Preface

It is hard to imagine a more fundamental area of real property practice than sales transactions. This fourth edition of California Real Property Sales Transactions, like its predecessors, is a practical guide to the myriad issues facing attorneys for both buyers and sellers of commercial and residential real property. These issues range from basic considerations about how title should be held to complex analysis of hazardous substances liability.

The first edition of this book covered a broad spectrum of topics that have since given rise to their own books, including California Title Insurance Practice (2d ed Cal CEB 1997), Real Property Exchanges (3d ed Cal CEB 2002), California Real Estate Finance Practice: Strategies and Forms (Cal CEB 2000), and California Real Property Remedies and Damages (2d ed Cal CEB 2002).

Subsequent editions added in-depth discussion of special topics such as hazardous wastes and toxic contamination of real property (see chap 7), which are of immense concern to buyers and sellers of real property; disclosure requirements imposed on both brokers and sellers of real property (see chaps 2, 6); basic property insurance principles, types of policies offered, and risk-of-loss issues (see chap 13); and the advantages and disadvantages of using letters of intent (see chap 3).

This fourth edition continues this expansion into more sophisticated practice areas by including two new chapters and three new forms:

- Chapter 5 discusses and analyzes the specialty commercial provisions unique to the purchase and sale of hotel properties. Three new appendixes provide a complete attorney-drafted hotel purchase and sale agreement (see App Q); a hotel operator estoppel certificate (see App R); and an access license and indemnity agreement that allows a prospective buyer to enter the property to perform its due diligence (including conducting inspections and testing) (see App P);
- Chapter 14 examines liability insurance issues pertinent to purchase and sale transactions.

In addition, the chapter on brokers (see chap 2) was thoroughly reorganized and rewritten to focus more closely on ethical and liability issues such as dual agency, disclosure obligations, the broker's role in negotiating contracts, and how brokers may avoid the unlicensed practice of law in handling real property sales. The chapter on residential purchase and sale transactions (see chap 6) was also extensively rewritten. The options chapter (see chap 8) was expanded to cover rights of first refusal, puts, and similar rights. Thoroughly updated and revised, this fourth edition provides the real estate lawyer with even more detailed and comprehensive coverage of all aspects of a purchase and sale transaction.

We are fortunate to have as authors of this book the real property practitioners listed on the Contents page and the first page of each chapter. To all these authors, who generously gave their time in writing their chapters, we express our profound gratitude. In addition, CEB acknowledges two attorneys whose contributions to this book have been invaluable. For many years, C. Darrell Sooy of Tobin & Tobin, San Francisco, acted as the update author, providing essential insight into developments in the law affecting real property sales transactions. Stephen K. Cassidy of Cassidy, Shimko, Dawson & Kawakami, San Francisco, acted as "super consultant" for this fourth edition by reviewing the third edition of this book and providing constructive comments and suggestions for improvement.

We are also indebted to the attorneys who served as authors of previous editions, update authors, and consultants on this book. Their names are listed on the Acknowledgments page.

CEB plans to update this book on a regular basis. We solicit your suggestions and comments to help us keep it accurate and up to date.

CEB Attorney Editors Janis L. Blanchette (Managing Editor), Ann H. Davis, and Bonnie C. Maly, and Legal Editors Ragnhild Fougner, Marty Weis, Philip Weverka, Kenneth Marr, and Carolyn Valley contributed to this fourth edition. Administrative support was provided by Nila Kanzaria and Akanke Peyton. Paul Green handled copy editing and production. Kathryn Te Selle and Robert Burke updated the index. Selected Developments

December 2009 Update

Lawyer's Role:

Attorneys must notify their clients in writing if they do not maintain professional liability insurance. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-410. See §1.12A.

Brokers:

As of December 1, 2010, California real estate brokers acting as mortgage loan originators will be required to obtain a real estate license endorsement and to register on the National Mortgage Licensing System and Registry. Fin C §22100. See §2.7.

In response to the increasing number of loan modification and foreclosure rescue scams in California, AB 260 and SB 94 added a number of new laws affecting mortgage brokers. See §2.8B.

In RC Royal Dev't and Realty Corp. v Standard Pac. Corp. (Sept. 29, 2009, B206894) 2009 Cal App Lexis 1606, the court held that a provision in an agency agreement stating that the commission would be paid at closing merely designated the timing of the payment and the close of escrow was not a condition precedent to payment. See §2.110.

Purchase Agreements:

In Peak-Las Positas Partners v Bollag (2009) 172 CA4th 101, 90 CR3d 775, the court found a seller acted in bad faith by not extending escrow on a land sale contract after the buyer had paid most of the purchase price, invested heavily in project costs, and was diligently trying to complete sale conditions. See §§4.3, 4.149, 6.21, 15.59, 15.97.

A purchase contract that allows the buyer to waive the recording of the final map is void at inception. Sixells, LLC v Cannery Bus. Park (2008) 170 CA4th 648, 88 CR3d 235. See §§4.92, 10.76, 11.24.

In a specific performance action, the seller is not entitled to interest on the sale proceeds if the property was overencumbered, because the entire purchase price would have been used to pay off existing liens. Kassir v Zahabi (2008) 164 CA4th 1352, 80 CR3d 1. See §4.149.

Civil Code §1675 was amended effective January 1, 2009, to limit the applicability of liquidated damages provisions in the sale of certain residential condominium units. See §6.14.

The court in Thompson v Toll Dublin, LLC (2008) 165 CA4th 1360, 81 CR3d 736 held that certain arbitration provisions in preprinted documents were procedurally and substantively unconscionable. See §6.15.

When a seller or broker is making disclosures regarding the condition of the property, whether information is sufficiently material to effect the value or desirability of property is generally a question of fact. Calemine v Samuelson (2009) 171 CA4th 153, 89 CR3d 495. See §§2.127, 6.31, 6.32A.

Under Civil Code §1103.4(c)(3), when making natural hazard disclosures on the statutorily mandated Natural Hazard Disclosure Statement under specified circumstance, the transferor must provide a "Notice of Right to Farm." See §6.49.

The discussions regarding deeds in lieu of foreclosure and short sales have been enhanced. See §§6.106B-6.106C.

The Mortgage Forgiveness Debt Relief Act of 2007 (Pub L 110-142) provided that in a short sale, a discharge of indebtedness income will not be taxed if the property sold is the taxpayer's principal residence, the debt is "qualified principal residence indebtedness," and the debt discharge (up to certain maximum amounts) occurred between January 1, 2007 and January 1, 2013. See §6.106C.

Until January 1, 2014, beneficiaries of deeds of trust must prepare and deliver a short-pay demand statement within 21 days of receiving a short-pay request from an entitled person or a written statement indicating that it has elected not to proceed with the transaction. CC §2943.

Under the Home Equity Sales Contracts Act, "equity purchasers" do not include persons who purchase the property for use as a personal residence, or who acquire title by deed in lieu, trustee's sale, or other statutory sale, by order or judgment of a court, or from a spouse, blood relative, or blood relative's spouse. Spencer v Marshall (2008) 168 CA4th 783, 85 CR3d 752. See §6.107.

The discussion regarding the sale of bank-owned property, commonly known as REO sales, has been enhanced. See §6.110.

Hazardous Waste:

The Supreme Court in Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v U.S. (2009) 556 US __, 173 L Ed 2d 812, 129 S Ct 1870 has held that apportionment among defendants is proper if there is a reasonable basis for determining the contribution of each defendant to a single harm. See §7.10.

Options:

In Patel v Liebermensch (2008) 45 C4th 344, 86 CR3d 366, the California Supreme Court discussed specific performance of a real estate option contract and held that the time of payment may be implied, using the custom and intent of the parties and other terms of the contract. See §§4.4, 6.5, 8.9.

Seller Financing:

Garcia v Roberts (2009) 173 CA4th 900, 93 CR3d 286 illustrates fraudulent use of the lease-option device. See §9.19.

Deeds, Property Descriptions, Easements, Dedications:

The deed's description of the form of title is presumed to reflect the actual ownership interest in the property, rebuttable only by clear and convincing proof. Marriage of Brooks & Robinson (2008) 169 CA4th 176, 184, 86 CR3d 624.

In Lee v Lee (2009) 175 CA4th 1553, 1558, 97 CR3d 516 the court held that a deed altered after execution is not void. See §10.76.

A restriction on resale price contained in prior recorded covenants, conditions, and restrictions (CC&Rs) could be enforced against a purchaser in an affordable housing development, in the absence of duress or fraud. See Alfaro v Community Housing Improvement Sys. & Planning Ass'n (2009) 171 CA4th 1356, 89 CR3d 659. See §§11.7, 11.11, 11.75.

In Gray v McCormick (2009) 167 CA4th 1019, 84 CR3d 777, exclusive easement language in a subdivision's CC&Rs was held enforceable as to the surface of the land, which was the servient tenement. See §11.52.

The easement claimant bears the burden of producing evidence to overcome the inference caused by the omission of an express reservation of a right of access to such property. See Murphy v Burch (2009) 46 C4th 157, 167, 92 CR3d 381. See §11.56.

A court has equitable power to allow a historic road to continue to encroach even though a prescriptive easement of necessity is not cognizable. See Linthicum v Butterfield (2009) 175 CA4th 259, 265, 95 CR3d 538. See §11.57.

Although a grant in fee simple without an express covenant is sufficient to pass the grantor's after-acquired title, a quitclaim deed transfers only the interest that the transferor has at the date of its execution and thus does not transfer an after-acquired title. See Johnson v E-Z Ins. Brokerage, Inc. (2009) 175 CA4th 86, 94, 95 CR3d 782. See §§10.4, 12.10.

For a discussion of appropriative water rights that are appurtenant and run with the land, see Nicoll v Rudnick (2008) 160 CA4th 550, 558, 72 CR3d 879. See §10.44.

Insurance:

In Major v Western Home Ins. Co. (2009) 169 CA4th 1197, 87 CR3d 556, the court describes the type of testimony, which would support a plaintiff's claim for apportioned fees and costs. The court of appeal also listed factors that qualified a claims agent as a managing agent (for purposes of corporate bad faith) and noted that the payment of legal fees and court cost to enforce a claim under the policy may satisfy the requirement of economic loss for recovery of emotional distress damages. See §§13.114-13.115, 13.117.

The court in Exxon Shipping Co. v Baker (2008) __ US __, 171 L Ed 2d 570, 128 S Ct 2605 distinguished the "more rigourous standards than the constitutional limit on punitive damages" that apply to jury awards under maritime law. See §13.118.

In Freedman v State Farm Ins. Co. (2009) 173 CA4th 957, 93 CR3d 296, the appellate court held that even though the "all risk" policy included mold, the damages were not covered, because caused by excluded third party negligence, corrosion, and continuous or repeated seepage or leakage of water. See §§13.72, 13.83, 13.86, 13.131.

If disputed, the termination of the "period of restoration" is a question of fact. See Shaw Mortgage Corp. v Peerless

Ins. Co. (SD Cal 2009) 615 F Supp 2d 1172; R&R Sails, Inc. v Insurance Co. of the State of Pennsylvania (SD Cal 2009) 610 F Supp 2d 1222. See §13.60.

Brehm v 21st Century Ins. Co. (2008) 166 CA4th 1225, 83 CR3d 410 holds that both good faith subjective intent and objectively reasonable conduct are necessary to defeat a bad faith claim on demurrer. However, the court of appeal in Bosetti v U.S. Life Ins. Co. in City of New York (2009) 175 CA4th 1208, 96 CR3d 744 holds that subjective bad faith is both insufficient and unnecessary, because "the covenant of good faith can be breached for objectively unreasonable conduct, regardless of the actor's motive." See §13.112.

Although an insurer may be estopped from relying on the statute of limitations if the insured establishes reasonable reliance, communications after the limitations period expired may not form the basis for estoppel. See Shugerman v Allstate Ins. Co. (CD Cal 2009) 594 F Supp 2d 1131. See §§13.93, 13.95-13.96.

In McCoy v Progressive W. Ins. Co. (2009) 171 CA4th 785, 90 CR3d 74 the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's refusal to instruct that a "genuine dispute" precludes bad faith, because that doctrine is subsumed within the concept of reasonableness. See §13.120.

The supreme court held that the Consumer Legal Remedies Act (CC §§1750-1784) does not apply to life insurance because it is not a "good" or "service" in Fairbanks v Superior Court (2009) 46 C4th 56, 92 CR3d 279. Also see Broberg v The Guardian Life Ins. Co. of Am. (2009) 171 CA4th 541, 79 CR3d 721. See §13.123.

In Delgado v Interins. Exch. of the Auto. Club of S. Cal. (2009) 47 C4th 302, 97 CR3d 298, the supreme court held that an insured's unreasonable belief in the need for self-defense does not turn an assault and battery into an accident. See §14.18.

An "extended reporting period" may not apply to a claim made against the insured during the original policy period. See World Health & Education Foundation v Carolina Cas. Ins. Co. (ND Cal 2009) 612 F Supp 2d 1089. See §14.13, 14.15.

The Consumer Product Safety Commission has received more than 800 complaints from 23 states concerning drywall imported from China since 2006. These complaints of property damage and illness raise numerous insurance issues that have not yet been resolved. See §§13.137-13.141.

Escrow:

The issuance, transfer, or exchange of a security or the making or delivery of an instrument of transfer pursuant to a plan confirmed under Bankruptcy Code, Chapter 11 is exempt from state or local transfer taxes. 11 USC §1146(a). The transfer tax exemption applies only to transfers made pursuant to a confirmed Chapter 11 plan. See Florida Dep't of Revenue v Piccadilly Cafeterias, Inc. (2008) ___ US ___, 171 L Ed 2d 203, 128 S Ct 2326. See §4.134.

The Department of Housing and Urban Development promulgated new rules under the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act designed to require more timely and effective disclosure of settlement costs in order to make the mortgage financing process clearer and less costly to consumers. See 73 Fed Reg 68204 (2008) and §§6.23, 15.95.

§1.1 I. INTRODUCTION

This chapter discusses the various ways the lawyer can be effective in assisting a client throughout the successive stages of a real property purchase and sale transaction. To get the most out of this chapter, think of it as two things: a discussion of practical steps that will be helpful in working through actual transactions, and an introductory discussion of concepts that will serve as a framework on which the later chapters in this book will build. As a further practice aid, the following sections are organized in a manner that should make the outline at the beginning of this chapter useful as a transaction checklist.

II. OVERVIEW OF ATTORNEY'S ROLE

§1.2 A. Services Typically Provided by Attorney

The lawyer's role in a real estate transaction will vary widely, depending on the complexity of the transaction, the real estate experience of the seller and the purchaser, the stage at which the attorney's assistance is sought, and whether the property is commercial or residential. Many sellers and purchasers who are experienced in the acquisition and sale of real property may engage counsel for very limited purposes; for example, to draft a purchase agreement for the seller, or to review a buyer's comments to the seller's purchase agreement and to advise the seller as to acceptable changes, or to review the title condition of the property for the purchaser. If either of the parties is inexperienced, the lawyer may have a more extensive role in the transaction.

The lawyer can assist the client in a variety of ways throughout the various stages of the transaction, including:

- Bringing a focus to the client's needs and objectives;
- Helping formulate and implement presale/prepurchase due diligence;
- Structuring the transaction; and
- Assisting with the marketing process, negotiating and drafting the documents, the closing process, and postclosing follow-up.

In preliminary discussions with the client, the lawyer should make sure that the client understands the full range of services that the lawyer can provide. Although a lawyer may not be involved in every aspect of the transaction, the balance of this chapter describes how the lawyer can assist his or her client at each stage.

Before turning to the specifics of the lawyer's role, it is first necessary to be clear about two aspects of the lawyer's involvement that will be fundamental to the lawyer-client relationship, regardless of the lawyer's role in the transaction: the lawyer's professional responsibility to the client (§§1.3-1.16) and the steps to take in defining the engagement (§§1.17-1.18).

The basic rules of professional responsibility are the same in real property transactions as in other transactions. It is sobering to reflect, however, that the number of claims based on breaches of these rules is statistically higher in real property practice than in most other practice areas. Data collected by the ABA National Legal Malpractice Data Center indicate that lawyers practicing personal injury law, real estate, and family law are the practitioners most likely to have claims brought against them for legal malpractice. Collectively, claims in these areas accounted for nearly 56 percent of all legal malpractice claims brought between 2000 and 2003. Profile of Legal Malpractice Claims: 2004-2007, ABA Standing Committee on Lawyers' Professional Liability (Sept. 2008).

However, the ABA's statistical analysis reflects a decline in recent years in real estate malpractice claims: the absolute number of such filings decreased from 6253 to 4879 during the 1999-2003 survey period. ABA Profile, p 3. The real property lawyer's relative share of malpractice claims has also declined slightly during that period: real estate accounted for 16.46 percent of all malpractice claims in 2003 as compared to 16.97 percent in 1999. Because of the limitations on the collection of these data, it is unclear whether the number of claims at present is disproportionate to the overall time spent by lawyers in this practice area. Nonetheless, the continuing statistical prominence of real estate malpractice claims should serve as an instructive reminder that conscientious attention should be paid to the rules of professional responsibility in real property practice. §1.4 1. Rules of Professional Conduct

The Rules of Professional Conduct of the State Bar of California are formulated by the Board of Governors subject to the approval of the California Supreme Court. Bus & P C §6076. The Rules govern the activities of State Bar members in and outside of California, except to the extent that members lawfully practicing outside of California may be specifically required by the jurisdiction in which they are practicing to follow different rules of professional conduct. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 1-100(D)(1). The Rules also govern the activities of nonmember lawyers while they are performing lawyer functions in this state, but the Rules do not authorize the performance of those functions by nonmembers except as otherwise permitted by law. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 1-100(D)(2). For assistance in researching specific ethics issues, and for up-to-the-minute information on the Rules currently in effect (as well as any amendments or additions being proposed), a convenient source is the State Bar's Ethics Hotline. See Directory for telephone number.

The lawyer's ethical responsibilities to the client in a real property transaction, as in any client matter, are governed by the Rules. Every lawyer should, of course, be generally familiar with all of them. In addition, the areas covered by the Rules and discussed in §§1.5-1.12 merit particular emphasis.

§1.5 a. General Standard of Performance

A general standard of performance is set forth in Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-110. This Rule provides that a member "shall not intentionally, recklessly, or repeatedly fail to perform legal services with competence." Rule 3-110(A). For purposes of the Rule, "competence" in any legal service means "to apply the 1) diligence, 2) learning and skill, and 3) mental, emotional, and physical ability reasonably necessary for the performance of such service." Rule 3-110(B).

§1.6 b. Conflicts and Financial Relationships

Three additional rules address circumstances that often occur in real property transactions. One circumstance arises when the lawyer has an opportunity to invest or otherwise participate financially in a project with the client. See §1.7. Another circumstance arises when a current client's interests potentially or actually conflict with the interests of another client or former client. See §§1.8-1.11. The third circumstance arises when the lawyer is asked to handle money or other property belonging to the client. See §1.12.

§1.7 (1) Conflict With Attorney's Own Interest

Under Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-300, a member is prohibited from entering into a business transaction with a client or knowingly acquiring an ownership, or a possessory, security, or other pecuniary interest adverse to the client unless three rigorous requirements of the rule are satisfied:

- The transaction and its terms are fair and reasonable to the client and are fully disclosed and transmitted in writing to the client in a manner that should reasonably be understood by the client;
- The client is advised in writing that the client may seek the advice of an independent lawyer of the client's choice and is given a reasonable opportunity to seek that advice; and
- The client thereafter consents in writing to the terms of the transaction.

See In re Casey (2008) 4 Cal St Bar Ct Rptr 11237, 2008 Cal Op Lexis Ct 3.

A member is prohibited from directly or indirectly purchasing property at a probate, foreclosure, receiver's, trustee's, or judicial sale in an action or proceeding in which "such member or any lawyer affiliated by reason of personal, business, or professional relationship with that member or with that member's law firm is acting as a lawyer for a party or as executor, receiver, trustee, administrator, guardian, or conservator." Cal Rules of Prof Cond 4-300(A). Under Cal Rules of Prof Cond 4-300(B) a member is prohibited from representing the seller at a probate, foreclosure, receiver's, trustee's, or judicial sale in which the purchaser "is a spouse or relative of the member or of another lawyer in the member's law firm or is an employee of the member or the member's law firm."

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.8 (2) Conflict With Other Interests

California Rules of Professional Conduct 3-310 applies to a variety of circumstances in which the lawyer's existing or contemplated representation of a client may involve an actual or a potential conflict of the client's interest with the interests of other persons or entities with whom the lawyer has or has had a relationship.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.9 (a) Written Disclosure

Under Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-310(B), a member is prohibited from accepting or continuing representation of a client without providing written disclosure to the client in these situations:

- The member has a "legal, business, financial, professional, or personal relationship" with a party or witness in the same matter;
- The member knows or reasonably should know that he or she previously had such a relationship with a party or a witness in the same matter and that such previous relationship would substantially affect the member's representation of the client in the present matter;
- The member has or had such a relationship with another person or entity that the member knows or reasonably should know would be affected substantially by resolution of the matter; or
- The lawyer has or had a "legal, business, financial, or professional interest in the subject matter of the representation."

"Written" means any writing as defined in Evid C §250 (Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-310(A)(3)), which has been expanded to include photocopies, e-mails, and faxes, and any record "thereby created" "regardless of the manner in which the record has been stored."

"Disclosure" means informing the client or former client of "the relevant circumstances and of the actual and reasonably foreseeable adverse consequences" of the conflicting relationship or interest. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-310(A)(1).

Source: Real Property/California Real Property Sales Transactions/1 Lawyer's Role in Real Property Sales/§1.10 (b) Informed Written Consent

§1.10 (b) Informed Written Consent

"Informed written consent" means the client's or former client's "written agreement to the representation following written disclosure." Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-310(A)(2). Under Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-310(C), the informed written consent of each client must be obtained before a member may

- accept representation of more than one client in a matter in which the clients' interests potentially conflict;
- accept or continue representation of more than one client in a matter in which the clients' interests actually conflict; or
- represent a client in one matter and at the same time in a separate matter accept representation of another client who has an interest in the first matter adverse to the first client.

California Rules of Professional Conduct 3-310 also requires each client's informed written consent before a member may

- represent multiple parties to an aggregate settlement of claims of or against the parties (Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-310(D)); or
- accept employment adverse to a client or former client when the member has obtained confidential information material to the employment through his or her representation of the client or former client (Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-310(E)).

Rule 3-310 also prohibits attorneys from accepting compensation for representing a client from someone other than the client unless the Rule's specific requirements are met. See Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-310(F).

§1.11 (c) Risks of Multiple Representation

Particularly in small transactions, both purchaser and seller may want to rely on the same lawyer for advice and even drafting. It is improper under the Rules to represent both parties unless the lawyer has disclosed to each party in writing the lawyer's representation of the adverse interest and obtained their informed written consent. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-310(C)(1). If multiple representation is undertaken and an actual conflict arises, the lawyer cannot continue representing the multiple clients without further informed written consent. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-310(C)(2). If multiple representation is not continued, it is likely that further informed written consent will be required by Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-310(E) (or by principles existing outside the disciplinary context, e.g., Woods v Superior Court (1983) 149 CA3d 931, 197 CR 185) before the lawyer may continue representing any of the clients in the matter. Violation of these principles may render the lawyer civilly liable as well as subject to discipline by the State Bar. See Klemm v Superior Court (1977) 75 CA3d 893, 142 CR 509. Even if it appears desirable for the lawyer to represent more than one party, and written disclosure is made to each party and the informed written consent of each is obtained, problems may still arise over whether the import of the consent was communicated adequately. See, e.g., Hawkins v State Bar (1979) 23 C3d 622, 153 CR 234.

PRACTICE TIP: The safest course is to decline to represent more than one of two or more adverse parties and to suggest that the other party or parties obtain separate counsel. In some situations, the representation of more than one party might not be immediately apparent, such as representing both a limited partnership and its general partner in a transaction in which their interests are not aligned.

§1.12 (3) Handling Client's Property

Detailed requirements that must be observed in handling a client's property are set forth in Cal Rules of Prof Cond 4-100. The Rule requires, among other things, that all client funds be deposited in one or more identifiable trust accounts. The Rule proscribes the commingling of clients' funds and the lawyer's funds except under very limited, temporary circumstances. The Rule also requires prompt client notification of the receipt of the client's funds or other property, sets forth requirements on the identification and safekeeping of client property and the payment or delivery of client funds or other property as requested by the client, and sets forth requirements for the maintenance and retention of records regarding client funds and other property and the rendering of accounts to the client. Under the Rule, the Board of Governors has authority to adopt standards from time to time as to what "records" must be maintained to comply with the Rule. A set of standards was adopted by the Board effective January 1, 1993, and has not been changed.

§1.12A c. Professional Liability Insurance

As of January 1, 2010, an attorney must disclose in writing the absence of professional liability insurance directly to a client at the outset of the attorney-client relationship whenever it is reasonably foreseeable that the total amount of the member's legal representation of the client in the matter will exceed 4 hours. An attorney who fails to provide this notice must inform the client in writing within 30 days of the date that the attorney subsequently knows or should know that he or she no longer has professional liability insurance. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-410.

§1.13 2. Malpractice Law

The law of malpractice imposes two basic duties on the lawyer. One is a general duty of care, i.e., to perform legal services competently and free from negligence. See §1.14. The other is a fiduciary duty that arises from the lawyer-client relationship. See §1.15.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.14 a. Duty of Care

The duty of care is the duty to perform the service for which the lawyer has been retained with "such skill, prudence, and diligence as other members of his profession commonly possess and exercise in the performance of the tasks which they undertake." Prosser, Law of Torts (4th ed. 1971) §30 at 143 as quoted in Lucas v Hamm (1961) 56 Cal 2d 583, 591, 15 CR 821; Budd v Nixen (1971) 6 C3d 195, 98 CR 849; Dawson v Toledano (2003) 109 CA4th 387, 396, 134 CR2d 689. The duty encompasses both a knowledge of law and an obligation of diligent research and informed judgment. Janik v Rudy, Exelrod & Zieff (2004) 119 CA4th 930, 936, 14 CR3d 751. In areas of specialty, of which real property law appears to be one (see, e.g., discussion of specialized practice areas in Committee on Specialization, Results of Survey on Certification of Specialists, 44 SBJ 140 (1969)), there are significant refinements to that general statement of the lawyer's duty. A lawyer who claims to be a specialist will be held to the same standards of skill, prudence, and diligence exercised by other specialists of ordinary skill and capacity specializing in the same field. Wright v Williams (1975) 47 CA3d 802, 810, 121 CR 194. A lawyer who does not purport to be a specialist nevertheless must satisfy specialist standards when practicing in specialized areas. The basic choices open to a nonspecialized lawyer are either to refer the specialty issues to a specialized practitioner or, if the lawyer handles the issues personally, to do so in accordance with the higher standards applicable to specialists in good standing in the same or similar locality and under the same circumstances. See Lewis v State Bar of Cal. (1981) 28 C3d 683, 170 CR 634.

§1.15 b. Fiduciary Duty

Along with the duty of care, the lawyer's other basic duty is to observe the fiduciary obligations arising from the lawyer-client relationship. Stated briefly, these obligations are undivided loyalty and confidentiality. 2 Mallen & Smith, Legal Malpractice, chap 15 (2008 ed). Stated more fully (Day v Rosenthal (1985) 170 CA3d 1125, 1143, 217 CR 89, quoting Betts v Allstate Ins. Co. (1984) 154 CA3d 688, 715, 201 CR 528):

> [I]t is an attorney's duty to "protect his client in every possible way," and it is a violation of that duty for the attorney to "assume a position adverse or antagonistic to his client without the latter's free and intelligent consent given after full knowledge of all the facts and circumstances". The attorney is "precluded from assuming any relation which would prevent him from devoting his entire energies to his client's interest."

This duty extends only to the client and not to a party whose position is actually or potentially adverse to the lawyer's client. B.L.M. v Sabo & Deitsch (1997) 55 CA4th 823, 64 CR2d 335.

C. Defining the Engagement

§1.17 1. Clearly Communicating Scope and Content of Engagement

Regardless of the scope of the engagement, a clear, thorough communication must be conveyed to the client about the scope and content of the lawyer's role in the particular transaction. If other experts will also be involved, this step includes defining each party's role and clarifying what responsibility (if any) the lawyer will have for coordinating the work of other experts or reviewing the results of their work. If it later becomes necessary to assess the lawyer's performance, the essential cornerstone of that evaluation will be a clear understanding of what the lawyer was specifically engaged to do. Communications defining the engagement generally may be written or oral, although in conflict situations covered by the Rules of Professional Conduct discussed above, at least some writing will be required. See §§1.6-1.12. A writing may be either required or highly desirable in connection with fee arrangements. See §§1.19-1.21.

For further discussion of determining the lawyer's scope of representation regarding title insurance matters, see California Title Insurance Practice §§2.1-2.3 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997).

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.18 2. Piecemeal Involvement

The parties in a real property transaction often wish to confine their consultation with a lawyer to questions about particular clauses or to a "quick look" at the contract to identify any "big problems." This desire may partly stem from the abundance of apparently "standard" preprinted transaction forms, or it may simply be due to an understandable desire to minimize transaction costs. Whatever the reason, approach such requests with extreme caution. Frequently, the sophistication of the client and the nature of the issue on which the client has asked advice are such that discrete transactional issues can be addressed. In such situations, it is good practice to advise the client in a writing that identifies the issue or issues involved and then specifically notes the limitations on the lawyer's engagement. Piecemeal involvement that cannot be clearly defined in this manner should be avoided. Otherwise, issues that the lawyer thought were not part of the engagement may appear later, from the client's viewpoint, to be issues the lawyer negligently failed to raise.

D. Defining the Fee

§1.19 1. The Fee Agreement

The initial interview is the best time for fixing the fee, or at least its terms and limits. See, e.g., ABA Model Rules of Prof Cond 1.5(b). A frank discussion of the probable fee and the elements that go into it will help establish a good client relationship and may prevent future misunderstandings. The agreement should be flexible enough to allow for reasonable compensation if the lawyer renders additional services.

