City could be liable on inverse condemnation theory for damage caused by discharge of surface water based on its ownership of portion of drainage system; as matter of law, city's ownership and control of portion of drainage system made it potentially liable for damage substantially caused by its unreasonable diversion of water through city-owned portions of system. Skoumbas v. City of Orinda (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 783, 791, 81 Cal. Rptr. 3d 242

Landowners could not recover on cause of action for inverse condemnation against public entity for discharging effluents into river from sewage treatment facilities, which allegedly caused excessive growth of vegetation in river channel causing potential flood problems, when landowners failed to prove that public entity acted unreasonably, and substantial evidence supported contention that landowners' property values were not diminished due to any actions by public entity and that landowners suffered no actual harm or interference with use of their properties. Jordan v. City of Santa Barbara (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 1245, 1261, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 340

Public entity is liable in inverse condemnation when seepage of water from irrigation ditch damages adjacent land. Powers Farms v. Consolidated Irr. Dist. (1941) 19 Cal. 2d 123, 126, 119 P.2d 717

[17] Liability to Public Entity

City was liable to water district for physical damage to district's property for failure to properly maintain road. Marin Mun. Water Dist. v. City of Mill Valley (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d 1161, 1164-1166, 249 Cal. Rptr. 469

[18] Measure of Damages

In inverse condemnation action by landowner whose access to land was affected by building of dam, damages were recoverable as monetary measure of diminution in value of property caused by invasion of property rights; evidence of costs of establishing new methods of access was admissible on issue of diminution of value. Dunbar v. Humboldt Bay Mun. Wat. Dist. (1967) 254 Cal. App. 2d 480, 488-489, 62 Cal. Rptr. 358

Cost of moving gas line was measure of damage in inverse condemnation action when defendant's placement of 12 feet of fill over it made it unsafe. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. San Mateo County (1965) 233 Cal. App. 2d 268, 273-275, 43 Cal. Rptr. 450

[19] No Liability for Land Use Regulation

Regulation that prohibited subsurface mining that caused subsistence did not constitute taking when regulation did not deprive landowner of economically viable use of land. Keystone Bituminous Coal Association v. DeBenedictis (1987) 480 U.S. 470, 493-497, 107 S. Ct. 1232, 94 L. Ed. 2d 472

City's conditioning of nonresidential building permits on payment of fee for low-income housing was not taking because it was based on study showing impact of permits on need for low-income housing. Commercial Builders of Northern California v. City of Sacramento (9th Cir. 1991) 941 F.2d 872

No showing that rent control ordinance failed to advance "substantial governmental interest" and therefore effected a taking when landlord alleged that ordinance failed to advance its stated goal of providing affordable housing for the poor, the elderly, and young families, but did not allege that ordinance failed to advance legitimate purpose of preventing unreasonable and excessive rent increases. Santa Monica Beach, Ltd. v. Superior Court (1999) 19 Cal. 4th 952, 971, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 93, 968 P.2d 993

Government agency's legally erroneous decision during development approval process resulting in delay does not amount to temporary taking of property unless error constitutes passage and enforcement of law or regulation that deprives property of all value. Landgate Inc. v. California Coastal Com. (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 1006, 1020, 1021, 73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 841, 953 P.2d 1188

Rent control ordinance that prohibited demolition of rental property unless certain conditions were met was not taking of property because owner could receive reasonable return on investment. Nash v. City of Santa Monica (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 97, 103-106, 207 Cal. Rptr. 285, 688 P.2d 894

Public entity was not liable in inverse condemnation for zoning land for open space with limitation on number of houses that could be constructed. Agins v. Tiburon (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 266, 277-278, 157 Cal. Rptr. 372, 598 P.2d 25 , aff'd, 447 U.S. 255, 100 S. Ct. 2138, 65 L. Ed. 2d 106 (1980)

Change in zoning that results in diminution in value of property is valid and not basis of cause of action in inverse condemnation. HFH, Ltd. v. Superior Court (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 508, 513-518, 125 Cal. Rptr. 365, 542 P.2d 237

Property owners who sought to establish native plant landscape on undeveloped property did not state regulatory takings claim based on county's action in denying permit for electrical connection for well or for delay until owners were granted relief by way of petition for writ of mandate. Shaw v. County of Santa Cruz (2009) 170 Cal. App. 4th 229, 271, 275, 278, 88 Cal. Rptr. 3d 186

Two-year delay in development precipitated by city's erroneous action in denying application for lot line adjustment not unlawful temporary taking; city's action was not objectively unreasonable because it was in furtherance of substantial governmental interest and was not taken solely to delay proposed project. Loewenstein v. City of Lafayette (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 718, 729, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 79

Inclusionary zoning ordinance requiring 10 percent of all newly constructed residential units in city to be "affordable" did not effect regulatory taking on its face because it allowed city to waive requirements. Home Builders Assn. v. City of Napa (2001) 90 Cal. App. 4th 188, 194, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 60

Delay resulting from factual or legal uncertainties that temporarily cloud respective limits of regulatory jurisdiction of two public entities does not constitute regulatory taking of any property. Littoral Development Co. v. San Francisco Bay Conservation Etc. Com. (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 211, 221, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 266

Cause of action for regulatory taking was not stated when complaint alleged that property retained significant value. Smith v. City and County of San Francisco (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 38, 45-46, 275 Cal. Rptr. 17

Redevelopment plan preventing demolition of building and construction of modern building was not a taking when owner still using old building and therefore not deprived of all use. Terminals Equipment Co. v. City and County of San Francisco (1990) 221 Cal. App. 3d 234, 241-244, 270 Cal. Rptr. 329

State was not liable in inverse condemnation for refusal to allow local water district with no new water sources to serve property that did not have preexisting rights to water. Gilbert v. State of California (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 234, 252-257, 266 Cal. Rptr. 891

Coastal Commission was not liable in inverse condemnation for adoption of general plan that allowed some development. Pier Gherini v. California Coastal Com. (1988) 204 Cal. App. 3d 699, 713-714, 251 Cal. Rptr. 426

Temporary suspension of land use during normal governmental decision making about status of land, absent extraordinary delay, is not considered to be taking. Guinnane v. San Francisco (1987) 197 Cal. App. 3d 862, 867-870, 241 Cal. Rptr. 787

Government power to regulate land is so important that no vested right to particular use by landowner vests until government has approved that specific use; absent vested right to use land as contemplated, landowner is unable to bring inverse condemnation action. Rutherford v. State of California (1987) 188 Cal. App. 3d 1267, 1286, 233 Cal. Rptr. 781

Requirement of irrevocable offer to dedicate for lateral beach access imposed on permit to construct house was not taking because owner was not deprived of all use of property. Grupe v. California Coastal Com. (1985) 166 Cal. App. 3d 148, 159-184, 212 Cal. Rptr. 578

Cause of action was stated based on allegations that land use regulation precluded only economic use of property. Mario Saikhon, Inc. v. Agricultural Labor Relations Bd. (1983) 140 Cal. App. 3d 581, 189 Cal. Rptr. 632

Question was one of fact as to whether or not two adjacent parcels owned by same person but zoned differently were separate parcels for purposes of deciding taking issue. Aptos Seascape Corp. v. County of Santa Cruz (1982) 138 Cal. App. 3d 484, 495-497, 188 Cal. Rptr. 191 ; see American Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. County of Marin (9th Cir. 1981) 653 F.2d 364, 368-369

Public entity was not liable for refusal to rezone plaintiff's property in manner that would increase its value. Gilliland v. County of Los Angeles (1982) 126 Cal. App. 3d 610, 614-617, 179 Cal. Rptr. 73

Adoption of general plan proposing acquisition of plaintiff's land for park did not create liability for inverse condemnation. Helix Land Co. v. City of San Diego (1978) 82 Cal. App. 3d 932, 945-948, 147 Cal. Rptr. 683

Freeze on permits for bay fill pending adoption of plan by regulatory commission is valid and not basis for action in inverse condemnation. Candlestick Properties Inc. v. San Francisco Bay Conservation etc. Com. (1970) 11 Cal. App. 3d 557, 570-573, 89 Cal. Rptr. 897

[20] Other Bases of Liability

Liability in inverse condemnation for mobilehome rent control law that resulted in tenant being given permanent transferable right of occupancy. Hall v. City of Santa Barbara (9th Cir. 1986) 833 F.2d 1270, 1282

When impairment of visibility of billboard is sole harm alleged from municipal landscaping project on city-owned property, eminent domain and inverse condemnation principles do not require payment of compensation. Regency Outdoor Adver., Inc. v. City of Los Angeles (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 507, 523, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 742

Public entity was liable in inverse condemnation for odor from sewage treatment plant adjacent to plaintiff's property. Varjabedian v. City of Madera (1977) 20 Cal. 3d 285, 296-298, 142 Cal. Rptr. 429, 572 P.2d 43

Application of Santa Monica Rent Control Law to nonresident tenants does not effect unconstitutional taking of landlords' property. Borten v. Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (2006) 141 Cal. App. 4th 1485, 1490, 47 Cal. Rptr. 3d 178

Eviction control ordinance restricting ability of owners of residential rental property to evict tenants to enable owner or owner's relatives to move into rental unit effected physical and regulatory taking of owners' property. Cwynar v. City and County of San Francisco (2001) 90 Cal. App. 4th 637, 109 Cal. Rptr. 2d 233

Tenants whose commercial leases were terminated by their landlord so that leased properties could be included in large scale commercial development partly funded by redevelopment agency were not entitled to compensation for loss of improvements and business goodwill; facts did not establish "substantial equivalent" to condemnation because landlord contributed property to joint venture with a developer, and there was no evidence redevelopment agency intended to condemn properties. Langer v. Redevelopment Agency (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 998, 1006, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 19

City was liable in inverse condemnation for destroying plaintiff's property in absence of emergency and compelling necessity and without affording owner due process. Rose v. City of Coalinga (1987) 190 Cal. App. 3d 1627, 1634, 236 Cal. Rptr. 124

Liability in inverse condemnation exists for purchasing property under threat of condemnation and not compensating lessee for loss of improvements on property, even when lease is for a short term. Lanning v. City of Monterey (1986) 181 Cal. App. 3d 352, 357-359, 226 Cal. Rptr. 258

Public entity was liable in inverse condemnation for discharge of treated sewage effluent through watercourses on plaintiff's property. Amador Valley Investors v. City of Livermore (1974) 43 Cal. App. 3d 483, 491-493, 117 Cal. Rptr. 749

Public entity was liable for taking avigation easement by imposing severe height limitations on property in airport flight path. Sneed v. County of Riverside (1963) 218 Cal. App. 2d 205, 209-210, 32 Cal. Rptr. 318

Public entity was liable in inverse condemnation for leaving pipe on surface of subsurface easement for 10 months. O'Dea v. County of San Mateo (1956) 139 Cal. App. 2d 659, 661-662, 294 P.2d 171

[21] Relocation Assistance

When inverse condemnation action is substitute for direct condemnation action because public entity should have brought action to acquire property, inverse condemnee is entitled to relocation assistance benefits. Beaty v. Imperial Irrigation Dist. (1986) 186 Cal. App. 3d 897, 902-915, 231 Cal. Rptr. 128

[22] Ripeness for Review

Full faith and credit rule [28 U.S.C. § 1738] bars relitigation in federal court of issues decided by state court that are dispositive of federal takings claims. San Remo Hotel, L.P. v. City and County of San Francisco (2005) 545 U.S. 323, 125 S. Ct. 2491, 2505, 162 L. Ed. 2d 315

Once it becomes clear that agency lacks discretion to permit any development, or property's permissible uses are known to a reasonable degree of certainty, takings claim is likely to have ripened. Palazzolo v. Rhode Island (2001) 533 U.S. 606, 620, 121 S. Ct. 2448, 150 L. Ed. 2d 592

Taking claim is ripe for adjudication when city rejected development application after having specified conditions for development that were met by application. Del Monte Dunes Monterey, Inc. v. City of Monterey (9th Cir. 1990) 920 F.2d 1496

Taking claim is not ripe when landowners had not applied for amendment to Tahoe plan to allow development. Tahoe-Sierra Preservation Council, Inc. v. Tahoe Regional Planning Agency (9th Cir. 1990) 911 F.2d 1331

Inverse condemnation action is ripe for review when county had made final decision because it rezoned land so as not to allow the project and otherwise made it clear that the project would not be allowed. Hoehne v. County of San Benito (9th Cir. 1989) 870 F.2d 529

Inverse condemnation action is not ripe for review when state remedies have not been pursued; state remedies for physical invasion are adequate. Sinaloa Lake Owners Association v. City of Simi Valley (9th Cir. 1989) 864 F.2d 1475

Developer's application to city to amend general plan and electorate's rejection of that amendment in referendum vote did not satisfy developer's obligation to obtain final definitive position from city as to how it would apply applicable regulations to developer's property, and therefore developer's inverse condemnation action was not ripe for adjudication. Milagra Ridge Partners, Ltd. v. City of Pacifica (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 108, 119, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 394

Inverse condemnation action is not ripe for review when landowner had not sought waste discharge permit under challenged Water Quality Plan. Tahoe Sierra Preservation Council v. State Water Resources Control Bd. (1989) 210 Cal. App. 3d 1421, 1439-1442, 259 Cal. Rptr. 132

The petition of _____ [name of petitioner] for an order permitting entry on the real property of _____ [name(s) of property owner(s)] for the purposes and activities described herein came on regularly for hearing by the court this date after notice was duly and properly given. Petitioner appeared by counsel _____ [name]; respondent appeared by counsel _____ [name].

Upon proof made to the satisfaction of the court that the motion ought to be granted, the court finds, determines, and orders that:

1. Petitioner is a _____ [specify, e.g., public entity authorized by law to exercise the power of eminent domain to acquire property for the purpose of _____ [specify].

2. Petitioner seeks to enter on property owned by _____ [name(s)] and described as follows: _____ [give legal description of property].

3. Petitioner seeks entry on the above-described of property for the purpose of _____ [state purpose, e.g., determining if the land is suitable for a state highway right-of-way].

4. The nature and scope of the activities that are reasonably necessary to accomplish the above-stated purpose are _____ [set forth court determination of the nature and scope of activities necessary for purpose for which entry is sought].

5. The entry and activities described above may result in actual damage to the property and/or substantial interference with its possession and use.

6. The probable compensation for any actual damage and/or substantial interference with possession and use of the property does not exceed $_____.

NOW, THEREFORE, IT IS HEREBY ADJUDGED, ORDERED, AND DECREED that on depositing the amount of $_____ in the _____ [specify county treasury or Condemnation Deposits Fund in the State Treasury] pursuant to Section 1245.050(b) of the Code of Civil Procedure, the petitioner is, and shall forthwith be, authorized and empowered to enter on the above-described property for the purpose of _____ [specify] and is, and shall forthwith be, authorized and empowered to undertake the following activities on the property: _____ [specify].
Dated: _____.

Judge of the Superior Court

This form of order is for use by the court in issuing an order permitting petitioner to enter property which it seeks to acquire by eminent domain. The order must prescribe the purpose for the entry and the nature and scope of the activities to be undertaken. It also must require the petitioner to deposit with the court the probable amount of compensation for any damage and/or interference with possession or use which may occur [Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.030(c)]. The deposit is retained for six months following the entry's termination, unless it is sooner disbursed by court order or the court extends the period for good cause [Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.050; see Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.050(b) (requirement relating to retention of deposit)]. The order should provide suitable limitations of time, area, and type of activity striking a balance between the needs of the condemnor and the interests of the property owner [Cal. L. Rev. [2] Use of Form

This form of notice is for use by the condemnor or the party owning the property on which the condemnor has entered to move for an order modifying an order of entry made under Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.030. The property owner or the condemnor may apply for such an order if it appears, after an order of entry has been made, that the activities must be extended to accomplish the purpose or curtailed to prevent unwarranted damage or interference, or that greater or lesser damage to the property will occur [Cal. L. Rev. Comm'n Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.040].

The motion of _____ [name of moving party] for an order modifying the previous order of the court dated _____ [date], came on regularly for hearing by the court this date on notice duly and regularly given. Petitioner appeared by counsel _____ [name]; respondent appeared by counsel _____ [name].

On proof made to the satisfaction of the court that the motion ought to be granted,

IT IS HEREBY ADJUDGED, ORDERED, AND DECREED that the motion be, and it hereby is, granted and the order of this court dated _____ [date], is modified in that _____ [specify manner in which order is to be modified].

[IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that _____ (specify, e.g., any further entry on the property) be stayed until the further amount is deposited.]
Dated: _____.

_____ [signature]
Judge of the Superior Court

This form of order is for use by the court in modifying a prior order of entry. After notice and hearing, a court may modify any of the provisions of an order of entry [Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.040(a)].

If an order of modification increases the amount required to be deposited, the court must specify the time within which the additional amount must be deposited and in its discretion may direct that any further entry or that specified activities be stayed until the additional amount has been deposited [Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.040(b); Cal. L. Rev. Comm'n Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.040].

Under some circumstances, a modification order may decrease the amount of the required deposit. In this situation, the court, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.050(a), can order that the excess be disbursed at once to the person who made the deposit [Cal. L. Rev. Comm'n Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.040].

[3] State Statutes

Proceedings are permitted to be stayed if amount deposited is increased by order of modification. Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.040(b)

[2] Use of Form

This form of notice of motion is for use by the owner of the property on which the condemnor entered and performed activities in moving for an order determining damages arising from that entry when funds are on deposit [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.060(c)].

If the entry and activities on property cause actual damage to or substantial interference with the possession or use of the property, whether or not a claim has been presented in compliance with Gov. Code §§ 900-935.6 (claims against public entities), the owner may recover from the damage or interference by application to the court [Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.060(a)]. The owner may also use any other available remedy to recover for the damage to his or her property [Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.060(d)]. Consequently, the property owner could bring an action for nuisance or trespass, depending on the specific factual situation [see generally, Ch. 391, Nuisance , and Ch. 550, Trespass].

[3] Costs and Litigation Expenses

The prevailing claimant must be awarded costs and his or her litigation expenses incurred in the proceedings if the court finds that (1) the entry was unlawful; (2) the entry was lawful but the activities on the property were abusive or lacking in due regard for the interests of the owner; or (3) there was a failure to comply substantially with the terms of an order made under Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.030 (order of entry) or 1245.040 (order modifying order of entry) [Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.060(b)].

Plaintiff alleges:

1. Plaintiff, _____ [name], is, and at all times herein mentioned was, _____ [specify, e.g., the duly authorized body in charge of state highways] and is vested by law with authority to exercise the power of eminent domain to acquire private property for public use.

2. Plaintiff seeks to acquire by eminent domain the following-described property, hereinafter referred to as "the property" in _____ County, California: _____ [set forth sufficiently detailed and certain description of property to enable parties, and any ministerial officer who may be called on to enforce the judgment, to know precisely what property is to be taken]. Plaintiff seeks a _____ [specify interest in property that plaintiff wants to acquire, e.g., fee simple interest] in the above-described property.

3. A _____ [map or diagram] portraying as far as practicable the property and showing its location in relation to the project for which it is sought to be taken is attached to this complaint as Exhibit A and made a part of this complaint.

4. The individually named defendants are record owners or are known to plaintiff to have an interest in the property. For the convenience of the court and the parties, and not as allegations by which plaintiff is bound, their possible interest in the property is set forth below [set forth names of defendants and opposite each name give statement of respective interest of that defendant in the property]:

Name of Property Interest

	Defendant
1.	_____	_____
2.	_____	_____
3.	etc.	etc.

5. Defendants DOES I-_____, inclusive, have, or claim to have, an interest in the property, the exact nature of which is unknown to plaintiff. The true names or capacities, whether individual, corporate, associate, or otherwise, of defendants DOES I-_____, are unknown to plaintiff, who therefore sues these defendants by such fictitious names. Plaintiff will ask leave to amend this complaint to show their true names and capacities and state of incorporation when ascertained.

[6. If there is an executor or an administrator for a deceased person whose estate holds an interest in the property, allege: Defendant _____ (name) was at all times herein mentioned, and now is, the duly appointed, qualified, and acting _____ (administrator or executor) of the estate of _____ (name), deceased, under Probate Case No. _____, of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of _____. At the time of _____'s (name of deceased) death, he/she _____ (was a record owner of or claimed an interest in) the property.]

[7. If the record owner of the property is dead or plaintiff believes he or she is dead but there is no known executor or administrator, allege: _____ (Name of decedent or person believed to be dead who has no personal representative) _____ (is a record owner of or claimed an interest in) the property. _____ (That person died on or about _____ (date) or Plaintiff believes that person has died), and plaintiff, as more fully shown by the declaration under penalty of perjury filed herewith, knows of no duly qualified and acting personal representative of the estate of that person. The heirs and devisees of _____ (name of decedent or person believed dead), deceased, and all persons claiming by, through, or under said decedent, are made defendants herein (, as well as _____ (name), the person named above whom plaintiff believes to be dead).]

[8. If the United States has a deed of trust against the property, allege: The interest of the defendant United States of America is as a beneficiary under a deed of trust. The deed of trust was executed by _____ (name) to _____ (name), dated _____ (date). It was recorded on _____ (date), in the Official Records of the County of _____, Book _____, page _____.]

[9. If the United States has a tax lien against the property, allege: The interest of the defendant United States of America is a tax lien arising under the Internal Revenue laws. The liability of _____ (name and address of taxpayer) created the tax lien. The _____ (specify) Office of the Internal Revenue Service filed a notice of the tax lien on _____ [date], in the Office of the County Recorder in _____ County, California.]

10. Plaintiff also names as defendants all persons unknown claiming an interest in the property.

11. Plaintiff claims _____ [no or a] preexisting interest in the property sought to be taken [, the nature and extent of which are as follows: _____ (specify)].

12. Plaintiff is authorized by the provisions of _____ [specify statutory authority] to acquire property for public use for _____ [specify particular use for which the property is to be taken]. The project for which the property is sought to be acquired is _____ [specify].

[EITHER, if plaintiff is a public entity]

13. On or about _____ [date], by a two-thirds vote of all of its members and after due notice and opportunity to be heard, plaintiff governing body adopted a resolution of necessity authorizing plaintiff to acquire the property by eminent domain. A copy of the resolution is attached to this complaint as Exhibit B and made a part of this complaint. As established by the resolution, the public interest and necessity require the project; the project is _____ [planned or located or planned and located] in the manner that will be most compatible with the greatest public good and the least private injury; and the property sought to be acquired is necessary for the project.

[OR, if plaintiff is a quasi-public entity]

13. The legislative body of the _____ [City or County] of _____, within whose boundaries the property is located, on or about _____ [date], by a two-thirds vote of all of its members, after due notice and opportunity to be heard, adopted a resolution consenting to plaintiff's acquisition of the property by eminent domain. A copy of the resolution is attached to this complaint as Exhibit B and made a part of this complaint. As established by the resolution, the public interest and necessity require the project; the project is _____ [planned or located or planned and located] in the manner that will be most compatible with the greatest public good and the least private injury; and the property sought to be acquired is necessary for the project.

[OR, if plaintiff is a nonprofit hospital]

13. After a public hearing conducted by a hearing officer on _____ [date], following due notice and opportunity to be heard, the State Director of Health Services certified that the acquisition of the property sought to be condemned is necessary for the _____ [establishment, operation, and/or expansion] of the nonprofit hospital; the public interest and necessity require the proposed project; and the proposed project is planned or located in the manner that will be most compatible with the greatest public good and the least private injury. The property to be acquired is adjacent to other property _____ [used or to be used] for the _____ [establishment, operation, and/or expansion] of the nonprofit hospital.

WHEREFORE, plaintiff prays judgment as follows:

1. That the property herein described be condemned to plaintiff's use _____ [specify, e.g., in fee simple absolute or for the purposes set forth in this complaint or for the purposes set forth in the resolution of necessity attached to this complaint as Exhibit B or other as appropriate];

2. That just compensation be ascertained, assessed, and awarded as provided by law;

3. That all liens and encumbrances against the property be deducted from the judgment; and

4. For such other and further relief as the court may deem proper.

[2] Use of Form

This form of complaint is for use in a condemnation proceeding by a person authorized to acquire property for a particular use by eminent domain. The filing of the complaint rather than the issuance of the summons commences the condemnation proceeding [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.110].

[3] Allegations

[a] Statutory Requirements Generally

A complaint in eminent domain is required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.310 to allege all of the following:

(1) The names of all plaintiffs and defendants (Paragraphs 1, 4-10);

(2) A description of the property sought to be taken (Paragraph 2);

(3) The nature and extent of any interest the plaintiff claims in the property (Paragraph 11) [see People ex rel. Dep't Pub. Wks. v. Shasta Pipe etc. Co. (1968) 264 Cal. App. 2d 520, 528-529, 70 Cal. Rptr. 618 , disapproved on other grounds in Merced Irrigation Dist. v. Woolstenhulme (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 478, 495, 93 Cal. Rptr. 833, 483 P.2d 1] ;

(4) A statement of the right of the plaintiff to take by eminent domain the property described in the complaint (Paragraphs 12, 13). The statement must include:

(a) A general statement of the public use for which the property is to be taken (Paragraph 12);

(b) An allegation of the necessity of the taking as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.030 (Paragraph 13); if the plaintiff is a public entity, a reference to its resolution of necessity; if the plaintiff is a quasi-public entity within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.320, a reference to the resolution adopted pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1245.310-1245.390; if the plaintiff is a nonprofit hospital, a reference to the certificate required by Health & Safety Code § 127050; if the plaintiff is a public utility and relies on a certification of the State Energy Resources Conservation and Development Commission or on a requirement of that commission that development rights be acquired, a reference to that certification or requirement; and

(c) A reference to the statute that authorizes the plaintiff to acquire the property by eminent domain (Paragraph 12). Specification of the statutory authority may be in the alternative and may be inconsistent; and

(5) A map or diagram portraying as far as practicable the property described in the complaint and showing its location in relation to the project for which it is to be taken (Paragraph 3).

[b] Parties

[i] Plaintiffs

Each person seeking to take property by eminent domain must be named as a plaintiff in the complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.210]. For example, if a joint and cooperative eminent domain proceeding is brought by agreement between different agencies, each condemnor must be named as a plaintiff unless the proceeding is brought by a separate legal entity created pursuant to a joint powers agreement [Cal. L. Rev. Comm'n Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.210; see

Gov. Code § 6508].

The plaintiff must be a person authorized by statute to exercise the power of eminent domain to acquire the property sought for the purpose listed in the complaint. A proceeding may not be maintained in the name of any other person [Cal. L. Rev. Comm'n Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.210; see People v. Superior Court (1937) 10 Cal. 2d 288, 296, 73 P.2d 1221 ; Sierra Madre v. Superior Court (1961) 191 Cal. App. 2d 587, 590-591, 12 Cal. Rptr. 836 (corporation is not permitted to maintain cause of action to acquire property in city's name)].

[ii] Defendants

The plaintiff must name in the complaint as defendants, by their real names, those persons appearing of record or who are known by the plaintiff to have or claim an interest in the property described in the complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.220(a)]. Failure to join a proper party to the proceeding leaves his or her interest unimpaired. However, a person not named as a defendant who claims an interest in the property sought to be acquired may participate in the proceeding and voluntarily appear [Cal. L. Rev. Comm'n Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.220; see Wilson v. Beville (1957) 47 Cal. 2d 852, 855-856, 306 P.2d 789] . As a practical matter, the plaintiff should name as defendants all persons shown as having an interest in the property by an up-to-date title report. When the complaint is filed some time after the title report was issued, it must be updated when the complaint is filed to ensure that all proper parties are named and served.

If a person who must be named as defendant is dead and the plaintiff knows of a duly qualified and acting personal representative of the estate of that person, the plaintiff must name the personal representative as a defendant. If a person is dead or believed by the plaintiff to be dead and if the plaintiff knows of no personal representative of the estate of that person and states these facts in an affidavit (or declaration under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) filed with the complaint, plaintiff may name as defendants "the heirs and devisees of the deceased person and all persons claiming by, through, or under the decedent." If the affidavit states that the person is believed by the plaintiff to be dead, the deceased also may be named as a defendant [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.220(b)].

The plaintiff may name as defendants "all persons unknown claiming an interest in the property" naming them in that manner [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.220(c)]. Additionally, the plaintiff may name fictitious defendants who claim an interest, but whose names are not known, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 474 [Code Civ. Proc. § 474; for forms of allegations of fictitious defendants, see Ch. 20, Allegations Commonly Used].

When the only interest of the county or any other taxing agency in the property being condemned is a lien for ad valorem taxes, the county or other agency need not be named as a party in the eminent domain proceeding [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.250].

The holder of a lien that secures a special assessment or a bond representing the special assessment must be named as a defendant, regardless of the nature of the special assessment and the manner of its collection [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.250(b); for discussion of lienholder's certification of information to court instead of answer, see § 247.288].

Although the complaint does not need to identify the nature of the defendants' interests in the property, other than the plaintiff's interest, since specification of the defendants' interest is the defendants' responsibility, as a convenience to the court and to the parties, this complaint contains an allegation of the property interests of the defendants (Paragraph 4) [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.320 (requirements of answer)].

[c] Description of Property

The complaint must contain a description of the property sought to be taken which may, but is not required to, indicate the nature or extent of the defendant's interest in the property. The property described may consist of anything from a fee interest in land to water rights, noise easements, or franchises [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1235.125 (defining "interest"), 1235.170 (defining "property")]. The description of the property should be sufficiently certain to enable the parties, and any ministerial officer who may be called on to enforce the judgment, to know precisely what land is to be taken and paid for [see California Cent. R. Co. v. Hooper (1888) 76 Cal. 404, 413, 18 P. 599 (description of property in judgment must be so certain that parties and ministerial officers may know what land is to be taken); see also Code Civ. Proc. § 455 (description of land in action to recover real property)]. According to the Cal. L. Rev. Comm'n Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.310, the complaint does not need to indicate if the property taken is part of a larger parcel.

The requirement of a statement of plaintiff's right to take the property described in the complaint by eminent domain is intended to provide the owner of the property sought to be taken with an understanding of the purpose for which the property is being taken and the authority for the taking. According to the Cal. L. Rev. Comm'n Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.310, the pleading requirements may be satisfied in any way convenient to the plaintiff as long as they are indicated in the complaint. For example, the resolution of necessity may be summarized or it may be attached to the complaint and incorporated by reference.

The Cal. L. Rev. Comm'n in its comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.310, stated that, since a public entity must adopt a resolution of necessity before it may condemn property [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1240.040, 1245.220], the requirement of Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.310(d)(2) necessitating an extensive statement of the necessity for the acquisition, may be satisfied by incorporation of the resolution containing appropriate findings and declarations. If the resolution is not incorporated, a reference to it should be included which is adequate to identify it so that a copy may be obtained.

When the condemnor is a nonprofit hospital, college, or cemetery, or a limited dividend housing corporation, a land chest corporation, or mutual water company, a reference must be made to the resolution of the local public entity consenting to the acquisition [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.330]. Similarly, a reference to the certificate required by Health & Safety Code § 127050 (requirements for exercise of right of eminent domain by nonprofit hospital) must be included when applicable. A reference to the certification or to the requirement that development rights be acquired must be included if the plaintiff is a utility relying on a certification, or on requirement by the State Energy Resources Conservation and Development Commission that development rights be acquired [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1240.030 (requirements for exercise of eminent domain) and 1240.220 (future use is required to be within seven years from date complaint is filed)].

The eminent domain power may be exercised only by persons authorized by statute for purposes designated by statute and a reference must be made in the complaint to the authorizing statute [Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.020]. These statutes may be of several types. For example, the state, the University of California, cities, counties, and school districts, may condemn any property necessary to carry out any of their powers or functions [see, e.g., Educ. Code §§ 35270.5 (school districts), 72300.5 (community college districts), 92040 (Regents of University of California); Gov. Code §§ 15853 (Public Works Board), 25350.5 (counties), 37350.5 (cities)]. Many special districts have similar broad authority, but some may condemn only for limited or special purposes. Additionally, if the condemnor is acquiring property under authority of certain general public uses, it must specify that authority [see, e.g., Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1240.220 (taking for future use), 1240.320-1240.350 (condemnation for exchange purposes), 1240.410 (excess condemnation), 1240.510 (taking for compatible use), 1240.610 (taking for more necessary public use)]. According to the Cal. L. Rev. Comm'n Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.310, when the plaintiff may be authorized to take the property on different and inconsistent grounds, the plaintiff may allege the authority in the alternative.

The map or diagram that must be attached to the complaint should be sufficiently detailed and accurate to enable the parties to identify the property and its relation to the project. When the taking is for a right-of-way, the map should show its location, general route, and termini with respect to the property sought to be taken. The map does not need to indicate whether the property sought is a part of a larger parcel but it may show such information, and any other information that the plaintiff wants to show [Cal. L. Rev. Comm'n Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.310; see Pub. Util. Code § 7557 (requiring map when complaint seeks relocation or removal of railroad tracks)].

[4] Allegations Required in Special Circumstances

When special types of condemnation are authorized, there are specific requirements stating that the complaint must refer to the code section under which the acquisition is sought to be made. This allegation must be made in the following situations:

(1) The property to be taken is for a future use more than seven years from the date the complaint is filed. The complaint also must state the estimated date of use [Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.220(b); see § 247.281];

(2) The property is to be taken pursuant to the Federal Highway Act of 1972 [23 U.S.C. § 101 et seq.]. The complaint also must state the estimated date of use [Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.250(b)];

(3) The property is to be taken as substitute property to exchange for necessary property. The complaint also must state that the property is necessary for the purpose for which it is being taken [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1240.320(b), 1240.330(b), 1240.350(b); see § 247.282];

(4) The property is to be taken as a remnant [Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.420; see § 247.283];

(5) The property to be taken is for a compatible use [Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.510; see § 247.284]; and

(6) The property to be taken is for a more necessary public use [Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.610; see § 247.285].

Failure to specifically make reference to Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.610 when the property is to be acquired for a more necessary public use makes the complaint subject to demurrer [Pacific Gas & Electric Co. v. Superior Court (1986) 180 Cal. App. 3d 770, 773-774, 225 Cal. Rptr. 768] .

[5] Verification and Signing of Complaint

If a plaintiff is represented by an attorney, the complaint need not be verified but it must be signed by the plaintiff's attorney. The attorney's signature constitutes a certificate by the attorney that he or she has read the complaint and that to the best of his or her knowledge, information, and belief there is ground to support it. If the complaint is not signed or is signed with intent to defeat the above purposes, it may be stricken [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.330; see also Code Civ. Proc. § 128.7 (sanctions)].

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.330, the plaintiff may verify the complaint if it chooses to do so, but this verification will not require verification by the defendant if he or she is represented by an attorney or if defendant is a public entity or officer [Cal. L. Rev. Comm'n Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.330; see generally Code Civ. Proc. §§ 446 (verification by defendant generally required if plaintiff is public entity or if complaint is verified unless defendant is public entity or officer), 1230.040]. When the defendant is not represented by an attorney and is not a public entity or officer, the answer must be verified [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 446, 1230.040].

The plaintiff may join in one complaint all property located within the same county which is sought to be acquired for the same project [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.240]. The court, however, has the authority to order separate trials where appropriate [Cal. L. Rev. Comm'n Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.240]. As a practical matter, the plaintiff should carefully consider whether to join a number of different pieces of property in the same action since joinder may make the case extremely complicated and may encourage the various property owners to join together in a common defense.

Except as otherwise provided by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1230.060 (eminent domain proceedings by Public Utilities Commission) and 1273.010-1273.050 (arbitration), all eminent domain proceedings must be commenced and prosecuted in the superior court [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.010; see Cal. Const., art VI, § 10]. The proceeding is not a limited civil case [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 85, 86, 580(b)(3)].

[8] Venue

The proceeding must be brought in the county in which the property sought to be taken is located. When the property is located in more than one county, the plaintiff may bring the proceeding in any one of these counties [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.020]. The county in which the proceeding is commenced is the proper county for trial unless the proceeding is transferred to another county in which case that county is the proper county for trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.030]. The Code of Civil Procedure provisions for changing the place of trial of actions apply to eminent domain proceedings [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.040; see Code Civ. Proc. § 394 (action against county, city, or local agency); Code Civ. Proc. §§ 396, 396b, 397 (changing place of trial); for discussion of and forms relating to venue, see Ch. 518, Service of Summons and Papers].

[9] Summons

Except in the case of service by publication, the form and contents of the summons is as in civil actions generally [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.120]. For forms of summonses for use in civil actions, see Ch. 518, Service of Summons and Papers .

[10] Failure to Commence Eminent Domain Proceeding

If, after adopting a resolution of necessity, a public entity has not commenced an eminent domain proceeding within six months after the date the resolution was adopted, or has commenced a proceeding but has not attempted diligently to serve the complaint and summons within six months after commencement, the property owner may bring an action in inverse condemnation to require the public entity to take the property and pay compensation for it, or to recover damages from the public entity for any interference with the possession and use of the property resulting from adoption of the resolution, or both [Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.260(a) (service by mail pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 415.30 constitutes diligent attempt at service)].

§ 247.280 Allegations--Temporary Right of Access to Adjoining or Adjacent Property to Repair or Reconstruct [Civ. Code § 1002; Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.326]

[1] FORM Allegations--Temporary Right of Access to Adjoining or Adjacent Property to Repair or Reconstruct [Civ. Code § 1002; Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.326]

1. Plaintiff, _____ [name], is, and at all times herein mentioned was, an owner of real property _____ [adjacent to or nearby] defendant's property and is authorized to take temporary access to repair and reconstruct by Civil Code Section 1002.

2. Plaintiff is authorized by the provisions of Civil Code Section 1002 to acquire a temporary right to enter on the above-described property to repair or reconstruct plaintiff's property.

3. On or about _____ [date], the legislative body of the _____ [City or County] of _____, within whose boundaries the property is located, by a two-thirds vote of all its members, after due notice and opportunity to be heard, adopted a resolution consenting to plaintiff's acquisition of the property by eminent domain. A copy of the resolution is attached to this complaint as Exhibit B and made a part of this complaint. As established by the resolution, temporary access to the property is required because _____ [the repair and reconstruction cannot be safely done without entry or the cost of performing the repair and reconstruction without entry would be much higher] and the property without repair or reconstruction adversely affects the surrounding community. The right to enter will be exercised in a manner that provides the least damage and inconvenience to defendant(s). The hardship to plaintiff, if the power of eminent domain is not exercised, clearly outweighs the hardship to defendant(s).

These allegations are for use in the general form of eminent domain complaint [see § 247.279] to bring an action to gain temporary access to adjoining or adjacent land to repair and reconstruct plaintiff's property [see Civ. Code § 1002; Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.326]. The allegations should replace Paragraphs 1, 12, and 13, respectively, in § 247.279[1]. The prayer in § 247.279[1] would also have to be adapted to request a temporary right to enter.

[3] When Access Can be Obtained

The power of eminent domain may be exercised by an owner of real property to acquire a temporary right to enter on adjacent or nearby property to repair or reconstruct land or improvements if all of the following conditions are met: (1) there is a necessity to do the repair or reconstruction work and there is a great necessity to enter on the adjacent or nearby property to do the repair or reconstruction work because the work cannot be done safely without entry, or the cost of performing the repair or reconstruction work without entry would be substantially higher and the property without repair or reconstruction adversely affects the surrounding community; (2) the right to enter on the adjacent or nearby land will be exercised in a manner that provides the least damage to the property and the least inconvenience or annoyance to the occupants or owners of this complaint, consistent with satisfactory completion of the repair or reconstruction work; and (3) the hardship to the person seeking to exercise the power of eminent domain, if that power is not exercised, clearly outweighs any hardship to the owner or occupant of the adjacent or nearby property [Civ. Code § 1002(a); Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.326(b)].

"Adjacent" or "nearby" mean land contiguous with the property needing repair or reconstruction, or land through which the party granted temporary access must pass to reach adjacent land [Civ. Code § 1002(d)].

No entry may be made on property to be condemned until an eminent domain proceeding has been commenced and then only after a court order permitting entry is issued or after judgment is entered for the plaintiff [Civ. Code § 1002(b)].

The right to obtain temporary access does not apply to lands used primarily for the commercial production of agricultural commodities and forest products [Civ. Code § 1002(e)].

[4] Resolution of Necessity Required

The person seeking to acquire a temporary right of entry is deemed a quasi-public entity. Before bringing the proceeding, a resolution of necessity must be obtained from the legislative body governing the property. The resolution must contain a declaration that the legislative body has found and determined that each of the necessary conditions, set forth in § 247.280[3], appear to exist [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1245.310-1245.390; see Paragraph 3 of form, above].

[5] Security and Rent

A deposit of security, in the form of cash or bond, must be made to the court in an amount that the court determines is necessary to permit the owner of the adjacent or nearby property to restore the property to the condition it was in before the entry, if the person exercising the power of eminent domain does not restore the property within a reasonable period of time as determined by the court [Civ. Code § 1002(b)].

The court may order the person acquiring the temporary right to enter the land of another to pay the owner of the land subject to that temporary right a reasonable amount of rent for the use of the land [Civ. Code § 1002(c)].

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that _____ [name], plaintiff, has commenced a proceeding in the above-named court against the above-named defendants.

The purpose of the proceeding is the condemnation and taking of [_____ (specify interest) in] the real property hereinafter described for the public purpose of _____ [specify].

The real property which is subject to and affected by this action is situated in _____ County, California and described as follows: _____ [give legal description].

The names of the parties who may have an interest in the real property are: _____ [specify names and their respective interests].

_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Plaintiff

[2] Use of Form

This form of notice is for use by a plaintiff in filing a notice of the pendency of the eminent domain proceeding in the county recorder's office. A notice of lis pendens must be filed in any county in which property described in the complaint is located [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.150]. For a discussion of the effect of lis pendens, see § 247.94.

[3] Service of Notice on Adverse Parties

A copy of the notice of lis pendens must be served with the summons and complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.150]. If service is by publication, the court must order recording of a lis pendens [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.130].

Pursuant to Section 1250.325 of the Code of Civil Procedure, _____ [name], defendant in the above-entitled proceeding, hereby disclaims any interest in the property described in plaintiff's complaint. _____ [Name] defendant, further disclaims any interest in the compensation that may be awarded in the above-entitled proceeding.

[Defendant understands that he/she has no right to participate in further proceedings or to share in the compensation awarded after filing this disclaimer.]
Dated: _____.

_____ [signature]
Defendant

This form of disclaimer is for use by a defendant in an eminent domain proceeding in disclaiming any interest in the property or in the compensation that may be awarded. The disclaimer may be an informal document, but it must state that defendant claims no interest in either the property or the award and must be signed by the defendant [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.325(a); Cal. L. Rev. Comm'n Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.325].

The disclaimer may be filed at any time, whether or not the defendant is in default. It supersedes any answer previously filed [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.325(a)].

According to Cal. L. Rev. Comm'n Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.325, a defendant may make only a partial disclaimer by filing an answer describing only the limited interest claimed by him or her [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.320 (answer)].

[3] Implementation of Disclaimer

The court may implement the disclaimer by appropriate orders including, where justified, awarding costs and litigation expenses [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.325(c)].

Defendant _____ [name], in answer to the complaint herein, admits, denies, and alleges as follows:

1. Admits each and every allegation in Paragraph(s) _____.

2. Denies each and every allegation in Paragraph(s) _____.

3. Defendant has no information or belief as to the matters stated in Paragraph(s) _____ and basing his/her answer on this lack of knowledge, denies each and every allegation of this complaint.

4. Answering Paragraph _____, defendant admits that _____ [specify e.g., he/she is a record owner of the property described in the complaint] and affirmatively alleges that he/she is _____ [describe nature and extent of interest claimed].

[5. If defendant admits plaintiff is a public entity but denies that plaintiff has the right to take the property, allege: Answering Paragraph _____ of the complaint, defendant admits that plaintiff is a _____ (public entity or quasi-public entity) but denies each and every other allegation of this complaint.]

6. _____ [If the defendant is the owner of a business conducted on the property to be taken or on a remainder, allege: In addition to compensation for the taking of the property, defendant claims compensation under Section 1263.510 of the Code of Civil Procedure for the loss of goodwill of his/her business which is conducted on the _____ (property to be taken or if the property is part of a larger parcel remainder of the property to be taken)].

[7. Defendant claims precondemnation damages of _____ (specify, e.g., loss of rental income) resulting from _____ (specify unreasonable conduct, e.g., unreasonable delay in commencing the present complaint in eminent domain after announcement of intent to condemn the property described in the complaint).]

AS SEPARATE AND AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE(S) AND OBJECTION(S) TO PLAINTIFF'S RIGHT TO TAKE, defendant alleges [select appropriate objections, if any, from those listed below]:

1. Plaintiff is not authorized by statute to exercise the power of eminent domain for the purpose specified in the complaint in that _____ [specify].

2. The stated purpose for which the property is to be used is not a public use in that _____ [specify].

3. _____ Plaintiff does not intend to devote the property described to the purpose stated in Paragraph _____ of the complaint, but, instead intends to devote it to the following use: _____ [specify].

4. There is no reasonable probability that plaintiff will devote the described property to the purpose stated in Paragraph _____ of the complaint within _____ [seven years or where the property is taken pursuant to the Federal Aid Highway Act of 1973 10 years] after the complaint was filed or within such longer period as is reasonable in that _____ [specify].

5. The described property is not subject to acquisition by the power of eminent domain for the purpose stated in Paragraph _____ of the complaint in that _____ [specify].

6. The described property is sought to be acquired pursuant to Section _____ [1240.410 (excess condemnation) or 1240.510 (condemnation for compatible use) or 1240.610 (condemnation for more necessary public use)] of the Code of Civil Procedure, but the acquisition does not satisfy the requirements of that provision in that _____ [specify].

7. The described property is sought to be acquired pursuant to Section 1240.610 of the Code of Civil Procedure (condemnation for more necessary public use), but defendant has the right under Section 1240.630 of the Code of Civil Procedure to continue the public use to which the property is appropriated, which is _____ [describe use], as a joint use in that _____ [specify].

8. The resolution of necessity referred to in Paragraph _____ of the complaint does not satisfy the requirements of Sections 1245.210-1245.270 of the Code of Civil Procedure in that _____ [specify].

9. The public interest and necessity do not require the proposed project in that _____ [specify].

10. The proposed project is not planned or located in the manner that will be most compatible with the greatest public good and the least private injury in that _____ [specify].

11. The property described in the complaint is not necessary for the proposed project in that _____ [specify].

12. The resolution of consent referred to in Paragraph _____ of the complaint does not satisfy the requirements of Sections 1245.310-1245.390 of the Code of Civil Procedure in that _____ [specify].

[If any additional objections provided by law are appropriate, continue to set them forth, each in a separate paragraph.]

WHEREFORE, defendant prays judgment as follows:

1. That plaintiff take nothing by its complaint against this answering defendant; or

2. If the court determines that plaintiff is entitled to take the property described in the complaint by eminent domain that this answering defendant be awarded the fair market value of [his/her interest in] the property [, together with compensation for loss of goodwill and severance damages];

3. For costs of suit herein incurred; and

4. For such other and further relief as the court may deem proper.

[2] Use of Form

This form of answer is for use by a defendant in an eminent domain proceeding. The answer must include a statement of the nature and extent of the interest the defendant claims in the property described in the complaint (Paragraph 4) [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.320(a)]. A defendant seeking compensation for loss of goodwill must allege that he or she claims compensation under Code Civ. Proc. § 1263.510 but does not need to specify the amount of the compensation (Paragraph 6) [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.320(b)]. Defendant also probably should claim any damages for precondemnation activities [Paragraph 7; see § 247.288[4]].

Objections to the right to take may be made by demurrer or by answer and are waived if not so raised [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.350]. Those objections appearing on the face of the complaint or from matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice may be taken by demurrer. Objections based on grounds not appearing on the face of the complaint may be made by answer [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30].

The demurrer or answer must state the specific ground on which the objection is taken and, if the objection is taken by answer, the specific facts on which the objection is based [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.350; San Mateo County v. Bartole (1960) 184 Cal. App. 2d 422, 433, 7 Cal. Rptr. 569 (defendant was required to allege specific facts showing basis of objection where he objects to right to take by answer because defense is not on face of complaint); see People v. Chevalier (1959) 52 Cal. 2d 299, 304, 340 P.2d 598] . Objection may be taken on more than one ground, and the grounds may be inconsistent [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.350]. The grounds on which defendant may object are enumerated in Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1250.360 and 1250.370 [see § 247.96[2], [3]].

In this answer, Paragraphs 1-7 of the affirmative defenses and objections to the right to take are based on Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.360 listing grounds for objection to the right to take regardless of whether plaintiff has adopted a resolution of necessity satisfying the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1245.210-1245.270. Paragraphs 8-12 of the affirmative defenses and objections to the right to take are based on Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.370 giving the grounds for objection to the right to take when plaintiff has not adopted a resolution of necessity.

When an eminent domain action has been dismissed by the public entity, a separate action for unreasonable precondemnation delay damages must be brought [Redevelopment Agency v. Heller (1988) 200 Cal. App. 3d 517, 521-522, 246 Cal. Rptr. 160 ; see Cal. L. Revision Comm'n Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.260]. If the condemnation proceeding proceeds to final judgment, precondemnation delay damages should be sought as a part of the eminent domain award. A judgment in the eminent domain action bars a later action for delay damages [Klopping v. City of Whittier (1972) 8 Cal. 3d 39, 58, 104 Cal. Rptr. 1, 500 P.2d 1345 ; Redevelopment Agency v. Contra Costa Theatre, Inc. (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 73, 79, 185 Cal. Rptr. 159].

Before revision of the Eminent Domain Law, cases held that inverse condemnation damages had to be sought in the answer to the eminent domain action [see Richmond Redevelopment Agency v. Western Title Guaranty Co. (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d 343, 350, 122 Cal. Rptr. 434 ; People ex rel. Dept. Pub. Wks. v. Peninsula Enterprises, Inc. (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 332, 353, 153 Cal. Rptr. 895]. However, such damages now may be sought by cross-complaint. Under the current statutory scheme, the only requirement that damages be specifically claimed by answer to an eminent domain complaint is that when the defendant seeks compensation for loss of goodwill, the answer must specifically state that the defendant claims compensation under Code Civ. Proc. § 1263.510, but the amount of such damage does not have to be alleged [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.320; San Diego Metropolitan Transit Development Board v. RV Communities (2007) 158 Cal. App. 4th 313, 335, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 705 ; see also Red Mountain LLC v. Fallbrook (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 333, 355-356, 48 Cal. Rptr. 3d 875 (eminent domain action did not preclude defendant from pursing inverse condemnation action seeking damages for diminution in value of its land that occurred before agency decided to directly condemn property)].

[5] Lienholder's Certification to Court in Lieu of Answer

The holder of a lien that secures a special assessment or a bond representing the special assessment, instead of an answer, may certify to the court within 30 days after service of the summons and complaint on the holder all of the following information [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.250(b)]:

- A complete description of the lien;
- A description of the property encumbered by the lien;
- The amount remaining due on the lien as of the date of the certificate; and
- The date on which each installment payable on the lien is due and the amount of each installment.

A copy of the certification must be sent by first-class mail to all parties to the proceeding at the time it is provided to the court. The filing of the certification or answer is considered a general appearance [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.250(c)].

[6] Verification and Signing of Answer

The answer of a defendant represented by an attorney need not be verified but must be signed by the attorney. The signature constitutes a certificate by the attorney that he or she has read the answer and that to the best of his or her knowledge, information, and belief there is ground to support it. If the answer is not signed or is signed with intent to defeat these purposes, it may be stricken [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.330].

Although plaintiff may verify the complaint if it chooses to do so, defendant is not required to verify the answer if he or she is represented by an attorney or if defendant is a public agency or officer [Cal. L. Rev. Comm'n Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.330; see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 446 (verification by defendant generally required when plaintiff is public entity or complaint is verified unless defendant is public entity or officer), 1230.040]. However, if the defendant is not represented by an attorney and is not a public entity or officer, the answer must be verified [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 446, 1230.040].

Contents of answer. Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.320

Objections to right to take is permitted to be made by answer or demurrer. Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.350

Grounds for objections to right to take. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1250.360, 1250.370

[8] Decisions

Defendant's denial that acquisition of property was in public interest or convenience constituted denial of lawful public use and consequently, defendant did not admit public use. Redevelopment Agency v. Herrold (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 1024, 1030-1031, 150 Cal. Rptr. 621

[Caption. See § 247.290.]

The motion of _____ [name of defendant] for an order that plaintiff does not have the right to take the property described in the complaint on file herein came on regularly for hearing by the court this date on notice duly and regularly given. Plaintiff _____ [name] appeared by counsel _____ [name]; defendant _____ [name] appeared by counsel _____ [name].

Proof having been made to the satisfaction of the court, and good cause appearing therefor,

[EITHER]

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that plaintiff has the right to take the property described in the complaint on file herein.

[OR]

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that plaintiff does not have the right to take the property described in the complaint on file herein for the reason(s) that _____ [specify, e.g., the described property is not subject to acquisition by the power of eminent domain for the stated purpose] and, therefore, defendant _____ [name] is entitled to a dismissal of the action as to that property. Judgment of this complaint shall be entered and defendant is entitled to costs and reasonable litigation expenses to be claimed in a cost bill filed not later than _____ [date].

[OR]

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that plaintiff is entitled to take the property described in the complaint on the condition that on or before _____ [date], _____ [specify corrective and remedial action the court may prescribe that plaintiff take]. If not so remedied by such date, then defendant is entitled to a dismissal of the action as to the property described in the complaint and judgment of this complaint will be entered. Defendant is entitled to costs and all reasonable litigation expenses necessarily incurred by defendant because of plaintiff's failure or omission which constituted the basis of the objection of the right to take, to be claimed in a cost bill filed not later than _____ [date].

[CONTINUE]

Dated: _____.

_____ [signature]

This form of order is for use in a proceeding to determine the right to take before determining the issue of compensation. The court may not create a right to take when none exists, but it may grant leave to the plaintiff to amend pleadings or take other corrective action enabling the plaintiff to continue with the proceeding. For example, if the resolution of necessity was not properly adopted, the court may order that a resolution be adopted within a specified time limit. Although the plaintiff is not required to comply with such an order, failure to do so results in a dismissal of the proceeding as to the property which the court has determined the plaintiff has no right to take [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1260.120; Cal. L. Rev. Comm'n Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 1260.120].

When the complaint alleges alternative grounds for condemnation, a finding requiring dismissal as to one ground does not preclude a finding of a right to take on another ground and the proceeding may continue, based on the latter ground [Cal. L. Rev. Comm'n Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 1260.120].

This form is for use by either a plaintiff or defendant when there is a dispute over an evidentiary or other legal issue affecting the determination of compensation. The motion must be made not later than 60 days before commencement of trial on the compensation issue. It must be heard by the assigned trial judge. If necessitated by the court's ruling on the motion, the court may postpone the date for the parties' final offer and demand, and the date of trial for a period that is sufficient to enable the parties to engage in further proceedings before trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 1260.040].

Use of this procedure is limited to resolution of legal issues that may affect compensation, such as what constitutes the larger parcel, or the probability of a zoning change; it may not be used to ascertain just compensation. The procedure does not preclude the use of other procedures that may be utilized for the same purpose, including bifurcation of issues and control of the order of proof pursuant to statute, or other pretrial procedure pursuant to court rule [Cal. L. Rev. Comm'n Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 1260.040].

To _____ [names of all parties who have appeared in proceeding]:

You are hereby notified that, pursuant to the provisions of Section 1255.010 of the Code of Civil Procedure, plaintiff deposited $_____ with the State Treasury in the above-entitled proceeding on _____ [date]. This sum is the amount of the probable compensation that will be awarded for the property sought to be condemned by the plaintiff in the above-entitled proceeding.

[EITHER, if appraisal of property has been made]

The probable amount of compensation deposited with the State Treasury is based on the appraisal of the property made by _____ [name of expert who appraised property]. A written _____ [statement or summary] of the basis for the appraisal is attached to this notice.

[OR, if plaintiff is permitted to make deposit before appraisal being completed]

The probable amount of compensation deposited with the State Treasury is based on plaintiff's good-faith estimate of the amount of compensation that will be awarded in the proceeding. A copy of all _____ [affidavits and/or declarations under penalty of perjury] on which the court order permitting plaintiff to make the deposit is based are attached to this notice. The appraisal and a written statement or summary of the basis for the appraisal is to be completed by _____ [date]. The written statement or summary of the basis for the appraisal will be sent to you at that time. If any additional amount of compensation is required to be deposited after completion of the appraisal, that amount will be deposited by _____ [date].

Plaintiff hereby objects to the application of _____ [name] for withdrawal of $_____ from the amount deposited by plaintiff as the amount of probable compensation for property described as _____ [give description of property] in the complaint on file herein.

This objection is made on the grounds that _____ [specify one or more of the following grounds:

1. Other parties are known or believed to have interests in the property. The names and last known addresses of these parties are: _____ (specify);

2. An undertaking should be filed by the defendant as provided in Section _____ (1255.240 or 1255.250) of the Code of Civil Procedure;

3. The amount of the undertaking filed by defendant _____ (name) is insufficient in that _____ (specify); and

4. The sureties on the undertaking filed by the defendant are insufficient in that _____ (specify)].

[If ground for objection is that other parties are known or believed to have interests in the property, add: On _____ [date], the other parties to the proceeding known or believed to have interests in the property, except as provided below, were served with notice that they may appear within 10 days after service of notice and object to the withdrawal and that failure to object constitutes a waiver of any right to the amount withdrawn or further rights against the plaintiff to the extent of the amount withdrawn. (Plaintiff has attempted to serve personally _____ (name and last known address of party) but has been unable to locate and serve that party and will be unable to locate the party within the 20-day period required by Section 1255.230 of the Code of Civil Procedure.)]

WHEREFORE, plaintiff prays that the court hold a hearing, after notice of this complaint to all parties, and determine the amounts, if any, to be withdrawn and by whom for a total amount not exceeding the amount deposited by plaintiff as security for taking immediate possession of the property.
Dated: _____.

The motion of _____ [name of plaintiff] for an order for possession of the property described in the complaint by eminent domain on file herein came on regularly for hearing on _____ [date], in [_____ (Department or Division) _____ of] this court, the Honorable _____ [name], Judge, presiding. Plaintiff appeared by counsel _____ [name], and defendant(s) [_____ (name(s))] appeared by counsel _____ [name(s)].

On proof made to the satisfaction of the court, the court finds that:

1. Plaintiff is entitled to take the property by eminent domain.

2. Plaintiff has deposited, pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure Sections 1255.010 to 1255.080, an amount equal to the probable compensation due for said property.

[If motion is opposed by defendant or occupant, include:]

3. There is an overriding need for plaintiff to possess the property before the issuance of final judgment, and plaintiff will suffer substantial hardship if the motion for possession is denied or limited.

4. The hardship that the plaintiff will suffer if possession is denied or limited outweighs any hardship on the [defendant or occupant] that would be caused by the granting of plaintiff's motion.

UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 1255.460, IT IS ORDERED that plaintiff be and hereby is authorized to take possession of the property described above and to fully possess and use the property on or after _____ [date].

[If appropriate (see Code Civ. Proc. § 1255.450(e)), add:] IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that, good cause appearing therefor, plaintiff be and hereby is authorized to take possession of the property, which is unoccupied, without serving a copy of this order on _____ [name], who is a record owner but cannot be located.
Dated: _____.

[2] Use of Form

This form of order is for use by the court to grant an order for possession before judgment. It is designed to be used when the order is sought in accordance with a motion for possession filed under Code Civ. Proc. § 1255.410 [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1255.460].

[3] Contents of Order

An order for possession issued in accordance with a motion made under Code Civ. Proc. § 1255.410 must [Code Civ. Proc. § 1255.460]:

- Recite that is has been made under Code Civ. Proc. § 1255.460;
- Describe the property to be acquired, which description may be by reference to the complaint; and
- State the date after which the plaintiff is authorized to take possession of the property.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that on _____ [date], at _____ [time], or as soon thereafter as the matter may be heard, in [_____ (Department or Division) _____ of] this court, located at _____ [street address], _____ [city], _____ [name of defendant] will, and hereby does, move for an order awarding as costs pursuant to Section 1268.710 of the Code of Civil Procedure the following litigation expenses:

The motion will be made on the ground that the offer of plaintiff for the property condemned was unreasonable and the demand of defendant was reasonable, viewed in the light of the evidence admitted and the compensation awarded in the proceeding and that these expenses were reasonably and necessarily incurred in preparing for and in conducting the condemnation trial in the above-entitled proceeding.

The motion will be based on this notice of motion, on the _____ [affidavit(s) or declaration(s)] of _____ [name(s)] and the supporting memorandum served and filed herewith, on the records and file herein, and on such evidence as may be presented at the hearing of the motion.

CAUTION:
A supporting memorandum must be served and filed with this notice of motion [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(a)]. For discussion and forms, see Ch. 417, Points and Authorities .

[2] Use of Form

This notice of motion is for use by a defendant in recovering litigation expenses. The motion must be made within 30 days after entry of judgment. If the court finds that plaintiff's final settlement offer was unreasonable and that defendant's final demand was reasonable viewed in the light of the evidence admitted and the compensation awarded in the proceeding, the costs allowed pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1268.710 must also include the defendant's litigation expenses [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.410(b)].

"Litigation expenses" are the party's reasonable attorney's fees and costs, including reasonable expert witness and appraiser fees [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.410(e)]. In determining the amount of litigation expenses, the court must consider all of the following [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.410(c)]:

- The offer required to be made before adopting the resolution of necessity [see Gov. Code § 7267.2];
- Any deposit made by the plaintiff; and
- Any other written offers and demands filed and served before or during trial.

The following offers and demands were made by the plaintiff and the defendant respectively in the above-entitled proceeding: _____ [set forth offers and demands, including plaintiff's offer made before adoption of resolution of necessity, and any other written offers and demands filed and served before or during trial].

The plaintiff's deposit of probable compensation pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure Section 1255.010 et seq. was $_____.

On _____ [date], judgment was entered in this proceeding wherein the amount of just compensation for the taking of the property sought to be condemned was determined to be $_____.

_____ [Set forth reasons why plaintiff's offer was unreasonable and defendant's demand was reasonable, viewed in light of the evidence admitted and the compensation awarded in the proceeding, e.g., Plaintiff's final offer was 80 percent of the jury's verdict and was $16,000 less than the verdict, whereas the defendant's final demand was $2,000 more than the jury's verdict. Additionally, the opinion of value made by the plaintiff's appraisal expert and the opinion of value made by the defendant's appraisal expert differed substantially in that the defendant's expert valued the property at $20,000 more than the plaintiff's expert].

Plaintiff alleges:

1. _____ [Allege capacity of defendant, e.g., Defendant _____ (name) is a public entity organized and existing under the laws of the State of California].

[2. Plaintiff is ignorant of the true names and capacities of defendants sued herein as DOES I-_____, inclusive, and therefore sues these defendants by these fictitious names. Plaintiff will amend this complaint to allege their true names and capacities when ascertained. Plaintiff is informed and believes and thereon alleges that each of the fictitiously named defendants is in some manner responsible for the injury and damage to plaintiff alleged herein.]

[3. (Plaintiff is informed and believes and thereon alleges that) (A)t all times herein mentioned defendants _____ (specify, e.g., DOE I, DOE II, and DOE III), were the agents, servants, and employees of their codefendants and (in doing the things hereinafter mentioned) were acting within the course and scope of their authority as such agents, servants, and employees with the permission and consent of their codefendants.]

4. On _____ [date], and at all times herein mentioned, plaintiff was the owner _____ [describe plaintiff's interest in property, e.g., in fee of] the following described real property in the City of _____, _____ County, California: _____ [give legal description of property].

5. _____ [Allege defendant's planning, approval, construction, operation of, or substantial participation in activity for public use or benefit, e.g., On _____ [date], defendant commenced construction of a public highway located _____ (specify, e.g., along the southern border of plaintiff's above-described property)].

6. _____ [Allege with specificity defendant's taking or damaging of plaintiff's property, e.g., As a direct and necessary result of the plan, design, maintenance, and operation of the highway, plaintiff's property was flooded from February 1 through February 17, 2005, and again from March 20 through March 28, 2005. Plaintiff is informed and believes and thereon alleges that, due to the construction of the highway by defendant, plaintiff's property will continue to be flooded at various times].

7. The above-described damage to plaintiff's property was _____ [proximately or substantially] caused by defendant's _____ [actions or failure to act] in that _____ [specify facts showing that defendant's actions or failure to act proximately or substantially caused plaintiff's injury or damage, e.g., defendant's plan, design, and maintenance of the highway was faulty in that no provision was made for controlling the flow of water onto the surrounding land].

8. As a result of the above-described damage to plaintiff's property, plaintiff has been damaged in the amount of $_____.

9. Plaintiff has received no compensation for the damage to his/her property.

10. Plaintiff has incurred and will incur attorney's, appraisal, and engineering fees because of this proceeding, in amounts that cannot yet be ascertained, which are recoverable in this action under the provisions of Code of Civil Procedure Section 1036.

WHEREFORE, plaintiff prays judgment against defendant as follows:

1. For damages in the amount of $_____ with interest thereon at the legal rate from the date of the damages;

2. For reasonable attorney's, appraisal, and engineering fees according to proof;

3. For costs of suit herein incurred; and

4. For such other and further relief as the court may deem proper.

VERIFICATION

I, _____ [name], am the plaintiff in the above-entitled action. I have read this complaint and know the contents of this complaint. The same is true of my own knowledge, except as to those matters which are therein alleged on information and belief, and as to those matters, I believe it to be true.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California that this is true and correct.

_____ [signature]

This complaint is a general form for use when there has been a taking or damaging of plaintiff's property without just compensation [see Cal. Const., art. I, § 19]. The sample allegations state a cause of action for a taking by water damage. A complaint in inverse condemnation may include several other causes of action, such as one for damages for nuisance [Civ. Code §§ 3479-3503; Code Civ. Proc. § 731; for discussion and forms relating to nuisance, see Ch. 391, Nuisance] or for injuries caused by a dangerous condition of a public entity's property [Gov. Code § 835; for discussion and forms relating to actions against public entities, see Ch. 464, Public Entities and Officers: California Tort Claims Act].

[3] Allegations

This complaint alleges the following:

- Defendant's capacity (Paragraph 1).
- The liability of fictitiously named defendants (Paragraphs 2 and 3).
- Plaintiff's interest in and a description of the property (Paragraph 4).
- Defendant's planning, approval, construction, operation of, or substantial participation in an activity for public use or benefit (Paragraph 5).
- Defendant's taking or damaging of plaintiff's property (Paragraph 6).
- That defendant's action was a proximate or substantial cause of the damage to plaintiff's property (Paragraph 7).
- Plaintiff's damages (Paragraph 8).
- That plaintiff has not been compensated for the damages (Paragraph 9).
- Attorney's, appraisal, and engineering fees incurred by plaintiff (Paragraph 10).

[4] Jurisdiction and Venue

The superior court has jurisdiction of the action, which will be classified as an unlimited civil case unless the amount in controversy, exclusive of interest, is $25,000 or less, in which case it will be classified as a limited civil case [Cal. Const., art. VI, § 10; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 85, 86(a)(1)].

In limited civil cases the caption must state whether the demand exceeds or does not exceed $10,000. The caption must also identify the case as a limited civil case [Code Civ. Proc. § 422.30(b); Gov. Code § 70613; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2.111(9), (10)].

In an action for injury to property based on inverse condemnation against the state, the county in which the property is located is the proper place for the trial of the action [Gov. Code § 955]. In an action for injury to property based on inverse condemnation against a county, city and county, city, or local agency, the court in the county, or city and county, or the county in which the city or local agency is located, is the proper court for trial of the action [Code Civ. Proc. § 394(a)].

[5] Statute of Limitations

[a] Applicable Statute Is Three or Five Years

Both the three-year statute of limitations relating to trespass actions [Code Civ. Proc. § 338(b)] and the five-year statute of limitations relating to possessory actions and actions arising out of title to real property [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 318, 319] have been applied to inverse condemnation actions [Williams v. Southern P. R. Co. (1907) 150 Cal. 624, 625-626, 89 P. 599 (three-year period); Frustuck v. City of Fairfax (1963) 212 Cal. App. 2d 345, 374, 28 Cal. Rptr. 357 (five-year period)]. The five-year period has been applied based on a distinction between trespass and the taking or damaging of private property under the power of eminent domain. The rationale for the application is that the owner's right of recovery is founded on and grows out of the owner's title to land and until the title is lost by adverse possession, the owner should have the right to maintain an action to recover that which represents the property itself [Frustuck v. City of Fairfax (1963) 212 Cal. App. 2d 345, 374 28 Cal. Rptr. 357] . The Supreme Court has declined to discuss the question of whether or not the five-year period of limitation is proper [Mehl v. People ex rel. Dep't of Pub. Wks. (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 710, 717 n. 3, 119 Cal. Rptr. 625, 532 P.2d 489 ; see Wilson v. Beville (1957) 47 Cal. 2d 852, 861, 306 P.2d 789] . The decisive consideration as to which period to apply may be whether there was a taking (in which case the five-year statute applies), or simply a trespass on real property causing an injury (in which case the three-year period applies) [Garden Water Corp. v. Fambrough (1966) 245 Cal. App. 2d 324, 328, 53 Cal. Rptr. 862] .

[b] Accrual of Cause of Action

If the basis of the cause of action for inverse condemnation is a taking by construction of a public improvement on plaintiff's land, the cause of action accrues when the construction is complete, not when the original trespass took place [Mosesian v. County of Fresno (1972) 28 Cal. App. 3d 493, 502, 104 Cal. Rptr. 655 ; see Pierpont Inn, Inc. v. State of California (1969) 70 Cal. 2d 282, 286-294, 74 Cal. Rptr. 521, 449 P.2d 737 (overruled on other grounds in Los Angeles County Metropolitan Transportation Authority v. Continental Development Corp. (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 694, 698-699, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 630, 941 P.2d 809)]. If the damage is caused by a public improvement not on plaintiff's land but that causes damages on plaintiff's land, the cause of action accrues when the damage occurs, not when the improvement was made [Frustuck v. City of Fairfax (1963) 212 Cal. App. 2d 345, 375, 28 Cal. Rptr. 357] . In such a case, the cause of action does not accrue until the damage would be sufficiently appreciable to a reasonable person [Mehl v. People ex rel. Dep't of Pub. Wks. (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 710, 717, 119 Cal. Rptr. 625, 532 P.2d 489] . If the damage is continuing, plaintiff can recover for all damages incurred within the limitation period, even though earlier damage may be barred by the statute [Bellman v. County of Contra Costa (1960) 54 Cal. 2d 363, 369, 5 Cal. Rptr. 692, 353 P.2d 300 ; Amador Valley Investors v. City of Livermore (1974) 43 Cal. App. 3d 483, 489-490, 117 Cal. Rptr. 749] .

[6] Service of Process

Service of summons in actions against the state must be made on the Attorney General. However, on claims arising out of work done by the Department of Transportation, or the Department of Water Resources, service can also be made on the relevant Director [Gov. Code §§ 955.4(a), 955.6, 955.8]. Service on other public entities may be made on the clerk, secretary, president, presiding officer, or other head of its governing body [Code Civ. Proc. § 416.50]. Information about the proper person to serve can be obtained from the Roster of Public Agencies [see Gov. Code § 53051] on file with the county clerk.

[7] No Claim Requirement

No claim is required to be filed to maintain an action under Cal. Const., art. I, § 19 against a public entity for taking of or damage to private property [Gov. Code § 905.1].

[8] Right to Jury Trial

The constitutionally mandated right to jury trial in eminent domain actions [Cal. Const., art. I, § 19] applies to inverse condemnation actions [Highland Realty Co. v. City of San Rafael (1956) 46 Cal. 2d 669, 683-684, 298 P.2d 15] . However, the right to jury trial extends only to the issue of compensation, not to the issue of whether or not there has been a taking for which the entity is liable [People v. Ricciardi (1943) 23 Cal. 2d 390, 402, 144 P.2d 799] . Thus, the issue of whether or not there has been a substantial impairment of access must be affirmatively decided by the court before the issue of damages is presented to the jury [Orpheum Bldg. Co. v. San Francisco Bay Area Rapid Transit Dist. (1978) 80 Cal. App. 3d 863, 868, 869, 146 Cal. Rptr. 5] .

[9] Costs

In any inverse condemnation proceeding, the court in rendering judgment for the plaintiff by awarding compensation, or the attorney representing the public entity who effects a settlement of the proceeding, must determine and award or allow to the plaintiff, as a part of the judgment or settlement, a sum that will, in the opinion of the court, reimburse the plaintiff for reasonable costs, disbursements, and expenses, including reasonable attorney's, appraisal, and engineering fees actually incurred because of the proceeding in the trial court or in any appellate proceeding in which the plaintiff prevails on any issue in the proceeding [Code Civ. Proc. § 1036]. For additional discussion, see § 247.205[1].

[10] Verification

A public entity need not verify its answer even if the complaint is verified [see Code Civ. Proc. § 446]. The verification of a complaint against a public entity does, however, preclude a general denial except in a limited civil case, and will preclude a general denial even in a limited civil case when the action is a claim assigned to a third party for collection [see Code Civ. Proc. § 431.30(d)].

[11] State Constitution

No taking or damaging of private property by public entity without compensation. Cal. Const., art. I, § 19

[12] State Statutes

Costs, including litigation costs, in inverse condemnation proceedings in trial court or in any appellate proceeding in which plaintiff prevails on any issue in that proceeding. Code Civ. Proc. § 1036

No claim requirement in inverse condemnation actions. Gov. Code § 905.1

Liability of public entity in inverse condemnation for damages caused by water. Bauer v. County of Ventura (1955) 45 Cal. 2d 276, 283, 289 P.2d 1

4. Defendant owns and operates _____ [name of airport], a municipal airport, in the vicinity of plaintiff's above-described property.

5. The noise from the operation of the airport causes a substantial interference with the use and enjoyment of plaintiff's above-described property, which amounts to a taking and damaging of the property for which defendant has not compensated plaintiff.

6. The noise from the airport has caused a reduction in the market value of plaintiff's property in the amount of $_____.

7. [Attorney's, appraisal, and engineering fees allegation. See § 247.340, Paragraph 10.]

WHEREFORE, plaintiff prays judgment against defendant as follows:

1. For damages in the amount of $_____, with interest thereon at the legal rate from the date of the damages;

2. For reasonable attorney's, appraisal, and engineering fees, according to proof;

[2] Use of Form

This form of complaint is for use in an inverse condemnation action based on diminution of market value due to airport noise from an adjacent airport.

[3] Allegations

The complaint alleges the following:

- Defendant's operation of the airport (Paragraph 4).
- Noise from the airport causing a substantial interference with the use and enjoyment of the plaintiff's property (Paragraph 5).
- Plaintiff's damages (Paragraph 6).

The complaint also contains cross references for the following allegations:

- Defendant's capacity (Paragraph 1).
- Liability of fictitiously named defendants (Paragraph 2).
- Plaintiff's interest in and a description of the property (Paragraph 3).
- Attorney's, appraisal, and engineering fees incurred by plaintiff (Paragraph 7).

[4] Decisions

Owner and operator of municipal airport is liable in inverse condemnation when property owner in vicinity of airport can show measurable reduction in market value as result of noise from operation of airport causing substantial interference with use and enjoyment of property. Aaron v. City of Los Angeles (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 471, 483-484, 115 Cal. Rptr. 162 , cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1122

[2] Use of Form

This form of complaint is for use in an inverse condemnation action to recover damages for substantial impairment of access.

[3] Allegations

The complaint alleges the following:

- Defendant's activities causing impairment of access (Paragraph 4).
- The impairment of access (Paragraph 5).
- A taking from the impairment of access (Paragraph 6).
- Damages resulting from the impairment of access (Paragraph 7).

The complaint also contains cross references for the following allegations:

- Defendant's capacity (Paragraph 1).

[2] Use of Form

This form of complaint is for use in an inverse condemnation action for damages caused by precondemnation delay. It may be used when the statutory cause of action for precondemnation delay [Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.260(a); see § 247.344] is not available because, for example, no resolution of necessity was passed.

[3] Allegations

The complaint alleges the following:

- Defendant's unreasonable precondemnation activities (Paragraph 4).
- That the unreasonable conduct constitutes a taking (Paragraph 5).
- Plaintiff's damages (Paragraph 6).

The complaint also contains cross references for the following allegations:

- Defendant's capacity (Paragraph 1).
- Liability of fictitiously named defendants (Paragraph 2).
- Plaintiff's interest in and a description of the property (Paragraph 3).
- Attorney's, appraisal, and engineering fees incurred by plaintiff (Paragraph 7).

[4] Decisions

Liability in inverse condemnation for unreasonable precondemnation delay or other unreasonable conduct; loss of rental value is one measure of damages. Klopping v. Whittier (1972) 8 Cal. 3d 39, 44-54, 104 Cal. Rptr. 1, 500 P.2d

[2] Use of Form

This form of complaint is for use in bringing an action in inverse condemnation when a public entity has adopted a resolution of necessity but (1) has not commenced an eminent domain proceeding to acquire the property within six months after the resolution's adoption or (2) has commenced a proceeding but has not attempted diligently to serve the complaint and the summons within six months after the proceeding was commenced [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.260(a)].

[3] Allegations

The complaint alleges the following [Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.260(a)]:

- Defendant's adoption of a resolution of necessity regarding plaintiff's property (Paragraph 4).
- Defendant's failure to commence an eminent domain proceeding within six months of adopting the resolution or if defendant did commence a proceeding, its failure to serve the complaint and summons on plaintiff within six months of the proceeding's commencement (Paragraph 5).
- Damages (Paragraph 6).

The complaint also contains cross references for the following allegations:

- Defendant's capacity (Paragraph 1).
- Liability of fictitiously named defendants (Paragraph 2).
- Plaintiff's interest in and a description of the property (Paragraph 3).
- Attorney's, appraisal, and engineering fees incurred by plaintiff (Paragraph 7).

[4] Statute of Limitations

An action against a public entity under Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.260(a) must be commenced within one year and six months after the resolution of necessity was adopted [Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.260(b)]. This period of limitation does not apply if the property owner petitions for a writ of mandate under Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.260(f) [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.260(f); Cal. L. Rev. Comm'n Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.260].

[5] Attorney's, Appraisal, and Engineering Fees

In any inverse condemnation proceeding, the court in rendering judgment for the plaintiff by awarding compensation, or the attorney representing the public entity who effects a settlement of the proceeding, must determine and award or allow to the plaintiff, as a part of the judgment or settlement, a sum that will, in the opinion of the court, reimburse the plaintiff for reasonable costs, disbursements, and expenses, including reasonable attorney's, appraisal, and engineering fees actually incurred because of the proceeding in the trial court or in any appellate proceeding in which the plaintiff prevails on any issue in the proceeding [Code Civ. Proc. § 1036]. For additional discussion, see § 247.205[1].

[6] State Statutes

Statutory right to force public entity to take property, pay damages, or both, if eminent domain action is not brought or summons served within six months of adoption of resolution of necessity. Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.260.

Petitioner alleges:

1. Petitioner is the owner _____ [describe petitioner's interest in property, e.g., in fee of] the following described real property in the City of _____, _____ County, California: _____ [give legal description of property].

2. Respondent _____ [name] is a public entity organized and existing under the laws of the State of California.

3. On _____ [date], respondent adopted a resolution of necessity determining that the above-described property was necessary and should be acquired for public use for the purpose of _____ [specify]. A copy of the resolution of necessity is attached to this petition as Exhibit A and made a part of this petition.

4. Respondent has a clear and present duty to _____ [commence an eminent domain proceeding to acquire petitioner's property or serve the complaint and the summons in the eminent domain proceeding it has commenced to acquire petitioner's property or rescind the resolution of necessity].

5. Petitioner has a clear, present, and substantial right to the performance of respondent's duty in that petitioner _____ [specify petitioner's interest in property, e.g., is the owner in fee of] the property for which respondent has adopted the resolution of necessity.

6. Petitioner is beneficially interested in the issuance of the writ by virtue of the fact that _____ [specify facts demonstrating that petitioner is beneficially interested in the issuance of the writ of mandate, e.g., the market value of his/her property has declined since respondent adopted the resolution of necessity and the market value will remain at this reduced value until respondent rescinds the resolution].

7. At all times herein mentioned, respondent has been able to perform the duty mentioned above. Notwithstanding such ability, respondent continues to fail [and refuse] to perform such duty.

[EITHER]

8. Pursuant to Section 1245.260(f) of the Code of Civil Procedure, petitioner may obtain a writ of mandate to compel respondent to _____ [rescind the resolution of necessity or commence the eminent domain proceeding to acquire petitioner's property].

[OR]

8. Petitioner has no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law, other than the relief sought in this petition, in that a period of more than one year and six months has passed since the adoption of the resolution of necessity.

[9. Respondent's failure to perform the duty herein mentioned has damaged petitioner in the sum of $_____ in that _____ (describe facts showing petitioner's damages).]

WHEREFORE, petitioner prays:

1. That the court issue an alternative writ of mandate commanding respondent to _____ [rescind the resolution of necessity or commence an eminent domain proceeding to acquire petitioner's property] or to show cause before this court at a time specified by court order why it has not done so and why a peremptory writ should not issue;

2. That on the return of the alternative writ and the hearing of this petition, this court issue its peremptory writ of mandate commanding respondent to _____ [rescind the resolution of necessity or commence an eminent domain proceeding to acquire petitioner's property];

[3. For damages in the sum of $_____;]

4. For costs of suit herein incurred; and

5. For such other and further relief as the court may deem proper.

VERIFICATION

I, _____ [name], am the petitioner in this proceeding. I have read this petition and know the contents of this complaint. The same is true of my own knowledge, except as to those matters which are therein alleged on information and belief, and as to those matters, I believe it to be true,

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California that this is true and correct.

_____ [date and place]
_____ [signature]

CAUTION:

A petition for writ of mandate must be verified [Code Civ. Proc. § 1086]. Proof of service of a copy of a petition that seeks an alternative writ on each respondent and real party in interest must accompany the petition when it is offered for filing (except when, in its discretion and for good cause, the court has granted the application for the writ ex parte) [Code Civ. Proc. § 1107]; for a discussion of the method of serving the petition, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition . Points and authorities also customarily accompany a petition filed in a superior court, although they do not appear to be expressly required by statute [but see Code Civ. Proc. § 1090, referring to the proceeding as a "motion" and Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(a), requiring a memorandum in support of a noticed motion]. For discussion and forms, see Ch. 417, Points and Authorities .

[2] Use of Form

This petition is for use in obtaining a writ of mandate to compel a public entity to rescind a resolution of necessity or to commence an eminent domain proceeding to acquire petitioner's property when the public entity has adopted a resolution of necessity but has not commenced a condemnation proceeding within six months after the resolution was adopted, or has commenced a proceeding but has not attempted diligently to serve the complaint and the summons within six months after the proceeding was commenced [Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.260(f)]. The petition also may be used when the limitations period provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.260(b) (18 months) has expired [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.260(f); for discussion, see § 247.197[2]]. Therefore, the first alternative Paragraph 8 should be used when the mandate proceeding is brought as an alternative to bringing an action to require a taking or recover damages under Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.260(a) (see § 247.344). The second alternative Paragraph 8 should be used when such action cannot be brought because the 18-month statute of limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.260(b)] for such action has expired [Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.260(f)].

[3] Allegations

This petition alleges the following:

- Petitioner's interest in and a description of the property involved (Paragraph 1);
- Respondent's identity (Paragraph 2);
- Respondent's adoption of a resolution of necessity (Paragraph 3);
- Respondent's duty (Paragraph 4);
- Petitioner's right (Paragraph 5);
- The beneficial interest of petitioner (Paragraph 6);
- The ability of respondent to perform the duty (Paragraph 7);
- The statutory authority authorizing petitioner to obtain a writ of mandate or petitioner's lack of a legal remedy (Paragraph 8); and
- Any damages that have occurred (Paragraph 9).

[4] State Statutes

Property owner is permitted to obtain writ of mandate compelling public entity to rescind resolution of necessity or commence eminent domain proceeding. Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.260(f)

[5] Cross References

See § 247.344.

2. The above-described property is adjacent to plaintiff's property which the complaint herein alleges was damaged by defendant's use of the above-described property.

3. The damage to plaintiff's property alleged in the complaint herein was reasonably foreseeable by plaintiff when the above-described property was acquired by defendant. Therefore, plaintiff was compensated for the alleged damage when the above-described property was acquired and is now estopped from recovering the alleged damage in this action.

[2] Use of Form

This form of affirmative defense is for use in an answer to a complaint for inverse condemnation when the plaintiff is estopped by judgment or deed from recovering damages. This estoppel defense applies when plaintiff claims damages caused by defendant's use of adjacent property that was acquired by defendant from plaintiff by judgment or deed. Under such circumstances, plaintiff is presumed to have been compensated for all damages resulting from defendant's use of the adjacent property that were reasonably foreseeable when defendant acquired the property [Reinking v. Orange County (1970) 9 Cal. App. 3d 1024, 1030, 88 Cal. Rptr. 695] . For a further discussion of the defense of estoppel, see § 247.208[3].

This chapter discusses an employer's tort liability to third parties, that is, persons other than the employer or its employees, based on the conduct of its employees. The chapter discusses tort theories involving fault on the part of the employer, such as negligent hiring or retention and negligent supervision or training, as well as vicarious liability under the doctrine of respondeat superior. The chapter also briefly discusses the interrelationship of the rules of respondeat superior based on an employment relationship, the rules of liability of a principal for the acts of an agent, and the liability of persons determined to be independent contractors. Finally, the part covers employer defenses to third-party actions and indemnity issues.

This chapter includes the following forms:

- Complaints alleging employer liability under the doctrine of respondeat superior and employer liability for the torts of independent contractors [§§ 248.40-248.43].

- Complaints alleging employer liability based on the employer's own negligence or fault [§§ 248.45 and 248.46], as well as allegations of liability for punitive damages for use against an employer [§ 248.44].

- Defensive forms for use by employers, alleging that the employee was not acting within the scope of employment [§ 248.50], and that no employment or agency relationship existed [§ 248.51].

§ 248.10 Governing Law

The basic principle of respondeat superior is set forth in Civ. Code §§ 2338 and 2339. The liability of an employer for punitive damages for the acts of an employee is limited by Civ. Code § 3294(b). Otherwise, respondeat superior has been shaped primarily by case law.

§ 248.11 Theories of Direct and Vicarious Employer Liability

An employer may be liable in tort to third persons for the conduct of employees under either (or both) of two theories. First, an employer is liable if the employer's own conduct constitutes a tort. For example, an employer may have been negligent in its selection, training, or supervision of employees and agents, or in its promulgation of work rules and business procedures that created a risk of harm to others [see, e.g., Underwriters Ins. Co. v. Purdie (1983) 145 Cal. App. 3d 57, 69, 193 Cal. Rptr. 248 (negligent hiring); see also §§ 248.12[2] and 248.12[3]].

Second, even if the employer is not directly at fault, the employer may be vicariously liable under the doctrine of respondeat superior for the torts of his or her employees or agents committed within the scope of the employment or agency [see, e.g., Perez v. Van Groningen & Sons, Inc. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 962, 967, 227 Cal. Rptr. 106, 719 P.2d 676 ; Rodgers v. Kemper Constr. Co. (1975) 50 Cal. App. 3d 608, 617-618, 124 Cal. Rptr. 143] .

For discussion of vicarious liability generally, see § 248.14. For discussion of when an employee's acts are within the scope of employment, see § 248.16.

Direct liability and vicarious liability under the doctrine of respondeat superior are not mutually exclusive. Depending on the facts in a particular case, the third-party plaintiff may be able to recover under either or both theories [see Golden W. Broadcasters, Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 947, 950-951, 171 Cal. Rptr. 95] . However, if liability is predicated solely on respondeat superior, a determination of the nonliability of the employee exonerates the employer also [Shaw v. Hughes Aircraft Co. (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 1336, 1347, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 446 (employer not vicariously liable for defamation if employee charged with uttering defamatory statements found not liable); Roberts v. Ford Aerospace & Commc'ns Corp. (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 793, 800, 274 Cal. Rptr. 139] . In contrast, an employer may be directly liable even if vicarious liability is precluded by the nonliability of the employee [Lehmuth v. Long Beach Unified Sch. Dist. (1960) 53 Cal. 2d 544, 550-553, 2 Cal. Rptr. 279, 348 P.2d 887] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Search for Direct Link to Breach of Statutory Duty for Extreme or Aberrational Conduct. Recent decisions of the California Supreme Court, rendered specifically in the sexual harassment context, indicate that plaintiff's counsel seeking to attach liability to an employer for employee acts that are in any way extreme or aberrational would be well advised to pay close attention to pleading and proving a breach of statutory duty or tortious conduct based upon the employer's own acts or omissions. See, Farmers Ins. Group v. City of Santa Clara (1996)11 Cal. 4th 992, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 478, 906 P.2d 440 , and Lisa M. v. Henry Mayo Newhall Mem'l Hosp. (1996) 12 Cal. 4th 291, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 510, 907 P. 2d 358 , for statements of respondeat superior policy analysis that seem to strengthen an employer's defense to such liability in cases other than those brought under the California Fair Employment and Housing Act. By Richard P. Hill

§ 248.12 Employer's Own Negligence or Fault as Basis for Liability

[1] Direct Employer Liability

An employer may be directly liable for its own acts of negligence, separately and independently from any particular act or omission of an employee that is the alleged direct cause of an injury. For example, particular employer policies or procedures may be insufficient or inadequate. In such a case, the employer may be directly liable as a result of its policy or procedure, whether or not a particular employee is negligent in its implementation [see Coffee v. McDonnell-Douglas Corp. (1972) 8 Cal. 3d 551, 560-562, 105 Cal. Rptr. 358, 503 P.2d 1366 (employee doctor relied on inadequate employer procedure regarding blood test results in authorizing employment of plaintiff who had significant blood test abnormality; jury absolved doctor, but found employer directly liable); McGuigan v. Southern Pac. Co. (1952) 112 Cal. App. 2d 704, 715-716, 247 P.2d 415 (employer misrepresented job duties in obtaining doctor's termination of employee's sick leave; whether doctor was employee was irrelevant because employer was directly liable because of incorrect job description)].

An employer may also be directly liable if the employee is acting according to the express directions of the employer [Roberts v. Ford Aerospace & Commc'ns Corp. (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 793, 800, 274 Cal. Rptr. 139] . Under these circumstances, it is possible for a jury to absolve the employee of liability, thereby precluding the imposition of vicarious liability on the employer, without exonerating the employer for its own independent negligence [Jensen v. Southern Pac. Co. (1954) 129 Cal App. 2d 67, 70-71, 276 P.2d 703 , overruled on other grounds, Alarid v. Vanier (1958) 50 Cal. 2d 617, 623, 327 P.2d 897) (train was being operated by employee engineer at speed and on schedule determined by employer railroad)].

[2] Negligent Hiring or Retention of Unsuitable Employee

An employer may be liable to a third party for the employer's negligence in hiring or retaining an employee who is incompetent or unfit if the employee tortiously injures the third party [see Underwriters Ins. Co. v. Purdie (1983) 145 Cal. App. 3d 57, 69, 193 Cal. Rptr. 248 (citing Restatement (Second) of Agency § 213; criticized for its analysis of concurrent cause doctrine in Century Transit Sys., Inc. v. American Empire Surplus Lines Ins. Co. (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 121, 128-129 n.6, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 567)]. Negligent hiring may form the basis of a claim for punitive damages against the employer [see Civ. Code § 3294(b); see also § 248.18[1]]. However, the employer is not an insurer of the safety of every person with whom its employees come into contact, and there must be a connection between the employment and the injury to the third party to hold the employer liable [Mendoza v. City of Los Angeles (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 1333, 1341, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 525 (employer not liable for off-duty police officer's shooting and killing fiance with personal firearm while intoxicated, even though employer may have had reason to know of police officer's excessive drinking)].

Liability under this theory requires more than just the existence of an employer-employee relationship. In the case of negligent hiring, the employer must, prior to the hiring, have had reason to believe that an undue risk of harm to others would exist because of the employment [see Roman Catholic Bishop v. Superior Court (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 1556, 1566-1567, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 399 (Church not liable for sexual abuse of minor by priest in the absence of any history of abuse and priest's right to privacy prevented Church from investigating priest's sexual behavior); Underwriters Ins. Co. v. Purdie (1983) 145 Cal. App. 3d 57, 69, 193 Cal. Rptr. 248 (quoting from Restatement (Second) of Agency § 213, cmt. d); see also Golden W. Broadcasters, Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 947, 954, 171 Cal. Rptr. 95 (burden on plaintiff to present facts to refute employer's contention of lack of prior knowledge of any propensity for violence)]. To state a claim for negligent hiring, a plaintiff must allege facts showing that the employer knew or should have known that an employee would act in a certain manner, and that the employee did in fact act in that manner [Doe v. Capital Cities (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 1038, 1055, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 122] .

Liability for negligent hiring can be imposed only when the employer knows, or should know, that the employee, because of past behavior or other factors, is unfit for the specific tasks to be performed [Federico v. Superior Court (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 1207, 1215, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 370 ; see, e.g., Hawkins v. Wilton (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 936, 943-944, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1 (security guard at apartment building was known to be unfit and dangerous)]. For example, even if an employer is aware of an employee's prior convictions for sexually molesting juvenile males, and could have foreseen that the employee's duties at a hair-styling school would entail some degree of contact with young males, the employer's actions in hiring the employee to manage and supervise the training of hair-styling students will not be construed as unreasonable. The employee's position required him only to supervise adult students and perform administrative tasks for the hair-styling college; his prior convictions did not involve students or customers of the hairdressing establishments in which he was employed at the time the offenses were committed; there was no connection between the employee's abnormal sexual interest in children and his profession, and nothing in the employee's history would have indicated to the employer that the employee posed a threat of harm to minors he might encounter in the course of his work [Federico v. Superior Court (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 1207, 1215, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 370] .

An employer cannot be held directly liable for negligence in hiring or retaining an employee who commits an assault or battery unless the employer has violated a legal duty owed to the victim. In one case, for example, the victim of a battery by an employee argued that the employer was negligent in failing to conduct a background check that was thorough enough to discover the employee's prior juvenile delinquency record. Plaintiff did not prove, however, that the employer had a legal duty to conduct that thorough an investigation before hiring or retaining the employee, nor that the employer was otherwise on notice of the employee's propensity for violence. In rejecting plaintiff's claim of negligent hiring or retention, the court also noted that juvenile records are made confidential by statute and imposing a duty to uncover these records would be inconsistent with that confidentiality [Flores v. AutoZone West, Inc. (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 373, 384, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 178].

The negligent-hiring theory of liability applies to the selection of independent contractors, as well as to the hiring of employees [see Holman v. State of California (1975) 53 Cal. App. 3d 317, 336, 124 Cal. Rptr. 773 ; see also Risley v.

Lenwell (1954) 129 Cal. App. 2d 608, 622-625, 277 P.2d 897 ; Restatement (Second) of Torts § 411)]. For discussion of the potential liability of the hirer of an independent contractor, see § 248.22.

Because the employer-employee relationship ends on the termination of employment, an employer cannot be held liable for the negligent hiring and retention of an unfit employee for harm inflicted by the employee after his or her employment has been terminated, even if the former employee initially met the plaintiff while working for the employer [Phillips v. TLC Plumbing, Inc. (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 1133, 1144-1145, 91 Cal. Rptr. 3d 864 (employer not liable for injury caused by former employee two years after employment was terminated, even though victim met former employee while latter was working for employer)].

When a plaintiff seeks to impose on an employer both vicarious liability for the tort of an employee and direct liability for negligent hiring and retention of that employee, the trial court does not err when allowing the plaintiff to introduce evidence of the employee's unfitness in order to establish the negligent hiring and retention claim, even if that evidence would be inadmissible as proof that the employee was negligent on the occasion that forms the basis for plaintiff's suit. However, the court should instruct the jury to limit its use of the evidence to only those claims for which it may properly be used [Diaz v. Carcamo (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 339, 349-351, 106 Cal. Rptr. 3d 306] . The evidence may be admitted for this limited purpose even if the employer concedes it would be vicariously liable if the employee is found liable, as the direct liability of the employer is separate from the employer's vicarious liability. Evidence of the employer's separate tortious conduct, if present, is necessary to establish the proper percentage of fault of each party when apportioning liability for noneconomic damages under Civ. Code § 1431.1 [Diaz v. Carcamo (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 339, 351, 106 Cal. Rptr. 3d 306] . The apportioning of fault under the Civil Code is described briefly in § 248.21, and more fully in Ch. 300, Indemnity and Contribution.

For a form of complaint that includes an allegation that the employer should be held directly liable based on negligent hiring or retention, see § 248.41.

[3] Negligent Supervision or Training of Employee

An employer may be liable for a negligent failure to supervise its employees adequately [City of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (1973) 33 Cal App. 3d 778, 783, 109 P.2d 365 ; see Restatement (Second) of Agency § 213; see also Federico v. Superior Court (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 1207, 1216, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 370 ; Underwriters Ins. Co. v. Purdie (1983) 145 Cal. App. 3d 57, 62, 69, 193 Cal. Rptr. 248 (criticized for its analysis of concurrent cause doctrine in Century Transit Sys., Inc. v. American Empire Surplus Lines Ins. Co. (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 121, 128-129 n.6, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 567)]. One court has suggested that such a theory of action must be based on knowledge by the employer that the employee is a person who cannot be trusted to act properly without being supervised and, as such, adds little, if anything, to the concept of liability for negligent hiring [Noble v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 654, 663-664, 109 Cal. Rptr. 269 (involving nonemployee agents)]. This view does not account for the otherwise qualified and responsible employee who is assigned a task that he or she is unqualified to perform [cf. Lehmuth v. Long Beach Unified Sch. Dist. (1960) 53 Cal. 2d 544, 550-553, 2 Cal. Rptr. 279, 348 P.2d 887 (school district independently liable for injuries caused by failure to supervise students properly)]. However, in a wrongful termination action the employer may not be liable to the plaintiff for negligent supervision. One court of appeal held, following Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 698 n.39, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P. 2d 373 , that no tort damages were available for negligent supervision that resulted in an employee's missing a meeting, but that was only a contributing cause of a termination decision [Hine v. Dittrich (1991) 228 Cal. App. 3d 59, 64, 278 Cal. Rptr. 330 ; but compare Lazar v. Superior Court (1996) 12 Cal. 4th 631, 647-648, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 377, 909 P. 2d 981 (narrowing application of Hine holding)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Liability to Third Parties for Negligent Supervision of Employee. A negligent retention/supervision theory would appear to be available under Hart v. National Mortgage & Land Co. (1987) 189 Cal. App.

3d 1420, 235 Cal. Rptr. 68 , where the plaintiff contended that defendants were negligent because of a supervisor's failure to act to restrain or remove a co-worker who had been reported by the plaintiff for harassing the plaintiff. Individuals or business entities providing the types of services listed in Civil Code § 51.9 would seemingly be liable to third parties for retaining or failing to control or supervise an employee who engages in sexual harassment. By Richard P. Hill

§ 248.13 Employer Ratification of Employee Conduct

An employer who subsequently ratifies the act of an employee is liable for the act, even if the act might otherwise be considered as outside the scope of employment [Jameson v. Gavett (1937) 22 Cal. App. 2d 646, 652, 71 P. 2d 937 ; see Civ. Code § 2339]. Courts that have found liability through ratification have not been called on to distinguish whether that liability is direct or only an extension of vicarious liability through respondeat superior [see Alhino v. Starr (1980) 112 Cal. App. 3d 158, 174-175, 169 Cal. Rptr. 136 ; Coats v. Construction & Gen. Laborers Local No. 185 (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 908, 914, 93 Cal. Rptr. 639 ; *Weber v. Regardless of the nature of the liability, punitive damages may be recovered if ratification is established [Civ. Code § 3294(b); see § 248.18[1]]. For discussion of what constitutes authorization or ratification, see § 248.18[3].

The doctrine of respondeat superior, literally "let the master answer," provides that an employer or principal is vicariously liable for the wrongful conduct of his or her employees or agents committed within the scope of the employment or agency [see, e.g., Perez v. Van Groningen & Sons, Inc. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 962, 967, 227 Cal. Rptr. 106, 719 P.2d 676 ; Rodgers v. Kemper Constr. Co. (1975) 50 Cal. App. 3d 608, 617-618, 124 Cal. Rptr. 143 ; see also Civ. Code § 2338 (liability of principal for torts of agent); Garton v. Title Ins. & Trust Co. (1980) 106 Cal. App. 3d 365, 375-376, 165 Cal. Rptr. 449 (discussing applicability of vicarious liability principles to tortfeasors working for several employers in varying capacities)]. The rationale for the doctrine is that, because the use of employees or agents benefits the employer or principal, the torts of employees or agents are imputed to their hirers for purposes of assigning liability. The liability is "vicarious" because the employer or principal is held liable even if the employer or principal has not personally engaged in wrongful conduct [see Roberts v. Craig (1954) 124 Cal. App. 2d 202, 208, 268 P.2d 500] . Respondeat superior applies to public and private employers alike [Mary M. v. City of Los Angeles (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 202, 209-210, 285 Cal. Rptr. 99, 814 P.2d 1341 ; see Gov. Code § 815.2(a) (stating rule for liability of public entity)].

Although earlier authorities sought to justify the respondeat superior doctrine on theories such as "control" by the master of the servant, the master's "privilege" in being permitted to employ another, the third party's innocence in comparison to the master's selection of the servant, or the master's "deep pocket" to pay for the loss, the modern justification for vicarious liability is a rule of policy, a deliberate allocation of a risk. The losses caused by the torts of employees are placed on the employer as a cost of doing business. The rule of respondeat superior is based in part on the rationale that, between the employer who has voluntarily engaged in an enterprise that may pose some risk of harm to others and the injured third party, fairness supports requiring the employer to bear the loss [see Hinman v. Westinghouse Elec. Co. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 956, 959-960, 88 Cal. Rptr. 188, 471 P.2d 988] . Respondeat superior also applies to a household that employs domestic help. Although not a business enterprise, a household is better equipped than its domestic help to absorb the risk by purchasing adequate insurance [Miller v. Stouffer (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 70, 80, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 454] . Courts have also justified the rule on the ground that the employer is better able to absorb the losses and distribute them, through prices, rates, or liability insurance, to the public [Hinman v. Westinghouse Elec. Co. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 956, 959-960, 88 Cal. Rptr. 188, 471 P.2d 988] . California courts have long recognized that an employer's responsibility for the torts of its employees extends beyond its actual or possible control of the servant to injuries that are the "risks of the enterprise" [see Hinman v. Westinghouse Elec. Co. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 956, 960, 88 Cal. Rptr. 188, 471 P.2d 988 (citing Carr. v. Wm. C. Crowell Co. (1946) 28 Cal. 2d 652, 655-656, 171 P.2d 5 , among other cases)].

Recent California Supreme Court decisions have articulated three reasons for applying the doctrine of respondeat superior [Mary M. v. City of Los Angeles (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 202, 209, 285 Cal. Rptr. 99, 814 P.2d 1341 ; Perez v. Van Groningen & Sons, Inc. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 962, 967, 227 Cal. Rptr. 106, 719 P.2d 676] :

- To prevent recurrence of tortious conduct;
- To give greater assurance of compensation for the victim; and
- To ensure that the victim's losses will be equitably borne by those who benefit from the enterprise that gave rise to the injury.

The Court has given great weight to these policy factors in determining whether to attach vicarious liability in different situations [see Mary M. v. City of Los Angeles (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 202, 214-216, 285 Cal. Rptr. 99, 814 P.2d 1341 (city liable for sexual assault by on-duty police officer); John R. v. Oakland Unified Sch. Dist. (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 438, 447-452, 256 Cal. Rptr. 766, 769 P.2d 948 (school district not liable for sexual assault by teacher); Miller v. Stouffer (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 70, 77, 81, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 454 ; see also § 248.17 for discussion of employer liability for intentional torts].

To recover from an employer under respondeat superior, a plaintiff must establish both that an employment relationship exists between the tortfeasor and the defendant and that the tort was committed within the scope of the tortfeasor's employment [see, e.g., Alma W. v. Oakland Unified Sch. Dist. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 133, 139, 176 Cal. Rptr. 287 ; Golden W. Broadcasters, Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 947, 955, 171 Cal. Rptr. 95] . For discussion of rules governing the determination of whether an employment relationship exists, see § 248.15. For discussion of the criteria for determining the scope of employment, see § 248.16. For a form of a complaint for damages arising from the acts of an employee and alleging employer liability under respondeat superior, see § 248.40[1].

In addition, an employer cannot be vicariously liable for the negligence of an employee if there is no causal connection between that negligence and the plaintiff's injuries [Dixon v. City of Livermore (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 32, 42-47, 25 Cal. Rptr. 3d 50] .

PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

21-248 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 248.15

AUTHOR: Richard P. Hill Editorial Consultant Richard P. Hill maintains his civil litigation practice as a partner in Moody & Hill in San Francisco. Mr. Hill is a 1971 graduate of Boalt Hall School of Law at the University of California, Berkeley, and is a long-time continuing legal education lecturer for CEB and Hastings School of Law/CLE in the field of employment law.

§ 248.15 Who Is an Employee for Purposes of Employer Liability

[1] In General

An employee is one who is subject to his or her employer's right of control with respect to any act, labor, or work to be done in the course and scope of the employment [see Gipson v. Davis Realty Co. (1963) 215 Cal. App. 2d 190, 205, 30 Cal. Rptr. 253 ; see also Lab. Code § 2750 ("contract of employment" defined)]. The term "servant" is synonymous with the term "employee" [Gipson v. Davis Realty Co. (1963) 215 Cal. App. 2d 190, 205, 30 Cal. Rptr. 253] .

Evidence that a person who hires another withholds income taxes or social security taxes, pays unemployment taxes, or carries workers' compensation insurance may support a finding of an employment relationship [see Corrigan v. Cox (1967) 254 Cal. App. 2d 919, 924, 62 Cal. Rptr. 733] . The converse, however, is of no significance in establishing a nonemployment relationship. An employer cannot change the status of an employee to one of independent contractor by illegally requiring the employee to assume the burdens that the law imposes directly on the employer [Toyota Motor Sales U.S.A., Inc. v. Superior Court (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 864, 877, 269 Cal. Rptr. 647] .

Although most employees work for monetary compensation such as salaries, hourly wages, or commissions, monetary compensation is not an essential element of an employer-employee relationship [see Eye v. Kafer, Inc. (1962) 202 Cal. App. 2d 449, 453, 20 Cal. Rptr. 841] . Thus, an employment relationship may exist between spouses [see Workman v. City of San Diego (1968) 267 Cal. App. 2d 36, 39, 72 Cal. Rptr. 509] or between parent and child [see Hughes v. Quackenbush (1934) 1 Cal. App. 2d 349, 357, 37 P.2d 99] .

However, unpaid volunteers of public agencies are excluded from the definition of "employee" for workers' compensation purposes, and this exclusion has been used to prevent a city from being liable under the doctrine of respondeat superior for the alleged tort of an unpaid volunteer [Munoz v. City of Palmdale (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 367, 368-369, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 229 (alleged tortfeasor was volunteer at city's senior center); see Lab. Code § 3352(i)]. The court in that case rejected the argument that the city's right to control the volunteer's actions, normally an indication of an employer-employee relationship [see § 248.15[2]] was sufficient to overcome the unpaid volunteer exclusion [Munoz v. City of Palmdale (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 367, 372, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 229] .

If a person is performing work and labor for another, a prima facie showing of an employer-employee relationship is established, and the person is presumed to be an employee in the absence of evidence to the contrary [Pierson v. Holly Sugar Corp. (1951) 107 Cal. App. 2d 298, 301, 237 P.2d 28] . Additionally, Lab. Code § 2750.5, which provides a rebuttable presumption that a worker providing services for which a license is required is an employee rather than an independent contractor, and denies independent contractor status to a person who does not have a license if one is required for the work, applies to tort cases as well as to workers' compensation cases [Foss v. Anthony Indus. (1983) 139 Cal. App. 3d 794, 797-799, 189 Cal. Rptr. 31] . The court of appeal has held that this Labor Code provision may subject a homeowner who employs an unlicensed worker to tort liability for injuries that the worker sustains while performing a job for which a license is required [Mendoza v. Brodeur (2006) 142 Cal. App. 4th 72, 80-81, 47 Cal. Rptr. 3d 310 ; Rosas v. Dishong (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 815, 821-823, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 339] .

In addition, even assuming that a homeowner who employs an unlicensed worker may be deemed the worker's employer for purposes of tort liability for the worker's injury, California courts have thus far rejected attempts to impose on homeowners a duty to comply with OSHA safety regulations, at least when the homeowner can show that the worker was hired to perform "household domestic service" within the meaning of a statutory OSHA exclusion provision [see Lab. Code § 6303(b)]. While that phrase is not defined in the statute, the courts have held that it includes tree trimming [Fernandez v. Lawson (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 31, 36-38, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 422, 71 P.3d 779]. In concluding that tree trimming was a "household domestic service," the California Supreme Court noted that the phrase likely refers to the performance of tasks in and outside a private residence and implies duties that are personal to the homeowner. The Court also noted that homeowners would be ill-equipped to understand or comply with OSHA requirements, suggesting that the regulations were probably intended to apply only to commercial businesses, although the Court stopped short of holding that the regulations could never be applied to a homeowner [see Fernandez v. Lawson (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 31, 36-38, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 422, 71 P.3d 779].

For discussion of the right to control as a criterion for the existence of an employment relationship, see § 248.15[2]. For discussion of the distinctions between employment relationships and agency relationships, see § 248.15[3]. For discussion of the distinctions between employment relationships and independent contractor relationships, see § 248.15[4]. For a form for use in an answer denying the existence of an employment relationship, see § 248.51.

The key factor in determining whether an employment relationship exists is whether the employer has the right to exercise control over the employee, regardless of whether or not that potential control is actually exercised with respect to all of the employee's duties [City of Los Angeles v. Vaughn (1961) 55 Cal. 2d 198, 201, 10 Cal. Rptr. 457, 358 P.2d 913 ; see Tieberg v. Unemployment Ins. App. Bd. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 943, 946-947, 949-950, 88 Cal. Rptr. 175, 471 P.2d 975] . If the defendant has such a right of control over the tortfeasor, an employment relationship exists even if control was not being exercised at the time of plaintiff's injury [see Eye v. Kafer, Inc. (1962) 202 Cal. App. 2d 449, 453, 20 Cal. Rptr. 841 (defendant bar owner held liable for assault on patron by temporary employee)]. The right to discharge an employee at will without cause is evidence of the employer's right to control [City of Los Angeles v. Vaughn (1961) 55 Cal. 2d 198, 201,10 Cal. Rptr. 457, 358 P.2d 913 ; Toyota Motor Sales U.S.A., Inc. v. Superior Court (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 864, 875, 269 Cal. Rptr. 647] .

The control must encompass both the means and manner of performance of the work. If control pertains only to the result of the work and not to the means by which it is accomplished, the relationship is one of independent contractor rather than employee [Millsap v. Federal Express Corp. (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 425, 431, 277 Cal. Rptr. 807 ; see Societa per Azioni de Navigazione Italia v. City of Los Angeles (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 446, 458, 183 Cal. Rptr. 51, 645 P.2d 102 ; see also Tieberg v. Unemployment Ins. Appeals Bd. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 943, 946-947, 88 Cal. Rptr. 175, 471 P.2d 975 (freelance television writers held to be employees for unemployment insurance purposes); Rogers v. Whitson (1964) 228 Cal. App. 2d 662, 671, 39 Cal. Rptr. 849] .

A scholarship sponsor that exercises control by providing that the scholarship will terminate if the student's grades fall below a designated level is not an employer for purposes of imposing vicarious liablity for the torts of the beneficiaries even if the scholarship program will improve the labor pool from which the sponsor may hire employees [Randolph v. Budget Rent-A-Car (9th Cir. 1996) 97 F.3d 319, 326 (applying Lab. Code § 2750; recognizing that situations might exist in which a student trainee could be considered an employee)].

[3] Employees and Agents Distinguished

An agent is one who represents another in dealings with third parties [Civ. Code § 2295; see Store of Happiness v. Carmona & Allen (1957) 152 Cal. App. 2d 266, 269, 312 P.2d 1104] . An agency may be specific (created for a particular act or transaction) or general [see Civ. Code § 2297].

PRACTICE TIP:

Attend to Doctrine of Ostensible Agency. In pleading and seeking proof on agency relationships, it should be remembered that the doctrine of ostensible agency and authority (Civil Code §§ 2300, 2317) can be a potent litigation tool with respect to tort theories such as fraud, negligent misrepresentation, intentional interference with contract, intentional interference with prospective business advantage, etc.
By Richard P. Hill

A single individual may be both an employee and an agent, but the terms "employee" and "agent" are not synonymous [Gipson v. Davis Realty Co. (1963) 215 Cal. App. 2d 190, 205, 30 Cal. Rptr. 253] . One may be an agent although not an employee if the person has been authorized to represent the principal with regard to a particular transaction or to accomplish a particular purpose [see, e.g., Garton v. Title Ins. & Trust Co. (1980) 106 Cal. App. 3d 365, 376, 165 Cal. Rptr. 449 (employee of real estate broker may be agent of title company with regard to preparation of documents for escrow)]. In other words, an agent is distinguished from an employee by the agent's "representative" powers and "derivative authority" [Gipson v. Davis Realty Co. (1963) 215 Cal. App. 2d 190, 206, 30 Cal. Rptr. 253] . A principal cannot be vicariously liable on the basis of respondeat superior for the acts of an agent who is not an employee, if the conduct on which the suit is based is not within the apparent or actual authority of the agent while acting for the principal [see Asplund v. Selected Invs. in Fin. Equities, Inc. (2000) 86 Cal. App. 4th 26, 45-49, 103 Cal. Rptr. 2d 34 (mutual fund brokerage not vicariously liable for acts of independent contractor representative in selling investment product not affiliated with brokerage)]. For further discussion of the liability of a principal for the acts of a nonemployee agent, see Ch. 427, Principal and Agent .

[4] Employees and Independent Contractors Distinguished

[a] Employer Generally Not Liable for Independent Contractor's Torts

Although employers and principals are subject to vicarious liability under the doctrine of respondeat superior for the torts of their employees and agents, the general rule is that a person who employs an independent contractor is not vicariously liable for the torts of the contractor [Schmidlin v. Alta Planing Mill Co. (1915) 170 Cal. 589, 591, 150 P. 983 ; Anderson v. Chancellor W. Oil Dev. Corp. (1975) 53 Cal. App. 3d 235, 239, 125 Cal. Rptr. 640] . However, there are many exceptions to this general rule of nonliability. For discussion of the application of respondeat superior liability for conduct of independent contractors, see § 248.22.

[b] Relevant Factors

The categories of employee and independent contractor are in general mutually exclusive; an individual's status does not vary depending of the nature of the function the individual was performing at the time of the accident [see Briggs v. Lawrence (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 605, 614-615, 281 Cal. Rptr. 578] . In determining whether an individual is an employee or an independent contractor, the most important factor is the right of control [Flores v. Brown (1952) 39 Cal. 2d 622, 628, 248 P.2d 922 ; Toyota Motor Sales U.S.A., Inc. v. Superior Court (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 864, 875, 269 Cal. Rptr. 647 (characterizing all other factors as secondary elements); see § 248.15[2]]. Other factors to be taken into consideration are (1) whether or not the one performing the services is engaged in a distinct occupation or business; (2) whether, in the locality, the kind of occupation or business is one in which the work is usually done under the direction of a principal or by a specialist without supervision; (3) the skill required in the particular occupation or business; (4) whether the principal or worker supplies the instrumentalities, tools, and place of work; (5) the length of time for which the services are to be performed; (6) the method of payment, whether based on time or by the job; (7) whether or not the work is part of the regular business of the alleged principal; and (8) whether or not the parties believe that they are creating an employment relationship [Malloy v. Fong (1951) 37 Cal. 2d 356, 370-372, 231 P.2d 241 ; Toyota Motor Sales U.S.A., Inc. v. Superior Court (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 864, 874-875, 269 Cal. Rptr. 647 ; Wickham v. Southland Corp. (1985) 168 Cal. App. 3d 49, 57-58 n.4, 213 Cal. Rptr. 825 ; see BAJI No. 13.20 (8th ed.); Restatement (Second) of Agency § 220].

Whereas the presence of complete or absolute control will support a finding that the relationship is one of employment, the converse is not necessarily true, that is, that the lack of absolute control means there is no employment relationship. It does not follow that, because there is a certain amount of freedom inherent in the nature of the work that one is called on to do, one becomes an independent contractor [Briggs v. Lawrence (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 605, 618, 281 Cal. Rptr. 578] .

It is also important to differentiate between general rights of supervision or review for the purpose of determining a contractor's progress, which are normally exercised by a hirer of an independent contractor, and the immediate, detailed supervision that an employer normally exercises with respect to an employee. Reservation or exercise of the former type of rights alone is not likely to result in a court determination that one who is nominally an independent contractor is in fact an employee [McDonald v. Shell Oil Co. (1955) 44 Cal. 2d 785, 790 Millsap v. Federal Express Corp. (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 425, 433, 277 Cal. Rptr. 807] .

The fact that an agreement or writing designates the relationship of the parties as hirer-independent contractor is not controlling [Anderson v. Badger (1948) 84 Cal. App. 2d 736, 742-743, 191 P.2d 768] . The parties' characterization will be ignored if the parties, by their actual conduct, act like employer-employee. Indeed, the attempt to conceal employment by formal documents purporting to create other relationships have led the courts to disregard the terms whenever the acts and declarations of the parties are inconsistent with the labels [Toyota Motor Sales U.S.A., Inc. v. Superior Court (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 864, 877, 269 Cal. Rptr. 647] .

Whether an individual is an employee or an independent contractor is a question of fact if it is dependent on resolution of disputed evidence or inferences [Fisher v. San Pedro Peninsula Hosp. (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 590, 608-609 n.6, 262 Cal. Rptr. 842] . It becomes one of law, however, if only one inference can be drawn from the evidence [Toyota Motor Sales U.S.A., Inc. v. Superior Court (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 864, 872, 269 Cal. Rptr. 647 ; see S.G. Borello & Sons, Inc. v. Department of Indus. Relations (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 341, 349, 256 Cal. Rptr. 543, 769 P.2d 399 (workers' compensation case)]. Ultimately, the determination must be made in the context of the purpose behind the particular application of vicarious liability at issue in the case [see Fisher v. San Pedro Peninsula Hosp. (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 590, 608-609 n.6, 262 Cal. Rptr. 842 (expressing "grave doubts" as to whether staff doctors are independent contractors with hospital for purposes of sexual harassment cause of action under Fair Employment and Housing Act, Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.); see also Toyota Motor Sales U.S.A., Inc. v. Superior Court (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 864, 878 n.10, 269 Cal. Rptr. 647 (placing respondeat superior liability on pizza franchisee for torts of driver while making delivery is consistent with rationale behind doctrine, that business enterprise should be liable for risks inherent in, or created by, operation of enterprise)].

Although not necessarily controlling, standards under workers' compensation, unemployment insurance, and other statutes can all be considered by the courts as "useful" in determining the tortfeasor's employment status in a third-party tort claim lodged against the tortfeasor's alleged employer [see Fleming v. Foothill-Montrose Ledger (1977) 71 Cal. App. 3d 681, 688-689, 139 Cal. Rptr. 579 (news carrier-vendor held to be independent contractor)]. For discussion of the applicability of workers compensation authority in determining scope of employment issues in tort cases, see § 248.16[3].

[c] Rebuttable Presumption in Case of Building Contractors

There is a rebuttable presumption affecting the burden of proof that a worker who performs services for which a license is required under Bus. & Prof'l Code § 7000 et seq., governing building contractors, or who performs services for a person who is required to obtain such a license, is an employee rather than an independent contractor [Lab. Code § 2750.5]. Proof of independent contractor status, which may rebut the presumption, includes satisfactory proof of the following:

(1) The individual has the right to control, and discretion in the manner of, performance of the contract for services in that the result of the work and not the means by which it is accomplished is the primary factor bargained for [Lab. Code § 2750.5(a)];

(2) The individual is customarily engaged in an independently established business [Lab. Code § 2750.5(b)]; and

(3) The individual's independent contractor status is bona fide and not a subterfuge [Lab. Code § 2750.5(c)].

A bona fide independent contractor status is evidenced by the presence of the following cumulative factors [Lab. Code § 2750.5(c)]:

(1) Substantial investment other than personal services in the business;

(2) Holding out that one is in business for oneself;

(3) Bargaining for a contract to complete a specific project for compensation by project rather than by time;

(4) Control over the time and place in which the work is performed;

(5) Supplying the tools or instrumentalities used in the work other than tools and instrumentalities normally and customarily provided by employees;

(6) Hiring employees;

(7) Performing work that is not ordinarily in the course of the principal's business;

(8) Performing work that requires a particular skill;

(9) Holding a license pursuant to the Business and Professions Code;

(10) The parties' intent that the work relationship is that of independent contractor; or

(11) The fact that the relationship is not severable or terminable at will by the principal, but gives rise to an action for breach of contract.

The history and terminology of Lab. Code § 2750.5 indicates that the statute was intended to apply to third-party tort claims as well as to workers' compensation proceedings. The statute codifies the general tort standard for independent-contractor status, in that Labor Code provisions concerning employment status have long been cited by California courts in tort cases involving injuries to third parties [Foss v. Anthony Indus. (1983) 139 Cal. App. 3d 794, 797-799, 189 Cal. Rptr. 31] .

A worker may be estopped from asserting the presumption created by Lab. Code § 2750.5 if the worker affirmatively lies about having a license, or initially informs the hirer that he or she has a license but then loses the license while the work is being performed and does not inform the hirer of the change in status [see, e.g., Chin v. Namvar (2008) 166 Cal. App. 4th 994, 1006-1007, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 294].

[5] Borrowed Employees: Special and Dual Employments

If one employer (the "general" employer) lends an employee to another employer and relinquishes its right of control over the employee's activities to the borrowing employer, a "special-employment" relationship is created between the borrowed employee and the borrowing employer [Marsh v. Tilley Steel Co. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 486, 492, 162 Cal. Rptr. 320, 606 P.2d 355] . For the duration of this relationship, the special or borrowing employer is solely liable in tort under the doctrine of respondeat superior for the special employee's job-related torts [Societa per Azioni de Navigazione Italia v. City of Los Angeles (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 446, 456, 183 Cal. Rptr. 51, 645 P.2d 102 ; Marsh v. Tilley Steel Co. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 486, 492, 162 Cal. Rptr. 320, 606 P.2d 355] .

A special employment relationship may be negated, and the general employer remains liable, by proof that the general employer has not relinquished its right to control the employee [see Marsh v. Tilley Steel Co. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 486, 492, 162 Cal. Rptr. 320, 606 P.2d 355] . Courts have held that evidence of the following factors tends to negate the existence of a special employment [Marsh v. Tilley Steel Co. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 486, 492, 162 Cal. Rptr. 320, 606 P.2d 355 ; Von Beltz v. Stuntman, Inc. (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 1467, 1487, 255 Cal. Rptr. 755] :

- The employee is not paid by and cannot be discharged by the borrowing employer;
- The employee is skilled and has substantial control over the operational details of his or her work;
- The employee is not engaged in the borrowing employer's usual business;
- The employee is borrowed for only a brief period of time;
- The employee continues to use tools and equipment furnished by the lending employer while working for the borrowing employer.

If both the borrowing and lending employers share control of an employee's work, a "dual employment" arises, and the general employer remains concurrently and simultaneously, jointly and severally liable for the employee's torts committed within the scope of the employment [Societa per Azioni de Navigazione Italia v. City of Los Angeles (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 446, 460, 183 Cal. Rptr. 51, 645 P.2d 102 ; Marsh v. Tilley Steel Co. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 486, 494-495, 162 Cal. Rptr. 320, 606 P.2d 355 ; see also Stevens v. Roman Catholic Bishop of Fresno (1975) 49 Cal. App. 3d 877, 889-891, 123 Cal. Rptr. 171 (priest was dual employee of both local and regional church authorities)].

§ 248.16 Employee Conduct Within the Scope of Employment

[1] Determination a Question of Fact

Under the doctrine of respondeat superior, an employer is vicariously liable for the torts of his or her employees if those torts are committed within the scope of the tortfeasor's employment [Munyon v. Ole's, Inc. (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 697, 701, 186 Cal. Rptr. 424] . The plaintiff has the burden of proving that the employee's tort occurred within the scope of employment [Ducey v. Argo Sales Co. (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 707, 721, 159 Cal. Rptr. 835, 602 P.2d 755 ; Jeffrey E. v. Central Baptist Church (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 718, 722, 243 Cal. Rptr. 128 ; Munyon v. Ole's, Inc. (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 697, 701, 186 Cal. Rptr. 424] .

Whether an employee's tort occurred within the scope of his or her employment is generally a question of fact. However, if the facts are undisputed and no conflicting inferences can be drawn from the facts presented, resolution of the issue becomes a question of law [Mary M. v. City of Los Angeles (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 202, 213, 285 Cal. Rptr. 99, 814 P.2d 1341 ; Hinman v. Westinghouse Elec. Co. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 956, 963, 88 Cal. Rptr. 188, 471 P.2d 988 ; Tryer v. Ojai Valley Sch. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1476, 1480 Jeffrey E. v. Central Baptist Church (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 718, 722, 243 Cal. Rptr. 128 ; Munyon v. Ole's, Inc. (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 697, 701, 186 Cal. Rptr. 424 ; Golden W. Broadcasters, Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 947, 956, 171 Cal. Rptr. 95] . Summary judgment may be granted on the basis of the employee's uncontroverted declaration that he or she was acting in the course of employment unless the opposing party at least asserts some theory to the contrary [see Golden W. Baseball Co. v. Talley (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 1294, 1305, 284 Cal. Rptr. 53] .

For a form for a demurrer by an employer on the ground that the employee was acting outside the scope of employment in causing injury, see § 248.50.

[2] Tests Applied to Determine Whether Conduct Was Within Scope of Employment

Courts have utilized various tests to determine whether or not specific conduct by an employee is within the scope of his or her employment. Older cases focused on the relationship between the employee's conduct and the duties of his or her employment. For example, in one case, the scope-of-employment test was articulated as follows [Jameson v. Gavett (1937) 22 Cal. App. 2d 646, 650-651, 71 P.2d 937] :

1. What are the employee's express duties and was the employee doing them at the time of the tort?

2. Did the tort occur while the employee was pursuing the employer's business interests?

3. Did the employee have express or implied employer authority to do the acts causing plaintiff's injuries?

Under this test, if the answer to any of these questions is affirmative, the employee's conduct is deemed to be within the scope of employment and the employer is liable for plaintiff's injuries [Jameson v. Gavett (1937) 22 Cal. App. 2d 646, 650-651, 71 P.2d 937 ; see also Coats v. Construction & Gen. Laborers Local No. 185 (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 908, 913, 93 Cal. Rptr. 639 (employee acting within scope of employment if employee's conduct was authorized by employer, arose out of employee's performance of services for the employer, was for employer's benefit, or was incidental to the employee's work)].

More recently, courts appear to have taken a broader approach, relying not only on the relationship between the conduct and the employment, but also on the "foreseeability" of the conduct [see Lazar v. Thermal Equip. Corp. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 458, 464-465, 195 Cal. Rptr. 890] . Thus, the determination of the nexus between the conduct and the duties of employment has been viewed as only one part of the test. Even if the conduct is deemed to lie outside the scope of employment under the "nexus" test, the employer may nevertheless be liable if the conduct is "foreseeable," meaning that it is not so unusual or startling that it would seem unfair to include the resultant loss among the other costs of the employer's business [Mary M. v. City of Los Angeles (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 202, 209, 285 Cal. Rptr. 99, 814 P.2d 1341 ; Miller v. Stouffer (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 70, 78, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 454 ; Perez v. Van Groningen & Sons, Inc. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 962, 968, 227 Cal. Rptr. 106, 719 P.2d 676 ; Alma W. v. Oakland Unified Sch. Dist. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 133, 141-142, 176 Cal. Rptr. 287 ; Golden W. Broadcasters, Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 947, 958, 171 Cal. Rptr. 95 ; see Rodgers v. Kemper Constr. Co. (1975) 50 Cal. App. 3d 608, 619, 124 Cal. Rptr. 143] . The inquiry should be whether the risk is one that may fairly be regarded as typical of or broadly incidental to the enterprise undertaken by the employer [Mary M. v. City of Los Angeles (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 202, 209, 285 Cal. Rptr. 99, 814 P.2d 1341 ; Miller v. Stouffer (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 70, 78, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 454] .

The trend is toward application of a dual test under which a tort is deemed to be committed within the scope of employment if either (1) the employee's act or conduct was "foreseeable" in the above sense; or (2) the employee's act or conduct was required by or incident to his or her duties, regardless of whether it could be foreseen by the employer [Jeffrey E. v. Central Baptist Church (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 718, 722, 243 Cal. Rptr. 128 ; Alma W. v. Oakland Unified Sch. Dist. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 133, 141-142, 176 Cal. Rptr. 287 ; Golden W. Broadcasters, Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 947, 956-957, 171 Cal. Rptr. 95] . Thus, tortious conduct that violates an employee's official duties or disregards the employer's express orders may nonetheless be within the scope of employment. So may be acts that provide no benefit to the employer or that are willful or malicious in nature [Mary M. v. City of Los Angeles (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 202, 209, 285 Cal. Rptr. 99, 814 P.2d 1341] .

In determining whether or not an employee's tort was incidental to his or her job duties, courts have held that an employee's duties, and the purpose of his or her employment, are to be broadly construed [Lazar v. Thermal Equip. Corp. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 458, 465, 195 Cal. Rptr. 890 ; Alma W. v. Oakland Unified Sch. Dist. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 133, 139, 176 Cal. Rptr. 287 ; but see Hoblitzell v. City of Ione (2003) 110 Cal. App. 4th 675, 682-684, 2 Cal. Rptr. 3d 8 (city not vicariously liable if building inspector and off-duty police officer posing as building inspector went to work site outside city jurisdiction and harassed contractor for personal reasons unrelated to city employment)]. A corollary to this principle is that, even if an employee was engaged in a specific activity or function that he or she was not hired to perform, the employee may still be found to be acting within the scope of employment if the activity in question is related to the employment or provides an indirect benefit to the employer [Robbins v. Hewlett-Packard Corp. (1972) 26 Cal. App. 3d 489, 494, 103 Cal. Rptr. 184] . For discussion of the "special errand rule," and the effect on employer's liability of torts occurring during social events, see § 248.16[4], [5].

[3] Applicability of Workers' Compensation Cases in Defining Scope of Employment

Under workers' compensation law, an applicant for benefits must establish that the applicant's injury arose out of and in the course of the employment [see Lab. Code § 3600(a)]. Some California courts have held that consideration of workers' compensation case authority is appropriate in tort cases involving the doctrine of respondeat superior, not only in determining the threshold scope of employment issues, but also in the application of corollary rules and exceptions to the scope of employment rule [see Alma W. v. Oakland Unified Sch. Dist. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 133, 143, 176 Cal. Rptr. 287 (risk allocation); Huntsinger v. Glass Containers Corp. (1972) 22 Cal. App. 3d 803, 807, 99 Cal. Rptr. 666 (going and coming rule and exceptions to it in the tort field have strongly parallel rules and exceptions in the workers' compensation system); see also Tryer v. Ojai Valley Sch. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1476, 1482, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 114] . However, courts have also held that workers'-compensation case authority is not controlling in tort cases, because of the differences in the purposes and policies behind the workers' compensation law and the doctrine of respondeat superior [see Blackman v. Great Am. First Sav. Bank (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 598, 604-605, 284 Cal. Rptr. 491 ; Golden W. Broadcasters, Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 947, 958-959, 171 Cal. Rptr. 95 ; see Munyon v. Ole's, Inc. (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 697, 702, 186 Cal. Rptr. 424 ; Alma W. v. Oakland Unified Sch. Dist. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 133, 143, 176 Cal. Rptr. 287 ; Castro v. State of California (1977) 70 Cal. App. 3d 156, 159, 138 Cal. Rptr. 572] .

In one case, for example, the court of appeal refused to apply the "commercial traveler rule," under which a workers' compensation claimant can be acting in the course and scope of employment during the entire period of travel on an employer's business, to a respondeat superior case. An employee who worked as a field service representative for an airplane manufacturer was in an automobile accident while getting food at a fast-food restaurant, hours after he stopped working for the day. The employee was not acting in the scope of employment, even though he was only in that particular city because he had been assigned there temporarily by his employer. The court noted that the activity of getting dinner at a restaurant was purely personal in nature and did not create a risk typical of or broadly incidental to the employee's employment [Sunderland v. Lockheed Martin Aeronautical Sys. Support Co. (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 1, 10-12, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 665] .

In another case, the court of appeal refused to apply the "premises line rule" in the respondeat superior context and held that an employer could not be vicariously liable for an employee's automobile accident that occurred while she was turning into the parking lot on the employer's premises. Under the premises line rule as applied in workers' compensation cases, the employment relationship begins when the employee enters the employer's premises, and injuries sustained in close proximity to the employer's premises may arise out of the employment if sustained in a parking lot used by employees or on public property immediately adjacent to the workplace. In rejecting application of the rule to respondeat superior cases, the court concluded that it would be an arbitrary expansion of employer liability to impose vicarious liability for events that happen to occur in public areas on or near their premises, if those events were neither typical of nor broadly incidental to the employer's particular enterprise [Hartline v. Kaiser Found. Hosps. (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 458, 469-470, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 713] .

[4] Going-and-Coming Rule

[a] Scope and Application

The "going-and-coming rule" is applied by courts to determine whether torts committed while an employee is commuting or traveling constitute employee conduct within the scope of employment. Under the going-and-coming rule, an employee is outside the scope of employment while commuting to and from work, and the employer is not liable for the employee's torts committed during those times [Ducey v. Argo Sales Co. (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 707, 722, 159 Cal. Rptr. 835, 602 P.2d 755 ; Anderson v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 254, 259, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 534 ; Blackman v. Great American First Savings Bank (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 598, 602, 284 Cal. Rptr. 491 ; Munyon v. Ole's, Inc. (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 697, 703, 186 Cal. Rptr. 424 ; Castro v. State of California (1977) 70 Cal. App. 3d 156, 161, 138 Cal. Rptr. 572 ; Robbins v. Hewlett-Packard Corp. (1972) 26 Cal. App. 3d 489, 493-494, 103 Cal. Rptr. 184 ; Harris v. Oro-Dam Constructors (1969) 269 Cal. App. 2d 911, 912, 75 Cal. Rptr. 544] . The rule does not apply when an employee is returning to, rather than commuting, to his or her place of employment [Miller v. Stouffer (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 70, 80-81, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 454] .

The going-and-coming rule also generally applies to an employee while he or she is traveling to or from lunch (or other meal periods), even if the employee is driving a vehicle owned by the employer, unless he or she is also performing an errand for the employer [Peccolo v. City of Los Angeles (1937) 8 Cal. 2d 532, 539, 66 P.2d 651 ; Tryer v. Ojai Valley Sch. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1476, 1482, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 114 ; Gipson v. Davis Realty Co. (1963) 215 Cal. App. 2d 190, 209-210, 30 Cal. Rptr. 253 ; see §§ 248.16[4][b] and 248.16[6] regarding the special errand exception to the going-and-coming rule and off duty employee and break time, respectively].

[b] Exception: Special Errand

If an employee pursues the employer's business during his or her commute time, the going-and-coming rule does not apply, and the employee is viewed as within the scope of employment during his or her entire commute period [Gipson v. Davis Realty Co. (1963) 215 Cal. App. 2d 190, 210, 30 Cal. Rptr. 253] . If an employee is not simply on the way from home to his or her normal place of work or returning from that place to home for his or her own purpose, but is coming from home or returning to it on a special errand either as part of regular duties or at the specific order or request of the employer, the employee is in the scope of employment from the start of the errand until he or she has returned or deviated from the scope of employment for personal reasons [Boynton v. McKales (1956) 139 Cal. App. 2d 777, 789, 294 P.2d 733 ; Anderson v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 254, 259, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 534 (driving coworker to park and ride lot does not come within special errand exception even when employer encourages carpooling); Blackman v. Great Am. First Sav. Bank (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 598, 602-603, 284 Cal. Rptr. 491 (travel to nonrequired but employer-compensated college classes not special errand)].

The special-errand exception applies both to employees who regularly perform work for their employer during commute periods, and to employees who only occasionally do so [Boynton v. McKales (1956) 139 Cal. App. 2d 777, 789, 294 P.2d 733] . Just as the going-and-coming rule applies to employees while commuting and during lunch hour break travel, the special-errand exception applies whether the employer's errands are performed during commute periods or during the employee's lunch period [see Gipson v. Davis Realty Co. (1963) 215 Cal. App. 2d 190, 209-210, 30 Cal. Rptr. 253] . For discussion of an employer's liability for torts committed while the employee is engaged in a social function, see § 248.16[5].

Even if the special-errand exception to the going-and-coming rule is found to be applicable, the employee may yet be found to be outside of the scope of employment if, at the time of the injury, the employee has completely abandoned the employer's business for personal reasons. To constitute an abandonment, however, the departure from the employer's business to pursue a personal errand must be substantial and complete. A mere deviation for personal reasons is insufficient. An employee who is pursuing a business errand and a personal objective simultaneously is still acting within the scope of employment [Felix v. Asai (1987) 192 Cal. App. 3d 926, 932, 237 Cal. Rptr. 718 ; see O'Connor v. McDonald's Rests. (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 25, 29 n.4, 269 Cal. Rptr. 101] .

Whether there has been a deviation so material as to constitute a complete departure by the employee from the course of employment is usually a question of fact. If the evidence clearly shows a complete abandonment, however, the court may make the determination that the employee is outside the scope of employment as a matter of law [Loper v. Morrison (1944) 23 Cal. 2d 600, 605, 145 P.2d 1 ; O'Connor v. McDonald's Rests. (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 25, 30, 269 Cal. Rptr. 101] . Similarly, a court may find as a matter of law that a deviation is insufficiently material to relieve the employer of respondeat superior liability [see Lazar v. Thermal Equip. Corp. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 458, 462-467, 195 Cal. Rptr. 890 (court granted judgment notwithstanding verdict, finding employee within scope of employment)].

In making the determination, a variety of relevant circumstances should be considered and weighed. These factors may include (1) the intent of the employee; (2) the nature, time, and place of the employee's conduct; (3) the work that the employee was hired to do; (4) the incidental acts that the employer should reasonably have expected the employee to do; (5) the amount of freedom allowed the employee in performing his or her duties; and (6) the amount of time consumed in the personal activity [Loper v. Morrison (1944) 23 Cal. 2d 600, 605-606, 145 P.2d 1 ; O'Connor v. McDonald's Rests. (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 25, 30, 269 Cal. Rptr. 101 ; Felix v. Asai (1987) 192 Cal. App. 3d 926, 932-933, 237 Cal. Rptr. 718] . One court has cast the question as whether the employee's deviation was both minor and foreseeable [see Lazar v. Thermal Equip. Corp. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 458, 462-467, 195 Cal. Rptr. 890] .

An employee's attendance at an out-of-town business conference authorized and paid for by the employer can be a special errand for the benefit of the employer under the special errand rule [Jeewarat v. Warner Bros. Entertainment Inc. (2009) 177 Cal. App. 4th 427, 436, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 837]. In such cases, the employee is in the course and scope of employment until the trip is completed. Thus, if the employee intends to drive from the airport to his or her residence at the end of the trip, in the absence of any intervening personal deviations, the special errand continues until the employee arrives at home. The fact that the employee may coincidentally pass his or her place of employment, without stopping, on the way home from the airport, and continue on from there by way of his or her normal commute path, does not change the result that the employee is considered in the course of employment until arriving at his or her residence [Jeewarat v. Warner Bros. Entertainment Inc. (2009) 177 Cal. App. 4th 427, 438, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 837].

[c] Exception: Travel Required by Job Duties

The going-and-coming rule was primarily intended to apply to employees with a single, fixed work location whose job duties do not include driving [see Huntsinger v. Glass Containers Corp. (1972) 22 Cal. App. 3d 803, 809, 99 Cal. Rptr. 666 ; Harris v. Oro-Dam Constructors (1969) 269 Cal. App. 2d 911, 916-917, 75 Cal. Rptr. 544] . Therefore, there is an exception to the rule, apart from the special-errand exception, if the employer requires the employee to furnish a vehicle for use on the job [Ducey v. Argo Sales Co. (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 707, 723, 159 Cal. Rptr. 835, 602 P.2d 755] .

If a business enterprise requires an employee to drive to and from its office in order to have a vehicle available for company business during the day, the risk of accidents during commute time are risks incident to the business [Singh v. Board of Ret. (1996) 41 Cal. App. 4th 1180, 1188, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 220 ; State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Haight (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 223, 242, 252 Cal. Rptr. 162 ; Huntsinger v. Glass Containers Corp. (1972) 22 Cal. App. 3d 803, 810, 99 Cal. Rptr. 666] . Courts have held that an employee whose regular job duties require frequent field work, customer contact, or travel between various locations of the employer is not subject to automatic application of the going-and-coming rule [see Richards v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. (1941) 19 Cal. 2d 236, 241-242, 120 P.2d 650 (insurance salesperson not within going-and-coming rule as a matter of law); Huntsinger v. Glass Containers Corp. (1972) 22 Cal. App. 3d 803, 806, 99 Cal. Rptr. 666 (employee who was required to perform service duties daily, meet customers at their offices, and appear daily at employer's main office for office work and staff meetings, and in addition frequently performed job assignments during commute hours and/or ran special errands for employer while commuting was within scope of employment); see also Ducey v. Argo Sales Co. (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 707, 723, 159 Cal. Rptr. 835, 602 P.2d 755 (house cleaner who traveled from home to one of several employer properties each day, but was not required to go from one place to another during day nor to transport cleaning equipment between job locations was not within exception to going-and-coming rule because travel by personal auto was not inherent in employee's job)].

One court of appeal opinion has suggested that this required-vehicle exception to the coming-and-going rule applies only if the employer requires the use of a vehicle as an integral part of performing the job at disparate locations throughout the course of work hours [Tryer v. Ojai Valley Sch. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1476, 1481-1482, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 114] . However, that suggestion was rejected in a subsequent court of appeal decision in which the court concluded that if the employer requires or reasonably relies upon the employee to make his or her personal vehicle available for use for the employer's benefit, the fact that the employer only rarely makes use of the employee's personal vehicle should not, in and of itself, defeat application of the required-vehicle exception [Lobo v. Tamco (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 297, 303, 105 Cal. Rptr. 3d 718] . In that particular case, the court of appeal, when reversing a summary judgment that had been granted in favor of the employer, noted that the fact that the personal vehicle was needed only rarely when the employee performed his work duties was one of the reasons that the employer required the employee to use his own car and a company car was not provided [Lobo v. Tamco (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 297, 303, 105 Cal. Rptr. 3d 718] .

[d] Exception: Employer Pays for Employee's Commute Time

The going-and-coming rule may be inapplicable in some instances if the employer compensates the employee for his or her work time. If the commute period is made part of the employee's paid workday, the employee remains within the scope of employment during commute periods, and the employer is therefore liable for its employee's torts as long as the employee was using the commute portion of his or her paid workday for its designated purpose. Employer liability is supported by the rationale that the employer chooses to compensate its employees for commute time because the arrangement benefits the employer by geographically expanding the size of the employer's employee-selection pool [Hinman v. Westinghouse Elec. Co. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 956, 962, 88 Cal. Rptr. 188, 471 P.2d 988] .

The California Supreme Court has expressly reserved the question of whether the mere payment of travel expenses, without additional payment for the employee's travel time, reflects a sufficient benefit for the employer so that the employer should bear responsibility to innocent third parties for the risks inherent in the travel. The Court did cite a workers' compensation case that had suggested that the payment of travel expenses must be a substantial inducement to accept the employment, and the place of employment must be an extensive distance from the employee's home, for the going-and-coming rule to be held inapplicable [Hinman v. Westinghouse Elec. Co. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 956, 962-963, 88 Cal. Rptr. 188, 471 P.2d 988 ; see Zenith Nat'l Ins. Co. v. Workmen's Comp. Appeals Bd. (1967) 66 Cal. 2d 944, 947-948, 59 Cal. Rptr. 622, 428 P.2d 606 (payment of $10 per day to induce employee to commute 130 miles sufficient to hold injury during commute within scope of employment for purposes of workers' compensation benefits); cf. Anderson v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 254, 259, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 534 (employer's payment of travel expenses did not bring employee's commute time within scope of employment under tort law even though it allowed employee to receive workers' compensation benefits); see also Harris v. Oro-Dam Constructors (1969) 269 Cal. App. 2d 911, 917-918, 75 Cal. Rptr. 544 (obtaining of travel-expense benefit in by collective bargaining, standing alone, does not automatically make commuting employees within scope of employment)].

[e] Exception: Special Risk Created by Employment

Under another exception to the going-and-coming rule, one that originated in the workers' compensation context, an employer may be liable for injuries arising from a special risk related to the employment, if the employee would not have been at the scene of the injury but for the employment and if the risk is distinctive in nature or qualitatively greater than risks common to the general public [see Depew v. Crocodile Enters., Inc. (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 480, 487, 73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 673] . The key inquiry, assuming the link to employment is established, is whether the risk of injury from the employee's conduct was foreseeable. The risk is foreseeable if, in the context of the particular enterprise, the employee's conduct is not so unusual or startling that it would seem unfair to include the loss resulting from the conduct among other costs of the employer's business [Bussard v. Minimed, Inc. (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 798, 804, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 675] .

In one case, for example, an employee who left work complaining of illness after being exposed to pesticide fumes for several hours caused an automobile accident, allegedly because she was feeling dizzy and lightheaded. The trial court granted summary judgment for the employer under the going-and-coming rule, but the court of appeal reversed. The court of appeal concluded that the work site pesticide exposure caused a special risk of danger, it was foreseeable that an employee might not be fit to drive after such exposure, and the occurrence of a car accident under those circumstances was not so startling or unusual as to be unforeseeable [Bussard v. Minimed, Inc. (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 798, 806, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 675] . The fact that the employer inquired whether the employee was able to drive safely was not relevant to the imposition of liability under a theory of respondeat superior, because foreseeability of risk arising from or connected to work required no more than a causal connection between a work-related event and the employee's subsequent injury-causing act [Bussard v. Minimed, Inc. (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 798, 806, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 675] .

In another case, by contrast, the court of appeal held that an insufficient link existed between the employment and a death caused by a fatigued employee driving home after working a six-hour shift. In that case, the employee had worked a double shift on the day before the accident, but he had 16 hours off work prior to working the last six-hour shift [Depew v. Crocodile Enters., Inc. (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 480, 488-489, 73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 673] .

[5] Social Functions

California appellate courts have held that attendance at social events, although not part of an employee's normal job duties, may in some instances come under the "special-errand" exception to the going-and-coming rule [see Robbins v. Hewlett-Packard Corp. (1972) 26 Cal. App. 3d 489, 494, 103 Cal. Rptr. 184 ; Boynton v. McKales (1956) 139 Cal. App. 2d 777, 789, 294 P.2d 733] . For a social event to qualify as a special errand, the event must be related to the employee's employment and provide an intended direct or indirect benefit to the employer [Robbins v. Hewlett-Packard Corp. (1972) 26 Cal. App. 3d 489, 495, 103 Cal. Rptr. 184] . Whether or not a particular social event is within the scope of employment is generally a question of fact [Robbins v. Hewlett-Packard Corp. (1972) 26 Cal. App. 3d 489, 495, 103 Cal. Rptr. 184 (employee returning from employer-sponsored annual summer picnic not within scope of employment in that attendance at picnic was voluntary, picnic lacked educational or awards presentations, and bore no relationship to employees' continued employment, performance evaluation, or promotional opportunities); Boynton v. McKales (1956) 139 Cal. App. 2d 777, 790, 294 P.2d 733 (annual employer-sponsored banquet at which employee became intoxicated held to have benefited employer by promoting sales program and continuity of employment)].

Informal social activity at the workplace may also raise the potential for employer liability. Employers have been held liable to injured employees or third parties if after-hours socializing and the furnishing of alcohol occurs with the express or implied permission of the employer, and accidents or physical altercations occur. The foreseeability of fights and other injuries resulting from drinking may support the imposition of liability on the employer if injuries do occur, especially if the employees are encouraged to remain near the jobsite so that the employer may more readily recall them to work [see Rodgers v. Kemper Constr. Co. (1975) 50 Cal. App. 3d 608, 619-621, 124 Cal. Rptr. 143] ; see also Harris v. Trojan Fireworks Co. (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 157, 164-165, 174 Cal. Rptr. 452 (allegations that employer encouraged consumption of alcohol at on-premises social function during normal work hours sufficient to survive demurrer in case involving decedent killed by drunken employee driving home afterwards)].

It has been held, however, that a plaintiff must show more than employee drinking on the employer's premises with the tacit acquiescence of the employer. There must be some endorsement of the drinking as a company activity that is viewed as of some benefit to the employer or as a customary incident of the employment relationship [Harris v. Trojan Fireworks Co. (1984) 155 Cal. App. 3d 830, 836-837, 202 Cal. Rptr. 440 (employer not liable for death caused by drunken employee after leaving on-premises, alcohol-free luncheon hosted by employer because employee purchased alcohol off-site and consumed it in employer's parking lot); Calrow v. Appliance Indus., Inc. (1975) 49 Cal. App. 3d 556, 570-571, 122 Cal. Rptr. 636 (employee was off-duty and on employer's premises for wholly personal reasons and was supplied with liquor by another off-duty employee); see McCarty v. Workmen's Comp. Appeals Bd. (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 677, 681-682, 117 Cal. Rptr. 65, 527 P.2d 617 (workers' compensation case establishing when on-site drinking is within scope of employment)].

[6] Off-Duty and Break Time

Generally, the going-and-coming rule encompasses the time that an employee takes away from work for meals. Under the "lunch-break" rule, the employer is not vicariously liable for the negligence of an employee who is not in the service of his or her employer while taking time away from work for meals [Peccolo v. City of Los Angeles (1937) 8 Cal. 2d 532, 539, 66 P.2d 651 ; Tryer v. Ojai Valley Sch. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1476, 1482, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 114] . However, in some instances, an employee may be found to be acting within the scope of employment for purposes of respondeat superior even during the employee's lunch hour or off-duty hours [see Gipson v. Davis Realty Co. (1963) 215 Cal. App. 2d 190, 209-210, 30 Cal. Rptr. 253] . If the employee combines his or her break time with accomplishment of employer business, the employee remains within the scope of employment for the duration of the relevant break period. Thus, meal and break periods are treated similarly to commute time [see § 248.16[1], [4]]. The employee remains within the scope of employment in both situations unless the employee totally departs from the employment-related purposes of his or her multipurpose mission [Gipson v. Davis Realty Co. (1963) 215 Cal. App. 2d 190, 210-213, 30 Cal. Rptr. 253] .

Employer liability for the torts of employees may also apply, under appropriate circumstances, to employee conduct occurring during employees' off-duty hours. Employees who are off-duty at home, but also "on call" for employer business, are acting within the scope of employment while going to, performing, and returning home from a service call for the employer [Robinson v. George (1940) 16 Cal. 2d 238, 245, 105 P.2d 914] . A public entity may be vicariously liable for the conduct of an off-duty law enforcement officer in the course of making an arrest [Inouye v. County of Los Angeles (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 278, 282-284, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 367 ; cf. Henriksen v. City of Rialto (1993) 20 Cal. App. 4th 1612, 1617-1622, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 308 (city not liable for negligent handling of service revolver by off duty officer not then engaged in any law enforcement activity)].

However, an employee who has been furnished with a company vehicle and is on call while at home does not bring 24-hour employer liability [Le Elder v. Rice (1994) 21 Cal. App. 4th 1604, 1609-1610, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 749] . The focus is strictly on the employee's purpose at the time of the injury-producing accident, and there is no employer liablity if the employee's use of the vehicle at that time was purely personal [Le Elder v. Rice (1994) 21 Cal. App. 4th 1604, 1609-1610, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 749 (involving employee' use of company vehicle for personal errand from and back to home); but see Lazar v. Thermal Equip. Corp. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 458, 462-467, 195 Cal. Rptr. 890 (involving employee on way home from work in company vehicle, which was for his use for emergency after-hour calls; court determined that employee's purpose at time of accident was "minor deviation" rather than "substantial departure" from employer's business based on foreseeability)].