With some exceptions, the Business and Professions Code requires that fee agreements be in writing and include particular provisions. Bus & P C §§6147 (contingency fees), 6148 (noncontingent fees).

Failure to comply with the statute renders the fee agreements voidable at the client's option, and the lawyer may recover only a "reasonable fee," not the amount provided for in the noncomplying agreement. Bus & P C §§6147(b), 6148(c). Under §6148, a written contract for lawyers' services is required, with some exceptions, if it is reasonably foreseeable that the total cost to the client will exceed $1000. The statute discusses "total expense to the client," not merely attorney fees. Therefore, other fees or costs such as deposition expenses must be considered. The contract must show the hourly rate or the standard rates, fees, and charges applicable to the matter. The general nature of the legal services and the respective responsibilities of the lawyer and the client in pursuing the matter must also be set out. The State Bar of California has prepared sample contracts, which are available at a nominal charge by writing to the address in the Directory. See also Fee Agreement Forms Manual (2d ed Cal CEB 2007).

It is not enough merely to obtain the client's signature on a retainer agreement. See, e.g., Cal Rules of Prof Cond 4-200, which permits consideration of the client's consent as a factor in determining the fee only if that consent is informed. See also Mazuran v Stefanich (1928) 95 CA 327, 272 P 772, in which the court noted that clients typically rely on the lawyer's draftsmanship, even for the fee agreement.

§1.20 2. Amount of Fee

In arriving at the fee amount, it is proper to consider all the facts and circumstances of the engagement, including these factors (Cal Rules of Prof Cond 4-200):

- The amount of the fee in proportion to the value of the services performed;
- The relative sophistication of the lawyer and the client;
- The novelty and difficulty of the issues and the skill required;
- The likelihood, if not apparent to the client, that acceptance of this particular employment will preclude other employment for the lawyer;
- The amount at stake and the results obtained;
- The time limitations imposed by circumstances or the client;
- The nature and length of the lawyer's relationship with the client;
- The lawyer's experience, reputation, and ability;
- Whether the fee is fixed or contingent;
- The time and labor required; and
- The client's informed consent to the fee arrangement.

See also ABA Model Rules of Prof Cond 1.5(a), 1.5(c). The client's inability to pay or an unreasonable burden on the attorney may also be factors. ABA Model Rules of Prof Cond 6.1, 6.2(b).

Attorneys may wish to inform their clients of the tax effects of legal fees. Reasonable fees, if they are ordinary and necessary, are deductible if they fall within the Internal Revenue Code definitions of expenses for business (IRC §162); expenses for the production of income or for management, conservation, or maintenance of income-producing property (IRC §212(1)-(2)); or expenses in connection with the determination, collection, or refund of any tax (IRC §212(3)). Not deductible, however, are expenses paid or incurred in acquiring, defending, or perfecting title, recovering possession, or developing or improving property. These fees are capital expenditures and are added to the cost of the property. See, e.g., Treas Reg §1.212-1(k).

However, before discussing tax effects, the lawyer should consider the specialist standards that are likely to apply to tax advice (see §1.14) and the scope of the lawyer's engagement (see §1.17). If tax advice is part of the engagement, then advice on the tax effects of the legal fees will be within the scope of the engagement. If tax advice is not part of the engagement, the lawyer should advise the client to consult with a tax specialist to advise the client on any tax issues relating to the transaction or the tax effect of legal fees.

§1.21 3. Equity Interests

Sometimes a client suggests that the lawyer accept an equity interest in the transaction as the fee for performing necessary legal services. Even though the lawyer invests no money in the venture, an equity fee arrangement pits the lawyer's interest as a participant against the duty to have no interest adverse to the client. Practitioners are strongly advised to avoid such an arrangement, which creates a conflict of interest. This arrangement may be unenforceable, and the lawyer may be subject to discipline under Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-300 or 3-310.

Equity compensation arrangements make it more difficult to revise the fee upward if additional services are required. Conversely, if the value of the lawyer's share greatly exceeds the lawyer's work, the client has paid more than a fair price for the legal services and the lawyer has charged what may be held to be an excessive fee. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 4-200; ABA Model Rules of Prof Cond 1.5(a), 1.5(c).

III. IDENTIFYING CLIENT'S NEEDS AND OBJECTIVES

§1.22 A. Needs and Objectives as Important Guideposts

To provide effective legal services in a particular transaction, it is important to develop, through discussions with the client, a thorough understanding of the client's specific needs and objectives. At the outset, knowing the needs and objectives will help both lawyer and client determine the lawyer's role and the nature and scope of legal help required. As the transaction progresses, the lawyer can better identify issues that bear on these needs and objectives and fashion appropriate means to address them.

The nine discussion areas treated in §§1.23-1.57 should, at a minimum, provide a helpful starting point.

B. Areas to be Explored With Client

§1.23 1. Client's Purpose in Selling or Buying the Property

What is the true purpose (or purposes) behind the client's desire to sell or buy the property in question? The lawyer must have a clear understanding of the purpose in order to know what issues and alternatives to consider and how to relate them to the client's goals. And the client must have a clear picture of purpose in order to make informed decisions on these issues and alternatives. In discussions with the client, the lawyer should review and ascertain the relative priorities of the key purposes, which may include the objectives discussed in §§1.24-1.25.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.24 a. Seller's Objectives

The seller's objectives in a transaction may include one or more of the following:

- To lock in gains or losses;
- To convert an illiquid asset into liquid assets;
- If the property is investment property, to "trade" to another property that is larger, smaller, or otherwise more suitable;
- If the property is residential property, to "trade" to another residence in the area that is larger, smaller, or otherwise more suitable; or to sell because of, e.g., a job transfer or changes in family circumstances;
- If the property is the site of the seller's business, to relocate the business to a more suitable site; and
- To raise cash to deal with other financial needs.

Source: Real Property/California Real Property Sales Transactions/1 Lawyer's Role in Real Property Sales/§1.25 b. Purchaser's Objectives

§1.25 b. Purchaser's Objectives

The purchaser's objectives in the transaction may include obtaining the property for one or more of the following:

- For the purchaser's own residential use;
- For the purchaser's own business use;
- For investment;
- For some combination of residential use, business use, and investment; and
- Because of certain features that are important to the purchaser (e.g., the property adjoins property already owned by purchaser; its size, its location, or the availability of water or other utilities make the property especially suited to the purchaser's intended uses; or the property appears to be the most suitable property in the area to achieve the purchaser's need for a tax-deferred exchange).

§1.26 2. Alternatives to Sale

As part of the process of identifying the client's purpose, review with the client any alternatives to sale or purchase that might apply to the client's circumstances. A review of alternatives will be helpful in two respects: First, it will bring appropriate alternatives to the client's attention early, when the client's ability to plan and decide is least constrained. Second, the process of considering the different risks and effects of these alternatives will help test and clarify the client's key objectives. Examples of alternatives are discussed in §§1.27-1.36.

© The Regents of the University of California

a. Seller's Alternatives

§1.27 (1) Leasing Transaction

A lease might be the most appropriate alternative in several circumstances:

- A lease rather than a sale of the property may be of interest to a seller who occupies the property now but does not need to continue to do so, needs some liquidity now, and would prefer to retain a long-term interest in the property.
- A lease of part of the property might be of interest to a seller who needs some liquidity, but also needs to continue to occupy at least some space on the property.
- A seller wanting liquidity but needing to continue to occupy the entire property might consider a sale-leaseback transaction.
- A seller considering a sale of the property in order to move elsewhere but concerned about the permanency of the move might consider leasing the property, at least for the period of uncertainty.
- A seller who wants liquidity and a retained interest in the property but is not interested in direct management of the property might want to consider a ground lease under which the actual leasing and management of the property would be done by the ground lessee.

Leases for terms of up to 99 years on town and city lots (CC §718), and up to 51 years for agricultural or horticultural purposes (CC §717), provide income, which is generally adjusted periodically for increases in rental values or the cost of living. A long-term lease usually provides that taxes, insurance, maintenance, and repairs are to be paid by the tenant, giving the landlord what amounts to an annuity for the leasehold term, the success of which depends on the tenant's ongoing financial ability to perform its obligations. At the end of the term, the landlord (or probably the landlord's heirs) regains possession of the property. If rent is not prepaid, a lease generates little current cash compared with a sale, and rent is taxable as ordinary income. On long-term leases generally, see Ground Lease Practice (2d ed Cal CEB 2009).

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.28 (2) Other Sources of Liquidity

If the seller's essential purpose is to gain liquidity, review with the seller any other potential sources of liquidity that may apply. Generally, the possibilities will fall into two broad categories, either debt sources (see §1.29) or equity sources (see §1.30).

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.29 (a) Debt Sources

One source of liquidity will be money raised by borrowings secured by the property. The key questions will be what amounts of money are realistically available for borrowing against the property, what the cost of such borrowing will be to the client, and whether such borrowing will address the seller's long-term needs or will instead provide some immediate relief but create new, perhaps more difficult, needs in the future.

On secured financing for commercial loans, see California Real Estate Finance Practice: Strategies and Forms (Cal CEB 2000).

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.30 (b) Equity Sources

Money may also be raised as equity. The ways this can be accomplished are many and varied. Most of them also involve costs, risks, and complexities that differ greatly from those of a straightforward sale (and are also beyond the scope of this chapter). The extent to which the lawyer will find it appropriate to review these alternatives with the client will depend not only on the client's purpose but also on the client's level of sophistication and tolerance for risk. Examples of possible equity alternatives:

- Sale of undivided cotenancy interests in the property;
- Syndication of the property (i.e., forming a limited liability company or limited partnership to own the property and selling interests in the new entity);
- Subdividing or converting the property to condominiums and then selling individual parcels or condominium units (see §1.31).

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.31 (3) Development of the Property in Furtherance of Sale

The seller may wish to consider whether development of the property will facilitate a sale of the property. The appropriateness of development will depend largely on the client's purpose and level of sophistication, and whether the investment of time and money is likely to result in an increase in value substantial enough to justify the expense and risk of development. The following are examples of presale development activities that the seller may wish to evaluate:

- Subdivision. Subdividing the property, which may simply involve splitting the property into two or more pieces, or it may involve the creation of two or more lots, parcels, condominium units, or other divisions, pursuant to a more formal subdivision plan; exactly what is done, and how it is done, will vary according to circumstances, including such factors as whether the property initially is unimproved or is already partly or fully improved, and whether and to what extent the client wants (or will be required) to improve (or further improve) the property as part of the subdivision process and the rules of the local jurisdiction;
- Condominium Conversion. In the case of property improved with a building used or usable as a multi-tenant building, whether commercial or residential, converting the building into a commercial (or residential, as the case may be) condominium;
- Improvement to Undeveloped Property. In the case of undeveloped property, fully developing it or, alternatively, making basic infrastructure improvements.
- Altering Existing Improvements. In the case of already-developed property, replacing the existing improvements with new improvements, upgrading existing improvements, increasing the density of the improvements, or changing the nature of the improvements (e.g., from low-rise industrial to mid-rise commercial).

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.32 (4) Other Sources of Relief

If the seller's essential purpose is to raise money to meet pressing financial needs, the lawyer should review the circumstances in detail with the seller so that the exact nature and extent of the seller's difficulties are clearly understood. Depending on the circumstances, it may be appropriate to consider a workout program with the seller's creditors (which may or may not include a sale of the property) or seek bankruptcy protection. If the lawyer is not an experienced bankruptcy practitioner, the lawyer should advise the client to consult with bankruptcy counsel who specialize in debtor representation.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.33 b. Purchaser's Alternatives

The purchaser's alternatives are substantially the same as the seller's, except that they must be viewed from a different perspective. The purchaser's alternatives are discussed in §§1.34-1.36.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.34 (1) Leasing Transaction

If the purchaser is interested in the property for the purchaser's own use, a lease of an initial term of 1 to 5 years (coupled with options to extend, expand, or both, as appropriate) may provide needed flexibility when, e.g.,

- the purchaser does not presently need the entire property, and future needs are uncertain;
- the purchaser needs the entire property now (or in the near future) but expects to outgrow the property in a period of years; or
- for any other reason, the purchaser is unsure of how long the size, type, or location of the property will remain suitable.

On leasing generally, see Retail Leasing: Drafting and Negotiating the Lease (Cal CEB 2007); Office Leasing: Drafting and Negotiating the Lease (Cal CEB 1996); and Ground Lease Practice (2d ed Cal CEB 2009).

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.35 (2) Other Equity Transactions

If the purchaser is interested in the property but would prefer to own only a part of it (or a shared interest in all of it), the purchaser might want to explore some of the alternatives discussed in §§1.27, 1.30-1.31, 1.34-1.35. The user of an office building or commercial space, for example, might want to explore a leasing transaction coupled with equity participation in the overall building project (or some variation involving shared ownership and shared occupancy). Similarly, a potential residential or commercial user who wants to own but has relatively modest space needs might be especially interested in a residential or commercial condominium project.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.36 c. The "Go/No-Go" Alternative

The lawyer and the client also need to consider the alternative of not pursuing any transaction at all. This alternative should be considered in the initial interviews with the client, and it is an option worth reconsidering from time to time as transactional negotiations progress. It may become evident that the client really does not want to sell the property, and this knowledge can help the client avoid the mistake of completing a transaction it did not want or need to conclude. At minimum, this knowledge will influence the negotiation of the transaction. If the client does not need to sell the property or is ambivalent about a sale, the seller's negotiating position with the purchaser will be much stronger and this added leverage will be a key factor in the negotiation of the transaction.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.37 3. Client's Timing Needs

Timing is often a crucial part of the client's overall needs and objectives that the lawyer needs to understand.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.38 a. Ascertaining Client's Needs

The lawyer must first ascertain the client's needs by reviewing the following:

- Whether the client needs the sale to close by a particular time;
- In the case of a seller, whether the client needs to receive the net proceeds of sale by a particular time (this issue will bear not only on the time of closing but also on whether—and if so, in what amount, and for how long—the seller can consider taking back a secured note for part of the purchase price);
- Whether any financing secured by the real property is coming due and whether the client has the ability to renew or find new financing; and
- In the case of a purchaser, whether the client needs a particular amount of time in which to deal with the presale contingencies discussed in §1.70.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.39 b. Degree and Causes of Any Timing Requirements

The lawyer should review the timing needs with the client and, if the needs are urgent, the particular circumstances causing the urgency. It is especially important to fully understand the causes of any timing urgency, because different causes can affect the client's approach to a transaction. For example, the timing may be driven by nontransaction-related needs, and fulfilling those needs may be more important to the client than price or cost; i.e., the client may be prepared to accept an early offer—before fully testing the market—or accept more risk, or both, in order to achieve a quick sale or purchase.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.40 (1) Seller Timing Requirements

Timing may be urgent for the seller when, e.g., (1) the seller is in financial difficulty or needs to raise cash to fund the purchase of another property already in escrow or pay off the current financing on the property which is coming due; (2) when the seller must move elsewhere within a particular time and is not in a position to do so until the property is sold; or (3) if the property is part of seller's business operation, when it is important to the seller for financial accounting purposes to book the sale of the property (and/or a loss from discontinued operations conducted on the property prior to sale) within a particular financial period. Although the time pressure on the seller generally is to shorten the time to close (nourished, often, by the additional general concern that longer time periods increase the chances that the purchaser's ardor for the sale may cool), sometimes the seller needs more time. Examples include a seller who is moving and has not yet purchased or leased property in the new location, and a seller who intends a tax-deferred exchange and needs time to locate a suitable exchange property.

In other instances, timing may be directly linked to price. A common example is when the seller will incur significantly greater income tax cost if the sale is closed in a subsequent year rather than in the current year.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.41 (2) Purchaser Timing Requirements

On the one hand, quick timing may be urgent for a purchaser who needs to occupy the property by a particular deadline. This situation might occur, e.g., in the following cases:

- The purchaser is obligated to vacate the property it now occupies by that date;
- The purchaser's present property is too small and the purchaser's need for the additional room provided by the new property is urgent;
- The purchaser intends to make improvements that are essential to the expansion of the purchaser's business and will lose a market window if the improvements are delayed beyond a particular date; or
- It is necessary to complete this purchase in order to complete a tax-deferred exchange or to accommodate specific tax or financial accounting objectives.

On the other hand, deferred timing may be urgent when, e.g., the purchaser must have time to sell other property to fund this purchase or to satisfy contingencies relating to the condition of the property or to the feasibility of the purchaser's planned use of the property.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.42 4. Net Proceeds Requirements

The lawyer and client should ascertain the net result the client needs to achieve from the sale. Determine the absolute bottom line (see §1.43) and distinguish between the client's needs and the client's wants (see §§1.44-1.46).

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.43 a. The Bottom Line

It is vital to focus on the ultimate net results to the client. The factors of price, selling expenses, closing costs, income tax costs, and the costs of legal, accounting, and other expert services engaged by the client to assist in the transaction must obviously be considered. But other factors that might not initially be as obvious should also be considered, such as:

- The carrying costs of the property during periods of marketing and escrow;
- The cost to the seller of any continuing responsibilities for the property assumed by the seller under the sale agreement (and the cost to the purchaser of responsibilities not so assumed by the seller);
- The potential costs of contingent liabilities arising from any seller warranties or indemnification obligations that survive the closing of the sale (and the potential costs to the purchaser for items that do not survive closing);
- The increase in property taxes resulting from reassessment of the property after the sale;
- The cost of sales taxes if personal property subject to such tax is included in the transaction;
- The cost of any local transit tax or other special taxes that may be triggered by the purchaser's new occupancy, or installation of improvements for occupancy, of the property;
- The effect of inflation if lengthy time periods are involved; and
- The effect of changes in currency exchange rates if foreign currencies are involved.

§1.44 b. Distinguishing Between Wants and Needs

What the client wants and what the client needs may be two different things. The lawyer must ascertain where the client stands on both points and must also help the client place them in a workable perspective.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.45 (1) Wants

Ascertaining the client's wants may not be easy. Sometimes a client will arrive at the lawyer's office with a definite deal in mind that will be unalterable throughout the transaction. More often, the client will be unsure, especially if there are no pressing needs. Perhaps the most difficult situation is when the client is determined to get "top dollar" for the property (in the case of a seller) or to give "bottom dollar" for the property (in the case of a purchaser), but has no clear sense of what that amount might be or how one goes about getting it. Such a client is not likely to be happy until he or she can develop (and become comfortable with) an understanding that the value of property at any particular time is a function of what a buyer, available, willing, and able at that time, is prepared to pay for it. It may be helpful in this situation to review in detail with the client the various techniques, discussed in §§1.104-1.113, for marketing the property.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.46 (2) Needs

When urgent needs exist, they may substantially influence both the client's wants and the deal itself. For example, if the seller's key purpose of the sale is to pay certain debts or to fund another purchase, the nature and amount of the financial need may establish a floor for what the client must net from the sale. In an extreme case, the need may even dictate whether the sale makes sense at all. For instance, if a client with financial troubles must realize an amount that exceeds the likely market value of the property, it may well be that the client should be focusing on either additional or alternative ways to resolve those troubles.

Further, the lawyer should be familiar with the terms of any loans secured by the real estate. There may be limits on the seller's ability to pay off the loan, and in a down market, the loan could be worth more than the real estate (known as being "underwater"), giving the lender a strong voice in any the terms of any proposed transaction.

In a purchaser's case, the purchaser's financial condition or other needs that are competing for the purchaser's available financial resources may set definite limits on both the overall cost that the purchaser can afford to incur and the manner in which that cost will be funded.

§1.47 5. Client's Risk Tolerance: Presale Contingencies

The lawyer should review with the client the various presale contingencies that a prospective purchaser of the property may want to include in the sale agreement. Whether presale contingencies will be accepted by a seller at all will depend on whether there is a "buyer's market" and the buyer has the superior bargaining position. If that is the case, a seller is more likely to agree to more presale contingencies benefiting the purchaser. Some typical contingencies are discussed in §1.70. The lawyer should also determine the extent to which the client will be in a position to accommodate such contingencies, which will enable the lawyer to assess such contingencies and also develop strategies for dealing with them. The possibilities cover wide spectrums for both the seller and the purchaser.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.48 a. Seller's Presale Risk Tolerance

At one extreme, the seller may have high presale risk tolerance (or may have limited bargaining leverage, particularly in a falling market or if a property is "underwater," i.e., the seller owes more on the real estate loan secured by the property than the property is worth), in which case the strategy may be to accept broader contingencies and longer contingency periods in order to obtain a higher price. As the seller's tolerance decreases, the strategy will be to narrow the number and scope of contingencies and shorten contingency periods. At the other extreme, the seller may have no presale risk tolerance (or may have the superior bargaining leverage). In that case, the strategy will be to insist that the prospective purchaser conduct its studies and inspections without execution of an agreement (other than an agreement, if appropriate, covering the inspections themselves) and to make the sale agreement, if an agreement is ultimately reached, a closing document. Alternatively, the parties may enter into a purchase and sale agreement that has no specific purchaser contingencies but only a very short due diligence period within which the purchaser must complete all of its due diligence investigations and inspections and, at the end of the period, decide whether to terminate the agreement or close the transaction.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.49 b. Purchaser's Presale Risk Tolerance

The strategies of the purchaser are much the same as those of the seller: A confident purchaser with high presale risk tolerance may see an opportunity to obtain a better price by offering few contingencies and short time periods. In a down real estate market, there may be opportunities for a purchaser with a higher risk tolerance to acquire property at a "discount" by bidding at a foreclosure sale, purchasing property in default from a foreclosing lender, or purchasing "REO" (real estate owned) property acquired by a lender from a defaulting borrower. However, in such circumstances, the purchaser may have limited opportunity to conduct due diligence with respect to the property and, if purchasing property directly from a lender, may receive no or limited representations concerning the property. On REO property, see §§6.110-6.111.

If a purchaser needs to finance its acquisition, not only should the purchaser determine its own risk tolerance, but also that of its proposed lender. Depending on the current lending climate, a purchaser may be willing to take greater risks regarding certain contingencies or be on a faster time line than its lender.

As the purchaser's risk tolerance decreases, the need for more time to satisfy broader contingencies increases. A purchaser with very low presale risk tolerance may wish to consider an option agreement that may cost the purchaser some option money but will keep open for the duration of the option period the purchaser's complete freedom to decide whether to go through with the purchase. On options, see chap 8.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.50 6. Client's Risk Tolerance: Postsale Contingencies

The lawyer should review with the client the various contingencies that may result in cost or liability to the client after closing and determine the extent to which the client is in a position to assume the risk of those contingencies. Some examples are discussed in §§1.51-1.53.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.51 a. Seller Financing

The lawyer should review whether and to what extent the seller is in a position to provide part or all of the purchase financing. The risks discussed with the seller should include the purchaser's financial ability; the risks of enforcement, including time, expense, and the effects of the one-form-of-action and antideficiency provisions of CCP §§580b, 580d, and 726; the effect of senior liens, if the seller's carryback deed of trust is not in first position; and the effect of a purchaser bankruptcy. Seller financing can increase the attractiveness of the property to a buyer in a weak market.

See chap 9 on seller financing.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.52 b. Condition of Property

The lawyer should review whether and to what extent the client is in a position to assume responsibility for the cost of correcting defects or other deficiencies discovered after closing with respect to the condition of the property. The seller's ability to avoid risk will, of course, be subject to some limitations imposed by law; the attorney should review these limitations thoroughly with the client. Such limitations include the law of fraud, the law of mistake, and the potential responsibility for hazardous waste remediation under environmental laws. Even with these limitations, however, a broad area of risk remains that the seller and the purchaser are free to allocate to one or the other (or to both on a shared basis) in the sale agreement. See §§4.95-4.97, 4.107.

See §§7.61-7.72 on indemnification and the use of release clauses in the context of hazardous waste liability.

§1.53 c. Other Postsale Problems

The lawyer should review whether and to what extent the client is in a position to assume responsibility for other problems discovered after closing. Examples include:

- For property currently producing income, disappointing postclosing operating results; and
- For undeveloped property (or property whose use is to be materially changed), disappointing postclosing results of the development (or change of use) attempted by the purchaser.

§1.54 7. Client's Tax and Financial Accounting Requirements

A sale and purchase of the property will have both tax and financial accounting consequences to both the seller and the purchaser. Both lawyer and client need to clearly understand what those consequences will be. In addition, the lawyer must know whether there are particular tax or accounting objectives that the client wants or needs to achieve. These objectives may be affected by the timing of the transaction (as discussed in §§1.39-1.41), by the structure of the transaction (e.g., as a nontaxable exchange rather than a taxable sale), by allocations made as part of the transaction (e.g., allocations of price as between land and depreciated/depreciable improvements), or by other aspects of the transaction (e.g., significant postsale risks assumed by the seller may, depending on the circumstances, need to be disclosed as contingent liabilities in the seller's financial statements or other documents disclosing information about the seller's financial condition). If the lawyer is not a tax specialist, the client should be advised to consult with a tax specialist about the tax implications of the transaction.

Recognized gain from a taxable disposition of real property that constitutes a capital asset or IRC §1231 property held can differ depending on the characterization of the gain for federal income tax purposes. Recognized gain from the disposition of dealer property or real property not held for more than 1 year is taxed at ordinary income rates.

© The Regents of the University of California

8. Client's Knowledge and Experience Concerning the Property

§1.55 a. Seller's Knowledge and Experience

The lawyer should review with the seller the duration of the seller's ownership of the property and the extent of the seller's information about the property. This review will be important in ascertaining the nature and extent of the disclosures the seller will be in a position to make about the property. It will also be important in assessing whether and to what extent further investigations by the seller will be needed or appropriate. The kinds of investigations that may be involved are discussed more fully in §§1.59-1.69.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.56 b. Purchaser's Knowledge and Experience

The purchaser may be a complete stranger to the property or may already have a fair amount of information about it. Examples of the latter situation are a purchaser who is currently a tenant on the property, a purchaser who owns adjoining property, and even a former owner of the property desiring to have it back again. Familiarity with the property will not lessen the purchaser's need to investigate with care, but it may affect the nature and scope of the investigations that will be needed. Usually, prior knowledge of the property will help sharpen the focus of the purchaser's investigations, thereby increasing both the efficiency and the effectiveness of the effort. On purchaser's investigations, see §§1.70-1.93.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.57 9. Client's Transactional Resources

The lawyer should review with the client the nature and extent of resources already available to the client to assist in selling or purchasing the property. Depending on the nature and scope of the transaction, the client may need expert assistance—in addition to the lawyer's help—from any one or more of a variety of other experts, including accountants, bankers, mortgage brokers, title and escrow officers, appraisers, real property brokers, real estate investment consultants, surveyors, structural engineers, insurance brokers, soils engineers, hydrologists, environmental consultants, architects, contractors, and land use and other political consultants. The client may have internal expert resources and existing relationships with outside experts who can fill many of these needs. The lawyer will need to know who those experts are and in what areas they will be assisting. The lawyer also will need to ascertain whether there are any outside experts the client will require assistance in engaging.

In assisting the client, the lawyer should be aware that many specialist areas are regulated by the state and that practitioners in such regulated fields are not permitted to claim to be specialists unless they have met the state's standards and have been properly licensed. For example, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency's "all appropriate inquiries" rule, which took effect November 1, 2006, requires that, incident to a prospective purchaser's duty to discover the environmental risks relative to the purchase of real property, all Phase I environmental site assessments must be conducted by or under the direct supervision of a qualified environmental professional and establishes specific education and experience requirements for an environmental consultant. 40 CFR §312.10(b). The lawyer should also remember that there is no authority inherently implied in the lawyer-client relationship to engage assistants at the client's expense. Cormac v Murphy (1922) 58 CA 366, 208 P 360. If the lawyer concludes that the client needs assistance from additional experts, the lawyer must be sure that the client agrees to the engagement and is prepared to bear the expense. The lawyer should also consider whether particular experts should be retained by the lawyer (if it is appropriate in the circumstances to protect reports and other work produced by the expert as part of the lawyer's work product) or directly by the client.

Before the property is put on the market for sale, the seller should assemble and review information about the property. This due diligence review will enable the seller to identify potential issues that will affect the marketing, pricing, and negotiation of the purchase agreement. Similarly, the purchaser may find it useful to conduct some preliminary due diligence and planning before the purchase agreement is signed, because the information acquired may affect negotiation of the purchase agreement.

A. Precontract Due Diligence Matters to Review With Seller

§1.59 1. Seller's Objectives

From the seller's standpoint, the objectives of precontract due diligence are the following:

- To determine (assuming the seller has a choice) whether the present time and circumstances are suitable for attempting to sell the property;
- To eliminate any problems with the property that are better addressed before the property is put on the market;
- To comply with any applicable disclosure requirements imposed by federal and state statutes or local ordinances and common law, such as the Natural Hazard Disclosure Statement (CC §§1103-1103.14; see §6.50); commercial earthquake safety disclosures (see §§5.16-5.17); and, after January 1, 2010, certain energy consumption disclosures about nonresidential buildings to a prospective purchaser, a lessee of the entire building, and a lender financing the entire building (Pub Res C §25402.10);
- CC §§1102-1103.14 (residential sales disclosures);
- CC §1102.6b (property subject to Mello-Roos Community Facilities Act (Govt C §§53311-53368.3) lien or a fixed lien assessment securing bonds issued under the Improvement Bond Act of 1915) (Str & H C §§8500-8887) or to a contractual assessment program authorized by CC §§5895.10-5898.32;
- CC §1102.6c (note that California property tax law requires assessor to revalue real property at time of change of ownership, which may result in receipt of supplemental property tax bill);
- CC §§1103-1103.14; Govt C §§8589.3-8589.5, 51183.5 (location of property in special flood hazard area, area of potential flooding, very high fire hazard severity zone, wildland fire area, earthquake fault zone, or seismic hazard zone);
- CC §1102.15 (ordnance location within one mile of property);
- CC §1102.16 (window security bars and any safety release mechanism on those windows);
- CC §1102.17 (adjacent property affected by or zoned for industrial use; see §6.46);
- CC §1368 (common interest developments);
- CC §§2079.7 (environmental hazards), 2079.8 (residential geologic and seismic hazards), 2079.9 (commercial seismic safety), and 2079.10 (energy rating program);
- Govt C §§8875.6-8875.95 (seismic information on certain unreinforced masonry buildings);
- Govt C §§8897.1-8897.2 (residential sales seismic disclosures);
- Health & S C §13113.8 (smoke detectors);
- Health & S C §13113.9 (burglar bars on residential dwellings);
- Health & S C §25359.7 (hazardous substances; see §1.64);
- Pub Res C §2621.9 (earthquake fault zones);
- Pub Res C §2694 (seismic hazard zone);
- Pub Res C §4136 (property in forest fire risk area); and
- Local ordinances covering such matters as energy conservation, termite control, and building permit status (see chaps 4, 6); and
- To anticipate other problems that will need to be disclosed and can best be raised at the beginning of negotiations, when discussion of the problems will do the least harm to the seller's negotiating position in the deal. Presale issues to be reviewed with the seller include the issues discussed in §§1.60-1.69.