An employee may be in the course and scope of employment while making a business call on his or her cell phone while driving his or her personal vehicle. For example, respondeat superior liability will probably attach if the driver causes an accident while talking on the cell phone for the employer [see Miller v. American Greetings Corp. (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 1055, 1063, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 776]. However, the mere fact that the employee made a work-related call during a trip that is otherwise a personal trip will not necessarily support a finding of employer liability. In one case, for example, the court held as a matter of law that an employer could not be held vicariously liable when the evidence indicated that an employee accidentally hit plaintiff with his car approximately eight minutes after engaging in a brief work-related cell phone call from his vehicle. Despite the fact that the employee regularly used his own vehicle and cell phone to conduct his business for his employer, the employee's uncontradicted testimony was that he was on his way to see an attorney for personal reasons at the time of the accident and was distracted when he looked down to find the attorney's address [Miller v. American Greetings Corp. (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 1055, 1062-1063, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 776].

Respondeat superior liability may arise for conduct committed by an employee on the work premises, but after work hours have ended. The employer may be liable if the employee's presence is endorsed by the express or implied permission of the employer, and the employer either receives a benefit from the employee's presence or the employee's presence is a customary incident of the employment relationship [Rodgers v. Kemper Constr. Co. (1975) 50 Cal. App. 3d 608, 620, 124 Cal. Rptr 143 (employer liable for assault committed by employee who remained on job site after hours to drink and socialize)]. However, an off-duty employee who travels to his or her employer's premises for his or her own purposes, and in the course of doing so commits a tort, remains outside of the scope of employment [Munyon v. Ole's, Inc. (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 697, 700-701, 706, 186 Cal. Rptr. 424] .

As with scope-of-employment questions generally, the determination of whether a tort committed during an employee's off-duty time is within the scope of employment is ordinarily a question of fact [Gipson v. Davis Realty Co. (1963) 215 Cal. App. 2d 190, 210-211, 30 Cal. Rptr 253] . However, it becomes a question of law if the undisputed facts will not support an inference that the employee was acting within the scope of employment [Henriksen v. City of Rialto (1993) 20 Cal. App. 4th 1612, 1617, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 308 ; see also Le Elder v. Rice (1994) 21 Cal. App. 4th 1604, 1607-1608, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 749] .

[7] On-Duty Employee Conduct Unrelated to Employment

[a] Personally Motivated Acts

Employers are not automatically vicariously liable for employee torts simply because the tort occurs on the employer's premises and while the employee is on duty. If the employee's acts are motivated by personal concerns and conduct unrelated to the employee's employment, the employee may be found to have acted outside of the scope of employment [see Lisa M. v. Henry Mayo Newhall Mem'l Hosp. (Dec. 26, 1995, No. S043581) 12 Cal. 4th 291, 299-302, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 510, 907 P.2d 358 (molestation by hospital technician); Jeffrey E. v. Central Baptist Church (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 718, 721, 243 Cal. Rptr. 128 (molestation by church worker); Alma W. v. Oakland Unified Sch. Dist. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 133, 140, 176 Cal. Rptr. 287 (molestation by janitor); Golden W. Broadcasters, Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 947, 957, 171 Cal. Rptr. 95 (personal quarrel and assault unrelated to employment or employment-related dispute)]. For further discussion of employer liability for intentional torts, see § 248.17.

[b] Personal Errands

A substantial deviation or departure by an employee from the employer's business takes the employee outside the scope of employment. If the main purpose of the activity is the employer's business, it does not cease to be within the scope of employment by reason of incidental personal acts, slight delays, or deflections from the most direct route. A personal errand during employment hours continues to be within the scope of employment as long as it is a foreseeable and minor deviation from the employer's business. A decision to stop at a party or a bar, or to begin a vacation, may not be foreseeable. However, a stop at a store to purchase a few items is a foreseeable deviation, which is insufficient to defeat respondeat superior liability [Miller v. Stouffer (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 70, 78-79, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 454 ; State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Haight (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 223, 242-243, 252 Cal. Rptr. 162 ; Lazar v. Thermal Equip. Corp. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 458, 466, 195 Cal. Rptr. 890] .

[c] Effect of Employee Violation of Employer's Rules or Instructions

Respondeat superior liability does not depend on the employee's specific authority to perform the act that results in the plaintiff's injury [Foss v. Anthony Indus. (1983) 139 Cal. App. 3d 794, 801-802, 189 Cal. Rptr. 31 (citing De Mirjian v. Ideal Heating Corp. (1954) 129 Cal. App. 2d 758, 765, 278 P.2d 114)]. Even the fact that the employee's conduct is contrary to the employer's instructions, alone, does not take the employee outside the scope of employment for purposes of respondeat superior liability [Perez v. Van Groningen & Sons, Inc. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 962, 968-971, 227 Cal. Rptr. 106, 719 P.2d 676 ; Foss v. Anthony Indus. (1983) 139 Cal. App. 3d 794, 802, 189 Cal. Rptr. 31 ; see Ingle v. Bay

§ 248.17 Employer Liability for Intentional Torts

[1] In General

Generally, an employer is vicariously liable for employee torts committed within the scope of employment, regardless of whether the employee's conduct is characterized as negligent or as intentionally tortious [see Golden W. Broadcasters, Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 947, 956-957, 171 Cal. Rptr. 95 ; Rodgers v. Kemper Constr. Co. (1975) 50 Cal. App. 3d 608, 621, 124 Cal. Rptr. 143] . The basic standard to be applied in cases of intentional torts is the same as in cases of unintentional torts [see § 248.16, for discussion of employee conduct within the scope of employment].

As in the case of a unintentional tort, in order to prevail in an action seeking to impose vicarious liability on the employer for an employee's intentional tort, the plaintiff must first establish the existence of an employer-employee relationship between the tortfeasor and the person or entity alleged to be vicariously liable [see Garton v. Title Ins. & Trust Co. (1980) 106 Cal. App. 3d 365, 375, 165 Cal. Rptr. 449] . For discussion of the factors involved in establishing such a relationship, see § 248.15.

If a statute governs the liability of a specific employer, that employer cannot be held strictly liable for the intentional torts of an employee that are committed outside the scope of employment, unless the statute clearly demonstrates a legislative intent to abrogate the common law rule that an employer is vicariously liable only if the employee's conduct was within the scope of employment [see Borg-Warner Protective Servs. Corp. v. Superior Court (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 1203, 1207-1212, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 687] . In one case, for example, the plaintiff had contracted for security guards to be provided by the defendant and sought to hold the defendant strictly liable for arson committed by one of the guards, even though the arson was outside the scope of the guard's employment. The plaintiff relied on a statute that made a licensed security guard company "at all times ... legally responsible for the good conduct in the business of each of his or her employees or agents" [see Bus. & Prof'l Code § 7582.15], arguing that the statute made the defendant strictly liable for all actionable conduct regardless of whether the defendant's employee was acting within the scope of employment. The court of appeal disagreed, however, concluding that the legislature was merely codifying the common law rule as to these particular employees and did not intend to abolish the requirement that the actionable conduct occur in the scope of employment in order to impose vicarious liability [Borg-Warner Protective Servs. Corp. v. Superior Court (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 1203, 1207-1210, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 687] .

[2] Assault and Battery

In determining whether an assault or battery was committed within the scope of employment, the courts have generally focused on two factors: (1) the nature of the employee's duties, and (2) the source of any dispute that led to the assault or battery. If the employee's job duties involve the possibility of force being used against others, the employer may be held vicariously liable for the employee's wrongful or excessive use of force in carrying out his or her duties [see Golden W. Broadcasters, Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 947, 957, 171 Cal. Rptr. 95 ; Monty v. Orlandi (1959) 169 Cal. App. 2d 620, 624, 337 P.2d 861 ; Haworth v. Elliott (1944) 67 Cal. App. 2d 77, 81, 153 P.2d 804 ; see also Jameson v. Gavett (1937) 22 Cal. App. 2d 646, 651, 71 P.2d 937 (employer who encouraged workers to expel trespassers held vicariously liable to trespasser-plaintiff; although security and trespasser control were not within tortfeasor's express job duties, employer encouraged employees to perform such tasks and tortfeasor acted in prosecution of employer's business when he assaulted plaintiff)]. For example, an employer who operates a bar may be vicariously liable for the excessive use of force by a "bouncer" in ejecting a patron from the employer's premises [see, e.g., Johnson v. Monson (1920) 183 Cal. 149, 151, 190 P. 635 ; Haworth v. Elliott (1944) 67 Cal. App. 2d 77, 81-82, 153 P.2d 804] .

Even if the employee's job duties do not require or contemplate the use of force, however, a battery may be held to be committed within the scope of employment if it arose out of a dispute that was work-related or that arose in the course of the performance of the employee's job duties [see, e.g., Fields v. Sanders (1947) 29 Cal. 2d 834, 841-842, 180 P.2d 684 (employee truck driver assaulted another person during dispute over traffic mishap); Carr v. Wm. C. Crowell Co. (1946) 28 Cal. 2d 652, 657, 171 P.2d 5 (employer vicariously liable for employee throwing hammer at employee of another contractor after dispute related to job performance); Rodgers v. Kemper Constr. Co. (1975) 50 Cal. App. 3d 608, 621-624, 124 Cal. Rptr.143 (battery on jobsite after hours arose in part because of dispute over rights and duties of employees); Stansell v. Safeway Stores, Inc. (1941) 44 Cal. App. 2d 822, 825-826, 113 P.2d 264 (dispute between store employee and customer over customer's order); Hiroshima v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1936) 18 Cal. App. 2d 24, 27-32, 63 P.2d 340 (dispute over collection by employee of employer's bill)].

An employee who commits an assault or battery while working will not be deemed to be acting within the scope of employment if the conduct is not incidental to the employee's duties or is the result of personal malice not engendered by the employment [see, e.g., Golden W. Broadcasters, Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 947, 957-958, 171 Cal. Rptr. 95 (broadcast employee who engaged in fistfight not related to employment while off duty and drinking in bar was not acting within scope of employment, even though employment brought employee to area and employer furnished employee with company car and per diem payment); Monty v. Orlandi (1959) 169 Cal. App. 2d 620, 624, 337 P.2d 861 (although ejecting disorderly patrons was within bartender's duties, when he ejected his wife over personal dispute and injured bystander, employer was not vicariously liable for bystander's injuries)].

Numerous cases have addressed whether a sexual assault committed by an employee can be within the scope of employment. In John R. v. Oakland Unified Sch. Dist. (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 438, 256 Cal. Rptr. 766, 769 P.2d 948 , the California Supreme Court held that a sexual assault committed by a public school teacher is not within the scope of employment because the act is in no way incident to any duties that a teacher is engaged to perform and may not fairly be said to be a foreseeable risk inherent in the teacher's activities [John R. v. Oakland Unified Sch. Dist. (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 438, 447-452, 256 Cal. Rptr. 766, 769 P.2d 948 (molestation of 14-year-old student participating in school-approved program conducted at teacher's residence)]. Appellate courts have reached the same conclusion in several different situations [see John Y. v. Chaparral Treatment Ctr., Inc. (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 565, 575-576, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 330 (sexual molestation of boy by counselor at residential facility for emotionally disturbed children); Juarez v. Boy Scouts of Am., Inc. (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 377, 394-395, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 12 (sexual assault of boy scout by adult troop leader); Debbie Reynolds Prof'l Rehearsal Studios v. Superior Court (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 222, 226-229, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 514 (sexual assault on minor dance student by instructor in trailer provided by employer); Kimberly M. v. Los Angeles Unified Sch. Dist. (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 545, 547-549, 263 Cal. Rptr. 612 (molestation of five-year-old student by teacher on school premises); Jeffrey E. v. Central Baptist Church (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 718, 722-724, 243 Cal. Rptr. 128 (molestation of child by volunteer Sunday school teacher during church-sponsored home visitations)].

In John R., the Court rejected the view that the inherent authority exercised by a teacher over his or her students should make the employer liable for acts done during the exercise of that authority. Instead, the Court found that the public policies behind the doctrine of respondeat superior--incentive for accident prevention, assurance of compensation for victims, and distribution of loss--would not be advanced by holding school districts liable for sexual assault by teachers [John R. v. Oakland Unified Sch. Dist. (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 438, 451-452, 256 Cal. Rptr. 766, 769 P.2d 948 ; see Kimberly M. v. Los Angeles Unified Sch. Dist. (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 545, 547-549, 263 Cal. Rptr. 612 (refusing to find any distinction based on youth of victim or whether molestation was on or off employer's premises)].

However, in Mary M. v. City of Los Angeles (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 202, 285 Cal. Rptr. 99, 814 P.2d 1341 , the Court reached the opposite conclusion in the case of a sexual assault by an on-duty police officer following a traffic stop. The Court observed that a police officer who detains an individual is acting as the official representative of the state, with all of its coercive power. Inherent in that power is the potential for abuse [Mary M. v. City of L.A. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 202, 216-217, 285 Cal. Rptr. 99, 814 P.2d 1341] . In view of the considerable power and authority that police officers possess, it is neither startling nor unexpected that, on occasion, an officer will misuse that authority by engaging in assaultive conduct. The risk of such tortious conduct is broadly incidental to the enterprise of law enforcement, and, thus, liability for such acts may be imposed on the employing public entity [Mary M. v. City of L.A. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 202, 217-218, 285 Cal. Rptr. 99, 814 P.2d 1341 ; accord, White v. County of Orange (1985) 166 Cal. App. 3d 566, 571-572, 212 Cal. Rptr. 493 ; cf. K. G. v. County of Riverside (2003) 106 Cal. App. 4th 1374, 1382-1383, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 762 (county not vicariously liable for off-duty deputy's sexual assaults on own stepdaughter, even though deputy used authority as officer to intimidate stepdaughter); Thorn v. City of Glendale (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 1379, 1382-1384, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1 (refusing to extend rule of Mary M. to city fire marshall who allegedly committed arson while on premises under color of authority to conduct fire inspection)]. The Court found that imposition of liability would encourage the employer to take preventive measure and would provide compensation for victims of police misconduct, and that the cost resulting from the misuse of police power should be borne by the community at large because of the substantial benefits that the community derives from the lawful exercise of police power [Mary M. v. City of L.A. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 202, 216-217, 285 Cal. Rptr. 99, 14 P.2d 1341] .

By contrast, the court of appeal has held that the private employer of an on-duty security guard was not liable for a sexual assault committed by the uniformed and armed guard after he pulled over the victim while she was driving down the highway. In that case, although the assault may not have occurred but for the employment, the guard's decision to assault the victim was strictly personal and did not arise out of the guard's duties [Maria D. v. Westec Residential Sec., Inc. (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 125, 146-147, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 326] . The court ruled that the Supreme Court's decision in Mary M. did not support a finding of vicarious liability, because the assault in this case did not arise from the misuse of authority uniquely conferred on a public law enforcement officer and because the guard was not acting as an official representative of the state at the time of the assault [Maria D. v. Westec Residential Security, Inc. (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 125, 146, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 326] .

In a case that questions whether the Mary M. holding would still receive the support of a majority of the Supreme Court, the court of appeal has also rejected an attempt to extend that holding to a sexual assault committed by firefighters, even if the firefighters were on duty at the time of the assault, noting that the firefighters had no coercive authority over the victim and did not purport to detain the victim in the course of any investigation or even while performing any official duties [M.P. v. City of Sacramento (2009) 177 Cal. App. 4th 121, 130-133, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 812].

The court of appeal also held that a city was not vicariously liable for an on-duty police officer's engaging in consensual sexual activities with two female minors who were on patrol with the officer as part of a program designed to encourage teenagers to consider careers in law enforcement. The court in that case concluded that because the officer was engaged in supervising and training the two young women when the sexual conduct occurred, making the relationship akin to that of supervisor and employee, and because the officer did not exert police authority over the young women to coerce them to take part in the sexual conduct, the conduct was not within the course of the officer's employment, and the city therefore could not be vicariously liable [Doe 1 v. City of Murrieta (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 899, 908-910, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 213] .

[3] Sexual Harassment

Employer liability for sexual harassment is addressed by statute. Under the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA), harassment of an employee, an applicant, or a person providing services pursuant to a contract, by an employee other than an agent or supervisor, is unlawful if the employer, or its agents or supervisors, knows or should have known of this conduct and fails to take immediate and appropriate corrective action [Gov. Code § 12940(j)(1)]. This language has been construed as imposing a rule of strict employer liability for harassing conduct by a supervisor. The fact that the employer may have a rule prohibiting such conduct is of no import [Kelly-Zurian v. Wohl Shoe Co. (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 397, 414-417, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 457] .

The liability imposed by the FEHA is direct employer liability [see Farmers Ins. Group v. County of Santa Clara (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 992, 1014, n.12, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 478, 906 P.2d 440] . If the statutory standard does not apply, the California Supreme Court has held that there is no common law vicarious liability on the employer for sexual harassment by an employee. For the purposes of respondeat superior, employees do not act within the scope of employment when they abuse job-created authority over others for purely personal reasons [Farmers Ins. Group v. County of Santa Clara (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 992, 1014, n.12, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 478, 906 P.2d 440 (construing Gov. Code § 825.2 (imposing duty on employer to indemnify employee for any liability incurred within scope of employment))].

Civ. Code § 51.9 provides a remedy for sexual harassment that is not limited to conduct between employees. It addresses sexual harassment in business, service, and professional relationships [see Civ. Code § 51.9(a)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Employer May Have Defense to Imputed Liability for Sexual Harassment of Third Parties. Civil Code § 51.9 provides a remedy for sexual harassment that is not confined to conduct between employees. However, it would appear that the exculpatory rationale of Farmers Ins. Group v. County of Santa Clara (1996)11 Cal. 4th 992, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 478, 906 P.2d 440 , and Lisa M. v. Henry Mayo Newhall Mem'l Hosp. (1996) 12 Cal. 4th 291, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 510, 907 P. 2d 358 , would also apply to respondeat superior claims brought pursuant to Civil Code § 51.9. By Richard P. Hill

For extensive discussion of California and federal law relating to sexual harassment, together with related forms, see Ch. 116, Civil Rights: Discrimination in Business Establishments ,.

[4] Other Intentional Torts

Employers have been found liable under respondeat superior for an employee's fraud [see Alhino v. Starr (1980) 112 Cal. App. 3d 158, 173-174, 169 Cal. Rptr. 136] , intentional infliction of emotional distress [see Agarwal v. Johnson (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 932, 945-947, 160 Cal. Rptr. 141, 603 P.2d 58 ; see also Fisher v. San Pedro Peninsula Hosp. (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 590, 618, 262 Cal. Rptr. 842 (hostile work environment that constitutes sexual harassment in violation of Fair Employment and Housing Act, Gov. Code § 12900 et seq., also constitutes intentional infliction of emotional distress)], malicious prosecution [see Shoopman v. Pacific Greyhound Lines (1959) 169 Cal. App. 2d 848, 855-856, 338 P.2d 3] , inducement of breach of contract [see Pratt v. Local 683, Film Technicians (1968) 260 Cal. App. 2d 545, 563, 67 Cal. Rptr. 483] , defamation [see Di Giorgio Fruit Corp. v. AFL-CIO (1963) 215 Cal. App. 2d 560, 576, 30 Cal. Rptr. 350] , and false imprisonment [see Hanna v. Raphael Weill & Co. (1949) 90 Cal. App. 2d 461, 463-464, 203 P.2d 564] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Evaluate Whether Plaintiff Suing Co-employee Should Allege Respondeat Superior. There will be times when plaintiff's counsel will want to be careful to plead and prove that an employee was not acting within the course and scope of his or her employment, and not for the employer's business purposes, when engaging in certain conduct. For instance, a plaintiff employee may seek to impose liability on another employee for intentionally interfering with the plaintiff's contract of employment with the employer. For such a claim to be viable, the defendant individual employee has to have been acting for his or her own selfish and improper purposes independent of the employer's business interests. By Richard P. Hill

§ 248.18 Employer Liability for Punitive Damages

[1] General Requirements

The purpose of compensatory damages is to indemnify plaintiff for losses caused by another's tortious conduct [see Civ. Code § 3333; Mozzetti v. City of Brisbane (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 565, 576, 136 Cal. Rptr. 751 ; see generally Levy, Golden & Sacks, California Torts, Ch. 50, pt. A (Matthew Bender)]. In contrast, the purpose of punitive or exemplary damages is to punish the defendant and to deter the recurrence of similar conduct by the defendant or others [see Civ. Code § 3294(a); Neal v. Farmers Ins. Exch. (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 910, 928 n.13, 148 Cal. Rptr. 389, 582 P.2d 980 ; see generally Levy, Golden & Sacks, California Torts, Ch. 54 (Matthew Bender)].

Liability for punitive damages is based on the defendant's having been found guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice [see Civ. Code § 3294(a)]. Although an employer may be held vicariously liable (that is, without having personally committed any tort) for compensatory damages caused by an employee's torts committed within the scope of employment, courts have traditionally been reluctant to impose punitive damages on an employer on the basis of an employee's conduct if there is no evidence of the employer's own participation in the tort [see, e.g., Ebaugh v. Rabkin (1972) 22 Cal. App. 3d 891, 894-895, 99 Cal. Rptr. 706 (no employer liability for punitive damages absent direction or ratification of wrongful act)].

An employer may not be held liable for punitive damages based on acts of an employee unless the employer (1) had advance knowledge of the unfitness of the employee and employed him or her with a conscious disregard for the rights or safety of others; (2) authorized or ratified the employee's wrongful conduct for which the punitive damages are awarded; or (3) was personally guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice [Civ. Code § 3294(b)]. Unless one of the above criteria is satisfied, an employer cannot be liable for punitive damages based solely on the conduct of its employee, no matter how malicious or oppressive its employee's conduct may have been [see Foley v. Martin (1904) 142 Cal. 256, 261-262, 71 P. 165 ; Hale v. Farmers Ins. Exch. (1974) 42 Cal. App. 3d 681, 690, 117 Cal. Rptr. 146 , disapproved on other grounds, Egan v. Mutual of Omaha Ins. Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 809, 822 n.5, 157 Cal. Rptr. 482, 598 P.2d 452)]. If, however, the employee is determined to be acting under the direction of the employer, then the employer participates in the act; and the employer's liability is based not on the acts of the employee, but on its own separate culpability. In such a case, punitive damages may be awarded against the employer even if none are assessed against the employee [Roberts v. Ford Aerospace & Commc'ns Corp. (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 793, 800-802, 274 Cal. Rptr. 139] .

For forms of allegations to recover punitive damages from an employer based on the acts of an employee, see § 248.44.

[2] Additional Requirements for Holding Corporate Employers Liable for Punitive Damages

If punitive damages are sought against a corporate employer, the plaintiff must prove that an officer, director, or "managing agent" of the corporation (1) had advance knowledge of the unfitness of the employee and acted with the requisite conscious disregard for the rights or safety of others; (2) authorized or ratified the employee's conduct; or (3) personally committed an act of oppression, fraud, or malice [Civ. Code § 3294(b); see Kelly-Zurian v. Wohl Shoe Co. (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 397, 420-421, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 457 (noting that ratification need not be shown if conduct is of officer, director, or managing agent, and criticizing BAJI No. 14.73.1)].

A "managing agent" of a corporation, for purposes of establishing an entitlement to punitive damages under these provisions, includes only those corporate employees who exercise substantial independent authority and judgment in their corporate decision-making so that their decisions ultimately determine corporate policy [White v. Ultramar, Inc. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 563, 566-567, 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 19, 981 P.2d 944 ; see also Kelly-Zurian v. Wohl Shoe Co. (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 397, 421-422, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 457] . Determining whether a corporate employee is a managing agent under this standard is a question of fact to be determined on a case-by-case basis [White v. Ultramar, Inc. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 563, 567, 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 19, 981 P.2d 944] .

A supervisory employee is not necessarily a managing agent under this standard. Equating the two would effectively render a corporate employer liable for punitive damages in most employment cases [White v. Ultramar, Inc. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 563, 575, 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 19, 981 P.2d 944] . Moreover, the ability of a supervisory employee to hire and fire employees does not, by itself, render a corporate employer liable for punitive damages [White v. Ultramar, Inc. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 563, 566, 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 19, 981 P.2d 944] .

However, the Supreme Court, in establishing this standard, held that a supervisory employee with responsibility for managing eight stores and at least 65 employees, which was a significant amount of the employing corporation's business, was a managing agent for these purposes [White v. Ultramar, Inc. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 563, 577, 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 19, 981 P.2d 944] . By contrast, the court of appeal held that a supervisory employee overseeing security at a single outlet of a multi-store chain was not a managing agent of the corporate chain as a matter of law [Cruz v. HomeBase (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 160, 168, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 435] .

Further, a corporate employer cannot be held liable for punitive damages based on the conduct of a managerial employee unless the individual was acting in a corporate or employment capacity when the conduct giving rise to the punitive damages claim against the employer occurred [College Hosp., Inc. v. Superior Court (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 704, 722-724, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 898, 882 P.2d 894] . In other words, there is a scope-of-employment threshold test that must be met in determining corporate liability for punitive damages based on the conduct of its officers, directors, or managing agents.

The standard applicable to a corporation has been found to apply as well to an unincorporated association [J. R. Norton Co. v. General Teamsters, Warehousemen & Helpers Union, Local 890 (1989) 208 Cal. App. 3d 430, 445, 256 Cal. Rptr. 246 (labor union)].

[3] What Constitutes Authorization or Ratification

An employer may be held liable for punitive damages if it authorizes or ratifies the employee's act of malice, oppression, or fraud [see Civ. Code § 3294(b)]. Corporate ratification in the punitive damages context requires actual knowledge of the conduct of the employee and its outrageous nature [College Hosp., Inc. v. Superior Court (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 704, 726, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 898, 882 P.2d 894 ; Cruz v. HomeBase (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 160, 168, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 435] .

Nevertheless, authorization and ratification are questions of fact that may be proved by any circumstantial or direct evidence demonstrating adoption or approval of the employee's actions by the corporate agent [Roberts v. Ford Aerospace & Commc'ns Corp. (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 793, 801, 274 Cal. Rptr. 139 ; Hartman v. Shell Oil Co. (1977) 68 Cal. App. 3d 240, 249-250, 137 Cal. Rptr. 244 ; see Storage Servs. v. Oosterbaan (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 498, 516, 262 Cal. Rptr. 689 (ratification or approval inferred from employer's close supervision of employee, its familiarity with transaction, its awareness of meetings between parties, and its subsequent discussions with employee about acts giving rise to tort)]. Authorization or direction (employer action taken prior to the tortious act) of an employee's tortious conduct can be given in the form of written or oral consent or encouragement [see Jameson v. Gavett (1937) 22 Cal. App. 2d 646, 650-652, 71 P.2d 937 (employer encouraged and gave oral express and implied consent to his employees' use of any means, including physical force, to deter trespassing or to remove trespassers from employer's business premises)]. The issue commonly arises if the employer fails to intercede in a known pattern of workplace abuse [College Hosp., Inc. v. Superior Court (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 704, 726, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 898, 882 P.2d 894] .

Ratification may be inferred from the fact that the employer, after being informed of the employee's actions, does not fully investigate and fails to repudiate the employee's conduct by redressing the harm done [Roberts v. Ford Aerospace & Commc'ns Corp. (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 793, 801, 274 Cal. Rptr. 139 ; see Alhino v. Starr (1980) 112 Cal. App. 3d 158, 173-174, 169 Cal. Rptr. 136 (employer was advised by its employee of employee's irregular conduct in representing plaintiff-real estate seller; employer let transaction proceed nonetheless)]. An employer's retention of the tortfeasor in employment, after the employer is advised of the employee's wrongful conduct, may also be a factor that establishes ratification [see Clark Equip. Co. v. Wheat (1979) 92 Cal. App. 3d 503, 519, 523-524, 154 Cal. Rptr. 874 (defendant hired collection counsel to pursue action against plaintiff; after employer was advised that attorney was misusing court procedures and pursuing legal remedies against party no longer liable for debt, employer did not discharge attorney or take any steps to limit attorney's discretion or latitude to act; court held that ratification of conduct had been established); Coats v. Construction & Gen. Laborers Local No. 185 (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 908, 914, 93 Cal. Rptr. 639 (union staff business agent retained after business agent's assaults on members of union became known to employer; employer's argument on appeal that retention of the tortfeasor was compelled because of tortfeasor's special or irreplaceable skills rejected by appellate court)].

However, the mere act of providing a defense for the employee at trial, through the payment of the employee's attorney's fees, does not constitute a ratification of the employee's allegedly tortious conduct. The employer has an interest in protecting itself from vicarious liability by providing the employee with the best possible defense against claims that the employee committed tortious acts [Plancarte v. Guardsmark (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 640, 647, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 315] . In addition, Lab. Code § 2802 obligates an employer to pay any judgment against an employee for conduct arising out of the employment and to provide a defense against charges brought by a third party against an employee for that conduct [Plancarte v. Guardsmark (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 640, 647-648, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 315 ; see Lab. Code § 2802].

For further discussion of ratification in the context of vicarious and direct liability generally, see § 248.13.

§ 248.19 Defenses to Respondeat Superior Actions

[1] In General

Because respondeat superior is based on the tortious conduct of another, employer liability will not attach vicariously if the employee is absolved from liability [see Campbell v. Security Pac. Nat'l Bank (1976) 62 Cal. App. 3d 379, 386, 133 Cal. Rptr. 77 ; Davis v. Pine Mountain Lumber Co. (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 218, 227, 77 Cal. Rptr. 825] . Even if a default judgment is entered against the employer, there is no liability under respondeat superior if the employee is subsequently found to have been free from fault [Plott v. York (1939) 33 Cal. App. 2d 460, 463-464, 91 P.2d 924] . However, it is not necessary to name or join any specific employees as defendants. The plaintiff's inability to identify which employee committed the wrongful act is not fatal to the employer's liability if the evidence establishes that some employee, in the scope of employment, committed the wrongful act. Even if the plaintiff names a particular employee and the judgment is for that employee, a judgment against the employer is valid if the evidence supports the conclusion that other unnamed employees committed the acts [Perez v. City of Huntington Park (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 817, 820-821, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 258 (defense judgments for four police officers upheld because plaintiff could not identify which one of them battered him; judgment against employer city affirmed because evidence supported court's finding that at least one of them did)].

The employer may raise defenses such as comparative negligence, assumption of the risk, privilege on the part of the active tortfeasor, statute of limitations, and any other defense going to the merits of the cause of action [see Freeman v. Churchill (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 453, 461, 183 P.2d 4 ; Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. Superior Oil Co. (1966) 243 Cal. App. 2d 289, 297, 52 Cal. Rptr. 53 (both cases decided prior to advent of comparative fault and holding that contributory negligence of plaintiff was defense available to employer); Plott v. York (1939) 33 Cal. App. 2d 460, 463, 91 P.2d 924] . However, the employer may not raise certain defenses that would negate the right to recover against the particular employee-tortfeasor, such as infancy and bankruptcy, but that do not relate to the merits of the cause of action

[see Plott v. York (1939) 33 Cal. App. 2d 460, 463, 91 P.2d 924 ; see also Restatement (Second) of Agency § 217(b)(ii) (employer may be liable under respondeat superior even though employee has immunity from civil liability)].

A plaintiff seeking to hold an employer liable for the torts of an employee must name the employer as a defendant prior to the running of the applicable statute of limitations, even if the claim against the employee is not barred by the statute of limitations [Boyer v. Jensen (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 62, 70-71, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 124] . In addition, if the employee's debts have been discharged by bankruptcy, shielding the employee from suit, and the plaintiff neglected to name the employer as a defendant prior to expiration of the statute of limitations, the plaintiff may not pursue the action against the employee in order to obtain a judgment that might be enforced against the employer [Boyer v. Jensen (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 62, 77-78, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 124] .

[2] Collateral Estoppel

A prior judgment in favor of an employee bars an action against his or her employer if the employer's liability could only be predicated on a theory of respondeat superior [Ponce v. Tractor Supply Co. (1972) 29 Cal. App. 3d 500, 505, 105 Cal. Rptr. 628 ; Davison v. Diamond Match Co. (1935) 10 Cal. App. 2d 218, 222-224, 51 P.2d 452] . The rule is the same whether the actions are separate or the employer and employee are joined in the same action [Freeman v. Churchill (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 453, 461, 183 P.2d 4] . A dismissal of the allegedly active tortfeasor from the action with prejudice has the same effect as an adjudication on the merits that the alleged tortfeasor was not at fault, and a finding of vicarious liability is thus precluded by the doctrine of collateral estoppel [Campbell v. Security Pac. Nat'l Bank (1976) 62 Cal. App. 3d 379, 385-386, 133 Cal. Rptr. 77] .

The employer may also take advantage of any prior judgment against the employee as an upper limit of damages for which it may be held liable in a separate subsequent action against the employer based on the doctrine of respondeat superior. Thus, if a default judgment was entered against the employee, the employer is entitled to prevent the injured third party from relitigating the issue of damages. However, the employer may relitigate the issue of damages if it wishes [Ponce v. Tractor Supply Co. (1972) 29 Cal. App. 3d 500, 505-507, 105 Cal. Rptr. 628] .

§ 248.20 Indemnity Issues

[1] Employer's Right to Indemnity

A party who is liable solely under principles of vicarious liability generally has a right to indemnity from the person who was actually at fault [Popejoy v. Hannon (1951) 37 Cal. 2d 159, 173, 231 P.2d 484 ; Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. Superior Oil Co. (1966) 243 Cal. App. 2d 289, 299, 52 Cal. Rptr. 53 ; Herrero v. Atkinson (1964) 227 Cal. App. 2d 69, 77, 38 Cal. Rptr. 490 ; see also Code Civ. Proc. § 876(b)]. Thus, an employer who is subjected to liability on the grounds of respondeat superior may look to the tortfeasor-employee for satisfaction for any liability it might incur as a result of the employee's tort [see Continental Cas. Co. v. Phoenix Constr. Co. (1956) 46 Cal. 2d 423, 428, 296 P.2d 801 ; but see Lab. Code § 2802; Holt v. Booth (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 1074, 1080 n.6, 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 727] . Total indemnity from the employee to the employer is appropriate because, under principles of comparative indemnity, the tortfeasor-employee is 100 percent responsible for the damages, and the vicariously liable employer is 0 percent responsible [see E. L. White, Inc. v. City of Huntington Beach (1982) 138 Cal. App. 3d 366, 373-377, 187 Cal. Rptr. 879 (cited with approval in Far W. Fin. Corp. v. D & S Co. (1988) 46 Cal. 3d 796, 808, 251 Cal. Rptr. 202, 760 P.2d 399)].

A vicariously liable employer's indemnity rights may be defeated, however, by a good faith settlement entered into between the employee and the injured party [Far W. Fin. Corp. v. D & S Co. (1988) 46 Cal. 3d 796, 817, 251 Cal. Rptr. 202, 760 P.2d 399 ; see Code Civ. Proc. § 877.6]. The parameters of what constitutes a good faith settlement between an employee and an injured party so as to foreclose the employer's indemnity rights have not yet been set by the courts. However, it appears that a token settlement, entered into primarily to defeat indemnity, will be insufficient [see Far W. Fin. Corp. v. D & S Co. (1988) 46 Cal. 3d 796, 815, 251 Cal. Rptr. 202, 760 P.2d 399] .

If an employer has been actively at fault and is directly liable for a tort for which an employee is also directly liable, normal principles of comparative indemnity apply [see American Motorcycle Ass'n v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 578, 591, 598, 146 Cal. Rptr. 182, 578 P.2d 899] . The comparison would be made between the negligence of the employer and that of the employee, for example, by comparing the relative culpability of the employer's negligent hiring or training with the employee's tortious conduct. The employer would then be directly liable for its own comparative share, and vicariously liable for the employee's share [see Miller v. Stouffer (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 70, 84, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d. 454] . The employer might then be entitled to indemnity from the employee for any amount paid in satisfaction of its vicarious liability, but not of its direct liability. For a complete discussion of indemnity and the effects of a good faith settlement on a nonsettling defendant's right to indemnity, see Levy, Golden & Sacks, California Torts, Ch. 74 (Matthew Bender).

[2] Employee's Right to Indemnity

Lab. Code § 2802 provides that an employer must indemnify an employee for all that the employee necessarily expends or loses in direct consequence of the discharge of the employee's duties as such, or of the employee's obedience to the directions of the employer, even though unlawful, unless the employee, at the time of obeying the directions, believed them to be unlawful. All such awards for reimbursement of necessary expenditures carry interest at the same rate as judgments in civil actions [Lab. Code § 2802(b)].

The indemnity rights of Lab. Code § 2802 are nonwaivable and any contract that purports to waive an employee's statutory indemnity rights is unlawful to that extent [Edwards v. Arthur Andersen LLP (2008) 44 Cal. 4th 937, 951-952, 81 Cal. Rptr. 3d 282, 189 P. 3d 285 ; see Lab. Code § 2804]. A contract provision releasing "any and all" claims generally does not encompass the nonwaivable statutory protections afforded by Lab. Code § 2802 and does not implicitly apply to an employee's right to indemnification from an employer [Edwards v. Arthur Andersen LLP (2008) 44 Cal. 4th 937, 953, 81 Cal. Rptr. 3d 282, 189 P. 3d 285].

Lab. Code § 2802 requires the employer to defend an employee who is sued for acts done within the scope of employment [Los Angeles Police Protective League v. City of Los Angeles (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 168, 177, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 574 ; Grissom v. Vons Cos., Inc. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 52, 57, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 808 (employer may be required to pay for employee's independent counsel, depending on facts); but see Cassady v. Morgan, Lewis & Bockius LLP (2006) 145 Cal. App. 4th 220, 237-238, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 527 (questioning whether duty to defend exists)]. This statute also probably requires an employer to indemnify the employee for any liability incurred by the employee for acts done at the direction of the employer unless the employee knew that the directions were unlawful [see Bradley v. Rosenthal (1908) 154 Cal. 420, 424, 97 P. 875] . Whether this statute has any effect on the common-law right of indemnity in favor of a vicariously liable employer from a negligent employee [see Continental Cas. Co. v. Phoenix Constr. Co. (1956) 46 Cal. 2d 423, 429, 296 P.2d 801 ; see also § 248.20[1]] has never been determined by a California appellate court [but see Holt v. Booth (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 1074, 1080 n.6, 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 727 (dicta in footnote suggesting that statute may require vicariously liable employer to indemnify negligent employee for liability to third party arising from conduct within scope of employment)].

If an employer chooses not to defend an employee who is sued, the employee may seek indemnification under Lab. Code § 2802 for costs incurred in defending the lawsuit, if it is determined that the employee's allegedly actionable conduct was within the course and scope of employment, even though the employee is found not to be liable. For example, one court of appeal opinion has held that an employee who was found not to be liable in a sexual harassment suit brought by a co-worker had a right under Lab. Code § 2802 to indemnification from his employer for the legal costs incurred in defending the suit [Jacobus v. Krambo Corp. (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 1096, 1098, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 425] . The court noted that even though sexual misconduct falls outside the course and scope of employment, the employee's acts were found not to constitute sexual misconduct, the allegedly actionable behavior was simply part of the social intercourse that occasionally occurs in the office setting, and the co-worker's suit was apparently a response to an adverse employment evaluation. Thus, under the facts, the employee could recover the expenses incurred in defending the suit from the employer [Jacobus v. Krambo Corp. (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 1096, 1104, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 425] .

When seeking indemnification of defense costs, the employee bears the burden of proving which costs were incurred in defense of claims arising from employment with the employer, even if apportionment of costs is required because the underlying claims arose from employment with multiple employers [Cassady v. Morgan, Lewis & Bockius LLP (2006) 145 Cal. App. 4th 220, 233-234, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 527] .

An employee's right to indemnity is defeated if the employer enters into a good faith settlement with the injured person [Far W. Fin. Corp. v. D & S Co. (1988) 46 Cal. 3d 796, 817, 251 Cal. Rptr. 202, 760 P.2d 399 ; see 248.20[1]]. For a complete discussion of comparative indemnity, see Levy, Golden & Sacks, California Torts, Ch. 74 (Matthew Bender).

§ 248.21 Respondeat Superior and Proposition 51

Proposition 51, the so-called "Deep Pockets" initiative passed by the voters in June 1986, limits the doctrine of joint and several liability. Under Proposition 51, in any action for personal injury, property damage, or wrongful death based on principles of comparative fault, the liablity of each defendant for "noneconomic damages" is several only and not joint. Thus, each defendant is liable only for the percentage of the plaintiff's noneconomic damages that corresponds to the defendant's comparative share of fault [Civ. Code § 1431.2(a)]. Noneconomic damages are subjective nonmonetary losses, such as general damages for pain and suffering [see Civ. Code § 1431.2(b)(2)].

Proposition 51, however, does not eliminate liability for noneconomic damages of a defendant whose liability is vicarious only under respondeat superior (and who, therefore, is technically without fault). The vicariously liable employer stands in the shoes of the employee for purposes of determining the employer's comparative share of fault and noneconomic damages. If there are no other tortfeasors, the employer and employee remain jointly and severally liable for 100 percent of the plaintiff's damages, including noneconomic damages. If there are other tortfeasors, then the employer is liable only for the percentage of the plaintiff's noneconomic damages that corresponds to the employee's percentage of comparative fault [Miller v. Stouffer (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 70, 81-86, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 454 ; see also Rashtian v. BRAC-BH, Inc. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1847, 1854, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 411 (Proposition 51 does not apply to eliminate liability for noneconomic damages of defendant held vicariously liable under Vehicle Code)].

Moreover, because Proposition 51 does not apply to limit the liability of an intentional tortfeasor, an employer's vicarious liability for the intentional tort of one of its employees is not subject to reduction under Proposition 51 based on a finding that another defendant's negligence also contributed to the plaintiff's injuries [Thomas v. Duggins Construction Co., Inc. (2006) 44 Cal. Rptr. 3d 66].

[1] General Rule of Nonliability

The general rule is that a person who hires an independent contractor, as distinguished from an employee, is not liable for the torts of the contractor or for the torts of the employees of the contractor [Torres v. Reardon (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 831, 838, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 52 ; Johnson v. Tosco Corp. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 123, 131, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] . However, there are many exceptions to the rule [see Van Arsdale v. Hollinger (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 245, 252-253, 66 Cal. Rptr. 20, 437 P.2d 508 , overruled on other grounds, Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 689, 696, 702, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72, 854 P.2d 721] .

For discussion of the definition of an independent contractor, and the distinction between employees and independent contractors, see § 248.15[4].

[2] Exceptions to Rule of Nonliability

[a] In General

A person may not insulate himself or herself from liability to others in all cases by hiring an independent contractor [Anderson v. Chancellor W. Oil Dev. Corp. (1975) 53 Cal. App. 3d 235, 239, 125 Cal. Rptr. 640] . Courts have articulated a number of theories under which a person may be held vicariously liable for the torts of an independent contractor.

In addition, one who hires an independent contractor may be liable for the acts of the contractor in the same way that an employer may be directly liable for the acts of an employee. For example, the hirer may be liable for the acts of an independent contractor acting under orders or directions negligently given by the hirer [see Widman v. Rossmoor

Sanitation, Inc. (1971) 19 Cal. App. 3d 734, 743, 97 Cal. Rptr. 52] , for negligent selection of an independent contractor [see Golden v. Conway (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 948, 957, 128 Cal. Rptr. 69] , for negligent failure to inspect the work of a contractor [see McCordic v. Crawford (1943) 23 Cal. 2d 1, 6-7, 142 P.2d 7] , or for negligently exercising retained control over work entrusted to the contractor [see Grahn v. Tosco Corp. (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 1373, 1393-1395, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 159 (the control necessary to give rise to a duty of care is control exercised by the hirer over the methods of work or manner in which the contractor's employee's perform the operative details of their tasks, not simply general control over the premises); Johnson v. Tosco Corp. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 123, 137-140, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

The determination that a defendant is not vicariously liable for the acts of an independent contractor may be made on summary judgment as a matter of law if the person asserting it cannot allege any facts or identify any relevant policy considerations that would warrant imposition of vicarious liability [see Yanez v. United States (9th Cir. 1995) 63 F.3d 870, 874-875 ; Weiss v. Chevron (1988) 204 Cal. App. 3d 1094, 1100, 251 Cal. Rptr. 727 (oil company's supply of products to service station insufficient to impose vicarious liability for acts of station's employee)].

[i] In General

The "peculiar risk" doctrine, as stated by the Restatement (Second) of Torts §§ 413 and 416, has been adopted in California [see LaCount v. Hensel Phelps Constr. Co. (1978) 79 Cal. App. 3d 754, 763, 145 Cal. Rptr. 244] . Thus, one who hires an independent contractor to do work that the hirer should recognize as likely to create, during its progress, a peculiar risk of physical harm to others unless special precautions are taken, is subject to liability for physical harm caused by the failure of the contractor to exercise reasonable care to take the precautions, even if the hirer has provided for the precautions in the contract or otherwise [Torres v. Reardon (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 831, 839, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 52 ; Johnson v. Tosco Corp. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 123, 132, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747 ; Henderson Bros. Stores, Inc. v. Smiley (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 903, 911, 174 Cal. Rptr. 875 ; see Restatement (Second) of Torts § 416].

A peculiar risk is something other than the ordinary and customary dangers that may arise in the course of the work or of normal human activity [Griesel v. Dart Indus., Inc. (1979) 23 Cal. 3d 578, 586, 153 Cal. Rptr. 213, 591 P.2d 619 , overruled on other grounds, Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 689, 696, 702, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72, 854 P.2d 721 ; Johnson v. Tosco Corp. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 123, 132, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] . It is a risk that is peculiar to the work to be done that arises from the character of the work or from the place where the work is to be done, against which a reasonable person would recognize the necessity of taking special precautions [Johnson v. Tosco Corp. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 123, 132, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

A peculiar risk does not mean that the risk must be one that is abnormal to the type of work done, or that it is an abnormally great risk, but rather refers to a special, recognizable danger arising out of the work itself [Aceves v. Regal Pale Brewing Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 502, 509, 156 Cal. Rptr. 41, 595 P.2d 619 , overruled on other grounds, Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 689, 696, 702, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72, 854 P.2d 721 (in determining whether danger is recognizable, hirer's knowledge and experience in field of work to be done are relevant); Henderson Bros. Stores, Inc. v. Smiley (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 903, 915-916, 174 Cal. Rptr. 875 (quoting from Restatement (Second) of Torts § 413, cmt. b)].

[ii] Factors in Determining "Special Danger"

Factors that are important in determining whether a particular danger is recognizable as a "special" danger include (1) the foreseeability of the specific risk or set of risks arising in connection with the work as planned, (2) whether the risk is "intimately connected with the work" or "accidental," (3) the degree of risk, and (4) the possibility of anticipating and prescribing definite precautions to avert the anticipated risk or risks [Henderson Bros. Stores, Inc. v. Smiley (1981)

The fact that a special risk is foreseeable justifies the imposition of liability [Holman v. State of California (1975) 53 Cal. App. 3d 317, 330, 124 Cal. Rptr. 773] . As a general rule, the foreseeability of special risks is determined by the parties' knowledge at the time when they entered into the contract [see McDonald v. City of Oakland (1967) 255 Cal. App. 2d 816, 823, 63 Cal. Rptr. 593] . However, liability may be imposed on one who hires an independent contractor and who, at the time of entering into the contract, had no reason to anticipate that conditions requiring special precautions would arise, if conditions subsequently arise of which the hirer knows or should know [Mackey v. Campbell Constr. Co. (1980) 101 Cal. App. 3d 774, 784, 162 Cal. Rptr. 64] .

However, the possibility of routine negligence in the performance of work cannot provide a basis for liability as a peculiar risk [Johnson v. Tosco Corp. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 123, 132-133, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747 ; Hughes v. Atlantic Pac. Constr. Co. (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 987, 1000-1001, 240 Cal. Rptr. 200] . Although the hirer of an independent contractor might always foresee that the contractor may in some way be negligent toward third persons, the doctrine has no reference to such a general anticipation [Johnson v. Tosco Corp. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 123, 133, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] . Thus, a contractor's use of defective equipment or misuse of equipment is not within the peculiar risk doctrine [Johnson v. Tosco Corp. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 123, 133, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747 (defective scaffolding on job site not peculiar risk); see Stark v. Weeks Real Estate (1979) 94 Cal. App. 3d 965, 972, 156 Cal. Rptr. 701 (misuse of hand-held circular power saw)]. For example, if a contractor is hired to transport goods, the hirer would have no liability for the contractor's failure to inspect the brakes or for negligent driving. But if the goods are logs weighing several tons, the hirer is liable for the contractor's failure to take special precautions to secure the logs to the truck [Holman v. State of California (1975) 53 Cal. App. 3d 317, 328, 124 Cal. Rptr. 773 (citing examples from Restatement (Second) of Torts § 416, cmt. d)].

The peculiar risk doctrine is strictly a rule of third-party liability. It imposes no liability on the hirer for injuries to the independent contractor [Torres v. Reardon (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 831, 839-841, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 52] .

[iii] Limitation on Recovery for Employees of Independent Contractors

Formerly, California was one of a minority of jurisdictions that expanded the traditional peculiar risk doctrine to permit an employee of the independent contractor to seek recovery from the nonnegligent hirer for injuries caused by the negligence of the contractor [Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 689, 696, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72, 854 P.2d 721 (citing and overruling, in part, Woolen v. Aerojet Gen. Corp. (1962) 57 Cal. 2d 407, 410-411, 20 Cal. Rptr. 12, 369 P.2d 708 , as case that initially expanded doctrine)]. However, in Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 689, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72, 854 P.2d 721 , the California Supreme Court reexamined this extension of the doctrine in light of the policies advanced by the workers' compensation laws, and concluded that those policies precluded employees of negligent independent contractors from recovering damages from the hirer under the peculiar risk doctrine [Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 689, 701-702, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72, 854 P.2d 721] . The Privette decision has been applied retroactively [see Whitford v. Swinerton & Walberg Co. (1995) 34 Cal. App. 4th 1054, 1059-1060, 40 Cal. Rptr. 2d 688 ; Smith v. ACandS, Inc. (1994) 31 Cal. App. 4th 77, 94-95, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 457] .

The California Supreme Court has held that Privette precludes application of the peculiar risk doctrine to employees of independent contractors who are injured through the negligence of the contractor even when the hirer fails to provide in the contract, or in some other manner, that special precautions be taken to avert the peculiar risks of the work [Toland v. Sunland Hous. Group, Inc. (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 253, 267, 74 Cal. Rptr. 898, 955 P.2d 475] .

The limitation of Privette has been extended to the situation in which the negligence of one independent contractor injures the employee of another. In this case also, the hirer has no vicarious liability to the injured employee [Smith v. ACandS, Inc. (1994) 31 Cal. App. 4th 77, 95-97, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 457] . The Privette holding even applies where there is an express indemnity agreement between the independent contractor and the person who hired the contractor [

Redfeather v. Chevron USA, Inc. (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th 702, 705, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 159] .

The court of appeal has also held that an injured employee of an independent contractor cannot sue the hirer of the contractor, even if the contractor fails to provide workers' compensation coverage, because the hirer should not be punished for the contractor's failure. Moreover, the court noted that the Uninsured Employers Fund provides coverage if an employer fails to do so [Lopez v. C.G.M. Dev., Inc. (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 430, 444-445, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 227 ; see also Bell v. Greg Agee Constr., Inc. (2004) 125 Cal. App. 4th 453, 466-467, 23 Cal. Rptr. 3d 33] .

The court of appeal has further held that the Privette doctrine applies even if the injured party is an independent contractor, rather than actually an employee, of another contractor [Michael v. Denbeste Transp., Inc. (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 1082, 1093, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 777] . The court, concluding that this result was consistent with the policy concerns underlying the Privette doctrine, noted that the lack of workers' compensation coverage for independent contractors was not dispositive and recognized that it was reasonable for hirers to anticipate that an independent contractor will insure against the risk of injury associated with the work and factor the cost of this insurance into the price of the hiring contract [Michael v. Denbeste Transp., Inc. (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 1082, 1094-1095, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 777] . The court also concluded that the liability of a hirer of an independent contractor for an injury sustained by a person hired by the independent contractor should not depend on whether the injured person was hired as an actual employee or hired as an independent contractor [Michael v. Denbeste Transp., Inc. (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 1082, 1095-1096, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 777] .

The doctrine of peculiar risk shields the person who hired an independent contractor from peculiar risk liability and "the person who hired the contractor" can be an owner, a lessee or a general contractor [Lopez v. University Partners (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1117, 1123, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 359 (Privette bars recovery against lessee of construction site)].

For a form of complaint under the peculiar-risk doctrine against an independent contractor and the person who hired the contractor to do a particular job, see § 248.42.

[iv] Peculiar Risk Cases Not Based on Vicarious Liability

Although the scope of a hirer's liability to the employee of an independent contractor for the hirer's own negligence is still being defined by the courts, the California Supreme Court has held that an employee of an independent contractor who is injured on the job cannot sue the hirer of the contractor for negligence in hiring the contractor [Camargo v. Tjaarda Dairy (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 1235, 1244-1245, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 617, 25 P.3d 1096 (rejecting claim of liability based on Restatement (Second) of Torts § 411)]. Although in some sense the hirer is being sued for the hirer's own negligence, the Court concluded that imposing liability under those circumstances would really be a form of vicarious liability, because the injury to the employee is actually caused by the negligent act or omission of the contractor primarily responsible for the details of the employee's work. Because the contractor would be shielded from tort liability by the exclusivity of workers' compensation, the hirer of the contractor should not be exposed to any greater liability [Camargo v. Tjaarda Dairy (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 1235, 1244, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 617, 25 P.3d 1096] . Moreover, allowing the injured employee to recover tort damages for what is essentially the failure to provide a safe workplace would provide a windfall to the employees of an independent contractor that is unavailable to the injured employees of other types of employers [Camargo v. Tjaarda Dairy (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 1235, 1245, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 617, 25 P.3d 1096] .

If an employee of an independent contractor is injured, imposition of direct liability on the hirer of the independent contractor may arguably be based on the hirer's breach of a duty of care, which the hirer owes by virtue of having retained control over operative details of the work being done [see Zamudio v. City & County of San Francisco (1999) 70 Cal. App. 4th 445, 452-453, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 664 (premises owner and general contractor exercised insufficient control of work of concrete subcontractor to impose liability for injury to subcontractor's employee)].

In addition, a hirer who is also the owner or possessor of property may be liable under a premises liability theory for an injury to the employee of an independent contractor if: (1) the hirer knows or reasonably should know of a concealed, preexisting hazardous condition on the premises; (2) the contractor does not know and could not reasonably have discovered the hazardous condition; and (3) the hirer fails to warn the contractor about the hazard [Kinsman v. Unocal Corp. (2005) 37 Cal. 4th 659, 675, 36 Cal. Rptr. 3d 495, 123 P.3d 931] .

However, the California Supreme Court has held that the hirer of an independent contractor is not liable for an injury to an employee of that independent contractor merely because the hirer retained control over safety conditions at a work site [Hooker v. Department of Transp. (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 198, 202, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 853, 38 P.3d 1081 (rejecting claim that liability could be imposed under Restatement (Second) of Torts § 414); see, e.g., Madden v. Summit View, Inc. (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 1267, 1276-1278, 81 Cal. Rptr. 3d 601]. Instead, the hirer may be liable only if the hirer's exercise of retained control over safety affirmatively contributed to the employee's injury [Hooker v. Department of Transp. (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 198, 202, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 853, 38 P.3d 1081 (hirer's failure to exercise control over safety at work site did not affirmatively contribute to employee's death); see, e.g., Browne v. Turner Constr. Co. (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 1334, 1345-1346, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 433 (summary judgment reversed because evidence showed that hirer and general contractor provided safety equipment for use by subcontractors, but withdrew equipment before construction was complete, resulting in injury to subcontractor's employee); see also Sheeler v. Greystone Homes, Inc. (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 908, 920-921, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 683] .

Under the appropriate circumstances, an omission on the part of the hirer may constitute an affirmative contribution--for example, if the hirer promises to undertake a particular safety measure, but fails to do so, and an employee is injured due to that failure [see Hooker v. Department of Transp. (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 198, 212 n.3, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 853, 38 P.3d 1081 ; see, e.g., Ray v. Silverado Constructors (2002) 98 Cal. App. 4th 1120, 1129, 1132-1133, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 251 (triable issue existed as to whether failure of project owners and general contractor to control traffic at highway construction site, despite legal and contractual obligations to do so, was sufficient to impose liability for death of subcontractor's employee)].

In addition, the Supreme Court held in a companion case that a hirer of an independent contractor may be liable for an injury to an employee of the contractor if the hirer's negligent provision of unsafe equipment to the contractor affirmatively contributes to the injury [McKown v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 219, 222, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 868, 38 P.3d 1094] .

The court of appeal has concluded that these principles governing the liability of a hirer apply equally to a claim against an agent of the hirer who has been delegated the responsibility to oversee safety for the hirer [Ruiz v. Herman Weissker, Inc. (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 52, 61-62, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 641] .

Although a public entity cannot be held liable under general negligence principles without a statutory basis, the court of appeal has held that Gov. Code § 815.4 can provide a statutory basis for imposing liability on a public entity hirer of an independent contractor based on retention of control over safety at the worksite when negligent exercise of that retained control affirmatively contributes to an injury to an employee of the independent contractor [McCarty v. Department of Transportation (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 955, 977-979, 79 Cal. Rptr. 3d 777]. Under Gov. Code § 815.4, a public entity is liable for an injury proximately caused by the tortious act or omission of an independent contractor to the same extent that the public entity would be subject to such liability if it were a private person [Gov. Code § 815.4]. Thus, if an employee's injury was proximately caused by a tortious act or omission of the independent contractor, and, as with a private person hirer, the public entity's negligent exercise of retained control over safety affirmatively contributed to the injury, then a public entity may be held liable under the statute [McCarty v. Department of Transportation (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 955, 978, 79 Cal. Rptr. 3d 777]. A public entity can be liable under these circumstances even if no particular public employee is liable [McCarty v. Department of Transportation (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 955, 979, 79 Cal. Rptr. 3d 777].

The court of appeal has held that a hirer may be liable to an employee of an independent contractor, if the hirer breaches a duty imposed on the hirer by regulation and if the breach affirmatively contributes to the employee's injury. In one case, there were triable issues of fact on the plaintiff's claim that the defendant breached its duty, imposed by the Fire Code, to provide fire extinguishers within 75 feet of likely fire areas, and that this failure contributed to the injuries that the plaintiff sustained in a fire [Barclay v. Jesse M. Lange Distrib., Inc. (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 281, 298-301, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 242] . However, safety regulations are only admissible in actions by employees of subcontractors brought against a general contractor if the evidence establishes that the general contractor affirmatively contributed to the employee's injuries [Padilla v. Pomona College (2008) 166 Cal. App. 4th 661, 673, 82 Cal. Rptr. 3d 869 ; Madden v. Summit View, Inc. (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 1267, 1280, 81 Cal. Rptr. 3d 601].

[c] Nondelegable Duty

A person who hires an independent contractor is liable for the misconduct of the contractor in regard to a duty of the hirer that is deemed "nondelegable" [Dow v. Holly Mfg. Co. (1958) 49 Cal. 2d 720, 728, 321 P.2d 736 (duty of a general contractor to construct building safely may not be delegated)]. Thus, if the law imposes a definite affirmative duty on one by reason of his or her relationship with others, whether as an owner or proprietor of land [see Snyder v. Southern Cal. Edison Co. (1955) 44 Cal. 2d 793, 797, 285 P.2d 912 (possessor of land as liable for negligence of independent contractor in building or maintaining structures on premises); Golden v. Conway (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 948, 958-959, 128 Cal. Rptr. 69 (landlord may be vicariously liable for negligent installation of heater by independent contractor)] or chattels, or in some other capacity, such a person cannot escape liability for a failure to perform the duty thus imposed by entrusting it to an independent contractor [Van Arsdale v. Hollinger (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 245, 251, 66 Cal. Rptr. 20, 437 P.2d 508 , overruled on other grounds, Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 689, 696, 702, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72, 854 P.2d 721] . A nondelegable duty may be imposed by statute, by charter, or by common law [Van Arsdale v. Hollinger (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 245, 251, 66 Cal. Rptr. 20, 437 P.2d 508 , overruled on other grounds, Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 689, 696, 702, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72, 854 P.2d 721] .

For example, certain statutory safety provisions such as those found in the Vehicle Code create duties that may not be delegated, so that the owner of a vehicle is liable for the harm caused by the negligence of his or her mechanic in servicing a vehicle, even though the mechanic is an independent contractor [Maloney v. Rath (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 442, 446-448, 71 Cal. Rptr. 897, 445 P.2d 513] . A nondelegable duty imposed by statute depends on statutory language and legislative purpose [Jordy v. County of Humboldt (1992) 11 Cal. App. 4th 735, 742-744, 14 Cal. Rptr. 2d 553 (refusing to impose liability on county for acts of foster parents; construing Welf. & Inst. Code § 202); see also J.L. v. Children's Institute, Inc. (2009) 177 Cal. App. 4th 388, 400-403, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 5 (nonprofit home daycare referral organization did not have nondelegable duty under Child Care and Development Services Act, Ed. Code § 8200 et seq., to prevent sexual assault of minor occurring at independent contractor daycare provider to whom victim's mother had been referred)].

A nondelegable duty may also be imposed by ordinances, regulations, or other public safety rules and orders. However, the duty imposed must involve specific safeguards; a general requirement that a safe workplace must be provided is insufficient to create a nondelegable duty [see Felmlee v. Falcon Cable TV (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 1032, 1038-1039, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 158] .

A nondelegable duty may also be created by contract. A promisor may not escape liability to the promisee by delegating performance of a contractual obligation to an independent contractor. Nevertheless, under this exception, no liability is incurred with regard to a nonparty to the contract who is injured by the independent contractor [Millsap v. Federal Express Corp. (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 425, 433, 277 Cal. Rptr. 807] . However, not every contractual duty will be deemed nondelegable. For example, a mortuary that contracts to provide funeral services and arrange for the cremation of a decedent has a duty of due care to perform its services nonnegligently [Christensen v. Superior Court (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 868, 886-888, 890-891, 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 79, 820 P.2d 181] , including a duty to use due care in selecting a crematory. However, once that duty is fulfilled, the mortuary may delegate the duty to carry out the cremation in a respectful and dignified manner and is not vicariously liable for the wrongful cremation practices of the subcontractor crematory [Hansell v. Santos Robinson Mortuary (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 608, 612-617, 75 Cal. Rptr. 2d 361 (mortuary has no statutory right to perform or oversee cremations)].

"Nondelegable duties" may also be imposed in connection with an activity done under license of public authority [see Anderson v. Chancellor W. Oil Dev. Corp. (1975) 53 Cal. App. 3d 235, 239, 125 Cal. Rptr. 640] . Thus, cases have stated that one engaged in an activity that can be lawfully performed only under a franchise granted by public authority and that involves an unreasonable risk of harm to others is subject to liability for personal injury caused by the negligence of a contractor hired to work on the activity [Millsap v. Federal Express Corp. (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 425, 433-434, 277 Cal. Rptr. 807 ; Klein v. Leatherman (1969) 270 Cal. App. 2d 792, 794-796, 76 Cal. Rptr. 190 ; see Restatement (Second) of Torts § 428]. This rule imposes liability on common carriers operating under a public franchise for the acts of independent-contractor drivers [see Eli v. Murphy (1952) 39 Cal. 2d 598, 599-600, 248 P.2d 756 ; Gamboa v. Conti Trucking, Inc. (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 663, 666, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 564] , and it has also been applied to nonfranchised highway contract carriers [see Gamboa v. Conti Trucking, Inc. (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 663, 666, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 564 ; Klein v. Leatherman (1969) 270 Cal. App. 2d 792, 794-796, 76 Cal. Rptr 190 ; cf. Gaskill v. Calaveras Cement Co. (1951) 102 Cal. App. 2d 120, 226 P.2d 633 (no liability based on nondelegable duty as between two contract carriers that stood on equal footing with regard to Public Utilities Commission regulation)]. So long as a carrier, at the time of the injury-causing conduct, was carrying on an activity that could only have been conducted lawfully under a public franchise or authority, the fact that the carrier's particular cargo at that time may have been exempt from certain regulations (such as registration and permit requirements) does not relieve the carrier from vicarious liability for the acts of independent contractors if the carrier remains otherwise regulated by safety and financial responsibility laws [Serna v. Pettey Leach Trucking, Inc. (2003) 110 Cal. App. 4th 1475, 1486-1487, 2 Cal. Rptr. 3d 835] . By contrast, businesses that are classified as "private carriers"--that is, businesses that use the highways only to transport their own products incidental to carrying on their business--are not vicariously liable for the acts of drivers who are independent contractors [Hill Bros. Chem. Co. v. Superior Court (2004) 123 Cal. App. 4th 1001, 1010, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 530] .

If the injured party is an employee of the independent contractor, the existence of a nondelegable duty imposed on the hirer of the independent contractor does not establish the liability of the hirer. Under the rule of Privette v. Superior Court and its progeny [see Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 659, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72, 854 P.2d 721 ; see also 248.22[2][b][iii], [iv]], even in the presence of a nondelegable duty, the hirer is not liable to the injured employee of the independent contractor unless the hirer's conduct affirmatively contributed to the employee's injury [Park v. Burlington N. Santa Fe Ry. Co. (2003) 108 Cal. App. 4th 595, 610-611, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 757 (despite railroad's nondelegable duty to properly dispose of hazardous waste, actions of railroad were not cause of employee's injury); see also Ruiz v. Herman Weissker, Inc. (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 52, 64, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 641 (hirer's attempt to delegate duty to agent, in and of itself, does not subject agent to liability)].

However, a hirer may be liable for breach of a regulatory duty that is imposed on the hirer if this breach affirmatively contributes to an injury [Evard v. Southern California Edison (2007) 153 Cal. App. 4th 137, 147-148, 62 Cal. Rptr. 3d 479 (triable issue as to whether billboard owner's breach of nondelegable regulatory duty to provide safety features for workers on billboard affirmatively contributed to injury to employee of independent contractor); Barclay v. Jesse M. Lange Distrib., Inc. (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 281, 298-301, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 242 (nondelegable duty imposed by Fire Code to provide fire extinguishers within 75 feet of likely fire areas)]. However, the language of the regulation determines whether a nondelegable duty is imposed and on whom the duty is imposed [Padilla v. Pomona College (2008) 166 Cal. App. 4th 661, 673, 82 Cal. Rptr. 3d 869 (Cal-OSHA regulation found at 8 Cal. Code Regs. § 1735(a) did not impose nondelegable duty on any particular party)].

In addition, a hirer who is also the owner or possessor of property cannot effectively delegate to an independent contractor the responsibility for the safety of the contractor's own employees, if the hirer fails to disclose critical information necessary to fulfill that responsibility. Therefore, a hirer who is also the owner or possessor of property may be liable under a premises liability theory for an injury to the employee of an independent contractor if: (1) the hirer knows or reasonably should know of a concealed, preexisting hazardous condition on the premises; (2) the contractor does not know and could not reasonably have discovered the hazardous condition, and (3) the hirer fails to warn the contractor about the hazard [Kinsman v. Unocal Corp. (2005) 37 Cal. 4th 659, 675, 36 Cal. Rptr. 3d 495, 123 P.3d 931] .

For a form of a complaint against an independent contractor and the person who hired the contractor to perform a nondelegable duty, see § 248.43.

[d] Vicarious Liability for Nuisance or Trespass

One who hired an independent contractor may be held liable for injuries resulting from acts of the contractor that constitute a nuisance if the hirer had knowledge of or should have known of the nuisance [Henderson Bros. Stores, Inc. v. Smiley (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 903, 909 n.2, 174 Cal. Rptr. 875 ; see Restatement (Second) of Torts § 427B].

[3] Intentional Torts

As a general rule, the vicarious liability of one who hired an independent contractor for the torts of the contractor does not extend to intentional torts committed by the contractor [Campbell v. Security Pac. Nat'l Bank (1976) 62 Cal. App. 3d 379, 386-387, 133 Cal. Rptr. 77] . However, in those instances in which the independent contractor is also deemed the agent of the hirer, the latter may be liable for the agent's intentional torts [see Draper v. Hellman Commercial Trust & Sav. Bank (1928) 203 Cal. 26, 38-39, 263 P. 240 ; Noble v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 654, 661-663, 109 Cal. Rptr. 269] . For discussion of the liability of the hirer of an independent contractor for the acts of the contractor under agency theories, see Ch. 427, Principal and Agent .

[4] Collateral Negligence

Under the collateral-negligence doctrine, one who might otherwise be liable for acts of an independent contractor that he or she hired, or of the contractor's employees, is not liable for acts that are deemed "collateral" [see Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 689, 696, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72, 854 P. 2d 721 ; Van Arsdale v. Hollinger (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 245, 252, 66 Cal. Rptr. 20, 437 P.2d 508 (overruled on other grounds in Privette)]. Negligence is collateral if [see LaCount v. Hensel Phelps Constr. Co. (1978) 79 Cal. App. 3d 754, 764-765, 145 Cal. Rptr. 244] :

- The contractor's negligence consists solely of the improper manner in which he or she does the work;
- The negligence creates a risk of harm that is not inherent in or normal to the work; and
- The person who contracted for the work had no reason to contemplate the contractor's negligence when the contract was made and was not otherwise negligent.

The negligence for which one who hired an independent contractor is liable must be of a type that is intimately connected with the work authorized and that is reasonably likely from its nature. Negligence in the performance of ordinary acts, that are not necessarily incidental, but only accidentally connected with the work, does not fall within the policy of the law that imposes the extraordinary liability on the hirer [Snyder v. Southern Cal. Edison Co. (1955) 44 Cal. 2d 793, 801, 285 P.2d 912] .

The doctrine of collateral negligence is based on the premise that, if harm results from a risk other than the one that makes the hirer liable for the acts of the independent contractor, the reason for applying vicarious liability no longer applies. Thus, if an independent contractor is hired to take down a heavy sign, the hirer would be liable for harm caused in lowering the sign to the ground but not liable for harm caused after the sign has been lowered [Smith v. Lucky

§ 248.32 Decisions

[1] Borrowed Employees

General employer as remaining concurrently and simultaneously liable in dual employment situation when general and special employers share control of employee's work. Societa per Azioni de Navigazione Italia v. City of Los Angeles (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 446, 460, 183 Cal. Rptr. 51, 645 P.2d 102 ; Marsh v. Tilley Steel Co. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 486, 494-495, 162 Cal. Rptr. 320, 606 P.2d 355

Surgeon as not solely liable for negligence of operating room nurses under borrowed servant doctrine. Truhitte v. French Hosp. (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 332, 343-350, 180 Cal. Rptr. 152

[2] Employer Liability

[a] For Intentional Torts

Employer as liable for intentional torts of employee when employment involves risk of force being used by employee except when tort is committed for employee's own purposes, or as the result of a personal quarrel. Golden W. Broadcasters, Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 947, 957, 171 Cal. Rptr. 95

[b] For Own Negligence or Fault

Municipality as liable for willfully continuing to employ police officer of known violent propensities. City of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 778, 782-783, 109 Cal. Rptr. 365

[c] For Punitive Damages

"Managing agent" of corporation for purposes of establishing entitlement to punitive damages under Civ. Code § 3294(b) includes only those corporate employees who exercise substantial independent authority and judgment in their corporate decision-making so that their decisions ultimately determine corporate policy. White v. Ultramar, Inc. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 563, 566-567, 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 19, 981 P.2d 944

Punitive damages under Civ. Code § 3294as available in judicial action for sex harassment pleaded under Fair Employment and Housing Act (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.). Bihun v. AT&T Info. Sys., Inc. (1993) 13 Cal. App. 4th 976, 996, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 787

Punitive damages as against corporate defendant require showing that corporation either itself committed acts of oppression, fraud, or malice, or that it authorized or ratified such acts by its employees. Pusateri v. E.F. Hutton & Co. (1986) 180 Cal. App. 3d 247, 253, 225 Cal. Rptr. 526

Standards for determining whether corporation is liable for punitive damages based on act of person other than officer or director. Egan v. Mutual of Omaha Ins. Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 809, 822-823, 157 Cal. Rptr. 482, 598 P.2d 452 (decided before 1980 addition of Civ. Code § 3294(b))

Employer liable for employee's tort under doctrine of respondeat superior as not responsible for punitive damages when employer neither directed nor ratified the tortious act. Hale v. Farmers Ins. Exch. (1974) 42 Cal. App. 3d 681, 690, 117 Cal. Rptr. 146 ; (disapproved in Egan v. Mutual of Omaha Ins. Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 809, 822-823, 157 Cal. Rptr. 482, 598 P.2d 452 (decided before 1980 addition of Civ. Code § 3294(b))); Ebaugh v. Rabkin (1972) 22 Cal. App. 3d 891, 895, 99 Cal. Rptr. 706

Person with no regular work space or hours of employment, no training or benefits and who was paid on a strictly commission basis with no taxes withheld, found to be independent contractor and not "employee" within the meaning of Welf. & Inst. Code section 14107.2. People v. Palma (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1559, 1565, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 334

Person is independent contractor if control by hirer may be exercised only as to result of the work and not as to means by which it is accomplished. Societa per Azioni de Navigazione Italia v. City of Los Angeles (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 446, 457-458, 183 Cal. Rptr. 51, 645 P.2d 102

Employer of independent contractor is generally not vicariously liable for torts committed by independent contractor. Henderson Bros. Stores, Inc. v. Smiley (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 903, 910, 174 Cal. Rptr. 875 ; Anderson v. Chancellor W. Oil Dev. Corp. (1975) 53 Cal. App. 3d 235, 239, 125 Cal. Rptr. 640

[b] Nondelegable Duty Exception

In action by ward against county for injuries sustained when he drove away in off-road vehicle owned by foster parents, trial court erred in instructing jury that county's duty of care to ward was nondelegable. Jordy v. County of Humboldt (1992) 11 Cal. App. 4th 735, 742, 14 Cal. Rptr. 2d 553

Activity involving possible danger to public carried on under public franchise or authority is duty that may not be delegated to independent contractor, whether duty is imposed by statute, charter, or common law. Snyder v. Southern Cal. Edison Co. (1955) 44 Cal. 2d 793, 799, 800, 285 P.2d 912

Business involving considerable risk of harm to others operating under governmental authority is nondelegable duty exception to rule of general nonliability for independent contractors. Eli v. Murphy (1952) 39 Cal. 2d 598, 599-601, 248 P.2d 756

[c] Peculiar Risk Doctrine

When injuries resulting form independnet contractor's performance of inherently dangerous work are to an employee of the contractor, and thus subject to workers' compensation coverage, peculiar risk doctrine does not provide basis for employee to recover tort damages from person who hired the contractor, but did not cause the injuries. Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 689, 702, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72, 854 P.2d 721 (overruling Woolen v. Aerojet Gen. Corp. (1962) 57 Cal. 2d 407, 20 Cal. Rptr. 12, 369 P.2d 708 , and its progeny)

Homeowner's association was not liable for injury to security guard employed by security firm hired by association, based on alleged failure of association to exercise control over association's property by restricting or controlling youth parties on premises. Tilley v. CZ Master Ass'n (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 464, 484-486, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 151

Peculiar risk doctrine was not applicable in action by ward against county for injuries sustained when he drove away in off-road vehicle owned by foster parents. Jordy v. County of Humboldt (1992) 11 Cal. App. 4th 735, 746-747, 14 Cal. Rptr. 2d 553

Plans and procedures used in construction of seismic joints in tall buildings did not create a peculiar risk of danger to workmen. Hughes v. Atlantic Pac. Constr. Co. (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 987, 996-1001, 240 Cal. Rptr. 200

Peculiar risk doctrine exception to rule of nonliability for actions of independent contractors applies on finding of two elements: (1) work was likely to create peculiar risk of harm unless special precautions were taken, and (2) employer should have recognized that work was likely to create such a risk. Jimenez v. Pacific W. Constr. Co. (1986) 185 Cal. App. 3d 102, 110, 229 Cal. Rptr. 575

Peculiar risk doctrine exception to rule of nonliability for actions of independent contractors did not apply when truck driven by independent contractor collided with bicycle rider while attempting to enter hiring corporation's property. A. Teichert & Son, Inc. v. Superior Court (1986) 179 Cal. App. 3d 657, 661-662, 225 Cal. Rptr. 10

Peculiar risk doctrine applies if negligence was not unusual or foreign to normal risks of doing work, or if employer was fully aware of independent contractor's contemplated unsafe method of doing work. Mackey v. Campbell Constr. Co. (1980) 101 Cal. App. 3d 774, 785, 786, 162 Cal. Rptr. 64

[4] Negligent Hiring

Church not liable for negligent hiring, retaining and supervising priest who sexually abused minor parishioner, in the absence of any record of abuse and where Church was precluded from investigating priest's sexual behavior by right of privacy. Roman Catholic Bishop v. Superior Court (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 1556, 1565, 1567, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 399 (granting writ of mandamus ordering superior court to enter summary judgment for defendant church)

Church as subject to liability for negligent hiring of pastor who sexually molested child parishioner, based on church's reason to know of pastor's history of pedophilia. Evan F. v. Hughson United Methodist Church (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 828, 841-844, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 748 (reversing summary judgment for defendant church)

Respondeat superior as applicable to all risks inherent in or created by enterprise. Miller v. Stouffer (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 70, 78, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 454

Respondeat superior as applicable to household that employs domestic help; although not business enterprise, household is better equipped than its domestic help to absorb risk by purchasing adequate insurance. Miller v. Stouffer (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 70, 80, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 454 (homeowner liable for negligent driving of housekeeper)

Civ. Code § 2338 as reflecting common law doctrine of respondeat superior. Spradlin v. Cox (1988) 201 Cal. App. 3d 799, 808-809, 247 Cal. Rptr. 347

Rule of respondeat superior as applicable to unpaid volunteers as well as paid employees. Jeffrey E. v. Central Baptist Church (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 718, 722 n. 6, 243 Cal. Rptr. 128

[6] Scope of Employment

Proof of an employer's authorization of employee's act as not necessary to show that act was within scope of employment. Perez v. Van Groningen & Sons, Inc. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 962, 969, 227 Cal. Rptr. 106, 719 P.2d 676 ; Foss v. Anthony Indus. (1983) 139 Cal. App. 3d 794, 801-802, 189 Cal. Rptr. 31

Acceptance of unauthorized tractor passenger by employee as within scope of employment. Perez v. Van Groningen & Sons, Inc. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 962, 967-970, 227 Cal. Rptr. 106, 719 P.2d 676

Burden of proof as on plaintiff to demonstrate that negligent act was committed within scope of employment. Ducey v. Argo Sales Co. (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 707, 721, 159 Cal. Rptr. 835, 602 P.2d 755

Reasonable jury could conclude that law firm partner acted within scope of authority when removing money from client's residence in effort to post client's bail and ensure that firm's fees were paid. PCO, Inc. v. Christensen, Miller, Fink, Jacobs, Glaser, Weil & Shapiro, LLP (2007) 150 Cal. App. 4th 384, 394, 58 Cal. Rptr. 3d 516

When employer had no knowledge of conduct, employer could not be liable for employee's use of employer's computer systems to send threatening e-mails that were unrelated to his employment. Delfino v. Agilent Technologies, Inc. (2006) 145 Cal. App. 4th 790, 813-814, 52 Cal. Rptr. 3d 376

Off-duty winery employee's misuse of grape bin for personal winemaking, without employer's knowledge or consent, could not support vicarious liability of employer for traffic accident caused when bin fell from employee's truck; employee was not acting within scope of employment at time of accident. Baptist v. Robinson (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 151, 164, 49 Cal. Rptr. 3d 153

Driver who committed intentional assault with personal vehicle for personal reasons was not acting in scope of employment, even though he was taking car to airport several hours later for business trip. Kephart v. Genuity, Inc. (2006) 136 Cal. App. 4th 280, 294-295, 38 Cal. Rptr. 3d 845

Question of fact for jury as to whether employee's act of throwing hot oil on police officer while attacking other employee was within scope of employment, because reasonable inferences could be made either way. Yamaguchi v. Harnsmut (2003) 106 Cal. App. 4th 472, 482-485, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 706

Evidence supported jury's verdict that employee involved in auto accident was not acting within scope of employment for school district, although accident occurred after being fingerprinted as required to work for district; fingerprinting was mandated by state, not school district, employee had discretion to decide when, where, and how to fulfill requirement, and task was performed on employee's day off at location chosen by employee. Tognazzini v. San Luis Coastal Unified Sch. Dist. (2001) 86 Cal. App. 4th 1053, 1058-1060, 103 Cal. Rptr. 2d 790

Triable issue of fact existed as to whether real estate agent was acting within scope of employment when submitting fraudulent loan transaction to mortgage loan broker such that employer could be vicariously liable. Inter Mountain Mortgage, Inc. v. Sulimen (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 1434, 1441, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 798

Negligent driving of employee on paid break, driving to obtain cookies to take back to work, as act of comfort and convenience that had no nexus to employment andtherefore outside scope of employment. Bailey v. Filco, Inc. (1996) 48 Cal. App. 4th 1552, 1565, 56 Cal. Rptr. 2d 333

Scope of employment test for purpose of respondeat superior is not the same as test under workers' compensation law to determine whether injuries sustained by employee arose out of and in course of employment. Anderson v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 254, 259, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 534

Payment of worker's compensation benefits for injuries suffered in accident that occurred on way home from work as not requiring finding that employer was vicariously liable for employee's tortious conduct in that accident. Anderson v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 254, 259, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 534

Whether an act is within scope of employment as question of law when facts are undisputed and no conflicting inferences are possible. Tryer v. Ojai Valley Sch. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1476, 1480, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 114

Employee's conduct as coming within scope of employment when typical or broadly incidental to enterprise and not so unusual or startling that it would seem unfair to include resulting loss in risk of doing business. Miller v. Stouffer (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 70, 78, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 454

Combined purposes doctrine as attaching respondeat superior liability to incidental deviations from strict course of employer's duties unless it appears that employee could not have been serving employer either directly or indirectly. Miller v. Stouffer (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 70, 78-79, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 454

Housekeeper's negligent driving of employee's vehicle as coming within scope of employment when housekeeper was practicing driving and returning from errands for her employer. Miller v. Stouffer (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 70, 78, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 454

Child molestation by Sunday school teacher as not within scope of employment. Jeffrey E. v. Central Baptist Church (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 718, 722-724, 243 Cal. Rptr. 128

Respondeat superior liability as properly applied when employee undertakes activities within his or her scope of employment that cause employee to become instrumentality of danger to others, even if danger may manifest itself at times and locations remote from workplace. Childers v. Shasta Livestock Auction Yard, Inc. (1987) 190 Cal. App. 3d 792, 804-805, 235 Cal. Rptr. 641

Sexual assault committed by police officer after making traffic stop as within scope of employment due to fact that police officer carries authority of law. White v. County of Orange (1985) 166 Cal. App. 3d 566, 570-571, 212 Cal. Rptr. 493

Employee's wrongful acts as within scope of employment on showing that (1) the act was either required or incident to his or her duties, or (2) employee's misconduct could be reasonably foreseen by employer. Alma W. v. Oakland Unified Sch. Dist. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 133, 139, 176 Cal. Rptr. 287 ; Clark Equip. Co. v. Wheat (1979) 92 Cal. App. 3d 503, 520, 154 Cal. Rptr. 874

Battery on job site after hours as within scope of employment when altercation arose out of employment situation. Rodgers v. Kemper Constr. Co. (1975) 50 Cal. App. 3d 608, 621-624, 124 Cal. Rptr. 143

[b] Going-and-Coming Rule

Employee injured while driving own vehicle to work considered within the scope of employment because employee often used personal vehicle to travel to job sites for work purposes, thereby incidentally benefitting the employer. Singh v. Board of Ret. (1996) 41 Cal. App. 4th 1180, 1186-1188, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 220

Per diem travel allowance as not changing general rule that employee is outside scope of employment while commuting to and from work. Anderson v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 254, 259, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 534

Special errand exception to going-and-coming rule as not applicable when employee is driving coworker to park and ride lot. Anderson v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 254, 262, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 534

Activities of employee on lunch break as not coming within required-vehicle exception to going-and-coming rule. Tryer v. Ojai Valley Sch. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1476, 1482, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 114

Combined purposes doctrine as not applying if employee's activities that fall outside his or her scope of employment under going-and-coming rule. Tryer v. Ojai Valley Sch. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1476, 1483, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 114

Going-and-coming rule as inapplicable as applied by either workers' compensation or tort cases. Tryer v. Ojai Valley Sch. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1476, 1481-1482, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 114

Required-vehicle exception to going-and-coming rule as applying only when employer requires use of vehicle as integral part of performing job at disparate locations throughout course of work hours. Tryer v. Ojai Valley Sch. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1476, 1481-1482, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 114

Special errand exception to going-and-coming rule as not applicable when employee's act constitutes a complete abandonment of employer's business. Felix v. Asai (1987) 192 Cal. App. 3d 926, 931-934, 237 Cal. Rptr. 718

Temporary employment agency employee as within going-and-coming rule while driving to temporary work assignment. Henderson v. Adia Servs., Inc. (1986) 182 Cal. App. 3d 1069, 1076-1078, 227 Cal. Rptr. 745

Employee sent home early due to heavy rains as within going-and-coming rule. Caldwell v. A.R.B., Inc. (1986) 176 Cal. App. 3d 1028, 1035-1042, 222 Cal. Rptr. 494

§ 248.40 Complaint for Compensatory Damages Based on Negligence--By Third Party Against Employer and Employee--Injury Caused by Employee Acting Within Scope of Employment [Civ. Code § 2338]

[1] FORM Complaint for Compensatory Damages Based on Negligence--By Third Party Against Employer and Employee--Injury Caused by Employee Acting Within Scope of Employment [Civ. Code § 2338]

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

_____[name],	)
Plaintiff,	)	NO. _____
vs.	)	COMPLAINT FOR DAMAGES
_____ [name of employer],	)	(Negligence)
_____ [name of employee],	)	[Amount demanded and DOES 1 through_____,	)	_____(exceeds or does not exceed)
Defendants.	)	$10,000]
	)	[LIMITED CIVIL CASE]

Plaintiff alleges:

FIRST COUNT (Negligence)

1. Defendant _____[name of employee tortfeasor] is an individual, and at all times herein mentioned was a resident of _____County, California.

2. Defendant _____[name of employer] is, and all times herein mentioned was, _____[specify capacity, e.g., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of California].

3. Defendants Doe I through Doe _____, inclusive, are sued herein under fictitious names. Their true names and capacities are unknown to plaintiff. When their true names and capacities are ascertained, plaintiff will amend this complaint by inserting their true names and capacities herein. Plaintiff is informed and believes and thereon alleges that each of the fictitiously named defendants is responsible in some manner for the occurrences herein alleged, and that plaintiff's damages as herein alleged were proximately caused by those defendants. Each reference in this complaint to "defendant," "defendants," or a specifically named defendant refers also to all defendants sued under fictitious names.

4. Plaintiff is informed and believes and thereon alleges that at all times herein mentioned each of the defendants, including all defendants sued under fictitious names, was the agent and employee of each of the remaining defendants, and in doing the things hereinafter alleged, was acting within the course and scope of this agency or employment.

5. On or about _____[date] at _____[location] in _____[city], California, plaintiff _____[allege plaintiff's conduct at time of injury, e.g., was driving her car northbound on Main Street at the point where Main Street intersects with First Avenue].

6. At that time and place, _____[name of employee defendant] _____[state negligent act or omission of employee, e.g., while operating an automobile belonging to defendant _____ (name of employer) negligently and carelessly operated this vehicle so as to cause it to strike the rear of plaintiff's vehicle].

[Allege that damages resulted from conduct of employee, using one or more of Paragraphs 7- 10, or other allegation of damages]

[8. As a proximate result of the acts of defendant, plaintiff was hurt and injured in his/her health, strength, and activity, sustaining injury to his/her nervous system and person, all of which have caused, and continue to cause, plaintiff great mental, physical, and nervous pain and suffering. (Plaintiff is informed and believes and thereon alleges that these injuries will result in some permanent disability to him/her.) As a result of these injuries, plaintiff has suffered general damages.]

[EITHER]

[9. As a further proximate result of defendant's acts, plaintiff has been damaged in that he/she has been required to expend money and incur obligations for medical services, x rays, drugs, and sundries reasonably required in the treatment and relief of the injuries herein alleged.]

[OR]

[9. As a further proximate result of the acts of defendant, plaintiff has incurred, and will continue to incur, medical and related expenses.]

[EITHER]

[10. As a further proximate result of the acts of defendant, plaintiff was prevented from attending to his/her usual occupation as a _____(state occupation) for a period of _____(specify, e.g., 2 months) and thereby lost earnings to his/her damage.]

[OR]

[10. As a further proximate result of the acts of defendant, plaintiff was prevented from attending to his/her usual occupation as a _____(state occupation) for a period of _____(specify, e.g., 2 months) as of the date of this complaint and continuing for an as yet undetermined period. Plaintiff thereby has lost and will lose earnings in an as yet unascertained amount. (As a further proximate result of the acts of defendant, plaintiff's present and future earning capacity has been greatly impaired.)]

[CONTINUE]

(Respondeat Superior)

11. At all times herein mentioned, defendant _____[name of employee] was the agent and employee of defendant _____[name of employer] and, in doing the acts herein described and referred to, was acting in the course and within the scope of his/her authority as agent and employee, and in the transaction of the business of the employment or agency. Defendant _____[name of employer] is, therefore, liable to plaintiff for the acts of _____[name of employee] as heretofore alleged.

WHEREFORE, plaintiff prays judgment against defendants, and each of them, as follows:

1. For general damages according to proof;

2. For medical and related expenses according to proof;

3. For lost earnings, past and future, according to proof;

4. For interest as allowed by law;

5. For costs of suit incurred herein; and

6. For such other and further relief as the court may deem proper.

VERIFICATION

I, _____[name], am the plaintiff in the above-entitled action. I have read the foregoing complaint and know the contents thereof. The same is true of my own knowledge, except as to those matters which are therein alleged on information and belief, and as to those matters, I believe it to be true.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California that the foregoing is true and correct.

[2] Use of Form

This form, is a general form of complaint for use to allege negligence against an employee and the liability of an employer for the acts of the employee under the doctrine of respondeat superior [see Civ. Code § 2338].

[3] Allegations

In addition to the allegations commonly used for capacity, fictitiously named defendants, and agency (Paragraphs 1-4), this form of complaint alleges the negligence of the employee (Paragraphs 5-6). For more detailed consideration of pleading negligence and forms for use in pleading negligence, see Ch. 380, Negligence .

This form also contains various optional alternatives to allege that damage resulted from the defendants' conduct, including:

- An allegation of specific physical injury (Paragraph 7);
- Allegations of general damages (Paragraph 8);
- Special damages for medical expenses (Alternative Paragraphs 9); and
- Special damages for lost earnings (Alternative Paragraphs 10).

The first alternative Paragraph 9 alleges a fixed and known amount of medical expenses. The second alternative is for use if the amount of medical expenses is not known at the time when the complaint is filed.

The first alternative Paragraph 10 alleges a fixed and known amount of lost earnings. The second alternative is for use if the total amount of lost earnings cannot yet be ascertained and the plaintiff's future earning capacity has been impaired.

Depending on the particular case, any or all of Paragraphs 7-10 may be used as appropriate. Additional alternatives may be found in Ch. 177, Damages , and Ch. 380, Negligence .

[4] Respondeat Superior Count

In addition to the allegations of negligence on the part of the defendant employee, this form contains a count alleging the employer's vicarious liability under respondeat superior (Paragraph 11). Generally, if recovery is sought for invasion of the same primary right, it is sought under the same cause of action, even if sought on a different legal ground or theory [see Mattson v. City of Costa Mesa (1980) 106 Cal. App. 3d 441, 448-449, 164 Cal. Rptr. 913] . Different legal grounds or theories for recovery for invasion of the same right are commonly denominated as "counts." Thus, theories such as respondeat superior that impose vicarious liability are not causes of action but counts.

Respondeat superior is commonly pleaded without reference to a separate count, but by use of either a general or specific allegation of agency in the preliminary allegations of the complaint. However, inclusion of a separate count helps clarify the nature of the liability alleged against the employer [see § 248.11 for a general discussion of theories of direct and vicarious employer liability]. This count should be used in addition to, and not instead of, the universal agency allegation set forth in Paragraph 4 because of the need to allege agency involving fictitiously named defendants.

[5] Specification of Damages

In an action to recover damages for personal injury or wrongful death, the complaint must not state the amount of actual or punitive damages demanded for this cause of action [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.10(b)].

Otherwise, the amounts claimed as damages for anything other than personal injury or wrongful death (for example, property damage) must be alleged [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.10(b)] or an equivalent statement must be included, for example, a statement that the damages for a particular loss or harm sustained [see Civ. Code §§ 3281, 3282] are not known and that leave will be sought to amend the complaint to state the exact amount when ascertained. If this is done, counsel must remember to seek leave to amend the complaint to so state before judgment.

No claim for punitive damages may state an amount sought regardless of the nature of the case [Civ. Code § 3295(e)].

For discussion of and forms for requesting and stating the amount of damages sought when they are not stated in the complaint, see Ch. 177, Damages , and Ch. 205, Defaults and Default Judgments [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 425.11, 425.115].

Although verification of this complaint is not required [see Code Civ. Proc. § 128.7(a)], verification will require any answer to be verified in an unlimited civil case [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 92(b), 446]. Verification will also preclude the defendant from using a general denial in an unlimited civil case, and will preclude a general denial in a limited civil case if the action is a claim assigned to a third party for collection [Code Civ. Proc. § 431.30(d)]. For further discussion, see Ch. 26, Answers .

Plaintiff alleges:

FIRST COUNT

(Battery)

1. [Allegation identifying employee defendant. See § 248.40[1], Paragraph 1.]

2. [Allegation identifying employer defendant. See § 248.40[1], Paragraph 2.]

3. [Fictitious name allegation. See § 248.40[1], Paragraph 3.]

4. [General and universal agency allegation. See § 248.40[1], Paragraph 4.]

5. On or about _____[date] at _____[location] in _____[city], California, plaintiff _____[state what plaintiff was doing immediately prior to battery, e.g., was lawfully on the premises of _____(name of employer defendant) for the purpose of purchasing groceries].

6. At that time and place, defendant _____[name of employee] _____[state all acts of defendant that constituted a harmful or offensive contact with plaintiff, e.g., removed a firearm from a drawer and, without warning, fired a shot at plaintiff, striking him in the chest with a bullet].

7. In doing the acts as alleged above, defendant acted with the intent to make a harmful contact with plaintiff's person.

8. At no time did plaintiff consent to any of the acts of defendant alleged in Paragraphs 5 through 7, above.

10. [General damages allegation. See § 248.40[1], Paragraph 8.]

11. [Medical expenses allegation. See § 248.40[1], Alternative Paragraphs 9.]

12. [Lost earnings allegation. See § 248.40[1], Alternative Paragraphs 10.]

[13. The aforementioned conduct of defendant _____ (name of employee) was willful and malicious and was intended to oppress and cause injury to plaintiff, thereby warranting the assessment of punitive damages against defendant _____ (name of employee).]

SECOND COUNT
(Respondeat Superior)

14. At all times herein mentioned, defendant _____ [name of employee] was the agent and employee of defendant _____ [name of employer] and, in doing the acts herein described and referred to, was acting in the course and within the scope of his/her authority as agent and employee, and in the transaction of the business of the employment or agency. Defendant _____ [name of employer] is, therefore, liable to plaintiff for the acts of _____ [name of employee] as heretofore alleged.

THIRD COUNT
(Employer's Negligent Hiring, Training, and/or Retention of Unfit Employee)

15. [Plaintiff is informed and believes and thereon alleges that,] [I]n doing the acts as heretofore alleged, defendant _____ [name of employer] knew, or in the exercise of reasonable diligence should have known, that defendant _____ [name of employee] was incompetent and unfit to perform the duties for which he/she was employed, and that an undue risk to persons such as plaintiff would exist because of the employment. [Add any specific facts to support allegation of employer's advance knowledge of employee's propensity for violence.]

[16. Despite this advance knowledge, defendant _____ (name of employer) retained defendant _____ (name of employee) as an employee in conscious disregard of the rights and safety of others. As a result of this conscious disregard of the rights of plaintiff, plaintiff is entitled to an award of punitive damages from defendant _____ (name of employer).]

WHEREFORE, plaintiff prays judgment against defendants, and each of them, as follows:

1. For general damages;

2. For medical and related expenses according to proof;

3. For lost earnings, past and future, _____ according to proof;

[4. For punitive damages;]

5. For interest as allowed by law;

6. For costs of suit incurred herein; and

7. For such other and further relief as the court may deem proper.

[Verification, if desired. See 248.40[1].]

[2] Use of Form

This form is a general form of complaint for use to allege a battery committed by an employee, the vicarious liability of the employer for the acts of the employee under the doctrine of respondeat superior [see Civ. Code § 2338], and the direct liability of the employer for the employee's acts based on the employer's negligent hiring or retention of the employee [see Underwriters Ins. Co. v. Purdie (1983) 145 Cal. App. 3d 57, 68-69, 193 Cal. Rptr. 248 ; see also § 248.12 for discussion of employer's own negligence or fault as basis for liability]. This form may be adapted for use in the case of any other intentional tort committed by an employee in the scope of employment by substituting the appropriate allegations for Paragraphs 5 through 8.

PRACTICE TIP:

Specifically Plead Scope of Employment. Given the holdings of Farmers Insurance Group v. City of Santa Clara (1996) 11 Cal.4th 992, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 478, 906 P. 2d 440 , and Lisa M. v. Henry Mayo-Newhall Mem'l Hosp. (1996) 12 Cal. 4th 291, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 510, 907 P. 2d 358 , and the likely increased use of demurrers such as that suggested in § 248.50[1], plaintiff's counsel will be well advised to more specifically plead why the employee conduct that caused the injury in question was an "outgrowth" of the employment, "inherent in the working environment," and a "foreseeable consequence" of the work. Such pleading, as specific as hard information and "information and belief" can make it, should, at the very least keep the "scope of employment" issue from being disposed of on demurrer and left open to discovery. By Richard P. Hill

[3] Allegations

In addition to the allegations commonly used for capacity, fictitiously named defendants, and agency (Paragraphs 1-4), this form of complaint alleges a battery (Paragraphs 5-8). For more detailed consideration of pleading assault and battery and for additional forms of allegations of assault and battery, see Ch. 58, Assault and Battery .

This form also contains an optional allegation of specific physical injury (Paragraph 9), allegations of general damages (Paragraph 10), special damages for medical expenses (Alternative Paragraphs 11), special damages for lost earnings (Alternative Paragraphs 12), and a claim for punitive damages from the employee (Optional Paragraph 13). For discussion of the advisability of pleading for punitive damages, § see 248.41[4]. For discussion of the use of the alternative paragraphs, see § 248.40[4].

This form next contains a count for the vicarious liability of the employer under the respondeat superior doctrine (Paragraph 14). For discussion of this count, see § 248.41[4].

[4] Count for Direct Employer Liability

This form contains a count alleging the employer's direct liability for the employee's acts as a result of the employer's negligent hiring and retention of an employee with a known propensity for violence (Paragraph 15) [see Underwriters Ins. Co. v. Purdie (1983) 145 Cal. App. 3d 57, 68-69, 193 Cal. Rptr. 248] . The complaint must allege facts showing that the employer knew or should have known of the risk that an employee would act in a certain manner, and that the employee did in fact act in that particular manner [see Doe v. Capital Cities (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 1038, 1054-1055, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 122 (upholding trial court's sustaining of demurrer to inadequately alleged negligent hiring, training, and/or supervision cause of action)]. If that does not appear from the face of other allegations in the complaint, facts showing that specific connection should be alleged in this paragraph.

An employer is liable for punitive damages if the employer had advance knowledge of the unfitness of the employee and employed him or her with a conscious disregard of the rights or safety of others (optional Paragraph 16) [see Civ. Code § 3294(b); see also § 248.18[1]]. Use of this optional paragraph is recommended in that discovery may establish the employer's actual knowledge of the employee's unfitness, which would support the prayer for punitive damages.

This form of complaint is for use to allege negligence against an independent contractor and the liability of the person who hired the contractor under the peculiar-risk doctrine [Henderson Bros. Stores, Inc. v. Smiley (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 903, 911-912, 174 Cal. Rptr. 875] . For general considerations about complaints for negligence, see § 248.40[2] et seq.

[3] Allegations

In addition to the allegations commonly used for capacity, fictitiously named defendants, and agency (Paragraphs 1-4), this form of complaint alleges the negligence of the independent contractor (Paragraphs 5-8). For more detailed consideration of pleading negligence and for additional forms of allegations of negligence, see Ch. 380, Negligence .

This form also contains an optional allegation of specific physical injury (Paragraph 9), allegations of general damages (Paragraph 10), special damages for medical expenses (Alternative Paragraphs 11), and special damages for lost earnings (Alternative Paragraphs 12). For discussion of the use of the alternative paragraphs, see § 248.40[3].

[4] Peculiar-Risk Doctrine

This form contains a count for the liability of the person who hired the independent contractor under the "peculiar-risk" doctrine (Paragraphs 13 and 14). The peculiar risk doctrine is stated in Restatement (Second) of Torts §§ 413 and 416. § 416, on which Paragraph 13 of the form is based, is described as imposing vicarious liability on one who hired an independent contractor, regardless of any contractual provisions, for the contractor's negligent failure to take the proper special precautions against a peculiar risk. § 413, on which optional paragraph 14 of the form is based, is described as imposing direct liability on the contractor for failing to provide in the contract for the taking of appropriate precautions or for failure to provide for them in some other manner [Henderson Bros. Stores, Inc. v. Smiley (1981) 120 Cal. App.

3d 903, 911, 174 Cal. Rptr. 875] . Paragraph 14 may be used if, in addition to vicarious liability, direct liability may be based on the employer's failure to meet the requirements of Restatement (Second) of Torts § 413.

The California Supreme Court has precluded employees of negligent independent contractors from recovering damages from the hirer of the independent contractor under the peculiar risk doctrine [Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 689, 701-702, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72, 854 P.2d 721] . This limitation applies even when the hirer fails to provide in the contract, or in some other manner, that special precautions be taken to avert the peculiar risks of the work [Toland v. Sunland Hous. Group, Inc. (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 253, 267, 74 Cal. Rptr. 898, 955 P.2d 475] .

In addition, an employee of an independent contractor who is injured on the job cannot sue the hirer of the contractor for negligence in hiring the contractor [Camargo v. Tjaarda Dairy (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 1235, 1244-1245, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 617, 25 P.3d 1096] , nor can suit be based merely on the fact that the hirer retained control over safety conditions at a work site [Hooker v. Department of Transp. (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 198, 202, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 853, 38 P.3d 1081] . However, the hirer may be liable for an injury to an employee of an independent contractor if the hirer's exercise of retained control over safety affirmatively contributed to the employee's injury [Hooker v. Department of Transp. (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 198, 202, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 853, 38 P.3d 1081] or if the hirer negligently provides unsafe equipment to the contractor that affirmatively contributes to the injury [McKown v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 219, 222, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 868, 38 P.3d 1094] .

For further discussion of the peculiar-risk doctrine, see § 248.22[2][b].

Plaintiff alleges:

FIRST COUNT

1. [Allegation identifying independent contractor defendant. See § 248.40[1], Paragraph 1.]

2. [Allegation identifying employer defendant. See § 248.40[1], Paragraph 2.]

3. [Fictitious name allegation. See § 248.40[1], Paragraph 3.]

4. [General and universal agency allegation. See § 248.40[1], Paragraph 4.]

5. On or about _____[date], defendant _____ agreed to hire, and did hire, _____[name of independent contractor] to serve defendant as an independent contractor for the purpose of _____[type of contracted work, e.g., repairing and constructing power lines for defendant _____(name of defendant who hired independent contractor) on its premises and on rights-of-way held by defendant _____(name of defendant who hired independent contractor)]. Pursuant to the agreement, _____[name of independent contractor] began performance of the contract on _____[date].

6. On or about _____[date], plaintiff _____[allege facts showing status and activity of plaintiff placing him/her in class of persons to whom defendant owed duty, e.g., was walking on the public sidewalk in front of the premises located at _____(address)].

7. At that place and sometime prior to that time, defendant _____[name of independent contractor] _____[allege facts establishing defendant independent contractor's control over instrumentality of injury, e.g., in fulfillment of the abovementioned contract, had installed a public-utility pole on a right-of-way of defendant _____(name of defendant who hired independent contractor) located immediately adjacent to the place where plaintiff was walking].

8. Defendant _____[name of independent contractor] negligently _____[allege acts or omissions of defendant independent contractor, e.g., had installed the pole at a depth of _____feet, an insufficient depth to properly secure it in the ground, so as to cause the pole to fall against a power line, breaking the line, and causing one end of it to fall to the ground, where it came in contact with plaintiff] and to proximately cause the injuries and damages described below.

10. [General damages allegation. See § 248.40[1], Paragraph 8.]

11. [Medical expenses allegation. See § 248.40[1], Alternative Paragraphs 9.]

12. [Lost earnings allegation. See § 248.40[1], Alternative Paragraphs 10.]

SECOND COUNT
(Hirer's Vicarious Liability for Negligent Performance of Nondelegable Duty by Independent Contractor)

13. [Pursuant to _____(statute, regulation, or other source of duty, e.g., the rules, regulations, and orders of the Public Utility Commission of the State of California], defendant _____[name of defendant who hired independent contractor] has a duty _____[specify, e.g., to ensure that its public-utility poles are installed at a depth of _____feet], which duty may not be delegated to any other person pursuant to contract or otherwise. Defendant _____[name of defendant who hired independent contractor] is, therefore, liable for the acts of _____[name of independent contractor] and plaintiff's injuries as herein alleged.

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff [name]

[Verification, if desired. See § 248.40[1].]

[2] Use of Form

This form of complaint is for use to allege negligence against an independent contractor and the liability of the person who hired the contractor because the injury resulted in the performance of an act that involved a nondelegable duty [see Van Arsdale v. Hollinger (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 245, 251, 66 Cal. Rptr. 20, 437 P.2d 508] . For general considerations about complaints for negligence, see § 248.40[2] et seq.

[3] Allegations

In addition to the allegations commonly used for capacity, fictitiously named defendants, and agency (Paragraphs 1-4), this form of complaint alleges the negligence of the independent contractor (Paragraphs 5-8). For more detailed consideration of pleading negligence and for additional forms of allegations of negligence, see Ch. 380, Negligence .

This form also contains an optional allegation of specific physical injury (Paragraph 9), allegations of general damages (Paragraph 10), special damages for medical expenses (Alternative Paragraphs 11), and special damages for lost earnings (Alternative Paragraphs 12). For discussion of the use of the alternative paragraphs, see § 248.40[3].

The form then sets forth a count alleging the hirer's vicarious liability based on the independent contractor's negligent performance of a nondelegable duty. For discussion of the liability of one who has hired an independent contractor for a nondelegable duty, see § 248.22[2][c].

[1] FORM Allegations--Employer Liability for Punitive Damages [Civ. Code § 3294(b)]

[EITHER]

1. In doing the acts as herein alleged, defendant _____[name of employee] was acting pursuant to the authorization of defendant _____[name of employer][add in case of corporate employer:, as given by _____(name), who was at all relevant times _____(an officer or a director or a managing agent) of _____(name of defendant corporation)]. An award of punitive damages against defendant _____[name of employer] is therefore warranted.

[OR]

1. Subsequent to the acts of _____[name of employee] as herein alleged, _____[name of employer][add in case of corporate employer:, acting through _____(name), who was at all relevant times _____(an officer or a director or a managing agent) of _____(name of defendant corporation),] ratified and adopted these acts as his/her/its own. An award of punitive damages against defendant _____[name of employer] is therefore warranted.

[OR]

1. In doing the acts as herein alleged, defendant _____[name of employer] [add in case of corporate employer:, acting through _____(name), who was at all relevant times _____(an officer or a director or a managing agent) of _____(name of defendant corporation),] was personally guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice. An award of punitive damages against defendant _____[name of employer] is therefore warranted.

[2] Use of Form

This form is for use as an allegation for the recovery of punitive damages from an employer for the acts of an employee [see Civ. Code § 3294(b)]. The first alternative paragraph alleges that the employer authorized the employee's act that caused the injury. The second alternative paragraph alleges that the employer subsequently ratified the employee's acts [see Coats v. Construction & Gen. Laborers Local No. 185 (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 908, 914, 93 Cal. Rptr. 639] . The third alternative paragraph alleges that the employer was personally guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice. Each alternative paragraph contains optional language to allege that a corporate defendant acted through an officer, director, or managing agent of the corporation [see Civ. Code § 3294(b)]. For a fourth alternative paragraph alleging a right to punitive damages from the employer based on the employer's advance knowledge of the unfitness of the employee, see § 248.41[1] (Paragraphs 15-16). For further discussion of employer liability for punitive damages, see § 248.18.

§ 248.45 Allegation--Count for Direct Employer Liability--Employee Acted Pursuant to Employer's Express Instructions and Authority

_____[Specify number, e.g., SECOND] COUNT
(Employer Authorization of Employee's Wrongful Conduct)

1. [Plaintiff is informed and believes and thereon alleges that,] [I]n doing the acts as heretofore alleged, defendant _____ [name of employee] was acting pursuant to the express authority and instructions and following the express directions of defendant _____[name of employer] [in that _____(specify any facts to support allegation of employer's express instructions, e.g., it is the business policy of defendant _____(name of employer) that all deliveries are to be completed within 10 minutes from the time of loading regardless of the speed at which the driver must travel in order to complete the delivery at that time. Therefore, the negligence as to speed of defendant _____(name of employee) was expressly authorized and directed by defendant _____(name of employer))].

2. [Punitive damages allegation against employer, if employee's conduct would support claim for punitive damages. See § 248.44[1], first alternative.]

This form of allegation is for use to allege that the defendant employer authorized the defendant employee's tortious act and is thus directly liable to the third-party plaintiff [see Jensen v. Southern Pac. Co. (1954) 129 Cal App. 2d 67,

69-71, 276 P.2d 703 , overruled on other grounds, Alarid v. Vanier (1958) 50 Cal. 2d 617, 327 P.2d 897] . This count may be added to a complaint for damages against an employee and employer in which the employer is alleged to be vicariously liable for the employee's torts under the doctrine of respondeat superior. For further discussion of direct employer liability, see § 248.12[1].

If the employee's liability is based on negligence, this count may be added to § 248.40[1]. If the employee's liability is based on an intentional tort, this count may be substituted for the second count in § 248.41[1] (Paragraphs 15-16).

§ 248.46 Allegation--Count for Direct Employer Liability--Negligent Training or Supervision

[1] FORM Allegation--Count for Direct Employer Liability--Negligent Training or Supervision

_____[Specify number, e.g., SECOND] COUNT
(Negligent Training and/or Supervision)

1. [Plaintiff is informed and believes and thereon alleges that,] [I]n doing the acts as heretofore alleged, defendant _____[name of employer] knew, or in the exercise of reasonable diligence should have known, that defendant _____[name of employee] was neither qualified nor able to _____[specify particular acts of employee that gave rise to injury, e.g., safely operate the employer's delivery van] and that an undue risk to persons such as plaintiff would exist because of this lack of ability unless defendant _____[name of employer] adequately trained and supervised defendant _____[name of employee] in the exercise of the tasks of his/her employment. [Add any specific facts to support allegation of employer's advance knowledge of employee's lack of ability, e.g., The van was equipped with a standard transmission, and _____(name of employee) informed _____(name of employer) that he/she did not know how to drive a vehicle with a standard transmission.]

2. Notwithstanding the knowledge that defendant _____[name of employee] was neither qualified nor able to _____[specify particular acts of employee that gave rise to injury, e.g., safely operate the employer's delivery van], defendant _____[name of employer] did not [adequately] train or supervise _____[name of employee] in his/her performance of _____[specify task(s)].

3. The failure of defendant _____[name of employer] to [adequately] train and supervise defendant

_____[name of employee] was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury, as _____[specify facts leading to inference of causation, e.g., had _____(name of employer) trained defendant _____(name of employee) in the proper operation of a vehicle with a stickshift, the accident that injured plaintiff would not have occurred].

[4. Despite this advance knowledge, defendant _____(name of employer) allowed defendant _____(name of employee) to _____(specify, e.g., drive the van) in conscious disregard of the rights and safety of others. As a result of this conscious disregard of the rights of plaintiff, an award of punitive damages against defendant _____(name of employer) is warranted.

[2] Use of Form

This form of allegation is for use to allege that the defendant employer negligently failed to train or supervise the defendant employee in the proper performance of his or her duties, thus resulting in injury. This count may be added to a complaint for damages against an employee and employer in which the employer is alleged to be vicariously liable for the employee's torts under the doctrine of respondeat superior. For further discussion of direct employer liability, see § 248.12[1].

If the employee's liability is based on negligence, this count may be added to § 248.40[1]. If the employee's liability is based on an intentional tort, this count may be substituted for the second count in § 248.41[1] (Paragraphs 15-16).

[3] Negligent Training or Supervision

Direct employer liability for negligent training or supervision is not a conclusively established theory of action in California. The right of action for negligent supervision is recognized in the Restatement [see Restatement (Second) of Agency § 213] and has been applied in other similar contexts [see Lehmuth v. Long Beach Unified Sch. Dist. (1960) 53 Cal. 2d 544, 550-553, 2 Cal. Rptr. 279, 348 P.2d 887 (school district independently liable for injuries caused by failure to properly supervise students)]. However, one court has failed to find a significant distinction between negligent hiring and negligent supervision [see Noble v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 654, 663-664, 109 Cal. Rptr. 269] . Nevertheless, there would seem to be a clear distinction between the hiring and retention of an employee who is wholly unqualified for the job that he or she is hired to perform, and the assigning of a specific task to an otherwise-qualified employee who has not been trained to perform that task and is unable to do it without representing a risk to others. For further discussion of direct employer liability, see § 248.12[3].

[4] Punitive Damages

Punitive damages are recoverable from an employer who had advance knowledge of the unfitness of an employee and employed him or her with a conscious disregard of the rights or safety of others [Civ. Code § 3294(b)]. It has not been determined whether the use of the term "employed" in the statute is limited to the general act of hiring a particular unfit individual, or whether it may be construed to extend to the assignment of a particular task that the employer knows, or reasonably should know, that the employee is incapable of performing safely. Even under these circumstances, however, an employer is only liable for punitive damages if the employee's conduct itself constitutes oppression, fraud, or malice [see Civ. Code § 3294(a),(b)].

It is somewhat difficult to postulate a circumstance under which an employee would so act as a result of the employer's failure to train the employee to perform a particular task to which the employee has been assigned. Perhaps an employee who has been given no training in dealing with the public and handling customer complaints might commit an intentional tort in the course of performing these duties. Based on such a possibility, this form is drafted to include an optional allegation for punitive damages.

NOTICE OF HEARING
MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES
[Add memorandum of points and authorities supporting demurrer]

[2] Use of Form

This form of demurrer is for use to object by demurrer to a complaint in which the alleged liability of a defendant employer is predicated on vicarious liability for the acts of an employee under the doctrine of respondeat superior. The ground of the objection is that the employee was not acting within the course and scope of employment in doing the acts complained of. A notice of hearing is also included.

A demurrer must be accompanied by a notice of hearing [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1320(c)]. It must also be accompanied by a memorandum of points and authorities in support of each ground thereof [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(a)]. For discussion and forms, see Ch. 417, Points and Authorities . This form contains an optional prayer; a prayer to a demurrer is not required but is frequently included.

[3] Objection by Demurrer

If any ground for objection to a complaint appears on the face of the complaint, or from any matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice, objection to the complaint on that ground may be taken by demurrer [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)]. Objection may also be taken by answer if the ground does not appear on the face of the complaint, or by both demurrer and answer [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(b), (c)]. Objection may bemade on the ground that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)].

[4] Burden of Proof and Raising Issue

To establish an employer's vicarious liability under respondeat superior, the plaintiff bears the burden of proving that an employee was acting within the scope of employment in doing the acts that give rise to liability [McChristian v. Popkin (1946) 75 Cal App. 2d 249, 258, 171 P.2d 85] . It is often said that whether or not a defendant acted in the course of employment is primarily a question of fact [McChristian v. Popkin (1946) 75 Cal App. 2d 249, 255, 171 P.2d 85] . However, at least one court has noted that the cases so holding almost uniformly involve factual situations in which conflicting inferences may be drawn from the same extrinsic facts. If no conflicting inferences are possible and if there is no dispute over the operable overt, observable facts, the question becomes one of law [Golden W. Broadcasters, Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 947, 956, 171 Cal. Rptr. 95 ; see also Tryer v. Ojai Valley Sch. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1476, 1480, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 114] .

Therefore, acting outside of the scope of employment may be raised in a number of different ways depending on the circumstances. If there are no conflicting facts or inferences and all the necessary facts appear on the face of the complaint, demurrer is appropriate. If it is necessary to go beyond the face of the complaint and establish uncontradicted facts by declaration, a motion for summary judgment is the proper vehicle [see, e.g., Golden W. Broadcasters, Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 947, 951, 171 Cal. Rptr. 95] . If resolution requires deciding between conflicting facts or inferences, an appropriate denial in the answer of the allegation of respondeat superior is required [see § 248.51[1]].

§ 248.51 Controverting Allegation in Answer--By Employer Sued Under Respondeat Superior--No Employment or Agency Relationship Between Tortfeasor and Employer

[1] FORM Controverting Allegation in Answer--By Employer Sued Under Respondeat Superior--No Employment or Agency Relationship Between Tortfeasor and Employer

1. Defendant _____[name of alleged employer] denies, generally and specifically, each and every allegation contained in Paragraph _____, and in this connection, defendant affirmatively alleges that, at all times mentioned in the complaint, defendant _____[name of alleged employee] was not the employee or agent of defendant _____[name of alleged employer], [add if applicable: but was, in fact, an independent contractor,] and in doing the things therein mentioned, was not acting pursuant to any agency or employment relationship between defendant _____[name of alleged employee] and defendant _____[name of alleged employer].

[2] Use of Form

This form is for use in an answer to deny an allegation in a complaint that one defendant is vicariously liable for the acts of another defendant under the doctrine of respondeat superior. The basis of the denial is that the actual tortfeasor was, in fact, not the agent or employee of the denying defendant. Optional language is included to set forth the defendant's assertion that the actual tortfeasor was an independent contractor. For general requirements regarding the form and content of an answer, see Code Civ. Proc. § 431.30

[3] Burden of Proof and Raising Issue

Plaintiff bears the burden of proving vicarious liability under respondeat superior [see McChristian v. Popkin (1946) 75 Cal App. 2d 249, 258, 171 P.2d 85] . The determination as to whether an employer-employee relationship exists is one of fact unless the evidence is susceptible of only one inference, in which case the question becomes one of law [Sparks v. L.D. Folsom Co. (1963) 217 Cal App. 2d 279, 285-286, 31 P.2d 640] .

Therefore, the nonexistence of an employer-employee relationship may be raised in a number of different ways depending on the circumstances. If there are no conflicting facts or inferences and all the necessary facts appear on the face of the complaint, a demurrer is appropriate [see § 248.50]. If it is necessary to go beyond the face of the complaint and establish uncontradicted facts by declaration, a motion for summary judgment is the proper vehicle [see, e.g., Golden W. Broadcasters, Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 947, 951, 171 Cal. Rptr. 95] . If resolution requires deciding between conflicting facts or inferences, the answer must contain an appropriate denial of the allegation of respondeat superior.

Chapter 249 EMPLOYMENT LAW: TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART I. SCOPE

21-249 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 249.01

AUTHOR: Richard P. Hill Editorial Consultant

This chapter discusses and contains forms for use in actions seeking damages based on various theories of liability for an employer's wrongful discharge or wrongful discipline of an employee, and discusses the remedies available under each of those theories. The theories of recovery discussed include a common law action for wrongful discharge [§ 249.11], violation of public policy [§ 249.12], breach of an express or implied-in-fact promise not to discharge except for good cause [§ 249.13], and breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing in the context of employment contracts [§ 249.14].

This chapter also discusses causes of action that are commonly related to wrongful discharge or discipline, such as intentional infliction of emotional distress [§ 249.22]. In addition, the chapter discusses an employer's defenses to a cause of action for wrongful discharge or discipline [§ 249.21], including the employee's breach of a contractual duty, preemption by various federal and state statutes, the parol evidence rule, the statute of limitations, termination for cause, mandatory arbitration, and lack of an employment relationship.

This chapter contains forms for use in actions against an employer by an employee seeking damages for wrongful discharge or discipline. The forms include:

- A complaint seeking damages for wrongful discharge or discipline based on violation of public policy, breach of contract, breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and intentional infliction of emotional distress [§ 249.50].

- An allegation that the discharge was in retaliation against the employee's political activities [§ 249.51].

- An allegation that the discharge was in retaliation against the employee's protest of unsafe working conditions [§ 249.52].

- An allegation that a fraud cause of action exists independent of the termination of employment [§ 249.53].

- Allegations for use if the terminated employee was employed as in-house counsel [§ 249.54 and § 249.55].

The chapter also contains forms of affirmative defense allegations that:

- The employee willfully breached a contractual duty [§ 249.60].

- The employee was habitually neglectful of employment duties [§ 249.61].

- The employee was under a continued incapacity to perform employment duties [§ 249.62].

- The employee was terminated for cause [§ 249.63].

- The cause of action is precluded by an arbitration agreement [§ 249.64].

- The employee failed to mitigate damages after having an opportunity to do so [§ 249.65].

- The cause of action is preempted by:

  - The Labor Management Relations Act (29 U.S.C. § 185(a)) [§ 249.66].

  - The Railway Labor Act (45 U.S.C. §§ 151-188) [§ 249.68].

  - The Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. § 1001 et seq.) [§ 249.70].

This chapter also discusses miscellaneous actions that arise from the employment relationship [§ 249.30 et seq.]. Related forms include:

- A complaint for double damages resulting from an employer's misrepresentations concerning employment conditions that induced the employee to change his or her residence [§ 249.80].

- A complaint for treble damages against an employer who has unlawfully prevented a employment of a former employee by misrepresentation [§ 249.81].

The chapter also includes forms of complaints by an employer against a former employee for breach of an employment contract based on failure to perform services [§ 249.90]. Finally, this chapter includes an illustrative copy of the Judicial Council Form Interrogatories for use in employment law litigation [see § 249.100].

§ 249.10 Governing Law

The at will employment doctrine is codified in Lab. Code § 2922. However, numerous cases have set forth judicial limitations on the at will employment doctrine. Among the leading cases in this area are Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680 ; Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 ; and Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330 .

Numerous federal and state statutes limit an employer's right to terminate or discipline employees. For a full list of those statutes, see the Research Guide, § 249.40 et seq.

In addition, statutes governing an employer's solicitation of an employee by misrepresentation are found in Lab. Code §§ 970-977. Statutes governing the prevention of the employment of a former employee are found in Lab. Code §§ 1050-1054. Statutes governing the obligations of an employee, generally, are found in Lab. Code §§ 2850-2866.

§ 249.11 Common-Law Action

[1] At Will Employment

Under the traditional common-law rule, codified in Lab. Code § 2922, an employment contract having no specified term may be terminated at the will of either party on notice to the other [see Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 172, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330 ; see also Corp. Code § 312(b) (similar at will provision for corporate officers)]. That rule controls in the absence of some other agreement by the parties [Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 665, 671-675, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 ; see § 249.13[1]].

Generally, when an employer is permitted to discharge an employee at any time with or without cause, it makes no difference if the employer had a bad motive in doing so. Just as the employee may resign for whatever reason, the employer may discharge the employee for any reason--good, bad, or indifferent [Mallard v. Boring (1960) 182 Cal. App. 2d 390, 394, 6 Cal. Rptr. 171] . This general rule is, however, subject to judicially created and statutory exceptions, discussed in §§ 249.12 -249.15.

For discussion of the at will doctrine generally, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60 (Matthew Bender); and Larson and Borowsky, Unjust Dismissal, Ch. 2 (Matthew Bender).

[2] Statutory Limitations on Employer's Right to Discipline and Terminate

There are a number of statutes under both federal and California law that limit an employer's right to discipline, terminate, or discriminate against employees under various circumstances. Some of these statutes act as exceptions to the at will doctrine in that they allow a cause of action for termination based on the employer's violation of the statute, regardless of whether the employment was at will. For example, an employee may bring an action for damages against an employer based on the employer's violation of Lab. Code § 1101, which prohibits an employer's attempt to control an employee's political activities. For a form of allegation regarding wrongful discharge based on Lab. Code § 1101, see § 249.51. For enumeration of federal and state statutes limiting the employer's right to discipline, terminate, or discriminate against an employee, see the Research Guide, §§ 249.41- 249.42. For full discussion of those statutes, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60 (Matthew Bender); and Larson and Borowsky, Unjust Dismissal, Ch. 5 (Matthew Bender).

The existence of a statutory remedy can also form the basis of a common law remedy under the tort of wrongful discharge in violation of public policy [see discussion in § 249.12].

[3] Concurrent Administrative Remedies

Some statutes that limit an employer's right to terminate provide administrative remedies that are not exclusive and do not preclude a civil action based on violation of statute. For example, Lab. Code § 98.6 prohibits discharge or any other form of discrimination against an employee because he or she has filed a bona fide complaint or instituted any proceeding with the Labor Commissioner, or has testified or will testify in any such proceeding [Lab. Code § 98.6(a)]. Reinstatement and reimbursement of lost wages and benefits are remedies for a violation of the statute [Lab. Code § 98.6(b)]. It is also a misdemeanor for the employer to refuse to so remedy a violation on a finding of entitlement for the employee [Lab. Code § 98.6(b)]. Lab. Code § 98.7 provides an administrative remedy before the Labor Commissioner for employees who have been discharged or discriminated against in violation of Lab. Code § 98.6 or any other law under the jurisdiction of the Labor Commissioner. However, Lab. Code § 98.7 expressly provides that its rights and remedies are not exclusive [Lab. Code § 98.7(f); Lloyd v. County of Los Angeles (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 320, 331-332, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 872 (Lab. Code § 98.7 provides additional remedy employee may pursue, and there is no requirement that employee exhaust that remedy before suing for violation of Labor Code provisions)].

If a statute such as the Fair Employment and Housing Act [see Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.] provides an administrative process for the resolution of grievances, exhaustion of those administrative remedies is a precondition to a civil suit on a statutory cause of action. But it is not a precondition of seeking judicial relief on a common-law tort claim for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy [Palmer v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 899, 904, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 567 ; see also Boston v. Penny Lane Ctrs., Inc. (2009) 170 Cal. App. 4th 936, 947, 88 Cal. Rptr. 3d 707 (when statutory remedy is provided for enforcement of preexisting common-law right, that statutory remedy will be considered only cumulative unless statute expressly extinguishes common-law right)]. However, if an employer establishes an internal grievance mechanism, a failure to exhaust its remedies precludes any subsequent private civil action [Palmer v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 899, 903-906, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 567] . For further discussion, see § 249.21[20].

§ 249.12 Wrongful Discharge in Violation of Public Policy

[1] Basis and Elements of Cause of Action

Pursuant to Lab. Code § 2922, unless otherwise agreed on by the parties, an employment contract of indefinite duration is generally terminable at the will of either party [see Jennings v. Marralle (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 121, 129, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275, 876 P.2d 1074] . However, the employer's right to terminate an employee may be limited by statute or by public policy [Petermann v. International Brotherhood of Teamsters (1959) 174 Cal. App. 2d 184, 188, 344 P.2d 25] .

Some statutes contain provisions that prohibit discharge or other disciplinary actions or limit the employer's right to discharge or discipline employees [see, e.g., Lab. Code § 2929(b) (forbidding discharge based on garnishment of wages)]. For example, an employee may not be discharged or disciplined for refusing to engage in illegal activity or for reporting matters such as illegal activity [see, e.g., Lab. Code § 1102.5 (reporting, or refusing to participate in, regulatory violations); Gov. Code § 12940(h) (discriminatory conduct); see also Gardenhire v. Housing Auth. (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 236, 241-243, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 893 (protection under Lab Code § 1102.5 extends to employees who report illegal activity to public agency, so public employee who reports illegal activity to his or her employer is protected by statute and need not make report to outside agency)] or industrial injuries [Lab. Code § 132a]. Similarly, a statute may expressly provide that the termination of an employee under certain conditions is a violation of public policy [see, e.g., Bus. & Prof. Code § 2056(c) (to terminate employment or otherwise penalize physician "principally for advocating for medically appropriate health care ... violates the public policy of this state")]. For a discussion of these statutes, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60 (Matthew Bender). The statutory scheme may preempt the field, eliminating common law claims. Often, however, it provides a public-policy basis for common law claims as well, leaving the plaintiff free to proceed even if prerequisites to the statutory cause of action have not been met [see discussion in [3][b] and [5], below].

A common-law cause of action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy can also be stated under some circumstances where there is no provision expressly protecting the employee from discharge or discipline. For example, an at will employee who is discharged for refusing to lie to a legislative committee at the direction of the employer has an action against the employer for wrongfuldischarge [Petermann v. International Brotherhood of Teamsters (1959) 174 Cal. App. 2d 184, 188-189, 344 P.2d 25] . Inasmuch as the penal statutes make perjury and its solicitation unlawful, public policy would be offended by permitting an employer to fire an employee because the employee refused to commit an unlawful act [Petermann v. International Brotherhood of Teamsters (1959) 174 Cal. App.2d 184, 188-189, 344 P.2d 25 ; see Penal Code §§ 118 (perjury), 653f (solicitation to commit felony)].

These claims typically arise when an employer allegedly retaliates against an employee for [Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1091-1092, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680] :

- Refusing to violate a statute;
- Performing a statutory obligation;
- Exercising a statutory right or privilege; or
- Reporting an alleged violation of a statute of public importance.

Employees have also brought this claim where the discharge violated an anti-discrimination policy codified in a California statute or the California Constitution [see Pettus v. Cole (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 402, 454, n.38, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 46] . For instance, in Badih v. Myers (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 1289, 1296, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 229 , the court upheld a jury verdict in favor of an employee discharged by a small employer because of her pregnancy, on the ground that the discharge violated the public policy against sex discrimination embodied in the California Constitution. Similarly, the court in Leibert v. Transworld Systems, Inc. (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 1693, 1706, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 65 , allowed the plaintiff to proceed on a claim of wrongful termination in violation of public policy against sexual orientation discrimination based on the public policy embodied in former Labor Code §§ 1101, 1102, and 1102.1 [now see Gov. Code § 12940(a) (Fair Employment and Housing Act)]. On the other hand, if the circumstances of the discharge do not establish a violation of a statute that embodies public policy, the employee cannot maintain an action for wrongful discharge in violation of that public policy [Hobson v. Raychem Corp. (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 614, 631, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 497 (in absence of any evidence of qualifying disability or of employer's refusal of accommodation under Fair Employment and Housing Act, plaintiff had no basis to claim violation of public policy against discrimination based on disability)].

Public policy is violated when an employer retaliates against an employee for exercising a statutory right or privilege. For example, terminating an employee for refusing to sign an employment agreement that contains an illegal noncompete covenant violates public policy, even if the agreement includes a severability provision that would preserve the enforceability of the remainder of the agreement [D'Sa v. Playhut, Inc. (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 927, 929-935, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 495 ; see Bus. & Prof. Code § 16600 (except as provided by statute, any contract that restrains anyone from engaging in any lawful profession, trade, or business is to that extent void); Edwards v. Arthur Andersen LLP (2008) 44 Cal. 4th 937, 945-950, 955, 81 Cal. Rptr. 3d 282, 288-292, 296, 189 P.3d 285 (noncompetition agreement is invalid under Bus. & Prof. Code § 16600, even if narrowly drawn, unless it falls within one of statutory exceptions provided by Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 16601, 16602, 16602.5); but see Thompson v. Impaxx, Inc. (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 1425, 1429-1430, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 427 (antisolicitation covenant may be enforceable if designed to protect employer's confidential, proprietary, or trade-secret customer information); Edwards v. Arthur Andersen LLP (2008) 44 Cal. 4th 937, 946 n.4, 81 Cal. Rptr. 3d 282, 189 P.3d 285 ("[W]e do not here address the applicability of the so-called trade secret exception to [Bus. & Prof. Code § 16600], as Edwards does not dispute that portion of his agreement or contend that the provision of the noncompetition agreement prohibiting him from recruiting Andersen's employees violated [Bus. & Prof. Code § 16600].")]. In Phillips v. Gemini Moving Specialists (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 563, 571-574, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 29 , the court found that there is a fundamental public policy against an employer's retaliation for its employee having asserted a right to prompt payment of wages, free from the employer's withholding of pay, based on Lab. Code §§ 201, 202, 216, 221, 222, 223, 224, and 1175, and Code Civ. Proc. § 487.020.

"Public policy" has been defined broadly to mean "that principle of law which holds that no citizen can lawfully do that which has a tendency to be injurious to the public or against the public good" [Petermann v. International Brotherhood of Teamsters (1959) 174 Cal. App. 2d 184, 188, 344 P.2d 25] . However, the California Supreme Court has noted the caution that courts should exercise in defining public policy, especially absent some prior legislative expression on the subject, and asserted that, in wrongful discharge actions, courts may not declare public policy without a basis in either constitutional or statutory provisions [Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1094-1095, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680 (dictum)].

To state a cause of action for violation of public policy, the complaint must allege the following [see Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 178, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330 ; see also CACI 2430-2433]:

- An adverse employment action that violates public policy, such as a termination in retaliation for statutorily protected activity or for refusal to engage in illegal activity; and

- Damages resulting from the adverse employment action. For a form of complaint against an employer that incorporates a cause of action for violation of public policy, see § 249.50.

Public entities are subject to liability only as provided by statute [Gov. Code § 815(a)]. Therefore, the common-law cause of action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy is not available against a public entity [Miklosy v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (2008) 44 Cal. 4th 876, 899-900, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 690, 188 P.3d 629].

An individual who is not an employer cannot commit the tort of wrongful discharge in violation of public policy; such an individual can only be the agent by which an employer commits the tort. But the cause of action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy lies only against the employer [Miklosy v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (2008) 44 Cal. 4th 876, 901, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 690, 188 P.3d 629]. Therefore, the doctrine of respondeat superior cannot be applied to impose liability for the tort on a public entity, which is subject to liability only as provided by statute [Lloyd v. County of Los Angeles (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 320, 330, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 872 ; see Gov. Code § 815(a)].

For additional discussion of wrongful termination actions based on the employer's violation of public policy, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60(Matthew Bender), and Larson and Borowsky, Unjust Dismissal, Ch. 6, Ch. 7 (Matthew Bender).

[2] Action Sounds in Tort

The cause of action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy sounds in tort, and entitles a successful plaintiff to recover the full range of compensatory and punitive damages [see Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 176-178, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330] . The California Supreme Court stated that when the defendant has breached a duty imposed by law because of the contractual relationship, rather than merely a promise set forth in the contract, the plaintiff is entitled to tort relief [Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 175-176, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330 ; see Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 665-671, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 (reaffirming existence of public-policy tort)].

[3] Tests for Determining if a Public Policy Protecting Employee Exists

[a] Overview

California law regarding the wrongful-discharge tort has been evolving since its inception in the seminal case of Petermann v. International Brotherhood of Teamsters (1959) 174 Cal. App. 2d 184, 344 P.2d 25 . The refinements developed to date have created five requirements for a public policy to be recognized as such in the wrongful-termination context. In a review of its own case law on the subject, the California Supreme Court enumerated four of these factors: the policy must (1) be supported by either constitutional or statutory provisions, (2) inure to the benefit of the public at large rather than serving merely the interests of the individual, (3) have been articulated at the time of the discharge, and (4) be fundamental and substantial [Stevenson v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 880, 889-890, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888, 941 P.2d 1157] .

The Stevenson Court also stated that when a plaintiff relies on a statutory prohibition to support a common-law tort action for wrongful termination in violation of public policy, the common-law claim is subject to statutory limitations affecting the nature and scope of the statutory prohibition [Stevenson v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 880, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888, 941 P.2d 1157] . In addition, then, to the four factors listed by the Court when it articulated its test, the public policy must be one framed to include, rather than exempt, the employer and the particular conduct against which it is sought to be applied. The remainder of this subsection discusses each of these requirements.

[b] Policy Supported by Constitution or Statute

[i] Requirement as Stated by Supreme Court

In Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680 , the California Supreme Court stated that in wrongful termination actions based on violation of public policy, the public policy must derive from constitutional or statutory authority; reliance on judicial or other nonlegislative sources is insufficient to support this cause of action [Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1095, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680] . The opinion in Gantt resolved the previous conflict among courts of appeal regarding whether the public policy sufficient to support a tort cause of action for wrongful termination may be based solely on decisional law [see Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1090-1095, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680 ; compare, e.g., Dabbs v. Cardiopulmonary Management Services (1987) 188 Cal. App. 3d 1437, 1443, 234 Cal. Rptr. 129 (dictum suggesting that action may be based on judicial definition) with Gray v. Superior Court (1986) 181 Cal. App. 3d 813, 819, 226 Cal. Rptr. 570 (public policy must derive from statute)].

In support of its position, the Court stated that a public-policy exception to the at will doctrine, carefully tethered to fundamental policies that are delineated in constitutional or statutory provisions, strikes the proper balance among the interests of employers, employees, and the public. The employer is bound, at a minimum, to know the fundamental public policies of the state and nation as expressed in their constitutions and statutes; so limited, the public-policy exception presents no impediment to employers that operate within the bounds of law. Employees are protected against employer actions that contravene fundamental state policy, and society's interests are served through a more stable job market, in which its most important policies are safeguarded [Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1095, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680] .

In some instances, a statutory provision may expressly provide that the termination of an employee under certain conditions is a violation of public policy [see, e.g., Bus. & Prof. Code § 2056(c) (to terminate employment or otherwise penalize physician "principally for advocating for medically appropriate health care ... violates the public policy of this state")]. However, the constitutional or statutory provision need not be framed to directly protect the plaintiff or prohibit his or her termination. A public policy against termination can in some instances be deduced from statutes condemning or protecting certain types of conduct. For example, the cause of action may be based on the employee's refusal to commit an act made illegal by statute [see, e.g., Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 179, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330 (refusal to participate in price-fixing scheme); Petermann v. International Brotherhood of Teamsters (1959) 174 Cal. App. 2d 184, 189-190, 344 P.2d 25 (refusal to commit perjury)]. Similarly, by prohibiting the employment of undocumented aliens, the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986 [8 U.S.C. § 1101 et seq.] establishes a public policy that protects an employee who complains to the authorities that the employer has hired undocumented aliens [Jiev. Liang Tai Knitwear Co., Ltd. (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 654, 661-662, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 682

; see 8 U.S.C. § 1324a].

In Gantt itself the Court held that an employer's attempt to induce or coerce an employee to lie to an investigator from the Department of Fair Employment and Housing (DFEH) plainly contravenes the public policy of the state, and consequently supports a claim for wrongful discharge based on violation of public policy. Specifically, Gov. Code § 12975 (providing that willful interference with a DFEH investigation constitutes misdemeanor), which is a provision of the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) [see Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.], enjoins any obstruction of a DFEH investigation [Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1096-1097, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680] . The Court stated that the facts of Gantt fit squarely within the rubric of Petermann and Tameny [Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1096, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680] . In Gantt, the plaintiff testified at a DFEH hearing on behalf of a coworker who asserted sex discrimination claims against the employer; he did so despite the employer's indirect threats of retaliation. Consequently, he was demoted and ultimately resigned under stressful circumstances. The Supreme Court held that the plaintiff in Gantt therefore established a valid claim for wrongful discharge (that is, wrongful constructive discharge) based on violation of public policy, because the employer retaliated against him for his refusal to withhold information or to provide false information to the DFEH [Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1097, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680] . For a discussion of FEHA, see Ch. 115, Civil Rights: Employment Discrimination .

In addition, some appellate court cases have founded public-policy violation torts not on policy supported directly by statute or other law, but rather on more attenuated connections to statutory principles. In one case, for example, an employer that discharged a health-care worker for that worker's refusal to work the night shift because of patient-safety and staff-adequacy factors, was held to be subject to wrongful termination liability based in part on public policy embodied in a series of statutes regulating the health-care professions in general [Dabbs v. Cardiopulmonary Management Services (1987) 188 Cal. App. 3d 1437, 1443, 234 Cal. Rptr. 129 (disapproved in Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1093, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680 , for dictum that public policy need not be rooted in statutory provision)]. In another case, the court held that a nurse had a right of action for retaliatory discharge for protesting unsafe and unhealthy working conditions [Jenkins v. Family Health Program (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 440, 448-449, 262 Cal. Rptr. 798] . In another case, the court held that terminating an employee in retaliation for the employee's designation of an attorney to conduct individual negotiations with the employer violates the public policy embodied in Lab. Code § 923, which protects the right of workers to organize and bargain collectively [Gelini v. Tishgart (1999) 77 Cal. App. 4th 219, 223-228, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 447] .

On the other hand, a statutory provision that is limited in scope to matters outside the employment context ordinarily will not be deemed to establish a fundamental public policy that supports a claim of wrongful termination. For example, the California Supreme Court has held that the Compassionate Use Act of 1996 (Proposition 215) [Health & Safety Code § 11362.5] does not establish a public policy against terminating employees who use marijuana for medical purposes. The Act does provide an exemption from criminal liability under two specific California statutes for a person who possesses or cultivates marijuana for medical purposes on the recommendation or approval of a physician [Health & Safety Code § 11362.5(d) (providing defense against prosecution under Health & Safety Code §§ 11357, 11358 for person who possesses or cultivates marijuana for medical purposes on recommendation or approval of physician)]. However, marijuana possession remains illegal under federal law, even for medical use [21 U.S.C. §§ 812, 844(a); Gonzales v. Raich (2005) 545 U.S. 1, 26-29, 125 S. Ct. 2195, 162 L. Ed. 2d 1]. Moreover, the Compassionate Use Act is limited in scope: it merely exempts medical users and their primary caregivers from criminal liability under two specified state statutes. Nothing in the Act's text or history indicates that the electorate intended the Act to articulate any policy concerning marijuana in the employment context, let alone a fundamental public policy requiring employers to accommodate marijuana use by employees [Ross v. RagingWire Telecommunications, Inc. (2008) 42 Cal. 4th 920, 932-933, 174 P.3d 200].

Similarly, a court of appeal has held that a statutory provision authorizing the Labor Commissioner to pursue constitutional claims on behalf of employees does not set forth an independent public policy that provides employees with any substantive rights [Barbee v. Household Auto. Fin. Corp. (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 525, 533-536, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 406 ; see Lab. Code § 96(k)]. A statute authorizing school districts to establish programs allowing senior employees to work part-time [see Educ. Code § 44922] is another example of a provision that does not create a sufficiently fundamental and substantial public policy. Thus, an employee whose request for a reduced workload under such a program has been denied may not use that denial as the basis of an action for wrongful constructive discharge in violation of public policy [Sinatra v. Chico Unified Sch. Dist. (2004) 119 Cal. App. 4th 701, 706-708, 14 Cal. Rptr. 3d 661 (although Educ. Code § 44922 enables school districts to bestow valuable right on select segment of their employees, it does not embody kind of universal and important right recognized as fundamental to public good)].

[ii] Extent of Requirement

The statements in Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680 , regarding a need for the public policy relied on by a wrongful-termination plaintiff to be grounded in statute or constitution, were dictum. Neither party raised the issue until the Court requested briefing on the subject, and the Court had no difficulty finding statutes embodying the public policy on which the Gantt plaintiff relied [Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1086, 1096-1097, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680] . Thus, as the dissenters pointed out, there was no factual situation presenting the question of whether violation of a nonstatutory, nonconstitutional public policy could ever form the basis of a wrongful-discharge suit [Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1102-1104, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680 (dissenting opinion)]. However, the fact that the Court did reach out to proclaim the new requirement and did so in an extended analysis makes it unlikely thatthe statutory/constitutional-basis-requirement can be seriously questioned, at least by a plaintiff without a truly egregious fact situation. Moreover, the Supreme Court characterized its Gantt discussion as a holding in a subsequent case in which it arguably applied the requirement [Jennings v. Marralle (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 121, 130, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275, 876 P.2d 1074 (holding that employer exempt from age-discrimination statute not subject to public-policy prohibition on discharge)]. Finally, in its later discussions of the development of wrongful-discharge law, the Court listed the need for support in a constitutional or statutory provision as among the requirements for a qualifying public policy [Green v. Ralee Engineering Company (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 66, 76, 90, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16, 960 P.2d 1046 ; Stevenson v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 880, 890, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888 ; 941 P.2d 1157 (dictum; plaintiff directly protected by statute)].

In Green v. Ralee Engineering Company (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 66, 80-81, 90, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16, 960 P.2d 1046 , the Supreme Court squarely held that public policy supporting a wrongful-discharge claim may be based on administrative regulations. In Green, the plaintiff alleged that he had been discharged from his job as an inspector of airplane components in retaliation for complaining to his employer that the employer's inspection practices violated regulations issued by the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA). The Supreme Court noted that in the Federal Aviation Act [49 U.S.C. § 40101 et seq.], Congress declared the public interest in commercial air safety and then delegated regulatory power to the FAA, which established an intricate regulatory scheme to ensure that aircraft design meets safety standards and that aircraft manufacture conforms to the design. Thus, the regulations were clearly "tethered" to their statutory basis and promoted a most important and fundamental public policy goal: air safety. Since the plaintiff's job was to perform inspections of aircraft components to further that fundamental public policy, that policy could serve as the basis for the plaintiff's wrongful-discharge claim [Green v. Ralee Engineering Company (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 66, 80-90, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16, 960 P.2d 1046] . In so holding, the Supreme Court expressly declined to address whether any other potential sources of public policy may serve as the basis of such an action [Green v. Ralee Engineering Company (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 66, 80 n.6, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16, 960 P.2d 1046] .

[c] Policy Inures to Benefit of Public

The wrongful-discharge plaintiff must establish that the dismissal violated a policy that inures to the benefit of the public at large rather than to a particular employer or employee [Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 669, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373] .

In determining the nature of the public policy involved, the California Supreme Court held in Foley that the violation of an asserted policy supporting an employee's duty to disclose information to his or her employer was not sufficiently public to support a cause of action, but instead served only the private interest of the employer [Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 669-671, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373] . A court of appeal reached a similar result in a case involving an employee who was terminated because he reported to his employer that some persons were receiving consulting fees without performing work. The court held that, because only the employer was the victim of the alleged wrongdoing, no public benefit was involved [American Computer Corp. v. Superior Court (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d 664, 668-669, 261 Cal. Rptr. 796] .

On the other hand, the reporting of criminal behavior to one's employer has been held to have a sufficiently public benefit to support a cause of action, because the public interest in a workplace free from crime would be impaired if an employee could be terminated for reporting criminal conduct [see Collier v. Superior Court (1991) 228 Cal. App. 3d 1117, 1126-1127, 279 Cal. Rptr. 453 ; Gould v. Industries, Inc. (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 1137, 1149-1150, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 718 (cause of action stated by former employee terminated for reporting to supervisors current failure to pay overtime wages); see also Rojo v. Kliger (1990) 52 Cal. 3d 65, 90-91, 276 Cal. Rptr. 130, 801 P.2d 373 (cause of action stated by former employee terminated for reporting sexual harassment)].

The Court has also stated that the tort of wrongful discharge is not a vehicle for enforcement of an employer's internal policies or the provisions of its agreements with others [Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1257, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022] . Not only are these "policies" not based on statute, they also do not implicate the public interest.

[d] Policy Has Been Articulated at Time of Discharge

The California Supreme Court has stated clearly that the purported public policy on which a wrongful-discharge claim is grounded must have been articulated at the time of the discharge [Stevenson v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 880, 889-890, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888, 941 P.2d 1157] . This is not a point that has been elaborated in case law, and in fact it has been developed only in a series of dicta, but it seems uncontroversial. In the case in which the California Supreme Court first recognized the tort of wrongful discharge in violation of public policy, the court noted "a series of cases arising out of a variety of factual settings in which a discharge clearly violated an express statutory objective or undermined a firmly established principle of public policy" [Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 175-176, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330 (emphasis added)]. A footnote in a later case cited this language for the proposition that in Tameny the Court "insist[ed]" that the policy be one that is firmly established [Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 670 n.11, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373] . Soon the Court was to characterize the footnote as one of several "guidelines" which it had provided in Foley [Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1090, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680] , and the Stevenson opinion cited Gantt for the proposition that the Court's wrongful-discharge jurisprudence included the requirement of the policy's having been articulated at the time of the discharge [Stevenson v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 880, 889-890, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888, 941 P.2d 1157] .

Applying these principles, the California Supreme Court has held that a wrongful discharge claim cannot be based on a fundamental public policy created by a statute that was enacted after the plaintiff's termination [Silo v. CHW Med. Found. (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 1097, 1110, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 698, 45 P.3d 1162 (employer cannot be held liable for violating public policy that was not manifest at time alleged tort was committed); see Phillips v. St. Mary Reg'l Med. Ctr. (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 218, 229, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 770 (legislation enacted afterplaintiff's termination was obviously not well established at pertinent time)]. However, a long-established general public policy can be sufficient to support a wrongful discharge claim even though a statute enacted after the plaintiff's termination addresses the specific kind of conduct involved in the plaintiff's case [Casella v. Southwest Dealer Servs., Inc. (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 1127, 1138-1143, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 445 (claim that plaintiff was terminated because he reported employer's participation in car dealers' fraudulent scheme was viable because scheme violated long-established policy of Penal Code § 487, which prohibits theft by misrepresentation, even though another statute specifically proscribing car dealers' scheme was enacted after plaintiff's termination)].

[e] Policy is Fundamental and Substantial

The express requirement that a public policy be fundamental and substantial in order to form the basis for a wrongful-discharge claim has the identical dicta-as-guidelines history as the requirement that it be articulated at the time of discharge [see [d], above], culminating in its being in the Stevenson enumeration of requirements [Stevenson v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 880, 889-890, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888, 941 P.2d 1157] . In Stevenson the Court considered the question whether California's policy against age discrimination in employment was substantial and fundamental. The Court first noted that its precedents had made no distinction between substantial and fundamental in this context, so it was treating them as one requirement [Stevenson v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 880, 890 n. 4, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888, 941 P.2d 1157] . Observing that age discrimination is ethically comparable to race and sex discrimination and that it is prohibited in the same statute with them, that prohibitions on age discrimination had been California law for more than 35 years and take multiple forms, and that Congress and 45 other states have enacted similar bans, the Court concluded that the Fair Employment and Housing Act's policy against age discrimination in employment is sufficiently substantial and fundamental to support a tort claim for wrongful discharge [Stevenson v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 880, 895-897, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888, 941 P.2d 1157] .

In determining whether an employee discharge for exercise of a right violates a fundamental public policy, the focus is not simply on the importance of the right that was exercised. The issue is whether permitting an employer to discharge an employee for exercising that right would undermine a "clearly mandated public policy" embodied in the provision from which that right emanates. Thus, it must be clear from the provision itself or from some other legislative or regulatory enactment that employers are not free to disregard or limit that right. For example, an employer may terminate an at-will employee for refusing to drop a lawsuit against the employer's customer, even though access to courts is guaranteed by the federal and state Constitutions, because there is no clearly mandated policy against such a termination [Jersey v. John Muir Med. Ctr. (2002) 97 Cal. App. 4th 814, 820-829, 118 Cal. Rptr. 2d 807] . Similarly, neither Education Code § 49423 (which authorizes school personnel to assist students in taking prescribed medication) nor Labor Code § 1102.5 (which prohibits termination of employees for reporting illegal activity) establishes any fundamental public policy that would support a wrongful-termination claim by a teacher who reports that another teacher recommended a legal nutritional supplement to a student [Carter v. Escondido Union High Sch. Dist. (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 922, 930-935, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 262] .