In the wake of the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001, the federal government promulgated the following restrictions:

- Executive Order No. 13224 (Sept. 23, 2001) prohibits "any transaction or dealing by United States persons or within the United States in property or interests in property" of suspected terrorists and persons or organizations associated with suspected terrorists. Both sellers and purchasers should check the U.S. Department of Treasury,

Office of Foreign Assets Control, list of "specially designated nationals and blocked persons." For further information, see http://www.treas.gov/offices/enforcement/ofac; and

- Uniting and Strengthening America by Providing Appropriate Tools Required to Intercept and Obstruct Terrorism Act of 2001 (USA Patriot Act) (Pub L 107-56, 115 Stat 272) imposes certain restrictions and reporting requirements on financial transactions to prevent, detect, and prosecute international money laundering and the financing of terrorism.

§1.60 2. Consider Valuation of Property

If the client has retained a real estate broker, the broker should provide market information to assist the client in determining the value of the property and a proposed purchase price for marketing purposes. If there is no real estate broker involved, the lawyer and client should discuss whether there is a need to obtain an appraisal or other expert information on the value of the property. This need can arise in various contexts. The information may simply be needed to provide market information needed to establish a proposed asking price for the property or a formal valuation may be imposed by law (e.g., a court-supervised sale in which the sale price must be within a certain percentage of the property's appraised value) or by contract (e.g., a sale made under a cotenancy agreement or a right of first refusal, requiring that the price be based on the property's appraised value). The more rapidly moving a market is, whether up or down in price, the more difficult it is to determine the value of the property.

§1.61 3. Review Condition of Title

Obtain (or have the client obtain) from a title company and review a current preliminary report on the condition of title to the property and copies of all easements, deeds of trust, and other exceptions shown in the preliminary report. If any title exceptions could create a problem, consider whether to work at removing them before the seller is committed to a sale. See §§4.53-4.57.

If there is an existing loan secured by the property, the lawyer should review the loan documents to ascertain the following:

- Can the loan be assumed by a new purchaser and, if so, under what terms and conditions?
- Can the loan be paid off before the maturity date? If so, is there a prepayment penalty? Other conditions?
- Is there a "lock in" clause that prohibits a prepayment before the maturity date?

Many securitized loans prohibit prepayment of the loan, but allow for a defeasance of the loan. Defeasance involves substituting government-backed securities as collateral for the loan and a release of the real property security to permit a sale of the real property. If there will be a defeasance, the lawyer should contact the lender immediately to discuss the lender's defeasance requirements, because that process will require additional time and cost that the seller and lawyer will need to take into account when negotiating the terms of the purchase agreement.

For discussion of the role of the lawyer in title insurance matters, see California Title Insurance Practice §§2.4-2.35 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997). On preliminary reports, see Title Ins, chap 5.

4. Review Condition of Property

§1.62 a. Existing Information

The lawyer should assist the seller in marshaling all information currently available to the seller on the condition of the property. In this connection, identify any physical problems with the land or improvements that might be better corrected before the sale.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.63 b. Additional Information

The lawyer should review with the seller any other investigations that it may be prudent to conduct before the property is placed on the market. The information gathered (see §1.62) may reveal conditions that should be clarified by further investigation or reveal issues that may affect negotiations.

If there are existing leases, are any of the leases expiring soon? Are any of the tenants in default? Does the seller, as landlord, have significant obligations to any tenants, such as the obligation to build out tenant improvements or pay a tenant improvement allowance?

Many purchasers and their lenders will require that the seller deliver (as conditions to closing of the transaction) tenant estoppel certificates and subordination agreements. Do the leases require tenants to provide estoppels and subordination agreements? Within what time period? Is there a prescribed form of estoppel or subordination agreement that must be used?

If the property is undeveloped but the seller has obtained land use entitlements, when do those entitlements expire? Is the property subject to a development agreement with a governmental agency?

All of the above information will be relevant to contract negotiations.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.64 c. Special Situation: Environmental Conditions

The lawyer should review with the seller both the state of the seller's existing information about the environmental condition of the property and the considerations involved in deciding whether more information is needed.

It should be considered a given that the seller will disclose to the purchaser any known contamination on the property. A statute covers part of the issue: The seller of nonresidential property who knows, or has reasonable cause to believe, that any hazardous substance is on or beneath that property must give the purchaser written notice of that condition. Health & S C §25359.7(a). In view of the likely materiality of this information to the purchaser, the entire issue, whether or not addressed in §25359.7, is probably covered by the principles of fraud or negligent misrepresentation. See also chap 7 on disclosure requirements concerning hazardous wastes and §6.53 on disclosure requirements concerning toxic molds.

A more difficult question for the seller is whether, and to what extent, to pursue information beyond that which the seller already knows. Generally, a seller is not required to inspect the environmental or other condition of a property and disclose the results of such inspection to the purchaser. Contrary to what may be the seller's initial instinct, however, it often makes good sense to further investigate the presence or absence of contaminants and the compliance of the property generally with environmental laws. There are two principle reasons for doing so:

- Additional information should help clarify the nature and extent of any problem (or help confirm the absence of a problem). If contamination is found, the seller may prefer to address the problem before marketing the property. Furthermore, whether or not contamination exists, the information should provide more exact data that will enhance both the quality of the seller's disclosures and the seller's ability to deal with the issues about the environmental condition of the property, which a purchaser will surely raise in the purchase transaction.
- Whether or not contamination is found, further information should help establish a "base line" concerning the present condition of the property, which could be useful to the seller after the property is sold.

See also §§6.47-6.50 on the seller's inspection of property for hazardous substances.

If an environmental audit is conducted, the lawyer should consider engaging an environmental consultant directly to provide a basis for protecting the audit results as lawyer-client privileged information. If the property is contaminated, the privilege may be important to preserving the client's rights in connection with any governmental or private action regarding the contamination. If the property is sold, of course, the privilege ceases to be important, because the seller will have disclosed the results of the investigation to the purchaser.

See chap 6 for a detailed discussion of environmental issues and approaches to addressing these issues in a purchase and sale transaction. See chap 4 for a detailed discussion of disclosures required for residential property. §1.65 5. Review Legal Issues Affecting Property

The lawyer should review any legal issues that might be easier to correct before the outside world becomes aware that the property is to be sold, e.g.,

- The need for an easement (e.g., for water line, access to public roads);
- The need to resolve potential easement claims by others;
- The need to resolve problems or disputes with an existing tenant or to negotiate a lease renewal or new rental rate;
- The need for a reciprocal parking agreement; and
- The need to address an encroachment problem with neighboring property.

For further discussion of legal title issues that should be addressed by the seller early in the sales process, see California Title Insurance Practice §§2.9-2.12 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997).

© The Regents of the University of California

6. Ascertain Whether Consents Needed From Others

§1.66 a. Internal Approvals

The lawyer should review any issues on internal approvals that the seller will need and ascertain whether any co-owners of the property will need to join in the sale. If the seller is an entity, the lawyer should learn what consents of, e.g., members, partners, shareholders, or directors will be needed; what lead times will be required; and whether problems may arise in obtaining the consents. For form consents, see App D (corporation), and App E (limited liability company). On partnerships, see Statement of Partnership Authority, App F.

§1.67 b. External Approvals and Nonobjections

The lawyer should review any issues on obtaining external approvals, e.g., liquor licenses (Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control), radio and television licenses (Federal Communications Commission), approvals under the Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Improvements Act of 1976 (15 USC §18a; 16 CFR §§801.1-803.90), or other governmental approvals or nonobjections; court approvals; approvals from the current lender; consent or waiver by the holder of an option or a right of first refusal; or other approvals or waivers required by material agreements to which the seller is a party.

§1.68 7. Review Matter From Purchaser's Perspective

In advising sellers, the author has found it helpful to review with the seller the various matters that are likely to be on a prospective purchaser's due diligence list. The lawyer should therefore consider reviewing with the client the matters discussed in §1.70. This exercise may bring to mind additional items that the seller may wish to consider before placing the property on the market.

Source: Real Property/California Real Property Sales Transactions/1 Lawyer's Role in Real Property Sales/§1.69 8. Assist in Engaging Outside Experts

§1.69 8. Assist in Engaging Outside Experts

If the seller will retain outside experts, the lawyer should assist the seller as needed to be sure the terms of engagement are in writing and clearly define

- the nature and scope of work to be done; and
- the rate and basis of compensation to be paid.

PRACTICE TIP: The lawyer should also watch for the unduly restrictive liability limitations and overly protective indemnity provisions found in the form contracts of many consultants.

B. Precontract Due Diligence Matters to Review With Purchaser

§1.70 1. Purchaser's Objectives

From the purchaser's standpoint, the objectives of precontract due diligence are to:

- Make an initial determination of the overall suitability of the property for the purchaser's intended needs;
- Identify presale contingencies that the purchaser will want to provide for in the letter of intent and the purchase agreement; and
- Identify any problems that need to be addressed (by elimination before closing, by price adjustment at closing, or by contractual provisions to be performed after closing).

Prepurchase issues to be reviewed with the purchaser are discussed in §§1.71-1.93; see also chap 4.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Real Property Sales Transactions/1 Lawyer's Role in Real Property Sales/§1.71 2. Financing the Purchase

§1.71 2. Financing the Purchase

The lawyer should review with the client any financing from outside sources that the purchaser will need to acquire the property and to accomplish whatever development or other use the purchaser intends to make of the property. Include consideration of the following:

- The amounts needed for all phases of the project;
- The time or times at which various amounts of funding will be needed;
- The likely sources of such funding, which may include the seller, direct borrowing from a third party lender or lenders, indirect third party borrowing through assumption of assumable existing loans secured by the property, equity investors, or proceeds from the sale of other property owned by the purchaser;
- The likely availability of adequate funding from such sources;
- The estimated lead time needed to obtain a commitment for financing and to close the financing portion of the transaction, because this window period will be an essential element of the purchase agreement; and
- The due diligence and underwriting requirements of the lender; thus, if the lender will, for example, require a survey of the property, a Phase I environmental site assessment, a roof inspection report, or estoppel certificates and subordination agreements from the tenants, the purchaser will want to make sure these matters are covered in the purchase agreement.

3. Legal Feasibility of Intended Use

§1.72 a. Necessary Approvals

The lawyer should review the issues and any local, regional, state, or federal agencies that are likely to be involved in obtaining, e.g., development approvals, variances, and permits.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.73 b. Effect of Applicable Laws

The lawyer should review the status and effect of local, regional, state, and federal laws that will bear on the purchaser's intended use and development of the property. Examples of such laws are set forth in §§1.74-1.90.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.74 (1) Local and Regional Laws

Numerous local and regional laws need to be considered in evaluating the property to be acquired, including the impact of the following:

- General plans (see §1.75);
- Specific plans (see §1.76);
- Zoning ordinances (see §1.77);
- Building codes (see §1.78); and
- Subdivision approvals (see §1.79).

For a broad, but not exhaustive, list of additional local and regional laws to be considered, see §1.80.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.75 (a) General Plans

Each local jurisdiction must have a general plan adopted under Govt C §§65300-65403, 65700. The plan's provisions may significantly affect how the property can be used. The general plan must include elements of land use; circulation; housing; conservation; open space; noise; safety relating to risks from seismic activity; slope instability, subsidence, and other geologic hazards; flooding; wildland and urban fires; growth of military readiness activities; and scenic aspects. Govt C §65302. The plan may also include any other elements that, in the judgment of the legislative body, relate to the physical development of the county or city. Govt C §65303. These elements may include, e.g., recreation, transportation, transit, public services and facilities, public building, community design, redevelopment, and historical preservation.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.76 (b) Specific Plans

Jurisdictions may also have specific plans that have been adopted to implement the general plan. Govt C §§65450-65457. Local approval of a proposed subdivision, construction project, or private sale of subdivided lots may be enjoined for inconsistency with the specific or general plan. Govt C §§66473.5, 66474; Save El Toro Ass'n v Days (1977) 74 CA3d 64, 141 CR 282; Woodland Hills Residents Ass'n v City Council (1975) 44 CA3d 825, 118 CR 856. Injunctive relief is also proper when a proposed public works project is inconsistent with the general plan. Friends of "B" Street v City of Hayward (1980) 106 CA3d 988, 165 CR 514.

§1.77 (c) Zoning Ordinances

Local jurisdictions are empowered to enact zoning ordinances regulating land use in their territory by Cal Const art XI, §7, and Govt C §§65800-65918. The zoning ordinances of the jurisdiction in which real property proposed to be sold is located will substantially affect how the property can be used, and the lawyer must have a working knowledge of the local ordinances and the procedures to follow in obtaining zone changes, variances, and conditional use permits. For detailed discussion of zoning, see California Land Use Practice, chaps 4-5 (Cal CEB 2006). For a discussion on making a sale subject to specific zoning, see §4.86.

§1.78 (d) Building Codes

The parties and their lawyers need to be aware of problems that may arise if an existing structure on the property does not comply with local building codes. Most local jurisdictions have adopted, with varying degrees of amendment and addition, the Uniform Building Code. The parties should check local codes as well as the records of the local building department concerning the property.

NOTE: A number of local jurisdictions have adopted or are considering adoption of green building standards and requirements. California has adopted the Green Building Standards Code as Part 11 of Title 24 of the California Code of Regulations. On green building, see California Construction Contracts, Defects, and Litigation, chap 4 (Cal CEB 2008).

The parties may wish to condition the purchase on compliance with local building ordinances. For discussion of making a sale subject to specific building codes, see §§4.87-4.89. On building codes, see California Land Use Practice, chap 11 (Cal CEB 2006).

§1.79 (e) Subdivision Approvals

The lawyer needs to be aware of local requirements for subdivision approvals, because failure to comply with the Subdivision Map Act (see §1.83) and any local ordinances enacted under it will result in disapproval of the subdivision. Govt C §66473. See Anthony v Snyder (2004) 116 CA4th 643, 10 CR3d 505. Approval is precluded unless the local agency finds that the subdivision is consistent with the general plan and any applicable specific plans. Govt C §66473.5; See Muzzy Ranch Co. v Solano County Airport Land Use Comm'n (2008) 164 CA4th 1, 78 CR3d 691. In addition, if a lot split is not authorized, the local building department cannot issue a building permit or other required approval for development of the property. Govt C §66499.34; see Wells Fargo Bank v Town of Woodside (1983) 33 C3d 379, 189 CR 41. For discussion of Subdivision Map Act requirements, see California Subdivision Map Act and the Development Process (2d ed Cal CEB 2001).

§1.80 (f) Miscellaneous Applicable Laws

The lawyer should be aware of the following:

- Applicable moratorium, or similar limitation on, e.g., development, construction, timber removal, or issuance of water or sewer permits;
- Applicable rent control laws (see California Landlord-Tenant Practice, chap 7 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997));
- Applicable nuclear-free-zone legislation;
- Applicable historical landmark laws;
- Other laws relating to the condition of the property (see §§1.62-1.64; see also §§4.77-4.82);
- Local laws requiring receipt of a conditional use permit if there is a change in use of the property; and
- Local laws regulating the location of timber operations (but see Big Creek Lumber Co. v County of Santa Cruz (2006) 38 C4th 1139, 45 CR3d 21, holding that county ordinances restricting permissible locations for timber harvesting operations to specified zones were not preempted by state forestry laws, including the Z'berg-Nejedly Forest Practice Act of 1973 (Pub Res C §§4511-4517) and the California Timberland Productivity Act of 1982 (Govt C §§51100-51119.5)).

§1.81 (2) State Laws

State laws that may affect the purchaser's decisions relating to acquisition of the property include the following:

- Environmental laws (see §1.82);
- The Subdivision Map Act (see §1.83);
- Vested rights decisions (see §1.84); and
- Laws regulating foreign investment and disposition of real property (see §1.85).

In addition, several other state laws need to be considered. See §1.86.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.82 (a) Environmental Laws

A purchaser who intends to develop the property in a manner that will require a government permit or government approval needs to be aware of the California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA) (Pub Res C §§21000-21177), which, among other things, requires preparation of an environmental impact report for any project requiring government approval that may have a significant effect on the environment (Pub Res C §21100). Regulations on enforcement of CEQA are published in 14 Cal Code Regs §§15000-15387. On environmental impact reports, see §4.97. For full discussion of the environmental review process under CEQA, see Practice Under the California Environmental Quality Act (2d ed Cal CEB 2008).

Regardless of the purchaser's plans for the property, the purchaser must consider the effect of laws providing for the investigation and remediation of environmental contamination and for restrictions on use of property that is contaminated or is located in a contamination area. Such laws include the following:

- California's "superfund" law, the Carpenter-Presley-Tanner Hazardous Substance Account Act (Health & S C §§25300-25395.32);
- The Porter-Cologne Water Quality Control Act (Wat C §§13000-14076);
- The Hazardous Waste Control Law (Health & S C §§25100-25257.1);
- The Air Resources Law (Health & S C §§39000-44474);
- Laws relating to air pollution control districts (Health & S C §§40000-41357);
- Several other statutes collected in Division 20 of the Health and Safety Code; and
- The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency's standards and procedures for "all appropriate inquiries" (40 CFR pt 312; see also §1.57).

If there are environmental issues affecting the property, the purchaser should also investigate whether environmental insurance is available. See Nanney & Falbo, Negotiation of Environmental Insurance: Policy Clarifications That Insurers May Give, 26 Cal Real Prop J 30 (Winter 2008). For more detailed discussion, see chap 7.

If the property to be sold is part of a larger parcel or if the purchaser intends to divide the property after the sale, the lawyers for both parties must be aware that the Subdivision Map Act (Govt C §§66410-66499.37) gives each local governing entity jurisdiction over subdivisions in its area (Govt C §66411; see Kalway v City of Berkeley (2007) 151 CA4th 827, 60 CR3d 477) and establishes an approval procedure that must be followed whenever land is subdivided (Govt C §§66451-66472.1; see, e.g., Anthony v Snyder (2004) 116 CA4th 643, 10 CR3d 505). As defined in Govt C §66424, subdivision > means the division, by any subdivider, of any unit or units of improved or unimproved land, or any portion thereof, shown on the latest equalized county assessment roll as a unit or as contiguous units, for the purpose of sale, lease or financing, whether immediate or future.

See also Black Hills Invs., Inc. v Albertson's, Inc. (2007) 146 CA4th 883, 893, 53 CR3d 263 (contracts for sale of two parcels were void; contracts violated Subdivision Map Act because they did not expressly condition sale on approval and filing of parcel map). For discussion of Subdivision Map Act requirements, see California Subdivision Map Act and the Development Process (2d ed Cal CEB 2001).

§1.84 (c) Laws on Vested Rights

The lawyers for the parties, especially the purchaser, must be sure to counsel clients on the uncertainty that they will be able to obtain a desired zoning change or even that present zoning will continue. Without specific statutory assurances, a vested right to develop land in a particular way arises only when substantial expenses have been incurred in reliance on a validly issued building permit. See Avco Community Developers, Inc. v South Coast Regional Comm'n (1976) 17 C3d 785, 132 CR 386. Statutory assurances are available through development agreements with the local jurisdiction (Govt C §§65864-65869.5), which are enforceable by all parties to the agreement regardless of a change in any applicable general or specific plan, zoning, subdivision, or building regulation adopted by the local jurisdiction. Govt C §65865.4.

Alternatively, developers can obtain a "vesting tentative map" under Govt C §§66498.1-66498.9. An approved vesting tentative map confers a vested right to proceed with development in substantial compliance with the ordinances, policies, and standards in effect at the time the local jurisdiction has found the subdivision application to be complete. Govt C §§66498.1(b), 66474.2. For further discussion of zoning and vested rights, see §§4.85-4.89. On acquiring vested rights, see California Subdivision Map Act and the Development Process, chap 7 (2d ed Cal CEB 2001) and California Land Use Practice, chap 16 (Cal CEB 2006).

§1.85 (d) Laws Regulating Foreign Investment and Disposition

With certain exceptions, California requires that 3-1/3 percent of the purchase price be withheld from a seller; however, the seller, on certification, may elect to have a sum withheld equivalent to the amount of actual gain recognized in the transaction. Rev & T C §18662. For discussion of withholding requirements, see §1.89.

§1.86 (e) Miscellaneous Applicable Laws

Other state laws and regulatory agencies that may affect a real property sales transaction include the following:

- The Alquist-Priolo Earthquake Fault Zoning Act (Pub Res C §§2621-2630), which requires a special disclosure form for certain properties in earthquake fault areas (see §§4.81, 6.48-6.50).
- The Seismic Hazards Mapping Act (Pub Res C §§2690-2699.6), which requires disclosure for properties located in a seismic hazard zone as designated on maps prepared by the state geologist. See §6.52.
- The California Coastal Act (Pub Res C §§30000-30900), which imposes detailed requirements for approval of any development in the protected coastal zone. Regulations adopted by the Coastal Commission to implement the Coastal Act are set forth in 14 Cal Code Regs §§13001-13666.4. For more detail, see §4.88.
- The Williamson Act (Govt C §§51200-51297.4), which provides property tax incentives for owners of agricultural land who agree with local jurisdictions to maintain agricultural or related uses of land. State reimbursements to counties for these incentives were eliminated by line item veto in the California State budget for fiscal year 2009-2010. For a website on the state budget, see Directory. Existing contracts remain valid, but lawyers and their clients may wish to assess the probability of the renewal of existing contracts and/or new contracts in the current budgetary environment. See §4.93; California Land Use Practice §5.38 (Cal CEB 2006).
- The Cortese-Knox-Hertzberg Local Government Reorganization Act of 2000 (Govt C §§56000-57550), which governs annexation of land through the Local Agency Formation Commission (LAFCO). See §4.91.
- The Metropolitan Transportation Commission Act in the San Francisco Bay Area (Govt C §§66500-66537).
- The San Francisco Bay Conservation and Development Commission (BCDC) (Govt C §§66600-66694).
- The Lake Tahoe Regional Planning Compact (Govt C §§66800-66801).
- · The California Tahoe Regional Planning Agency (Govt C §§67000-67130).
- Any applicable moratorium or similar limitation on development or construction.
- Any applicable historical landmark laws.
- Other laws relating to the condition of the property. See §§1.62-1.64; see also §§4.72-4.82.

§1.87 (3) Federal Laws

Federal laws that may affect the purchaser's decisions relating to acquisition of the property include:

- Environmental laws (see §1.88); and
- Laws regulating foreign investment and disposition of real property (see §1.89).

In addition, several other federal laws need to be considered. See §1.90.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.88 (a) Environmental Laws

The Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980, widely known by its acronym "CERCLA" (42 USC §§9601-9675), and the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act of 1976 (RCRA) as amended (42 USC §§6901-6992k) are the primary federal statutes dealing with toxic contamination. CERCLA generally addresses releases of hazardous substances and the procedures, costs, and responsibilities for remediating or removing such substances. RCRA regulates the generation, storage, treatment, transportation, and disposal of hazardous wastes. In most real property transactions, CERCLA has the greater impact. See §7.8.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.89 (b) Laws Regulating Foreign Investment and Disposition

If the client is a non-United States person or entity, review with the client any United States laws (and advise the client to obtain guidance on any laws of the client's home country) that may affect the present purchase or sales transaction. The following are the principal United States laws likely to be pertinent:

- The International Investment and Trade in Service Survey Act of 1976, which requires the periodic filing of reports with the United States Department of Commerce (22 USC §§3101-3108, with implementing regulations at 15 CFR pt 806).
- The Agricultural Foreign Investment Disclosure Act of 1978, which requires the periodic filing of reports on ownership of United States agricultural lands (7 USC §§3501-3508, with implementing regulations at 7 CFR pt 781).
- The Exon-Florio Amendment to the Defense Production Act of 1950, which authorizes the President to investigate and prohibit transactions that "could result in foreign control of any person engaged in interstate commerce" (50 USC App §2170).
- The Foreign Investment in Real Property Tax Act of 1980 (FIRPTA), which applies special federal income tax rules to "foreign persons," as defined in the statute, and also imposes on the purchaser an obligation to withhold 10 percent of the purchase price paid to a seller who is a "foreign person" (IRC §§897, 1445, and regulations promulgated under them). Note that in every transaction in which the seller is not, or claims not to be, a "foreign person," the purchaser should obtain from the seller an affidavit of nonforeign status to assure the purchaser of an exemption under IRC §1445 if the seller's claimed nonforeign status proves to be incorrect.
- Other tax reporting requirements affecting foreign-owned persons, e.g., IRC §§6038A, 6038C; Rev & T C §19135 (information returns on foreign and foreign-owned corporations).

For laws regulating foreign investors in United States real estate, see Smith, Foreign Investment in United States Real Estate (1992).

§1.90 (c) Miscellaneous Applicable Laws

Other federal controls include the following:

- The National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (NEPA) (42 USC §§4321-4370f);
- The Clean Air Act (42 USC §§7401-7671q);
- The Noise Control Act of 1972 (42 USC §§4901-4918);
- The Noise Pollution and Abatement Act of 1970 (42 USC §§7641-7642);
- The Flood Disaster Protection Act (42 USC §§4001-4129);
- The Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972 (16 USC §§1451-1466);
- The Clean Water Act (33 USC §§1251-1387), which prohibits discharging certain materials into "navigable waters"; and
- Title 42 USC §5320, which requires certain historic preservation measures for urban development action grants and may also affect some development projects.

§1.91 4. Economic Feasibility of Intended Use

The lawyer should review with the purchaser the various factors that the purchaser will need to consider to assess the economic feasibility of buying the property and putting it to the purchaser's intended use. Items to consider include the following:

- The need for an appraisal of the property (this may be a lender requirement);
- Cost, cash flow, and return-on-investment analyses;
- A tax analysis;
- For currently operating property, a review of the status of current tenancies and historical financial operating results;
- Identification of any additional costs that may be triggered by the change in ownership resulting from the purchase and/or by any postpurchase construction, including property tax reassessment, any required upgrading or renovating for seismic compliance, fire safety, handicapped access, etc.;
- Identification of the amounts and terms of any bonds or assessments that are liens on the property;
- If the purchaser's intended use includes leasing the property to others or developing the property and reselling to others, any need for marketing studies;
- Identification of additional costs of purchasing the property and achieving the purchaser's intended use, including design, development, and construction costs; costs of obtaining financing; costs of servicing financing; costs of complying with legal requirements discussed in §§1.72-1.90; and costs of outside experts assisting the purchaser; and
- Identification of any use restrictions applicable to the property. If the property is part of a common interest community, review the governing documents of the community and the governing association, including any covenants, conditions, and restrictions and association articles of incorporation, bylaws, and rules and regulations. On common interest communities, see Advising California Common Interest Communities (Cal CEB 2003) and Forming California Common Interest Developments (Cal CEB 2004).

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.92 5. Consents Needed From Others

The lawyer should review with the purchaser the need for any internal or external consents, as discussed in §§1.66-1.67 with respect to the seller. For a purchaser, the lawyer should be sure to review both the approvals needed to complete the purchase and those needed to accomplish whatever development, construction, or other work that the purchaser will need to perform to put the property to its intended use.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.93 6. Assist in Engaging Outside Experts

The lawyer should cover the same matters with the purchaser as are discussed in §1.69 with respect to the seller.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.94 V. STRUCTURING THE TRANSACTION

Early in the process (for a seller, before actively marketing the property; for a purchaser, before making an offer), attention should be paid to the basic structures needed to accomplish the client's needs and objectives.

© The Regents of the University of California

A. Structuring Seller/Purchaser Entities

§1.95 1. Advising the Seller

If all or any part of the property to be sold is owned by a corporation, limited liability company, partnership, or other entity, the lawyer should review the following considerations with the seller:

- If there are multiple entities, will any combinations, split-offs, or other transactions among entities be needed before or as part of the consummation of a sale?
- Are there any adjustments among the interests of the entity owners that must be accomplished before or as part of the consummation of a sale?
- Do the governing documents of the entity contain any special requirements (e.g., approvals by a required percentage of entity owners) or consequences (e.g., required cash distributions or a mandatory termination of the entity on sale) in the event of a sale? Are any amendments to these governing documents prior to a sale necessary or desirable?
- Should the entity (or entities) be dissolved after the sale? Dissolution will involve analyzing both the tax and nontax effects of the sale, both to the entity (or entities) and to its owners.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.96 2. Advising the Purchaser

The lawyer should review the following considerations with the purchaser:

- If the purchaser is an individual (or group of individuals), the advantages and disadvantages of acquiring the property through an existing or newly formed entity or as cotenants. Tenancy-in-common (TIC) transactions are often used by real estate investors to acquire fractional interests in commercial properties. If structured properly, a TIC investor may defer capital gains using an IRC §1031 exchange. See §1.101. On cotenancies, see §§4.21-4.23; Jacobson, Tenancy-In-Common: An Old Dog Learns New Tricks, 25 Cal Real Prop J 29 (Winter 2007); Gutierrez, Drafting and Reviewing Residential Cotenancy Ownership Agreements, Part 1, 20 CEB Real Prop L Rep 153 (July 1997). For a form tenancy-in-common agreement, see App O.
- The basic choices of entity: subchapter C corporation, subchapter S corporation, general partnership, limited partnership, limited liability company, limited liability partnership. Factors to consider include these:
- Limited liability;
- Tax consequences to the entity owners (with respect to start-up development, loss operations, profitable operations, and later sale or other disposition of the property);
- Management and control; and
- The entity's suitability as a vehicle for allocating a variety of desired economic interests among the various entity owners.
- If the acquisition, ownership, development, operation, and management of the property is to be divided among two or more entities (whether owned by the same group or different groups of investors), the choice of entity in each case and the choice of contractual arrangements between the owner entity and the other entities (e.g., ground lease, operating, or management agreement).
- If the purchaser is an existing entity, whether there is any advantage to acquiring the property through a newly formed entity (either a subsidiary of the existing entity or a new sibling entity, i.e., owned all or mostly by the same persons who own the existing entity).
- If the purchaser will be obtaining debt financing from an institutional or conduit lender, because such lenders generally require the borrowing entity to be a single-purpose entity (SPE), the purchaser and the lawyer should ascertain the lender's entity requirements. For a discussion of SPEs, see California Real Estate Finance Practice: Strategies and Forms, chap 10 (Cal CEB 2000).

Most transfers will result in a reappraisal of the property. Generally, when there is a change in ownership of real property, a new base-year value for the purpose of assessing property taxes is entered on the tax roll. See Rev & T C §50. A "change in ownership," however, does not include a transfer between legal entities "that results solely in a change in the method of holding title to the real property and in which proportional ownership interests of the transferors and transferees, whether represented by stock, partnership interest, or otherwise, in each and every piece of real property transferred, remain the same after the transfer." Rev & T C §62(a)(2). See App A for a discussion of which transfers result in reappraisal. For a discussion of choice of entity issues, see §§4.22-4.28; Organizing Corporations in California §§1.22-1.128 (3d ed Cal CEB 2001); Advising California Partnerships §§1.10-1.23 (3d ed Cal CEB 1999); Forming and Operating California Limited Liability Companies (2d ed Cal CEB 2007).

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.97 B. Structuring the Transaction Itself

The lawyer should review with the client the basic transaction structure that will be most consistent with the client's needs and objectives. This review will enable the client to indicate the desired structure in marketing the property, and it will serve as a reference point in ensuing negotiations. Factors to consider include the matters discussed in §§1.98-1.103.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.98 1. Choice of Form

The lawyer should review the various forms the transaction might take. The basic choices are:

- An option agreement (see chap 8);
- An agreement of sale with contingencies (see chaps 4, 6); or
- If appropriate in the circumstances,
- a lease with option to purchase; or
- a transaction tailored to a change in the form of the property, as discussed in §1.31.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.99 2. Liquidated Damages

The lawyer should review the enforceability of liquidated damages clauses and compare it with rules on nonrefundability of option consideration. See §§4.142, 6.10-6.13, 8.75.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.100 3. Warranties

The lawyer should review strategies for dealing with warranties:

- Title warranties (see §4.111);
- Property condition warranties (see §4.112); and
- "As is" clauses (see §4.120), as limited by law, e.g.:
- The laws of fraud and mistake (see California Real Property Remedies and Damages, chaps 3, 11 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002));
- The further limitations under applicable California disclosure statutes (see §§6.9, 6.37); and
- Potential responsibility for contamination cleanup under environmental laws (see §1.64).

The lawyer should consider whether there should be any limit on (1) the number and scope of warranties that survive closing or (2) the aggregate amount of, and the time periods for asserting, postclosing warranty claims.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.101 4. Tax-Deferred Exchange

The lawyer should always raise with the client the issue of whether a tax-deferred exchange is desirable. Specifically, the Internal Revenue Code provides that neither gain nor loss will be recognized when real property held for productive use in a trade or business or for investment is exchanged solely for like-kind property. IRC §1031(a). Although IRC §1031 generally permits the avoidance of recognition of gain or loss on the exchange of like-kind property, a taxpayer will recognize gain in part when money or other non-like-kind property is also received in the exchange. In other words, a taxpayer who receives money or other non-like-kind property in addition to the like-kind property recognizes gain (but not loss) to the extent of the sum of money or the fair market value of the non-like-kind property received.

The conventional purchase of property with a higher market value generally affords the advantage of greater depreciation. In a tax-deferred exchange, however, that advantage is lost because under IRC §1031(d) the tax basis for the old property determines the basis for the replacement property.

In addition, strict time limits apply with respect to the identification and transfer of exchange property:

- The property to be received in the exchange must be identified within 45 days after the date on which the seller transfers the property to be relinquished in the exchange; or
- The property to be acquired by the taxpayer is received after the earlier of either (1) 180 days after the date on which the seller transfers the property to be relinquished in the exchange; or (2) the due date for the seller's income tax return for the taxable year in which seller's property is sold. IRC §1031(a)(3).

If a seller desires the flexibility to use §1031, a provision should be added to the purchase and sale agreement as discussed in §4.165.

For a comprehensive treatment of the requirements and tax consequences of a tax-deferred exchange, see Real Property Exchanges (3d ed Cal CEB 2002). See also, Kennedy & Baird, Recent Developments in 1031 Exchanges, 25 Cal Real Prop J 41 (Summer 2007).

§1.102 5. Letter of Intent

The lawyer should consider whether the nature of the transaction is such that a letter of intent should be considered. Some lawyers see no advantage of a letter of intent to a seller, because even when carefully drafted and intended to be a nonbinding outline of the proposed transaction, it may create at least the obligation to negotiate in good faith (a subjective concept whose nuances may be viewed very differently by seller and purchaser). If negotiations break down in disputed circumstances, this obligation can become a cloud on the seller's title. Accordingly, some lawyers believe that a seller should consider a letter of intent only when the purchaser is highly desirable, has a high level of interest, and refuses to negotiate without a letter of intent. Others believe that nonbinding letters of intent are useful tools for both sellers and purchasers. For a detailed discussion of the advantages and risks of using letters of intent, see chap 3.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.103 6. Client's Ability to be Flexible

The lawyer should review the extent to which (if at all) the client is in a position to depart from the structure most favorable to him or her. For a particular seller, for example, an "as is" transaction in the form of an option may be the only form of transaction the seller is willing to consider. Another seller may prefer one form of transaction but may be in a position (or forced by circumstances) to consider other forms as well. It is important for both the lawyer and the client to have a clear sense at the outset of where the client's individual situation lies on this spectrum of possibilities.

VI. STRUCTURING AND COORDINATING THE MARKETING PROCESS

§1.104 A. Marketing Considerations to Review With Seller

Occasionally, a seller will have little choice in how the property is to be marketed. If the seller is an estate or is a bankrupt with a trustee appointed, for example, it may be necessary to conduct a probate sale or a trustee's sale according to the applicable rules governing such sales. Even in cases of estates and bankruptcies, however, a choice may be available; in most other situations there clearly will be a choice. The essential choices are discussed in §§1.105-1.108.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.105 1. Brokered or Nonbrokered Sale

The issue of whether to have a brokered or a nonbrokered sale turns on the extent to which a broker's involvement will (1) provide more market exposure than the seller could otherwise achieve and (2) relieve a seller desiring relief from the logistical chore of marketing the property. See §§2.23-2.24.

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Negotiated Sale or Sale Involving Bidding

§1.106 a. Estate

For an estate, the issue in choosing the type of sale is whether it appears necessary (e.g., because of disputes among beneficiaries) or desirable (because of the potential for overbidding for this particular property) to conduct the sale as a probate sale in which an accepted offer would be subject to bidding in open court.

NOTE: If a probate sale is contemplated and a broker will be engaged, be aware that (1) the broker's commissions will be subject to the court's approval (including possible adjustment) and (2) complex rules govern the payment of brokerage commissions if there is a broker-assisted successful overbidder (see Prob C §§10161-10168). Make sure the broker agreement is subject to those approvals and rules.

Even when no estate is involved, there may nevertheless be circumstances in which it is desirable to consider structuring the sale as one involving bidding. It especially makes sense to consider such a structure during times of rising prices and high purchaser demand. During "buyers' markets," bidding structures are rarely seen as they require multiple parties to be interested simultaneously in purchasing a property and allow less flexibility in contract structure.

NOTE: The secrets to a successful private bidding sale are to (1) spell out in detail, in advance and in writing, the rules for each step of the process, and (2) adhere faithfully to those rules. Moreover, if a bidding sale is contemplated and a broker will be engaged, be sure that such a sale is provided for in the brokerage agreement. Some brokers do not want to be involved in bidding sales, and it is only fair to bring that issue to the table at the outset.

§1.108 3. Anticipating Multiple Offers

It is important for the seller to decide, first, what rules to follow if multiple offers are made, and then to make sure to clearly communicate those rules to any broker involved and to each prospective purchaser. Most important is to establish the rule that the seller reserves the right to consider (or not consider) any offer submitted at all times before the time an offer is ultimately accepted. If the seller decides to make a counterproposal to a particular offer, the seller should also decide whether the counterproposal is to be subject to a continuing right by the seller to consider other offers (i.e., the seller can continue to negotiate with others, and there is to be no deal with this offeror unless and until the final terms are accepted by the seller). If such a condition is to apply, it should be clearly stated in the counterproposal. This condition is extremely important in maintaining control of the marketing process and avoiding the nightmare of being bound by contract to more than one purchaser.

§1.109 B. Marketing Considerations to Review With Purchaser

Although the seller's decisions, discussed in §§1.105-1.108, may limit the available choices, the purchaser may still have some options. See discussion in §§1.110-1.113.

§1.110 1. Separate Broker

The issue for the purchaser turns on the extent to which the purchaser needs to engage a broker to help in locating a suitable property.

NOTE: If the purchaser decides to engage a broker, make sure the broker agreement is clear about the circumstances in which a commission is earned and about who will pay it. Remember, too, that the seller is not a party to the agreement between the purchaser and the purchaser's broker. If the understanding is that the compensation of the purchaser's broker is to be paid by the seller, an agreement by the seller to pay that compensation must be included in the purchase contract. See chap 2.

2. Negotiated Sale Versus Bidding Sale

§1.111 a. Estate

The purchaser's objective will usually be to avoid open-court bidding. If the seller is determined to have a bidding sale, then the purchaser has no choice. To test the seller's intent, however, the purchaser should explore alternatives with the seller (e.g., a private sale under the independent administration rules, or distribution of the property to, and then sale by, the estate beneficiaries).

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.112 b. Nonestate

The purchaser's position in a nonestate context is purely a matter of bargaining power. If the purchaser has bargaining leverage, the seller may be dissuaded from having a private auction. If the seller is determined to have an auction, the purchaser's essential choices are to play (perhaps with some say in what the rules are to be) or to move on to another property.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.113 3. Anticipating Multiple Offers

The purchaser's objective is essentially the reverse of the seller's: A purchaser who submits an offer wants to have the seller negotiate exclusively with the purchaser until a sale is either made or abandoned. As with bidding, the purchaser's position essentially depends on the purchaser's bargaining power. A purchaser who feels in a strong bargaining position should look at two alternative approaches:

- In a major transaction, the lawyer should consider proposing a letter of intent that includes an exclusive negotiation provision. See chap 3 on letters of intent.
- In a transaction in which a letter of intent is inappropriate, the lawyer should consider including a provision in the offer that the offer is subject to the requirement of exclusive negotiation. This approach does not bind the seller (who can reject the offer or reply with a counterproposal that rejects the exclusive negotiation condition), but it makes the purchaser's position clear and, if the seller is sufficiently motivated to deal with the purchaser, may produce the intended result (i.e., a period during which negotiations with the purchaser are exclusive).

§1.114 VII. STRUCTURING AND COORDINATING THE NEGOTIATION AND DOCUMENTATION PROCESS

Depending on the client's needs and objectives, the lawyer can play a variety of roles in the planning, organization, and management of the marketing and negotiation process. These roles include the following:

- Organizing the negotiating team (see §1.115);
- Conducting negotiations (see §§1.116-1.118);
- Generating the transactional documents (see §§1.119-1.120);
- Rendering legal opinions (see §§1.121-1.130); and
- Structuring and coordinating the closing process (see §§1.131-1.139).

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.115 A. Organizing the Negotiating Team

Depending on the circumstances, the "team" may consist of just the lawyer and the client, or it may consist of any number of additional people, including employees of the client and various outside experts retained to assist the client in the transaction. The key requirements are:

- The team should include all persons needed to achieve the result desired by the client;
- There should be clear lines of communication and job definitions among the members of the team;
- One member (or as few members as possible) should be designated to handle communications relating to negotiations with any prospective other party to the transaction; and
- A team leader should be designated to be responsible for coordinating the work of the team.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.116 B. Conducting Negotiations

The appropriate role for the lawyer will depend on the circumstances and can range from advising the client from the background to playing the lead role in the negotiation process.

On negotiating title insurance with the title company, see California Title Insurance Practice §§2.22-2.27 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997).

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.117 1. Other Counsel

When one or more other parties to the transaction are represented by counsel, the Rules of Professional Conduct require that the lawyer communicate with that counsel unless that counsel consents to direct communications with the client. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 2-100. If a material party to the transaction is not represented by counsel, consider the advisability of requesting that that party obtain counsel. The enforceability of the agreements reached in negotiations may be affected by whether that party needs counsel's assistance to fully understand the provisions of the agreements.

Source: Real Property/California Real Property Sales Transactions/1 Lawyer's Role in Real Property Sales/§1.118 2. Attorney's Role in Negotiation Process

§1.118 2. Attorney's Role in Negotiation Process

Regardless of the nature and scope of the lawyer's role, it should encompass the same essential contributions to the process. The lawyer should

- keep testing the progress of negotiations against the client's needs and objectives;
- assist the client in recognizing issues that affect those needs and objectives;
- assist the client in finding workable solutions to disputed issues; and
- regardless of how emotional the other parties to the process may become, maintain a composed manner and a firm and objective grasp on where the negotiations stand in order to guide the client to a resolution of issues (or an informed and well-reasoned conclusion that certain issues cannot be resolved).

C. Generating Transactional Documents

§1.119 1. Drafting and Adapting Forms

In drafting or revising the transactional documents, the lawyer bears a heavy responsibility for producing documents that achieve the parties' wishes. The various forms available can be valuable drafting tools, but caution must be exercised when using them. Forms that lawyers frequently use include the following:

- Printed forms with blanks to be filled in, such as the California Association of Realtors® (CAR) exclusive authorization and right-to-sell form (see §2.57) and residential purchase agreement and receipt for deposit (see chap 6);
- Forms in form books (and books such as this one), which can be adapted for a particular transaction; and
- Form documents retained in the lawyer's files or computer files from previous transactions.

The hazard in using ready-made forms instead of tailoring instruments to each situation is that they may be used uncritically and with insufficient attention to the comments that accompany them or to the reasons for using particular language. No ready-made form is a substitute for a document designed for the particular client's situation. Nor can any form, however perfect it may have been when originally designed, remain equally dependable in the face of changing times and laws. When computer-generated or electronically generated forms are used, the hazard is magnified by the ease with which lengthy documents can be stored and then retrieved and modified for use in subsequent transactions. The lawyer must remember to recheck the entire form to make sure that a provision that does not fit the present transaction is deleted or changed as appropriate.

Nevertheless, there are sound legal and economic reasons for using forms in drafting instruments. Even if it is substantially supplemented and revised, a good form can provide a basis for the drafting process, especially when a new problem arises. Each of the basic types of form is a kind of checklist, protecting against inadvertent omission of necessary or desirable clauses. Moreover, a well-worded form offers protection against ambiguities that may result from drafting under a deadline. On the economic side, struggling anew with legal problems, organization, and special phrasing is a waste of productive time when these issues have already been carefully worked out.

Forms should be used with respect for their constructive uses but with awareness of their dangers. The forms should be chosen carefully and reviewed critically; annotations should be filed with office forms; drafting should be done only after reading the comments and annotations that accompany the forms; and the forms should be adapted to precisely meet the needs of the new situation.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.120 2. Standard Forms; Boilerplate

The lawyer should keep in mind (and make sure the client understands) that there are no such things as "standard forms" and "boilerplate." All provisions of a real property contract, whether typed or preprinted, are appropriate subjects for negotiation, and changes to forms should be made whenever needed to tailor the form to the terms of an acceptable deal.

PRACTICE TIP: Because changes in laws may alter the effect of form provisions, and because publishers have their own biases and may revise their forms over time, the lawyer should not assume that a form's provisions are "reasonable" or represent a compromise of the buyer's and seller's perspectives. Indeed, given the increasing ease with which documents may be manipulated electronically, the lawyer should not assume that a form that seems familiar in fact contains the language that he or she expects.

D. Rendering Legal Opinions

§1.121 1. Contexts in Which Legal Opinions Arise

The lawyer handling a real property sales or purchase transaction may encounter legal opinions in a variety of contexts. For example:

- The client may request a written opinion on one or more aspects of the transaction.
- If a government agency is in some way involved in the transaction (or in the development or other use of the property after the transaction closes), the agency may request a written opinion on one or more issues relating to its involvement.
- If the purchaser is borrowing or raising equity money to fund the purchase, the lender or investors may request a written opinion on a variety of issues bearing on the validity and enforceability of the funding documents (and sometimes certain aspects of the underlying transaction).
- If the purchaser is obtaining debt financing, the lender will typically require the lawyer for the purchaser-borrower to provide a legal opinion as to the borrowing entity and the enforceability of the loan documents.
- Opinions on title matters may be requested by the purchaser, but it is customary for the purchaser to rely on title insurance for assurances as to title matters.

NOTE: The lawyer may be on either end of the request (i.e., the one who is asked for an opinion or the one asking the other party's lawyer for an opinion) or may be involved in both activities.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.122 2. How to Know an Opinion When You See One

Lawyers should be aware that their written response to a request for their views or state of knowledge on a particular point might well be treated as a legal opinion. Although it will usually be clear that an opinion is intended, the nature of the request or the context in which it is made may make it difficult to know what is intended and how the matter should be handled.

For a compilation of reports on opinion letters (some superseded by the 2005 Report cited at the end of this section), see Executive Committees of the Business Law and the Real Property Law Sections of the California State Bar, The 2002 California Opinion Reports, State Bar of California (2002) (cited as California Opinion Reports (2002)); the publication is available to State Bar members on the State Bar website, which is listed in the Directory. The California Opinion Reports (2002) contains reports and addendums for and from 1989-2002. Also, some useful rules of thumb are suggested by the discussion in the Legal Opinions in Business Transactions (2005 Report), The Corporations Committee of the Business Law Section of the State Bar of California, superseding the 1989 Report.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.123 a. Watch for Writings in Legal Opinion Contexts

The term "opinion" is variously defined, depending on the context in which it is used. See the 2002 California Opinion Reports, State Bar of California (2002), and the Legal Opinions in Business Transactions (2005 Report), The Corporations Committee of the Business Law Section of the State Bar of California; the publication is available to State Bar members on the State Bar website, which is listed in the Directory. See also §1.122.

In a general context, the 2005 Report cites two dictionary definitions of "opinion" at Part II, n25:

- A Webster's definition: "a formal expression by an expert (as a professional authority) of his thought upon or judgment or advice concerning a matter."
- A Black's Law Dictionary definition: "[a] written document in which an attorney provides his or her understanding of the law as applied to assumed facts."

In the context of a business transaction, the 2005 Report defines a legal opinion as a formal writing prepared by an opinion giver, expressing an informed understanding of the legal principles generally applicable to a specific transaction or to a particular aspect of such a transaction.

As a rule of thumb, these definitions suggest that if a lawyer is asked to prepare any writing in any of the circumstances addressed in these definitions, the lawyer should assume that the writing will be construed as a legal opinion and that the degree of care required for such an opinion applies to that writing.

§1.124 b. Watch for "Factual," "Reasoned," and "Comfort" Opinions

The Legal Opinions in Business Transactions (2005 Report), The Corporations Committee of the Business Law Section of the State Bar of California, Part IV(B)(1) (available to State Bar members on the State Bar website, which is listed in the Directory) contains excellent discussions of the difficulties arising in three common gray areas:

- When the requested writing covers matters that are essentially factual in nature (sometimes referred to as "factual opinions");
- When the request is for legal conclusions on matters in which there is some recognized legal uncertainty (so-called reasoned opinions); and
- When the request is for written confirmation that the lawyer knows of no misstatements or omissions in the client's representations (so-called comfort opinions).

Because of the difficulties these opinions present, the lawyer should generally avoid them whenever possible and, when they cannot be avoided, take particular care to qualify them in the manner discussed in the 2005 Report. See also §1.123.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.125 c. Avoid Unnecessary Opinions

Legal opinions are laborious to produce. Although much of the factual due diligence and legal research required to prepare a proper legal opinion will have already been performed in order to handle the transaction properly, an opinion may involve extra due diligence or research, especially on any matters that—without the need to render an opinion on them—would not have been within the scope of the lawyer's engagement. Additional time will also be involved in crafting the opinion and, no doubt, in negotiating the scope and precise wording of the opinion with counsel on the other side. All this extra activity will add to the client's transaction cost, and yet the technical nature of the matters covered in the opinion will often make it difficult for the client to understand how the opinion (and the process of preparing it) add any value to the transaction. It is therefore a useful (and obvious) rule of thumb to avoid giving or requesting unnecessary legal opinions. In many contexts, it may be appropriate to have no legal opinions at all. In other situations, legal opinions on certain matters may be necessary, but the scope of the matters covered (and thus the amount of effort involved in preparing the opinion) can be narrowed to only those matters that are clearly necessary.

§1.126 3. Legal Standards Applicable to Opinions

Although there is currently no developed law or Bar canon specifically setting standards for the preparation of legal opinions, the lawyer should expect that the professional responsibilities discussed in §§1.3-1.12 apply to the preparation and issuance of legal opinions with the same force as to the lawyer's other legal services. See Legal Opinions in Business Transactions (2005 Report), The Corporations Committee of the Business Law Section of the State Bar of California; the publication is available to State Bar members on the State Bar website, which is listed in the Directory (see also §1.123).

§1.127 4. Essential Resources Available to the Attorney

A substantial body of helpful literature exists to assist lawyers in understanding

- the function of legal opinions;
- how to word them; and
- how to structure the research and factual due diligence required to render such opinions properly.

Some of the best resources on legal opinions are listed in the selected bibliography in Appendix C to the Legal Opinions in Business Transactions (2005 Report), The Corporations Committee of the Business Law Section of the State Bar of California; the publication is available to State Bar members on the State Bar website, which is listed in the Directory (see also §1.123). A useful addition to this literature is Glazer & FitzGibbon on Legal Opinions (2d ed 2001), which includes substantial discussion of third party legal opinions, copies of the Bar reports discussed in §1.129, several other non-California Bar reports, and an exhaustive annotated bibliography. §1.128 a. State Bar Reports

The presently available literature includes several State Bar reports (and an addendum to one of them) that are indispensable resources. Although they overlap somewhat in their discussions, overall they complement each other and all of the reports should be on every lawyer's bookshelf. Collectively, they deal extensively with the nature and purpose of legal opinions, the elements to be included in legal opinions (in many cases with examples of specific language used by various practitioners), and discussions of many of the more difficult opinion areas. They also include references to virtually all relevant case law and literature available on the subject of legal opinions at the time the reports were written. The reports, which are collected in a volume titled 2002 California Opinion Reports (2002) that is available for purchase from the State Bar (see Directory), include (see also §1.123):

- 1995 California Real Property Opinion Report, 13 Cal Real Prop J 1 (Fall 1995) and First Supplement to 1995 California Real Property Opinion Report, 16 Cal Real Prop J 15 (1998).
- Report on the Adaptation of the Legal Opinion Accord of the Section of Business Law of the American Bar Association for Real Estate Secured Transactions, Section of Business Law of the American Bar Association and the American College of Real Estate Lawyers (1993), 29 ABA Real Prop, Prob & Tr J 569 (Fall 1994). This report was revised and republished as A Report of the Joint ABA/ACREL Committee Comprising: The American Bar Association, Section of Real Property, Probate and Trust Law, Committee on Legal Opinions in Real Estate Transactions, Subcommittee on Creation of an Inclusive Opinion, and the American College of Real Estate Lawyers Attorneys' Opinion Committee.
- Former 1989 Report of the Committee on Corporations of the Business Law Section of the State Bar of California Regarding Legal Opinions in Business Transactions (Aug. 31, 1989), revising and updating the earlier report published by the committee in 1982.
- Legal Opinions in California Real Estate Transactions, A Joint Committee Report by the Real Property Law Section of the State Bar of California and the Real Property Section of the Los Angeles County Bar Association, 42 Bus L 1139 (1987), plus Legal Opinions in California Real Estate Transactions: An Addendum (Mar. 14, 1990).
- Report of the Uniform Commercial Code Committee Regarding Legal Opinions in Personal Property Secured Transactions, Business Law Section of the State Bar of California (Dec. 1988), revising and updating an earlier report published on December 31, 1986.

The 1995 report, published in the California Real Property Journal (see first bullet above), comments on the ABA Report and the ABA ACREL Report referred to in §1.130:

- Report of a Joint Committee of the Real Property Section of the State Bar of California and The Real Property Section of the Los Angeles County Bar Association on the Legal Opinion Reports of (I) The ABA Section of Business Law, and (II) The ABA Section of Real Property, Probate and Trust Law and The American College of Real Estate Lawyers (Fall 1995) (referred to in this book for brevity as the 1995 California Report).

NOTE: The Business Law Section has also published the Report on Third-Party Remedies Opinions (Sept. 2004). This Report updates portions of the Business Law Section's 1989 Report as well as the Section's 1992 Report on the Third-Party Legal Opinion Report of the ABA Section of Business Law. This 2004 Report, in conjunction with Legal Opinions in Business Transactions (2005 Report), The Corporations Committee of the Business Law Section of the State Bar of California, superseding the 1989 Report, provides further guidance to California lawyers about practices regarding remedies opinions. §1.130 c. Accord

The ABA Report (see §1.129) contains an accord (in the ABA Report this is called the "Accord"; among practitioners, it is often referred to as the "Silverado Accord," after an ABA Business Law Section conference held early in the deliberation process in Silverado, California). The Accord sets forth specific position statements on a number of definitions, procedures, and limitations. If the Accord is adopted in an opinion, then these definitions, procedures, and limitations govern the opinion and need not be separately stated. The California Response (see §1.129) contains a helpful discussion of the background of the ABA Report and discusses several respects in which the positions stated in the Accord are at odds with the approaches taken in the California Bar's former 1989 Report (see §1.128).

The ABA ACREL Report (see §1.129) adapts the ABA Report for use in real estate secured financing transactions, and the 1995 California Report provides a California response and commentary to the ABA Report and the ABA ACREL Report. (see §1.128).

Both the ABA Report and the California Response emphasize that use of the Accord is consensual (i.e., a matter of agreement between the parties to a particular transaction) and that neither the ABA Report nor the Accord itself is to be used as a frame of reference for evaluating or interpreting opinions delivered in the past or those delivered in the future that do not adopt the Accord.

The Accord generally has not been fully embraced in California legal opinions given in real estate secured transactions. To take advantage of the refinements in the California Report, the ABA ACREL Report, and the 1995 California Report, it is necessary to incorporate all or portions of those reports in an opinion that adopts the Accord. The nature and structure of the reports and the Accord make such incorporation a rather unwieldy process, and most opinions rendered today still set forth the relevant definitions and qualifications in full in the body of the opinion letter. Nevertheless, the reports are a valuable and necessary resource for California attorneys who render legal opinions, and they are an important component of the available body of literature on legal opinions.

For an in-depth discussion of the ABA-ACREL opinion used in secured loan transactions, see California Real Estate Finance Practice: Strategies and Forms, chap 8 (Cal CEB 2000). For a more up-to-date report, see Report on Third-Party Remedies Opinions, State Bar of California Business Law Section (Sept. 2004) and the 2005 Report (see §§1.123, 1.129).

VIII. STRUCTURING AND COORDINATING THE CLOSING PROCESS

A. Organizing and Coordinating Escrow

§1.131 1. Understanding the Process

The lawyer should make sure that the client understands how the escrow process works (experienced real property sellers or purchasers generally do understand, but occasional sellers or purchasers often do not). In discussing the escrow process with the client, the lawyer should

- review the differences between escrow functions and title insurance functions;
- make sure the client understands that once money (and/or documents) have been deposited in escrow, even if under clear instructions entitling the client to have these items returned on demand, an escrow holder concerned about its position if a dispute arises may refuse to return them unless all parties to the escrow consent, and will usually file an interpleader action so that a court resolves the dispute (CCP §§386-386.6).

On escrows generally, see chap 15.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.132 2. Written Escrow Instructions; Follow-Up

The lawyer should make sure that all facets of the escrow holder's activities are covered by clear and complete written escrow instructions and then follow up the instructions with whatever further communications—written and verbal—are needed to ensure that the instructions were correctly understood and are being correctly carried out. The lawyer should not assume that the escrow instructions, as clear as they may be, will be strictly followed. Escrow offices are busy places, and misunderstandings and errors do occur. Escrow should be organized so that either the lawyer or another responsible member of the "team" will review all steps of the closing process with the escrow holder, check all closing documents deposited in escrow, and actively monitor the closing to ensure that the instructions are, in fact, implemented as written. See chap 15.

On written title instructions and for form title instructions, see California Title Insurance Practice §§10.13-10.18 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997).

§1.133 B. Advising Client on Title Insurance

Title insurance is a normal part of most real property purchase transactions (and in the author's view, should be regarded by both purchaser and seller as a necessary element of any such transaction). Yet it is amazing how many clients (and often their expert advisers) do not fully understand how title insurance works and the choices that are available among title insurance products. The points the lawyer should review with the client include the matters discussed in §§1.134-1.139. See also California Title Insurance Practice §§2.1-2.39 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997).

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.134 1. Choice of Basic Policy Forms

The lawyer should review the basic coverages and exclusions from coverage provided by the standard California Land Title Association (CLTA) owner's policy form, the CLTA/ALTA Homeowner's Policy, and the extended coverage American Land Title Association (ALTA) owner's policy form. As part of this review, note the key coverage differences between the two forms.