In some cases, a fundamental public policy is counterbalanced by another fundamental public policy so as to shield the employer from liability for discharging the employee. For example, the California Supreme Court has held that the public policy against religious discrimination in employment [see Cal. Const., art. I, § 8] must be qualified by the public policy of permitting religious employers considerable discretion to choose employees who will not interfere with their religious mission or message [see U.S. Const., Amend. I; Cal. Const., art. I, § 4]. Construing the two policies together, along with the FEHA's formerly unqualified general exemption for religious employers [see Gov. Code § 12926(d); now see Gov. Code § 12926.2(c) (effective January 2000, FEHA exemption for religious employers generally does not apply to persons employed to perform nonreligious duties at health-care facilities that are not restricted to adherents of religion that established employer)], the Court stated that it could not find a fundamental and substantial public policy prohibiting a religious employer from terminating an employee because of the employee's objectionable religious speech in the workplace [Silo v. CHW Med. Found. (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 1097, 1108-1109, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 698, 45 P.3d 1162] .

[f] Policy Covers Alleged Violation and Applies to Employer or Other Defendants

The California Supreme Court has held that when a plaintiff relies on a statutory prohibition to support a common-law tort action for wrongful termination in violation of public policy, the common-law claim is subject to statutory limitations affecting the nature and scope of the statutory prohibition [Stevenson v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal. 4th

880, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888, 941 P.2d 1157] . Thus, for example, a statutory provision cannot establish the existence of a fundamental public policy if an inseparable part of the legislative statement of policy exempts the defendant from the statutory provision [Jennings v. Marralle (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 121, 135, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275, 876 P.2d 1074] . Absent some other statutory or constitutional basis for the policy alleged to have been contravened by the termination of plaintiff's employment, a cause of action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy will not lie if the defendant is exempt from the statute [Jennings v. Marralle (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 121, 134-136, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275, 876 P.2d 1074 (age discrimination prohibition of FEHA, Gov. Code § 12941, which does not apply to those who employ fewer than five employees, cannot be basis of wrongful discharge action against exempt employer)]. For example, although the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) embodies a general public policy of accommodating disabled workers, that policy is not applicable to the California National Guard, in the absence of express statutory language extending FEHA remedies to military personnel [Estes v. Monroe (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 1347, 1355-1360, 16 Cal. Rptr. 3d 616 (applying deferential analysis of statutory language pursuant to Feres v. United States (1950) 340 U.S. 135, 146, 71 S. Ct. 153, 95 L. Ed. 152)]. Similar reasoning applies if the purported source of public policy is a constitutional provision. Thus, because the First Amendment applies onlyto government actions and expresses no public policy regarding terminations by private employers, its free speech provision fails to establish a public policy against terminations by private employers for speech-related activities [Grinzi v. San Diego Hospice Corp. (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 72, 80-84, 14 Cal. Rptr. 3d 893] .

Similarly, individual defendants may be exempt from liability under a particular public policy. A supervisor generally cannot be individually liable for the tort of wrongful termination in violation of public policy because that tort has its basis in the employer-employee relationship, a relationship to which the supervisor in his or her individual capacity is a third party [Phillips v. Gemini Moving Specialists (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 563, 575-577, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 29] . For example, under the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA), a supervisor may not be sued individually for discriminatory conduct made unlawful under FEHA, unless the conduct constitutes harassment [Jones v. Lodge at Torrey Pines P'ship (2008) 42 Cal. 4th 1158, 1162-1173, 72 Cal. Rptr. 3d 624, 177 P.3d 232 (reference to "person" in Gov. Code § 12940(h) does not subject nonemployer individuals to liability for retaliation under FEHA); Reno v. Baird (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 640, 645-647, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 499, 957 P.2d 1333 ; see Gov. Code § 12940(a), (h); cf. Gov. Code § 12940(j)(3)]. Thus, the public policy against discriminatory conduct other than harassment does not apply to supervisors in their individual capacities; therefore, they may not be sued individually in common-law actions based on non-harassment discrimination that violates the public policy contained in FEHA [Reno v. Baird (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 640, 643, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 499, 957 P.2d 1333].

If a statutory exemption or limitation prevents a particular statute from serving as the basis for a claim of wrongful discharge in violation of public policy, the plaintiff may rely on alternative sources of fundamental public policy in support of the claim [see, e.g., Badih v. Myers (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 1289, 1293-1296, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 229 (employer with fewer than five employees and therefore exempt from FEHA was still subject to action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy for firing employee because of pregnancy, based on independent proscription against sex discrimination, including pregnancy discrimination, contained in Cal. Const., art. I, § 8)]. For example, a FEHA express exemption for religious employers prevented the act from serving as a public-policy basis for the plaintiff's wrongful-discharge claim against a religious employer [see Gov. Code § 12926(d) (FEHA's formerly unqualified general exemption for religious employers); now see Gov. Code § 12926.2(c) (effective January 2000, FEHA exemption for religious employers generally does not apply to persons employed to perform nonreligious duties at health-care facilities that are not restricted to adherents of religion that established employer)]. The court of appeal held, however, that the plaintiff could pursue a wrongful discharge claim on the basis of a violation of public policy derived from the California Constitution and from Title VII of Civil Rights Act of 1964 [Phillips v. St. Mary Reg'l Med. Ctr. (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 218, 230-238, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 770 ; see 42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq. (Civil Rights Act of 1964); Cal. Const., art. I, § 8].

[4] Causal Relationship Must Exist Between Discharge and Public Policy Violation

Even assuming that plaintiff can establish a fundamental policy expressed in a statute or constitutional provision, he or she must establish a nexus between the allegedly protected conduct and the employer's adverse treatment [see Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1258, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022] . Thus, in a case in which the plaintiff alleged that he had been constructively discharged because he reported illegal activity to his employer, the California Supreme Court found that the length of time between the reports and the alleged retaliatory conduct, as well as the evidence regarding the employer's response to the reports, supported the conclusion that the plaintiff had failed to prove any causal link between the alleged policy violations and his (constructive) discharge [Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1258-1259, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022] .

In an action for wrongful discharge based on alleged retaliation for an employee's whistleblowing activity [see Lab. Code § 1102.5 ("whistleblower" statute prohibiting retaliation against employees who report or refuse to participate in illegal activity)], the employer may defend by proving that the employee would have been discharged anyway. However, to establish this affirmative defense, once it has been demonstrated by a preponderance of the evidence that a protected activity was a contributing factor in the alleged retaliatory discharge, the employer has the burden of proof to demonstrate by clear and convincing evidence that the alleged discharge would have occurred for legitimate, independent reasons even if the employee had not engaged in protected activities [see Lab. Code § 1102.6].

Similarly, although public policy prohibits the termination of a physician "principally for advocating for medically appropriate health care" [see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2056(c)], a physician who claims that he or she was terminated in violation of this policy must establish a causal relationship between the termination and his or her advocacy for patients. In such a case, for example, the employer may successfully defend on the basis that the physician was terminated not for advocating for medically appropriate health care, but rather for refusing to comply with the employer's directives that were themselves medically appropriate [see Sarka v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (2006) 146 Cal. App. 4th 261, 271-275, 52 Cal. Rptr. 3d 810] .

[5] Exclusivity Vel Non of Statutory Remedies

Where there is a statute prohibiting the discharge which is claimed to be in violation of public policy, the statute--with any associated administrative or judicial procedures and remedial provisions--may or may not provide the exclusive remedy available to the plaintiff. For example, Lab. Code § 132a provides the exclusive remedy for discharge in retaliation for filing a workers' compensation claim [Portillo v. G.T. Price Products, Inc. (1982) 131 Cal. App. 3d 285, 287-290, 182 Cal. Rptr. 291] . On the other hand, statutes protecting workers who protest unhealthy or unsafe working conditions do not occupy the field and and do not preclude a common law wrongful-discharge action [Jenkins v. Family Health Program (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 440, 449, 262 Cal. Rptr. 798 ; Hentzel v. Singer Co. (1982) 138 Cal. App. 3d 290, 300-301, 188 Cal. Rptr. 159 ; see also Boston v. Penny Lane Ctrs., Inc. (2009) 170 Cal. App. 4th 936, 944-947, 88 Cal. Rptr. 3d 707 (Health & Safety Code § 1596.882, which provides exclusive administrative remedy for employee who suffers retaliation for complaining about employer's violation of California Child Day Care Act, does not bar employee's common-law claim of wrongful discharge in retaliation for complaining about unsafe working conditions)]. Nor do those protecting an employee from discharge based on sexual orientationor political beliefs [Leibert v. Transworld Systems, Inc. (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 1693, 1704-1706, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 65] . Nor does the Fair Employment and Housing Act, which protects employees against discrimination based on membership in a variety of protected groups [Stevenson v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 880, 898-905, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888, 941 P.2d 1157 ; Rojo v. Kliger (1990) 52 Cal. 3d 65, 88, 276 Cal. Rptr. 130, 801 P.2d 373 ; for discussion of the FEHA, see Ch. 115, Civil Rights: Employment Discrimination].

Sometimes the determination of whether the legislature intended to occupy the field can require extensive analysis [see, e.g., Stevenson v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 880, 898-905, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888, 941 P.2d 1157 ; Rojo v. Kliger (1990) 52 Cal. 3d 65, 72-88, 276 Cal. Rptr. 130, 801 P.2d 373] .

Note that since the statute involved may be the only basis for claiming that there is a fundamental public policy protecting the plaintiff, it is possible for the enactment of new employee protections to create not only the remedies explicitly contained in the statute, but also the remedies available under a common law tort theory [see Stevenson v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 880, 898-905, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888, 941 P.2d 1157] . Of course, preemption defenses available for wrongful discharge actions generally may also be available in public-policy-violation cases. These defenses are discussed in § 249.21.

[6] Special Rules Applicable to In-House Counsel

The California Supreme Court has held that an attorney's status as "in-house" counsel does not preclude a tort cause of action for discharge in violation of public policy, but that an action may be stated only if (1) the reasons for discharge contravene an attorney's mandatory ethical obligations, or (2) the reasons would support a claim by a non-attorney employee and a statutory or ethical code provision permits the attorney to depart from the usual rule that client matters remain confidential [General Dynamics Corp. v. San Bernardino County Superior Court (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1170, 1189, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1, 876 P.2d 487] .

The Court fashioned a rule designed to support in-house counsel in remaining faithful to the fundamental public policies reflected in the governing ethical code when carrying out professional assignments [General Dynamics Corp. v. San Bernardino County Superior Court (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1181-1182, 1188-1189, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1, 876 P.2d 487] . The Court held that the fiduciary values of mutual trust and confidence can be protected from the threat of damages by limiting judicial access to those claims grounded in explicit and unequivocal ethical norms embodied in the Rules of Professional Conduct and statutes, and claims that are maintainable by the non-attorney employee [for discussion of requirements, see [3], above], under circumstances in which the Legislature has manifested a judgment that the principle of professional confidentiality does not apply [General Dynamics Corp. v. San Bernardino County Superior Court (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1189, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1, 876 P.2d 487] .

If, for reasons peculiar to the particular case, the elements of a claim for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy cannotbe fully established without breaching the attorney-client privilege, the suit must be dismissed in the interest of preserving the privilege [General Dynamics Corp. v. San Bernardino County Superior Court (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1190, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1, 876 P.2d 487] . However, this rule prohibits only public disclosure of the employer's confidential information. Thus, a former in-house counsel's suit for wrongful termination is not barred by the plaintiff's disclosure to his or her own attorney of employer confidences obtained during the course of employment, if they are relevant to the wrongful termination suit [Fox Searchlight Pictures, Inc. v. Paladino (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 294, 308-315, 106 Cal. Rptr. 2d 906] .

Ordinarily, the question of whether the attorney-client privilege precludes a plaintiff's recovery will not be susceptible to resolution at the demurrer stage. Rather, in the usual case, whether the privilege serves as a bar to the plaintiff's recovery will be litigated and determined in the context of motions for protective orders or to compel further discovery responses, as well as at the time of summary judgment [General Dynamics Corp. v. San Bernardino County Superior Court (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1190, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1, 876 P.2d 487] . In making this determination, the trial court can and should apply an array of ad hoc measures within its equitable powers in order to permit the attorney plaintiff to attempt to make the necessary proof while protecting from disclosure client confidences subject to the privilege [General Dynamics Corp. v. San Bernardino County Superior Court (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1191, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1, 876 P.2d 487] . The Court rejected any suggestion that the scope of the attorney-client privilege should be diluted in the context of in-house counsel and their corporate clients [General Dynamics Corp. v. San Bernardino County Superior Court (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1190, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1, 876 P.2d 487] .

The Court also set forth subsidiary rules that will deter the incidence of strike suits or claims filed in bad faith. The contested ethical requirement must be clearly established by the ethics code or statutory provision; disagreements over policy are not actionable. The plaintiff bears the burden of establishing the unequivocal requirements of the ethical norm at issue, and that the employer's conduct was motivated by impermissible considerations under a "but for" standard of causation. The ethical norm at issue must be one that is intended for the protection of the public at large; measures designed solely for the benefit of the attorney or the client will not suffice to support a wrongful discharge claim [General Dynamics Corp. v. San Bernardino County Superior Court (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1191, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1, 876 P.2d 487] .

[7] Action Against Subsequent Employers

Although the California courts have not decided the issue, the Ninth Circuit, applying California law, has held that a California employee could bring an action for discharge in violation of public policy against a subsequent employer for retaliation by the subsequent employer against the employee for whistleblowing against a previous employer [Skillsky v. Lucky Stores, Inc. (9th Cir. 1990) 893 F.2d 1088, 1092-1094 (employee claimed previous employer had informed subsequent employer of employee's health and safety complaints to OSHA, leading to retaliatory discharge by subsequent employer)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Termination Against Public Policy is Rapidly Evolving Area of Law. Read your advance sheets! There is perhaps no area of employment law that continues to evolve as quickly as the tort claim for wrongful retaliatory termination in violation of public policy. The Courts of Appeal continue to actively decide these cases on a regular basis, and the California Supreme Court continues to scrutinize the Court of Appeal decisions in a pro-active fashion. For example, the Supreme Court ordered depublication of Nagy v. Whittlesey Automotive Group (California Court of Appeal, 4th District, Division 3, December 7, 1995), where it had been held that an employee stated a cause of action for wrongful termination in violation of public policy against an employer that had violated the employee's privacy rights under Penal Code §§ 631 and 632 (recording of telephone conversations without consent).

This is still the most fluid battle field in the California common-law regarding employment. By Richard P. Hill

§ 249.13 Breach of Express or Implied-in-Fact Promise Not to Terminate Except for Cause

[1] Existence of Covenant

An employer is precluded from dismissing an employee at will when the discharge is contrary to the terms of an express or implied agreement between the parties [Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 322, 171 Cal. Rptr. 917 (Pugh I)]. The presumption that an employment contract is intended to be terminable at will is subject, like any presumption, to contrary evidence, which may take the form of an express or implied agreement that the relationship will continue for some fixed period of time, or will continue indefinitely, pending the occurrence of some event [Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 677, 680, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 ; Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 324-325, 171 Cal. Rptr. 917 (Pugh I)].

A court may decide as a matter of law, however, that there was no agreement to terminate for good cause if no facts exist to show the existence of such an agreement [see, e.g., Kelly v. Stamps.com, Inc. (2005) 135 Cal. App. 4th 1088, 1102-1103, 38 Cal. Rptr. 3d 240 (as matter of law, employer's grant of two-stage bonus was not implied promise of continued employment until second stage of bonus came due); Lenk v. Total-Western, Inc. (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 959, 969-970, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 34 (contractual provision that performance review will be completed after 12 months' employment not sufficient to overcome presumption of at-will employment, especially because employee signed employment application confirming that employment would be at will and acknowledged receipt of employee manual with express at-will provision); Horn v. Cushman & Wakefield W., Inc. (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 798, 817-819, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 459 (favorable performance evaluations, merit-based salary increases, and general assurances of employee's future with employer are insufficient to overcome statutory presumption under Lab. Code § 2922 and express statement of at-will employment in employee handbook); Kovatch v. California Casualty Management Co. (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 1256, 1267, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 217 (positive performance reviews, commendations, salary increases, and vague assurances of advancement in company were insufficient to create triable issue of fact as to whether there was implicit agreement to terminate only for cause); Miller v. Pepsi-Cola Bottling Co. (1989) 210 Cal. App. 3d 1554, 1558-1559, 259 Cal. Rptr. 56 (no agreement existed when employer had established no policy governing plaintiff's termination and made no oral assurances of job security to plaintiff)].

An employment contract stating that the employment is "at will" and terminable "at any time" unambiguously creates an at-will employment relationship, even if it does not also state that termination can be without cause. Because there is no ambiguity about the at-will nature of the employment, additional provisions in that contract regarding a probationary period and annual reviews ordinarily will not expressly or impliedly create a right to be terminated only for cause [Dore v. Arnold Worldwide, Inc. (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 384, 389-393, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 668] . Similarly, a contractual provision that gives an employee the right to request management review of the employee's termination does not change an at-will employment relationship into one that can be terminated only for cause [Bernard v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (2007) 158 Cal. App. 4th 304, 310-311, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 700].

There is some conflict among courts of appeal regarding whether an implied-in-fact agreement to discharge only for cause supersedes an express at will provision in a previous contract [compare, e.g., Agosta v. Astor (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 596, 603-605, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 565 (express contractual provision that employer "is an 'at will' employer" establishes at-will employment and cannot be overcome by proof of implied contrary understanding); Tomlinson v. Qualcomm, Inc. (2002) 97 Cal. App. 4th 934, 943-947, 118 Cal. Rptr. 2d 822 (express contractual provision forat-will employment precludes existence of implied agreement to contrary); Starzynski v. Capital Pub. Radio, Inc. (2001) 88 Cal. App. 4th 33, 37-39, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 525 (at-will provision in express written agreement, signed by employee, cannot be overcome by proof of implied contrary understanding); Haggard v. Kimberly Quality Care, Inc. (1995) 39 Cal. App. 4th 508, 519, 522, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16 (employee unable to establish that relationship was not at will, when she had signed two agreements setting forth her at will status); Anderson v. Savin Corp. (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 356, 364, 254 Cal. Rptr. 627 ; Shapiro v. Wells Fargo Realty Advisors (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 467, 482, 199 Cal. Rptr. 613 ; Gerdlund v. Electronic Dispensers International (1987) 190 Cal. App. 3d 263, 277-278, 235 Cal. Rptr. 279 (employee cannot reasonably rely on implied promise of continued employment that contradicts express provisions of at will agreement) with McLain v. Great American Ins. Companies (1989) 208 Cal. App. 3d 1476, 1483-1487, 256 Cal. Rptr. 863 (implied promise may supersede previous at willagreement embodied in nonintegrated document that was subject to parol-evidence interpretation)]. The California Supreme Court in Foley (discussed in § 249.12[3][b][i]), expressly left this issue open [see Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 680 n.23, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373] .

PRACTICE TIP:

At Will Agreements May Displace an Implied Covenant. The "cutting edge" of this issue--the effectiveness of "at will agreements" to foreclose implied in fact contract claims--is addressed in Haggard v. Kimberly Quality Care, Inc. (1995) 39 Cal. App. 4th 508, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16 . The Court of Appeal in Haggard holds that it will not inquire into the adequacy of consideration supporting a purported at will agreement entered into by an employee who has already been employed for some period of time. The consideration identified is continuation of at will employment and the continued payment of wages and benefits. The facts of Haggard keep it from being a clear general authority for the proposition that implied contract rights can be wiped out by a subsequently imposed at will agreement supported by no additional consideration, but that isalmost certainly the position that employers' counsel will take. By Richard P. Hill

An agreement that the relationship will continue indefinitely is characterized as a contract for "permanent" employment. That characterization has been held to mean that the employment is to continue indefinitely, until one of the parties wishes, for some good reason, to sever the relation. A contract that limits the power of the employer with respect to the reasons for termination is no less enforceable because it places no equivalent limits on the power of the employee to quit the employment [Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 325, 171 Cal. Rptr. 917] .

A promise for continued employment subject to limitation on the employer's power of termination need not be supported by "independent consideration," that is, consideration other than the services to be rendered [Pugh v. See's

Candies, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 325, 171 Cal. Rptr. 917 (Pugh I); accord Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 679, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 ; but see Comeaux v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Co. (9th Cir. 1990) 915 F.2d 1264, 1271-1272, 1272 n.8 (plaintiff failed to establish agreement to terminate for cause only on the basis of "independent consideration," even though he resigned from prior job and relocated as condition of new job)]. There is no analytical reason why an employee's promise to render services or actual rendition of services over time may not support an employer's promise both to pay a particular wage and to refrain from arbitrary dismissal [Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 679, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373] . Consequently, the independent consideration factor serves only an evidentiary function in the essential determination of whether there was an agreementto terminate only for cause. Independent consideration would show that it is more probable that the parties intended a continuing relationship, with limitations on the employer's dismissal authority, when the employee has provided some benefit to the employer, or suffers some detriment, beyond the usual rendition of service [Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 326, 171 Cal. Rptr. 917 (Pugh I)].

In determining whether an implied-in-fact promise exists for some form of continued employment, courts have considered a variety of factors in addition to the existence of independent consideration. These have included, for example, the personnel policies or practices of the employer, the employee's longevity of service, actions, or communications by the employer reflecting assurances of continued employment, and the practices of the industry in which the employee is engaged [Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 327, 171 Cal. Rptr. 917 (Pugh I); see discussion at [2], below; see also Robards v. Gaylord Bros., Inc. (9th Cir. 1988) 854 F.2d 1152, 1156-1157 (longevity of employment may, in itself, support inference that employment could be terminated only for cause); Knights v. Hewlett Packard (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 775, 780, 281 Cal. Rptr. 295 (no triable issue as to whether employer promised to terminate only for good cause, in part because plaintiff had no longevity of service); but see Gould v. Maryland Sound Industries, Inc. (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 1137, 1151-1153, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 718 (insufficient showing of implied contract, in part because plaintiff had no longevity of service (three years))].

However, an employee's mere passage of time in the employer's service, even when marked with tangible indications that the employer approves the employee's work, cannot alone form an implied-in-fact contract to be terminated only for good cause. Absent other evidence of the employer's intent, longevity, raises, and promotions are their own rewards for the employee's continuing valued service; they do not, in and of themselves, additionally constitute a contractual guarantee of future employment security [Guz v. Bechtel Nat., Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 317, 341-343, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 352, 8 P.3d 1089] . On the other hand, long and successful service is not necessarily irrelevant to the existence of an implied agreement to terminate only for good cause. Whether the employer's words or conduct over the period of the employee's tenure have created a specific understanding that the employee has rights against termination at will must be determined by the trier of fact [Guz v. Bechtel Nat., Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 317, 342, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 352, 8 P.3d 1089 ; Haycock v. Hughes Aircraft Co. (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 1473, 1489-1495, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 248 (employer's failure to present substantial evidence that employment was at will did not permit court to rule that longevity created implied agreement to terminate only for cause)].

A related doctrinal development exists in the application to the employment relationship of the "implied-in-law covenant of good faith and fair dealing inherent in every contract" [Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1981) 171 Cal. Rptr. 917 (Pugh I)]. However, since the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing cannot impose substantive duties or limits on the parties beyond those incorporated in the specific terms of their agreement, a claim asserting a breach of an implied covenant in the employment context often is either invalid (because it seeks to impose limits on the employer's conduct beyond what the parties agreed to) or superfluous (because it involves conduct that breached the contract terms the parties did agree to) [Guz v. Bechtel Nat., Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 317, 348-352, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 352, 8 P.3d 1089] . For further discussion, see § 249.14.

The employer and employee may expressly define what constitutes good cause for termination, or they may agree to refer questions regarding the existence of good cause to arbitration. In the latter instance, so long as the arbitrator's award draws its essence from the employment contract and does not simply reflect the arbitrator's own notions of industrial justice, the courts will not set aside the arbitrator's interpretation of the contract. Thus, unless there is a contention that the arbitrator has acted outside the scope of the contractually delegated authority,the courts will be bound to treat the arbitrator's award as if it represented an agreement between employer and the union as to the proper meaning of "good cause" under the contract [Eastern Associated Coal Corp. v. United Mine Workers of Am. (2000) 531 U.S. 57, 121 S. Ct. 462, 148 L. Ed. 2d 354, 360-361 (public policy does not require district court to refuse to enforce arbitration award ordering employer to reinstate employee who tested positive for marijuana use)]. For further discussion of what constitutes "good cause," see § 249.21[14][c].

For discussion of what constitutes "good cause," see § 249.21[14][c].

For additional discussion of breach of the express or implied-in-fact promise not to terminate except for cause, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60 (Matthew Bender); and Larson and Borowsky, Unjust Dismissal, Ch. 3 (Matthew Bender).

[2] Effect of Handbooks, Letters, and Other Writings

Documents such as personnel policies, bylaws, and letters of understanding that include language limiting the employer's prerogative to terminate an employee at will may be treated as agreements not to terminate without good cause [see, e.g., Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 681-682, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 ; Rochlis v. Walt Disney Co. (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 201, 211, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 793 (language in stock option agreement sufficient to define relationship as at will); Burton v. Security Pacific Nat. Bank (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 972, 978, 243 Cal. Rptr. 277] .

An agreement to limit the grounds for termination may be inferred from the employer's personnel manual or policies [Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 681-682, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373] . For example, an implied-in-fact agreement may be evidenced by a handbook that indicates that if an employee's performance is unsatisfactory, he or she could be terminated at any time within the probationary period, and further states that a nonprobationary employee is eligible for all benefits, presumably including the grievance procedures outlined elsewhere in the handbook. A plaintiff who shows the foregoing facts is entitled to a jury determination whether the language allowing termination at any time during probation implied that termination after probation was to be for good cause only [Walker v. Northern San Diego County Hospital Dist. (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 896, 903-905, 185 Cal. Rptr. 617] . By contrast, a personnel policy that is only a guideline, and not mandatory, does not imply an agreement to terminate only for good cause [Knights v. Hewlett Packard (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 775, 780, 281 Cal. Rptr. 295 (policy stating that it was "guide for supervisors" when dealing with termination); Davis v. Consolidated Freightways (1994) 29 Cal. App. 4th 354, 367, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 438 (existence of a progressive discipline system does not negate at will status)].

An employer's no-layoff policy, unilaterally adopted by the employer, may become part of the employment contract. Such a policy is effectively an offer for a unilateral contract not to terminate except for good cause, and the offer is accepted by employees who continue in employment after the policy is adopted. However, the no-layoff policy may also be unilaterally discontinued, so long as the employer does so after a reasonable time, on reasonable notice, and without interfering with employees' vested benefits. Once the no-layoff policy is discontinued, the statutory presumption of at-will employment becomes applicable [Asmus v. Pacific Bell (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 1, 9-18, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 179, 999 P.2d 71 ; see Lab. Code § 2922 (presumption of at-will employment)].

Although a letter of understanding may form the basis for an implied-in-fact agreement, the language of the letter must be analyzed for the existence of the employer's promise of termination only for cause. For example, language in a letter of understanding stating that termination of the letter could be accomplished on thirty days' notice, without additional language stating possible causes for termination, failed to evidence either a promise of termination for cause only, or a reservation of the right to terminate at will [see Hillsman v. Sutter Community Hospitals (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d 743, 748, 750-751, 200 Cal. Rptr. 605] .

An employer's bylaws may constitute a contract with its employees in certain circumstances. Bylaws, like other written rules and procedures, may form part of the employment contract "if the employer and employee had a mutual understanding that the rules or procedures would apply to the employee" [Hillsman v. Sutter Community Hospitals (1984) 153 Cal.App. 3d 743, 748, 753, 755, 200 Cal. Rptr. 605 (citing Walker v. Northern San Diego County Hospital Dist. (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 896, 902-905, 185 Cal. Rptr. 617)].

Standardized employment applications that state that an individual's employment is for no definite period and can be terminated at any time do not in themselves negate the existence of an implied-in-fact contract, unless they are integrated into the employment agreement [see McLain v. Great American Ins. Companies (1989) 208 Cal. App. 3d 1476, 1484-1487, 256 Cal. Rptr. 863 (application was not complete and integrated contract between parties, parol evidence was admissible to show application susceptible to other meanings, and evidence, including personnel manual, showed implied contract to terminate only for cause)]. Such an application is not a contract at all, but rather is a solicitation of an offer of employment, and is merely evidence concerning the ultimate agreement entered into by the parties [Harden v. Maybelline Sales Corp. (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 1550, 1555, 282 Cal. Rptr. 96] . Such an application, however, does indicate an at will relationship if it so provides and also states that it constitutes the terms of the employment contract, because the application is thencompletely integrated [see Comeaux v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Co. (9th Cir. 1990) 915 F.2d 1264, 1271 n.7]. However, a writing need not be an employment agreement, per se, to be integrated with respect to the at will provisions. In Haggard v. Kimberly Quality Care, Inc. (1995) 39 Cal. App. 4th 508, 523, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16 , the court found that a confidentiality agreement with an at will termination clause which expressly stated that it could only be modified by the president of the company in writing, whether or not is was considered an "employment agreement," was a complete and integrated expression of the parties' intent with respect to termination.

PRACTICE TIP:

Closely Examine All Employer Practices. Plaintiff's counsel should plead, and pursue in discovery and proof, established employer practices (which may or may not appear in written policies) that support an implied in fact promise not to terminate employment arbitrarily. Such practices can be quite prevalent in smaller, less legally sophisticated noninstitutional employers. By Richard P. Hill

[3] Statute of Frauds Not a Defense to Action Based on Oral or Implied Promise

The statute of frauds does not bar wrongful termination claims based on breach of an oral or implied-in-fact contract not to terminate except for cause [Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 673-675, 675 n.19, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 (disapproving Newfield v. Insurance Co. of the West (1984) 156 Cal. App. 3d 440, 446-447, 203 Cal. Rptr. 9)]. That holding applies retroactively [Newman v. Emerson Radio Corp. (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 973, 993, 258 Cal. Rptr. 592, 772 P.2d 1059] .

The employer had argued in Foley that plaintiff's contract claims were barred by the predecessor of Civ. Code § 1624(a)(1), which invalidates any unwritten agreement that "by its terms is not to be performed within a year from [its making]." The Court held that the statute was inapplicable because it refers only to contracts that, by their terms, cannot possibly be performed within a year [Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 675, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 (citing White Lighting Co. v. Wolfson (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 336, 343 n.2, 66 Cal. Rptr. 697, 438 P.2d 345)]. The Court reasoned that an employment agreement with a good-cause limitation can be performed within one year, because an employee could quit or the employer could discharge the employee for cause within that time [Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 675, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373] .

A court of appeal has rejected the contention that the reasoning used in Foley is limited to contracts of indefinite duration and did not apply to contracts for a specific term exceeding one year. The court held that, as long as there is the possibility that the contract could be terminated in less than a year--for example, if the oral contract permitted termination for cause during the first year--the statute of frauds does not require that the contract be in writing [Abeyta v. Superior Court (1993) 17 Cal. App. 4th 1037, 1043-1045, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 680] .

Every contract contains an implied-in-law covenant of good faith and fair dealing [Seaman's Direct Buying Service, Inc. v. Standard Oil Co. (1984) 36 Cal. 3d 752, 768, 206 Cal. Rptr. 354, 686 P.2d 1158] . Prior to 1989, a number of court of appeal cases held that an employee who was terminated in violation of this implied covenant had a tort cause of action against the employer by analogy to the rule applied in insurance claims cases [see, e.g., Gray v. Superior Court (1986) 181 Cal. App. 3d 813, 820-821, 226 Cal. Rptr. 570 ; Rulon-Miller v. International Business Machines Corp. (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 241, 252-253, 208 Cal. Rptr. 524 ; Cleary v. American Airlines, Inc. (1980) 111 Cal. App. 3d 443, 453-456, 168 Cal. Rptr. 722] .

In Foley v. Interactive Data Corp., the California Supreme Court rejected the analogy between the insurance cases and cases involving termination of employment, and held that employees terminated in violation of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing can recover only contract damages [Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 682-700, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373] . The Foley decision is retroactive [Newman v. Emerson Radio Corp. (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 973, 988-993, 258 Cal. Rptr. 592, 772 P.2d 1059 (Foley applicable to cases not final on January 30, 1989)].

In Guz v. Bechtel Nat'l, Inc., the California Supreme Court reaffirmed Foley and clearly stated that there is no tort of bad-faith breach of an employment contract [Guz v. Bechtel Nat., Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 317, 351, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 352, 8 P.3d 1089] . The Court in Guz went on to explain that the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing cannot impose substantive duties or limits on the contracting parties beyond those incorporated in the specific terms of their agreement. Thus, unless an express or implied-in-fact contract term provides otherwise, the employer may terminate an at-will employee for any reason or no reason and in any manner. In such a case, the unfairness of the manner of termination (for example, if the termination violates the employer's own established personnel policies) ordinarily does not set forth a cause of action for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing [Guz v. Bechtel Nat., Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 317, 348-351, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 352, 8 P.3d 1089] . The Guz Court expressly disapproved of prior court of appeal cases holding to the contrary [Guz v. Bechtel Nat., Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 317, 351, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 352, 8 P.3d 1089] . Accordingly, in the employment context, a claim asserting a breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing often is either invalid (because it seeks to impose limits on the employer's conduct beyond what the parties agreed to) or superfluous (because it involves conduct that breached contract terms the parties did agree to) [Guz v. Bechtel Nat., Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 317, 352, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 352, 8 P.3d 1089] . However, a valid, discrete claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing may exist if an employer performs an act that does not otherwise breach the contract (for example, by terminating an at-will employee) as a mere pretext to cheat the employee out of a contract benefit to which the employee was clearly entitled (such as compensation already earned) [Guz v. Bechtel Nat., Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 317, 353 n.18, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 352, 8 P.3d 1089] .

For additional discussion of breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60 (Matthew Bender); and Larson & Borowsky, Unjust Dismissal, Ch. 3 (Matthew Bender).

§ 249.15 Employer Actions Short of Actual Discharge

[1] Constructive Discharge

[a] Effect of Constructive Discharge

Normally, in order to establish liability under a wrongful discharge theory, the plaintiff will need to establish that the employer terminated the plaintiff's employment. However, the fact that the plaintiff resigned from his or her employment will not preclude recovery for wrongful termination if he or she can prove that the employer's conduct forced him or her to resign, and thus amounted to a "constructive discharge" [Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1244-1245, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022 .

Standing alone, constructive discharge is neither a tort nor a breach of contract; it is a doctrine that transforms what is ostensibly a resignation into a firing. Even after establishing constructive discharge, an employee must independently prove a breach of contract or tort in connection with the termination of employment in order to obtain damages for wrongful termination [Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1251, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022 ; Soules v. Cadam, Inc. (1991) 2 Cal. App. 4th 390, 399-400, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 6] . Thus, an employee who has resigned may maintain an action against the employer for wrongful "termination" in violation of public policy if, for example, the employee can establish that the intolerable conditions that gave rise to the resignation were the result of the employer's unlawful discriminatory practices [see Kovatch v. California Casualty Management Co. (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 1256, 1267, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 217 ; see also § 249.12 (wrongful discharge in violation of public policy)].

[b] Essential Elements

[i] Employee's Burden of Proof

In order to establish a constructive discharge, an employee must plead and prove, by the usual preponderance of the evidence standard, that the employer either intentionally created or knowingly permitted working conditions that were so intolerable or aggravated that a reasonable person in the employee's position would be compelled to resign [Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1251, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022] .

It is not necessary that the employee have completely resigned from the job. It is sufficient if the employee establishes that, because of intolerable conditions, he or she needed to remove himself or herself from the job, thus causing an effectively constructive discharge. For example, assuming thatthe other elements of a wrongful-discharge claim are established, an employer will not be relieved of liability by the fact that the employee did not actually quit his or her job, but rather took a disability retirement [Colores v. Board of Trustees (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 1293, 1316-1318, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 347] .

[ii] Intolerable Conditions

In order to support a claim of constructive discharge, the conditions giving rise to the resignation must be sufficiently extraordinary and egregious to overcome the normal motivation of a competent, diligent, and reasonable employee to earn a livelihood and serve his or her employer. The proper focus is on whether the resignation was coerced, not whether it was simply one rational option for the employee [Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1246, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022] .

The adverse working conditions must be unusually aggravated or amount to a continuous pattern before the situation will be deemed intolerable [Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1247, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022] . A series of separate incidents may establish such a continuous pattern if they amount to a campaign of harassment against the employee, even if each incident considered separately might be viewed as trivial [Thompson v. Tracor Flight Sys., Inc. (2001) 86 Cal. App. 4th 1156, 1171-1172, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 95] . In some circumstances, a single intolerable incident, such as a crime of violence against an employee by an employer, or an employer's ultimatum that an employee commit a crime, may constitute a constructive discharge [Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1247 n.3, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022 (noting that case before it involved no such allegations)]. Generally, though, single, trivial, or isolated acts of misconduct are insufficient to support a constructive discharge claim. Moreover, a poor performance rating or a demotion, even if accompanied by a reduction in pay, does not by itself trigger a constructive discharge [Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1247, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022 (citing Valdez v. City of Los Angeles (1991) 231 Cal. App. 3d 1043, 1056, 282 Cal. Rptr. 726 , and Soules v. Cadam, Inc. (1991) 2 Cal. App. 4th 390, 401, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 6)]. Similarly, a lack of a promotion, even if it is the result of gender discrimination, does not establish such intolerable working conditions as to support a claim of constructive discharge [Cloud v. Casey (2000) 76 Cal. App. 4th 895, 902-905, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 757 (employee's willingness to continue working for supervisor who discriminated against her strongly supported inference that working conditions were not intolerable)].

[iii] Intolerability Determined by Objective Standard

A constructive discharge can only exist if, under an objective standard, a reasonable person faced with the allegedly intolerable employer actions or conditions of employment would have no reasonable alternative but to quit [Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1248, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022 (citing Rochlis v. Walt Disney Co. (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 201, 212, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 793); see Pennsylvania State Police v. Suders (2004) 542 U.S. 129, 124 S. Ct. 2342, 159 L. Ed. 2d 204, 216-220 (Title VII plaintiff who advances hostile-environment constructive-discharge claim must show working conditions so intolerable that reasonable person would have felt compelled to resign); Huskey v. City of San Jose (2000) 204 F.3d 893, 901-902 (civil-rights action; deputy city attorney's subjective discomfort or ethical dilemma over how to proceed with future cases after supervisor's criticism of deputy's "crippling fear" of losing such cases, is not sufficient to support finding of constructive discharge)]. Thus, courts will examine the circumstances surrounding an employee's resignation and determine whether those conditions were sufficiently egregious [see Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1254-1255, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022 (holding that allegations of illegality at workplace were insufficient to support claim of constructive

PRACTICE TIP:

Constructive Discharge May Often Be Determined at Summary Judgment Stage. The evolving case law on what it takes factually to constitute a constructive discharge makes this an issue ripe for summary judgment practice by defendants. See, Gibson v. Aro Corp. (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 1628, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 882 ; King v. AC&R Advertising (9th Cir. 1995) 65 F.3d 764 . It is now possible, reading the case law in the aggregate, to put together an extremely extensive list of actions or conditions that do not amount to constructive termination as a matter of law. By Richard P. Hill

[iv] Employer Knowledge or Intent Required

The California Supreme Court has declined to require a showing that the employer intended to cause the employee to resign, but instead requires proof that the employer either deliberately created the intolerable conditions that triggered the discharge or, at a minimum, knew about the conditions and failed to remedy the situation in order to force the employee to resign [Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1249-1250, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022] . For purposes of this standard, the requisite knowledge or intent must exist on the part of either the employer or those persons who effectively represent the employer, that is, its officers, directors, managing agents, or supervisory employees [Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1251, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022] .

The Court rejected the line of cases that had permitted a constructive discharge to be established based on the employer's constructive knowledge of the intolerable conditions [see 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1248, 1251, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022 (disapproving cases following Brady v. Elixir Industries (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 1299, 1306, 242 Cal. Rptr. 324 , to the extent that they required only constructive knowledge)]. The Court stated that requiring employees to notify someone in a position of authority of their plight permits employers unaware of any wrongdoing to correct a potentially destructive situation [Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1250, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022 ; see also Gibson v. Aro Corp. (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 1628, 1640, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 882 (employer must also be aware of the impact of events on employee, not merely fact events occurred; demotion and decrease in pay which was "embarrassing" not enough to establish constructive discharge)].

Some language in the Court's discussion of the knowledge requirement suggests that an element of the proof is the employer's intent to force the employee to resign [see Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1249-1250, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022 (employer must "know about [the intolerable working conditions] and fail to remedy the situation in order to force the employee to resign")]. However, the Court also stated that it was not imposing an express intent requirement [see Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1248, 1249, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022 (noting that majority of courts have declined to require express intent, and that express intent requirement might unduly focus trier of fact's attention on presence or absence of direct evidence)], so it may be that an intent will be inferred from the employer's failure to remedy the situation once it has knowledge.

[v] Effect of Delay Before Resignation

An issue that has arisen in regard to constructive discharge claims is the effect of a delay between the onset of the allegedly intolerable working conditions and the employee's resignation. The California Supreme Court made clear in Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022 , that the "reasonable employee" standard (discussed in [b][iii], above) makes the length of time one relevant factor in determining the intolerability of employment conditions from the standpoint of a reasonable employee, but that it is not the dispositive factor [Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1254, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022] . The Court disapproved a court of appeal opinion to the extent that it held that a delay greater than the applicable statute of limitations period precluded a constructive discharge claim [Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1254, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022 (disapproving Panopulos v. Westinghouse Electric Corp. (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 660, 264 Cal. Rptr. 810)]. However, in the case before it the Court held that the delay between the allegedly illegal activities of the employer and the employee's resignation supported a conclusion that a reasonable employee would not have found the working conditions intolerable [Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1254-1255, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022] . In Gibson v. Aro Corp. (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 1628, 1637, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 882 , a four-month delay between the demotion and the employee's resignation was one of the factors considered by the court in ruling that there was no constructive discharge.

When a constructive discharge arises from intolerable working conditions which occur over an extended period, the statute of limitations begins to run only upon actual termination [Mullins v. Rockwell Internat. Corp. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 731, 733-734, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 636, 936 P.2d 1246 ; see Draper v. ECR Coeur Rochester, Inc. (9th Cir. 1998) 147 F.3d 1104, 1110-1111 (date of termination, i.e., resignation, triggers limitation period in constructive discharge case just as it does in other cases of wrongful discharge)]. In rejecting the argument that the statute beings to run when the employee has notice of the intolerable conditions, the Court applied the same reasoning it had in an earlier contract action [see Romano v. Rockwell Internat., Inc. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 479, 489-491, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 20, 926 P.2d 1114 (statute of limitations in breach of employment contract action begins to run on actual termination, not upon employer's unequivocal notice that termination will occur in future)]. The Court explained that during the period of ongoing intolerable conditions, the employee has an election of remedies: either to continue to perform the contract and await termination to bring an action for breaches of contract, or to resign and sue for termination [Mullins v. Rockwell Internat. Corp. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 731, 739-740, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 636, 936 P.2d 1246] .

The Court criticized a court of appeal case that held the statute of limitations in a constructive discharge case begins to run when the adverse employment decision is communicated to the employee [Mullins v. Rockwell Internat. Corp. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 731, 739-740, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 636, 936 P.2d 1246 ; see Regents of University of California v. Superior Court (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 1710, 1720-1722, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 919] . In rejecting this approach, the Court noted that a rule "requiring a lawsuit to be filed as soon as intolerable conditions begin would interfere with informal conciliation in the workplace" and promote "premature legal proceedings" [Mullins v. Rockwell Internat. Corp. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 731, 741, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 636, 936 P.2d 1246] .

[2] Wrongful Discipline or Other Adverse Employment Action

The doctrine of wrongful termination in violation of public policy has been interpreted to embrace wrongful discipline [Garcia v. Rockwell International Corp. (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 1556, 1560-1562, 232 Cal. Rptr. 490] . For example, a cause of action for wrongful discipline was stated by an employee who alleged that the employer ordered him to mischarge the amount of time he and other workers spent on certain government projects, that the employer then suspended him without pay, and that after he filed suit, the employer reinstatedhim [Garcia v. Rockwell International Corp. (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 1556, 1561-1562, 232 Cal. Rptr. 490 (finding that public policy under Lab. Code § 1102.5, protecting whistleblowing, prohibited employer's conduct)]. The rationale underlying the prohibition is that there is no logical reason to disallow a cause of action for wrongful discipline when one exists for wrongful termination because the same wrongful conduct is involved whether the wrong inflicted (that is, the retaliation) is a suspension without pay or a discharge [Garcia v. Rockwell International Corp. (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 1556, 1562, 232 Cal. Rptr. 490] .

Similarly, an employee who has been subjected to an adverse employment action because he or she reported a violation of law may have a cause of action for retaliation under the "whistleblower" statute. That statute provides that an employer may not retaliate against an employee for disclosing information to a government or law-enforcement agency, if the employee has reasonable cause to believe that the information discloses a violation of or noncompliance with state or federal law [Lab. Code § 1102.5(b)]. To establish a prima facie case of retaliation under the whistleblower statute, an employee must show (1) he or she engaged in a protected activity, (2) the employer subjected the employee to an adverse employment action, and (3) there was a causal link between the two. To qualify as an "adverse employment action" for this purpose, an employer's act must have a material effect on the terms, conditions, or privileges of employment; it is not sufficient that the act deter the plaintiff or other employees from engaging in protected activities [Patten v. Grant Joint Union High School Dist. (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 1384, 1386-1388, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 113 ("materiality" test for "adverse employment action" adopted by Yanowitz v. L'Oreal USA, Inc. (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 1028, 1050-1055, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 436, 116 P.3d 1123 in context of Fair Employment and Housing Act also applies in context of Lab. Code § 1102.5(b))]. Also, an assignment to a less-preferred position by itself--with no change in pay, benefits, or promotional opportunities, and with no hostile environment--does not constitute an adverse employment action [Malais v. Los Angeles City Fire Dept., 150 Cal. App. 4th 350, 357-358, 58 Cal. Rptr. 3d 444] .

[3] Express or Implied-in-Fact Contract Not to Demote Except for Cause

The California Supreme Court has held that an employee may, in an appropriate case, bring an action for breach of an express or implied-in-fact contract to demote employees only for cause [Scott v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 454, 473-474, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 427, 904 P.2d 834] . The Court could perceive no reason why the principles set forth in Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 681-682, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 , pertaining to implied-in-fact contracts not to discharge except for cause [see discussion in § 249.13[1]] should not also apply to limit an employer's power of demotion [Scott v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 454, 464, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 427, 904 P.2d 834] . In so holding, the Court rejected the employer's arguments that allowing such actions would violate public policy and lead to excessive involvement of the courts in the workplace [see Scott v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 454, 468-473, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 427, 904 P.2d 834] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Carefully Analyze Damages in Wrongful Demotion Cases. In many cases, the damages in a wrongful demotion claim may not be obvious. Plaintiff's counsel investigating such a claim should look to long-term elements. For example, does the structure of the potential plaintiff's retirement benefits mean that the employee's demotion to a lower pay grade towards the end of a career will have an inordinate impact on the amount of retirement benefits expected over the employee's life. By Richard P. Hill

[4] Refusal to Renew Contract for Specified Term of Employment

Circumstances that might give rise to a wrongful termination claim cannot do so if the allegedly terminated employment agreement has lapsed by its own terms. Thus an employee failed to state a claim when she alleged that she worked under successive one-year contracts, renewable at the employer's option, and that the contract was allowed to lapse without further renewal because she engaged in activity that--in a true termination context--would be protected [Daly v. Exxon Corp. (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 39, 45-46, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 727 (nonrenewal after being warned to stop reporting Cal-OSHA violations); see also Motevalli v. Los Angeles Unified Sch. Dist. (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 97, 112-113, 18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 562 (probationary schoolteacher has no cause of action for nonrenewal of employment contract, since law does not recognize claim of tortious nonrenewal of employment contract in violation of public policy absent termination); Tollefson v. Roman Catholic Bishop (1990) 219 Cal. App. 3d 843, 853-857, 268 Cal. Rptr. 550 (neither implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing nor circumstances that might create implied-in-fact agreement to renew absent good cause can transmute express written contract for limited term into one limiting the employer's right of nonrenewal)]. Note, however, that there may still be statutory protections for the employee [see, e.g., Daly v. Exxon Corp. (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 39, 43-44, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 727 (no tort remedy, but failure to renew contract could be "discrimination" under Lab. Code § 6310(b), providing reinstatement and recovery of lost wages and benefits for one terminated or discriminated against for complaining of unsafe working conditions)].

§ 249.16 Remedies in Tort Actions

[1] General Damages

In tort actions generally, a plaintiff may obtain compensation for all harm proximately caused by the defendant's wrongful conduct [Civ. Code § 3333]. Thus, general damages for pain, suffering, and emotional distress may be recovered [see, e.g., Phillips v. Gemini Moving Specialists (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 563, 577, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 29] . However, emotional distress claims that arise out of demotions, transfers, discipline, termination, or any other actions that constitute a "normal part of the employment relationship" may be preempted under the exclusive remedy rule of the workers' compensation law [see Miklosy v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (2008) 44 Cal. 4th 876, 902, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 690, 188 P.3d 629 ("The alleged wrongful conduct, however, occurred at the worksite, in the normal course of the employer-employeerelationship, and therefore workers' compensation is plaintiffs' exclusive remedy for any injury that may have resulted." (citations omitted)); Shoemaker v. Myers (1990) 52 Cal. 3d 1, 18, 20, 25, 276 Cal. Rptr. 303, 801 P.2d 1054 ; Cole v. Fair Oaks Fire Protection Dist. (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 148, 159, 233 Cal. Rptr. 308, 729 P.2d 743] . For discussion of preemption by workers' compensation laws, see § 249.21[10].

PRACTICE TIP:

Not All Workers Comp Damages Are Excepted. Excepted from this aspect of the Shoemaker holding are discharges occurring as the result of an express or implied statutory exception to workers compensation law, or terminations that result from risks or events not within "the compensation bargain." As a practical matter, this would seemingly include all terminations based on discrimination and violations of fundamental public policy, as well as employer conduct such as assault, false imprisonment, and invasion of privacy [see Phillips v. Gemini Moving Specialists (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 563, 577, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 29 (in action for wrongful termination in violation of public policy or in violation of express statutory provision, damages for emotional distress are recoverable component of compensatory damages and are not preempted by workers' compensation); Shoemaker v. Myers (Shoemaker III) (1992) 2 Cal. App. 4th 1407, 1419, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 203 ; Fermino v. Fedco, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 701, 714-715, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 18] . By Richard P. Hill

To the extent that they are not precluded by workers' compensation law, tort damages are available in an action for wrongful termination in violation of public policy [Shoemaker v. Myers (Shoemaker III) (1992) 2 Cal. App. 4th 1407, 1414-1418, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 203 ; Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 176-178, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330] .

In Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 663, 700, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 , the California Supreme Court held that tort remedies are not available for the breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing in the employment context [see Guz v. Bechtel Nat., Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 317, 351, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 352, 8 P.3d 1089 (there is no tort of bad-faith breach of an employment contract; reaffirming Foley); see also discussion in § 249.14].

[2] Special Damages

The plaintiff can obtain damages for lost wages and benefits, including health insurance and life insurance, which should be calculated at the replacement cost for plaintiff, not at the cost to the employer [Wise v. Southern Pac. Co. (1970) 1 Cal. 3d 600, 608, 83 Cal Rptr. 202, 463 P.2d 426] . In most cases, the trier of fact must determine the period of time that plaintiff would have worked for defendant, and then calculate the monetary value of all the compensation that plaintiff would have received during that time, subtracting any amounts obtained or obtainable through reasonable efforts at mitigation [Smith v. Brown-Forman Distillers Corp. (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 503, 518, 241 Cal. Rptr. 916 ; see discussion in § 249.18].

If the plaintiff would have received raises absent defendant's tortious conduct, damages should include amounts representing the raises [see Smith v. Brown-Forman Distillers Corp. (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 503, 518-519, 241 Cal. Rptr. 916 (upholding award of compensatory damages that may have included increases and benefits that might have been received)]. Although these damages may to some degree be speculative, by analogy to the employment discrimination context it can be argued that "unrealistic exactitude" is not required, and that any uncertainties in the calculation of damages should be resolved against an employer who has wrongfully terminated an employee [cf. Holloway & Leech, Employment Termination: Rights and Remedies, Ch. 11, pp. 402-403 (BNA 1985)].

[3] Future Earnings in Tort Actions

Compensation for wages and benefits from the date of judgment forward are referred to as "front pay." Front pay based on future earnings is available to a plaintiff in a wrongful discharge action [see Petermann v. International Brotherhood of Teamsters (1963) 214 Cal. App. 2d 155, 159, 29 Cal. Rptr. 399] . In cases brought under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq.), front pay is generally awarded as an alternative to reinstatement if reinstatement appears inappropriate [see Ackerman v. Western Elec. Co., Inc. (N.D. Cal. 1986) 643 F. Supp. 836, 856] . Consequently, it may be wise for plaintiff's counsel to include a request for reinstatement when requesting front pay as an element of damages [see Whittlesey v. Union Carbide Corp. (2d Cir. 1984) 742 F.2d 724, 727-728 ; Cancellier v. Federated Dep't Stores (9th Cir. 1982) 672 F.2d 1312, 1319 , cert. denied, 459 U.S. 859] . Front pay is generally awarded only for a limited period of time [see Rabago-Alvarez v. Dart Industries, Inc. (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 91, 97, 127 Cal. Rptr. 222 (4 years); Drzewiecki v. H & R Block, Inc. (1972) 24 Cal. App. 3d 695, 705, 101 Cal. Rptr. 169 (10 years)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Carefully Analyze Time Period of Lost Front Pay. The issue of what is a reasonable period of time for the assessment of front pay is an "under-litigated" issue in most wrongful termination cases. Many plaintiffs assume that they would have stayed employed until retirement age, and many defendants seem strangely reluctant to challenge that assumption. Evidence should be developed and analyzed on all of the factors pertaining to just how long the subject employment is likely to have lasted, absent the termination in question. By Richard P. Hill

In general, that portion of a compensatory damages award that represents future wages and benefits must be reduced "to a present lump sum which, when invested to yield the highest rate of return consistent with reasonable security, will pay the equivalent of lost future benefits at the times, in the amounts and for the period such future benefits would have been received" [see Canavin v. Pacific Southwest Airlines (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 512, 521, 196 Cal. Rptr. 82 , citing BAJI No. 14.70 (now see CACI 3904)]. Competent evidence on any or all of the following factors should be considered by the trier of fact: (1) the amount the plaintiff would have earned during each period of lost compensation; (2) the discount rate that properly produces a present lump sum, which by way of safe investments might yield the appropriate future sums; and (3) the effects of inflation [cf. Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp. v. Pfeifer (1983) 462 U.S. 523, 537-538, 103 S. Ct. 2541, 76 L. Ed. 2d 768 (ascertaining future damages ofinjured worker under Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers Compensation Act); United States v. English (9th Cir. 1975) 521 F.2d 63, 75 (wrongful death action under Federal Tort Claims Act); Rodriguez v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 626, 662, 151 Cal. Rptr. 399 (personal injury action by employee against contractors and subcontractors)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Review All Lost Benefits. It is very important to analyze the value of each component of compensation lost in a wrongful termination. Many benefits packages are quite complex in their elements and structure, and expert guidance is often, if not always, necessary in doing a proper damage analysis. By Richard P. Hill

[4] Prejudgment Interest in Tort Actions

[a] Nature of Interest Awards

Prejudgment interest is an element of compensatory damages that provides plaintiff with "the accretion of wealth which money or particular property could have produced during a period of loss" [Berns v. PanAmerican World Airways, Inc. (9th Cir. 1982) 667 F.2d 826, 829-830 ; In re Pago Pago Aircrash of Jan. 30, 1974 (C.D. Cal. 1981) 525 F. Supp. 1007, 1013 ; Greater Westchester Homeowners Asso. v. Los Angeles (1979) 26 Cal. 3d 86, 102-103, 160 Cal. Rptr. 733, 603 P.2d 1329 , cert. denied, 449 U.S. 820] . Prejudgment interest can be awarded in a tort case pursuant to three separate statutes, depending on the facts of the case [see Civ. Code § 3287(a) (discussed at [b], below), Civ. Code § 3288 (discussed at [c], below), and Civ. Code § 3291 (discussed at [d], below)].

[b] Damages Certain in Amount

Civ. Code § 3287(a) states that interest must be awarded if damages are certain or capable of being made certain by calculation on a particular day prior to judgment [Civ. Code § 3287(a); see E.L. White, Inc. v. City of Huntington Beach (1982) 138 Cal. App. 3d 366, 377, 187 Cal. Rptr. 879] . Civ. Code § 3287(a) has been interpreted to apply to tort as well as contract causes of action [Levy-Zentner Co. v. Southern Pac. Transportation Co. (1977) 74 Cal. App. 3d 762, 796-798, 142 Cal. Rptr. 1] . However, the statute applies only if the dispute concerns a question of liability alone and not the basis on which damages are computed [National Farm Workers Service Center, Inc. v. M. Caratan, Inc. (1983) 146 Cal. App. 3d 796, 810, 194 Cal. Rptr. 617] . Thus, it may have limited utility with regard to damages other than those representing lost wages in wrongful termination cases because the amount of such damages is usually disputed.

[c] Discretionary Interest Awards

Prejudgment interest also may be obtained in a wrongful discharge case sounding in tort under Civ. Code § 3288, which permits interest to be awarded at the discretion of the trier of fact in any case of a breach of a noncontractual obligation or in any case of malice, fraud, or oppression [Civ. Code § 3288; Harsany v. Cessna Aircraft Co. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 1139, 1142, 196 Cal. Rptr. 374] . Prejudgment interest under Civ. Code § 3288 does not apply to the portion of the judgment representing emotional distress damages [Berns v. Pan American World Airways, Inc. (9th Cir. 1982) 667 F.2d 826, 830 ; Greater Westchester Homeowners Asso. v. Los Angeles (1979) 26 Cal. 3d 86, 103, 160 Cal. Rptr. 733, 603 P.2d 1329 , cert. denied, 449 U.S. 820] .

The third statute providing for prejudgment interest in a tort action is Civ. Code § 3291. Civ. Code § 3291 provides that if the plaintiff in a "personal injury" action makes a written pretrial settlement offer pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 998, which defendant declines, and plaintiff later achieves a more favorable result at trial, he or she will receive interest at the legal rate of 10 percent from the date of the unaccepted offer [Civ. Code § 3291]. However, one court of appeal has held that a wrongful discharge action primarily involves the infringement of property rights, not personal injury, and so is not an action to recover personal injury damages within the meaning of the statute [Holmes v. General Dynamics Corp. (1993) 17 Cal. App. 4th 1418, 1436, 22 Cal. Rptr. 2d 172] . The court relied on the California Supreme Court's holding that an insurance bad faith action was not an action to recover personal injury damages in which interest could be awarded under Civ. Code § 3291, even if emotional distress damages are alleged, because the action is primarily to recover financial damages [see Gourley v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 121, 127-129, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 666, 822 P.2d 374] . The court of appeal held that a wrongful discharge action was comparable to an insurance bad faith action in that it affects plaintiff's economic rights, with personal injury incidental to that economic loss [Holmes v. General Dynamics Corp. (1993) 17 Cal. App. 4th 1418, 1436-1437, 22 Cal. Rptr. 2d 172 (noting that focus is on nature of tort, rather than type or extent of damages suffered in particular case)].

The court also distinguished actions based on sexual harassment under the Fair Employment and Housing Act (Gov. Code § 12940 et seq.), which have been held to be within the meaning of Civ. Code § 3291 [see Bihun v. AT&T Information Systems, Inc. (1993) 13 Cal. App. 4th 976, 1004-1005, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 787 (disapproved on other grounds by Lakin v. Watkins Associated Industries (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 644, 664, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 109, 863 P.2d 179)]. The court stated that actions for sexual harassment vindicate personal rights, while actions for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy involve the loss of a tangible economic benefit (a job) rather than the invasion of a personal freedom interest [Holmes v. General Dynamics Corp. (1993) 17 Cal. App. 4th 1418, 1437 n.15, 22 Cal. Rptr. 2d 172] .

It is not clear whether an action that alleges a violation of public policy could also serve to vindicate a personal freedom interest, and therefore be an action in which interest under Civ. Code § 3291 is proper. For example, if the public policy involved were the constitutional prohibition against discrimination based on sex, violated by an employer's sexual harassment that led to plaintiff's discharge, it is not clear whether Gourley and Holmes would preclude an award of prejudgment interest.

[5] Punitive Damages

Punitive damages generally are available in tort actions in which it is proved by clear and convincing evidence that the defendant has been guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice [Civ. Code § 3294(a)]; see Smith v. Brown-Forman Distillers Corp. (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 503, 516, 241 Cal. Rptr. 916 ; see also Civ. Code § 3294(c) (definitions of "malice," "oppression," and "fraud")].

An employer will be liable for punitive damages based on the wrongful conduct of an employee if the employer [Civ. Code § 3294(b)]:

- Had advance knowledge of the unfitness of the employee and employed him or her with a conscious disregard of the rights or safety of others,

- Authorized or ratified the wrongful conduct of the employee, or

- Was personally guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice [see Scott v. Phoenix Sch., Inc. (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 702, 717, 96 Cal. Rptr. 3d 159 (wrongful termination, without more, will not sustain finding of malice or oppression)].

To subject a corporate employer to liability for punitive damages, the advance knowledge and conscious disregard, authorization, ratification, or act of oppression, fraud, or malice must be on the part of an officer, director, or managing agent of the corporation [Civ. Code § 3294(b)]. In this context, a "managing agent" is a corporate employee who exercises substantial independent authority and judgment in making decisions that ultimately determine corporate policy; the mere power to hire and fire employees is not sufficient to establish such authority [White v. Ultramar, Inc. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 563, 567, 573-577, 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 19, 981 P.2d 944 (determination of managing-agent status is factual determination that must be made on case-by-case basis); *see Roby v. McKesson Corp. (Nov. 30, 2009) 47 Cal. 4th 686, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 773, 219 P.3d 749, 2009 Cal. LEXIS 12374, at *53-54 (supervisor in charge of four of corporation's 20,000 employees did not have kind of discretionary authority over formal corporate policies affecting substantial portion of corporation that would justify awarding punitive damages against corporation for that supervisor's conduct)]. For full discussion of general rules regarding punitive damage awards in tort actions, see Ch. 177, Damages, § 177.40 et seq.

Punitive damages may be obtained in a wrongful discharge action that sounds in tort, that is, an action based on violation of public policy [see Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 176-178, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330] . For example, an employee who sued for tortious "constructive discharge" after he resigned following his refusal to participate in illegal activities was awarded punitive damages on the ground that the employer consciously disregarded his rights by willfully failing to ensure that employees were informed of the law relevant to their duties or to ensure that employees would not be required to participate in illegal conduct [Smith v. Brown-Forman Distillers Corp. (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 503, 516, 241 Cal. Rptr. 916] .

Further, although not available for breach of contract actions, punitive damages may be awarded where defendant fraudulently induced the plaintiff to enter into the contract [Las Palmas Associates v. Las Palmas Center Associates (1991) 235 Cal. App. 3d 1220, 1238-1239, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 301] .

The Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution places constraints on state-court awards of punitive damages [State Farm Mut. Auto Ins. Co. v. Campbell (2003) 538 U.S. 408, 416-418, 123 S. Ct. 1513, 155 L. Ed. 2d 585 ; BMW of N. Am. v. Gore (1996) 517 U.S. 559, 568, 116 S. Ct. 1589, 134 L. Ed. 2d 809 ; *Roby v. McKesson Corp. (Nov. 30, 2009) 47 Cal. 4th 686, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 773, 219 P.3d 749, 2009 Cal. LEXIS 12374, at 48 ; Simon v. San Paolo U.S. Holding Co., Inc. (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 1159, 1171, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 379, 113 P.3d 63] . The United States Supreme Court has articulated three "guideposts" for courts reviewing punitive damages: (1) the degree of reprehensibility of the defendant's misconduct, (2) the disparity between and the punitive damages award and the actual or potential harm suffered by the plaintiff, (3) the difference between the punitive damages awarded by the jury and the civil penalties authorized or imposed in comparable cases [State Farm Mut. Auto Ins. Co. v. Campbell (2003) 538 U.S. 408, 418, 123 S. Ct. 1513, 155 L. Ed. 2d 585 ; *Roby v. McKesson Corp. (Nov. 30, 2009) 47 Cal. 4th 686, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 773, 219 P.3d 749, 2009 Cal. LEXIS 12374, at 49] . The most important of these guideposts is the degree of reprehensibility of the defendant's conduct. On this question, courts must consider whether (1) the harm caused was physical as opposed to economic; (2) the tortious conduct evinced an indifference to or a reckless disregard of the health or safety of others; (3) the target of the conduct had financial vulnerability; (4) the conduct involved repeated actions or was an isolated incident; and (5) the harm was the result of intentional malice, trickery, or deceit, or mere accident [State Farm Mut. Auto Ins. Co. v. Campbell (2003) 538 U.S. 408, 419, 123 S. Ct. 1513, 155 L. Ed. 2d 585 ; *Roby v. McKesson Corp. (Nov. 30, 2009) 47 Cal. 4th 686, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 773, 219 P.3d 749, 2009 Cal. LEXIS 12374, at *49, *63-64 (one-to-one ratio between compensatory and punitive damages was federal constitutional limit in FEHA discrimination and harassment case involving relatively low degree of reprehensibility of defendant's conduct and substantial compensatory damages award, which included

§ 249.17 Remedies in Contract Action

[1] Wages and Benefits

Pursuant to Civ. Code § 3300, the proper measure of damages for breach of a contract is the amount that will compensate the party aggrieved for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, or that in the ordinary course of things would be likely to result therefrom. The general rule is that the measure of recovery by a wrongfully discharged employee in a contract action is the amount of salary agreed on for the period of service, less the amount that the employer proves the employee has earned or with reasonable effort might have earned from other employment [Parker v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 176, 181-182 ; Rabago-Alvarez v. Dart Industries, Inc. (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 91, 98, 127 Cal. Rptr. 222] . Benefits, such as health and life insurance provided by the employer, are included as part of the compensation to which wrongfully discharged employees are entitled [Wise v. Southern Pac. Co. (1970) 1 Cal. 3d 600, 607, 83 Cal. Rptr. 202, 463 P.2d 426 ; see discussion in § 249.16[2]].

[2] Future Earnings in Contract Actions

Awards of future lost earnings, or front pay, are available in a wrongful discharge action based on contract [see Rabago-Alvarez v. Dart Industries, Inc. (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 91, 97-98, 127 Cal. Rptr. 222 (4 years); Drzewiecki v. H & R Block, Inc. (1972) 24 Cal. App. 3d 695, 705, 101 Cal. Rptr. 169 (10 years)]. For discussion of determination of future earnings, see § 249.16[3].

[3] Reliance Damages

In most wrongful discharge cases based on breach of an employment contract, the damages suffered by plaintiff are based on the loss of the benefit of the bargain agreed to by plaintiff and defendant. In some cases, plaintiff may suffer additional damages because he or she acted in reliance on the existence of the contract. For example, a plaintiff may have moved a substantial distance to begin employment. "Reliance" damages are properly included in plaintiff's recovery [see Lazar v. Superior Court (1996) 12 Cal. 4th 631, 649, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 377, 909 P.2d 981 (plaintiff may properlyseek as damages the cost of uprooting family, expenses incurred in relocation and loss of security and income associated with former employment); Thomas v. Olin Mathieson Chem. Corp. (1967) 255 Cal. App. 2d 806, 811-812, 63 Cal. Rptr. 454 ; see also Lab. Code §§ 970-972 (liability for inducing employee to change location as result of false representations concerning employment), discussed in § 249.30]. However, any overlap between damages received in tort and damages in contract is limited by the rule against double recovery [Tavaglione v. Billings (1993) 4 Cal. 4th 1150, 1159, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 608] .

[4] Prejudgment Interest in Contract Actions

In a contract cause of action, prejudgment interest may be available under Civ. Code § 3287, which allows interest on damages that are certain, or able to be made certain by calculation, and that are vested in the plaintiff on a particular day [see discussion in § 249.16[4]].

Prejudgment interest may also be available in a contract case under Civ. Code § 3287(b), which permits an award of interest in a contract action when the amount of damages is not liquidated. Every person who is entitled under any judgment to receive damages based on a cause of action in contract when the claim was unliquidated may also recover interest thereon from a date prior to the entry of judgment as the court may, in its discretion, fix, but in no event earlier than the date the action was filed [Civ. Code § 3287(b)]. The award of interest is not for determination by the jury [George v. Double-D Foods, Inc. (1984) 155 Cal. App. 3d 36, 47, 201 Cal. Rptr. 870] .

The delay involved in the litigation appears to be an important factor in determining whether to award interest under Civ. Code § 3287(b) [A & M Produce Co. v. FMC Corp. (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 473, 496, 186 Cal. Rptr. 114 ; Moreno v. Jessup Buena Vista Dairy (1975) 50 Cal. App. 3d 438, 448, 123 Cal. Rptr. 393] . The good or bad faith of defendant in opposing plaintiff's claim may affect the decision to award interest [Zalk v. General Exploration Co. (1980) 105 Cal. App. 3d 786, 795, 164 Cal. Rptr. 647] .

Plaintiffs in tort and contract actions generally have a duty to make a reasonable effort to minimize the damage caused by defendant's actions [see Ash v. Soo Sing Lung (1918) 177 Cal. 356, 361-362, 170 P. 843 ; Ortiz v. Bank of America Nat. Trust and Sav. Ass'n (9th Cir. 1987) 852 F.2d 383, 387] . In the case of the wrongfully discharged employee, mitigation means seeking other employment [Meyer v. Byron Jackson, Inc. (1984) 161 Cal. App. 3d 402, 416-417, 207 Cal. Rptr. 663] and making a reasonable effort to retain any employment that is secured [see Stanchfield v. Hamer Toyota, Inc. (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 1495, 1502-1503, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 565] . Defendant may show that compensation earned by the plaintiff after termination, or the amount that could have been earned with reasonable diligence, should be deducted from plaintiff's damages [Parker v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 176, 181-182, 89 Cal. Rptr. 737, 474 P.2d 689 ; cf. Ford Motor Co. v. EEOC (1982) 458 U.S. 219, 231 n.14, 102 S.Ct. 3057, 73 L. Ed. 2d 721 (case brought under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. §§ 2000e-2000e-17))]. For a form of affirmative defense alleging that plaintiff failed to mitigate damages, see § 249.65.

Defendant must prove plaintiff's failure to mitigate by showing that comparable positions were available for which plaintiff was qualified, and that plaintiff did not make reasonable efforts to obtain them [Parker v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 176, 182, 89 Cal. Rptr. 737, 474 P.2d 689] . Included in the defendant's burden of proof is a demonstration of the amount of money that the plaintiff could have earned [Mayer v. Multistate Legal Studies, Inc. (1997) 52 Cal. App. 4th 1428, 1436-1437, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 336] . If plaintiff found but failed to retain comparable employment, defendant may prove failure to mitigate by showing that plaintiff did not make reasonable efforts to retain such employment [Stanchfield v. Hamer Toyota, Inc. (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 1495, 1502, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 565] . For example, if plaintiff is fired from the newly-obtained employment for cause, any amount the employee could have earned by retaining that employment should be deducted from plaintiff's damages [see Stanchfield v. Hamer Toyota, Inc. (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 1495, 1502-1503, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 565] . The reasonableness of plaintiff's efforts is a question of fact for the jury [Ortiz v. Bank of America Nat. Trust and Sav. Ass'n (9th Cir. 1987) 852 F.2d 383, 387] .

Plaintiff is not required to bear undue risk, burden, or humiliation in order to fulfill the duty to mitigate; only reasonable diligence is demanded [see Rest. 2d, Contracts, § 350 (1979)]. Thus, plaintiff need not accept inferior employment or work of a different kind [Parker v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 176, 182, 89 Cal. Rptr. 737, 474 P.2d 689 ; Rabago-Alvarez v. Dart Industries, Inc. (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 91, 99, 127 Cal. Rptr. 222] . Similarly, plaintiff generally need not relocate to find a job [Hegler v. Board of Ed. of Bearden Sch. Dist., Bearden, Ark. (8th Cir. 1971) 447 F.2d 1078, 1081] . For example, a discharged employee need not accept similar employment offering the same wages and benefits as the original position, if accepting the position requires him or her to relocate and incur other expenses [Cunningham v. Retail Clerks Union (1983) 149 Cal. App. 3d 296, 307, 196 Cal. Rptr. 769] . Plaintiff's damages should include any sums expended in his or reasonable efforts at mitigation [see W.C. Cook & Co. v. White Truck etc. Co. (1932) 124 Cal. App. 721, 727, 13 P.2d 549] .

A unique opportunity to mitigate damages may arise if the defendant employer offers the terminated employee his or her job back. In Ford Motor Co. v. EEOC (1982) 458 U.S. 219, 102 S. Ct. 3057, 73 L. Ed. 2d 721 , a case arising under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq.), the United States Supreme Court held that an ex-employee's refusal of the employer's unconditional offer of reinstatement to the same or substantially equivalent position operates to cut off the back pay period at the date of refusal. The holding does not affect plaintiff's right to back pay for the period predating the effective date of the reinstatement offer [Ford Motor Co. v. EEOC (1982) 458 U.S. 219, 238, 102 S. Ct. 3057, 73 L. Ed. 2d 721] . In applying this rule to a wrongful termination action arising under California law, the Ninth Circuit has held that an offer of reinstatement does not, as a matter of law, automatically terminate the employer's liability for back pay; a jury question may remain as to whether or not the plaintiff's refusal of the reinstatement offer was reasonable under the circumstances [Ortiz v. Bank of America Nat. Trust and Sav. Ass'n (9th Cir. 1987) 852 F.2d 383, 387] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Mitigation of Damages is Defendant's Burden of Proof. An important, but sometimes overlooked, aspect of a defendant's burden of proof on mitigation of damages is the necessity of showing that earnings sought to be credited against damages must be inconsistent with the performance of the contract proven to have been breached. If the earnings in question still would have been available to the plaintiff in the "but for" world of an unbreached contract, they are not properly subtracted from damages in mitigation. See Mass v. Board of Education (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 612, 629 n.12, 39 Cal. Rptr. 739 . Plaintiff should be aggressive in proposing instructions which make the defendant's burden of proof on mitigation of damages clear and explicit. By Richard P. Hill

§ 249.19 Deduction of Collateral Compensation

A damages award may be reduced by the amounts earned or earnable by the plaintiff through reasonable diligence [see discussion in § 249.18]. Under the collateral source rule, other types of compensation received by the plaintiff from sources other than the defendant generally are not deducted from the award [Helfend v. Southern Cal. Rapid Transit Dist. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 1, 6, 84 Cal. Rptr. 173, 465 P.2d 61] . The rule applies only to sources other than the defendant. Therefore, severance pay paid by defendant may be deducted from damages [cf. E.E.O.C. v. Sandia Corp. (10th Cir. 1980) 639 F.2d 600, 626 ; E.E.O.C. (U.S.A.) v. Pacific Press Pub. Ass'n (N.D. Cal. 1979) 482 F. Supp. 1291, 1317-1318 (Title VII cases)] . Workers' compensation payments relating to a wrongful termination may also be deducted [Pichon v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 488, 499-501, 260 Cal. Rptr. 677 ; accord, Panopulos v. Westinghouse Electric Corp. (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 660, 668, 264 Cal. Rptr. 810 ; see also Mayer v. Multistate Legal Studies, Inc. (1997) 52 Cal. App. 4th 1428, 1432-1434 & n.2, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 336 (plaintiff conceded deductibility of disability benefits, and court seemed to assume their deductibility)].

Collateral benefits that are not deducted include the following:

- Unemployment benefits [Monroe v. Oakland Unified School Dist. (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 804, 810-812, 170 Cal. Rptr. 867] ;

- Retirement benefits [Hume v. Lacey (1952) 112 Cal. App. 2d 147, 152, 245 P.2d 672] ; and

- Medical benefits [Helfend v. Southern Cal. Rapid Transit Dist. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 1, 6, 84 Cal. Rptr. 173, 465 P.2d 61] .

§ 249.20 Equitable Remedies

One court has held that specific performance (that is, reinstatement) is not available as a remedy in a wrongful termination action because of the long-established rule that a contract for personal services cannot be specifically enforced [Barndt v. County of Los Angeles (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 397, 403-406, 259 Cal. Rptr. 372 ; see Civ. Code § 3390]. This rule may be inapplicable, however, if an employee is discharged in violation of a statute that expressly provides for reinstatement as a remedy [see, e.g., Lab. Code § 132a(1) (employee discharged for filing workers' compensation claim or testifying in workers' compensation proceeding is, among other things, entitled to reinstatement)].

In the wake of the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001, the Legislature acted to protect the rights of military reservists who are called to active duty. Among the protections enacted was an extension of reemployment rights to reservists who are called to active duty [2002 Stats., Ch. 60 (effective June 21, 2002)]. The California military leave law now provides that an officer or enlisted member of the California National Guard, or a member of the United States Military Reserve, who leaves a full- or part-time position in private employment to perform full-time active California or federal military service may obtain a certificate of satisfactory service, which entitles him or her to apply within 40 days after the completion of such service for reemployment with the same employer [Mil. & Vet. Code § 395.06(a), (b); see Mil. & Vet. Code § 400; see also 86 Ops. Cal. Atty. Gen. 12 (2003) (employment-related benefits granted in Mil. & Vet. Code §§ 389-395.8 are not available to employee who seeks leave of absence for service in militia of another state)]. The employer must restore the returning employee to the former position or to a position of similar seniority, status, and pay without loss of retirement or other benefits, unless the employer's circumstances have so changed as to make it impossible or unreasonable to do so [Mil. & Vet. Code § 395.06(a), (b)]. The returning employee may not be terminated without cause within one year after being restored to the position [Mil. & Vet. Code § 395.06(a), (b)]. In addition, any employee of the state called up during time of war or national emergency has the right "to return and reenter upon the office or position within six months after the termination of his or her active service with the armed forces" [Mil. & Vet. Code § 395.1(a)].

If a private employer fails to provide reemployment benefits as required by the California military leave law, the person entitled to reemployment may obtain relief by filing a motion, petition, or similar pleading in the superior court for the county where the employer maintains a place of business. The court may grant specific relief by requiring the employer to comply with the reemployment law and compensate the person for any loss of wages or benefits caused by the employer's unlawful action [Mil. & Vet. Code § 395.06(c) (superior court to order speedy hearing and advance matter on calendar)]. The district attorney or city prosecutor of the county or city in which the employer maintains a place of business is authorized to appear and act as attorney for the person entitled to reemployment benefits, and no fees or court costs are required to be paid by the person applying for those benefits [Mil. & Vet. Code § 395.06(c), (d)].

Similar benefits are mandated for a volunteer member of the California Wing of the Civil Air Patrol (the civilian auxiliary of the United States Air Force) who has been employed for at least 90 days by an employer that has more than 15 employees [Gov. Code § 1501 et seq.; see Gov. Code § 1501(a),(b),(d) ("Civil Air Patrol leave," "employee," and "employer" defined)]. The employer generally must provide not less than 10 days per calendar year of unpaid leave to an employee responding to an emergency operational mission of the Civil Air Patrol [Gov. Code § 1503(a)(1); see also Gov. Code § 1503(d) (employer may opt to provide paid leave); Gov. Code § 1504(b) (employer and employee may negotiate for employer to maintain employee's benefits at employer's expense during leave)]. Such leave for a single emergency operational mission must not exceed three days, unless an extension of time is granted by the governmental entity that authorized the emergency operational mission, and the extension of the leave is approved by the employer [Gov. Code § 1503(a)(1); but see Gov. Code § 1503(a)(2) (employer is not required to grant such leave to employee who is required to respond to same or simultaneous emergency operational mission as first responder or disaster-service worker for local, state, or federal agency)]. The employee must give the employer as much notice as possible of the intended dates on which the leave will begin and end, and the employer may require certification from the Civil Air Patrol to verify the employee's eligibility for leave [Gov. Code § 1503(b)]. The employer may not require the employee to exhaust accrued vacation leave, personal leave, compensatory leave, sick leave, disability leave, or any other leave that may be available to the employee in order to take Civil Air Patrol leave [Gov. Code § 1503(c)]. On the expiration of the leave, the employer must restore an employee to the position held by him or her when the leave began or to a position with equivalent seniority status, employee benefits, pay, and other terms and conditions of employment [Gov. Code § 1504(a) (employer may decline to restore employee because of conditions unrelated to employee's exercise of leave rights)]. The employer must not discriminate against or discharge the employee because of his or her membership in the Civil Air Patrol and may not hinder or prevent the employee from performing service as part of the Civil Air Patrol during an emergency operational mission for which the employee is entitled to leave [Gov. Code § 1502; see Gov. Code § 1506; see also Gov. Code § 1505(a) (taking Civil Air Patrol leave must not result in loss of any employee benefit accrued before beginning of leave)].

Federal law provides similar reemployment benefits for service members. The Uniformed Services Employment and Reemployment Rights Act of 1994 ("USERRA") [38 U.S.C. § 4301 et seq.] requires employers to provide leaves of absence to employees serving in the uniformed services and grants reemployment and job protection rights to such employees [38 U.S.C. §§ 4304, 4312, 4313, 4316(c)]. Affected employees generally are entitled to reemployment if they (1) give proper advance verbal or written notice of such service to their employer; (2) are not on leave for more than five years, except in limited circumstances, such as when the service is required for a national emergency; and (3) apply for reemployment within the periods prescribed by USERRA [38 U.S.C. § 4312(a)(1)-(3)]. An employee's release of rights in a severance agreement is not enforceable to bar a claim for wrongful termination based on a violation of USERRA rights [Perez v. Uline, Inc. (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 953, 957-958, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 872]. For detailed coverage of the USERRA, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 40 (Matthew Bender) [see also Tyler M. Paetkau, Emerging Employment Law Considerations as a Result of the September 11th Terrorist Attacks, California Employment Law Reporter, Dec. 2001 (Matthew Bender)].

§ 249.21 Defenses to Wrongful Discharge Action

[1] Preemption by Federal Labor Law Generally

Common law wrongful discharge actions may be preempted by federal labor laws in several ways. First, if the gravamen of a plaintiff's complaint is that he or she was discharged or disciplined because of his or her exercise of rights protected by the National Labor Relations Act (NLRA; 29 U.S.C. §§ 151-169), the plaintiff's exclusive remedy is through the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) [Henry v. Intercontinental Radio, Inc. (1984) 155 Cal. App. 3d 707, 713-715, 202 Cal. Rptr. 328 ; see discussion at [2], below]. Some wrongful-discharge claims may also be preempted by § 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act (LMRA; 29 U.S.C. § 185(a)), which provides the exclusive remedy for challenging a breach of a collective bargaining agreement [see Allis-Chalmers Corp. v. Lueck (1985) 471 U.S. 202, 221, 105 S. Ct. 1904, 85 L. Ed. 2d 206 ; see discussion at [3], below]. The Railway Labor Act (RLA; 45 U.S.C. §§ 151-188), which governs collective bargaining agreements regarding employees of railroads and airlines engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, may also preempt some wrongful termination actions [see discussion at [5], below].

[2] Federal Preemption Regarding Rights Protected by National Labor Relations Act

The NLRA preempts common law wrongful discharge actions if the gravamen of plaintiff's complaint is that he or she was discharged or disciplined because of that statute [Henry v. Intercontinental Radio, Inc. (1984) 155 Cal. App. 3d 707, 713-715, 202 Cal. Rptr. 328] . For example, in one case, a complaint alleging that an employer fired the plaintiff for working to increase wages, to improve working conditions, and to unionize employees was subject to demurrer, because discharge or discrimination based on union-related factors is arguably within the jurisdiction of the NLRB [Henry v. Intercontinental Radio, Inc. (1984) 155 Cal. App. 3d 707, 713, 202 Cal. Rptr. 328] . In another case, the court held that the NLRA preempted a wrongful termination action by a union cab driver who was fired in retaliation for testifying against his employer at a Public Utilities Commission hearing [Rodriguez v. Yellow Cab Cooperative, Inc. (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 668, 674-679, 253 Cal. Rptr. 779 ; see also Kelecheva v. Multivision Cable T.V. Corp. (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 521, 528, 22 Cal. Rptr. 2d 453 (discharge from supervisory position, allegedly due to plaintiff's refusal to participate in employer's campaign of antiunion harassment, preempted)]. Similarly, a wrongful termination action brought by a supervisor is preempted by the NLRA if the supervisor's discharge interfered with the right of employees to exercise their rights under the NLRA, such as a supervisor's testimony adverse to the employer's interest at an NLRB proceeding or during the processing of an employee's grievance under a collective bargaining agreement [Ruscigno v. American Nat'l Can Co. (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 112, 119-128, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 585] .

Although the NLRB generally has exclusive jurisdiction over the adjudication of unfair labor practices, there is an exception to that exclusive jurisdiction for certain matters of local concern. This exception applies to matters that touch interests that are so deeply rooted in local feeling and responsibility, that the courts will not find that the NLRB has exclusive jurisdiction in the absence of a plain expression of congressional intent to preempt state regulation. One such area is the regulation of occupational health and safety [Inter-Modal Rail Employees Ass'n v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 918, 924-928, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 60] . Thus, for example, when an employer discharges employees because they have formed an association to complain about hazardous work conditions, the employees' cause of action for retaliatory discharge in violation of the California Occupational Safety and Health Act [Lab. Code § 6300 et seq.] is not preempted by the NLRA [Inter-Modal Rail Employees Ass'n v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 918, 925-929, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 60] .

At least one case has held that, if an action alleges mixed motivations for the wrongful discharge, which include the employee's refusal to commit an unfair labor practice, the action is not preempted by the NLRA, and the employee may recover for the wrongful discharge based on the other reasons [Balog v. LRJV, Inc. (1988) 204 Cal. App. 3d 1295, 1311, 250 Cal. Rptr. 766 ; cf. Kelecheva v. Multivision Cable T.V. Corp. (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 521, 528-529, 22 Cal. Rptr. 2d 453 (plaintiff's admission that defendant's sole unlawful motivation for termination involved "unionbusting" precluded reliance on "mixed motive" exception to preemption)].

An action for breach of an implied contract of employment, or an action for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, is not preempted by the National Labor Relations Act unless the controversy presented to the court is identical to that which would be presented to the NLRB [see Kelecheva v. Multivision Cable T.V. Corp. (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 521, 529-532, 22 Cal. Rptr. 2d 453] . In the case of an employee not covered by a collective bargaining agreement (such as a supervisory employee), the interest of the state in providing contract remedies outweighs any marginal effect the adjudication of those employees' contract claims might have on the administration of national labor policies [Kelecheva v. Multivision Cable T.V. Corp. (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 521, 532, 22 Cal. Rptr. 2d 453] .

Because the NLRB has primary jurisdiction over substantive NLRA issues, a case subject to NLRA preemption may not be removed to federal court, even for the limited purpose of dismissing it to protect the NLRB's jurisdiction. State courts must determine NLRA preemption issues with respect to wrongful termination claims [Ethridge v. Harbor House Restaurant (9th Cir. 1988) 861 F.2d 1389, 1396-1402] . For general discussion and forms relating to federal removal jurisdiction, see Ch. 265, Federal Courts: Jurisdiction and Removal .

[3] Federal Preemption Under Labor Management Relations Act

The Labor Management Relations Act (LMRA; 29 U.S.C. § 185(a)), which provides the exclusive remedy for challenging a breach of a collective bargaining agreement, preempts state-law wrongful discharge claims that require interpretation of the terms of a collective bargaining agreement [Allis-Chalmers Corp. v. Lueck (1985) 471 U.S. 202, 211, 105 S. Ct. 1904, 85 L. Ed. 2d 206 ; Hansen v. Aerospace Related Indus. Dist. Lodge 725 of Int'l Ass'n of Machinists & Aerospace Workers (2001) 90 Cal. App. 4th 977, 984-985, 109 Cal. Rptr. 2d 482 (adjudication of employee's claim that she had been terminated for pretextual reasons necessarily involved determination of whether she had been laid off out of seniority order under collective bargaining agreement)]. Therefore, because a collective bargaining agreement generally governs the employment relationship between an employer and a unionized employee, the employee's common law action for breach of contract or breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing is likely to fail [see Cook v. Lindsay Olive Growers (9th Cir. 1990) 911 F.2d 233, 238-239 ; Newberry v. Pacific Racing Ass'n (9th Cir. 1988) 854 F.2d1142, 1147-1148 (action for breach of implied covenant and good faith); Young v. Anthony's Fish Grottos, Inc. (9th Cir. 1987) 830 F.2d 993, 997-1001 (claims for breach of contract and breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing); Paige v. Henry J. Kaiser Co. (9th Cir. 1987) 826 F.2d 857, 861-862 , cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1054 (1988) ; see also Allis-Chalmers Corp. v. Lueck (1985) 471 U.S. 202, 221, 105 S. Ct. 1904, 85 L. Ed. 2d 206 (cause of action for breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing based on denial of group-insurance benefits provided under collective bargaining agreement)]. Of course, the LMRA does not preempt a wrongful termination action by an employee who is not actually covered by a collective bargaining agreement [see Wanland v. Los Gatos Lodge, Inc. (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 1507, 1515, 281 Cal. Rptr. 890] .

The LMRA may preempt a cause of action for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing even if the collective bargaining agreement provides no comparable protection against discharge at will, because a labor union may waive any requirement of good cause for termination that otherwise may be implied under California common law [see Young v. Anthony's Fish Grottos, Inc. (9th Cir. 1987) 830 F.2d 993, 999-1001] .

The LMRA does not preempt an employee's wrongful termination action merely because a court must scrutinize a collective bargaining agreement to determine whether the employee is covered by the agreement [Wanland v. Los Gatos Lodge, Inc. (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 1507, 1517, 281 Cal. Rptr. 890] . Likewise, the LMRA does not preempt a state-law wrongful termination claim solely because dispute resolution under a collective bargaining agreement and judicial analysis of a state-law claim would require analysis of the same set of facts, as long as the state-law claim can be resolved without interpreting the agreement itself [see Lingle v. Norge Division, Magic Chef (1988) 486 U.S. 399, 411-413, 108 S. Ct. 1877, 100 L. Ed. 2d 410] . Thus, the United States Supreme Court has held that the LMRA did not preempt a cause of action under Illinois law for retaliatory discharge for filing a workers' compensation claim, because none of the factual questions regarding the state-law claim required interpretation of the collective-bargaining agreement in that case [Lingle v. Norge Division, Magic Chef (1988) 486 U.S. 399, 407, 108 S. Ct. 1877, 100 L. Ed. 2d 410 ; see also Detabali v. St. Luke's Hosp. (9th Cir. 2007) 482 F.3d 1199, 1203 (LMRA did not preempt FEHA claim that employer applied terms of collective bargaining agreement in discriminatory manner, even though court would have to refer to agreement, because resolution of FEHA claim did not depend on interpretation of agreement)].

Several Ninth Circuit cases have held that the LMRA does not preempt wrongful discharge claims based on violation of public policy [see, e.g., Paige v. Henry J. Kaiser Co. (9th Cir. 1987) 826 F.2d 857, 863 , cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1054 (1988) (wrongful termination in violation of public policy embodied in occupational health and safety statutes); Garibaldi v. Lucky Food Stores, Inc. (9th Cir. 1984) 726 F.2d 1367, 1373-1374 , cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1099 (1985) (wrongful termination action based on retaliation for "whistleblowing"); see also Miller v. AT&T Network Systems (9th Cir. 1988) 850 F.2d 543, 548-550 (Oregon employment discrimination statute)]. These decisions were based in part on the fact that the claims involved did not require interpretation of the collective bargaining agreement [see Miller v. AT&T Network Systems (9th Cir. 1988) 850 F.2d 543, 548-550 ; Paige v. Henry J. Kaiser Co. (9th Cir. 1987) 826 F.2d 857, 863 , cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1054] . Other factors the cases considered, however, include whether the purpose of the state law was to "regulate the employment relationship" [see Paige v. Henry J. Kaiser Co. (9th Cir. 1987) 826 F.2d 857, 863 ; Garibaldi v. Lucky Food Stores, Inc. (9th Cir. 1984) 726 F.2d 1367, 1374, 1375 , cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1099 (1985)] ; whether the state law applies to "all employees as individual workers" and not just to union members [see Paige v. Henry J. Kaiser Co. (9th Cir. 1987) 826 F.2d 857, 863 , cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1054] ; and whether the rights provided by state law are "non-negotiable" [see Miller v. AT&T Network Systems (9th Cir. 1988) 850 F.2d 543, 548-550 ; but see Lingle v. Norge Division, Magic Chef (1988) 486 U.S. 399, 407, 108 S. Ct. 1877, 100 L. Ed. 2d 410 (dictum; neither fact that state law remedy is "non-negotiable" nor fact that it applies uniformly to all employees ensures that it will not be preempted)].

For a form of affirmative defense that plaintiff's claim is preempted by the LMRA, see § 249.66.

[4] Preemption by Federal Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act

The Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act (LMRDA; 29 U.S.C. § 401 et seq.) preempts claims of wrongful discharge based on contract breach brought against unions or their officials by former policymaking or confidential employees [Screen Extras Guild, Inc. v. Superior Court (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 1017, 1024, 1032, 275 Cal. Rptr. 395, 800 P.2d 873] . Allowing such claims would frustrate the LMRDA's goal of ensuring union democracy [see Finnegan v. Leu (1982) 456 U.S. 431, 435-436, 102 S. Ct. 1867, 72 L. Ed. 2d 239] because they would interfere with the ability of elected union officials to implement, by selecting their own administrators, the will of the union members they represent [Screen Extras Guild, Inc. v. Superior Court (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 1017, 1030, 275 Cal. Rptr. 395, 800 P.2d 873] . Thus, a union business agent with significant decision-making responsibility for the implementation of union policies and their application to individual cases is a policymaking or confidential employee covered by the LMRDA and may not bring a state-law action for wrongful termination based on breach of contract [Screen Extras Guild, Inc. v. Superior Court (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 1017, 1031-1032, 275 Cal. Rptr. 395, 800 P.2d 873] .Similarly, "confidential" employees include secretaries who do not have policymaking responsibilities, but who have access to confidential union information that--if disclosed--could thwart union policies and objectives [Thunderburk v. United Food & Commercial Workers' Union, Local 324 (2001) 92 Cal. App. 4th 1332, 1341-1343, 112 Cal. Rptr. 2d 609] .

The LMRDA does not preempt a wrongful-discharge claim by an elected union official, however. Allowing such an action to proceed furthers the LMRDA's goal of ensuring union democracy [Sheet Metal Workers' Int'l Ass'n v. Lynn (1989) 488 U.S. 347, 355, 109 S. Ct. 639, 102 L. Ed. 2d 700 ; see Hansen v. Aerospace Related Indus. Dist. Lodge 725 of Int'l Ass'n of Machinists& Aerospace Workers (2001) 90 Cal. App. 4th 977, 982-983, 109 Cal. Rptr. 2d 482 (union official's wrongful-termination action preempted by LMRDA; although originally elected to his position, by time of alleged wrongful termination union had reorganized and plaintiff was serving at will of union president)].

LMRDA preemption does not extend to wrongful-discharge claims based on violations of the public policy against age discrimination and disability discrimination. California law imposes a responsibility on employers to refrain from discriminating on the basis of age and disability and to accommodate disabled employees [see Gov. Code § 12940(a), (m)]. The LMRDA does not explicitly provide to the contrary or reduce or limit those responsibilities [see 29 U.S.C. § 523(a)], and the California public policy against discrimination does not directly conflict with the federal policy underlying the LMRDA. Therefore, the LMRDA does not preempt an action against a union by a union employee arising out of job discrimination based on age or disability [Smith v. IBEW, Local Union 11 (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 1637, 1648-1654 ; see Screen Extras Guild, Inc. v. Superior Court (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 1017, 1025 n.5, 275 Cal. Rptr. 395, 800 P.2d 873] .

For a form of affirmative defense alleging that the LMRDA preempts a wrongful discharge cause of action, see § 249.67.

[5] Preemption by Federal Railway Labor Act

The Railway Labor Act (RLA; 45 U.S.C. § 151 et seq.) governs labor relations and collective bargaining agreements involving employees of railroads and airlines engaged in interstate or foreign commerce. Among other things, the RLA is intended to provide for prompt and orderly settlement of disputes growing out of grievances or arising out of the interpretation or application of collective bargaining agreements relating to rates of pay, rules, and working conditions known as "minor disputes" [see 45 U.S.C. § 151a(5); DeTomaso v. Pan American World Airways, Inc. (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 517, 525, 525 n.7, 235 Cal. Rptr. 292, 733 P.2d 614 , cert. denied, 484 U.S. 829] . "Minor disputes" are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the particular adjustment board created to hear and decide them, and are not subject to state court jurisdiction [45 U.S.C. §§ 151a(5), 153 first subd. (i); see Hawaiian Airlines, Inc. v. Norris (1994) 512 U.S. 246, 253, 114 S. Ct. 2239, 129 L. Ed. 2d 203 ; Conrail v. Railway Labor Executives' Ass'n (1989) 491 U.S. 299, 310, 109 S. Ct. 2477, 105 L. Ed. 2d 250 ; DeTomaso v. Pan American World Airways, Inc. (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 517, 525-526, 235 Cal. Rptr. 292, 733 P.2d 614 , cert. denied, 484 U.S. 829] .

Some courts have held that the RLA preempts wrongful discharge claims premised on activity that is arguably governed by a collective bargaining agreement [see, e.g., Grote v. Trans World Airlines, Inc. (9th Cir. 1990) 905 F.2d 1307, 1309 , cert. denied, 498 U.S. 958 ; Lewy v. Southern PacificTransp. Co. (9th Cir. 1986) 799 F.2d 1281, 1290 ; Magnuson v. Burlington Northern, Inc. (9th Cir. 1978) 576 F.2d 1367, 1369-1370 , cert. denied, 439 U.S. 930] . According to the California Supreme Court, the RLA preempts a wrongful discharge action that is premised on facts inextricably intertwined with matters subject to a collective bargaining agreement's grievance procedures [DeTomaso v. Pan American World Airways, Inc. (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 517, 525-526, 235 Cal. Rptr. 292, 733 P.2d 614 , cert. denied, 484 U.S. 829] . Thus, the Court held that the RLA preempted claims for, among other things, defamation and intentional infliction of emotional distress arising out of an alleged wrongful discharge [DeTomaso v. Pan American World Airways, Inc. (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 517, 529, 235 Cal. Rptr. 292, 733 P.2d 614 , cert. denied, 484 U.S. 829] . However, a claim for retaliatory discharge is a private right of action not preempted by the RLA [see Fennessy v. Southwest Airlines (9th Cir. 1996) 91 F.3d 1359, 1362 (following Hawaiian Airlines, Inc. v. Norris (1994) 512 U.S. 246, 114 S. Ct. 2239, 129 L. Ed. 2d 203)]. In Hawaiian Airlines, the Supreme Court addressed this issue in the context of wrongful termination in breach of public policy and claims under the state whistleblower statute and determined that the RLA did not preempt these claims [Hawaiian Airlines, Inc. v. Norris (1994) 512 U.S. 246, 266, 114 S. Ct. 2239, 2251, 129 L. Ed. 2d 203] .

For a form of affirmative defense asserting that the RLA preempts a wrongful termination or other tort action, see § 249.68.

[6] Preemption by Federal Banking Laws

The federal interest in the regulation of banking employment may result in preemption of state wrongful termination actions [see Hall v. Great Western Bank (1991) 231 Cal. App. 3d 713, 720, 282 Cal. Rptr. 640 ; Aalgaard v. Merchants Nat. Bank, Inc. (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 674, 692, 274 Cal. Rptr. 81 , cert. denied, 502 U.S. 901 (1991)] . For example, some courts have held that the National Bank Act (Bank Act), which gives national banks the power to dismiss bank officers "at pleasure" [see 12 U.S.C. § 24 P 5], preempts wrongful discharge claims by those officers [Wells Fargo Bank v. Superior Court (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 1082, 1088, 282 Cal. Rptr. 841, 811 P.2d 1025 ; Aalgaard v. Merchants Nat. Bank, Inc. (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 674, 692, 274 Cal. Rptr. 81 , cert. denied, 502 U.S. 901 (1991) ; Walleri v. Federal Home Loan Bank of Seattle (1996) 83 F.3d 1575, 1582 (the laws which govern Federal Home Loan Banks contain analogous language upon which preemption of state wrongful termination claims is based)]. The rationale is that the Bank Act's "at pleasure" provision ensures fiscal integrity and instills public confidence, and wrongful discharge claims that inhibit or reduce that power frustrate the statute's effectiveness [see Aalgaard v. Merchants National Bank, Inc. (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 674, 677, 692, 274 Cal. Rptr. 81 ; but see Mardula v. Rancho Dominguez Bank (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 790, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 63 (terminated bank president's severance pay agreement did not violate "at pleasure" provision of National Bank Act)].

The Bank Act's "at pleasure" provision is inapplicable, however, unless theterminated employee is a bank "officer" meeting all of the following criteria: (1) he or she holds an office created by the board of directors and listed in the bank's bylaws; (2) he or she is appointed by the board of directors, either directly or pursuant to a delegation of board authority set forth in the bylaws; (3) he or she has express legal authority to bind the bank in its transactions with borrowers, depositors, customers, or other third parties by executing contracts or other legal instruments on the bank's behalf; and (4) his or her decision-making authority, however it might be limited by bank rule or policy, relates to fundamental banking operations in such a manner as to affect potentially the public's trust in the banking institution [Wells Fargo Bank v. Superior Court (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 1082, 1091, 282 Cal. Rptr. 841, 811 P.2d 1025 (setting forth criteria); Ramanathan v. Bank of America (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 1017, 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 471 (employee designated "vice president" by bank's board of directors does not qualify as "officer" for purposes of 12 U.S.C. § 24 P 5 unless he or she meets all four criteria)].

Banking laws or regulations, however, that do not contain "at pleasure" language may not preempt wrongful termination claims. For example, one case involved a federal regulation that allows savings associations to discharge employees "at any time," but preserves the contract rights of employees who are not fired "for cause" [see Hall v. Great Western Bank (1991) 231 Cal. App. 3d 713, 282 Cal. Rptr. 640 (construing 12 C.F.R. § 563.39)]. The court held that the regulation does not preempt a cause of action for wrongful termination in violation of public policy because the regulation does not contain "atpleasure" language and there is no conflict with federal law [see Hall v. Great Western Bank (1991) 231 Cal. App. 3d 713, 721-722, 282 Cal. Rptr. 640] .

The California Supreme Court has held that the National Bank Act provision that grants the power to dismiss bank officers "at pleasure" [12 U.S.C. § 24 P 5] preempts the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) to the extent the two laws are in conflict. However, the Court also held that the actual scope of the National Bank Act provision has been limited since its original enactment in 1864. Reading federal law as a whole, the Court found that the National Bank Act has been impliedly amended by subsequently enacted federal civil-rights laws. Thus, as impliedly amended by Title VII and the ADEA, the National Bank Act provision actually grants a national bank a limited power to dismiss its officers, not extending to dismissal on the ground of race, color, religion, sex, national origin, or age. As so amended, the National Bank Act provision preempts the FEHA, but only to the extent that the FEHA confers on officers of a national bank a right against dismissal on grounds not mentioned in Title VII and the ADEA (for example, physical disability, mental disability, medical condition, or marital status) [Peatros v. Bank of America (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 147, 173-175, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 659, 990 P.2d 539 ; see Gov. Code § 12940(a); see also Kroske v. US Bank Corp. (9th Cir. 2005) 432 F.3d 976, 981-989 (12 U.S.C. § 24 does not preempt age-discrimination claims asserted under state laws that substantively mirror provisions of ADEA)]. Presumably, the Court's reasoning would apply to prevent preemption of a claim of wrongful discharge in violation of public policy, if the public policy is embodied in a provision of the FEHA that is not preempted by the National Bank Act.

For a form of affirmative defense asserting that the National Bank Act preempts a wrongful discharge action, see § 249.69.

[7] Preemption by Federal Law Governing Pension Benefits

The Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA; 29 U.S.C. §§ 1001-1461) is broadly preemptive, superseding any state law that "relates to" employee benefit plans [29 U.S.C. § 1144(a)], as long as the relationship is not "too tenuous, remote, or peripheral" [Nevill v. Shell Oil Co. (9th Cir. 1987) 835 F.2d 209, 212 (citing Shaw v. Delta Air Lines, Inc. (1983) 463 U.S. 85, 97, 100 n.21, 103 S. Ct. 2890, 77 L. Ed. 2d 490)]. A cause of action "relates to" a benefit plan if it has "a connection with or reference to such a plan" [Shaw v. Delta Air Lines, Inc. (1983) 463 U.S. 85, 97, 103 S. Ct. 2890, 77 L. Ed. 2d 490 ; Sorosky v. Burroughs Corp. (9th Cir. 1987) 826 F.2d 794, 799-800 ; see also Stone v. Travelers Corp. (9th Cir. 1995) 58 F.3d 434, 437 (California Fair Employment and Housing Act claim founded on denial of benefits relates to an ERISA plan)]. A claim need not actually seek benefits to trigger ERISA preemption. For example, ERISA preempts a cause of action alleging discharge to avoid pension contributions, even if the claim seeks only tort and contract damages [Ingersoll-Rand v. McClendon (1990) 498 U.S. 133, 139-141, 111 S. Ct. 478, 112 L. Ed. 2d 474 (cause of action "related to" covered plan because it specifically referred to, and was premised on, existence of plan); see also Sorosky v. Burroughs Corp. (9th Cir. 1987) 826 F.2d 794, 799-800 (ERISA preempted breach of contract claim alleging that defendant promised monthly retirement benefits, but then denied them)]. In addition, ERISA expressly provides a civil cause of action for, among other things, interfering with the attainment of covered benefits [see 29 U.S.C. §§ 1132(a)(3), 1140]. Therefore, since ERISA, by its terms, prohibits firing an employee to prevent the vesting of pension benefits, it is the exclusive remedy for such an action [see Ingersoll-Rand v. McClendon (1990) 498 U.S. 133, 142-145, 111 S. Ct. 478, 112 L. Ed. 2d 474 (relying on Pilot Life Ins. Co. v. Dedeaux (1987) 481 U.S. 41, 54, 107 S. Ct. 1549, 95 L. Ed. 2d 39)].

However, the United States Supreme Court has emphasized that--despite broad language in its earlier decisions--(1) it will presume that Congress did not intend ERISA to supersede historic police powers of the states, absent evidence of a contrary intention in a particular sphere of regulation; (2) important factors to consider are the actual concerns of ERISA (reporting, disclosure, fiduciary responsibility and the like) and the purpose of its preemption clause (allowing a benefit plan to operate interstate with uniformity in benefit structures and administrative practices); and (3) state law's merely having an effect on the economic environment in which a plan operates is too tenuous a relation to make it "related to" a plan under ERISA [Cal. Div. of Labor Stds. v. Dillingham (1997) 519 U.S. 316, 324-325, 331-332, 117 S. Ct. 832, 136 L. Ed. 2d 791 (no preemption of scheme penalizing ERISA-covered apprenticeship program for not meeting state standards)]. ERISA does not, for example, preempt independent causes of action for termination without "good cause" or breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing [Sorosky v. Burroughs Corp. (9th Cir. 1987)826 F.2d 794, 800] . Furthermore, ERISA does not preempt claims that incidentally include benefits as an element of damages. The claim must actually "relate to" the administration of a benefit plan [Ethridge v. Harbor House Restaurant (9th Cir. 1988) 861 F.2d1389, 1404 (plaintiff asserted damages including "loss of employment and benefits"--no preemption)].

For a form of affirmative defense alleging that ERISA preempts a wrongful discharge cause of action, see § 249.70.

[8] Preemption by Federal Nuclear Regulatory Law

Federal nuclear regulatory law did not preempt a state law claim for infliction of emotional distress arising from a wrongful termination in a case involving actions allegedly taken by a nuclear fuels production facility to retaliate against a technician for her nuclear safety complaints [English v. General Electric Co. (1990) 496 U.S. 72, 84, 110 S. Ct. 2270, 110 L. Ed. 2d 65 ; see 42 U.S.C. § 5851(a) (Energy Reorganization Act of 1974)]. Although, generally, federal law is preemptive in the field of nuclear safety, the state tort action was neither within the field of safety nor motivated by safety concerns, nor would it have a substantial affect on nuclear safety concerns [English v. General Electric Co. (1990) 496 U.S. 72, 84-86, 110 S. Ct. 2270, 110 L. Ed. 2d 65 (also holding that state claim did not conflict with particular aspects of federal statute)].

[9] Removal of Cases Preempted by Federal Law

Although federal preemption does not ordinarily render an action subject to the removal jurisdiction of federal courts, courts deem that certain federal laws preempt state law so "completely" as to be removable. Federal laws that so "completely preempt" state law include ERISA (29 U.S.C. § 1001 et seq.) [see 29 U.S.C. § 1144(a) (stating broad preemption policy); see also Nevill v. Shell Oil Co. (9th Cir. 1987) 835 F.2d 209, 212 (state claims "relating to" ERISA preempted)], and the LMRA (29 U.S.C. § 185(a)) [Allis-Chalmers Corp. v. Lueck (1985) 471 U.S. 202, 211, 105 S. Ct. 1904, 85 L. Ed. 2d 206] . Thus, for example, a state-law claim against the fiduciary of an ERISA-regulated benefit plan is completely preempted by ERISA, and therefore removable, if interpretation of the terms of the plan forms an essential part of the claim and the plaintiff is in essence suing only to rectify a wrongful denial of benefits promised under the plan [Aetna Health Inc. v. Davila (2004) 542 U.S. 200, 124 S. Ct. 2488, 159 L. Ed. 2d 312, 330] .

The RLA (45 U.S.C. § 151 et seq.), however, does not preempt wrongful termination claims based on statute or breach of public policy [Hawaiian Airlines, Inc. v. Norris (1994) 512 U.S. 246, 114 S. Ct. 2239, 2251, 129 L. Ed. 2d 203 ; Price v. PSA, Inc. (9th Cir. 1987) 829 F.2d 871, 876 , cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1006].

For full discussion and forms relating to federal removal jurisdiction, see Ch. 265, Federal Courts: Jurisdiction and Removal ,.

[10] Preemption by California Workers' Compensation Law

Labor Code § 132a provides, among other things, civil remedies and criminal penalties against, "Any employer who discharges, or threatens to discharge, or in any manner discriminates against any employee because he or she has filed or made known his or her intention to file a claim for [workers'] compensation with his or her employer or an application for adjudication, or ... [a]ny employer who discharges, or threatens to discharge, or in any manner discriminates against any employee because the employee testified or made known his or her intentions to testify in another employee's case ..." [Lab. Code § 132a(1), (3)]. In 1978, the California Supreme Court held that Lab. Code 132a remedies likewise apply if an employee suffers "discrimination incurred as the result of his injury," including discrimination based on disability [Judson Steel Corp. v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1978) 150 Cal. Rptr. 250, 586 P.2d 564] . Thereafter, several court of appeal decisions held that Lab. Code § 132a provides the exclusive remedy for discrimination based on a work-related disability, precluding both FEHA and common law wrongful discharge claims [see City of Moorpark v. Superior Court of Ventura County (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 1143, 1148, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 445, 959 P.2d 752] .

However, the California Supreme Court has now disapproved the reasoning of the earlier court of appeal cases and held that, in most instances, Lab. Code § 132a does not provide the exclusive remedy for disability discrimination cases based either in FEHA or in common law wrongful discharge claims [City of Moorpark v. Superior Court of Ventura County (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 1143, 1148, 1150-1158, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 445, 959 P.2d 752] . Finding the policy against disability discrimination to be "substantial and fundamental," the Court held that violation of this public policy can form the basis of a common law wrongful discharge claim [City of Moorpark v. Superior Court of Ventura County (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 1143, 1158-1161, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 445, 959 P.2d 752] . However, the Moorpark court also stated, "Nevertheless, we emphasize that not every instance of disability discrimination in violation of section 132a gives rise to a valid FEHA claim"; presumably, this same caveat pertains to certain common law wrongful discharge claims [City of Moorpark v. Superior Court of Ventura County (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 1143, 1158, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 445, 959 P.2d 752] .

For further discussion and forms regarding preemption by workers' compensation laws, see Ch. 577, Workers' Compensation . Borowsky, Unjust Dismissal, Ch. 9 (Matthew Bender).

[11] Preemption by California Law Governing Discrimination

The Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) [Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.], which prohibits employment discrimination based on race, religion, sex, age, national origin, physical and mental disability, and various other personal characteristics, does not preempt other state laws, including thecommon law, that prohibit or restrict such discrimination [Rojo v. Kliger (1990) 52 Cal. 3d 65, 73-82, 276 Cal. Rptr. 130, 801 P.2d 373 ; Blom v. N.G.K. Spark Plugs (U.S.A.), Inc. (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 382, 386, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 139 ; see Gov. Code § 12993(a)]. Furthermore, although an employee must exhaust the FEHA administrative remedy before bringing a civil action under the FEHA or seeking any remedies provided by the FEHA, exhaustion of the administrative remedy is not required before filing a civil action for damages alleging nonstatutory causes of action [Rojo v. Kliger (1990) 52 Cal. 3d 65, 88, 276 Cal. Rptr. 130, 801 P.2d 373] .

In Rojo, the California Supreme Court found that Cal. Const., art. I, § 8, which provides that no person may be disqualified from entering or pursuing a business, profession, vocation, or employment because of sex, race, creed, color, or national or ethnic origin, sets forth a fundamental public policy against employment discrimination on any of those grounds and may be the basis for a tort cause of action for wrongful termination in violation of public policy, independent of the FEHA [Rojo v. Kliger (1990) 52 Cal. 3d 65, 89-91, 276 Cal. Rptr. 130, 801 P.2d 373 ; see also Badih v. Myers (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 1289, 1293-1296, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 229 (employer who was exempt from the FEHA because he had fewer than five employees was still subject to action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy for firing employee because of pregnancy, based on independent proscription against sex discrimination, including pregnancy discrimination, contained in Cal. Const., art. I, § 8)]. The FEHA, however, prohibits discrimination on several other grounds not mentioned in Cal. Const., art. I, § 8, including age, physical and mental disability, and marital status [see Gov. Code §§ 12940, 12941].

Rojo left as an open question whether a plaintiff can state a common-law wrongful termination claim for discrimination based on one of these other grounds, or whether such a plaintiff must pursue the remedies provided by the FEHA. This question was answered in two later cases. In an age discrimination case, the Supreme Court ruled that even if the public-policy basis of the wrongful-discharge tort claim lies only in the FEHA, the statute neither preempts the claim nor requires exhaustion of the administrative remedies which it provides [Stevenson v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 880, 901-904, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888 ; 941 P.2d 1157] . While cautioning that whether a particular form of discrimination will support a common law wrongful-discharge claim at all must be analyzed separately for each form of discrimination, the Court emphasized that its preemption analysis applied to any common law claim which could be grounded in the FEHA [Stevenson v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 880, 902, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888 ; 941 P.2d 1157] . In a disability discrimination case, the Court ruled that public policy against disability discrimination is "substantial and fundamental" and therefore can provide a basis for common law wrongful discharge claims [City of Moorpark v. Superior Court of Ventura County (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 1143, 1158, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 445, 959 P.2d 752 ; see [10], above].

For discussion of state and federal statutes regarding discrimination in employment, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Chs. 40-44 (Matthew Bender). [12] Parol Evidence Rule

In some cases, the plaintiff-employee has signed an employment contract that provides for at will employment, but the employee alleges that the employer has made oral promises stating that termination will be for cause only. Pursuant to the parol evidence rule, terms set forth in a writing intended by the parties as a final expression of their agreement with respect to the terms included therein may not be contradicted by evidence of any prior agreement or of a contemporaneous oral agreement [Code Civ. Proc. § 1856(a)].

Therefore, the first issue is to determine whether the written at will contract is integrated, that is, one that is meant to be the complete and final embodiment of the agreement, because the parol evidence rule generally prohibits the introduction of any extrinsic evidence that would vary or contradict the terms of an integrated written agreement [Anderson v. Savin Corp. (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 356, 364, 254 Cal. Rptr. 627 ; Gerdlund v. Electronic Dispensers International (1987) 190 Cal. App. 3d 263, 270, 235 Cal. Rptr. 279 ; Malmstrom v. Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 299, 314, 231 Cal. Rptr. 820] . For example, a contract that stated that employment would continue so long as it was "mutually agreeable to both parties" was found to have created an at will employment contract. Consequently, evidence of an implied agreement contradicting those terms was held not admissible [Malmstrom v. Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 299, 315-316, 231 Cal. Rptr. 820 ; see also Anderson v. Savin Corp. (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 356, 363-364, 254 Cal. Rptr. 627 (relying on Malmstrom; holding that oral promises of termination only for cause were superseded by express employment agreement providing that either party could terminate agreement "in its discretion" on 5 days' notice); Gerdlund v. Electronic Dispensers International (1987) 190 Cal. App. 3d 263, 273, 235 Cal. Rptr. 279 (citing Malmstrom and obtaining same result, interpreting contract terms stating notice of termination could be given "for any reason")].

However, an employment application, signed by employee and stating that employment can be terminated with or without cause, was found not to be an integrated instrument, and was subject to interpretation by parol evidence showing that contract had been modified to require good cause for termination. The court noted that the particular instrument did not contain provisions regarding salary, was preprinted and short, and was drafted by the employer [McLain v. Great American Ins. Companies (1989) 208 Cal. App. 3d 1476, 1483-1487, 256 Cal. Rptr. 863] .

If the contract is integrated, parol evidence may nevertheless be admitted to explain the meaning of the written contractual language, if the relevant language is reasonably susceptible to the interpretation advanced by the parol evidence. However, if the contract terms are clear and not susceptible of other meanings, parol evidence is inadmissible

There are several statutes of limitations set out in the Code of Civil Procedure that are potentially relevant to various causes of action in a wrongful termination suit. Code Civ. Proc. § 337(1) establishes a four-year period for an action based on a written contract. Code Civ. Proc. § 338(a) prescribes a three-year statute for an action on a liability created by statute, other than a penalty or forfeiture. Code Civ. Proc. § 339 provides a two-year limitations period for an action based on a contract not in writing. Additionally, Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 provides a two-year limitation period for injury caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another. Finally, Code Civ. Proc. § 340(c) sets out a one-year statute for an action for libel or slander.

Although there are no cases directly on point, a wrongful termination action styled as a breach of contract case would appear to be governed by either the four-year statute for written contracts, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 337(1), or the two-year statute for oral or implied contracts, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 339.

The two-year limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 for personal-injury claims applies to actions for wrongful termination in violation of public policy [see Mathieu v. Norrell Corp. (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 1174, 1189 n.14, 10 Cal. Rptr. 3d 52 (effective January 1, 2003, two-year limitations period under Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 replaced one-year period of former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3)); see also Barton v. New United Motor Manufacturing, Inc. (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 1200, 1205-1209, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 328 (actions for wrongful termination in violation of public policy are tort actions subject to limitations period applicable to personal-injury claims)]. The one-year limitations period under the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) [see Gov. Code § 12965(b)] does not apply to bar a wrongful-discharge action that alleges discrimination based on common-law claims that are independent of the FEHA [Carmichael v. Alfano Temporary Personnel (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 1126, 1131-1132, 285 Cal. Rptr. 143] . Moreover, an employee's pursuit of an administrative remedy under the FEHA does not toll the limitations period on a common-law claim of wrongful termination in violation of public policy [Mathieu v. Norrell Corp. (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 1174, 1189-1190, 10 Cal. Rptr. 3d 52] . For discussion of the FEHA generally, see Ch. 115, Civil Rights: Employment Discrimination].

The Ninth Circuit has held that the two-year limitations period under Code Civ. Proc. § 339 is applicable to a claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing in an employment contract [Eisenberg v. Insurance Co. of North America (9th Cir. 1987) 815 F.2d 1285, 1291] . However, the court's holding was based in part on its assumption that breach of the covenant in an employment contract constitutes a tort. The holding may therefore be questionable in light of Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 663, 700, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 , in which the California Supreme Court held that breach of the implied covenant based on termination of an employment contract sounds in contract only [see Guz v. Bechtel Nat., Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 317, 348-352, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 352, 8 P.3d 1089 (reaffirming Foley and explaining that claims asserting breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing often are either invalid or superfluous in employment context); see also discussion in § 249.14].

In Romano v. Rockwell Internat., Inc. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 479, 490-493, 501, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 20, 926 P. 2d 1114 , the California Supreme Court held that the statute of limitations for wrongful termination begins to run at the time of termination for purposes of causes of action (1) for breach of an implied contract not to terminate except for good cause, (2) for discharge in violation of the Fair Employment and Housing Act, and (3) for discharge in violation of public policy. The Court rejected Rockwell's argument that these actions accrue upon the employer's earlier unequivocal notification of termination at a future date. In cases of implied contracts not to terminate except for good cause, the Court found no difference from other cases of contract repudiations, which give the promisee an election of remedies at the time of repudiation; he or she may immediately sue for breach or elect to await the time of performance when the threatened termination occurs [Romano v. Rockwell Internat., Inc. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 479, 490-491, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 20, 926 P.2d 1114] . In cases of discharge in violation of the Fair Employment and Housing Act, the Court examined the statutory language of Gov. Code §§ 12940, 12941, and 12960 and found that actions for unlawful practices under the act, including discharge, accrue when the unlawful practice occurs, that is, when actual termination occurs [Romano v. Rockwell Internat., Inc. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 479, 492-493, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 20, 926 P. 2d 1114] . In cases of termination in violation of public policy, the Court reiterated that the tort cause of action recognized in Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330 is one for dismissal on improper grounds; accordingly, the employer breaches its duty to the employee when dismissal occurs [Romano v. Rockwell Internat., Inc. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 479, 501, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 20, 926 P. 2d 1114] .

A contractual provision that shortens the statute of limitations for a wrongful-termination action is not unconscionable and will be enforced if it provides for a reasonable limitations period, even if it is a nonnegotiable adhesive provision [Soltani v. Western & S. Life Ins. Co. (9th Cir. 2001) 258 F.3d 1038, 1042-1045 (contractual six-month limitation reasonable under standard of unconscionability used by California Supreme Court in analyzing mandatory arbitration clause in Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Servs., Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669); but see Martinez v. Master Protection Corp. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 107, 117-118, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 663 (arbitration agreement imposing six-month period for asserting any statutory or common-law claim was unconscionable under Armendariz standard)]. However, a nonmutual contractual provision requiring that an employee give the employer 10 days' notice before filing suit is unconscionable and will not be enforced to bar an employee's action, at least if the provision is unaccompanied by a corresponding requirement to exhaust intra-company grievance procedures [Soltani v. Western & S. Life Ins. Co. (9th Cir. 2001) 258 F.3d 1038, 1045-1047 (10-day period unjustified because too short to allow employer to investigate or attempt to resolve claim, and does not prevent stale claims, since 10-day period not measured from accrual of claim)].

For general discussion and forms relating to the statute of limitations, see Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions .

[14] Termination for Cause

[a] In General

In most wrongful termination cases, the plaintiff claims that he or she was protected from the dismissal at will, normally permissible under Lab. Code § 2922, by a contract or covenant, express or implied, requiring that there be good cause for termination. If that type of contract or covenant exists in a given case, the plaintiff may not recover if the employer had good cause for termination [see, e.g., Fowler v. Varian Associates, Inc. (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 34, 41-43, 241 Cal. Rptr. 539 (employee breached duty of loyalty by actively advancing interests of competitor with whom employee considered accepting employment)]. For a form of affirmative defense allegation that the employee was terminated for cause, see § 249.63.

[b] Order and Burden of Proof

The order and burden of proof for wrongful termination cases involving breach of a covenant to terminate for cause only was set forth in Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 171 Cal. Rptr. 917 (Pugh I). The court in Pugh stated that the plaintiff carries the ultimate burden of proving that he or she was terminated wrongfully. First, plaintiff must demonstrate a prima facie case that he or she was terminated despite adequate job performance. The employer must then produce evidence of good cause for the termination. The plaintiff may then attack the defendant's proffered reason for termination, either on the ground that it is pretextual and that the real reason is one prohibited by contract or public policy; or on the ground that it is insufficient to meet the employer's obligations under contract or other applicable legal principles [Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 329-330, 171 Cal. Rptr. 917 (Pugh I); see Crosier v. United Parcel Service, Inc. (1983) 150 Cal. App. 3d 1132, 1137-1138, 198 Cal. Rptr. 361 ; Huber v. Standard Ins. Co. (9th Cir. 1988) 841 F.2d 980, 985-986 (genuine issue of fact regarding good cause for termination was sufficient to avoid employer's motion for summary judgment)].

When the plaintiff denies the misconduct that was the basis for defendant's decision to terminate for good cause, the proper standard to be applied to the evidence by the trier of fact is not whether the misconduct actually happened, but rather whether the defendant, acting in good faith and following an investigation appropriate, had reasonable grounds for believing that it happened [Cotran v. Rollins Hudig Hall International, Inc. (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 93, 109, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 900, 948 P.2d 412] . Coupling good faith with objective reasonableness in intended to place the trier of fact in the position of a reasonable employer, in deciding whether the employer in a wrongful termination action acted responsibly and in conformity with prevailing social norms in deciding to terminate an employee for misconduct [Cotran v. Rollins Hudig Hall International, Inc. (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 93, 106-107 n.3, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 900, 948 P.2d 412] . A standard allowing the trier of fact simply to determine whether there was sufficient cause for dismissal would be too intrusive, and would be at odds with the underlying policy of finding a balance between the interests of employer and employee. The objective good faith standard, by contast, strikes a fair balance between theses interests [Cotran v. Rollins Hudig Hall International, Inc. (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 93, 100-108, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 900, 948 P.2d 412 (citing, for policy considerations requiring a balance of employer and employee interests, Walker v. Blue Cross of California (1992) 4 Cal. App. 4th 985, 994 ; Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 743, 769, 250 Cal. Rptr. 195 (Pugh II); Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 330, 171 Cal. Rptr. 917 (Pugh I))].

When the plaintiff alleges that the termination violated the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, the plaintiff must show that the employer acted in bad faith and lacked probable cause to believe that it had cause to terminate the employee [see Burton v. Security Pacific Nat. Bank (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 972, 979, 243 Cal. Rptr. 277] . In the absenceof facts showing that the employer lacked a reasonable belief in the existence of cause for discharge, the employee cannot prevail merely by showing that the employer was mistaken and that, in fact, no good cause existed for the discharge [see Burton v. Security Pacific Nat. Bank (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 972, 979, 243 Cal. Rptr. 277 (upholding summary judgment for employer when plaintiff failed to contradict facts showing that employer lacked good faith in investigating charges of employee's misconduct)].

[c] Good Cause Defined

Good cause for termination may be specified in an employment contract or may appear in written or unwritten company policies [see discussion in § 249.13[2]]. If the employer has never defined good cause for the dismissal of its employees, the operative definition is supplied under the Scott-Pugh standard: fair and honest reasons, regulated by good faith on the part of the employer, that are not trivial, arbitrary, or capricious, unrelated to business needs or goals, or pretextual; in short, a reasoned conclusion supported by substantial evidence gathered through an adequate investigation that includes notice of the claimed misconduct and a chance for the employee to respond [Cotran v. Rollins Hudig Hall International, Inc. (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 93, 107-108, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 900, 948 P.2d 412 , citing Scott v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 454, 467, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 427, 904 P.2d 834 and Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 330, 171 Cal. Rptr. 917 (Pugh I)].

Employers have prevailed by showing good cause for termination in two ways. In one type of case, the termination was prompted by legitimate business reasons that had nothing to do with the employee's job performance. For example, reorganization of a company's business to respond to changing economic conditions was held to be good cause for termination [see Gianaculas v. Trans World Airlines, Inc. (9th Cir. 1985) 761 F.2d 1391, 1394-1395 (termination pursuant to reduction in work force); Clutterham v. Coachmen Industries, Inc. (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 1223, 1227, 215 Cal. Rptr. 795 (termination due to depressed market conditions and concomitant reorganization of business)]. Put another way, an implied agreement to terminate only for good cause does not ordinarily include a restriction on the employer's right to reduce its workforce. Thus, an implied agreement not to terminate an employee except for good cause does not prevent the employer from legitimately terminat ing an employee on the basis of the need to eliminate the employee's work unit, in the absence of evidence of an agreement restricting that right. This is so even if the employer's decision is influenced by dissatisfaction with the eliminated unit's performance and even if individual employees are entitled to progressive discipline procedures before being fired for poor performance [Guz v. Bechtel

Nat., Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 317, 338, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 352, 8 P.3d 1089] . However, an employer's freedom to consolidate or reduce its work force, and to eliminate positions in the process, does not permit the employer to use the occasion as a convenient opportunity to get rid of workers who are protected by antidiscrimination laws [see Kelly v. Stamps.com, Inc. (2005) 135 Cal. App. 4th 1088, 1098, 38 Cal. Rptr. 3d 240 (employer's invocation of right to downsize does not resolve whether employer violated Fair Employment and Housing Act by having discriminatory motive for cutting back its work force or by engaging in intentional discrimination when deciding which individual workers to retain and which to release)].

In the other type of case, the employer acted in good faith by terminating an employee whom it reasonably believed had violated company policy. For example, in a case where an employee contested his termination for sexually harassing other employees, the employer could establish good cause if it acted reasonably and in good faith in making the determination that the harassment occurred, and the employer need only prove its good faith belief, and not that the harassment actually occurred [Cotran v. Rollins Hudig Hall International, Inc. (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 93, 109, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 900, 948 P.2d 412] . Summary judgment in favor of the employer was also upheld on facts showing that the employee was terminated because he violated an unwritten company rule forbidding management personnel to fraternize with nonmanagement employees, when the plaintiff's allegations regarding improper motives were insufficiently supported [see Crosier v. United Parcel Service, Inc. (1983) 150 Cal. App. 3d 1132, 1138-1139, 198 Cal. Rptr. 361 ; but see Breitman v. May Co. California (9th Cir. 1994) 37 F.3d 562, 564-565 (despite employer contention that employee was terminated pursuant to written policy prohibiting falsification of timecards, genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether policy was followed and uniformly enforced)].

An employee's involvement in organizing a competing business may constitute a violation of the employee's duty of loyalty and good cause for dismissal [see Stokes v. Dole Nut Co. (1995) 41 Cal. App. 4th 285, 293-295, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 673 ; Fowler v. Varian Associates, Inc. (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 34, 41-43, 241 Cal. Rptr. 539] .

In discussing what constitutes good cause for dismissal, courts have stated that care must be taken not to interfere with the legitimate exercise of managerial discretion, particularly with regard to an employee in a sensitive managerial or confidential position [Cotran v. Rollins Hudig Hall International, Inc. (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 93, 100-101, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 900, 948 P.2d 412 ; Scott v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 454, 467, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 427, 904 P.2d 834 ; Crosier v. United Parcel Service, Inc. (1983) 150 Cal. App. 3d 1132, 1139-1140, 198 Cal. Rptr. 361 ; Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 330, 171 Cal. Rptr. 917 (Pugh I)].

If good cause for termination is in issue, character evidence may be admissible to support the employer's allegations that defendant was terminated for goodcause. For example, a managerial employee's ability to work well with peers and persons of higher authority is relevant to the issue of good-cause termination of that employee. Moreover, specific acts of misconduct are admissible to show that an employee is unfit or incompetent for the job [see Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 743, 756-757, 250 Cal. Rptr. 195 (Pugh II)] (affirming judgment for employer, and affirming use of character evidence against plaintiff admitted without objection at trial)].

[15] Employee's Breach of Duty Under Contract for Specified Term

An employment for a specified term may be terminated at any time by the employer in case of any willful breach of duty by the employee in the course of the employment or in case of the employee's habitual neglect of duty or continued incapacity to perform it [Lab. Code § 2924]. For forms of affirmative defense alleging willful breach, habitual neglect, and incapacity, see §§ 249.60, 249.61, 249.62, respectively.

Employment for a specified term means employment for a period greater than one month [Lab. Code § 2922]. An employment can be for the equivalent of a specified term even though the term is not actually specified. For example, the facts of a case might imply that the employer and the employee understood that the employment would continue for a reasonable time, and a discharge before a reasonable time has elapsed amounts to a breach of contract [see Brown v.

National Electric Works (1914) 168 Cal. 336, 337-338, 143 P. 606 (defendant agreed to employ plaintiff at stated salary, without specifying duration of employment, in exchange for plaintiff's purchase of stock in defendant corporation at fixed price)].

[16] Arbitration Required Under Employment Contract

An employee who signs an agreement to arbitrate employment disputes may be precluded from bringing an action for wrongful discharge in lieu of arbitrating the claim [see Martinez v. Scott Specialty Gases, Inc. (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 1236, 1246-1248, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 403 ; see also Alliance Title Co. v. Boucher (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 262, 267-273, 25 Cal. Rptr. 3d 440 (after employee was transferred from one subsidiary to another subsidiary of parent corporation, equitable principles required employee's claims against transferee company to be submitted to arbitration, even though transferee company was not party to arbitration agreement between employee and transferor company); Buckhorn v. St. Jude Heritage Med. Group (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 1401, 1406-1408, 18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 215 (employment agreement providing for mandatory arbitration of disputes "concerning the enforcement or the interpretation of any provisions of this Agreement" encompasses all claims rooted in contractual relationship, including tort claims that arise from employment relationship, whether based on conduct occurring before or after termination of that relationship)]. While written arbitration agreements are generally enforceable under California law [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1281], there are some exceptions under state law to the general enforceability of such agreements. For example, some state statutes preclude mandatory arbitration of certain types of disputes [see, e.g., Lab. Code § 229 (wage claims); but see Perry v. Thomas (1987) 482 U.S. 483, 490-491, 107 S. Ct. 2520, 96 L. Ed. 2d 426 (Lab. Code § 229 preempted by Federal Arbitration Act with regard to contracts covered by the Act)].

The California Supreme Court has held that a mandatory arbitration agreement in an employment contract that encompasses unwaivable statutory rights (such as the employee's rights under the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) [Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.]), or that encompasses unwaivable claims of wrongful termination in violation of public policy, is invalid unless it effectively permits the employee to vindicate such rights or claims in the arbitral forum [Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Servs., Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 99-113, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 ; see Little v. Auto Stiegler, Inc. (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1076-1081, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892, 63 P.3d 979 (Armendariz standards apply to arbitration of claims of wrongful termination in violation of public policy, as well as to unwaivable statutory claims); Gentry v. Superior Court (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 443, 463, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 773 (waiver of class arbitration in employment arbitration agreement is not enforceable to preclude class arbitration by employees asserting unwaivable statutory rights to overtime pay under Lab. Code §§ 500 et seq., 1194, if trial court determines that class arbitration would be significantly more effective way of vindicating employees' rights than individual arbitration); see also Ch. 115, Civil Rights: Employment Discrimination]. Generally, statutory rights are "unwaivable" if they arise under a statute enacted "for a public reason," that is, for a public purpose [Mercuro v. Superior Court (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 167, 180, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 671 (Armendariz's "particular scrutiny" applies to agreements to arbitrate claims arising under Lab. Code § 230.8, which prohibits discrimination against employee for time off to participate in child's school activities, or Lab. Code § 970, which prohibits employers from misrepresenting terms and conditions of employment to induce person to change residences to take job); Fittante v. Palm Springs Motors, Inc. (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 716, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 659] . Also, even if an arbitration agreement covering unwaivable statutory rights is enforceable, a court must vacate an arbitration award made pursuant to the provision if a legal error in the award prevents the employee from obtaining a hearing on his or her FEHA claim or other claim based on unwaivable statutory rights [Pearson Dental Supplies, Inc. v. Superior Court (2010) 48 Cal. 4th 665, 675-680, 108 Cal. Rptr. 3d 171, 229 P.3d 83 (arbitrator erred in concluding that arbitration was time-barred, based on erroneous interpretation of Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.12 tolling provision)].

Even as to claims other than unwaivable causes of action, the California Supreme Court has held that an arbitration provision is unconscionable and unenforceable if it is (1) procedurally unconscionable, that is, adhesive (imposed as a condition of employment with no opportunity for the employee to negotiate); and (2) substantively unconscionable, that is, lacking basic fairness and mutuality. For example, an arbitration provision imposed in an adhesive context lacks fairness and mutuality if it requires the employee, but not the employer, to arbitrate all claims arising out of the same transaction or occurrence. Also, an arbitration agreement is unconscionably one-sided if it restricts the full recoveryof damages by the employee, while placing no such restriction on the employer [Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Servs., Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 113-121, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 ; see Stirlen v. Supercuts, Inc. (1997) 51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1539-1540, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 138] . Also unconscionable in a contract of adhesion is a provision giving the arbitrator exclusive authority to decide questions of enforceability, including questions of unconscionability [Ontiveros v. DHL Express (USA), Inc. (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 494, 505, 79 Cal. Rptr. 3d 471 (when one party is "repeat player" in arbitration, arbitrator has self-interest in deciding that any given dispute is arbitrable)].

Similarly unconscionable and one-sided in an employment context is a provision authorizing an appeal to a second arbitrator from an award of $50,000 or more. Even if the provision makes such appeals available to both parties, the $50,000 threshold inordinately favors the employer (usually the defendant) by giving it an opportunity to overturn a sizable arbitration award [Little v. Auto Stiegler, Inc. (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1071-1074, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892, 63 P.3d 979 ; but see Cummings v. Future Nissan (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 321, 329 n.9, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 10 (provision for second-level "appellate" arbitrator "is not invalid so long as there is no dollar-amount threshold for invoking it (which would make it almost exclusively an employer remedy)")]. Likewise, a provision is unconscionable if it requires that the employee pay costs of arbitration beyond any expense that the employee would be required to bear were the claim asserted in court [Circuit City Stores, Inc. v. Mantor (9th Cir. 2003) 335 F.3d 1101, 1107-1108 (requirement that employee pay employer $75 filing fee to initiate arbitration is substantively unconscionable, even if agreement gives employer discretion to waive fee); McManus v. CIBC World Mkts. Corp. (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 76, 93, 134 Cal. Rptr. 2d 446 (employee required to pay $500 deposit plus $1,200 per arbitration hearing session)]. Also unconscionable is a provision for a vastly shortened limitations period for presenting the employee's claims [Martinez v. Master Protection Corp. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 107, 117-118, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 663 (arbitration agreement imposing six-month period for asserting any statutory or common-law claim was unconscionable)].

Procedural and substantive unconscionability must both be present for a court to exercise its discretion to refuse to enforce an arbitration provision because of unconscionability [see Gentry v. Superior Court (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 443, 469, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 773, 165 P.3d 556 (if there truly is no element of procedural unconscionability in arbitration agreement, agreement will not be deemed unconscionable, no matter how one-sided terms appear to be)]. However, they need not be present in the same degree. In effect, a "sliding scale" applies: the more substantively oppressive the provision, the less evidence of procedural unconscionability is required to justify the conclusion that the provision is unenforceable. Conversely, a high degree of procedural unconscionability means that less evidence is necessary to support a holding of unenforceability [Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Servs., Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 114, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669] . In one case, for example, a court of appeal held an arbitration provision unenforceable despite a low quantum of procedural unconscionability, given the presence of a high degree of substantive unconscionability. In that case, the court conceded that the nonnegotiable nature of the arbitration provision yielded a low quantum of procedural unconscionability because the provision was conspicuously printed in all capital letters (alerting the reader that it might be significant) and because the employee's attorney had reviewed the provision before the employee signed it. At the same time, there was a high degree of substantive unconscionability, given a complete lack of mutuality (only the employee's claims were required to be arbitrated), the provision's requirement of a prearbitration dispute-resolution procedure controlled by the employer, and a severe limitation on the time for the employee to assert claims. Under the sliding-scale approach, the court of appeal concluded that the agreement was unconscionable and unenforceable [Nyulassy v. Lockheed Martin Corp. (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 1267, 1286-1288, 16 Cal. Rptr. 3d 296] .

If an arbitration contains only one unconscionable provision and it can be severed from the rest of the arbitration agreement, a court may delete the unconscionable provision and enforce the remainder of the agreement [Little v. Auto Stiegler, Inc. (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1064, 1074-1076, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892, 63 P.3d 979 ; McManus v. CIBC World Mkts. Corp. (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 76, 101-102, 134 Cal. Rptr. 2d 446 (provision that would require employee to pay arbitration costs severed, but remainder of arbitration agreement enforced); Fittante v. Palm Springs Motors, Inc. (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 708, 726-727, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 659] .

On the other hand, if the arbitration agreement is "permeated" by unconscionability--for example, if it contains more than one unlawful provision, or if there is no discrete unlawful provision that can be severed from the agreement--then the entire arbitration agreement is void and cannot be partially enforced [Armendariz v. Foundation Health Psychcare Servs. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 83, 121-127, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745, 6 P.3d 669 ; see, e.g., Franco v. Athens Disposal Co. (2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 1277, 1304, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 539 (because arbitration agreement contained two unlawful provisions--class arbitration waiver, and provision precluding employee from seeking civil penalties on behalf of other employees under Lab. Code § 2698 et seq.--agreement as whole was tainted with illegality and was therefore unenforceable); Sanchez v. Western Pizza Enters., Inc. (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 154, 181, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 818 (arbitration agreement containing more than one unlawful provision--class arbitration waiver and unconscionable arbitrator-selection clause--was permeated by unlawful purpose and was therefore unenforceable)]. Thus, if an arbitration agreement (1) addresses the kinds of claims that normally would be brought by the employee but not those that would be brought by the employer, (2) limits the employee's recovery to the amount of wages paid during the employee's last six months of work, (3) precludes recovery by the employee for statutory claims, (4) specifies a venue for arbitration that is convenient for the employer but not necessarily for the employee, and (5) requires that the employee initially pay all costs of arbitration, the agreement is unconscionable and so one-sided as to be unenforceable [Pinedo v. Premium Tobacco Stores, Inc. (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 774, 781, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 435 (such arbitration agreement "is at least equally unconscionable to the one presented in Armendariz")]. Similarly, an arbitration agreement is "permeated by an unlawful purpose," and therefore unenforceable in its entirety, if the terms of the agreement and the surrounding circumstances indicate a systematic effort to impose arbitration on an employee as an inferior forum that works to the employer's advantage [Mercuro v. Superior Court (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 167, 184-186, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 671 (systematic effort to impose arbitration on employee as inferior forum was established by employer's threats and cajoling toget employee to sign agreement, lack of mutuality as to arbitrable claims, provision that unlawfully required employee to share burden of arbitrator's fee, and disadvantages to employee in using designated arbitrator); O'Hare v. Municipal Res. Consultants (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 267, 282, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 116 (completely one-sided agreement, compelling arbitration all of employee's claims but allowing employer to file lawsuit on any claim against employee); see Ferguson v. Countrywide Credit Indus., Inc. (9th Cir. 2002) 298 F.3d 778, 784-788 (following Mercuro, lack of mutuality as to arbitrable claims, provision requiring employee to share arbitration costs after first day, and discovery limitations favoring employer so permeated agreement that severance was not possible)].

If the employer has afforded the employee a meaningful opportunity to opt out of an arbitration agreement, the agreement will not be deemed unconscionable [Circuit City Stores, Inc. v. Ahmed (9th Cir. 2002) 283 F.3d 1198, 1199-1200 (arbitration agreement is not adhesive, and thus lacks procedural unconscionability, if employee is given opportunity to opt out)]. However, if the employee's failure to opt out is not an authentic informed choice, the agreement does have an element of unconscionability and faces judicial scrutiny to determine whether its terms are so one-sided or oppressive as to be substantively unconscionable [Gentry v. Superior Court (2007), 42 Cal. 4th 443, 470-472, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 773 (employer's failure to provide employees with material information about disadvantageous terms of arbitration agreement, combined with likelihood that employees felt pressure not to opt out of agreement, meant that agreement was not free from procedural unconscionability); Circuit City Stores, Inc. v. Mantor (9th Cir. 2003) 335 F.3d 1101, 1106-1107 (arbitration agreement is procedurally unconscionable if employee's opportunity to opt out is not meaningful, such as when employer pressures employee and threatens employee's job if he or she does not accept arbitration agreement)].

If an arbitration agreement contains a clause in which the parties expressly agree to allow a court or arbitrator to sever or modify any "unreasonable or unenforceable" provisions, the agreement as so modified may be enforceable [Blake v. Ecker (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 728, 743-746, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 422 ; see Civ. Code §§ 1599, 1670.5(a)].

State law, however, does not always govern the enforceability of arbitration agreements. If the agreement is covered by the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA) (9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.), state-law exceptions to the enforceability of arbitration agreements are not applicable [see, e.g., Heily v. Superior Court (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d 255, 260, 248 Cal. Rptr. 673 , cert. denied, 489 U.S. 1013 (1989) (California doctrine of unconscionability not available to avoid arbitration clause in securities dealer's employment contract); but cf. Stirlen v. Supercuts, Inc. (1997) 51 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1543-1552 (one-sided arbitration clause in contract of adhesion unenforceable as unconscionable; Federal Arbitration Act does not reach state contract principles which apply neutrally to arbitration clauses, only law representing a bias against arbitration)]. The FAA generally reaches to the limits of Congress' Commerce Clause power [Allied-Bruce Terminix Cos. v. Dobson (1995) 513 U.S. 265, 277, 115 S. Ct. 834, 130 L. Ed. 2d 753] . When the FAA applies, the states must treat arbitration clauses the same as any other contract clause under state law. General contract principles apply and may provide a defense to enforcement of an arbitration clause on grounds that would be available to a party seeking to avoid the enforcement of any contract [see Brown v. Dillard's, Inc. (9th Cir. 2005) 430 F.3d 1004, 1010 (generally applicable rule that party who breaches contract cannot enforce it is available as defense against attempt to enforce arbitration agreement)]. However, states cannot place arbitration clauses on a footing unequal to other contract clauses [Allied-Bruce Terminix Cos. v. Dobson (1995) 513 U.S. 265, 281, 115 S. Ct. 834, 130 L. Ed. 2d 753] .

The United States Supreme Court has held that the FAA applies to arbitration clauses in employment contracts, except contracts for the employment of transportation workers [Circuit City Stores, Inc. v. Adams (2001) 532 U.S. 105, 121 S. Ct. 1302, 149 L. Ed. 2d 234, 250-251] . Although the FAA excludes from its application "contracts of employment of seamen, railroad workers, or any other class of workers engaged in foreign or interstate commerce" [9 U.S.C. § 1], the Court construed this exclusion narrowly, holding that an employment contract is not excluded unless the employee is directly involved in the transportation industry [Circuit City Stores, Inc. v. Adams (2001) 532 U.S. 105, 121 S. Ct. 1302, 149 L. Ed. 2d 234, 251] .

An arbitration agreement covering employment disputes may be enforceable even if it is not contained in an employment agreement as such. For example, the United States Supreme Court has held that an arbitration agreement contained in a securities registration application, and not in the plaintiff's employment contract, precluded an employment-discrimination action under the federal Age Discrimination in Employment Act (29 U.S.C. § 621 et seq.) [Gilmer v. Interstate/Johnson Lane Corp. (1991) 500 U.S. 20, 25 n.2, 25-32, 111 S. Ct. 1647, 114 L. Ed. 2d 26 ; see Spellman v. Securities, Annuities & Ins. Servs., Inc. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 452, 465, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 427 (employment contract that incorporated rules of National Association of Securities Dealers, Inc., together with application for securities industry registration that expressly required arbitration of any dispute, claim or controversy between employee and employer, constituted enforceable compulsory arbitration agreement); Hall v. Nomura Secs. Int'l (1990) 219 Cal. App. 3d 43, 48-51, 268 Cal. Rptr. 45] . However, if the arbitration provision is a discrete document, rather than a part of a fully integrated employment contract, the separate arbitration provision may be unenforceable if it is not signed by the employer and employee and the circumstances do not otherwise establish an actual agreement to arbitrate. In one case, for example, an employee's signing ofan "acknowledgement" at the end of an employee handbook did not establish assent to a "mutual agreement to arbitrate," which was presented as a separate section of the handbook, with separate signature lines that were never signed by the parties [Romo v. Y-3 Holdings, Inc. (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 1153, 1158-1160, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 208 ; see also Mitri v. Arnel Mgmt. Co. (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 1164, 1170-1173, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 223 (employee handbook statement that "employees are required to sign an arbitration agreement" does not itself constitute arbitration agreement)].

To be enforceable, an agreement to arbitrate federal statutory employment-discrimination claims must include a clear and unmistakable waiver of a judicial forum for such claims [Wright v. Universal Maritime Serv. Corp. (1998) 525 U.S. 70, 119 S. Ct. 391, 396-397, 142 L. Ed. 2d 361 ; see Prudential Ins. Co. of America v. Lai (9th Cir. 1994) 42 F.3d 1299, 1304 , cert. denied, 516 U.S. 812 (1995) (agreement to arbitrate statutory employment discrimination claims not enforceable unless there is "knowing agreement to arbitrate" and thereby waive judicial remedies afforded by Title VII and related state statutes); but see Kuehner v. Dickinson & Co. (9th Cir. 1996) 84 F.3d 316, 319-320 ("knowing waiver" requirement not applicable to arbitration of claims under Fair Labor Standards Act, 29 U.S.C. § 201 et seq.); Brookwood v. Bank of Am. (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1667, 1673-1674, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 515 (rescission is only permitted for unilateral mistake when that mistake is known to the other party and is encouraged or fostered by that party; ignorance of a contractual provision is not a proper basis for avoidance of that provision)]. Thus, a provision for the arbitration of "matters under dispute," which could be understood to be restricted to matters in dispute under the contract, is insufficient to waive the employee's right to a judicial forum for statutory employment-discrimination claims [see Wright v. Universal Maritime Serv. Corp. (1998) 525 U.S. 70, 119 S. Ct. 391, 396-397, 142 L. Ed. 2d 361 ; Gilmer v. Interstate/Johnson Lane Corp. (1991) 500 U.S. 20, 111 S. Ct. 1647, 114 L. Ed. 2d 26, 35-43 (individual employee can make agreement that waives right to judicial forum for employment-discrimination claim); see also Kummetz v. Tech Mold, Inc. (9th Cir. 1998) 152 F.3d 1153, 1154-1156 (no waiver of judicial remedy where employee signed document acknowledging receipt of "information booklet" that included arbitration clause, but acknowledgment of receipt did not explicitly mention arbitration clause or waiver of right to sue)].

A collective bargaining agreement provision that clearly and unmistakably requires union members to arbitrate statutory claims is enforceable [14 Penn Plaza LLC v. Pyett (2009) -- U.S. --, 129 S. Ct. 1456, 173 L. Ed. 2d 398, 408-414 (enforcing collective bargaining agreement that expressly mandated grievance and arbitration procedure as "sole and exclusive remedy" for union members' claims of employment discrimination under state and federal statutes, including Age Discrimination in Employment Act, 29 U.S.C. § 621 et seq.); see Taylor v. Lockheed Martin Corp. (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 380, 385-387, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 358 (labor arbitration decision not entitled to collateral estoppel effect in subsequent litigation of statutory claim of retaliatory discharge under Lab. Code § 6310, unless collective bargaining agreement clearly and unmistakably waived employee's right to sue); Camargo v. California Portland Cement Co. (2001) 86 Cal. App. 4th 995, 1018-1021, 103 Cal. Rptr. 2d 841 (arbitration award not entitled to collateral estoppel effect in subsequent FEHA litigation because arbitration had been conducted under collective bargaining agreement that did not clearly and unmistakably provide for arbitration of FEHA claims, and arbitration procedures did not allow for full litigation and fair adjudication of FEHA claims); Vasquez v. Superior Ct. (2000) 80 Cal. App. 4th 430, 433-436, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 294 (collective bargaining agreement did not specifically refer to ADA or FEHA, so there was no clear and unmistakable waiver)].

For a form of affirmative defense allegation that a cause of action for wrongful discharge is precluded by an arbitration agreement, see § 249.64.

[17] Lack of Employment Relationship

Tort liability for violation of public policy is inapplicable if the relationship terminated is one of independent contractors rather than of employer and employee [Abrahamson v. NME Hospitals, Inc. (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 1325, 1329-1330, 241 Cal. Rptr. 396] . For discussion of the definition of an employee for purposes of determining vicarious liability, see Ch. 248, Employer's Liability for Employee's Torts .