In 2006, ALTA adopted new and updated versions of the owners and loan title insurance policies. For a summary of the changes, see Cruz, Hammann & Rogers, The New 2006 ALTA Policies: The Industry Listens!, 24 Cal Real Prop J 3 (Fall 2006). For in-depth discussion and comparison of ALTA and CLTA policies, including the 2006 policies, see California Title Insurance Practice, chap 6 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997). On owner's policies, see Title Ins, chap 7.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.135 2. Addressing Particular Problems

The lawyer should review any particular problems areas that may be involved in the transaction, including, e.g., the following:

- Matters not covered by the type of policy (whether CLTA or ALTA) that the client proposes to obtain (see California Title Insurance Practice, chaps 6-7 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997).
- Techniques for dealing with problems that cannot easily be removed before closing (e.g., disputed mechanics' liens).
- If applicable, confirmation of coverage against the special (and unrecorded) state and federal estate tax liens.
- Review of what it means to "insure around" an exception (i.e., the policy insures against loss arising from the exception, but the exception itself remains a burden on the title to the property). This arrangement may be acceptable in some cases but not in others. For further discussion of insuring around particular problems, see Title Ins §§4.28, 7.84-7.85.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.136 3. Policy Endorsements

If applicable, the lawyer should review the function and availability of policy endorsements and consider whether any particular problems can be met by appropriate endorsements. On owner's endorsements, see California Title Insurance Practice §§7.64-7.103 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997). On lender's endorsements, see Title Ins §§8.50-8.118.

For a chart of available CLTA endorsements, see Title Ins, App I.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.137 4. Wording of Policy Provisions

The lawyer should recognize that the particular wording of policy exceptions and additional title endorsements can be negotiated with the title company. Refinements in wording can be important in making sure that the exception clearly and correctly identifies only the particular title condition and does not imply other problems or conditions. Changes in wording may also be appropriate if the title insurer is willing to enlarge the coverage of the policy by narrowing the scope of the exception. An example of the latter situation is a modification of the usual exception for supplemental tax liens to have the exception apply only to supplemental taxes arising after closing (thereby extending the coverage of the policy to any liens arising from changes of ownership or construction occurring prior to closing). Wording changes to correct or clarify the policy are also appropriate in the other nonprinted parts of the policy, including legal descriptions, characterization of the vested estate, and the contents of policy endorsements.

On negotiating coverage, see California Title Insurance Practice §§2.22-2.27, 5.21-5.24 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997).

§1.138 5. Insurer's Financial Ability

Title insurance is like other insurance—an indemnification by the title insurer against losses covered in the insurance contract. As with any insurance policy, the lawyer must consider the financial resources of the underwriting title insurer in relation to the amount of risk covered. If the insuring company's financial resources are of concern, consider spreading the risk by requiring the principal underwriting company to reinsure specified amounts of the total policy liability with other acceptable title insurers.

On evaluating the financial stability of the title insurer, see California Title Insurance Practice §§3.6-3.10 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997).

§1.139 6. Policy Costs and Required Lead Times

The lawyer should be aware of the requirements for the policy to be obtained, including any additional costs or lead times involved. The lawyer should consider, e.g., the following:

- The extra cost and time required to obtain the ALTA survey required for an extended-coverage ALTA owner's policy (on ALTA surveys, see California Title Insurance Practice §4.32 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997);
- Any documentation required by the title company to verify the authority of persons acting for a trust, corporation, partnership, or other entity (on establishing authority to act, see Title Ins §§2.29-2.35); and
- Any documentation required by the title company to remove an unwanted exception (on negotiating exceptions and handling title defects, see Title Ins §§5.21-5.24, 5.39-5.44).

On title insurance premiums and methods of reducing premiums, see Title Ins §§3.15-3.27.

IX. POSTCLOSING FOLLOW-UP

§1.140 A. Making Sure All Closing Details Are Complete and Correct

After close of escrow, the lawyer's involvement in other matters related to the transaction or the property varies according to the scope of the lawyer's engagement. See §§1.17-1.18. Such matters are generally beyond the scope of this chapter, but the client usually contemplates at least some follow-up on matters that may reasonably be considered an integral part of the transaction. If the lawyer believes that such follow-up activities are not part of the engagement (and this limitation is not already clear in the lawyer's engagement letter with the client), the lawyer should make sure that the client knows (preferably through a written communication) that the lawyer will not be attending to those matters.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.141 B. Examples of Follow-Up Matters

The number and kind of postclosing follow-up matters vary from transaction to transaction. Examples of frequently encountered matters include the following:

- Receipt and review of title policy (see §1.142);
- Receipt and review of other closing documents (see §1.143); and
- Monitoring certain postclosing notices and actions (see §1.144).

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.142 1. Receipt and Review of Title Policy

Although the title policy will be issued as of the closing date, title companies rarely have the policy form physically completed and ready for delivery at the closing. Follow-up is needed to ensure that the policy is issued as soon as practicable after the closing and that the policy, as issued, is correct. The latter point is extremely important. Mistakes do happen, and the process of correcting a mistake in the policy will be easier (and more likely to be successful) if the mistake is brought to the insurer's attention soon after the closing rather than months (or years) later. On reviewing the title policy, see California Title Insurance Practice §§10.20-10.21 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997).

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.143 2. Receipt and Review of Other Closing Documents

Although most closing documents will have been delivered to the parties at the closing, there may be some documents not physically delivered to the parties at that time. It may have been convenient to ask the escrow holder to mail (or deliver by other means) some or all of the closing documents after closing. Also, any recorded documents remain at the recorder's office until processed and are then mailed to the addressee shown on the face of the document. Follow-up is needed to ensure that all documents are in due course received and, when received, are still in the proper condition.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.144 3. Monitoring Certain Postclosing Notices and Actions

Certain notices may need to be given or other actions may need to be taken after closing that are time sensitive and closely connected to the transaction itself. Examples include:

- Following up the postclosing disposition of an escrow holdback for, e.g., discharge of a disputed mechanics' lien claim or payment for repair work;
- Obtaining refund from the escrow holder of any unused balance of the funds deposited by the purchaser in escrow;
- If the seller has remained on the property under a short lease or a rental arrangement, monitoring the termination or expiration of that lease or arrangement; and
- If the purchase and sale agreement contains indemnification provisions requiring the purchaser to assert claims within a short specified period after closing, making sure that the purchaser anticipates the specified deadline and, if the purchaser does have claims, that they are filed within the time and in the manner specified in the agreement.

§2.1 I. REGULATION OF BROKERS

In California, the real estate brokerage industry is regulated by statute (Bus & P C §§10000-10580, commonly known as the Real Estate Law) and by administrative regulations adopted by the Real Estate Commissioner (10 Cal Code Regs §§2705-3109). This discussion of the regulatory scheme briefly addresses the following topics:

- Broker's licensing requirements and who must obtain a license (§§2.2-2.5);
- Exemptions from the licensing regulations (§2.6);
- Types of specialized licenses (§§2.7-2.11);
- Broker's advertising regulations (§2.12);
- The broker's relationship with the salespersons (§§2.13-2.21); and
- The broker as escrow agent (§§2.22-2.23).

For an in-depth treatment of brokers, including regulation and discipline, see California Real Estate Brokers: Law and Litigation (Cal CEB 2009).

§2.2 A. Licensing

It is unlawful for anyone to act as a real estate broker or salesperson without first obtaining a license from the Department of Real Estate (DRE). Bus & P C §10130. For more information about the DRE, see the DRE website listed in the Directory.

According to the licensing provisions of the Real Estate Law, a real estate broker is someone who performs specified acts for another person and for compensation. Among other things, a broker:

- Sells or offers to sell, or buys or offers to buy, real property (Bus & P C §10131(a));
- Solicits prospective sellers or buyers, solicits or obtains listings, or negotiates for the purchase, sale, or exchange of real property or a business opportunity (Bus & P C §10131(a));
- Charges an advance fee in connection with various specified activities relating to the sale or lease of real property (Bus & P C §10131.2);
- Collects payments or performs other services for borrowers, lenders, or note owners in connection with loans secured by liens on real property (Bus & P C §10131(d); see also §2.7 on loan brokering activities and Bus & P C §10133.1(b) for certain exemptions on collection of loan payments);
- Sells or offers to sell, buys or offers to buy, or exchanges or offers to exchange real property sales contracts or promissory notes secured by a lien on real property, as either an agent or the principal (Bus & P C §§10131(e), 10131.1);
- Sells or exchanges with the public eight or more real property sales contracts or promissory notes secured directly or collaterally by liens on real property during one calendar year (Bus & P C §10131.1(b)(1)(B)); or
- Makes eight or more loans in a calendar year from the broker's own funds to the public when those loans are held or resold and secured directly or collaterally by residential real property (Bus & P C §10131.1(b)(1)(C)).

For a complete list of activities requiring a real estate broker's license, see Bus & P C §10131.

An individual convicted of acting as a real estate broker or a real estate salesperson without a license is punishable by a fine not to exceed $20,000 or by imprisonment for a term not to exceed 6 months, or both. A convicted corporation is punishable by a fine not to exceed $60,000. Bus & P C §10139.

§2.3 1. Licensing Qualifications

To obtain a real estate license, brokers and salespersons must pass a written examination. Bus & P C §10153. Applicants must also meet the experience requirements in Bus & P C §10150.6 and the educational requirements in Bus & P C §§10153.2, 10153.3-10153.5. The Commissioner may deny a license if the applicant is dishonest. Bus & P C §10177(j). See Harrington v Department of Real Estate (1989) 214 CA3d 394, 263 CR 528 (contracting without license and passing worthless check are crimes of moral turpitude justifying denial of license).

NOTE: California attorneys (members of the State Bar) are exempt from the educational requirements for a real estate salesperson license. Bus & P C §10151(d).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.4 2. Corporations and Partners as Licensees

A corporation can be licensed as a real estate broker, and the corporate license entitles one designated officer (who individually holds a broker's license) to act as a broker on behalf of the corporation without payment of any further licensing fee. Bus & P C §10211. If more than one officer of a corporation acts as a broker, the corporation must obtain additional licenses for each of them (Bus & P C §10158), and each officer through whom the corporation acts as a licensee must pass the DRE's written examination (Bus & P C §10153). Acts for which a real estate license is required may be conducted by the corporation only if there is an officer licensed under Bus & P C §10158 or §10211. 10 Cal Code Regs §2740.

A corporation's real estate broker's license cannot be revoked for violation of the Real Estate Law if the violating broker had completely disassociated himself from the corporation at the time of revocation. Amvest Mortgage Corp. v Antt (1997) 58 CA4th 1239, 68 CR2d 457. Clarifying legislation provides that the DRE may still discipline the corporation or deny it a license, even if the violator has disassociated from the corporation, if the offending officer, director, or stockholder violated the Real Estate Law while acting on behalf of the corporate broker. Bus & P C §10177(p).

Although there is no provision for a broker's license to be issued to a partnership, individual licensed brokers can form a partnership. Bus & P C §10137.1. A salesperson can act on behalf of a partnership if the employing broker is a partner. 10 Cal Code Regs §2755. A partnership consisting of both licensees and nonlicensees may act as a broker as long as the partners through whom it acts are licensed. Bus & P C §10137.1. A broker's license may be issued in a fictitious name as long as the broker has registered the fictitious name with the DRE. Bus & P C §10159.5.

§2.5 3. Brokers Distinguished From Finders

California courts have long distinguished between a person acting as a real estate broker and a person acting merely as a "finder" and have ruled that a finder is not subject to the licensing requirements of the Real Estate Law. The terms "finder" and "middleman" are used interchangeably to refer to one whose role in a transaction is limited to introducing the principals, leaving it to them to negotiate the terms of their contract. Tyrone v Kelley (1973) 9 C3d 1, 106 CR 761. In contrast, a broker actually plays a role in bringing about a meeting of the minds between the parties. Eaton v Yount (1920) 48 CA 221, 191 P 1009. An intermediary who engages in any activity beyond merely arranging an introduction of seller and buyer will be classified as engaging in an activity requiring a license as a broker. Zappas v King Williams Press, Inc. (1970) 10 CA3d 768, 89 CR 307.

A person acting as a finder without having a broker's license will be able to recover a fee (Tenzer v Superscope, Inc. (1985) 39 C3d 18, 216 CR 130), but a person acting as a broker without a license will not (Hasekian v Krotz (1968) 268 CA2d 311, 74 CR 410). A lawyer, not licensed as a real estate broker, who engages in licensed activities, however, is not protected by the finder's exception. Preach v Monter Rainbow (1993) 12 CA4th 1441, 16 CR2d 320. See §2.94 on a license as a prerequisite to compensation.

The distinction between broker and finder is important not only because a finder need not be licensed, but also because a finder does not owe the same fiduciary duty to the principal that a broker does. Batson v Strehlow (1968) 68 C2d 662, 68 CR 589. See §§2.124-2.187 for discussion of brokers' fiduciary and other duties. Because a finder has no fiduciary obligations, courts are reluctant to find that an intermediary is merely a finder. Batson v Strehlow, supra.

PRACTICE TIP: As a practical matter, an intermediary's activities are rarely limited to those of a mere finder, especially in large commercial transactions. An intermediary who expects compensation on consummation of the transaction will likely want to be involved in the negotiation and performance of the contract in an effort to ensure completion of the transaction, rather than leaving the entire process in the hands of the principals. In such circumstances the intermediary should also expect to be considered a broker rather than a finder.

An intermediary's ability to collect a finder's fee is further restricted by the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act of 1974 (RESPA) (12 USC §§2601-2617; 24 CFR §§3500.1-3500.21). Referral fees and fee-splitting arrangements are barred in transactions involving four or fewer dwelling units that are financed by loans secured by first deeds of trust obtained from federally insured lending institutions. 12 USC §§2602, 2607; 24 CFR §3500.14. Fees for services actually performed, "affiliated business arrangements" (as long as certain advance notices are given to the person being referred), and payments under cooperative broker and referral arrangements or agreements between real estate agents and brokers are all exempt from this prohibition. See 12 USC §2607(c); 24 CFR §§3500.14(g)(1), 3500.15. The latter exemption has yet to be interpreted by the courts, and it is unclear whether it exempts any finder's fee paid to a licensed broker or exempts only referrals between brokers in different geographical areas. See 2 Miller & Starr, California Real Estate §§4:29, 5:3, 36:26 (3d ed 2000). See chap 15 for further discussion of RESPA. Under California law, real estate agents are prohibited from receiving a "commission, fee, or other consideration" for referral of clients to an "escrow agent, structural pest control firm, home protection company, title insurer, controlled escrow company, or underwritten title company," unless such compensation falls within an exception provided by the statute. See Bus & P C §10177.4.

For restrictions on title companies, see Ins C §§12404-12413.5.

Source: Real Property/California Real Property Sales Transactions/2 Brokers/§2.6 4. Exemptions From Licensing Requirements

§2.6 4. Exemptions From Licensing Requirements

Generally, a broker's license is required only for activities undertaken on behalf of others. Bus & P C §§10131, 10133(a). See, e.g., Robinson v Murphy (1979) 96 CA3d 763, 158 CR 246. Persons who perform any of the activities described in §§2.2 and 2.7-2.11 with respect to their own property are exempt from the licensing requirements of the Real Estate Law. A few specifically enumerated activities, however, require a license even when the individual is acting as the principal. For example, a person who engages as a principal in the business of buying, selling, or exchanging real property sale contracts or notes secured by liens on real property must be licensed as a broker. Bus & P C §10131.1; see §2.2.

The Real Estate Law also provides the following exemptions:

- Certain types of individuals are exempt from licensing requirements (for a complete list see Bus & P C §10133); and
- Certain entities and companies are exempt from broker licensing requirements in connection with their activities in making, negotiating, or arranging mortgage loans, or in purchasing, servicing, and selling promissory notes secured by real property (for a complete list of these exemptions, see Bus & P C §10133.1).

B. Specialized Licensees

§2.7 1. Mortgage Loan Brokers

A real estate broker's license is required for anyone who solicits borrowers or lenders for, or negotiates loans secured directly or collaterally by, liens on real property. Bus & P C §10131(d). A broker's employee assisting the broker in residential mortgage loan transactions may be exempt from the license requirement. See §2.6.

A real estate license endorsement is required to engage in the business of a mortgage loan originator. Fin C §22100. In addition, mortgage loan brokers' activities are regulated under both the Real Property Loan Law (Bus & P C §§10240-10248.3) and regulations adopted by the Real Estate Commissioner (10 Cal Code Regs §§2840-2849.01). Specifically, the license endorsement requirement entails education, written testing, and reporting duties. The requirement comports with the creation of a Nationwide Mortgage Licensing System and Registry (NMLS) under the federal Secure and Fair Enforcement Mortgage Licensing Act of 2008 (SAFE) (12 USC 5101-5116). Finance lenders and residential mortgage lenders under the Department of Corporation must register in the nationwide system by July 1, 2010. Real estate brokers who originate mortgages must comply by December 1, 2010. In addition, if a real estate broker or the broker's salesperson makes, arranges, or services loans secured by residential property containing 1-4 units, the broker must notify the DRE by January 31, 2010 or within 30 days of commencing such loan activity, whichever is later.

§2.8 a. Disclosure Requirements and Limits on Charges

A mortgage loan broker owes a fiduciary duty to the borrower, including a duty to point out to an unsophisticated borrower any unfavorable loan provisions. Wyatt v Union Mortgage Co. (1979) 24 C3d 773, 157 CR 392 (broker failed to disclose unfavorable terms regarding interest, late charges, and size of balloon payment; borrowers were awarded punitive damages for breach of broker's duty). In Realty Projects, Inc. v Smith (1973) 32 CA3d 204, 108 CR 71, the borrowers sought loans within the coverage of the Real Property Loan Law (Bus & P C §§10240-10248.3) but were persuaded by the broker to borrow above the applicable regulated loan limit. The court, in sustaining an order suspending and revoking the brokers' real estate licenses, held that they were required to disclose to the borrowers that the commissions and other charges would have been substantially lower if the loans had been within the coverage of Bus & P C §10245.

The Real Property Loan Law protects borrowers by limiting the fees that may be charged on regulated loans and by requiring detailed and specific disclosure of loan charges. The law applies generally to loans secured by real property that are made or negotiated by a real estate broker. Bus & P C §§10240(b), 10248.3. For maximum charges that can be imposed for brokerage costs and expenses, including appraisal fees, escrow, title, notary, recording, and credit investigation fees (but exclusive of title and recording charges) in a mortgage loan subject to the Real Property Loan Law, see Bus & P C §10242(a).

The law also requires the broker to give the borrower a detailed mortgage loan disclosure statement in the form prescribed by the DRE that discloses, among other things, the amount of commissions and all other costs charged to the borrower. Bus & P C §§10240-10241; 10 Cal Code Regs §2840 (approved borrower disclosure statements). For a federally regulated residential mortgage loan of $30,000 or more in principal and secured by a first deed of trust (or $20,000 or more and secured by a junior deed of trust), the broker's disclosure obligations are satisfied if (1) the borrower receives a "good faith estimate" that satisfies the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act of 1974 (RESPA) (12 USC §§2601-2617) and that includes the broker's license number and a statement that it is not a loan commitment; (2) the borrower receives applicable disclosures required by the Truth in Lending Act (15 USC §§1601-1693r); and (3) if the loan provides for a balloon payment, the loan contains a balloon payment disclosure meeting specified standards. Bus & P C §§10240(c), 10245. Generally, the "good faith estimates" are satisfied when the buyer receives the Estimated and Final Closing Statements from the escrow or title company.

The broker must retain a copy of the disclosure documentation, as acknowledged by the borrower, for a period of 3 years. Bus & P C §10240(a), (c). This requirement applies to all loans made or arranged by real estate brokers, not only those secured by a dwelling. Bus & P C §§10240.1, 10248.3. On disclosure and compliance requirements for nontraditional and subprime mortgage products, see §2.8A-2.8B.

§2.8A b. Disclosure and Compliance Requirements for Nontraditional and Subprime Mortgage Products

On January 14, 2008, in response to concerns regarding nontraditional and subprime mortgage products, emergency regulations were added to the law regarding mortgage disclosures. 10 Cal Code Regs §2844. The new regulations specify strict, minimum-risk management practices, underwriting standards, control systems, and consumer protection to which brokers must adhere. 10 Cal Code Regs §2844.

Among other things, the broker must consider the borrower's ability to repay a mortgage loan according to its terms as the primary basis for making a loan rather than the foreclosure or liquidation value of the collateral. 10 Cal Code Regs §2844(b)(1)(A). In analyzing repayment capacity, the broker must include an evaluation of the borrower's ability to repay the loan by final maturity at the fully indexed rate, assuming a fully amortized repayment schedule. 10 Cal Code Regs §2844(b)(2)(A).

The broker must avoid combining nontraditional loan features such as interest-only or negative amortization loans with reduced documentation or simultaneous second-lien loans absent specific mitigating factors such as high credit scores and low loan-to-value ratios. 10 Cal Code Regs §2844(b)(2)(B). When making loans categorized as subprime, the broker must ensure that such programs do not feature terms that could become predatory or abusive as described in certain specified guides and publications. 10 Cal Code Regs §2844(b)(2)(E).

Brokers must design compensation programs that avoid providing incentives for originations inconsistent with sound underwriting and consumer protection principles (10 Cal Code Regs §2844(b)(3)(A)) and monitor the quality of third party originations so that they reflect the broker's lending standards and compliance with the Real Estate Law (Bus & P C §§10000-10580) (10 Cal Code Regs §2844(b)(3)(B)).

In October 2009 the California legislature adopted AB 260 (2009) and SB 94 (2009) in response to the mortgage crisis of the late 2000s and the resultant growth in loan modification and foreclosure rescue scams. The provisions of AB 260 do not go into effect until January 1, 2010, but SB 94 was adopted as an urgency measure, and thus goes into effect immediately.

WARNING: Both AB 260 and SB 94 amend Bus & P C §10177 with slightly different effect (SB 94 adds subsection (q), while AB 260 adds subsections (q) and (r), discussed below). Both bills were chaptered on October 11, 2009, with AB 260 as Chapter 629 and SB 94 as Chapter 630. The normal rule is that the later chaptered bill controls. Govt C §9605. Here, however, the later chaptered bill is an urgency measure, going into effect immediately and the earlier chaptered bill does not go into effect for several months. Did the legislature intend that changes to the statute in the earlier bill would amend the changes made by the later bill? It appears to do just that, but is not addressed in the discussion of the bills provided by the legislative counsel. The situation will resolve itself in January 2010 when SB 260 goes into effect.

Senate Bill 94 immediately amends several existing statutes and adds a number of new statutes applicable to loan modifications involving 1-4 residential units. Senate Bill 94 does not apply to actions taken by a person offering loan modifications on loans owned or serviced by that person. The provisions of SB 94 sunset on January 1, 2013, unless extended, and include the following changes:

- New Bus & P C §10147.6 requires brokers involved in residential loan modifications to provide clients with a disclosure notice stating that it is not necessary to pay a third party for loan modification services and that such services are available for free from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development. New CC §2944.6 requires anyone involved in residential loan modifications to provide such notice. The notice must be in 14-point bold type and in the language in which the loan modification is offered or negotiated. Penalties for noncompliance include fines of up to $50,000 for entities and $10,000 and/or 1 year imprisonment in county jail for individuals.
- New Bus & P C §10085.6 prohibits brokers involved in residential loan modifications from collecting "advance fees" or a power of attorney from clients. New CC §2944.7 prohibits anyone from collecting such fees or obtaining a power of attorney from clients. Penalties for violating these statutes include fines of up to $50,000 for entities and $10,000 and/or 1 year imprisonment in county jail for individuals.
- New subsection Bus & P C §10177(q) provides that the Real Estate Commissioner may suspend or revoke the license of a broker, or may deny the issuance of a license to an applicant, who has violated or failed to comply with CC §§2920-2944.7.
- New Bus & P C §6106.3 provides that attorneys violating new CC §§2944.6-2944.7 are subject to discipline procedures.
- New Bus & P C §10026 redefines "advance fee" as a fee collected before completion of each and every service a broker has contracted to perform.
- New Bus & P C §10085 requires brokers to submit certain documents pertaining to advance fees to the Real Estate Commissioner at least 10 calendar days before use and imposes fines of up to $2500 and misdemeanor penalties for noncompliance.
- New subsection Bus & P C §10133.1(11) provides that as to any organization or employee of an organization approved by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development to provide free residential loan modification counseling services, such persons:
- are not "real estate brokers" within the meaning of Bus & P C §10131 and 10131.1.
- are not subject to CC §1695.13 prohibiting unconscionability in residential real property foreclosures.
- are exempt from regulation of mortgage loan brokers' activities under the Real Property Loan Law (Bus & P C §§10240-10248.3).
- New definitions in existing CC §2945.1 cover, among other things, "foreclosure consultant" and "residence in foreclosure."

- New Fin C §22161(a) prohibits any person from making a materially false or misleading statement or representation to a borrower about the terms or conditions of the borrower's loan when making or brokering the loan.

Assembly Bill 260 goes into effect on January 1, 2010 and includes the following changes relevant to brokers:

- New subsection Bus & P C §10177(q) provides that the Real Estate Commissioner may suspend or revoke the license of a broker, or may deny the issuance of a license to any applicant, who violates the provisions of the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act of 1974 (RESPA) (12 USC §§2601-2617; 24 CFR §§3500.1-3500.21), the Truth in Lending Act (TILA) (15 USC §§1601-1693r), the Home Ownership Equity Protection Act (15 USC §1639), or any of the regulations promulgated under these federal acts.
- New subsection Bus & P C §10177(r) provides that the Real Estate Commissioner may suspend or revoke the license of a broker, or may deny the issuance of a license to any applicant, who has violated or failed to comply with CC §§2920-2944.7.
- New CC §2923.1 provides that a mortgage broker is a fiduciary of its borrower-client and defines "mortgage broker" as a licensed real estate broker who provides mortgage brokerage services. Any violation of the broker's fiduciary duties is a violation of mortgage broker's licensing law and incurs requisite civil penalties and liability. The mortgage broker's fiduciary duty to its client includes a duty to place the economic interest of the client ahead of the economic interest of the broker.
- New Fin C §§4995-4995.6 affects certain loans originated on or after July 1, 2010 and establishes a category of residential loans defined as "higher-priced mortgage loans"; prohibits brokers and others from making false, deceptive, or misleading statements or representations in connection with such loans; restricts broker compensation received on such loans containing prepayment penalties to certain limits; and provides that any violation of these statutes by a broker is punishable by civil penalty of up to $10,000.

§2.9 d. Exemption From Usury for Loans Made or Arranged by Broker

A loan secured by real property and made or arranged by a real estate broker is exempt from usury limitations. Cal Const art XV, §1. This exemption was given retroactive effect in Chapman v Farr (1982) 132 CA3d 1021, 183 CR 606, thus protecting brokers from liability for usury in transactions that occurred before the enactment of the constitutional amendment. Lind, A Real Estate Attorney's Guide to California Usury Laws, 18 CEB Real Prop L Rep 271 (Oct 1995). See Harroch & Dana, The Real Estate Broker Exemption From the California Usury Law, 4 CEB Real Prop L Rep 137 (Nov. 1981).

The phrase "make or arrange" does not include a loan in which the broker was a borrower; it includes only loans in which the broker is either a lender or a third party acting for others for compensation. Winnett v Roberts (1986) 179 CA3d 909, 225 CR 82; CC §1916.1. However, the exemption does apply when the borrower is a limited partnership and the loan is arranged by a broker who acts in the capacity of general partner. A loan arranged by a broker acting in his capacity as the general partner of a borrower that is a limited partnership, however, does qualify for the exemption. See Park Terrace Ltd. v Teasdale (2002) 100 CA4th 802, 807, 122 CR2d 797;see also Stickel v Harris (1987) 196 CA3d 575, 242 CR 88 (broker did not lose exempt status by joining borrowing joint venture). The expected compensation may be the right to participate in the borrowing entity's anticipated profits. See Park Terrace Ltd. v Teasdale, supra.

Civil Code §1916.1 restricts the foregoing usury exemption to situations in which the broker:

- Acts for compensation or in expectation of compensation for soliciting, negotiating, or arranging the loan for another;
- Acts for compensation or in expectation of compensation for selling, buying, leasing, exchanging, or negotiating the sale, purchase, lease, or exchange of real property or a business for another and (1) arranges a loan to pay all or any portion of the purchase price of, or of an improvement to, that property or business, or (2) arranges a forbearance, extension, or refinancing of any loan in connection with that sale, purchase, lease, exchange of, or improvement to, real property or a business; or
- Arranges or negotiates for another a forbearance, extension, or refinancing of any loan secured by real property in connection with a past transaction in which the broker had acted for compensation or in expectation of compensation for selling, buying, leasing, exchanging, or negotiating the sale, purchase, lease, or exchange of real property or a business.

NOTE: The actions of simply preparing loan documents according to instructions and on terms provided by the parties, ordering title insurance, and dispersing funds do not constitute "arranging" a loan under Cal Const art XV, §1, or under CC §1916.1 See Gibbo v Berger (2004) 123 CA4th 396, 402, 19 CR3d 829 ("When viewed in the context of 'arranging a loan,' the phrase 'arranged by' must refer to some conduct by a real estate broker, acting as a third party intermediary rather than as a party to the loan, that causes a loan to be obtained or procured").

On the broker's duty to disclose the fact that it is arranging a loan, see §2.31.

§2.10 2. Business Opportunity Brokers

A business opportunity broker is required to be licensed as a real estate broker. Bus & P C §10131. As defined in the Real Estate Law, the term "business opportunity" includes "the sale or lease of the business and goodwill of an existing business enterprise or opportunity." Bus & P C §10030. A sale of all or substantially all assets of a corporation, partnership, or sole proprietorship is considered a business opportunity, and the sale of all or substantially all the shares of a corporation may also be considered a business opportunity. All Points Traders, Inc. v Barrington Assocs. (1989) 211 CA3d 723, 259 CR 780. Licensed security broker-dealers, however, can broker the sale of a business opportunity without a real estate license. Bus & P C §10008.5.