[17A] Prospective Modification of At Will Contract

Employment at will includes the right to impose a prospective modification of the at-will agreement as a condition of continued employment. As a matter of law, an at-will employee who continues to work after the employer has given notice of changed terms or conditions of employment has accepted the changed terms and conditions. Under these circumstances, the employer's modification has expressly and impliedly terminated the old contract and stated an offer of a new contract. The employee's continuing to work under the modified terms and conditions, even if grudging and protest-filled, constitutes the employee's acceptance of the new offer [DiGiacinto v. Ameriko-Omserv Corp. (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 629, 637-638, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 300] .

Thus, for example, an employer's unilaterally adopted policy not to lay off employees except under specified circumstances may become part of the employment agreement for employees who continue in employment after the policy is adopted. However, the no-layoff policy may be unilaterally discontinued, so long as the employer does so after a reasonable time, on reasonable notice, and without interfering with employees' vested benefits. Once the no-layoff policy is discontinued, the statutory presumption of at-will employment becomes applicable [Asmus v. Pacific Bell (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 1, 9-18, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 179, 999 P.2d 71 ; see Lab. Code § 2922 (presumption of at-will employment)].

[18] At-Will Employment of Corporate Officers

Corp. Code § 312(b) states in part that, "[e]xcept as otherwise provided by the articles or bylaws, officers shall be chosen by the board and serve at the pleasure of the board, subject to the rights, if any, of an officer under any contract of employment." This provision essentially corresponds to the at-will presumption of Lab. Code § 2922 applicable to employees generally, and it creates a comparable presumption [Bell v. Superior Court (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 1103, 1108-1109, 263 Cal. Rptr. 787] . Asnoted in the above-quoted language, however, the terms of "any contract of employment" may overcome the assumption of otherwise at will status. In one case, the court held that, in a wrongful termination action based on breach of implied contract, allegations that the corporation impliedly agreed the officer would not be terminated except for good cause based on the officer's longevity of service, promotions, praise of her work, regular pay raises and bonuses, and the corporation's express personnel practices and policies indicating its obligation to deal fairly and in good faith were sufficient, if proved, to overcome the presumption of at will employment created by Corp. Code § 312(b) [Bell v. Superior Court (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 1103, 1110-1111, 263 Cal. Rptr. 787] .

[19] After-Acquired Evidence Justifying Termination

Some conflict exists regarding the extent to which evidence of employee misconduct that would have justified an employer's adverse employment action, but which was not discovered by the employer until after it took an allegedly wrongful employment action (so-called "after-acquired evidence"), may act as a defense to a wrongful discharge cause of action. One common factual context in which this issue has arisen has involved an employer's discovery, typically after the commencement of litigation, that the employee had falsified his or her resume or employment application. In a case involving common-law wrongful termination and age discrimination claims, a California court of appeal refused to adopt a blanket rule that after-acquired evidence of falsification of an employment application is a complete defense to a wrongful termination or employment discrimination claim [Cooper v. Rykoff-Sexton, Inc. (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 614, 617-618, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 642] . The court reasoned that an automatic forfeiture of all employment rights, regardless of circumstances, was too harsh a penalty in many cases. The court further reasoned that in cases in which an employer has fired a worker in violation of the statutory ban on discrimination, the purpose and effect of the discrimination statutes would be unacceptably undermined by a principle that would allow a fact that played no part in the firing decision to bar any recovery [Cooper v. Rykoff-Sexton, Inc. (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 614, 618-619, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 642] . The court did not discuss the potential effect of such after-acquired evidence on the amount of damages, as the issue was not before the court [see Cooper v. Rykoff-Sexton, Inc. (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 614, 619 n.1, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 642] .

Another California court of appeal has held that even if the employer presents after-acquired evidence that would have justified termination of the employee, it remains a question of fact whether the employer would have actually terminated the employee on the basis of the after-acquired evidence. Thus, depending on the circumstances of the particular case, a jury might reasonably find that the employee would have been subjected to a less harsh disciplinary action, or no adverse action at all. In such a case the trial court would be justified in refusing to bar or reduce the plaintiff's recovery of damages for the wrongful termination [Thompson v. Tracor Flight Sys., Inc. (2001) 86 Cal. App. 4th 1156, 1172-1174, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 95 (record, including after-acquired evidence, supported jury's finding that employee had not engaged in wrongdoing that would have resulted in termination)].

In the context of federal employment discrimination law, the United States Supreme Court has held that after-acquired evidence that would have caused the employer to terminate the employment does not bar the action, but does preclude a reinstatement order or awards for pay lost after the evidence was discovered [see McKennon v. Nashville Banner Publ. Co. (1995) 513 U.S. 352, 115 S. Ct. 879, 130 L. Ed. 2d 852, 861-864] . In an age discrimination case, in which the employer produced after-acquired evidence of misconduct, the Ninth Circuit held that an employer can avoid back pay and other damages only if it can prove by a preponderance of evidence that it would have fired the employee for the misconduct [O'Day v. McDonnell Douglas Helicopter Company (9th Cir. 1996) 79 F.3d 756, 761] . However, in another case, the Ninth Circuit held that although after-acquired evidence may reduce available remedies, it cannot form the basis for granting summary judgment with regard to the entire matter [Schnidrig v. Columbia Machine, Inc. (9th Cir. 1996) 80 F.3d 1406, 1412] . The federal employment discrimination decisions are, of course, only persuasive authority and are not binding on California courts in analyzing common-law wrongful termination claims.

In a more recent case, a California court of appeal, relying on language in Cooper suggesting that after-acquired evidence might limit or bar an employee's claims in some situations, held that two employees' public policy wrongful discharge claims were barred by after-acquired evidence of the plaintiffs' prior felony convictions [Camp v. Jeffer, Mangels, Butler & Marmaro (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 620, 639, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 329 ; see Cooper v. Rykoff-Sexton, Inc. (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 614, 616-617, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 642 (commenting that many of the decisions granting summary judgment based on job application misrepresentations had "probably reached the correct result on their facts," but "declin[ing] to adopt a blanket rule that material falsification of an employment application is a complete defense to [an employee/s claim]")]. In Camp, the employer, a federal contractor, was required by law to certify that none of its employees had been convicted of a felony. The plaintiffs lied on their employment applications by denying any prior felony convictions, and one plaintiff also signed a post-employment form stating that she had never been convicted of a felony. The court of appeal found that after-acquired evidence could bar liability altogether where, as in the present case, the misrepresentations relate directly to the wrongful termination claims and would have disqualified the plaintiff from employment [Camp v. Jeffer, Mangels, Butler & Marmaro (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 620, 638-639, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 329] . The court also found significant the fact that the employees misrepresented a job qualification that was required by law, such that they were not lawfully qualified for the job [Camp v. Jeffer, Mangels, Butler & Marmaro (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 620, 636, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 329 (distinguishing the case before it from Cooper and McKennon on the grounds that the employer policies involved in those cases were self-imposed)].

After-acquired evidence of the employee's immigration status may have limited value in an action to enforce employment rights. The Legislature has declared that all protections, rights, and remedies available under state law, except any reinstatement remedy prohibited by federal law, are available to all individuals regardless of immigration status who have applied for employment, or who are or who have beenemployed, in California [Civ. Code § 3339(a); Gov. Code § 7285(a); Lab. Code § 1171.5(a)]. Accordingly, for purposes of enforcing state labor, employment, and civil-rights laws, a person's immigration status is irrelevant to the issue of liability; in proceedings or discovery undertaken to enforce those state laws no inquiry may be made into a person's immigration status unless the person seeking to make the inquiry has shown by clear and convincing evidence that the inquiry is necessary in order to comply with federal immigration law [Civ. Code § 3339(b); Gov. Code § 7285(b); Lab. Code § 1171.5(b)].

The Ninth Circuit has ruled that the foregoing provisions of California law are not preempted by the federal Immigration Reform and Control Act (IRCA), at least not when the employer can comply with the IRCA without creating a conflict with California law. The IRCA forbids employers from knowingly employing unauthorized aliens [8 U.S.C. § 1324a(a)(2)]. There is clearly no conflict between California law and IRCA--and therefore no preemption--when an employer is required to terminate an employee by IRCA and does so in order to comply withthat statute. Under those circumstances, the employer can obey both laws because compliance with IRCA provides good cause, as defined by California law, for terminating unauthorized aliens [see Incalza v. Fendi N. Am., Inc. (9th Cir. 2007) 479 F.3d 1005, 1010] .

Similarly, California law may impose liability on an employer for discharging an employee, even when the employer claims the discharge is required by the IRCA, when remedies short of discharge are permissible under the IRCA and its implementing regulations [Incalza v. Fendi N. Am., Inc. (9th Cir. 2007) 479 F.3d 1005, 1010-1013 (IRCA and regulations authorized employer to place employee on unpaid leave without pay while employee obtained change in work visa to which employee was entitled under federal law)]. It remains an open question, however, whether California law and the IRCA conflict when an employer that is required by federal law to terminate an unlawful alien does so, but for reasons that are unlawful under California law [see Incalza v. Fendi N. Am., Inc. (9th Cir. 2007) 479 F.3d 1005, 1010 (identifying issue but resolving case on other grounds)].

[20] Failure to Exhaust Administrative Remedy

If a statute such as the Fair Employment and Housing Act [see Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.] provides an administrative process for the resolution of grievances, exhaustion of those administrative remedies is a precondition to bringing a civil suit on a statutory cause of action, but it is not a precondition of seeking judicial relief on a common-law tort claim for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy [Palmer v. Regents of Univ.of Cal. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 899, 904, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 567] . However, if an employer establishes an internal grievance mechanism, a failure to exhaust its remedies precludes any subsequent private civil action [Palmer v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 899, 903-906, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 567] . Similarly, an employer's internal remedy generally must be exhausted before the employee sues under a statutory provision that does not contain its own administrative remedy [see Campbell v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 311, 329-330, 25 Cal. Rptr. 3d 320, 333-335 (public employee must exhaust employer's internal remedy before suing for retaliation for statutorily protected "whistleblowing" activity under Lab. Code § 1102.5, which is silent on administrative remedy or exhaustion requirement)]. The exhaustion of internal grievance procedures is required not because of any contractual obligation, but because of compelling policy considerations. If an employer has the opportunity quickly to determine through the operation of its internal procedures that it has committed error, it may be able to minimize, and sometimes eliminate, any monetary injury to the employee by immediately reversing its initial action. An employee should not be permitted to increase damages by forgoing available internal remedies. Moreover, an exhaustion requirement reflects the courts' recognition of the "expertise" of the employer's quasi-judicial tribunal, permitting it to adjudicate the merits of the plaintiffs' claims in the first instance [Campbell v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 311, 322, 25 Cal. Rptr. 3d 320, 327-328 (requirement that internal remedy be exhausted serves salutary function of mitigating damages, recognizes quasi-judicial tribunal's expertise, and promotes judicial economy by unearthing relevant evidence and providing record should there be judicial review of case); Palmer v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 899, 905, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 567] .

§ 249.22 Related Causes of Action

[1] In General

Depending on the factual situation, certain other tort causes of action may arise out of termination of an employment relationship. Generally, an employee or former employee may not assert such other causes of action against his or her coworkers for their conduct relating to personnel actions [Sheppard v. Freeman (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 339, 343-347, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 13 (whether coworker's personnel action is technically within scope of employment is irrelevant)]. However, an action against a coworker may be brought [Sheppard v. Freeman (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 339, 343 n.4, 348-349, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 13] :

- For a tort involving physical injury, or
- If the cause of action against a coworker is permitted by statutory provisions, such as those governing defamation actions [see Civ. Code §§ 43-48.5 (defamation actions)].

For additional discussion of related causes of action, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 63 (Matthew Bender); L. Larson & P. Borowsky, Unjust Dismissal, Ch. 4 (Matthew Bender).

[2] Assault and Battery

In cases in which the employee is terminated as a result of a physical altercation with the employer or with a fellow employee, or in which the employee's dismissal is accompanied by physical force applied by the employer or a supervisor, the employee may have a cause of action for assault or battery as well as a cause of action for wrongful termination.

Generally, an employee who sustains an injury arising out of and in the course of his or her employment, including an injury inflicted by a coworker, is limited to recovery under the workers' compensation system [Lab. Code § 3600(a); see Ch. 577, Workers' Compensation]. However, if the employee is injured in the course of employment by the willful and unprovoked physical act of aggression by a coworker, the injured employee may sue the coworker for damages [Lab. Code § 3601(a)(1)]. To establish a "willful and unprovoked physical act ofaggression" for this purpose, the injured employee must prove that the coworker had an intent to convey an actual, present, and apparent threat of bodily injury [Torres v. Parkhouse Tire Serv., Inc. (2001) 26 Cal. 4th 995, 1004, 111 Cal. Rptr. 2d 564, 30 P.3d 57] .

If the employer commits a willful physical assault on the employee, the employee may sue the employer for damages at law, as an alternative to seeking workers' compensation relief [Lab. Code § 3602(b)(1)]. However, the employer ordinarily cannot be held liable in a civil action for one employee's assault and battery committed against another employee. In such a case, the injured employee's sole remedy against the employer is a workers' compensation claim, unless the employer has engaged in some positive misconduct [Fretland v. County of Humboldt (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 1478, 1486-1489, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 359 ; see Lab. Code § 3601(a)(1)]. Thus, an employer cannot be vicariously liable for civil damages caused by the coworker's assault on a theory of respondeat superior, but the employer may be held liable as a "joint participant" in the assault if it ratified the assaultive conduct of the coworker [Fretland v. County of Humboldt (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 1478, 1489-1491, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 359] .

If an employee is injured or killed by a third party in the course of the employee's employment solely because of the third party's personal beliefs relating to his or her perception of the employee's race, religious creed, color, national origin, age, gender, disability, sex, or sexual orientation, workers' compensation benefits may be available in addition to any action the employee or his or her survivors may have against the third party [see Lab. Code § 3600(c) (for purposes of determining whether to grant or deny workers' compensation claim, if employee is injured or killed by third party in course of employee's employment, no personal relationship or personal connection shall be deemed to exist between employee and third party based only on determination that third party injured or killed employee solely because of third party's personal beliefs relating to his or her perception of employee's race, religious creed, color, national origin, age, gender, disability, sex, or sexual orientation)].

Although the torts of assault and battery often occur in conjunction with one another, they are separate torts, as a comparison of their elements indicates. The elements of the tort of battery consist of an intentional, unlawful, and harmful or offensive contact by one person with the person of another [see Barbara A. v. John G. (1983) 145 Cal. App. 3d 369, 375, 193 Cal. Rptr. 422] . An act is "intentional" if the actor acted with the intention of touching the injured party, regardless of whether he or she intended to hurt the injured party, or if the actor intended to put the injured party in apprehension of a harmful or offensive touching [see Weisbart v. Flohr (1968) 260 Cal. App. 2d 281, 284-285, 67 Cal. Rptr. 114 (dicta)]. Case law has not clearly defined the term "unlawful" as it relates to the definition of a battery. However, one case has held that lack of consent is an essential element of battery [see Rains v. Superior Court (1984) 150 Cal. App. 3d 933, 938, 198 Cal. Rptr. 249] . A contact is "harmful or offensive" not only in cases of physical beatings, but also in cases in which the contact was not harmful but offended a reasonable sense of personal dignity [see Boyes v. Evans (1936) 14 Cal. App. 2d 472, 479, 58 P.2d 922 ; see also Restatement (Second) of Torts § 19].

Although California cases have not always been consistent in setting forth the elements of the tort of assault, it appears that those elements are the demonstration of an unlawful intent by one person to inflict immediate injury on the person of another who is then present, and apprehension of the injury by the person present [see Lowry v. Standard Oil Co. (1944) 63 Cal. App. 2d 1, 6-7, 146 P.2d 57 ; see also Restatement (Second) of Torts § 21(1) (requiring apprehension of harmful or offensive contact rather than apprehension of injury); but see Fraguglia v. Sala (1936) 17 Cal. App. 2d 738, 742, 62 P.2d 783 (utilizing definition of assault found in Penal Code § 240, which defines assault as an unlawful attempt to commit violent injury on another)]. It is immaterial that the tortfeasor did not have the present ability to inflict injury as long as the party bringing the action had a reasonable apprehension of injury [see Lowry v. Standard Oil Co. (1944) 63 Cal. App. 2d 1, 7, 146 P.2d 57 (defendant's act of pointing unloaded gun at plaintiff as assault)].

In an action for assault and battery, a successful plaintiff is entitled to compensation for all harm proximately caused by the assault and battery, including damages for pain and suffering, fear, anxiety, and other types of emotional distress, as well as damages for lost wages and earning capacity and medical expenses [see Delia S. v. Torres (1982) 134 Cal. App. 3d 471, 482, 184 Cal. Rptr. 787 ; McChristian v. Popkin (1946) 75 Cal. App. 2d 249, 262-263, 171 P.2d 85] . In addition, punitive damages are also available in actions for assault and battery, assuming that plaintiff is able to prove the requisite malice, oppression, or fraud on the part of the defendant [see Civ. Code § 3294; Scruggs v. Haynes (1967) 252 Cal. App. 2d 256, 269, 60 Cal. Rptr. 355] .

For further discussion and pleading forms, see Ch. 58, Assault and Battery . For a full discussion of the elements of and defenses to the torts of assault and battery, see Levy, Golden & Sacks, California Torts, Ch. 41.

[3] Defamation

[a] Elements Generally

In cases in which an employee is terminated as a result of a false statement made about the employee that injures the employee's reputation, or in which false statements are made about plaintiff in the connection with the termination, the employee may have a cause of action for defamation, that is, for libel or slander, as well as a cause of action for wrongful termination. In addition, an employee who has left an employer for any reason may in some instances have a cause of action for defamation against the former employer if the employer publishes any defamatory falsehoods about the employee [see, e.g., Prevost v. First Western Bank (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 1492, 1497-1500, 239 Cal. Rptr. 161] . This may occur when the employee searches for new employment, and a prospective employer contacts the former employer concerning the employee's fitness for employment. For discussion of actions under Lab. Code §§ 1050-1054 regarding a former employer's misrepresentations concerning a former employee that impede that person from obtaining subsequent employment, see § 249.31.

Under the doctrine of respondeat superior, an employer may be vicariously liable for a defamatory statement made by one of its employees [Kelly v. General Telephone Co. (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 278, 284, 186 Cal. Rptr. 184] . For further discussion of the doctrine of respondeat superior, see Ch. 248, Employer's Liability for Employee's Torts, § 248.14.

With minor exceptions, the torts of libel and slander have essentially the same elements. The primary difference between them is that libel involves a defamatory statement by writing or other "fixed representation to the eye" [see Civ. Code § 45], while slander involves a defamatory statement uttered orally [see Civ. Code § 46]. The elements of a claim for libel or slander are the following:

- A false and defamatory statement [see Civ. Code §§ 45 (libel), 46 (slander); see also MacLeod v. Tribune Publishing Co. (1959) 52 Cal. 2d 536, 551, 343 P.2d 36 (defamatory aspect); Gantry Constr. Co. v. American Pipe & Constr. Co. (1975) 49 Cal. App. 3d 186, 194-196, 122 Cal. Rptr. 834 (falsity aspect)];

- Publication of the statement by the employer [see Kelly v. General Telephone Co. (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 278, 284, 186 Cal. Rptr. 184] or compelled self-publication [Lin v. Circuit City, Inc. (C.D. Cal. 1995) 11 IER Cases 140 (court rejected plaintiff's defamation claim based on lack of evidence that the self-publication was compelled)];

- Identification of the plaintiff in the statement [see Noral v. Hearst Publications, Inc. (1940) 40 Cal. App. 2d 348, 350, 104 P.2d 860] ;

- Intent, in that if a qualified privilege applies, plaintiff is required to show malice [see discussion at [b], below]; and

- Resulting damages [see Forsher v. Bugliosi (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 792, 806-807, 163 Cal. Rptr. 628, 608 P.2d 716 ("special damages" as element of defamation claim unless statement is defamatory per se); Civ. Code § 45a].

For discussion and forms regarding defamation generally, see Ch. 340, Libel and Slander . For full discussion of the tort of defamation, see Levy, Golden, and Sacks, California Torts, Ch. 45. For additional discussion of the tort of defamation in the context of wrongful termination, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 63.

[b] Absolute and Qualified Privileges

Unless a constitutional privilege or a qualified privilege under state law applies, a person may be liable for publishing a defamatory statement regardless of whether he or she intended to make a false statement that would injure the reputation of the plaintiff or had reason to know that the plaintiff would be so harmed [see Davis v. Hearst (1911) 160 Cal. 143, 154-155, 116 P. 530] . However, in the employment context, a qualified privilege often applies, which requires a showing of malice on the part of the defendant before liability may attach.

Under state law, there are two types of privileges that are available in defamation actions--absolute privileges and qualified privileges. An absolute privilege is a privilege that cannot be defeated by malice on the part of the publisher [see Kilgore v. Younger (1982) 30 Cal. 3d 770, 778, 180 Cal. Rptr. 657, 640 P.2d 793] . An absolute privilege is available for statements made by specified high-ranking public officials, statements made by legislators, statements made in judicial proceedings and other official or unofficial proceedings authorized by law, and fair and true reports of official proceedings and public meetings [see Civ. Code § 47(a), (b), (d), (e); but see Prevost v. First Western Bank (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 1492, 1498-1499, 239 Cal. Rptr. 161 (privilege for statements made in "other official proceedings authorized by law" was inapplicable to statement made about former employee in proof of loss statement by employer-bank to bonding company, even though proof of loss statement was required by law)]. This absolute privilege protects an employer who provides information about a current or former employee in the course of a law enforcement agency's investigation of the employee's application for employment with the agency [Bardin v. Lockheed Aeronautical Sys. Co. (1999) 70 Cal. App. 4th 494, 499-504, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 726 (in these circumstances, absolute privilege of Civ. Code § 47(b) controls over qualified privilege of Gov. Code § 1031.1(b))]. In other cases, however, statements made by a current or former employer during the background inspection of an applicant by a potential employer are privileged if made without malice and based on credible evidence [Civ. Code § 47(c)(3)]. For example, a current or former employer, or the employer's agent, is privileged to answer whether the employer would rehire a current or former employee [Civ. Code § 47(c)]. The privilege may also apply to statements made during the course of a grievance procedure established by a collective-bargaining agreement and reviewable by mandate [see Wallin v. Vienna Sausage Manufacturing Co. (1984) 156 Cal. App. 3d 1051, 1054-1055, 203 Cal. Rptr. 375] .

A qualified privilege acts as a bar to liability when the statement was published without malice [see Saroyan v. Burkett (1962) 57 Cal. 2d 706, 708, 21 Cal. Rptr. 557, 371 P.2d 293] . Qualified privileges exist for statements made by persons with a common interest, persons in special relationships, and persons responding to a request for information [see Civ. Code § 47(c)]. In the employment context, the qualified privilege available to interested parties often applies [see Civ. Code § 47(c)]. This privilege exists when the communicator and the recipient have a common interest and the communication is reasonably calculated to further that interest. Therefore, an employer's performance evaluation cannot support a cause of action for libel even if the employer's perceptions were wrong and unsupportable, unless the evaluation falsely accuses an employee of criminal conduct, lack of integrity, dishonesty, incompetence, or reprehensible personal characteristics or behavior [Jensen v. Hewlett-Packard Co. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 958, 965, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 83 (only remedy for feigned negative evaluation is contract action for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing)]. Performance evaluations are inherently subjective and "courts should be extremely cautious before allowing such comments to be the basis of a libel action" [Campanelli v. Regents of the University of California (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 572, 581, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 891] . Communication among a company's employees concerning the conduct of an employee fall squarely within this privilege [Cuenca v. Safeway San Francisco

Employees Fed. Credit Union (1986) 180 Cal. App. 3d 985, 995-996, 225 Cal. Rptr. 852 ; see also Kelly v. General Telephone Co. (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 278, 285, 186 Cal. Rptr. 184 (communication designed to insure accurate company records as privileged)]. Thus, for example, an employer who publishes to its employees the reasons for the termination of another employee is protected by this qualified privilege [see Deaile v. General Telephone Co. of California (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 841, 847, 115 Cal. Rptr. 582] .

Malice sufficient to overcome a qualified privilege is a state of mind arising from hatred or ill will evidencing a willingness to vex, annoy, or injure another person [Agarwal v. Johnson (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 932, 944, 160 Cal. Rptr. 141, 603 P.2d 58 ; see also Cuenca v. Safeway San Francisco Employees Fed. Credit Union (1986) 180 Cal. App. 3d 985, 997, 225 Cal. Rptr. 852 (malice established by showing that publisher lacked reasonable grounds to believe statement was true and thus acted in reckless disregard for rights of plaintiff)]. The privilege is lost if the publication is motivated by any cause other than to protect the interest for which the protection of the privilege was granted [Agarwal v. Johnson (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 932, 944-945, 160 Cal. Rptr. 141, 603 P.2d 58 (privilege overcome whenstatements concerning employee's competence were maliciously motivated for purpose of terminating employee)].

For discussion and forms regarding absolute and qualified privileges, see Ch. 340, Libel and Slander, § 340.50 et seq. For full discussion of the absolute and qualified privileges, see Levy, Golden, and Sacks, California Torts, Ch. 45, Pt. B.

[c] Availability of Defense of Preemption

A cause of action for defamation brought by an employee against an employer is not subject to the exclusivity provision of the Workers' Compensation Act (Lab. Code § 3201 et seq.) for the reasons discussed below.

Defamatory statements that have no other purpose than to damage an employee's reputation are neither a normal part of the employment relationship nor a risk of employment within the exclusivity provision of the Workers' Compensation Act [Davaris v. Cubaleski (1993) 12 Cal. App. 4th 1583, 1591, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 330 (defendant's accusations that plaintiff stole money from the company were not within scope of employment context, and harm did not constitute personal injury); Howland v. Balma (1983) 143 Cal. App. 3d 899, 905, 192 Cal. Rptr. 286] .

Moreover, appellate courts have stated that the gravamen of an action for libel or slander is damage to reputation, a proprietary as distinct from a physical or mental injury. Consequently, defamation does not lie within the purview of the workers' compensation law [see, e.g., Howland v. Balma (1983) 143 Cal. App. 3d 899, 192 Cal. Rptr. 286 (cited in dictum in Livitsanos v. Superior Court (1992) 2 Cal. 4th 744, 757, 7 Cal. Rptr. 2d 808, 828 P.2d 1195)].

In an employment context involving a collective-bargaining agreement, an employee's action for defamation may in some cases be preempted by federal labor law [see, e.g., 29 U.S.C. § 185(a) (LMRA), discussed in § 249.21[3]]. If the claim is inextricably intertwined with considerations covered by the labor contract, the claim is preempted [DeTomaso v. Pan American World Airways, Inc. (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 517, 530, 235 Cal. Rptr. 292, 733 P.2d 614 , cert. denied, 484 U.S. 829 ; see Allis-Chalmers Corp. v. Lueck (1985) 471 U.S. 202, 213, 105 S. Ct. 1904, 85 L. Ed. 2d 206] . For example, when the claim is based on defamatory statements made in an investigation required by collective-bargaining agreement, the claim may be preempted, at least in instances in which the conduct of the investigation is subject to the collective-bargaining agreement's grievance adjustment procedure [see DeTomaso v. Pan American World Airways, Inc. (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 517, 530-533, 235 Cal. Rptr. 292, 733 P.2d 614 , cert. denied, 484 U.S. 829 ; cf. Tellez v. Pacific Gas and Elec. Co., Inc. (9th Cir. 1987) 817 F.2d 536, 538-539 , cert. denied, 98 L. Ed. 2d 209 (defamation action based on statements that were neither required by collective-bargaining agreement nor part of grievance process was not preempted by federal labor law)].

However, a defamation claim is not preempted if it is based on facts either "unrelated to matters expressly or impliedly governed by the collective bargaining agreement" or that "so far exceed the scope of reasonable conduct in the context of such matters that reference to the collective bargaining agreement is unnecessary to resolve the claim" [see DeTomaso v. Pan American World Airways, Inc. (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 517, 529, 235 Cal. Rptr. 292, 733 P.2d 614 , cert. denied, 484 U.S. 829 ; see also Tellez v. Pacific Gas and Elec. Co., Inc. (9th Cir. 1987) 817 F.2d 536, 538 , cert. denied, 484 U.S. 908 (state defamation claim neither asserted rights derived from the collective-bargaining agreement nor required interpretation of agreement; California defamation law establishes nonnegotiable rights and obligations independent of any labor agreement)].

For discussion of preemption under the LMRA, see § 249.21[3]. For additional discussion of preemption of wrongful termination claims under federal labor law, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60; and Larson and Borowsky, Unjust Dismissal, Ch. 9.

[d] Remedies Regarding Defamation Actions

In a defamation action, a successful plaintiff may be entitled to both general and special damages. Special damages are actual economic losses proximately caused by the defamation, including out-of-pocket expenses and amounts lost in one's occupation [see Civ. Code §§ 45a, 48a(4)(b); Gomes v. Fried (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 924, 939-940, 186 Cal. Rptr. 605] . General damages compensate for loss of reputation, shame, mortification, and hurt feelings in any context, including the plaintiff's business or occupation [see Civ. Code § 48a(4)(a); Gomes v. Fried (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 924, 939, 186 Cal. Rptr. 605] . In addition, punitive damages are available on the proper showing of malice [see Civ. Code § 3294; see also McCoy v. Hearst Corp. (1986) 42 Cal. 3d 835, 872-873, 231 Cal. Rptr. 518, 727 P.2d 711 , cert. denied, 481 U.S. 1041] . For discussion and forms relating to recoverable damages, see Ch. 340, Libel and Slander, § 340.10 et seq.

[4] False Imprisonment

In cases in which an employee brings an action against an employer for wrongful termination, the employee may, in limited circumstances, have an additional cause of action against an employer for false imprisonment. That situation might arise, for example, when an employee is wrongfully detained by the employer under the mistaken belief that the employee has stolen company property and the employee is also terminated as a result.

The essence of a claim for false imprisonment is the restraint of a person's liberty so that a person is compelled to remain in a place where he or she does not wish to remain [Onick v. Long (1957) 154 Cal. App. 2d 381, 386, 316 P.2d 427 ; Parrott v. Bank of America (1950) 97 Cal. App. 2d 14, 23, 217 P.2d 89] . An allegation of temporary restraint is sufficientto state a cause of action, and the plaintiff need not allege the use of actual physical force [Parrott v. Bank of America (1950) 97 Cal. App. 2d 14, 23, 217 P.2d 89] .

In one case, a bank employee was detained at a supervisor's desk for interrogation with respect to bank shortages and was threatened with federal prosecution if she did not sign a confession. In upholding a jury verdict for the plaintiff, the court found that the fact that the employee did agree to sign the confession, even though she was absolutely innocent of any wrongdoing, was sufficient to support a finding that a threat of force was used to detain the employee [Parrott v. Bank of America (1950) 97 Cal. App. 2d 14, 23, 217 P.2d 89] . There is no false imprisonment, however, if the restraint is lawful [see Singleton v. Perry (1955) 45 Cal. 2d 489, 494, 289 P.2d 794] . Thus, for example, if a merchant has probable cause to believe that a person has unlawfully taken his or her property, the merchant is entitled to detain the person for a reasonable time for the purpose of conducting a reasonable investigation [see Penal Code § 490.5(f)]. A property owner may similarly take reasonable steps to protect his or her property from theft or injury [see Collyer v. S.H. Kress & Co. (1936) 5 Cal. 2d 175, 180-181, 54 P.2d 20] . Whether an employer's actions were reasonable, justifiable, or privileged, so as to preclude liability for false imprisonment is a question of fact. [Fermino v. Fedco, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 701, 723, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 18, 872 P.2d 559] .

In Fermino the California Supreme Court concluded that false imprisonment is not a normal aspect of the employment relationship, however legitimate its initial justification. Accordingly, a false imprisonment committed by an employer on an employee is outside the scope of the "compensation bargain," and an action brought by an employee based on that act is not preempted by the exclusive remedy doctrine of workers compensation [Fermino v. Fedco, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 701, 723, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 18, 872 P.2d 559] .

For discussion and forms regarding false imprisonment generally, see Ch. 257, False Imprisonment . For a complete discussion of the tort of false imprisonment, see Levy, Golden & Sacks, California Torts, Ch. 42.

[5] Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress

In cases in which an employee brings an action against an employer for wrongful termination, the employee may theoretically have an additional cause of action against the employer for intentional infliction of emotional distress based on the manner in which the termination was carried out [see, e.g., Rulon-Miller v. International Business Machines Corp. (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 241, 254-255, 208 Cal. Rptr. 524] . However, it appears that the availability of such an action is extremely limited because most civil actions against employers seeking damages for emotional distress are barred by the exclusive remedy provisions of workers' compensation law [see Lab. Code §§ 3601, 3602]. The California Supreme Court in Cole v. Fair Oaks Fire Protection Dist. (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 148, 160, 233 Cal. Rptr. 308, 729 P.2d 743 , held that, if the misconduct attributed to the employer involves actions that are a normal part of the employment relationship, such as demotions, promotions, criticism of work practices, and frictions in negotiations as to grievances, workers' compensation is the exclusive remedy. Characterization of the employer's conduct as outrageous, unfair, or intended to cause mental disability is not sufficient to avoid the exclusive remedy provisions of the Labor Code [Cole v. Fair Oaks Fire Protection Dist. (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 148, 160, 233 Cal. Rptr. 308, 729 P.2d 743] . However, a cause of action may be available notwithstanding the exclusive remedy doctrine if the conduct of the employer constituted a willful physical assault by the employer, within the meaning of Lab. Code § 3602(b)(1) [Herrick v. Quality Hotels, Inns & Resorts, Inc. (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 1608, 1616-1618, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 203 (also finding sufficient evidence of employer ratification of supervisor's threat to "blow [plaintiff's] head off" during termination)]. In a subsequent case, the Court held that termination of employment is a "normal part of the employment" for purposes of the workers' compensation exclusive-remedy doctrine and that a civil action for intentional infliction of emotional distress to recover damages for emotional injuries caused by termination of employment is therefore preempted [Shoemaker v. Myers (1990) 52 Cal. 3d 1, 25, 276 Cal. Rptr. 303, 801 P.2d 1054 ; see also Miklosy v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (2008) 44 Cal. 4th 876, 902, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 690, 188 P.3d 629 ("The alleged wrongful conduct, however, occurred at the worksite, in the normal course of the employer-employee relationship, and therefore workers' compensation is plaintiffs' exclusive remedy for any injury that may have resulted." (citations omitted)); Panopulos v. Westinghouse Electric Corp. (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 660, 666, 264 Cal. Rptr. 810 ; Jenkinsv. Family Health Program (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 440, 449-450, 262 Cal. Rptr. 798 ; Pichon v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 488, 495-497, 260 Cal. Rptr. 677] .

However, if the employer's conduct implicates considerations of substantial public policy, interests beyond those of the employer and employee are involved. "Those interests are not protected by workers' compensation law and therefore must be accommodated outside the compensation bargain" [Shoemaker v. Myers (1992) 2 Cal. App. 4th 1407, 1418-1419, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 203 ; see Fretland v. County of Humboldt (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 1478, 1486-1492, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 359 (emotional distress caused by work-related injury discrimination is not normal risk of compensation bargain)]. Thus, for example, the workers' compensation law does not bar an employee's claim of infliction of emotional distress that arises out of conduct that is also the basis for a claim of wrongful termination in violation of public policy [Kovatch v. California Casualty Management Co. (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 1256, 1277, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 217 ; see Murray v. Oceanside Unified Sch. Dist. (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 1338, 1362-1363, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 28 (cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress founded on sexual-orientation harassment in violation of public policy embodied in FEHA is not barred by exclusivity provisions of workers' compensation law, since such harassment is outside normal scope of employment relationship); see also § 249.12 (wrongful discharge in violation of public policy)].

A claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress is preempted by the exclusive remedy doctrine even if no physical injury or disability is alleged, as long as the basic conditions of compensation are otherwise satisfied and the employer's conduct neither contravenes a fundamental public policy nor exceeds the risks inherent in the employment relationship [Livitsanos v. Superior Court (1992) 2 Cal. 4th 744, 754-755, 7 Cal. Rptr. 2d 808, 828 P.2d 1195] . For example, if an employee asserts a claim of intentional infliction of emotional distress caused by the employer's denial ofstatutory medical leave, but the jury finds no violation of the relevant statutory medical leave provisions, then the employee's exclusive remedy is under the Workers' Compensation Act [Gibbs v. American Airlines, Inc. (1990) 74 Cal. App. 4th 1, 9-10, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 554 (employer's denial of medical leave did not violate public policy because jury found no violation of California Family Rights Act, Gov. Code § 12945.2)]. On the other hand, an employer's false statements about the company's financial stability, future plans, and a job applicant's prospects for promotion--all designed to induce the applicant to accept employment--are not a normal part of the employment relationship or a risk reasonably encompassed within the compensation bargain. Therefore, a fraud cause of action seeking emotional distress damages for such false statements is not barred by the workers' compensation exclusivity rule [Lenk v. Total-Western, Inc. (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 959, 970-973, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 34] .

[6] Interference With Contract and Interference With Prospective Economic Advantage

As a general rule, an employee has no cause of action for inducing the breach of an employment contract or for interference with prospective economic advantage (which encompasses the tort of inducing breach of contract) [see Buckaloo v. Johnson (1975) 14 Cal. 3d 815, 823, 122 Cal. Rptr. 745, 537 P.2d 865] . Generally, an employee cannot assert those claims against either the employer or coemployees who were acting within the scope of their employment [see Shoemaker v. Myers (1990) 276 Cal. Rptr. 303, 801 P.2d 1054 ; Mallard v. Boring (1960) 182 Cal. App. 2d 390, 393-394, 6 Cal. Rptr. 171] .

A California court of appeal has held that third parties who are not the plaintiff's employer cannot be liable for conspiracy to effect wrongful termination [Weinbaum v. Goldfarb, Whitman & Cohen (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 1310, 1314-1315, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 462 (plaintiff auditors)]. The Weinbaum court reasoned that,"Because tort liability arising from conspiracy presupposes that the coconspirator is legally capable of committing the tort ... a third party who is not (and never was) the plaintiff's employer cannot be liable for conspiracy to terminate the plaintiff's employment in violation of public policy."

However, the United States Supreme Court has since held that a terminated employee may state a claim for interference with an at-will employment relationship against third parties who conspire to deter plaintiff from testifying in any court of the United States by threatening his or her person or property in violation of 42 U.S.C. § 1985(2) [Haddle v. Garrison (1998) 525 U.S. 121, 119 S. Ct. 489, 491-492, 142 L. Ed. 2d 502] . Although the Haddle court noted that the harm alleged by plaintiff was essentially the same as one that "has long been a compensable injury under tort law," it also noted that it "is merely a species of the traditional torts of intentional interference with contractual relations and intentional interference with prospective contractual relations" [Haddle v. Garrison (1998) 525 U.S. 121, 119 S. Ct. 489, 492, 142 L. Ed. 2d 502 ; see Restatement (Second) of Torts 766, Comment g; see also Kozlowsky v. Westminster Nat. Bank (1970) 6 Cal. App. 3d 593, 598-600, 86 Cal. Rptr. 52 (third persons, including shareholders or directors, may be liable for inducing termination of at-will employment contract)].

The elements of a cause of action for interference with prospective economic advantage are (1) an economic relationship between the plaintiff and a third person containing the probability of future economic benefit to the plaintiff (such as an existing employment agreement), (2) knowledge by the defendant of the existence of the relationship, (3) intentional acts on the part of the defendant designed to disrupt the relationship, (4) actual disruption of the relationship, and (5) damages to the plaintiff proximately caused by the acts of the defendant [Blank v. Kirwan (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 311, 330, 216 Cal. Rptr. 718, 703 P.2d 58] . Moreover, in certain circumstances, negligent interference with prospective economic advantage is also actionable [see J'Aire Corp. v. Gregory (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 799, 805-806, 157 Cal. Rptr. 407, 598 P.2d 60] .

The California Supreme Court has applied these principles to hold that an employer may recover damages for intentional interference with an at-will employment relationship. Although a third party generally incurs no liability for soliciting or hiring an at-will employee of the employer, liability may be imposed if the third party engaged in an independently wrongful act that induced the at-will employee to leave the employer. In this context, an "independently wrongful act" is one that is proscribed by some constitutional, statutory, regulatory, common-law, or other ascertainable legal standard [Reeves v. Hanlon (2004) 33 Cal. 4th 1140, 1148-1156, 17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 289, 95 P.3d 513 (employer may recover damages for intentional interference with at-will employment relation under same standard applicable to claims for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage)]. At least one court of appeal has extended this reasoning to hold that an employee may recover damages under the equitable theory of promissory estoppel against a third party who induces the employee to terminate at-will employment in reliance on an unfulfilled job offer [Toscano v. Greene Music (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 685, 694-695, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 732 (for employee to recover, fact and extent of lost future earnings with former employer must be proven with reasonable certainty)].

For discussion and forms relating to elements of and defenses to actions for interference with economic relations generally, see Ch. 565, Unfair Competition, § 565.130 et seq. For a complete discussion of the tort of interference with prospectiveeconomic advantage and applicable defenses, see Levy, Golden & Sacks, California Torts, Ch. 40, pt. D (Matthew Bender).

[7] Fraud or Deceit

Wrongful termination of employment ordinarily does not give rise to a cause of action for fraud or deceit, even if some misrepresentation is made in the course of the employee's dismissal. Tort recovery is available only if the plaintiff can establish all of the elements of fraud with respect to a misrepresentation that is separate from the termination of the employment contract, that is, when the plaintiff's fraud damages cannot be said to result from termination itself [Hunter v. Up-Right, Inc. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 1174, 1178, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 8, 864 P.2d 88] . The policy considerations that supported the holding in Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 700, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 , making tort remedies unavailable for a breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing in the employment context, also support the holding that tort remedies are not available for a wrongful termination merely because the employer arguably made a misrepresentation in the course of the termination [Hunter v. Up-Right, Inc. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 1174, 1180-1185, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 8, 864 P.2d 88] . Given the essentially contractual nature of the employment relationship, tort remedies are not recoverable merely because an employer used a misrepresentation to end the relationship, thereby transforming what otherwise would have been a resignation into a constructive discharge. Because an employer may terminate an employee without any subterfuge, and be liable only for contractual damages in mostcircumstances, the Court held that the use of a misrepresentation to achieve the same result should not give rise to tort damages [Hunter v. Up-Right, Inc. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 1174, 1182-1185, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 8, 864 P.2d 88] .

A misrepresentation that is not aimed at effecting termination of employment, but designed instead to induce the employee to alter detrimentally his or her position in some other respect, can be the basis of a valid fraud claim, even in the context of a wrongful termination [see Lazar v. Superior Court (1996) 12 Cal. 4th 631, 638, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 377, 909 P. 2d 981 (claim for fraudulent inducement of employment contract does not depend upon whether defendant employer's promise is ultimately enforceable as a contract, although the harm alleged must be separate and distinct from the harm caused by termination of the employment agreement); cf. Hunter v. Up-Right, Inc. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 1174, 1185-1186, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 8, 864 P.2d 88 (citing Miller v. Fairchild Industries, Inc. (9th Cir. 1989) 885 F.2d 498, 509-510 , cert. denied, 494 U.S. 1056 (1990) , as example of case in which a cause of action was based on fraud because misrepresentation concerned plaintiff's settlement of civil rights action rather than termination of employment relationship)].

For discussion and forms relating to a cause of action in tort for deceit, see Ch. 269, Fraud and Deceit . For a further discussion of the tort of deceit, see Levy, Golden & Sacks, California Torts, Ch. 40, pt. A (Matthew Bender).

[8] Statutory Causes of Action

An employee may have related statutory causes of action against the employer. For example, under Lab. Code § 970, an employee may sue for double damages resulting from an employer's misrepresentation that induces the employee to change residence [see Lab. Code § 972], and, under Lab. Code § 1050, an employee may sue for treble damages caused by an employer's misrepresentation that prevents the employee from obtaining subsequent employment [see Lab. Code § 1054]. These causes of action are discussed in §§ 249.30 -249.31.

In addition, a number of California statutes impose liability on an employer for discharging or discriminating against employees under various specified circumstances. For example, Lab. Code § 132a provides remedies for an employee who is penalized by an employer for asserting rights under the workers' compensation system [see discussion in § 249.21[10]]. For full discussion of those statutes, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60.

[9] Invasion of Privacy

The right of privacy protects the rights of employees and job applicants from intrusions by the employer. For example, an employer may be prohibited from posting on an open bulletin board the reasons for an employee's dismissal [Payton v. City of Santa Clara (1982) 132 Cal. App. 3d 152, 154, 183 Cal. Rptr. 17].

One context in which privacy rights are implicated is drug testing. Under California law, an employer may require preemployment drug tests and take illegal drug use into consideration in making employment decisions [Loder v. City of Glendale (1997) 14 Cal. 4th 846, 882-883, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 696, 927 P.2d 1200]. However, suspicionless drug testing of current employees who apply for and are offered promotions, without regard to the nature of the position sought, violates the prohibition against unreasonable searches under the Fourth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution [Loder v. City of Glendale (1997) 14 Cal. 4th 846, 878-881, 900, 918 n.1, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 696, 927 P.2d 1200 (leaving open possibility that employer may constitutionally require current employee to submit to drug test as condition to employment when testing is justified by nature of particular position to which promotion is sought)]. It is not settled whether a termination based on a refusal to submit to a random drug test may form the basis of a cause of action for wrongful termination in violation of public policy [compare Semore v. Pool (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 1087, 1096-1098, 266 Cal. Rptr. 280 (assertion of the constitutional right of privacy is an assertion of a fundamental principle of public policy that is sufficient to state a cause of action for wrongful termination), with Luck v. Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 1, 17-19, 267 Cal. Rptr. 618 (termination based on a refusal to submit to urinalysis does not violate public policy)].

Privacy rights may also be implicated when an employer conducts surveillance of employees. It is an infraction for an employer, other than the federal government, to make audio or videotape recordings of employees in restrooms, locker rooms, or other rooms designated by employers for changing clothes [Lab. Code § 435].

In one case involving an employer's video surveillance of an office used by employees, the California Supreme Court found that the employees had a reasonable expectation under widely held social norms that their employer would not install video equipment capable of monitoring and recording their activities--personal and work-related--behind closed doors without their knowledge or consent. Under the circumstances of that case, however, the intrusion was not sufficiently serious to constitute a privacy violation. Any actual surveillance was drastically limited in nature and scope (no audio, not operated during business hours), exempting plaintiffs from its reach, and the defendants were motivated by strong countervailing concerns, which included providing a wholesome environment for the abused children in their care and avoiding legal liability [Hernandez v. Hillsides, Inc. (2009) 47 Cal. 4th 272, 286-300, 97 Cal. Rptr. 3d 274, 211 P.3d 1063].

For further discussion of the right of privacy under the California Constitution as it relates to drug and alcohol testing of employees and job applicants, see Ch. 429, Privacy ; see also Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 50 (Matthew Bender).

§ 249.30 Misrepresentation Inducing Employee to Change Residence

No person, agent, or officer thereof shall, directly or indirectly, influence, persuade or engage any person to move from one place to another within California or from any place outside California to any place within the state, or from any place within California to any place outside the state, for the purposes of working in any branch of labor, through or by means of knowingly false representation, whether spoken, written, or advertised in written form, concerning any of the following matters [Lab. Code § 970]:

- The kind, character, or existence of such work;
- The length of time such work will last, or the compensation for the work;
- The sanitary or housing conditions relating to or surrounding the work; or
- The existence or nonexistence of any strike, lockout, or other labor dispute affecting the work and pending between the proposed employer and the persons then or last engaged in the performance of the labor for which the employee is sought.

In order to allege facts sufficient to state a cause of action under Lab. Code § 970, the complaint must allege that the representations made were knowingly false [Tyco Industries, Inc. v. Superior Court (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 148, 157, 211 Cal. Rptr. 540.] .

The words "to change from one place to another" in Lab. Code § 970 import temporary as well as permanent change of residence, as contrasted with a mere change in the site of employment. The quantitative fact that the change of residence might be for only a short period of time would not affect the qualitative misrepresentations and would not render Lab. Code § 970 inapplicable [Collins v. Rocha (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 232, 239-240, 102 Cal. Rptr. 1, 497 P.2d 225] . However, if an employment contract expressly provides for at-will employment, an action for fraudulent inducement of the employment contract may not be maintained on the basis of an alleged false representation regarding the duration of employment; in such a case the employee willbe unable to show justifiable reliance on the false representation [Dore v. Arnold Worldwide, Inc. (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 384, 393-394, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 668] . Still, the employee may have a cause of action for fraudulent inducement to accept employment based on false representations about other aspects of the employment, such as compensation terms [Agosta v. Astor (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 596, 606, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 565] .

A person who violates Lab. Code § 970 is liable to the aggrieved person for double damages resulting from the misrepresentations. The action may be brought by the aggrieved person or by his or her assigns or successors in interest, without first establishing criminal liability [Lab. Code § 972; see Lab. Code § 971 (violation of Lab. Code § 970 constituting misdemeanor, punishable by fine and/or imprisonment)]. For a form of complaint based on an employer's misrepresentation to induce an employee to change residence, see § 249.80.

§ 249.31 Misrepresentation Preventing Subsequent Employment

Any person, or agent or officer thereof, who, after having discharged an employee from the person's service or after an employee has voluntarily left such service, by any misrepresentation prevents or attempts to prevent the former employee from obtaining employment, is liable in a civil action to the party aggrieved for treble damages [Lab. Code §§ 1050, 1054]. Additionally, any person who knowingly causes, suffers, or permits an agent, superintendent, manager, or employee to do so or who fails to take all reasonable steps within his or her power to prevent such acts is also liable in a civil action for treble damages [Lab. Code §§ 1052, 1054]. Criminal penalties also apply to violations of these provisions [see Lab. Code §§ 1050, 1052].

An action under Lab. Code § 1050 applies only to misrepresentations made to prospective employers other than defendant. It does not apply to misrepresentations made by the defendant's employees to other employees of the defendant [Kelly v. General Telephone Co. (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 278, 288-289, 186 Cal. Rptr. 184] . By its literal terms, Lab. Code § 1050 does not apply if the employee is still employed by the defendant at the time the misrepresentation was made [Lab. Code § 1050].

Lab. Code § 1050 refers to misrepresentation that "prevents or attempts to prevent the former employee from obtaining employment." It is not clear whether this language encompasses misrepresentation causing discharge from subsequent employment. Inasmuch as a discharge prevents obtaining continuance of the employment, the misrepresentation is arguably encompassed by the language in question. For a case involving an employer's wrongful interference with his or her former employee's subsequent employment, see Blender v. Superior Court (1942) 55 Cal. App. 2d 24, 26, 130 P.2d 179 .

Nothing in Lab. Code §§ 1050-1057 prevents an employer, or an agent, employee, superintendent, or manager of an employer, from furnishing a truthful statement concerning the reason for the discharge of an employee or of the reason why the employee voluntarily left the service of the employer, on special request for such a statement [Lab. Code § 1053]. However, a statement that furnishes any mark, sign, or other means conveying information different from that expressed by the words therein, or that was given without a special request therefor is prima facie evidence of a violation of Lab. Code §§ 1050 and 1052 [Lab. Code § 1053].

The privileges of Civ. Code § 47 that are available to a defendant in a defamation action also apply in actions for violation of Lab. Code §§ 1050 or 1052 [see O'Shea v. General Telephone Co. (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 1040, 1047, 238 Cal. Rptr. 715] . For a discussion of privileges in the context of a defamation action, see § 249.22[3][b] and Ch. 340, Libel and Slander, § 340.50 et seq.

In addition to the treble damages granted under Lab. Code § 1054, if malice is established, punitive damages may be awarded under Civ. Code § 3294]. The plaintiff may not, however, recover both punitive damages and treble damages and is limited to either treble damages or untrebled damages plus punitive damages [Marshall v. Brown (1983) 141 Cal. App. 3d 408, 418-419, 190 Cal. Rptr. 392] .

The civil relief granted by Lab. Code § 1054 is provided in addition to and apart from the criminal penalties applying to violations of Lab. Code 1050-1052, and the actions may be brought without first establishing any criminal liability under Lab. Code §§ 1050-1057 [Lab. Code § 1054]. For a form of complaint based on a former employer preventing a former employee from obtaining employment by the employer's misrepresentation, see § 249.81.

§ 249.32 Things Acquired by Employee by Virtue of Employment

Everything that an employee acquires by virtue of his or her employment, except the compensation that is due him or her from the employment, belongs to the employer. This is true whether the thing was acquired lawfully or unlawfully, or during or after the expiration of the term of his employment [Lab. Code § 2860]. An employer who has been injured under this statute may obtain compensatory and injunctive relief from the offending employee [see Reid v. Mass Co., Inc. (1957) 155 Cal. App. 2d 293, 305, 308, 318 P.2d 54] . Lab. Code § 2860 has been applied principally, though not exclusively, to unfair competition carried on by former employees with the use of trade secrets and the like. Even in this context it has been narrowly employed [Williams v. Weisser (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 726, 734, 78 Cal. Rptr. 542] . Additionally, the section must be interpreted in conformity with the established rule that business information acquired by an employee that is not confidential in fact, or by agreement, is not protectable property of the employer [King v. Pacific Vitamin Corp. (1967) 256 Cal. App. 2d 841, 849, 64 Cal. Rptr. 486] . For a discussion relating to and a form of complaint alleging the misappropriation of a trade secret by a former employee, see Ch. 565, Unfair Competition, § 565.100 et seq.

§ 249.33 Competition With Employer or Diversion of Employer's Business

Courts have recognized that an employee owes "a duty of loyalty" toward his or her employer during the term of employment [see Fowler v. Varian Associates, Inc. (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 34, 41, 241 Cal. Rptr. 539] . For example, an employee has a duty tofaithfully serve the employer during working hours and not to engage in a competing business even outside of working hours [Charles T. Powner Co. v. Smith (1928) 91 Cal. App. 101, 102, 266 P. 833] . When an employee engages in a business that makes him or her a competitor of the employer, no matter how much or how little time is devoted to it, there is an interest against this duty and therefore a violation of the employment contract, even if the agreement does not contain a noncompetition provision [Puritas Laundry Co. v. Green (1911) 15 Cal. App. 654, 660, 115 P. 660] .

Corporate officers stand in a fiduciary relationship with the corporation and are not permitted to use their position of trust to further their own objectives [Bancroft-Whitney Co. v. Glen (1966) 64 Cal. 2d 327, 345, 49 Cal. Rptr. 825, 411 P.2d 921] . Thus, when a corporate officer competes with the corporation prior to terminating his or her relationship with the corporation, without disclosing this fact to the corporation, he or she may be liable for breach of fiduciary duty [see Sequoia Vacuum Systems v. Stransky (1964) 229 Cal. App. 2d 281, 287-288, 40 Cal. Rptr. 203] . For discussion relating to a corporate officer's duty to avoid competing with his or her corporation and a form of complaint for breach of fiduciary duty see Ch. 167, Corporations: Directors and Management .

By statute, an employee who has any business to transact on his or her own account that is similar to that entrusted to the employee by his or her employer must give preference to the business of the employer [Lab. Code § 2863]. Thus, if an employee transacts the business of the employer for his or her own profit, the employer is entitled to those profits [Sumner v. Nevin (1906) 4 Cal. App. 347, 350, 87 P. 1105] .

In the absence of an enforceable noncompetition agreement or any actual or threatened misappropriation of trade secrets, a California court will not apply the so-called doctrine of inevitable disclosure to enjoin a former employee from working for a competing employer. As applied in some jurisdictions, the "doctrine of inevitable disclosure" allows a plaintiff to establish a claim of trade-secret misappropriation by demonstrating that the defendant's new employment will inevitably lead him or her to rely on the plaintiff's trade secrets [see, e.g., PepsiCo, Inc. v. Redmond (7th Cir. 1995) 54 F.3d 1262, 1269] . In such a case, the result is not merely an injunction against the use of trade secrets, but an injunction restricting employment. However, the doctrine of inevitable disclosure has been rejected in California because it creates a de facto covenant not to compete and runs counter to the strong California public policy favoring employee mobility [Whyte v. Schlage Lock Co. (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 1443, 1458-1464, 125 Cal. Rptr. 2d 277 ; see Bus. & Prof. Code § 16600 (general prohibition against noncompetition agreements); Edwards v. Arthur Andersen LLP (2008) 44 Cal. 4th 937, 945-950, 955, 81 Cal. Rptr. 3d 282, 189 P.3d 285 (noncompetition agreement is invalid under Bus. & Prof. Code § 16600, even if narrowly drawn, unless it falls within one of statutory exceptions provided by Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 16601, 16602, 16602.5); but see Thompson v. Impaxx, Inc. (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 1425, 1429-1430, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 427 (antisolicitation covenant may be enforceable if designed to protect employer's confidential, proprietary, or trade-secret customer information); Edwards v. Arthur Andersen LLP (2008) 44 Cal. 4th 937, 946 n.4, 81 Cal. Rptr. 3d 282, 289 n.4, 189 P.3d 285 ("[W]e do not here address the applicability of the so-called trade secret exception to [Bus. & Prof. Code § 16600], as Edwards does not dispute that portion of his agreement or contend that the provision of the noncompetition agreement prohibiting him from recruiting Andersen's employees violated [Bus. & Prof. Code § 16600].")].

Generally, a former employee or other competitor of the employer incurs no liability to the employer for soliciting or hiring an at-will employee of the employer. However, liability may be imposed if the former employee or other competitor engaged in an independently wrongful act that induced the at-will employee to leave the employer. In this context, an "independently wrongful act" is one that is proscribed by some constitutional, statutory, regulatory, common-law, or other determinable legal standard [Reeves v. Hanlon (2004) 33 Cal. 4th 1140, 1148-1156, 17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 289, 95 P.3d 513 (employer may recover damages for intentional interference with at-will employment relation under same standard applicable to claims for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage)].

For discussion of contractual provisions restraining an employee from competing with his or her employer, see Ch. 565, Unfair Competition, § 565.70 et seq. For discussion and forms relating to actions against former employees for misappropriating confidential information regarding an employer's customers, see Ch. 565, Unfair Competition, § 565.100 et seq. § 249.34 Employee Negligence

[1] Generally

An employee who is negligent in the course of employment may be liable to the employer [Division of Labor Law Enforcement v. Barnes (1962) 205 Cal. App. 2d 337, 348-349, 23 Cal. Rptr. 55] . For a discussion and forms relating to an action for negligence generally, see Ch. 380, Negligence .

[2] Employee's Duty of Care

One who is employed at his or her own request to do that which is more for that person's own advantage than for that of his or her employer shall use great care and diligence therein to protect the interest of the employer [Lab. Code § 2853]. One who, for a good consideration, agrees to serve another shall perform the service and shall use ordinary care and diligence therein as long as he or she is thus employed [Lab. Code § 2854]. An employee is bound to exercise a reasonable degree of skill unless that person's employer has notice, before employing him or her, of his or her want of skill [Lab. Code § 2858]. An employee is always bound to use such skill as he or she possesses, to the extent that the same is required, for the service specified [Lab. Code § 2859].

An employee who is expressly authorized to employ a substitute is liable to his principal only for want of ordinary care in his or her selection, and the substitute is directly responsible to the principal employer [Lab. Code § 2864].

[3] Liability of Employee to Employer

An employee who is guilty of a culpable degree of negligence is liable to his or heremployer for the damage thereby caused to the employer [Lab. Code § 2865; see Civ. Code § 3333 (measure of damages for breach of obligation not arising from contract)]. "Culpable degree of negligence," as that term is used in Lab. Code § 2865, has been interpreted to mean the violation or disregard of the duty that an employee owes to his or her employer pursuant to the obligations imposed by Lab. Code §§ 2850-2865. Thus, in the case of a gratuitous employee, he or she is guilty of a culpable degree of negligence when he or she is guilty of gross negligence [Dahl-Beck Electric Co. v. Rogge (1969) 275 Cal. App. 2d 893, 907, 80 Cal. Rptr. 440 ; see Lab. Code § 2850]. In the case of an employee for consideration, he or she is guilty of a culpable degree of negligence when he or she fails to use ordinary care, consistent with the degree of skill required and to be used as provided in Lab. Code § 2858 (duty to exercise reasonable degree of skill) and Lab. Code § 2859 (duty to use skill possessed) [Dahl-Beck Electric Co. v. Rogge (1969) 275 Cal. App. 2d 893, 907, 80 Cal. Rptr. 440 ; see also discussion at [2], above].

No employer is permitted to make any deduction from the wage of an employee for any cash shortage, breakage, or loss of equipment, notwithstanding any contract or arrangement to the contrary, unless it can be shown that the shortage, breakage, or loss is caused by a dishonest or willful act, or by the gross negligence of the employee [8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11010-11150, P 8 (Cal. Wage Orders); see Kerr's Catering Service v. Department of Industrial Relations (1962) 57 Cal. 2d 319, 329, 19 Cal. Rptr. 492, 369 P.2d 20 (upholding substantially similar provision of former wage orders); but see Barnhill v. Robert Saunders & Co. (1981) 125 Cal. App. 3d 1, 6, 177 Cal. Rptr. 803 (holding that employer may not deduct debt owed by employee from employee's final paycheck)]. For a discussion of deductions by an employer from an employee's wages, see Ch. 250, Employment Law: Wage and Hour Disputes, § 250.20.

For further discussion relating to the measure of damages in an action for negligence, see Ch. 177, Damages, § 177.40 et seq.

[4] Gratuitous Employee

One who, without consideration, undertakes to do a service for another is not bound to perform the same, but if he or she actually enters on the performance of it, he or she shall use at least slight care and diligence therein [Lab. Code § 2850]. One who, by his or her own special request, induces another to entrust him or her with the performance of a service shall perform the same fully; in other cases, one who undertakes a gratuitous service may relinquish it at any time [Lab. Code § 2851].

A "gratuitous employee" who accepts a written power of attorney shall act under it as long as it remains in force, or until he or she gives notice to his "employer" that he or she will not do so [Lab. Code § 2852].

§ 249.35 Breach of Personal Service Contract

[1] General Limitation on Enforcement

A contract to render personal service, other than a contract of apprenticeship as provided in Lab. Code §§ 3070-3098, may not be enforced against the employee beyond seven years from the commencement of service under the contract [Lab. Code § 2855(a)].

Any contract, otherwise valid, to perform or render service of a special, unique, unusual, extraordinary, or intellectual character, which gives it peculiar value and the loss of which can not be reasonable or adequately compensated in damages in an action at law, may nevertheless be enforced against the person contracting to render the service, for a term not to exceed seven years from the commencement of service under the contract. If the employee voluntarily continues to serve beyond that time, the contract may be referred to as affording a presumptive measure of the compensation [Lab. Code § 2855(a); Porporato v. Devincenzi (1968) 261 Cal. App. 2d 670, 676-677, 68 Cal. Rptr. 210 (complaint for quasi-specific performance to devise property based on consideration of peculiar personal services as sufficient to withstand demurrer)].

[2] Exception for Phonorecord Contracts

Notwithstanding Lab. Code § 2855(a), discussed at [1], above, if the contract is to render personal service in the production of phonorecords in which sounds are first fixed as defined in 17 U.S.C. § 101, special rules apply. Specifically, before an employee who is a party to the phonorecord contract may invoke Lab. Code § 2855(a), he or she must first give written notice to the employer in accordance with Code Civ. Proc. § 1020, specifying that the employee from and after a future date will no longer render service under the contract by reason of Lab. Code § 2855(a). Any party to the contract has the right to recover damages for breach of contract, including damages from the failure to render all of the required personal service in the production of a specified quantity of phonorecords [Lab. Code § 2855(b)].

[3] Specific Performance

Generally, an obligation to render personal service or to employ another in personal service cannot be specifically enforced [Civ. Code § 3390(1), (2); Lyon v. Goss (1942) 19 Cal. 2d 659, 674-675, 123 P. 2d 11] . Courts have reasoned that enforcement of these contracts may conflict with constitutional prohibitions against involuntary servitude and that they may be inconvenient or impossible to enforce [Poultry Producers etc. v. Barlow (1922) 189 Cal. 278, 288-289, 208 P. 93] .

For further discussion and a form of affirmative defense for use in an answer to a complaint for specific performance, see Ch. 528, Specific Performance .

[4] Injunction

As discussed at § [3], above, an obligation to render personal services cannot be specifically enforced [Civ. Code § 3390(1)], and ordinarily an injunction cannot be granted to prevent the breach of a contract that is not specifically enforceable [see Civ. Code § 3423(e); Code Civ. Proc. § 526(b)(5)]. However, an injunction may be granted to prevent the breach of a contract in writing for the rendition of personal services from one to another if the promised service is of a special, unique, unusual, extraordinary, or intellectual character, which gives it peculiar value, the loss of which cannot be reasonably or adequately compensated in damages in an action at law, and if the compensation for the personal services is as follows [Civ. Code § 3423(e)]:

(1) Regarding contracts entered into on or before December 31, 1993, the minimum compensation provided in the contract for the personal services is at the rate of six thousand dollars ($6,000) per annum.

(2) Regarding contracts entered into on or after January 1, 1994, the criteria of either (A) or (B), below, are satisfied:

(A) The compensation is as follows:

(i) The minimum compensation provided in the contract is at the rate of nine thousand dollars ($9,000) per annum for the first year of the contract, twelve thousand dollars ($12,000) per annum for the second year of the contract, and fifteen thousand dollars ($15,000) per annum for the third to seventh years, inclusive, of the contract.

(ii) In addition, after the third year of the contract, there has actually been paid for the services through and including the contract year during which the injunctive relief is sought, over and above the minimum contractual compensation specified in clause (i), the amount of fifteen thousand dollars ($15,000) per annum during the fourth and fifth years of the contract, and thirty thousand dollars ($30,000) per annum during the sixth and seventh years of the contract. As a condition to petitioning for an injunction, amounts payable under this clause may be paid at any time prior to seeking injunctive relief.

(B) The aggregate compensation actually received for the services provided, under a contract that does not meet the criteria of subparagraph (A), is at least 10 times the applicable aggregate minimum amount specified in clauses (i) and (ii) of subparagraph (A) through and including the contract year during which the injunctive relief is sought. As a condition to petitioning for an injunction, amounts payable under this subparagraph may be paid at any time prior to seeking injunctive relief.

Compensation paid in any contract year in excess of the minimums specified by Civ. Code § 3423(e)(2)(A) or (B) reduces the compensationotherwise required to be paid under those provisions in any subsequent contract years [Civ. Code § 3423(e)(3)]. For further discussion and a complaint enjoining a breach of a personal services contract, see Ch. 528, Specific Performance . For a discussion and forms relating to injunctions generally, see Ch. 303, Injunctions .

[5] Accounting by Employee

An employee is required to render just accounts of all transactions in the course of his or her service, as often as is reasonable. The employee must also give prompt notice, without demand, of everything that the employee receives for the account of the employer [Lab. Code § 2861].

§ 249.43 Decisions

[1] At Will Employment

Summary judgment for employer proper in wrongful discharge action based on breach of employment contract, when plaintiff conceded that defendant never told her she could be terminated only for cause, discharge was conducted as part of legitimate reduction in work force, and plaintiff had received unfavorable performance evaluations. Schneider v. TRW, Inc. (9th Cir. 1991) 938 F.2d 986, 993

Application of at will rule depends on actual existence of employment relationship; employer cannot defend breach of contract action by prospective employee by demonstrating that employment would have been "at will." Comeaux v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Co. (9th Cir. 1990) 915 F.2d 1264, 1270

Employment contract stating that employment is "at will" and terminable "at any time" unambiguously creates at-will employment relationship, even if it does not also state that termination can be without cause. Dore v. Arnold Worldwide, Inc. (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 384, 389-393, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 668

Unless otherwise agreed to by the parties, a contract of indefinite duration is generally terminable at will. Jennings v. Marralle (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 121, 129, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275, 876 P.2d 1074

Integrated at will agreement precludes implied contract for termination for cause. Haggard v. Kimberly Quality Care, Inc. (1995) 39 Cal. App. 4th 508, 521, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16

Signed acknowledgment that employment is at will can be basis for summary judgment against plaintiff on implied contract claim. Camp v. Jeffer, Mangels, Butler & Marmaro (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 620, 629-630, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 329

Employer's rejection of specific term of employment during negotiations, and stock option agreement reserving employer's right to terminate with or without good cause, establishes at will employment as matter of law. Rochlis v. Walt Disney Co. (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 201, 211-212, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 793

Implied promise may supersede previous at will agreement embodied in non-integrated document. McLain v. Great American Ins. Companies (1989) 208 Cal. App. 3d 1476, 1483-1487, 256 Cal. Rptr. 863

Exercise of First Amendment rights are not dependent on one's tenure or status as at will officer or employee. Young v. County of Marin (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 863, 869, 241 Cal. Rptr. 169 (reversing dismissal of public employee's complaint for wrongful termination, because dismissal arose from her exercise of constitutional rights of free speech)

Public employer as prohibited from disciplining or discharging public employee for expressive conduct protected by U.S. Const., amends. I and XIV; however, speech that results in disruption, materially interferes with employment activities, or impairs discipline as not protected by constitutional prohibition. Franklin v. Leland Stanford Junior University (1985) 172 Cal. App. 3d 322, 336, 342, 218 Cal. Rptr. 228

Written employment contract under which employee could be terminated at will precludes, as matter of law, contradictory implied promise to retain him until retirement. Malmstrom v. Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 299, 231 Cal. Rptr. 820

Language in letter of understanding, in which employer stated, "We look forward to a long, pleasant, and mutually satisfactory relationship with you," purported by employee to establish promise of termination only for cause, constitutes merely hopeful and polite salutation. Hillsman v. Sutter Community Hospitals (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d 743, 748, 750, 200 Cal. Rptr. 605

Application of Lab. Code § 2922 (employment contract terminable at will) to plaintiff's termination is not unconstitutional denial of property right in continued employment. Shapiro v. Wells Fargo Realty Advisors (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 467, 483, 199 Cal. Rptr. 613

Written employment policy may be basis to rebut presumption of at will employment. Shapiro v. Wells Fargo Realty Advisors (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 467, 481-482, 199 Cal. Rptr. 613 (finding, however, that under facts of case plaintiff did not produce any written document showing any status other than at will employment)

Employment-at will presumption may be rebutted by evidence of promise by employer that employee could be terminated only for cause. Rabago-Alvarez v. Dart Industries, Inc. (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 91, 96-97, 127 Cal. Rptr. 222 ; Drzewiecki v. H & R Block, Inc. (1972) 24 Cal. App. 3d 695, 703-704, 101 Cal. Rptr. 169

[2] Constructive Discharge

Replacing employee with younger worker, moving to smaller office, excluding from meetings and decisions did not constitute constructive termination under federal age discrimination law. Schnidrig v. Columbia Machine, Inc. (9th Cir. 1996) 80 F.3d 1406, 1411-1412

Demotion in job level, even when accompanied by reduction in pay does not constitute constructive discharge. King v. AC&R Advertising (9th Cir. 1995) 65 F.3d 764, 767

Lack of promotion, even if it is result of gender discrimination, does not by itself establish such intolerable working conditions as to support claim of constructive discharge. Cloud v. Casey (2000) 76 Cal. App. 4th 895, 902-905, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 757

Denial of training and demotion not sufficiently intolerable to avoid summary judgment on constructive discharge claim. Addy v. Bliss & Glennon (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 205, 218-219

Statute of limitations on constructive discharge action began to run when adverse employment decision was communicated to plaintiff, and not when she resigned over one year later; no intolerable acts occurred during limitations period. Regents of University of California v. Superior Court (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 1710, 1720-1723, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 919

Employee failed to establish constructive discharge; demotion, as a matter of law, not enough to compel reasonable person to resign, and working conditions were not intolerable; embarrassment about working in lower position did not convert demotion to constructive discharge, as proper focus is on working conditions and not on subjective reaction to working conditions; employer must deliberately create intolerable working conditions or must know about them and fail to remedy the situation so as to force employee to resign. Gibson v. Aro Corp. (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 1628, 1634-1640, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 882

Constructive discharge required plaintiff to plead and prove that employer either intentionally created or knowingly permitted working conditions so intolerable or aggravated at time of employee's resignation that reasonable employer would recognize that reasonable person in employee's position would be compelled to resign. Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1251, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022

Tortious constructive discharge is established by proof that: (1) actions and conditions that caused employee to resign were violative of public policy, (2) actions and conditions were so intolerable or aggravated at time of employee's resignation that reasonable person in employee's position would have resigned, and (3) facts and circumstances show that employer had actual or constructive knowledge of intolerable actions and conditions and of their impact on employee and could have remedied situation. Brady v. Elixir Industries (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 1299, 1306, 242 Cal. Rptr. 324 (modified by Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1248-1252)

Constructive discharge occurs when employer deliberately causes or allows employee's working conditions to become so intolerable that employee is forced into involuntary resignation; coerced resignation is tantamount todischarge. Smith v. Brown-Forman Distillers Corp. (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 503, 513, 241 Cal. Rptr. 916

[3] Damages

One-to-one ratio between compensatory and punitive damages was federal constitutional limit in FEHA discrimination and harassment case involving relatively low degree of reprehensibility of defendant's conduct and substantial compensatory damages award, which included substantial amount of noneconomic damages, which itself may have included punitive component. *Roby v. McKesson Corp. (Nov. 30, 2009) 47 Cal. 4th 686, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 773, 219 P.3d 749, 2009 Cal. LEXIS 12374, at *49, *63-64

For purposes of imposing punitive-damages liability on corporation for conduct of its managing agent under Civ. Code § 3294(b), "managing agent" is corporate employee who exercises substantial independent authority and judgment in making decisions that ultimately determine corporate policy; mere power to hire and fire employees is not sufficient to establish such authority. White v. Ultramar, Inc. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 563, 567, 573-577, 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 19, 981 P.2d 944

In deciding reasonableness of plaintiff's effort to mitigate damages, jury may consider employee's failure to retain comparable employment once it has been secured. Stanchfield v. Hamer Toyota, Inc. (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 1495, 1502, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 565

Court generally will not reverse factfinder's damages determination, even when there is disparity between opposing experts' estimates and there are methodological disagreements. Wanland v. Los Gatos Lodge, Inc. (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 1507, 1518-1519, 281 Cal. Rptr. 890

In action for wrongful termination in violation of public policy based on racial harassment under California Fair Employment and Housing Act (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.), employer's failure to act on employee's complaints about harassment by coworkers and retaliation for such complaints constitutes ratification, subjecting employer to punitive damages. Roberts v. Ford Aerospace & Communications Corp. (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 793, 801, 274 Cal. Rptr. 139

Award of tort damages in wrongful termination action based on breach of covenant of good faith and fair dealing is required to be reversed based on holding in Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 663, 700, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 , that such awards are improper. Carpiaux v. Peralta Community College Dist. (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 1220, 1224-1225, 264 Cal. Rptr. 208

Under California law, wrongfully discharged employee has duty to act reasonably to minimize damages flowing from wrongful discharge, and question whether injured party acted reasonably as one of fact; however, fact that former employee refused former employer-defendant's unconditional offer to reemploy as not defeating employee's right to recover damages for any period after offer was made, when there was substantial evidence to support jury's finding that reinstatement was not reasonable alternative mandated by duty to mitigate damages. Ortiz v. Bank of America Nat. Trust and Sav. Ass'n (9th Cir. 1987) 824 F.2d 692, 695

Compensatory and punitive damages are not available under Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 (29 U.S.C. §§ 621-634), but are recoverable in pendent state claim alleging breach of covenant of good faith and fair dealing. Cancellier v. Federated Dep't Stores (9th Cir. 1982) 672 F.2d 1312, 1318 , cert. denied, 459 U.S. 859 (1982)

Holding in Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 663, 700, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 , that tort remedies are not available in employment actions for breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, is retroactive in application. Newman v. Emerson Radio Corp. (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 973, 993, 258 Cal. Rptr. 592, 772 P.2d 1059

Tort remedies are unavailable for breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing in employment contracts; plaintiff is limited to recovery of contract remedies only with regard to that cause of action. Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 663, 700, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373

Former employee discharged in violation of implied employment contract is not required to mitigate damages by accepting alternative position that offered same wage and pension rates as original position, but was located far from her home, requiring her to rent extra apartment and incur other expenses. Cunningham v. Retail Clerks Union (1983) 149 Cal. App. 3d 296, 307, 196 Cal. Rptr. 769

Measure of recovery in employee's action for damages based on wrongful discharge. Carroll v. Civil Service Com. (1973) 31 Cal. App. 3d 561, 565, 107 Cal. Rptr. 557

Mitigation of damages by wrongfully discharged employee. Parker v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 176, 181-182, 182 n.5, 184, 89 Cal. Rptr. 737, 474 P.2d 689

Employee terminated in violation of Lab. Code § 923 (rights regarding labor-organization membership) is entitled to tort damages as well as injunctive relief. Wetherton v. Growers Farm Labor Ass'n (1969) 275 Cal. App. 2d 168, 175, 79 Cal. Rptr. 543 ; Glenn v. Clearman's Golden Cock Inn (1961) 48 L.R.R.M. (BNA) 2779, 192 Cal. App. 2d 793, 797, 13 Cal. Rptr. 769

Plaintiff seeking damages required to mitigate. Ash v. Soo Sing Lung (1918) 177 Cal. 356, 361-362, 170 P. 843

[4] Discovery

Plaintiff's right to production of personnel files of former coemployees is restricted by those employees' right to privacy under Cal. Const., art. I, § 1; plaintiff is required to show compelling public need for discovery of particular documents and inability to obtain documents through less intrusive means or from nonconfidential sources. Harding Lawson Associates v. Superior Court (1992) 10 Cal. App. 4th 7, 10, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 538 ; El Dorado Savings & Loan Assn. v. Superior Court (1987) 190 Cal. App. 3d 342, 345-346, 235 Cal. Rptr. 303

[5] Employment Contracts

Employee handbook and service and operations manual provisions regarding at will employment are not tantamount to express integrated agreement foreclosing evidence of contrary agreement to discharge for cause only; those provisions are factors to be considered in determining existence and content of employment agreement. Wilkerson v. Wells Fargo Bank (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 1217, 1226-1228, 261 Cal. Rptr. 185 (disapproved on other grounds in Cotran v. Rollins Hudig Hall International, Inc. (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 93, 102-103, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 900, 948 P.2d 412)

Summary judgment for employer was proper in employee's action for breach of contract because, even if employer's personnel policies became part of employment contract, plaintiff failed to show connection between employer's violation of personnel policy requiring written reprimand for absenteeism, and plaintiff's termination for unauthorized entry into restricted area to read confidential personnel materials. Burton v. Security Pacific Nat. Bank (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 972, 977-978, 243 Cal. Rptr. 277

Although covenant of good faith and fair dealing may supply requirement of good cause for termination when contract is silent or ambiguous on that subject, there is no implied covenant when written contract expressly provides that it may be terminated at will or for any reason on notice. Gerdlund v. Electronic Dispensers International (1987) 190 Cal. App. 3d 263, 277-278, 235 Cal. Rptr. 279 (agreement with nonemployee sales representative)

Contract of employment made in light of, and incorporating, provisions of Lab. Code §§ 1101-1105; if employer violates Lab. Code § 1101, employee has right of action for damages for breach of employment contract. Lockheed Aircraft Corp. v. Superior Court (1946) 28 Cal. 2d 481, 486, 171 P.2d 21

Enforcement of employment contract against professional athlete. Lemat Corp. v. Barry (1969) 275 Cal. App. 2d 671, 678-680, 80 Cal. Rptr. 240

Enforcement of employment contract against recording artist. Foxx v. Williams (1966) 244 Cal. App. 2d 223, 235-237, 52 Cal. Rptr. 896

Time limit in Lab. Code § 2855 is seven calendar years and not seven years of service. De Haviland v. Warner Bros. Pictures (1944) 67 Cal. App. 2d 225, 232, 153 P.2d 983

Words "may not" in Lab. Code § 2855 are mandatory. De Haviland v. Warner Bros. Pictures (1944) 67 Cal. App. 2d 225, 232, 153 P.2d 983

[6] Good Cause for Termination

When employee discharged for cause denies misconduct that was basis for decision to terminate, proper standard to be applied by trier of fact is not whether alleged misconduct actually happened, but rather whether employer had reasonable grounds for believing that it happened, thoroughly investigated, and otherwise acted fairly. Cotran v. Rollins Hudig Hall International, Inc. (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 93, 109, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 900, 948 P.2d 412

Point at which employee's outside activities give rise to conflict of interest, creating good cause for termination, is dependent upon particular circumstances of case, with appropriate deference to legitimate exercise of managerial discretion. Stokes v. Dole Nut Co. (1995) 41 Cal. App. 4th 285, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 673

Genuine issue of material fact existed regarding good cause for discharge, where although employer had written policy prohibiting falsification of time cards, employee presented evidence questioning whether policy was followed and uniformly applied and that it was common practice to pay employees for their expenses by adding hours to timecards. Breitman v. May Co. California (9th Cir. 1994) 37 F.3d 562, 564-565

In wrongful termination action brought by employee of 191/2 years, triable issue of material fact as existing based on whether termination for violating medical-leave policy constituted good cause, when defendant had discretion to apply exceptions to that particular policy. Walker v. Blue Cross of California (1992) 4 Cal. App. 4th 985, 994-995, 6 Cal. Rptr. 2d 184

Whether employee's performance was unacceptable and whether good cause for discharge existed as issues that may be determined on summary judgment motion. Knights v. Hewlett Packard (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 775, 780, 281 Cal. Rptr. 295

Diocese has no duty to apply good cause standard regarding renewal of school administrator's contract because of administrator's years of service or failure to receive negative evaluations since employment contract expressly provided one-year term without obligation to renew. Tollefson v. Roman Catholic Bishop (1990) 219 Cal. App. 3d 843, 855-857, 268 Cal. Rptr. 550

Summary judgment for defendant employer is improper when issue of good cause for termination of employee who was to move from California to Tennessee and was terminated prior to starting job was disputed; declarations that employee had made disparaging and demeaning remarks concerning employer as conclusions rather than evidentiary facts, and declarations that employee was inappropriately dressed on employer's premises as involving instances prior to starting date and as not set forth as reason for termination. Sheppard v. Morgan Keegan & Co. (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 61, 66-67, 266 Cal. Rptr. 784

Court as committing reversible error for excluding evidence by former bank vice president concerning bank's termination policy with regard to employee misconduct and his opinion as to whether termination of plaintiff for misconduct was consistent with such policy. Wilkerson v. Wells Fargo Bank (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 1217, 1229, 1231, 261 Cal. Rptr. 185 (disapproved on other grounds in Cotran v. Rollins Hudig Hall International, Inc. (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 93, 102-103, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 900, 948 P.2d 412)

Evidence showing that employee was fired because he objected to union contract on ground of illegality is relevant in establishing employer's lack of good cause regarding causes of action for breach of implied-in-fact contract, and breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing; however, such evidence is irrelevant absent showing that employee communicated objection to employer, pursuant to preliminary-fact requirement under Evid. Code § 403. Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 743, 757-758, 250 Cal. Rptr. 195 (Pugh II)

Depressed market conditions and corporate reorganization involving transfer of marketing operations to another state are good cause for termination of independent sales representative; courts should not interfere with legitimate exercise of managerial discretion. Clutterham v. Coachmen Industries, Inc. (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 1223, 1226-1227, 215 Cal. Rptr. 795

Articulation of just cause for discharge requires balance of employer's interest in operating business efficiently and profitably against employee's interest in maintaining employment and public's interest in maintaining proper balance between them. Crosier v. United Parcel Service, Inc. (1983) 150 Cal. App. 3d 1132, 1139, 198 Cal. Rptr. 361

Discharged managerial employee failed to meet burden of proof in showing that violation of unwritten policy against fraternization between managerial and nonmanagerial employees by cohabiting with nonmanagerial employeewas not proper cause for dismissal. Crosier v. United Parcel Service, Inc. (1983) 150 Cal. App. 3d 1132, 1139, 198 Cal. Rptr. 361

[7] Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing

Cause of action for breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing as available, even if employment relationship is "at will," when plaintiff alleges that conduct other than discharge violated covenant. Comeaux v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Co. (9th Cir. 1990) 915 F.2d 1264, 1272

Express employment agreement stating that contract is terminable at will as preventing invoking of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing to prevent enforcement of agreement. DeHorney v. Bank of America Nat. Trust and Sav. (9th Cir. 1989) 879 F.2d 459, 466-467

There is no tort of bad-faith breach of employment contract; moreover, since implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing cannot impose substantive duties or limits on parties beyond those incorporated in specific terms of their agreement, claim asserting breach of implied covenant in employment context often is either invalid (because it seeks to impose limits on employer's conduct beyond what parties agreed to) or superfluous (because it involves conduct that breached contract terms parties did agree to). Guz v. Bechtel Nat., Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 317, 348-352, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 352, 8 P.3d 1089

Since tort damages are no longer available for breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, such cause of action adds nothing to claim that also alleged breach of contract not to terminate except for good cause. Aragon-Haas v. Family Security Ins. Services, Inc. (1991) 231 Cal. App. 3d 232, 240, 282 Cal. Rptr. 233

Implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing does not change unequivocal agreement obligating parties only for one year and not requiring renewal to agreement terminable only on finding of good cause. Tollefson v. Roman Catholic Bishop (1990) 219 Cal. App. 3d 843, 855-857, 268 Cal. Rptr. 550

Triable issue of fact exists as to whether employer breached covenant of good faith and fair dealing in terminating employee before job began when employee had quit California job to move to Tennessee to take job with defendant employer. Sheppard v. Morgan Keegan & Co. (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 61, 66-67, 266 Cal. Rptr. 784

Employer commits contractual breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing by terminating employee for refusing to submit to drug test. Luck v. Southern Pacific Transportation Co. (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 1, 26, 267 Cal. Rptr. 618 , cert. denied, 498 U.S. 939

Holding in Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 663, 700, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 , that tort remedies are not available in employment actions for breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, is retroactive in application. Newman v. Emerson Radio Corp. (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 973, 993, 258 Cal. Rptr. 592, 772 P.2d 1059

plaintiff is limited to recovery of contract remedies only with regard to that cause of action. Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 663, 700, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373

Jury instructions defining "good faith" and "bad faith," which conformed to generally accepted meanings and gave jury some standards, albeit not only ones, by which to assess employer's state of mind, were not erroneous statements of law. Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 743, 763-765, 250 Cal. Rptr. 195 (Pugh II)

Elements of action for breach of implied covenant are: (1) employee's expectation of benefit from contract, (2) expectation of benefit not dependent on continuous employment relationship that can be terminated for good cause, and (3) bad faith termination coupled with wrongful intent of employer to deprive employee of that benefit of agreement. Hejmadi v. AMFAC, Inc. (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d 525, 551, 249 Cal. Rptr. 5

Summary judgment for employer was proper in employee's action for breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing when undisputed facts showed that employer investigated charge of employee's misconduct and made determination in good faith that misconduct had occurred; ability of employee to prove subsequently that employer's factual finding of misconduct was mistaken did not demonstrate that defendant lacked probable cause to believe employee committed misconduct or lacked good faith belief in truth of charge. Burton v. Security Pacific Nat. Bank (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 972, 979, 243 Cal. Rptr. 277

In private sector, covenant of good faith and fair dealing is implied in contracts of employment. Valenzuela v. State of California (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 916, 920, 240 Cal. Rptr. 45

Under special facts of case, public employee, claiming wrongful discharge, stated cause of action for breach of contract and for breach of covenant of good faith and fair dealing. Green v. City of Oceanside (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 212, 225 n.5, 239 Cal. Rptr. 470 (cautioning that as matter of law public employees do not have identical rights and remedies for wrongful termination as private employees)

Although longevity of satisfactory service is helpful to discharged employee to establish cause of action for breach of duty of fairness, that factor as not essential; breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing in employment contracts is established if employer engages in bad-faith action extraneous to contract, combined with employer's intent to frustrate employee's enjoyment of contractual rights. Prevost v. First Western Bank (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 1492, 1502, 239 Cal. Rptr. 161

Company policies are not construed as defining standards of good faith and fair dealing. Malmstrom v. Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 299, 321, 231 Cal. Rptr. 820

Concept of breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing was not extended into field of racial discrimination in employment, which has been entirely occupied by California Legislature in Gov C §§ 12900-12996. Robinson v. Hewlett-Packard Corp. (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 1108, 1124-1125, 228 Cal. Rptr. 591

Discharge of participant under group medical program for exercising right to which that beneficiary is entitled under employee benefit plan was violation of self-insured company's duty of good faith and fair dealing. Wayte v. Rollins International, Inc. (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 1, 17-18, 215 Cal. Rptr. 59

Covenant of good faith and fair dealing is implied in employment contracts; duty of fair dealing requires application of employer's rules and regulations for employee's benefit. Rulon-Miller v. International Business Machines Corp. (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 241, 247-248, 208 Cal. Rptr. 524 (disapproved by Guz v. Bechtel Nat., Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 317, 351, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 352, 8 P.3d 1089 for suggestion that implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing may impose limits on employer's termination rights beyond those expressed or implied in fact in employment contract itself; disapproved by Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 663, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 for holding that tort remedies available for breach of implied covenant)

Fellow employees are not accountable for employer's breach of implied-in-law covenant of good faith and fair dealing, but are possibly liable for wrongful interference with business relationship and wrongful inducement of breach of contract in termination of at will employee. Cleary v. American Airlines, Inc. (1980) 111 Cal. App. 3d 443, 456, 168 Cal. Rptr. 722 (disapproved by Guz v. Bechtel Nat., Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 317, 351, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 352, 8 P.3d 1089 for suggestion that implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing may impose limits on employer's termination rights beyond those expressed or implied in fact in employment contract itself; disapproved by Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 685-700, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 for holding that tort remedies available for breach of implied covenant)

Employment contracts contain implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing that neither party will do anything that will injure right of other to receive benefits of agreement. Cleary v. American Airlines, Inc. (1980) 111 Cal. App. 3d 443, 453, 168 Cal. Rptr. 722 (disapproved by Guz v. Bechtel Nat., Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 317, 351, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 352, 8 P.3d 1089 for suggestion that implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing may impose limits on employer's termination rights beyond those expressed or implied in fact in employment contract itself; disapproved by Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 685-700, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 for holding that tort remedies available for breach of implied covenant)

[8] Implied Promise to Terminate Only for Good Cause

Employee as not converting at will employment relationship into one allowing termination only for cause by showing that he or she left attractive prior employment to take new job, unless employee shows that he or she gave up prior employment only after explicitly bargaining with employer to do so in exchange for promise of termination-only-for-cause contract. Comeaux v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Co. (9th Cir. 1990) 915 F.2d 1264, 1272 n.8

Employer as impliedly promised by actions that employee would be treated fairly and not be laid off except in accordance with personnel policies and procedures. Kern v. Levolor Lorentzen, Inc. (9th Cir. 1990) 899 F.2d 772, 776

Employee's mere passage of time in employer's service, even when marked with tangible indications that employer approves employee's work, cannot alone form an implied-in-fact contract to be terminated only for good cause. Guz v. Bechtel Nat., Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 317, 341-343, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 352, 8 P.3d 1089

Implied agreement not to terminate employee except for good cause does not prevent employer from legitimately terminating employee on basis of need to eliminate employee's work unit, in absence of evidence of agreement restricting that right. Guz v. Bechtel Nat., Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 317, 338, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 352, 8 P.3d 1089

No-layoff policy, unilaterally adopted by employer, may be unilaterally discontinued, so long as employer does so after reasonable time, on reasonable notice, and without interfering with employees' vested benefits; once policy is discontinued, statutory presumption of at-will employment is applicable. Asmus v. Pacific Bell (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 1, 9-18, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 179, 999 P.2d 71

Favorable performance evaluations, merit-based salary increases, and general assurances of employee's future with employer are insufficient to create a triable issue of fact as to whether there is an implicit agreement to change the at-will nature of employment; such evidence cannot overcome statutory presumption under Lab. Code § 2922 and express statement of at-will employment in employee handbook. Horn v. Cushman & Wakefield W., Inc. (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 798, 817-819, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 459

Damages for breach of implied-in-fact employment contract were upheld when at will language in "Sales Regulations" was inserted shortly before plaintiff's termination and without plaintiff's knowledge, employment agreement was not integrated, and defendant's asserted reason for termination did not constitute good cause; principles of Pugh are applicable under facts, which included trial evidence of express and implied promises not to terminate except for good cause. Thomka v. Financial Corp. (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 877, 882-885, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 382

In wrongful termination action brought by employee of 191/2 years, existence of implied-in-fact agreement not to terminate except for good cause was triable issue of material fact; handbook language that relationship is "voluntary employment at will" does not negate plaintiff's cause of action for breach of contract, or providing complete defense to it. Walker v. Blue Cross of California (1992) 4 Cal. App. 4th 985, 994, 6 Cal. Rptr. 2d 184

Triable issue of fact existed as to whether, in terminating baseball coach, university had adhered to disciplinary procedures dictated by its policies set forth in personnel manual limiting its ability to terminate at will. Wood v. Loyola Marymount University (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 661, 671, 267 Cal. Rptr. 230

Absent written employment contract and absent evidence of implied-in-fact covenant not to terminate without good cause, plaintiff in wrongful discharge action was unable to establish covenant when plaintiff failed toproduce evidence showing longevity of employment and produced only weak and ineffective showing of employer policies indicating existence of covenant. McCabe v. General Foods Corp. (9th Cir. 1987) 811 F.2d 1336, 1339-1340

Holding in Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 673-675, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 , that statute of frauds does not bar wrongful-termination claims based on breach of oral or implied-in-fact contract not to terminate except for cause, was applicable retroactively. Newman v. Emerson Radio Corp. (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 973, 993, 258 Cal. Rptr. 592, 772 P.2d 1059

Implied-in-fact promise not to terminate except for cause was stated when (1) employee had worked for employer for over six years; (2) employer had given oral assurances of job security; (3) employer had given consistent promotions, salary increases, and bonuses; (4) employer had placed self-imposed limitations on its power to discharge at will in form of written termination guidelines; and (5) employee had signed noncompetition agreement, which was probative of intent to create continuing employment relationship. Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 681-682, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373

Statute of frauds does not bar wrongful-termination claims based on breach of oral or implied-in-fact contract not to terminate except for cause. Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 673-675, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373

Implied contract to terminate only for good cause was supported by personnel manual provisions stating that new employees could be terminated for good cause with written warning, and that employees could be terminated for excessive absence with proper warnings or for misconduct without warning. McLain v. Great American Ins. Companies (1989) 208 Cal. App. 3d 1476, 1486-1487, 256 Cal. Rptr. 863

Documents such as personnel policies, bylaws, and letters of understanding that include language limiting the employer's prerogative to terminate an employee at will were properly treated as agreements not to terminate without good cause. Prevost v. First Western Bank (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 1492, 1501-1502, 239 Cal. Rptr. 161 ; Walker v. Northern San Diego County Hospital Dist. (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 896, 903, 185 Cal. Rptr. 617

Implied-in-fact promise not to terminate employees without good cause was reflected in personnel policies and guidelines, performance evaluations, warnings, and instructions given to employees. Robinson v. Hewlett-Packard Corp. (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 1108, 1123, 228 Cal. Rptr. 591

Allegation that defendant promised plaintiff "permanent career" but later discharged him without cause, was insufficient to state cause of action for wrongful discharge based on breach of contract because, inter alia, there were no other allegations that defendant made express or implied promise not to discharge plaintiff without just cause. Newfield v. Insurance Co. of the West (1984) 156 Cal. App. 3d 440, 444-446, 203 Cal. Rptr. 9

Employee who had been employed for only three and one-half years before discharge, had signed stock option agreement defining job as at will employment, and who made conclusory allegations regarding employer's implied suggestions of continued employment and practice of discharging employees without cause, failed as matter of law to sustain burden of showing wrongful discharge on either covenant of good faith or implied contract theories. Shapiro v. Wells Fargo Realty Advisors (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 467, 479, 482, 199 Cal. Rptr. 613

Discharge without notice by union of union employee who, although not covered by collective-bargaining agreement negotiated by union for its members, had been told that terms of her employment would track collective-bargaining agreement, breach violated implied employment contract. Cunningham v. Retail Clerks Union (1983) 149 Cal. App. 3d 296, 304, 196 Cal. Rptr. 769

Jury in wrongful discharge case had duty to determine whether or not there is express or implied-in-fact promise for continued employment absent cause for firing; factors to be considered as including employment documents, provisions regarding grievance processes, personnel practices or policies, employee's length of service, and practice of industry in which employee is engaged. Walker v. Northern San Diego County Hospital Dist. (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 896, 905, 185 Cal. Rptr. 617

Directed verdict in action for wrongful discharge was error when question of fact for jury is presented as to existence or nonexistence of express or implied-in-fact promise to continue employment absent cause for firing. Walker v. Northern San Diego County Hospital Dist. (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 896, 900, 905, 185 Cal. Rptr. 617

Appellant, fired without explanation after 32 years of service, demonstrated prima facie case of wrongful termination in violation of contract of employment, and burden of producing evidence as shifting to employer to show reason for termination. Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 324-331, 171 Cal. Rptr. 917 (Pugh I)

Employer precluded from dismissing employee at will when discharge is contrary to terms of express or implied agreement between parties. Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 322, 171 Cal. Rptr. 917 (Pugh I)

[9] Limitations Period

One year statute of limitations for personal injuries applied to action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy. Barton v. New United Motor Manufacturing, Inc. (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 1200, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 328

Action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy, governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 340, and accrued no later than time employee stopped working for employer. Funk v. Sperry Corp. (9th Cir. 1988) 842 F.2d 1129, 1133

[10] Parol Evidence Rule

Employment application and employment contract that each used language setting forth employment at will constituted integrated agreement, and employer, therefore, did not have to show good cause for termination or justify its business judgment in terminating employee as part of reduction in force. Slivinsky v. Watkins-Johnson Co. (1990) 221 Cal. App. 3d 799, 804-806, 270 Cal. Rptr. 585

Parol evidence admissible when agreement as whole was not integrated, but part relating to termination was integrated, and language used wassusceptible to both meanings proposed by the employer and employee; examination of parol evidence by court led to affirmance of lower court's finding that there was implied-in-fact requirement of good cause for termination. Wallis v. Farmers Group, Inc. (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 718, 730-731, 269 Cal. Rptr. 299

Parol evidence of acknowledgment form attached to employee handbook and signed by employee, stating that policies within handbook were subject to change, was inadmissible because it was not integrated agreement, since it was missing key elements of an employment agreement and merely restated term of employment agreement as it then existed, subject only to future change. Wagner v. Glendale Adventist Medical Center (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 1379, 1388-1390, 265 Cal. Rptr. 412

[11] Preemption of Common-Law Actions

[a] California Fair Housing and Employment Act (FEHA)

Supervisor, who cannot be sued individually under the FEHA, also cannot be sued individually for violation of public policy articulated in the FEHA. Reno v. Baird (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 640, 643, 663-664, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 499, 957 P.2d 1333

Older worker discharged on basis of age has common law claim for tortious wrongful discharge by employer with five or more employees. Stevenson v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 880, 885, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888 ; 941 P.2d 1157

FEHA preempts common law claims of age discrimination against small employers. Jennings v. Marralle (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 121, 125, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275, 876 P.2d 1074

Claim for pregnancy discrimination not barred because employer too small to be subject to FEHA. Badih v. Myers (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 1289, 1291, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 229

Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA; Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.) did not preempt other state laws, including the common law, that prohibit or restrict such discrimination. Rojo v. Kliger (1990) 52 Cal. 3d 65, 73-82, 276 Cal. Rptr. 130, 801 P.2d 373 ; see Gov. Code § 12993(a)

Although employee must exhaust FEHA administrative remedy before bringing civil action under FEHA or seeking any remedies provided by FEHA, exhaustion of administrative remedy was not required before filing civil action for damages alleging nonstatutory causes of action. Rojo v. Kliger (1990) 52 Cal. 3d 65, 88, 276 Cal. Rptr. 130, 801 P.2d 373

[b] California Occupational Safety and Health Act (OSHA)

Administrative remedy available to terminated employee under Lab. Code § 6312 (regarding discrimination based on assertion of rights under Cal OSHA) was not exclusive, and did not preclude common-law wrongful discharge action. Hentzel v. Singer Co. (1982) 138 Cal. App. 3d 290, 303-304, 188 Cal. Rptr. 159

[c] California Workers' Compensation Law

Workers' compensation act did not preempt claims for intentional and negligent infliction of emotional distress where such claims arose out of conduct implicating fundamental public policies. Maynard v. City of San Jose (9th Cir. 1994) 37 F.3d 1396, 1405-1406

Plaintiff's allegations that defendant perpetrated fraud by virtue of supervisor's treatment of plaintiff leading to termination, did not exempt action for wrongful termination from purview of workers' compensation exclusivity. Kacludis v. GTE Sprint Communications Corp. (N.D. Cal. 1992) 806 F. Supp. 866, 871 (noting also that plaintiff failed to plead fraud properly)

Standard language of mandatory preprinted form used in settling workers' compensation claims-- see 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 10874--releases only those claims that are within scope of workers' compensation system, and extrinsic evidence is not admissible to show that parties intended preprinted release form to encompass claims outside scope of workers' compensation system. Claxton v. Waters (2004) 34 Cal. 4th 367, 376-377, 18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 246, 96 P.3d 496

When employee in workers' compensation proceeding has knowledge of potential FEHA claim against employer at time of executing general release that purports to settle all claims, including those outside scope of workers' compensation system, but employee has not yet initiated litigation of FEHA claim, employee has burden of expressly excepting that claim from release; in absence of such exception, and absent contrary extrinsic evidence, general language releasing all claims will bar employee from pursuing FEHA claim. Jefferson v. Cal. Dep't of Youth Auth. (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 299, 302-311, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 391, 48 P.3d 423

Employee claim for false imprisonment not preempted by worker's compensation act. Fermino v. Fedco, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 701, 723, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 18, 872 P.2d 559

Claim for intentional or negligent infliction of emotional distress was within exclusive remedy provisions of workers' compensation act, even when no physical injury or disability is alleged, so long as basic conditions of compensation are otherwise satisfied and employer's conduct neither contravenes any fundamental public policy nor exceeds risks inherent in employment relationship. Livitsanos v. Superior Court (1992) 2 Cal. 4th 744, 754-755, 7 Cal. Rptr. 2d 808, 828 P.2d 1195

Cause of action for tortious discharge in violation of public policy is not preempted by workers' compensation law. Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1101, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680

Termination of employment is "normal part of the employment" for purposes of workers' compensation exclusive remedy doctrine; civil action to recover damages for emotional injuries caused by termination of employment was preempted by workers' compensation unless injury caused by conduct not reasonably within compensation bargain. Shoemaker v. Myers (1990) 52 Cal. 3d 1, 18-20, 276 Cal. Rptr. 303, 801 P.2d 1054

Workers' compensation exclusivity rule does not bar fraud cause of action seeking emotional distress damages based on employer's false statements about company's financial stability, future plans, and job applicant'sprospects for promotion, all designed to induce applicant to accept employment. Such misrepresentations are not normal part of employment relationship or risk reasonably encompassed within compensation bargain. Lenk v. Total-Western, Inc. (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 959, 970-973, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 34

Cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress founded on sexual-orientation harassment in violation of public policy embodied in FEHA is not barred by exclusivity provisions of workers' compensation law, since such harassment is outside normal scope of employment relationship. Murray v. Oceanside Unified Sch. Dist. (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 1338, 1362-1363, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 28

Exclusivity of workers' compensation extends to intentional infliction of emotional distress by employer's work-related conduct so long as that conduct does not contravene public policy. Gibbs v. American Airlines, Inc. (1990) 74 Cal. App. 4th 1, 9-10, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 554

Labor Code § 132a provides the exclusive remedy for a claim alleging disability discrimination. Jimeno v. Mobil Oil

Corp. (9th Cir. 1995) 66 F.3d 1514, 1530 ; Langridge v. Oakland Unified School Dist. (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 664, 666, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 34

In wrongful termination and discrimination action based on plaintiff's termination allegedly because he was homosexual, issue whether compromise and release form disposing of his workers' compensation claim barred cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress was question of fact, because release was preprinted form and did not specifically enumerate those issues, and intent of parties was unclear. Delaney v. Superior Fast Freight (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 590, 599-600, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 33

Emotional distress injuries caused by termination of the plaintiff's employment are within course and scope of employment and thus civil action to recover damages for such injuries was preempted by workers' compensation. Panopulos v. Westinghouse Electric Corp. (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 660, 666, 264 Cal. Rptr. 810 ; Jenkins v. Family Health Program (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 440, 449-450, 262 Cal. Rptr. 798 ; Pichon v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 488, 495-497, 260 Cal. Rptr. 677

Employee who suffers emotional distress causing disability as result of employer's intentional conduct that is normal part of employment relationship, such as demotions, promotions, criticisms of work practices, and frictions in negotiation of grievances, was unable to avoid exclusivity of workers' compensation remedy for injuries arising out of and in course of employment (Lab. Code §§ 3600, 3601), by characterizing employer's decisions as manifestly unfair, outrageous, harassing, or intended to cause emotional disturbance resulting in disability. Cole v. Fair Oaks Fire Protection Dist. (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 148, 160, 233 Cal. Rptr. 308, 729 P.2d 743

In action for damages for wrongful termination of employment and breach of covenant of good faith and fair dealing, defendant's failure to plead bar of exclusive remedy provisions (Lab. Code § 3600) of workers' compensation law as affirmative defense (or failure to raise objection by demurrer if complaint affirmatively establishes applicability of workers' compensation remedy) constituted waiver of objection. Green v. City of Oceanside (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 212, 224, 239 Cal. Rptr. 470

Award of damages for intentional infliction of emotional distress in action by employee against city for wrongful discharge and breach of covenant of good faith and fair dealing was not barred by exclusive remedy provisions (Lab. Code § 3602) of workers' compensation law when: (1) city neither demurred to complaint on that ground nor pleaded the bar as an affirmative defense, (2) applicability of workers' compensation remedy was not established on face of complaint, and (3) trial court found there was sufficient evidence on issue to go to jury. Green v. City of Oceanside (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 212, 223-225, 224 n.4, 239 Cal. Rptr. 470

Action by employee against employer for fraudulent inducement to enter into employment contract and tortious breach of covenant of good faith and fair dealing, arising from alleged unsafe working conditions, was barred by exclusivity provisions of workers' compensation act. Spratley v. Winchell Donut House, Inc. (1987) 188 Cal. App. 3d 1408, 1417, 234 Cal. Rptr. 121

Workers' Compensation Appeals Board has exclusive authority to award relief in action under Lab. Code § 132a for wrongful discharge from employment because plaintiff sought workers' compensation for injuries received in employment; cause of action in tort for wrongful discharge was not authorized. Portillo v. G.T. Price Products, Inc. (1982) 131 Cal. App. 3d 285, 287-290, 182 Cal. Rptr. 291

[d] Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA)

State-law claim against fiduciary of ERISA-regulated benefit plan is completely preempted by ERISA, and therefore removable to federal court, if interpretation of terms of plan forms essential part of claim, and plaintiff is in essence suing only to rectify wrongful denial of benefits promised under plan. Aetna Health Inc. v. Davila (2004) 542 U.S. 200, 124 S. Ct. 2488, 159 L. Ed. 2d 312, 330

Former employee's claims for breach of contract, breach of covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and fraud, are preempted by ERISA (29 U.S.C. §§ 1001-1461), because they relate to enforcement of employee's benefit plan, and represent his attempt to force former employer to provide severance benefits. Nevill v. Shell Oil Co. (9th Cir. 1987) 835 F.2d 209, 212

Common-law wrongful termination action relating to ERISA (29 U.S.C. §§ 1001-1461) benefits are preempted by ERISA. Sorosky v. Burroughs Corp. (9th Cir. 1987) 826 F.2d 794, 799

Common-law action for wrongful discharge against employer who terminated employee solely for purpose of depriving employee of employee benefits are federally preempted to extent that benefits in question come within purview of ERISA. Johnson v. Trans World Airlines, Inc. (1983) 149 Cal. App. 3d 518, 526-528, 196 Cal. Rptr. 896

ERISA preempts claims that are based on misconduct that is identical to conduct on which ERISA claim is based. Dytrt v. Mountain State Tel. & Tel. Co. (9th Cir. 1990) 921 F.2d 889, 897

[e] Federal Banking Laws

Terminated bank president's severance pay agreement held not to violate provision of National Bank Act (12 U.S.C. § 24) providing all bank officersserve "at pleasure" of board of directors. Mardula v. Rancho Dominguez Bank (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 790, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 63

" D'Oench, Duhme doctrine" (partially codified common-law rule of estoppel that precludes borrower from asserting against FDIC defenses based on secret or unrecorded side-agreement that alters terms of facially unqualified obligations) was inapplicable factually to defense of breach of an implied-in-fact employment contract claim, when plaintiff did not impede or hinder any bank examiner to evaluate the bank's assets, nor relied on any unrecorded documents or arrangements. Thomka v. Financial Corp. (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 877, 889, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 382 (citing D'Oench, Duhme & Co. v. FDIC (1942) 315 U.S. 447, 62 S. Ct. 676, 86 L. Ed. 956 and 12 U.S.C. § 1823(e))

California courts have subject matter jurisdiction over wrongful discharge action brought by savings association employee; 12 C.F.R. § 563.39, which covers employment contracts for savings associations, does not preempt state cause of action for wrongful discharge. Thomka v. Financial Corp. (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 877, 885-887, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 382 ; Honig v. Financial Corp. of America (1992) 6 Cal. App. 4th 960, 964-965, 7 Cal. Rptr. 2d 922

[f] Labor Management Relations Act (LMRA)

LMRA does not preempt union members' claims for fraud, misrepresentation, suppression of facts, and related claim of intentional infliction of emotional distress based on employer's allegedly deliberate plan to liquidate company's assets while assuring union employees of job security and obtaining union concessions on threat to shut down otherwise, followed by liquidation of all assets and termination of employees; however, claims for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, interference with contractual relations, and interference with prospective economic advantage were preempted. Milne Employees Ass'n v. Sun Carriers (9th Cir. 1991) 960 F.2d 1401, 1405, 1418 , cert. denied, 124 L. Ed. 2d 678

Employee's wrongful termination claim based on rule deeming three-day unauthorized absence as voluntary termination was clearly dependent on terms of collective bargaining agreement, which expressly provided for employee to express grievance against any discharge or application of work rules, and was thus preempted by Section 301 of

LMRA. Harris v. Alumax Mill Products, Inc. (9th Cir. 1990) 897 F.2d 400, 402-403 , cert. denied, 498 U.S. 835

Section 301 of LMRA does not preempt wrongful termination action in which collective bargaining agreement had expired previous to employee's discharge. Overby v. Chevron USA, Inc. (9th Cir. 1989) 884 F.2d 470, 473-474

Section 301 of LMRA preempts claim in which collective bargaining agreement covered in detail conduct that would give rise to dismissal for cause. Jackson v. Southern California Gas Co. (9th Cir. 1989) 881 F.2d 638, 644-645

Wrongful termination action based on constructive discharge of employee after he was entrapped into selling drugs in the workplace was preempted by LMRA because (1) no state nonnegotiable right was involved since California has not articulated a public policy preventing parties from negotiating means by which drug problems may be dealt with in workplace, and (2) even if there had been a nonnegotiable right involved, resort to collective bargaining agreement was necessary to resolve wrongful discharge actions involved. Moreau v. San Diego Transit Corp. (1989) 210 Cal. App. 3d 614, 628, 258 Cal. Rptr. 647

Test for preemption of state-law claims under Labor Management Relations Act (29 U.S.C. §§ 141-187) § 301 was whether application of state law requires interpretation of collective-bargaining agreement. Lingle v. Norge Division, Magic Chef (1988) 486 U.S. 399, 108 S. Ct. 1877, 100 L. Ed. 2d 410, 423

Labor Management Relations Act § 301 (29 U.S.C. § 185(a)) preempted former employee's cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress, when claim arose out of her discharge for theft and gross dereliction and duty, and employer's conduct in investigation leading up to it; determination of validity of claim required determination whether discharge was justified under terms of collective-bargaining agreement. Newberry v. Pacific Racing Ass'n (9th Cir. 1988) 854 F.2d 1142, 1149-1150

Labor Management Relations Act § 301 (29 U.S.C. § 185(a)) preempted former employee's cause of action for breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, arising out of her discharge for theft and dereliction of duty, because her employment contract was collective-bargaining agreement, and action required interpretation of specific language of agreement's terms. Newberry v. Pacific Racing Ass'n (9th Cir. 1988) 854 F.2d 1142, 1147-1148

Former employee's claims for conspiracy and infliction of emotional distress, based on defendants' alleged failure to process grievance claim, filing of false reports regarding work infractions, removal of employee as union delegate, and termination without cause, was preempted by Labor Management Relations Act § 301 (29 U.S.C. § 185(a)), because they were not based on non-negotiable state-law rights, and were inextricably intertwined with consideration of terms of collective-bargaining agreement. Hyles v. Mensing (9th Cir. 1988) 849 F.2d 1213, 1215-1216

[g] National Labor Relations Act (NLRA)

National Labor Relations Act does not preempt state-law causes of action on matters of local concern, such as regulation of occupational health and safety. Inter-Modal Rail Employees Ass'n v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 918, 924-928, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 60

National Labor Relations Act preempted employer's state court action seeking injunctive relief setting conditions upon how union representatives could contact employees on the job because the state court action created a risk of interference with National Labor Relations Board's jurisdiction. Hillhaven Oakland Nursing and Rehabilitation Center (1996) 41 Cal. App. 4th 846, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 11

Causes of action for breach of contract and bad faith denial of existence of contract based on denial of tenure were preempted by NLRA because plaintiff was in effect seeking to enforce expired collective bargaining agreement in bringing action. McGough v. University of San Francisco (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 1577, 1586, 263 Cal. Rptr. 404

NLRB had exclusive jurisdiction over wrongful discharge claim, filed in state court, that alleged federal labor law violations. Bassett v. Attebery (1986) 180 Cal. App. 3d 288, 290, 225 Cal. Rptr. 399

NLRB did not have exclusive jurisdiction over employee's claim of retaliatory discharge for filing worker's compensation claim because there was no evidence that plaintiff acted with or on authority of other employees in pursuing worker's compensation claim, and thus there was no "concerted action" necessary to bring claim within NLRB jurisdiction. Meyer v. Byron Jackson, Inc. (1984) 161 Cal. App. 3d 402, 410-412, 207 Cal. Rptr. 663

Wrongful termination action based on Lab. Code §§ 921 and 923 is preempted by National Labor Relations Act (29 U.S.C. §§ 151-169), which gives exclusive jurisdiction to NLRB when covered employer wrongfully terminates employee because of union-related activities, unless NLRB declines to issue complaint. Henry v. Intercontinental Radio, Inc. (1984) 155 Cal. App. 3d 707, 711-715, 202 Cal. Rptr. 328

[h] Railway Labor Act (RLA)

RLA does not preempt wrongful termination action brought by nonunion employee who is not subject to collective bargaining agreement. Luck v. Southern Pacific Transportation Co. (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 1, 11-12, 267 Cal. Rptr. 618 , cert. denied, 498 U.S. 939

Claims for wrongful termination in breach of public policy and claims brought under the state whistleblower statute are not preempted by RLA. Hawaiian Airlines, Inc. v. Norris (1994) 512 U.S. 246, 114 S. Ct. 2239, 2251, 129 L. Ed. 2d 203

Claim for retaliatory discharge is a private right of action not preempted by RLA. Fennessey v. Southwest Airlines (9th Cir. 1996) 91 F.3d 1359, 1362

[12] Related Causes of Action

Employees have reasonable expectation under widely held social norms that their employer will not install video equipment capable of monitoring and recording their activities--personal and work-related--behind closed doors without their knowledge or consent; in this case, however, intrusion was not highly offensive or sufficiently serious to constitute privacy violation, since actual surveillance was drastically limited in nature and scope (no audio, and no surveillance during business hours), exempting plaintiffs from its reach, and defendants were motivated by strong countervailing concerns that included providing wholesome environment for abused children in their care. Hernandez v. Hillsides, Inc. (2009) 47 Cal. 4th 272, 286-300, 97 Cal. Rptr. 3d 274, 211 P.3d 1063

If employment contract expressly provides for at-will employment, action for fraudulent inducement of employment contract may not be maintained on basis of alleged false representation regarding duration of employment; in such case employee will be unable to show justifiable reliance on false representation. Dore v. Arnold Worldwide, Inc. (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 384, 393-394, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 668 .

Employer may recover damages from third party who intentionally engages in independently wrongful act--one that is proscribed by some constitutional, statutory, regulatory, common-law, or other ascertainable legal standard--that induces at-will employee to leave employer. Reeves v. Hanlon (2004) 33 Cal. 4th 1140, 1152-1153, 17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 289, 95 P.3d 513

To establish "willful and unprovoked physical act of aggression" by coworker under Lab. Code § 3601(a)(1) so as to avoid exclusivity of workers' compensation remedy, injured employee must prove that coworker acted with intent to injure. Torres v. Parkhouse Tire Serv., Inc. (2001) 26 Cal. 4th 995, 1004, 111 Cal. Rptr. 2d 564, 30 P.3d 57]

Tort damages available where action based on allegation that defendant employer fraudulently induced employee to enter employment contract, and claim does not depend on whether defendant's promise is ultimately enforceable as a contract. Lazar v. Superior Court (1996) 12 Cal. 4th 631, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 377

Tort damages for fraud in context of wrongful termination action are recoverable only if misrepresentation was independent of termination of plaintiff's employment. Hunter v. Up-Right, Inc. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 1174, 1184-1186, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 8, 864 P.2d 88

In complaint for breach of employment contract, cause of action for slander per se, based on disparaging remarks made by supervisors about plaintiff's qualifications, was subject to defenses of privilege under Civ. Code § 47(c) as well as common-law "manager's privilege" (usually asserted in action for interference with prospective economic advantage). Kacludis v. GTE Sprint Communications Corp. (N.D. Cal. 1992) 806 F. Supp. 866, 872

In defamation action based on performance evaluation, nonsuit affirmed because statements were not actionable, i.e., did not accuse employee of criminal conduct, lack of integrity, dishonesty, incompetence, or reprehensible personal characteristics or behavior; libel suits based on communications in employment performance reviews as judicially disfavored, particularly when plaintiff attempts to avoid Foley. Jensen v. Hewlett-Packard Co. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 958, 964, 969-971, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 83

Damages for emotional distress are ordinarily not recoverable in action for negligent misrepresentation when injury other than emotional distress is only economic. Branch v. Homefed Bank (1992) 6 Cal. App. 4th 793, 798, 8 Cal. Rptr. 2d 182

Cause of action for fraudulent concealment was based on employer's fraudulent representation inducing currently employed independent sales representatives to sign agreements providing for termination without cause, purportedly as mere formality of company reorganization, when employer intended to, and did in fact subsequently terminate them. Marketing West, Inc. v. Sanyo Fisher (USA) Corp. (1992) 6 Cal. App. 4th 603, 612-614, 7 Cal. Rptr. 2d 859

If a plaintiff's cause of action for wrongful constructive discharge in breach of employment contract or the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing fails, plaintiff is precluded from recovering tort damages based on related causes of action (intentional and negligent infliction of emotional distress, defamation, intentional interference with contractual relations, conspiracy)that are founded on same conduct of defendant that formed basis for wrongful constructive discharge claim. Soules v. Cadam, Inc. (1991) 2 Cal. App. 4th 390, 404, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 6

Allegations that employer acted unreasonably or "should have" acted differently during precursor events to termination, such as allegation that employer negligently supervised harassing employee, did not establish tort of negligence independent of discharge itself, and does not turn contractual wrongful discharge action into tort claim. Hine v. Dittrich (1991) 228 Cal. App. 3d 59, 64-65, 278 Cal. Rptr. 330

Plaintiffs were entitled to recover damages incurred as result of defendant employer'smisrepresentation that plaintiffs would receive training opportunities if they waived right to sue for alleged racial discrimination; evidence as supporting inference that representation, made with undisclosed knowledge that plaintiffs were likely to be laid off, was made without intention to perform. Miller v. Fairchild Industries, Inc. (9th Cir. 1989) 885 F.2d 498, 509-510 , cert. denied, 494 U.S. 1056

Summary judgment for employer was properly granted on cause of action for libel when court found no evidence to support claim; claim of libel was defeated when undisputed facts show that substance of alleged statement was true.

Newberry v. Pacific Racing Ass'n (9th Cir. 1988) 854 F.2d 1142, 1150-1151

Comments made by representative of employer to newspaper reporter after employee's discharge, stating that former employee had had problems handling money, and that some employees had been discharged because of "sloppy bookkeeping," did not constitute outrageous conduct in support of cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress. Newberry v. Pacific Racing Ass'n (9th Cir. 1988) 854 F.2d 1142, 1150 (also finding that evidence supported truth of comments)

Former employee's cause of action for defamation, arising from employer's alleged filing of false work-infraction reports and testimony during grievance proceeding concerning collective-bargaining agreement, as privileged; statements made in grievance proceedings arising under collective-bargaining agreement to persons having legitimate interests in them are privileged as matter of law, and do not support state tort claim. Hyles v. Mensing (9th Cir. 1988) 849 F.2d 1213, 1217

Former employee's claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress was not supported by allegations that her supervisor repeatedly told her she was over forty, senile, and a liar; mere insulting language, without more, does not ordinarily constitute outrageous conduct. Yurick v. Superior Court (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 1116, 1123-1130, 257 Cal. Rptr. 665

Employer's conduct was not "outrageous" to support cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress when conduct consisted of (1) presenting employee with termination package that she accepted, (2) withdrawing that offer and retaining her as employee, (3) telling her a week later that she would be terminated, (4) providing her with less favorable terminationpackage, and (5) assigning her "menial work" prior to her termination. Trerice v. Blue Cross of California (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 878, 883-885, 257 Cal. Rptr. 338

Wrongful discharge supports action for intentional infliction of emotional distress when employer's behavior was extreme and outrageous, going beyond all possible bounds of decency; extreme, outrageous, and atrocious conduct was evidenced by employer's deception, flagrant disregard of company policies, and denial of employee's choice, resulting in humiliation and degradation of employee. Rulon-Miller v. International Business Machines Corp. (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 241, 254-255, 208 Cal. Rptr. 524

[13] Religious Organizations

Wrongful termination actions pertaining to actions taken by a legally constituted church or religious organization as within authority of that church or religious organization and civil courts as not exercising jurisdiction over such transaction actions that are peculiarly within inner workings of such religious organization. Higgins v. Maher (1989) 210 Cal. App. 3d 1168, 1173-1176, 258 Cal. Rptr. 757 , cert. denied, 493 U.S. 1080

[14] Statutory Prohibitions Against Wrongful Discharge

Title VII anti-retaliation provision, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-3(a), protects employee who opposes unlawful discrimination by speaking out about it in answering questions during employer's internal investigation, even if that employee did not report discrimination on his or her own initiative. Crawford v. Metropolitan Gov't (2009) -- U.S. --, 129 S. Ct. 846, 172 L. Ed. 2d 650, 656-659

42 U.S.C. § 1981 encompasses claims of retaliation on basis of race, including retaliation against person for complaining about violation of another person's rights under § 1981. CBOCS W., Inc. v. Humphries (2008) 553 U.S. 442, 128 S. Ct. 1951, 1954-1955, 1961, 170 L. Ed. 2d 864, 869, 877

29 U.S.C. § 633a(a), which prohibits "discrimination based on age" in federal employment, includes prohibition of retaliation based on filing of age-discrimination complaint. Gomez-Perez v. Potter (2008) 553 U.S. 474, 128 S. Ct. 1931, 1935-1936, 1943, 170 L. Ed. 2d 887, 893-894, 902

California's whistleblower protection laws, e.g., Lab. Code § 1102.5, are not preempted by Friendship, Commerce, and Navigation treaties, which confer on foreign employers right to choose nationality of executive employees but do not confer immunity from domestic employment laws that do not interfere with that right. Ventress v. Japan Airlines (9th Cir. 2007) 486 F.3d 1111, 1115-1118

Plaintiff who was fired in retaliation for attempting to report environmental violations while working as civilian hazardous waste overseer in naval shipyard, stated cause of action for wrongful discharge based on retaliation for whistleblowing, under 42 U.S.C. § 9610; under "dual motive" test, once employee shows that illegal motives played some part in the discharge, employer that asserts that discharge was justified must prove that it would have discharged employee even if he or she had not engaged in protected conduct. Pogue v. United States Dep't of Labor (9th Cir. 1991) 940 F.2d 1287, 1289-1291

Federal court judgment in Title VII claim for employment discrimination is res judicata bar to subsequent state-law wrongful termination claim based on same facts. Gamble v. General Foods Corp. (1991) 229 Cal. App. 3d 893, 896, 280 Cal. Rptr. 457

Individual discharged in violation of Railway Labor Act (45 U.S.C. §§ 151-188) is entitled to bring private civil action for damages and reinstatement. Burke v. Compania Mexicana de Aviacion, S.A. (9th Cir. 1970) 433 F.2d 1031, 1033-1034

Discharge of employee, allegedly for requesting presence of attorney at performance evaluations, was not violative of Lab. Code § 923 (granting rights regarding labor-organization membership). Robinson v. Hewlett-Packard Corp. (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 1108, 1130-1131, 228 Cal. Rptr. 591

Protections under California Occupational Safety and Health Act (Lab. Code §§ 6300-6711) are not dependent on whether Cal OSHA standard ultimately is found to have been violated; protection is afforded when employee complains in good faith about working conditions reasonably believed to be unsafe. Hentzel v. Singer Co. (1982) 138 Cal. App. 3d 290, 299, 188 Cal. Rptr. 159

Termination in violation of Lab. Code § 923 (granting rights regarding labor-organization membership) is actionable if it was "primarily" due to employee's union affiliation; union affiliation is not required to be sole motive for termination in order for liability to attach. Escamilla v. Marshburn Brothers (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d 472, 483, 121 Cal. Rptr. 891

Lab. Code § 923 allows individual employee to designate attorney or other individual to represent him or her in negotiating terms and conditions of employment; discharge based on exercise of that right is a violation of Lab. Code § 923. Montalvo v. Zamora (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 69, 75, 86 Cal. Rptr. 401

Lab. Code § 923, granting workers freedom regarding labor-organization membership, prohibits employer from terminating employee solely because of unionmembership or activity. Glenn v. Clearman's Golden Cock Inn (1961) 48 L.R.R.M. (BNA) 2779, 192 Cal. App. 2d 793, 798, 13 Cal. Rptr. 769

Former Elec. Code § 695 (now see Elec. Code § 12312), prohibiting suspension or termination of employee because of absence from work while serving as election officer on election day, is basis for common-law wrongful termination action. Kouff v. Bethlehem-Alameda Shipyard (1949) 90 Cal. App. 2d 322, 324-325, 202 P.2d 1059

[15] Theories of Liability

Three distinct theories of liability have developed from wrongful discharge of employee: (1) tort cause of action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy; (2) cause of action for employer's breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing; and (3) cause of action for employer's breach of implied-in-fact covenant to terminate only for good cause. Robinson v. Hewlett-Packard Corp. (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 1108, 1120-1121, 228 Cal. Rptr. 591

Causes of action for termination in violation of fundamental principles of public policy and termination in breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing are available to both at will employees and employees hired for specified term. Koehrer v. Superior Court (1986) 181 Cal. App. 3d 1155, 1166, 1172, 226 Cal. Rptr. 820 (disapproved in Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 688-700, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 for its holding that tortious breach of implied covenant lies for breach of contract term as opposed to denial of existence of contract, and for supporting recovery of tort damages for breach of employment contract)

Grounds for cause of action for wrongful discipline. Garcia v. Rockwell International Corp. (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 1556, 1561, 232 Cal. Rptr. 490 (disapproved in Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1093, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680 , for stating that public policy underlying wrongful discharge claim need not be rooted in statutory or constitutional provision)

[16] Tortious Discharge in Violation of Public Policy

Truck driver who was discharged for refusing to operate trailer under erroneous impression that it was not legally registered, did not state cause of action for wrongful discharge based on refusal to violate law, because it would have been legal to drive trailer and no fundamental public policy concern was involved. DeSoto v. Yellow Freight Systems, Inc. (9th Cir. 1992) 957 F.2d 655, 657-659

In wrongful termination actions based on violation of public policy, public policy must derive from constitutional or statutory authority; reliance on judicial or other nonlegislative sources as insufficient. Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1095, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680

Employer's attempt to induce or coerce an employee to lie to investigator from Department of Fair Employment and Housing plainly contravened public policy of California. Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1096-1097, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680

Cal. Const., art. I, § 8, which provides that no person may be disqualified from entering or pursuing a business, profession, vocation, or employment because of sex, race, creed, color, or national or ethnic origin, sets forth fundamental public policy against employment discrimination on any of those grounds and provides basis for tort cause of action for wrongful termination in violation of public policy. Rojo v. Kliger (1990) 52 Cal. 3d 65, 89-91, 276 Cal. Rptr. 130, 801 P.2d 373

Public policy in favor of employer's duty to pay overtime wages protects employee from termination for making good-faith but mistaken claim to overtime pay. Barbosa v. IMPCO Techs. (2009) 179 Cal. App. 4th 1116, 1121-1123, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 923

Lab. Code § 6400 et seq. and Code Civ. Proc. § 527.8 establish explicit public policy requiring employers to provide safe and secure workplace, including requirement that employer take reasonable steps to address credible threats of violence in workplace. Franklin v. Monadnock Co. (2007) 151 Cal. App. 4th 252, 259, 59 Cal. Rptr. 3d 692

By prohibiting employment of undocumented aliens, Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986, 8 U.S.C. § 1101 et seq., establishes public policy that protects employee who complains to authorities that employer has hired undocumented aliens. Jie v. Liang Tai Knitwear Co., Ltd. (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 654, 661-662, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 682 ; see 8 U.S.C. § 1324a

Public policy is violated by termination of employee for refusing to sign employment agreement that contains illegal noncompete covenant [see Bus. & Prof. Code § 16600], even if agreement includes severability provision that would preserve enforceability of remainder of agreement. D'Sa v. Playhut, Inc. (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 927, 929-935, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 495

Whistle-blower protection under Lab Code § 1102.5 extends to public employees who report illegal activity to public agency; public employee who reports illegal activity to his or her employer is protected by statute and need not make report to outside agency. Gardenhire v. Housing Auth. (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 236, 241-243, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 893

Terminating employee in retaliation for employee's designation of attorney to conduct individual negotiations with employer violates public policy embodied in Lab. Code § 923, which protects right of workers to organize and bargain collectively. Gelini v. Tishgart (1999) 77 Cal. App. 4th 219, 223-228, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 447

Employee cannot maintain action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy against discrimination based on disability if discharge did not violate Fair Employment and Housing Act, which embodies that public policy. Hobson v. Raychem Corp. (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 614, 631, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 497

Public policy protects employee against discharge or discrimination for complaining in good faith about working conditions or practices employee reasonably believes to be unsafe, whether or not they actually are unsafe. Cabesuela v. Browning-Ferris Indus. of Cal., Inc. (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 101, 109, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 60

Employee's periodic acquiescence in employer's illegal conduct because of fear of discharge as not creating in pari delicto defense, even though employee received commissions from illegal transactions. Jacobs v. Universal Development Corp. (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 120, 53 Cal. App. 4th 692, 702-703, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 446

Cause of action for wrongful termination in violation of public policy exists against employer exempt from the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) who terminated employee because of pregnancy; Cal. Const., art. I, § 8, contains proscription against sex discrimination, including pregnancy discrimination, that is independent of FEHA. Badih v. Myers (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 1289, 1293-1296, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 229

In action for wrongful termination in violation of public policy, plaintiff terminated on basis of sexual orientation stated public policy based on former Labor Code § 1102.1 [now see Gov. Code § 12940(a) (FEHA). Leibert v. Transworld Systems, Inc. (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 1693, 1703-1704, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 65]

Plaintiff stated cause of action for wrongful termination in violation of public policy based on allegations that termination was for purpose of avoiding payment of commissions and vacation pay and in retaliation for reporting to management the ongoing failure to pay overtime. Gould v. Maryland Sound Industries, Inc. (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 1137, 1146-1150, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 718

_____ PRACTICE TIP: Potentially Broad Application of *Gould. The Gould case's recognition of a public policy claim inherent in an employer's motivation to avoid paying wages or commissions due by terminating an employee is seemingly applicable to a great many wrongful termination situations. Many prospective plaintiffs have the sense that the "real" reason they were fired was because the employer was seeking to avoid payment of some form of compensation or another. By Richard P. Hill _____

Tameny cause of action does not exist for breach of commercial contract in violation of public policy; case law does not recognize cause of action outside employment relationship. Harris v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1993) 14 Cal. App.

4th 70, 75-77, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 649

In action for wrongful termination based on violation of public policy, plaintiff terminated for allegedly disagreeing with employer insurance company's practice of inflating policy reserves in apparent circumvention of Proposition 103 failed to state public policy delineated in any constitutional or statutory provision; issue of excessive case reserves was not addressed in Proposition 103 or any other source required under Gantt. Sequoia Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1993) 13 Cal. App. 4th 1472, 1480, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888

In action for wrongful termination based on violation of public policy, plaintiff terminated for taking lengthy medical leave after operation failed to state public policy based on Lab. Code §§ 6401, 6403, which merely require employer to maintain safe and healthful workplace, without encouraging employer to provide proper medical care to employees. Davaris v. Cubaleski (1993) 12 Cal. App. 4th 1583, 1589, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 330

State employee stated Tameny claim based on employer's violation of public policy as expressed in statute that protects state employees from retaliation for whistleblowing (former Gov. Code § 19683; now see Gov. Code § 8457 et seq.) as well as Officers Rights Act (Gov. Code § 3300 et seq.), which gives public safety officers certain political rights; but Tameny claim was subject to immunity under Government Claims Act (Gov. Code § 810 et seq.). Shoemaker v. Myers (1992) 2 Cal. App. 4th 1407, 1419-1421, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 203

Employee had cause of action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy because he was fired for reporting to his employer suspected illegal conduct by coemployees, including violations of antitrust laws and laws against bribery and kickbacks, embezzlement, tax evasion, and possible drug trafficking and money laundering. Collier v. Superior Court (1991) 228 Cal. App. 3d 1117, 1119-1120, 279 Cal. Rptr. 453

Wrongful termination based on race discrimination was violation of public policy under Fair Employment & Housing Act, Gov. Code §§ 12920, 12940, and was basis for tort action. Roberts v. Ford Aerospace & Communications Corp. (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 793, 798, 274 Cal. Rptr. 139

Nurse was allowed to bring action for tortious discharge in retaliation for complaining about unsafe and unhealthy work conditions; Lab. Code §§ 6310-6312 do not provide exclusive remedy, nor is exhaustion of those sections a requisite to bringing private cause of action. Jenkins v. Family Health Program (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 440, 449, 262 Cal. Rptr. 798

Allegation that employee was discharged for reporting false payments of consulting fees to former employees was not public policy violation because interest was not public but private interest of employer only. American Computer Corp. v. Superior Court (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d 664, 667-669, 261 Cal. Rptr. 796

Termination in retaliation for failure to violate Insurance Department guideline was contrary to public policy. Eisenberg v. Insurance Co. of North America (9th Cir. 1987) 815 F.2d 1285, 1289

Summary judgment for employer was proper in employee's wrongful-discharge action when employee claimed tortious discharge in violation of public policy but failed to produce evidence that reason for discharge was in breach of California public policy. McCabe v. General Foods Corp. (9th Cir. 1987) 811 F.2d 1336, 1340

Public policy asserted as basis for tort of violation of public policy must inure to benefit of public at large, rather than to particular employer or employee. Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 669, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373

Discrimination against whistleblowing employees is contrary to public policy. Sanchez v. Unemployment Ins. Appeals Bd. (1984) 36 Cal. 3d 575, 588, 205 Cal. Rptr. 501, 685 P.2d 61

Employee who was discharged for refusal to commit unlawful act was entitled to sue employer in tort for wrongful discharge. Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 178, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330

Cause of action for wrongful termination in violation of public policy, based on former employee's complaining to management that employer's acts violated public policy, was stated when plaintiff pleads (1) employer's policy to contravene statutory proscription affecting matters relating to employer's business, (2) employee's protest to company management regarding unlawful policy, and (3) retaliatory termination of employment resulting from protest. Hejmadi v. AMFAC, Inc. (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d 525, 551, 249 Cal. Rptr. 5

Employee who had no viable alternative to risking arrest for conduct required by his employer, other than resigning his position, was constructively discharged for failure to perform unlawful act. Smith v. Brown-Forman Distillers Corp. (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 503, 513, 241 Cal. Rptr. 916

Action for wrongful discharge was proper when employees were required to violate state and federal regulations regarding pricing and trade practices as condition of employment, even though employer paid lip service to policy of following laws and regulations. Smith v. Brown-Forman Distillers Corp. (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 503, 512-514, 516, 241 Cal. Rptr. 916

Theory of action based on discharge for refusal to perform unlawful act is limited to employer-employee relationship, and does not bar termination of contract with independent contractor pursuant to contract provision allowing either party right to unilaterally terminate contract. Abrahamson v. NME Hospitals, Inc. (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 1325, 1329-1330, 241 Cal. Rptr. 396

Purported public policy to promote job security and community stability is not sufficient basis to establish cause of action for discharge in violation of substantial public policy principle. Shapiro v. Wells Fargo Realty Advisors (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 467, 477, 199 Cal. Rptr. 613

[17] Employer Misrepresentations

Misrepresentation that induces employee to alter detrimentally his or her circumstances can be the basis of a valid fraud claim. Lazar v. Superior Court (1996) 12 Cal. 4th 631, 639, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 377, 909 P.2d 981 .

Plaintiff can only establish misrepresentation if it is separate from the termination of the employment contract. Hunter v. Up-Right, Inc. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 1174, 1178, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 8, 864 P.2d 88

If employment contract expressly provides for at-will employment, action for fraudulent inducement of employment contract may not be maintained on basis of alleged false representation regarding duration of employment; in such case employee will be unable to show justifiable reliance on false representation. Dore v. Arnold Worldwide, Inc. (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 384, 393-394, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 668

Lab. Code § 970 is based on deceit and scienter requirement, and requires that representations by employer be knowingly false; no cause of action under Lab. Code § 970 established when employee fails to produce evidence tending to show that employer withheld information from employee with intent to deceive. Funk v. Sperry Corp. (9th Cir. 1988) 842 F.2d 1129, 1133-1134

"Change from one place to another" as used in Lab. Code § 970 encompasses temporary as well as permanent change of residence. Collins v. Rocha (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 232, 239-240, 102 Cal. Rptr. 1, 497 P.2d 225

Class action is appropriate remedy for violation of Lab. Code § 970. Collins v. Rocha (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 232, 234-240, 102 Cal. Rptr. 1, 497 P.2d 225

Cause of action was not stated for violation of Lab. Code § 970 or for wrongful discharge based on violation of Lab. Code § 970, because plaintiff failed to allege that defendant employer made knowingly false representations. Tyco Industries, Inc. v. Superior Court (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 148, 155-156, 211 Cal. Rptr. 540

Application of Lab. Code §§ 970, 972 is not restricted to farm labor or other mass hiring situations; actions asserting oral misrepresentation under Lab. Code § 970 are limited to those that can be performed within one year. Munoz v. Kaiser Steel Corp. (1984) 156 Cal. App. 3d 965, 980-981, 203 Cal. Rptr. 345

Employee's union was without standing to bring action under Lab. Code § 1054. Service Employees International Union v. Hollywood Park, Inc. (1983) 149 Cal. App. 3d 745, 765, 197 Cal. Rptr. 316

Liability under Lab. Code § 1050 applies only to misrepresentations made to prospective employers and not to misrepresentations made by employees of former employer to other employees of former employer. Kelly v. General Telephone Co. (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 278, 288, 186 Cal. Rptr. 184

SECOND CAUSE OF ACTION
(Breach of _____ [Implied and/or Express] Contract of Continued Employment)

11. Plaintiff incorporates herein by reference Paragraphs _____ (specify paragraph numbers of relevant allegations in previous cause of action).

12. _____ [Allege facts establishing written, oral, implied-by-conduct contract not to terminate, or discipline, or demote without cause, e.g., Plaintiff was employed by defendant for 15 years, consistently received either good or excellent performance evaluations and merit raises, was assured on numerous occasions that he/she would not be terminated arbitrarily, and relied on the provisions of the personnel manual (, a copy of which is appended as Exhibit _____,) regarding the causes for which employees could be discharged, to conclude that plaintiff and defendant had entered into an implied contract that plaintiff would not be discharged unless there was good cause to do so.]

13. Based on the _____ [_____ (written contract or oral representations and promises) and/or conduct of defen dant], as set forth in Paragraph[s] _____, above, plaintiff had an employment contract with defendant that he/she would be employed by defendant so long as his/her performance was satisfactory, and that defendant would not discharge him/her without good and just cause.

[14. The terms of the employment contract included, but were not limited to, the following: _____ (specify terms, e.g., defendant would not demote or discharge plaintiff without good cause and fair warning, based on objective, reasonable job evaluations of plaintiff).]

15. Plaintiff at all times fulfilled his/her duties and conditions under the contract and has been ready, willing, and able to continue performing them in a competent and satisfactory manner.

[EITHER]

16. THIRD CAUSE OF ACTION

18. Plaintiff incorporates by reference and realleges Paragraphs _____ [specify paragraph numbers of relevant allegations in previous cause(s) of action].

19. The employment agreement referred to above contained an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, which obligated defendant[s] to perform the terms and conditions of the agreement fairly and in good faith and to refrain from doing any act that would prevent or impede plaintiff from performing any or all of the conditions of the contract that he/she agreed to perform, or any act that would deprive plaintiff of the benefits of the contract.

[20. _____ (Allege facts showing long service to employer and existence of employer policies that the employer failed to follow, especially policies or practices providing the employee with prior notice of intended termination, or demotion, or discipline and an opportunity to appeal those actions, e.g., Plaintiff was employed by defendant for 15 years, and reasonably relied on the provisions of the personnel manual (, a copy of which is appended as Exhibit _____,) regarding the causes for which employees could be discharged or demoted and the procedures set forth for such discharges for the expectation that defendant would apply its policies even-handedly to afford plaintiff the protections of those procedures if defendant believed there was cause to discharge plaintiff.)]

[22. Defendant knew that plaintiff had fulfilled all his/her duties and conditions under the contract.]

23. Defendant breached the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing under the employment agreement by _____ [discharging or _____ (allege other adverse employment actions or facts giving rise to constructive discharge)] plaintiff intentionally, maliciously, and without probable cause, in bad faith and for reasons extraneous to the contract. _____ [Allege facts showing ill motivation and/or non-job-related reasons for discharge or demotion or discipline, e.g., In fact, defendant discharged plaintiff, not because of alleged poor performance, but because plaintiff, in good faith and in a reasonable, appropriate, and businesslike manner, had attempted to secure payment of commissions due under the employment agreement. Such motives were retaliatory in nature and extraneous to the employment relationship and were intended to deprive plaintiff of the benefits thereof].

[24. Defendant further breached the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing by violating and failing to follow its own personnel policies by _____ (allege facts showing defendant did not comply with personnel policies, e.g., not providing plaintiff with the written warning of performance deficiency required by its personnel policy before discharge).]

[25. Defendant further breached the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing by depriving plaintiff of _____ (allege facts establishing that the termination deprived the employee of benefits about to accrue, e.g., commissions earned by plaintiff on sales completed before his/her termination and due as soon as the merchandise ordered was delivered).]

26. As a proximate result of defendant's breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, plaintiff has suffered, and continues to suffer, losses _____ [describe nature of damages, e.g., in earning and other employment benefits], to his/her damage _____ [in the sum of $_____ or in an amount to be established at trial]. As a further proximate result of defendant's breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, plaintiff has incurred reasonable attorney's fees in attempting to secure the benefits owed him/her under the employment contract.

[Insert additional causes of action as appropriate.]

WHEREFORE, plaintiff prays judgment against defendant[s, and each of them,] as follows:

1. For damages for breach of contract according to proof, including lost earnings and other employee benefits, past and future;

2. For compensatory damages according to proof, including lost earnings and other employee benefits[, costs of seeking other employment][, and damages for emotional distress, humiliation, and mental anguish];

3. For interest on lost earnings and benefits at the prevailing legal rate from _____ [date];

[4. For punitive damages in an amount appropriate to punish defendant and deter others from engaging in similar misconduct;]

[5. For reasonable attorney's fees incurred by plaintiff in obtaining the benefits due him/her under the employment contract with defendant;]

6. For costs of suit incurred by plaintiff; and

7. For such other and further relief as the court deems proper.

[2] Use of Form

The form of complaint in [1], above, is for use by an employee in an action for wrongful discipline against the employer, or by a former employee in action for wrongful termination against the former employer, to seek damages based on defendant's violation of public policy, breach of contract, and breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, as appropriate [see, e.g., Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330 (wrongful termination); Garcia v. Rockwell International Corp. (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 1556, 232 Cal. Rptr. 490 (wrongful discipline; disapproved in Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1093, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680 , for stating that public policy underlying of wrongful discharge action need not be rooted in statutory or constitutional provision); Scott v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 454, 466, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 427, 904 P.2d 834 (wrongful demotion in violation of public policy)].

[3] Allegations

The complaint contains allegations supporting the following causes of actions:

- Wrongful discharge, or other adverse action, in violation of public policy (Paragraphs 4-10) [see Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 665-671, 669, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 (public policy must inure to benefit of public in general); Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 174, 178, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330 (establishing cause of action for wrongful discharge); Koehrer v. Superior Court (1986) 181 Cal. App. 3d 1155, 1163, 226 Cal. Rptr. 820 (cause of action for "tortious discharge"; disapproved in Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1093, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680 , for stating that public policy underlying wrongful discharge action need not be rooted in statutory or constitutional provision); Scott v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 454, 466, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 427, 904 P.2d 834 (wrongful demotion in violation of public policy); see also discussion under § 249.12];

- Breach of an express or implied-in-fact contract (Paragraphs 11-17) [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(g) (complaint must state whether contract is written, oral, or implied by conduct); Lab. Code § 2922 (at will employment generally); Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 680, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 (allegation of facts sufficient to overcome statutory presumption of at will employment); Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 327, 171 Cal. Rptr. 917 (Pugh I); but see Shapiro v. Wells Fargo Realty Advisors (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 467, 481-482, 199 Cal. Rptr. 613 (noting factors to be considered in determining whether or not implied contract exists, but holding that existence of express contract of employment providing for at will status precludes existence of implied contract with different terms); see also discussion in [6], below]; and

- Breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing (Paragraphs 18-26) [compare Cleary v. American Airlines, Inc. (1980) 111 Cal. App. 3d 443, 456, 168 Cal. Rptr. 722 (employee's long service, and existence of employer's procedures for terminating employees, as sufficient to give rise to cause of action for breach of the implied covenant when plaintiff was terminated without cause and without protection of the employer's procedures), with Koehrer v. Superior Court (1986) 181 Cal. App. 3d 1155, 1171, 226 Cal. Rptr. 820 (breach of implied covenant established if employerasserted existence of good cause to discharge employee without good-faith belief in cause to discharge; disapproved on other grounds in Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1093, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680), and Khanna v. Microdata Corp. (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 250, 262-263, 215 Cal. Rptr. 860 (breach of implied covenant established by proof of employer's bad faith conduct extraneous to contract coupled with intent to frustrate employee's contract rights); see also § 249.14 for additional discussion].

Alternative Paragraphs 7 are for use in support of a cause of action based on the employer's violation of public policy in the following circumstances: (1) if plaintiff was terminated (Option 1) [see Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 174, 178, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330] ; (2) if plaintiff was demoted rather than discharged (Option 2) [Scott v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 454, 466, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 427, 904 P.2d 834] ; (3) if plaintiff was disciplined rather than discharged (Option 3) [see Garcia v. Rockwell International Corp. (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 1556, 1561, 232 Cal. Rptr. 490 (disapproved on other grounds in Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1093, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680)]; or (4) if plaintiff resigned (Option 4) [see Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1251, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022] .

It also contains allegations in support of an award of punitive damages for the tort causes of action (Paragraphs 9, 10) [see Civ. Code § 3294].

Because public entities are subject to liability only as provided by statute [Gov. Code § 815(a)], the common-law cause of action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy is not available against a public entity [see Miklosy v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (2008) 44 Cal. 4th 876, 899-900, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 690, 188 P.3d 629 ; Lloyd v. County of Los Angeles (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 320, 330, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 872 (doctrine of respondeat superior cannot be applied to hold public entity liable for common-law tort of wrongful discharge in violation of public policy)]. Therefore, if the defendant employer is a public entity, the first cause of action set forth in this form should not be used.

If the defendant is a public entity, the complaint should include an allegation that a written notice of claim was timely presented to the public entity pursuant to the Government Claims Act [see Gov. Code §§ 905, 910, 912.4, 945.4; see also City of Stockton v. Superior Court (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 730, 741, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 295, 171 P.3d 20 ("Henceforth, we will refer to [Gov. Code § 810 et seq.] as the Government Claims Act," rather than "Tort Claims Act," because it applies to contract claims as well as tort claims)]. The complaint may assert additional wrongful discharge theories not set forth in the notice of claim, so long as the notice of claim informed the public entity of the employment termination cause of action giving rise to the claim and provided sufficient detail for investigation by the public entity. Thus, a notice of claim is sufficient if it notifies the public entity of its act (wrongful termination) that caused the plaintiff's injury (e.g., loss of earnings) and names the public entity's agents the plaintiff believes responsible. In such a case, the plaintiff's subsequent complaint may assert additional theories of liability so long as it does not shift liability to other parties or premise liability on acts committed at times or places different from those identified in the notice of claim [Stockett v. Association of Cal. Water Agencies Joint Powers Ins. Auth. (2004) 34 Cal. 4th 441, 445-450, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 176, 99 P.3d 500] . For detailed coverage of notice of claim requirements and related procedures under the Tort Claims Act, see Ch. 464, Public Entities and Officers: California Tort Claims Act .

[4] Preemption

The foregoing complaint should not contain allegations that will subject it to removal to federal district court. Generally, the existence of a federal defense to a state-law cause of action renders the action subject to the removal jurisdiction of federal courts only if the federal law "completely" preempts state law. For example, a state-law claim against the fiduciary of an ERISA-regulated benefit plan is completely preempted by ERISA (and therefore removable) if interpretation of the terms of the plan forms an essential part of the claim, and the plaintiff is in essence suing only to rectify a wrongful denial of benefits promised under the plan [Aetna Health Inc. v. Davila (2004) 542 U.S. 200, 124 S. Ct. 2488, 159 L. Ed. 2d 312, 330 ; see 29 U.S.C. § 1144(a) (broad preemption policy of ERISA, 29 U.S.C. § 1001 et seq.].

Unless state law is completely preempted, if both a state and a federal remedy are available to an employee based on the facts alleged, an employee may choose the state remedy and avoid removal to federal court [Caterpillar, Inc. v. Williams (1987) 482 U.S. 386, 398-399, 107 S. Ct. 2425, 96 L. Ed. 2d 318 ; see Garibaldi v. Lucky Food Stores, Inc. (9th Cir. 1984) 726 F.2d 1367, 1370 , cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1099 (1985)] . For discussion and forms relating to federal removal jurisdiction, see Ch. 265, Federal Courts: Jurisdiction and Removal .

Similarly, the complaint should not contain allegations that will subject it to preemption by state law. Termination of employment, and the events culminating in termination, are deemed a normal part of the employment relationship, and the exclusive remedy doctrine bars a civil damages action for personal injury caused by termination unless the injury is the result of conduct that does not reasonably come within the compensation bargain [Shoemaker v. Myers (1990) 52 Cal. 3d 1, 17-20, 276 Cal. Rptr. 303, 801 P.2d 1054 ; Cole v. Fair Oaks Fire Protection Dist. (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 148, 159-160, 233 Cal. Rptr. 308, 729 P.2d 743] . The California Supreme Court has held that even when no physical injury or disability is alleged, a claim for intentional or negligent infliction of emotional distress is within the exclusive remedy provisions of the workers' compensation act, so long as the basic conditions of compensation are otherwise satisfied and the employer's conduct neither contravenes a fundamental public policy nor exceeds the risks inherent in the employment relationship [Livitsanos v. Superior Court (1992) 2 Cal. 4th 744, 754-755, 7 Cal. Rptr. 2d 808, 828 P.2d 1195 ; see Gibbs v. American Airlines, Inc. (1990) 74 Cal. App. 4th 1, 9-10, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 554 (exclusivity of workers' compensation extends to intentional infliction of emotional distress by employer's work-related conduct so long as that conduct does not contravene public policy)]. The Court has also held that a cause of action for tortious discharge in violation of public policy is not preempted by workers' compensation law [Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1101, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680] . On the other hand, a pattern of continuing violations of the public policy against workplace harassment is outside the normal scope of employment. Therefore, a cause of action for the infliction of emotional distress resulting from such harassment will not be barred by the exclusivity provisions of the workers' compensation law [Murray v. Oceanside Unified Sch. Dist. (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 1338, 1362-1363, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 28 (sexual-orientation harassment in violation ofFair Employment and Housing Act, Gov. Code § 12940(j))]. For additional discussion preemption by California Workers' Compensation law, see § 249.21[10].

[5] Cause of Action for Violation of Public Policy

[a] Pleading Source of Public Policy

To state a cause of action for violation of public policy, the complaint must allege the following: (1) a public policy; (2) adverse employment in violation of public policy, such as defendant's termination of plaintiff's employment in retaliation for plaintiff's statutorily protected activity or for plaintiff's refusal to engage in illegal conduct; and (3) damages resulting from the adverse employment action [see Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 174, 178, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330 ; see also CACI 2430-2433].

The public policy asserted in a wrongful discharge action based on the employer's violation of public policy must derive from either statutory or constitutional authority. Therefore, for example, public policy embodied in decisional law alone is insufficient to support this cause of action [see Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1090-1095, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680] . However, public policy embodied in administrative regulations adopted pursuant to statutory authority may serve as the basis of a wrongful-discharge claim [Green v. Ralee Engineering Company (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 66, 80-90, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16, 960 P.2d 1046] . In addition, the statutory or constitutional basis for the asserted public policy must be a fundamental public policy applicable to the defendant's conduct. For example, the statutory policy prohibiting employment discrimination on the basis of age could not be the basis for a wrongful discharge action against an employer expressly exempt from the substantive provisions of the statutory scheme [Jennings v. Marralle (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 121, 130, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275, 876 P.2d 1074 (defendant was not "employer" subject to FEHA because he employed fewer than five employees); but see Phillips v. St. Mary Reg'l Med. Ctr. (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 218, 230-238, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 770 (although employer was expressly exempt from FEHA, plaintiff alleging race and sex discrimination could rely on Civil Rights Act of 1964, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq. , and on Cal. Const., art. I, § 8, as sources of public policy to support claim of wrongful discharge in violation of public policy); Badih v. Myers (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 1289, 1291, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 229 (plaintiff brought claim for wrongful termination in violation of policy against pregnancy discrimination based on proscription against sex discrimination embodied in California Constitution even though her employer was not subject to FEHA)]. For additional discussion see § 249.12[3].

[b] Pleading Proximate Cause

Counsel should specifically allege that the stated public policy violation was the proximate cause of the discharge or other adverse action [see Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 171 n.3, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330 (allegations that sole reason for discharge was employee's refusal to commit illegal acts sufficiently alleged proximate cause)]. If the defendant did not actually terminate plaintiff's employment, but plaintiff resigned as a result of the employer's violation of public policy, the complaint should use the alternative allegations in Paragraph 7 of the form to allege either the action (such as discipline or demotion) taken by the employer, or facts that will support a conclusion that the conditions were so intolerable that a reasonable person would feel compelled to resign, and that the employer knew of those conditions [see Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1251, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022 ; see also discussion in § 249.15[1][a]].

[c] Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies

If the statute that embodies the public policy also provides a private right of action, the statutory cause of action may in some cases be the exclusive remedy and may require exhaustion of administrative remedies. Therefore, if plaintiff can comply with the statutory requirements, such as the shorter limitation period and requirements of exhaustion of administrative remedies, counsel should consider foregoing a common law public-policy claim in favor of pleading the statute exclusively. That choice may provide counsel with advantages such as less jury confusion, better-developed law, and statutory attorney's fees. For additional discussion, see § 249.12[5].

[d] Alleging Emotional Distress Damages

If plaintiff is seeking emotional distress damages for tortious breach of public policy, the distress should be alleged. However, allegations that the termination caused emotional distress, especially allegations that the plaintiff continues to suffer from symptoms of mental distress, put the plaintiff's mental condition in controversy and may result in a psychological examination by defendant's expert [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032(d) (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2032.310, 2032.320 operative July 1, 2005); see also Vinson v. Superior Court (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 833, 840-841, 239 Cal. Rptr. 292, 740 P.2d 404] . For discussion of the examination of plaintiff during discovery, see Ch. 190, Depositions and Discovery .

In addition, plaintiff's counsel should be wary of potential workers' compensation preemption issues. For discussion, see [4], above. In addition, see discussion in § 249.21[10].

[6] Cause of Action for Implied-in-Fact Contract Not to Terminate Except for Cause

If the contract is oral or implied by conduct, the complaint should allege the specific conduct or representations that the plaintiff alleges are the basis for the existence of a contract. If the action is not based on an express contract providing that termination must be for cause, plaintiff should allege in Paragraph 12 of the form facts sufficient to overcome the presumption of at will employment embodied in Lab. Code § 2922, including as many of the following as possible:

specific oral or written assurances of continued employment absent good cause for termination; longevity of service; commendations, promotions, and lack of criticism; the employer's personnel policies or practices (especially those governing discipline and termination); and industry practices regarding job security [see Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 680, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 ; see also discussion in § 249.13].

If the employer caused the employee to change location by intentional misrepresentations about aspects of the work set forth in Lab. Code § 970, the complaintshould also allege a cause of action for double damages pursuant to Lab. Code § 972. For discussion of those provisions, see § 249.30. For a form of complaint against an employer to seek double damages on the ground that the employer's misrepresentations induced the employee to change residences, see § 249.80.

[7] Cause of Action for Breach of Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing

A complaint for a breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing in the context of an employment contract must allege at least the following: (1) the existence of an employment contract, whether written, oral, or implied by conduct, one term of which is the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing (see Paragraph 19 of form); (2) defendant's breach of the covenant (see Paragraph 23 and optional Paragraphs 24 and 25 of form); and (3) plaintiff's resultant damages (see Paragraph 26 of form) [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(g) (complaint must state whether contract is written, oral, or implied by conduct); see also Koehrer v. Superior Court (1986) 181 Cal. App. 3d 1155, 1167, 226 Cal. Rptr. 820 (complaint must state breach of covenant and resultant damages)]. If it cannot be shown that the employment contract was not at will, the complaint must allege that the employer's conduct deprived the plaintiff of a benefit of the agreement other than just continued employment (e.g., already-earned commissions) [see Camp v. Jeffer, Mangels, Butler & Marmaro (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 620, 631, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 329] .

If applicable to the particular facts involved, the complaint should allege that the employee was treated differently from similarly situated employees, that the employer denied the employee the benefit of personnel policies or practices that it afforded to other employees, and any particularly abusive conduct involved in the way plaintiff was terminated [see Rulon-Miller v. International Business Machines Corp. (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 241, 248, 255, 208 Cal. Rptr. 524] .

[8] Related Causes of Action

A number of additional tort theories of recovery may be available, depending on the facts of the particular case, such as assault, battery, defamation, invasion of privacy, and interference with prospective business advantage. The foregoing form may include additional allegations regarding those causes of action. For further discussion, see § 249.22.

[9] Statute of Limitations

There are several statutes of limitations set out in the Code of Civil Procedure that are potentially relevant to various causes of action in a wrongful termination suit. Code Civ. Proc. § 337(1) establishes a four-year period for an action based on a written contract. Code Civ. Proc. § 338(a) prescribes a three-year statute for an action on a liability created by statute, other than a penalty or forfeiture. Code Civ. Proc. § 339 provides a two-year limitation period for an action based on a contract not in writing. Additionally, Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 provides a two-year limitation period for injury caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another. Finally, Code Civ. Proc. § 340(c) sets out a one-year statute for an action for libel or slander.

A claim of wrongful termination in violation of public policy sets forth a claim for violation of a personal right. Accordingly, the appropriate limitations period is the two-year period set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 [see Mathieu v. Norrell Corp. (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 1174, 1189 n.14, 10 Cal. Rptr. 3d 52 (effective January 1, 2003, two-year limitations period under Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 replaced one-year period of former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3)); see also Barton v. New United Motor Manufacturing, Inc. (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 1200, 1205-1209, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 328 (actions for wrongful termination in violation of public policy are tort actions subject to limitations period applicable to personal-injury claims)].

Although there are no cases directly on point, a wrongful termination action styled as a breach of contract case would appear to be governed either by the four-year statute for written contracts, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 337(1), or by the two-year statute for oral or implied contracts, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 339.

For additional discussion of limitation periods for causes of action for violation of public policy and breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, see § 249.21[13].

[10] Venue

In a breach of contract action, the proper venue is either in the county where the defendant resides, where the contract was to be performed, or where the contract was entered into [Code Civ. Proc. § 395(a)]. If the defendant is a corporation, the county where the corporation's principal place of business is located is also a proper place to institute the action [Code Civ. Proc. § 395.5]. An unincorporated association may similarly be sued in the county in which the association's principal office is located [Code Civ. Proc. § 395.2]. If a basis for venue other than the residence of the defendant is relied on for venue purposes, it is unnecessary to allege defendant's residence. The fact relied on to establish venue, such as the place that the contract was entered into, must be alleged, however, because the county in which defendant resides is the proper county for trial except as otherwise provided by law [see Code Civ. Proc. § 395(a); see also Ch. 571, Venue].

In an action for injury to person or personal property or for death from wrongful act or negligence, either the county in which the injury occurs or the county in which the defendants, or some of them, reside at the commencement of the action is a proper county for the trial of the action [Code Civ. Proc. § 395(a); see also Ch. 571, Venue]. If venue is based on the situs of the wrongful act or negligence, then the allegation of defendant's residence is not needed.

[11] Verification

Verification of this complaint is not required, but verification of the complaint requires the defendant to file a verified answer in a superior court action other than a limited civil case [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 92(b), 446(a)] and precludes a general denial in superior court and in some limited civil cases [Code Civ.Proc. § 431.30(d)]. For further discussion of the effect that verifying a complaint has on the answer, see Ch. 26, Answers .

§ 249.51 Allegations for Use in Complaint for Damages for Wrongful Termination or Demotion or Discipline--Retaliation for Employee's Political Activity [Lab. Code §§ 1101, 1105]

[1] FORM Allegations for Use in Complaint for Damages for Wrongful Termination or Demotion or Discipline--Retaliation for Employee's Political Activity [Lab. Code §§ 1101, 1105]

1. _____ [Allege facts showing that plaintiff exercised protected rights to engage in political activity or political affiliation, e.g., On or about _____ (date), plaintiff became a candidate for election to the City Counsel for the city of _____].

2. At some time prior to _____ [date], defendant made and adopted a _____ [rule or regulation or policy] that _____ [specify e.g., any employee who became a candidate for election to a public office would be suspended or discharged]. On that date, by way of enforcing that _____ [rule or regulation or policy], defendant discharged plaintiff from employment because _____ [specify e.g., plaintiff had become a candidate for election to the City Counsel for the city of _____].

3. Defendant's _____ [discharge or discipline or demotion] of plaintiff violated the provisions of Labor Code section 1101 and the public policy of the State of California as expressed in that statute.

4. Defendant's _____ [discharge or discipline or demotion] of plaintiff was in violation of the implied covenant in the employment contract incorporating the provisions of California law, including Labor Code section 1101.

[2] Use of Form

The allegations in [1], above, may be included in a complaint for wrongful discharge or discipline or demotion to allege that defendant discharged or disciplined plaintiff in violation of Lab. Code § 1101, which prohibits an employer from making, adopting, or enforcing any rule, regulation, or policy interfering with an employee's rights of political activity or affiliation. These allegations may be incorporated into the form of complaint in § 249.50. To assert that defendant's conduct constituted violation of public policy, Paragraphs 1 and 2 of the allegation may be substituted for Paragraphs 5 and 7 of that form, and Paragraph 3 may be substituted for Paragraph 6 of that form. To assert that defendant breached the employment contract because the contract impliedly incorporated the provisions of Lab. Code § 1101, Paragraphs 1, 2, and 4 of the allegation may be substituted for Paragraphs 13-16 of the form in § 249.50.

[3] Allegations

The form of allegations includes:

- Facts regarding plaintiff's exercise of rights to engage in political activity or affiliation (Paragraph 1) [see Lab. Code § 1101].

- Facts regarding defendant's making, adopting, or enforcing a rule, regulation, or policy in derogation of those rights, and plaintiff's discharge or discipline because of that conduct (Paragraph 2) [see Lab. Code § 1101].

- A statement that defendant's conduct violates Lab. Code § 1101 (Paragraph 3).

- A statement that defendant's conduct constitutes a breach of the employment contract (Paragraph 4).

[4] Action Based on Discharge or Discipline or Demotion Because of Political Activity

No employer shall make, adopt, or enforce any rule, regulation, or policy forbidding or preventing employees from engaging or participating in politics or from becoming candidates for public office; or controlling or directing, or tending to control or direct, the political activities or affiliations of employees [Lab. Code § 1101]. Violation of this provision is a misdemeanor [Lab. Code § 1103]. Nothing in Lab. Code §§ 1101-1104, however, prevents the injured employee from recovering damages from the employer for injury suffered through a violation [Lab. Code § 1105].

§ 249.52 Allegations for Use in Complaint for Damages for Wrongful Termination or Discipline or Demotion--Retaliation for Employee's Protesting Unsafe or Unhealthy Working Conditions

[1] FORM Allegations for Use in Complaint for Damages for Wrongful Termination or Discipline or Demotion--Retaliation for Employee's Protesting Unsafe or Unhealthy Working Conditions

1. On or about _____ [date], [and again on _____ (date(s)),] plaintiff protested about the _____ [unsafe and/or unhealthy] working conditions at his/her place of employment by _____ [specify, e.g., attempting to obtain a reasonably smoke-free environment, because the presence of cigarette smoke in a closed environment creates a significant health hazard to those who are present in the environment].

2. On or about _____ [date], defendant _____ [discharged or disciplined or demoted] plaintiff by _____ [allege facts showing communication of discharge or discipline to plaintiff by word or act, e.g., a written notice given to plaintiff stating that his/her services were no longer required. (A copy of this notice is attached hereto as Exhibit A and made a part hereof.)]

3. Defendant's _____ [discharge or discipline or demotion] of plaintiff violated the public policy of the State of California, as expressed in the provisions of Labor Code section 6310, which prohibits discrimination against employees who make oral or written complaints about workplace safety to either their employer or a governmental agency.

[2] Use of Form

The allegations in [1], above, may be included in a complaint for wrongful discharge or discipline or demotion, to allege that defendant discharged or disciplined plaintiff in violation of the public policy underlying Lab. Code § 6310, which prohibits discrimination against employees who make oral or written complaints about workplace safety to either their employer or a governmental agency [see Hentzel v. Singer Co. (1982) 138 Cal. App. 3d 290, 295-304, 188 Cal. Rptr. 159] . The allegation may be incorporated into the form of complaint in § 249.50. To assert that defendant's conduct constituted violation of public policy, Paragraph 1 of this form may be substituted for Paragraph 5 of the form in § 249.50, Paragraph 2 may be substituted for Paragraph 7, and Paragraph 3 may be substituted for Paragraph 6.

[3] Allegations

This form alleges:

- Facts regarding plaintiff's protest of unsafe or unhealthy working conditions (Paragraph 1) [see Hentzel v. Singer Co. (1982) 138 Cal. App. 3d 290, 295-304, 188 Cal. Rptr. 159] ;

- Defendant's discharge or discipline of plaintiff because of plaintiff's protest (Paragraph 2) [see Hentzel v. Singer Co. (1982) 138 Cal. App. 3d 290, 295-304, 188 Cal. Rptr. 159] ; and

- A statement that defendant's conduct violated the public policy underlying Lab. Code § 6310 (Paragraph 3).

[4] Cause of Action for Retaliatory Dismissal Based on Activity to Insure Safe Working Place

The California Occupational Safety and Health Act (Lab. Code § 6300 et seq.) prohibits discrimination against employees who make oral or written complaints about workplace safety to either their employer or a governmental agency, who participate in occupational safety and health committees established under Lab. Code § 6401.7, or who institute or testify in proceedings under the Act [Lab. Code § 6310; see Lab. Code § 6312 (action by Labor Commissioner)]. The administrative remedy provided a terminated employee by Lab. Code § 6312 is not, however, exclusive and does not preclude a common-law wrongful discharge action [Hentzel v. Singer Co. (1982) 138 Cal. App. 3d 290, 302-304, 188 Cal. Rptr. 159 ; see discussion in § 249.12[5]].

For an employee to maintain a cause of action for wrongful discharge in this context, it is not necessary to allege or prove that there was a violation of the Occupational Health and Safety Act or that the workplace actually was unsafe. Rather, the employee is protected against discharge or discrimination so long as the complaint was made in good faith about working conditions or practices the employee reasonably believed to be unsafe, whether or not they actually are unsafe [Cabesuela v. Browning-Ferris Indus. of Cal., Inc. (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 101, 109, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 60 (plaintiff had complained to employer about extended working hours, which plaintiff believed posed health and safety hazard)].

The statutory protection against retaliatory discharge in this context [see Lab. Code § 6310] extends not only to employees who make workplace safety complaints, but also to those who are fired because their employers fear they will make workplace safety complaints [Lujan v. Minagar (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 1040, 1044-1046, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 861] .

§ 249.53 Allegations for Use in Complaint for Damages for Wrongful Termination or Discipline--Fraud Cause of Action Based on Misrepresentation Independent of Termination

[1] FORM Allegations for Use in Complaint for Damages for Wrongful Termination or Discipline--Fraud Cause of Action Based on Misrepresentation Independent of Termination

1. On or about _____ [date], defendant _____ [name][, through his/her/its agent _____ (name of agent)] represented to plaintiff that _____ [specify misrepresentation, e.g., if plaintiff withdrew the complaint filed with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission and waived the right to sue based on the facts alleged in that complaint, defendant _____ (name) would provide plaintiff with training opportunities that could lead to promotion and increased compensation]. Defendant _____ [name] knew at the time this representation was made that it was false, in that _____ [specify reason for falsity, e.g., defendant _____ (name) had a plan to reduce its staff, and plaintiff was among those slated to be laid off]. The misrepresentation was made with the intent to induce plaintiff to _____ [specify, e.g., withdraw the complaint and waive the right to sue based on the facts set forth in that complaint]. Plaintiff's reliance on that misrepresentation was reasonable, in that _____ [specify facts supporting reasonableness of reliance, e.g., plaintiff had no knowledge of any impending layoffs, and intended to use the promised opportunities to improve his/her career]. As a result of plaintiff's reliance on the misrepresentation, he/she suffered damages in that _____ [specify resulting damage, e.g., plaintiff's waiver of the right to sue based on the facts alleged in the complaint filed with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission precluded any later reinstatement of that cause of action, which would have resulted in an award of damages].

2. The misrepresentation alleged in Paragraph 1 was independent of the termination of plaintiff's employment, and the damages suffered by plaintiff resulted not from that termination but from _____ [specify cause of damages suffered, e.g., plaintiff's waiver of the right to sue].

[2] Use of Form

The allegations in [1], above, may be included in a complaint for wrongful discharge or discipline to allege that defendant's conduct constituted fraud, permitting recovery of tort damages that resulted from plaintiff's reliance on defendant's misrepresentation. The allegations may be added as an additional cause of action in the form of complaint in § 249.50, before the prayer.

[3] Allegations

This form includes:

- Allegations sufficient to state a cause of action for fraud or deceit (Paragraph 1) [Civ. Code §§ 1709, 1710; see Lazar v. Superior Court (1996) 12 Cal. 4th 631, 639, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 377, 909 P.2d 981 ; Hunter v. Up-Right, Inc. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 1174, 1184, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 8, 864 P.2d 88] ; and

- Facts supporting the contention that the misrepresentation at issue was independent of the termination of plaintiff's employment, permitting a tort cause of action to recover those damages that did not result from the termination itself [see Lazar v. Superior Court (1996) 12 Cal. 4th 631, 638-639, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 377, 909 P.2d 981 (fraud claim was proper because it occurred when plaintiff was induced to give up other opportunities and relocate to take job with defendant); Hunter v. Up-Right, Inc. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 1174, 1185-1186, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 8, 864 P.2d 88 (citing Miller v. Fairchild Industries, Inc. (9th Cir. 1989) 885 F.2d 498, 509-510 , cert. denied, 494 U.S. 1056 as example of case in which fraud cause of action was proper because misrepresentation concerned plaintiff's settlement of civil rights action rather than termination of employment relationship)].

§ 249.54 Allegations for Use in Complaint for Damages for Wrongful Termination or Discipline--Defendant's Termination of Plaintiff's Employment as In-House Counsel Violated Public Policy--Termination Was Based on Plaintiff's Refusal to Violate Mandatory Ethical Provision

[1] FORM Allegations for Use in Complaint for Damages for Wrongful Termination or Discipline--Defendant's Termination of Plaintiff's Employment as In-House Counsel Violated Public Policy--Termination Was Based on Plaintiff's Refusal to Violate Mandatory Ethical Provision

1. On or about _____ [date], defendant _____ [name][, through his/her/its agent _____ (name of agent)] informed plaintiff that he/she must, in his/her capacity as in-house counsel for _____ [name of defendant], _____ [specify conduct violative of ethical rule of conduct, e.g., commit perjury by lying in sworn testimony]. This conduct would have violated _____ [specify mandatory ethical rule prohibiting the conduct, e.g., Business and Professions Code Section 6106], and plaintiff refused to do so. As a proximate result of that refusal, defendant _____ [name] terminated plaintiff's employment as in-house counsel.

[2] Use of Form

The allegations in [1], above, may be used in a complaint for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy to allege that plaintiff's discharge from his or her employment as in-house counsel was in retaliation for his or her compliance with mandatory ethical obligations [see General Dynamics Corp. v. San Bernardino County Superior Court (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1188-1189, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1, 876 P.2d 487] . To state a cause of action, the claim must be based on explicit and unequivocal ethical norms embodied in the Rules of Professional Conduct and statutes [General Dynamics Corp. v. San Bernardino County Superior Court (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1189, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1, 876 P.2d 487] . Other claims by in-house counsel must be maintainable by the nonattorney employee under Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1091-1092, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680 , under circumstances in which the Legislature has manifested a judgment that the principle of professional confidentiality does not apply [General Dynamics Corp. v. San Bernardino County Superior Court (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1189, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1, 876 P.2d 487] . For a form of allegation that may be used in the latter situation, see § 249.55.

This allegation may be used in place of the allegations set forth in Paragraphs 5 and 6 of the form of complaint in § 249.50; the allegations in § 249.55 may also be added if appropriate under the factual circumstances.

§ 249.55 Allegations for Use in Complaint for Damages for Wrongful Termination or Discipline--Defendant's Termination of Plaintiff's Employment as In-House Counsel Violated Public Policy--Action Available to Non-Attorney Does Not Violate Attorney-Client Confidences

[1] FORM Allegations for Use in Complaint for Damages for Wrongful Termination or Discipline--Defendant's Termination of Plaintiff's Employment as In-House Counsel Violated Public Policy--Action Available to Non-Attorney Does Not Violate Attorney-Client Confidences

1. Plaintiff's cause of action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy is not precluded because of his/her former capacity as in-house counsel to defendant _____ [name], because establishing the wrongful nature of the termination will not require plaintiff to violate the attorney-client privilege.

[2] Use of Form

The allegation in [1], above, may be used in a complaint for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy to allege that the principles of professional confidentiality do not preclude plaintiff's cause of action, based on his or her discharge from employment as in-house counsel [see General Dynamics Corp. v. San Bernardino County Superior Court (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1189, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1, 876 P.2d 487] . This allegation should be used in conjunction with allegations (such as those in Paragraphs 5 and 6 of the form of complaint in § 249.50) that plaintiff's discharge violated public policy and therefore gave rise to a cause of action under Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1091-1092, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680 [*see General Dynamics Corp. v. San Bernardino County Superior Court (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1189, 32 Cal. § 249.60 Affirmative Defense Allegation--Discharge of Employee Under Specified Term of Employment--Willful Breach of Duty [Lab. Code § 2924]

[1] FORM Affirmative Defense Allegation--Discharge of Employee Under Specified Term of Employment--Willful Breach of Duty [Lab. Code § 2924]

AS A [_____ (if more than one, specify number, e.g., FIRST)] SEPARATE AND AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE [if more than one cause of action alleged, state TO THE _____ (specify, e.g., SECOND) CAUSE OF ACTION], defendant alleges that defendant discharged plaintiff because plaintiff willfully breached his/her duty in the course of his/her employment, in that _____ [specify].

[2] Use of Form

The form of affirmative defense in [1], above, is for use in an answer to a complaint seeking damages based on a cause of action for wrongful discharge. It is for use by a defendant-employer, when the plaintiff had been employed for a specified term, and defendant wishes to allege that the discharge was due to plaintiff's willful breach of a duty of employment in the course of the employment [see Lab. Code § 2924; for discussion, see § 249.21[15]]. For a form of complaint seeking damages for wrongful discharge, see § 249.50.

§ 249.62 Affirmative Defense Allegation--Discharge of Employee Under Specified Term of Employment--Continued Incapacity to Perform Duty [Lab. Code § 2924]

[1] FORM Affirmative Defense Allegation--Discharge of Employee Under Specified Term of Employment--Continued Incapacity to Perform Duty [Lab. Code § 2924]

AS A [_____ (if more than one, specify number, e.g., FIRST)] SEPARATE AND AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE [if more than one cause of action alleged, state TO THE _____ (specify, e.g., SECOND) CAUSE OF ACTION], defendant alleges that defendant discharged plaintiff because of plaintiff's continued incapacity to perform his/her duty as an employee, in that _____ [specify].

[2] Use of Form

The form of affirmative defense in [1], above, is for use in an answer to a complaint seeking damages based on a cause of action for wrongful discharge. It is for use by a defendant-employer when the plaintiff had been employed for a specified term, and defendant wishes to allege that the plaintiff had a continued incapacity to perform his or her duty as an employee [see Lab. Code § 2924; for discussion, see § 249.21[15]]. For a form of complaint seeking damages for wrongful discharge, see § 249.50.

§ 249.63 Affirmative Defense Allegation--Employee Terminated for Good Cause

[1] FORM Affirmative Defense Allegation--Employee Terminated for Good Cause

AS A [_____ (if more than one, specify number, e.g., FIRST)] SEPARATE AND AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE [if more than one cause of action alleged, state TO THE _____ (specify, e.g., SECOND) CAUSE OF ACTION], defendant alleges that plaintiff was terminated for good cause[, that is, _____ (specify, e.g., plaintiff was terminated pursuant to a reduction in work force necessitated by depressed economic conditions)].

[2] Use of Form

The form of affirmative defense in [1], above, is for use in an answer to a complaint seeking damages based on a cause of action for wrongful discharge when plaintiff is party to an employment agreement requiring good cause for termination [see, e.g., Gianaculas v. Trans World Airlines, Inc. (9th Cir. 1985) 761 F.2d 1391, 1394-1395 (termination pursuant to reduction in work force)].

§ 249.64 Affirmative Defense Allegation--Arbitration Required Under Employment Contract

[1] FORM Affirmative Defense Allegation--Arbitration Required Under Employment Contract

AS A [_____ (if more than one, specify number, e.g., FIRST)] SEPARATE AND AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE [if more than one cause of action alleged, state TO THE _____ (specify, e.g., SECOND) CAUSE OF ACTION], defendant alleges that arbitration of the dispute is required under the employment contract [referred to in the complaint or attached hereto as Exhibit _____], and that plaintiff failed to submit the dispute to arbitration and is therefore precluded from bringing a wrongful discharge action in lieu of arbitration.

[2] Use of Form

The form of affirmative defense in [1], above, is for use in an answer to a complaint seeking damages based on a cause of action for wrongful discharge when there is an employment contract requiring arbitration, and plaintiff has filed the action in lieu of seeking arbitration [see Heily v. Superior Court (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d 255, 257-263, 248 Cal. Rptr. 673 , cert. denied, 489 U.S. 1013 (finding arbitration procedures neither adhesive nor unconscionable, on ground that SEC approved them)].

For discussion of the defense that a wrongful discharge action is precluded by an enforceable agreement to arbitrate, see § 249.21[16].

§ 249.65 Affirmative Defense Allegation--Plaintiff's Failure to Mitigate Damages

[1] FORM Affirmative Defense Allegation--Plaintiff's Failure to Mitigate Damages

AS A [_____ (if more than one, specify number, e.g., FIRST)] SEPARATE AND AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE [if more than one cause of action alleged, state TO THE _____ (specify, e.g., SECOND) CAUSE OF ACTION], defendant alleges that by the exercise of reasonable effort, plaintiff could have obtained and retained employment substantially similar to his/her employment with defendant promptly after termination of his/her employment with defendant. However, plaintiff failed and refused, and continues to fail and refuse, to exercise a reasonable effort to obtain other employment. Plaintiff also has failed and refused, and continues to fail and refuse, to exercise a reasonable effort to retain any employment that plaintiff has secured.

[2] Use of Form

The form of affirmative defense in [1], above, is for use in an answer to a complaint seeking damages based on a cause of action for wrongful discharge. It is for use by a defendant-employer, when the defendant wishes to allege that plaintiff failed to mitigate his or her damages after having an opportunity to do so [see Ash v. Soo Sing Lung (1918) 177 Cal. 356, 361-362, 170 P. 843 (duty to mitigate generally); see also Meyer v. Byron Jackson, Inc. (1984) 161 Cal. App. 3d 402, 416-417, 207 Cal. Rptr. 663 (mitigation in wrongful-discharge action means seeking other employment)]. For a form of complaint seeking damages for wrongful discharge, see § 249.50.

[3] Requirement That Defendant Plead and Prove Failure to Mitigate Plaintiff's failure to mitigate damages is an affirmative defense that must be pleaded and proved by the defendant [Mayes v. Sturdy Northern Sales, Inc. (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 69, 86, 154 Cal. Rptr. 43] . The burden of proof on the issue of mitigation of damages is on the party asserting the failure to mitigate [Steelduct Co. v. Henger-Seltzer Co. (1945) 26 Cal. 2d 634, 654, 160 P.2d 804] . For discussion of mitigation of damages, see § 249.18.

§ 249.66 Affirmative Defense Allegation--Wrongful Discharge Claim Under State Law Preempted by Federal Labor Management Relations Act (29 U.S.C. § 141 et seq.) [29 U.S.C. § 185(a)]--Employment Relationship Governed by Collective Bargaining Agreement

[1] FORM Affirmative Defense Allegation--Wrongful Discharge Claim Under State Law Preempted by Federal Labor Management Relations Act (29 U.S.C. § 141 et seq.) [29 U.S.C. § 185(a)]--Employment Relationship Governed by Collective Bargaining Agreement

AS A [_____ (if more than one, specify number, e.g., FIRST)] SEPARATE AND AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE [if more than one cause of action alleged, state TO THE _____ (specify, e.g., SECOND) CAUSE OF ACTION], defendant alleges that resolution of plaintiff's state-law wrongful discharge claim is substantially dependent on analysis of the terms and conditions of the collective bargaining agreement that governs plaintiff's employment and is therefore preempted by Section 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act (29 U.S.C. § 185(a)).

[2] Use of Form

The affirmative defense in [1], above, may be pleaded in an answer to a complaint for damages based on the alleged wrongful discharge of an employee whose terms and conditions of employment are covered by a collective bargaining agreement when the action is preempted by Section 301 of the federal Labor Management Relations Act (29 U.S.C. § 185(a)) [see Friday v. Hughes Aircraft Co. (1986) 188 Cal. App. 3d 117, 123, 236 Cal. Rptr. 291] .

§ 249.67 Affirmative Defense Allegation--Wrongful Discharge Claim Under State Law Preempted by Federal Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act (29 U.S.C. § 401 et seq.)--Plaintiff Is Policymaking or Confidential Union Employee

[1] FORM Affirmative Defense Allegation--Wrongful Discharge Claim Under State Law Preempted by Federal Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act (29 U.S.C. § 401 et seq.)--Plaintiff Is Policymaking or Confidential Union Employee

AS A [_____ (if more than one, specify number, e.g., FIRST)] SEPARATE AND AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE [if more than one cause of action alleged, state TO THE _____ (specify, e.g., SECOND) CAUSE OF ACTION], defendant alleges that the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act (29 U.S.C. § 401 et seq.) preempts plaintiff's state-law wrongful discharge claim because plaintiff was a _____ [policymaking or confidential or policymaking and confidential] employee for defendant.

[2] Use of Form

The affirmative defense in [1], above, may be used in an answer to a complaint for damages based on the alleged wrongful discharge in breach of an employment contract of a plaintiff employed by a labor union as a policymaking or confidential employee. The Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act (LMRDA; 29 U.S.C. § 401 et seq.) preempts such an action [Screen Extras Guild, Inc. v. Superior Court (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 1017, 1024, 1032, 275 Cal. Rptr. 395, 800 P.2d 873] . This preemption defense is not applicable, however, if the plaintiff was an elected union official [Sheet Metal Workers' Int'l Ass'n v. Lynn (1989) 488 U.S. 347, 355, 109 S. Ct. 639, 102 L. Ed. 2d 700 (allowing elected union official's wrongful-termination action to proceed furthers LMRDA's goal of ensuring union democracy); see Hansen v. Aerospace Related Indus. Dist. Lodge 725 of Int'l Ass'n of Machinists & Aerospace Workers (2001) 90 Cal. App. 4th 977, 982-983, 109 Cal. Rptr. 2d 482 (union official's wrongful-termination action preempted by LMRDA; although originally elected to his position, by time of alleged wrongful termination union had reorganized and plaintiff was serving at will of union president)]. Also, LMRDA preemption does not apply to a wrongful-discharge claim based on a violation of the public policy against age discrimination and disability discrimination [Smith v. IBEW, Local Union 11 (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 1637, 1648-1654] .

[1] FORM Affirmative Defense Allegation--Employee's Tort Claim Against Railroad or Airline Employer Preempted by Railway Labor Act (45 U.S.C. § 151 et seq.) [45 U.S.C. §§ 153-155, 183-185]--Claim Involves Minor Dispute

AS A [_____ (if more than one, specify number, e.g., FIRST)] SEPARATE AND AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE [if more than one cause of action alleged, state TO THE _____ (specify, e.g., SECOND) CAUSE OF ACTION], defendant alleges that this action is preempted by the Railway Labor Act and that plaintiff's exclusive remedy is in the grievance adjustment procedures designated by the collective bargaining agreement for resolution of disputes _____ [specify basis of dispute, e.g., stemming from plaintiff's belief that he/she had been unjustly dealt with or that any provision of the agreement was not properly applied or interpreted], for the following reasons:

1. The claim set forth in the complaint _____ [specify basis of action, e.g., is based on conduct that occurred in defendant's investigation of charges against plaintiff to determine whether plaintiff should be disciplined or discharged, and the investigation was made pursuant to the requirements of the collective bargaining agreement in effect at the time, which expressly required that an investigation and hearing take place before an employee could be discharged or disciplined]; and

2. Defendant's alleged conduct does not so far exceed the scope of reasonable conduct in the context of those matters that reference to the collective bargaining agreement is unnecessary to resolve the claim.

[2] Use of Form

The affirmative defense in [1], above, may be pleaded in an answer to a complaint for damages based on an alleged wrongful discharge or other tort when the substance of plaintiff's claim is properly classified as a minor dispute under the Railway Labor Act (45 U.S.C. § 151 et seq.); that is, the claim is arguably governed by a collective-bargaining agreement or has a relationship to the labor contract that is not obviously insubstantial [see Hawaiian Airlines, Inc. v. Norris (1994) 512 U.S. 246, 114 S. Ct. 2239, 2251, 129 L. Ed. 2d 203 (no preemption for wrongful termination in breach of public policy); Fennessey v. Southwest Airlines (9th Cir. 1996) 91 F.3d 1359, 1362 (no preemption for retaliatory discharge); DeTomaso v. Pan American World Airways, Inc.(1987) 43 Cal. 3d 517, 525, 527 n.7, 235 Cal. Rptr. 292, 733 P.2d 614] . Although preemption under the RLA may be raised by affirmative defense, such preemption is a question of subject matter jurisdiction and, hence, is not waived by a failure to plead it as an affirmative defense [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(a), 430.80(a); DeTomaso v. Pan American World Airways, Inc. (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 517, 520 n.1, 235 Cal. Rptr. 292, 733 P.2d 614 , cert. denied, 484 U.S. 829] . § 249.69 Affirmative Defense Allegation--Wrongful Discharge Claim Under State Law Preempted by National Bank Act (12 U.S.C. § 24 P 5)--Plaintiff Is Bank Officer

[1] FORM Affirmative Defense Allegation--Wrongful Discharge Claim Under State Law Preempted by National Bank Act (12 U.S.C. § 24 P 5)--Plaintiff Is Bank Officer

AS A [_____ (if more than one, specify number, e.g., FIRST)] SEPARATE AND AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE [if more than one cause of action alleged, state TO THE _____ (specify, e.g., SECOND) CAUSE OF ACTION], defendant alleges that the National Bank Act (12 U.S.C. § 24 P 5) preempts plaintiff's state-law wrongful discharge claim because plaintiff was a _____ [specify, e.g., president or vice-president or cashier or other bank officer] of defendant and may be discharged at plaintiff's pleasure.

[2] Use of Form

The affirmative defense in [1], above, may be used in an answer to a complaint for damages based on the alleged wrongful discharge of a plaintiff employed as a bank officer at a national bank. The National Bank Act (12 U.S.C. § 24 P 5) preempts such actions [Wells Fargo Bank v. Superior Court (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 1082, 1088, 282 Cal. Rptr. 841, 811 P.2d 1025 ; Aalgaard v. Merchants Nat. Bank, Inc. (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 674, 677, 692, 274 Cal. Rptr. 81 , cert. denied, 502 U.S. 901 (1991)] . Preemption does not apply, however, unless the terminated employee is a bank "officer" meeting all of the following criteria: (1) he or she holds an office created by the board of directors and listed in the bank's bylaws; (2) he or she is appointed by the board of directors, either directly or pursuant to a delegation of board authority set forth in the bylaws; (3) he or she has express legal authority to bind the bank in its transactions with borrowers, depositors, customers, or other third parties by executing contracts or other legal instruments on the bank's behalf; and (4) his or her decision-making authority, however it might be limited by bank rule or policy, relates to fundamental banking operations in such a manner as to affect potentially the public's trust in the banking institution [Wells Fargo Bank v. Superior Court (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 1082, 1091, 282 Cal. Rptr. 841, 811 P.2d 1025 (setting forth criteria); Ramanathan v. Bank of America (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 1017, 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 471 (employee designated "vice president" by bank's board of directors does not qualify as "officer" for purposes of 12 U.S.C. § 24 P 5 unless he or she meets all four criteria)].

The California Supreme Court has held that the National Bank Act provision that grants the power to dismiss bank officers "at pleasure" [12 U.S.C. § 24 P 5] preempts the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) to the extent the two laws are in conflict. However, the Court also held that the actual scope of the National Bank Act provision has been limited since its original enactment in 1864. Reading federal law as a whole, the Court found that the National Bank Act has been impliedly amended by subsequently enacted federal civil-rights laws. Thus, as impliedly amended by Title VII and the ADEA, the National Bank Act provision actually grants a national bank a limited power to dismiss its officers, not extending to dismissal on the ground of race, color, religion, sex, national origin, or age. As so amended, the National Bank Act provision preempts the FEHA, but only to the extent that the FEHA confers on officers of a national bank a right against dismissal on grounds not mentioned in Title VII and the ADEA (for example, physical disability, mental disability, medical condition, or marital status) [Peatros v. Bank of America (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 147, 173-175, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 659, 990 P.2d 539 ; see Gov. Code § 12940(a)]. Presumably, the Court's reasoning would apply to prevent preemption of a claim of wrongful discharge in violation of public policy, if the public policy is embodied in a provision of the FEHA that is not preempted by the National Bank Act.

For further discussion of preemption under the National Bank Act, see § 249.21[6].

§ 249.70 Affirmative Defense Allegation--Wrongful Discharge Claim Under State Law Preempted by Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. § 1001 et seq.)--Action Relates to Employee Benefit Plan Under ERISA and Is Not Exempt From Its Provisions

[1] FORM Affirmative Defense Allegation--Wrongful Discharge Claim Under State Law Preempted by Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. § 1001 et seq.)--Action Relates to Employee Benefit Plan Under ERISA and Is Not Exempt From Its Provisions

AS A [_____ (if more than one, specify number, e.g., FIRST)] SEPARATE AND AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE [if more than one cause of action alleged, state TO THE _____ (specify, e.g., SECOND) CAUSE OF ACTION], defendant alleges that plaintiff's state-law wrongful discharge claim relates to an employee benefit plan as defined under Section 4(a) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. § 1001 et seq.), and is not exempt under Section 4(b) of that act. The action is therefore preempted, pursuant to Title 29 of the United States Code, Section 1144(a).

[2] Use of Form

The affirmative defense in [1], above, may be pleaded in an answer to a complaint for damages based on the alleged wrongful discharge of an employee when the action relates to an employee benefit plan under the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA; 29 U.S.C. § 1001 et seq.), to allege that the action is preempted by ERISA [see 29 U.S.C. § 1144(a)].

[Verification, if desired. See § 249.50[1].]

The form of complaint in [1], above, is for use in an action for damages against a person who, by knowing misrepresentation, influenced, persuaded, or engaged the plaintiff to change from one place to another for the purpose of working in any branch of labor [see Lab. Code §§ 970, 972]. For further discussion, see § 249.30.

The cause of action alleged in the form may augment other theories, such as wrongful discharge or intentional infliction of emotional distress. For forms relating to wrongful discharge, see § 249.50 et seq. For discussion and forms relating to intentional infliction of emotional distress, see Ch. 362, Mental Suffering and Emotional Distress .

[3] Allegations

The form of complaint in [1], above, contains the elements for stating a cause of action for violation of Lab. Code § 970, as follows:

- Paragraph 4 of the form alleges that the defendant made false representations concerning the following conditions of employment [Lab. Code § 970; see Lab. Code §§ 973-974 (requiring plain and explicit mention in advertising or other communications that labor disturbance exists; criminal sanctions)]:

  - The kind, character, or existence of work in any branch of labor;

  - The length of time such work will last, or the compensation therefor;

  - The sanitary or housing conditions relating to or surrounding the work; or

  - The existence or nonexistence of any strike, lockout, or other labor dispute affecting it and pending between the proposed employer and the persons then or last engaged in the performance of the labor for which the employee is sought.

- Paragraph 5 of the form alleges that defendant's representations were knowingly false [Lab. Code § 970]. A complaint fails to state a cause of action if this essential element is not alleged [Tyco Industries, Inc. v. Superior Court (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 148, 156-157, 211 Cal. Rptr. 540] .

- Paragraph 6 of the form alleges that plaintiff, without knowledge of the falsity, relied on the defendant's misrepresentations and changed his or her residence for the purpose of working in some branch of labor [see Lab. Code § 970].

- Paragraph 7 of the form alleges the circumstances of plaintiff's discovery that the representations were false.

- Paragraph 8 of the form alleges that as a proximate result of defendant's misrepresentations, plaintiff was influenced, persuaded, or engaged to change his or her place of residence for the purpose of working and suffered damage therefrom [Lab. Code § 970].

- Optional Paragraph 9 of the form alleges grounds for punitive damages under Civ. Code § 3294. Plaintiff may, however, have to elect between double damages and punitive damages. For further discussion, see [5], below.

[4] Double Damages

Any person or agent or officer thereof who violates any provision of Lab. Code § 970 is liable to the party aggrieved, in a civil action, for double damages resulting from the misrepresentations. The civil action may be brought by an aggrieved person or by his or her assigns or successors in interest without first establishing any criminal liability [Lab. Code § 972].

[5] Punitive and Exemplary Damages

Although no case has so held, by analogy to cases decided under similar statutes that provided for enhanced damages, it is arguable that if malice is established in such a cause of action, the plaintiff may be entitled to punitive damages. If punitive damages are allowed, however, the plaintiff may have to elect between double damages and punitive damages [see Marshall v. Brown (1983) 141 Cal. App. 3d 408, 418-419, 190 Cal. Rptr. 392 (construing Lab. Code § 1054); see also discussion in § 249.31]. For this reason, the form sets forth an allegation and prayer for punitive damages as optional.

[6] Class Action

It appears that damages may be sought under Lab. Code § 972 in a class action on behalf of a number of persons who are aggrieved by the same misrepresentations [see Collins v. Rocha (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 232, 234, 240, 102 Cal. Rptr. 1, 497 P.2d 225 (reversing order sustaining demurrer to complaint asserting class action)].

[and DOES I through_____,]	)	[Amount demanded (exceeds or does not exceed)
Defendant(s).	)	$10,000]

Plaintiff alleges:

1. [Capacity and residence of parties. See § 249.50[1], Paragraph 1.]

[2. Fictitious name allegations. See § 249.50[1], Paragraph 2.]

[3. Agency allegations. See § 249.50[1], Paragraph 3.]

4. On or about _____ [date], defendant hired plaintiff, and plaintiff entered into employment, as defendant's employee.

5. On or about _____ [date], _____ [defendant discharged plaintiff from employment or plaintiff voluntarily left defendant's service.]

6. On or about _____ [date], defendant falsely informed _____ [name], to whom plaintiff had applied for employment, that _____ [set forth the misrepresentation, e.g., plaintiff had been discharged because plaintiff had pilfered goods from defendant's inventory].

7. As a proximate result of defendant's intentional misrepresentation(s), plaintiff was prevented from obtaining employment with _____ [name], to plaintiff's damage in the sum of $_____.

[8. The above-described misrepresentation(s) was made by the defendant with _____ [malice and/or oppression and/or fraud] in that _____ [specify circumstances]. Defendant's conduct therefore warrants the assessment of punitive damages.]

WHEREFORE, plaintiff prays for judgment as follows:

1. For damages in the sum of $_____;

2. That the damages be trebled as provided in Labor Code Section 1054;

[3. As an alternative to the treble damages prayed for herein, for punitive damages in an amount appropriate to punish defendant and deter others from engaging in similar wrongful conduct;]

4. For costs of suit herein incurred;

5. For such other and further relief as the court deems proper.

_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[Verification, if desired. See § 249.50[1].]

[2] Use of Form

The form of complaint in [1], above, is for use in an action for damages against a person who, by misrepresentation, prevented or attempted to prevent the plaintiff from obtaining other employment after discharging the plaintiff or after the plaintiff voluntarily left the defendant's service [Lab. Code §§ 1050, 1054; see also Lab. Code § 1053 (protection for truthful statement of reason for employee's discharge or voluntary departure)]. For further discussion, see § 249.31.

The cause of action for prevention of employment may augment other theories, such as wrongful discharge, defamation, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. For forms relating to wrongful discharge, see § 249.50 et seq. For discussion and forms relating to defamation and intentional infliction of emotional distress, see Ch. 340, Libel and Slander , and Ch. 362, Mental Suffering and Emotional Distress , respectively.

[3] Allegations

The form of complaint in [1], above, sets forth the elements of a cause of action for unlawful prevention of employment [Lab. Code §§ 1050, 1054]:

- Defendant either discharged plaintiff or plaintiff voluntarily left defendant's service (Paragraph 5).
- Defendant made a misrepresentation (Paragraph 6).
- Defendant, by making the misrepresentation, prevented or attempted to prevent the plaintiff from obtaining employment (Paragraph 7).

The prayer requests that the damages be trebled pursuant to Lab. Code § 1054.

If malice is established, punitive damages may be awarded under Civ. Code § 3294. The plaintiff may not, however, recover both punitive damages and treble damages and is limited to either treble damages or untrebled damages [Marshall v. Brown (1983) 190Cal. Rptr. 392]. Hence, the form sets forth optional allegations and prayer that may be used when the plaintiff is seeking punitive damages (Paragraph 8 and Prayer, Paragraph 3).

The form may also be modified to allege liability under Lab. Code § 1052 when the defendant has knowingly caused, suffered, or permitted an agent, superintendent, manager, or employee in his or her employ to commit a violation of Lab. Code § 1050, or who fails to take all reasonable steps within his or her power to prevent such violation [see Lab. Code §§ 1052, 1054].

[1] FORM Complaint for Damages [Civ. Code § 3300] Based on Breach of Employment Contract--By Employer Against Former Employee--Refusal to Perform Services

vs.	)	COMPLAINT FOR DAMAGES
_____ [name],	)	(Breach of Contract)
Defendants.	)	[Amount demanded _____ (exceeds or does not ex-
	)	ceed) $10,000]

Plaintiff alleges:

1. _____ [Allege capacity and residence of defendant, e.g., Defendant is, and at all times mentioned herein was, a resident of _____ County, California].

2. On or about _____ [date], at _____ [city], _____ County, California, plaintiff and defendant entered into _____ [a written or an oral] agreement for the employment of defendant by plaintiff to _____ [set forth general nature of work, e.g., perform as an actor in a production of the play "Macbeth"]. The terms of the agreement were _____ [as follows: _____ (set out terms) or as stated in the copy attached hereto as Exhibit A and made a part hereof].

3. Plaintiff has performed all conditions, covenants, and promises required by him/her on his/her part to be performed in accordance with the terms and conditions of the contract[, except _____ (specify conditions(s) not performed). The reason that plaintiff did not perform _____ (this or these) condition(s) is that _____ (specify facts showing excuse for nonperformance, e.g., plaintiff's performance was prevented by defendant's actions in contravention of the agreement as hereinafter described)].

4. _____ [At all times mentioned herein or Until plaintiff took steps to mitigate plaintiff's loss resulting from defendant'sactions in contravention of the agreement, as hereinafter alleged], plaintiff was [and now is] ready, able, and willing to perform, and [has] offered to perform, all of the terms of the agreement to be performed on plaintiff's part.

5. _____ [Allege defendant's actions in contravention of agreement, e.g., Pursuant to the agreement, defendant began rehearsals on or about _____ (date), and continued to perform until _____ (date). On that date defendant failed to appear for rehearsals. Thereafter, for a period of _____ (e.g., one week), defendant failed and refused to appear for rehearsals].

6. _____ [Allege facts tending to show nature and extent of plaintiff's injury, e.g., Defendant is a well-known Shakespearean actor whose performances in other productions have drawn record numbers of spectators. This fact was known to both plaintiff and defendant when the agreement was entered into, and it was, and defendant knew that it was, the principal reason why plaintiff employed defendant. Defendant's absence from the cast of plaintiff's production could have been expected to, and did, substantially reduce the number of spectators at every performance below the number that was reasonably anticipated when the agreement was entered into. As a result, plaintiff could have been expected to, and did, receive substantially less revenue from the production than was reasonably anticipated when the agreement was entered into].

7. _____ [Allege facts tending to show the measure of plaintiff's damages, including facts in mitigation, e.g., If defendant had fully performed the terms of the agreement on his part to be performed, plaintiff would have received a net profit from the production of at least $_____. When defendant failed and refused to continue with rehearsals, as hereinabove alleged, plaintiff engaged another actor, who was less well known and less highly respected as a Shakespearean actor, to play the role that defendant had been engaged to play. Plaintiff thereafter produced the number of performances anticipated by the agreement. Plaintiff received from those performances a total net profit of $_____].

8. As a proximate result of defendant's breach of the agreement as hereinabove alleged, plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of $_____.

WHEREFORE, plaintiff prays judgment against defendant as follows:

1. For damages in the sum of $_____;

2. For interest on the sum of $_____ from and after _____ [date];

3. For costs of suit herein incurred; and

4. For such other and further relief as the court may deem proper.

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[Verification, if desired. See § 249.50[1].]

[2] Use of Form

The form of complaint in [1], above, is for use in an action for damages against a person who has breached a contract for personal services [see generally Civ. Code § 3300].

[3] Specific Enforcement

An obligation to render personal service cannot be specifically enforced [see Civ. Code § 3390(1)]. Since an employee's obligation under a contract of employment is principally to render personal service, specific enforcement is not a remedy that is available to the employer if the employee refuses or fails to render the service; however, there are a few exceptional cases in which the employer may obtain an injunction against breach of a personal services contract [see Civ. Code § 3423(e); Code Civ. Proc. § 526(b)(5)]. For further discussion, see § 249.35[4], Ch. 528, Specific Performance , and Ch. 303, Injunctions .

§ 250.10 Governing Law

Both the federal government and California have enacted comprehensive wage and hour laws establishing minimum wages, overtime compensation requirements, standards for working conditions, and restrictions on child labor to protect employees from oppressive working conditions [see 29 U.S.C. § 202(b); Lab. Code § 90.5(a)]. State law is codified mainly in the Labor Code and Title 8 of the California Code of Regulations. The principal federal law is contained in Title 29 of the United States Code and Title 29 of the Code of Federal Regulations. Employers covered by federal and state wage and hour laws must comply with both and, to the extent that federal and state requirements conflict, must follow the law that provides the most protection for the employee [see 29 U.S.C. § 218(a)].

The principal federal wage and hour legislation for most employers is the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA) [see 29 U.S.C. §§ 201-219]. The FLSA is supplemented by the Portal-to-Portal Act, which contains certain limitations on liability imposed under the FLSA [see 29 U.S.C. §§ 251-262].

In California, pursuant to constitutional and statutory authority [see Cal. Const., art. XIV, § 1; Lab. Code § 1173], the Industrial Welfare Commission (IWC) has promulgated codified administrative regulations ("wage orders"). Industry and occupation wage orders set forth labor standards (including minimum wage and overtime compensation requirements) that must be complied with by employers in specific industries or employing workers in specific occupations, and a general minimum wage order sets forth the minimum wage that must be paid to employees regardless of the industry or occupation in which they work [see 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11000 et seq.]. For further discussion of wage orders, see § 250.14[2].

In addition to state and federal laws, some cities have enacted "living wage" ordinances that require certain employers to pay wages approximating the real cost of living in the locality, which is often significantly higher than the applicable state or federal minimum wage [see RUI One Corp. v. City of Berkeley (9th Cir. 2004) 371 F.3d 1137, 1141, 1147-1157 , cert. denied, 160 L. Ed. 2d 825 (2005) (upholding constitutionality of city's ordinance mandating minimum wage and employee benefits for certain employers that received some form of financial benefit from city); Amaral v. Cintas Corp. No. 2 (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 1157, 1174-1183, 78 Cal. Rptr. 3d 572 (upholding constitutionality of city's living wage ordinance incorporated into municipal contracts, even though ordinance had extraterritorial effects when contractors were required to pay living wage to employees who lived or worked outside of city)].

§ 250.11 Applicable Standards of Construction When More Than One Law Addresses the Same Subject

Nothing in the FLSA excuses noncompliance with any federal or state law or municipal ordinance establishing a higher minimum wage, a lower maximum workweek, or a higher standard relating to the employment of minors than that established under the FLSA. Thus, the FLSA does not preempt any state law that establishes a higher minimum wage or a shorter workweek for covered employees than federal law [see 29 U.S.C. § 218(a); 29 C.F.R. § 778.5; see also Tidewater Marine Western, Inc. v. Bradshaw (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 557, 566-568, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 186, 927 P. 2d 296 , cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1248 (1997) (FLSA exemption of seamen from regulation does not create affirmative bar to state regulation); Industrial Welfare Com. v. Superior Court (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 690, 727, 166 Cal. Rptr. 331 , appeal dismissed and cert. denied sub nom., California Manufacturers Association v. Industrial Welfare Commission, 449 U.S.1029 (state's authority to go beyond federal legislation in adopting more protective regulations for benefit of employees expressly recognized by FLSA)].

In cases of conflict between federal and California definitions of state boundaries, federal law does not preclude California from regulating employment conduct outside federal boundaries but within broader state law territorial boundaries [Tidewater Marine Western, Inc. v. Bradshaw (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 557, 564-565, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 186, 927 P. 2d 296 , cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1248 (1997)] . Nor does federal law preclude California from regulating its citizens' conduct beyond California territorial borders [Tidewater Marine Western, Inc. v. Bradshaw (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 557, 565-566, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 186, 927 P. 2d 296 , cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1248 (1997)] .

In California, the state minimum wage may exceed the federal minimum wage, but may not fall below it [see Lab. Code § 1182(b); compare Cal. Lab. Code § 1182.12 (California minimum wage) with 29 U.S.C. § 206(a) (federal minimum wage)]. In addition, the employer is subject to stricter standards under California law in such areas as, for example, overtime compensation [see, e.g., Ramirez v. Yosemite Water Co., Inc. (1999) 20 Cal. 4th 785, 797, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 844, 978 P.2d 2 (California defines "outside salespersons" who are exempt from overtime pay in way that provides, at least in some cases, greater protection for employees than under federal law)]. For example, an employer may use an "averaging" method to establish compliance with the minimum wage imposed by the FLSA. Under that method, an employer may compensate some hours at less than the minimum rate so long as the average compensation for the relevant pay period equals or exceeds the minimum rate [see Medrano v. D'Arrigo Bros. Co. (N.D. Cal. 2004) 336 F. Supp. 2d 1053, 1057] . California's minimum wage law, in contrast, requires that an employee be paid at the statutory rate (or, if higher, the applicable contractual rate) for every hour worked [see Lab. Code §§ 221, 222, 223, 1194(a)]. Thus, an employer may not use the "averaging" method to establish compliance with California's minimum wage law, because it would effectively reduce employees' contractual hourly rate and would contravene the clear legislative intent that every hour be paid at the statutory or contractual rate [Armenta v. Osmose, Inc. (2005) 135 Cal. App. 4th 314, 321-324, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 460] .

In those instances when California law imposes stricter standards, the employer subject to both the FLSA and California law must follow California law [see 29 U.S.C. § 218(a); Morillion v. Royal Packing Co. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 575, 582-594, 94 Cal. Rptr. 2d 3, 995 P.2d 139 (time employees are required to spend traveling on employer's bus is compensable under 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11140, P 2(G); because of substantial differences between California and federal definitions of "hours worked," FLSA, as amended by Portal-to-Portal Act, 29 U.S.C. § 251 et seq., does not provide persuasive guidance on this issue)].

In an area in which federal and California requirements do not conflict, federal authorities may provide useful guidance in applying state law. For example, in applying California requirements for overtime pay, an employee's "regular rate" of pay is determined by reference to federal law, since California law does not define that term [Huntington Mem'l Hosp. v. Superior Court (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 893, 903, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 373 (federal authorities still provide useful guidance in applying state law)].

§ 250.12 Effect of Contractual Provisions

[1] Employment Contracts Generally

An individual employee's right to a minimum wage and to overtime pay under the FLSA is nonwaivable [Barrentine v. Arkansas-Best Freight System (1981) 450 U.S. 728, 740, 101 S. Ct. 1437, 67 L. Ed. 2d 641 ; see, e.g., Brooklyn Savings Bank v. O'Neil (1945) 324 U.S. 697, 706-707, 65 S. Ct. 895, 89 L. Ed. 1296 (nonwaivability of statutory liquidated damages for nonpayment of minimum wage under FLSA); see also Zavala v. Scott Bros. Dairy, Inc. (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 585, 594, 49 Cal. Rptr. 3d 503 (union cannot waive individual employees' statutory rights under Lab. Code §§ 226(a) and 226.7(b) to receive rest breaks and wage-stub itemization)]. Contracts falling short of the level of guaranteed minimum compensation for all work or employment engaged in by covered employees must be set aside [see, e.g., Martino v. Michigan Window Cleaning Co. (1946) 327 U.S. 173, 177-178, 66 S. Ct. 379, 90 L. Ed. 603] . However, as long as they comply with the provisions of the FLSA, employers and employees covered under the FLSA may contract for any terms they choose, including higher wages and shorter workweeks than required by statute, in which case nothing in the FLSA will justify the employer in reducing that wage or increasing the workweek [see 29 U.S.C. § 218(a); cf. Lab. Code § 511 (employees in readily identifiable work unit may adopt employer's proposal for regularly scheduled alternative workweek or menu of work-schedule options)].

With regard to California statutory law relating to overtime claims, a provision in a contract covered by the Federal Arbitration Act (9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.) that requires arbitration of employment disputes takes precedence over California wage and hour law because of the strong federal policy favoring enforcement of such arbitration agreements [see 9 U.S.C. § 2; see also Circuit City Stores, Inc. v. Adams (2001) 532 U.S. 105, 121 S. Ct. 1302, 149 L. Ed. 2d 234 (Federal Arbitration Act generally applies to arbitration provisions contained in employment contracts, except contracts of employment of transportation workers)]. Thus, the Labor Commissioner does not have jurisdiction to adjudicate a complaint brought by an employee for overtime if the employee has signed an employment contract agreeing to arbitration of employment-related controversies [Baker v. Aubry (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 1259, 1266, 265 Cal. Rptr. 381] . Furthermore, an employee who has signed such an arbitration agreement may not bring a civil action for wage and hour violations under either California or federal law [see Perry v. Thomas (1987) 482 U.S. 483, 489-491, 107 S. Ct. 2520, 96 L. Ed. 2d 426 (Lab. Code § 229, which provides that employee may bring civil action to recover wages notwithstanding any private agreement to arbitrate, is preempted by Federal Arbitration Act with regard to agreements covered by Act); see Kuehner v. Dickinson & Co. (9th Cir. 1996) 84 F.3d 316, 318 (suit for violation of FLSA stayed pending arbitration of employment disputes); but see Gentry v. Superior Court (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 443, 465 at n.8, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 773 (under 9 U.S.C. § 2, court may refuse to enforce arbitration agreement that significantly undermines ability of employees to vindicate their statutory right to overtime pay)]. However, a clause in a collective bargaining agreement (CBA) requiring arbitration of all grievances arising under the agreement does not waive individual employees' right to bring statutory labor rights claims in court. Such claims arise from the applicable statutory provisions, not from the CBA [Zavala v. Scott Bros. Dairy, Inc. (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 585, 592-595, 49 Cal. Rptr. 3d 503] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Scope of FAA Enforcement. The Federal Arbitration Act (FAA) provides for enforcement of arbitration provisions in any contract "evidencing a transaction involving commerce" [9 U.S.C. § 2]. In general, this language has been construed to mean that the FAA governs if the underlying contract facilitates interstate commercial transactions, or if it directly or indirectly affects commerce between states. The FAA specifically excludes "contracts of employment of seamen, railroad employees, or any other class of workers engaged in foreign or interstate commerce" [9 U.S.C. § 1]. The United States Supreme Court has construed this exclusion narrowly, holding that an employment contract is not excluded unless the employee is directly involved in the transportation industry [Circuit City Stores, Inc. v. Adams (2001) 532 U.S. 105, 121 S. Ct. 1302, 149 L. Ed. 2d 234] . California had earlier adopted this narrow construction of the exclusion, which is consistent with the strong national policy favoring arbitration [see Spellman v. Securities, Annuities & Ins. Servs., Inc. (1992) 8 Cal. App.4th 452, 460, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 427, 432]. By Richard P. Hill.

[2] Collective Bargaining Agreements

The fact that wages, hours, and other conditions of labor may also constitute the objects of collective bargaining does not preclude the state from adopting minimum standards to protect the welfare of workers who may not enjoy sufficient bargaining strength to obtain adequate protection from their employers at the bargaining table [Industrial Welfare Com. v. Superior Court (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 690, 727-728, 166 Cal. Rptr. 331, 613 P.2d 579 , appeal dismissed and cert. denied sub nom. California Manufacturers Association v. Industrial Welfare Commission, 449 U.S. 1029] . In a few instances, however, the wage orders and the Labor Code expressly defer to the provisions of applicable collective bargaining agreements [see, e.g., Lujan v. Southern Cal. Gas Co. (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 1200, 1211-1212, 117 Cal. Rptr. 2d 828] . Thus, for example, many of the Labor Code provisions relating to the time for payment of wages during the course of employment are inapplicable if the terms of a collective bargaining agreement provide for a different pay arrangement [see Lab. Code §§ 204, 204.1, 204.2]. Furthermore, even in those instances in which state law would otherwise be applicable to employees covered by a collective bargaining agreement, state wage and hour laws may be preempted by the federal Labor Management Relations Act [29 U.S.C. § 141 et seq.] in cases in which resolution of the wage controversy requires interpretation of the collective bargaining agreement [see Firestone v. Southern Cal. Gas Co. (9th Cir. 2000) 219 F.3d 1063, 1066-1068]. However, the Labor Management Relations Act does not preempt a state-law claim for unpaid wages if the court is required simply to apply the terms of a collective bargaining agreement; it is preempted only if the court must interpret the terms of the collective bargaining agreement [Soremekun v. Thrifty Payless Inc. (9th Cir. 2007) 509 F.3d 978, 990-991 ; Lujan v. Southern Cal. Gas Co. (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 1200, 1206-1211, 117 Cal. Rptr. 2d 828 (LMRA does not preempt state-law wage claim merely because collective bargaining agreement will be consulted in course of state-law litigation, if interpretation of agreement is not in dispute)]. For general discussion of preemption by the Act, see Ch. 248, Employer's Liability for Employee's Torts .

Under federal law, the requirements of the FLSA take precedence over provisions of collective bargaining agreements that are in conflict with congressionally granted rights under the FLSA [see, e.g., Martino v. Michigan Window Cleaning Co. (1946) 327 U.S. 173, 177-178, 66 S. Ct. 379, 90 L. Ed. 603] . Nevertheless, the FLSA also provides for partial exemptions or exceptions to its general requirements on the basis of the provisions of collective bargaining agreements [see, e.g., 29 U.S.C. § 207(b)(1), (2), (e)(7)].

§ 250.13 Requirement of Employment Relationship

[1] State Law Generally

[a] Operative Definitions

An employment relationship must exist for the California wage orders or the provisions of the Labor Code governing wages, hours, and working conditions to be applicable [see Lab. Code § 1171; 8 Cal. Code Reg. §§ 11010-11150, P 1 (Cal. Wage Order Nos. 1-2001-15-2001); proposed Cal. Wage Order Nos. 16-2001, 17-2001 (http://www.dir.ca.gov/IWC/WageOrderIndustries.htm)]. "Employ," as used in the wage orders, means to engage, suffer, or permit to work. An "employer" is any person [see Lab. Code § 18] who employs or exercises control over the wages, hours, or working conditions of any person [8 Cal. Code Reg. §§ 11010-11150, P 2 (Cal. Wage Order Nos. 1-2001-15-2001); proposed Cal. Wage Order Nos. 16-2001, 17-2001 (http://www.dir.ca.gov/IWC/WageOrderIndustries.htm)]. An "employee" generally is any person employed by an employer [8 Cal. Code Reg. §§ 11010-11150, P 2 (Cal. Wage Order Nos. 1-2001-15-2001); proposed Cal. Wage Order No. 16-2001 (http://www.dir.ca.gov/IWC/WageOrderIndustries.htm)], but special definitions apply in the personal services, public housekeeping, and mercantile industries [8 Cal. Code Reg. §§ 11020, 11050, 11070, P 2 (Cal. Wage Order Nos. 2-2001, 5-2001, 7-2001)]. A large volume of case authority exists defining the employment relationship for purposes of tort law [see, e.g., Johnson v. Banducci (1963) 212 Cal. App. 2d 254, 262, 27 Cal. Rptr. 764] and workers' compensation [see, e.g., S.G. Borello & Sons, Inc. v. Department of Indus. Relations (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 341, 351-356, 256 Cal. Rptr. 543, 769 P.2d 399 (hiree's status in workers' compensation context is to be determined in light of history and purposes of Workers' Compensation Act, thereby lessening common-law emphasis on hirer's degree of control over details of hiree's work in determining whether employment relationship exists); Laeng v. Workmen's Comp. Appeals Bd. (1972) 6 Cal. 3d 771, 774, 100 Cal. Rptr. 377, 494 P.2d 1 ; Baugh v. Rogers (1944) 24 Cal. 2d 200, 205-207, 148 P.2d 633 ; JKH Enters., Inc. v. Department of Indus. Relations (2006) 142 Cal. App. 4th 1046, 1062-1066, 48 Cal.

Rptr. 3d 563] . However, relatively few cases have addressed the definitions of "employer" and "employee" for purposes of state wage and hour law [see, e.g., Grubb & Ellis Co. v. Spengler (1983) 143 Cal. App. 3d 890, 895-897, 192 Cal. Rptr. 637 (real estate salesperson is broker's employee for purposes of real estate, workers' compensation, and tort law, but is not an employee under wage and hour laws); see also Estrada v. FedEx Ground Package System, Inc. (2007) 154 Cal. App. 4th 1, 10, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 327 ("Because the Labor Code does not expressly define 'employee' for purposes of Lab. Code § 2802, which makes employer liable for business expenses incurred by employee, the common law test of employment applies."); People v. Palma (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1559, 1565, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 334 (neither federal or state law defines the term "employee," as a general rule when the term "employee" is used in a statute without a definition, the term is given its common law meaning)].

[b] Independent Contractors

No employment relationship exists if the individual performing services for a principal is an independent contractor. The critical legal distinction between employees and independent contractors is the right to control the manner and means by which the work is performed. A bona fide independent contractor is customarily engaged in an independently established business and retains the right to control the manner in which he or she performs the contract. An employee, on the other hand, is subject to the absolute control and direction of the employer [see Lab. Code §§ 2700, 2750.5; see, e.g., People v. Palma (1995) 40 Cal. App 4th 1559, 1566, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 334 ; Grubb & Ellis Co. v. Spengler (1983) 143 Cal. App. 3d 890, 897-898, 192 Cal. Rptr. 637] .

An individual hired to perform services that require a building contractor's license is presumed to be an employee, unless independent contractor status is established by proof that the individual holds a valid contractor's license and that the following factors exist [Lab. Code § 2750.5; see Cedillo v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (2003) 106 Cal. App. 4th 227, 233, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 581 (if statutory presumption is not rebutted, property owner who hires unlicensed building contractor will be presumptive employer not only of contractor, but also of workers hired by building contractor)]:

- The individual has the right to control and has discretion to determine the manner of performance of the contract for services, thus reflecting the fact that the result of the work and not the means of accomplishing it as the primary factor bargained for;

- The individual is customarily engaged in an independently established business; and

- The individual's independent contractor status is bona fide and not a subterfuge to avoid employee status. Good faith in this context is evidenced by the presence of cumulative factors such as the following:

    - Substantial investment other than personal services in the business;

    - Holding oneself out to be in business for oneself;

    - Bargaining for a contract to complete a specific project for compensation by project rather than by time;

    - Supplying the tools used in the work (other than tools normally provided by employees);

    - Hiring employees;

    - Performing work that is not ordinarily in the course of the principal's work;

- Performing work that requires a particular skill;

- Holding a license under the Business and Professions Code; and

- The intent of the parties that an independent contractor relationship exists or that the relationship is not terminable at will but gives rise to an action for breach of contract if terminated. However, the parties' label for their relationship will be ignored if their actual conduct establishes a different relationship [Estrada v. FedEx Ground Package System, Inc. (2007) 154 Cal. App. 4th 1, 11-13, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 327 (employer's control over every detail of workers' performance supported trial court's conclusion that workers were employees, not independent contractors, despite contractual recitations that manner and means of performing work were within workers' discretion)].

Applying the foregoing statutory presumption, the California Supreme Court has held that an unlicensed worker hired to remodel a homeowner's house, who became injured on the job, cannot be an independent contractor in the eyes of the law and is instead deemed the homeowner's employee at law for purposes of rendering him or her eligible for workers' compensation benefits under the homeowner's insurance policy [State Compensation Ins. Fund v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1985) 40 Cal. 3d 5, 15, 219 Cal. Rptr. 13, 706 P.2d 1146]. It remains an open question, however, whether an unlicensed worker will be deemed a homeowner-hirer's employee under Lab. Code § 2750.5 so as to impose vicarious tort liability on the homeowner for the worker's conduct that results in the worker's own injury [Ramirez v. Nelson (2008) 44 Cal. 4th 908, 920, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 728, 188 P.3d 659 (because no applicable statute created special duty owed by employer to employee, it was unnecessary to decide whether unlicensed worker was homeowner-hirer's employee at law under Lab. Code § 2750.5 so as to impose vicarious liability on homeowner for worker's death caused by worker's own conduct)].

[c] Other Relationships

The "employee" status of a number of other individuals presents difficult coverage questions, the resolution of which depend on the specific facts of each case. The Division of Labor Standards Enforcement (DLSE), which enforces the wage and hour provisions of the Labor Code and the wage orders, has drafted internal guidelines dealing with the status of individuals in the following categories:

- Nominal lessees [see 8 Cal. Code Reg. §§ 11020, 11070, P 2(E) (Cal. Wage Order Nos. 2-2001, 7-2001) (personal service and mercantile industries), 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11050, P 2(F) (Cal. Wage Order No. 5-2001) (public housekeeping industry)];

- Volunteers;

- Students [see 5 Cal. Code Reg. § 10071; see also Lab. Code §§ 1191-1193; 8 Cal. Code Reg. §§ 11010-11150, P 6 (Cal. Wage Order Nos. 1-2001-15-2001 (occupational training for disabled students); 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11050, P 1(A) (student nurses)];

- Trainees [see Lab. Code § 1192; 8 Cal. Code Reg. §§ 11010-11150, P 4(A)(1) (Cal. Wage Order Nos. 1-2001-15-2001)];

- Joint venturers, partners, and shareholders;

- Apprentices [see 8 Cal. Code Reg. §§ 11010-11150, P 4(D) (Cal. Wage Order Nos. 1-2001-15-2001); see also Lab. Code §§ 3070-3098 (State Division of Apprenticeship Standards)];

- Members of religious orders; and
- Spouses.

For a discussion of factors to consider in determining the employee status of these individuals, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 1 (Matthew Bender).

[2] Federal Law

An employment relationship must also exist in order for the FLSA to be applicable, and one who is not an employee will not be covered even if he or she is engaged in covered activities [see 29 U.S.C. §§ 206(a), 207(a); Tony & Susan Alamo Foundation v. Sec. of Labor (1985) 471 U.S. 290, 295, 105 S. Ct. 1953, 85 L. Ed. 2d 278 ; Walling v. Portland Terminal Co. (1947) 330 U.S. 148, 152-153, 67 S. Ct. 639, 91 L. Ed. 809] . The FLSA defines "employer" as including any person acting directly or indirectly in the interest of an employer in relation to an employee [29 U.S.C. § 203(d); see Lambert v. Ackerley (1999) 180 F.3d 997, 1011-1012 (en banc) ("employer" is to be given expansive interpretation in order to effectuate FLSA's broad remedial purposes; individual who exercises control over corporate employer may thus be treated as employer for FLSA purposes)]. The term "employee" means any individual employed by an employer, including most individuals employed by public agencies [see 29 U.S.C. § 203(d), (e), (x)]. To "employ" means to suffer or permit to work [29 U.S.C. § 203(g)].

The FLSA applies to all persons employed by an employer, although certain employees may be wholly or partially exempt from some or all of its provisions. Thus, for example, the FLSA covers piece workers, trainees, beginners, apprentices, or learners if they are employed to work for an employer for compensation, but does not cover individuals who "work" in activities carried on by other persons solely for their own personal purposes or pleasure without the promise or expectation of compensation [see 29 U.S.C. §§ 213, 214; United States v. Rosenwasser (1945) 323 U.S. 360, 362-364, 65 S. Ct. 295, 89 L. Ed. 301 ; Walling v. Portland Terminal Co. (1947) 330 U.S. 148, 151-153, 67 S. Ct. 639, 91 L. Ed. 809] . Also, although the FLSA covers most "domestic service" employees [29 U.S.C. § 206(f)], it provides an exemption for those who are employed to provide companionship services for individuals who (because of age or infirmity) are unable to care for themselves [29 U.S.C. § 213(a)(15); see Long Island Care at Home, Ltd. v. Coke (2007) 551 U.S. 158, 127 S. Ct. 2339, 2344-2352, 168 L. Ed. 2d 54, 61-70 (upholding exemption under 29 C.F.R. § 552.109(a), which applies 29 U.S.C. § 213(a)(15) exemption to persons providing companionship services who are employed by employers or agencies other than families or households using their services)]. As another example, a person employed by a public agency is not covered by the FLSA if that person is exempt from civil service laws and serves as a member of an elected official's personal staff [29 U.S.C. § 203(e)(2)(C); Renna v. County of Fresno (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 1, 5-6, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 586 (board member assistant to county supervisor)]. Also, independent contractors are not deemed "employees" under the FLSA [see Real v. Driscoll Strawberry Associates, Inc. (9th Cir. 1979) 603 F.2d 748, 754] .

PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
A. Overview of Wage and Hour Laws

21-250 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 250.14

§ 250.14 State Law Governing Wages and Hours

[1] Labor Code

[a] General Provisions

Wages, hours, and working conditions are generally governed by Lab. Code § 1171 et seq. These provisions apply to men, women, and minors employed in any occupation, trade, or industry, whether their compensation is measured by time, piece, or otherwise, but do not include any individual employed in outside sales or in a national service program such as AmeriCorps that is carried out with federal assistance under 42 U.S.C. § 12571 [Lab. Code § 1171; see Ramirez v. Yosemite Water Co., Inc. (1999) 20 Cal. 4th 785, 796-798, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 844, 978 P.2d 2 (California definition of "outside salesperson" differs from definition of that term under federal law; California definition depends on how much time employee spends on outside selling, whereas federal definition depends on employee's primary job function); see also [2][e], below]. Among other things, these provisions do all of the following:

- Establish procedures for promulgation, review, and interpretation of wage orders [see Lab. Code §§ 517(a), 1173-1182.1, 1182.7, 1183, 1184, 1187-1190, 1198.4, 1204; see also [2], below, for discussion of Industrial Welfare Commission wage orders].

- Establish a standard eight-hour workday and a standard 40-hour workweek (specifying circumstances in which alternative workweek schedules may be adopted), with overtime pay required for any hours worked in excess of an employee's applicable workday or workweek [Lab. Code §§ 510-558; see Advanced-Tech Sec. Servs., Inc. v. Superior Court (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 700, 706-710, 77 Cal. Rptr. 3d 757 (if employment contract specifies premium pay for holiday work, employer is entitled to credit that premium against otherwise earned overtime pay under Lab. Code § 510(a), which requires one and a half times regular rate of pay for overtime work); Huntington Mem'l Hosp. v. Superior Court (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 893, 902-911, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 373 (employer may not engage in subterfuge or artifice designed to evade overtime requirements, such as manipulation or reduction of pay for regular hours to make up for overtime rate that will have to be paid)].

- Authorize the Industrial Wage Commission to issue wage orders governing wages, hours, and working conditions for particular industries and employees, including the ski industry, the commercial fishing industry, the health care industry, stable employees in the horse racing industry, licensed pharmacists, and outside salespersons [Lab. Code § 517(b)-(d)].

- Authorize the IWC to establish special subminimum wages for certain types of employees [see Lab. Code §§ 1191-1193].

- Set forth various administrative and judicial remedies for violation of the wage and hour laws [see Lab. Code §§ 1193.5-1197.1, 1199, 1199.5, 1200].

For discussion of other statutory provisions governing payment of wages, see § 250.16[1]. For discussion of other statutory provisions governing deductions from wages, see § 250.20.

[b] Equal Pay Act

Lab. Code § 1197.5, popularly known as the California Equal Pay Act, prohibits any employer from paying any individual in the employer's employ at wage rates less than the rates paid to employees of the opposite sex in the same establishment for equal work on jobs performed under similar working conditions that require equal skill, effort, and responsibility. An exception exists for payments made pursuant to a seniority system, a merit system, a system that measures earnings by quantity or quality of production, or a differential based on any bona fide factor other than sex [Lab. Code § 1197.5(a)]. In addition, it is a misdemeanor to pay, or to cause to be paid, any employee of one sex a wage less than the rate paid to an employee of the opposite sex as required by Lab. Code § 1197.5, or to reduce the wages of any employee to comply with that section [Lab. Code § 1199.5].

Any employer who discriminates in wage rates on the basis of sex alone is liable to the employee affected in the amount of the wages, plus interest, of which the employee is deprived by reason of the violation, plus an additional equal amount as liquidated damages [Lab. Code § 1197.5(b)]. Any employee receiving less than the wage to which he or she is entitled under Lab. Code § 1197.5 may recover the balance of the wages, including interest, an equal amount as liquidated damages, and costs of suit and reasonable attorney's fees, notwithstanding any agreement to work for a lesser wage [Lab. Code § 1197.5(g)]. For a form of complaint for use in cases in which unlawful discrimination based on sex in violation of the Equal Pay Act is alleged, see § 250.64.

In an action under the Equal Pay Act, the employee must make a prima facie showing that the employer pays workers of one sex more than workers of the opposite sex for substantially similar work performed under substantially similar conditions [see Hall v. County of Los Angeles (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 318, 323-325, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 732 (plaintiff cannot compare male employees of one work unit and female employees of another unit, if each unit employs substantial number of men and women, and both sexes in plaintiff's unit are paid same)]. After the employee makes the prima facie showing, the employer then has the burden of showing that one of the statutory exceptions [see Lab. Code § 1197.5(a)] is applicable. If the employer does so, the employee may show that the employer's stated reasons are pretextual [Green v. Par Pools Inc. (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 620, 624-626, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 844] .

Alternatively, the Division of Labor Standards Enforcement (DLSE) of the Department of Industrial Relations (DIR) may commence and prosecute, unless otherwise requested by the employee or affected group of employees, a civil action on behalf of the employee and on behalf of a similarly affected group of employees to recover unpaid wages under Lab. Code § 1197.5(a). The division is entitled to recover costs of suit in addition to the wages. The consent of any employee to the bringing of such an action constitutes a waiver of his or her cause of action under Lab. Code § 1197.5(g) unless the action is dismissed without prejudice by the division. The employee may intervene in the suit or may initiate independent action, however, if the suit has not been determined within 180 days from the date of the filing of the complaint [Lab. Code § 1197.5(f)].

Any affected employee may file a complaint with the DLSE that the wages he or she has been paid are less than the wages to which he or she is entitled under Lab. Code § 1197.5(a). These complaints are investigated as provided in Lab. Code § 98.7(b). The name of any employee who submits a complaint to the division regarding an alleged violation of Lab. Code § 1197.5(a) must be kept confidential by the division until it establishes the complaint's validity, or unless the confidentiality must be abridged by the division to investigate the complaint. The name of the complaining employee must remain confidential if the complaint is withdrawn before confidentiality is abridged by the division. The division must take all proceedings necessary to enforce the payment of any sums found to be due and unpaid to the employee [Lab. Code § 1197.5(e); see Lab. Code § 1197.5(c)].

A civil action to recover wages under Lab. Code § 1197.5(a) generally may be commenced no later than two years after the cause of action occurs. A cause of action arising out of a willful violation, however, may be commenced no later than three years after the cause of action occurs [Lab. Code § 1197.5(h)].

Federal law provides similar restrictions regarding wage discrimination on the basis of sex [see 29 U.S.C. § 206(d); Green v. Par Pools Inc. (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 620, 623, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 844 (because California Equal Pay Act is nearly identical to federal Equal Pay Act, courts may, in absence of California authority, rely on federal authorities construing federal statute); see also § 250.15[3]].

For a detailed discussion of the state and federal equal pay statutes and related employment discrimination laws, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Chs. 40-43 (Matthew Bender). For further discussion and forms relating to employment discrimination laws, see Ch. 115, Civil Rights: Employment Discrimination .

[c] Public Works

Special provisions govern the payment of wages to workers employed by a contractor for a public works project of more than $1,000 [see Lab. Code §§ 1770-1780, 1815; see also Lab. Code §§ 1720-1720.4 ("public works" defined); City of Long Beach v. Department of Indus. Relations (2004) 34 Cal. 4th 942, 950-954, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 518, 102 P.3d 904 (January 1, 2001, expansion of definition of "public works" to include design and preconstruction phases of construction was not retroactive)]. These workers must be paid no less than the general prevailing rate, determined by the Director of the Department of Industrial Relations, of per diem wages for work of a similar character in the locality in which the public work is performed, and no less than the general prevailing rate of per diem wages for holiday and overtime work [Lab. Code § 1771; see Lab. Code §§ 1770, 1773, 1773.4-1773.9; International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Locals v. Aubry (1996) 41 Cal. App. 4th 1632, 1636-1637 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 759 (courts will accord substantial deference to Director of DIR's determination of "actually prevailing" wage for public works projects)]. Where a public-works project is a joint enterprise of the federal government and California governmental units, but the federal agency awards the construction contracts and exerts overall control, California defers to federal prevailing-wage standards [Southern Cal. Lab. Management Etc. Committee v. Aubry (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 873, 886, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 106] . On the other hand, contentions that the Employee Retirement Income Security Act and the National Labor Relations Act preempt California's prevailing-wage scheme have been rejected [Cal. Div. of Labor Stds. v. Dillingham (1997) 519 U.S. 316, 117 S. Ct. 832, 136 L. Ed. 2d 791, 802-805 (California prevailing-wage law is not preempted by ERISA and may be enforced against subcontractor employing apprentices in unapproved apprenticeship program, though program is ERISA "benefit plan"); Dillingham Constr. N.A., Inc. v. County of Sonoma (9th Cir. 1999) 190 F.3d 1034, 1040 (NLRA does not preempt California prevailing-wage law); WSB Elec., Inc. v. Curry (9th Cir. 1996) 88 F.3d 788, 794 (prevailing-wage scheme not preempted, though it takes into account sums paid into benefit plans); Department of Industrial Relations v. Nielsen Construction Co. (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 1016, 1028-1030, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 785 (no preemption where state seeks recovery of funds contractor withheld from benefit plan, when withholding was means of avoiding prevailing-wage obligations); see Associated Builders & Contractors of S. Cal., Inc. v. Nunn (9th Cir. 2004) 356 F.3d 979, 986-991 (NLRA does not preempt California prevailing-wage regulation governing apprenticeships on private projects)].

During any Division of Labor Standards Enforcement (DLSE) investigation of an alleged violation of the California prevailing-wage law, the division must keep confidential the name of any employee who reported the violation, as well as any other information that might identify the employee [Lab. Code § 1736].

The Labor Code provides for the withholding of contract payments from public works contractors or subcontractors that fail to pay prevailing wages to their workers [Lab. Code § 1727]. An affected contractor or subcontractor may obtain an administrative hearing to review the correctness of the withholding of contract payments, followed by mandamus review in superior court [Lab. Code § 1742; see Lujan v. G & G Fire Sprinklers, Inc. (2001) 532 U.S.189, 195-197, 121 S. Ct. 1446, 149 L. Ed. 2d 391 (lack of administrative review before Lab. Code § 1742 took effect on July 1, 2001, did not violate constitutional due process requirements because contractor's right to payment could be fully protected in ordinary breach-of-contract action); see also Mobley v. Los Angeles Unified Sch. Dist. (2001) 90 Cal. App. 4th 1221, 1238, 1241, 1245, 109 Cal. Rptr. 2d 591 (Lab. Code § 1742 requires postdeprivation hearing to determine whether withholding of contract payments is correct)].

In addition, a worker on a public works project has a private statutory cause of action to recover the prevailing wage from the contractor or subcontractor that employs the worker [Lab. Code § 1194; Road Sprinkler Fitters Local Union No. 669 v. G & G Fire Sprinklers, Inc. (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 765, 777-779, 125 Cal. Rptr. 2d 804] . However, a subcontractor's employee on a public works project does not have a statutory or contractual right to sue the prime or general contractor for the nonpayment of prevailing wages by the subcontractor (the employee's direct employer) [Violante v. Communities S.W. Dev. & Constr. Co (2006) 138 Cal. App. 4th 972, 978-982, 41 Cal. Rptr. 3d 673] .

For a discussion of the payment of the general prevailing rate to public works employees, as distinguished from payment of the minimum wage, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 2 (Matthew Bender).

[2] Industrial Welfare Commission Wage Orders

[a] Generally

The California wage orders, promulgated by the IWC [see Lab. Code §§ 1173, 1182] and codified in Title 8 of the California Code of Regulations [see Cal. Wage Order No. MW-2007 (http://www.dir.ca.gov/IWC/Minwage2007.pdf) (implementing Lab. Code § 1182.12); 8 Cal. Code Reg. §§ 11010-11170 (Cal. Wage Order Nos. 1-2001-17-2001)], are administrative regulations that set forth requirements for minimum wages, overtime compensation, and working conditions in various industries and occupations in California. Wage orders may be adopted, amended, or rescinded by the IWC pursuant to procedures set forth in the Labor Code [see Lab. Code §§ 1173, 1176-1182.1, 1182.5, 1182.7, 1184-1190], and are expressly exempted from the usual procedures for adopting administrative regulations set forth under Gov. Code § 11346 et seq. [Lab. Code § 1185].

The provisions of the various wage orders differ in many respects. Of the wage orders promulgated by the IWC, twelve are "industry" orders, each of which applies to persons employed in the industry specified in the particular order [see 8 Cal. Code Reg. §§ 11010-11030, 11050-11130 (Cal. Wage Order Nos. 1-2001-3-2001, 5-2001-13-2001)]; four are "occupation" orders that apply to persons employed in specified types of occupations [see 8 Cal. Code Reg. §§ 11040, 11140-11160 (Cal. Wage Order Nos. 4-2001, 14-2001-16-2001)]; and one is a general minimum wage order applicable to all California employers [see Cal. Wage Order No. MW-2007 (http://www.dir.ca.gov/IWC/Minwage2007.pdf) (implementing Lab. Code § 1182.12)]. There is also a catchall order, Miscellaneous Employees, covering "[a]ny industry or occupation not previously covered by, and all employees not specifically exempted in, the Commission's wage orders in effect in 1997, or otherwise exempted by law" [see 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11170 (Cal. Wage Order No. 17-2001); see also Eight-Hour-Day Restoration and Workplace Flexibility Act of 1999, 1999 Stats., ch. 134 (A.B. 60)].

For detailed discussion of the industries and occupations covered by the wage orders, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 1 (Matthew Bender).

[b] Industry Wage Orders

The 12 specific industries covered under the wage orders are the following:

- Amusement and recreation (Wage Order No. 10-2001) [see 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11100].
- Broadcasting (Wage Order No. 11-2001) [see 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11110].
- Canning, freezing, and preserving (Wage Order No. 3-2001) [see 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11030].
- Handling products after harvest (Wage Order No. 8-2001) [see 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11080].
- Laundry, linen supply, dry cleaning, and dyeing (Wage Order No. 6-2001) [see 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11060].
- Manufacturing (Wage Order No. 1-2001) [see 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11010].
- Mercantile (Wage Order No. 7-2001) [see 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11070].
- Motion picture (Wage Order No. 12-2001) [see 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11120].
- Personal service (Wage Order No. 2-2001) [see 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11020].
- Preparing agricultural products on the farm for market (Wage Order No. 13-2001) [see 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11130].
- Public housekeeping (Wage Order No. 5-2001) [see 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11050].
- Transportation (Wage Order No. 9-2001) [see 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11090].

[c] Occupation Wage Orders

The occupation wage orders are the following:

- Professional, technical, clerical, mechanical, and similar occupations (Cal. Wage Order No. 4-2001 [see 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11040].
- Agricultural occupations (Wage Order No. 14-80) [see 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11140].
- Household occupations (Cal. Wage Order No. 15-2001 [see 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11150].
- Certain on-site occupations in the construction, drilling, logging, and mining industries (Wage Order No. 16-2001) [see 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11160].

[d] General Minimum Wage Order

In addition to the industry and occupation wage orders, the IWC has promulgated a general minimum wage order requiring that every employer pay to each employee, excluding public employees and outside salespersons, no less than the current minimum wage for all hours worked. The general minimum wage order applies to employees not otherwise covered by an industry or occupation wage order, but does not apply to employees who are expressly exempt from all provisions, or from the minimum wage provisions, of a wage order otherwise covering those employees [see Cal. Wage Order No. MW-2007 (http://www.dir.ca.gov/IWC/Minwage2007.pdf) (implementing Lab. Code § 1182.12)].

[e] Exempt Employees

Certain categories of employees, including outside salespersons, government employees [see Cal. Wage Order No. MW-2007 (http://www.dir.ca.gov/IWC/Minwage2007.pdf) (implementing Lab. Code § 1182.12); 8 Cal. Code Reg. §§ 11010-11130, P 1 (Cal. Wage Order Nos. 1-2001-13-2001)], and members of the employer's immediate family are exempt from all provisions of all of the wage orders. Under the applicable wage orders, an "outside salesperson" is an employee who works more than half of his or her working time selling or obtaining orders or contracts for the employer [see, e.g., Cal. Wage Order No. 7-2001; see Ramirez v. Yosemite Water Co., Inc. (1999) 20 Cal. 4th 785, 802, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 844, 978 P.2d 2 (determination of time spent by employee in selling activity must be made by considering realistic job requirements as well as how employee actually spends his or her time)]. This definition of "outside salesperson" differs from the definition of that term under federal law; the federal definition focuses on whether the employee's primary duty is selling [see 29 C.F.R. § 541.500], rather than on how much time is spent selling [see Ramirez v. Yosemite Water Co., Inc. (1999) 20 Cal. 4th 785, 796-800, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 844, 978 P.2d 2 (nothing in Lab. Code § 1171 or legislative history indicates legislative intent to prevent IWC from departing from federal definition of "outside salesperson")].

Persons employed in administrative, executive, and professional capacities are exempt from most of the provisions of the wage orders, including the minimum wage and overtime compensation requirements and the provisions requiring rest and meal periods [see Cal. Wage Order No. MW-2007 (http://www.dir.ca.gov/IWC/Minwage2007.pdf) (implementing Lab. Code § 1182.12); 8 Cal. Code Reg. §§ 11010-11150, P 1 (Cal. Wage Order Nos. 1-2001-15-2001); see also Cal. Sch. of Culinary Arts v. Lujan (2003) 112 Cal. App. 4th 16, 22-29, 4 Cal. Rptr. 3d 785 (exemption for teaching at accredited college under 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11040 [Cal. Wage Order No. No. 4-2001] not limited to teachers at institutions that award bachelor's or higher degrees); Bell v. Farmers Ins. Exch. (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 805, 819-829, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 59 (insurance claim representatives who perform "routine and unimportant" duties are nonexempt production workers, rather than exempt administrators)]. In addition, the participants, director, and staff of a live-in alternative to incarceration rehabilitation program with special focus on substance abusers are exempt from wage and hour provisions when participating in programs owned and operated by the program under certain circumstances [see Penal Code § 8002]. For a discussion of employees exempt from the minimum wage and overtime compensation provisions of the state wage orders, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Chs. 2, 3 (Matthew Bender).

[f] Validity of Wage Orders

State regulation of minimum wages, maximum hours, and working conditions carries with it a strong presumption of regularity [see Industrial Welfare Com. v. Superior Court (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 690, 731-732, 166 Cal. Rptr. 331, 613 P.2d 579 , appeal dismissed and cert. denied sub nom. California Manufacturers Association v. Industrial Welfare Commission, 449 U.S. 1029] . Orders of the IWC fixing minimum wages, maximum hours, and standard conditions of labor for all employees, when promulgated in accordance with the applicable provisions of the Labor Code, are presumed to be reasonable and lawful [see Cal. Labor Federation, AFL-CIO v. Industrial Welfare Com. (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 982, 990-1000, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 397 (IWC amendment of wage order to eliminate requirement that overtime be paid after 8 hours of work in one day was within IWC's power, even though Legislature had refused to enact similar change in overtime rules); see also Lab. Code § 1173]. Similarly, findings of fact made by the IWC in promulgating, amending, or rescinding wage orders are, in the absence of fraud, conclusive [Lab. Code §§ 1185, 1187]. The California Supreme Court has rejected challenges to the 1980 wage orders on the basis of procedural and constitutional defects, and has expressly ruled Wage Order Nos. 1-80 (now see 1-2001), 3-80 (now see 3-2001), 4-80 (now see 4-2001), 5-89 (now see 5-2001), 8-80 (now see 8-2001), 9-80 (now see 9-2001), 10-80 (now see 10-2001), 13-80 (now see 13-2001), and 14-80 (now see 14-2001) to be valid [see Industrial Welfare Com. v. Superior Court (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 690, 698 n. 2, 735, 166 Cal. Rptr. 331, 613 P.2d 579 , appeal dismissed and cert. denied sub nom. California Manufacturers Association v. Industrial Welfare Commission, 449 U.S. 1029] . A California Court of Appeal rejected a challenge to the California minimum wage law brought on the ground that the law infringed First Amendment rights [Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now v. Department of Industrial Relations (1995) 41 Cal. App. 4th 298, 301] .

The presumption that IWC wage orders are lawful does not apply, however, to a wage order that directly conflicts with statutory provisions [see, e.g., Lab. Code § 516 (except as provided in Lab. Code § 512, IWC may adopt or amend working condition orders with respect to break periods, meal periods, and days of rest)]. For example, because the statute requiring employers to provide meal periods specifies certain exemptions from the meal-period requirements [see Lab. Code § 512(a), (c), (d) (exemptions for waivers of certain meal period by employees and for wholesale baking industry, motion picture industry, and broadcasting industry)], the IWC lacked authority to enact a wage order creating an additional exemption [Bearden v. U.S. Borax, Inc. (2006) 138 Cal. App. 4th 429, 434-440 (Wage Order No. 16-2001, 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11160, P 10(E), exceeded IWC's authority because it created a new exemption for certain collective bargaining agreements that was inconsistent with exemptions expressly included in Lab. Code § 512)].

[3] Enforcement and Remedies

The DLSE is responsible for administering and enforcing the provisions of Lab. Code § 1171 et seq., governing wages, hours, and working conditions; interpreting the intent of the IWC in promulgating specific orders [see Lab. Code 1198.4; Aguilar v. Association for Retarded Citizens (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 21, 26-28, 285 Cal. Rptr. 515 ; Keyes Motors, Inc. v. Division of Labor Standards Enforcement (1987) 197 Cal. App. 3d 557, 561-562, 242 Cal. Rptr. 873] ; and enforcing wage orders promulgated by the IWC [see Lab. Code §§ 61, 74, 1193.5]. The DLSE also may enforce other provisions of the Labor Code and all labor laws of the state not otherwise specifically vested in another officer, board, or commission [Lab. Code § 95(a)]. In addition, aggrieved employees may maintain civil actions to collect unpaid wages or otherwise enforce their rights [see Lab. Code §§ 218, 229, 1194]. For a detailed discussion of enforcement of wage and hour laws and administrative and judicial remedies, see Subpart B, § 250.30 et seq., and Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 5 (Matthew Bender).

§ 250.15 Federal Law Governing Wages and Hours

[1] Fair Labor Standards Act

The Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA) [see 29 U.S.C. §§ 201-219], as limited by the Portal-to-Portal Act [see 29 U.S.C. §§ 251-262], is the primary federal statute governing wages and hours of employment. The FLSA establishes minimum wages to be paid employees covered by its provisions and maximum hours of employment, beyond which overtime compensation must be paid [see 29 U.S.C. §§ 206, 207].

For employees expressly exempted from the provisions of the FLSA, federal law does not conflict with state regulation of overtime pay [Tidewater Marine Western, Inc. v. Bradshaw (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 557, 566-567, 577-579, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 186, 927 P. 2d 296 , cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1248 (1997) (seamen working outside territorial boundaries, as defined by federal law, subject to overtime pay provisions of California wage orders)]. Moreover, despite the use of similar terminology, FLSA exemptions are not necessarily coextensive with state-law exemptions from regulation of overtime pay [see, e.g., Ramirez v. Yosemite Water Co., Inc. (1999) 20 Cal.4th 785, 797, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 844, 978 P.2d 2 (California defines "outside salespersons" who are exempt from overtime pay in way that provides, at least in some cases, greater protection for employees than under federal law)].

The FLSA also regulates the employment of minors in activities related to interstate commerce [see 29 U.S.C. § 212], prohibits wage discrimination based on sex [see 29 U.S.C. § 206(d)], and imposes recordkeeping requirements [see 29 U.S.C. § 211(c)].

For a detailed discussion of the coverage of the FLSA, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 1 (Matthew Bender).

[2] Portal-to-Portal Act

Among other things, the Portal-to-Portal Act [see 29 U.S.C. §§ 251-262] (1) sets forth the statute of limitations for actions brought under the FLSA [see 29 U.S.C. § 255]; (2) provides certain "good faith" defenses to FLSA actions [see 29 U.S.C. §§ 259, 260]; and (3) relieves employers from liability under the FLSA for minimum wages or overtime compensation resulting from the failure to compensate employees for certain specified activities unless, at the time the activity was engaged in, it was made compensable by the terms of an express contractual provision, or by custom or practice not inconsistent with a contractual provision [see 29 U.S.C. §§ 252(a), 254(a), (b)].

For a discussion of the Portal-to-Portal Act as it affects the computation of work hours for purposes of determining overtime compensation and minimum wages, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 3 (Matthew Bender). For a discussion of the Portal-to-Portal Act's statute of limitations and good faith defense provisions, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 5 (Matthew Bender).

[3] Equal Pay Act

The Equal Pay Act [29 U.S.C. § 206(d)], which is included in the FLSA, prohibits employers from discriminating among employees on the basis of sex by paying wages to employees at a rate less than the rate at which the employer pays wages to employees of the opposite sex in the same establishment on jobs requiring equal skill, effort, and responsibility, and performed under similar working conditions, unless the unequal payment is made pursuant to a seniority system, a merit system, a system that measures earnings by quantity or quality of production, or a differential based on any other factor other than sex. The Act also prohibits labor organizations from causing or attempting to cause an employer to discriminate against an employee on the basis of sex by paying lower wages to that employee.

For a detailed discussion of the state and federal equal pay statutes and related employment discrimination laws, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Chs. 40-43 (Matthew Bender). For further discussion and forms relating to employment discrimination laws and equal pay statutes, see Ch. 115, Civil Rights: Employment Discrimination .

[4] Enforcement and Remedies

The FLSA provides the following five exclusive remedies for unlawful discrimination, retaliation, and failure to pay federally required minimum wages and overtime compensation [see Lerwill v. Inflight Motion Pictures, Inc. (N.D. Cal. 1972) 343 F. Supp. 1027, 1029] :

- Voluntary payment of unpaid minimum wages and overtime payments may be sought under the aegis of the Secretary of Labor through the Wage and Hour Division [see 29 U.S.C. § 216(c)];

- The Secretary of Labor may bring a civil action to recover unpaid minimum wages or overtime compensation in any court of competent jurisdiction [see 29 U.S.C. § 216(c)];

- The Secretary of Labor may seek injunctive relief in federal court against an employer violating the minimum wage, overtime, discrimination, and other provisions of the FLSA [see 29 U.S.C. § 217];

- An employee or group of employees may bring a civil action in any court of competent jurisdiction for violation of the minimum wage and overtime rules or alleged discrimination or retaliation [see 29 U.S.C. §§ 215(a)(3), 216(b); see Breuer v. Jim's Concrete of Brevard, Inc. (2003) 538 U.S. 691, 694-699, 123 S. Ct. 1882, 155 L. Ed. 2d 923 (employee's state-court suit under FLSA may be removed to federal court)]; other employees may "opt in" and join the action as additional plaintiffs [29 U.S.C. § 216(b); see Haro v. City of Rosemead (2009) 174 Cal. App. 4th 1067, 1074-1077, 94 Cal. Rptr. 3d 874 (FLSA actions, which are predicated on additional plaintiffs opting in, are properly termed "collective actions," not class actions and, in California courts, are not governed by class-action procedures under Code Civ. Proc. § 382 and Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.760 et seq.)];

- Criminal proceedings may be brought against an employer who willfully violates the FLSA [see 29 U.S.C. § 216(a)].

Although the FLSA purports to authorize private actions against states in their own courts without regard to their consent [see 29 U.S.C. §§ 203(x), 216(b)], the Supreme Court has held that sovereign immunity bars an individual suit against a state to enforce a federal statutory right under the FLSA, when brought in a state court over the state's objections [Alden v. Maine (1999) 527 U.S. 706, 745, 753-760, 119 S. Ct. 2240, 144 L. Ed. 2d 636 (state employees could not sue state of Maine for overtime wages due under the FLSA, absent state's waiver of its sovereign immunity)].

Repeated or willful violations [see 29 C.F.R. § 578.3 (defining repeated and willful)] of the federal minimum wage and overtime laws may also result in the imposition of a civil penalty not exceeding $1,100 on the employer [29 U.S.C. § 216(e)(2); 29 C.F.R. § 578.3]. The amount of the penalty is determined with consideration for the appropriateness of the penalty in relation to the size of the business of the person charged and the gravity of the violation [29 U.S.C. § 216(e)(3); see 29 C.F.R. § 578.4 (other factors that may be considered)]. If the penalty assessed is unpaid, it may be collected by the Secretary of Labor through any of the following methods:

- Withholding the amount from funds due to the person in arrears from any sums owed to that person by another United States agency [29 C.F.R. § 580.18(b)(1)];

- Instituting a civil action in any court of competent jurisdiction [29 C.F.R. § 580.18(b)(2)]; or

- If the penalty was imposed by court order in a civil or criminal proceeding [see 29 U.S.C. §§ 215(a)(2), (4), 216(a)], requesting that the noncomplying person be held in contempt [29 C.F.R. § 580.18(b)(3)].

For a detailed discussion of remedies available under the FLSA, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 5 (Matthew Bender).

[5] Federal Contractors

Certain employers working under contract with the federal government, including employers not otherwise subject to the FLSA, generally are subject to the following special wage and hour legislation:

- The Walsh-Healey Act [41 U.S.C. §§ 35-45] (contracts for manufacture or furnishing of materials, supplies, articles, or equipment in any amount over $10,000);

- The Davis-Bacon Act [40 U.S.C. §§ 276a-276a-7] (contracts in excess of $2,000 for construction, alteration, and/or repair of federal public buildings or public works);

- The Service Contract Act [41 U.S.C. §§ 351-358] (contracts in excess of $2,500 to furnish services) [see Naranjo v. Spectrum Sec. Servs., Inc. (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 654, 663-669, 91 Cal. Rptr. 3d 393 (although Service Contract Act does not provide right of action for employees to enforce Act, it does not preempt suits for wages claimed under California Labor Code or other state or local laws that are consistent with Act)];

- Provisions governing wages and hours under public works contracts [40 U.S.C. §§ 3141 et seq. , 3701 et seq.] (contracts involving employment of laborers or mechanics on federal public works, and to the employment of laborers under a contract to which the United States or any federal agency is a party, or that is made on behalf of the United States or a federal agency, or that is financed by federal loans or grants under a federal statute providing wage standards);

- The Copeland ("Anti-Kickback") Act [see 18 U.S.C. § 874] (prohibiting inducing an employee on federal public work project to give up wages to which he or she is entitled); and

- The Miller Act [see 40 U.S.C. §§ 270a-270d-1] and waivers set forth in 40 U.S.C. § 3134 (wage payment bond posting requirement for public building/works contracts in excess of $25,000).

An employer subject to both the FLSA and a special government-contract statute must comply with the requirements of both statutes; to the extent that they conflict, the employee must be paid according to the statute that requires the greatest pay [see 29 U.S.C. § 218(a); 29 C.F.R. § 778.5].

For a detailed discussion of special government-contract statutes, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 1 (Matthew Bender).

Mr. Hill is a 1971 graduate of Boalt Hall School of Law at the University of California, Berkeley, and is a long-time continuing legal education lecturer for CEB and Hastings School of Law/CLE in the field of employment law.

§ 250.16 Time and Place of Wage Payments

[1] During Course of Employment

During the course of employment, wages for most employees generally must be paid at least twice each month on dates designated in advance by the employer as regular paydays and published in a payday notice [see Lab. Code §§ 204, 207; see also Lab. Code § 210 (civil penalty for nonpayment)]. Different rules are prescribed for the following types of employees, however:

- Discharged and seasonal employees; employees who quit [see Lab. Code §§ 201-202];
- Employees of temporary service employers [see Lab. Code § 201.3];
- Salaried executive, administrative, and professional employees [see Lab. Code §§ 204, 204c, 204.2];
- Agricultural and domestic employees [see Lab. Code §§ 205, 205.5, 1696.5]; and
- Commissioned employees of motor vehicle dealers [see Lab. Code § 204.1].

Employees who are subject to a collective bargaining agreement containing provisions regarding the time for payment of wages that differ from the Labor Code provisions are governed by the terms of the agreement [see Lab. Code §§ 204, 204.1, 204.2]. In addition, Lab. Code §§ 200-211 and Lab. Code §§ 215-219, inclusive, do not apply to the payment of wages of employees directly employed by any county, incorporated city or town, or other municipal corporation [Lab. Code § 220(b)]. However, these provisions are applicable to the payment of wages of employees directly employed by the state, except for Lab. Code §§ 201.3, 201.5, 201.7, 203.1, 203.5, 204, 204a, 204b, 204c, 204.1, 205, and 205.5 [Lab. Code § 220(a)].

For detailed discussion of the rules governing the time and place of wage payments during the course of employment, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 4 (Matthew Bender).

[2] On Discharge, Layoff, or Resignation

[a] Time Frame

Generally speaking, all of a discharged or laid-off employee's earned and unpaid wages are due and payable at the time of the discharge or layoff, and must be paid at the place of discharge [Lab. Code §§ 201(a), 208]. "Discharge," in this context, occurs not only when an employee is involuntarily terminated from an ongoing employment relationship, but also when an employee is released after completing the particular job assignment or time duration for which he or she was hired [Smith v. Superior Court (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 77, 45 Cal. Rptr. 3d 394, 137 P.3d 218] .

The wages of an employee who resigns are due and payable no later than 72 hours after the resignation unless the employee has given at least 72 hours' notice of his or her intention to quit, in which case the final payment of all wages is due at the time of quitting [Lab. Code § 202]. An employee who quits without providing a 72-hour notice is entitled to receive payment of wages by mail if he or she so requests and designates a mailing address. The date of mailing is deemed the date of payment for purposes of the requirement that wages be paid within 72 hours after notice of quitting [Lab. Code § 202]. An employee who quits must be paid at the office or agency of the employer in the county where the employee worked [Lab. Code § 208]. Special rules govern the time within which wages must be paid to the following classes of employees:

- Employees who are laid off because of the termination of seasonal employment in the curing, canning, or drying of any variety of perishable fruit, fish, or vegetables [see Lab. Code § 201(a)];

- State employees [Lab. Code §§ 201(b), (c), 202(b), (c)];

- Employees of temporary services employers [see Lab. Code § 201.3];

- Motion picture employees whose unusual or uncertain terms of employ ment require special computation of the amount due [see Lab. Code § 201.5];

- Oil drilling employees [see Lab. Code § 201.7]; and

- Employees engaged in an employment that normally involves working for several employers in the same industry interchangeably who are paid at a central place [Lab. Code § 204a].

For further discussion of the payment of wages on discharge, lay off, or resignation, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 4 (Matthew Bender).

PRACTICE TIP:

Look for Unconscionability in Method of Computing Wages Due on Termination. The way in which an employer computes an employee's wages upon termination of employment is deserving of careful scrutiny. In Ellis v. McKinnon Broadcasting Co. (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 1796, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 80 , the Court of Appeal applied the contract "unconscionability" doctrine of California Civil Code § 1670.5 to invalidate an employer method for reducing commissions due at the time of termination.

As a general observation, California courts seem very willing to import contract, tort, and statutory principles such as "unconscionability," "unfair business practice," and "tortious discharge in violation of public policy" into employee/employer disputes centered on wage and hour protections for the employee. By Richard P. Hill

[b] Severance Pay

No state or federal law requires employers to pay severance pay to discharged employees in the absence of an agreement to do so. Although the Labor Commissioner is statutorily authorized to enforce, and take assignment of, severance pay claims pursuant to the general statutory procedure for enforcement of wage and supplemental compensation claims [see Lab. Code §§ 96(h), 96.7, 98-98.3], several federal court decisions have held that state regulation of severance pay benefits is preempted by the enforcement provisions of ERISA [see, e.g., Scott v. Gulf Oil Corp. (9th Cir. 1985) 754 F.2d 1499, 1503-1505 ; California Chamber of Commerce v. Simpson (C.D. Cal. 1985) 601 F. Supp. 104, 107-109 (Labor Commissioner and DLSE enjoined from enforcing severance pay claims against employers in or affecting commerce)].

PRACTICE TIP:

ERISA Claim Provides Ground for Removal to Federal Court. Unsuspecting plaintiff's counsel attempting to plead a claim for breach of express or implied contract for severance pay have often found themselves faced with removal to federal court based on the federal question resulting from ERISA preemption of severance pay claims. While there is no right to a jury trial in ERISA litigation, there is an entitlement to attorneys fees for a prevailing party. By Richard P. Hill

[c] Vacation Pay

Unless otherwise provided by a collective bargaining agreement, whenever an employment contract or employer policy provides for paid vacations, and an employee is terminated without having used his or her vested vacation time, all vested vacation must be paid to the employee as wages at his or her final rate in accordance with the provisions of the employment contract or employer policy regarding eligibility or time served [Lab. Code § 227.3; see Owen v. Macy's, Inc. (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 462, 468, 96 Cal. Rptr. 3d 70 (Lab. Code § section 227.3 does not require that employer provide its employees with any paid vacation at all; rather, statute imposes certain requirements "whenever" employer provides vacation benefits)]. Furthermore, an employment contract or employer policy may not provide for forfeiture of vested vacation time on termination of employment [Lab. Code § 227.3; D.L.S.E. Interpretive Bulletin No. 86-3, P 3 (Sept. 30, 1986); see Henry v. Amrol, Inc. (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 1, 4-7 , 272 Cal. Rptr. 134 (Lab. Code § 227.3 prohibits "use it or lose it" vacation policy by preventing forfeiture of vacation time once it has vested)]. Paid vacation time, when granted, is deemed a form of additional compensation for the employee's services that vests as it is earned and that must be paid in a pro rata share on termination of employment [Suastez v. Plastic Dress-Up Co. (1982) 31 Cal. 3d. 774, 781, 784, 183 Cal. Rptr. 846, 647 P.2d 122] .

Although an employer may not establish a "use it or lose it" vacation policy that would result in the forfeiture of vested vacation time, an employer may expressly limit the vesting of vacation time by establishing a "no additional accrual" vacation policy. Such a policy prevents an employee from earning vacation time over a designated limit. Once the employee has accrued vacation time to the limit, the employee cannot earn more time until the employee takes some of the accrued time. This type of vacation policy is permissible because it does not involve a forfeiture of vested vacation time, but merely limits the amount of time that vests. However, the policy must be explicitly provided in the employment agreement; in the absence of an express provision, vacation time will accumulate without limit [Boothby v. Atlas Mechanical, Inc. (1992) 6 Cal. App. 4th 1595, 1601-1602, 8 Cal. Rptr. 2d 600] .

It is an open question whether a terminated employee's action to recover compensation for vested but unused vacation time is subject to the statute of limitations for claims based on statutory liability, or the statutes of limitations for contract claims [Church v. Jamison (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 1568, 1577, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 166 (finding it unnecessary to decide which statute of limitations applied, because complaint in case at bar had been filed within all potentially applicable limitation periods); see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 337(1) (written contracts--four years), 338(a) (liability created by statute--three years), 339(1) (oral contracts--two years); but see Sequeira v. Rincon-Vitova Insectaries, Inc. (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 632, 634, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 264 (applying four-year limitation for actions based on written contract, Code Civ. Proc. § 337(1), to bar employee from recovering unused vacation that had vested more than four years before termination of employment)].

Whichever statute of limitations governs the time for filing a lawsuit, the courts of appeal are split on the question of whether the statute should also be applied to limit the years for which vested vacation must be paid upon termination. The Second District has held that if the employment relationship was governed by a written contract, the four-year statute of limitations [see Code Civ. Proc. § 337(1)] would limit the right to vacation pay to that which vested within four years prior to the termination of the employment relationship [Sequeira v. Rincon-Vitova Insectaries, Inc. (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 632, 637, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 264] . The Fifth District, in contrast, has held that the statute of limitations only limits the time for filing suit after accrual of the terminated employee's cause of action (i.e., the employer's failure to pay vested vacation upon termination). Under this view, the limitations period should not also be applied "in reverse" to limit the years for which vested vacation may be claimed. Rather, because "all vested vacation shall be paid to [a terminated employee] as wages" [Lab. Code § 227.3], the Fifth District holds that there is no limit on the years of vested, unused vacation time that a terminated employee may claim [Church v. Jamison (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 1568, 1577-1583, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 166] . The Fifth District's analysis seems preferable. The First District's view--that claims for vacation time vested more than four years prior to the date of termination are barred as "stale" claims [see Sequeira v. Rincon-Vitova Insectaries, Inc. (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 632, 637, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 264] --ignores the general principle that a statute of limitations does not begin to run until the cause of action accrues (which, in this context, could not happen before the termination of employment) [see Church v. Jamison (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 1568, 1582-1583, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 166] .

For detailed discussion regarding payment of unused vacation benefits on termination of employment, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 4 (Matthew Bender).

[d] Penalty for Nonpayment on Discharge or Quitting

If an employer willfully fails to pay wages without abatement or reduction in accordance with Lab. Code §§ 201 (payment on discharge generally), 201.3 (payment when employee of temporary services employer is discharged or quits), 201.5 (payment of movie production employee on discharge), 202 (payment on quitting generally), or 205.5 (payment of agricultural employee), the employee's daily wages will continue as a penalty from the date that the wages were due until they are paid or an action is commenced, but for no more than 30 days [Lab. Code § 203; see also Lab. Code § 203.1 (payment with bad check, draft, or voucher)]. The word "willful," as used in Lab. Code § 203, does not mean that the refusal to pay wages must necessarily be based on a deliberate evil purpose to defraud workers of wages the employer knows to be due in order to subject the employer to the penalty [Davis v. Morris (1940) 37 Cal. App. 2d 269, 274, 99 P.2d 345 ; see 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 13520]. Rather, "willful" merely means that the employer intentionally failed or refused to perform an act that was required to be done; however, a good-faith belief in a legal defense will preclude a finding of willfulness [Armenta v. Osmose, Inc. (2005) 135 Cal. App. 4th 314, 325, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 460] . The phrase "without abatement or reduction" as used in Lab. Code § 203 means without discount on account of the payment of wages before the time when they are payable according to the terms of the contract of employment [Sayre v. Western Bowl (1946) 76 Cal. App. 2d 793, 797-798, 174 P.2d 466 (overruled on other grounds in Reid v. Overland Machined Products, 55 Cal. 2d 203)].

This "waiting time" penalty is computed by calculating the employee's daily wage rate, which is then multiplied by the number of days of nonpayment, up to 30 days. Thus, the penalty can exceed one month's wages, because the unpaid wages continue to accrue not only on days that the employee might have worked, but also on nonworkdays. This method of calculating the penalty furthers public policy by providing a strong disincentive to employers who are reluctant to make timely payment of wages due on termination of employment [Mamika v. Barca (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 487, 491-494, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 175 (although limited to 30 days, penalty can exceed one month's wages; targeted wrong is delay in payment, which continues on nonworkdays as well as workdays throughout period payment is not made)].

The waiting time penalty does not apply to any period during which the employee hides, otherwise absents himself or herself in order to avoid payment, or refuses to receive full payment, including penalties, tendered to him or her [Lab. Code § 203; see Oppenheimer v. Sunkist Growers (1957) 153 Cal. App. 2d Supp. 897, 898-899 , 315 P.2d 116] . Furthermore, employers of boarded agricultural workers are not subject to this provision [Lab. Code §§ 205, 257].

An employee incentive compensation plan under which employees can elect to receive, in lieu of a portion of their compensation, shares of company stock with restricted rights during a vesting period, with forfeiture of the restricted stock on an employee's resignation or termination for cause before the stock fully vests, does not violate Lab. Code § 201 or 202 [Schachter v. Citigroup, Inc. (2009) 47 Cal. 4th 610, 618-623, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 2, 218 P.3d 262 (because restricted stock had value--immediately exercisable voting and dividend rights, and contingent rights of full ownership--employee's bargained-for wages had been paid in full, and forfeiture of unvested shares did not constitute denial of compensation)].

[3] Payment of Striking Employees

Striking employees must be paid all unpaid wages without abatement or reduction by the next regular payday following the beginning of the strike. In addition, the employer must return to each striking employee any deposits, money, or other guaranty required of the employee to secure faithful performance of the employee's duties [Lab. Code § 209]. Employers of seasonal labor, however, are not subject to this requirement [Lab. Code § 257].

Any person (or any agent, manager, superintendent, or officer of that person) who violates any provision of Lab. Code § 209 is guilty of a misdemeanor [Lab. Code § 215].

[4] Payment by Commission From Employers With No Permanent and Fixed Place of Business

Whenever an employer with no permanent and fixed place of business in California enters into a contract for employment with an employee for services to be rendered in California and the contemplated method of payment of the employee involves commissions, the contract must be in writing and must set forth the method by which the commissions will be computed and paid. The employer must give a signed copy of the contract to every employee who is a party to it, and must obtain a signed receipt for the contract from each employee. For this purpose, the term "commissions" does not include short term productivity bonuses of the type paid to retail clerks; nor does it include bonus and profit-sharing plans, unless the employer has offered to pay a fixed percentage of sales or profits as compensation for work to be performed [Lab. Code § 2751]. An employer who does not employ an employee pursuant to a written contract as required by Lab. Code § 2751 is liable to the employee in a civil action for triple damages [Lab. Code § 2752].

There is a split of authority on whether contract terms which limit commissions after termination are unconscionable [compare Ellis v. McKinnon Broadcasting Co. (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 1796, 1803-1807, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 80 (term was unconscionable), with American Software, Inc. v. Ali (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 1386, 1394-1395 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 477 (term was not unconscionable)].

For a form of complaint for use in cases in which the provisions of Lab. Code § 2751 have been violated, see § 250.66.

[5] Payday Notice

Every employer must conspicuously post a notice stating the employer's regular pay days and the time and place of payment. The notice must be posted at the place of work, if practicable. Otherwise, it must be posted where it can be seen by employees as they come and go to work, or at the office or nearest agency for payment kept by the employer [Lab. Code § 207]. Violation of Section 207 is a misdemeanor [Lab. Code § 215].

§ 250.17 Form of Payment

[1] State Law

No employer, agent, or officer may issue any order, check, draft, note, memorandum, or other acknowledgment of indebtedness as payment of wages due, or to become due, or as an advance on wages to be earned, unless theinstrument meets all of the following requirements [Lab. Code § 212(a)]:

- It is negotiable and payable in cash, on demand, without discount;
- It is payable at some established place of business in California, the name and address of which must appear on the instrument; and
- At the time of its issuance and for a reasonable time thereafter, which must be at least 30 days, the maker or drawer of the instrument must have sufficient funds in, or credit, arrangement, or understanding with the drawee for payment of the instrument.

The requirement that the address where the instrument is payable appear on it does not apply if the drawee is a bank and the instrument is payable at any of the bank's places of business.

An employer who violates the provisions of Lab. Code. § 212 is guilty of a misdemeanor [see Lab. Code § 215] and may be subject to a variety of civil penalties [see Lab. Code § 225.5; see also Civ. Code § 1719 (payment with bad check); Lab. Code § 203.1 (payment of wages with bad check)].

For a detailed discussion of restrictions on the form of payment of wages under state law, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 4 (Matthew Bender).

[2] Federal Law

Minimum wage and overtime compensation payments mandated by the FLSA must be made in cash or a negotiable instrument payable at par. Under specified circumstances, the "reasonable cost" or "fair value," as determined by the Secretary of Labor, of food, lodging, and "other facilities" furnished by the employer may be credited toward wage payments required by the FLSA [see 29 U.S.C. § 203(m); 29 C.F.R. § 531.27]. In addition, employers may use tokens or scrip for the limited purpose of determining the amount of cash wages due at the end of the pay period [see 29 C.F.R. § 531.34].

The FLSA provides that, if agreed to by its employees, a public employer may compensate the employees for overtime work by granting them compensatory time at a rate of 1.5 hours for every overtime hour worked, up to a maximum of 240 or 480 hours of compensatory time, depending on the nature of the job [29 U.S.C. § 207(o)(1); see 29 U.S.C. § 207(o)(3)(A) (maximum compensatory time that may be accrued)]. The employer must honor an employee's request to use compensatory time within a reasonable period after the request, so long as the use of compensatory time would not unduly disrupt the employer's operations [29 U.S.C. § 207(o)(5); 29 C.F.R. § 553.25; Mortensen v. County of Sacramento (9th Cir. 2004) 368 F.3d 1082, 1086-1090 (29 U.S.C. § 207(o)(5) requires only that compensatory time off be granted within reasonable time after employee's request, rather than on specific date chosen by employee; unambiguous statutory language overrides any contrary implication in regulation)]. The FLSA does not restrict the employer's authority to adopt policies to compel employees' use of compensatory time [Christensen v. Harris County (2000) 529 U.S. 576, 581-588, 120 S. Ct. 1655, 1660-1662, 146 L. Ed. 2d 621] . If an employee accumulates the maximum amount of compensatory time allowed under the FLSA, the employer must pay cash compensation for additional overtime work [29 U.S.C. § 207(o)(3)(A)]. Also, the employer must pay an employee cash for any unused compensatory time remaining at the termination of employment [29 U.S.C. § 207(o)(4)].

For a detailed discussion of restrictions on the form of payment of wages under federal law, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 4 (Matthew Bender).

§ 250.18 Itemized Statement of Wages and Deductions

[1] Employer Obligations

Every employer is required to furnish his or her employees with an accurate itemized statement of wages and deductions, either semi-monthly or at the time of each payment of wages, containing the following information [Lab. Code § 226(a); see 8 Cal. Code Reg. §§ 11010-11150, P 7(B) (Cal. Wage Order Nos. 1-2001-15-2001)]:

- Gross wages earned by the employee;
- Total hours worked by the employee, if the employee is paid based on an hourly wage or if the employee is salaried but eligible for overtime pay;
- The number of piece-rate units earned and any applicable piece rate, if the employee is paid on a piece-rate basis;
- A separate list of deductions, except that deductions made on written orders of the employee may be aggregated and shown as one item;
- A separate listing of all deductions made from the gross wages, except that at the written request of the employee, all deductions made may be aggregated and shown as a separate item;
- Net wages earned;

- The dates of the beginning and the end of the period for which the employee is being paid;

- The name of the employee and the employee's social security number, except that by January 1, 2008, only the last four digits of the social security number or an existing employee identification number other than a social security number may be shown on the check;

- The employer's name and address; and

- All applicable hourly rates in effect during the pay period and the corresponding number of hours worked by the employee at each hourly rate.

A copy of either the itemized statement or a record of the deductions must be kept on file by the employer for at least three years at either the place of employment or a central location within California. The employer must afford a current or former employee the right to inspect and copy records of this information pertaining to that current or former employee, on reasonable request to the employer [Lab. Code § 226(a)].

[2] Penalties for Failure to Provide Statement

An employer who violates the itemized statement provisions may face a civil penalty of $250 per employee per violation in an initial citation and $1,000 per employee for each violation in a subsequent citation. In enforcing this provision, the Labor Commissioner has discretion not to penalize the employer for a first violation if the violation was due to a clerical error or inadvertent mistake [Lab. Code § 226.3]. If an employer knowingly and intentionally fails to provide the required statement, an employee suffering an injury as a result of the failure may recover the greater of the employee's actual damages or $50 for the initial pay period in which the violation occurs, plus $100 for each subsequent pay period in which the violation occurs, up to a maximum of $4000, plus costs and reasonable attorneys' fees [Lab. Code § 226(e)]. In addition, an employer who knowingly and intentionally fails to provide itemized statements of wages and deductions as required by statute is guilty of a misdemeanor, as is any officer, agent, employee, fiduciary of the employer, or any other person who is in control, receipt, custody, or disposal of the wages due to an employee who knowingly or intentionally participates or aids in the violation of the statement requirements [Lab. Code § 226.6].

§ 250.19 Wage Disputes

[1] Procedure for Resolution

When there is a dispute about the amount of wages due, the employer must pay, without any condition, any part of the employee's wages that the employer concedes is due within the time limits set by law [Lab. Code § 206(a); see Watkins v. Wachovia Corp. (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 1576, 1586-1587, 92 Cal. Rptr. 3d 409 (Lab. Code § 206.5(a), which prohibits employer from requiring release of wage claim unless claimed wages have been paid, does not prevent compromise of bona fide wage dispute, but simply prevents employer from coercing settlement of dispute by withholding wages that are concededly due)]. As to any remaining balance claimed to be due, the employee may pursue any remedies available to him or her [Lab. Code § 206(a)]. For a discussion of remedies available for an employer's failure to pay wages, see Subparts B (§ 250.30 et seq.) and C (§ 250.40 et seq.).

[2] Penalties for Willful Failure to Pay Wages

In addition to being subject to the penalties applicable to violations of specific provisions of the Labor Code governing wage payment [see, e.g., Lab. Code §§ 203, 210], it is a misdemeanor for an employer who has the ability to pay wages to willfully refuse to pay wages that are due and payable after a demand has been made, or to falsely deny the amount or validity of a wage claim, or that wages are due, with the intent to secure any discount of the wages due or to annoy, harass, oppress, hinder, delay, or defraud the person to whom the wages are due [Lab. Code § 216(a), (b)]. Violations of Lab. Code § 216 may also result in the imposition of civil penalties [Lab. Code § 225.5(a)], and employers who fail to make timely payment of wages may be required to furnish a bond to secure future compliance [see Lab. Code § 240(a)].

§ 250.20 Wage Deductions, Assignments, and Garnishments

[1] Authorized Deductions

Among the deductions expressly required by law are those for state and federal income taxes, social security taxes, and state disability insurance taxes. Deductions also may be made pursuant to the statutory procedures for wage garnishment [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 706.010-706.154; see also [3], below]. Federal regulations bar deductions that have the effect of lowering the employee's wages below the rates required by the minimum wage and overtime provisions of the FLSA [see 29 C.F.R. §§ 531.35-531.37, 778.307].

Employers may deduct the following items from wages if authorized in advance by the employee in writing [see Lab. Code §§ 224, 300 (wage assignments); 8 Cal. Code Reg. §§ 11010-11150, P 9(C) (Cal. Wage Order Nos. 1-2001-15-2001; but see Social Services Union v. Board of Supervisors (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 279, 286-288, 271 Cal. Rptr. 494 (county could recoup increase in health and insurance premiums that was not approved in advance because prospective salary deductions were subsequently authorized during collective bargaining, even though bargaining was concluded over one year after increase became effective)]:

- Premiums for life, health, or disability insurance;

- Deductions made pursuant to voluntary wage assignments complying with the requirements of the Labor Code;

- Contributions to pension or retirement plans;

- Deductions from final pay check to recoup the cost of uniforms and equipment that are provided by the employer and that are not returned by the employee on completion of the job; and

- Periodic deductions from wages authorized by employee to repay certain types of indebtedness owed to the employer.

Although no provision of the Labor Code specifically regulates the use of wage deductions to recover debts owed to an employer by an employee, case law limits the employer's right to recoup an employee's debt by deducting the full amount owed from the employee's wages on his or her final paycheck [see Barnhill v. Robert Saunders & Co. (1981) 125 Cal. App. 3d 1, 6, 177 Cal. Rptr. 803 ; see also D.L.S.E. Interpretive Bulletin No. 85-3 (Feb. 6, 1985) (interpreting effect of Barnhill)]. Similarly, an employer generally may not make any deduction from an employee's wage, or require any reimbursement from the employee, because of a cash shortage, breakage, or loss of equipment that results from simple negligence [see Kerr's Catering Service v. Department of Industrial Relations (1962) 57 Cal. 2d 319, 329-330, 19 Cal. Rptr. 492, 369 P.2d 20 , cert. denied, 371 U.S. 818 ; 8 Cal. Code Reg. §§ 11010-11150, P 8 (Cal. Wage Order Nos. 1-2001-15-2001)]. In addition, it is a violation of Lab. Code § 221 (prohibiting employers from receiving back any part of wages previously paid by the employer to the employee) for a retail employer to deduct a proportionate amount of "unidentified returns" (i.e., returns of merchandise for which it was not possible to identify the specific salesperson who had sold the merchandise) from the earned commissions of all sales employees [Hudgins v. Neiman Marcus Group, Inc. (1995) 34 Cal. App. 4th 1109, 1117-1124, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 46] . On the other hand, Lab. Code § 221 is not violated by an employer's contract with its sales employees to pay a commission on a sale immediately, subject to a chargeback if the sale later falls through or does not generate an agreed-upon level of revenue [Koehl v. Verio, Inc. (2006) 142 Cal. App. 4th 1313, 1329-1337, 48 Cal. Rptr. 3d 749 (sales of Internet access services); Steinhebel v. Los Angeles Times Communications (2005) 126 Cal. App. 4th 696, 704-710, 24 Cal. Rptr. 3d 351 (newspaper subscription sales); cf. Schachter v. Citigroup, Inc. (2009) 47 Cal. 4th 610, 618-623, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 2, 218 P.3d 262 (incentive compensation plan providing for forfeiture of restricted shares of company stock on employee's resignation or termination for cause before shares fully vested did not violate Lab. Code §§ 201 and 202, which require payment of earned, unpaid wages on termination or resignation)].

The statutory and regulatory prohibitions against deducting or recapturing unauthorized amounts from wages [see Lab. Code §§ 221-224, 400-410, 3751(a); 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11070(8)] also apply to employee bonuses, which are within the scope of the statutory definition of "wages" [see Lab. Code § 200]. However, deducting the employer's expenses from its gross receipts to calculate net profits for purposes of a supplemental profit-sharing program does not run afoul of these prohibitions, so long as the employees' regular wages are not subject to any unauthorized deductions for the employer's operating expenses [Prachasaisoradej v. Ralphs Grocery Co. (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 217, 237, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 407, 165 P.3d 133 (no improper deductions were made by employer after calculating each employee's percentage of net profits)].

For detailed discussion of permissible wage deductions, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 4 (Matthew Bender).

PRACTICE TIP:

Wage Policy May Constitute an Unfair Business Practice. The Hudgins v. Neiman Marcus Group, Inc. (1995) 34 Cal. App. 4th 1109, 1117-1124, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 46 opinion also recognizes the applicability of Business and Professions Code § 17200 (prohibiting all business practices that are "unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent") to wage policies that violate the Labor Code. The remedies available under Business & Professions Code § 17200 are cumulative and supplementary to those provided in the Labor Code. See People v. Los Angeles Palm, Inc. (1981) 121 Cal. App. 3d 25, 32-33 . By Richard P. Hill

[2] Assignment of Wages

[a] General Requirements

Assignments of wages are generally required to be in writing and to conform to the requirements of Lab. Code § 300. However, the rules regarding assignments set forth in Lab. Code § 300 are not applicable to orders or wage assignments made pursuant to Fam. Code § 5200 et seq. (assignment of wages for child or spousal support) or Prob. Code § 3088 (wage assignment for payment of support of conservatee from community property of conservatee's spouse) [Lab. Code § 300(a)]. In addition, the rules governing wage assignments do not apply to deductions authorized by the employee for the following purposes [Lab. Code § 300(g)]:

- Payment for life, retirement, disability, or unemployment insurance premiums.
- Payment of taxes owed by the employee.
- Contributions to funds, plans, or systems providing for death, retirement, disability, unemployment, or other benefits.
- Payment for goods or services furnished by the employer to the employee or the employee's family at the employee's request.
- Contributions for charitable, educational, patriotic, or similar purposes.

In all other cases, a wage assignment is not valid unless the wages to be assigned have been earned at the time the assignment is made, unless the assignment (1) is for the necessities of life, (2) is made directly to the person furnishing those necessities, and (3) does not exceed the amount needed to furnish those necessities [Lab. Code § 300(h)]. Assignments are not allowed if the employee is paid under a plan for payment by several different employers at a central place as provided for in Lab. Code § 204a, and no more than half of the assignor's wages may be withheld at the time of each payment of wages [Lab. Code § 300(c), (f)].

No assignment of wages, earned or to be earned, is valid unless all of the following conditions are satisfied [Lab. Code § 300(b)]:

- It is contained in a separate written instrument, signed by the person by whom the wages or salary have been earned or are to be earned, and identifying specifically the transaction to which the assignment relates.
- If made by a married person, the written consent of the spouse of the person making the assignment is attached to the assignment. However, written consent is needed if (1) judgment of legal separation, or (2) if couple are living apart and after interlocutory judgment of dissolution.
- If made by a minor, the written consent of a parent or guardian of the minor is attached to the assignment.
- If made by a person who is unmarried or who is an adult or who is both unmarried and an adult, a written statement by the person making the assignment, setting forth these facts, is attached to or included in the assignment.
- No other assignment exists in connection with the same transaction or series of transactions and a written statement by the person making the assignment to that effect is attached to or included in the assignment.

- A copy of the assignment and of the written statement provided for in Lab. Code § 300(b)(2), (4), (5), authenticated by a notary public, is filed with the employer, accompanied by an itemized statement of the amount then due.

- At the time it is filed with the employer, no other assignment of wages of the employee is subject to payment and no earnings withholding order is in force against the employee's wages.

The employer may rely on the statements of fact in the written statement provided for in Lab. Code § 300(b)(2), (4), (5), without having to inquire into the statement's truth, and the employer incurs no liability whatsoever by reason of any payments made by him or her to an assignee under any assignment or order, in reliance on the facts so stated [Lab. Code § 300(d)].

For detailed discussion of wage assignments and the Lab. Code § 300 requirements, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 4 (Matthew Bender). For discussion of assignments of wage claims to the Labor Commissioner pursuant to Lab. Code § 96, which are not subject to technical rules governing the validity of assignments such as those set out in Lab. Code § 300 [see Lab. Code § 97], see § 250.33[4].

[b] By Public Employees

For considerations of public policy, a public official is not permitted to make an assignment of wages or salary until the time arrives when he or she is entitled to collect them, or at least not until they have been completely earned. Furthermore, a public official cannot split his or her earnings into parts smaller than the unit of pay (for example, a monthly salary cannot be split into daily earned portions) for the purpose of assigning them from day to day as earned [Trow v. Moody (1915) 27 Cal. App. 403, 405-406, 150 P. 77] .

This rule does not apply to all public employees, however, but only to public officers. Thus, for example, a teacher may assign unearned salary, although the teacher is a public employee [Kimball v. Ledford (1936) 13 Cal. App. 2d 602, 604-605, 57 P.2d 163] . As to who is a public officer and who is not, it has been observed by one court that there must first be, at least, a public office created by the Constitution, the Legislature, or some legislative body with delegated authority--an office that exists independently of the person in it [Pacific Finance Corp. v. City of Lynwood (1931) 114 Cal. App. 509, 514, 300 P. 50] .

Gov. Code §§ 1150-1153, 1157-1157.8 provide for salary and wage deductions for officers and employees of public agencies for certain specified purposes, such as the purchase of savings bonds, insurance premiums, and the like. It is specifically provided that no provision of law prohibiting, restricting, or limiting the assignment or order for wages or salaries in any way prohibits, restricts, or limits Gov. Code §§ 1150-1157.8 [Gov. Code § 1158]. This apparently refers to Lab. Code § 300.

[3] Wage Garnishment

Except for proceedings by the state to collect a state tax liability [see Code Civ. Proc. § 706.072(d)] and certain support proceedings [see Fam. Code § 5200 et seq. (formerly Civ. Code § 4390 et seq.); Prob. Code § 3088(e)], California law only permits garnishment of wages to enforce a judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 706.102]. Wages are exempt from prejudgment attachment [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 487.020(c), 706.011(a)]. If more than one order is served on an employer with respect to the same employee, California statutory law sets forth the rules governing priority of orders based on the type of order, date of service, and date of judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 706.023, 706.030, 706.031, 706.077]. Statutory limitations are also imposed on the amount of wages per workweek that may be subject to garnishment [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 706.050-706.051].

Federal law also contains restrictions on garnishment of wages as part of the Consumer Credit Protection Act [see 15

U.S.C. §§ 1671-1677]. In general, the federal provisions limit the amount of wages that may be garnished per week to a specified percentage of an employee's disposable earnings [see 15 U.S.C. § 1673(a)]. The Consumer Credit Protection Act does not limit the amounts that may be withheld under a federal court order pursuant to Chapter 13 of the federal bankruptcy laws, however, or for any debt for state or federal taxes [15 U.S.C. § 1673(b)(1)(B), (C)]. The Consumer Credit Protection Act is superseded by state laws that prohibit wage garnishment or that provide for more limited garnishment than is permitted under the Act [see 15 U.S.C. § 1677(1)].

Service of an earnings withholding order creates a lien, not only on the earnings of the judgment debtor-employee that must be withheld, but also on all property of the employer that is subject to enforcement of a money judgment, in an amount equal to the amount required to be withheld under the order. The lien continues for a period of one year from the date the earnings become payable to the employee unless the amount that must be withheld pursuant to the order is paid as required by law [Code Civ. Proc. § 706.029].

The Judicial Council has promulgated official forms for all required applications, notices, claims, claims of exemption, orders, and other documents, the use of which is mandatory [Code Civ. Proc. § 706.120; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 1.31(a)]. These forms are available in an interactive, electronic format in LexisNexis(R) Automated California Judicial Council Forms, which may be accessed at www.lexisone.com for an individual or monthly charge. A noninteractive version in PDF format also is available at www.lexisone.com at no charge. For a detailed discussion of garnishment procedures, see Ch. 276, Garnishment , and Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 4 (Matthew Bender).

§ 250.21 Employer's Obligation to Indemnify Employee's Losses and Expenses

[1] General Liability of Employer for Losses and Expenses

An employer is liable for the losses of an employee that are caused by the employer's lack of ordinary care [Lab. Code § 2800]. The employer cannot assert assumption of risk or the fellow servant rule in defending any action for those losses, and the employee's contributory negligence cannot bar recovery although it can diminish the amount of the employee's recovery [Lab. Code § 2801]. The personal representative of an employee whose death results from the lack of ordinary or reasonable care of the employer or any of its employees can bring an action for wrongful death [Lab. Code § 2803].

An employer must indemnify its employee for all necessary expenditures or losses incurred by the employee in direct consequence of the discharge of his or her duties or obedience to the directions of the employer. This obligation to indemnify applies even if the directions of the employer are unlawful, unless the employee at the time of obeying the directions believed them to be unlawful [Lab. Code § 2802(a)]. However, the duty to indemnify does not arise when the employee's conduct, though alleged to be in the scope of employment, is so unusual or startling that it would be unfair to include indemnification in the employer's cost of doing business [Devereaux v. Latham & Watkins (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 1571, 1583, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 849 (overruled on other grounds in Moran v. Murtaugh Miller Meyer & Nelson, LLP (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 780); Rodgers v. Kemper Constr. Co. (1975) 50 Cal. App. 3d 608, 619, 124 Cal. Rptr. 143] .

Expenses subject to indemnification include attorney's fees incurred by the employee not only in defending against claims arising from the employee's discharge of duties, but also in proceedings against the employer to enforce the employee's right to indemnification [Lab. Code § 2802(c); O'Hara v. Teamsters Union Local #856 (9th Cir. 1998) 151 F.3d 1152, 1157, 1160-1161] . For this purpose, a claim against an employee arises from the employee's discharge of duties if (1) the employee's actions giving rise to the claim are within the scope of employment; and (2) the claim is proven to be unfounded, that is, without merit [O'Hara v. Teamsters Union Local #856 (9th Cir. 1998) 151 F.3d 1152, 1158-1160] (third party's claim against employee is unfounded as matter of law if third party dismisses claim with prejudice; that dismissal was part of settlement did not mean claim had merit, since settlement did not include any admission of liability by employee)].

If the employee brings an action against the employer to enforce the employee's right to indemnification, an award for the reimbursement of the employee's expenditures or losses must carry interest at the same rate as judgments in civil actions, accruing from the date on which the employee incurred the expenditures or losses [Lab. Code § 2802(b)].

These statutory obligations cannot be waived by the parties [Lab. Code § 2804]. Thus, for example, an agreement between an employer and employee for reimbursement of recurring business expenses by a method that approximates the employee's actual expenses (e.g., a mileage reimbursement or a lump-sum reimbursement) does not relieve the employer of the statutory obligation to pay full reimbursement, and such an agreement does not preclude the employee from suing to recover full reimbursement [Gattuso v. Harte-Hanks Shoppers, Inc. (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 554, 569571, 67 Cal. Rptr. 3d 468, 169 P.3d 889] . A contract provision in which an employee releases "any and all" claims against the employer does not encompass nonwaivable statutory protections such as the employee indemnity protection described above [Edwards v. Arthur Andersen LLP (2008) 44 Cal. 4th 937, 950-955, 81 Cal. Rptr. 3d 282, 189 P.3d 285 (because provision releasing "any and all" claims does not waive employee's right to indemnity under Lab. Code § 2802(a), it is not void under Lab. Code § 2804)].

[2] Reimbursement of Recurring Expenses

When an employee has recurring business expenses subject to reimbursement [see Lab. Code § 2802(a)], several methods of reimbursement are permissible. Under the "actual expense method," the employee maintains records of actual expenses necessarily incurred in the performance of employment tasks, and the employer issues a reimbursement separate from the employee's regular compensation. This is the most accurate method, but it can be burdensome for both the employer and the employee. For example, if the employee is required to use his or her own automobile for business purposes, under the actual expense method the employee must keep detailed records of expenditures for fuel, maintenance, repairs, insurance, registration, and depreciation, and must apportion those expenses between personal and business uses of the automobile; then, the employer must make a determination of whether each of those expenses was reasonably necessary [see Gattuso v. Harte-Hanks Shoppers, Inc. (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 554, 567-568, 67 Cal. Rptr. 3d 468, 169 P.3d 889] . For this reason, few employers use the actual expense method to determine reimbursement for work-required use of employees' own automobiles. Instead, many employers use the "mileage reimbursement method"; under that method, the employee need only keep a record of the miles driven to perform job duties, and the employer reimburses the employee a predetermined amount per mile. Many employers use the mileage rate calculated by the Internal Revenue Service based on national average expenses for fuel, maintenance, repairs, depreciation, and insurance [see Gattuso v. Harte-Hanks Shoppers, Inc. (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 554, 569, 67 Cal. Rptr. 3d 468, 169 P.3d 889] . The mileage reimbursement method is inherently less accurate than the actual expense method, and if the employee can show that the reimbursement amount paid as a mileage reimbursement is less than the actual expenses necessarily incurred, the employer must make up the difference [Gattuso v. Harte-Hanks Shoppers, Inc. (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 554, 569-570, 67 Cal. Rptr. 3d 468, 169 P.3d 889] .

Another method of reimbursement is to use a lump-sum payment. Under this method, the employee need not submit any information; the employer simply pays a fixed amount as reimbursement for the employee's recurring automobile expenses (or other expenses subject to reimbursement). A lump-sum reimbursement may take various forms and have various labels, such as "per diem" or (in the automobile-reimbursement context) "car allowance" or "gas stipend." Lump-sum reimbursement is permissible so long as the amount paid is sufficient to provide full reimbursement for actual expenses necessarily incurred. Thus, if the employee can show that the lump sum is less than the actual expenses necessarily incurred, the employer must make up the difference [Gattuso v. Harte-Hanks Shoppers, Inc. (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 554, 570-571, 67 Cal. Rptr. 3d 468, 169 P.3d 889] . A lump-sum reimbursement need not be segregated from the employee's other compensation and may take the form of an increase to the employee's base salary or commissions, so long as the employer provides a method or formula to identify what part of the combined compensation amount is intended to provide expense reimbursement [Gattuso v. Harte-Hanks Shoppers, Inc. (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 554, 572-575, 67 Cal. Rptr. 3d 468, 169 P.3d 889] .

Like a mileage reimbursement, a lump-sum reimbursement is inherently less accurate than the actual expense method, and if the employee can show that the lump sum paid is less than the actual expenses necessarily incurred, the employer must make up the difference [Gattuso v. Harte-Hanks Shoppers, Inc. (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 554, 571, 67 Cal. Rptr. 3d 468, 169 P.3d 889] .

§ 250.30 Available Remedies

If an employer fails to pay contractually or statutorily required wages, or fails to pay wages in the manner or at the time required by law, California law provides a number of remedial procedures. The two most commonly used lie within the California Labor Commissioner's jurisdiction. The first is known as the "Berman hearing" procedure [Lab. Code §§ 98-98.2; see § 250.32]. The second procedure authorizes the Labor Commissioner to bring a civil action on behalf of an aggrieved employee for recovery of unpaid wages and penalties [Lab. Code § 98.3; see § 250.33[1]].

State and federal law provide the following additional procedures to remedy violations of wage and hour laws:

- The Labor Commissioner is empowered by Lab. Code §§ 210 and 225.5 to bring a civil action to recover statutory penalties for failure to pay wages due [see § 250.33[2]];

- Lab. Code § 218 authorizes any individual wage claimant to file a civil action to recover wages due, either directly or through an assignee [see § 250.34[1][a]];

- Under the Labor Code Private Attorneys General Act of 2004 [see Lab. Code § 2698], a civil penalty to be assessed and collected for a violation of the Labor Code [see Lab. Code § 2699.5] may be recovered through a civil action brought by an aggrieved employee on behalf of himself or herself and other current or former employees [Lab. Code § 2699(a); see Lab. Code § 2699.3 (procedures for employee's civil action); Amalgamated Transit Union, Local 1756, AFL-CIO v. Superior Court (2009) 46 Cal. 4th 993, 1001-1005, 95 Cal. Rptr. 3d 605, 209 P.3d 937 (plaintiff has standing to bring action under Labor Code Private Attorneys General Act of 2004 only if plaintiff suffered injury from unlawful action, so labor union lacks standing to sue as assignee or association of injured members); see also

Arias v. Superior Court (2009) 46 Cal. 4th 969, 975, 980-988, 95 Cal. Rptr. 3d 588, 209 P.3d 923 (employee's representative action under Labor Code Private Attorneys General Act of 2004 need not satisfy class-action requirements)]. Any employee who prevails in such an action will be entitled to an award of reasonable attorney's fees and costs, and the employee will ordinarily be entitled to retain 25 percent of any civil penalties recovered [Lab. Code § 2699(g), (i), (j)]. An enforcement action under this provision may be combined with other remedies the employee may have under state or federal law [Lab. Code § 2699(g)];

- Lab. Code §§ 98.6 and 98.7, as well as provisions of the FLSA [see 29 U.S.C. §§ 215(a)(3), 216(b)], provide administrative remedies for unlawful discrimination or retaliation against an employee for filing a wage claim or testifying against an employer on a wage claim [see § 250.35];

- Numerous sections of the Labor Code provide for the imposition of criminal penalties [see § 250.36] and bond requirements [see § 250.37] on employers who violate the wage and hour laws; and

- State and federal law provide administrative and civil procedures specifically intended to remedy failure to pay mandated minimum wages or overtime compensation that overlap with, but are narrower in scope than, the procedures set forth above [see 29 U.S.C. §§ 209, 211, 215-217; Lab. Code §§ 1193.5-1197.1; see also § 250.40 et seq.].

§ 250.31 Jurisdiction of Labor Commissioner Over Administrative Claims

[1] Scope of Authority

The California Labor Commissioner is the Chief of the DLSE [see Lab. Code §§ 21, 79]. The DLSE is responsible for enforcement of all provisions of the Labor Code unless jurisdiction is specifically vested in another officer, board, or commission [Lab. Code § 95(a)], including all laws and penalties relating to the payment of minimum wages and overtime compensation [Lab. Code §§ 61, 1193.5; see Lab. Code §§ 1193.6-1197.1], the time and manner of payment of wages [Lab. Code § 217; see Lab. Code §§ 206, 210, 226.4-226.5, 253-256, 355, 410], collection of unpaid wages and benefits [see Lab. Code §§ 96, 96.7] and discrimination against wage claimants and witnesses in wage claim proceedings [see Lab. Code §§ 98.6, 98.7]. The DLSE also enforces child labor restrictions under the Labor Code [Lab. Code §§ 1311, 1398]. The Labor Commissioner's jurisdiction does not limit the authority of prosecuting attorneys of the cities and/or counties and affected employees or their assignees to prosecute civil and/or criminal actions for violations of Labor Code Section 200 et seq., governing payment of wages [see Lab. Code § 218].