§2.11 3. Real Estate Syndicate Securities Dealers

Real estate syndications may take many forms, but they are generally a means of pooling investors' funds for investment in real estate. They are most often formed to purchase, develop, or construct real property or to make loans secured by real property. Most syndications involve the offer and sale of a security within the meaning of California's Corporate Securities Law of 1968 (Corp C §§25000-25707) and the federal Securities Act of 1933 (15 USC §§77a-77aa). For example, limited partnership interests, investment contracts, interests in an unincorporated association such as a trust, and multiple interests in promissory notes constitute securities. Corp C §25019 (definition of securities). See also People v Woodson (1947) 78 CA2d 132, 177 P2d 586 (limited partnership interests are securities). Anyone who offers or sells securities as a principal or a broker must generally be licensed as a "broker-dealer" by the Department of Corporations. Corp C §25210. For exemptions from the broker-dealer licensing requirement, see Corp C §25206; Bus & P C §10131.3.

§2.12 C. Real Estate Advertising

Under California law, real estate brokers who advertise services for which a license is required must use terms such as "broker," "bro.," "agent," "agt.," "licensee," or "Realtor®" to indicate advertising by a real estate licensee, and the name of the broker. Bus & P C §§10140.5-10140.6; 10 Cal Code Regs §2770.1. The broker must supervise all activities, including the advertisements of its agents. See 10 Cal Code Regs §2725(e). Loan advertising has additional requirements. See Bus & P C §§10235.5, 17539.4. See also Bus & P C §10236.4 (requiring broker's license number on certain advertisements).

Advertisements must not be false or misleading. Bus & P C §§10140, 17500. The DRE has not issued general guidelines for what constitutes false and misleading advertising in all cases.

- Subdivision interests: 10 Cal Code Regs §2799.1;
- Mortgage loans: 10 Cal Code Regs §2848;

- Internet advertisement laws: Bus & P C §§17500, 17530; 10 Cal Code Regs §2770;
- E-mail and facsimiles: Bus & P C §§17538.43, 17538.45; 47 USC §227; 47 CFR §68.318(d); and
- Telephones and autodialers: Bus & P C §§17511-17511.13; Pub Util C §§2871-2876; CC §1770(a)(22); 47 USC §227.

§2.12A D. Interpretive Opinions

Brokers and attorneys seeking guidance regarding specific regulatory statutes or rules (e.g., loan advertising, see §2.12) may request an interpretive opinion under Bus & P C §10236 by writing to the Department of Real Estate at the address set forth in the Directory. 10 Cal Code Regs §2845. Attorneys writing are requested to provide their own analysis of the issues presented along with citations to legal authority in support of any views expressed. 10 Cal Code Regs §2845.

E. Broker's Relationship With Salespersons

§2.13 1. Salesperson Licensing and Employment Requirements

A natural person employed by a licensed real estate broker to perform any act that requires a broker's license is a salesperson. See Bus & P C §10132 (definition of "real estate salesman"). A salesperson can be employed only by a licensed broker and cannot deal with the public except through that broker. Bus & P C §§10132, 10137; Grand v Griesinger (1958) 160 CA2d 397, 406, 325 P2d 475. A broker cannot employ a person who is not a licensed broker or a licensed salesperson to perform acts that require a license. Bus & P C §10137. A salesperson cannot be employed by, or accept compensation from, anyone other than the broker under whom he or she is currently licensed. Bus & P C §10137; Hoar v Tuley (1970) 12 CA3d 344, 348, 90 CR 559.

PRACTICE TIP: It is accepted DRE policy that the employing broker can pay its agent's commission through escrow as long as the broker has given written instructions to the escrow holder on a "transaction-by-transaction" basis.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.14 2. Supervision of Salespersons

The statutory scheme of the Real Estate Law requires that a salesperson act only through and on behalf of a broker. Bus & P C §§10132, 10137, 10160. Similarly, a broker is required to supervise his or her salespersons and is subject to disciplinary action by the Real Estate Commissioner for failure to do so. Bus & P C §10177(h). The duty of supervision requires the broker to establish policies, rules, procedures, and systems to manage and review certain activities, including transactions for which a license is required, documents that may have a material effect on the rights or obligations of a party to the transaction, handling of trust funds, and advertising. 10 Cal Code Regs §2725.

§2.15 a. Relationship Between Broker and Salesperson Under Bus & P C §10032

A salesperson may be either an independent contractor or an employee of the broker. Under Bus & P C §10032, the nature of the relationship—and the mutual legal obligations of the broker and salesperson—can vary with the relevant legal context or issue, e.g., liability. The parties' characterization of the relationship is not determinative. Brown v IAC (1917) 174 C 457, 163 P 664; Anderson v Badger (1948) 84 CA2d 736, 191 P2d 768. For some purposes, such as withholding taxes, unemployment compensation, and workers' compensation, the character of the relationship may be governed by statutes other than §10032 (see §§2.17-2.19).

For purposes of liability to third parties, salespersons are generally considered employees of the broker. The broker's failure to properly supervise a salesperson can result in both (1) a civil judgment against the broker on a theory of vicarious liability arising from the salesperson's fraud, misrepresentation, or deceit, and (2) loss of the broker's license. Bus & P C §10177.5; CC §2079.13(b). This aspect of broker liability cannot be changed by contract or by characterizing the salesperson as an independent contractor. Gipson v Davis Realty Co. (1963) 215 CA2d 190, 30 CR 253. Furthermore, as demonstrated in California Real Estate Loans, Inc. v Wallace (1993) 18 CA4th 1575, 23 CR2d 462, the revocation of a broker's license under §10177.5 does not require any guilty knowledge on the broker's part, only the fact of a judgment against the broker. Administrative discipline against the broker who suffers a judgment based on a salesperson's misconduct provides a powerful incentive to guard against misconduct by salespersons in the future.

A supervising broker who also holds an ownership interest in a brokerage may be liable as a matter of law, under DRE regulations as well as traditional corporate vicarious liability law, for tortious acts committed by those salespersons working under the broker's supervision. Holley v Crank (9th Cir 2004) 400 F3d 667 (designated officer and broker of real estate company can be held personally liable for actions of employee and can be held liable through piercing company's corporate veil; but note that the opinion deletes language previously included in a predecessor opinion (Holley v Crank (9th Cir 2004) 386 F3d 1248) imposing liability for negligent supervision). See also California Real Estate Loans, Inc. v Wallace, supra; Bus & P C §10032; CC §2079.13(b).

§2.16 b. Relationship Between Broker and Salesperson Under Common Law and Other Statutory Schemes

In contexts not specifically addressed in Bus & P C §10032, the character of the relationship between broker and salesperson generally will depend on the application of common law principles to the facts of a particular case. Under common law, the most important test of whether the relationship is that of employee or independent contractor is the degree to which the broker has the right to control the manner and means in which the salesperson's work is done. If the broker controls only the results to be achieved, the salesperson is likely an independent contractor. If the broker has the right to control the details of how services are performed (whether or not control is actually exercised), then the salesperson is likely an employee. See Baugh v Rogers (1944) 24 C2d 200, 148 P2d 633.

In addition to the common law test, the relationship between broker and salesperson must be considered in view of the legal context in which the inquiry arises, i.e., the purposes intended by the applicable statutory scheme. Absent an overriding public policy or the clearly expressed intent of another statutory scheme, the duty to supervise imposed by the Real Estate Law historically has been interpreted to favor a finding of an employee-employer relationship.

§2.17 c. Unemployment Insurance

Brokers and real estate salespersons are excluded from the coverage under California's unemployment insurance system under specified conditions; in particular, brokers must be licensed and salespersons must be independent contractors. See Un Ins C §650. If a salesperson is paid a salary, coverage turns on whether he or she is an independent contractor or an employee under Un Ins C §601, and this determination depends on the degree of control the broker is able to exercise. See, e.g., Grant v Woods (1977) 71 CA3d 647, 139 CR 533 (primary factor considered in determining whether employment relationship exists is where right of control lies within relationship). To obtain helpful information and publications on this topic, see the California Employment Development Department's website, listed in the Directory.

§2.18 d. Worker's Compensation

The status of a real estate salesperson under the California Workers' Compensation Act (Lab C §§3200-6208) remains a question of fact to be analyzed on a case-by-case basis, as governed by the definitions of "employee" and "independent contractor" set forth in the Act. Lab C §§3350-3351, 3353. The common law test for employees—the right of control over the means of performing services—applies in this context. Flickenger v IAC (1919) 181 C 425, 184 P 851; Esquer v Teresi (1951) 105 CA2d 89, 232 P2d 895. In the cases decided before the enactment of Bus & P C §10177 (on suspension and revocation of licenses), the results were mixed. For cases discussing whether a salesperson qualified as an employee for workers' compensation purposes, see Brown v IAC (1917) 174 C 457, 163 P 664 (salesman deemed employee); Cameron v Pillsbury (1916) 173 C 83, 159 P 149 (real estate manager was employee); Payne v White House Props., Inc. (1980) 112 CA3d 465, 169 CR 373 (salesperson was not employee); Royal Indem. Co. v IAC (1930) 104 CA 290, 285 P 912 (agent was employee); Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co v IAC (1928) 93 CA 313, 269 P 733 (salesperson was employee).

Source: Real Property/California Real Property Sales Transactions/2 Brokers/§2.19 e. Withholding Income and Social Security Taxes

§2.19 e. Withholding Income and Social Security Taxes

Income, employment, and social security taxes must be withheld from compensation paid to employees, but those taxes cannot be withheld from independent contractors. IRC §§3102(a), 3401-3403, 3501-3510. Moreover, real estate salespersons receive specific statutory treatment. A licensed salesperson will not be considered an employee if (1) compensation is based on sales or other output rather than number of hours worked, and (2) the salesperson and the broker have a written contract that states that the salesperson will not be treated as an employee for withholding purposes. IRC §3508(b). California has a similar statutory exemption from state withholding requirements. Un Ins C §13004.1. If the salesperson does not satisfy its specific requirements, however, the control test must be used to determine whether the salesperson is an employee or an independent contractor.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.20 f. Tort Liability

For purposes of the Real Estate Law, salespersons are agents of their brokers as a matter of law. Gipson v Davis Realty Co. (1963) 215 CA2d 190, 30 CR 253; see §2.14. Under both common law principles of agency and statutory law, brokers are liable as a matter of law for the torts committed by their salespersons within the course and scope of their agency. California Real Estate Loans, Inc. v Wallace (1993) 18 CA4th 1575, 23 CR2d 462; Bus & P C §10032; CC §2079.13(b). This is true even if the salesperson is otherwise classified as an employee or independent contractor. An employer is required by statute to indemnify an employee for all expenses or losses necessarily incurred in the performance of his or her job or while obeying the directions of the employer, whether or not lawful, unless the employee believed the acts to be unlawful at the time the directions were obeyed. Lab C §2802(a). Any contract made by an employee that purports to waive this right is null and void. Lab C §2804. Although independent contractors are not entitled to indemnification under §2802, a real estate salesperson who is an employee of a broker should be indemnified for any tort liability necessarily arising from services performed in the scope of employment. Independent contractor agreements with real estate salespersons commonly allocate defense costs (and sometimes judgments and settlements) between the broker and the salesperson.

§2.21 3. Documenting Relationship Between Broker and Salesperson

A broker must have a written agreement with each salesperson, whether licensed as a salesperson or as a broker. 10 Cal Code Regs §2726. The agreement must set forth the material terms of the agreement, including supervision of licensed activities, duties, and compensation. 10 Cal Code Regs §2726. The broker must notify the DRE within 5 days of a broker's employment of a salesperson or of another broker. Bus & P C §10161.8; 10 Cal Code Regs §2752. A salesperson cannot accept compensation from anyone except the broker under whom the salesperson is licensed at the time. The salesperson's right to compensation is based solely on the agreement with the broker. Bus & P C §10137.

F. Broker as Escrow Agent

§2.22 1. License Requirements

Escrow agents are regulated by California's Escrow Law (Fin C §§17000-17703) and must be licensed by the Corporations Commissioner (Fin C §17200). Real estate brokers are exempt from these requirements while they are acting in the course of, or incidental to, real estate transactions in which they are an agent or a party. Fin C §17006(a)(4). This exemption is "not available for any arrangement entered into for the purpose of performing escrows for more than one business." Fin C §17006(b). A broker may act as an escrow agent without an escrow license in a transaction in which he or she is also acting as a broker (54 Ops Cal Atty Gen 13 (1971)), but must obtain a license to act as an escrow agent in a transaction in which the broker is not providing brokerage services (43 Ops Cal Atty Gen 284 (1964)).

When acting under Fin C §17006(a)(4), the broker may charge a separate fee for escrow services. 44 Ops Cal Atty Gen 105 (1964). The Real Estate Commissioner has promulgated regulations on a broker's handling of funds as an escrow agent (10 Cal Code Regs §2951) and a broker's actions in handling an escrow (10 Cal Code Regs §2950).

Source: Real Property/California Real Property Sales Transactions/2 Brokers/§2.23 2. Decision to Use Broker-Escrow Agent

§2.23 2. Decision to Use Broker-Escrow Agent

The decision on whether to use a broker-affiliated escrow company must be carefully weighed. Generally, the escrow departments of banks or large title companies have greater resources and can provide a wider range of ancillary services than are available at a small, broker-owned escrow company. Counsel should generally advise against permitting brokers to act as both broker and escrow agent in the same transaction, because the broker's fiduciary duties become difficult to distinguish from the other duties the broker owes to the principal (see §§2.124-2.175), and—more importantly—because the escrow holder owes a fiduciary duty to both parties, not just the broker's principal. See Colonial Sav. & Loan Ass'n v Redwood Empire Title Co. (1965) 236 CA2d 186, 46 CR 16. It is unclear whether a broker-affiliated escrow agent could function as a truly neutral escrow agent.

ETHICAL CONSIDERATION: Attorneys who have a bona fide relationship with a principal in a real estate or personal property transaction are also exempt from the licensing requirements of the Escrow Law (Fin C §17006(a)(2)), but they should be aware of the conflicting duties that would arise from acting as both escrow agent and attorney in the same transaction.

For a discussion regarding liability of an escrow holder, see chap 15.

II. BROKERS' SERVICES; SELECTING A BROKER

§2.24 A. Type of Services

Brokers provide a variety of services to parties in purchase and sale transactions. The mix of service and advice required by each client varies with the nature of the transaction and the sophistication of the client. At one extreme is the typical single-family home transaction. This client—buyer or seller—has no particular expertise in real estate transactions, and may be looking to the broker for a great deal of hand-holding through each step of the process. At the opposite end of the spectrum is the experienced commercial real estate investor who may have far more expertise in the real estate business than the broker. That client often does not need the broker for advice on the basics of buying and selling real estate, but relies on the broker either for assistance in marketing property and locating prospective buyers (if a seller) or for identifying potential acquisitions (if a buyer). In both instances, the broker is likely to be used as a go-between with the other party, from the negotiation stage through due diligence and close of escrow. Thus, especially in commercial transactions, the level of service and advice provided by the broker varies with the circumstances of the transaction, the relative sophistication of the parties, and the standard of care in the industry for similar transactions. See Field v Century 21 Klowden-Forness Realty (1998) 63 CA4th 18, 25-26, 73 CR2d 784; Restatement (Second) of Agency §379 (1958). On the broker's duties to the client, see §§2.124-2.152.

By knowing the local market, the broker is in a good position to provide accurate information on current property values and advice on how to market a seller's property or where to find property to meet a buyer's needs. Brokers also perform many routine functions, such as obtaining preliminary reports and distributing documents for review and execution. They can also provide advice and assistance to the parties in negotiating the terms of the transaction. Depending on the transaction, the broker may also offer other services, such as:

- Arranging for inspections;
- Assisting in evaluating the status of title;
- Suggesting various financing methods and sources;
- For investment properties, compiling financial information from the seller to facilitate the buyer's evaluation of the income potential of the property; and
- Obtaining comparable information from other sales that have occurred to assist the principal in evaluating value.

The range of services and other terms of the broker's relationship with the client—especially the broker's compensation—are subject to negotiation.

§2.25 B. Factors to Consider in Selecting a Broker

The services brokers offer, and their expertise, experience, and knowledge of the market vary greatly. A prospective buyer or seller should look for a broker who is able to fulfill his or her specific needs. In selecting a broker, the buyer or seller should consider the following factors:

- Broker's familiarity with the area in which the property is located. A local broker is more likely to be well informed about prospective buyers or sellers in the area, the advantages and disadvantages of the area and of a particular parcel, local property values, sources of financing, and particular specialized local real estate forms or requirements. For instance, see the Residential Record Report ("3R Report") required in the sale or exchange of most residential buildings in the City and County of San Francisco, which contains, among other things, the construction date, permit history, and occupancy classification.
- Broker's experience in handling the type of property under consideration and the type of transaction contemplated. A broker who specializes in particular kinds of properties is more likely to know of prospective buyers or sellers and of available financing for that type of property. If the transaction will be complex or unusual, it is important that the broker have sufficient expertise to be able to understand and meet the client's needs.

Sellers often want to retain as much flexibility as possible through short-term and nonexclusive listings, but this consideration must be weighed against the likelihood that a broker with an exclusive or long-term listing will put more effort and resources into the transaction. See §§2.56-2.61 on types of listing agreements; see §§2.44-2.53 on the requirements for a writing.

The broker's commission, although subject to negotiation, will be an additional expense of the sale. Even though the seller usually pays the commission, the amount affects the buyer in that it is a factor in the seller's calculation of an acceptable price. On compensation, see §§2.91-2.123.

III. BROKER AS AGENT

§2.26 A. Agency Versus Contract Law

The broker-client relationship is governed by both agency and contract law. Although the broker's right to compensation depends on the existence of a written agreement (CC §1624(a)(4); see §§2.44-2.53), an agency relationship may be created without either consideration (CC §2308; Leno v YMCA (1971) 17 CA3d 651, 95 CR 96) or a writing (Steiner v Rowley (1950) 35 C2d 713, 221 P2d 9). Thus, a broker without an enforceable contractual claim for a commission may still be subject to the fiduciary duties of the principal-agent relationship, the breach of which may render the broker liable for damages (Steiner v Rowley, supra) or subject to disciplinary action by the Real Estate Commissioner (Buckley v Savage (1960) 184 CA2d 18, 7 CR 328).

On brokers as agents, see California Real Estate Brokers: Law and Litigation, chap 3 (Cal CEB 2009).

Source: Real Property/California Real Property Sales Transactions/2 Brokers/§2.27 B. Creation of Agency Without Written Contract

§2.27 B. Creation of Agency Without Written Contract

An agency relationship is usually created between a seller and broker through a written listing or commission agreement; however, a written agreement is not required to establish an agency relationship. (Note, however, that a broker without a writing that satisfies the Statute of Frauds (CC §1624(a)(4)) will be unable to recover his or her commission. See §§2.43, 2.48.) Conversely, although a buyer-broker relationship can be created by a written agreement, they are not generally used in practice. Absent a written agreement, an agency relationship can be created by the following:

- Agreement of the parties, whether express or implied (see §2.28);
- Ratification of previously unauthorized acts of the agent (see §2.29); or
- Estoppel (or ostensible agency) (see §2.30).

California has substantially codified these common law agency principles. CC §§2295-2400.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.28 1. Agency by Express or Implied Agreement

An agency is generally created by an express agreement, which may or may not be in writing. CC §§2299, 2307. No special formalities are required to create an agency, however, and the existence of an agency relationship may be inferred from the parties' actions. Zander v Texaco, Inc. (1968) 259 CA2d 793, 66 CR 561. Although no formalities are required, the parties must intend that the relationship exist, and this intent must be disclosed by either their express agreement or their actions. Nizuk v Gorges (1960) 180 CA2d 699, 4 CR 565.

The existence of agency is a question of fact for the trial court. California courts have been inclined to find the existence of an agency relationship when it is necessary to impose a fiduciary obligation on the broker to protect the seller against injury. Skopp v Weaver (1976) 16 C3d 432, 440, 128 CR 19 ("No California decision has held a realtor exempt from fiduciary obligation to the seller when the realtor has in fact acted to the seller's detriment").

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.29 2. Agency by Ratification

An agency may also be created when the principal ratifies previously unauthorized actions. CC §2307. Ratification occurs when the purported agent has held itself out as representing the principal (Anderson v Fay Improvement Co. (1955) 134 CA2d 738, 748, 286 P2d 513) and the principal then accepts the benefits of the purported agent's actions (CC §2310; Rakestraw v Rodriques (1972) 8 C3d 67, 104 CR 57). The third party is bound only when ratification occurs and may withdraw at any prior time. 3 Witkin, Summary of California Law, Agency and Employment §139 (10th ed 2005).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.30 3. Ostensible Agency

Ostensible agency, also called agency by estoppel, arises when the principal either intentionally or negligently causes a third party to believe that another person is the principal's agent. CC §2300. Unlike agency by ratification (see §2.29), ostensible agency rests on statements, acts, or neglect by the principal that lead a third party to believe that an agency relationship exists. Hill v Citizens Nat'l Trust & Sav. Bank (1937) 9 C2d 172, 69 P2d 853. The California courts have always treated ostensible agency as resting on estoppel principles. Lee v Helmco, Inc. (1962) 199 CA2d 820, 19 CR 413; Keppelman v Heikes (1952) 111 CA2d 475, 245 P2d 54 (principal not allowed to use lack of agency as defense against third party who relied in good faith on principal's acts). If a principal's acts lead others to believe, in good faith, that he conferred authority on an agent, the principal cannot assert against those third persons that he did not intend to confer such power. Preis v American Indem. Co. (1990) 220 CA3d 752, 761, 269 CR 617.

A principal will thus be liable for an agent's acts under ostensible authority if (Mejia v Community Hosp. (2002) 99 CA4th 1448, 1456, 122 CR2d 233; see also CC §2300):

- The third party dealing with the agent believes in the agent's authority and such belief is reasonable;
- The belief is generated by some act or neglect of the principal sought to be charged; and
- The third person, in relying on the agent's apparent authority, is not guilty of negligence.

The ostensible authority of an agent generally is established through the acts or declarations of the principal—not the agent. Jacoves v United Merchandising Corp. (1992) 9 CA4th 88, 103, 11 CR2d 468. Additionally, a principal's failure to promptly disaffirm an agent's conduct on his or her behalf constitutes a ratification. Norcal Mut. Ins. Co. v Newton (2000) 84 CA4th 64, 79, 100 CR2d 683.

Ostensible agency has been invoked to permit a buyer to recover the downpayment from a brokerage firm for the actions of a nonmember broker who occupied space in the firm's offices and shared commissions. Peterson v Ryan (1951) 108 CA2d 41, 238 P2d 117.

Source: Real Property/California Real Property Sales Transactions/2 Brokers/ C. Residential Disclosure Requirements on Agency Relationship/§2.31 1. Disclosure of Agency and Confirmation Forms

C. Residential Disclosure Requirements on Agency Relationship

§2.31 1. Disclosure of Agency and Confirmation Forms

Real estate agents in sales transactions (including leases for more than 1 year) involving residential property containing one to four dwelling units or mobilehomes must provide written disclosures to both the buyer and the seller on the available agency relationships. CC §§2079.13-2079.24. Moreover, the principals must confirm in writing the particular agency relationship selected (see §2.37).

Delivery of the completed disclosure form required by CC §2079.16 (see §2.36) must be made by:

- The listing agent to the seller before (or when) entering into the listing agreement (CC §2079.14(a));
- The selling agent to the seller as soon as practicable before (or when) presenting an offer (thus, sellers generally receive a copy of this form twice, even when listing agent and selling agent are with the same brokerage) (CC §2079.14(b)); and
- The selling agent to the buyer as soon as practicable before (or at the time of) execution of the buyer's offer (CC §2079.14(d)).

NOTE: The form often cannot be delivered before the listing agreement, presentation of the offer, or execution of the buyer's offer; so, instead, it is delivered at the same time as (but not after) these other documents.

The "selling agent" is the agent who procures the buyer. CC §2079.13(n). The selling agent may be the buyer's agent only, a dual agent or, in rare circumstances, the agent of the seller only (see §2.32). A selling agent who does not also represent the seller may be known as the "cooperating agent" or sometimes simply as the "buyer's agent." Usually, the disclosure form must be signed by the seller or buyer, acknowledging receipt. CC §2079.14.

The disclosure form merely describes the possible types of agency relationships that may be chosen. It does not disclose the particular type of agency relationship that, in fact, will exist. Disclosure of the actual type of agency relationship (i.e., confirmation of that agency relationship) is made in a separate form prescribed by CC §2079.17. See §2.37. This confirmation form must be given to the buyer and the seller as soon as practicable, although the statute suggests that the confirmation is normally not made until an offer is presented to the seller (and often is contained in the offer itself). CC §2079.17(a)-(b). Thus, the disclosure form describing the various types of agency relationships may be given to buyers and sellers before all the forms confirming the actual relationship; but they are usually delivered simultaneously.

An agent who arranges financing in connection with a sale, lease, or exchange of real property must disclose this fact in writing to all parties to the transaction within "24 hours" (presumably after the agent first undertakes this role). Bus & P C §10177.6.

The agency disclosure statutes make no distinction between brokers and salespersons (who are now referred to as the agent and the associate licensee, respectively, because the agency relationship is deemed to exist between the client and broker, since the salesperson cannot contract on his or her own). See §§2.13-2.21 on the relationship between the broker and salesperson.

Source: Real Property/California Real Property Sales Transactions/2 Brokers/§2.32 2. Failure to Comply With Agency Disclosure Requirements

§2.32 2. Failure to Comply With Agency Disclosure Requirements

Civil Code §§2079.13-2079.24 provide no penalties for failure to confirm the agency relationship. In Huijers v DeMarrais (1992) 11 CA4th 676, 14 CR2d 232, a dual agent (who represented the buyer before approaching the sellers) failed to give the required disclosure when the listing was obtained, which made the listing agreement voidable at the sellers' option, thus relieving them from their obligation to pay the commission. The broker did make proper agency disclosures when the purchase contract was executed, and the sellers were not relieved of their obligations under that agreement.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.33 3. Agency Elections

There are a variety of agency election options in the typical sales transaction. Most commonly, one agent represents only the seller and another represents only the buyer, but other permutations exist. A common misconception, even among experienced brokers, is that every party in a transaction is represented by an agent; but the parties' agreement, which may be established in writing by the buyer's and seller's acceptance of the brokers' agency elections, can establish different arrangements. The listing agent may elect to be the seller's agent only or a dual agent. The agent who procures the buyer ("selling agent") may elect to be a dual agent or the seller's agent only or (unless also acting as the listing agent) may elect to be the buyer's agent only. If an agent is both the listing and the selling agent and elects to be the seller's agent only, then the agent furnishes services to the buyer on behalf of the seller, and the buyer is unrepresented in the transaction. An agent who both lists and sells, however, is prohibited from representing the buyer only. CC §2079.18. As a consequence, no salesperson in the office of the listing broker can purport to represent the buyer exclusively. An agency relationship exists between the seller and the broker (not the salesperson) from the time the listing is signed, and that relationship cannot later be abrogated.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.34 4. Change in Agency Election

Agency elections can be changed as long as the change is made before the agency services are performed. For example, an agent may elect to act as the buyer's exclusive agent when making an offer on property listed with another agent. If the offer is rejected and the buyer chooses to make an offer on one of the agent's own listings, the agency election must be changed to dual agency, because an agent cannot be the buyer's agent exclusively when the broker is also the listing agent. CC §2079.18.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.35 5. Dual Agency of Listing Agents

Dual agency, in which the same broker represents both buyer and seller, is fairly common because listing agents frequently sell their own listings. Dual agency also arises when two different sales agents working under the same broker represent the parties, whether or not the two agents are in the same office of their common broker (because the agency relationship is deemed to exist at the broker level). CC §2079.13(d).

Authorization to act as a dual agent generally should be obtained from the seller when the listing agreement is executed. Typically, the agent will not know in advance whether it will procure the buyer (or whether another agent in the firm may do so). Sellers may agree to dual agency because they are retaining the broker for the express purpose of finding a suitable buyer; therefore, they do not want to limit the broker's ability to do so by preventing the broker from presenting the property to its own buyer-clients. See §2.129 for the benefits and disadvantages of dual agency.

If the seller refuses to permit the listing agent to act as a dual agent and represent the buyer as well, the listing agent may refer the buyer to an agent with another brokerage or the buyer could remain unrepresented. For a further discussion of dual agency and conflicts of interest, see §§2.129-2.130.

For an extensive discussion, and strong criticism, of former CC §§2373-2382 (now CC §§2079.13-2079.24), see Bernhardt, Broker's Agency Disclosure Law: Misinformation or Disinformation?, 11 CEB Real Prop L Rep 113 (July 1988).

2.36-1 Disclosure of agency relationship

DISCLOSURE REGARDING
REAL ESTATE AGENCY RELATIONSHIP
(As required by the Civil Code)

When you enter into a discussion with a real estate agent regarding a real estate transaction, you should from the outset understand what type of agency relationship or representation you wish to have with the agent in the transaction.

SELLER'S AGENT

A Seller's agent under a listing agreement with the Seller acts as the agent for the Seller only. A Seller's agent or a subagent of that agent has the following affirmative obligations:

To the Seller:

A fiduciary duty of utmost care, integrity, honesty, and loyalty in dealings with the Seller.

To the Buyer and the Seller:

(a) Diligent exercise of reasonable skill and care in performance of the agent's duties.

(b) A duty of honest and fair dealing and good faith.

(c) A duty to disclose all facts known to the agent materially affecting the value or desirability of the property that are not known to, or within the diligent attention and observation of, the parties.

An agent is not obligated to reveal to either party any confidential information obtained from the other party which does not involve the affirmative duties set forth above.

BUYER'S AGENT

A selling agent can, with a Buyer's consent, agree to act as agent for the Buyer only. In these situations, the agent is not the Seller's agent, even if by agreement the agent may receive compensation for services rendered, either in full or in part from the Seller. An agent acting only for a Buyer has the following affirmative obligations:

To the Buyer:

A fiduciary duty of utmost care, integrity, honesty, and loyalty in dealings with the Buyer.

To the Buyer and Seller:

(a) Diligent exercise of reasonable skill and care in performance of the agent's duties.

(b) A duty of honest and fair dealing and good faith.