The Labor Commissioner does not have jurisdiction, however, over wage disputes involving the interpretation or application of collective bargaining agreements that provide for arbitration [see Lab. Code § 229; Plumbing, Heating etc. Council v. Howard (1975) 53 Cal. App. 3d 828, 834-835, 126 Cal. Rptr. 406] . The Labor Commissioner has in the past interpreted this rule as precluding its adjudication of such wage disputes [D.L.S.E. Policy and Procedure Memo. No. 76-6 (Mar. 22, 1976)], and has adopted a policy of declining to enforce any state-law claims by employees covered by such agreements if those claims involve relief based on the employee's wage rate [see Livadas v. Bradshaw (1994) 512 U.S. 107, 112-113 n.6, 114 S. Ct. 2068, 129 L. Ed. 2d 93] . However, the United States Supreme Court has held that this policy contravenes federal law because it penalizes the right to collectively bargain granted by the National Labor Relations Act by depriving employees who exercise that right of their ability to have their rights under state wage and hour laws enforced [Livadas v. Bradshaw(1994) 512 U.S. 107, 124, 132-134, 114 S. Ct. 2068, 129 L. Ed. 2d 93 (commissioner must adjudicate claim that employer owed penalty to employee under Lab. Code § 203 for failing to pay employee wages due on discharge as required by Lab. Code § 201)].

According to the Labor Commissioner, the Court in Livadas did not open the door to unlimited adjudication by the DLSE of claims filed by employees covered by collective bargaining agreements containing arbitration clauses, but the Court also did not offer any guidelines in determining whether adjudication by the DLSE is precluded [D.L.S.E. Interpretive Bulletin No. 94-4 (Aug. 5, 1994)]. However, following a more recent United States Supreme Court decision regarding whether an employee's claim is independent of a collective bargaining agreement and can be resolved or enforced without interpretation of the agreement [see Hawaiian Airlines, Inc. v. Norris (1994), 512 U.S. 246, 114 S. Ct. 2239, 129 L. Ed. 2d. 203, 216-218, 220 (involving wrongful discharge, not wage and hour issues)], the Labor Commissioner has issued interim guidelines to be used by all DLSE personnel until new written directives are issued [D.L.S.E. Interpretive Bulletin No. 94-4 (Aug. 5, 1994)]. Under these guidelines, the DLSE will not reject any claim solely because the claimant's employment was covered by the terms of a collective bargaining agreement [D.L.S.E. Interpretive Bulletin No. 94-4 (Aug. 5, 1994)]. The guidelines outline the procedures for handling (1) claims that clearly indicate that a collective bargaining agreement covers the employment, (2) situations in which the existence of a collective bargaining agreement is not initially clear, and (3) situations in which the resolution of the meaning of the agreement's terms is the subject of dispute [D.L.S.E. Interpretive Bulletin No. 94-4 (Aug. 5, 1994)]. The guidelines also prescribe the role of DLSE attorneys in reviewing this type of case, and require DLSE legal staff to address the following issues: (1) whether the claim is based on a state law right; (2) whether the state law right is a minimum standard that cannot be bargained away; (3) whether the state law claim is independent of the collective bargaining agreement; and (4) whether the collective bargaining agreement is the only source of the claimant's right [D.L.S.E. Interpretive Bulletin No. 94-4 (Aug. 5, 1994)].

[2] Types of Proceedings

The DLSE may pursue either the Berman hearing procedure or institute a civil action to adjudicate wage claims filed pursuant to Lab. Code §§ 96 (assignment of claims for wages and other benefits), 96.7 (unassigned wage and benefit claims), 98 (complaints for recovery of wages, penalties, and other demands for compensation), and 1195.5 (nonpayment of wages in excess of the minimum wage). Separate procedures are provided for the imposition of penalties paid to the State of California [see Lab. Code §§ 210, 226.4, 226.5, 408-410, 1175] and to govern claims of discrimination under various provisions of the Labor Code [see Lab. Code §§ 98.6, 98.7].

Berman proceedings are authorized in cases of complaints for wages, penalties, and other demands for compensation, and also may be used when a claim is filed by the holder of a payroll check or other instrument returned for insufficient funds [see Lab. Code §§ 98-98.2; 8 Cal. Code Reg. §§ 13501-13520]. They may not be used in the case of claims involving bankruptcies or probate; mechanics', loggers', or miners' claims; preferred wage claims under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1204, 1205 or 1206; discrimination and retaliation complaints under Lab. Code § 98.6 and for engaging in certain other protected activities under Lab. Code §§ 132a, 432.2, 6310-6312; other nonwage matters when criminal or civil citations are used (such as violations of child labor laws, itemized wage and deduction statement violations, matters involving unlicensed contractors, health and welfare benefits, and payday violations); and anonymous or confidential complaints of Industrial Welfare Commission wage order violations [see D.L.S.E. Div. Management Memo. No. 84-3 (Feb. 14, 1984)]. For further discussion of Berman hearings, see § 250.32.

A civil action may be brought by the Labor Commissioner on behalf of the claimant under Lab. Code § 98.3 following an investigation and/or "hearing" conducted by an assigned Deputy Labor Commissioner. Generally, the Labor Commissioner is authorized to bring suit under Section 98.3 when the employee has a valid claim and cannot afford to employ counsel. For further discussion of civil suits brought under Lab. Code § 98.3, see § 250.33[1].

[3] Investigatory Powers

The Labor Commissioner, together with his or her deputies and agents, has free access to all places of labor to conduct investigations. Refusal of admission or a willful failure to furnish the Labor Commissioner with statistics or information is a misdemeanor. The Labor Commissioner also may issue subpoenas to compel the attendance of witnesses or production of records; administer oaths; examine witnesses under oath; take verifications, acknowledgments, or proofs of written instruments; and take depositions and affidavits [Lab. Code §§ 90, 92, 1174(b); see Lab. Code § 74; but see California Restaurant Assn. v. Henning (1985) 173 Cal. App. 3d 1069, 1075-1077, 219 Cal. Rptr. 630 (limiting Labor Commissioner's power to enforce subpoenas)]. An employer who willfully fails to maintain records required by Lab. Code § 1174(c) or accurate and complete records required by Lab. Code § 1174(d), or to allow access to any IWC member or DLSE employee to inspect records pursuant to Lab. Code § 1174(b) is subject to a civil penalty [see Lab. Code § 1174.5]. In addition, officers and employees of the DLSE may be designated as peace officers with the authority to make arrests, serve processes and notices throughout the state, and (in some instances) carry firearms [see Lab. Code § 95].

§ 250.32 Berman Hearings

[1] Procedures in General

The Labor Commissioner is authorized to investigate employee complaints for unpaid wages, penalties, and other compensation. After receipt of the initial claim, the DLSE may attempt to encourage the parties to settle the claim without the need for further investigation, and may hold an informal settlement conference. If settlement is not possible, within 30 days after the complaint is filed, the DLSE must decide to conduct a Berman hearing within 90 days, pursue a civil action pursuant to Lab. Code § 98.3, or take no further action on the complaint [Lab. Code § 98(a); see D.L.S.E. Div. Management Memo. No. 86-4 (Oct. 6, 1986) (settlement conferences)]. If a Berman hearing date is set, the DLSE must serve a notice of the time and place of the hearing, together with a copy of the complaint, on all parties [Lab. Code § 98(b)].

The hearing officer, a deputy labor commissioner, has the authority to:

- Issue subpoenas;
- Grant or deny requests for continuances or changes of venue; and
- Control the conduct of the hearing, including limiting the number of witnesses for corroboration and/or to establish a fact, excluding evidence, excusing witnesses, and determining the order of the presentation of evidence [see 8 Cal. Code Reg. §§ 13506, 13508]. The hearing need not be conducted according to technical rules of evidence [see 8 Cal. Code Reg. §§ 13502, 13505]. All parties have a right, but are not required, to be represented by counsel [8 Cal. Code Reg. § 13507].

No default can be entered against an employer for failure to answer the complaint and/or appear at the Berman hearing. Instead, the Labor Commissioner must hear the available evidence and render a decision. A defendant employer who fails to answer or appear because of lack of notice of the pendency of the proceedings may apply to the Labor Commissioner for relief from the Commissioner's decision or award [Lab. Code § 98(f)]. Once the 10-day time to appeal the Commissioner's award has expired [see Lab. Code § 98.2(a); see also [4], below], an employer who failed to answer or appear at the Berman hearing has no right to any judicial relief unless it has first applied to the Commissioner for relief [Gonzalez v. Beck (2007) 158 Cal. App. 4th 598, 605-606, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 843].

For detailed discussion of Berman hearing procedures and examples of required preprinted pleadings promulgated by the Labor Commissioner, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 5, pt. A, subpt. 2 (Matthew Bender).

PRACTICE TIP:

Employer Has Risks and Benefits in Deciding Not to Appear. In the absence of an employer at the Berman hearing, the Labor Commissioner might determine, after listening to the employee's evidence, that the complaint should be dismissed. That is, the employee might fail to make out a prima facie case. Accordingly, the employer has a decision to make about when to commit to substantive involvement, and possible related legal expense, in the defense of the matter. It should be noted, however, that rote reliance on the right of de novo hearing can expose the employer to an award of attorneys fees to the employee if the contested "appeal" is also decided in favor of the employee. By Richard P. Hill

[1A] Statute of Limitations and Accrual

Labor Code § 98 is silent as to time limitations: it does not provide (1) for commencement of proceedings within certain limitations periods, or (2) the lengths of those periods, or (3) the triggering event, or (4) the date on which the proceedings are deemed to have commenced [Cuadra v. Millan (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 855, 859, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 687, 952 P.2d 704] . Historically, the commissioner provided for all four of those factors as policy matters. For the first three the commissioner adopted the procedures that govern civil actions for unpaid wages [see § 250.34[1][b]]. But for the fourth factor, the commissioner's policy provided in effect that for statute of limitations purposes a wage claim proceeding commenced not when the claim was filed, but when it was heard. In Cuadra, noting the frequently appreciable delay between the dates of filing claims for back pay and the dates of the hearings on such claims, the Supreme Court held that the Commissioner's policy constituted an abuse of discretion because it penalized employees who exercised their right to a Berman hearing and frustrated the remedial purpose of legislation entitling employees to all back wages due. The Court therefore held that the legislature's intent is best served by calculating back pay from the filing date of the claim itself. [Cuadra v. Millan (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 855, 867, 870, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 687, 952 P.2d 704] .

[2] Order, Decision, or Award by Labor Commissioner

Within 15 days after the hearing is concluded, the hearing officer must file his or her order, decision, or award. The order, decision, or award must include a summary of the hearing and the reasons for the decision, a statement of any sums due either as proven damages or as penalties, as well as notice of the parties' right to appeal and of the consequences of failure to do so in a timely manner [see Lab. Code § 98.1(a), (b)]. Interest at the legal rate [see Civ. Code § 3289(b)] accrues on all due and unpaid wages awarded, from the date the wages were due and payable [Lab. Code § 98.1(c)]. The Labor Commissioner must serve a copy of the filed decision personally, or by first-class mail or "combination service" [see Code Civ. Proc. § 415.20], on all of the parties [Lab. Code § 98.1(a); see REO Broadcasting Consultants v. Martin (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 489, 497 n.6, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 639 (service of Labor Commissio ner's decision after hearing under Talent Agencies Act, Lab. Code § 1700 et seq. , need not be made by registered or certified mail; first-class mail as permitted under Lab. Code § 98.1(a) is sufficient)].

Within 10 days after the order, decision, or award becomes final, the Labor Commissioner must file a certified copy with the clerk of the superior court of the appropriate county, unless a settlement has been reached by the parties and approved by the Labor Commissioner, or unless the DLSE receives full payment of the award or ascertains that the defendant-employer has made direct payment of the award to the claimant within that period. On filing, judgment is entered immediately by the court clerk in conformity with the order, decision, or award. The judgment has the same force and effect as, and is subject to all provisions of law relating to, a judgment in a civil action [Lab. Code § 98.2(e)].

Lab. Code § 206(b) imposes a penalty on an employer having the ability to pay who, after investigation and hearing by the Labor Commissioner, does not take a timely appeal and willfully fails to pay wages found to be due within 10 days of receipt of notice of wages due from the Labor Commissioner. That employer is subject to a penalty of treble the amount of any damages accruing to the employee as a direct and foreseeable consequence of the failure to pay, in addition to any other applicable penalty [Lab. Code § 206(b); Triad Data Services, Inc. v. Jackson (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 1, 5, 7-8 , 200 Cal. Rptr. 418] .

If a claim is filed under Lab. Code §§ 98-98.2 against a person operating or doing business under a fictitious business name, as defined in Bus. & Prof. Code § 17900, the DLSE is required to inquire at the time of the hearing whether the name of the person is the legal name under which the business or person has been licensed, registered, incorporated, or otherwise authorized to do business. The DLSE may amend an order, decision, or award to conform to the legal name of the business or the person who is the defendant to a wage claim, provided it can be shown that proper service was made on the defendant or his or her agent, unless a judgment has been entered on the award under Lab. Code § 98.2. In that event, the Labor Commissioner may apply to the clerk of the court that entered the judgment pursuant to the Commissioner's final order, decision, or award to conform the judgment to the defendant's legal name, provided that it can be shown that proper service was made on the defendant or on his or her agent [Lab. Code § 98(h)].

[3] Enforcement of Labor Commissioner's Award

Enforcement of judgments entered pursuant to Lab. Code § 98.2, which have court priority, may be accomplished in the same manner as any other judgment of the court in which they are entered [Lab. Code § 98.2(e)]. For general discussion of procedures for enforcement of judgments, see Ch. 254, Executions and Enforcement of Judgments . The Labor Commissioner is required by statute to make "every reasonable effort" to assure that judgments resulting from wage hearings are satisfied, including taking all appropriate legal action and requiring the employer to deposit a bond as provided in Lab. Code § 240 [Lab. Code § 98.2(i)]. If all collection attempts prove futile, the DLSE will, at the end of six months, close its files and reassign the judgment to the claimant [see D.L.S.E. Div. Management Memo. No. 87-4 (Sept. 4, 1987) (Labor Commissioner's collection guidelines)].

To ensure that judgments are satisfied, the Labor Commissioner may serve on the judgment debtor a form similar to, and requiring reporting of the same information as, the form approved or adopted by the Judicial Council for the purposes of former Code Civ. Proc. § 117.19(b) [repealed; now see Code Civ. Proc. § 116.830 (form to be completed by judgment debtor in small claims court)] to assist in identifying the nature and location of any assets of the judgment debtor. The Labor Commissioner may serve this form personally or by first-class mail at the judgment debtor's last known address listed with the DLSE. The judgment debtor must complete the form and deliver it to the DLSE at the address listed on the form within 35 days after the form has been served on the judgment debtor, unless the judgment has been satisfied. In the case of willful failure by the judgment debtor to comply with this provision, the DLSE or judgment creditor may request the court to apply the sanctions provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 708.170 (sanctions for failure to appear at judgment debtor's examination) [Lab. Code § 98.2(f)].

On good cause, the Labor Commissioner may stay execution of any judgment entered on a final order, decision, or award [Lab. Code § 98.2(g)].

If the judgment is satisfied, other than by execution, the Labor Commissioner may order entry of satisfaction of judgment. If a certified copy of such an order is filed with the clerk of the appropriate court, the clerk must enter a satisfaction of the judgment in its records [Lab. Code § 98.2(h)].

The judgment creditor, or the Labor Commissioner as assignee of the judgment creditor, is entitled to court costs and reasonable attorney's fees for enforcing the judgment [Lab. Code § 98.2(j)].

[4] Appeal of Labor Commissioner's Award

[a] Right to Appeal and Time Limit

Either party has the right to appeal the Labor Commissioner's order, decision, or award to the court with appropriate subject matter jurisdiction [Lab. Code § 98.2(a); see Ch. 324, Jurisdiction: Subject Matter for discussion of rules governing subject matter jurisdiction in state courts]. The defendant need not have participated in the proceedings before the Labor Commissioner to prosecute an appeal [Jones v. Basich (1986) 176 Cal. App. 3d 513, 518-519, 222 Cal. Rptr. 26] . For a form to use in appealing an order, decision, or award of the Labor Commissioner, see § 250.60.

A wage claimant's right to appeal and obtain a de novo trial applies whenever the Labor Commissioner has conducted a Berman hearing, even if the commissioner's award consists of a dismissal of the wage claim for lack of jurisdiction, based on a finding that the claimant is not an employee. Under the statutory scheme, the commissioner's refusal to accept a wage claim in the first instance would not be subject to appeal, and the claimant's remedy in such a case would be to file a civil lawsuit rather than an appeal. However, such a summary dismissal can be made by the commissioner only within 30 days after the filing of the wage claim; thereafter, the commissioner must conduct a Berman hearing and issue an order, decision or award that will be subject to de novo appeal [Post v. Palo/Haklar & Assocs. (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 942, 948-951, 98 Cal. Rptr. 2d 671, 4 P.3d 928 ; see Lab. Code §§ 98, 98.1, 98.2(a)].

Any appeal must be filed within 10 days after service of notice of the order, decision, or award [Lab. Code § 98.2(a)]. If the order is served by mail, service is deemed complete at the time of deposit, but the 10-day period for filing the appeal is extended by 5 calendar days if the place of address and the place of mailing are within California, 10 calendar days if either the place of address or the place of mailing is outside California but within the United States, and 20 calendar days if either the place of address or the place of mailing is outside the United States [Lab. Code § 98.2(a); see Code Civ. Proc. § 1013(a); Clavell v. North Coast Business Park (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 328, 332, 283 Cal. Rptr. 419 (provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 1013 that exempts "notices of appeal" inapplicable to notices seeking de novo judicial review of Labor Commissioner decisions)]. The 10-day period is increased by two court days if service is by fax, Express Mail, or other overnight delivery method [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1013(c), (e)]. This requirement is considered jurisdictional and mandatory, and it is strictly enforced. Relief from this time limit will not be afforded on the grounds of mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect [Pressler v. Donald L. Bren Co. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 831, 837, 187 Cal. Rptr. 449, 654 P.2d 219 ; REO Broadcasting Consultants v. Martin (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 489, 496, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 639 (rule of Pressler--that court cannot consider late appeal from Labor Commissioner's decision even if lateness results from mistake, inadvertence, or other excuse -- applies to any kind of administrative proceeding held before Labor Commissioner, including proceedings under Talent Agencies Act, Lab. Code § 1700 et seq.)]. In addition, Lab. Code § 98.2(a) requires the appellant to serve a copy of the appeal request on the Labor Commissioner.

An employer that files an appeal must post an undertaking with the reviewing court in the amount of the order, decision, or award. The undertaking must consist of an appeal bond issued by a licensed surety or a cash deposit with the court in the amount of the order, decision, or award. The employer must provide written notification to the other parties and the Labor Commissioner of the posting of the undertaking. The undertaking must be on the condition that, if any judgment is entered in favor of the employee, the employer will pay the amount owed pursuant to the judgment, and if the appeal is withdrawn or dismissed without entry of judgment, the employer will pay the amount owed pursuant to the order, decision, or award, unless the parties have executed a settlement agreement for the payment of some other amount, in which case the employer must pay that agreed amount. If the employer fails to pay the amount owed within 10 days of the entry of judgment, dismissal, or withdrawal of the appeal, or the execution of a settlement agreement, a portion of the undertaking equal to the amount owed, or the entire undertaking if the amount owed exceeds the undertaking, will be forfeited to the employee [Lab. Code § 98.2(b)]. The failure to post the undertaking does not deprive the trial court of jurisdiction over the appeal, but the court may issue an order requiring the appealing employer to post an undertaking in a certain amount by a certain date or be subject to sanctions, including dismissal of the employer's appeal [Progressive Concrete, Inc. v. Parker (2006) 136 Cal. App. 4th 540, 546-553, 38 Cal. Rptr. 3d 939] .

No statutes or rules provide procedures for withdrawing an appeal under Lab. Code § 98.2. Thus, a party dissatisfied with an award can reasonably expect that it need take no action, such as a cross appeal, to preserve its rights once the adverse party has filed a notice of appeal. Therefore, once a party has filed an appeal, that party does not have the unilateral right to withdraw its appeal by filing a request for dismissal, because this action affects the rights of the other party [Miller v. Foremost Motors, Inc. (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 1271, 1274-1275, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 503] . For example, an employer that files an appeal may ostensibly have been the losing party before the Labor Commissioner because its employee obtained an award. However, the employer cannot file an appeal and then request its dismissal because the dismissal could deprive the employee from receiving a much higher award in the appeal proceedings [see Miller v. Foremost Motors, Inc. (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 1271, 1274-1275, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 503] .

[b] Nature of Proceeding

Although a proceeding under Lab. Code § 98.2(a) to review the Labor Commissioner's decision is referred to in the statute as an "appeal," the reviewing court hears the case de novo; that is, the parties literally receive a new trial. In the de novo hearing, the court may hear testimony, including entirely new evidence, and the decision of the Labor Commissioner is entitled to no weight [Pressler v. Donald L. Bren Co. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 831, 835-836, 187 Cal. Rptr. 449, 654 P.2d 219 ; Nordquist v. McGraw-Hill Broadcasting Co. (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 555, 561, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 221 ; Hernandez v. Mendoza (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 721, 725, 245 Cal. Rptr. 36 ; Sales Dimensions v. Superior Court (1979) 90 Cal. App. 3d 757, 762-763, 153 Cal. Rptr. 690 ; Triad Data Services, Inc. v. Jackson (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 1, 14, 200 Cal. Rptr. 418] . Accordingly, at the de novo hearing the court has discretion to allow the employee to raise new wage claims not raised in the Berman hearing. In deciding whether to allow such new claims, the trial court will weigh considerations such as whether the new claims are sufficiently related to the claims raised before the Labor Commissioner, whether the interests of judicial economy will be served, and whether the employer will be prejudiced [Murphy v. Kenneth Cole Prods., Inc. (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 1094, 1118] . Similarly, the employer is not bound by the defenses it raised in the Berman hearing, and it may abandon, change, or add defenses not raised before the Labor Commissioner [Murphy v. Kenneth Cole Prods., Inc. (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 1094, 1118 ; Jones v. Basich (1986) 176 Cal. App. 3d 513, 518-519, 222 Cal. Rptr. 26] .

[c] Award of Attorney's Fees and Costs Against Unsuccessful Appellant

If the party seeking the de novo appeal is unsuccessful, the court is required by statute to determine the costs and reasonable attorney's fees incurred by any respondents and to assess that amount as a cost on the appellant [Lab. Code § 98.2(c)]. A "successful" appellant is not, however, entitled to recover costs and attorney's fees from the respondent in a de novo proceeding under Lab. Code § 98.2 [Dawson v. Westerly Investigations, Inc. (1988) 204 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 20, 23-24 , 251 Cal. Rptr. 633] . Thus, if the employer appeals and is unsuccessful, the employee will be awarded attorney's fees under Lab. Code § 98.2(c). However, if the employee is the appellant and is successful, he or she will not be able to recover fees under Lab. Code § 98.2(c). In such a case, at least one court has held that the employee may recover attorney's fees under Lab. Code § 1194(a), which authorizes an award of attorney's fees incurred in a "civil action" for unpaid minimum wages or legal overtime compensation [Eicher v. Advanced Bus. Integrators, Inc. (2007) 151 Cal. App. 4th 1363, 1378-1384, 61 Cal. Rptr. 3d 114 (de novo appeal from decision in Berman hearing qualifies as "action" for purposes of Lab. Code § 1194(a)); but see Sampson v. Parking Serv. 2000 Com, Inc. (2004) 117 Cal. App. 4th 212, 217-230 (Lab. Code § 1194(a) does not apply in context of administrative Berman hearing, which is not "civil action")].

An employee is "successful" in the de novo hearing, for purposes of an award of costs and attorney's fees, if the court awards an amount greater than zero [Lab. Code § 98.2(c) (legislative intent to overrule Smith v. Rae-Venter Law Group (2002) 29 Cal. 4th 345, 370, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 516, 58 P.3d 367 , holding that "successful" appellant must obtain judgment more favorable than administrative award)].

The California Supreme Court has held that under this provision the superior court may assess attorney's fees against an employer who unsuccessfully appeals an administrative order to pay wages, even if the employee could not afford counsel and was represented without charge by the Labor Commissioner [Lolley v. Campbell (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 367, 372-373, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 571, 48 P.3d 1128 (indigent employee represented without charge by Labor Commissioner has nevertheless "incurred" fees within meaning of Lab. Code § 98.2(c))].

The standards for determining a reasonable attorney's fee appear to be the same as in any other action [cf. Sales Dimensions v. Superior Court (1979) 90 Cal. App. 3d 757, 761, 153 Cal. Rptr. 690 (de novo hearing under Lab. Code § 98.2(a) subject to usual procedural rules of reviewing court)]. For a general discussion of the standards for determining the reasonableness of an award of attorney's fees, see Ch. 174, Costs and Attorney's Fees .

[d] Offsets of Unsatisfied Judgments

An employer must satisfy a judgment in proceedings under Lab. Code § 98.2 within 90 days after issuance of a final judgment or face having the unpaid amount of the judgment offset against various amounts due from the State. These amounts include refunds of personal income, bank and corporation, and sales and use tax, as well as winnings in the California State Lottery [Gov. Code § 12419.11(a)]. To enforce these provisions, employers must provide the Labor Commissioner with identifying numbers at the time the judgment becomes final. A corporate employer must provide the corporation's identification number issued by the Secretary of State, and an employer who is an individual must provide his or her Social Security number [Gov. Code § 12419.11(b)].

Chapter 250 EMPLOYMENT LAW: WAGE AND HOUR DISPUTES
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
B. Remedies for Failure to Pay Wages--In General

21-250 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 250.33

§ 250.33 Other Actions by Labor Commissioner to Collect Wages

[1] In General

As an alternative to conducting a Berman hearing, the Labor Commissioner and DLSE may prosecute civil actions for the following:

- Collection of wages, penalties, and demands of persons who, in the opinion of the Commissioner, have valid claims and are financially unable to employ counsel;

- Return of worker's tools that are illegally in the possession of another [Lab. Code § 98.3(a)];

- Collection of wages and other moneys payable to employees or to the State of California arising out of the employment relationship or an order of the Industrial Welfare Commission [Lab. Code § 98.3(b)]; and

- Recovery of wages or other monetary benefits that are owed to the Industrial Relations Unpaid Wage Fund [Lab. Code § 98.3(c)].

The Labor Commissioner and the DLSE also have authority to investigate and enforce claims for wages, conceded to be above the minimum set by law, that have not been computed or paid correctly [Lab. Code § 1195.5].

The Labor Code provides that no court costs are payable by the DLSE in any civil action to which the DLSE is a party Lab. Code § 101]. This provision, however, applies only to filing fees and other fees payable to the court; it does not prevent the court from ordering the DLSE to pay costs to a prevailing party [Department of Indus. Relations v. Lee (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 763, 766-770, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 710 (nothing in language or legislative history of Lab. Code § 101 indicates intent to exempt DLSE from paying costs to prevailing party in litigation); see Code Civ. Proc. § 1028 (costs may be awarded against state on same basis as against any other party)].

[2] Actions by Labor Commissioner to Collect Civil Penalties

Lab. Code §§ 210 and 225.5 provide civil penalties for violations of various Labor Code provisions relating to the time, manner, and place for payment of wages. If penalties are sought, the Labor Commissioner must take the necessary civil action to collect the penalties; the action is brought in the name of the people of the State of California and the Commissioner is authorized to act on the people's behalf [Lab. Code §§ 210, 225.5]. Alternatively, the Labor Commissioner may include a claim for penalties in a Berman hearing to recover unpaid wages if there is at least one underlying wage claim related to the penalty claim [see Lab. Code § 98(a)], or may file a civil action pursuant to Lab. Code § 98.3 [see Lab. Code §§ 210, 225.5].

The Labor Code also provides civil penalties for violation of Lab. Code § 226, which requires employers to provide employees with itemized statements of wages earned, hours worked, pay periods, and deductions from wages, and other specified information [see Lab. Code §§ 226(e), 226.3-226.5]. An employer who receives a citation may contest the citation or the proposed penalty assessment by notifying the office of the Labor Commissioner listed on the citation that an informal hearing is desired within 15 business days after service of the citation [Lab. Code § 226.5(a)].

Special rules apply to penalties imposed for violation of provisions requiring payment of prevailing rates to public works employees [see Lab. Code §§ 98.9, 1770-1775, 1810-1815].

Under the Labor Code Private Attorneys General Act of 2004 [see Lab. Code § 2698], any civil penalty to be assessed and collected for a violation of the Labor Code [see Lab. Code § 2699.5] may be recovered through a civil action brought by an aggrieved employee on behalf of himself or herself and other current or former employees [Lab. Code § 2699(a); see Lab. Code § 2699.3 (procedures for employee's civil action); Amalgamated Transit Union, Local 1756, AFL-CIO v. Superior Court (2009) 46 Cal. 4th 993, 1001-1005, 95 Cal. Rptr. 3d 605, 209 P.3d 937 (plaintiff has standing to bring action under Labor Code Private Attorneys General Act of 2004 only if plaintiff suffered injury from unlawful action, so labor union lacks standing to sue as assignee or association of injured members); see also Arias v. Superior Court (2009) 46 Cal. 4th 969, 975, 980-988, 95 Cal. Rptr. 3d 588, 209 P.3d 923 (employee's representative action under Labor Code Private Attorneys General Act of 2004 need not satisfy class-action requirements)]. Any employee who prevails in such an action will be entitled to an award of reasonable attorney's fees and costs, and the employee will ordinarily be entitled to retain 25 percent of any civil penalties recovered [Lab. Code § 2699(g), (i), (j)]. An enforcement action under this provision may be combined with other remedies the employee may have under state or federal law [Lab. Code § 2699(g)].

For a detailed discussion of civil penalties, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 5 (Matthew Bender).

[3] Disputes Regarding Seasonal Laborers

The Labor Commissioner must hear and decide all wage disputes involving seasonal laborers, as defined in Lab. Code § 253. These procedures apply to persons hired in California to perform out-of-state work who are paid in California at the end of the employment, but not to seamen and other persons whose payment is regulated by federal statute [see Lab. Code §§ 250, 251]. When wages for "seasonal employees" are not paid when due, the Labor Commissioner must impose a civil penalty of no more than 30 days' pay as a waiting time penalty consistent with the terms of Lab. Code § 203 (penalty for failure to pay wages due on termination of employment) [Lab. Code § 256]. The procedures for assessing and contesting those penalties are the same as those used for penalties imposed pursuant to Lab. Code §§ 210 and 225.5 [see D.L.S.E. Div. Management Memo. No. 84-4 (Feb. 22, 1984)].

[4] Labor Commissioner as Assignee of Wage Claims

Lab. Code § 96 authorizes the Labor Commissioner and his or her deputies and representatives to take assignments of the following wage claims and certain other employee claims for purposes of enforcement:

- Wage claims and incidental expense accounts and advances;
- Mechanics' and other liens of employees;
- Claims based on "stop orders" for wages and on bonds for labor;
- Claims for damages for misrepresentations of conditions of employment;
- Claims for unreturned bond money of employees;
- Claims for penalties for nonpayment of wages;
- Claims for return of workers' tools in the illegal possession of another person;
- Claims for vacation pay, severance pay, or other compensation supplemental to a wage agreement [but see California Chamber of Commerce v. Simpson (C.D. Cal. 1985) 601 F. Supp. 104, 109 (enjoining enforcement of severance pay claims)];
- Awards for workers' compensation benefits in which the Worker's Compensation Appeals Board has found that the employer has failed to secure payment of compensation and the award remains unpaid for more than 10 days after having become final;
- Claims for loss of wages as the result of discharge from employment for the garnishment of wages; and
- Claims for loss of wages as the result of demotion, suspension, or discharge from employment for lawful conduct occurring during nonworking hours away from the employer's premises [see 83 Ops. Cal. Att'y Gen. 226 (2000) (Labor Commissioner's authority to take assignments of such wage claims does not abrogate existing law that permits disciplining of peace officers for off-duty conduct occurring away from place of employment that is otherwise lawful but that conflicts with their duties as police officers)].

Assignments to the Labor Commissioner can only be made on behalf of employees, not independent contractors [Fitch v. Pacific Fid. Life Ins. Co. (1975) 54 Cal. App. 3d 140, 146-148, 126 Cal. Rptr. 445] . However, if the employee is covered by a collective bargaining agreement, the employee's collective bargaining representative may act as assignee of wage claims for enforcement by the Labor Commissioner, subject to the employee's option to reject this representation [Lab. Code § 96.3].

Wage assignments to the Labor Commissioner pursuant to Lab. Code § 96 are not subject to technical rules governing validity of assignments, such as those set out in Lab. Code § 300 [see Lab. Code § 97; see also § 250.20[2]].

PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
B. Remedies for Failure to Pay Wages--In General

21-250 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 250.34

AUTHOR: Richard P. Hill Editorial Consultant Richard P. Hill maintains his civil litigation practice as a partner in Moody & Hill in San Francisco. § 250.34 Civil Action by Employee or Assignee to Recover Wages

[1] Action by Employee or Former Employee

[a] Right of Action

Although many wage claimants use the administrative remedies described above to pursue wage claims, they are not statutorily required to pursue their remedies through the Labor Commissioner. Rather, a wage claimant may bring a civil action, directly or through an assignee, to recover any wages or penalties due under Lab. Code § 200 et seq. [Lab. Code § 218]. In addition, causes of action for breach of contract, an accounting, or declaratory relief may be added when wages and/or benefits are not paid consistent with the employment agreement [see, e.g., Nelson v. Abraham (1947) 29 Cal. 2d 745, 751, 177 P.2d 931 ; Ware v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc. (1972) 24 Cal. App. 3d 35, 43-45, 100 Cal. Rptr. 791 , aff'd 414 U.S. 117 (1973) ; Montalvo v. Zamora (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 69, 76, 86 Cal. Rptr. 401] . However, breach of contract and other state-law claims related to most employee benefit agreements are preempted by the remedies of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA) [see, e.g., Scott v. Gulf Oil Corp. (9th Cir. 1985) 754 F.2d 1499, 1503-1505] .

Lab. Code § 229 provides that an employee's right to maintain a civil action to recover due and unpaid wages is unaffected by the existence of a private agreement to arbitrate. However, the United States Supreme Court has held Lab. Code § 229 is preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act (9 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.) with respect to agreements that are subject to that Act [see Perry v. Thomas (1987) 482 U.S. 483, 490-491, 107 S. Ct. 2520, 96 L. Ed. 2d 426] . The Act generally applies to all employment contracts, except contracts of employment of transportation workers [Circuit City Stores, Inc. v. Adams (2001) 532 U.S. 105, 109, 121 S. Ct. 1302, 149 L. Ed. 2d 234 ; see 9 U.S.C. § 1 (excluded from coverage of Act are contracts of employment of seamen, railroad employees, or any other class of workers engaged in foreign or interstate commerce)]. Thus, agreements to arbitrate wage disputes appear to be generally enforceable, notwithstanding

Lab. Code § 229. However, a court may refuse to enforce an arbitration agreement that significantly undermines the ability of employees to vindicate their statutory right to overtime pay [Gentry v. Superior Court (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 443, 465 n.8, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 773 (under 9 U.S.C. § 2, states may apply arbitration-neutral rules to limit enforcement of specific provisions of arbitration agreements on public policy grounds)]. For related discussion of the effect of arbitration agreements on civil actions for wrongful termination, see Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline, § 249.21[16].

Lab. Code §§ 200-211 and Lab. Code §§ 215-219, inclusive, do not apply to the payment of wages of employees directly employed by any county, incorporated city or town, or other municipal corporation [Lab. Code § 220(b)]. However, these provisions are applicable to the payment of wages of employees directly employed by the state, except for Lab. Code §§ 201.3, 201.5, 201.7, 203.1, 203.5, 204, 204a, 204b, 204c, 204.1, 205, and 205.5 [Lab. Code § 220(a)].

For a form of complaint for use in a civil action by an employee or assignee to recover wages, see § 250.61.

PRACTICE TIP:

Failure to Pay Proper Amount on Discharge May Be Wrongful Termination in Violation of Public Policy. The arsenal of theories available to counsel for employees with wage disputes has been fortified by the Court of Appeal. In Gould v. Maryland Sound Industries, Inc. (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 1137, 1148-1149, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 718 , it was held that a plaintiff's claim that he was discharged so that the employer could avoid paying him accrued commissions supported a cause of action for tortious discharge in violation of public policy. A wage/commission dispute that ends in actual or constructive termination now gives a plaintiff a truly potent array of remedies. Joining a tortious discharge claim with a breach of contract and/or breach of statutory obligation claim can result in a defendant's exposure to special consequential damages, general damages, punitive damages, prejudgment interest, and statutory attorney's fees [see Brewer v. Premier Golf Props. (2008) 168 Cal. App. 4th 1243, 1252, 86 Cal. Rptr. 3d 225 ("[P]unitive damages are not recoverable when liability is premised solely on the employer's violation of the Labor Code statutes that regulate meal and rest breaks, pay stubs, and minimum wage laws.")]. In this writer's experience, many potential wrongful termination scenarios involve a motivation to deprive an employee of some form of wages or compensation. It should be noted that the statute of limitations on the Gould public policy claim will be one year, a shorter period than the statutory or contract-based approaches to wage collection. By Richard P. Hill

[b] Statute of Limitations

The general rules contained in the Code of Civil Procedure govern the time for institution of an action to recover unpaid wages after the claim has accrued [see Code Civ. Proc. § 312]. Thus, a claim based on an oral contract must be brought within two years after accrual of the cause of action [see Code Civ. Proc. § 339(1); see also Tostevin v. Douglas (1958) 160 Cal. App. 2d 321, 328-329, 325 P.2d 130 (despite request for "accounting" in complaint, action for breach of oral employment contract barred by two-year statute of limitations)]. Actions based on a written agreement must be commenced within four years after accrual of the cause of action [see Code Civ. Proc. § 337(1)]. An action to recover a statutory penalty or forfeiture must be brought within one year of the accrual of the cause of action [see Code Civ. Proc. § 340(a)]. However, if a claim for waiting time penalties allowed under Lab. Code § 203 is joined with a claim for unpaid wages, the action may be brought within the time allowed for bringing the underlying claim for wages rather than within the one-year period set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 340 [see Lab. Code § 203]. On the other hand, if the only claim in an action is for the waiting-time penalty, the one-year period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340(a) governs [McCoy v. Superior Court (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 225, 229-233, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 483].

In addition, Code Civ. Proc. § 338(a) provides a three-year limitations period for actions based on a liability created by statute, other than a penalty or forfeiture. One court of appeal has held that this three-year limitations period, rather than the two-year limitations period applicable to actions based on oral contracts, applies to an action to recover unpaid overtime compensation [Aubry v. Goldhor (1988) 201 Cal. App. 3d 399, 404, 247 Cal. Rptr. 205] . Also, the Supreme Court has held that the three-year limitations period, rather than the one-year period for actions to collect statutory penalties or forfeitures [see Code Civ. Proc. § 340(a)], applies to an employee's claim for additional pay based on the employer's failure to provide meal periods or rest periods required by the applicable IWC wage order [Murphy v. Kenneth Cole Prods., Inc. (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 1094, 1103 ("additional hour of pay," required by Lab. Code § 226.7(b) when employer fails to provide required meal period or rest period, constitutes wage rather than penalty)].

A cause of action for recovery of unpaid wages accrues from each payday or date when the required compensation was not paid [Shuler v. Corl (1918) 39 Cal. App. 195, 198, 178 P. 535 ; see Calvao v. Superior Court (1988) 201 Cal. App. 3d 921, 923, 247 Cal. Rptr. 470 (unpaid salary); Aubry v. Goldhor (1988) 201 Cal. App. 3d 399, 406, 247 Cal. Rptr. 205 (unpaid overtime compensation)].

It is an open question whether a terminated employee's action to recover compensation for vested but unused vacation time [Lab. Code § 227.3; see § 250.16[2][c]] is subject to the statute of limitations for claims based on statutory liability, or the statutes of limitations for contract claims [Church v. Jamison (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 1568, 1577, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 166 (finding it unnecessary to decide which statute of limitations applied, because complaint in case at bar had been filed within all potentially applicable limitation periods); see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 337(1) (written contracts--four years), 338(a) (liability created by statute--three years), 339(1) (oral contracts--two years); but see Sequeira v. Rincon-Vitova Insectaries, Inc. (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 632, 634, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 264 (applying four-year limitation for actions based on written contract, Code Civ. Proc. § 337(1), to bar employee from recovering unused vacation that had vested more than four years before termination of employment)]. Whichever statute of limitations governs the time for suing to recover vested vacation, the courts of appeal are split on the question of whether the statute should also be applied to limit the years for which vested vacation must be paid upon termination. The Second District has held that if the employment relationship was governed by a written contract, the four-year statute of limitations [see Code Civ. Proc. § 337(1)] would limit the right to vacation pay to that which vested within four years prior to the termination of the employment relationship [Sequeira v. Rincon-Vitova Insectaries, Inc. (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 632, 637, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 264] . The Fifth District, in contrast, has held that the statute of limitations only limits the time for filing suit after accrual of the terminated employee's cause of action (i.e., the employer's failure to pay vested vacation upon termination). Under this view, the limitations period should not also be applied "in reverse" to limit the years for which vested vacation may be claimed. Rather, because "all vested vacation shall be paid to [a terminated employee] as wages" [Lab. Code § 227.3], the Fifth District holds that there is no limit on the years of vested, unused vacation time that a terminated employee may claim [Church v. Jamison (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 1568, 1577-1583, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 166] . The Fifth District's analysis seems preferable. The First District's view--that claims for vacation time vested more than four years prior to the date of termination are barred as "stale" claims [see Sequeira v. Rincon-Vitova Insectaries, Inc. (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 632, 637, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 264] --ignores the general principle that a statute of limitations does not begin to run until the cause of action accrues (which, in this context, could not happen before the termination of employment) [see Church v. Jamison (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 1568, 1582-1583, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 166] .

An action to recover compensation for labor performed as a Second World War slave labor victim or forced labor victim may be commenced in superior court on or before December 31, 2010, regardless of whether the action would otherwise be barred under the applicable statute of limitation [Code Civ. Proc. § 354.6(c); see Code Civ. Proc. § 354.6(b) (action may be brought by victim or heir against entity for which work was performed, or against successor entity); see also Code Civ. Proc. § 354.6(a) ("Second World War slave labor victim" and "Second World War forced labor victim" defined as persons forced to perform work without pay from 1929 to 1945 by Nazi regime, its allies and sympathizers, or enterprises transacting business in areas occupied by or under control of Nazi regime or its allies and sympathizers)]. This provision does not apply to claims against Japan or its nationals because it conflicts with the federal policy (embodied in the 1951 Treaty of Peace with Japan) that such claims are to be resolved diplomatically [Taiheiyo Cement Corp. v. Superior Court (2004) 117 Cal. App. 4th 380, 390-398, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 32] .

For additional discussion of the statute of limitations applicable to wage claims, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 5 (Matthew Bender).

[c] Jurisdiction

The principal determinant of wage claim subject matter jurisdiction in state courts is the amount in controversy [see Cal. Const., art. VI, § 10; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 85, 86(a)(1), 116.220; see also Ch. 324, Jurisdiction: Subject Matter]. The type of relief sought is another consideration. Actions seeking equitable relief (e.g., injunctions, declaratory relief, or an accounting) must be brought in the superior court and are not limited civil cases [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 85-86(a)(1), 580(b); see, e.g., Silverman v. Greenberg (1938) 12 Cal. 2d 252, 254, 83 P.2d 293] .

State-law claims for failure to pay wages provided under a collective bargaining agreement or to provide employment benefits may be preempted by the Labor Management Relations Act (LMRA) and/or ERISA, respectively, and these actions must be brought in the United States District Court [see generally 29 U.S.C. §§ 185(a), 1001 et seq.]. However, the LMRA does not preempt a state-law wage claim merely because the collective bargaining agreement will be consulted in the course of state-law litigation, if the interpretation of the agreement is not in dispute [Soremekun v. Thrifty Payless Inc. (9th Cir. 2007) 509 F.3d 978, 990-991 ; Lujan v. Southern Cal. Gas Co. (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 1200, 1206-1211, 117 Cal. Rptr. 2d 828] . For example, when a union member brings a claim under a wage order that allows a collective bargaining agreement to waive the protection of that wage order [see, e.g., 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11160(5)(D)], the mere possibility of waiver does not trigger preemption by the LMRA, and the fact that the collective bargaining agreement must be consulted to determine whether it contains a waiver does not trigger preemption [Burnside v. Kiewit Pac. Corp. (9th Cir. 2007) 491 F.3d 1053, 1064-1073].

[c.1] Governing Law

The California Supreme Court has held that the DLSE's interpretations and constructions of IWC wage orders are void because they have not been promulgated in conformity with the Administrative Procedure Act [Tidewater Marine Western, Inc. v. Bradshaw (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 557, 568-577, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 186, 927 P. 2d 296 , cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1248 (1997) ; see Gov. Code § 11340 et seq.]. In Tidewater, the court reasoned that because the DLSE formulated its interpretations of wage orders without any public participation or procedural safeguards, its interpretations could be given no weight or deference by the court and are void for failure to comply with the APA [Tidewater Marine Western, Inc. v. Bradshaw (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 557, 570-571, 577, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 186, 927 P. 2d 296 , cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1248 (1997) ; see Gov. Code § 11340 et seq.].

[d] Recovery of Attorney's Fees and Costs

The court must award reasonable costs and attorney's fees to the prevailing party if any party to an action brought for the nonpayment of wages and other employment benefits requests attorney's fees and costs on initiation of the action [see Lab. Code § 218.5; On-Line Power, Inc. v. Mazur (2007) 149 Cal. App. 4th 1079, 1085-1086, 57 Cal. Rptr. 3d 698 (award of attorney's fees under Lab. Code § 218.5 is available not just to employees who sue to recover unpaid hourly wages, but also to those who sue to recover unpaid salary); see also Code Civ. Proc. § 1031 (awards in cases with demands less than $300)]. This rule does not apply, however, to actions brought by the Labor Commissioner, to sureties issuing a bond under Business and Professions Code provisions regulating licensed contractors, to actions to enforce mechanics' liens under Civ. Code § 3109 et seq., or to an action to recover the unpaid balance of the legal minimum wage or overtime compensation. In an action for minimum wages or overtime pay, a prevailing employee is entitled to attorneys' fees and costs, but if the employer prevails, the employer has no right to recover fees or costs [Lab. Code §§ 218.5, 1194(a); Earley v. Superior Court (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 1420, 1426-1431, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 57 ; see Bell v. Farmers Ins. Exch. (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 805, 829-833, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 59 (Lab. Code § 1194(a) authorizes attorneys' fee award following judgment, but does not authorize interim fee award prior to judgment); see also Sampson v. Parking Service 2000 Com., Inc. (2004) 117 Cal. App. 4th 212, 217-230 (Lab. Code § 1194(a) applies only in civil actions filed in court, not in administrative "Berman hearings" to resolve wage claims under Lab. Code §§ 98-98.2)].

[d.1] Recovery of Prejudgment Interest

In any action brought for the nonpayment of wages, the court must award interest on all due and unpaid wages at the legal rate [see Civ. Code § 3289(b)], with such interest accruing from the date the wages were due and payable [Lab. Code § 218.6]. The statute imposing this interest requirement is to be applied retroactively; thus, interest must be awarded at the statutory rate even as to unpaid wages that became payable before the statute was enacted [Bell v. Farmers Ins. Exch. (2006) 135 Cal. App. 4th 1138, 1146-1150, 38 Cal. Rptr. 3d 306 ; see Lab. Code § 218.6 (eff. Jan. 1, 2001)].

[e] Defenses

In addition to making the appropriate admissions and denials, the employer's answer should separately allege any new facts not included in the complaint constituting defenses to the causes of action alleged in the complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 431.20(a), 431.30(b), (f), (g)]. Examples of affirmative defenses to an action for failure to pay wages or benefits as required by the Labor Code include the following:

- The party is an independent contractor rather than an employee subject to the provisions of the Labor Code [see, e.g., Fitch v. Pacific Fid. Life Ins. Co. (1975) 54 Cal. App. 3d 140, 145-146, 126 Cal. Rptr. 445 ; but cf. Zaremba v. Miller (1980) 113 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 1, 5-6 , 169 Cal. Rptr. 688 (although an independent contractor may have a cause of action for breach of contract against the defendant); for a form of affirmative defense, see § 250.70].

- The defendant-employer and/or plaintiff-wage claimant are exempt from the applicable provision(s) of the Labor Code [see, e.g., Division of Labor Law Enforcement v. El Camino Hosp. Dist. (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 30, 33 , 87 Cal. Rptr. 476 (employer a "municipal corporation" exempt from wage payment provisions of Labor Code); for a form of affirmative defense, see § 250.71].

- The cause of action is based on an interpretation and/or application of a collective bargaining agreement and is barred by Lab. Code § 229.

- The cause of action is preempted by the LMRA [see 29 U.S.C. § 185(a) (federal law governs suits for violation of contract between employer and labor organization representing employees in industry affecting interstate commerce); but see Soremekun v. Thrifty Payless Inc. (9th Cir. 2007) 509 F.3d 978, 990-991 (LMRA does not preempt state-law claim for unpaid wages if court is required simply to apply terms of collective bargaining agreement; it is preempted only if court must interpret terms of collective bargaining agreement); Burnside v. Kiewit Pac. Corp. (9th Cir. 2007) 491 F.3d 1053, 1064-1073 (mere possibility that collective bargaining agreement may waive protection of state law does not trigger preemption, and fact that collective bargaining agreement must be consulted to determine whether it contains waiver does not trigger preemption); Lujan v. Southern Cal. Gas Co. (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 1200, 1206-1211, 117 Cal. Rptr. 2d 828 (LMRA does not preempt state-law wage claim merely because collective bargaining agreement will be consulted in course of state-law litigation, if interpretation of agreement is not in dispute); for a form of affirmative defense, see § 250.74].

- The cause of action is preempted by ERISA [29 U.S.C. § 1144(a); see, e.g., Scott v. Gulf Oil Corp. (9th Cir. 1985) 754 F.2d 1499, 1503-1506] .

- The defendant and/or plaintiff are not proper parties to the action [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(d); see Oppenheimer v. Robinson (1957) 150 Cal. App. 2d 420, 424, 309 P.2d 887] .

- Plaintiff secreted or absented himself or herself to avoid payment of wages or refused to receive the payment fully tendered to him or her, thereby relieving defendant of liability for waiting time penalties [see Lab. Code § 203; for a form of affirmative defense, see § 250.72].

Other potential defenses include lack of subject matter jurisdiction [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(a)], failure to state a cause of action [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)], and failure to commence the action within the applicable statute of limitations [see, e.g., Tostevin v. Douglas (1958) 160 Cal. App. 2d 321, 328-329, 325 P.2d 130] .

If the grounds for objecting to the complaint appear on the face of the complaint (or from any matter of which the court is required or permitted to take judicial notice), the objection should be made by demurrer rather than by answer [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a), (b)].

[2] Action by Assignee

An employee's assignee may bring an action to collect wages that are due [Lab. Code § 218]. Except in the case of an assignment to the Labor Commissioner [see Lab. Code § 96], the assignment must meet the requirements of Lab. Code § 300. If the assignment is valid, the assignee has the same enforcement rights and is subject to the same defenses as the employee assigning the wages [see Teater v. Good Hope Dev. Corp. (1942) 55 Cal. App. 2d 459, 462, 130 P.2d 812] . A claim for penalties by an assignee appears to be limited, however, to the portion of the penalty that accrued prior to the assignment [see Martin v. Going (1922) 57 Cal. App. 631, 636, 207 P. 935] . For a form of complaint for use by an employee's assignee against an employer for failure to pay wage, see § 250.65.

§ 250.35 Protection of Employee or Claimant Against Retaliation

[1] Discrimination and Retaliation Forbidden

An employer may not discharge or in any manner discriminate against an employee for filing a bona fide complaint or claim or instituting any proceeding relating to his or her rights under the jurisdiction of the Labor Commissioner, or for testifying in such a proceeding [see Lab. Code § 98.6(a)]. Employers are also prohibited from discriminating or retaliating against employees for exercising any right given to them on their own behalf or on the behalf of others [Lab. Code § 98.6(a)]. Similar protection is afforded job applicants [Lab. Code § 98.6(a)]. Acts of discrimination and retaliation include discharge, threats of discharge, demotion, suspension, and any other discrimination in the terms and conditions of employment [see Lab. Code § 98.6(b)].

An employee who suffers discrimination or retaliation for having made a bona fide complaint is entitled to reinstatement and/or reimbursement for wages and benefits lost as a result. An employer who willfully refuses to hire, promote, or otherwise restore such an employee following a decision by a grievance procedure, arbitration, or other hearing authorized by law is guilty of a misdemeanor [Lab. Code § 98.6(b)].

[2] Procedure in Case of Complaint of Discrimination or Retaliation

Lab. Code § 98.7 provides a specific statutory administrative investigation and hearing procedure before the Labor Commissioner to address alleged cases of discrimination under any provision of the Labor Code enforced by the Labor Commissioner [Lab. Code § 98.7(a)]. A person who believes that he or she has been discharged or otherwise discriminated against in violation of these provisions may initiate the administrative process by filing a complaint with the Division of Labor Standards Enforcement (DLSE) within six months after the violation. The six-month period may be extended for good cause [Lab. Code § 98.7(a)]. This administrative mechanism is not an exclusive remedy and the provisions of Lab. Code § 98.7 do not preclude any other remedies provided by law such as, for example, common law suits for wrongful discharge [Lab. Code § 98.7(f); see, e.g., Montalvo v. Zamora (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 69, 76, 86 Cal. Rptr. 401 (civil action for wrongful discharge); Lloyd v. County of Los Angeles (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 320, 331-332, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 872 (Lab. Code § 98.7 provides additional remedy employee may choose to pursue, and there is no requirement that employee exhaust that remedy before suing for violation of Labor Code provisions)]. For discussion of common-law actions for wrongful termination, see Ch. 249 Employment Law: Termination and Discipline, § 249.11.

Appropriate relief under Lab. Code § 98.7 can include rehiring or reinstatement of the complainant, reimbursement of lost wages with interest, reasonable attorney's fees, and other appropriate compensation or equitable relief. If the respondent fails to comply within a specified time after notification of the Labor Commissioner's determination, the Commissioner must initiate an action in the appropriate court to secure the remedy, and must seek appropriate temporary relief or restraining orders. The complainant may intervene in any action filed by the Labor Commissioner [Lab. Code § 98.7(c)].

If the Labor Commissioner finds no violation and dismisses the complaint, he or she must notify the complainant of the right to seek full relief by bringing an action in the appropriate court and, when appropriate under Lab. Code §§ 6310 or 6311, filing a claim with the United States Department of Labor against a state program [Lab. Code § 98.7(d)(1)]. If a timely complaint against a state program under Lab. Code §§ 6310 or 6311 is filed with the United States Department of Labor, the Labor Commissioner's dismissal of the division complaint will be stayed until the United States Secretary of Labor makes a determination regarding the alleged violation. Within 15 days of receipt of that determination, the Labor Commissioner must notify the parties whether he or she will reopen the complaint filed with the division or whether he or she will reaffirm the dismissal [Lab. Code § 98.7(d)(2)]. In dismissing any complaint, the Labor Commissioner may assess reasonable attorney's fees associated with any investigatory hearing against the complainant if the Commissioner finds that the complaint was frivolous, unreasonable, groundless, and brought in bad faith [Lab. Code § 98.7(d)].

For a detailed discussion of administrative hearing procedures under Lab. Code § 98.7, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 5 (Matthew Bender).

§ 250.36 Criminal Sanctions

The Labor Code is replete with criminal sanctions for violations of its requirements. Unless a different punishment is expressly prescribed by the particular statute, every offense declared by the Labor Code to be a misdemeanor is punishable by imprisonment in the county jail for a term not exceeding 6 months, or by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or by both [Lab. Code § 23]. Courts have rejected constitutional challenges to the imposition of criminal sanctions for failure to pay wages based on the prohibition against imprisonment for debt [see Cal. Const. art. I, § 10] on the ground that the imposition of a criminal penalty requires "willfulness," and that purposeful failure to pay wages owed when there is no claim of inability to pay is a fraud constituting an exception to the prohibition against imprisonment for debt [see, e.g., In re Trombley (1948) 31 Cal. 2d 801, 805-806, 193 P.2d 734 ; People v. Bishopp (1976) 56 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 8, 12-13 , 128 Cal. Rptr. 923 ; *People v. Hampton (1965) 236 Cal. App. 2d 795, 804-805, 46 Cal. § 250.37 Bond Requirements

[1] Penalty Bonds

The Labor Commissioner may, in addition to all other penalties, require an employer who has been convicted of a violation of any provision of Lab. Code § 200 et seq. or who has not paid a judgment for nonpayment of wages within 10 days after expiration of the appeal period, to post a bond to secure future compliance with payment requirements. The bond, the amount of which is in the Labor Commissioner's discretion, is payable to the Labor Commissioner and is conditioned on payment of any judgment for nonpayment of wages and on the payment, for a definite period not exceeding 6 months, of wages in accordance with the law [Lab. Code § 240].

In addition, under certain circumstances set forth in Lab. Code § 243, a current or former employee may bring an action for a temporary restraining order prohibiting an employer from doing business in California unless it deposits with the court a bond to secure compliance with the wage payment provisions of Lab. Code § 240 et seq. or to satisfy any outstanding judgment for nonpayment of wages. Such an action may be brought by a current employee or his or her legal representative if the employer has, for the second time in 10 years, violated the provisions of Lab. Code § 240 et seq. or failed to satisfy a judgment for nonpayment of wages [see Lab. Code § 243(a)-(c)]. A former employee who has obtained a judgment in a previous action against an employer for nonpayment of wages may also petition for such a restraining order if the employer fails to satisfy the judgment [see Lab. Code § 243(e)].

[2] Wage Security Bonds

Employers in the mining, logging and saw mill, door-to-door selling or telephone solicitation, and theatrical industries must maintain a bond, cash deposit, or other salable surety, sufficient to assure their ability to make payroll obligations [see Lab. Code §§ 270-272; 8 Cal. Code Reg. §§ 13300-13302].

§ 250.40 California Law

[1] Available Remedies

An employee who receives less than the required minimum wage or overtime compensation may pursue the Lab. Code § 98 general administrative procedures for resolving wage claims. For a discussion of Lab. Code § 98 general administrative procedures for resolving wage claims, see Subpart B, § 250.30 et seq. Alternatively, Lab. Code §§ 1193.5 and 1195-1197.1 provide additional administrative remedies specifically designed to remedy unlawful failure to pay minimum wages. Civil actions for violation of the minimum wage and overtime compensation provisions of the wage orders also may be brought by the DLSE [see Lab. Code §§ 1193.6, 1194.5] or by the employee [see Lab. Code § 1194].

[2] Role of Division of Labor Standards Enforcement

[a] Acceptance and Investigation of Complaints

Any person may register a complaint with the DLSE that an employee has been paid less than the minimum wage. The DLSE must investigate all such complaints and "take all proceedings necessary to enforce payment of a wage not less than the minimum wage" [Lab. Code § 1195; see Lab. Code § 1193.5]. An employee who accepts payment of sums found to be due on demand of the DLSE waives his or her right to sue the employer directly under Lab. Code § 1194 [Lab. Code § 1193.5(b)].

[b] Administrative Rulings

The Labor Commissioner and DLSE are authorized to administer and enforce Lab. Code § 1171 et seq. and wage orders promulgated thereunder [see Lab. Code §§ 61, 1193.5]. Consistent with that authority, the Labor Commissioner issues interpretations of the minimum wage and overtime rules, which serve as guidelines for employers. However, DLSE interpretations of wage orders are to be given no weight as precedent because under the Administrative Procedure Act, they fall within the definition of regulations which are void because they have not been promulgated in compliance with the APA. Such interpretations are not entitled to deference even if it represents a longstanding DLSE policy [Tidewater Marine Western, Inc. v. Bradshaw (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 557, 568-577, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 186, 927 P. 2d 296 , cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1248 (1997)] . For further discussion of DLSE interpretations, see § 250.34[1][c.1].

[c] Examination of Employer's Records

Employers must give representatives of the DLSE and members of the Industrial Welfare Commission (IWC) access to places of business to secure information or make any authorized investigation; allow inspection and/or make excerpts from books, reports, contracts, payrolls, documents or papers relating to the employment of employees; maintain certain records; and furnish the IWC with requested reports and information [Lab. Code § 1174]. Refusal to comply is a misdemeanor [Lab. Code § 1175] and also subjects the employer to a civil penalty [see Lab. Code § 1174.5].

[d] Penalties

The Labor Commissioner may issue a penalty citation at the conclusion of a Berman hearing or if, after an investigation, he or she determines that an employee has been paid wages that are less than the minimum allowed [Lab. Code § 1197.1(b); see Gov. Code § 11505(c) (manner of sending notice of penalty)]. Generally, penalties are not pyramided, but multiple penalties may be assessed for separate violations applicable to different employees [D.L.S.E. Div. Management Memo. No. 84-1 (Jan. 24, 1984)].

An employer or other person acting either individually or as an officer, agent, or employee of another person, who pays or causes to be paid to any employee a wage less than the minimum wage fixed by an order of the IWC is subject to a civil penalty of $100 for each underpaid employee for each pay period for which the employee is underpaid for each initial, intentional violation. For each subsequent violation for the same specific violation, the penalty is $250 for each underpaid employee for each pay period for which the employee is underpaid, with no requirement that the violation be intentional [Lab. Code § 1197.1(a)]. This civil penalty is not applicable to any order of the Commission relating to household occupations and is in addition to any other penalty provided by law [Lab. Code § 1197.1(h), (i)].

A penalty citation must be contested within 15 business days after service of the citation, and a hearing on the contested citation must be held within 30 days thereafter. A writ of mandate to the appropriate superior court may be taken from a hearing decision assessing civil penalties [Lab. Code § 1197.1(c)].

An employer who does not contest the citation must pay the penalty within 15 business days after issuance of the citation [Lab. Code § 1197.1(d)]. In addition, the Labor Commissioner may file a certified copy of the uncontested citation or proposed assessment in the appropriate superior court, and the court clerk must enter judgment for the state against the employer in the amount shown on the citation or the proposed assessment [Lab. Code § 1197.1(e)].

For a detailed discussion of penalty procedures under Lab. Code § 1197.1, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 5 (Matthew Bender).

[e] Injunction

Lab. Code § 1194.5 authorizes the DLSE to seek injunctions to bar further violations in cases of willful violation of any law, regulation, or order governing employee wages, hours of work, or working conditions [see generally Lab. Code §§ 101-102; Civ. Code §§ 3420-3423; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 526, 527].

[f] Civil Action by Agency on Behalf of Employee

The DLSE or the Department of Industrial Relations (DIR) may institute civil actions on behalf of employees who have been paid less than the minimum wage or who did not receive the required overtime compensation. In addition to recovering the unpaid wages or compensation, the DLSE or DIR is entitled to an award of the costs of suit. Unless the action is dismissed without prejudice, an employee's consent to institution of a civil action by the DLSE or DIR waives the employee's right to institute a civil action against the employer pursuant to Lab. Code § 1194 [Lab. Code § 1193.6(a)].

The DLSE or DIR may commence and prosecute the civil action with or without the consent of the employee. The DLSE or DIR may also recover interest on the unpaid wages or compensation. In addition to the wages, compensation, and interest awarded, the court must award costs of suit plus reasonable attorney's fees [Lab. Code § 1193.6]. If the action is brought to recover amounts unpaid in violation of the minimum wage fixed by an order of the commission, the court may also award liquidated damages equal to the amount of wages unlawfully unpaid plus interest. Liquidated damages are not recoverable for failure to pay overtime compensation [Lab. Code § 1194.2(a), (c)].

The Labor Code provides that no court costs are payable by the DLSE in any civil action to which the DLSE is a party Lab. Code § 101]. This provision, however, applies only to filing fees and other fees payable to the court; it does not prevent the court from ordering the DLSE to pay costs to a prevailing party [Department of Indus. Relations v. Lee (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 763, 766-770, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 710 (nothing in language or legislative history of Lab. Code § 101 indicates intent to exempt DLSE from paying costs to prevailing party in litigation); see Code Civ. Proc. § 1028 (costs may be awarded against state on same basis as against any other party)].

[3] Civil Action by Employee

Any employee who has been paid less than the required minimum wage or overtime compensation may institute a civil action to recover any sums that are due and the costs of suit [Lab. Code § 1194(a)]. This right cannot be waived by the employee's agreement to work at a rate less than the minimum wage or without overtime compensation, or by acquiescence in payment of less than the statutorily required amounts [see Lab. Code § 1194(a); Bartholomew v. Heyman Properties (1955) 132 Cal. App. 2d Supp. 889, 893-895 , 281 P.2d 921] . The employee is also entitled to recover interest on the unpaid wages or compensation, plus reasonable attorney's fees [Lab. Code § 1194(a); see Bell v. Farmers Ins. Exch. (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 805, 829-833, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 59 (Lab. Code § 1194(a) authorizes attorneys' fee award following judgment, but does not authorize interim fee award prior to judgment)]. If the action is brought to recover amounts unpaid in violation of the minimum wage fixed by an order of the IWC, the court may also award liquidated damages equal to the amount of wages unlawfully unpaid plus interest. An employee may not recover liquidated damages for failure to pay overtime compensation [Lab. Code § 1194.2(a), (c)].

An action to recover the minimum wage or overtime compensation must be brought against the plaintiff's employer, as defined by the applicable Industrial Welfare Commission wage order (see § 250.14[2]) [*Martinez v. Combs (May 20, 2010) 49 Cal. 4th 35, -- Cal. Rptr. 3d --, -- P.3d --, 2010 Cal. LEXIS 4660, at *52-61 ("[A] claim under [Lab. Code § 1194] is in reality a claim under the applicable wage order and thus subject to the order's definitional provisions.")]. The wage orders' broad regulatory definition of "employer" encompasses not just the common-law employment relationship; it also includes any person that exercises control over the plaintiff's wages, hours, or working conditions or that suffers or permits the plaintiff to work [*Martinez v. Combs (May 20, 2010) 49 Cal. 4th 35, -- Cal. Rptr. 3d --, -- P.3d --, 2010 Cal. LEXIS 4660, at *56-57 (applying 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11140(2)(C),(F) (Cal. Wage order No. 14-2001))]. Also, the action must be brought directly against the employer; thus, it may not be maintained against shareholders, officers, directors, or other agents of a corporate employer. Although the common law makes "control" a key factor in establishing an employer-employee relationship, an individual corporate agent who exercises control over the wages, hours, or working conditions of a corporate employee does not thereby become an "employer" who is personally liable for unpaid wages. It is settled that corporate agents and employees acting for and on behalf of a corporation cannot be held liable for a breach of the corporation's contractual or statutory duty to pay wages [Reynolds v. Bement (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 1075, 1085-1089, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 483 ; Jones v. Gregory (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 798, 803-805, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 581].

If the employee in such an action proves that he or she performed work for which he or she did not receive the proper minimum wage or overtime compensation and produces sufficient evidence to permit a reasonable inference as to the amount and extent of that work, the burden shifts to the employer to come forward with evidence of the precise amount of work performed or to negate the inference drawn from the employee's evidence. If the employer fails to produce such evidence because it has failed to keep proper records, the court may award damages based on the employee's evidence, even if the damages only approximate the actual hours worked [see Hernandez v. Mendoza (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 721, 727, 245 Cal. Rptr. 36 (citing Anderson v. Mt. Clemens Pottery Co. (1945) 328 U.S. 680, 687-688, 66 S. Ct. 1187, 90 L. Ed. 1515); see also Bell v. Farmers Ins. Exch. (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 715, 746-751, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 544 (reliable statistical inference may be basis for determining class damages for unpaid overtime compensation)].

An action for recovery of unpaid overtime compensation must be brought within the three-year limitation period provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 338(a) for actions based on a liability created by statute, other than a penalty or forfeiture. A separate cause of action for overtime compensation accrues on each regular pay day immediately following the work period during which the services were performed and for which overtime compensation is claimed [see Aubry v. Goldhor (1988) 201 Cal. App. 3d 399, 406, 247 Cal. Rptr. 205] .

For a form of complaint for use in cases in which the employer has failed to pay minimum wages and/or overtime compensation, see § 250.62.

[b] Defenses

In addition to admitting or denying the allegations of the complaint (for example, denying that an employment relationship existed or that the wages paid to the plaintiff violated the applicable minimum wage or overtime requirements), the employer's answer should set forth any of the following applicable affirmative defenses [see Code Civ. Proc. § 431.30(b)]:

- The employer and/or employee is exempt from the minimum wage and/or overtime compensation requirements of the wage orders [for a form of affirmative defense, see § 250.71].

- The hours claimed are not "hours worked" within the meaning of the wage orders, so that minimum wage and overtime compensation need not be paid for those hours [see, e.g., 8 Cal. Code Reg. §§ 11020-11150, PP 4-6 (Cal. Wage Order Nos. 2-2001-15-2001); Aguilar v. Association for Retarded Citizens (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 21, 24-25, 285 Cal. Rptr. 515] .

- The employee was properly paid a subminimum wage [see, e.g., 8 Cal. Code Reg. §§ 11020-11150, PP 4-6 (Cal. Wage Order Nos. 1-2001-15-2001); for a form of affirmative defense, see § 250.71].

- Liquidated damages should be denied or reduced because the employer's act or omission was in good faith and the employer had reasonable grounds for believing that the act or omission did not violate any Labor Code provision relating to minimum wage or any order of the IWC [see Lab. Code § 1194.2(b); for a form of affirmative defense, see § 250.75].

For a detailed discussion of possible affirmative defenses, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Chs. 2 and 3 (Matthew Bender).

§ 250.41 Federal Law

[1] Remedies Available Under Fair Labor Standards Act

[a] In General

The Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA) provides a remedial scheme for failure to pay federally required minimum wages and overtime compensation. The following six remedies are available for FLSA violations [see 29 U.S.C. §§ 215-217; Lerwill v. Inflight Motion Pictures, Inc. (N.D. Cal. 1972) 343 F. Supp. 1027, 1029] :

- Voluntary payment of unpaid minimum wages and overtime payments under the aegis of the Secretary of Labor through the Wage and Hour Division.

- A civil action brought by the Secretary of Labor to recover unpaid minimum wages or overtime compensation.

- A federal court action for injunctive relief brought by the Secretary of Labor for violations of minimum wage, overtime, discrimination, and other provisions of the FLSA.

- A civil action brought by an employee or group of employees for violation of the minimum wage and overtime rules or alleged discrimination or retaliation.

- Civil penalties for repeated or willful violations of the minimum wage, overtime, and child labor provisions of the FLSA.

- Criminal proceedings for willful violations of the FLSA.

Although the FLSA purports to authorize private actions against states in their own courts without regard to their consent [see 29 U.S.C. §§ 203(x), 216(b)], the Supreme Court has held that the Constitution bars an individual suit against a state to enforce a federal statutory right under the FLSA, when brought in a state court over the state's objections [Alden v. Maine (1999) 527 U.S. 706, 745, 753-760, 119 S. Ct. 2240, 144 L. Ed. 2d 636 (state employees could not sue state of Maine for overtime wages due under the FLSA, absent state's waiver of its sovereign immunity)].

For further discussion of the remedies available under the FLSA and an example of a complaint for wages, liquidated damages, attorney's fees, and costs that may be filed in federal district court, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 5, Pt. B, Subpt. 2 (Matthew Bender).

[b] Jurisdiction

Both the federal and state courts of general jurisdiction can entertain actions by employees to recover unpaid minimum wages and/or overtime compensation under the FLSA [see 29 U.S.C. § 216(b)]. The federal courts may also exercise pendent jurisdiction over related state claims [see Marchak v. Observer Publications, Inc. (D.R.I. 1980) 493 F. Supp. 278, 282] . There is a dispute among the federal appellate circuits with regard to the right to remove cases originally brought in the state courts; however, it appears that most cases favor removal [see, e.g., Ramos v. H.E. Butt Grocery Company (S.D. Tex. 1986) 632 F. Supp. 342, 343 ; Anthony v. West Coast Drug Company (W.D. Wash. 1971) 331 F. Supp. 1279, 1280 ; Aaker v. Kaiser Co. (D. Or. 1947) 74 F. Supp. 55, 56] .

[c] Amounts Recoverable

In an action under 29 U.S.C. § 216(b), the employer is liable to the plaintiff-employees for any unpaid minimum wages and/or overtime compensation found to be due under the terms of the FLSA. In addition, the successful plaintiff is entitled to an award of liquidated damages equal to the amount of minimum wages or overtime compensation found to be due, unless the employer can show that the act or omission was in good faith and that the employer had reasonable grounds for believing that there was no violation of the FLSA [29 U.S.C. §§ 216(b), 260; see, e.g., SEIU, Local 102 v. County of San Diego (9th Cir. 1995) 60 F.3d 1346, 1355-1356 ; Craig v. Far West Engineering Company (9th Cir. 1959) 265 F.2d 251, 261 , cert. denied, 361 U.S. 816 ; Kelly v. Ballard (S.D. Cal. 1969) 298 F. Supp. 1301, 1309] . It appears that punitive damages are also recoverable under the FLSA [see Travis v. Gary Community Mental Health Ctr., 921 F.2d 108, 112 (7th Cir. 1990) , cert. denied, 502 U.S. 812 (1991) ; see also Lambert v. Ackerley (1999) 180 F.3d 997, 1011 (en banc) (not reaching issue because it had been waived by appellants, but stating that Seventh Circuit's reasoning in Travis was persuasive)].

Interest on the judgment may also be awarded. The Ninth Circuit awards prejudgment interest on the grounds that compensation should be provided for the loss of the use of the money that was owed [see, e.g., Ford v. Alfaro (9th Cir. 1986) 785 F.2d 835, 842] . Awards of postjudgment interest are made as a matter of course [see 28 U.S.C. § 1961].

Finally, plaintiff-employees are entitled to recover attorney's fees and costs if successful [29 U.S.C. § 216(b); see Kerr v. Screen Extras Guild, Inc. (9th Cir. 1975) 526 F.2d 67, 69-70 , cert. denied sub nom. Perkins v. Screen Extras Guild, Inc., 425 U.S. 951 (1976) (factors considered in making award); see also Haworth v. State of Nev. (9th Cir. 1995) 56 F.3d 1048, 1051-1052 (when Rule 68 offer of judgment is rejected in FLSA case, and the judgment is for less than the offer, this must be taken into account in determining what attorney's fee is reasonable)].

[d] Defenses

Potential defenses to an action under the FLSA to recover unpaid minimum wages and/or overtime compensation, plus liquidated damages, include the following:

- The employer or employee is statutorily exempt from the minimum wage and/or overtime compensation requirements of the FLSA [see 29 U.S.C. §§ 207(b), (f), (g), (i)-(k), (m), (o), (p), 213].

- The hours for which the employee claims compensation are not considered working time under the FLSA and Portal-to-Portal Act [see 29 U.S.C. §§ 206(a), 207(a), (n), 254].

- The action is barred by the statute of limitations (generally two years from the accrual of the cause of action; three years in the case of willful violations) [see 29 U.S.C. § 255(a); see also McLaughlin v. Richland Shoe Co. (1988) 486 U.S. 128, 132-133, 108 S. Ct. 1677, 100 L. Ed. 2d 115 (violation is "willful" for purposes of FLSA if employer knew its conduct was prohibited by FLSA or showed reckless disregard as to whether its conduct was prohibited)].

- The plaintiff-employee accepted payment of back wages under the supervision of the Secretary of Labor as payment in full [see 29 U.S.C. § 216(c); see Dent v. Cox Commc'ns Las Vegas, Inc. (9th Cir. 2007) 502 F.3d 1141, 1145 (employee's acceptance of back wages for specified period under 29 U.S.C. § 216(c) does not waive claims for back wages owed for periods not specified in settlement)].

- The employer is a state that has not consented to be sued in its own courts [Alden v. Maine (1999) 527 U.S. 706, 745, 753-760, 119 S. Ct. 2240, 144 L. Ed. 2d 636 (state employees could not sue state of Maine for overtime wages due under the FLSA, absent state's waiver of its sovereign immunity)].

In addition, the Portal-to-Portal Act provides two separate defenses based on the employer's good faith belief in the legality of its actions [see 29 U.S.C. §§ 259, 260]. First, an employer is not subject to any liability or punishment for failure to pay minimum wages or overtime compensation under the FLSA if the employer acted in good-faith conformity with, and reliance on, any written administrative regulation, order, ruling, approval, or interpretation of the Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division or any administrative practice or enforcement policy of that agency with respect to the class of employers to which it belongs [29 U.S.C. § 259(a); see 29 C.F.R. §§ 790.13-790.19]. An objective test is used to determine whether reliance on rulings was in good faith; that is, the test is whether the employer acted as a reasonably prudent person in taking the particular action [see 29 C.F.R. § 790.15(a)]. An affirmative writing by the agency must exist. Thus, for example, the failure of the agency to respond to an employer's request for a ruling is not considered an interpretation or ruling of the agency [see 29 U.S.C. § 259(a); 29 C.F.R. § 790.17(f)]. Also, a position taken by the agency in litigation does not constitute an administrative ruling or interpretation for this purpose [Alvarez v. IBP, Inc. (9th Cir. 2003) 339 F.3d 894, 907-908 , aff'd on other grounds, 546 U.S. 21, 126 S. Ct. 514, 163 L. Ed. 2d 288 (2005)] . Furthermore, the administrative regulation, order, ruling, approval, or interpretation must be in effect at the time of the reliance [see 29 C.F.R. § 790.17(h)].

Second, the recovery of liquidated damages under the FLSA is barred if the employer proves that the act or omission complained of was in good faith and that the employer had reasonable grounds for believing that its act or omission was not a violation of the FLSA. This defense, if established, permits the court to exercise its discretion as to whether to award liquidated damages and, if so, whether to award an amount less than the amount to which the plaintiff would otherwise be entitled under 29 U.S.C. § 216 [29 U.S.C. § 260].

Generally, an employee is entitled to compensation only for the period that starts when an employee commences the principal activities of the job and ends when the employee ceases performance of the last principal activity of the job [29 U.S.C. § 254(a); 29 C.F.R. § 790.6(a)]. Thus, time spent traveling to the place where the first principal activity is performed is not part of the compensable workday, but time spent walking to a production area after performing the first principal activity and before the end of the last principal activity is part of the compensable workday [IBP, Inc. v. Alvarez (2005) 546 U.S. 21, 126 S. Ct. 514, 523-525, 163 L. Ed. 2d 288, 299-302 ("principal activities" include activities that are integral and indispensable to employee's work, such as donning and doffing required protective gear)].

[2] Protection of Employee for Filing Claim or Testifying Against Employer

The FLSA makes it unlawful to discharge or discriminate against any employee because that employee has (1) filed any complaint or instituted or caused to be instituted any proceeding under or related to the FLSA, or (2) has testified or is about to testify in any such proceeding [29 U.S.C. § 215(a)(3); see, e.g., Ford v. Alfaro (9th Cir. 1986) 785 F.2d 835, 841-842] . An employer who unlawfully discriminates against a claimant or witness in a proceeding under the FLSA is liable for legal or equitable relief as appropriate under the circumstances, including employment, reinstatement, promotion, back pay, and an additional equal amount as liquidated damages [29 U.S.C. § 216(b); Mitchell v. De Mario Jewelry (1960) 361 U.S. 288, 295-296, 80 S. Ct. 332, 4 L. Ed. 2d 323] .

The Ninth Circuit has held that this anti-retaliation provision also protects employees who complain about FLSA violations to their employers, even in the absence of formal FLSA proceedings. The court held that such a broad construction of the anti-retaliation provision is necessary to ensure that employees are not compelled to risk their jobs in order to assert their rights under the FLSA [Lambert v. Ackerley (1999) 180 F.3d 997, 1002-1004 (en banc) (noting that First, Third, Sixth, Eighth, Tenth, and Eleventh Circuits have issued similar holdings, with only Second Circuit holding to contrary)]. However, the protection of the anti-retaliation provision will not attach to mere amorphous expressions of discontent related to wages and hours. The Ninth Circuit stated that for the statutory protection to apply, an employee must have communicated the substance of his or her allegations to the employer (for example, that the employer failed to pay adequate overtime or failed to pay the minimum wage). The employee may communicate such allegations orally or in writing, and need not refer to the FLSA by name [Lambert v. Ackerley (1999) 180 F.3d 997, 1007-1008 (en banc) (minimum specificity with which employee must assert FLSA violation to find protection under anti-retaliation provision must be decided on case-by-case basis)].

§ 250.54 Decisions

[1] Action for Recovery of Wages

[a] In General

For purposes of action to recover minimum wage or overtime compensation under Lab. Code § 1194, "employer" is defined by applicable Industrial Welfare Commission wage order. *Martinez v. Combs (May 20, 2010) 49 Cal. 4th 35, -- Cal. Rptr. 3d --, -- P.3d --, 2010 Cal. LEXIS 4660, at *52-61

Action by employee to recover statutory minimum wage or overtime compensation under Lab. Code § 1194 must be brought directly against employer and may not be maintained against shareholders, officers, directors, or other agents of corporate employer. Reynolds v. Bement (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 1075, 1085-1089, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 483

Cause of action for recovery of unpaid wages accrues from each payday or date when required compensation was not paid. Calvao v. Superior Court (1988) 201 Cal. App. 3d 921, 923, 247 Cal. Rptr. 470

Employee has burden of proving performance of work for which he or she was not compensated; burden is carried by employee's proof that he or she in fact performed work for which he or she was improperly compensated and producing sufficient evidence to show amount and extent of that work as matter of just and reasonable inference; burden then shifting to employer to come forward with evidence of precise amount of work performed or with evidence to negative reasonableness of inference to be drawn from employee's evidence; if employer fails to produce such evidence, court is then permitted to award damages to employee, even though result is only approximate; trier of fact may draw whatever reasonable inferences it can from employee's evidence when employer cannot provide accurate information. Hernandez v. Mendoza (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 721, 727, 245 Cal. Rptr. 36

[b] Affirmative Defenses

Fact that cause of action is preempted by ERISA constitutes affirmative defense to action for failure to pay wages or benefits as required by Labor Code. California Chamber of Commerce v. Simpson (C.D. Cal. 1985) 601 F. Supp. 104, 109

Party not subject to provisions of Labor Code by virtue of his or her status as independent contractor rather than employee has cause of action for breach of contract against defendant. Zaremba v. Miller (1980) 113 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 1, 5-6 , 169 Cal. Rptr. 688

Fact that party is independent contractor rather than employee subject to provisions of Labor Code constitutes affirmative defense in action for failure to pay wages or benefits. Fitch v. Pacific Fid. Life Ins. Co. (1975) 54 Cal. App. 3d 140, 145-146, 126 Cal. Rptr. 445

Fact that employer or employee is exempt from Labor Code constitutes affirmative defense in action for violation of Labor Code provisions relating to payment of wages. Division of Labor Law Enforcement v. El Camino Hosp. Dist. (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 30, 32, 33, 36 , 87 Cal. Rptr. 476

[c] Pleading

Employee's rate of pay must be alleged to support claim for penalty wages. Oppenheimer v. Moebius (1957) 151 Cal. App. 2d 818, 820, 312 P.2d 314

Issues in statutory action under Lab. Code § 201 for damages because of nonpayment of wages are (1) whether employer failed to pay wages accrued when employer-employee relationship terminated, and (2) what is amount of accrued wages. Oppenheimer v. Robinson (1957) 150 Cal. App. 2d 420, 422, 309 P.2d 887

[d] Statute of Limitations

Three-year limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. 338(a) for actions based on liability created by statute, rather than one-year period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340(a) for actions to collect statutory penalties or forfeitures, applies to employee's claim under Lab. Code § 226.7(b) for additional pay based on employer's failure to provide requisite meal periods or rest periods. Murphy v. Kenneth Cole Prods., Inc. (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 1094, 1103

Code Civ. Proc. § 354.6(c), which provides special limitations period for actions to recover compensation for labor performed as a Second World War slave labor victim or forced labor victim, does not apply to claims against Japan or its nationals because it conflicts with the federal policy (embodied in the 1951 Treaty of Peace with Japan) that such claims are to be resolved diplomatically. Taiheiyo Cement Corp. v. Superior Court (2004) 117 Cal. App. 4th 380, 390-398, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 32

Code Civ. Proc. § 338(a) three-year limitations period for actions based on liability created by statute other than penalty or forfeiture applies to action to recover unpaid overtime compensation, rather than two-year limitations period applicable to actions based on oral contracts. Aubry v. Goldhor (1988) 201 Cal. App. 3d 399, 404, 247 Cal. Rptr. 205

[e] Costs

Lab. Code § 101, which provides that no court costs are payable by DLSE in any civil action to which DLSE is party, applies only to filing fees and other fees payable to court; it does not prevent court from ordering DLSE to pay costs to prevailing party. Department of Indus. Relations v. Lee (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 763, 766-770, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 710

[2] Appeal of Labor Commissioner's Decision

At de novo hearing on appeal from Labor Commissioner's decision, court has discretion to allow employee to raise new wage claims, after weighing considerations such as whether new claims are sufficiently related to claims raised before Labor Commissioner, whether interests of judicial economy will be served, and whether employer will be prejudiced. Murphy v. Kenneth Cole Prods., Inc. (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 1094, 1118

Wage claimant's right to appeal and obtain de novo trial applies whenever Labor Commissioner has conducted Berman hearing, even if commissioner's award consists of dismissal of wage claim for lack of jurisdiction, based on finding that claimant is not employee. Post v. Palo/Haklar & Associates (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 942, 948-951, 98 Cal. Rptr. 2d 671, 4 P.3d 928

Statutory requirement that appeal from Labor Commissioner's decision be filed within 10 days is mandatory and jurisdictional; therefore, court cannot consider late appeal even if lateness results from mistake, inadvertence, or other excuse. Pressler v. Donald L. Bren Co. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 831, 837, 187 Cal. Rptr. 449, 654 P.2d 219 ; REO Broadcasting Consultants v. Martin (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 489, 496, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 639

Timely filing of notice of appeal from Labor Commissioner's decision forestalls finality of that decision, terminates Labor Commissioner's jurisdiction, and vests jurisdiction to conduct trial de novo in appropriate court. Pressler v. Donald L. Bren Co. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 831, 836, 187 Cal. Rptr. 449, 654 P.2d 219 ; Rogers v. Municipal Court (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 1314, 1318, 243 Cal. Rptr. 530

Provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 1013 that exempts "notices of appeal" from extensions of time limits for responding to papers served by mail is inapplicable to notices seeking de novo judicial review of Labor Commissioner decisions. Clavell v. North Coast Business Park (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 328, 332, 283 Cal. Rptr. 419

Lab. Code § 98.2 provides for de novo trial in superior court on appeal from Labor Commissioner's order or decision; superior court proceedings constitutes new trial in fullest sense and parties are permitted to introduce any relevant evidence not presented at administrative hearing; review as accorded to facts presented to superior court and not to commissioner's decision. Hernandez v. Mendoza (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 721, 725, 245 Cal. Rptr. 36

Notice of appeal from Labor Commissioner's decision that was filed by nonattorney president of corporation was valid; although notice constitutes initial trial "pleading," such notice does not having any other similarity to civil complaint so as to require that it be signed by attorney on corporation's behalf. Rogers v. Municipal Court (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 1314, 1318-1319, 243 Cal. Rptr. 530

Defendant who did not participate in proceedings before Labor Commissioner was permitted to prosecute appeal to appropriate court within 10 days after service of notice of order, decision, or award. Jones v. Basich (1986) 176 Cal. App. 3d 513, 518-519, 222 Cal. Rptr. 26

Employer who sought review of adverse order by Labor Commissioner was properly required to pay employee's attorney's fees and costs pursuant to Lab. Code § 98.2(b) [now see Lab. Code § 98.2(c)], even though trial court reduced commissioner's award to employee. Triad Data Services, Inc. v. Jackson (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d Supp 1, 13-15 , 200 Cal. Rptr. 418

On superior court's review of order, decision, or award of Labor Commissioner pursuant to Lab. Code § 98.2, findings of Labor Commissioner are entitled to no weight whatsoever and proceedings as trial anew in fullest sense; review as accorded not to decision of Labor Commissioner, but to underlying facts on which merits of dispute depend. Hill v. Kaiser Aetna (1982) 130 Cal. App. 3d 188, 190 n. 1, 181 Cal. Rptr. 564

Appeal as new trial in which findings of Labor Commissioner are entitled to no weight. Sales Dimensions v. Superior Court (1979) 90 Cal. App. 3d 757, 762-763, 153 Cal. Rptr. 690

[3] Assignments of Wages

Meaning of terms "assignment" and "order" in Lab. Code § 300. Lande v. Jurisich (1943) 59 Cal. App. 2d 613, 619, 139 P.2d 657

Assignee of valid assignment has same enforcement rights and is subject to same defenses as employee assigning wages. Teater v. Good Hope Dev. Corp. (1942) 55 Cal. App. 2d 459, 462, 130 P.2d 812

"Wages" and "salary" as used in Lab. Code § 300 mean compensation for services rendered, whether limited to fixed sum or payable in "fees." Reynolds v. Reynolds (1936) 14 Cal. App. 2d 481, 484, 58 P.2d 660 (construing former Civ. Code § 955, now see Lab. Code § 300)

Elements of valid assignment mentioned in Lab. Code § 300 must be alleged. Berg v. Standard Light Co. of Cal. (1928) 89 Cal. App 542, 544, 265 P. 369 (decided under former Civ. Code § 955, now see Lab. Code § 300)

Claim for penalties by assignee are limited to portion of penalty that accrued prior to assignment. Martin v. Going (1922) 57 Cal. App. 631, 636, 207 P. 935

Public official was not permitted, by policy, to assign wages or salary until time entitled to collect or until wages or salary completely earned. Trow v. Moody (1915) 27 Cal. App. 403, 405-406, 150 P. 77

Assignment of wages to be earned in future, if there is no existing contract of employment, is invalid because assignor has no present interest. Cox v. Hughes (1909) 10 Cal. App. 553, 557-558, 102 P. 956

[4] Criminal Sanctions

Court recognized purposeful failure to pay wages owed when there is no claim of inability to pay as fraud constituting exception to constitutional prohibition against imprisonment for debt. In re Trombley (1948) 31 Cal. 2d 801, 805-806, 193 P.2d 734

Rejecting constitutional challenges to imposition of criminal sanctions for failure to pay wages based on prohibition against imprisonment for debt. People v. Bishopp (1976) 56 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 8, 12-13 , 128 Cal. Rptr. 923

Employer's payment of wages by check with insufficient funds was sufficient to demonstrate willfulness for purposes of coming within exception to constitutional prohibition against imprisonment for debt. People v. Hampton (1965) 236 Cal. App. 2d 795, 804-805, 46 Cal. Rptr. 338

[5] Definitions

Under FLSA, as amended by Portal-to-Portal Act, 29 U.S.C. § 201 et seq., employee is entitled to compensation for time spent walking to production area after donning required protective gear and for time spent walking to changing area to doff protective gear; "principal activities" that delineate compensable workday include activities that are integral and indispensable to employee's work, such as donning and doffing required protective gear. IBP, Inc. v. Alvarez (2005) 546 U.S. 21, 126 S. Ct. 514, 523-525, 163 L. Ed. 2d 288, 299-302

California definition of compensable "hours worked" under 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11160(2)(J) includes time spent by employees in employer-mandated travel. Burnside v. Kiewit Pac. Corp. (9th Cir. 2007) 491 F.3d 1053, 1062

California definition of compensable "hours worked" under 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11140(2)(G) includes time employees are required to spend traveling on employer's bus; because of substantial differences between California and federal definitions of "hours worked," FLSA, as amended by Portal-to-Portal Act, 29 U.S.C. § 251 et seq., does not provide persuasive guidance on this issue. Morillion v. Royal Packing Co. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 575, 582-594, 94 Cal. Rptr. 2d 3, 995 P.2d 139

California definition of "outside salespersons" who are exempt from overtime pay differs from definition of that term under federal law; California definition depends on how much time employee spends on outside selling, whereas federal definition depends on employee's primary job function. Ramirez v. Yosemite Water Co., Inc. (1999) 20 Cal. 4th 785, 796-798, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 844, 978 P.2d 2

Employer's policy of deducting from salaried employee's vacation-leave bank whenever employee takes four hours off work on any workday does not remove employee from exempt classification; leave policy does no more than regulate timing of exempt employee's use of vacation time. Conley v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 260, 269-270, 31 Cal. Rptr. 3d 719

If statute contains no definition of "employee" court should rely on common law usage. People v. Palma (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1559, 1565, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 334

Definitions of "employer" and "employee" for purposes of state wage and hour law. Grubb & Ellis Co. v. Spengler (1983) 143 Cal. App. 3d 890, 895-897, 192 Cal. Rptr. 637

"Wages" include not only periodic monetary earnings of employee but also other benefits to which he or she is entitled as part of compensation. Ware v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc. (1972) 24 Cal. App. 3d 35, 44, 100 Cal. Rptr. 791 , aff'd sub nom., Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc. v. Ware 414 U.S. 117 (1973) 140, 94 S. Ct. 383, 38 L. Ed. 2d 348

[6] Discrimination

Employer who unlawfully discriminates against claimant or witness in proceeding under FLSA may be liable for legal or equitable relief as appropriate under circumstances, including employment, reinstatement, promotion, back pay, and additional equal amount as liquidated damages. Mitchell v. De Mario Jewelry (1960) 361 U.S. 288, 295-296, 80 S. Ct. 332, 4 L. Ed. 2d 323

Recovery of back wages under Lab. Code § 1197.5 was limited to two years preceding filing of complaint for wage discrimination by statute of limitations. Jones v. Tracy School Dist. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 99, 107-109, 111, 165 Cal. Rptr. 100, 611 P.2d 441 (trial court erred in limiting recovery without regard to possible equitable tolling of statute of limitations by filing wage discrimination claim in earlier federal administrative proceeding)

[7] Employment Contracts

Fact that wages, hours, and other conditions of labor may constitute objects of collective bargaining does not preclude state from adopting minimum standards to protect welfare of workers who may not enjoy sufficient bargaining strength to obtain adequate protection from their employers at bargaining table. Industrial Welfare Com. v. Superior Court (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 690, 727-728, 166 Cal. Rptr. 331, 613 P.2d 579 , appeal dismissed and cert. denied sub nom. California Manufacturers Association v. Industrial Welfare Commission, 449 U.S. 1029

Although considered nonforfeitable "wages" within meaning of Lab. Code § 200, bonus is not earned or payable unless employee has completed required service as specified under the terms of applicable employment contract. Neisendorf v. Levi Strauss & Co. (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 509, 522-524, 49 Cal. Rptr. 3d 216

Right of employee who has been paid less than required minimum wage or overtime compensation to institute civil action to recover any sums that are due is not waivable by employee's agreement to work at rate less than minimum wage or without overtime compensation, or by acquiescence in payment of less than statutorily required amounts. Bartholomew v. Heyman Properties (1955) 132 Cal. App. 2d Supp. 889, 893-895 , 281 P.2d 921

Existence of collectively bargained agreement to arbitrate affects employee's right to maintain civil action to recover due and unpaid wages. Griggs v. Transocean Air Lines (1960) 176 Cal. App. 2d 843, 847, 1 Cal. Rptr. 803

Despite request for "accounting" in complaint, action for breach of oral employment contract was barred by 2-year statute of limitations. Tostevin v. Douglas (1958) 160 Cal. App. 2d 321, 328-329, 325 P.2d 130

[8] Federal Actions

Employee's state-court suit to recover wages and related items under FLSA may be removed to federal court. Breuer v. Jim's Concrete of Brevard, Inc. (2003) 538 U.S. 691, 123 S. Ct. 1882, 1884-1887, 155 L. Ed. 2d 923, 929-932

Sovereign immunity bars individual suit against state to enforce federal statutory right under FLSA, when suit brought in state court over state's objections. Alden v. Maine (1999) 527 U.S. 706, 745, 753-760, 119 S. Ct. 2240, 144 L. Ed. 2d. 636 (state employees could not sue state of Maine for overtime wages due under FLSA, absent state's waiver of sovereign immunity)

FLSA requires employment relationship to be applicable. Tony & Susan Alamo v. Sec. of Labor (1985) 471 U.S. 290, 295, 105 S. Ct. 1953, 85 L. Ed. 2d 278

Nonwaivable FLSA right to minimum wage and overtime pay. Barrentine v. Arkansas-Best Freight System (1981) 450 U.S. 728, 740, 101 S. Ct. 1437, 67 L. Ed. 2d 641

FLSA requirements take precedence over provisions of conflicting collective bargaining agreements. Martino v. Michigan Window Cleaning Co. (1946) 327 U.S. 173, 177-178, 66 S. Ct. 379, 90 L. Ed. 603

Nonwaivability of statutory liquidated damages for nonpayment of minimum wage under FLSA. Brooklyn Savings Bank v. O'Neil (1945) 324 U.S. 697, 706-707, 65 S. Ct. 895, 89 L. Ed. 1296

FLSA covers individuals who perform piece work. United States v. Rosenwasser (1945) 323 U.S. 360, 362-363, 65 S. Ct. 295, 89 L. Ed. 301

FLSA exemption for executive, professional, and administrative employees is inapplicable to group of employees paid on salary basis because employer has established practice of subjecting employees to partial-week disciplinary deductions from pay (i.e., suspensions). Block v. City of Los Angeles (9th Cir. 2001) 253 F.3d 410, 415-416

Salaried administrative employee qualifies for FLSA exemption if employee's salary is not subject to reduction for partial-day absences, even though employer has policy of reducing employee's paid leave allowance for such absences, and even though employee's unused leave allowance is convertible to cash. Webster v. Public Sch. Employees of Wash, Inc. (9th Cir. 2001) 247 F.3d 910, 917

Anti-retaliation provision of FLSA (29 U.S.C. § 513(a)(3)) protects employee who complains to employer about FLSA violations, even in absence of formal FLSA proceeding. Lambert v. Ackerley (1999) 180 F.3d 997, 1002-1004 (en banc)

Employee does not fall within FLSA exemption for executive and administrative employees who are paid on salary basis if there is significant likelihood that employee's pay would be reduced for disciplinary reasons or because of variations in quality or quantity of work performed. McGuire v. City of Portland (9th Cir. 1998) 159 F.3d 460, 462-464

Judgment for employer proper on FLSA retaliation claim in light of employee's lack of cooperation and disobedience. Knickerbocker v. City of Stockton (9th Cir. 1996) 81 F.3d 907, 911-912

Participant in Salvation Army rehabilitation program was not an employee for purposes of FLSA minimum wage law. Williams v. Strickland (9th Cir. 1996) 87 F.3d 1064, 1067

Prisoner working for prison-run program, and who was statutorily required to work as term of confinement, not employee for purposes of FLSA. Morgan v. MacDonald (9th Cir. 1994) 41 F.3d 1291, 1292-1293

FLSA exemption for executives inapplicable if employer's general policy is to deduct from wages for absences of less than one day even if no deduction is actually made. Abshire v. County of Kern (9th Cir. 1990) 908 F.2d 483, 486-489 , cert. denied, 498 U.S. 1068 (1991)

Regulations under FLSA defining salaries for executive exemption applicable to public employees because Cal. Const., art. XVI, § 6, which prohibits gifts of public funds to individuals, does not mandate reductions in state employees' pay for absences from work. Abshire v. County of Kern (9th Cir. 1990) 908 F.2d 483, 486-489 , cert. denied, 498 U.S. 1068 (1991)

In action to recover unpaid minimum wages and overtime under FLSA, if employer has failed to maintain accurate payroll records, employee has satisfied burden of proof if employee shows that he or she performed work for which he or she was improperly compensated and produces some evidence to show the amount and extent of the work; court may then award damages to employee, even if the result only approximates actual amount due under FLSA. McLauglin v. Ho Fat Seto (9th Cir. 1988) 850 F.2d 586, 589, cert. denied, 488 U.S. 1040, 109 S. Ct. 864, 102 L. Ed. 2d 988 (1989)

Breach of contract and other state-law claims related to most employee benefit agreements are preempted by ERISA remedies. Scott v. Gulf Oil Corp. (9th Cir. 1985) 754 F.2d 1499, 1503-1506

Independent contractors are not "employees" within meaning of FLSA. Real v. Driscoll Strawberry Associates, Inc. (9th Cir. 1979) 603 F.2d 748, 754

Plaintiff-employees are entitled to recover attorney's fees and costs if successful. Kerr v. Screen Extras Guild, Inc. (9th Cir. 1975) 526 F.2d 67, 69-70 , cert. denied sub nom. Perkins v. Screen Extras Guild, Inc., 425 U.S. 951 (1976)

Employer in action under 29 U.S.C. § 216(b) is liable to plaintiff-employees for any unpaid minimum wages and/or overtime compensation found to be due under terms of FLSA, as well as award of liquidated damages equal to amount of minimum wages or overtime compensation found to be due, unless employer can show that act or omission was in good faith and that employer had reasonable grounds for believing that there was no violationof FLSA. Craig v. Far West Engineering Company (9th Cir. 1959) 265 F.2d 251, 261, cert. denied 361 U.S. 816, 80 S. Ct. 57, 4 L. Ed. 2d 63

FLSA provides remedial scheme for failure to pay federally required minimum wages and overtime compensation. Lerwill v. Inflight Motion Pictures, Inc. (N.D. Cal. 1972) 343 F. Supp. 1027, 1029

[9] Interest

Award of prejudgment interest is proper in action under FLSA on ground that compensation should be provided for loss of use of money that was owed. Ford v. Alfaro (9th Cir. 1986) 785 F.2d 835, 842

Prejudgment interest awarded from date of termination is an amount due and payable as of date capable of being made certain by calculation. Marc Bellaire, Inc. v. Fleischman (1960) 185 Cal. App. 2d 591, 598, 8 Cal. Rptr. 650

In absence of express contract covering matter, law awards interest on money from time it becomes due and payable if such time is certain or can be made certain by calculation. Budget Financial Plan v. Sav-On Food Club (1955) 44 Cal. 2d 565, 572 n.6, 283 P.2d 694 (citing Civ. Code §§ 3287, 3302)

[10] Labor Commissioner's Powers

Labor commissioner's declining to enforce state wage claims of employees covered by collective bargaining agreement penalizes employee's right to bargain collectively under National Labor Relations Act; union employee was entitled to have commissioner decide whether employer owed penalty under Lab. Code § 203 for failure to pay wages due at discharge because dispute did not require interpretation or application of collective bargaining agreement. Livadas v. Bradshaw (1994), 512 U.S. 107, 124, 132-134, 114 S. Ct. 2068, 129 L. Ed. 2d 93

Judicial enforcement of administrative subpoenas issued by Labor Commissioner under Lab. Code § 74 that order employers to produce wage and hour records required to be maintained under Lab. Code § 1174 does not violate either Fourth Amendment proscription against unreasonable searches and seizures or Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination. Craib v. Bulmash (1989) 49 Cal. 3d 475, 485-486, 489-490, 261 Cal. Rptr. 686, 777 P.2d 1120

Interpretations by Labor Commissioner of minimum wage and overtime rules, which serve as guidelines for employers, are generally upheld by courts and entitled to great weight. Keyes Motors, Inc. v. Division of Labor Standards Enforcement (1987) 197 Cal. App. 3d 557, 564, 242 Cal. Rptr. 873

Lab. Code § 93, providing for strict criminal liability in event subpoenaed party refuses to surrender his or her rights against unreasonable searches and seizures without prior judicial validation of subpoena, is unconstitutional under Fourth Amendment. California Restaurant Assn. v. Henning (1985) 173 Cal. App. 3d 1069, 1074, 1077, 219 Cal. Rptr. 630

Entry into nonpublic areas of employer's premises by Labor Commissioner, whether for inspection of records or other inspections, requires voluntary consent of authorized person. People v. Los Angeles Palm, Inc. (1981) 121 Cal. App. 3d 25, 29, 175 Cal. Rptr. 257

Withholding of consent or refusal of permission to inspect on Labor Commissioner's request requires administrative search warrant before actual inspection of premises may be conducted. People v. Los Angeles Palm, Inc. (1981) 121 Cal. App. 3d 25, 28-29, 175 Cal. Rptr. 257

Labor Commissioner does not have jurisdiction over wage disputes involving interpretation or application of collective bargaining agreements that provide for arbitration. Plumbing, Heating etc. Council v. Howard (1975) 53 Cal. App. 3d 828, 834-835, 126 Cal. Rptr. 406

[11] Minimum Wage

Any incidental infringement on First Amendment freedoms of low income advocacy group, by requiring workers to be paid minimum wage, was justified by compelling state interest Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now v. Department of Industrial Relations (1995) 41 Cal. App. 4th 298, 301-302, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 486

Deduction of meal credits from minimum wage pursuant to collective bargaining agreement did not violate Lab. Code § 450. Porter v. Quillin (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 869, 876, 177 Cal. Rptr. 45

Employer's practice of applying credit for value of meals furnished against minimum wage without employee's consent violated Lab. Code § 450, which prohibits employer from compelling employee to patronize employer in purchase of anything of value. California State Restaurant Assn. v. Whitlow (1976) 58 Cal. App. 3d 340, 346-347, 129 Cal. Rptr. 824

[12] Overtime Compensation

Overtime provisions of California law apply to work performed in California by residents of Colorado and Arizona, and that application of California law does not violate United States Constitution. Sullivan v. Oracle Corp. (9th Cir. 2008) 547 F.3d 1177, 1181-1186

Pursuant to 29 C.F.R. § 541.203, insurance claims adjusters, regardless of type or size of claims they handle, are exempt from overtime requirements of Fair Labor Standards Act. Corralez v. Farmers Ins. Exch. (In re Farmers Ins. Exch.) (9th Cir. 2006) 466 F.3d 853, 858-864

California definition of "outside salespersons" who are exempt from overtime pay differs from definition of that term under federal law; California definition depends on how much time employee spends on outside selling, whereas federal definition depends on employee's primary job function. Ramirez v. Yosemite Water Co., Inc. (1999) 20 Cal. 4th 785, 796-798, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 844, 978 P.2d 2

Public policy in favor of employer's duty to pay overtime wages protects employee from termination for making good-faith but mistaken claim to overtime pay. Barbosa v. IMPCO Techs. (2009) 179 Cal. App. 4th 1116, 1121-1123, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 923

For healthcare workers on three-day, 12-hour alternative workweek schedule, Wage Order No. 5-2001 [8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11050] provides that overtime pay begins only after 40 hours. Singh v. Superior Court (2006) 140 Cal. App. 4th 387, 397-400, 44 Cal. Rptr. 3d 348

"24-hour agreement" between emergency medical employees and employer was valid under Wage Order No. 9-80, which allows employers to avoid paying daily overtime if employer and employees agree to 24-hour shifts that exclude three 1-hour meal periods and an 8-hour sleep period from hours worked, even if employer voluntarily elects to pay employees regular rate of pay for such sleep and meal periods. Auchmoody v. 911 Emergency Services (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 1510, 1519, 263 Cal. Rptr. 278

Fixed salary for irregular workweek does not compensate employee for overtime work unless parties have entered into explicit, mutual wage agreement. Ghory v. Al-Lahham (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 1487, 1491-1492, 257 Cal. Rptr. 924

[13] Tips

Lab. Code § 351 does not prohibit shift supervisor from keeping gratuities undisputedly given to him or her for his or her customer services, and employer may allow shift supervisor to retain his or her portion of a collective tip that was intended for entire team of service employees. Chau v. Starbucks Corp. (2009) 174 Cal. App. 4th 688, 696-706, 94 Cal. Rptr. 3d 593

Under Lab. Code § 351, tip pool mandated by employer may include all employees who participate in chain of service, not just those who render direct table service. Etheridge v. Reins Int'l Cal., Inc. (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 908, 914-924, 91 Cal. Rptr. 3d 816

Neither Lab. Code § 351 nor precedent mandates that tip pools be restricted to those employees who provide customers with "direct" table service; thus, employer may require that bartenders participate in tip pool. Budrow v. Dave & Buster's of California, Inc. (2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 875, 878-884, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 239

Floor managers who have authority to hire or discharge, or to supervise, direct, or control other employees' acts are agents of employer under Lab. Code § 350(d); therefore, such floor managers are prohibited by Lab. Code § 351 from sharing in tip pooling among employees. Jameson v. Five Feet Rest., Inc. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 138, 143-145, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 771

Lab. Code § 351, which makes gratuity sole property of employee or employees for whom it was left, does not prohibit employer-mandated pooling of tips among employees who directly provided service to tipping patron. Leighton v. Old Heidelberg, Ltd. (1990) 219 Cal. App. 3d 1062, 1068, 1071, 268 Cal. Rptr. 647

[14] Wage Deductions

Deducting employer's expenses from its gross receipts to calculate net profits for purposes of supplemental profit-sharing program does not run afoul of statutory and regulatory prohibitions against deducting or recapturing unauthorized amounts from wages [see Lab. Code §§ 221-224, 400-410, 3751(a); 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11070(8)], so long as employees' regular wages are not subject to any unauthorized deductions for employer's operating expenses. Prachasaisoradej v. Ralphs Grocery Co. (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 217, 237, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 407, 165 P.3d 133

Employer generally not allowed to make any deduction from employee's wage, or require any reimbursement from employee, because of cash shortage, breakage, or loss of equipment that results from simple negligence. Kerr's Catering Service v. Department of Industrial Relations (1962) 57 Cal. 2d 319, 329, 19 Cal. Rptr. 492, 369 P.2d 20 , cert. denied, 371 U.S. 818

[15] Wages Due on Termination of Employment

[a] In General

Employee incentive compensation plan under which employee can elect to receive, in lieu of portion of compensation, shares of company stock with restricted rights during two-year vesting period, with forfeiture of restricted stock on employee's resignation or termination for cause before stock fully vests, does not violate Lab. Code §§ 201 and 202, which require payment of earned, unpaid wages on termination or resignation. Schachter v. Citigroup, Inc. (2009) 47 Cal. 4th 610, 618-623, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 2, 218 P.3d 262

For purposes of statutes requiring prompt payment of wages on discharge [Lab. Code §§ 201, 203], "discharge" occurs not only when employee is involuntarily terminated from ongoing employment relationship, but also when employee is released after completing particular job assignment or time duration for which he or she was hired. Smith v. Superior Court (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 77, 45 Cal. Rptr. 3d 394, 137 P.3d 218, 2006 Cal. LEXIS 8354

Employee who has worked for part of year was entitled to pro rata share of vacation pay on termination, even though company policy states that employee is not eligible for vacation pay until anniversary date of his or her employment. Suastez v. Plastic Dress-Up Co. (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 774, 784, 183 Cal. Rptr. 846, 647 P.2d 122

There is no limit on years of vested, unused vacation time that terminated employee may claim under Lab. Code § 227.3, under which "all vested vacation shall be paid to [terminated employee] as wages"; statute of limitations only limits time in which employee may file suit after termination of employment. Church v. Jamison (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 1568, 1577-1583, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 166

Statute of limitations on right to sue for payment of unused vacation begins to run as vacation is earned or at point when employee becomes eligible to take the vacation; employee could claim payment only for unused vacation accrued under written contract during four-year period preceding termination, even though employee had 12 years of accrued vacation. Sequeira v. Rincon-Vitova Insectaries, Inc. (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 632, 636, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 264

Employer is not entitled to recoup employee's debt by deducting full amount owed from employee's wages on his or her final paycheck. Barnhill v. Robert Saunders & Co. (1981) 125 Cal. App. 3d 1, 4-6, 177 Cal. Rptr. 803

Lab. Code §§ 200-204 expresses strong public policy for prompt payment of wages on discharge despite industry habit, custom, or agreement to contrary. Zaremba v. Miller (1980) 113 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 1, 6 , 169 Cal. Rptr. 688

[b] Payment of Wages After Labor Commissioner Determination

Lab. Code § 206(b), authorizing award of treble damages against employer who willfully fails to pay employee wages within 10 days after determination by Labor Commissioner of validity of employee's claim for wages, is inapplicable when employer has filed for trial de novo under Lab. Code § 98.2(a) within 10 days of order of Labor Commissioner. Triad Data Services, Inc. v. Jackson (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 1, 7-8 , 200 Cal. Rptr. 418

[c] Penalty Wages

Waiting time penalty is computed by calculating employee's daily wage rate, which is then multiplied by number of days of nonpayment, including nonworkdays as well as workdays; thus, although penalty is limited to 30 days, it can exceed one month's wages. Mamika v. Barca (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 487, 491-494, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 175

Employee is entitled to penalty wages under Lab. Code § 203 for willful failure of employer to pay overtime wages after termination of employee. Ghory v. Al-Lahham (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 1487, 1492-1493, 257 Cal. Rptr. 924

Employee entitled to have wages continue as penalty award for "waiting time" under Lab. Code § 203 until action is commenced in competent court; penalty award is not terminated by commencement of proceedings in administrative agency. Triad Data Services, Inc. v. Jackson (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 1, 13 , 200 Cal. Rptr. 418

Phrase "without reduction or abatement" in Lab. Code § 203 means without discount on account of payment of wages before time when wages payable according to terms of employment contract. Sayre v. Western Bowl (1946) 76 Cal. App. 2d 793, 797-798, 174 P.2d 466 , overruled on other grounds, Reid v. Overland Machined Products, 55 Cal. 2d 203

§ 250.60 Appeal of Order, Decision, or Award of Labor Commissioner [Lab. Code § 98.2]--DLSE Form 537

[2] Use of Form

The form of notice of appeal in [1], above, is for use in seeking review of the Labor Commissioner's order, decision, or award. The appeal is filed with the superior court, in accordance with the appropriate rules of jurisdiction, within 10 days of service of notice of the Labor Commissioner's order, decision, or award. The court will hear the case de novo [Lab. Code § 98.2(a)]. If the party seeking review is unsuccessful in the appeal, the court will determine the costs and reasonable attorney's fees incurred by the other parties to the appeal, and assess this amount as a cost on the party filing the appeal [Lab. Code § 98.2(c) (employee is "successful" if court awards amount greater than zero); Lolley v. Campbell (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 367, 378, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 571, 48 P.3d 1128 (superior court may assess attorney's fees against employer who unsuccessfully appeals administrative order to pay wages, even if employee could not afford counsel and was represented without charge by Labor Commissioner)].

CAUTION:
Check Local Practice. Because no statute or provision of the California Rules of Court specifies the contents of a notice of "appeal" under Lab. Code § 98.2(a), procedures may vary from court to court. Some courts may not accept this form. Counsel should check local court rules and contact the clerk of the court to determine the nature and contents of the document necessary to initiate a de novo proceeding under Lab. Code § 98.2(a) in that particular court.

For discussion of procedures relating to appeals under Lab. Code § 98.2, see § 250.32[4]. For discussion of Labor Commissioner's order, decision, or award under Lab. Code § 98.1, see § 250.32[2].

[3] Contents

The Labor Code, Code of Civil Procedure, and California Rules of Court provide no guidance regarding the nature of the pleading, notice, or other document necessary to initiate an "appeal" under Lab. Code § 98.2(a). In practice, the procedures vary from court to court. Some courts may require filing of a formal civil complaint, others may accept a copy of the complaint before the Labor Commissioner, while others may require a "notice of appeal" accompanied by a copy of the Labor Commissioner's decision (and possibly a brief). Counsel is therefore well-advised to check the local court rules and contact the clerk of the court to determine the nature of the document necessary to initiate a de novo proceeding under Lab. Code § 98.2(a) in that particular court.

The Labor Commissioner has promulgated a form of Notice of Appeal (DLSE 537), set forth above, suggested for use in appealing a decision of the Labor Commissioner under Lab. Code § 98.2(a). The form is modeled after the notice of appeal used in conventional civil appeals [cf. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.100(a), 8.821(a) (governing notices of appeal in civil actions)]. The form requests the clerk of the court to give notice of the date, time, and place of the de novo hearing before the court. A copy of the Labor Commissioner's order, decision, or award should be attached to the notice of appeal, if used.

Counsel should check with the particular court in which the appeal is to be filed before using this form, however, because the rules of that court will govern the format of the papers to be filed [cf. Sales Dimensions v. Superior Court (1979) 90 Cal. App. 3d 757, 761-763, 153 Cal. Rptr. 690] , and some courts may not accept the DLSE form or may require additional supporting papers.

One court of appeal has held that a notice of appeal in a de novo proceeding under Lab. Code § 98.2(a) is not considered to be an initial pleading. Thus, the court held that the notice may be signed by an officer of a corporate party and need not be signed by an attorney [see Rogers v. Municipal Court (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 1314, 1318-1319, 243 Cal. Rptr. 530] . Note, however, that a subsequently enacted statute provides that if the appealing party is represented by an attorney, the attorney of record may be required to sign the notice of appeal [see Code Civ. Proc. § 128.7(a) (attorney of record required to sign pleading, petition, written notice of motion, or other similar paper)].

[4] Service

A copy of the appeal request must be served on the Labor Commissioner by the appellant [Lab. Code § 98.2(a)].

[1] FORM Complaint for Damages and Penalties [Lab. Code § 203] Based on Breach of Statutory Obligation--By Former Employee Against Employer--Failure to Pay Wages [Lab. Code §§ 201, 202, 218, 218.5, 218.6]

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

_____ [name],	)
Plaintiff,	)	NO. _____
vs.	)	COMPLAINT FOR DAMAGES AND PENALTIES
_____ [name],	)	(Recovery of Unpaid Wages)
Defendant(s).	)	[Amount demanded _____
	)	(exceeds or does not exceed) $10,000]

Plaintiff alleges:

FIRST CAUSE OF ACTION
(Nonpayment of Wages)

1. _____ [Allege capacity and residence of defendant, if a venue allegation is desired, e.g., Defendant is, and at all times relevant herein was, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of _____, which maintains its headquarters and principal place of business in the City of _____, County of _____, California].

2. Beginning on or about _____[date] and continuing until _____[date], plaintiff was employed by defendant as a _____ [state job title or describe the nature of the work, e.g., keypunch operator] at defendant's facility located in _____[city], California, in the County of _____.

3. Plaintiff's employment was pursuant to _____ [a written or an oral] employment agreement. The terms of that agreement were _____ [state pertinent terms of the agreement, including wage rate and any changes in that rate, contractual right to any benefits claimed, and term, or refer to and incorporate written agreement, e.g., as stated in the agreement entered into on _____ (date). A true and correct copy of that agreement is attached to this complaint as Exhibit _____ and is incorporated herein by reference].

4. Effective _____ [date], _____ [plaintiff resigned from or defendant terminated] that employment. [If a resignation add: Plaintiff gave notice of his/her intent to resign on or about _____ (date)].

5. On _____ [date], at the time that _____ [plaintiff resigned or defendant terminated plaintiff's employment], plaintiff had last been paid accrued wages on _____ [date] and was owed wages for _____ [number] _____[hours or days or weeks] in the amount of $_____ based on a wage rate of $_____ per _____ [specify, e.g., hour], as provided for in the employment agreement referred to in Paragraph 3.

[6. In addition, as of _____ (date), plaintiff had accrued _____ days of paid time off pursuant to the policies of defendant at the rate of $_____ per day, of which plaintiff had not taken _____days, and was therefore owed the amount of $_____ for accrued paid time off.]

7. At the time of termination, defendant _____[failed to pay plaintiff any of the amounts due, as set forth in Paragraph(s) 5 (and 6) or paid plaintiff only the sum of $_____]. Defendant's failure to pay the full amount due plaintiff on termination violates the provisions of Labor Code Section _____ [specify applicable statute, e.g., 201]. There is now due and owing to plaintiff the sum of $_____. Defendant has failed and refused, and continues to fail and refuse, to pay the amount due.

8. Pursuant to Labor Code Section 218.5, plaintiff requests that the court award plaintiff reasonable attorney's fees and costs incurred by him/her in this action.

9. Pursuant to [Labor Code Section 218.6], plaintiff requests that the court award plaintiff interest on all due and unpaid wages, at the legal rate specified by Civil Code Section 3289(b), accruing from the date the wages were due and payable.

WHEREFORE plaintiff prays judgment as set forth below.

SECOND CAUSE OF ACTION
(Waiting Time Penalties Under Labor Code Section 203)

10. Plaintiff hereby incorporates by reference and realleges all of the allegations contained in paragraphs 1 through 9, above.

11. The defendant's failure to pay wages, as alleged in Paragraph 7, was willful in that _____ [specify], thus entitling plaintiff to penalties under Labor Code Section 203, which provides that an employee's wages shall continue as a penalty until paid or for a period of up to 30 days from the time they were due, whichever period is shorter.

12. Defendant failed to pay plaintiff the sum of $_____ at the time of termination and has failed to pay those sums for _____ [days] thereafter. Pursuant to the provisions of Labor Code Section 203, plaintiff is entitled to a penalty in the amount of $_____, which is his/her daily rate multiplied by _____ [number] days.

WHEREFORE plaintiff prays judgment against defendant as follows:

1. For compensatory damages in the amount of $_____, representing wages and other compensation owed to plaintiff on _____ [date];

2. For interest on the amount of $_____ from _____ [date that compensation was due];

3. For penalties in the amount of $_____pursuant to Labor Code Section 203;

4. For reasonable attorney's fees pursuant to Labor Code Section 218.5;

5. For costs of suit incurred herein; and

6. For such other and further relief as the court may deem appropriate.

VERIFICATION
[Code Civ. Proc. §§ 446, 2015.5]

I, _____ [name], am the plaintiff in the above-entitled action. I have read the foregoing complaint and know the contents thereof. The same is true of my own knowledge, except as to those matters which are therein alleged on information and belief, and as to those matters, I believe it to be true.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California that the foregoing is true and correct.

[2] Use of Form

The form of complaint in [1], above, may be used by a former employee seeking recovery of wages and penalties [see

Lab. Code § 218.5; see also Lab. Code §§ 201 (discharged employee), 202 (employee who quit), 203 (penalties for willful failure to pay wages due on termination of employment)]. Causes of action for breach of contract, an accounting, or declaratory relief may also be included when appropriate.

For discussion of civil actions to recover wages and/or penalties, see § 250.34.

[3] Allegations

[a] In General

The complaint sets forth the following allegations:

- The existence of an employment relationship, including the dates of employment, position(s) held, and the relevant terms of any employment agreement (Paragraphs 2 through 4) [see § 250.13 for discussion of the requirement of an employment relationship];

- The amount of wages (and, if appropriate, unused vested vacation pay [see Lab. Code § 227.3; Suastez v. Plastic Dress-Up Co. (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 774, 781, 784, 183 Cal. Rptr. 846, 647 P.2d 122] due at discharge, or to date, or facts from which that amount can be readily ascertained (Paragraphs 5 and 6);

- The fact of nonpayment of wages when due (Paragraph 7) [see Lab. Code §§ 201, 201.5, 201.7, 202 (time for payment of wages on termination of employment); see also § 250.16[2][a]];

- The employee's entitlement to prejudgment interest (Paragraph 9) [see Labor Code Section 218.6]; and

- If appropriate, facts showing plaintiff's entitlement to waiting time penalties under Lab. Code § 203 (Paragraph 12) [see § 250.16[2][d], for discussion of penalties, generally].

The complaint is brought against the employing entity; it is improper to name a supervisor or agent who is not a party to the agreement [see Oppenheimer v. Robinson (1957) 150 Cal. App. 2d 420, 424, 309 P.2d 887] .

If attorney's fees are sought under Lab. Code § 218.5, a request for fees must be included in the complaint (Paragraph 8) [see Lab. Code § 218.5].

For discussion of civil actions to recover wages and/or penalties, see § 250.34.

[b] When Penalty Wages Claimed

Penalty wages are calculated on the basis of the employee's rate of pay and this fact must, therefore, be alleged to support a claim for penalty wages [see Oppenheimer v. Moebius (1957) 151 Cal. App. 2d 818, 820, 312 P.2d 314] . An allegation of the terms of an oral contract, or the incorporation by reference of a copy of a written contract attached as an exhibit, should be sufficient; but if neither of these methods reveals the plaintiff's rate of pay, it should be specially alleged.

The allegations and prayer pertaining to the waiting time penalty should compute the penalty by multiplying the plaintiff's daily wage rate by the number of days of nonpayment, up to 30 days, including not only days that the employee might have worked, but also nonworkdays. Although this method of calculating the penalty can result in a penalty greater than one month's wages, it furthers public policy by providing a strong disincentive to employers who are reluctant to make timely payment of wages due on termination of employment [Mamika v. Barca (1998) 68 Cal.

App. 4th 487, 491-494, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 175 (although limited to 30 days, penalty can exceed one month's wages; targeted wrong is delay in payment, which continues on nonworkdays as well as workdays so long as payment is not made)].

There appears to be no decision on what constitutes a sufficient allegation of a willful failure to pay earned wages. The willfulness in question amounts to nothing more than that the employer intentionally did not pay the wages [see Davis v. Morris (1940) 37 Cal. App. 2d 269, 274, 99 P.2d 345] . An allegation of intent, although unquestionably a conclusion, appears to be permissible as an allegation of fact [see, e.g., Rosin v. Superior Court (1960) 181 Cal. App. 2d 486, 490, 5 Cal. Rptr. 421] .

For discussion of penalty wages, see § 250.16[2][d].

[4] Verification

Although verification of this complaint is not required [see Code Civ. Proc. § 128.7(a)], verification will require any answer to be verified in an unlimited civil case [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 92(b), 446]. Verification will also preclude the defendant from using a general denial in an unlimited civil case, and will preclude a general denial in a limited civil case if the action is a claim assigned to a third party for collection [Code Civ. Proc. § 431.30(d)]. For further discussion see Ch. 26, Answers .

§ 250.62 Complaint for Damages and Penalties Based on Breach of Statutory Obligation--By Employee Against Employer--Failure to Pay Minimum Wages and/or Overtime Compensation [Lab. Code §§ 1194, 1197, 1198]

[1] FORM Complaint for Damages and Penalties Based on Breach of Statutory Obligation--By Employee Against Employer--Failure to Pay Minimum Wages and/or Overtime Compensation [Lab. Code §§ 1194, 1197, 1198]

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

_____ [name],	)
Plaintiff,	)	NO. _____
vs.	)	COMPLAINT FOR DAMAGES (Failure to Pay
_____ [name],	)	_____ [Minimum Wages and/or Defendant(s).	)	Overtime Compensation])
	)	[Amount demanded _____
	)	(exceeds or does not exceed) $10,000]
		[LIMITED CIVIL CASE]

Plaintiff alleges:

1. [Capacity, residence of defendant. See § 250.61[1], Paragraph 1.]

2. [Employment relationship between plaintiff and defendant. See § 250.61[1], Paragraph 2.]

3. [Terms of employment and, if appropriate, the terms (incorporated by reference) of any written employment agreement. See § 250.61[1], Paragraph 3.]

4. During the period from _____[date], to _____ [date], plaintiff worked a total of _____ hours and received a total compensation for that period of $_____. A detailed statement of the days worked, the hours worked each day, and the payment received therefor is attached hereto as Exhibit _____and incorporated herein by reference.

5. Labor Code Section(s) _____ [identify appropriate provisions, e.g., 1197 and/or 1198] provide(s) that it is unlawful to _____ [set forth terms of the applicable statute, e.g., pay less than the minimum wage established by law or to employ persons for longer than the hours set by the Industrial Welfare Commission or under conditions prohibited by the applicable wage orders].

6. At all times relevant herein, Industrial Welfare Commission Wage Order No. _____ [state number and/or give citation to the California Code of Regulations provision, e.g., 2-2001 (8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11020)], which applies to plaintiff's employment by defendant, provided for payment of a minimum wage of $_____ [state applicable minimum wage] per hour and that employees employed for more than _____ [state relevant portions of the regulations governing overtime work, e.g., 8 hours in one day are entitled to payment at the rate of time and one half for hours in excess of 8 in one day].

7. Under the provisions of the Wage Order referred to in Paragraph 6, plaintiff should have received a total of $_____ for hours worked during the period referred to in Paragraph 4. Defendant therefore owes plaintiff the sum of $_____, representing the difference between the amount of wages owed pursuant to the Wage Order and the amount actually paid to plaintiff. Defendant has failed and refused and continues to fail and refuse to pay plaintiff the amount owed.

8. Defendant's failure to pay plaintiff the sum of $_____, as required by the applicable Wage Order, violates the provision of Labor Code Section(s) _____ [state applicable code provision, e.g., 1197 and/or 1198] and is therefore unlawful.

9. Pursuant to Labor Code Section 1194(a), plaintiff requests that the court award plaintiff reasonable attorney's fees and costs incurred by him/her in this action.

WHEREFORE plaintiff prays judgment against defendant as follows:

1. For compensatory damages in the amount of $_____, representing the amount of unpaid _____[minimum wages and/or overtime compensation] owed on _____ [date];

2. For interest on any _____ [minimum wages and/or overtime compensation] due from the day such amounts were due;

[3. For liquidated damages pursuant to Labor Code Section 1194.2(a) in the amount of $_____, which amount equals the minimum wages unpaid and interest on that amount;]

4. For reasonable attorney's fees pursuant to Labor Code Section 1194(a);

5. For costs of suit incurred herein; and

6. For such other and further relief as the court may deem appropriate.

Attorney for Plaintiff

[Verification, if desired. See § 250.61[1].]

[2] Use of Form

The form of complaint in [1], above, may be used in an action under Lab. Code § 1194 to obtain damages on behalf of an employee whose employer has failed to pay minimum wages and/or overtime compensation as required under the California wage orders [see 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11000 et seq. (Cal. Wage Orders)].

[3] Allegations

The complaint includes the following allegations:

- The existence of an employment relationship [*Martinez v. Combs (May 20, 2010) 49 Cal. 4th 35, -- Cal. Rptr. 3d --, -- P.3d --, 2010 Cal. LEXIS 4660, at 61 ("employer" for this purpose is defined by applicable IWC wage order); Reynolds v. Bement (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 1075, 1085-1089, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 483 (action by employee to recover statutory minimum wage or overtime compensation under Lab. Code § 1194 must be brought directly against employer and may not be maintained against shareholders, officers, directors, or other agents of corporate employer)], including the dates of employment, position held, and the agreed-on wage rate and hours (Paragraphs 2 and 3) [see, e.g., 8 Cal. Code Reg. §§ 11010-11150, PP 1, 3, 4, (Cal. Wage Order Nos. 1-2001-15-2001)];

- Facts showing the actual hourly rate received and hours worked by the employee (Paragraph 4);

- References to the applicable portions of the relevant wage orders and/or statutory provisions with respect to minimum wage rates and overtime hours (Paragraphs 5 and 6); and

- The fact of nonpayment of the required minimum wage and/or overtime compensation (Paragraphs 7 and 8).

If plaintiff seeks attorney's fees pursuant to Lab. Code § 1194(a), a request for fees must be included in the complaint.

A request for liquidated damages may be included in the complaint only if (1) the action is commenced on or after January 1, 1992; and (2) the action is brought to recover amounts unpaid in violation of the minimum wage fixed by an IWC wage order. An employee may not recover liquidated damages for failure to pay overtime compensation [Lab. Code § 1194.2(a), (c)].

Violations of minimum wage and/or overtime compensation laws and orders may also involve violations of the provisions of the Labor Code governing payment of wages [see Lab. Code § 200 et seq.] and causes of action under those provisions or for breach of contract [see Anders v. State Board of Equalization (1947) 82 Cal. App. 2d 88, 94, 185 P.2d 883 (IWC wage order provisions are part of contract between employer and employee)] may also be included, when appropriate. For a form of complaint for use in cases alleging failure to pay wages on discharge or resignation, see § 250.61[1].

[4] Action for Minimum Wage or Overtime Compensation

Any employee receiving less than the legal minimum wage or applicable overtime compensation is entitled to recover the unpaid balance of the full amount of that minimum wage or overtime compensation, together with costs of suit, notwithstanding any agreement to work for a lesser wage [Lab. Code § 1194(a)]. If the action is commenced on or after January 1, 1992, the employee is additionally entitled to recover interest [Lab. Code § 1194], reasonable attorney's fees [Lab. Code § 1194], and, if the action is for minimum wage violations, liquidated damages [Lab. Code § 1194.2(a), (c)].

[5] Alternative Procedures

Alternative remedies to a civil action by the employee are available through the Department of Industrial Relations (DIR) or the DLSE. These remedies include investigations of minimum wage violations [Lab. Code § 1195], proceedings to enjoin violations of wage and hour laws [Lab. Code § 1194.5], and civil actions on behalf of the employee to recover unpaid minimum wages or overtime compensation [see Lab. Code § 1193.6]. For discussion of alternative remedies, see § 250.40[2].

Plaintiff alleges:

1. Plaintiff _____ [name] is an adult person and a resident of the County of _____, State of California.

2. Plaintiff is a _____ [female or male]. From _____ [date of commencement of employment], to _____ [date of termination of employment, if any, or current date], plaintiff [was or has been] employed by defendant _____ [name].

[EITHER]

3. Defendant is a(n) _____ [specify nature of defendant/employer, e.g., bank] employing approximately _____ [number] of employees of both sexes. Defendant's establishment is located at _____ [address], _____ [city], California.

[OR]

3. Defendant is a(n) _____ [specify nature of defendant/employer, e.g., bank]. Defendant employs plaintiff and at least one person of the _____ [state sex of employee(s) alleged to be paid more] sex. Defendant's establishment is located at _____ [address], _____[city], California.

[CONTINUE]

[4. Plaintiff has filed a complaint with the Division of Labor Standards Enforcement pursuant to Labor Code Section 98.7 based on his/her claim of discrimination in payment of wages because of sex. The Labor Commissioner took the following actions with regard to the complaint: _____ (describe actions taken by Labor Commissioner, including investigations and hearings, if any). The outcome of the investigation of charges by the Labor Commissioner is as follows: _____ (specify outcome of action by Labor Commissioner).]

5. Plaintiff is/was employed by defendant in the position of _____ [job title] in defendant's business establishment identified in Paragraph 3, above. In this capacity plaintiff's responsibilities include(d): _____ [describe nature of plaintiff's job; indicate duties performed and general nature of skill, effort, and responsibility required of plaintiff].

6. [On the basis of plaintiff's information and belief, plaintiff alleges that] [F]rom _____ [identify first date of unequal pay], until _____ [allege date, if any, on which employer ceased paying plaintiff less, due to sex, or, if the practice is continuing, allege current date and state that violation is continuing], defendant [has] paid to plaintiff a lower [rate of] _____ [wage or salary or bonus or commission or draw or allowance for _____ (specify, e.g., travel) or _____ (specify type of benefit, e.g., health insurance) benefit] than that paid to one or more of the employees of defendant of the _____[specify the sex favored by discrimination] sex. [The amount of the difference between the _____ (specify type of compensation as in previous sentence) paid to plaintiff and that paid to members of the _____ (specify sex favored by discriminatory act of employer) sex is $_____ per _____ (specify unit if time, e.g., hour).]

7. Plaintiff and the other employee(s) of defendant who is/are paid more than plaintiff (1) work in the same establishment; (2) perform equal work; (3) perform work that requires equal skill, effort, and responsibility; and (4) perform their jobs under similar working conditions.

8. [On the basis of plaintiff's information and belief, plaintiff alleges that] [D]efendant has failed or refused to pay to plaintiff the sum of $_____, which is the difference between the amount plaintiff has earned in the position and the amount paid to the other employee(s) of the _____[sex favored by the discrimination] sex over the period of time alleged in Paragraph 6, above. Pursuant to the California Equal Pay Act, Labor Code Section 1197.5, defendant owes plaintiff that sum as and for back pay, a sum equal to that amount as and for "liquidated damages," interest on the back pay amount, and attorney's fees and costs of suit.

[9. Defendant employer's violation of plaintiff's rights under the California Equal Pay Act is and has been willful in that _____ (set forth knowledge or information and belief regarding facts giving rise to characterization of willful violation).]

WHEREFORE, plaintiff prays for judgment as follows:

1. For wages owed to plaintiff because of defendant's violation of the Equal Pay Act, in the amount of $_____ [specify amount or approximate amount based on information and belief], with interest on that amount from _____ [date];

2. For liquidated damages equal to the sum of wages owed to plaintiff because of defendant's violation of the Equal Pay Act, in the amount of $_____ [specify same amount as that listed in Paragraph 1 of prayer];

3. For reasonable attorney's fees pursuant to Labor Code Section 1197.5(g);

4. For costs of suit herein incurred; and

5. For such other and further relief as the court deems proper.

[Verification, if desired. See § 250.61[1].]

[2] Use of Form

The form of complaint in [1], above, may be used to obtain damages on behalf of an employee whose wage rate or other compensation was lower than that of employees of the opposite sex in the same establishment for the same quantity and quality of the same classification of work, in violation of Lab. Code § 1197.5.

[3] Allegations

The complaint contains all of the following allegations:

- The capacity and residence of the plaintiff (Paragraph 1);

- The sex of the plaintiff and the fact that the plaintiff was or is an employee of the defendant (Paragraph 2);

- That the employer employs persons of both sexes and the location of the employer's business (Paragraph 3);

- That the plaintiff filed an administrative complaint with Division of Labor Standards Enforcement for investigation and action by the Labor Commissioner, if the plaintiff has filed such a complaint (Optional Paragraph 4) [see Bass v. Great Western Sav. & Loan Assn. (1976) 58 Cal. App. 3d 770, 772-773, 130 Cal. Rptr. 123 (not necessary to show that administrative remedies have been exhausted under California Equal Pay Act)];

- A description of the plaintiff's employment position with the defendant and his or her responsibilities in the defendant's business (Paragraph 5);

- That the defendant has paid the plaintiff at a lower rate than another employee or other employees of the opposite sex, or has otherwise compensated the plaintiff at a lower rate (Paragraph 6) [see Lab. Code § 1197.5(a)];

- That the plaintiff and the higher-paid employee or employees of the opposite sex (a) work in the same establishment; (b) perform equal work; (c) perform work requiring equal skill, effort, and responsibilities; and (d) perform their jobs under the same working conditions (Paragraph 7) [see Lab. Code § 1197.5(a)];

- That the plaintiff is entitled to back pay plus interest, liquidated damages, attorney's fees, and costs for violation of the Equal Pay Act (Paragraph 8) [Lab. Code § 1197.5(b), (g)]; and

- If appropriate, that the defendant's violation of the Equal Pay Act was willful, thereby extending the limitations period for filing the action (Optional Paragraph 9) [see Lab. Code § 1197.5(h)].

Plaintiff alleges:

FIRST CAUSE OF ACTION

1. _____ [Capacity, residence of defendant. See § 250.61[1], Paragraph 1.]

2. Beginning on or about _____[date] and continuing until _____[date], _____ [name of assignor-employee] was employed by defendant as a _____ [state job title or describe the nature of the work, e.g., keypunch operator] at defendant's facility located in _____ [city], California, in the County of _____.

3. _____'s [Name of assignor-employee] employment was pursuant to _____ [a written or an oral] employment agreement. The terms of that agreement were _____ [state pertinent terms of the agreement, including wage rate and any changes in that rate, contractual right to any benefits claimed, and term, or refer to and incorporate written agreement, e.g., as stated in the agreement entered into on _____ (date). A true and correct copy of that agreement is attached to this complaint as Exhibit _____ and is incorporated herein by reference].

4. Effective _____ [date], _____ [_____ (name of assignor-employee) resigned from or defendant terminated] that employment. [If a resignation add: (Name of assignor-employee) gave notice of his/her intent to resign on or about _____ (date)].

5. On _____ [date], at the time that _____ [_____ (name of assignor-employee) resigned or defendant terminated _____'s (name of assignor-employee) employment], _____ [name of assignor-employee] had last been paid accrued wages on _____ [date] and was owed wages for _____ [number] _____[days or weeks] in the amount of $_____ based on a wage rate of $_____ per _____ [specify, e.g., hour], as provided in the employment agreement referred to in Paragraph 3.

[6. In addition, as of _____[date], _____ (name of assignor-employee) had accrued _____ days of paid time off pursuant to the policies of defendant at the rate of $_____ per day, of which _____ (name of assignor-employee) had not taken _____ days, and was therefore owed the amount of $_____ for accrued paid time off].

7. At the time of termination, defendant _____[failed to pay _____ (name of assignor-employee) any of the amounts due, as set forth in Paragraph(s) 5 (and 6) or paid _____ (name of assignor-employee) only the sum of $_____]. Defendant's failure to pay the full amount due _____[name of assignor-employee] on termination violates the provisions of Labor Code Section _____ [specify applicable statute, e.g., 201]. There is now due and owing to _____ [name of assignor-employee] the sum of $_____. Defendant has failed and refused, and continues to fail and refuse, to pay the amount due.

[EITHER]
[if assignment represents wages earned at time of assignment]

8. On or about _____ [specify date after the wages were earned], _____ [name of assignor-employee] properly assigned to plaintiff, pursuant to Labor Code Section 300, the sum of $_____, which represents the wages and salary then owed to him/her, as set forth in Paragraph 7, above.

[OR]
[if assignment represents wages not yet earned, in whole or in part, at time of assignment]

8. _____ [Allege facts showing that assignment was made as consideration for provision of necessities of life, as required by Labor Code Section 300(h), e.g., On or about _____ (date), plaintiff furnished _____ (name of assignor-employee) with the following necessities of life, at the latter's request: _____ (specify, e.g., food and necessary medications for _____ (name of assignor-employee) and his/her family). The reasonable cost and value of these items is $_____. In consideration and as security for reimbursement of plaintiff for the cost of these necessities, _____ (name of assignor-employee) agreed to assign all wages then due and owing to him/her and to be earned by him/her thereafter, up to the maximum amount of $_____ (cost of necessities), to plaintiff. On or about _____ (date), _____ (name of assignor-employee) executed a separate written assignment of such wages, in compliance with the requirements of Labor Code Section 300].

[CONTINUE]

9. A copy of the written assignment referred to in Paragraph 8 was filed with defendant on _____ [date] [along with the statements required by Labor Code Section 300]. A true and correct copy of that written assignment [and supporting documents] is/are attached to this complaint as Exhibit _____ and is/are incorporated herein by reference.

10. On or about _____[date], plaintiff demanded payment of $_____, the amount of wages currently due to _____[name of assignor-employee], pursuant to the terms of the written assignment, but defendant has failed and refused to pay the sums owed.

11. Pursuant to Labor Code Section 218.5, plaintiff requests that the court award plaintiff reasonable attorney's fees and costs incurred by him/her in this action.

12. Pursuant to [Labor Code Section 218.6], plaintiff requests that the court award plaintiff interest on all due and unpaid wages, at the legal rate specified by Civil Code Section 3289(b), accruing from the date the wages were due and payable.

SECOND CAUSE OF ACTION
(Waiting Time Penalties Under Lab. Code § 203)

13. Plaintiff hereby incorporates by reference and realleges all of the allegations contained in paragraphs 1 through 12, above.

14. The defendant's failure to pay wages, as alleged in Paragraph 7, was willful in that _____ [specify]. Thus, at the time of the assignment herein alleged, _____ [name of assignor-employee] was entitled, and plaintiff as his/her assignee is entitled, to penalties under Labor Code Section 203, which provides that an employee's wages shall continue as a penalty until paid or for a period of up to 30 days from the time they were due, whichever period is shorter.

15. Defendant failed to pay _____ [name of assignor-employee] the sum of $_____ at the time of termination and has failed to pay those sums for _____ [days] thereafter [up to the time of the assignment]. Pursuant to the provisions of Labor Code Section 203, plaintiff is entitled to a penalty in the amount of $_____, which is _____'s [name of assignor-employee] daily rate multiplied by _____ [number] days.

WHEREFORE plaintiff prays judgment against defendant as follows:

1. For compensatory damages in the amount of $_____, representing wages and other compensation owed to plaintiff, pursuant to the written assignment of _____ [name of assignor-employee], on _____ [date];

2. For interest on the amount of $_____ from _____ [date that compensation was due];

3. For penalties in the amount of $_____ pursuant to Labor Code Section 203;

4. For reasonable attorney's fees pursuant to Labor Code Section 218.5;

5. For costs of suit incurred herein; and

6. For such other and further relief as the court may deem appropriate.

[2] Use of Form

The form of complaint in [1], above, is for use by an assignee to recover an employee's wages who has assigned earned or unearned wages or salary when the employer has not paid the assigned amounts according to the assignment [see Lab. Code § 300].

[3] Allegations

The plaintiff-assignee must allege facts showing the assignor's entitlement to the wages [see discussion of allegations in § 250.61[3][a]]. In addition, the assignee should also plead facts showing that a proper assignment has been made; however, any defect in the assignment under Lab. Code § 300 is an affirmative defense, which must be pleaded and proved by the defendant [see Mathewson v. Alderman (1930) 107 Cal. App. 272, 275-276, 290 P. 317] . For a form of allegation for use as an affirmative defense in cases in which the assignment was defective, see § 250.73.

For a discussion of wage assignments, see § 250.20[2].

The allegations and prayer pertaining to the waiting time penalty under Lab. Code § 203 should compute the penalty by multiplying the plaintiff's daily wage rate by the number of days of nonpayment, up to 30 days, including not only days that the employee might have worked, but also nonworkdays. Although this method of calculating the penalty can result in a penalty greater than one month's wages, it furthers public policy by providing a strong disincentive to employers who are reluctant to make timely payment of wages due on termination of employment [Mamika v. Barca (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 487, 491-494, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 175 (although limited to 30 days, penalty can exceed one month's wages; targeted wrong is delay in payment, which continues on nonworkdays as well as workdays so long as payment is not made)]. For detailed discussion of the waiting time penalty, see § 250.16[2][d].

§ 250.70 Affirmative Defense--Exemption From Applicable Provisions of Labor Code--Plaintiff Was Independent Contractor

[1] FORM Affirmative Defense--Exemption From Applicable Provisions of Labor Code--Plaintiff Was Independent Contractor

AS A [if more than one, specify number, e.g., FIRST] SEPARATE AND AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE [if more than one cause of action alleged in complaint, specify, e.g., TO THE _____ (specify, e.g., SECOND) CAUSE OF ACTION], defendant alleges that at all times mentioned in the complaint, plaintiff was an independent contractor and defendant is therefore not subject to any of the wage payment provisions or penalties set forth in Labor Code Section 200 et seq.

[2] Use of Form

The form of affirmative defense in [1], above, may be pleaded in answer to a complaint for failure to pay wages or benefits as required by Lab. Code § 200 et seq. Parties who are classifiable as independent contractors rather than employees are exempt from the wage payment provisions of the Labor Code by virtue of their status [Fitch v. Pacific Fid. Life Ins. Co. (1975) 54 Cal. App. 3d 140, 145-146, 126 Cal. Rptr. 445 ; *see Zaremba v. Miller (1980) 113 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 1, 5-6 , 169 Cal. § 250.71 Affirmative Defense--Exemption From Applicable Provisions of Labor Code--Parties Not Subject to Minimum Wage/Overtime Provisions

[1] FORM Affirmative Defense--Exemption From Applicable Provisions of Labor Code--Parties Not Subject to Minimum Wage/Overtime Provisions

AS A [if more than one, specify number, e.g., FIRST] SEPARATE AND AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE [if more than one cause of action alleged in complaint, specify, e.g., TO THE _____ (specify, e.g., SECOND) CAUSE OF ACTION], defendant alleges that at all times mentioned in the complaint, the parties to this action were exempt from the _____ [minimum wage and/or overtime compensation] requirements contained in the Labor Code and in the wage orders of the Industrial Welfare Commission, in that _____ [specify, e.g., plaintiff was employed in an administrative, executive, or professional capacity as a _____ (specify)].

[2] Use of Form

The affirmative defense in [1], above, may be pleaded in answer to a complaint alleging that the wages paid to the plaintiff violated the applicable minimum wage or overtime requirements. For a form of complaint alleging that wages paid to the plaintiff violated applicable minimum wage or overtime requirements, see § 250.62.

Both state and federal law contain numerous exemptions to classifications of employees subject to statutory minimum wage and overtime provisions. Despite the use of similar terminology, however, federal exemptions are not necessarily coextensive with state-law exemptions. For example, the California definition of "outside salespersons" who are exempt from overtime pay differs from the definition of that term under federal law. The California definition depends on how much time the employee spends on outside selling, whereas the federal definition depends on the employee's primary duty [compare, e.g., 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11070, P 2(J) (Cal. Wage Order No. 7-2001) with 29 C.F.R. § 541.500]. Thus, in at least some cases, California law provides greater protection for employees than does federal law [Ramirez v.

Yosemite Water Co., Inc. (1999) 20 Cal. 4th 785, 796-800, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 844, 978 P.2d 2 (nothing in Lab. Code § 1171 or legislative history indicates legislative intent to prevent IWC from departing from federal definition of "outside salesperson")].

Pursuant to the Eight-Hour-Day Restoration and Workplace Flexibility Act of 1999 [1999 Stats., ch. 134 (A.B. 60); see Lab. Code § 517], the IWC amended its wage orders, effective January 1, 2001 [see 8 Cal. Code Reg. §§ 11010-11170]. The amended wage orders contain several new exemptions. For example, the minimum wage requirements do not apply to certain employees in the computer software field who earn an hourly rate of pay that is not less than $41, who are engaged primarily in work that is intellectual or creative, that requires the exercise of discretion and independent judgment, and who are highly skilled and proficient in the theoretical and practical application of highly specialized information to computer systems analysis, programming, and software engineering [see 8 Cal. Code Reg. §§ 11010-11130, 11150, P 1(A)(3) (Cal. Wage Order Nos. 1-2001-13-2001, 15-2001)]. Also, effective January 1, 2001, the provisions of all wage orders do not apply to individuals participating in national service programs, such as AmeriCorps, carried out using assistance provided under 42 U.S.C. § 12571 [8 Cal. Code Reg. §§ 11010-11040, 11060-11080, 11130, 11150, P 1(D) (Cal. Wage Order Nos. 1-2001-4-2001, 6-2001-8-2001, 13-2001, 15-2001); 8 Cal. Code Reg. §§ 11050, 11090-11120, P 1(F) (Cal. Wage Order Nos. 5-2001, 9-2001-12-2001); 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11140, P 1(E) (Cal Wage Order No. 14-80)].

For an overview of minimum wage and overtime requirements, as well as exempt employees, see § 250.14. For a detailed discussion of complete and partial exemptions from the minimum wage and overtime provisions under state law and the FLSA [29 U.S.C. § 213], see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Chs. 2 and 3 (Matthew Bender).

[1] FORM Affirmative Defense--Exemption From Applicable Provisions of Labor Code--Defendant Not Liable for Waiting Time Penalties Due to Plaintiff's Avoidance or Refusal of Payment [Lab. Code § 203]

AS A [if more than one, specify number, e.g., FIRST] SEPARATE AND AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE [if more than one cause of action alleged in complaint, specify, e.g., TO THE _____ (specify, e.g., SECOND) CAUSE OF ACTION], defendant alleges that plaintiff _____[secreted or absented himself/herself to avoid payment of wages and/or refused to receive the payment fully tendered to him/her by defendant], thereby relieving defendant of liability for waiting time penalties under Labor Code section 203.

[2] Use of Form

The form of affirmative defense in [1], above, may be pleaded in answer to a request for waiting time penalties pursuant to Lab. Code § 203 [see §§ 250.61, 250.65] when the employee secretes or absents himself or herself to avoid payment, or refuses to receive the payment when fully tendered. Any employee who secretes or absents himself or herself to avoid payment, or who refuses to receive the payment when fully tendered, is not entitled to any benefit for the time during which he or she so avoids payment [*Lab. § 250.73 Affirmative Defense--Defective Assignment of Wages [Lab. Code § 300]

[1] FORM Affirmative Defense--Defective Assignment of Wages [Lab. Code § 300]

AS A [if more than one, specify number, e.g., FIRST] SEPARATE AND AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE [if more than one cause of action alleged in complaint, specify, e.g., TO THE _____ (specify, e.g., SECOND) CAUSE OF ACTION], defendant alleges the alleged assignment of wages from the assignor-employee to plaintiff is defective under the provisions of Labor Code Section 300, in that _____ [specify, e.g., it was made by a minor without the written consent of a parent or guardian being attached to the alleged assignment].

[2] Use of Form

The form of affirmative defense in [1], above, may be pleaded in answer to a complaint for wages by an assignee to recover wages owed to the assignor-employee or former employee when the assignment is defective [Lab. Code § 300; see § 250.20[2] for discussion of assignment of wages generally].

[3] Cross References

§ 250.74 Affirmative Defense--Cause of Action Preempted by Federal Law

[1] FORM Affirmative Defense--Cause of Action Preempted by Federal Law

AS A [if more than one, specify number, e.g., FIRST] SEPARATE AND AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE [if more than one cause of action alleged in complaint, specify, e.g., TO THE _____ (specify, e.g., SECOND) CAUSE OF ACTION], defendant alleges plaintiff's action is preempted by _____ [specify federal law, e.g., the Labor Management Relations Act (LMRA) (29 U.S.C. § 185(a)) or the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA) (29 U.S.C. § 1144(a))] in that plaintiff has alleged _____ [specify, e.g., a violation of a contract between an employer and a labor organization representing employees in an industry affecting commerce, and resolution of the controversy will require an interpretation of the collective bargaining agreement].

[2] Use of Form

The form of affirmative defense in [1], above, may be pleaded in answer to a cause of action that is preempted by federal law such as the Labor Management Relations Act (LMRA) [see 29 U.S.C. § 185(a)] or by the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA) [see 29 U.S.C. § 1144(a)]. For example, several courts have held that state law enforcement of severance benefit claims are preempted by ERISA [see, e.g., Scott v. Gulf Oil Corp. (9th Cir. 1985) 754 F.2d 1499, 1503-1506 ; California Chamber of Commerce v. Simpson (C.D. Cal. 1985) 601 F. Supp. 104, 109] .

For a discussion of affirmative defenses, including causes of action preempted by federal law, see §§ 250.34[1][e], 250.40[3][b], 250.41[1][d].

[1] FORM Affirmative Defense--Good Faith Action or Omission and Reasonable Belief of No Minimum Wage Violation [Lab. Code § 1194.2(b)]

AS A [if more than one, specify number, e.g., FIRST] SEPARATE AND AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE [if more than one cause of action alleged in complaint, specify, e.g., TO THE _____ (specify, e.g., SECOND) CAUSE OF ACTION], defendant alleges that plaintiff is not entitled to liquidated damages because any alleged act or omission by defendant was in good faith and defendant had reasonable grounds for believing that his/her conduct did not violate any provision of the Labor Code or Industrial Welfare Commission order relating to the minimum wage.

[2] Use of Form

The form of affirmative defense in [1], above, may be pleaded in answer to a cause of action to recover liquidated damages based on a violation of minimum wage laws [Lab. Code § 1194.2(b)]. The defense may be raised by the employer in a civil action brought against it by the employee or on behalf of the employee by the DLSE or the Department of Industrial Relations (DIR) [Lab. Code § 1194.2(a), (b); see Lab. Code §§ 1193.6, 1194]. If the employer demonstrates to the court's satisfaction that the alleged act or omission was in good faith and was based on a reasonable belief of compliance with the law, the court has discretion to refuse to award liquidated damages or to award a smaller amount than requested by the plaintiff [Lab. Code § 1194.2(b)].

For a discussion of affirmative defenses, see §§ 250.40[3][b], 250.41[1][d]. For a discussion of the recovery of liquidated damages in civil actions, see §§ 250.40[2][f], 250.40[3][a].

Chapter 251 EQUITY

PART I. SCOPE

§ 251.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter examines the topic of equity in civil matters. Equity for criminal matter are not covered in this chapter. Actions, defenses, and remedies in equity are addressed in multiple chapters throughout this publication for specific topics and areas of law. This chapter provides a comprehensive review of these issues, with extensive cross referencing to specific topics and chapters to locate discussion and forms for precise application to the matter that is being researched.

This chapter reviews the nature of equity, in general [see § 251.10 et seq.], equitable jurisdiction [see § 251.30 et seq.], and equitable maxims for obtaining relief on claims in equity [see § 251.50 et seq.].

This chapter further addresses equitable causes of action [see § 251.70 et seq.], equitable remedies [see § 251.90 et seq.], defenses to actions in equity [see § 251.140 et seq.], equitable defenses of general application [see § 251.150 et seq.], specific equitable relief against particular wrongs [see § 251.180 et seq.], and proceedings for relief in equity [see § 251.220 et seq.]

This chapter also include a sample complaint in equity: specifically, a general form of complaint in equity to set aside judgment or order obtained by extrinsic fraud or mistake [see § 251.270]. This form is illustrative of one type of assertion of equitable relief. Cross references throughout this chapter highlight various forms across the wide spectrum of actions that assert actions, defenses, and grounds for equity relief. Refer to the specific discussions in this chapter to locate applicable forms in other chapters.

A. Nature, Jurisdiction, and Principles of Equitable Power
1. Nature of Equity

21-251 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 251.10

§ 251.10 Definition of Equity

Equity consists of a set of rules that permit the contriving of remedies that "correspond both to the primary right of the injured party, and to the wrong by which that right has been violated" [*Bertero v. § 251.11 Purpose of Equitable Power

The object of equity is to do right and justice. [Hirshfield v. Schwartz (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 749, 770, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 861] . When a court exercises its equity powers, its principal concern is to promote justice, acting through its conscience and good faith [Hirshfield v. Schwartz (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 749, 769, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 861] .

§ 251.12 The Breadth of Equitable Power

A court called upon to afford relief historically or analytically equitable in its nature has broad powers to fashion a remedy [Shapiro v. Sutherland (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 1534, 1552, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 101 ; Dawson v. East Side Union High School Dist. (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 998, 1040, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 108] . In exercising its power, the court is not strictly limited to the particular relief requested in the prayer of the complaint [Redke v. Silvertrust (1971) 6 Cal. 3d 94, 108, 98 Cal. Rptr. 293, 490 P.2d 805 ; Sears v. Rule (1945) 27 Cal. 2d 131, 148-149, 163 P.2d 443 , Dawson v. East Side Union High School Dist. (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 998, 1040, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 108 ; Oceanside Community Assn. v. Oceanside Land Co. (1983) 147 Cal. App. 3d 166, 177, 195 Cal. Rptr. 14] .

A court cannot properly exercise an equitable power without consideration of the equities on both sides of a dispute. This principle of equity jurisprudence has been applied in a variety of contexts in which the court is called upon to exercise equitable power [Cortez v. Purolator Air Filtration Prods. Co. (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 163, 180, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 518 ; 999 P.2d 706] . In so doing, the court must consider any unjust or harsh results, and adopt means to avoid them [Shapiro v. Sutherland (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 1534, 1552, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 101] .

1. Nature of Equity

§ 251.13 Equitable Power to Resolve Unique Situations With Unique Solutions

Equity or chancery law has its origin in the necessity for exceptions to the application of rules of law in those cases where the law, by reason of its universality, would create injustice [Hirshfield v. Schwartz (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 749, 770, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 861 ; Estate of Vargas (1974) 36 Cal. App. 3d 714, 718, 111 Cal. Rptr. 779] . Accordingly, equity does not wait upon precedent that exactly squares with the facts in controversy, but asserts itself in those situations where right and justice would be defeated but for its intervention [Times-Mirror Co. v. Superior Court (1935) 3 Cal. 2d 309, 331, 44 P.2d 547 ; Hirshfield v. Schwartz (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 749, 770, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 861] . Courts exercising equitable jurisdiction will so mold and adjust their decrees as to award substantial justice according to the requirements of the varying complications that may be presented to them for adjudication [Toscano v. Greene Music (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 685, 693-694, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 732 ; Hirshfield v. Schwartz (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 749, 770-771, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 861] .

The powers of a court of equity, dealing with the subject-matters within its jurisdiction, are not cribbed or confined by the rigid rules of law. From the very nature of equity, a wide play is left to the conscience of the court in formulating decrees. It is of the very essence of equity that its powers should be so broad as to be capable of dealing with novel conditions [Bechtel v. Wier (1907) 152 Cal. 443, 446, 93 P. 75 ; Hirshfield v. Schwartz (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 749, 770-771, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 861 ; accord, MacFarlane v. Peters (1980) 103 Cal. App. 3d 627, 631, 163 Cal. Rptr. 655 (court sitting in equity has powers broad, flexible, and capable of being expanded to deal with novel cases and conditions)]. Thus, lack of precedent is no hindrance to application of equitable relief [Cassinos v. Union Oil Co. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 1770, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 574 ; MacFarlane v. Peters (1980) 103 Cal. App. 3d 627, 632, 163 Cal. Rptr. 655 ; Roman v. Ries (1968) 259 Cal. App. 2d 65, 70, 66 Cal. Rptr. 120] .

For Example:

- In many cases, in order that the owner of the lost document may fully enjoy the benefits of ownership, it is necessary that the document be physically restored. In such a case, a court possesses full equity power physically to restore the document [Atkins Corp. v. Tourny (1936) 6 Cal. 2d 206, 216, 57 P.2d 480] .

The maxim that every wrong has a remedy underlies the power of equity to invent new methods of relief for new types of wrongs [Shapiro v. Sutherland (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 1534, 1552, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 101 ; see Civ. Code § 3523].

For discussion of the maxim that every wrong has a remedy, see § 251.51.

§ 251.14 Discretion of Court to Exercise Equitable Power

A trial court's rulings granting or denying equitable relief are matters for the exercise of the court's sound discretion [Fairchild v. Raines (1944) 24 Cal. 2d 818, 826, 151 P.2d 260 ; De Anza Enterprises v. Johnson (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 1307, 1315, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 749] . That discretion is not an arbitrary one, but should be exercised in accord with the principles and precedents of equity jurisprudence. Sound discretion is not based upon whimsy [Hicks v. Clayton (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 251, 265, 136 Cal. Rptr. 512 ; Jewett v. Albin (1928) 90 Cal. App. 535, 546, 266 P. 329] .

However, judicial discretion to grant relief becomes judicial duty to grant it under some circumstances, and the grace that equity should bestow then becomes a matter of right [Hicks v. Clayton (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 251, 265, 136 Cal. Rptr. 512 ; California Pine Box & Lumber Co. v. Superior Court (1910) 13 Cal. App. 65, 69-71, 108 P. 882] .

1. Nature of Equity

§ 251.15 General Limitations on Equitable Power

Although the judicial power of equity is broad, courts with that power may not create totally new substantive rights under the guise of doing equity Thus, an equitable remedy must be supported by "some recognized underlying obligation in law or equity" [Friedman v. Friedman (1993) 20 Cal. App. 4th 876, 886, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892 ; Marvin v. Marvin (1981) 122 Cal. App. 3d 871, 876, 176 Cal. Rptr. 555 (findings that plaintiff needed the award for "rehabilitation" and that defendant had the ability to respond to the need was not enough)].

Furthermore, even if the complainant has established a right to the protection of equity, and its aid in enforcing and protecting his or her rights, the court may not, in providing relief to that party, inflict a wrong and injury upon another entirely innocent in the transaction by invading and disregarding the rights of the innocent party [Owens v. McNally (1896) 113 Cal. 444, 452-453, 45 P. 710] .

[1] Domestic Judgments

The jurisdiction of a court of equity to enforce its decrees is coextensive with its jurisdiction to determine the rights of the parties, and it has power to enforce its decrees as a necessary incident to its jurisdiction [Dawson v. East Side Union High School Dist. (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 998, 1044, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 108 ; Day v. Sharp (1975) 50 Cal. App. 3d 904, 912, 123 Cal. Rptr. 918 ; *Beeler v. Beeler (1961) 193 Cal. A court with "jurisdiction of the person may enforce a decree in personam although it could not enforce it in rem" [Taylor v. Taylor (1923) 192 Cal. 71, 76, 218 P. 756 ; Beeler v. Beeler (1961) 193 Cal. App. 2d 548, 550, 14 Cal. Rptr. 460] .

For discussion and forms on enforcement of domestic judgments, see Ch. 254, Executions and Enforcement of Judgments, § 254.10 et seq.

[2] Foreign Judgments

There is no sound reason for denying a proper decree of another state's court of equity the same full faith and credit accorded any other kind of judgment [Rozan v. Rozan (1957) 49 Cal. 2d 322, 331, 317 P.2d 11] .

§ 251.17 Appeal of Equitable Decrees

Appellate courts review a judgment based in equity under the abuse of discretion standard [City of Barstow v. Mojave Water Agency (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 1224, 1256, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 294, 5 P.3d 853 ; De Anza Enterprises v. Johnson (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 1307, 1315, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 749] . Under that standard, courts resolve all evidentiary conflicts in favor of the judgment and determine whether the court's decision falls within the permissible range of options set by the legal criteria. [Hirshfield v. Schwartz (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 749, 771, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 861 ; Dorman v. DWLC Corp. (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 1808, 1815, 42 Cal. Rptr. 2d 459] .

2. Equitable Jurisdiction

21-251 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 251.30

§ 251.30 In General

[1] Jurisdiction Is Generally In Personam

The decrees of courts sitting in equity primarily and properly act in personam, and at most collaterally only, in rem [Smith v. Davis (1891) 90 Cal. 25, 32, 27 P. 26 ; Mills v. Mills (1956) 147 Cal. App. 2d 107, 117, 305 P.2d 61 ; accord, Curtin v. Dep't of Motor Vehicles (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 481, 485, 176 Cal. Rptr. 690] .

A trial court cannot exercise its equitable powers if it does not have subject matter jurisdiction or jurisdiction over the parties in the case [In re Marriage of Ryall (1984) 154 Cal. App. 3d 743, 754, 201 Cal. Rptr. 504 (disapproved on other grounds as stated in In re Marriage of Comer (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 504, 515 n.4, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 155, 927 P.2d 265)].

[2] Extraterritorial Jurisdiction

In accordance with the court's in personam jurisdiction, the general rule is that a court exercising equity jurisdiction having jurisdiction of the person of a party may render any appropriate decree acting directly on the party, even though the subject matter affected is outside the in rem jurisdiction of the court [Promis v. Duke (1929) 208 Cal. 420, 428, 281 P. 613 ; Pines v. Tomson (1984) 160 Cal. App. 3d 370, 399-400, 206 Cal. Rptr. 866] .

A court having jurisdiction of the parties may grant and enforce an injunction, although the subject matter affected is beyond its territorial jurisdiction, or requires defendant to do or refrain from doing anything beyond its territorial jurisdiction which it could require him to do or refrain from doing within the jurisdiction [Pines v. Tomson (1984) 160 Cal. App. 3d 370, 399-400, 206 Cal. Rptr. 866 ; Allied Artists Pictures Corp. v. Friedman (1977) 68 Cal. App. 3d 127, 137, 137 Cal. Rptr. 94] .

A California court having jurisdiction of the parties may adjudicate their rights to land located in another state [Barber v. Barber (1958) 51 Cal. 2d 244, 247, 331 P.2d 628 ; In re Marriage of Economou (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 1466, 1479, 274 Cal. Rptr. 473 ; but see Fam. Code § 2660]. It is well settled that a California court with the parties before it can compel the execution of a conveyance in the form required by the law of the situs and that such a conveyance will be recognized there [Rozan v. Rozan (1957) 49 Cal. 2d 322, 330, 317 P.2d 11 ; accord, In re Marriage of Economou (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 1466, 1479-1480, 274 Cal. Rptr. 473] .

By means of its power over the person of the parties before it, a court exercising equitable jurisdiction may compel them to act in relation to property not within the jurisdiction, but its decrees do not operate directly upon the property nor affect the title. They are only made effectual through the coercion of the parties by directing some action on their part, such as the execution of conveyances or the cancellation of instruments [Taylor v. Taylor (1923) 192 Cal. 71, 76, 218 P. 756] .

A California court having in personam equitable jurisdiction over the parties can require them to execute conveyances to foreign land to insure a complete determination of the controversy before the court, even though the court does not have in rem jurisdiction over the land itself [Tomaier v. Tomaier (1944) 23 Cal. 2d 754, 760, 146 P.2d 905 (court ordered husband to execute deed conveying property to wife in action enforcing divorce decree)]. Examples include:

- Trust property [Hardy v. Hardy (1960) 181 Cal. App. 2d 317, 319, 5 Cal. Rptr. 110] ;

- Conveyance by court clerk [Phelps v. Kozakar (1983) 146 Cal. App. 3d 1078, 1085, 194 Cal. Rptr. 872] ;

- Appoint a commissioner of the court to cancel deeds and execute waivers of California defendants' claims to extraterritorial real property [Tully v. Bailey (1941) 46 Cal. App. 2d 195, 199, 115 P.2d 542] ;

- List of fact situations pre-1956 [Mills v. Mills (1956) 147 Cal. App. 2d 107, 116, 305 P.2d 61] .

[3] Equitable Jurisdiction of Probate Court

While a probate court has no general equity jurisdiction, it has the power to apply equitable and legal principles in aid of its functions as a probate court [Security First Nat. Bank v. Superior Court, 1 Cal. 2d 749, 757, 37 P.2d 69 ; Marsh v. Edelstein (1970) 9 Cal. App. 3d 132, 141, 88 Cal. Rptr. 26] .

[4] Equitable Jurisdiction of Arbitrators

Arbitrators may apply both legal and equitable principles in deciding the ultimate issue submitted to them [Morris v. Zuckerman (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 686, 691, 72 Cal. Rptr. 880, 446 P.2d 1000] .

Chapter 251 EQUITY
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
A. Nature, Jurisdiction, and Principles of Equitable Power
2. Equitable Jurisdiction

21-251 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 251.31

§ 251.31 No Jurisdiction Where Law Provides Adequate Remedy

[1] Plain, Complete, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy at Law Bars Equity

Civ. Code § 22.2, which decrees English common law as the law of California to the extent that it does not conflict with the federal or state Constitution and statutes, includes equitable principles within its scope [Martin v. Superior Court (1917) 176 Cal 289, 293, 168 P 135] .

Equitable relief will not be granted if there is a plain, complete, speedy, and adequate remedy at law [Andal v. City of Stockton (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 86, 91, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 34 ; see Bond v. Bulgheroni (1932) 215 Cal. 7, 10, 8 P. 2d 130 ("plain, speedy, and adequate")]. Where the primary right of a party is legal in its nature, as distinguished from equitable, and one for which the law affords some remedy, a proper exercise of the equitable jurisdiction will not give equitable relief in any case where the legal remedy is full and adequate and does complete justice. No principle of equitable jurisprudence is more firmly established than this [Morrison v. Land (1915) 169 Cal. 580, 586, 147 P. 259 ; Wilkison v. Wiederkehr (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 822, 830].

Accordingly, equitable relief will not be denied where the available legal relief is not plain, complete, speedy, or adequate [see Thayer Plymouth Center, Inc. v. Chrysler Motors Corp. (1967) 255 Cal. App. 2d 300, 306, 63 Cal. Rptr. 148 (action for injunctive relief); San Pedro Lumber Co. v. Reynolds (1896) 111 Cal. 588, 596-597, 44 P. 309 (action for accounting)].

For Example:

- Plaintiff's cause of action for equitable declaration that settlement and payment on settlement satisfied obligation failed because plaintiff could make motion under Civ. Code § 675 to compel defendant-creditor to acknowledge satisfaction [Taliaferro v. Taliaferro (1956) 144 Cal. App. 2d 109, 111, 300 P.2d 726] .

[2] Determining Whether Available Legal Relief Is Plain, Complete, Speedy, and Adequate

The mere fact that there may be a remedy at law does not oust the jurisdiction of a court of equity. To have this effect, the remedy must also be speedy, adequate, and efficacious to the end in view. It must reach the whole mischief and secure the whole right of the party in a perfect manner at the present time and not in the future. Otherwise, equity will give such relief and aid as the exigencies of the case may require [Quist v. Empire Water Co. (1928) 204 Cal. 646, 652-653, 269 P. 533 ; Hicks v. Clayton (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 251, 264, 136 Cal. Rptr. 512] .

Whether the given remedy at law is adequate is, in the first instance, a question of fact for the trial court [Hicks v. Clayton (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 251, 264, 136 Cal. Rptr. 512 (uncollectible damage award would be inadequate)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Under CCP § 634, the trial court's decision must resolve the question of the plainness, completeness, speediness, and adequacy of the legal remedy in order for the trial court's determination on that point to receive the deference on review afforded to explicitly decided issues on appeal [Hicks v. Clayton (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 251, 264, 136 Cal. Rptr. 512 (appellate court gave no favorable inference to trial court's choice of damages where trial court decision did not resolve issue)].

For Example:

- The fact that a party against whom a damage award might be sought at law is insolvent supports the inference that an award would be uncollectible and the remedy would be inadequate [Hicks v. Clayton (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 251, 264-265, 136 Cal. Rptr. 512 (damage award reversed as inadequate)].

- Repurchase of goods sold under contract with provision protecting seller from liability to third party would not provide present remedy for buyer's failure to comply with protective provision of sale [Nadell & Co. v. Grasso (1959) 175 Cal. App. 2d 420, 426, 346 P.2d 505] .

- The legal remedy of claim and delivery would be inadequate to prevent the destruction of a business by failure to provide personal property essential to the continuation of the business [Dingley v. Buckner (1909) 11 Cal. App. 181, 185, 104 P. 478] .

[3] Equity Supplanted by Statute

[a] Statute Must Be Intended to Supplant

The Legislature may supplant common law such as equity by enacting a statute that intends to do so [see In re Marriage of Plescia (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 252, 261, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 120] . Accordingly, as a matter of law, equitable principles are not applicable when the relevant statutory scheme is unambiguous and comprehensive [Foster v. Snyder (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 264, 267, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 207 ; Lass v. Eliassen (1928) 94 Cal. App. 175, 179, 270 P. 745] .

For Example:

- Equitable defenses of duress and necessity do not apply to determination of whether to suspend under Veh. Code § 13353.2(a), or uphold the suspension under Veh. Code § 13557(b)(2), of an individual's driver's license, because statutory scheme is unambiguous and comprehensive [Foster v. Snyder (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 264, 273, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 207] .

[b] Discerning Legislative Intent to Supplant Equity

Absent any indication that the Legislature intends a statute to supplant equitable principles, the courts should not give it that effect [In re Marriage of Plescia (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 252, 261, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 120 (former statute did not supplant laches defense to action for support); Lacher v. Superior Court (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 1038, 1050, 281 Cal. Rptr. 640] . The courts have applied the rules concerning the supplanting of common law rules to whether statutes supplant equitable jurisdiction [see Martin v. Superior Court (1917) 176 Cal 289, 293, 168 P 135 ("common law" includes "equity")].

Under those rules, the general rule is that statutes do not supplant the equity unless it appears that the Legislature intended to cover the entire subject or, in other words, to "occupy the field" [Lacher v. Superior Court (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 1038, 1050, 281 Cal. Rptr. 640 ; see Pacific Scene, Inc. v. Penasquitos, Inc. (1988) 46 Cal. 3d 407, 413-414, 250 Cal. Rptr. 651, 758 P.2d 1182] . General and comprehensive legislation, where course of conduct, parties, things affected, limitations and exceptions are minutely described, indicates a legislative intent that the statute should totally supersede and replace the application of equitable principles dealing with the subject matter [Pacific Scene, Inc. v. Penasquitos, Inc. (1988) 46 Cal. 3d 407, 411, 250 Cal. Rptr. 651, 758 P.2d 1182 ; Lacher v. Superior Court (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 1038, 1050, 281 Cal. Rptr. 640] .

Statutes are not presumed to alter the application of equity otherwise than the act expressly provides. Where the code is silent, the principles of equity govern as applicable. Equitable jurisdiction is not repealed by implication or otherwise, if there is no repugnancy between it and the statute, and it does not appear that the legislature intended to cover the whole subject [Lacher v. Superior Court (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 1038, 1050, 281 Cal. Rptr. 640] .

Examples Include:

- Gov. Code § 12960 supplants equitable principles applicable to the timeliness of the filing of administrative complaints alleging employment discrimination [Williams v. City of Belvedere (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 84, 92-93, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 658] .

- Doctrine of unclean hands does not protect corporation suspended under Rev. & Tax Code § 23301, providing for suspension of corporate charter for failure to pay franchise tax, from resulting disability to renew judgment against defendant for breach of contract [Timberline, Inc. v. Jaisinghani (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1361, 1368 n.5, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 4] .

- Estoppel does not apply to nonstatutory attempt to dissolve governmental entity under statutes providing complete scheme for dissolving that type of entity [Las Tunas Beach Geologic Hazard Abatement Dist. v. Superior Court (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 1002, 1014, 45 Cal. Rptr. 2d 529] .

- Equitable action by neighboring landowners for developer's fraud and deceit was not supplanted by statutes covering governmental approval of real estate development [Lacher v. Superior Court (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 1038, 1050-1051, 281 Cal. Rptr. 640] .

- Statutes on relief against former shareholders in receipt of assets of dissolved corporation supplant former equitable doctrine of trust fund theory [Pacific Scene, Inc. v. Penasquitos, Inc. (1988) 46 Cal. 3d 407, 413-414, 250 Cal. Rptr. 651, 758 P.2d 1182] .

§ 251.32 Statutory Additions to Equitable Jurisdiction

The Legislature may establish new areas of equitable jurisdiction [see Korea Supply Co. v. Lockheed Martin Corp. (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1134, 1144, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 29, 63 P.3d 937] , and may limit the extent of equitable power in those areas [Korea Supply Co. v. Lockheed Martin Corp. (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1134, 1147, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 29, 63 P.3d 937 ; Alch v. Superior Court (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 339, 403-404, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 29] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Statutes expanding statutory provisions concerning equitable jurisdiction must be examined to determine whether they actually expand equitable jurisdiction from that in the common law, or merely codify existing common law jurisdictional precedents [see Korea Supply Co. v. Lockheed Martin Corp. (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1134, 1147, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 29, 63 P.3d 937] .

Except where legislative action impinges on the exercise of fundamental judicial powers and thus violates the separation of powers doctrine [see Cal. Const., art. III, § 3], a statute may specify the remedy and/or relief available for violation of the statute and thereby limit the extent of equitable relief a court may grant [Kraus v. Trinity Management Services, Inc. (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 116, 131 n.14, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 485, 999 P.2d 718 ; Alch v. Superior Court (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 339, 405 n.73, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 29] . The court's jurisdiction extends to the limits of the jurisdiction intended by the Legislature [Kraus v. Trinity Management Services, Inc. (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 116, 131 n. 14, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 485, 999 P.2d 718 ; Alch v. Superior Court (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 339, 403, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 29] .

For Example:

- Bus. & Prof. Code § 17203 does not grant the court equitable power to grant nonrestitutionary monetary relief for unfair business practices [Kraus v. Trinity Management Services, Inc. (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 116, 137, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 485, 999 P.2d 718 ; Alch v. Superior Court (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 339, 408, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 29] .

2. Equitable Jurisdiction

21-251 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 251.33

§ 251.33 Limitation on Power to Alter Legislative Acts or Policy

[1] Equity Follows Positive Statutes

Equitable power does not intrude into matters that are plain and fully covered by positive statute. In this way, equity does not lend its aid to accomplish by indirection what the law or its clearly defined policy forbids to be done directly [Timberline, Inc. v. Jiasinghani (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1361, 1368 n.5, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 4 ; Marsh v. Edelstein (1970) 9 Cal. App.3d 132, 140-141, 88 Cal. Rptr. 26] .

Examples include:

- No court may assign an interest rate above 7 percent, the legal rate of interest under Cal. Const., Art. XV, § 1, on an implied loan agreement, even if in hearing the case it sits as a court of equity [Armstrong v. Picquelle (1984) 157 Cal. App. 3d 122, 129, 203 Cal. Rptr. 552] .

- Executor's claim of equitable conversion, based upon his payment of taxes, did not entitle him to the property because it was contrary to the law of requiring the probate of estates of deceased persons [Marsh v. Edelstein (1970) 9 Cal. App.3d 132, 140-141, 88 Cal. Rptr. 26] .

[2] Law at Time of Decision, Including on Appeal, Applies

The rights of the parties in an action in equity will be determined on the basis of the law as it exists at the time of the determination, rather than at the time the complaint was filed, and this rule applies to judgments on appeal as well as to judgments in the trial court [City of Whittier v. Walnut Properties, Inc. (1983) 149 Cal. App. 3d 633, 640, 197 Cal. Rptr. 127 ; see Kash Enterprises, Inc. v. City of Los Angeles (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 294, 306 n. 6, 138 Cal. Rptr. 53, 562 P.2d 1302 (appeal)].

Examples include:

- Injunctions [Kash Enterprises, Inc. v. City of Los Angeles (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 294, 306 n. 6, 138 Cal. Rptr. 53, 562 P.2d 1302 ; White v. Davis (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 757, 773 & n. 8, 120 Cal. Rptr. 94, 533 P.2d 222 (new constitutional provision applied on appeal)].

- Action for declaratory relief on siting of adult theatre [City of Whittier v. Walnut Properties, Inc. (1983) 149 Cal. App. 3d 633, 640, 197 Cal. Rptr. 127] .

[3] Limitation on Interfering With Legislative Acts of Municipality

Courts of equity may, and sometimes do, interfere and enjoin the action of a municipal corporation acting or proposing to act in excess of jurisdiction and without authority. It has no authority to interfere with the legislative or governmental acts within the scope of the city's authority [Muchenberger v. City of Santa Monica (1929) 206 Cal. 635, 646, 275 P. 803 ; Glide v. Superior Court, 147 Cal. 21, 23-24, 81 P. 225 ; City Council of Santa Barbara v. Superior Court of Santa Barbara County (1960) 179 Cal. App. 2d 389, 397, 3 Cal. Rptr. 796] .

2. Equitable Jurisdiction

21-251 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 251.34

§ 251.34 Power and Duty to Dispose of Complete Controversy

[1] Power to Dispose of Complete Controversy

In effecting a complete disposition of the litigation before it, a court sitting in equity can extend its jurisdiction to matters that ordinarily are subject to legal cognizance only [In re Marriage of Plescia (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 252, 258, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 120 ; St. Sava Mission Corp. v. Serbian Eastern Orthodox Diocese (1990) 223 Cal. App. 3d 1354, 1367, 273 Cal. Rptr. 340] . Where a court has taken jurisdiction of a suit in equity it may determine all legal as well as equitable issues in order to completely dispose of the matters in controversy [Day v. Sharp (1975) 50 Cal. App. 3d 904, 913, 123 Cal. Rptr. 918] . A court sitting in equity may exercise its full range of powers to accomplish complete justice between the parties, restoring if necessary the status quo ante as nearly as may be achieved [Cortez v. Purolator Air Filtration Products Co. (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 163, 177, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 518, 999 P.2d 706 ; Fletcher v. Security Pacific Nat. Bank (1979) 23 Cal. 3d 442, 452, 153 Cal. Rptr. 28, 591 P.2d 51] . The purpose of the rule is to avoid multiple litigation and to do full and complete justice [St. Sava Mission Corp. v. Serbian Eastern Orthodox Diocese (1990) 223 Cal. App. 3d 1354, 1367, 273 Cal. Rptr. 340 ; see Sears v. Rule (1945) 27 Cal. 2d 131, 149, 163 P.2d 443] .

Examples include:

- Court with jurisdiction to decide divorce proceedings has jurisdiction to quiet title of marital property in another county over which it would otherwise not have jurisdiction in a quiet title action [McClenny v. Superior Court of Los Angeles Cty. (1964) 62 Cal. 2d 140, 147-148, 41 Cal. Rptr. 460, 396 P.2d 916] .

- Even in the absence of the specific authorization contained in Bus. & Prof. Code § 17535, a trial court has the inherent power to order restitution as a form of ancillary relief [Cortez v. Purolator Air Filtration Products Co. (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 163, 177, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 518, 999 P.2d 706] .

The rule only applies, of course, when the court otherwise has jurisdiction, and therefore, this rule of judicial efficiency does not excuse a fundamental lack of personal or in rem jurisdiction [St. Sava Mission Corp. v. Serbian Eastern Orthodox Diocese (1990) 223 Cal. App. 3d 1354, 1367, 273 Cal. Rptr. 340 (trial court's exercise of subject-matter jurisdiction failed for lack of personal jurisdiction)].

PRACTICE TIP:

The fact that a court may grant even equitable relief that is not sought by a party [see § 251.12] presents an issue regarding the lack of inclusion of the relief in the pretrial order. At least where the parties received adequate notice and tried the issue of such relief, no party may question the lack of inclusion of the issue in the pretrial order on appeal [Citizens Suburban Co. v. Rosemont Development Co. (1966) 244 Cal. App. 2d 666, 684, 53 Cal. Rptr. 551] .

Furthermore, the equitable jurisdiction must not be limited by statute [People v. Superior Court (1973) 9 Cal. 3d 283, 286, 107 Cal. Rptr. 192, 507 P.2d 1400] .

Examples include:

- Nothing in the quiet title statute limits any authority the court may have to grant such equitable relief as may be proper under the circumstances of the case [Code Civ. Proc. § 760.040(c)].

- The right to demand contribution provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 883 is not the only remedy available to a nontort judgment debtor who has paid more than his or her share of a judgment. Code Civ. Proc. § 883 does not limit any other remedy that a judgment debtor entitled to contribution or repayment may have [Code Civ. Proc. § 883(c)].

For discussion of the effect of statutes on equitable jurisdiction, see §§ 251.31 -251.33.

[2] Duty to Dispose of Complete Controversy

The trial court has a fundamental duty to provide equity to all parties, and fully dispose of the issues between the parties [In re Marriage of Dancy (2000) 82 Cal. App. 4th 1142 ; 1149, 98 Cal. Rptr. 2d 775 ; In re Marriage of Plescia (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 252, 258, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 120 ; accord, Swan v. Talbot (1907) 152 Cal. 142, 147, 94 P. 238] .

21-251 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 251.35

§ 251.35 Scope of Relief

[1] Award of Any Legal or Equitable Relief Appropriate Under the Pleadings and Proof

A party is entitled to any and all relief that may be appropriate under the scope of the pleadings and within the facts alleged and proved, irrespective of the theory upon which the facts were pleaded, the title of the pleading, or what relief was sought by the prayer [Potrero Homes v. Western Orbis Co. (1972) 28 Cal. App. 3d 450, 456, 104 Cal. Rptr. 633 ; accord, Estrin v. Superior Court (1939) 14 Cal. 2d 670, 678, 96 P.2d 340] . Thus, a plaintiff may recover if the complaint states any cause of action entitling the plaintiff to any relief either at law or in equity [Estrin v. Superior Court (1939) 14 Cal. 2d 670, 677, 96 P.2d 340] .

The fact that a complaint seeks equitable relief is not a bar to a judgment for damages. Where the complaint and prayer are drawn in the form of an equitable action, but equitable relief is for some reason not available, damages may be awarded if the facts pleaded otherwise justify legal relief [Potrero Homes v. Western Orbis Co. (1972) 28 Cal. App. 3d 450, 456, 104 Cal. Rptr. 633 ; Walsh v. Macaire (1951) 102 Cal. App. 2d 435, 438-440, 227 P.2d 517 (trial court erred by failing to determine damages after specific performance proved unavailable as remedy)]. This rule also allows the court to replace part of the requested equitable relief with appropriate legal relief [see Swan v. Talbot (1907) 152 Cal. 142, 147, 94 P. 238] .

[2] Action and Judgment May Combine Legal and Equitable Relief

A suit in equity may request both legal and equitable relief. Where legal and equitable remedies are sought in the same action, each remedy is governed by the law that would apply to it if the other remedy had not been requested [Crouser v. Boice (1942) 51 Cal. App. 2d 198, 200, 124 P.2d 358] .

Thus, a judgment may award both a money judgment at law and:

- Injunctive relief [Lenard v. Edmonds (1957) 151 Cal. App. 2d 764, 769, 312 P.2d 308 (preliminary injunction); St. James Church v. Superior Court (1955) 135 Cal. App. 2d 352, 361, 287 P.2d 387] .

- Imposition of a constructive trust [Day v. Sharp (1975) 50 Cal. App. 3d 904, 911-912, 123 Cal. Rptr. 918] .

- Restitution after rescission [Runyan v. Pacific Air Industries, Inc. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 304, 318-319, 85 Cal. Rptr. 138, 466 P.2d 682 ; see Civ. Code § 1692].

- An accounting [Sears v. Rule (1945) 27 Cal. 2d 131, 148-149, 163 P.2d 443] .

- Injunction and civil penalties [People v. Superior Court (1973) 9 Cal. 3d 283, 288-289, 107 Cal. Rptr. 192, 507 P.2d 1400] .

For discussion of the effect of combining equitable and legal remedies on the right to a trial by jury, see § 251.222.

[3] Relief for Future Harm

While some older Court of Appeals cases suggested that Civ. Code § 3283 providing that "[d]amages may be awarded, in a judicial proceeding, for detriment resulting after the commencement thereof, or certain to result in the future does not apply to actions in equity" [see, e.g., Hutcherson v. Alexander (1968) 264 Cal. App. 2d 126, 134, 70 Cal. Rptr. 366 ("No statute or decision authorizes a court to abate a nuisance that is injurious to the plaintiff and then to defer judgment on the issue of past damages to a later date in order to consider evidence accumulated after the nuisance has been abated"], others have approved a court's determination of damages at such time as other proceedings established the necessary facts upon which to base a determination [see, e.g., Day v. Sharp (1975) 50 Cal. App. 3d 904, 911-912, 123 Cal. Rptr. 918 (constructive trust action)].

Furthermore, the California Supreme Court has allowed an award of future damages and indemnification from their satisfaction. The Court stated that the power to do so is included in the exercise of equitable jurisdiction to "complete justice and prevent further litigation" [Redke v. Silvertrust (1971) 6 Cal. 3d 94, 107-108, 98 Cal. Rptr. 293, 490 P.2d 805] .

§ 251.36 Retention of Equity Jurisdiction

A trial court rendering an equitable decree may reserve jurisdiction to take steps to carry it into effect [Hewlett v. Squaw Valley Ski Corp. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 499, 541, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 118 ; Estes v. Rowland (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 508, 536, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 901] . "There is nothing particularly unusual or contrary to good practice for the court in the exercise of its equity powers to retain jurisdiction of the parties and the subject matter of the action, when the circumstances of the case warrant the same, until the appropriate remedy may be finally accorded by the judgment in the action" [Universal Consol. Oil Co. v. Byram (1944) 25 Cal. 2d 353, 363, 153 P.2d 746 ; Hutcherson v. Alexander (1968) 264 Cal. App. 2d 126, 134, 70 Cal. Rptr. 366] . Jurisdiction over a cause or parties after a final judgment, order or decree is exceptional and limited to special situations, such as where the judgment reserves power to modify [Day v. Sharp (1975) 50 Cal. App. 3d 904, 911, 123 Cal. Rptr. 918] .

Examples include:

- A court possesses the inherent power to reserve jurisdiction to ensure that its injunctive orders are carried out [Estes v. Rowland (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 508, 536, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 901] .

- Order for specific performance [Hewlett v. Squaw Valley Ski Corp. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 499, 541, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 118] .

- Judgment expressly retained jurisdiction "to make such other and further orders and decrees as it may deem necessary or proper to carry out the provisions of this judgment" [Day v. Sharp (1975) 50 Cal. App. 3d 904, 911, 123 Cal. Rptr. 918] .

- Judgment expressly reserved continuing jurisdiction "to amend the judgment to insert the amount of the additional sums ... when the amounts were determined" [United States Liab. Ins. Co. v. Haidinger-Hayes, Inc. (1970) 1 Cal. 3d 586, 591, 83 Cal. Rptr. 418, 463 P.2d 770] .

"The retention of jurisdiction to meet future problems is regarded as an appropriate exercise of equitable jurisdiction in litigation over water rights, particularly when the adjustment of substantial public interests is involved" [Los Angeles v. City of Glendale (1943) 23 Cal. 2d 68, 81, 142 P.2d 289 ; Central and West Basin Water Replenishment Dist. v. Southern Cal. Water Co. (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 891, 903, 135 Cal. Rptr. 2d 486] .

21-251 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 251.37

§ 251.37 Jurisdiction to Modify Equitable Decree

[1] Whether Modification Is Limited to Mode or Procedure

[a] The General Rule

Courts of equity are recognized as having the inherent power to change the mode or procedure in executing its decrees although the decree itself specifies a particular method [Lesser & Son v. Seymour(1950) 35 Cal. 2d 494, 500, 218 P.2d 536] . Such a power to change or modify an equitable decree is limited, however, to matters of procedure only. It may not be exercised in such a fashion as to materially change a substantial adjudicated portion of the judgment [Orban Lumber Co. v. Fearrien (1966) 240 Cal. App. 2d 853, 858-859, 50 Cal. Rptr. 41] .

By contrast, jurisdiction may not be retained to materially change the adjudication of substantial issues [Bernardi v. City Council (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 426, 439 n. 12, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 347 ; Palo Alto-Menlo Park Yellow Cab Co. v. Santa Clara County Transit Dist. (1976) 65 Cal. App. 3d 121, 130, 135 Cal. Rptr. 192 ; Orban Lumber Co. v. Fearrien (1966) 240 Cal. App. 2d 853, 855-856, 50 Cal. Rptr. 41] .

[b] Exception for Changed Circumstances

Changed circumstances occurring after judgment may justify modifying an equitable decree [Union Oil Co. of Cal. v. Greka Energy Corp. (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 129, 137, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 738] . Instances in which the court has properly modified an equitable judgment based on change of circumstances include:

- When it can be shown that circumstances have so changed that an injunction is no longer necessary or desirable, the trial court has power to amend it in the interest of providing justice for all parties in interest [Union Interchange, Inc. v. Savage (1959) 52 Cal. 2d 601, 604, 342 P.2d 249 ; Palo Alto-Menlo Park Yellow Cab Co. v. Santa Clara County Transit Dist. (1976) 65 Cal. App. 3d 121, 130, 135 Cal. Rptr. 192 ; accord Estes v. Rowland (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 508, 536, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 901] .

- Trial court has discretion to consider whether changed circumstances following its judgment require modification of its order on specific performance [Union Oil Co. of Cal. v. Greka Energy Corp. (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 129, 137, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 738 ; Barnes v. Chamberlain (1983) 147 Cal. App. 3d 762, 767-768, 195 Cal. Rptr. 417] .

Modification of an order for equitable relief may only be done in accordance with requirements of due process [City of Oakland v. Superior Court (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 565, 186 Cal. Rptr. 326 (injunction)].

For discussion and forms on modification of injunctive relief, see Ch. 303, Injunctions, § 303.80 et seq.

[c] Exception for Extension of Time to Perform in Order to Prevent Forfeiture

Civ. Code § 3275, which provides generally for avoidance of forfeiture by tendering payment in full, and Civ. Code § 3369, which provides that neither specific nor preventive relief can be granted to enforce a forfeiture, allow a court to modify a decree in equity to extend the time for payment, in order to avoid a forfeiture on the part of the obligor, whether the court has reserved judgment to do so or not [Leslie v. Federal Finance Co., Inc. (1939) 14 Cal. 2d 73, 78-81, 92 P.2d 906] .

For discussion of equitable remedies preventing forfeiture, see § 251.101.

[d] Exception for Mode of Court-Ordered Sale of Property

A trial court may modify an order for the sale of property with [Lesser & Son v. Seymour (1950) 35 Cal. 2d 494, 499, 218 P.2d 536] or without [Bechtel v. Wier (1907) 152 Cal. 443, 445-446, 93 P. 75] an express reservation in the judgment of jurisdiction to do so.

For discussion and forms on execution sales, see Ch. 254, Executions and Enforcement of Judgments, § 254.80 et seq.

[2] Whether Reservation of Jurisdiction Is Necessary for Modification of Mode or Procedure

[a] Differences Among Courts

In instances not involving the exceptions discussed in §§ 251.37[1][b] -[d], whether the trial court must expressly reserve in its judgment the jurisdiction to modify the mode or procedure in the judgment in order for it to modify the judgment in that manner has been a point of contention among California courts [Barnes v. Chamberlain (1983) 147 Cal. App. 3d 762, 768, 195 Cal. Rptr. 417] .

Courts of Appeal have ruled that a court sitting in equity has inherent power to make its decree effective by additional orders affecting the details of performance, irrespective of reservation of power in the decree [see, e.g., Barnes v. Chamberlain (4th Dist., 1983) 147 Cal. App. 3d 762, 767, 768, 195 Cal. Rptr. 417 ; Hercules Glue Co., Ltd. v. Littooy (1st Dist., 1941) 45 Cal. App. 2d 42, 45, 113 P.2d 490] . The California Supreme Court has stated that courts exercising equitable jurisdiction have the inherent power, with or without an express reservation of such right in the judgment, to change the mode or procedure in executing its decrees generally when the principles and compelling necessities of a case require it [see Lesser & Son v. Seymour(1950) 35 Cal. 2d 494, 500, 218 P.2d 536] . However, that statement qualifies as dictum, because the case decided involved a decision modified in accordance with a reservation of jurisdiction to do so [Lesser & Son v. Seymour (1950) 35 Cal. 2d 494, 497-498, 218 P.2d 536] .

Other recent Court of Appeals decisions have called for the reservation of the jurisdiction to implement a decree with respect to procedural details or mode of relief [Bernardi v. City Council (2nd Dist., 1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 426, 439 n. 12, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 347 ; Orban Lumber Co. v. Fearrien (1st Dist., 1966) 240 Cal. App. 2d 853, 855-856, 50 Cal. Rptr. 41] .

[b] Examples

Examples of modifications that are only procedural in character and were allowed without a reservation of jurisdiction include:

- Whether to appoint receiver [Gold v. Gold (2003) 114 Cal. App. 4th 791, 806-809, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 118] .

- Orders to ensure performance of complex mutually interrelated escrow terms and conditions of decree of sale of property [Barnes v. Chamberlain (1983) 147 Cal. App. 3d 762, 768-769, 195 Cal. Rptr. 417] .

- Payment of additional expenses incurred pending appeal from the decree [Hercules Glue Co., Ltd. v. Littooy (1941) 45 Cal. App. 2d 42, 45, 113 P.2d 490] .

Examples of modifications that are only procedural in character and were allowed under a reservation of jurisdiction include:

- Changing the mode of judicially ordered sale of real property [Lesser & Son v. Seymour, 35 Cal. 2d 494, 218 P.2d 536 (1950)] .

- Time for execution [Gibson v. River Farms, Co. (1942) 49 Cal. App. 2d 278, 286, 121 P.2d 504 ("equity abhors forfeitures")].

Examples of modifications that are not procedural, but are substantive in character include:

- The fiscal cap and debt deadline of validating judgment on a business district redevelopment plan under Health & Saf. Code § 33503 [Bernardi v. City Council (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 426, 439 n. 12, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 347] .

- Modification of community property distribution by applying the same percentage division of newly discovered pension assets as applied to partial pension benefits covered by the original judgment [In re Marriage of Melton (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 931, 938-939, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 761] .

- Extension of contract term by amount of time preliminary injunction preventing performance is in effect [Orban Lumber Co. v. Fearrien (1966) 240 Cal. App. 2d 853, 858-859, 50 Cal. Rptr. 41] .

§ 251.50 Maxims Aid in Just Application of Civil Code

The equitable maxims set forth in Part 4, Div. 4 of the Civil Code are intended not to qualify the other provisions of the Civil Code, but to aid in their just application [Civ Code § 3509]. To aid in the just application of the Civil Code, the maxims may be applied to provide a remedy once a court determines that a plaintiff is entitled to relief under another Code provision [Halperin v. Raville (1986) 176 Cal. App. 3d 765, 772 n. 3, 222 Cal. Rptr. 350] . A resulting principle is that a maxim may not nullify a statute [Lass v. Eliassen (1928) 94 Cal. App. 175, 179, 270 P. 745 ; Timberline, Inc. v. Jaisinghani (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1361, 1368 n.5, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 4] .

The most common maxims of jurisprudence are discussed in the following sections, supported by either statute or case law. The codified maxims below are found in Civil Code § 3509, et seq., and all were enacted in 1872, except the last four which were added in 1966:

- The maxims of jurisprudence hereinafter set forth are intended not to qualify any of the foregoing provisions of this code, but to aid in their just application [Civ. Code § 3509].

- When the reason of a rule ceases, so should the rule itself [Civ. Code § 3510].

- Where the reason is the same, the rule should be the same [Civ. Code § 3511].

- One must not change his purpose to the injury of another [Civ. Code § 3512].

- Anyone may waive the advantage of a law intended solely for his benefit. But a law established for a public reason cannot be contravened by a private agreement [Civ. Code § 3513].

- One must so use his own rights as not to infringe upon the rights of another [Civ. Code § 3514].

- He who consents to an act is not wronged by it [Civ. Code § 3515].

- Acquiescence in error takes away the right of objecting to it [Civ. Code § 3516].

- No one can take advantage of his own wrong [Civ. Code § 3517].

- He who has fraudulently dispossessed himself of a thing may be treated as if he still had possession [Civ. Code § 3518].

- He who can and does not forbid that which is done on his behalf, is deemed to have bidden it [Civ. Code § 3519].

- No one should suffer by the act of another [Civ. Code § 3520].

- He who takes the benefit must bear the burden [Civ. Code § 3521].

- One who grants a thing is presumed to grant also whatever is essential to its use [Civ. Code § 3522].

- For every wrong there is a remedy [Civ. Code § 3523].

- Between those who are equally in the right, or equally in the wrong, the law does not interpose [Civ. Code § 3524].

- Between rights otherwise equal, the earliest is preferred [Civ. Code § 3525].

- No man is responsible for that which no man can control [Civ. Code § 3526].

- The law helps the vigilant, before those who sleep on their rights [Civ. Code § 3527].

- The law respects form less than substance [Civ. Code § 3528].

- That which ought to have been done is to be regarded as done, in favor of him to whom, and against him from whom, performance is due [Civ. Code § 3529].

- That which does not appear to exist is to be regarded as if it did not exist [Civ. Code § 3530].

- The law never requires impossibilities [Civ. Code § 3531].

- The law neither does nor requires idle acts [Civ. Code § 3532].

- The law disregards trifles [Civ. Code § 3533].

- Particular expressions qualify those which are general [Civ. Code § 3534].

- Contemporaneous exposition is in general the best [Civ. Code § 3535].

- The greater contains the less [Civ. Code § 3536].

- Superfluity does not vitiate [Civ. Code § 3537].

- That is certain which can be made certain [Civ. Code § 3538].

- Time does not confirm a void act [Civ. Code § 3539].

- The incident follows the principal, and not the principal the incident [Civ. Code § 3540].

- An interpretation which gives effect is preferred to one which makes void [Civ. Code § 3541].

- Interpretation must be reasonable [Civ. Code § 3542].

- Where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the act of a third, he, by whose negligence it happened, must be the sufferer [Civ. Code § 3543].

- Private transactions are fair and regular [Civ. Code § 3545].

- Things happen according to the ordinary course of nature and the ordinary habits of life [Civ. Code § 3546].

- A thing continues to exist as long as is usual with things of that nature [Civ. Code § 3547].

- The law has been obeyed [Civ. Code § 3548].

21-251 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 251.51

§ 251.51 For Every Wrong There Is a Remedy

For every wrong there is a remedy [Civ Code § 3523]. Where persons are subjected to certain conduct by others that is unfair and contrary to public policy, courts have full power to afford necessary protection in absence of a statutory remedy [Williams v International Brotherhood of Boilermakers (1946) 27 Cal. 2d 586, 590, 165 P.2d 903] . For these purposes, a remedy must in some degree be commensurate with the injury inflicted [Siminoff v Jas. H. Goodman & Co. Bank (1912) 18 Cal. App. 5, 14, 121 P 939] .

This maxim underlies the power of equity to invent new methods of relief for new types of wrongs [Shapiro v. Sutherland (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 1534, 1552, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 101] . Accordingly, equity acts in order to meet the requirements of every case, and to satisfy the needs of a progressive social condition, in which new primary rights and duties are constantly arising, and new kinds of wrongs are constantly committed [Hirshfield v. Schwartz (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 749, 771, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 861 ; Estate of Vargas (1974) 36 Cal. App. 3d 714, 718, 111 Cal. Rptr. 779] .

For example:

- The "doctrine of relation," by which an act done at one time is considered, by a fiction of law, to have been done at some antecedent period, is a doctrine of both equitable and legal cognizance, and may be promulgated for the purpose of promoting justice or preventing injustice and is applicable where several proceedings are essential to complete a particular transaction. When it is invoked the doctrine must be based on some antecedent lawful right, and when there is otherwise no remedy. The doctrine may be used to place an initiative on the ballot past the cut off date when the proponent has satisfied all election requirements, but the initiative is declared ineligible due to government clerical error. MHC Financing Ltd. Partnership Two v. City of Santee (2005) 125 Cal. App. 4th 1372, 23 Cal. Rptr. 3d 622

For discussion of equitable power to fashion unique remedies, see § 251.13.

21-251 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 251.52

§ 251.52 That Which Ought to Have Been Done Is to Be Regarded as Done

That which ought to have been done is to be regarded as done, in favor of the person to whom, and against the person from whom, performance is due [Civ. Code § 3529; Beckwith v. Sheldon (1914) 168 Cal. 742, 746, 145 P. 97 ; Palos Verdes Properties v. County Sanitation Dist. Number 5 (1960) 177 Cal. App. 2d 679, 691, 2 Cal. Rptr. 537] . Under this maxim, equity looks upon things agreed to be done as actually performed, and will treat the subject matter as to collateral consequences and incidents in the same manner as if the final acts contemplated by the parties had been executed exactly as they ought to have been [Poultry Producers of Central Cal. v Nilsson (1925) 197 Cal. 245, 254, 239 P. 1086 ; Beverly v Blackwood (1894) 102 Cal. 83, 91-92, 36 P. 378] .

Examples include:

- Under this maxim, to complete the purchase of property for which nothing remains to be done excepting the execution and delivery of the necessary document of title and its acceptance and payment therefor by defendant, the court may specifically direct the parties to perform acts and execute documents necessary to fully effectuate a transference of title to the property [Palos Verdes Properties v. County Sanitation Dist. Number 5 (1960) 177 Cal. App. 2d 679, 690-691, 2 Cal. Rptr. 537] .

- Under this maxim, where a party agrees to give a mortgage or lien on property, or imperfectly attempts to execute that mortgage or lien, upon a valuable consideration received, a court sitting in equity, upon a proper showing, can create a specific lien on the property intended to be encumbered [Beckwith v. Sheldon (1914) 168 Cal. 742, 746-747, 145 P. 97] .

- In dealing with constructive trusts, which are creatures of equity, courts will disregard mere form, and will ascertain and act on the substance of things, regarding that as done which should have been done [Edwards-Town, Inc. v Dimin (1970) 9 Cal. App. 3d 87, 94, 87 Cal. Rptr. 726] .

The doctrine of equitable conversion is a mere fiction that rests on this maxim [Lang v. Klinger (1973) 34 Cal. App. 3d 987, 992, 110 Cal. Rptr. 532 ; Mamula v McCulloch (1969) 275 Cal. App. 2d 184, 193, 79 Cal. Rptr. 571] .

For discussion of equitable conversion, see § 251.181. For discussion of equitable mortgages, see § 251.212. For discussion of constructive trusts, see § 251.111. For discussion of specific performance, see § 251.201.

The maxim is not applicable where the party has, for consideration, waived that which is claimed ought to have been done [Smith v Central & Pac. Improv. Corp. (1919) 45 Cal. App. 384, 394, 187 P. 456] .

3. Equitable Maxims for Obtaining Relief on Claims in Equity

21-251 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 251.52A

§ 251.52A One Who Seeks Equity Must Be Willing to Do Equity

One who seeks equity must be willing to do equity [Cortez v. Purolator Air Filtration Prods. Co. (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 163, 180, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 518 ; 999 P.2d 706 ; Farmers Ins. Exchange v. Zerin (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 445, 453, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 707] . This maxim stems from the paramount principle that equity is, peculiarly, a forum of conscience [Cortez v. Purolator Air Filtration Prods. Co. (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 163, 180, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 518 ; 999 P.2d 706 ; In re Marriage of Plescia (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 252, 257-258, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 120] .

This maxim means that a court will not grant equitable relief to one party unless that party acknowledges the equitable claims or defenses of the adverse party that grow out of the same subject matter [Dickson, Carlson & Campillo v. Pole (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 436, 445-446, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 678 ; In re Marriage of Plescia (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 252, 258, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 120] . Accordingly, under this maxim, a court can compel a plaintiff seeking equitable relief to accommodate the equities favoring the defendant by conditioning the plaintiff's relief upon the enforcement of those equities [Dickson, Carlson & Campillo v. Pole (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 436, 446, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 678] . At the same time, the application of this maxim does not allow the court to create substantive rights under the guise of doing equity, that is, it does not confer rights when the one who invokes it has none [Stein v. Simpson (1951) 37 Cal. 2d 79, 83, 230 P.2d 816 ; In re Marriage of Umphrey (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 647, 658, 267 Cal. Rptr. 218] .

For discussion of failure to do equity as a defense, see § 251.150.

§ 251.53 Equity Is Equality

Between those who are equally in the right, or equally in the wrong, the law does not interpose [Civ. Code § 3524]. Equality is equity [Crowell v. Gilmore (1861) 18 Cal. 370, 372 (unsecured creditors have equal standing among themselves for debtor's assets)].

Examples include:

- Under this maxim, the governing principle is that where equally innocent persons have dealt with one another under a mistake, the burden of loss resulting from the common error will ordinarily be left where the parties themselves have placed it, and a recovery can only be had where in equity and good conscience a defendant should be called upon to refund [Frontier Refining Co. v Home Bank (1969) 272 Cal. App. 2d 630, 636, 77 Cal. Rptr. 641] .

- Equity will not aid one party or another to an illegal transaction where they stand in pari delicto, but will leave them just where it finds them, to settle their differences without aid of the court [Colby v Title Ins. & Trust Co. (1911) 160 Cal. 632, 640, 117 P. 913] . Where, however, the party seeking the relief is not a free moral agent, and his or her consent to the illegal transaction is obtained through duress, menace, or undue influence, the party is not regarded as in pari delicto with the person obtaining his or her consent by the employment of such means, and will not be precluded from invoking affirmative relief in equity [Colby v Title Ins. & Trust Co. (1911) 160 Cal. 632, 640-641, 117 P. 913] .

§ 251.54 Equity Respects Form Less Than Substance

The law respects form less than substance [Civ. Code § 3528]. Under this maxim, equity looks beyond the form of the transaction, and will grant such relief as is necessary to carry out the true intent of the parties. For the purpose of determining that intent, the court will consider all of the facts and circumstances of the transaction [Ephraim v. Metropolitan Trust Co. (1946) 28 Cal. 2d 824, 172 P.2d 501] . Equity deals with the substance of transactions, and treats their forms as of secondary importance [Lencioni v Fidelity Trust & Sav. Bank (1928) 95 Cal. App. 490, 497-498, 273 P. 103] . A court sitting in equity is bound to consider substance over form [In re Marriage of Umphrey (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 647, 657, 267 Cal. Rptr. 218] .

Examples include:

- A court exercising equity jurisdiction may view the conduct of the parties rather than the terms of the written instrument in order to ascertain their true intent [In re Marriage of Umphrey (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 647, 657, 267 Cal. Rptr. 218 ; McCafferty v. Gilbank (1967) 249 Cal. App. 2d 569, 575, 57 Cal. Rptr. 695] .

- Acts of individuals will be recognized as being those of corporations to prevent fraud, protect the rights of third persons, and accomplish justice [Wenban Estate, Inc. v. Hewlett (1924) 193 Cal. 675, 696, 227 P. 723 ; County of San Mateo v. Consolidated Farms, Inc. (1959) 169 Cal. App. 2d 735, 738, 337 P.2d 840] .

§ 251.55 Between Rights Otherwise Equal, the Earliest Is Preferred

Between rights otherwise equal, the earliest is preferred [Civ. Code § 3525]. The time of creation, however, is the last element for consideration when determining the priority of equitable claims, and a plaintiff's claim can predominate by reason of antedating intervener's equity only if the two interests are in all other respects equal. Interests are equal in equity when each is entitled to the same recognition and protection by reason of possessing to an equal degree those elements of right and justice which are recognized and aided by courts of equity [Smitton v. McCullough (1920) 182 Cal. 530, 534, 535, 189 P. 686 ; Pangborn Plumbing Corp. v. Carruthers & Skiffington (2002) 97 Cal. App. 4th 1039, 1049-1050, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 416] .

21-251 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 251.56

§ 251.56 Equity Helps the Vigilant, Before Those Who Sleep on Their Rights

The law helps the vigilant, before those who sleep on their rights [Civ. Code § 3527]. Under this maxim, equity frowns upon stale demands and declines to aid those who have slept on their rights. From this maxim is derived the defense of laches [Piscioneri v. City of Ontario (2002) 95 Cal. App. 4th 1037, 1046, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 38 ; In re Marriage of Plescia (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 252, 256, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 120] . It is also the basis for the rule of equitable estoppel to the effect that estoppel may arise from silence where there is a duty to speak [see Russell v. Dopp (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 765, 781-782, 42 Cal. Rptr. 2d 768] .

For discussion of the defense of laches, see § 251.142. For discussion of equitable estoppel, see §§ 251.161, 251.170[2].

§ 251.57 Equity Follows the Law

Equity follows the law. A court of equity cannot grant relief that the law denies [Abouab v. City and County of San Francisco (2006) 141 Cal. App. 4th 643, 673, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 206 ; Johnson v. Tago, Inc. (1986) 188 Cal. App. 3d 507, 518, 233 Cal. Rptr. 503] .

Neither a fiction nor a maxim may nullify a statute [Lass v. Eliassen (1928) 94 Cal. App. 175, 179, 270 P. 745 ; Timberline, Inc. v. Jaisinghani (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1361, 1368 n.5, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 4] . Principles of equity cannot be used to avoid a statutory mandate [Jiagbogu v. Mercedes-Benz USA (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 1235, 1244, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 679 ; *Ghory v. 21-251 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 251.58

§ 251.58 No One Can Take Advantage of His or Her Own Wrong

[1] Improper Conduct

No one can take advantage of his or her own wrong [Civ. Code § 3517]. The prestatutory version of the maxim sets forth that one who comes to court seeking equity must come with clean hands [see Jay Bharat Developers, Inc. v. Minidis (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 437, 445, 84 Cal. Rptr. 3d 267]. Under this maxim, it is the duty of a court exercising equity jurisdiction, whenever it is suggested that a plaintiff is guilty of fraudulent or otherwise improper conduct with respect to his or her claim, to inquire into the facts of the alleged conduct. This rule necessarily presupposes, however, that the facts indicating improper conduct on the part of the plaintiff are properly before the court [Moss Estate Co. v. Adler (1953) 41 Cal. 2d 581, 584, 261 P.2d 732] .

Examples include:

- This maxim is the basis for the equitable doctrine of "clean hands" and the equitable defense of "unclean hands" [Jay Bharat Developers, Inc. v. Minidis (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 437, 445, 84 Cal. Rptr. 3d 267 ; In re Brandie W. (1984) 157 Cal. App. 3d 110, 113, 203 Cal. Rptr. 537] .

- The rule that a defendant may be equitably estopped from asserting the statute of limitations when, as a result of intentional concealment, the plaintiff is unable to discover the defendant's actual identity is based on the maxim that one may not profit from one's own wrongdoing [Bernson v. Browning-Ferris Industries (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 926, 936, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 440, 873 P.2d 613] .

- In nuisance actions, the party causing the alleged nuisance may not avoid damages by offering or even have admitted into evidence an offer to buy the property of the complaining party at its market value, because that would allow the perpetrator to gain the advantage of obtaining the other party's property as a result of having created the nuisance [McIvor v. Mercer-Fraser Co. (1946) 76 Cal. App. 2d 247, 251-252, 172 P.2d 758] .

For discussion of defense of unclean hands, see § 251.141. For discussion of equitable estoppel as defense to defense of statute of limitations, see § 251.170[2].

[2] Illegal Acts

A court sitting in equity will not lend assistance to persons whose claim for relief rests on an illegal transaction [MW Erectors, Inc. v. Niederhauser Ornamental & Metal Works Co., Inc. (2005) 36 Cal.4th 412, 435, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 755, 115 P.3d 41 (building contract illegal due to subcontractor's lack of license); California Phys. Serv. v. Aoki Diabetes Research Inst. (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 1506, 1516, 78 Cal. Rptr. 3d 646 (illegal services contract); see, e.g., Goldstein v. Enoch (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 891, 897, 57 Cal. Rptr. 19] . Where, however, the party seeking the relief is not a free moral agent, and his or her consent to the illegal transaction is obtained through duress, menace, or undue influence, the party is not regarded as in pari delicto with the person obtaining his or her consent by the employment of such means, and will not be precluded from invoking affirmative relief in equity [Colby v Title Ins. & Trust Co. (1911) 160 Cal. 632, 640-641, 117 P. 913] . Similarly, the maxim does not apply where the failure to restrain an act because the parties are in pari delicto would result in permitting an act declared by statute to be void or against public policy [Jomicra, Inc. v. California Mobile Home Dealers Assn. (1970) 12 Cal. App. 3d 396, 402, 90 Cal. Rptr. 696 ; Kofsky v. Smart & Final Iris Co. (1955) 131 Cal. App. 2d 530, 532, 281 P.2d 5] .

For discussion of exceptions under which illegal contracts are enforceable despite the illegality, see Ch. 140, Contracts, §§ 140.24[6].

For discussion of illegal contracts and the affirmative defense based on the illegality, see Ch. 140, Contracts, §§ 140.24, 140.63. For form of complaint for action in conversion arising from illegal contract, see Ch. 140, Contracts, § 140.144[5]. For form of affirmative defense to a building contract of nonlicensed status of subcontractor, see Ch. 104, Building Contracts, § 104.217.

§ 251.59 One Who Takes the Benefit Must Bear the Burden

The one who takes the benefit must bear the burden [Civ. Code § 3521]. This maxim has found application in at least three legal contexts:

- Contracts--e.g., no person may adopt that part of an entire transaction that is beneficial to him or her, and then reject its burdens [Peers v. McLaughlin (1891) 88 Cal. 294, 299, 26 P. 119 ; Halperin v. Raville (1986) 176 Cal. App. 3d 765, 772, 222 Cal. Rptr. 350 ; see Jans v Nelson (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 848, 857, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 106 (maxim underlies requirement of contribution among co-obligors)].

- Liability for tort or fraud of others--e.g., the principal is liable for the fraud of an agent [Mathews v Wilson (1918) 38 Cal. App. 148, 151-152, 175 P. 647] , and a fiduciary trust estate may be required to respond in damages for the trustee's tortious acts to the extent that the estate has been enriched thereby [Alphonzo E. Bell Corp. v Bell View Oil Syndicate (1941) 46 Cal. App. 2d 684, 689, 116 P.2d 786] .

- Possession and use of property [Soman Properties, Inc. v. Rikuo Corp. (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 471, 486, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 427 ; Bastanchury v. Times-Mirror Co. (1945) 68 Cal. App. 2d 217, 240, 156 P.2d 488] .

§ 251.60 Loss Falls on One Who Made Wrongdoer's Act Possible

Where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the act of a third, the one, by whose negligence it happened, must suffer [Civ. Code § 3543]. The concept of this maxim is basically an estoppel theory, addressing comparative fault between two innocent victims. It is based upon misplaced confidence by one victim resulting in victimization of the other: Misplaced confidence is negligence within the maxim and has resulted in the estoppel of a true owner from asserting title against an innocent party. The maxim applies to bona fide purchasers for value from those who have been clothed with the indicia of ownership. For although the true owner is guilty of no more than misplaced confidence, such misplaced confidence is negligence within the meaning of the maxim [South Beverly Wilshire Jewelry & Loan v. Superior Court (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 74, 81, 16 Cal. Rptr. 3d 710 ; Wurzl v. Holloway (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 1740, 1752, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 512] .

The equitable maxim that, of two innocent parties injured by the act of a third party, the careless party should bear loss has no application when there is a measure of carelessness on the part of both parties [Collins v Home Sav. & Loan Asso. (1962) 205 Cal. App. 2d 86, 101, 22 Cal. Rptr. 817] .

For discussion of estoppel, see § 251.161.

§ 251.61 Equity Abhors Multiplicity of Action

Equity abhors a multiplicity of actions [In re Marriage of Davis (1977) 68 Cal. App. 3d 294, 304, 137 Cal. Rptr. 265 ; Pacific Engine & Machine Works v. Superior Court of State of Cal., In and For Del Norte Cty. (1955) 132 Cal. App. 2d 739, 744, 282 P.2d 937] . The law reduces to the minimum the number of actions that may subsist between the same parties [Pacific Engine & Machine Works v. Superior Court of State of Cal., In and For Del Norte Cty. (1955) 132 Cal. App. 2d 739, 744, 282 P.2d 937 ; Rilcoff v. Superior Court (1942) 50 Cal. App. 2d 503, 506, 123 P.2d 540] .

Examples:

- There are two general classes of cases in which injunctions are issued to prevent a multiplicity of actions, namely, those in which many claims which have not been adjudicated are brought into equity to be made the subject of a single trial and decree, and those that are enjoined because they are shown to be vexatious suits upon causes of action that have been settled by former adjudication [Verdier v. Verdier (1962) 203 Cal. App. 2d 724, 735, 22 Cal. Rptr. 93] .

- Intervenor [In re Marriage of Davis (1977) 68 Cal. App. 3d 294, 304, 137 Cal. Rptr. 265] .

- Writ of mandate commanded trial court to recommence California action filed after Oregon action, upon finding that trial court improperly stayed California action, in that California action provided only forum in which final judgment would be had in controversy between the parties [*Pacific Engine & Machine Works v. 21-251 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 251.62

§ 251.62 Equity Abhors Forfeitures

Just as the law abhors forfeitures [Enfantino v. Superior Court (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 1110 ; 1113, 208 Cal. Rptr. 829] , so, too, does equity [Hopkins v. Woodward (1932) 216 Cal. 619, 622, 15 P.2d 499 ; Peak-Las Positas Partners v. Michael Bollag (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 101, 106, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 775 ; Carroll v. Import Motors, Inc. (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 1429, 1437, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 791] . By statute, an authorization of forfeiture "must be strictly interpreted against the party for whose benefit it is created" [Civ. Code § 1442].

The fact that equity abhors forfeitures does not with nothing more excuse a person from complying with the law [Martell v. Antelope Valley Hospital Medical Center (2001) 67 Cal. App. 4th 978, 984-985, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 329 (statute of limitation not avoided by equity); *Carroll v. Import Motors, Inc. (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 1429, 1437, 39 Cal. B. Equitable Causes of Action

§ 251.70 Cancellation of Instruments

[1] Elements of Cause of Action

To establish a cause of action for cancellation under Civ. Code § 3412, a plaintiff must establish [Wiard v. Brown (1881) 59 Cal. 194, 197] :

- The existence of a facially valid [Civ. Code § 3413] instrument of writing, and
- The instrument:
  - Has been obtained without consideration,
  - Has become a nullity, or
  - If left outstanding, may:
    - Cause serious injury to plaintiff,
    - Be vexatiously used against plaintiff, after the evidence to impeach or invalidate it is lost, or
    - Throw a cloud or suspicion over plaintiff's title.

The statute specifically refers to instruments that are "void or voidable" [see Civ. Code § 3412], a distinction that affects the specifics of the available remedy [see § 107.C3[4]].

For discussion of grounds for cancellation, including by consent of the parties, see Ch. 107, Cancellation of Instruments

, § 107.11. For discussion of establishing the possibility of serious injury to the plaintiff, see Ch. 107, Cancellation of Instruments, § 107.14. For discussion of the distinction between void and voidable instruments and its effects, see Ch. 107, Cancellation of Instruments, § 107.13. For form of complaint for cancellation of instrument and related forms, see Ch. 107, Cancellation of Instruments, § 107.60 et seq.

[2] Types of Instruments That May Be Cancelled

Instruments that may be reformed in equity include, among others:

- Applications of a contractual nature [see Klombies v. Weeks Poultry Community (1932) 121 Cal. App. 175, 8 P.2d 940] .

- Assignments [see Lentz v. Hartman (1941) 43 Cal. App. 2d 609, 111 P.2d 404] .

- Bills of sale for personal property [see Bland v. Kelley (1945) 69 Cal. App. 2d 116, 158 P.2d 206] .

- Consent to the marriage of a minor child [see Turner v. Turner (1959) 167 Cal. App. 2d 636, 334 P.2d 1011] .

- Deeds [see Smith v. Williams (1961) 55 Cal. 2d 617, 12 Cal. Rptr. 665, 361 P.2d 241] .

- Executory contracts for the sale of personal property [see Matlin v. Crescent Commercial Corp. (1949) 93 Cal. App. 2d 8, 207 P.2d 873] .

- Leases [see Oswald v. El Centro (1930) 211 Cal. 45, 292 P. 1073] .

- Options [see Bard v. Kent (1942) 19 Cal. 2d 449, 122 P.2d 8] .

- Promissory notes and security instruments [see Fleming v. Kagan (1961) 189 Cal. App. 2d 791, 11 Cal. Rptr. 737] .

- Reconveyances by a trustee under a deed of trust [see Phelps v. American Mortgage Co. (1936) 6 Cal. 2d 604, 59 P.2d 95] .

- Releases from liability [see O'Meara v. Haiden (1928) 204 Cal. 354, 268 P. 334] .

- Stock certificates [see Noble v. Learned (1908) 153 Cal. 245, 94 P. 1047] .

- Written agreements which purport to be contracts but are not because there was no meeting of the minds [see Patterson v. Clifford F. Reid, Inc. (1933) 132 Cal. App. 454, 23 P.2d 35] . or

- Written relinquishment of child for adoption if a parent has been induced by fraud, duress, or undue influence (or other means) to sign the relinquishment [see Brooks v. Los Angeles County Bureau of Adoptions (1963) 218 Cal. App. 2d 732, 32 Cal. Rptr. 466] .

[3] Defenses to Request for Cancellation

Defenses to a request for the equitable remedy of cancellation of an instrument include:

- Defendant is not connected with fraud, duress, menace, or undue influence rendering the instrument void or voidable [see Carroll v. Carroll (1940) 16 Cal. 2d 761, 770-771, 108 P.2d 420] .

- Plaintiff's failure to act promptly to rescind the underlying transaction, after discovering the facts making voidable instrument voidable [see Leeper v. Beltrami (1959) 53 Cal. 2d 195, 215, 1 Cal. Rptr. 12, 347 P.2d 12] .

- Unclean hands [see Taylor v. Taylor (1944) 66 Cal. App. 2d 390, 399-400, 152 P.2d 480] .

- Plaintiff's waiver of right to rescind transaction underlying voidable instrument [see Mobley v. Richfield Oil Corp. (1942) 53 Cal. App. 2d 406, 410, 128 P.2d 105] .

- Instrument is apparently invalid on its face or face of another instrument [Civ. Code § 3413].

- Cancellation would cause defendant to suffer forfeiture [see § 251.70[4][b].

For discussion of defenses to a request for cancellation of an instrument, see Ch. 107, Cancellation of Instruments, § 107.18.

[4] Cancellation as Remedy

[A] Remedy for Cancellation Dependent on Status of Instrument

If the instrument is void or voidable, the court will declare it so and afford relief by ordering it to be delivered up and cancelled [Civ. Code § 3412; Wiard v. Brown (1881) 59 Cal. 194, 197] . However, where an instrument is voidable, rather than void [see § 251.C3[1]], the plaintiff in an action for cancellation of it must generally offer to restore to the defendant everything of value that the plaintiff has received in the underlying transaction, less damages sustained [see Fleming v. Kagan (1961) 189 Cal. App. 2d 791, 796-798, 11 Cal. Rptr. 737] .

A lost instrument that would be subject to cancellation clearly cannot be canceled under the plain language of Civ. Code § 3412. However, on proper application, the instrument may be adjudged void [see Civ. Code § 3412; Brown v. Anderson-Cottonwood Irrigation Dist. (1920) 183 Cal. 186, 189, 190 P. 797] .

Where an instrument is evidence of different rights or obligations, it may be canceled in part and allowed to stand as to the part remaining uncanceled [Civ. Code § 3414].

For discussion of void and voidable instruments, lost instruments, and partial cancellation of instruments, see Ch. 107, Cancellation of Instruments, §§ 107.12, 107.13, 107.15.

[b] With Other Remedies

Cancellation differs from rescission in that rescission involves the restoration of the parties to their former positions, whereas cancellation of a contract leaves the parties where they are when it is canceled [see Mamula v. McCulloch (1969) 275 Cal. App. 2d 184, 197, 79 Cal. Rptr. 571] . Accordingly, cancellation of an instrument may be had in an action for restitution [see, e.g., Millar v. James (1967) 254 Cal. App. 2d 530, 532, 534, 62 Cal. Rptr. 335] .

If the effect of canceling a contract is that the defendant would suffer a forfeiture, forfeiture must be prevented by requiring restoration as a condition of cancellation, in which case cancellation of the writing that evidences the contract would be in effect a rescission and restitution [see Ebbert v. Mercantile Trust Co. (1931) 213 Cal. 496, 499-501, 2 P.2d 776] .

For discussion of restitution after rescission, see § 251.110.

For discussion of remedy of cancellation in combination with other remedies, see Ch. 107, Cancellation of Instruments, § 107.11.

21-251 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 251.71

§ 251.71 Quieting Title

[1] Grounds for Quieting Title

[a] Under Code Civ. Proc. § 760.010

If one person claims to be the owner of an interest in property, and another person claims to be the owner of an interest in the same property, and the two claims conflict, either may sue the other for a judgment resolving that conflict with the equitable relief [see Santoro v. Carbone (1972) 22 Cal. App. 3d 721, 731, 99 Cal. Rptr. 488] of quieting title [see Code Civ. Proc. § 760.010]. For these purposes, a "claim" is a legal or equitable right, title, estate, lien, or interest in property or cloud on title [Code Civ. Proc. § 760.010(a)], and "property" includes real property and, to the extent applicable, personal property [Code Civ. Proc. § 760.010(b)].

PRACTICE TIP:

When a dispute arises as to ownership of the present interest, and one claimant has, while the other claimant (holder of an equitable interest only) lacks, record title, a quiet title action is inappropriate. Instead, the plaintiff should sue for a judgment declaring the defendant to be the owner as a resulting or a constructive trustee only, and directing the defendant to transfer ownership to the plaintiff [see, e.g., Nevarez v. Nevarez (1962) 202 Cal. App. 2d 596, 21 Cal. Rptr. 70] .

For discussion of the nature of quiet title actions under Code Civ. Proc. § 760.010, see Ch. 482, Quieting Title, §§ 482.12 -482.14. For discussion of disposed party's establishment of title in quiet title action, see Ch. 482, Quieting Title, § 482.23. For forms of complaint for quieting title under Code Civ. Proc. § 760.010 and related motions and orders, see Ch. 482, Quieting Title, §§ 482.80, 482.81, 482.84 -482.85, 482.87.

[b] Under Other Statutes

Specific statutes provide for quieting title against:

- In the case of tax-defaulted property:
  - The tax default after the defaulting owner redeems [see Rev. & Tax. Code § 4113], or
  - The right of redemption after a bona fide purchaser or his or her successor acquires the property at tax sale [see Rev. & Tax. Code §§ 3727, 3950].
- Tax lien for canceled state, county, or city taxes [see Rev. & Tax. Code § 4990.3].
- Certain improvement assessment liens [see Code Civ. Proc. § 801.1].
- The state's claims that land is situated in the former bed of a navigable river or stream [see Pub. Res. Code § 6461].
- Questions of the validity of a boundary line agreement entered into between the state and the owner of shoreline property pursuant to Pub. Res. Code § 6357 [see Code Civ. Proc. § 760.020(b)].
- State or private claims in situ oil or gas deposits [see Pub. Res. Code § 6814], or
- Claims conflicting with public ownership of an interest in property [see Marks v. Whitney (1971) 6 Cal. 3d 251, 261-262, 98 Cal. Rptr. 790, 491 P.2d 374] .

For discussion of actions under any of these statutes, see Ch. 482, Quieting Title, §§ 482.16 -482.22.

[2] Defenses to Quiet Title Action

A court will not give equitable relief to a party unless he or she has acknowledged or conceded, or will admit and provide for, all the equitable rights, claims, and demands justly belonging to the adverse party and growing out of, or necessarily involved in, the subject matter of the controversy [O'Brien v. O'Brien (1925) 197 Cal. 577, 584-585, 241 P. 861] .

That the other party is not a bona fide purchaser is not a defense against the other party's claims in an action to quiet title [see Mix v. Sodd (1981) 126 Cal. App. 3d 386, 389-392, 178 Cal. Rptr. 736] .

For forms of answer to complaint for quieting title under Code Civ. Proc. § 760.010, see Ch. 482, Quieting Title, §§ 482.82, 482.83.

[3] The Remedy

A party to a quiet title action will prevail only to the extent he or she proves ownership interest in the disputed property. A party cannot prevail merely by showing that the other party does not own the interest claimed, or appears to have, or by showing that the other party owns no interest [see, e.g., Kunza v. Gaskell (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 201, 207, 154 Cal. Rptr. 101 (plaintiff); Harmon Enterprises, Inc. v. Vroman (1959) 167 Cal. App. 2d 517, 334 P.2d 628 (defendant)].

For discussion of the presumptions applicable in quiet title action, see Ch. 482, Quieting Title, § 482.23.

The remedy provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 760.010 is cumulative and not exclusive of any other remedy, form, or right of action or proceeding provided by law for establishing or quieting title to property [Code Civ. Proc. § 760.030(a)].

For discussion of the effect of other requested remedies on defendant's entitlement to trial by jury in quiet title action, see § 251.222.

The effect of judgment in a quiet title action is to quiet adverse claimants to the rightful owner's title, because the doctrine of res judicata precludes further litigation and thereby tends to make the rightful owner's title secure [see Jones v. Sacramento Sav. & L. Ass'n (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 522, 530, 56 Cal. Rptr. 741] .

For discussion of the parties to whom the binding effect of judgment in quiet title action applies, see Ch. 482, Quieting Title, § 482.24. For form of judgment quieting title under Code Civ. Proc. § 760.010, see Ch. 482, Quieting Title, § 482.86.

If a party to a joint or joint and several obligation satisfies more than his or her share of the obligation, he or she may require a proportionate contribution from all the parties to the obligation [Civ. Code § 1432]. Similarly, a surety may also seek contribution from the principal [Civ. Code § 2848].

An action for contribution on debt is controlled by the two-year statute of limitations for actions not founded on instruments in writing and thus must be brought within two years from the date of payment [Code Civ. Proc. § 339; Manuel v. Hicks Iron Works (1932) 216 Cal. 459, 461, 14 P.2d 756] .

§ 251.73 Accounting

[1] Nature and Elements of Accounting Action

[a] Nature of Accounting Action

An action for accounting lies in equity when the suit is for recovery of an amount that is unliquidated and unascertained and that cannot be determined without an accounting [St. James Church v. Superior Court (1955) 135 Cal. App. 2d 352, 359, 287 P.2d 387] .

For discussion of the nature of accounting actions, including distinguishing them from action for account or account stated, see Ch. 7, Accounting, Action for, § 7.11.

[b] Elements of Accounting Action

A complaint sufficiently states a cause of action in equity for an accounting by alleging [see Kritzer v. Lancaster (1950) 96 Cal. App. 2d 1, 7, 214 P.2d 407] :

- A relationship between the parties or other circumstances that require an accounting in equity because legal remedies are inadequate, and

- An unknown balance is due that cannot not be ascertained without an accounting, the means of which are within the knowledge of the defendant.

For discussion of elements of accounting actions, see Ch. 7, Accounting, Action for, § 7.12[1], [3]. For form of complaint and various allegations for action for accounting, see Ch. 7, Accounting, Action for, § 7.60 et seq.

[c] Circumstances Requiring Accounting

Circumstances rendering an accounting equitable include:

- When a fiduciary relationship exists between the parties and the defendant has a duty to render an account [San Pedro Lumber Co. v. Reynolds (1896) 111 Cal. 588, 596-597, 44 P. 309] .

- Contractual relationships requiring cost-sharing [McClain v. Octagon Plaza, LLC (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 784, 807, 71 Cal. Rptr. 3d 885] or payment by one party to another of profits received [Wolf v. Superior Court (2003) 107 Cal. App.4th 25, 34, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 860].

- When accounts are so complicated that an ordinary legal action demanding a fixed sum is impracticable, and defendant has committed misconduct, violated a fiduciary duty, or otherwise owes money to the plaintiff [see Union Bank v. Superior Court (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 573, 593-594, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 653] , or

- Fraud [Swan v. Talbot (1907) 152 Cal. 142, 145, 94 P. 238] .

For discussion of circumstances requiring an accounting, see Ch. 7, Accounting, Action for, §§ 7.12[2], 7.13. For discussion of procedures for prosecuting an accounting action, see Ch. 7, Accounting, Action for, §§ 7.15-7.21.

For discussion of right to default judgment after opposing party's default in accounting action, see § 251.221[2].

[2] Defenses to Accounting Action

An action for accounting may be opposed with the following affirmative defenses:

- Expiration of the four-year statute of limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 343].

- Laches [see Estate of Peebles (1972) 27 Cal. App. 3d 163, 166, 103 Cal. Rptr. 560] .

- Unclean hands [Seymour v. Cariker (1963) 220 Cal. App. 2d 300, 305, 33 Cal. Rptr. 727] .

- The entire amount owed by defendant is properly agreed on [Huntoon v. Hurley (1955) 137 Cal. App. 2d 33, 39, 290 P.2d 14] or shown by defendant without dispute from plaintiff [Guy Coburn, Inc. v. Tiffany P., Inc. (1940) 37 Cal. App. 2d 410, 414, 99 P.2d 569] .

- Accord and satisfaction [see Civ. Code §§ 1521-1525], or

- Other equitable defenses [see James v. Kuhn (1932) 121 Cal. App. 69, 71, 8 P.2d 526] .

For discussion of application of statute of limitation to action for accounting, see Ch. 7, Accounting, Action for, § 7.14. For discussion of other affirmative defenses to actions for accounting, see Ch. 7, Accounting, Action for, § 7.18. For forms of affirmative defenses to actions for accounting, see Ch. 7, Accounting, Action for, § 7.74 et seq.

[3] After Right to Accounting Is Established

After the right to an accounting has been established, the court may proceed to take the accounting from the evidence provided and render final judgment, or order that an accounting be taken by reference under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 638-645.1 [Baumann v. Harrison (1941) 46 Cal. App. 2d 84, 90-91, 115 P.2d 530] . While the plaintiff must first establish that he or she is entitled to an accounting, the court is not required to issue an interlocutory judgment to that effect before the accounting may be taken, although it may do so [Schefski v. Anker (1932) 216 Cal. 624, 627, 15 P.2d 744] .

For discussion of the right to and taking of accounting, see Ch. 7, Accounting, Action for, §§ 7.22, 7.23. For discussion of final judgments in accounting actions, see Ch. 7, Accounting, Action for, §§ 7.24, 7.25. For form relating to reference in action for accounting, see Ch. 7, Accounting, Action for, § 7.79 et seq.

B. Equitable Causes of Action

21-251 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 251.74

§ 251.74 Interpleader

[1] Nature of Interpleader Action

A suit in interpleader is an equitable proceeding [Williams v. Gilmore (1942) 51 Cal. App. 2d 684, 689, 125 P.2d 539] allowing a debtor or obligor to avoid a multiplicity of actions on claims based on a single obligation, by compelling the various claimants to interplead and litigate their claims among themselves. The obligor could thus avoid facing multiple, vexatious litigation with respect to a single obligation [see City of Morgan Hill v. Brown (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 1114, 1122, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 361 ; Code Civ. Proc. § 386].

[2] Elements of Interpleader Action

An interpleader action can consider all claims by claimants seeking the same thing, debt, or duty [City of Morgan Hill v. Brown (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 1114, 1123, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 361] . This general approach may be used in two types of actions:

- As in the traditional equitable remedy, the first type of interpleader action is generally available to give relief to a debtor who acknowledges owing to someone all or part of a contractual obligation or specified personal property, but who cannot ascertain to which of two or more adverse claimants it should be paid or delivered [see Code Civ. Proc. § 386(a)], and

- The second type of interpleader allows any person or entity against whom double or multiple claims have been made, or may be made, which may give rise to double or multiple liability, to compel the claimants to interplead and litigate their claims in a single proceeding without necessarily admitting any liability to any of these claimants [see Code Civ. Proc. § 386(b)].

For discussion of interpleader and related defenses and procedure, see Ch. 314, Interpleader, § 314.10 et seq. For forms of cross-complaints, answers, and related matters in interpleader actions, see Ch. 314, Interpleader, § 314.60 et seq.

21-251 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 251.75

§ 251.75 Fraudulent Conveyances

[1] Purpose of Fraudulent Conveyance Actions

An important distinction is that fraud that entitles a party to rescind a transfer or seek damages arising out of the transfer is based on false representations inducing reliance, whereas a fraudulent transfer or obligation may be in fraud of creditors because it was a gift by an insolvent donor [Civ. Code § 3439.05], was designed to put the property beyond the reach of creditors [see Civ. Code § 3439.04(a)], or, in the case of personal property, because it was not followed by immediate delivery [see Civ. Code § 3440; Strong v. Strong (1943) 22 Cal. 2d 540, 547, 140 P.2d 386] .

For discussion of the definition of fraudulent conveyances, see Ch. 270, Fraudulent Conveyances, §§ 270.32 -270.38.

[2] Types of Fraudulent Conveyance Actions

The Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act prevents debtors from placing property beyond the reach of their creditors when the property should be legitimately made available to satisfy the creditors' demands [see Chichester v. Mason (1941) 43 Cal. App. 2d 577, 584, 111 P.2d 362 (decided under former Civ. Code §§ 3439, 3442)]. Civ. Code § 3440 allowing the voiding of fraudulent transfers of personal property without delivery and actual change of possession prevents the deception of creditors arising out of the ostensible ownership of the property by the transferor who has made a secret transfer of the property [see Dersch v. Thomas (1934) 138 Cal. App. 785, 138 Cal. App. Supp. 785, 789, 30 P.2d 630] . Finally, Com. Code § 6101 et seq. prevents merchants who owe debts from selling out their stock in trade for any price and disappearing with the proceeds of the sale [see Uniform Commercial Code Comment to former Com. Code § 6101].

For discussion of fraudulent conveyances, see Ch. 270, Fraudulent Conveyances . For forms of pleadings, allegations, and orders in actions on fraudulent conveyances, see Ch. 270, Fraudulent Conveyances, § 270.190 et seq.

Examples of fraudulent conveyances from which relief may be had include:

- Transfer made or obligation incurred by a debtor with actual intent to hinder, delay, or defraud any creditor of the debtor [Civ. Code § 3439.04(a)(1)].

- Transfer made or obligation incurred without the transferor's or obligor's receiving reasonably equivalent value in exchange for the transfer or obligation and the transferor or obligor intended to incur, or believed, or reasonably should have believed, that he or she would incur debts beyond his or her ability to pay as they became due [Civ. Code § 3439.04(a)(2)(B)].

- After creditor's claim arose, transfer made or obligation incurred by a debtor without receiving a reasonably equivalent value in exchange for the transfer or obligation, and the debtor was insolvent at the time or became insolvent as a result of the transfer or obligation [Civ. Code § 3439.05], and

- Transfer made or an obligation incurred by a debtor who did not receive reasonably equivalent value in exchange for the transfer or obligation and who was engaged, or was about to engage, in a business or transaction for which his or her remaining assets were unreasonably small in relation to the business or transaction [Civ. Code § 3439.04(a)(2)(A)].

For discussion of these types of fraudulent conveyances, see Ch. 270, Fraudulent Conveyances, §§ 270.39 -270.43.

[3] Choices of Relief From Fraudulent Conveyances

An action on a fraudulent conveyance is an action in equity [see Flowers & Sons Development Corp. v. Municipal Court (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 818, 825, 150 Cal. Rptr. 555] , for which the available remedies include:

- Voiding the transfer or obligation to the extent necessary to satisfy the plaintiff's underlying claim [Civ. Code § 3439.07(a)(1)].

- Attachment before or after the claim has ripened [Civ. Code § 3439.07(a)(2)].

- Injunction before or after the claim has ripened [Civ. Code § 3439.07(a)(3)(A)].

- Appointment of a receiver [Civ. Code § 3439.07(a)(3)(B)], and

- Any other relief the circumstances may require [Civ. Code § 3439.07(a)(3)(C)], including:

  - Accounting [see Heffernan v. Bennett & Armour (1944) 63 Cal. App. 2d 178, 185, 146 P.2d 482] , and

  - After judgment, execution on the asset transferred or its proceeds in the hands of the transferee [Civ. Code § 3439.07(c)].

C. Equitable Remedies
1. Compelling an Act or Omission

21-251 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 251.90

§ 251.90 Injunction

[1] Nature and Types of Injunctions

[a] Nature of Injunctions

An injunction is an equitable remedy in which the court orders a person to refrain from a particular act [Tide Water Assoc. Oil Co. v. Superior Court (1955) 43 Cal. 2d 815, 822, 279 P.2d 35, 4 O.&G.R. 588] or to do an affirmative act [Comfort v. Comfort (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 736, 741, 112 P.2d 259] .

For a discussion of the nature and types of injunctive relief, see Ch. 303, Injunctions, § 303.10.

For discussion of venue and trial court's jurisdiction to provide injunctive relief, see Ch. 303, Injunctions, § 303.20 et seq.

[b] Types of Injunctive Relief and Their Purposes

A mandatory injunction compels the performance of a substantive act or a change in the relative positions of the parties. By contrast, a prohibitory injunction seeks to restrain a party from a course of conduct or to halt a particular condition [Davenport v. Blue Cross of California (1997) 52 Cal. App. 4th 435, 446, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 641 ; People v. Mobile Magic Sales, Inc. (1979) 96 Cal. App. 3d 1, 13, 157 Cal. Rptr. 749] .

For a discussion of the difference between mandatory and prohibitory injunctions and its significance, see Ch. 303, Injunctions, § 303.11.

Whether mandatory or prohibitive, an injunction is either provisional [see Code Civ. Proc. § 527] or permanent [see Civ. Code § 3420]. A temporary restraining order ("TRO") is a provisional injunction issued by a court pending its determination whether a party is entitled to a preliminary injunction [San Diego Water Co. v. Pacific Coast S.S. Co. (1894) 101 Cal. 216, 218, 35 P. 651] . A preliminary injunction ("temporary injunction" or "injunction pendente lite") is issued to preserve the status quo pending a decision on the merits [Continental Baking Co. v. Katz (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 512, 528, 67 Cal. Rptr. 761, 439 P. 2d 889 ; Casmalia Resources, Ltd. v. County of Santa Barbara (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 827, 832, 240 Cal. Rptr. 903] . A permanent ("final") injunction is the ultimate relief in an action after trial on the merits [San Diego Water Co. v. Pacific Coast S.S. Co. (1894) 101 Cal. 216, 221, 35 P. 651] .

For a discussion of temporary restraining orders, see Ch. 303, Injunctions, § 303.30 et seq. For forms of complaint and proceedings for a temporary restraining order, see Ch. 303, Injunctions, §§ 303.130 -303.133.

For a discussion of preliminary injunctions, see Ch. 303, Injunctions, § 303.40 et seq. For form of proceedings on and order granting an application for a preliminary injunction, see Ch. 303, Injunctions, §§ 303.133, 303.136.

For a discussion of permanent injunctions, see Ch. 303, Injunctions, § 303.60 et seq. For a sample complaint for a permanent injunction, see Ch. 303, Injunctions, § 303.130.

[2] Availability of Injunctive Relief

[a] As Basis for Equitable Action

A temporary restraining order is permitted in the same situations as a preliminary injunction, as discussed below. However, a court will issue a TRO only for a limited period of time, which is usually pending its consideration whether to order a preliminary injunction [San Diego Water Co. v. Pacific Coast S.S. Co. (1894) 101 Cal. 216, 218, 35 P. 651 ; see Code Civ. Proc. § 527].

For a discussion of grounds for temporary restraining orders, see Ch. 303, Injunctions, §§ 303.30, 303.31.

A preliminary injunction may be granted when it appears that the party applying for relief is entitled to the relief demanded, and all or part of the relief consists in restraining the commission or continuance of the act complained of (or commanding certain conduct) either for a limited period or perpetually [Code Civ. Proc. § 526(a)(1)]. Situations in which the applying party may be entitled to relief include when [Code Civ. Proc. § 526(a)]:

- The injunction will prevent waste or irreparable injury,
- The injunction will prevent action that would violate rights of another party,
- A statute specifically authorizes injunction for violation of the statute.
- Pecuniary compensation would be inadequate or is not ascertainable,
- The injunction would avoid multiplicity of suits,
- The obligation arises from a trust, or

For a discussion of grounds for preliminary injunctions, see Ch. 303, Injunctions, §§ 303.40, 303.41.

The last three of the grounds listed for preliminary injunctions are statutory grounds for permanent injunctions [see Civ. Code § 3422].

[b] In Actions at Law

Injunctive relief in the form of a preliminary injunction is available in a legal action for damages when it is reasonably necessary and fair to both sides to maintain the status quo pending the litigation's outcome [Lenard v. Edmonds (1957) 151 Cal. App. 2d 764, 769, 312 P.2d 308] .

[3] Defenses

An action or request for injunctive relief can be opposed by defenses showing that:

- Changed circumstances or completed acts render the remedy unnecessary or ineffective [Paul v. Milk Depots, Inc. (1964) 62 Cal. 2d 129, 133, 41 Cal. Rptr. 468, 396 P.2d 924] .

- The balancing of conveniences results in a finding that the substance of the right to be enforced does not justify the particular hardship that the relief would cause [Fairrington v. Dyke Water Co. (1958) 50 Cal. 2d 198, 200, 323 P.2d 1001] .

- The conduct to be restrained is protected under the First Amendment [see, e.g., Saline v. Superior Court (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 909, 915-916, 122 Cal. Rptr. 2d 813] .

- The plaintiff is guilty of laches [Finnie v. Town of Tiburon (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 1, 14, 244 Cal. Rptr. 581] .

- An available legal remedy is adequate [Thayer Plymouth Center, Inc. v. Chrysler Motors Corp. (1967) 255 Cal. App. 2d 300, 306, 63 Cal. Rptr. 148] .

- Policy favoring protection of the public interest precludes the relief [see Loma Portal Civic Club v. American Airlines, Inc. (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 582, 588-589, 39 Cal. Rptr. 708, 394 P.2d 548] .

- The requested relief is contrary to law [People ex rel. Dept. of Transportation v. Maldonado (2001) 86 Cal. App. 4th 1225, 1233-1234, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 66] .

- The plaintiff has unclean hands [Nutro Products, Inc. v. Cole Grain Co. (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 860, 869, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 41] .

For a discussion of defenses to actions or requests for injunctive relief, see Ch. 303, Injunctions, §§ 303.70, 303.71. For a form for demurrer to action for injunctive relief, see Ch. 303, Injunctions, § 303.135. § 251.91 Mandate and Prohibition

[1] Nature of Mandate and Prohibition

Writs of mandate or prohibition [see, e.g., American Mut. Liab. Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1974) 38 Cal. App. 3d 579, 588, 113 Cal. Rptr. 561 (perogative writs)] are utilized as a means for reviewing judicial, nonjudicial, and administrative rulings [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1103]. They are available only in extraordinary circumstances and courts are vested with discretion to accept or reject requests for them [see American Mut. Liab. Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1974) 38 Cal. App. 3d 579, 588-589, 113 Cal. Rptr. 561 ; Renken v. Compton City School Dist. (1962) 207 Cal. App. 2d 106, 112, 24 Cal. Rptr. 347] .

Mandamus is an action where equitable principles apply [Bruce v. Gregory (1967) 65 Cal. 2d 666, 670-671, 56 Cal. Rptr. 265, 423 P.2d 193 ; McIntosh v. Aubry (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 1576, 1592, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 680] .

For discussion and forms on obtaining writs of mandate and prohibition, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition .

[2] Elements of Mandate and Prohibition

To obtain a writ of mandate, the petitioner must generally show a duty on the part of the respondent [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1085(a)], the petitioner's beneficial interest in compelling the performance of that duty [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1086], and the inadequacy of other legal remedies [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1086].

For further discussion of elements of mandate, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition, § 358.31. For discussion of appropriate and inappropriate uses of mandate, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition, §§ 358.32, 358.33.

To obtain a writ of prohibition, the petitioner must generally show the fact of a proceeding of a tribunal, corporation, board, or person exercising judicial functions [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1102], the fact that the proceeding is without or in excess of the jurisdiction of the tribunal, corporation, board, or person [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1102], the petitioner's beneficial interest in arresting that proceeding [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1102, 1103], and the inadequacy of other legal remedies [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1103].

For further discussion of elements of prohibition, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition, § 358.41. For discussion of appropriate uses of prohibition, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition, § 358.42.

For discussion of the adequacy of alternative relief, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition, § 358.50 et seq. For discussion of defenses to petition for mandate or prohibition, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition, § 358.60 et seq.

§ 251.92 Bill of Peace

The ancient equitable action of bill of peace provides a remedy to prevent duplication of trial effort and expense in situations where a plaintiff asserts a claim against numerous defendants and where the legal remedy of consolidation of cases is not available because the causes of action or parties were not joinable, some of the actions were not yet filed, or those filed were in different courts [Southern Cal. Edison Co. v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Ins. Co. (1969) 271 Cal. App. 2d 744, 748, 76 Cal. Rptr. 909] . the prevention of a multiplicity of suits as a ground for the equity jurisdiction does not mean the complete and absolute interdiction or prevention of any litigation concerning the matters in dispute, but the substitution of one equitable suit in place of the other kinds of judicial proceeding, by means of which the entire controversy may be finally decided [Bartholomew v. Bartholomew (1942) 56 Cal. App. 2d 216, 224-225, 132 P.2d 297] . To invoke such relief the courts have required a showing that plaintiff's claims have arisen from a common relationship or source [Schroeter v. Abbott, 185 Cal. 146, 151, 196 P. 39 ; Southern Cal. Edison Co. v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Ins. Co. (1969) 271 Cal. App. 2d 744, 748, 76 Cal. Rptr. 909] .

For example:

- Action to quiet title arose from a bill of peace in equity [Caira v. Offner (2005) 126 Cal. App. 4th 12, 25, 24 Cal. Rptr. 3d 233] .

- There are two general classes of cases in which injunctions are issued to prevent a multiplicity of actions, namely, (1) those in which many claims that have not been adjudicated are brought into equity to be made the subject of a single trial and decree, and (2) those that are enjoined because they are shown to be vexatious suits upon causes of action that have been settled by former adjudication [Verdier v. Verdier (1965) 203 Cal. App. 2d 724, 735, 22 Cal. Rptr. 93 ; Bartholomew v. Bartholomew (1942) 56 Cal. App. 2d 216, 225, 132 P.2d 297] .

- Equity will enjoin repeated attacks upon a title that has been settled by judgment that is conclusive as to the parties and as to the issues sought to be retried [Wellborn v. Wellborn (1945) 67 Cal. App. 2d 540, 545, 155 P.2d 95] .

- Bill of peace will be denied where consolidation of cases would not reduce issues to be litigated in sum total of litigation [Southern Cal. Edison Co. v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Ins. Co. (1969) 271 Cal. App. 2d 744, 748, 76 Cal. Rptr. 909 (petition denied)].

§ 251.93 Bill Quia Timet

No principle in equity is more familiar, or more firmly established, than that a surety, after the debt for which he or she is liable has become due, without paying or being called on to pay it, may file a bill in equity in the nature of a bill quia timet to compel the principal to exonerate the surety from liability by its payment, provided no rights of the creditor are prejudiced thereby. The doctrine is not premised on mere fear of loss or liability prior to an obligation's maturity. Rather, only after the obligation becomes payable, the surety, before he or she pays it, may maintain a suit in equity against the debtor in the nature of a bill quia timet to compel the latter to pay the debt or perform the obligation, provided the creditor could enforce payment or performance but neglects or refuses to do it [Escrow Agents' Fidelity Corp. v. Superior Court (1992) 4 Cal. App. 4th 491, 495, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 698] .

PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
C. Equitable Remedies
1. Compelling an Act or Omission

21-251 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 251.94

§ 251.94 Estoppel

[1] Equitable Estoppel

[a] The Nature of Equitable Estoppel

The doctrine of equitable estoppel is founded on concepts of equity and fair dealing. It provides that a person may not deny the existence of a state of facts if he or she intentionally led another to believe a particular circumstance to be true and to rely upon such belief to his or her detriment [Strong v. County of Santa Cruz (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 720, 725, 125 Cal. Rptr. 896, 543 P.2d 264 ; Aerojet-General Corp. v. Commercial Union Ins. Co. (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 132, 147, 65 Cal. Rptr. 3d 803].

PRACTICE TIP:

Estoppel Versus Waiver. Estoppel effects a forfeiture, i.e., the loss of an otherwise viable right. It is akin to the doctrine of waiver, often invoked in the same breath, and sometimes confused with it. The essence of waiver [for discussion of waiver, see § 251.151], however, is the voluntary relinquishment of a known right that may be effective as a matter of law without any demonstration that the other party was caused by the waiver to expose himself or herself to any harm. That causation is essential to estoppel, and where it is present the estoppel may arise involuntarily, and may effect the loss of rights the actor did not know he or she possessed [City of Hollister v. Monterey Ins. Co. (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 455, 487, 81 Cal. Rptr. 3d 72 ; Oakland Raiders v. Oakland-Alameda County Coliseum, Inc. (2006) 144 Cal.App.4th 1175, 1189-1190, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 144].

The vital principle is that a party who by his or her language or conduct leads another to do what the other would not otherwise have done may not subject the other person to loss or injury by disappointing the expectations upon which he or she acted. Such a change of position is sternly forbidden [Long Beach v. Mansell (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 462, 488, 91 Cal. Rptr. 23, 476 P.2d 423 (quoting Seymour v. Oelrichs (1909) 156 Cal. 782, 795, 106 P. 88)]. Equitable estoppel in the modern sense arises from the conduct of a party, using that word in its broadest meaning as including his or her spoken or written words, positive acts, and silence or negative omission to do anything. Its foundation is justice and good conscience. Its object is to prevent the unconscientious and inequitable assertion or enforcement of claims or rights that might have existed or been enforceable by other rules of the law, unless prevented by the estoppel. Its practical effect is, from motives of equity and fair dealing, to create and vest opposing rights in the party who obtains the benefit of the estoppel [Long Beach v. Mansell (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 462, 488 n.22, 91 Cal. Rptr. 23, 476 P.2d 423] .

In order to work an equitable estoppel, a representation must generally be a statement of fact. It can rarely happen that the statement of a proposition of law will conclude the party making it from denying its correctness, except when it is understood to mean nothing but a simple statement of fact [Steinhart v. Cty. of Los Angeles (2010) 47 Cal. 4th 1298, 1315, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 195, 223 P.3d 57] .

In general, the law particularly disfavors estoppels when the party attempting to raise the estoppel is represented by an attorney at law [Steinhart v. Cty. of Los Angeles (2010) 47 Cal. 4th 1298, 1316, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 195, 223 P.3d 57] .

Estoppel is codified in Evid. Code § 623 [Estate of Bonanno (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 7, 22, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 560].

For discussion of estoppel to enforcement of zoning requirements, see Ch. 579, Zoning and Planning, § 579.241[2].

For forms of affirmative defense of equitable estoppel in boundary disputes, see Ch. 101, Boundaries, §§ 101.54, 101.56. For form of affirmative defense of equitable estoppel under Evid. Code § 623 in action on negotiable instrument, see Ch. 385, Negotiable Instruments, § 385.118. For form of affirmative defense of equitable estoppel in action on trade name or mark infringement, see Ch. 549, Trademarks and Tradenames, § 549.100.

[b] Elements

[i] Generally

The elements of the doctrine of equitable estoppel are that: (1) the party to be estopped was apprised of the facts, (2) the party intended that his or her conduct would be acted upon, or so acted that the party asserting the estoppel had a right to believe it was so intended, (3) the other party was ignorant of the true state of facts; and (4) the other party relied upon the conduct to his or her injury [Strong v. County of Santa Cruz (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 720, 725, 125 Cal. Rptr. 896, 543 P.2d 264 ; Estate of Bonanno (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 7, 22, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 560 ; Aerojet-General Corp. v. Commercial Union Ins. Co. (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 132, 147, 65 Cal. Rptr. 3d 803 (no intention or action supporting reliance)].

[ii] Special Considerations Involving Real Property

Although generally speaking it is true that the application of the doctrine of equitable estoppel to controversies centered upon title to land involves the same basic factors of the doctrine as are brought into play in other areas of the law, the courts in California and other jurisdictions have proceeded with considerable caution and restraint when the effect of raising an estoppel would be to take the title to land from one person and vest it in another, for such a result would be essentially contrary to the intent and purpose, if not the letter, of the statute of frauds. Thus, the doctrine will not be applied to divest title to land in the absence of actual or constructive fraud on the part of the party to be estopped [Long Beach v. Mansell (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 462, 489, 91 Cal. Rptr. 23, 476 P.2d 423] .

[c] Generally a Question of Fact

Equitable estoppel is generally a question of fact. However, if the facts are undisputed and only one reasonable conclusion can be drawn from them, whether estoppel applies is a question of law [Estate of Bonanno (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 7, 22, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 560].

[2] Promissory Estoppel

[a] The Nature of Promissory Estoppel

Promissory estoppel is a doctrine that employs equitable principles to satisfy the requirement that consideration must be given in exchange for the promise sought to be enforced [Kajima/Ray Wilson v. Los Angeles County Metropolitan Transportation Authority (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 305, 310, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747, 1 P.3d 63 ; Cooper v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (2009) 177 Cal. App. 4th 876, 892 n.3, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 870 ; Poway Royal Mobilehome Owners Assn. v. City of Poway (2007) 149 Cal. App. 4th 1460, 1471, 58 Cal. Rptr. 3d 153]. Under the doctrine of promissory estoppel, a promise that the promisor should reasonably expect to induce action or forbearance on the part of the promisee or a third person and that does induce the action or forbearance is binding if injustice can be avoided only by enforcement of the promise. The remedy granted for breach may be limited as justice requires [Kajima/Ray Wilson v. Los Angeles County Metropolitan Transportation Authority (2000) 23 Cal.4th 305, 310, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747, 1 P.3d 63 ; Poway Royal Mobilehome Owners Assn. v. City of Poway (2007) 149 Cal. App. 4th 1460, 1470-1471, 58 Cal. Rptr. 3d 153].

For discussion of promissory estoppel as substitution for consideration on contracts, see Ch. 140, Contracts, § 140.23[8]. For discussion of estoppel to assert the statute of frauds, see Ch. 530, Statute of Frauds, § 530.12[6]. For form of complaint for damages for breach of contract with promissory estoppel as substitute for consideration, see Ch. 140, Contracts, § 140.106.

[b] Elements

The elements of promissory estoppel are: (1) a clear promise, (2) reliance, (3) substantial detriment, and (4) damages measured by the extent of the obligation assumed and not performed [Poway Royal Mobilehome Owners Assn. v. City of Poway (2007) 149 Cal. App. 4th 1460, 1471, 58 Cal. Rptr. 3d 153 ; Toscano v. Greene Music (2004) 124 Cal.App.4th 685, 692, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 732].

[c] The Promise

The promise is an indispensable element of the doctrine of promissory estoppel. The doctrine cannot be invoked and must be held inapplicable in the absence of a showing that a promise had been made upon which the complaining party relied to his or her prejudice [Garcia v. World Savings, FSB (2010) 183 Cal. App. 4th 1031, 1044-1045, 107 Cal. Rptr. 3d 683] . The promise must be clear and unambiguous in its terms [Garcia v. World Savings, FSB (2010) 183 Cal. App. 4th 1031, 1044-1045, 107 Cal. Rptr. 3d 683 ; Advanced Choices, Inc. v. State Department of Health Services (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 1661, 1672, 107 Cal. Rptr. 3d 470 (no clear promise given)]. To meet this standard, a promise need only be definite enough that a court can determine the scope of the duty, and the limits of performance must be sufficiently defined to provide a rational basis for the assessment of damages [Garcia v. World Savings, FSB (2010) 183 Cal. App. 4th 1031, 1044-1045, 107 Cal. Rptr. 3d 683] .

The fact that a promise is conditional does not render it unenforceable or ambiguous [Garcia v. World Savings, FSB (2010) 183 Cal. App. 4th 1031, 1045, 107 Cal. Rptr. 3d 683 (conditional promise enforced)].

If extrinsic evidence is needed to interpret a promise, then obviously the promise is not clear and unambiguous. Thus, promissory estoppel cannot be established from preliminary discussions and negotiations [Garcia v. World Savings, FSB (2010) 183 Cal. App. 4th 1031, 1044-1045, 107 Cal. Rptr. 3d 683] .

[3] Judicial Estoppel

[a] The Nature of Judicial Estoppel

Judicial estoppel is an equitable doctrine, and its application is discretionary [MW Erectors, Inc. v. Niederhauser Ornamental & Metal Works Co., Inc. (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 412, 422, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 755, 115 P.3d 41 ; Jhaveri v. Teitelbaum (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 740, 751, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 268] . The dual purposes of the doctrine are to maintain the integrity of the judicial system and protect parties from unfair strategies of their opponents [Aguilar v. Lerner (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 974, 986, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 287, 88 P.3d 24 ; Jhaveri v. Teitelbaum (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 740, 751, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 268] .

[b] Elements

The judicial estoppel doctrine precludes a party from gaining a litigation advantage by espousing one position and then seeking a second advantage by taking an incompatible position [Aguilar v. Lerner (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 974, 986, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 287, 88 P.3d 24 ; Jhaveri v. Teitelbaum (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 740, 751, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 268] . The doctrine of judicial estoppel applies when the following conditions are met [Aguilar v. Lerner (2004) 32 Cal.4th 974, 986, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 287, 88 P.3d 24] :

- The same party has taken two positions.
- The positions were taken in judicial or quasi-judicial administrative proceedings.
- The party was successful in asserting the first position (i.e., the tribunal adopted the position or accepted it as true).
- The two positions are totally inconsistent.
- The first position was not taken as a result of ignorance, fraud, or mistake.

For a comprehensive discussion of judicial estoppel, see Ch. 491, Res Judicata, § 491.21.

[4] Estoppel May Not Apply to Governmental Entity

Neither a claim for equitable estoppel [Lusardi Construction Co. v. Aubry (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 976, 994-995, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 837, 824 P.2d 643 ; Feduniak v. California Coastal Com. (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 1346, 1359-1360, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 591] nor promissory estoppel [City of Long Beach v. Mansell (1970) 3 Cal.3d 462, 493, 91 Cal. Rptr. 23, 476 P.2d 423 ; Poway Royal Mobilehome Owners Assn. v. City of Poway (2007) 149 Cal. App. 4th 1460, 1471, 58 Cal. Rptr. 3d 153 (exception applied)] are applied against the government if to do so would effectively nullify a strong rule of policy adopted for the benefit of the public. The facts upon which such an estoppel must rest go beyond the ordinary principles of estoppel. Each case must be examined carefully and rigidly to be sure that a precedent is not established through which, by favoritism or otherwise, the public interest may be mulcted or public policy defeated [City of Long Beach v. Mansell (1970) 3 Cal.3d 462, 495 n.30, 91 Cal. Rptr. 23, 476 P.2d 423 ; Poway Royal Mobilehome Owners Assn. v. City of Poway (2007) 149 Cal. App. 4th 1460, 1471, 58 Cal. Rptr. 3d 153].

Equitable estoppel only applies to a governmental body when necessary to avoid grave injustice and when the result will not defeat a strong public policy [Steinhart v. Cty. of Los Angeles (2010) 47 Cal. 4th 1298, 1315, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 195, 223 P.3d 57] . Thus, the government may be bound by an equitable estoppel in the same manner as a private party when the elements requisite to such an estoppel against a private party are present and, in the considered view of a court of equity, the injustice that would result from a failure to uphold an estoppel is of sufficient dimension to justify any effect upon public interest or policy that would result from the raising of an estoppel [Long Beach v. Mansell (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 462, 496-497, 91 Cal. Rptr. 23, 476 P.2d 423 ; Feduniak v. California Coastal Com. (2007) 148 Cal.

App. 4th 1346, 1359-1360, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 591] . The extra considerations for equitable estoppel against the government may be stated as requiring the court to find also that both [Long Beach v. Mansell (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 462, 496-497, 91 Cal. Rptr. 23, 476 P.2d 423 ; Feduniak v. California Coastal Com. (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 1346, 1372, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 591] :

- Estopping the government would not nullify a strong rule of policy adopted for the public's benefit.

- The injustice to the private party without estoppel outweighs, and therefore justifies, any effect upon public interest or policy that results from estopping enforcement of the government's policy.

§ 251.100 Reformation of Instruments

[1] Nature and Elements of Reformation

[a] The Nature of Remedy of Reformation

Reformation is an equitable remedy used to reframe a written instrument to express accurately the parties' true agreement when, through fraud, mutual mistake, or unilateral mistake in limited instances, the writing does not embody their agreement [see Civ. Code § 3399; Bailard v. Marden (1951) 36 Cal. 2d 703, 708, 227 P.2d 10] .

For a discussion of the definition and nature of reformation of instruments, see Ch. 488, Reformation of Instruments, §§ 488.11 -488.12.

[b] The Elements of Remedy of Reformation

To obtain reformation of a written instrument, a party must generally allege and show:

- The true intention of the parties for the instrument [see Civ. Code § 3399; American Home Ins. Co. v. Travelers Indemnity Co. (1981) 122 Cal. App. 3d 951, 961, 175 Cal. Rptr. 826] ,
- The instrument as written differed from the parties' true intention [see Civ. Code § 3399; Holmes v. Anderson (1928) 90 Cal. App. 276, 282, 265 P. 1010] , and
- The failure of the writing to reflect the true agreement resulted from one of the following:
  - Mutual mistake of fact [Civ. Code § 3399],
  - Unilateral mistake of fact when the other party knew of the mistake or suspected it at the time [Civ. Code § 3399],

- Fraud [Civ. Code § 3399], or

- Unconscionable conduct [see MacFarlane v. Peters (1980) 103 Cal. App. 3d 627, 631, 163 Cal. Rptr. 655] .

For a discussion of scope and grounds for reformation of instruments, see Ch. 488, Reformation of Instruments, §§ 488.13 -488.14, 488.18. For a complaint for reformation of a written instrument and allegations of various grounds for reformation, see Ch. 488, Reformation of Instruments, § 488.60 et seq.

[2] Availability of Reformation as a Remedy

[a] Remedy in Action or as Defense

Reformation requires that the parties to the transaction share a complete and mutual understanding on all essential terms [Bailard v. Marden (1951) 36 Cal. 2d 703, 708, 227 P.2d 10] . In addition to being requested as the remedy in an action on the grounds stated in § 251.AR1[1][b], reformation of an instrument may be raised as a defense to an action at law for enforcement of a contract [Appalachian Ins. Co. v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 1, 18 n.8, 262 Cal. Rptr. 716] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Although a written instrument that accurately reflects a common intent based on a mistake of fact cannot be reformed, the mistake may be ground for rescission [White v. Berrenda Mesa Water Dist. (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 894, 900-908, 87 Cal. Rptr. 338] .

For discussion of rescission, see Ch. 490, Rescission and Restitution .

For discussion of availability of reformation, see Ch. 488, Reformation of Instruments, § 488.13.

[b] Types of Instruments That May Be Reformed

Instruments that may be reformed in equity include, among others:

- Contracts [Civ. Code § 3399],

- Deeds [MacFarlane v. Peters (1980) 103 Cal. App. 3d 627, 631, 163 Cal. Rptr. 655] ,

- Trusts [Getty v. Getty (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 1159, 1172-1175, 232 Cal. Rptr. 603] ,

- Substitutions of trustees [Jones v. First American Title Insurance Company (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 381, 390, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 859] ,

- Trust deeds [San Fernando Valley C. of C. v. Thomas (1954) 123 Cal. App. 2d 348, 350-351, 266 P.2d 891] ;

- Mortgages [San Jose Ranch Co. v. San Jose L. & W. Co. (1901) 132 Cal. 582, 583-584, 64 P. 1097] ,

- Judgments [Voge, Inc. v. Rose (1962) 205 Cal. App. 2d 534, 538, 23 Cal. Rptr. 87 ; Douglass v.

Dahm (1950) 101 Cal. App. 2d 125, 128, 224 P.2d 914] .

For discussion of equitable doctrine of setting aside judgments for extrinsic fraud or mistake, see § 251.190.

On the other hand, wills are not reformable [Kobus v. San Diego Trust & Savings Bank (1959) 172 Cal. App. 2d 574, 580, 342 P.2d 468] .

[3] Defenses to Request for Reformation

Defenses to a request for the equitable remedy of reformation of an instrument include:

- Gross negligence in failing to prevent a mistake in the instrument [Voge, Inc. v. Rose (1962) 205 Cal. App. 2d 534, 539, 23 Cal. Rptr. 87] .

- Voidness of the instrument [see, e.g., Ainsworth v. Morrill (1916) 31 Cal. App. 509, 511, 160 P. 1089] , including under the statute of frauds [see Oatman v. Niemeyer (1929) 207 Cal. 424, 426-427, 278 P. 1043] .

- Unclean hands [Seymour v. Cariker (1963) 220 Cal. App. 2d 300, 305, 33 Cal. Rptr. 727] , or

- Res judicata [Getty v. Getty (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 1159, 1174-1175, 232 Cal. Rptr. 603] .

- Statute of limitations [see Code Civ. Proc. 338(d)], - Laches [Getty v. Getty (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 1159, 1170-171, 232 Cal. Rptr. 603] .

- Waiver or ratification [San Fernando Valley C. of C. v. Thomas (1954) 123 Cal. App. 2d 348, 350-351, 266 P.2d 891] .

For discussion of defenses to request for reformation, see Ch. 488, Reformation of Instruments, §§ 488.13[3], [5], 488.15. For forms of affirmative defenses to request for reformation, see Ch. 488, Reformation of Instruments, § 488.64 et seq.

[4] Limitation on Extent of Reformation

The actual reformation of an instrument will be limited to the extent that it can be done without prejudice to the "rights acquired by third persons in good faith and for value" [Civ. Code § 3399].

For discussion of protection of rights of bona fide purchaser from request for reformation, see Ch. 488, Reformation of Instruments, § 488.13[2]. For form of affirmative defense based on the intervening rights of bona fide purchasers, see Ch. 488, Reformation of Instruments, § 488.67.

[5] Other Remedies Allowed With Reformation

A court, having first obtained equitable jurisdiction over the subject matter, may award any additional relief incidental to the equitable relief being sought [Tomas v. Vaughn (1944) 63 Cal. App. 2d 188, 192, 146 P.2d 499] . Examples of additional relief that may be sought include the following:

- When the cause of action is based on failure to perform the intended agreement, the plaintiff may seek reformation and other forms of relief [Civ. Code § 3402; Landis v. Superior Court (1965) 232 Cal.

App. 2d 548, 555, 42 Cal. Rptr. 893] .

- A court may award damages if they are purely incidental to the relief of reformation [Tomas v. Vaughn (1944) 63 Cal. App. 2d 188, 192, 146 P.2d 499] .

For discussion of pursuing remedies in addition to reformation, see Ch. 488, Reformation of Instruments, § 488.19.

21-251 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 251.101

§ 251.101 Preventing Forfeiture

[1] Relief from Forfeitures in General

In accordance with the maxim that equity abhors forfeitures [see § 251.62], where the right to a forfeiture is created by contract or by law it has always been considered that it was necessary to restrain it to the most technical limits of the terms and conditions upon which the right is to be exercised [Palo & Dodini v. Oakland (1947) 79 Cal. App. 2d 739, 747, 180 P.2d 764] . Equity is particularly reluctant to enforce forfeitures where the default is minor [Baypoint Mortgage Corp. v. Crest Premium Real Estate etc. Trust (1985) 168 Cal. App. 3d 818, 829, 214 Cal. Rptr. 531] .

The proclivity of equity to prevent forfeiture can take a myriad of forms involving various other types of equitable remedies, such as:

- Presumption in adverse possession cases in favor of title owner of real property subject to claim [see, e.g., Marriage v. Keener (1994) 26 Cal. App. 4th 186, 192-193, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 511] .

- Adaptation of rules of court procedure to serve the ends of justice by preventing technical forfeitures from unjustifiably preventing a trial on the merits [Bollinger v. National Fire Ins. Co. (1944) 25 Cal. 2d 399, 154 P.2d 399 ; Morris Plan Co. v State (1946) 73 Cal. App. 2d 415, 166 P.2d 627] .

- No-contest clauses in wills are strictly construed and not extended beyond what was plainly the testator's intent [Jacobs-Zorne v. Superior Court (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 1064, 1073, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 385 ; see also Prob. Code § 21304].

The discussion of these types of applications of the maxim may be found in the specific topics on the area of law in which the equitable remedy may be used.

[2] Relief from Forfeiture for Nonperformance of Obligation

Unless no other interpretation is reasonably possible, a contract should not be construed so as to effect or provide for a forfeiture [ABI, Inc. v. City of Los Angeles (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d 669, 682, 200 Cal. Rptr. 563 ; see Civ. Code § 1442].

A party may be relieved from a forfeiture incurred for nonperformance of an obligation upon making full compensation to the other party, except in case of a grossly negligent, willful, or fraudulent breach of duty [Civil Code § 3275]. This statutory injunction codifies the equitable rule that equity considers the payment, or performance, or enjoyment to be the real thing intended by the agreement, and the penalty or forfeiture to be only an accessory. Equity will relieve against the forfeiture by awarding compensation proportionate to the damages actually resulting from the nonpayment, or nonperformance, or nonenjoyment, according to the stipulations of the agreement [Ascherman v. McKee (1956) 143 Cal. App. 2d 277, 286, 299 P.2d 367] .

Example:

- Trial court properly determined that a Medi-Cal service provider may rely on CC § 3275 to excuse its failure to file a timely treatment authorization request (TAR) in order to receive reimbursement for providing medically necessary services. Where the circumstances and equities excuse compliance with the express state regulation requiring the timely submission of a TAR, a trial court may grant relief from the requirement so long as it finds that the medical service provider's omission was not grossly negligent, willful, or fraudulent [Lauderdale Associates v Department of Health Services (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 117, 122-123, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 802 , superseded by statute as stated in Life Care Centers of America v. CalOptima (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 1169, 1182, 35 Cal. Rptr. 3d 387] .

Civ. Code § 3275 is not the exclusive source of the right to relief from forfeiture for breach of obligation. The prohibition of punitive damages for breach of contract in Civ. Code § 3294, the strict limitations on the right to provide for liquidated damages in Civ. Code §§ 1670, 1671, and the bar of specific nor preventive enforcing a forfeiture in Civ. Code § 3369 together establish a policy that precludes a forfeiture having no reasonable relation to the damage caused by the vendee's breach of contract even when that breach is willful [MacFadden v Walker (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 809, 813-814, 97 Cal. Rptr. 537, 488 P.2d 1353] . The approach is an equitable remedy that is carefully hedged around with protections to the person against whom it is invoked, as follows [MacFadden v Walker (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 809, 815, 97 Cal. Rptr. 537, 488 P.2d 1353 (breaching party granted specific performance)]:

- The contract must be just and reasonable, and the consideration adequate [see Civ. Code, § 3391].

- The vendor must be assured that he or she will also receive the benefit of the bargain [see Civ. Code, § 3386].

- The defenses of laches and unclean hands are available to preclude a defaulting vendee from seeking an unfair advantage over an innocent vendor.

Example:

- Equity allows a vendee who has made substantial payments on a land installment sale contract or substantial improvements on a property, and whose defaults, albeit willful, consist solely of failure to pay further amounts due, has an unconditional right to a reasonable opportunity to complete the purchase by paying the entire remaining balance plus damages before the seller is allowed to quiet title [Petersen v. Hartell (1985) 40 Cal. 3d 102, 219 Cal. Rptr. 170, 707 P.2d 232 (referring to procedure as a redemption)].

[3] Possibility of Exception for Statutorily Authorized Forfeiture

For a statute to effect a forfeiture, its provisions to that effect must be clear and certain [ABI, Inc. v. City of Los Angeles (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d 669, 682, 200 Cal. Rptr. 563] . In determining a party's right to another party's forfeiture, the statute's forfeiture provisions must be strictly construed [Civ. Code § 1442], and the party claiming the right must have strictly followed the statutory method [Castello v. Central Eureka Mining Co. (1948) 85 Cal. App. 2d 772, 774, 193 P.2d 968 ; Ruck v. Caledonia Silver Min. Co. (1907) 6 Cal. App. 356, 359, 92 P. 194] .

While Courts of Appeals decisions have stated that if a statute provides a method of forfeiture, and a party has strictly followed that method, equity affords no relief from it [see, e.g., Castello v. Central Eureka Mining Co. (1948) 85 Cal. App. 2d 772, 774, 193 P.2d 968 ; Palo & Dodini v. Oakland (1947) 79 Cal. App. 2d 739, 747, 180 P.2d 764 ; Ruck v. Caledonia Silver Min. Co. (1907) 6 Cal. App. 356, 359, 92 P. 194] , the California Supreme Court has held that the equitable grounds of mistake allow a party to avoid forfeiture under a statute that does not explicitly require forfeiture in situations where the party has a legal excuse, such as mistake as a basis for equitable relief, for triggering the forfeiture clause [M. F. Kemper Constr. Co. v. Los Angeles (1951) 37 Cal. 2d 696, 705, 235 P.2d 7] .

§ 251.102 Cy Pres or Fluid Recovery

In many class actions, particularly those involving consumer lawsuits, individual damages are too small to make traditional methods of proof worthwhile or feasible. In these situations, courts frequently use the cy pres or "fluid recovery" method to assess and distribute damages. The implementation of fluid recovery involves three steps [State v. Levi Strauss & Co. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 460, 472-473, 479, 490, 224 Cal. Rptr. 605, 715 P.2d 564] :

- Payment of the defendant's total damage liability into a class fund,
- An opportunity for individual class members to collect their individual shares by proving their particular damages, usually under a lowered standard of proof; and
- Distribution of the residue.

For discussion of cy pres, see Ch. 120, Class Actions, § 120.22.

21-251 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 251.103

§ 251.103 Alter Ego Doctrine

The equitable remedy of the alter ego doctrine [Troyk v. Farmers Group, Inc.(2008) 168 Cal. App. 4th 1337, 1372, 86 Cal. Rptr. 3d 416 ; Dow Jones Co. v. Avenel (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 144, 147-148, 198 Cal. Rptr. 457] protects the rights of third persons by disregarding the distinct existence of a corporation and its stockholders and treating them as identical when necessary to circumvent fraud [Erkenbrecher v. Grant (1921) 187 Cal. 7, 10-11, 200 P. 641 ; Rowe v. Exline (2007) 153 Cal. App. 4th 1276, 1284, 63 Cal. Rptr. 3d 787]. Two conditions must be met before the alter ego doctrine will be invoked. First, there must be such a unity of interest and ownership between the corporation and its equitable owner that the separate personalities of the corporation and the shareholder do not in reality exist. Second, there must be an inequitable result if the acts in question are treated as those of the corporation alone [Troyk v. Farmers Group, Inc. (2008) 168 Cal. App. 4th 1337, 1372, 86 Cal. Rptr. 3d 416].

For discussion of the alter ego doctrine, see Ch. 161, Corporations: Alter Ego Liability, § 161.10.

§ 251.110 Restitution

Whether termed unjust enrichment, quasi-contract, or quantum meruit [see § 251.120], the equitable remedy of restitution when unjust enrichment has occurred is an obligation (and not a true contract) created by the law without regard to the intention of the parties, and is designed to restore the aggrieved party to his or her former position by return of the thing or its equivalent in money [Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Dintino (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 333, 346, 84 Cal. Rptr. 3d 38].

Restitution includes not only the restoration or giving back of something to its rightful owner, but also compensation, reimbursement, indemnification, or reparation for benefits derived from, or for loss or injury caused to, another [Dinosaur Development, Inc. v. White (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 1310, 1315, 265 Cal. Rptr. 525 ; Lucky Auto Supply v. Turner (1966) 244 Cal. App. 2d 872, 885, 53 Cal. Rptr. 628] . To be entitled to restitution, one must confer the benefit by mistake, fraud, coercion, or request [Dinosaur Development, Inc. v. White (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 1310, 1315-1316, 265 Cal. Rptr. 525 ; Nibbi Brothers, Inc. v. Home Federal Sav. & Loan Assn. (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 1415, 1422, 253 Cal. Rptr. 289] . A benefit is conferred not only when one adds to the property of another, but also when one saves the other from expense or loss [Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Dintino (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 333, 346-347, 84 Cal. Rptr. 3d 38].

For example:

- The law of restitution may give a supplier a cause of action against a lender for unjust enrichment under a broad range of circumstances distinct from those on which the equitable lien was predicated. In an appropriate case, the lender's fraudulent inducement to the supplier to perform work on the property may give rise to a cause of action distinct from the equitable lien [Nibbi Brothers, Inc. v. Home Federal Sav. & Loan Assn. (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 1415, 1421-1422, 253 Cal. Rptr. 289] .

The phrase "unjust enrichment" is used to characterize the result or effect of a failure to make restitution of or for property or benefits received under circumstances that give rise to a legal or equitable obligation to account for them [Dinosaur Development, Inc. v. White (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 1310, 1315, 265 Cal. Rptr. 525 ; Lucky Auto Supply v. Turner (1966) 244 Cal. App. 2d 872, 885, 53 Cal. Rptr. 628] .

To some extent, recovery in restitution is premised on the equitable maxim of Civ. Code § 3521 that one who takes a benefit must bear the burden [Halperin v. Raville (1986) 176 Cal. App. 3d 765, 771-774, 222 Cal. Rptr. 350] .

The Unfair Competition Law, Bus. & Prof. Code § 17203, allows restitution under the terms of the statute. For a brief discussion of unfair competition, see § 251.183.

For discussion of the maxim that one who takes a benefit must bear the burden, see § 251.59.

For discussion of restitution after rescission or to avoid unjust enrichment, see Ch. 490, Rescission and Restitution, § 490.27. For forms of complaints and answers to complaints seeking restitution based on rescission, see Ch. 490, Rescission and Restitution, § 490.61 et seq. 21-251 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 251.111

§ 251.111 Constructive Trusts

A constructive trust is an involuntary equitable trust created by operation of law as a remedy to compel the transfer of property from a person who is wrongfully holding it to its rightful owner [Burlesci v. Petersen (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 1062, 1067, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 704 ; Communist Party v. 522 Valencia, Inc. (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 980, 990, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 618 ; for discussion of wrongful acts as basis for obtaining constructive trust, see Ch. 561, Trusts: Constructive Trusts, § 561.16[4]]. The purpose of a constructive trust is to prevent unjust enrichment and to prevent a person from taking advantage of his or her own wrongdoing [Burlesci v. Petersen (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 1062, 1067, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 704 ; Communist Party v. 522 Valencia, Inc. (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 980, 990, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 618] .

The equitable principles that one who wrongfully acquires or detains property of another holds the property as an involuntary constructive trustee for the owner are codified in Civ. Code §§ 2223 and 2224 [Burlesci v. Petersen (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 1062, 1067, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 704 ; Communist Party v. 522 Valencia, Inc. (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 980, 990, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 618] .

PRACTICE TIP:

The imposition of a constructive trust is an equitable remedy, so the incidents of a constructive trust differ from those of an express or resulting trust [Haskel Eng'g & Supply Co. v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co. (1978) 78 Cal. App. 3d 371, 375, 144 Cal. Rptr. 189] . Express and resulting trusts arise from the intention of the parties (express or implied) to set aside property under the stewardship of a trustee for the benefit of the beneficiary. An express trust establishes a fiduciary relationship, while a constructive trust does not. A constructive trust is imposed by a court of equity, independent of the intention of the parties, to prevent a party in possession of property from being unjustly enriched [see Del Costello v. State of California (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 887, 892, 185 Cal. Rptr. 582] .

For discussion of resulting trusts, see § 251.112.

Express, Public, Charitable, and Totten Trusts .

For discussion and forms on obtaining a constructive trust on property, see Ch. 561, Trusts: Constructive Trusts .

§ 251.112 Resulting Trusts

A resulting trust arises from the transfer of property under circumstances showing that the transferee was not intended to take the beneficial interest in the property [Lloyds Bank Cal. v. Wells Fargo Bank (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 1038, 1042, 232 Cal. Rptr. 339 ; Martin v. Kehl (1983) 145 Cal. App. 3d 228, 238, 193 Cal. Rptr. 312] . A resulting trust is a creature of equity [Calistoga Civic Club v. City of Calistoga (1983) 143 Cal. App. 3d 111, 117, 191 Cal. Rptr. 571] , an involuntary trust [Wells Fargo Bank v. Greuner (1964) 226 Cal. App. 2d 454, 460, 38 Cal. Rptr. 132] created by operation of law [see Lloyds Bank Cal. v. Wells Fargo Bank (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 1038, 1042, 232 Cal. Rptr. 339] when the intention of the parties to create a trust is not expressed [Wells Fargo Bank v. Greuner (1964) 226 Cal. App. 2d 454, 460, 38 Cal. Rptr. 132] .

PRACTICE TIP:

A resulting trust has been termed an intention-enforcing trust, to distinguish it from the other type of implied trust, the constructive or fraud-rectifying trust. While the resulting trust carries out the inferred intent of the parties, the constructive trust defeats or prevents the wrongful act of one of the parties [Martin v. Kehl (1983) 145 Cal. App. 3d 228, 238, 193 Cal. Rptr. 312] .

For discussion of constructive trusts, see § 251.111.

For discussion and forms on obtaining a resulting trust on property, see Ch. 562, Trusts: Resulting Trusts .

§ 251.113 Equitable Liens

[1] Definition and Grounds for Finding Equitable Lien

[a] Definition of Equitable Lien

An equitable lien is a direct charge or encumbrance on property such that the property itself may be proceeded against in an equitable action and either sold or sequestered and its proceeds applied in favor of the person in whose favor it exists [Okuda v. Superior Court (1983) 144 Cal. App. 3d 135, 141, 192 Cal. Rptr. 388] .

For discussion of equitable liens, see Ch. 342, Liens and Wage Preferences, § 342.40 et seq.

[b] Grounds for Judicial Finding of Equitable Lien

The basic purpose of an equitable lien is identifying and impressing on certain property the beneficial rights that have arisen in an innocent party who in some way contributed to the acquisition, protection, or improvement of the property [Holder v. Williams (1959) 167 Cal. App. 2d 313, 315, 334 P.2d 291] . A court may find grounds for imposing an equitable lien on the basis of either:

- Express, executory intent to contractually secure debt or obligation [Holder v. Williams (1959) 167 Cal. App. 2d 313, 316, 334 P.2d 291] :
  - With property, or
  - With the conveyance, transfer, or assignment of property.
- Inference from the circumstances surrounding a particular transaction [see Miller v. Mountain View Sav. & L. Ass'n (1965) 238 Cal. App. 2d 644, 662, 48 Cal. Rptr. 278] .

For discussion of the grounds for imposing an equitable lien, see Ch. 342, Liens and Wage Preferences, § 342.42.

[2] Equitable Lien Recognized After the Fact

Although an equitable lien is not judicially recognized until a judgment is rendered that declares its existence, the lien relates back to the time it was created by the conduct of the parties [Holder v. Williams (1959) 167 Cal. App. 2d 313, 317, 334 P.2d 291] .

21-251 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 251.114

§ 251.114 Partition

In an action for partition, the court orders that the property that is the subject of the petition for partition be divided among the parties in accordance with their interests in the property as determined in the interlocutory judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 872.810]. To achieve this, the interest of each person claiming an interest in property may be put in issue by the others; and, if so, such issues are to be first tried and determined, and no partition can be made until the respective interests of all the parties have been ascertained and settled by a trial [Morenhout v. Higuera (1867) 32 Cal. 289, 295] . In order to make the determination that the plaintiff has the right to partition, the court must find that the plaintiff has an interest in the property sufficient to maintain the action [for determination of sufficient interest, see Ch. 397, Partition, § 397.41[2]]. In addition, the court must find the existence of any special conditions prerequisite to partition of interests in particular types of property [Assembly Legislative Committee Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 872.710].

The partition statutes [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 872.010-874.240] govern actions for partition of real property and, except to the extent not applicable [for examples of inapplicable actions for partition of personal property, see Code Civ. Proc. § 872.020]. An action for partition is statutory, but the powers conferred on the courts by statute are substantially those formerly exercised by the chancery courts in pursuit of the same object, and the methods employed by the code are, in the main, "a reflex of those pursued under former equity practice." It is equitable practice prescribed by law [Jameson v. Hayward (1895) 106 Cal. 682, 687-688, 39 P. 1078 ; Akley v. Bassett (1922) 189 Cal. 625, 647, 209 P. 576] .

§ 251.115 Equitable Distribution

"Equitable distribution" appears in California law to be a general term referring to a distribution based on either general or statutorily specified equitable principles. The cases do not discuss what an equitable distribution is, and therefore, it may simply fall under the equitable maxim that equity has the power to resolve unique situations with unique solutions [see § 251.13]. This approach is supported by the fact that appellate review of equitable distributions applies the standard of abuse of discretion [see Lesser & Son v. Seymour (1950) 35 Cal. 2d 494, 502, 218 P.2d 536] . The term may apply to, among other things:

- Apportionment of wrongful death awards under Code Civ. Proc. § 578 [s ee, e.g., Corder v. Corder (2007) 41 Cal. 4th 644, 653-654, 61 Cal. Rptr. 3d 660 ; see also Ch. 318, Judgments].

- Distribution of the proceeds of a judicial sale [e.g., Lesser & Son v. Seymour (1950) 35 Cal. 2d 494, 218 P.2d 536] .

- Distribution of proceeds of class action [e.g., Cruz v. PacifiCare Health Systems, Inc. (2003) 30 Cal. 4th 303, 319, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 58, 66 P.3d 1157] .

- Distribution of Medi-Cal beneficiaries among participating prepaid health plans, or managed care plans under Wel & Inst Code § 14087.305(j) [e.g., Capri v. L.A. Fitness International, LLC (2006) 136 Cal. App. 4th 1078, 1086 ; 39 Cal. Rptr. 3d 425] .

- Distribution of tort liability among defendants [e.g., Doe 1 v. City of Murrieta (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 899, 908, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 213] .

- Distribution of debtor's assets to creditors [Pangborn Plumbing Corp. v. Carruthers & Skiffington (2002) 97 Cal. App. 4th 1039, 1053, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 416] .

- Distribution of community property in divorce proceeding [Glade v. Glade (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 1441, 1451, 45 Cal. Rptr. 2d 695] .

For discussion of equitable distribution in the context of a particular proceeding, consult the topic addressing the type of claim involved in the proceeding.

21-251 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 251.120

§ 251.120 Quantum Meruit

Given that some courts consider quantum meruit to be an action in equity [see Life Care Centers of America v. CalOptima (2006) 133 Cal. App. 4th 1169, 1182, 35 Cal. Rptr. 3d 387] , even though others do not [see Jogani v. Superior Court (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 901, 906-907, 81 Cal. Rptr. 3d 503 ("species of assumpsit" which is "an action at law")], the doctrine is included here.

Quantum meruit is a well-established principle to the effect that the law implies a promise to pay for services performed under circumstances disclosing that they were not gratuitously rendered [Huskinson & Brown v. Wolf (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 453, 458, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 693, 84 P.3d 379 ; Long v. Rumsey (1938) 12 Cal. 2d 334, 342, 84 P.2d 146] .

To recover on a claim for the reasonable value of services under a quantum meruit theory, a plaintiff must establish both that [Ochs v. PacifiCare of California (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 782, 794, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 734 ; Day v. Alta Bates Medical Center (2002) 98 Cal. App. 4th 243, 248, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 606] :

- He or she was acting pursuant to either an express or implied request for services from the defendant and

- The services rendered were intended to and did benefit the defendant.

Plaintiff must show the circumstances were such that the services were rendered under some understanding or expectation of both parties that the plaintiff was to be compensated therefor [Huskinson & Brown v. Wolf (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 453, 458, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 693, 84 P.3d 379 ; Estate of Mumford (1916) 173 Cal. 511, 523, 160 P. 667] . Either the recipient of services performed requested or acquiesced in them, or, when the services are rendered by the plaintiff to a third person, there was a specific request therefor from the defendant [Day v. Alta Bates Medical Center (2002) 98 Cal. App. 4th 243, 249, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 606] .

The plaintiff does not need to prove the existence of a contract [Huskinson & Brown v. Wolf (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 453, 458, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 693, 84 P.3d 379 ; Maglica v. Maglica (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 442, 449, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 101] . The existence of a contract instead precludes recovery on quantum meruit [Valerio v. Andrew Youngquist Construction (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 1264, 1271-1272, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 436] .

Recovery under quantum meruit is inappropriate where it would frustrate the law or public policy [Ochs v. PacifiCare of California (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 782, 794, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 734 ; Dinosaur Development, Inc. v. White (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 1310, 1315, 265 Cal. Rptr. 525] .

Examples include:

- Attorney's expectation of shared attorney fee disallowed under Cal. Rules Prof. Conduct, Rule 2-200 from attorney to whom she referred case on which she nonetheless worked on and paid fees for did not preclude her claim for compensation for time and expenses on basis of quantum meruit [Huskinson & Brown v. Wolf (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 453, 459-464, 84 P.3d 379 ; 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 693] .

- Statutory public bidding requirements generally preclude quantum meruit claims for extra work performed beyond the scope of the contract or for work performed under a contract void for defects in bidding [Amelco Electric v. City of Thousand Oaks (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 228, 234, 239, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 900, 38 P.3d 1120] .

- A quasi-contract theory such as quantum meruit cannot be asserted against a municipality in a public works context [North Bay Construction, Inc. v. City of Petaluma (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 552, 563, 49 Cal. Rptr. 3d 455] .

- The passage of Welf. & Inst. Code § 14081.5 precludes the extension of the equitable principle of quantum meruit to circumvent management controls on Medi-Cal reimbursement [Life Care Centers of America v. CalOptima (2006) 133 Cal. App. 4th 1169, 1182, 35 Cal. Rptr. 3d 387] .

- There is nothing in Health and Safety Code § 1371.4 or in the Knox-Keene Health Care Service Plan Act of 1975, [see Health and Safety Code § 1340 et seq.] generally to preclude a private action on a quantum meruit theory [Bell v. Blue Cross of California (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 211, 216, 31 Cal. Rptr. 3d 688] .

§ 251.121 Receivership

A receiver pendente lite is a person appointed by the court to take the charge and management of property that is the subject of the litigation before the court to preserve and ultimately dispose of it according to the final judgment in the case [Kreling v. Kreling (1897) 118 Cal. 421, 422, 50 P. 549 ; Neider v. Dardi (1955) 130 Cal. App. 2d 646, 650, 279 P.2d 598] . A receiver may be appointed only in the classes of cases expressly set forth in the statutes [Turner v. Superior Court (1977) 72 Cal. App. 3d 804, 811, 140 Cal. Rptr. 475] .

Under the main statute on receivers, a court may appoint a receiver when necessary to preserve the property or rights of any party [Code Civ. Proc. § 564(b)(9)]. This provision, formerly Code Civ. Proc. § 564(b)(8), was amended by Stats. 2001, ch. 44, in a manner replacing reference to equity with the standard, "when necessary to preserve the property or rights of any party." Accordingly, this statute may derogate from the common law of equitable jurisdiction to impose receivership.

However, when the purpose of the receivership is to reach property of a judgment debtor which cannot be reached by the ordinary levy of execution, that is, when the receivership is supplementary to or in aid of execution, the receivership is a statutory creation and not an equitable remedy [Morand v. Superior Court (1974) 38 Cal. App. 3d 347, 349-350, 113 Cal. Rptr. 281] .

For additional discussion and forms for seeking imposition of receivership in an action, see Ch. 486, Receivers .

§ 251.122 Marshaling Assets

Marshaling of assets is an equitable doctrine that applies where two or more creditors seek satisfaction from one debtor, and one of the creditors can reach two funds held by debtor, whereas other creditor can reach only one of funds. Equity will require the creditor who can reach both funds, if it can be done without prejudice to him or inequity to third parties, to look first to the fund that cannot be reached by the other creditor [Victor Gruen Associates, Inc. v Glass (1964, CA9 Cal) 338 F2d 826 ; see also Civ. Code §§ 2899, 3433].

For discussion of marshalling of assets, see Ch. 342, Liens and Wage Preferences, § 342.24. For forms of complaint and affirmative defense to actions for marshalling assets, see Ch. 342, Liens and Wage Preferences, §§ 342.159, 342.160.

§ 251.130 Contribution by Joint Nontort Judgment Debtors

If two or more nontort judgment debtors are jointly liable on a money judgment, one of them who has satisfied more than his or her due proportion of the judgment, whether voluntarily or through enforcement procedures, may compel contribution from another judgment debtor who has satisfied less than his or her due proportion of the judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 882(a)]. Similarly, if a judgment is based on an obligation of one judgment debtor as surety for another and the surety satisfies any part of the judgment, the surety may compel repayment from the principal [Code Civ. Proc. § 882(b)].

PRACTICE TIP:

As an alternative to contribution, a party satisfying the obligation of a joint nontort judgment debtor may take an assignment of the original obligation from the obligor-judgment creditor. The assignee judgment-debtor thereby acquires equitable rights in the assigned obligation with which to force his or her joint judgment debtors to pay their share of the judgment [Tucker v. Nicholson (1938) 12 Cal. 2d 427, 430, 84 P.2d 1045] .

For discussion of assignment, see Ch. 60, Assignments .

A judgment debtor may apply on noticed motion to the court that entered the judgment for an order determining liability for contribution or repayment, at any time before the judgment is satisfied in full or within 30 days thereafter [Code Civ. Proc. § 883(a)].

For discussion of contribution by joint nontort judgment debtor, see Ch. 300, Indemnity and Contribution, §§ 300.92, 300.93. For forms of postjudgment proceedings to determine liability of joint nontort judgment debtor, see Ch. 300, Indemnity and Contribution, § 300.211 et seq.

§ 251.131 Legal Subrogation and Assignment

[1] Definitions

"To subrogate" is to put in the place of another, to substitute. Subrogation is the substitution of another person (the subrogee) in place of the creditor or claimant (the subrogor) to whose rights the other person succeeds in relation to the debt or claim [Interstate Fire and Casualty Ins. Co. v. Cleveland Wrecking Co. (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 23, 31, 105 Cal. Rptr. 3d 606 ; Reliance Nat'l Indem. Co. v. General Star Indem. Co. (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 1063, 1077, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 627] . Subrogation has been said to be of two kinds, "legal" and "conventional." Legal subrogation has its source in equity and arises by operation of law. Conventional subrogation arises by the act of the parties and rests in contract [Fifield Manor v. Finston (1960) 54 Cal. 2d 632, 638, 7 Cal. Rptr. 377, 354 P.2d 1073] .

Legal subrogation sometimes may be described as an assignment by operation of law, or a legal assignment, or an equitable assignment [see, e.g., Bank of California v. Connolly (1973) 36 Cal. App. 3d 350, 366-368, 111 Cal. Rptr. 468] .

For discussion of the definition of legal subrogation and related terminology, see Ch. 536, Subrogation, §§ 536.11, 536.12, 536.14. For discussion of assignments, see Ch. 60, Assignments .

[2] Elements of Legal Subrogation

The prerequisites for equitable subrogation generally are [Caito v. United Cal. Bank (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 694, 704, 144 Cal. Rptr. 751, 576 P.2d 466] :

- Payment was made by the subrogee to protect his or her own interest,
- The subrogee did not act as a volunteer,
- The debt is one for which the subrogee was not primarily liable,

- The entire debt has been paid, and
- Subrogation does not work any injustice to the rights of others.