(c) A duty to disclose all facts known to the agent materially affecting the value or desirability of the property that are not known to, or within the diligent attention and observation of, the parties.

An agent is not obligated to reveal to either party any confidential information obtained from the other party that does not involve the affirmative duties set forth above.

AGENT REPRESENTING BOTH SELLER AND BUYER

A real estate agent, either acting directly or through one or more associate licensees, can legally be the agent of both the Seller and the Buyer in a transaction, but only with the knowledge and consent of both the Seller and the Buyer.

In a dual agency situation, the agent has the following affirmative obligations to both the Seller and the Buyer:

(a) A fiduciary duty of utmost care, integrity, honesty, and loyalty in the dealings with either the Seller or the Buyer.

(b) Other duties to the Seller and the Buyer as stated above in their respective sections.

In representing both Seller and Buyer, the agent may not, without the express permission of the respective party, disclose to the other party that the Seller will accept a price less than the listing price or that the Buyer will pay a price greater than the price offered.

The above duties of the agent in a real estate transaction do not relieve a Seller or Buyer from the responsibility to protect his or her own interests. You should carefully read all agreements to ensure that they adequately express your understanding of the transaction. A real estate agent is a person qualified to advise about real estate. If legal or tax advice is desired, consult a competent professional.

Throughout your real property transaction you may receive more than one disclosure form, depending on the number of agents assisting in the transaction. The law requires each agent with whom you have more than a casual relationship to present you with this disclosure form. You should read its contents each time it is presented to you, considering the relationship between you and the real estate agent in your specific transaction.

This disclosure form includes the provisions of Sections 2079.13 to 2079.24, inclusive, of the Civil Code set forth on the reverse hereof. Read it carefully.

Comment: Civil Code §2079.17 requires this form to be used in residential transactions, in addition to the disclosures required by CC §2079.14 (see §§2.31-2.35). Although general agency principles require the disclosure of dual agency in both commercial and residential transactions, it has not been held that disclosure must be in writing in a commercial transaction, although it certainly is better practice to do so. In residential transactions, the required written disclosure form must be included either in the purchase and sale agreement or in a separate writing executed or acknowledged before or coincident with the execution of that agreement. If the listing agent's confirmation is a separate writing, it must be executed or acknowledged by the seller and the listing agent. CC §2079.17(b). If the selling agent's confirmation is a separate writing, it must be signed by the seller, the buyer, and the selling agent. CC §2079.17(a).

§2.38 D. Unintended Dual Agency

Although the seller usually pays the broker's commission, that fact alone does not prevent the broker from being the agent of the buyer, either exclusively or as a dual agent (Wolf v Price (1966) 244 CA2d 165, 52 CR 889), and this dual role can be the source of disputes and potential breaches of fiduciary duty (see §2.129). Normally, the broker is the agent of the party who first employs the broker. Stephens v Ahrens (1919) 179 C 743, 178 P 863. Frequently, however, a real estate transaction involves two principals and only one broker, who was originally retained by the seller but who also works with the buyer to complete the sale. In this situation, there is a common misunderstanding that the broker must represent both parties, but that is incorrect. Agency election remains subject to the agreement of the parties and the broker; in the absence of an express agreement, however, it will be determined by the parties' conduct. When one party has retained the broker, an agency relationship between the broker and the other party may arise from the broker's acceptance of duties and responsibilities to that party. See, e.g., Whiteman v Leonard Realty Co. (1961) 189 CA2d 373, 11 CR 211 (buyer's broker held to be seller's agent in undertaking to transmit escrow instructions); Wright v Lowe (1956) 140 CA2d 891, 296 P2d 34 (broker's agreement to convey buyer's counteroffer to seller made broker buyer's agent for that purpose).

The payment of, or obligation to pay, compensation to an agent by the seller or the buyer does not necessarily determine a particular agency relationship. CC §2079.19. In the absence of other factors, however, payment of a commission is strong evidence of an agency relationship between the broker and the party paying the fee. Standard Realty & Dev. Co. v Ferrera (1957) 151 CA2d 514, 311 P2d 855.

PRACTICE TIP: Because an agency relationship can arise without any express agreement between the parties, a broker should protect itself and the parties by making sure that agency relationships are disclosed to and confirmed by all parties in writing (as required in residential transactions).

§2.38A E. Broker Acting in Non-Agency Capacity

"An agent is one who represents another… in dealings with third persons." CC §2295. There are times when a broker is not acting as an agent and is performing services that do not require a license. Examples include:

- In the preliminary stages of negotiating a listing or representation agreement—before the client retains the broker;
- In routine discussions with other industry members concerning market trends, recent transactions, etc.; and
- In providing consulting services that do not require the performing party to be a real estate licensee.

Although brokers still have obligations to parties with whom they do not have an agency relationship, no fiduciary duty arises in its absence. In Stetler v Greenpoint Mortgage Funding Inc. (ED Cal, Jan. 23, 2008) 2008 US Dist Lexis 4880, a borrower sued a mortgage broker whom, it alleged, had received undisclosed kickback payments from the lender. The court granted the mortgage broker summary judgment, holding that the broker did not owe a fiduciary duty to the borrower when their agreement provided that the broker was an independent contractor and not the borrower's agent and disclosed that the lender may compensate the broker. If the broker had been the borrower's agent, the details of any payments from the lender would have had to have been disclosed. See §2.135. The statutory scheme in some other states (e.g., Colorado) permits a broker to declare itself a "transaction broker," which is not an agent of either the buyer or the seller. Colo Rev Stat §12-61-802. Stetler suggests that the same result could be obtained in California with appropriate contract language.

§2.39 F. Multiple Listing Service

The multiple listing service (MLS) is usually sponsored by a local Board of Realtors® and provides a means for brokers to refer listings to other real estate licensees through a central information exchange. In California, the MLS is governed by CC §§1086-1090 and is defined as a facility for cooperation between agents, through which agents establish legal relationships with respect to listed properties. CC §1087. The service compiles and publishes listings submitted by participating brokers. A broker may not submit a listing to an MLS without the owner's authorization. CC §1088. Appraisers may use the MLS to establish legal relationships with respect to listed properties or to prepare market evaluations and appraisals of real property. CC §1087.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.40 1. Subagency

Traditionally, the MLS required all listings submitted to contain an automatic unilateral offer of subagency to all MLS participants. In California, the MLS abandoned the automatic subagency requirement and created a system in which subagency is the exception rather than the rule. The MLS provides for a unilateral offer to share compensation rather than a unilateral offer of subagency. This system avoids many of the conflicts and liabilities inherent in subagency, particularly the dual agency problem, because the selling broker can now represent the buyer without becoming a dual agent as a result of a unilateral offer of subagency. On dual agency, see §§2.129-2.130. The National Association of Realtors® has also deleted the mandatory offer of subagency, making it optional. Many form listing agreements still give the broker the right to appoint subagents (see California Association of Realtors® form in §2.57) if the broker chooses to do so, but the MLS no longer requires it.

§2.41 2. Nonmember Access to Multiple Listing Services

Before 1976, the MLS limited access to its listings to members of its sponsoring Boards of Realtors®, but Marin County Bd.of Realtors v Palsson (1976) 16 C3d 920, 130 CR 1, held that such restrictions on access violate the Cartwright Act (Bus & P C §§16700-16770). See also Glendale Bd. of Realtors v Hounsell (1977) 72 CA3d 210, 139 CR 830. California courts have also rejected restrictions on MLS access based on:

- Illegal group boycott (People v National Ass'n of Realtors (1981) 120 CA3d 459, 174 CR 728; board's refusal to accept any but exclusive right-to-sell listings defeated broker's right to negotiate other types of listings); and
- Price fixing in violation of the Cartwright Act and the unlawful competition statutes (Bus & P C §§16600-17365) (Feldman v Sacramento Bd. of Realtors (1981) 119 CA3d 739, 174 CR 231; board policies that encouraged equal commission splits and discouraged brokers from negotiating different arrangements unreasonably restricted competition).

These holdings have broadened the category of potential MLS users to include all licensees who wish to subscribe to the MLS, rather than board members only. Access to the MLS may, however, be restricted to licensed brokers and salespersons. Derish v San Mateo-Burlingame Bd. of Realtors (1982) 136 CA3d 534, 186 CR 390.

The federal courts have also examined the anticompetitive effects of MLSs, but with differing results. Although the Cartwright Act provides a separate state law basis for the California decisions, and thus the California courts cannot be required to accept the federal antitrust interpretation, it is interesting to note the federal holdings. See Freeman v San Diego Ass'n of Realtors (9th Cir 2003) 322 F3d 1133 (11 broker associations, which combined MLS databases into single database operated by single entity that charged fixed, inflated fee to subscribers, engaged in price-fixing in violation of the prohibition of contracts in restraint of trade (15 USC §1(e)) under the Sherman Antitrust Act (15 USC §§1-7)); Pope v Mississippi Real Estate Comm'n (5th Cir 1989) 872 F2d 127 (upholding tie-in requirement between board membership and right to join MLS); U.S. v Realty Multi-List, Inc. (5th Cir 1980) 629 F2d 1351 (exclusion from MLS had anticompetitive effects and, unless counterbalanced by some direct benefit to competition, regulation must fail).

§2.42 G. Extent of Broker's Authority to Bind Principal

A real estate broker's authority is limited to that actually or ostensibly conferred by the principal. CC §2315. See §§2.28-2.30. The listing agreement should specify the extent of the broker's authority because an agent is authorized by statute to do everything "necessary or proper and usual" to carry out the purpose of the agency. CC §2319. Such broad implied authority invites disputes about what is proper and usual.

Generally, the broker's authority is limited to negotiating the terms of the transaction; the broker has no authority to bind the seller contractually, even if the buyer makes an unconditional offer on all the terms and conditions in the listing agreement. Holland v McCarthy (1916) 173 C 597, 160 P 1069. For example, the broker may not deliver the seller's deed to the buyer (Keele v Clouser (1928) 92 CA 526, 268 P 682) or sign a contract of sale on the principal's behalf (Lyne v Bonner (1954) 129 CA2d 743, 277 P2d 941) without specific authority to do so. Only the principal, not a third party, can raise the issue of the broker's lack of authority. Mitchell v Locurto (1947) 79 CA2d 507, 179 P2d 848.

A broker is rarely given express authority to accept the purchase price, as distinguished from the deposit (see §2.68), on the seller's behalf. Sarten v Pomatto (1961) 192 CA2d 288, 13 CR 588 (seller authorized broker to accept deposit). Even when the broker is expressly authorized to negotiate the sale, courts have not found authority to collect the purchase price. Ernst v Searle (1933) 218 C 233, 22 P2d 715. If the seller has led the buyer to believe that the agent can receive the purchase price, however, then ostensible authority exists (see §2.30), and the seller will not be able to recover from the buyer if the broker misappropriates the funds. Hicks v Wilson (1925) 197 C 269, 240 P 289. A broker who does receive the purchase price for the seller must be careful to comply with the Real Estate Law and the regulations of the Real Estate Commissioner on brokers' handling of clients' funds. Bus & P C §10145; 10 Cal Code Regs §§2830.1-2836.

IV. CONTRACTING WITH BROKER

A. Elements Applicable to Both Sellers and Buyers

§2.43 1. Essentials of Contract

Although an agency relationship and its attendant duties can be established without a written contract, a broker without a writing that satisfies the Statute of Frauds (CC §1624(a)(4)) will be unable to recover his or her commission. See §2.48. Furthermore, the broker will not be able to recover in quantum meruit the value of any brokerage or other incidental services provided to the client (see §§2.44-2.53). Phillippe v Shapell Indus. (1987) 43 C3d 1247, 241 CR 22. Written broker-principal contracts generally grant limited agency authority to the broker and obligate the principal to compensate the broker if specified conditions are fulfilled.

Like any contract, an agreement with a broker requires these elements (CC §1550):

- Parties capable of contracting (see CC §§1556-1559);
- The parties' consent (see CC §§1565-1590);
- A lawful object (see CC §§1595-1599); and
- Sufficient cause or consideration (see §§1605-1615).

Contracts with real estate licensees are subject to additional requirements. A copy of any agreement authorizing or employing a real estate licensee must be delivered to the person signing it when the signature is obtained. Bus & P C §10142; see §2.88. The broker's right to a commission depends on express authorization in the agreement. See §2.97. Other requirements are discussed in connection with the forms for listing agreement provisions that satisfy those requirements. See §§2.62-2.88.

On contracting with brokers, see California Real Estate Brokers: Law and Litigation, chap 2 (Cal CEB 2009).

2. Statute of Frauds

§2.44 a. Contents of Required Writing

An "agreement authorizing or employing an agent, broker, or any other person to purchase or sell real estate," to lease real property for a period longer than 1 year, or to procure a purchaser, seller, lessee, or lessor of real property, must be in writing. CC §1624(a)(4). To satisfy the Statute of Frauds, the writing need not contain all elements of a binding contract. See §2.43. If the document includes the essential terms of the agreement but their meaning is unclear, "the memorandum is sufficient under the Statute of Frauds if extrinsic evidence clarifies the terms with reasonable certainty and the evidence as a whole demonstrates that the parties intended to be bound." Sterling v Taylor (2007) 40 C4th 757, 55 CR3d 116. The writing must, however, establish the broker's authority to act for the principal (see §2.45), identify the property (see §2.46), and be signed by the principal (see §2.47).

The words "or any other person" in CC §1624(a)(4) mean that even a finder or an intermediary (see §2.5) must have a written agreement in order to recover a fee in a real property transaction. Under the Statute of Frauds, a finder cannot assert a breach of contract claim based on an oral agreement. Unlike a broker, however, a finder is free to pursue an ordinary misrepresentation claim or sue on a theory of estoppel. See §§2.50-2.51. Compare CC §1624(a)(4) with Zalk v General Exploration Co. (1980) 105 CA3d 786, 164 CR 647, in which a finder was able to enforce an oral agreement because the agreement was for locating a company to be acquired rather than locating real property. For further discussion of the Statute of Frauds, see §4.13.

§2.45 (1) Employment of Broker

The writing must establish the fact of employment for the broker to act or to negotiate a sale for the owner. CC §1624(a)(4). Some courts have interpreted this requirement rather strictly, so any memorandum on which a broker intends to rely should use words that have typically denoted an employment relationship, such as "appoint," "employ," or "authorize." (Other language that has been held sufficient to show an employment relationship includes: "you may have the listing with one or two other realtors" (Rogers v Grua (1963) 215 CA2d 1, 30 CR 39), "go ahead" (Spitler v Avery (1961) 189 CA2d 811, 11 CR 724), and "take it up" (Bruner v Van's Mkts. (1951) 103 CA2d 135, 229 P2d 56).

Some older cases dealing with this issue have held that writings that set forth the terms on which the principal is willing to sell or buy, without specific language appointing the broker, do not comply with CC §1624(a)(4). See, e.g. Franklin v Hansen (1963) 59 C2d 570, 30 CR 530. In Seck v Foulks (1972) 25 CA3d 556, 102 CR 170, however, the Statute of Frauds was satisfied when the broker jotted down the terms of the sale, including the commission, on the back of his business card and had the seller date and sign it, despite the fact that no specific language of appointment was used. In the authors' opinion, language that demonstrates an agreement to pay a commission or fee for specified services or objectives accomplished should be sufficient to satisfy the requirement, especially if the client has accepted the benefit of the broker's performance.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.46 (2) Identity of Property

The property that is the subject of the agency relationship must be described with sufficient clarity to permit reasonable identification. See, e.g., Wolf v Price (1966) 244 CA2d 165, 52 CR 889. An exact legal description is not required, and parol evidence may be admitted to explain the meaning of the written description. A description such as "my house," when the principal owned only one house in the state, has been held sufficient. Pray v Anthony (1929) 96 CA 772, 274 P 1024. Courts have not, however, admitted extrinsic evidence to identify the property when a writing contained no description at all. Proulx v Sacramento Valley Land Co. (1912) 19 CA 529, 126 P 509.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.47 (3) Execution of the Writing

The writing need not be signed by both parties, but it must be subscribed by or on behalf of "the party to be charged." CC §1624(a). The signature of an authorized agent of a corporation is sufficient to bind the corporation. Marks v Walter G. McCarty Corp. (1949) 33 C2d 814, 205 P2d 1025.

The Statute of Frauds is intended to establish the existence of a contract (but not necessarily all its terms); therefore, the writing can be signed after the services are rendered or even after the sale has closed and title has been transferred. Estate of Rule (1944) 25 C2d 1, 152 P2d 1003, disapproved on other grounds in Parsons v Bristol Dev. Co. (1965) 62 C2d 861, 44 CR 767. A promissory note for the broker's commission, signed by the seller after closing, satisfied the Statute of Frauds in Fellom v Adams (1969) 274 CA2d 855, 79 CR 633.

In commercial or industrial transactions, there may be no memorandum on which the broker can rely until the parties execute the contract of sale or the escrow instructions. Both escrow instructions (Beazell v Schrader (1963) 59 C2d 577, 30 CR 534) and a deposit receipt (Mitchell v Johnston (1956) 140 CA2d Supp 982, 298 P2d 170) have been held sufficient as writings, but the broker's rights are then contingent on completion of the sale. If a sale is not completed because of mutual rescission or the buyer's breach (Paulsen v Leadbetter (1968) 267 CA2d 148, 72 CR 819), CC §1624(a) requires a showing that the seller and the broker intended the commission to be earned on execution of the agreement. In Rader Co. v Stone (1986) 178 CA3d 10, 223 CR 806, a broker in a lease transaction was able to satisfy the subscription requirement because a landlord's agent had signed a Realtor Registration Form completed by the broker, which, together with a series of other papers, was held to constitute a written contract to pay a commission.

NOTE: The Uniform Electronic Transactions Act (CC §§1633.1-1633.17) provides that an electronic record ("a record created, generated, sent, communicated, received, or stored by electronic means") or electronic signature will satisfy the legal requirements of a writing or signature. CC §1633.8. The term "electronic signature" should be distinguished from the term "digital signature." A digital signature is a digital code that can be attached to an electronically transmitted message to uniquely identify the sender so that if even one bit in the message changes on its way, the signature will not verify at the other end. The use of digital signatures is permitted in transactions with public entities. Govt C §16.5; 2 Cal Code Regs §§22000-22005.

See also the federal Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act (15 USC §§7001-7031) (Pub L 106-229, 114 Stat 464), which also validates electronic signatures and records. State law, however, may supersede the federal law if certain conditions are met. 15 USC §7002.

§2.48 b. No Compensation Without a Writing

The California Supreme Court has extensively analyzed the writing requirement and concluded that, except in very limited situations (i.e., when the broker has performed services that are not broker related or incidental to broker-related services), a broker cannot recover compensation from his or her principal unless the broker has a writing that satisfies the Statute of Frauds. Phillippe v Shapell Indus. (1987) 43 C3d 1247, 241 CR 22. Courts have applied the statute to broker-client relationships in virtually all categories of real property transactions, including options (Pacific S.W. Dev. Corp. v Western Pac. R.R. (1956) 47 C2d 62, 301 P2d 825), assignments of contracts to purchase real property (King v Tilden Park Estates (1958) 156 CA2d 824, 320 P2d 109), and exchanges (Zimmerman v Bank of America (1961) 191 CA2d 55, 12 CR 319).

Without a writing, the value of the broker's services cannot be recovered, even if the principal has taken advantage of the services and substantially benefited from them. Augustine v Trucco (1954) 124 CA2d 229, 268 P2d 780. Thus, a buyer's broker or cooperating brokers may have an enforceable right to share the commission only if there is an express written agreement, e.g., the seller's broker's listing agreement. See Enea v Coldwell Banker/Del Monte Realty (Bankr ND Cal 1998) 225 BR 715. The broker may be able to recover a commission for the sale of personal property (Marks v Walter G. McCarty Corp. (1949) 33 C2d 814, 205 P2d 1025) or for various nonbrokerage services without a writing as long as they are separable from real estate brokerage services (Carey v Cusack (1966) 245 CA2d 57, 54 CR 244). In Hughes v Morrison (1984) 160 CA3d 103, 206 CR 321, brokers were permitted to recover a commission when the original sale agreement was replaced by a new agreement between the same parties for the same property. The court concluded that, because the original broker played a substantial part in the renegotiation, the original commission agreement should apply. When the client clearly has used and benefited from the broker's services, a writing may be found to satisfy the Statute of Frauds even if it is not in the form of a traditional listing or commission agreement. Torelli v J.P. Enters. (1997) 52 CA4th 1250, 61 CR2d 76 (see §2.52); Rader Co. v Stone (1986) 178 CA3d 10, 223 CR 806 (see §2.47).

The Statute of Frauds, however, does not require that the writing indicate the amount of the broker's commission or even the broker's entitlement to compensation. Barcelon v Cortese (1968) 263 CA2d 517, 69 CR 657. If a writing demonstrates that the principal authorized the agent to act on his or her behalf, other provisions of the agreement, including the commission, may be proved by parol evidence. Bruner v Van's Mkts. (1951) 103 CA2d 135, 229 P2d 56. If no evidence exists in writing or from parol evidence on the amount of the commission, the courts will infer an agreement to pay reasonable compensation. Beazell v Schrader (1963) 59 C2d 577, 30 CR 534.

© The Regents of the University of California

c. Theories of Recovery in Absence of a Writing

§2.49 (1) Quasi-Contract Theory

A broker cannot recover from the seller on a quasi-contract theory, regardless of the amount of time, expense, or effort spent or substantial benefit conferred on the seller. Beazell v Schrader (1963) 59 C2d 577, 30 CR 534. This theory of recovery has been so roundly rejected by the courts that many recent attempts by brokers to recover commissions do not even raise it.

Brokers have, however, been allowed to recover under oral agreements on a quasi-contractual basis for nonbrokerage expenditures such as survey costs, costs of locating suitable sites, subdivision costs, and other indirect selling expenses. Carey v Cusack (1966) 245 CA2d 57, 54 CR 244. These nonbrokerage services must be clearly separable from brokerage services. Carey v Cusack, supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.50 (2) Fraud and Misrepresentation

To recover for fraud, a plaintiff must show reasonable reliance on a defendant's misrepresentation. A licensed broker cannot, as a matter of law, establish this required element of reasonable reliance to recover on the client's oral promise to pay a commission because the broker is presumed to know that an oral commission agreement is unenforceable. Phillippe v Shapell Indus. (1987) 43 C3d 1247, 241 CR 22. The court, however, suggested that there may be other promises on which a licensed broker could reasonably rely and thus assert a claim for fraud. As an example, the court cited the broker's reliance on a representation that a written agreement had been executed in Owens v Foundation for Ocean Research (1980) 107 CA3d 179, 165 CR 571, overruled on other grounds in Applied Equip. v Litton Saudi Arabia Ltd. (1994) 7 C4th 503, 28 CR2d 475.

In contrast to a broker, a finder may seek recovery based on the principal's alleged misrepresentation, and the fact that an unwritten promise is unenforceable as a contract does not preclude an action for fraud. A finder, however, may seek recovery based on the principal's alleged misrepresentation and the unenforceability of an unwritten promise as a contract does not preclude an action for fraud. Tenzer v Superscope, Inc. (1985) 39 C3d 18, 216 CR 130. Mere proof that a promise was made but not fulfilled, however, is insufficient to prove fraud. Something more than nonperformance is required to prove an intent not to perform on the promise. (The court reserved for another day the question of whether licensed brokers may invoke equitable remedies to avoid the results of the Statute of Frauds.)

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.51 (3) Estoppel Theory

The theory of estoppel usually does not help a broker trying to collect a commission in the absence of a written contract. Many seller-broker disputes seem to present a prima facie case for invoking the equitable estoppel doctrine to prevent a reneging principal from raising the defense of the Statute of Frauds. See 13 Witkin, Summary of California Law, Equity §191 (10th ed 2005); Domarad v Fisher & Burke (1969) 270 CA2d 543, 76 CR 529. Courts generally have been unwilling to apply this theory, however, because it would permit precisely what the Statute of Frauds was designed to prevent: the oral assertion of a promise with no easily available contravention other than denial. Phillippe v Shapell Indus. (1987) 43 C3d 1247, 241 CR 22 (requires showing of actual fraud); Pacific S.W. Dev. Corp. v Western Pac. R.R. (1956) 47 C2d 62, 301 P2d 825. But compare these cases with Tenzer v Superscope, Inc. (1985) 39 C3d 18, 216 CR 130, in which the supreme court held that a finder, who need not be a licensed real estate broker, was entitled to invoke the doctrine of estoppel to overcome the Statute of Frauds.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.52 d. Exceptions

The courts have recognized a few exceptions to the CC §1624(a)(4) requirement that agreements authorizing or employing brokers to purchase or sell real estate or to procure a buyer must be in writing:

- An agreement between a finder and a broker, providing for a fee to the finder for introducing the broker to prospective sellers or buyers, need not be in writing because no buyer or seller is a party to the agreement. Grant v Marinell (1980) 112 CA3d 617, 169 CR 414.
- Commission-sharing agreements between brokers are not subject to the Statute of Frauds. Iusi v Chase (1959) 169 CA2d 83, 337 P2d 79. See §2.52.
- An agreement between two brokers who cooperate in selling real property need not be in writing. Holland v Morgan & Peacock Prop. Co. (1959) 168 CA2d 206, 335 P2d 769. The cooperating broker's share can be recovered from the listing broker if the listing broker has a written contract with the seller, or if the entire commission has already been paid to the listing broker. Iusi v Chase, supra.
- A broker who is acting as a member of a joint venture is a principal rather than an agent, and the broker's authority to bind the coventurers in a real property transaction need not be in writing. Foote v Posey (1958) 164 CA2d 210, 330 P2d 651.
- An implied covenant of good faith may permit the broker to recover a commission even when the listing agreement has expired. For instance, in Torelli v J.P. Enters. (1997) 52 CA4th 1250, 61 CR2d 76, the buyer's offer included a commission to be split between Torelli and the buyer's broker. The seller's counteroffer did not change the commission terms. The counteroffer expired unaccepted. Later, the buyer's broker drafted an offer deleting Torelli's commission and reduced the purchase price by the amount of the commission. The court held that a seller cannot agree to sell the property to the buyer on substantially the same terms as those in a counteroffer without paying the broker the contemplated commission; to do so violates the implied covenant of good faith. The broker's right to a commission—predicated on finding a buyer for the seller—is not necessarily defeated just because the buyer and seller do not sign the precise piece of paper embodying the commission agreement, as long as a sufficient writing exists. 52 CA4th at 1257.

§2.53 e. Modification of Listing Agreement

Contracts that are required to be in writing generally cannot be modified orally. CC §1698(c). However, an oral modification is enforceable if it is executed (CC §1698(b)), with the result that an oral modification to a listing agreement is enforceable if both parties have carried out the terms of the modification. Realty Corp. of Am. v Burton (1958) 162 CA2d 44, 327 P2d 948. For example, if a broker agrees to accept a smaller commission, and the owner then agrees to accept a lower sale price, the broker is bound by the oral modification. Fidler v Schiller (1963) 212 CA2d 569, 28 CR 48; Lawrence Block Co. v Scholer (1958) 166 CA2d 608, 333 P2d 396. A broker's oral agreement to receive his commission from the proceeds of the buyer's installment payments was enforced when the broker accepted partial payment from the downpayment and first installment but demanded full payment when the buyer defaulted on a later installment. Waldteufel v Sailor (1944) 62 CA2d 577, 144 P2d 894. In commercial transactions, it is not unusual for commissions to be renegotiated, and the better practice is to commit all such agreements to writing.

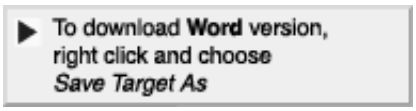
§2.54 B. Seller-Broker Listing Agreements



A listing agreement is simply an employment contract between the seller and the broker, and the parties are free to negotiate any terms that are lawful. Blank v Borden (1974) 11 C3d 963, 115 CR 31. The performance required of the broker, and the conditions under which the seller will become obligated to pay the broker's compensation, must be in the listing agreement. Blank v Borden, supra; Seck v Foulks (1972) 25 CA3d 556, 102 CR 170; see §2.97. Three commonly used types of listing agreements have evolved in the industry: exclusive right to sell (see §§2.56-2.57), exclusive agency (see §2.58), and open listing (see §2.59). See, e.g., Tetrick v Sloan (1959) 170 CA2d 540, 339 P2d 613; CC §1086(f). The three types of listings are distinguished by the conditions that must be fulfilled for the broker to earn the commission. No particular form of agreement is required to be used; the parties' rights are established by the provisions actually included in their agreement. It is the contents of the agreement, not its title, that the courts will consider controlling. See, e.g., Coleman v Mora (1968) 263 CA2d 137, 69 CR 166.

Any one of the common forms of listing agreement, or any hybrid agreement negotiated by the parties, may include a net listing arrangement (see §2.61) and may either allow or require the broker to cooperate (i.e., share his or her commission with other brokers) and refer the listing to the local multiple listing service (see §2.75), or both.

§2.55 1. Listing Agreement Checklist

When reviewing a listing agreement prepared by the broker, the attorney for the seller should pay particular attention to the following provisions:

- The amount of the commission, usually expressed as a percentage of the sales price. By law, all commissions are negotiable. Bus & P C §10147.5.
- The term of the listing agreement. A 3- or 6-month term is common. If the term is too short, the broker may not be sufficiently motivated to sell the property. If the term is too long, it may be difficult to switch to another broker if the first broker is not putting forth sufficient effort.
- Does the agreement specifically list what constitutes "due diligence" by the broker and the specific tasks the broker will perform? Industry forms rarely include such provisions.
- The language concerning when the commission is earned (as opposed to the time when payment is due). From the seller's standpoint, the commission should not be earned until the sale has closed, unless closing was prevented by the seller's breach of the sales agreement. Listing agreements frequently provide that the commission is earned when the broker produces a "ready, willing, and able buyer." Under such a provision, the seller may be liable for the commission once an unconditional contract is accepted, even if the buyer later refuses to complete the transaction (although the broker may have difficulty proving that a defaulting buyer was, in fact, "ready, willing, and able"). See §2.108. Some listing agreements may contain ambiguous language concerning when the commission is earned. For example, some may state that the commission is earned when the property is "sold."
- Is the broker expected to cooperate with other brokers, and, if so, how the commission is to be shared?
- Will the listing be submitted to the multiple listing service (residential transactions)? Sellers usually wish to get the broadest possible exposure of the property as quickly as possible.
- The price and terms of sale. Even though the sale terms in a listing agreement do not obligate the seller to sell to a buyer whose offer meets the terms, the broker may have earned a commission when he or she procures an offer that meets the specified terms.