For discussion of the elements of legal subrogation actions and related defenses and procedure, see Ch. 536, Subrogation, § 536.13 et seq. For forms of complaints, allegations, and defenses in subrogation actions, see Ch. 536, Subrogation, § 536.80 et seq.

§ 251.132 Comparative Indemnity

[1] Definition and Scope of Comparative Indemnity

Comparative indemnity is a method of apportioning liability among those who are responsible for another's personal injury or property damage [see American Motorcycle Assn. v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 578, 599-604, 146 Cal. Rptr. 182, 578 P.2d 899 (using alternate name of "implied equitable indemnity" for the doctrine)].

The doctrine applies to tort liability [see American Motorcycle Assn. v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 578, 591, 598, 146 Cal. Rptr. 182, 578 P.2d 899] or for liability implied by contract language not addressing indemnification [Bay Dev., Ltd. v. Superior Court (1990) 50 Cal. 3d 1012, 1029, 269 Cal. Rptr. 720, 791 P.2d 290] .

[2] Elements of Comparative Indemnity

At a minimum, equitable indemnity requires a determination of fault on the part of the alleged indemnitor. In the absence of a contractual agreement between the parties concerning allocation of fault, a court determination that neither party was at fault precludes either from obtaining indemnity against the other [City of Huntington Beach v. City of Westminster (1997) 57 Cal App. 4th 220, 225, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 826] .

In addition, comparative indemnity is available only among tortfeasors who are jointly and severally liable to the plaintiff [GEM Developers v. Hallcraft Homes of San Diego, Inc. (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d 419, 430, 261 Cal. Rptr. 626] .

For discussion of the comparative indemnity and related defenses and procedure, see Ch. 300, Indemnity and Contribution, § 300.60 et seq. For forms of complaints, cross-complaints, proceedings for attorney fees, and related matters in comparative indemnity actions, see Ch. 300, Indemnity and Contribution, § 300.160 et seq.

21-251 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 251.140

§ 251.140 Jurisdictional Defenses

Among others, the following are defenses to equitable actions based on limits on a court's equitable jurisdiction:

- Law provides as adequate remedy [see §§ 251.31[1] -[2]];
- Law has supplanted equity jurisdiction [see § 251.31[3]];
- The requested relief is contrary to positive statute [see § 251.32[1]]; and
- Requested equitable relief would interfere with municipal legislative power [see § 251.32[3]].

In addition, the court has a duty to exercise jurisdiction to resolve the complete controversy between the parties, so all legal defenses and counterclaims should be raised in the case [see § 251.34].

On the other hand, a court exercising equitable jurisdiction need only obtain jurisdiction over the person controlling property, so the defense of lack of subject matter jurisdiction over the rem of a case is not available [see § 251.30[2]].

§ 251.141 Unclean Hands

[1] The Nature of the Defense

[a] In General

In accordance with the maxim that no one can take advantage of his or her own wrong [see Civ. Code § 3517; for discussion, see § 251.58], those who seek the aid of equity must come to the court in good faith. Any unconscionable conduct that relates to the transaction may give rise to the defense of unclean hands and bar relief [Samuelson v Ingraham (1969) 272 Cal. App. 2d 804, 77 Cal. Rptr. 750] . Whether the defense applies in particular circumstances depends on the analogous case law, the nature of the misconduct, and the relationship of the misconduct to the claimed injuries [Jay Bharat Developers, Inc. v. Minidis (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 437, 445-446, 84 Cal. Rptr. 3d 267 ; Dickson, Carlson & Campillo v. Pole (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 436, 447, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 678 ; Blain v. Doctor's Co. (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 1048, 1060, 272 Cal. Rptr. 250] .

The defense of unclean hands has been applied to causes of action and defenses including, but not limited to:

- Declaratory judgment [Fladeboe v. American Isuzu Motors Inc. (2007) 150 Cal. App. 4th 42, 57, 58 Cal. Rptr. 3d 225].

- Injunctive relief [Jay Bharat Developers, Inc. v. Minidis (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 437, 445-446, 84 Cal. Rptr. 3d 267 ; Nutro Products, Inc. v. Cole Grain Co. (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 860, 869, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 41] .

- Reformation as an equitable remedy [Seymour v. Cariker (1963) 220 Cal. App. 2d 300, 305, 33 Cal. Rptr. 727] .

- Unjust enrichment [Lundgren v Lundgren (1966) 245 Cal. App. 2d 582, 54 Cal. Rptr. 30] .

- A party seeking equitable relief on laches must come into court with clean hands [In re Marriage of Dancy (2000) 82 Cal. App. 4th 1142, 1157, 98 Cal. Rptr. 2d 775] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Unclean hands, unlike "do equity" [see § 251.52A] requires inequitable conduct by the plaintiff in connection with the matter in controversy and provides a complete defense to the plaintiff's action [Dickson, Carlson & Campillo v. Pole (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 436, 446, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 678] .

The equitable defense of unclean hands is not a defense to an unfair trade or business practices claim based on violation of a statute, such as California's Unfair Competition Law [Ticconi v. Blue Shield of Cal. Life & Health Ins. Co. (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 528, 543, 72 Cal. Rptr. 3d 888].

As a matter of law, the unclean hands doctrine is not an affirmative defense to a cause of action under the Immigration Consultants Act, Bus. & Prof. Code, § 22440 et seq. [Mendoza v. Ruesga (2008) 169 Cal. App. 4th 270, 282, 86 Cal. Rptr. 3d 610].

[b] Unconscionable Conduct Must Occur in Litigated Transaction or Subject Matter

The doctrine of unclean hands rule does not call for denial of relief to one guilty of any past improper conduct. It is only misconduct in the particular transaction or connected with the subject matter of the litigation that is a basis for the defense [Jay Bharat Developers, Inc. v. Minidis (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 437, 445, 84 Cal. Rptr. 3d 267 ; Shaw v. Shaw (1964) 227 Cal. App. 2d 159, 38 Cal. Rptr. 520] .

[c] Requires Prejudice to Moving Party Warranting No Relief

The act upon which equity may refuse relief to plaintiff because plaintiff does not come into court with clean hands must prejudicially affect the rights of the person against whom relief is sought so that it would be inequitable to grant such relief [Jay Bharat Developers, Inc. v. Minidis (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 437, 445, 84 Cal. Rptr. 3d 267 ; Wiley v Wiley (1943) 59 Cal. App. 2d 840, 139 P.2d 950] . The defense of unclean hands does not apply in every instance where the plaintiff has committed some misconduct in connection with the matter in controversy, but applies only where it would be inequitable to grant the plaintiff any relief [Dickson, Carlson & Campillo v. Pole (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 436, 446-447, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 678 ; Martin v. Kehl (1983) 145 Cal. App. 3d 228, 239-240, n. 1, 193 Cal. Rptr. 312] . The court must consider both the degree of harm caused by the plaintiff's misconduct and the extent of the plaintiff's alleged damages [Dickson, Carlson & Campillo v. Pole (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 436, 447, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 678] .

[d] Must Not Cause Injustice

The doctrine of clean hands must not be applied where to do so would create an injustice. It is neither proper nor necessary to sacrifice justice in order to vindicate the honor of the court [Hill v Younkin (1969) 274 Cal. App. 2d 880, 79 Cal. Rptr. 509] .

[2] Burden on Party Asserting Defense

The party asserting the defense of unclean hands must plead it or otherwise call it to the attention of the trial court. Only in cases involving "flagrantly unconscionable" conduct will the court, on its own initiative, apply the doctrine of unclean hands even though it was not raised initially by the parties [Behm v. Fireside Thrift Co. (1969) 272 Cal. App. 2d 15, 21, 76 Cal. Rptr. 849] .

[3] Question of Fact

Whether a party has been guilty of unclean hands is a question of fact for the factfinder [Bennett v. Lew (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 1177, 199 Cal. Rptr. 241] . If requested, factual findings concerning the nature of the misconduct and the extent of prejudice or damage to the defendant relative to the plaintiff's damages or other requested relief may be necessary to support the court's exercise of discretion and facilitate effective review [Dickson, Carlson & Campillo v. Pole (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 436, 447, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 678] .

[4] Within Discretion of Trial Court

The decision of whether to apply the defense based on the facts is a matter within the trial court's discretion [Farahani v. San Diego Community College Dist. (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 1486, 1495, 96 Cal. Rptr. 3d 900 ; Dickson, Carlson & Campillo v. Pole (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 436, 447, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 678 ; Lovett v. Carrasco (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 48, 55, 73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 496] . However, a court's discretion to grant an equitable defense such as unclean hands is not unlimited. The court must consider the material facts affecting the equities between the parties; the failure to do so is an abuse of discretion [Dickson, Carlson & Campillo v. Pole (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 436, 447, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 678] .

[5] Effect of Defense

The clean hand doctrine operates to deny a suitor the special remedies of equity and leaves the party to his or her remedies at law. It does not deny legal rights, or generally foreclose a defense by a defendant brought into equity [Behm v Fireside Thrift Co. (1969) 272 Cal. App. 2d 15, 76 Cal. Rptr. 849] . A party who has acted wrongfully, dishonestly, or unfairly in bringing an action to court is precluded from obtaining equitable relief [Seymour v. Cariker (1963) 220 Cal. App. 2d 300, 305, 33 Cal. Rptr. 727] .

In an action for declaratory judgment, the trial court must not merely dismiss the action for unclean hands, but adjudicate the defense with the merits of the declaratory relief cause of action [Fladeboe v. American Isuzu Motors Inc. (2007) 150 Cal. App. 4th 42, 57-58, 58 Cal. Rptr. 3d 225].

D. Defenses to Actions in Equity

21-251 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 251.142

§ 251.142 Laches

[1] The Nature of Laches Defense

Laches is a defense to a suit in equity. Under the doctrine of laches the plaintiff will be refused equitable relief because of his or her delay in bringing suit, even though the suit is commenced within the statutory period of limitation [Trail v. Firth (1921) 186 Cal. 68, 69, 198 P 1033] . Laches is a question of fact, and it must be determined, on the evidence, by all of the circumstances of each particular case [see In re Marriage of Plescia (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 252, 256, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 120] .

The defense of laches rests on the maxim that "equity aids the vigilant, not those who sleep on their rights" [Magic Kitchen LLC v. Good Things International, Ltd. (2007) 153 Cal. App. 4th 1144, 1156, 63 Cal. Rptr. 3d 713].

For a discussion of the maxim that equity aids the vigilant and not those who sleep on their rights, see § 251.56.

For a discussion of the nature of the defense of laches to an action in equity, see Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions, § 345.40.

For a discussion of raising the defense of laches in an action in equity, see Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions, § 345.43.

[2] Elements and Proof of Laches

The defense of laches requires unreasonable delay plus either acquiescence in the act about which the plaintiff complains or prejudice to the defendant resulting from the delay [Johnson v. City of Loma Linda (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 61, 68, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 316, 5 P.3d 874] . The elements of unreasonable delay and resulting prejudice may be met in two ways [Fountain Valley Regional Hospital & Medical Center v. Bonta (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 316, 323-325, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 139] :

- They may be demonstrated by the evidence in the case, and the person arguing in favor of a finding of laches has the burden of proof on the laches issue, or

- The element of prejudice may be "presumed" if there exists a statute of limitations that is sufficiently analogous to the facts of the case and the period of limitations has been exceeded by the party bringing the claim.

For a discussion of the elements of the defense of laches to an action in equity, see Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions, § 345.41.

[3] Defenses to the Defense of Laches

The equitable doctrines of estoppel [see Austin v. Hallmark Oil Co. (1943) 21 Cal. 2d 718, 735, 134 P.2d 777] and unclean hands [see Magic Kitchen LLC v. Good Things International, Ltd. (2007) 153 Cal. App. 4th 1144, 1165, 63 Cal. Rptr. 3d 713 (unclean hands bars assertion of laches by "willful" or "deliberate" defendant); In re Marriage of Dancy (2000) 82 Cal. App. 4th 1142, 1157, 98 Cal. Rptr. 2d 775] apply to a defendant seeking to invoke the equitable defense of laches to a plaintiff's action in equity.

For a discussion of the equitable doctrine of unclean hands, see § 251.141.

§ 251.143 Statute of Limitations

Whether or not the plaintiff is guilty of laches, an action not brought within the statutory period is barred unless it falls within some exception within the statute or the defense of the statute of limitations is not open to the defendant because of waiver or estoppel [Trail v. Firth (1921) 186 Cal. 68, 69-70, 198 P. 1033] .

The statute of limitation applicable to a given equitable cause of action depends on the nature of the underlying cause in the same manner as with actions at law. For discussion of relevant limitation periods, consult the chapter addressing the substantive claim in an action for equity.

For a discussion of statutes of limitation, see Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions . For a table of limitation periods organized by type of substantive claim, see Ch. 345, Table of Limitation Periods, § 345.150 et seq.

§ 251.150 Failure to Do Equity

[1] Condition on Equity for Plaintiff

As a defense to an equitable action, the maxim to do equity does not assume that the plaintiff has done anything unconscientious or inequitable, much less does it refuse to him or her all relief. On the contrary, it ordinarily grants the plaintiff the remedy to which he or she is entitled, but upon condition that the defendant's equitable rights are protected by means of the remedy to which the defendant is entitled [Dickson, Carlson & Campillo v. Pole (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 436, 446 n.7, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 678] .

Strategic Point:

The doctrine to do equity differs from that of unclean hands [see § 251.141]. Unclean hands, unlike do equity, requires inequitable conduct by the plaintiff in connection with the matter in controversy and provides a complete defense to the plaintiff's action. More specifically, the doctrine of unclean hands differs from the maxim to do equity, in that the latter assumes that different equitable rights have arisen from the same subject matter or transaction, some in favor of plaintiff and some in favor of the defendant, so that the plaintiff is required to recognize and provide for defendant's rights, and plaintiff's relief is granted only upon a showing that defendant's rights are protected [DeGarmo v. Goldman (1942) 19 Cal. 2d 755, 765, 123 P.2d 1 ; Dickson, Carlson & Campillo v. Pole (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 436, 446, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 678] .

Examples of conditions properly placed on judgments in equity include:

- Conditioning injunctive relief upon payment of costs [Collester v. Oftedahl (1941) 48 Cal. App. 2d 756, 760-761, 120 P.2d 710] .

- The trial court could not quiet appellant's title to the property without protecting the interests of respondent therein [District Bond Co. V. Pollack (1942) 19 Cal. 2d 304, 307, 121 P.2d 7] .

Examples of conditions considered inequitable to place on a judgment in equity include:

- Order the easement owner to contribute all or part of the cost of relocating or reconstructing an encroaching building [Warsaw v. Chicago Metallic Ceilings, Inc. (1984) 35 Cal. 3d 564, 575-576, 199 Cal. Rptr. 773] .

[2] Limited Application as Complete Defense

The obligation to do equity is only a complete defense to an action if either [Dickson, Carlson & Campillo v. Pole (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 436, 446, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 678] :

- The plaintiff fails to comply with the conditions imposed to afford relief to the defendant on the equities favoring the defendant, or

- The court cannot accommodate the equities favoring the defendant in granting the relief, and to grant relief to the plaintiff without affording relief to the defendant would be inequitable.

For discussion of the maxim to do equity, see § 251.52A.

[3] Applicable to Actions at Law and in Equity

The rule that one who seeks equity must do equity is not confined to cases that were formerly cognizable only in equity. It applies as well to actions authorized by statute, and a plaintiff may be forced to do equity, as a condition of claiming rights fixed by statute and established law [Richman v. Bank of Perris (1929) 102 Cal. App. 71, 83, 282 P. 801] .

1. Purely Equitable Defenses to Causes of Action

§ 251.151 Waiver

Waiver is an intentional relinquishment of a known right after knowledge of the facts [Waller v. Truck Ins. Exchange, Inc. (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 1, 31-32, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 370, 900 P.2d 619 ; Supervalu, Inc. v. Wexford Underwriting Managers, Inc. (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 64, 76, 96 Cal. Rptr. 3d 316] or such conduct as warrants an inference of the relinquishment of such right [Waller v. Truck Ins. Exchange, Inc. (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 1, 31, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 370, 900 P.2d 619 ; Bastanchury v. Times-Mirror Co. (1945) 68 Cal. App. 2d 217, 240, 156 P.2d 488] . A waiver may be expressed or implied [Waller v. Truck Ins. Exchange, Inc. (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 1, 31, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 370, 900 P.2d 619 ; Salton Community Services Dist. v. Southard (1967) 256 Cal. App. 2d 526, 532, 64 Cal. Rptr. 246] . Waiver may be implied from conduct inferentially manifesting an intention to waive [Johnson v. Kaeser (1925) 196 Cal. 686, 698, 239 P. 324 ; Salton Community Services Dist. v. Southard (1967) 256 Cal. App. 2d 526, 532-533, 64 Cal. Rptr. 246] .

When a party's statement or conduct intentionally leads a second party to believe a particular thing and reasonably rely on that belief, the second party cannot take a contrary position during litigation [Supervalu, Inc. v. Wexford Underwriting Managers, Inc. (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 64, 77, 96 Cal. Rptr. 3d 316 ; Westoil Terminals Co., Inc. v. Industrial Indemnity Co. (2003) 110 Cal. App.4th 139, 152, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 516] . The doctrine of waiver operates defensively only. In other words, it protects a party from unfair advantage sought by another. It is not designed to permit a person, offensively, to thereby obtain unfair advantage [Supervalu, Inc. v. Wexford Underwriting Managers, Inc. (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 64, 77, 96 Cal. Rptr. 3d 316 ; Peskin v. Phinney (1960) 182 Cal. App. 2d 632, 636, 6 Cal. Rptr. 389] . Waiver must generally be pleaded affirmatively in order to be considered by the court [San Fernando Valley C. of C. v. Thomas (1954) 123 Cal. App. 2d 348, 350-351, 266 P.2d 891 (reformation of instrument)].

The burden is on the party claiming a waiver of a right to prove it by clear and convincing evidence that does not leave the matter to speculation. Doubtful cases will be decided against a waiver [Waller v. Truck Ins. Exchange, Inc. (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 1, 31, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 370, 900 P.2d 619] .

For discussion and forms concerning waiver with respect to a particular right or claim, consult the topic covering the type of right or claim.

21-251 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 251.152

§ 251.152 Bona Fide Purchase

The doctrine of bona fide purchase gives a bona fide purchaser priority over earlier-arising unrecorded interests of which the bona fide purchaser had no notice [Bank of America, N.A. v. La Jolla Group II (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 706, 715, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 825] . A bona fide purchaser might generally be described as one who [Melendrez v. D & I Investment, Inc. (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 1238, 1251, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 413 (context of real property recording and sale statutes)]:

- Purchases the property in good faith for value, and
- Has no knowledge or notice of the asserted rights of another.

The doctrine of bona fide purchase is an equitable one [Bryce v. O'Brien (1936) 5 Cal. 2d 615, 616, 55 P.2d 488] . For example, A deed of real property passes conclusive title from grantor and all claiming under the grantor except a bona fide encumbrancer for value without notice [Fallon v. Triangle Management Services, Inc. (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 1103, 1106, 215 Cal. Rptr. 748] .

Some rules of bona fide purchase have been altered by statute. Thus, for example, under Civ. Code § 2924, there is a conclusive presumption created in favor of a bona fide purchaser who receives a deed that contains a recital that the grantor has fulfilled its statutory notice requirements [Melendrez v. D & I Investment, Inc. (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 1238, 1250, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 413] . The exact definition of bona fide purchaser may vary in the context of a statute as well. Again in the context of Civ. Code § 2924, for example, a bona fide purchaser is one who pays value for the property without notice of any adverse interest or of any irregularity in the sale proceedings [Melendrez v. D & I Investment, Inc. (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 1238, 1250, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 413] .

Furthermore, an instrument wholly void, such as a deed in blank, cannot be made the foundation of a good title under the doctrine of bona fide purchase [Bryce v. O'Brien (1936) 5 Cal. 2d 615, 616, 55 P.2d 488 ; Green v. MacAdam (1959) 175 Cal. App. 2d 481, 486, 346 P.2d 474] .

An innocent purchaser taking a void instrument for whom the doctrine of bona fide purchase offers no relief may be able to find protection in the doctrine of estoppel, if circumstances establish negligence or some other misconduct by the other party contributed to the loss [Green v. MacAdam (1959) 175 Cal. App. 2d 481, 486, 346 P.2d 474] .

For discussion and forms on the doctrine of bona fide purchase to a transaction, consult the topic covering the type of transaction involved. For an exception to the bona fide purchase doctrine where the purchaser has been negligent, see § 251.161[2].

§ 251.153 Terminating Sanction as Equitable Defense

The exercise of the inherent power to dismiss, like all inherent authority, derives in part from the court's historic powers in equity [Stephen Slesinger, Inc. v. The Walt Disney Co. (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 736, 763, 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 268]. The decision whether to exercise the inherent power to dismiss as an equitable defense to plaintiff's misconduct requires consideration of all relevant circumstances, including the nature of the misconduct, the strong preference for adjudicating claims on the merits, the integrity of the court as an institution of justice, the effect of the misconduct on a fair resolution of the case, and the availability of other sanctions to cure the harm [Stephen Slesinger, Inc. v. The Walt Disney Co. (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 736, 764, 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 268].

For a discussion of the equitable sanction of dismissal as a defense generally, see Ch. 510, Sanctions . For a discussion of the equitable sanction of dismissal based on discovery misconduct, see Ch. 192, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 192.13.

§ 251.161 Estoppel

[1] Estoppel as Affirmative Defense in General

Equitable estoppel [for discussion, see § 251.94[1]] may be raised as an affirmative defense, so long as the rules for raising and affirmative defense [see] are properly followed [see Oldcastle Precast, Inc. v. Lumbermens Mut. Casualty Co. (2009) 170 Cal. App. 4th 554, 571-572, 88 Cal. Rptr. 3d 363 (responsive statement of material facts failed to raise affirmative defense of equitable estoppel)].

Estoppel is codified in Evid. Code § 623 [Estate of Bonanno (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 7, 22, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 560].

[2] Estoppel Against Other Party Negligent in Making Third Party Cause Both Parties to Suffer

[a] General Rule

The maxim that where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the act of a third, one of them by whose negligence it happened must be the sufferer [see Civ. Code § 3543; for discussion, see § 251.60], creates an estoppel based upon misplaced confidence by one victim of fraud, resulting in victimization of the other [Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v Superior Court (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 337, 349, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 713 ; Wurzl v. Holloway (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 1740, 1752, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 512] . It must appear that negligence of one of the parties was the cause of the loss [Medak v. Cox (1970) 12 Cal. App. 3d 70, 77, 90 Cal. Rptr. 452] . The question of the other party's negligence is a question of fact [Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v Superior Court (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 337, 349-350, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 713] . Accordingly, the party seeking the protection of this defense must plead, substantiate, and request that the court making a finding on the negligence of the other otherwise innocent party [Medak v. Cox (1970) 12 Cal. App. 3d 70, 77-78, 90 Cal. Rptr. 452 (failure to allege, show, or obtain finding of negligence waived defense)].

[b] Exception for Principal Using Unscrupulous Agent

It is settled that Civ. Code § 3543 ordinarily cannot be relied on by a principal who has utilized the services of an unscrupulous agent [Clifton Cattle Co. v. Thompson (1974) 43 Cal. App. 3d 11, 19, 117 Cal. Rptr. 500] . As between two innocent persons, one of whom must suffer, the loss should fall on the principal who has appointed the agent rather than on the third person who trades or deals with the agent [Clifton Cattle Co. v. Thompson (1974) 43 Cal. App. 3d 11, 19, 117 Cal. Rptr. 500 ; Monteleone v. Southern California Vending Corp. (1968) 264 Cal. App. 2d 798, 808, 70 Cal. Rptr. 703] .

21-251 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 251.170

§ 251.170 Equitable Defenses to Statute of Limitations

[1] Equitable Tolling of Limitations Period in Actions at Law

A period of limitation may be equitably tolled as to one action when plaintiff has sought an alternative form of relief, if [Addison v. State of California (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 313, 319, 146 Cal. Rptr. 224, 578 P.2d 941] :

- Defendant has received timely notice of the first claim,
- Defendant has not been prejudiced in gathering evidence to defend against the second claim, and
- Plaintiff has acted reasonably and in good faith in filing the second action.

For a discussion of equitable tolling of statutes of limitations in actions at law, see Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions, § 345.21. For a form of allegation of circumstances raising the equitable tolling of statutes of limitations, see Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions, § 345.82.

[2] Equitable Estoppel Against Use of Limitations Bar in Actions at Law

The equitable estoppel doctrine applies to a defendant's raising of the bar of statute of limitations if the plaintiff establishes that [Kleinecke v. Montecito Water Dist. (1983) 147 Cal. App. 3d 240, 245-247, 195 Cal. Rptr. 58] :

- The defendant was aware of the limitation period,
- The defendant intended that the plaintiff should rely on his or her conduct or statements,
- The plaintiff was ignorant of the true facts, and

- The plaintiff relied on the defendant's conduct or statements to his or her detriment.

Under this rule, the act or omission must constitute a misrepresentation or nondisclosure of a material fact, rather than law. The defendant need not intend to deceive the plaintiff to give rise to an equitable estoppel. That is, an estoppel may arise although there was no designed fraud on the part of the person sought to be estopped. It is enough if the party has been induced to refrain from using means or taking action that is within his or her power, by which the party might have retrieved his or her position and prevented his or her loss. Where the delay in commencing action is induced by the conduct of the defendant, the defendant may not assert the expiration of the statute of limitation as a defense [Superior Dispatch, Inc. v. Ins. Corp. of N.Y. (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 175, 186-187, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 508] .

A defendant is also estopped from raising the limitations bar to a claim when [see Hernandez v. Garcetti (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 675, 680-681, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 443 ; Parsons v. Tickner (1995) 31 Cal App 4th 1513, 1525-1529, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 810] :

- The defendant fraudulently concealed the facts on which a cause of action depends,

- The plaintiff exercised due diligence, but did not discover the cause of action before the expiration of the limitation period on the cause of action because of the defendant's fraudulent concealment of it.

Finally, a defendant is estopped from raising the limitations bar to a claim when [Bernson v. Browning-Ferris Industries (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 926, 936, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 440, 873 P.2d 613] :

- The defendant fraudulently concealed his or her identity as the person against whom the plaintiff has a right of action,

- The plaintiff exercised due diligence, but did not discover the identity of the defendant before the expiration of the limitation period on the cause of action because of the defendant's fraudulent concealment of his or her identity.

For a discussion of equitable estoppel against a defense of the bar of statute of limitations, see Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions, § 345.22. For a form of allegation that defendant is estopped from raising the bar of the statute of limitations, see Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions, § 345.81.

[3] Relief From Bar of Statute Based on Extrinsic Mistake Caused by Court Clerk

Representations made by a court clerk may be construed as extrinsic mistake giving rise to equitable relief so as to preclude application of a statute of limitation [see Mirvis v. Crowder (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 1684, 1686-1688, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 644] .

For a discussion of relief from a defense of the bar of statute of limitations based on the extrinsic mistake of court clerk, see Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions, § 345.29.

§ 251.180 Abatement of Continuing Nuisance

[1] Cause of Action in Tort

The term "nuisance" is applied to a multiplicity of wrongful acts that may arise out of numerous types of tortious conduct, whether negligent, intentional, or involving ultrahazardous activities [Sturges v. Charles L. Harney, Inc. (1958) 165 Cal. App. 2d 306, 317-318, 331 P.2d 1072] .

For additional discussion of definitions of nuisance, see Ch. 391, Nuisance, §§ 391.11- 39113. For general discussion and forms concerning abatement of nuisance, see Ch. 391, Nuisance .

[2] Injunctive Relief to Abate Continuing Nuisance

If a nuisance is permanent, the plaintiff is entitled to bring only one action in which he or she may recover all damages accrued as well as anticipated future damages. However, if the nuisance is continuing and can be abated, the plaintiff is entitled to an injunction to have the nuisance abated as well as a judgment for all damages having accrued until the commencement of the action and damages for the temporary decrease in the value of the use of the property while the nuisance continues [Spaulding v. Cameron (1952) 38 Cal. 2d 265, 267-269, 239 P.2d 625] .

For additional discussion of injunctive relief to abate a nuisance, see Ch. 391, Nuisance, §§ 391.19, 391.26 -391.29.

The continuing nature of a nuisance refers to the continuing damage caused by the offensive condition, not the acts causing the offensive conduct. Thus, a nuisance may be continuing even if the defendant's offensive conduct has ended years earlier [Mangini v. Aerojet-Gen. Corp. (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 1125, 1147, 281 Cal. Rptr. 827] . In addition, a salient feature of a continuing trespass or nuisance is that its impact may vary over time [see Field-Escandon v. DeMann (1988) 204 Cal. App. 3d 228, 234, 251 Cal. Rptr. 49] .

For additional discussion of the distinction between permanent and continuing nuisances, see Ch. 391, Nuisance, §§ 391.15 -391.17.

[3] Standing to Bring Civil Action to Abate Nuisance

Any person whose property is injuriously affected or whose personal enjoyment is lessened by a nuisance, as defined in Civ. Code § 3479, may bring an action to abate a private nuisance [Code Civ. Proc. § 731].

For additional discussion of standing to bring an action to abate a nuisance, see Ch. 391, Nuisance, §§ 391.27, 391.28.

21-251 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 251.181

§ 251.181 Equitable Conversion

The doctrine of equitable conversion is "a mere fiction" based on the principle that equity regards things that are directed to be done as having actually been performed where nothing has intervened that ought to prevent performance [Parr-Richmond Industrial Corp. v. Boyd (1954) 43 Cal. 2d 157, 165-166, 272 P.2d 16] . The question of conversion is a question of intention [McCaughna v. Bilhorn (1935) 10 Cal. App. 2d 674, 679, 52 P.2d 1025] .

Examples include:

- An unconditional contract for the sale of land, of which specific performance would be decreed, grants the purchaser equitable title, and equity considers him the owner [Parr-Richmond Industrial Corp. v. Boyd (1954) 43 Cal. 2d 157, 166, 272 P.2d 16 ; Estate of Dwyer, 159 Cal. 664, 675, 115 P. 235] . But there is no equitable conversion where the contracting parties demonstrate an intention to the contrary [Parr-Richmond Industrial Corp. v. Boyd (1954) 43 Cal. 2d 157, 166, 272 P.2d 16] .

- Fraudulently conveyed asset which has been sold at trustee's sale is subject to being followed into whatever form it has been converted either on theory of following res into hands of constructive trustee or by applying kind of equitable conversion [Ahmanson Bank & Trust Co. v. Tepper (1969) 269 Cal. App. 2d 333, 344-345, 74 Cal. Rptr. 774] .

- A contract for the sale of land cannot be taken out of the statute of limitations governing contract actions by converting the action into one for the recovery of real property through the application of the doctrine of equitable conversion. Thus the five-year period of limitation provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 318 for the recovery of real property can not be made applicable by the theory that under a contract for sale, the purchaser is deemed to be the equitable owner of the property and the seller is considered the owner of the purchase price [Reiner v. Hermann (1947) 79 Cal. App. 2d 543, 546, 180 P.2d 385] .

- A settlor who is a beneficiary of a revocable trust has the power, under the doctrine of equitable conversion, to convey property to which the trust holds title and over which the beneficiary has complete control [Walgren v. Dolan (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 572, 576-579, 276 Cal. Rptr. 554] .

- A defense of impossibility with regard to specific performance was rejected by the court in a case in which a foreclosure sale resulted in the property being conveyed to bona fide third-party purchasers after the plaintiffs had entered into an oral contract for the purchase of the property. The court reasoned that a decree of specific performance need not be absolute in form, and the performance that it requires need not be identical with that promised in the contract; it may be so drawn as to best effectuate the purposes for which the contract was made, and it may be granted on such terms and conditions as justice requires [Rogers v. Davis (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 1215, 1221-1222, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 716] . The court held that, as the equitable owners of the property at the time of the foreclosure sale, the plaintiffs were entitled in equity to the proceeds of the sale under the doctrine of equitable conversion [Rogers v. Davis (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 1215, 1223, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 716] .

- On the basis of equitable conversion, unlawfully withheld wages are property of the employee within the contemplation of the UCL [Cortez v. Purolator Air Filtration Products Co. (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 163, 178, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 518, 999 P.2d 706] .

- In an action in which the trial court ordered specific performance of a term in a joint venture agreement allowing plaintiff to purchase defendant's interest in the property owned by them as part of their joint venture, the trial court properly found that no equitable conversion of title in plaintiff's favor resulted from defendant's failure to appoint an appraiser, thus delaying the fixing of fair market value, where defendant was not the sole obstacle to the appraisal [De Anza Enters. v. Johnson (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 1307, 1318-1320, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 749] .

- Where it clearly appears from a will that the testatrix intended that real property be sold during administration and the proceeds of the sale be given to an heir and the bequest does not fail, an equitable conversion of the land into money occurs and the will bequeaths personal property and does not devise real estate [McCaughna v. Bilhorn (1935) 10 Cal. App. 2d 674, 678, 52 P.2d 1025] .

§ 251.182 Invasion of Personal Rights

Where relief at law is just as inadequate in cases of personal torts as is such relief in cases of torts to property, there is a strong tendency to extend equitable relief to those cases just as such relief has been extended to protect property rights and rights of substance [Orloff v. Los Angeles Turf Club, Inc. (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 110, 117, 180 P.2d 321] . Code Civ. Proc. § 526, rather than limiting injunctive relief to property rights, indicates that personal rights as well may be protected [Orloff v. Los Angeles Turf Club, Inc. (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 110, 118, 180 P.2d 321 ; Dandini v. Dandini (1948) 86 Cal. App. 2d 478, 487, 195 P.2d 871] .

Examples include

- Although the Unruh Act, Civ. Code § 51, makes no express provision for injunctive relief, that remedy as well as damages may be available to an aggrieved person [Burks v. Poppy Constr. Co. (1962) 57 Cal. 2d 463, 470, 20 Cal. Rptr. 609, 370 P.2d 313] .

- A person whose civil rights are invaded as a result of discrimination against a group on the basis of race or ancestry may bring an action for injunctive relief on behalf of all members of the group similarly situated [Williams v. International etc. of Boilermakers, 27 Cal. 2d 586, 594, 165 P.2d 903 ; Banks v. Housing Authority, 120 Cal. App. 2d 1, 23, 260 P.2d 668] .

- Although the Fair Employment and Housing Act does not expressly authorize a court to grant injunctive relief for unlawful discrimination, courts have awarded such relief [see, e.g., Aguilar v. Avis Rent A Car System (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 121, 133-142, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 132, 980 P.2d 846 (restraining speech consisting of racial epithets)].

In addition, the Tom Bane Civil Rights Act, prohibiting interference with the exercise of civil rights, explicitly provides for injunctive relief in that regard [Civ. Code § 52.1(a), (b)].

For discussion and forms on actions for civil rights violations, see Ch. 112, Civil Rights: Government-Funded Programs and Activities , see Ch. 113, Civil Rights: Post-Civil War Statutes , see Ch. 114, Civil Rights: Prisoners' Rights , see Ch. 115, Civil Rights: Employment , see Ch. 116, Civil Rights: Business Establishments , see Ch. 117, Civil Rights: Housing , see Ch. 117A, Civil Rights: Interference .

Although trade libel, as opposed to defamation, may be enjoined in proper case, injunction is not available to restrain disparagement published in context of public debate to influence government action on matter of public interest. Leonardini v. Shell Oil Co. (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 547, 574-579, 264 Cal. Rptr. 883] .

For discussion and forms on actions for libel or slander, see Ch. 340, Libel and Slander .

A member of an unincorporated association may commence a proceeding to challenge his or her expulsion or suspension, including a claim alleging defective notice, within one year after the effective date of the expulsion or suspension [Corp. Code § 18320(e)]. The court may order any relief, including reinstatement, it determines is equitable under the circumstances [Corp. Code § 18320(e)].

§ 251.183 Unfair Competition

[1] Unfair Business Practices

California's unfair competition law [Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.] defines unfair competition to consist of three types of business-related activities [Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200]:

- Any unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent business act or practice;
- Unfair, deceptive, untrue, or misleading advertising; and
- Any act prohibited by Bus. & Prof. Code § 17500 et seq. (governing advertising).

A person who engages, has engaged, or proposes to engage in unfair competition may be enjoined in a court of competent jurisdiction [Bus. & Prof. Code § 17203; see also Madrid v. Perot Sys. Corp. (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 440, 465, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 210] . The court may make such orders or judgments, as may be necessary to prevent the use or employment by a person of a practice that constitutes unfair competition under Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200, or as may be necessary to restore to any person in interest any money or property, real or personal, that may have been acquired by means of unfair competition [Bus. & Prof. Code § 17203].

In exercising its discretion to fashion an appropriate equitable remedy for unfair business practices, the court may consider any equitable defenses pleaded by the defendant [Cortez v. Purolator Air Filtration Prods. Co. (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 163, 179-180, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 518, 999 P.2d 706] .

[2] Restraints of Trade

Injunctive relief against improper restraints of trade is available under general equitable principles [Kold Kist, Inc. v. Amalgamated Meat Cutters & Butchers Workmen (1950) 99 Cal. App. 2d 191, 203-204, 21 P.2d 724 ; O'Shea v. Tile Layers Union (1957) 155 Cal. App. 2d 373, 375 ; see Civ. Code § 3422].

For additional discussion of restraints of trade, see Ch. 565, Unfair Competition, § 565.70 et seq. For forms for actions on restraints of trade, see Ch. 565, Unfair Competition, § 565.250 et seq.

[3] Misappropriation of Trade Secrets

Actual or threatened misappropriation of a trade secret may be enjoined. On application to the court, an injunction will be terminated when the trade secret has ceased to exist, but the injunction may be continued for an additional period of time in order to eliminate commercial advantage that would otherwise be derived from the misappropriation [Civ. Code § 3426.2(a); see also Morlife, Inc. v. Perry (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 1514, 1528, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 731] .

For additional discussion of misappropriation of trade secrets, see Ch. 565, Unfair Competition, § 565.100 et seq. For forms for actions on misappropriation of trade secrets, see Ch. 565, Unfair Competition, § 565.270 et seq.

21-251 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 251.184

§ 251.184 Misuse of Trademark or Trade Name

In addition to legal relief, equitable relief is available in trademark and trade name infringement suits. Accordingly, a plaintiff may obtain injunctive relief in the following instances:

- An owner of a mark registered under the California Trademark Law may proceed by suit to enjoin, as may be deemed just and reasonable, the manufacture, use, display, or sale of counterfeits of the mark [Bus. & Prof. Code § 14340(a)].

- An owner of a mark registered under the California Trademark Law or valid at common law, or an owner of a trade name valid at common law, may obtain injunctive relief when there is a likelihood of injury to the owner's business reputation or likelihood of dilution of the distinctive quality of the mark or name [Bus. & Prof. Code § 14330].

- An owner of a mark registered under either the California Trademark Law or the Lanham Act, or both, may obtain injunctive relief to prevent the unauthorized or infringing use of that mark by another to enhance the commercial value of the unauthorized user's or infringer's products or services [Bus. & Prof. Code § 14335(a)].

If a court finds a mark is counterfeit, the court may order the destruction, transfer, or seizure of all offending matter, or order after obliteration of the counterfeit mark, the transfer of these materials to the State of California, a civil claimant, an eleemosynary institution, or any appropriate private person other than the person from whom the materials were obtained [Bus. & Prof. Code § 14340(a), (b)].

In addition, the equitable doctrine of secondary meaning protects any trade name or design that may not be exclusively appropriated as a trademark, but that has nonetheless become associated in the public mind with one person's business as the source of goods or services [see Ball v. American Trial Lawyers Assn. (1971) 14 Cal. App. 3d 289, 300-304, 92 Cal. Rptr. 228 ; Family Record Plan, Inc. v. Mitchell (1959) 172 Cal. App. 2d 235, 242-243, 342 P.2d 10] .

For additional discussion and forms on suits for infringement of trademark or trade name, see Ch. 549, Trademarks and Trade Names . For discussion of actions for misuse of name of unincorporated association, see Ch. 61, Associations and Clubs, § 61.43.

§ 251.190 Relief from Judgments and Orders

Superior courts have inherent equitable jurisdiction in unlimited civil cases to relieve a party from a judgment or order resulting from extrinsic fraud or mistake [see Baske v. Burke (1981) 125 Cal. App. 3d 38, 43-44, 177 Cal. Rptr. 794] . The equitable power of a superior court may be invoked by either a motion in the original action or by a separate independent action [see, e.g., Weitz v. Yankosky (1966) 63 Cal. 2d 849, 855, 48 Cal. Rptr. 620, 409 P.2d 700 ; In re Marriage of Baltins (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 66, 81, 260 Cal. Rptr. 403] .

In limited civil cases, courts are granted equitable jurisdiction to vacate a judgment or order rendered by the court from which relief is sought if the judgment or order was obtained through extrinsic fraud, mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect [Code Civ. Proc. § 86(b)(3)].

For a sample general form of a complaint in equity to set aside a judgment or order obtained by extrinsic fraud or mistake, see § 251.270. 3. Relief on Contract

§ 251.200 Quasi or Implied Contracts

"An implied contract is one, the existence and terms of which are manifested by conduct" [Civ. Code § 1621]. The principle of unjust enrichment forms the basis for the right to restitution upon a quasi-contractual theory of recovery. Accordingly, where one obtains a benefit that he or she may not justly retain, that person is unjustly enriched, and the law creates an obligation, irrespective of the intention of the parties, that that person must restore the aggrieved party to his or her former position by return of the thing or its equivalent in money [Holmes v. Steele (1969) 269 Cal. App. 2d 675, 75 Cal. Rptr. 216] . Courts recognize "implied-by-law" or "quasi-contracts" to prevent the unjust enrichment of a party who has no intent, either express or implied, to pay or to make reimbursement for something of value received by the other party. Equity imposes an obligation to pay or reimburse because good conscience dictates that the party benefited make the payment reimbursement [Santa Clara County v. Robbiano (1960) 180 Cal. App. 2d 845, 848, 5 Cal. Rptr. 19 ; see Halperin v. Raville (1986) 176 Cal. App. 3d 765, 774, 222 Cal. Rptr. 350] .

An implied contract must be founded upon an ascertained agreement of the parties to perform it. The substantial difference between the two being the mere mode of proof by which they are to be respectively established. It is thus an actual agreement between the parties. Although an implied in fact contract may be inferred from the conduct, situation, or mutual relation of the parties, the very heart of this kind of agreement is an intent to promise [Truck Ins. Exchange v. Amoco Corp. (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 814, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 551] .

Examples include:

- One wrongfully occupying the real property of another is liable to the owner for damages in tort. That owner may waive the tort and sue on the contract implied in law as resulting from the tort. This implied contract obligates the wrongful occupant of real property to pay to the owner thereof the reasonable value of the use thereof during the period of occupancy [Samuels v. Singer (1936) 1 Cal. App. 2d 545, 554, 36 P.2d 1098] .

- Quasi-contract is the proper measure of damages for the benefit of storage in a continuing trespass where the cross-defendant refused to remove trade fixtures upon termination of a lease. If the tort claim is waived, the action is in implied assumpsit to recover the value of the use taken, i.e., the benefit to the trespasser for the use had [Herond v. Bonsall (1943) 60 Cal. App. 2d 152, 155-156, 140 P.2d 121] .

- The trial court arrived at a reasonable quasi-contractual measure of damages--the fair market cost to dispose of the wastewater, which was injected into oil well damaging oil field, at available sites in the area during the pertinent period. This is the amount of money the defendant would have had to pay to others to dispose of the excess water, and therefore the amount of the defendant's unjust enrichment [Cassinos v. Union Oil Co. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 1770, 1788, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 574] .

For discussion of the definition of implied or quasi contract, see Ch. 140, Contracts, § 140.10[5]. For form of allegation of contract implied in fact, see Ch. 140, Contracts, § 140.110.

3. Relief on Contract

21-251 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 251.201

§ 251.201 Specific Performance

[1] The Nature of the Remedy of Specific Performance

Specific performance is an equitable action [Schaefer v. United Bank & Trust Co. (1930) 104 Cal. App. 635, 641, 286 P. 723] to procure the performance of a contract by the defendant [Patterson v. Reddish (1922) 56 Cal. App. 197, 202, 204 P. 565] . Specific performance of a contract may be decreed whenever: (1) its terms are sufficiently definite; (2) consideration is adequate; (3) there is substantial similarity of the requested performance to the contractual terms; (4) there is mutuality of remedies; and (5) plaintiff's legal remedy is inadequate [Union Oil Co. of Cal. v. Greka Energy Corp. (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 129, 134, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 738]. Specific performance is generally granted to compel the performance of an affirmative obligation in a contract. When the obligation is negative, i.e., an agreement not to do something, an injunction may be granted [see Long Beach Drug Co. v. United Drug Co. (1939) 13 Cal. 2d 158, 170-171, 89 P.2d 386 ; Smith v. Mendonsa (1952) 108 Cal. App. 2d 540, 542-544, 238 P.2d 1039] .

An agreement for the sale of property cannot be specifically enforced in favor of a seller who cannot give to the buyer a title free from reasonable doubt [Civ. Code § 3394; King v. Stanley (1948) 32 Cal. 2d 584, 589-590, 197 P.2d 321] .

For discussion of specific performance, see Ch. 528, Specific Performance .

[2] Defenses to Action Peculiar to Action for Specific Performance

The plaintiff in an action for specific performance generally may not obtain relief if any of the following is found:

- The terms of the contract are not sufficiently certain to make the precise act that is to be performed clearly ascertainable [Civ. Code § 3390(5); Crail v. Blakely (1973) 8 Cal. 3d 744, 753-754, 106 Cal. Rptr. 187, 505 P.2d 1027] , which is a standard significantly more certain than when a plaintiff seeks the traditional legal remedy of damages [Larwin-Southern Cal., Inc. v. JGB Inv. Co. (1980) 101 Cal. App. 3d 626, 636, 162 Cal. Rptr. 52] .

- The contract to be performed is not just and reasonable as to defendant [Civ. Code § 3391(2); Berkeley Lawn Bowling Club v. City of Berkeley (1974) 42 Cal. App. 3d 280, 290, 116 Cal. Rptr. 762] .

- Adequate consideration has not been given to the defendant for the contract [Civ. Code § 3391(1); [Drullinger v. Erskine (1945) 71 Cal. App. 2d 492, 495, 163 P.2d 48] .

- The assent of the party against whom the contract is to be enforced was obtained by the misrepresentation, concealment, circumvention, or unfair practices of a party to whom performance would become due under the contract or by a promise of that party that has not been substantially fulfilled [Civ. Code § 3391(3); Cornblith v. Valentine (1930) 211 Cal. 243, 247, 294 P. 1065] .

- The assent of the party against whom the contract is to be enforced was given under the influence of mistake, misapprehension, or surprise, except that when the contract provides for compensation in case of mistake, in which case a mistake within the scope of the provision may be compensated for, and the contract specifically enforced in other respects, if such enforcement is proper [Civ. Code § 3391(4); Loeb v. Wilson (1967) 253 Cal. App. 2d 383, 389, 61 Cal. Rptr. 377] .

§ 251.202 Cohabitation Agreements

A nonmarital partner may seek to enforce an implied agreement that may be evidenced by the conduct of the parties [see Marvin v. Marvin (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 660, 684, 134 Cal. Rptr. 815, 557 P.2d 106] . California courts have granted relief to a nonmarital partner to vindicate his or her property rights in a dispute between the parties or when the other partner dies, in actions on implied contracts under the following theories, among others:

- An action on an implied contract of the parties to pool efforts and earnings and share accumulations [see Alderson v. Alderson (1986) 180 Cal. App. 3d 450, 463, 225 Cal. Rptr. 610] ;

- An action to enforce an implied partnership or joint venture agreement [Marvin v. Marvin (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 660, 684, 134 Cal. Rptr. 815, 557 P.2d 106] ;

- An action to enforce an implied agreement to own property jointly [see, e.g., Hill v. Estate of Westbrook (1950) 95 Cal. App. 2d 599, 603, 213 P.2d 727] ;

- An action in quantum meruit for the reasonable value of services rendered [Maglica v. Maglica (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 442, 449, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 101] ;

- An action seeking the imposition of a constructive or resulting trust or an equitable lien [see Marvin v. Marvin (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 660, 684 n.25, 134 Cal. Rptr. 815, 557 P.2d 106 ; Nelson v. Nevel (1984) 154 Cal. App. 3d 132, 139, 201 Cal. Rptr. 93] .

In addition, it may be possible for a nonmarital partner to seek support on the basis of an implied agreement [see Marvin v. Marvin (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 660, 684, 134 Cal. Rptr. 815, 557 P.2d 106 ; Friedman v. Friedman (1993) 20 Cal. App. 4th 876, 886, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892] , if there is specific conduct from which it can be concluded that the parties agreed that they would be bound by the obligations of support that would have inured to their benefit had they been married [Friedman v. Friedman (1993) 20 Cal. App. 4th 876, 887-888, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892] .

§ 251.203 Equitable Adoption

The doctrine of equitable adoption allows a person who was accepted and treated as a natural or adopted child, and as to whom adoption was promised or contemplated but never performed, to share in inheriting the property of the equitable parent [Estate of Ford (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 160, 165, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 541, 82 P.3d 747] . Equitable adoption requires some form of agreement to adopt, coupled with subsequent objective conduct indicating mutual recognition of an adoptive parent and child relationship to such an extent that in equity and good conscience an adoption should be deemed to have taken place [Bauer Estate (1980) 111 Cal. App. 3d 554, 560, 168 Cal. Rptr. 743] .

21-251 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 251.210

§ 251.210 Miscellaneous and General Relief Concerning Real Estate

A life estate may be created by implication when the grant in the deed is in fee simple, but the deed is delivered to another person besides the grantee and is to be delivered to the grantee on the grantor's death [see Wilhoit v. Salmon (1905) 146 Cal. 444, 448, 80 P. 705 (deed unconditionally delivered in escrow vested title but not use and possession in grantees, and impliedly reserved life estate in grantor)]. For further discussion of creating life estates, see Ch. 344, Life Estates and Remainders, § 344.13.

An equitable lien is a direct charge or encumbrance on property such that the property itself may be proceeded against in an equitable action and either sold or sequestered and its proceeds applied in favor of the person in whose favor it exists [Okuda v. Superior Court (1983) 144 Cal. App. 3d 135, 141, 192 Cal. Rptr. 388] . For further discussion of equitable liens, see Ch. 342, Liens and Wage Preferences, § 342.40 et seq.

§ 251.211 Equitable Servitudes

An equitable servitude restricts the use of one parcel of land for the benefit of another parcel, not merely between the original parties to a covenant, but also between their respective grantees [see Werner v. Graham (1919) 181 Cal. 174, 180, 183 P. 945] . A burdensome covenant on land does not run with the land, and is therefore not binding at law upon the transferees of the grantee. Nevertheless, it may be enforced as an equitable servitude against a transferee who takes with knowledge of its terms and under circumstances that would make avoidance of the restriction inequitable [Marra v. Aetna Constr. Co., 15 Cal. 2d 375, 378, 101 P.2d 490 ; Ross v. Harootunian (1967) 257 Cal. App. 2d 292, 295, 64 Cal. Rptr. 537] .

The doctrine of equitable servitudes, however, does not rest on the technical form of the covenant but on the equitable notion that one who takes property with notice of a valid agreement concerning it cannot refuse to be bound by that agreement [Richardson v. Callahan (1931) 213 Cal. 683, 687, 3 P.2d 927] .

Example:

- A servitude such as a building restriction is enforceable in equity only if the deed restriction contains language indicating it as part of a general plan for the common benefit of a designated larger tract [Riley v. Bear Creek Planning Committee (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 500, 505, 131 Cal. Rptr. 381, 551 P.2d 1213 ; Werner v. Graham, 181 Cal. 174, 183 P. 945] . The larger tract must be designated by a map or other appropriate description [Wing v. Forest Lawn Cemetery Asso., 15 Cal. 2d 472, 480, 101 P.2d 1099 ; Ross v. Harootunian (1967) 257 Cal. App. 2d 292, 295, 64 Cal. Rptr. 537] .

For additional discussion of equitable servitudes, see Ch. 184, Deeds, § 184.63. For form of complaint to, among other things, enforce equitable servitude, see Ch. 184, Deeds, § 184.190.

An executory agreement in writing, in which a debtor sufficiently indicates an intent to make certain real property security for the debt, is in equity deemed to create a mortgage on that property, enforceable as any other mortgage except against good faith purchasers or lienholders [Coast Bank v. Minderhout (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 311, 313-314, 38 Cal. Rptr. 505, 392 P.2d 265 (overruled on other grounds, *Wellenkamp v. Bank of America (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 943, 953, 148 Cal. Equitable redemption is the right of a judgment debtor to redeem property sold at an execution sale for a grossly inadequate price when the purchaser is guilty of unfairness or has taken undue advantage [Gonzalez v. Toews (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 977, 982, 4 Cal. Rptr. 3d 434] . While the Enforcement of Judgments Law, Code Civ. Proc. § 680.010 et seq., does not retain the right to redemption after judicial sales [see Code Civ. Proc. § 701.680], the Law does not affect the doctrine of equitable redemption [16 Cal. Law Revision Com. Rep. (1982) pp. 1119-1120].

§ 251.220 Procedure Otherwise Conforms to Action at Law

Generally, procedure for an action in equity is the same as procedure for an action at law. Thus:

- A complaint may raise both equitable and legal issues [Crouser v. Boice (1942) 51 Cal. App. 2d 198, 200, 124 P.2d 358] .

- A cross-complaint in an action in equity may bring in legal issues [Crouser v. Boice (1942) 51 Cal. App. 2d 198, 200, 124 P.2d 358] .

§ 251.221 No Default Judgment Immediately After Entry of Default

[1] Code Civ. Proc. § 585(a) Does Not Apply to Equitable Relief

The provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 585(a), authorizing the clerk to enter judgment immediately after entering the defendant's default in an action arising on a contract for the recovery of money or damages only, do not authorize the clerk to enter judgment after the defendant's default in an equitable action [see Farrar v. Steenbergh (1916) 173 Cal. 94, 97, 159 P. 707 (construing statutory language substantially the same as present Code Civ. Proc. § 585(a))]. This rule has been applied to equitable actions seeking, among other things:

- Cancellation of an instrument [Farrar v. Steenbergh (1916) 173 Cal. 94, 97, 159 P. 707 (construing statutory language substantially the same as present Code Civ. Proc. § 585(a))].

- Quieting title [Code Civ. Proc. § 764.010].

Such a default judgment, if entered, is void [Farrar v. Steenbergh (1916) 173 Cal. 94, 97, 159 P. 707 (construing statutory language substantially the same as present Code Civ. Proc. § 585(a))].

For discussion of and forms for setting aside void default judgments, see Ch. 489, Relief from Judgments and Orders .

[2] Code Civ. Proc. § 580 as Applied to Accounting Actions

The requirement of Code Civ. Proc. § 580 that a plaintiff cannot obtain a default judgment for a specific amount of damages unless the defendant has been notified of the amount of damages sought conflicts with the principles of an accounting action. If a sum is specified in the complaint, then the plaintiff is not due any accounting but a default judgment is not available unless a sum is specified [see Ely v. Gray (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 1257, 1262, 274 Cal. Rptr. 536] . The courts have taken two approaches to this dilemma:

- Plaintiff in an accounting action must give a postcomplaint and predefault notice to the defendant of the amount plaintiff will seek to prove due him or her if the defendant defaults [Finney v. Gomez

(2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 527, 543-544, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 604 ; Ely v. Gray (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 1257, 1263, 274 Cal. Rptr. 536] .

- Notice of the specific amount claimed is not necessary if the partnership agreement gives the defendants the information necessary to calculate precisely their potential exposure on default [Cassel v. Sullivan, Roche & Johnson (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 1157, 1163-1164, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 899] .

For discussion of this issue, see Ch. 7, Accounting, Action for, § 7.17.

21-251 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 251.222

§ 251.222 No Right to Jury Trial in Equitable Actions

[1] When Only Equitable Relief Is Sought

As a general rule a party is not entitled to a jury trial in an equitable action [Interactive Multimedia Artists, Inc. v. Superior Court (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 1546, 1551, 73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 462 ; Strauss v. Summerhays (1984) 157 Cal. App. 3d 806, 812, 204 Cal. Rptr. 227]. The right to trial by jury guaranteed by the Constitution is the right as it existed at common law at the time the state Constitution was adopted in 1850. In determining whether a common law court before 1850 could have entertained a plaintiff's action and granted the requested relief, a court must look past the form or label attached to the plaintiff's claim and discern its substance, i.e., gist. If the claim is, in substance, one that was cognizable at law before 1850 and seeks relief that could have been obtained at law before 1850, then the action is legal and the right to jury trial attaches, regardless of the extent to which the claim requires the application of equitable doctrines [Jogani v. Superior Court (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 901, 905 & n.3, 81 Cal. Rptr. 3d 503]. Thus, a jury trial has been properly denied in an action for only equitable relief consisting of:

- Rescission, seeking to recover something other than the consideration paid [NMSBPCSLDHB v. County Of Fresno (2007) 152 Cal. App. 4th 954, 963, 61 Cal. Rptr. 3d 425].

- Injunction [People v. Bhakta (2008) 162 Cal. App. 4th 973, 979, 76 Cal. Rptr. 3d 421 (under Unfair Competition Law); People v. Englebrecht (2001) 88 Cal. App. 4th 1236, 1245, 106 Cal. Rptr. 2d 738 (action to abate public nuisance and for injunctive relief was equitable)].

- Quieting title [Hartman v. Burford (1966) 242 Cal. App. 2d 268, 270, 51 Cal. Rptr. 309] .

- Accounting [Hillman v. Stults (1968) 263 Cal. App. 2d 848, 877, 70 Cal. Rptr. 295] .

However, the right to trial by jury in fraudulent conveyance actions that existed prior to the enactment of the 1851 Constitution is preserved in those actions under the present Constitution of California [see Wisden v. Superior Court (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 750, 756-757, 760, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 523] .

For full discussion of trial by jury in fraudulent conveyance actions, see Ch. 270, Fraudulent Conveyances, §§ 270.12, 270.31.

Likewise, at least one court has determined that an action in quantum meruit [see § 251.120] is an action at law, not equity, engendering a right to jury trial on the cause [Jogani v. Superior Court (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 901, 906-907, 81 Cal. Rptr. 3d 503 (finding right to jury trial)].

[2] When Both Legal and Equitable Relief Is Sought

[a] Relief Sought in Complaint

When legal and equitable issues are joined in the same action, the parties usually are entitled to a jury trial on separable legal issues [Frahm v. Briggs (1970) 12 Cal. App. 3d 441, 445, 90 Cal. Rptr. 725].

However, when legal and equitable issues cannot be severed, whether a case must be tried by the court or a jury depends on whether the relief sought is essentially equitable or legal in nature [People v. Bestline Prod., Inc. (1976) 61 Cal. App. 3d 879, 916, 132 Cal. Rptr. 767]. If the "gist of an action," as framed by the pleadings, raises issues that would have been triable at law in 1850 [Interactive Multimedia Artists, Inc. v. Superior Court (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 1546, 1551, 73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 462 ; Ripling v. Superior Court (1952) 112 Cal. App. 2d 399, 402, 247 P.2d 117] or that did not exist in 1850 [Martin v. Los Angeles County (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 688, 694-696, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 303], a trial by jury is a matter of right. The "gist of the action" refers to the nature of the rights involved and the facts of the particular case [see C & K Eng'g Contractors v. Amber Steel Co. (1978) 23 Cal. 3d 1, 9, 151 Cal. Rptr. 323, 587 P.2d 1136].

For these purposes, an action for damages is generally legal in nature [Mendoza v. Ruesga (2008) 169 Cal. App. 4th 270, 284, 86 Cal. Rptr. 3d 610 (finding right to jury trial)].

For general discussion of the right to jury trial in mixed legal and equitable actions, see Ch. 322, Juries and Jury Selection, § 322.13.

[b] When Legal Relief Is First Sought by Amended Complaint or Cross-Complaint in Equitable Action

Upon amendment of the pleadings in an equitable action so as to include a legal cause of action for damages, the parties were entitled to a jury trial on the legal issue [Farnsworth v. Hunter, 11 Cal. 2d 27, 77 P.2d 840 (action for specific performance)].

The Supreme Court has held that where the complaint pleads a purely equitable cause of action and the defendant cross-complains for legal relief, the parties are entitled to a jury trial on the legal issue, and that the order granting a new trial in such action is appealable [Connell v. Bowes (1942) 19 Cal. 2d 870, 123 P.2d 456 (action for specific performance)].

For discussion and forms on juries and jury selection, see Ch. 322, Juries and Jury Selection .

[3] When Both Equitable Relief and Legal Relief of Recovery of Specific Real or Personal Property Are Sought

[a] General Rule

When the plaintiff seeks not only a declaration of his or her rights but also recovery of possession, the rule is different because Code Civ. Proc. § 592 generally requires an issue of fact concerning the recovery of property, a legal remedy, to be tried by a jury, unless a jury trial is waived, or a reference is ordered. Therefore, when the plaintiff seeks both a declaration of rights and recovery of possession, trial by jury is a matter of right with respect to the legal issues (i.e., the right to recover possession), but not with respect to the equitable issues [see, e.g., Robinson v. Puls (1946) 28 Cal. 2d 664, 665-666, 171 P.2d 430] .

For discussion and forms on juries and jury selection, see Ch. 322, Juries and Jury Selection .

[b] Application to Quiet Title Actions

Regarding the question of a jury trial, the courts have distinguished three kinds of quiet title actions:

- When the plaintiff is out of possession and seeks to establish his or her title primarily for the purpose of recovering possession, the action is regarded as a legal action for the recovery of property, and a jury trial is a matter of right [see, e.g., Medeiros v. Medeiros (1960) 177 Cal. App. 2d 69, 73, 1 Cal. Rptr. 696] ,

- When the plaintiff is in possession and the defendant seeks to recover possession, the action is partly equitable (on the plaintiff's side) and partly legal (on the defendant's side), and a jury trial is a matter of right for the defendant if he or she alleges that he or she was recently dispossessed [see, e.g., Donahue v. Meister (1891) 88 Cal. 121, 128-129, 25 P. 1096] , and

- When the plaintiff is in possession and the defendant does not seek to recover possession, the action is purely equitable, and a jury trial is not a matter of right, even if the plaintiff alleges a right to possession [Thomson v. Thomson (1936) 7 Cal. 2d 671, 681-683, 62 P.2d 358] .

For discussion and forms on juries and jury selection, see Ch. 322, Juries and Jury Selection .

[4] No Jury Trial for Legal Defense to Equitable Action

Given that the right to trial pertains to an action at law, there is no right to trial by jury on an affirmative defense at law to an equitable action that can be tried separately and first, because the defense does not constitute an action [DiPirro v. Bondo Corporation (2007) 153 Cal. App. 4th 150, 186, 62 Cal. Rptr. 3d 722 (affirmative defense of warning exemption under Health & Safety Code § 25249.10(c) not subject to jury trial of right)].

§ 251.223 Equitable Issues Tried Before Legal Issues

When a case involves both legal and equitable issues, the trial court may proceed to try the equitable issue first, without a jury or with an advisory jury [Raedeke v. Gibraltar Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1974) 10 Cal. 3d 665, 671, 111 Cal. Rptr. 693, 517 P.2d 1157]. However, the court is not required to hear equitable issues before legal ones, and in fact may hear issues in the opposite order [Bate v. Marsteller (1965) 232 Cal. App. 2d 605, 617, 43 Cal. Rptr. 149].

If the court's determination as to equitable issues also is dispositive of the legal issues, nothing remains to be tried by jury [Raedeke v. Gibraltar Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1974) 10 Cal. 3d 665, 671, 111 Cal. Rptr. 693, 517 P.2d 1157 ; Jaffe v. Albertson Co. (1966) 243 Cal. App. 2d 592, 609, 53 Cal. Rptr. 25]. If not, the jury trial on the remaining issues will follow [Jaffe v. Albertson Co. (1966) 243 Cal. App. 2d 592, 609, 53 Cal. Rptr. 25].

Disposition of an action by trial of equitable issues first does not unconstitutionally deny the right to jury trial on the obviated legal issues [Stephen Slesinger, Inc. v. The Walt Disney Co. (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 736, 764, 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 268 (dismissal as terminating sanction for plaintiff misconduct in a legal action)].

For general discussion of trying equitable issues first, see Ch. 322, Juries and Jury Selection, § 322.13.

§ 251.224 Equitable Power to Award Attorney Fees

Courts have inherent equitable power in limited situations to award attorney's fees when it was warranted by the equities of the case [Rudnick v. Rudnick (2009) 179 Cal. App. 4th 1328, 1335, 102 Cal. Rptr. 3d 493] . Attorney fees may be granted in equity under the following bases;

- The "common fund" principle [Serrano v. Priest (1977) 20 Cal. 3d 25, 34, 35, 141 Cal. Rptr. 315, 569 P.2d 1303 ; Quinn v. State of California (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 162, 167-171, 124 Cal. Rptr. 1, 539 P.2d 761] .

- The "substantial benefit" theory [Serrano v. Priest (1977) 20 Cal. 3d 25, 38, 141 Cal. Rptr. 315, 569 P.2d 1303] .

- The "private attorney general" theory [Serrano v. Priest (1977) 20 Cal. 3d 25, 43, 141 Cal. Rptr. 315, 569 P.2d 1303 ; D'Amico v. Board of Medical Examiners (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 1, 27, 112 Cal. Rptr. 786, 520 P.2d 10] .

PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE

21-251 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 251.230

§ 251.230 Nature of Equity and Equitable Maxims

[1] That Which Ought to Have Been Done Is to Be Regarded as Done

Equity will consider as done that which ought to have been done [Lencioni v Fidelity Trust & Sav. Bank (1928) 95 Cal. App. 490, 498, 273 P. 103]

[2] One Who Seeks Equity Must Be Willing to Do Equity

This maxim means that whatever be the nature of the controversy between two definite parties, and whatever be the nature of the remedy demanded, the court will not confer its equitable relief upon the party seeking its interposition and aid, unless that party has acknowledged and conceded, or will admit and provide for, all the equitable rights, claims and demands justly belonging to the adverse party, and growing out of or necessarily involved in the subject matter of the controversy [Dool v. First Nat. Bank (1929) 207 Cal. 347, 352, 278 P. 233 ; Richman v. Bank of Perris (1929) 102 Cal. App. 71, 83, 282 P. 801]

A party who requests equitable relief must satisfy the equitable claims interposed by the opposing party [District Bond Co. v. Pollack (1942) 19 Cal. 2d 304, 307, 121 P.2d 7]

[3] No One Can Take Advantage of His or Her Own Wrong

It is the duty of a trial court upon the discovery that a transaction is tainted with fraud or lack of good faith to inquire into the facts in regard thereto [Rosenfeld v. Zimmer (1953) 116 Cal. App. 2d 719, 722, 254 P.2d 137]

It is the duty of a court of equity upon any suggestion that a plaintiff has not acted in good faith concerning the matters upon which he bases his suit, to inquire into the facts in that regard [Fansler v. Fansler (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 81, 87, 253 Cal. Rptr. 186 ; Howe v. Brock, 86 Cal. App. 2d 271, 276, 194 P.2d 762]

It is not only fraud or illegality which will prevent a suitor from obtaining equitable relief. Any unconscientious conduct upon his part which is connected with the controversy will repel him from the forum whose very foundation is good conscience [Howe v. Brock, 86 Cal. App. 2d 271, 276, 194 P.2d 762]

In an action to quiet title to property which defendant had purchased at an execution sale, the trial court did not err in quieting plaintiffs' title as against the objection that plaintiffs were guilty of inequitable conduct in not informing defendant of their homestead on the property at the execution sale. Plaintiffs had no fiduciary duty to advise their judgment creditor as to the method that would best enable him to reach their property, their attendance and silence at the execution sale were proper, and the parties, who had engaged in prior litigation, were dealing at arm's length, and no equities or duties had arisen between them [Viotti v. Giomi (1964) 230 Cal. App. 2d 730, 737-738, 41 Cal. Rptr. 345]

For research guide on illegal contracts, see Ch. 140, Contracts, § 140.180 et seq.

For research guide on illegal building contracts, see Ch. 104, Building Contracts, § 104.170 et seq.

[4] One Who Takes the Benefit Must Bear the Burden

In an action against a father and son to recover sums plaintiff had lent to defendant father over a period of years for use in the father's business, the trial court properly awarded plaintiff a judgment against defendant son under a contractual right theory [Civ. Code § 1428] and on the equitable basis that the son had received the benefit of the transactions between defendant father and plaintiff [Civ. Code § 3521]. where the evidence showed that, although the loans had been made to defendant father, the father's business had the utmost personal significance to the son, the son had actively participated in the company's affairs and considered the company to be partially his own, and the son had aggressively worked to secure business funds from plaintiff through the sale of plaintiff's assets and had participated in the arrangements for such sales [Halperin v. Raville (1986) 176 Cal. App. 3d 765, 772-773, 222 Cal. Rptr. 350]

A showing that a person had the use and benefit of money raises the obligation to pay for the value received [Brown v. Brown (1930) 104 Cal. App. 480, 489, 285 P. 1086]

The courts prohibit an offeree who remains silent from reaping the benefits of a contract in which the offeror deemed silence as the mode of acceptance, if the offeree could have later successfully resisted any contractual obligations imposed in such a manner [Durgin v. Kaplan (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 81, 90, 65 Cal. Rptr. 158, 436 P.2d 70]

[5] Equity Respects Form Less than Substance

Equity regards substance rather than form [County of San Mateo v. Consolidated Farms, Inc. (1959) 169 Cal. App. 2d 735, 738, 337 P.2d 840]

Equity looks beyond the form of a transaction and shapes its judgments in such a way as to carry out the purposes of the parties to the agreement, and to protect each of them against any unconscionable advantage to be derived from the apparent form in which their transaction has taken place [Campbell v. Freeman (1893) 99 Cal. 546, 548, 34 P. 113]

[6] Equity Abhors Forfeitures

Seller of land for subdivision did not have good cause to refuse an escrow extension because the buyer delayed the lot line adjustment, given that the buyer was diligent and went to great lengths to obtain approval of the lot line adjustment. The court properly extended the escrow to prevent forfeiture where the seller did not care how long the project took. Peak-Las Positas Partners v. Michael Bollag (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 101, 106, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 775

Proceedings for the foreclosure of a mechanics' lien under Civ. Code § 3082 et seq. are proceedings in equity in which the court will apply equitable principles, such as that equity abhors forfeiture. T.O. IX, LLC v. Superior Court (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 140, 146, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 602

[c] Equitable Estoppel

Plaintiff could not raise equitable estoppel because she knew all the salient facts underlying the municipality's action. Her ignorance of the law was insufficient, because any injustice was not induced by the municipality's action, but by plaintiff's action. Steinhart v. Cty. of Los Angeles (2010) 47 Cal. 4th 1298, 1315-1317, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 195, 223 P.3d 57

Equitable estoppel did not prevent defendant from invoking mediation confidentiality, because she herself used and did not object to plaintiffs' use of evidence describing the events of mediation. Simmons v. Ghaderi (2008) 44 Cal. 4th 570, 584-585, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 83, 187 P.3d 934

Plaintiff failed to even establish elements of equitable estoppel against a private party in an action against a city, because the city made no representation that it would approve the proposed subdivision map upon which plaintiff claimed to have relied to its detriment. City of Goleta v. Superior Court (2006) 40 Cal. 4th 270, 279-281, 52 Cal. Rptr. 3d 114, 147 P.3d 1037

District director of industrial relations was not subject to equitable estoppel where enforcement of law did not require construction company's assent. Rather, the company may be entitled to indemnification if it reasonably relied on the district's representations that the project was not a public project. Lusardi Construction Co. v. Aubry (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 976, 996-997, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 837, 824 P.2d 643

The trial court appropriately rejected the doctrine of equitable estoppel since plaintiffs were aware of when the five-year period in which to bring their case to trial under Code Civ. Proc. § 583.310 ran, and it was not reasonable for plaintiffs to assume defendants were willing to waive the deadline. Jordan v. Superstar Sandcars (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 1416, 1422-1423, 107 Cal. Rptr. 3d 5

To prove equitable estoppel, one must show: (1) a representation or concealment of material facts; (2) made with knowledge, actual or virtual, of the facts; (3) to a party ignorant, actually and permissibly, of the truth; (4) with the intention, actual or virtual, that the ignorant party acted on it; and (5) the ignorant party relied on it. Oldcastle Precast, Inc. v. Lumbermens Mut. Casualty Co. (2009) 170 Cal. App. 4th 554, 571, 88 Cal. Rptr. 3d 363

A more accurate description of the elements of equitable estoppel would appear to be: (1) The party to be estopped has engaged in blameworthy or inequitable conduct, (2) that conduct caused or induced the other party to suffer some disadvantage, and (3) equitable considerations warrant the conclusion that the first party should not be permitted to exploit the disadvantage he or she has thus inflicted upon the second party. City of Hollister v. Monterey Ins. Co. (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 455, 488, 81 Cal. Rptr. 3d 72

Estoppel can be invoked in the land use context in only the most extraordinary case where the injustice is great and the precedent set by the estoppel is narrow. Golden Gate Water Ski Club v. Cty. of Contra Costa (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 249, 259, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 876

The rule of law is clear that where one by his words or conduct willfully causes another to believe the existence of a certain state of things, and induces the other to act on that belief, so as to alter his or her own previous position, the former is precluded from averring against the latter a different state of things as existing at the same time. Esate of Bonanno (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 7, 22, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 560

Grant of equitable estoppel against California Coastal Commission was reversed because, among other things, injustice to the owners without estoppel was not of sufficient dimension to justify the effect upon public interest and policy. Feduniak v. California Coastal Com. (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 1346, 1380, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 591

[d] Promissory Estoppel

Lender's representative's statement that foreclosure sale could be postponed a day, and borrower's subsequent communication to the representative that the borrower would need the extra day, showed a conditional promise sufficiently definite to support promissory estoppel. Garcia v. World Savings, FSB (2010) 183 Cal. App. 4th 1031, 1044-1046, 107 Cal. Rptr. 3d 683

Substantial evidence supported the administrative law judge's determination that pharmacy buyer knew it could not use the pharmacy seller's provider number; no evidence indicated the state knew the buyer was submitting claims using an invalid provider number; and no evidence suggested the state misled the buyer or intended that it rely on its tacit approval of the claims it had improperly submitted. Advanced Choices, Inc. v. State Department of Health Services (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 1661, 1672, 107 Cal. Rptr. 3d 470

Whether based on a contract principle of promissory estoppel or a tort theory of a voluntary assumption of a duty, plaintiff relied to his detriment on insurer's promise to preserve evidence of defective tire. As a result, insurer owed a duty to plaintiff. Cooper v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (2009) 177 Cal. App. 4th 876, 892, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 870

[4] Exercising Possession of Property

[a] Quantum Meruit

Law firm's evidence was sufficient to raise a factual question on a claim of quantum meruit as to whether the firm reasonably expected to be paid for its services by the client personally, rather than the estate involved. Miller v. Campbell, Warburton, Fitzsimmons, Smith, Mendel & Pastore (2008) 162 Cal. App. 4th 1331, 1346, 76 Cal. Rptr. 3d 649

The theory of quasi-contractual recovery is that one party has accepted and retained a benefit with full appreciation of the facts, under circumstances making it inequitable for him to retain the benefit without payment of its reasonable value. Day v. Alta Bates Medical Center (2002) 98 Cal. App. 4th 243, 248, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 606 ; Truestone, Inc. v. Simi West Industrial Park II (1984) 163 Cal. App. 3d 715, 724, 209 Cal. Rptr. 757

The measure of recovery in quantum meruit is the reasonable value of the services rendered provided they were of direct benefit to the defendant. The idea that one must be benefited by the goods and services bestowed is thus integral to recovery in quantum meruit; hence courts have always required that the plaintiff have bestowed some benefit on the defendant as a prerequisite to recovery. Day v. Alta Bates Medical Center (2002) 98 Cal. App. 4th 243, 249, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 606

§ 251.233 Defenses to Actions in Equity

[1] Failure to Do Equity

The principle of doing equity is applicable to an action to quiet title. A familiar instance of its application is when the court precludes a mortgagor from quieting his or her title against an outlawed mortgage payment of the mortgage debt. In such a case, when the debt is not paid or not required to be paid, the court does not decree that the plaintiff has no interest in the property, but dismisses the action for want of equity in the plaintiff's cause. O'Brien v. O'Brien (1925) 197 Cal. 577, 584-585, 241 P. 861

[3] Unclean Hands

Contractor could not prevail on its unclean hands defense because Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031 (b) allowed reimbursement for amounts paid to an unlicensed contractor even if the party seeking such reimbursement knew that the contractor was unlicensed. Alatriste v. Cesar's Exterior Designs, Inc. (2010) 183 Cal. App. 4th 656, 673, 108 Cal. Rptr. 3d 277

Signing an illegal contract does not give the signer unclean hands. Farahani v. San Diego Community College Dist. (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 1486, 1496, 96 Cal. Rptr. 3d 900

A member of the class protected under the Immigration Consultants Act, Bus. & Prof. Code, § 22440 et seq. can maintain an action notwithstanding that he or she has shared in the illegal transaction. Mendoza v. Ruesga (2008) 169 Cal. App. 4th 270, 279, 86 Cal. Rptr. 3d 610

The unclean hands doctrine did not preclude injunctive relief because analogous case law supported the imposition of injunction, the alleged misconduct did not affect the equitable relations between the parties. Jay Bharat Developers, Inc. v. Minidis (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 437, 446, 84 Cal. Rptr. 3d 267

The doctrine demands that a plaintiff act fairly in the matter for which he seeks a remedy. Plaintiff must come into court with clean hands, and keep them clean, or plaintiff will be denied relief, regardless of the merits of his or her claim. Kendall-Jackson Winery, Ltd. v. Superior Court (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 970, 978, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 743

Cesar's Exterior Designs, Inc. (2010) 183 Cal. App. 4th 656, 673, 108 Cal. Rptr. 3d 277*

If the responsive separate statement of material facts does not identify equitable estoppel as a defense raised in opposition to plaintiff's motion for summary judgment or the elements of that defense, the defendant is not entitled to have his or her evidence in support of the defense considered by the trial court. *Oldcastle Precast, Inc. v. _____ [signature]

[2] Use of Form

The form of complaint in [1], above, is for use by a party seeking relief in equity from a prior judgment or order entered against the plaintiff. The grounds of relief are extrinsic fraud or mistake. Alternatively, relief may be sought by a motion on the same grounds in the court in which the judgment or order was entered [see Ch. 489, Relief From Judgments and Orders, § 489.430[1]]. For discussion of trial court's equitable jurisdiction, see Ch. 489, Relief From Judgments and Orders, § 489.227. For matters of which a court may take judicial notice and the manner of requesting it to do so, see Evid. Code 452(d), 453.

For a form of complaint for use when relief is sought from a default judgment on the ground of lack of personal jurisdiction, see Ch. 489, Relief From Judgments and Orders, § 489.441.

For discussion of when an action as opposed to a motion should be used to set aside a judgment or order, see Ch. 489, Relief From Judgments and Orders, § 489.266. For discussion of the statute of limitations that apply to the action, see Ch. 489, Relief From Judgments and Orders, § 489.261.

[3] Venue

An action in equity to set aside the judgment of a court is transitory and, under the general rule that a defendant is entitled to have transitory actions tried in the county of his or her residence (see Code Civ. Proc. 395(a)), the proper county for trial is the county in which the defendant or some of the defendants reside at the commencement of the action [Brown v. Happy Valley Fruit Growers (1929) 206 Cal. 515, 523-524, 274 P. 977 (reversing order denying motion to change venue to county in which defendants resided and judgment was entered); Deas v. Lido Lumber Co. (1955) 132 Cal. App. 2d 402, 404-407, 282 P.2d 90 (explaining apparently contrary dictum in Brown and reversing order denying motion to change venue from county in which judgment was entered to defendant's county of residence)].

[4] Allegations

The complaint identifies the judgment or order from which relief is sought and requests that the court take appropriate judicial notice [see Evid. Code 452(d), 453] (Paragraphs 3, 4). The complaint then alleges [see, e.g., Bennett v. Hibernia Bank (1956) 47 Cal. 2d 540, 559, 305 P.2d 20 ; Turner v. Allen (1961) 189 Cal. App. 2d 753, 758-759, 11 Cal. Rptr. 630] :

The grounds for relief (the fraud or mistake must be specifically pleaded) (Paragraph 5);

Plaintiff's discovery of the fraud or mistake, which normally starts the running of the statute of limitations [discussion, see § 489.261[1]], and if it was not promptly discovered after entry of the judgment, the reason for failure to discover it earlier, and plaintiff's freedom from fault in the entry of the judgment or order [see Kulchar v. Kulchar (1969) 1 Cal. 3d 467, 470-473, 82 Cal. Rptr. 489, 462 P.2d 17], (Paragraph 6) ;

Plaintiff's diligence in seeking relief if there is any delay between the time plaintiff discovered the facts constituting the fraud or mistake and the filing of the present action, anticipating the defense of laches [see discussion in 489.261[4]] (Paragraph 7);

That plaintiff has a meritorious claim or defense with respect to the prior judgment [see discussion in 489.264] (Paragraph 8); and

The absence of any remedy at law, either because the time for relief by appeal or by motion under Code Civ. Proc. 473(b) or (d) or any other remedy at law, expired before plaintiff was aware of the judgment [see Parsons v. Weis (1904) 144 Cal. 410, 421, 77 P. 1007 ; see also Weitz v. Yankosky (1966) 63 Cal. 2d 849, 855, 48 Cal. Rptr. 620, 409 P.2d 700] , or because the plaintiff's earlier motion under Code Civ. Proc. 473(b) or (d) was denied without a full hearing of the issues [see Rose v. Fuqua (1962) 200 Cal. App. 2d 719, 724, 19 Cal. Rptr. 634] (alternative Paragraphs 9).

Allegations for use in declarations supporting motions for relief are contained 489.430 and 489.431. With appropriate modifications as to parties and grounds relied on, these averments may be used to describe the particular extrinsic fraud or mistake in Paragraph 5 of the form in [1], above.

[5] Prayer

The prayer should request the precise relief sought. Paragraph 1 of the prayer in the form in [1], above, illustrates three possibilities:

Plaintiff seeks relief from a default and default judgment with leave to answer;

Plaintiff seeks to have declared null and void a judgment procured by extrinsic fraud or mistake, for example, a judgment quieting the defendant's title to real property owned by plaintiff; and Plaintiff seeks to have the defendant declared to be a constructive trustee of property for the plaintiff's benefit, as, for example, when the judgment attacked is one in probate distributing to another property that, but for the extrinsic fraud or mistake, would have been distributed to plaintiff, and the property has been distributed in accordance with the judgment.

[6] No Jury Trial

Being an action in equity, there is no right to a jury trial [see Holt v. Parmer (1951) 106 Cal. App. 2d 329, 331-332, 235 P.2d 43] .

Chapter 252 ESCHEAT (UNCLAIMED PROPERTY)
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
A. General Considerations

21-252 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 252.10

§ 252.10 Definitions

[1] Property

The term "property," unless specifically qualified by statute, includes all classes of property, real, personal, and mixed [Code Civ. Proc. § 1300(a)].

[2] Unclaimed Property

The term "unclaimed property" means all property that is unclaimed, abandoned, escheated, permanently escheated, or distributed to the state, or that, under any provision of law, will become unclaimed, abandoned, escheated, permanently escheated, or distributed to the state. It includes all property the possession of which the state is or will become entitled to if not claimed by the person or persons entitled to the property within the time allowed by law, whether or not there has been a judicial determination that the property is unclaimed, abandoned, escheated, permanently escheated, or distributed to the state [Code Civ. Proc. § 1300(b)].

[3] Escheat

The term "escheat" means the vesting in the state of title to property the whereabouts of whose owner is unknown, or whose owner is unknown, or that a known owner has refused to accept. Vesting may be by judicial determination or by operation of law, subject to the right of claimants to appear and claim all or any portion of the escheated property. When used in reference to the law of another state, "escheat" includes the transfer to the state of the right to the custody of such property [Code Civ. Proc. § 1300(c)].

[4] Permanent Escheat

The term "permanent escheat" means the absolute vesting in the state of title to property the whereabouts of whose owner is unknown, whose owner is unknown, or that a known owner has refused to accept, pursuant to judicial determination, a proceeding of escheat as provided by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1410-1431 [see § 252.23], or by operation of law, and the barring of all claims to the property by the former owner or his or her successors [Code Civ. Proc. §

1300(d)].

Chapter 252 ESCHEAT (UNCLAIMED PROPERTY)
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
A. General Considerations

21-252 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 252.11

§ 252.11 Purpose of Escheat and Unclaimed Property Statutes

The purpose of the unclaimed property statutes is to provide for the receipt, custody, investment, management disposal, escheat, and permanent escheat of various classes of unclaimed property to the possession of which the state is, or may become, entitled pursuant to statutes or other provisions of law [Code Civ. Proc. § 1305]. The escheat statutes are not penal in nature and do not contemplate a forfeiture of the property [see Estate of Eugene (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 907, 914 fn.5, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 622 (escheats are disfavored and should be avoided if at all possible)].

One objective of the statutes behind the process is that unclaimed property should be claimed by the state for the benefit of the public at large. Even after the property has escheated to the state, the rightful owner or claimant may recover the property if he or she can establish a right to the property prior to the passage of the time period designated by statute [see § 252.24]. If the property cannot be restored to the owners, a second objective of the escheat laws is to give benefit of the use of the property to the state rather than to its holders [Douglas Aircraft Co. v. Cranston (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 462, 463, 24 Cal. Rptr. 851, 374 P.2d 819] . Thus, a business association cannot by internal rule establish a procedure whereby unclaimed property whose owners' whereabouts are unknown becomes the property of the association. Such a procedure, even though not expressly prohibited by statute, is a private escheat law and contrary to the policy of express law [Screen Actors Guild, Inc. v. Cory (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 111, 115-116, 154 Cal. Rptr. 77 ; see Blue Cross of N. Cal. v. Cory (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 723, 739-740, 174 Cal. Rptr. 901 (claims withdrawal provision in medical insurance contracts was void and unenforceable because it constituted a private escheat law)].

Property subject to escheat generally consists of estate assets or unclaimed property with miscellaneous types of property subject to escheat as designated by statute. Lost property does not escheat, even though unclaimed. The finder is entitled to retain it if he or she complies with the provisions of Civ. Code §§ 2080-2082, dealing with lost and unclaimed property. For discussion and forms relating to lost property, see Ch. 355, Lost and Unclaimed Property .

B. Recovery of Escheated Property

21-252 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 252.21

§ 252.21 Escheat of Nonabandoned Property

[1] Property Considered Nonabandoned Property

Unclaimed property, other than abandoned property, in general includes:

- Assets remaining in the hands of the personal representative of a decedent's estate because there are no known heirs or the assets are to be distributed to heirs, devisees, or legatees whose whereabouts are unknown [see Prob. Code §§ 6800 et seq., 11900 et seq., discussed in § 252.22].

- Assets remaining in the hands of a receiver belonging to persons who cannot be located [Code Civ. Proc. § 570].

- Assets of a liquidated bank [see Fin. Code § 3121].

[2] Delivery to State Pending Expiration of Time for Escheat

Nonabandoned, unclaimed property must be delivered to the State Treasurer if it is cash or to the State Controller if it is personal property other than cash [Code Civ. Proc. § 1310]. Thereafter, the property is held subject to the claims of those entitled to it for a period of five years, after which it permanently escheats to the state, subject to claims of minors or incompetent persons within one year after the removal of their incapacity [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1351, 1355, 1430].

Unclaimed money or other property in a decedent's estate, or any unclaimed amount payable on an allowed and approved claim against the estate, received by the state and deposited in the State Treasury, must be recorded on the Controller's books to the credit or in the name of the estate, for the benefit of the person entitled to it or that person's successors in interest [Code Civ. Proc. § 1315]. Unclaimed money or other property received by the state and deposited in the State Treasury for the benefit of known heirs, devisees, legatees, or creditors of a decedent's estate, or for the benefit of known claimants, payees, or other persons entitled thereto, must be recorded on the Controller's books to the credit or in the name of the heirs, devisees, legatees, creditors, claimants, payees, or other persons entitled to it [Code Civ. Proc. § 1316].

PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
B. Recovery of Escheated Property

21-252 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 252.22

§ 252.22 Escheat of Decedents' Property

[1] When Escheat Is Required

If a decedent, whether or not domiciled in California, leaves no one to take his or her estate or any portion of it by testate succession, and no one other than a government or governmental subdivision or agency to take the estate or a portion of it by intestate succession, under the laws of California or any other jurisdiction, the estate or portion escheats at the time of the decedent's death [Prob. Code § 6800(a)].

Although the possibility of escheat may arise at the death of a decedent without heirs, the state's interest does not vest until the end of five years from the date of distribution. Until then, the state's interest is conditional or provisional, and the Controller is a mere stakeholder for possible claimants [Mannheim v. Superior Court (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 678, 690, 91 Cal. Rptr. 585, 478 P.2d 17] .

Property that escheats to the state, whether held by the state or its officers, is subject to the same charges and trusts to which it would have been subject if it had passed by succession. It is also subject to Code Civ. Proc. § 1300 et seq., relating to escheated estates [Prob. Code § 6800(b)].

[2] Particular Classes of Property

[a] Real Property

Real property situated in California escheats to the state in accordance with Prob. Code § 6800 [Prob. Code § 6801; see § 252.22].

[b] Personal Property

All tangible personal property owned by the decedent, wherever located at the decedent's death, that was customarily kept in California prior to the decedent's death escheats to the state in accordance with Prob. Code § 6800 [Prob. Code § 6802; see § 252.22]. All tangible personal property owned by the decedent that is subject to the control of a California superior court for purposes of estate administration also escheats [Prob. Code § 6803(a)]. Personal property subject to court control, however, does not escheat to California but goes to another jurisdiction if the other jurisdiction claims the property and establishes all of the following [Prob. Code § 6803(b)]:

- The other jurisdiction is entitled to the property under its law;
- The decedent customarily kept the property in that jurisdiction prior to his or her death; and
- California has the right to escheat and take tangible personal property being administered as part of a decedent's estate in that jurisdiction if the decedent customarily kept the property in this state prior to his or her death.

[c] Intangible Property

All intangible property owned by the decedent escheats to California in accordance with Prob. Code § 6800 if the decedent was domiciled in California at the time of death [Prob. Code § 6804; see § 252.22]. All intangible property owned by the decedent that is subject to the control of a California superior court for purposes of estate administration escheats to the state, whether or not the decedent was domiciled in California at the time of his or her death [Prob. Code § 6805(a)]. Intangible property subject to court control, however, does not escheat to California but goes to another jurisdiction if the other jurisdiction claims the property and establishes all of the following [Prob. Code § 6805(b)]:

- The other jurisdiction is entitled to the property under its laws;
- The decedent was domiciled in that jurisdiction at the time of his or her death; and
- California has the right to escheat and take intangible property being administered as part of a decedent's estate in that jurisdiction if the decedent was domiciled in California at the time of his or her death.

[d] Trust Benefits

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a benefit consisting of money or other property distributable from a trust established under a plan providing health and welfare, pension, vacation, severance, retirement benefit, death benefit, unemployment insurance, or similar benefits does not pass to or escheat to California, but goes to the trust or fund from which it is distributable, subject to the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1521 (rules for escheat of employee benefit plan distributions under Unclaimed Property Law). If the plan has terminated and the trust or fund has been distributed to its beneficiaries prior to distribution of the benefit from the estate, however, the benefit passes to the state and escheats to the state [Prob. Code § 6806].

[3] Distribution of Undistributed Property to State

[a] Order for Distribution

The court in a proceeding for administration of a decedent's estate must order property that is not ordered distributed to known beneficiaries to be distributed to the state [Prob. Code § 11900(a)]. Real property or tangible personal property must generally be converted to money before distribution to the state [Prob. Code § 11900(b)]. If the court's order includes words that otherwise create a trust in favor of unknown or unidentified persons as a class, the distribution vests in the state both legal and equitable title to the property [Prob. Code § 11901].

[b] Delivery of Property to State

When the court orders distribution to the state, the personal representative of the estate must promptly deliver any money to the State Treasurer, deliver any personal property other than money to the Controller, and record a certified copy of the order in the office of the county recorder of each county in which real property is located [Prob. Code § 11902(a)]. The personal representative must deliver to the Controller a certified copy of the order for distribution and a statement of the date and place of each recording and other appropriate recording information [Prob. Code § 11902(b)].

[c] Five-Year Holding Period

The State Treasurer must hold property distributed to the state for a period of five years from the date of the order for distribution. Within this five-year period, any person may claim the property in the manner provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 1300 [Prob. Code § 11903(a); see § 252.24]. Title to property distributed to the state does not vest absolutely and unconditionally in the state, nor is the escheat complete, until the lapse of the five-year period without the appearance of any claimants. Before this time, the state's title is conditional and subject to divestment by the appearance of legitimate claimants [Estate of McGuigan (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 639, 644, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 887] . Any property that is not claimed within this five-year period is permanently escheated to the state without any further proceeding, except that minors or mentally disabled persons have until one year after their disabilities cease within which to make a claim [Code Civ. Proc. § 1441].

PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
B. Recovery of Escheated Property

21-252 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 252.23

§ 252.23 Escheat Proceedings by State

[1] In General

The Attorney General may file actions on behalf of the state for the purpose of obtaining an adjudication that title to unclaimed property to which the state has become entitled by escheat has vested in the state, and for the purpose of obtaining an adjudication that property has been actually abandoned or that the owner of the property has died and there is no person entitled to it so that it has escheated and vested in the state. The action must be filed in the superior court for Sacramento County, except that any action concerning real property must be filed in the superior court for the county in which the property is situated. The Attorney General must record a notice of the pendency of the petition in the office of the county recorder of the county in which the real property is situated [Code Civ. Proc. § 1410].

The court must order all persons interested in the property or estate that is the subject of the proceeding to appear and show cause why title to the property should not vest in the state. Service of process must be made by delivery of a copy of the order and the petition to each person who claims title to the property and is known to the Attorney General or Controller, or who has filed with the Controller a written request for service of process. The order must also be published at least once a week for two consecutive weeks in a newspaper published in the county in which the action is filed. On completion of this service of process, the court has full jurisdiction over the estate, the property, and the person of everyone having or claiming an interest in the property, and has full jurisdiction to hear and determine the issues in the proceeding and to render judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 1410].

If it appears from the facts found or admitted that the state is entitled to the property, the court must render judgment that title to the property has vested in the state by escheat [Code Civ. Proc. § 1410].

[2] Property Valued at $1,000 or Less

If the escheated property is valued at $1,000 or less, the Controller may prepare a return listing the property and publish notice of the return once each week for two consecutive weeks. Within five years after notice by publication is completed, any person entitled to the property may claim it. Persons who fail to make a claim within this time limit are forever barred from making a claim, except that minors and mentally disabled persons have until one year after their disability ceases to make a claim [Code Civ. Proc. § 1415].

[3] Property in Decedents' Estates

At any time after two years of the death of a decedent who leaves property to which the state is entitled because the property has escheated to the state, the Attorney General must commence a proceeding on behalf of the state in the superior court for Sacramento County to obtain an adjudication of the state's entitlement to the property [Code Civ. Proc. § 1420(a)]. The petition must set forth a description of the property, the name of the person last in possession of the property, the name of any person claiming any portion of the property, and the facts and circumstances showing that the property has escheated [Code Civ. Proc. § 1420(b)].

The court must order all persons interested in the estate to appear and show cause, within 60 days of the order, why the estate should not vest in the state. The order must be published at least once a week for four consecutive weeks in a newspaper published in Sacramento County. When this publication is complete, the court has full jurisdiction over the estate, the property, and the person of everyone having or claiming any interest in the property, and has full jurisdiction to hear and determine the issues in the action and to render an appropriate judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 14208].

If a proceeding for the administration of the estate has been instituted, a copy of the order must be filed in this proceeding. If none of the persons entitled to succeed to the estate have appeared and made a claim to estate property before the decree of final distribution is made or before the commencement of a proceeding by the Attorney General, or if the court finds that the persons who have appeared are not entitled to estate property, the court must, on final settlement of the proceeding for the administration of the estate, distribute all moneys and other property remaining to the state after the payment of all debts and expenses of administration [Code Civ. Proc. § 1420(d)]. If a proceeding for the administration of any estate as not been commenced within six months from the decedent's death, the Attorney General may direct the public administrator to commence such a proceeding [Code Civ. Proc. § 1420(e)].

All persons named in the petition filed by the Attorney General may appear and answer; any other person claiming an interest in the estate may appear and be made a defendant by filing a motion for that purpose within the time allowed to answer. If no person appears and answers, judgment must be rendered for the state. If any person appears and denies the state's entitlement to estate property, then the issues of fact in the case must be tried as issues of fact are tried in civil actions. If it appears from the facts found or admitted that the state has good title to the property, the court must render judgment that the state is the owner of and entitled to possession of the property, and is entitled to recover costs of suit against the defendants who have appeared and answered [Code Civ. Proc. § 1423].

The Attorney General may also intervene on behalf of the state in any action or special proceeding affecting an estate that has escheated or is about to escheat to the state, to contest the rights of any claimants to the estate [Code Civ. Proc. § 1421].

[4] When Property Is Permanently Escheated

Property covered by an escheat proceeding permanently escheats to the state five years after the date of entry of judgment in the proceeding [Code Civ. Proc. § 1430(a); see Estate of McGuigan (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 639, 645, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 887 (purpose of five-year statute is to protect previously unknown heirs from a permanent escheat)]. An exception to this general rule applies to a claim by a minor or mentally disabled person [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1430(b)].

Chapter 252 ESCHEAT (UNCLAIMED PROPERTY)
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
B. Recovery of Escheated Property

21-252 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 252.24

§ 252.24 Claim to Recover Escheated Property in Possession of State

[1] Persons Entitled to Make Claim

Any person or entity entitled to property subject to escheat may make a claim for recovery of the property at any time before the property becomes permanently escheated to the state (generally five years after the date of entry of judgment in any escheat proceeding under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1410-1431) [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1350, 1430; see § 252.23[4]]. Persons entitled to make claims include distributees, assignees, conservatees, wards, named beneficiaries, and blood relatives of named beneficiaries [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1352(b) (assignees, distributees, conservatees, wards); see also Code Civ. Proc. § 1430(c) (named beneficiaries and blood relatives) and discussion in [3][c], below].

[2] Property Valued at Under $60,000 or Assigned to Distributee

A claim for recovery of escheated property valued at less than $60,000 may be made to the Controller [Code Civ. Proc. § 1352(a)], Property assigned or distributed to a named distributee of an estate may be claimed by the distributee himself or herself, or by his or her legal guardian or conservator, regardless of the amount. This provision does not apply to the heirs or estate of a distributee, or to property distributed to the state for lack of known heirs [Code Civ. Proc. § 1352(b)]. Any person aggrieved by a decision of the Controller may bring an action against the Controller to establish the person's claim. The action may be filed in the superior court in any county in which the Attorney General has an office [Code Civ. Proc. § 1352(c)].

[3] Proceeding to Recover Other Property Before Escheat Proceeding by State

A person claiming entitlement to property other than as provided in [2], above [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1352], must make any such claim by filing a verified petition in the superior court of Sacramento County or in the superior court of any county in which the Attorney General has an office. The petition must show the person's claim or right to the money or other property [Code Civ. Proc. § 1353].

[4] Proceeding to Recover Property After Escheat Proceeding by State

[a] Petition

Within five years after the date of entry of judgment in any escheat proceeding by the state under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1410-1431 [see § 252.23], any person not a party or privy to the proceeding, if not otherwise barred, may file a verified petition in the superior court of Sacramento County or in the superior court of any county in which the Attorney General has an office [Code Civ. Proc. § 1355; Estate of McGuigan (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 639, 642, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 887 (potential heir has five years from state's initial receipt of escheated estate to make claim to recover estate by filing a petition)]. The petition must show the person's claim or right to the money or other property. If the petitioner seeks recovery as an heir, devisee, or legatee (or the successor in interest of an heir, devisee, or legatee), of money or other property received by the state from a decedent's estate, the petition must set forth specified information about the decedent and his or her descendants or a statement of reasons why the petitioner is unable to do so [Code Civ. Proc. § 1355; Estate of McGuigan (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 639, 642-643, 645, 649, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 887 (judgment based on petition that deliberately fails to identify known and closer heirs may be set aside for extrinsic fraud when compliance with disclosure requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 1355 would have likely resulted in timely claim by closer heir)].

[b] Service of Petition and Notice of Hearing

A copy of the petition and notice of hearing must be served on the Attorney General and the Controller at least 20 days before the hearing on the petition [Code Civ. Proc. § 1355]. In a case involving estate property, the statute does not require the petitioner to give notice of the proceeding to other heirs, because they have already been given notice of the estate administration proceeding; however, the statute does not discourage an effort to give such notice when another heir who may be more deserving is brought to the court's attention [Estate of McGuigan (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 639, 647-648, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 887 (there would appear to be no other purpose for statutory requirement that petitioner specify names and addresses of each of decedent's heirs in petition); but see Parage v. Couedel (1997) 60 Cal. App. 4th 1037, 1043-1044, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 671 (because other heir is not entitled to actual notice of Code Civ. Proc. § 1355 proceeding, failure to receive actual notice does not constitute mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect within meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 473(b) or extrinsic fraud)].

If the claim includes a claim to an interest in real property, the petitioner also must record a notice of the pendency of the petition in the office of the county recorder of the county in which the property is situated [Code Civ. Proc. § 1355].

[c] Hearing and Court Order

The court must try the issue as issues are tried in civil actions. If the court determines that the petitioner is entitled to the money or other property, it must order the property delivered to the petitioner or, if the property has been sold, delivery of the proceeds of sale to the petitioner [Code Civ. Proc. § 1355]. Although Code Civ. Proc. § 1355 permits any "person" to file a claim for funds escheated to the state, it allows distribution only to those "entitled to" the funds. Therefore, a person who claims entitlement by virtue of descent must establish that he or she is an heir of the person in whose name the funds are held. If the funds were distributed to the state because the heirs were unknown, the funds are held in the name of the estate, and the petitioner is entitled to distribution on proving that he or she is an heir of the decedent. However, if the funds were distributed to the state because the named distributee could not be found, the funds are held in the distributee's name, and only the distributee or his or her heirs are entitled to distribution [Bogert v. Davis (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 774, 777, 263 Cal. Rptr. 129 (result is different if named distributee predeceased decedent; then escheated funds would be held in name of estate)].

[d] Distribution of Property In Escheated Estate

With respect to an escheated estate, once the court determines that the petitioner is the decedent's heir, the petitioner is entitled to immediate distribution of the estate, regardless of whether there might be other unknown heirs who are closer in line to the decedent who will be forever divested of their interest in the estate [Estate of McGuigan (2000) 83 Cal.

App. 4th 639, 647, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 887] . Obviously, this "first come, first served" policy can lead to harsh results, but delaying distribution of an escheated estate is not required because unknown heirs do not have a vested interest in the estate during the five-year waiting period. The five-year period delaying final escheat to the estate does not vest all heirs with an absolute right to state claims during that time. This delay is merely a final attempt to prevent escheat. When there is a mechanism to distribute the estate and prevent the escheat, there is no reason to provide the extra five-year period [Estate of McGuigan (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 639, 647, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 887 ; see Parage v. Couedel (1997) 60 Cal. App. 4th 1037, 1042, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 671 (when statutory escheat procedures are followed, unknown heirs who fail to come forward cannot later complaint of distribution to other known heirs after distribution has become final); Estate of Supeck (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 360, 369, 274 Cal. Rptr. 706 (in escheat, unlike probate, status of "prior heir" in itself conveys no entitlement to claim estate; entitlement belongs only to heirs who file timely Code Civ. Proc. § 1355 petitions, whatever their degree of kinship to decedent)].

[e] Fail to File Petition Within Five-Year Period

All persons who fail to appear and file their petitions within the five-year period are forever barred from making a claim, except that minors and mentally disabled persons have one year after their disabilities cease within which to file a petition [Code Civ. Proc. § 1355; see Code Civ. Proc. § 1430(b)]. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1355, the right to escheated property belongs only to heirs who file timely petitions, whatever their degree of kinship to the decedent. If a closer heir who could file a timely claim fails to do so, this heir is barred by the express terms of Code Civ. Proc. § 1355 from making a claim to the estate thereafter [Estate of McGuigan (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 639, 646, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 887] .

[f] Appeal

Because a petition to recover an escheated estate is a civil action [Code Civ. Proc. § 1355], review of a court's denial of the petition is permitted under the rules governing appeals in civil actions [Code Civ. Proc. § 904.1(a); Bogert v. Davis (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 774, 776 fn. 5, 263 Cal. Rptr. 129] .

PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
C. Recovery of Abandoned Unclaimed Property

21-252 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 252.40

§ 252.40 Purpose of "Unclaimed Property Law"

The Unclaimed Property Law [Code Civ. Proc. § 1500 et seq.] dealing with abandoned property determines abandonment in certain situations if the owner of the property does not take affirmative action to evidence his or her title. The purposes of the law are to protect unknown owners by locating them and restoring their property and to give the state, rather than the holder, the benefit of using unclaimed funds or property [Cory v. Public Utilities Comm'n (1983) 33 Cal. 3d 522, 528, 189 Cal. Rptr. 386, 658 P.2d 749 ; Bank of America v. Cory (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 66, 74, 210 Cal. Rptr. 351 (Unclaimed Property Law is not true escheat statute because of these dual objectives)]. Property the state receives under the Unclaimed Property Law does not permanently escheat to the state [Code Civ. Proc. § 1501.5(a)].

Generally, the law applies to the unclaimed property of banking organizations [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1501(b)], business associations [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1501(c) (defining term to include any association for business purposes of two or more individuals whether or not for profit)] and financial organizations [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1501(d)], if the owner's last known address, as it appears on the record of the holder of the property, or as otherwise specified in Code Civ. Proc. § 1510, is in California, the holder is domiciled or a public entity in California and has not paid the property to the state of the owner's last known address, or the last known address of the holder is in a state or foreign country that does not provide by law for the escheat of property and the holder is domiciled or a public entity in California [Code Civ. Proc. § 1510].

The Controller's rights under the Unclaimed Property Law are derivative, i.e., the Controller only succeeds to whatever rights the owner of the unclaimed property may have, and no more [Blue Cross of N. Cal. v. Cory (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 723, 737, 174 Cal. Rptr. 901] .

PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

21-252 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 252.41

§ 252.41 Property Subject to Unclaimed Property Law

[1] Demand, Savings, or Mature Time Deposits

Any demand, savings, or matured time deposit made with a banking organization, together with any interest or dividends on the deposit (excluding, from demand deposits only, any reasonable service charges that lawfully may be withheld), that has been dormant for more than three years escheats to the state [Code Civ. Proc. § 1513(a)(1)(A)].

Dormancy exists if the owner has not done any of the following [Code Civ. Proc. § 1513(a)(1)(A)]:

- Increased or decreased the amount of the deposit, cashed an interest check, or presented a passbook or other similar evidence of the deposit for the crediting of interest;

- Corresponded electronically or in writing with the banking organization concerning the deposit;

- Otherwise indicated an interest in the deposit as evidenced by a memorandum or other record on file with the banking organization.

A deposit or account will not escheat to the state if, within the previous three years, the owner owned another deposit or account with the banking organization, or the owner owned an individual retirement account or funds held by the banking organization under a retirement plan for self-employed individuals or a similar account or plan established as provided in Code Civ. Proc. § 1513(a)(6), and with respect to that deposit, account or plan, the owner conducted one of the above listed activities with respect to the other deposit or account, and the banking organization communicated electronically or in writing with the owner at the address for that deposit or account regarding the deposit or account otherwise subject to escheat [Code Civ. Proc. § 1513(a)(1)(B)]. For these purposes, "communications" refers to account statements or statements of interest paid for federal and state income tax purposes [Code Civ. Proc. § 1513(a)(1)(B)].

[2] Individual Retirement Accounts and Retirement Plans for Self-Employed Persons

In the case of an individual retirement account, a retirement plan for a self-employed individual, or a similar account or plan established under the internal revenue laws of the United States or California, dormancy exists if, for more than three years after the funds become payable or distributable, the owner has not done any of the following: (1) increased or decreased the principal; (2) accepted payment of principal or income; or (3) corresponded in writing concerning the property or otherwise indicated an interest in it [Code Civ. Proc. § 1513(a)(6)(A)]. Funds held by a business association in an individual retirement account or under similar retirement plan for self-employed individuals or a similar account established under U.S. or California law, will not escheat to the state if, within the previous three years, the owner has owned another such account or plan with the business association, and the owner has conducted one of the activities listed in Code Civ. Proc. § 1513(a)(1)(A)(i)-(iii) (see § 252.41[1]) and the business association has communicated electronically or in writing with the owner [Code Civ. Proc. § 1513 (a)(6)(B)]. The funds are not payable or distributable unless, under the terms of the account or plan, distribution of all or a part of the funds would then be mandatory [Code Civ. Proc. § 1513 (a)(6)(C)].

[3] Other Property

Other property that escheats to the state after a period of dormancy as indicated by express statutory requirements includes the following:

- Any demand, savings, or matured time deposit, or matured investment certificate, or account subject to a negotiable order of withdrawal, or other interest in a financial organization (after three years) [Code Civ. Proc. § 1513(a)(2)(A)].

- Any sum payable on a travelers check (after 15 years) [Code Civ. Proc. § 1513(a)(3)].

- Any sum payable on any other written instrument on which a banking or financial institution is directly liable (after three years) [Code Civ. Proc. § 1513(a)(4)].

- Any sum payable on a money order issued by a business association (after seven years) [Code Civ. Proc. § 1513(a)(5)].

- Any wages or salaries that remain unclaimed by the owner for more than one year after they became payable [Code Civ. Proc. § 1513(a)(7)].

- The contents of any safe deposit box or other safekeeping repository (after three years) [Code Civ. Proc. § 1514].

- Funds held or owing by a life insurance corporation under any life or endowment insurance policy or annuity contract that has matured or terminated (after three years) [Code Civ. Proc. § 1515].

- Property that is distributable in the course of a demutualization or related reorganization of an insurance company (either on the date of the demutualization or reorganization, or two or three years after that date, as specified) [Code Civ. Proc. § 1515.5].

- Any dividend, profit, distribution, interest, payment on principal, or other sum held or owing by a business association for or to its shareholder, certificate holder, member, bondholder, or other security holder, or a participating patron of a cooperative (after three years) [Code Civ. Proc. § 1516(a)].

- Property that is distributable in the course of a voluntary or involuntary dissolution or liquidation of a business association (six months) [Code Civ. Proc. § 1517(a)].

- Property that is distributable in the course of voluntary or involuntary dissolution or liquidation of an insurer (six months; transferred to Department of Insurance for deposit in Insurance Fund) [Code Civ. Proc. § 1517(b)].

- Property held in a fiduciary capacity (after three years) [Code Civ. Proc. § 1518].

- Property held by any government or governmental subdivision or agency (after three years) [Code Civ. Proc. § 1519].

- Funds held by a business association that have been ordered to be refunded by a court or an administrative agency, including the Public Utilities Commission (after one year) [Code Civ. Proc. § 1519.5; see Assembly v. Public Utilities Comm'n (1995) 12 Cal. 4th 87, 103-104, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 54, 906 P.2d 1209 (legislature has expressly barred PUC from retaining ratepayer refunds by mandating reimbursement of these funds either to ratepayers or by escheat to general fund under Code Civ. Proc. § 1519.5)].

- Other property that is held or owing in the ordinary course of the holder's business (after three years) [Code Civ. Proc. § 1520(a); see Cory v. Public Utilities Com. (1983) 33 Cal. 3d 522, 526, 189 Cal. Rptr. 386, 658 P.2d 749 (unclaimed public utilities refunds are within this "catchall" category); Blue Cross of N. Cal. v. Cory (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 723, 736, 174 Cal. Rptr. 901 (amount of any benefit checks that have not been negotiated and paid is within this category)].

- Employee benefit plan distributions (after three years) [Code Civ. Proc. § 1521; see Simon Levi Co., Ltd. v. Dun & Bradstreet Pension Servs., Inc. (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 496, 502, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 159 (state escheat law is not preempted by ERISA (29 U.S.C. § 1001 et seq.))].

PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
C. Recovery of Abandoned Unclaimed Property

21-252 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 252.42

§ 252.42 Property Not Subject to Unclaimed Property Law

The Unclaimed Property Law does not apply to property in the official custody of a municipal utility district [Code Civ. Proc. § 1502(a)(1)] or of a local agency if the property may be transferred to the General Fund of the agency under Gov. Code § 50050 et seq. [Code Civ. Proc. § 1502(a)(2)].

The Unclaimed Property Law also does not include employee benefit plan distributions (generally funds distributable to beneficiaries under health, welfare, and pension plans and residuals payable under a collective bargaining agreement [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1501(i), (j)]) if the plan expressly provides for a forfeiture of any distribution to a beneficiary who cannot be found in the time prescribed in the plan [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1521(b)]. In addition, it does not apply to any proprietary interest in an agricultural cooperative if the conditions set forth in Food & Agric. Code § 54041 are met; that interest would become the property of the association rather than escheating to the state [see Food & Agric. Code § 54041].

In the case of unclaimed property loaned to a museum, the Unclaimed Property Law is superseded by Civ. Code §§ 1899-1899.11 [see Civ. Code § 1899.11(a); for discussion of *Civ. If the museum elects to proceed under the Unclaimed Property Law, it must mail notice to the lender of its intent not less than six months or more than 12 months before reporting the property to the controller pursuant to the Unclaimed Property Law [Civ. Code § 1899.11(b)]. The requirements for the notice are set forth in Civ. Code § 1899.11(b).

C. Recovery of Abandoned Unclaimed Property

21-252 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 252.44

§ 252.44 Notice to Apparent Owner

[1] In General

In specific circumstances, the holder of abandoned property must give notice to the apparent owner of the property before it will escheat. As discussed under [2] et seq., below, the notice requirements depend on the type and value of the property, and the identity of the property holder.

[2] Financial Institutions

If a deposit, account, shares, or other interest of $50 or more held by a banking or financial organization is subject to escheat, and if the apparent owner of the property is one of the organization's customers, the organization is subject to the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 1513.5. Under that section, if the banking or financial organization has in its records an address for the apparent owner, and if the organization's records do not disclose the address to be inaccurate, the organization must make reasonable efforts to notify the customer by mail, or, if the owner has consented to electronic notice, electronically, that the deposit, account, shares, or other interest will escheat to the state pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1513(a)(1), (a)(2) [Code Civ. Proc. § 1513.5(a); see Code Civ. Proc. § 1513.5(c) (notice not required for interests less than $50)].

The banking or financial organization must give the customer notice that the deposit, account, shares, or other interest will escheat and the effects of escheat, including the necessity for filing a claim for the return of the deposit, account, shares, or other interest. It must also include a form prescribed by the State Controller by which the customer may declare an intention to maintain the deposit, account, shares, or other interest. If that form is filled out, signed by the customer, and returned to the banking or financial organization, the deposit, account, shares, or other interest will not be subject to escheat [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1513(a)(1), (a)(2), 1513.5(b)].

The notice must comply with the statutory format and content requirements [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1513.5(b)] and must be given either [Code Civ. Proc. § 1513.5(a)(1), (2)]:

- Not less than two nor more than two and one-half years after the date of last activity by or communication with the customer with respect to the account, deposit, shares, or other interest; or

- Not less than six nor more than 12 months before the time the account, deposit, shares, or other interest becomes reportable to the State Controller.

[3] Business Associations

If a business association holds a dividend, profit, distribution, interest, payment on principal, or other sum for one of its shareholders, certificate holders, members, bondholders, or other security holders, it must give notice under Code Civ. Proc. § 1516(d) before the property is subject to escheat. Code Civ. Proc. § 1516(d) requires that the notice be given not less than six nor more than twelve months before the time the interest in the business association becomes reportable to the State Controller, and that the notice specify the time that the interest will escheat and the effects of escheat, including the necessity of filing a claim for the return of the interest [Code Civ. Proc. § 1516(d)]. The notice must also comply with the statutory format and content requirements [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1516(d)].

Code Civ. Proc. § 1516(d) also requires that a form prescribed by the State Controller be included with the notice, by which the owner may confirm his or her current address [Code Civ. Proc. § 1516(d)].

[4] Tangible Personal Property and Property Held in Ordinary Course of Holder's Business

If the property subject to escheat is tangible personal property located in California, or certain types of intangible personal property [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1520(a); see also Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1510, 1511, 1513-1519, 1521], that is held or owing in the ordinary course of the holder's business, notice must be given as specified in Code Civ. Proc. § 1520 [Code Civ. Proc. § 1520(b)].

If the property is valued at $50 or more, and if the holder has in its records an address for the apparent owner of the property which the holder's records do not disclose to be inaccurate, Code Civ. Proc. § 1520(b) requires the holder to make reasonable efforts to notify the owner by mail, or, if the owner has consented to electronic notice, electronically, that the owner's property is subject to escheat.

The notice must be mailed not less than six nor more than twelve months before the time the owner's property becomes transferable to the State Controller. The notice must specify the time when the property will escheat and the effects of escheat, including the need to file a claim in order for the owner's property to be returned to the owner and must also comply with statutory format and content requirements [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1520(b)]. It must also include a form prescribed by the State Controller by which the owner may confirm his or her current address. If that form is filled out, signed by the owner, and returned to the holder, it will be deemed that the account or other device in which the owner's property is being held remains current active, and the escheat period will recommence [Code Civ. Proc. § 1520(b)].

§ 252.45 Report to State Controller by Holder of Escheated Property

If property has escheated to the state under the Unclaimed Property Law, the holder is required to report to the State Controller, on a form prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 1530, facts showing the existence of the escheated property [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1530]. A notice concerning the escheated property is published as provided in Code Civ. Proc. § 1531. If an account paid or delivered to the Controller includes a social security number, the Controller must request the Franchise Tax Board to provide a current address for the apparent owner on the basis of that number. The Controller must mail a notice to the apparent owner for whom a current address is obtained if this address is different than the address previously reported to the Controller [Code Civ. Proc. § 1531(d)].

Except for contents of a safe deposit box escheating to the state under Code Civ. Proc. § 1514 [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1532.1], every reporting holder must pay or deliver to the Controller all escheated property specified in the report no sooner than seven months and no later than seven months and 15 days after the final date for filing the report [Code Civ. Proc. § 1532(a)]. The controller may postpone the date for payment or delivery of the property, and the date for any report required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1532(b), upon his or her own motion or upon written request by any person required to pay or delivery the property or file a report [Code Civ. Proc. § 1532(a)].

§ 252.46 Procedure to Recover Escheated Property Under Unclaimed Property Law

Claims to property escheated to the state under the Unclaimed Property Law [Code Civ. Proc. § 1500 et seq.] are initiated by filing a verified claim with the Controller [Code Civ. Proc. § 1540(a); see § 252.80[2]]. The Controller must consider each claim within 180 days after it is filed, and may hold a hearing and receive evidence. The Controller must give written notice to the claimant of the denial of the claim, in whole or in part, by mailing notice to the claimant's address as stated in the claim [Code Civ. Proc. § 1540(b)]. No interest is payable on the claim [Code Civ. Proc. § 1540(c)].

When the Controller denies a claim or fails to make a decision on a claim within 180 days after it is filed, the claimant may file an action against the Controller to establish his or her claim in the superior court of any county in which the Attorney General has an office. The action must be filed within 90 days after the Controller's decision or within 270 days from the date the claim was filed if the Controller fails to make a decision [Code Civ. Proc. § 1541]. The claimant must serve a summons and a copy of the complaint on the Controller and the Attorney General. The Controller has 60 days to respond by answer. The action must be tried without a jury [Code Civ. Proc. § 1541].

Any person who willfully fails to report, pay or deliver escheated property to the controller under the Unclaimed Property Law, within a reasonable time after notification by the controller, must pay a fine [Code Civ. Proc. § 1576]. In addition to any other damages, penalties, or fines, a person who fails to report, pay, or deliver unclaimed property within the time prescribed by the Unclaimed Property Law, unless the failure is due to reasonable cause, will be liable to the controller for interest at the rate of 12 percent per annum on the property or the value of the property from the date when it should have been reported, paid, or delivered [Code Civ. Proc. § 1577]. If a holder pays or delivers unclaimed property in a timely manner, but files a report that is not in substantial compliance with the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 1530, the interest payable must not exceed $10,000 [Code Civ. Proc. § 1577]. The holder will not be subject to any interest payment if the holder's failure to report in substantial compliance with the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 1530 is due to reasonable cause [Code Civ. Proc. § 1577].

§ 252.48 Time Limits

The expiration of any time period specified by statute or court order during which an action or proceeding may be commenced or enforced to obtain payment of a claim for money or recovery of property from the holder does not prevent the money or property from being escheated. It also does not affect any duty to file a report required by the Unclaimed Property Law, or to pay or deliver escheated property to the Controller [Code Civ. Proc. § 1570; see Bank of America v. Cory (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 66, 74-76, 210 Cal. Proc. § 338(a) and must be brought within three years as specified by that statute; Code Civ. Proc. § 1570 is legislatively created exception to that statute)]. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1570, a holder of unclaimed property has a continuing duty to report and deliver this property to the state, and there is no limitation on the time in which the Controller may bring an action to enforce the provisions of the Unclaimed Property Law [*Bank of America v. Third-party "whistleblower" plaintiff failed to state reverse false claims action against banks for failing to report reconveyance fees as escheated property because alleged false reports occurred before enactment of reconveyance fee refund statute; disputed reconveyance fees were not "escheatable property" under Unclaimed Property Law, because they did not represent liquidated or certain obligations. *State ex rel. PART IV. PROCEDURAL CHECKLIST

21-252 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 252.80

§ 252.80 Present Claim When Appropriate

[1] Make Preliminary Determinations

☐ Is filing of claim mandatory before legal action can be commenced [see § 252.46 (Unclaimed Property Law claim)]?

☐ If not mandatory, may claim be filed [see § 252.24[1], [2] (escheat)]? If action is to be brought and claim not filed, continue as set forth in § 252.81. If claim is to be filed, see § 252.81[1] and [2] for facts to be ascertained and documents to be obtained.

☐ Is filing of claim prohibited [see § 252.24[3], [4] (escheat)]? If action is to be brought and claim not filed, continue as set forth in § 252.81. If claim is to be filed, see § 252.81[1] and [2] for facts to be ascertained and documents to be obtained.

[2] File Claim

☐ Complete claim form.

NOTE:
A claim is made by completing an Affirmation form which may be obtained from the State Controller at www.sco.ca.gov or State Controller, Bureau of Unclaimed Property, P.O. Box 942850, Sacramento, California 94250-5873.

☐ Have each claimant sign the form.

NOTE:
The claim must be notarized if claiming securities or any property over $1,000.

☐ Obtain other required documents that must be filed with claim:

☐ Copy of current photo identification for each claimant (e.g., driver's license or passport).

☐ Proof of social security number for each claimant (e.g., copy of claimant's social security card or other document sowing claimant's social security number such as a tax return or pay stub).

☐ Original instrument, if applicable, such as passbook or stock certificate. If original instrument has been lost, stolen, or destroyed, claimant must furnish proof (e.g., a utility or tax bill) showing that he or she once resided at address shown on the account as reported to the Controller.

☐ If claimant is an heir of the deceased owner, death certificate of deceased owner, plus one of the following:

☐ Copy of current certified letters testamentary, dated within past six months, and decedent's estate tax identification number;

☐ Complete copy of court ordered distribution of decedent's estate;

☐ Complete copy of decedent's will and/or trust agreement and a completed Controller's Form 13101, Declaration Under Probate Code 13101, if distribution of the estate was not ordered by the court; or ☐ Completed Form 13101 and completed Controller's form, Table of Heirship, if there is no will or trust agreement.

☐ Mail completed claim form/affirmation and all required supporting documents to State Controller, Bureau of Unclaimed Property, P.O. Box 942850, Sacramento, California 94250-5873.

[3] Commence Action on Adverse Decision

☐ Controller may:

☐ Deny claim in whole.

☐ Deny claim in part.

☐ Make no decision on claim.

☐ If Controller holds hearing and receives evidence on Unclaimed Property Law claim [Code Civ. Proc. § 1500 et seq.], he or she must give notice of any decision to deny claim [Code Civ. Proc. § 1540(b)].

☐ If Controller's decision on Unclaimed Property Law claim is adverse or is not made within 180 days [Code Civ. Proc. § 1541], petition may be filed in superior court to establish claimant's right to recover property [Code Civ. Proc. § 1541; see § 252.81].

☐ If Controller's decision under Code Civ. Proc. § 1352 is adverse, any person aggrieved may commence action, naming Controller as defendant, to establish claim in superior court in any county or city and county in which Attorney General has office pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1541 [Code Civ. Proc. § 1352(c)]. For procedure, see § 252.81.

PART IV. PROCEDURAL CHECKLIST

21-252 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 252.81

§ 252.81 Petitioner's Checklist

[1] Ascertain Facts

NOTE:
Not all of the following facts will be ascertainable from the client in the initial interview. Subsequent interviews may be required or it may be necessary to ascertain the facts from others, including the potential state defendant, by use of discovery proceedings. Notes following facts listed below indicate sources from which the facts required might be obtained. The following facts, although not necessarily in the order indicated, are required to enable counsel to prepare a petition to recover escheated property from the state.

[a] Facts Relating to Petitioner

☐ Obtain general information: name, address (including zip code), telephone number of petitioner.

☐ Ascertain capacity of petitioner, for example: minor, adult, trustee, conservator, guardian, executor, partnership, domestic corporation, foreign corporation.

☐ Ascertain additional facts, as desired, relating to petitioner's stability and financial solvency, such as: employment status, prior residences, credit, bank, personal references.

[b] Facts Relating to Defendants

☐ Obtain names of California Attorney General and Controller.

☐ State of California is respondent in petitions for escheated property under Code Civ. Proc. § 1355 and State Controller is added respondent in petition under Unclaimed Property Law [Code Civ. Proc. § 1541]. Attorney General must be served in both actions.

☐ Obtain addresses of California Attorney General and Controller.

☐ Petitions in both actions may be brought in Superior Court of County of Sacramento or in any city or city and county in which Attorney General has office [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 401, 1353, 1355, 1541]. The address to be used for Attorney General should be address of his or her office in county in which action will be brought. Address of Controller is P.O. Box 942850, Sacramento, California 94250-5873.

[c] Facts Relating to Escheated Property Generally

☐ Obtain general descriptive information: description of property claimed, location of property claimed, controller's account number.

☐ If real property is involved, obtain street address, city, county, legal description.

☐ Record title holder of property [for procedure and forms relating to examination of title, see California Legal Forms, Ch. 26, Title Insurance (Matthew Bender)].

☐ Identify person or entity from whom state acquired property, as, for example, from dissolved corporation or from decedent's estate.

☐ Ascertain steps, if any, taken by state with respect to property.

NOTE:
The state may take court action [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1410, 1420-1431] or proceed by notice and publication [Code Civ. Proc. § 1415] to establish that the property has permanently escheated.

☐ If court action has been filed, identify title of court, cause, number, parties, present status of action or date judgment was entered.

☐ If notice and publication procedure has been initiated [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1415], dates of notice and publication.

☐ Ascertain date by which claimant's petition must be filed [see § 252.24[4]].

☐ Ascertain relationship of petitioner to any party named in prior action or notice, if any, and any appearance, or other action, taken by petitioner with respect thereto.

☐ Determine exact nature of petitioner's claim or right to property held by state.

☐ Identify any further material facts necessary to establish prima facie right or title to property in petitioner.

[d] Facts relating to escheated property of decedent [Code Civ. Proc. § 1355]

☐ Ascertain all of facts listed in [a], above.

☐ If probate proceedings were commenced, determine title of court and cause, number, name of executor or administrator, and present status of proceeding or date of entry of decree of distribution.

☐ Determine full name, and place and date of birth, of decedent whose estate, or any part thereof, is claimed.

☐ Ascertain full name of decedent's father and maiden name of his or her mother, places and dates of their respective births, place and date of their marriage, full names of all children, issue of that marriage, with date of birth of each, and place and date of death of all children of that marriage who have died unmarried and without issue.

☐ Determine whether or not decedent was ever married, and if so, where, when, and to whom.

☐ Determine how, where, and when the marriages, if any, were dissolved.

☐ Determine whether or not decedent was ever remarried, and, if so, where, when, and to whom.

☐ Ascertain full names, and dates and places of birth of all lineal descendants, if any, of decedent; dates and places of death of any lineal descendants who died before filing of this petition; and places of residence of all who are now surviving, with degree of relationship of each of the survivors to decedent.

☐ Determine whether or not decedent, if of foreign birth, ever became naturalized citizen of United States and, if so, when, where, and by what court citizenship was conferred.

☐ Determine post office names of cities, towns, or other places, each in its appropriate connection, where records of births, marriages, and deaths enumerated above are preserved, and, if known, title of public official or other person having custody of the records.

☐ Ascertain nationality of each of decedent's heirs.

☐ Determine street address (including zip code) of each of deceden's heirs.

☐ If petitioner is unable to state any of above matters, determine reason for that inability [Code Civ. Proc. § 1355].

NOTE:

For a discussion of the rights of aliens to inherit from the estates of United States citizens, see Estate of Chichernea (1967) 66 Cal. 2d 83, 85-86, 57 Cal. Rptr. 135, 424 P.2d 687 ; Estate of Larkin (1966) 65 Cal. 2d 60, 64, 52 Cal. Rptr. 441, 416 P.2d 473 .

[e] Facts relating to abandoned property transferred to state under Unclaimed Property Law [Code Civ. Proc. § 1541].

☐ Obtain facts requested on form prescribed by State Controller for filing of claim under Code Civ. Proc. § 1540(a) [see § 252.90[1]].

☐ Determine date on which claim was filed with Controller.

☐ Determine date of Controller's decision.

☐ Determine date by which petition must be filed [see § 252.46].

[2] Obtain Documents

[a] Documents Relating to Judgments and Orders

☐ Copy of final judgment in any action commenced by state to obtain possession of claimed property [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1410, 1420-1431] and copies of any other documents showing notice or lack of notice to petitioner.

☐ Copy of notice and publication by Controller in proceedings on escheated property [Code Civ. Proc. § 1415].

☐ Copies of any order or judgment under which property of estate was transferred to state and any other documents from the proceedings showing notice or lack of notice to petitioner of those proceedings.

☐ Copies of any other order or judgment under which property was transferred to state and any other documents from the proceedings showing notice or lack of notice to petitioner of those proceedings.

[b] Documents Relating to Claims

☐ Copy of claim, if any against Controller under Unclaimed Property Law [Code Civ. Proc. § 1540] and Controller's notice of decision on claim.

☐ Copy of notice by Controller of his or her decision on claim [Code Civ. Proc. § 1540(b)].

[c] Documents Evidencing Right to Property

☐ Litigation title report if real property is claimed [see California Legal Forms, Ch. 26, Title

Insurance (Matthew Bender)].

☐ Other documents evidencing petitioner's title or right to property claimed, such as bank account passbook, check, money order, stock certificate, etc.

☐ When property belonged to decedent or when claimant must prove heirship, or absence of other heirs, certified copies of birth, marriage, and death certificates and decrees of adoption, dissolution of marriage, divorce, annulment, etc.

[3] Conduct Preliminary Investigation

☐ Investigation and interviews. If facts or documents obtained indicate that possible cause of action exists, interview witnesses and conduct whatever preliminary investigation facts require.

[4] Make Preliminary Determinations

☐ Determine whether petitioner has capacity to sue.

NOTE:
For statutes governing the capacity of executors, administrators, and trustees to sue without joining persons for whose benefit the action is prosecuted, see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 369 and 1354. For statutes governing the capacity of married person to sue, see Code Civ. Proc. § 370. If petitioner is a competent adult individual, he or she has capacity to sue. If petitioner is a minor, or an insane or incompetent person, he or she lacks capacity to sue and must appear either by a guardian of his or her estate or by a guardian ad litem [Code Civ. Proc. § 372]. If a guardian ad litem is to be appointed [see [8], below], counsel should ascertain his or her identity.

☐ Determine whether cause of action is to recover escheated property [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1300-1476] or to recover abandoned or unclaimed property turned over to state under Unclaimed Property Law [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1500-1582].

NOTE:
Property that has escheated is recovered by filing a petition in the superior court [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1353, 1355]. If the action to recover property is brought before the state has taken action on the escheated property [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1410-1424], it is brought under Code Civ. Proc. § 1353. If the action to recover property is brought after the state has acted [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1410-1424], it is brought under Code Civ. Proc. § 1355.

Claims for property under the Unclaimed Property Law are made against the State Controller on a form prescribed by the Controller [see § 252.80[2] and if the Controller denies the claim or a part of it, a petition is filed in the superior court to establish the claim [Code Civ. Proc. § 1541; see §§ 252.91[1], 252.92].

☐ Determine jurisdiction [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1355, 1541].

☐ Determine county in which to file action [see §§ 252.24[3], [4], 252.46].

[5] Take Deposition to Perpetuate Testimony

☐ Obtain depositions to perpetuate testimony before action, if petitioner is presently unable to bring action or cause it to be brought [Code Civ. Proc. § 2035]. For procedure, forms, and points and authorities, see Ch. 190, Depositions and Discovery and California Points and Authorities, Ch. 80, Discovery (Matthew Bender).

[6] Prepare of Petition

[a] Draft Petition

☐ Petitions contained in this chapter are for recovery of escheated or unclaimed property in possession of state [see §§ 252.91[1], 252.92].

☐ For form, typing, paper, and style requirements of California Rules of Court, see Ch. 123, Complaints and Cross Complaints .

[b] Set Forth Essential Allegations

☐ Set forth essential allegations of petition for recovery of escheated property under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1300-1476 [Code Civ. Proc. § 1353 or 1355], which are:

☐ Capacity or residence of petitioner (generally optional, unless petitioner is suing in representative capacity [Code Civ. Proc. § 1354] or it is necessary to establish petitioner's right to maintain action, but frequently included).

NOTE:
When the petition is filed by the representative of an estate, it must affirmatively appear that there are heirs or legatees who will receive the property or creditors of the deceased owner of the claim whose claims are valid and are not barred and whose claims were in existence prior to the death of the deceased owner of the claim [Code Civ. Proc. § 1354].

☐ If action is not brought in Sacramento County, whether Attorney General maintains office in county in which action is brought and city in which office is located.

☐ Description of property sought to be recovered, including Controller's account number, location of property, and if real property, legal description.

☐ Transaction under which property was deposited with state, including complete description of transferor to state, date of deposit, and if transfer was made pursuant to court proceedings, title of court and cause, number, names of parties, and date of entry of decree or judgment.

☐ If action was commenced by Attorney General [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1410, 1420-1431], title of court and cause, number, date of commencement, names of parties, present status of action, or date of entry of final judgment.

☐ If proceedings were commenced by Controller by notice and publication [Code Civ. Proc. § 1415], dates of notices and publications, present status of proceedings, or date of completion of publication.

☐ If any escheat proceedings have been commenced, statement that petitioner was not party or privy to proceedings or actions [Code Civ. Proc. § 1355].

☐ If money or other property claimed did not come into possession of state in connection with estates of deceased persons, any material facts necessary to establish prima facie right or title in petitioner [Code Civ. Proc. § 1353].

☐ Set forth essential allegations of petition for recovery of escheated property by heirs or estate of party for whom property is held by state [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1353 or 1355], which are:

☐ All of applicable allegations set forth, above.

☐ Full name, and place and date of birth of decedent whose estate, or any part thereof, is claimed.

☐ Full name of decedent's father and maiden name of his or her mother, places and dates of their respective births, place and date of their marriage, full names of all children, issue of marriage, with date of birth of each, and place and date of death of all children of marriage who have died unmarried and without issue.

☐ Statement whether or not decedent was ever married, and if so, where, when, and to whom and:

☐ How, when, and where those marriages, if any, were dissolved.

☐ Whether or not decedent was ever remarried, and, if so, where, when, and to whom.

☐ Full names, and dates and places of birth of all lineal descendants, if any, of decedent; dates and places of death of any lineal descendants who died before filing of this petition; and places of residence of all who are now surviving, with degree of relationship of each survivor to decedent.

☐ Whether any of brothers or sisters of decedent ever married, and, if so, where, when, and to whom.

☐ Full names, and places and dates of birth of all children who are issue of marriage of any such brother or sister of decedent, and date and place of death of all deceased nephews and nieces of decedent.

☐ Whether or not decedent, if of foreign birth, ever became naturalized citizen of United States and, if so, when, where, and by what court citizenship was conferred.

☐ Post office names of cities, towns, or other places, each in its appropriate connection, in which records of births, marriages, and deaths described above, are preserved, and, if known, title of public official or other person having custody of those records.

☐ Nationality of each heir of decedent.

☐ Street address (including zip code) of each heir of decedent.

☐ If petitioner is unable to set forth any of above allegations, reason for inability.

☐ Essential allegations of petition for recovery of abandoned property [Code Civ. Proc. § 1541], which are:

☐ Allegations required in form prescribed by Controller for filing claims for abandoned property [Code Civ. Proc. § 1540; see § 252.80[2]]. See also allegations set forth above, and include as applicable.

☐ Date on which claim was filed with Controller [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1540].

☐ Date of Controller's decision on claim [see § 252.46].

[c] Execute Petition and Verification

☐ Complaint must be signed by at least one attorney of record in attorney's individual name (or by party if not represented). It must also state signer's address and telephone number [Code Civ. Proc. § 128.7(a); see also § 252.91[1], for form for verification under penalty of perjury executed by individual plaintiff; for forms for other kinds of verifications, see Ch. 572, Verification].

☐ Prepare verification for execution by:

☐ Petitioner, if individual. Petitions for recovery of escheated property must be verified [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1353, 1355]. Petitions for recovery of unclaimed property under Code Civ. Proc. § 1541 are not required to be verified, but claims against Controller, which must be filed before filing petition, must be verified by claimant [Code Civ. Proc. § 1540(a)].

☐ By counsel if plaintiff is out of county in which counsel has his or her office or for some reason is unable to verify it or when facts are within attorney's knowledge.

☐ If petitioner is corporation, by officer.

☐ Have verification executed (signed) by person making it.

[d] Prepare Copies

☐ Prepare following required copies:

☐ Original for filing.

☐ One copy for service on Attorney General.

☐ One copy for service on Controller.

☐ Copy for office file.

☐ Copy for client, if desired.

☐ Additional copies as desired.

[7] Prepare Summons

NOTE:
A notice of hearing is used in petitions under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1353 or 1355 instead of a summons [see [11], below], but a summons is used in petitions under Code Civ. Proc. § 1541. The summons should provide that the Controller has 60 days in which to answer [Code Civ. Proc. § 1541].

☐ For forms for summons, see Ch. 518, Service of Summons and Papers . Counsel may also obtain printed summons forms from clerk of appropriate court.

☐ The following copies should be prepared:

☐ One or more originals for filing.

☐ One copy for service on Attorney General.

☐ One copy for service on Controller.

[8] Initiate Ancillary Proceedings on Filing of Complaint

☐ Apply for appointment of guardian ad litem if petitioner is minor or insane or incompetent person [Code Civ. Proc. § 372; for procedure and forms, see Ch. 291, Guardians ad Litem , and for points and authorities, see California Points and Authorities, Ch. 106, Guardianship and Conservatorship (Matthew Bender)].

☐ Draft and record notice of pendency of action [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 405.20, 1353, 1355; for procedure and forms for giving notice, see Ch. 348, Lis Pendens].

[9] Filing

[a] File Petition

☐ Petition in action to recover escheated property must be filed within five years after date of entry of judgment in any proceeding brought by Attorney General under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1410, 1420-1424 or within five years after completion of notice by publication in escheat action taken under provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1415 [Code Civ. Proc. § 1355].

☐ Petition to establish claim to unclaimed property must be filed within 90 days after decision on claim [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1540] by Controller or within 270 days from filing of claim if Controller fails to make decision [Code Civ. Proc. § 1541].

☐ Petitions in both actions are filed in superior court. For procedure, see Ch. 518, Service of Summons and Papers .

[b] File for ancillary proceedings

☐ File appointment of guardian ad litem of petitioner. For procedure and forms, see Ch. 291, Guardians ad Litem , and for points and authorities, see California Points and Authorities, Ch. 106, Guardianship and Conservatorship (Matthew Bender).

☐ Record notice of pendency of action in office of county recorder of county in which real property is situated.

☐ Pay basic recording fee and any additional fees that may apply [see Gov. Code §§ 27361(a), 27361.4, 27361.5].

[10] Cause Issuance of Summons and Service of Summons and Petition

☐ Have summons issued by clerk of court in which petition is filed. For procedure and forms, see Ch. 518, Service of Summons and Papers .

☐ Serve copy of summons and copy of petition on Attorney General and Controller within three years of commencement of action, and make return on summons within 60 days thereafter [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 583.210-583.250; see also Code Civ. Proc. §§ 583.410, 583.420(a)(1) (discretionary dismissal for failure to complete service within two years)]. For procedure and forms, see Ch. 518, Service of Summons .

[11] Prepare and Serve Notice of Hearing

☐ Prepare notice of hearing [see § 252.91[2]] in following number of copies:

☐ Original for filing.

☐ One copy for service on Attorney General.

☐ One copy for service on Controller.

☐ Office copy.

NOTE:
The Attorney General answers the petition on behalf of the Controller and time is required to determine whether or not the claim in the petition will be resisted. If the petition and notice of hearing are served together with a hearing date slightly more than the 20 days allowed by Code Civ. Proc. § 1355, the Attorney General may need additional time to investigate the claim and may request that the matter be taken off calendar or continued. To avoid this procedure, a practice has developed in which the petition is served without a notice of hearing and the notice of hearing is served at a later time when it appears that the matter is ready for the hearing.

☐ Serve notice of hearing and petition on Attorney General and Controller at least 20 days before hearing of petition [Code Civ. Proc. § 1355].

☐ Ascertain from clerk of court in which petition is filed department in which hearing will be held and date on which it can be calendared, allowing sufficient time for service of notice at least 20 days before hearing date.

☐ Have hearing calendared by clerk.

☐ Return proof of service of notice of hearing [see [10], above].

[12] Answer

☐ In action to recover escheated property [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1353, 1355], Attorney General may answer petition and notice of hearing at his or her discretion [Code Civ. Proc. § 1355].

☐ In action to recover unclaimed property, Controller has 60 days within which to respond by answer [Code Civ. Proc. § 1541].

[13] Conduct Pretrial Procedures, Motions, and Preparations for Trial

NOTE:
The pretrial proceedings, motions, and preparations for trial in an action for the recovery of property from the state are the same as in civil actions. Such proceedings on the part of the petitioner may include a response to defendant's demurrer, answer, and motions; petitioner's demurrer to answer, motions, depositions, written interrogatories, and other discovery procedures; and request for settlement conference. For a checklist generally outlining those procedures, see Ch. 460, Products Liability .

[14] Jury Trial

☐ An action for recovery of property under Unclaimed Property Law is tried without jury [Code Civ. Proc. § 1541].

[1] Judgment

☐ Prepare judgment showing total amount allowed to petitioner and Controller's account number to facilitate payment of judgment by Controller [see § 252.91[3]].

[2] Proceedings Other Than Judgment

☐ In actions for recovery of escheated property, proceedings at conclusion of trial are same as in other civil cases.

[3] Appeal

☐ Either party aggrieved by judgment, or both parties if both are aggrieved, may appeal from judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 902]. For discussion, procedure, and forms, see Ch. 40, Appeal: An Overview , et seq..

[4] Enforcement of Judgment

☐ Obtain certified copy of judgment and forward it to State Controller, Bureau of Unclaimed Property, P.O. Box 94250-5873, Sacramento, California 942850, with request that Conroller issue warrant for amount of judgment. The Controller's warrant is returned to claimant and is negotiated as a check.

[b] Use of Form

The form in [a], above, is a petition to be used to secure property in the possession of the state that escheated to the state at the close of probate proceedings in which the petitioner was neither a party nor had notice.

The action must be brought any time within five years after the date of entry of the probate court decree under Prob. Code §§ 7660-7666, and 11900 distributing the property to the state [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1355, 1441; Prob. Code §§ 7660-7666, 11900; see also § 252.81[1][c] (Procedural Checklist)]. If the person is a minor or of unsound mind who was born before expiration of the five-year period, the time limit for filing this petition is extended to one year after the disability ceases [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1430(b), 1441; see Code Civ. Proc. § 1430(a)].

The form in [a], above, can also be used in a proceeding to recover property deposited with the County Treasurer before the time it is forwarded to the State Treasurer [Prob. Code § 11854]. Such an action may be maintained in the superior court of the county in which the property is located. The only difference in the form, aside from the designation of the parties, is that the petitioner prays the court to grant a certificate showing his or her right to the property deposited with the Treasurer.

[c] Contents of Petition

The contents of the form are prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 1355 [see § 252.81[6] (Procedural Checklist)]. If for any reason the petitioner is unable to set forth any of the matters or things required by statute, the petitioner must clearly state the reason for this omission in the petition. The petition must also be verified [Code Civ. Proc. § 1355].

[d] Claims to Real Property

If the petition includes a claim to real property or any interest in real estate, the petitioner must record a notice of lis pendens [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1355; § 252.81[6] (Procedural Checklist)].

[e] Service of Petition

A copy of this form and a notice of hearing [see § 252.91[2]] must be served on the Attorney General and the Controller at least 20 days prior to the date of the hearing and the Attorney General may answer the petition at his or her discretion [Code Civ. Proc. § 1355].

[Verification. See § 252.91[1][a].]

[2] Use of Form

The form in [1], above, is for use by a petitioner who claims possession or title to property in the possession of the state which was transferred to the state other than through probate proceedings. If the petitioner is an heir or successor in interest of an heir of property received by the state from the estate of a decedent, the form in § 252.91[1][a] should be used. For additional comments regarding contents and use of petition, see § 252.91[1].

[3] Escheat Proceedings

If the state has commenced escheat proceedings under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1410 and 1415, the petition is brought under Code Civ. Proc. § 1355 and is subject to the five-year statute of limitations provided in those statutes. If the state has not commenced such proceedings, the petition is brought under Code Civ. Proc. § 1353, which requires that certain procedures set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 1355 be followed [see § 252.91[1][a]].

[4] Service of Petition

A copy of the form and a notice of hearing [see § 252.91[2][a]] must be served on the Attorney General and the Controller at least 20 days prior to the date of the hearing [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1353, 1355].

PART I. SCOPE

21-253 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 253.01

§ 253.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter discusses and contains forms for use in actions involving escrows and the parties to escrow agreements. It contains forms of complaints in interpleader brought by an escrow holder after notice of rescission of the escrow agreement by a party to the escrow [see § 253.60], to determine the status of property held in escrow [see § 253.61], and in a liquor license transfer [see § 253.62].

It also contains forms of notice of motion [see § 253.63] with a supporting declaration [see § 253.64] and order thereon [see § 253.65] when the escrow holder wishes to deposit the property in escrow with the court and be dismissed as a mere stakeholder.

In addition, the forms include complaints for damages and conversion for misappropriation of funds held in escrow [see § 253.66], for specific performance and damages when a party fails to comply with escrow instructions [see § 253.67], and for declaratory relief in the sale of corporate stocks [see § 253.68] and real estate [see § 253.69] when the buyer has failed to perform pursuant to the escrow instructions; and allegations of negligence against the escrow holder for misdelivery of property held in escrow [see § 253.70]. It also contains a form of complaint for actual and treble damages for failure to return funds after an escrow has failed to close [see § 253.71].

§ 253.11 Definitions

[1] "Grant"

The transfer of real or personal property in writing is called a grant, conveyance, or bill of sale, and the term "grant" includes all such instruments, unless it is specially applied to real property transactions [Civ. Code § 1053].

[2] "Escrow"

A grant may be deposited by the grantor with a third person, to be delivered on performance of a condition, and, on delivery by the depositary, it will take effect. While in the possession of the third person, and subject to condition, it is called an "escrow" [Civ. Code § 1057]. For purposes of regulation of escrow agents, "escrow" means any transaction wherein one person, for the purpose of effecting the sale, transfer, encumbering, or leasing of real or personal property to another person, delivers any written instrument, money, evidence of title to real or personal property, or other thing of a value to a third person to be held by the third person until the happening of a specified event or the performance of a prescribed condition, when it is then to be delivered by the third person to a grantee, grantor, promisee, promisor, obligee, obligor, bailee, bailor, or any agent or employee of any of the latter [Fin. Code § 17003(a)].

With regard to Internet escrow companies, "escrow" also includes any transaction in which one person, for the purpose of effecting the sale or transfer of personal property or services to another person, delivers money, or its Internet-authorized equivalent, to a third person to be held by that third person until the happening of a specified event or the performance of a prescribed condition, when it is then to be delivered by that third person to a grantee, grantor, promisee, promisor, obligee, obligor, bailee, bailor, or any agent or employee of the latter [Fin. Code § 17003(b)].

[3] "Escrow Agent"

The term "escrow agent" denotes any person engaged in the business of receiving escrows for deposit or delivery [Fin. Code § 17004]. An escrow agent is also referred to as an "escrow holder."

[4] "Internet Escrow Agent"

An "Internet escrow agent" is any person engaged in the business of receiving escrows for deposit or delivery over the Internet [Fin. Code § 17004.5]. Internet escrow agents are subject to the provisions governing all escrow agents [Fin. Code § 17005.4]. For discussion of Internet and electronic transactions, and legal requirements applicable to Internet escrow agents and others participating in these transactions, see § 253.14.

[5] "Business Location" and "Business Office Location"

"Business location" and "business office location" mean a facility or other place of business where a person engages in the business of receiving an escrow for deposit or delivery, but does not include a customer contact center [Fin. Code § 17005.2].

[6] "Customer Contact Center"

"Customer contact center" means a facility operated by an Internet escrow agent that exists solely for the purpose of responding to customer electronic messages and telephone inquiries; provided, however, that no receipt or disbursements relating to an escrow are made from the facility, and provided further than any documentation or other material generated, transmitted, or otherwise sent from the facility can be reviewed at any time from the business location of the Internet escrow location [Fin. Code § 17005.3]. For discussion of laws and regulations applicable to customer contact centers, see § 253.14[4].

[7] "Within This State"

With regard to escrows, the term "within this state" means any activity of a person relating to receiving escrows for deposit or delivery if the activity [Fin. Code § 17005.5]:

- Originates from inside California and is directed to persons outside the state.
- Originates from outside California and is directed to persons inside the state.
- Originates from inside California and is directed to persons inside the state.
- Leads to the formation of a contract and the offer or acceptance of the contract is directed to a person in California, whether from inside or outside the state and whether the offer was made inside or outside the state.

§ 253.12 Terms Used in Escrow Transactions

A business or real estate transaction goes "into escrow" or an "escrow is opened" when a document, such as a deed or written agreement containing "escrow instructions," is deposited with a third party known as an "escrow agent" or "escrow holder." The transaction is "in escrow" thereafter until the transaction is consummated or the "escrow closes." The transaction may also be referred to as being "escrowed," or it may be said that an "escrow is pending."

PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND

21-253 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 253.13

§ 253.13 Property That May Be Subject of Escrow

Although the concept of escrow was originally developed to apply to real estate transactions and originated in statutes pertaining to deeds by way of grant, the term "grant" as used in Civ. Code §§ 1053 and 1057 is comprehensive enough to cover transactions involving real or personal property, and a single escrow transaction may involve both real and personal property [Bailey v. Security Trust Co. (1919) 179 Cal. 540, 548, 177 P. 444 ; see Fitch v. Bunch (1866) 30 Cal. 208, 212 ; Rockefeller v. Smith (1930) 104 Cal. App. 544, 547, 286 P. 487] . Therefore, the subject of an escrow may be a deed, certificate of stock, money, or a promissory note, and an escrow may also be used in transactions involving leases, mortgages, subscriptions, and exchanges.