2. Types of Listing Agreements

a. Exclusive Right to Sell

§2.56 (1) General Characteristics

An exclusive right-to-sell listing gives the broker the right to the commission if the property is sold during the listing period by anyone, including the seller. Lowe v Loyd (1949) 93 CA2d 684, 209 P2d 851. The broker need not be the procuring cause (see §§2.99-2.105) and need not even have contacted the buyer. Berzon v U.L.C. Corp. (1969) 274 CA2d 690, 79 CR 277.

Listing agreements are strictly construed against the broker. Courts will not find an exclusive right-to-sell agreement unless it is expressly so designated. E.A. Strout W. Realty v Gregoire (1950) 101 CA2d 512, 225 P2d 585. An exclusive right-to-sell agreement must contain a definite termination date. If it does not, the broker will be subject to disciplinary action by the Real Estate Commissioner if the broker seeks compensation under the agreement. Bus & P C §10176(f). Provisions in many exclusive right-to-sell agreements entitle the broker to the full commission if the seller withdraws the property from the market (Baumgartner v Meek (1954) 126 CA2d 505, 272 P2d 552) or does something to the property that makes it unmarketable or substantially reduces its marketability (Alderson v Houston (1908) 154 C 1, 96 P 884). In Blank v Borden (1974) 11 C3d 963, 115 CR 31, the validity of such a commission-on-withdrawal clause was upheld. See §2.114.

Many exclusive right-to-sell listing agreements also contain a safety or protection clause that entitles the broker to the commission if the property is sold within a stated period after the listing expires to a buyer identified during the term of the listing. See §§2.115-2.116 on the safety clause. The CAR exclusive authorization and right-to-sell form is set forth in §2.57. It contains a commission-on-withdrawal clause and a limited safety clause.

Exceptions to ownership, title and authority are as follows: _____
6. MULTIPLE LISTING SERVICE: All terms of the transaction, including financing, if applicable, will be provided to the selected MLS for publication, dissemination and use by persons and entities on terms approved by the MLS. Seller authorizes Broker to comply with all applicable MLS rules. MLS rules allow MLS data about the Property to be made available by the MLS to additional Internet sites unless Seller gives Broker instructions to the contrary. MLS rules generally provide that residential real property and vacant lot listings be submitted to the MLS within 48 hours or some other period of time after all necessary signatures have been obtained on the listing agreement. However, Broker will not have to submit this listing to the MLS or can prohibit this listing or certain information from or about it from appearing on certain internet sites if, Broker submits to the MLS such an instruction signed by Seller (C.A.R. 8. BROKER'S AND SELLER'S DUTIES: Broker agrees to exercise reasonable effort and due diligence to achieve the purposes of this Agreement. Unless Seller gives Broker written instructions to the contrary, Broker is authorized to order reports and disclosures as appropriate or necessary and advertise and market the Property by any method and in any medium selected by Broker, including MLS and the Internet, and, to the extent permitted by these media, control the dissemination of the information submitted to any medium. Seller agrees to consider offers presented by Broker, and to act in good faith to accomplish the sale of the Property by, among other things, making the Property available for showing at reasonable times and referring to Broker all inquiries of any party interested in the Property. Seller is responsible for determining at what price to list and sell the Property. Seller further agrees to indemnify, defend and hold Broker harmless from all claims, disputes, litigation, judgments and attorney fees arising from any incorrect information supplied by Seller, or from any material facts that Seller knows but fails to disclose.

Broker shall, as soon as practicable, disclose to Seller any election to act as a dual agent representing both Seller and Buyer. If a Buyer is procured directly by Broker or an associate-licensee in Broker's firm, Seller hereby consents to Broker acting as a dual agent for Seller and such Buyer. In the event of an exchange, Seller hereby consents to Broker collecting compensation from additional parties for services rendered, provided there is disclosure to all parties of such agency and compensation.     D. Other Sellers: Seller understands that Broker may have or obtain listings on other properties, and that potential buyers may consider, make offers on, or purchase through Broker, property the same as or similar to Seller's Property. Seller consents to Broker's representation of sellers and buyers of other properties before, during and after the end of this Agreement.
    E. Confirmation: If the Property includes residential property with one-to-four dwelling units, Broker shall confirm the agency relationship described above, or as modified, in writing, prior to or concurrent with Seller's execution of a purchase agreement.

§2.58 b. Exclusive Agency

An exclusive agency listing provides that the broker is the only agent authorized to procure offers to purchase the property and is entitled to a commission even if another broker sells the property. Fleming v Dolfin (1931) 214 C 269, 4 P2d 776; Carlsen v Zane (1968) 261 CA2d 399, 67 CR 747. If the owner independently procures a buyer and sells the property, however, the broker is not entitled to the commission. Faith v Meisetschlager (1919) 45 CA 7, 187 P 61. But see Coldwell Banker & Co. v Pepper Tree Office Ctr. Assocs. (1980) 106 CA3d 272, 165 CR 51, disapproved on other grounds in Barrett v Bank of America (1986) 183 CA3d 1362, 1371, 229 CR 16, in which the broker was denied a commission under an exclusive agency listing despite the absence of a finding that the owner was the procuring cause. Most brokers will not accept a listing when the seller reserves the right to sell the property on its own or with other exclusions to the broker's exclusive right to sell.

If the broker presents an offer from a ready, willing, and able buyer before a purchase agreement is executed by a buyer independently procured by the seller, the broker is entitled to the commission. Houston v Williams (1921) 53 CA 267, 200 P 55. Conversely, if the seller procures a buyer and enters into a purchase agreement before the broker procures a buyer, the broker's right to the commission is lost. California Land Sec. Co. v Ritchie (1919) 40 CA 246, 180 P 625. Sale of the property by the owner automatically terminates an exclusive agency listing, even if the broker is not notified. E.A. Strout W. Realty v Gregoire (1950) 101 CA2d 512, 225 P2d 585. If the owner sells to a prospective buyer who had already been contacted by the listing broker, the broker must show that he or she was the procuring cause. Nelson v Mayer (1954) 122 CA2d 438, 265 P2d 52. For discussion of procuring cause, see §§2.99-2.105.

As with an exclusive right-to-sell agreement, courts will not find the existence of an exclusive agency in the absence of clear and specific language. Summers v Freeman (1954) 128 CA2d 828, 276 P2d 131. An exclusive agency listing must also contain a definite termination date. Bus & P C §10176(f).

c. Open Listing

§2.59 (1) General Characteristics

An open (or general) listing requires the broker to be the procuring cause (see §§2.99-2.105) of a buyer who is ready, willing, and able (see §§2.106-2.109) to purchase the property on the terms of the listing. An owner can employ a number of brokers to sell the same property under open listing agreements, and the first broker to procure a buyer earns the commission. Marks v Rowley (1951) 102 CA2d 619, 228 P2d 29. If the owner sells the property without a broker's assistance, all open listings are terminated, and no commission is owed. Edens v Stoddard (1954) 126 CA2d 56, 271 P2d 610. Unlike either of the exclusive listings, an open listing agreement need not contain a definite termination date. Bus & P C §10176(f); Summers v Freeman (1954) 128 CA2d 828, 276 P2d 131. An open listing without a specified duration may be revoked by the owner at any time before the broker produces a buyer, regardless of the efforts the broker may have made before termination. Tetrick v Sloan (1959) 170 CA2d 540, 339 P2d 613; Heffernan v Merrill Estate Co. (1946) 77 CA2d 106, 174 P2d 710. The only limitation on the owner's right to terminate is that the revocation must be made in good faith. Tetrick v Sloan, supra.

6. MULTIPLE LISTING SERVICE: All terms of the transaction, including financing, if applicable, will be provided to the selected MLS for publication, dissemination and use by persons and entities on terms approved by the MLS. Seller authorizes Broker to comply with all applicable MLS rules. MLS rules allow MLS data to be made available by the MLS to additional Internet sites unless Broker gives the MLS instructions to the contrary. MLS rules generally provide that residential real property and vacant lot listings be submitted to the MLS within 48 hours or some other period of time after all necessary signatures have been obtained on the listing agreement. However, Broker will not have to submit this listing to the MLS if, within that time, Broker submits to the MLS a form signed by Seller (C.A.R. Form SEL or the locally required form) instructing Broker to withhold the listing from the MLS. Information about this listing will be provided to the MLS of Broker's selection unless a form instructing Broker to withhold the listing from the MLS is attached to this listing Agreement.
7. SELLER REPRESENTATIONS: Seller represents that, unless otherwise specified in writing, Seller is unaware of: (i) any Notice of Default recorded against the Property; (ii) any delinquent amounts due under any loan secured by, or other obligation affecting, the Property; (iii) any bankruptcy, insolvency or similar proceeding affecting the Property; (iv) any litigation, arbitration, administrative action, government investigation or other pending or threatened action that affects or may affect the Property or Seller's ability to transfer it; and (v) any current, pending or proposed special assessments affecting the Property. Seller shall promptly notify Broker in writing if Seller becomes aware of any of these items during the Listing Period or any extension thereof.
8. BROKER'S AND SELLER'S DUTIES: Broker agrees to exercise reasonable effort and due diligence to achieve the purposes of this Agreement. Unless Seller gives Broker written instructions to the contrary, Broker is authorized to order reports and disclosures as appropriate or necessary and advertise and market the Property by any method and in any medium selected by Broker including MLS and the Internet, and, to the extent permitted by these media, control the dissemination of the information submitted to any medium. Seller agrees to consider offers presented by Broker, and to act in good faith to accomplish the sale of the Property by, among other things, making the Property available for showing at reasonable times and referring to Broker all inquiries of any party interested in the Property. Seller is responsible for determining at what price to list and sell the Property. Seller further agrees to indemnify, defend and hold Broker harmless from all claims, disputes, litigation, judgments and attorney fees arising from any incorrect information supplied by Seller, or from any material facts that Seller knows but fails to disclose.
9. DEPOSIT: Broker is authorized to accept and hold on Seller's behalf any deposits to be applied toward the purchase price.
10. AGENCY RELATIONSHIPS:
    A. Disclosure: If the Property includes residential property with one-to-four dwelling units, Seller shall receive a "Disclosure Regarding Agency Relationships" (C.A.R. Form AD) form prior to entering into this Agreement.
    B. Seller Representation: Broker shall represent Seller in any resulting transaction, except as specified in paragraph 4F.
    C. Possible Dual Agency With Buyer: Depending upon the circumstances, it may be necessary or appropriate for Broker to act as an agent for both Seller and buyer, exchange party, or one or more additional parties ("Buyer"). Broker shall, as soon as practicable, disclose to Seller any election to act as a dual agent representing both Seller and Buyer. If a Buyer is procured directly by Broker or an associate-licensee in Broker's firm, Seller hereby consents to Broker acting as a dual agent for Seller and such Buyer. In the event of an exchange, Seller hereby consents to Broker collecting compensation from additional parties for services rendered, provided there is disclosure to all parties of such agency and compensation. Seller understands and agrees that: (i) Broker, without the prior written consent of Seller, will not disclose to Buyer that Seller is willing to sell the Property at a price less than the listing price; (ii) Broker, without the prior written consent of Buyer, will not disclose to Seller that Buyer is willing to pay a price greater than the offered price; and (iii) except for (i) and (ii) above, a dual agent is obligated to disclose known facts materially affecting the value or desirability of the Property to both parties.
    D. Other Sellers: Seller understands that Broker may have or obtain listings on other properties, and that potential buyers may consider, make offers on, or purchase through Broker, property the same as or similar to Seller's Property. Seller consents to Broker's representation of sellers and buyers of other properties before, during and after the end of this Agreement.
    E. Confirmation: If the Property includes residential property with one-to-four dwelling units, Broker shall confirm the agency relationship described above, or as modified, in writing, prior to or concurrent with Seller's execution of a purchase agreement.
11. SECURITY AND INSURANCE: Broker is not responsible for loss of or damage to personal or real property, or person, whether attributable to use of a keysafe/lockbox, a showing of the Property, or otherwise. Third parties, including but not limited to, appraisers, inspectors, brokers and prospective buyers, may have access to, and take videos and photographs of, the interior of the Property. Seller agrees: (i) to take reasonable precautions to safeguard and protect valuables that might be accessible during showings of the Property; and (ii) to obtain insurance to protect against these risks. Broker does not maintain insurance to protect Seller.
12. KEYSAFE/LOCKBOX: A keysafe/lockbox is designed to hold a key to the Property to permit access to the Property by Broker, cooperating brokers, MLS participants, their authorized licensees and representatives, authorized inspectors, and accompanied prospective buyers. Broker, cooperating brokers, MLS and Associations/Boards of REALTORS® are not insurers against injury, theft, loss, vandalism or damage attributed to the use of a keysafe/lockbox. Seller does (or if checked ☐ does not) authorize Broker to install a keysafe/lockbox. If Seller does not occupy the Property, Seller shall be responsible for obtaining occupant(s)' written permission for use of a keysafe/lockbox.
13. SIGN: Seller does (or if checked ☐ does not) authorize Broker to install a FOR SALE/SOLD sign on the Property.
14. EQUAL HOUSING OPPORTUNITY: The Property is offered in compliance with federal, state and local anti-discrimination laws.
15. ATTORNEY FEES: In any action, proceeding or arbitration between Seller and Broker regarding the obligation to pay compensation under this Agreement, the prevailing Seller or Broker shall be entitled to reasonable attorney fees and costs, except as provided in paragraph 19A.

18. SUCCESSORS AND ASSIGNS: This Agreement shall be binding upon Seller and Seller's successors and assigns.
19. DISPUTE RESOLUTION:
    A. MEDIATION: Seller and Broker agree to mediate any dispute or claim arising between them out of this Agreement, or any resulting transaction, before resorting to arbitration or court action, subject to paragraph 19B(2) below. The parties shall have the right to discovery in accordance with Code of Civil Procedure §1283.05. In all other respects, the arbitration shall be conducted in accordance with Title 9 of Part III of the California Code of Civil Procedure. The filing of a court action to enable the recording of a notice of pending action, for order of attachment, receivership, injunction, or other provisional remedies, shall not constitute a waiver of the mediation and arbitration provisions.

§2.61 d. Net Listing Provisions

Under a net listing provision, the broker's commission is earned in any manner the parties agree on (e.g., any one of the listing agreements in §§2.56-2.60), but the amount of the commission is the amount by which the actual sale price exceeds a stated net price to the seller. See Smith v Zak (1971) 20 CA3d 785, 98 CR 242; §2.132. If the property is sold for the specified net sum or a lesser amount, the broker does not earn a commission. Haigler v Donnelly (1941) 18 C2d 674, 117 P2d 331. Although legal, a net listing provision provides an obvious opportunity for abuse by brokers, and its use will be scrutinized closely by the Real Estate Commissioner under the authority of Bus & P C §10176(g).

Both brokers and owners should be cautious about using net listing arrangements. A broker should explain the nature and effect of a net listing to the principal and should make sure that the net sale price is set by the owner. Any facts tending to indicate that the broker influenced the price may subject the broker to liability for secret profits (see §§2.139, 2.160) and disciplinary action by the Real Estate Commissioner (see §2.171).

A broker must ordinarily disclose to the seller any amounts he or she will receive as a result of the sale (see §§2.139, 2.160) and any interest, direct or indirect, the broker has in the purchase of the property (see §§2.137-2.141). There is some authority for easing these disclosure requirements when the property is sold under a net listing (Pascal v Cotton (1962) 205 CA2d 597, 23 CR 357; see §2.138), but the continuing vitality of this exception is open to question and, in any event, it is strictly limited to sales in which the net price was set by the seller without any influence from the broker. Sierra Pac. Indus. v Carter (1980) 104 CA3d 579, 163 CR 764. Courts have held the broker to a strict duty to disclose when the broker has influenced the setting of the net price. Sierra Pac. Indus. v Carter, supra.

§2.62 3. Forms and Provisions for Listing Agreements

The listing agreement may be prepared in any format acceptable to the seller and the broker. The Residential Listing Agreement (Exclusive Authorization and Right to Sell) published by the California Association of Realtors® is set forth in §2.57. Most standard listing agreements tend to favor brokers, and the seller's attorney should make any changes or include any additional provisions on an addendum or rider attached to the listing agreement. See §2.55 for a checklist of what to review. Alternatively, the attorney may prefer to draft the listing agreement either in the form of a letter agreement employing the broker or in a formally prepared and executed employment contract.

Circumstances will dictate the format to use in a given transaction. Brokers (especially residential brokers) usually prefer their own forms and more readily accept riders to those forms. Using a rider presents some risk of contradiction between the agreement and the rider, and both should be carefully reviewed for consistency. The form agreement should include a notation that it is subject to the attached rider. The seller and the broker should initial the notation and sign the addendum.

The form provisions in §§2.64-2.88 are intended to enable the seller's attorney to draft a complete listing agreement, letter agreement, or rider to a standard form agreement. Some of the provisions are found in standard listing agreements; others are generally omitted from standard agreements but should be added by addendum or separate agreement when needed by the parties. Many of the provisions are not essential to every listing agreement, but they could be useful to cover a situation in a particular transaction.

The seller's attorney, whether using a standard form listing agreement or an attorney-drafted form, should carefully review or draft each provision, paying special attention to the provision specifying when the commission is earned and the other provisions discussed in §§2.63-2.88.

a. Termination Date

§2.63 (1) Need for Definite Date

An exclusive agency or right-to-sell listing agreement must contain a definite termination date for the listing period. See §§2.56-2.58. A broker is subject to discipline under Bus & P C §10176(f) for attempting to collect compensation under either of these exclusive listings if it does not have a termination date. The broker who has performed fully under an exclusive listing agreement without a termination date may, however, be able to recover the commission if the seller has benefited from those services. See Babcock v Houston (1973) 33 CA3d 858, 109 CR 454 (transaction was completed, no serious moral turpitude was involved, defendant was guilty of greatest moral fault, and applying rule would give unjust enrichment). Schaffter v Creative Capital Leasing Group, LLC (2008) 166 CA4th 745, 752, 83 CR3d 19 (argument that commission agreement was unenforceable because it lacked definite termination date was waived when defendant failed to notify broker of issue). If the broker has not performed, the owner can rescind the agreement and the broker cannot enforce it. Nichols v Boswell-Alliance Constr. Corp. (1960) 181 CA2d 584, 5 CR 546.

The termination date need not be a calendar date, but it must be determinable from the listing agreement itself without reference to some external event. Dale v Palmer (1951) 106 CA2d 663, 235 P2d 650. Listing agreements that provide for the listing to continue until revoked by the seller, but in no event later than a definite calendar date, have been upheld. See Lowe v Loyd (1949) 93 CA2d 684, 209 P2d 851. A listing that purported to renew automatically after a period of time, unless actively terminated by the seller, would not be enforceable. Dale v Palmer, supra.

_ _[I/We]_ _ employ you as broker

[Alternative 2: Employment contract]

Comment: The need to use language indicating the broker's employment is discussed in §2.45. Most standard agreements specify at the beginning the type of listing agreement that the broker is employed under (open, exclusive agency, or exclusive right-to-sell listing). These specifications actually define the conditions under which the commission is earned, so they should also be included in the provision on the broker's commission. See the form provision in §2.79.

The event triggering the broker's right to a commission must occur during the term of the listing or an agreed-upon extension. This event is usually the formation of a contract between the buyer and the seller that ultimately leads to a closed transaction. Close of escrow, which may dictate when the commission is due or may be a condition to payment of the commission, may occur after the term has ended. Although listing agreements are commonly granted for a specific number of days or months, a specific termination date is recommended for clarity. For a further discussion of the termination date, see §2.63.

The Statute of Frauds does not require that the listing agreement contain an exact legal description of the property as long as the description adequately identifies the property. CC §1624(a); see §2.46. Whether a street address, legal description, or assessor's parcel number is used, accuracy is vital. The purchase agreement will probably describe the property as it is shown in the listing agreement, and the buyer may have a defense against performing if the description in the purchase agreement is not correct. See California Real Property Remedies and Damages §4.19 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002) on the uncertainty of a legal description as a defense to the enforcement of the purchase agreement.

b. Listing Price

§2.65 (1) Negotiating Listing Price; Method of Payment

To meet the seller's objectives and be competitively priced, the listing price should be the product of discussion and negotiation between the broker and the seller. Occasionally, brokers overstate the value of the property to obtain the listing and eliminate competition. This practice is unethical and may subject the broker to discipline. See Bus & P C §§10176-10177. Moreover, brokers should avoid the pitfall of overstating the value to indulge a seller who is not committed to selling the property at a realistic market price.

The broker earns the commission by producing a buyer who can pay cash. See §§2.106-2.109 on when the commission is earned. If the seller is willing to accept some other arrangement for all or part of the purchase price, such as the buyer's note or the buyer's assumption of an existing loan, the listing agreement should specify that the price may be paid by alternative methods. This expands the circumstances under which a broker will have earned a commission even if the seller refuses to sell. More importantly, to market the property effectively, the broker should understand what terms the seller is willing to entertain. See §2.106; see chap 9 on financing terms in the purchase and sale agreement. Most often, these details can be left to the seller and a potential buyer to negotiate.

2.66-1 Listing price

[Alternative 1: Minimum total price]

The minimum price for sale of the property shall be _ _[dollar amount]_ _ paid as follows: _ _[specify, e.g., all cash to seller/in installments as follows: _ _[specify installments]_ _/(other consideration)]_ _.

[Alternative 2: Net price to seller]

The price of the property shall not be less than _ _[dollar amount]_ _ net to seller after deduction of all expenses and costs of sale payable by the seller, except _ _[specify expenses seller will bear]_ _.

Comment: Unless the seller requires the transaction to be structured as an installment sale or an exchange, the listing agreement generally need not specify the payment terms in any greater detail than "cash to seller." If the seller wishes the transaction to be an installment sale under IRC §453, the listing agreement should specify the maximum downpayment the seller will accept, the amounts of future installments, their payment dates, and the interest rate. See chap 9 on installment sales.

Occasionally, the seller may want to specify details of payment of the purchase price in the listing agreement, and the form can be modified for that purpose. In most circumstances, this clause can be used in an exchange without modification if the seller intends the disposition of the property to be the first leg of a tax-deferred exchange (except in the unlikely event such exchange is intended to be direct (i.e., in exchange for the buyer's property) or simultaneous). Because cash is typically generated from the buyer of the taxpayer's property, the broker's commission can usually be paid from the leg of the transaction that generates the cash. See generally Real Property Exchanges (3d ed Cal CEB 2002).

For discussion of net listings, see §2.61.

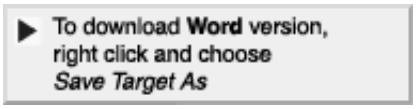
c. Buyer's Deposit

§2.67 (1) Broker Holding Buyer's Deposit

In most localities, by custom and practice escrow agents rather than brokers hold the buyer's deposit. Parties, however, may disagree on who should hold the deposit: an escrow company, the broker, or the seller. An escrow holder may be unsatisfactory because, in a dispute between the buyer and the seller, it will almost invariably refuse to release the deposit to either party unless all parties sign written release instructions, preferring to interplead the funds in the buyer-seller litigation. Custody of the deposit by the broker or the seller exposes the buyer (or seller, see §2.62) to the risk of loss or misappropriation by the other. Brokers are often reluctant to hold funds because of the complex rules on broker trust accounts. See Bus & P C §10145; 10 Cal Code Regs §§2830.1-2836, 2950-2951.



If the broker will hold a deposit, the listing agreement must address the broker's authorization to do so. An express authorization to accept the deposit for the seller renders the broker the seller's agent in holding the deposit, which shifts the risk of loss of the deposit to the seller. Hicks v Wilson (1925) 197 C 269, 240 P 289; Warshauer v Bauer Constr. Co. (1960) 179 CA2d 44, 3 CR 570. Without express authorization, the broker holds the deposit as the buyer's agent and the buyer retains the risk of loss. Clark v Patterson (1931) 213 C 4, 300 P 967. On the broker's duty to account for funds held, see §2.149.

§2.68 (2) Form: Authority to Accept Deposits

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§2.64-2.88.

2.68-1 Authority to accept deposits

[If applicable, add one or both of the following options]

[Option 1: Authority to Accept Deposit Only as Seller's/Buyer's Agent]

You are authorized on seller's behalf to accept and hold buyer's deposit. On seller's acceptance of buyer's offer, you are instructed to _ _[e.g., deliver the deposit to seller/place buyer's deposit in escrow]_ _.

[Option 2: Authority to accept deposit only as buyer's agent]

You are authorized to accept buyer's deposit only as buyer's agent until seller's acceptance. The deposit is to be considered accepted only when seller accepts buyer's offer.

Comment: Generally, escrow agents—not brokers—hold the buyer's deposit. See discussion in §2.67. This provision, therefore, generally would not be necessary. If the parties do elect to have the broker hold the deposit, however, this type of provision clarifies for whose benefit the broker holds the deposit. The issue of for whose benefit the broker holds the deposit is affected by the type of agency relationship that the broker and the seller confirm before execution of the listing. See §§2.31-2.37. If the seller and the broker agree that the broker will be a dual agent, the clause in Option 2 above should be used to limit the seller's exposure regarding the deposit. This provision will protect the seller from the broker's loss or misappropriation of the deposit.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.69 (3) Handling Deposits

When the deposit is deemed paid can depend on the method of payment and intent of the parties. If both the buyer and the seller intend a check to be held as the deposit without being cashed, the broker's receipt of the check will be treated as payment of the deposit. Beazell v Kane (1954) 127 CA2d 593, 274 P2d 224. If it is not expressly agreed that the check is to be held without being cashed, the check does not constitute payment of the deposit until it is honored by the drawee bank. Mendiondo v Greitman (1949) 93 CA2d 765, 209 P2d 817.

Whatever methods of payment and custody of the deposit are used, the deposit never becomes the property of the broker. The broker holds the deposit as agent, escrow holder, and trustee for the respective parties. Savage v Mayer (1949) 33 C2d 548, 203 P2d 9; Holloway v Thiele (1953) 116 CA2d 68, 253 P2d 131.

2.70-1 Handling deposits

Buyer's deposit shall be made only _ _[e.g., in cash or cashier's check or a combination]_ _. All checks must be made to the order of _ _[e.g., seller/name of escrow holder]_ _, and all deposits must be delivered by broker to _ _[e.g., seller/escrow holder]_ _ by the next business day following receipt.

Comment: Lawyers frequently require that payments be made in cash or by cashier's check because payment on personal checks, even certified checks, can be stopped. See §4.37. If payment on a check is stopped, both parties may be unsure of their rights regarding the property until the dispute over the check is resolved, and the effect may be to remove the property from the market for a considerable period.

This provision requires immediate delivery of any deposit, which is in the best interest of both the seller and broker. It minimizes the chances for loss or misappropriation by the broker and reduces the time in which the buyer might regret making an offer and decide to stop payment. The broker is required to place the deposit into a neutral escrow depository or broker's trust account no later than 3 business days after receipt. Bus & P C §10145; 10 Cal Code Regs §2832. The buyer retains title to the deposit and is entitled to its return until the seller unconditionally accepts the offer. Norris v San Mateo County Title Co. (1951) 37 C2d 269, 231 P2d 493.

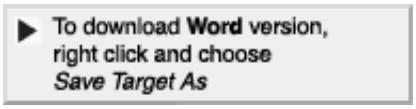
d. Escrow Holder

§2.71 (1) Selection of Escrow Holder



Sellers may wish to designate a particular escrow holder in the listing agreement. The seller's right to select the escrow holder is constrained by CC §2995, which bars a developer from requiring use of an escrow holder in which it has a financial interest, and by the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act of 1974 (RESPA) (12 USC §§2601-2617), which prohibits most sellers from conditioning the sale on the use of a particular title company (12 USC §2608).

2.72-1 Designating escrow holder

Escrow shall be opened with _ _[name and address of escrow holder]_ _, and shall close no sooner than _ _[date]_ _, and no later than _ _[date]_ _. Broker shall deliver any deposits broker holds under the terms of this listing agreement to the escrow holder on execution by both buyer and seller of a purchase and sale agreement.

Comment: Whether or not an escrow holder is named, the seller may wish to set out the closing date to prevent closing before possession can be delivered in order to ensure that closing occurs by a particular date or to specify a closing date in a particular tax year. On prohibitions on the seller selecting the escrow holder, see §2.71.

2.73-1 Possession

Buyer shall have possession of the property _ _[e.g., at close of escrow/no sooner than _ _[date]_ _]_ _.

Comment: If the date of delivery of possession is important to the seller, it should be a condition of the listing agreement. Close of escrow is usually given as the time for delivering possession, but an owner-occupant may need more time to move. Unless given additional time to vacate, an owner who is unable to deliver possession at the close of escrow may be in violation of the purchase agreement.

f. Multiple Listing Services

§2.74 (1) Use of MLS

Most residential sellers prefer to use the Multiple Listing Service (MLS) for maximum market exposure, fastest sale, and highest price. It may be a breach of the broker's fiduciary duty to persuade the seller to keep the listing out of the MLS. On broker's fiduciary duties, see §§2.124-2.126; 2 Miller & Starr, California Real Estate §5:32 (3d ed 2000). If the use of a multiple listing service is mandatory, subscribing brokers will be required by the terms of the MLS to submit all their listings or submit a waiver of the MLS signed by the seller.

Some localities have an MLS that will accept commercial listings as well as residential, but they are not generally used for commercial transactions. If used, the listing should address whether the listing broker is required to cooperate (i.e., share its commission) with outside brokers. Sellers often will insist on cooperation and a 50/50 commission split. There are, however, situations in which the seller agrees to some other arrangement (e.g., no cooperation required during first week or two of listing); and in some markets, the listing agreement may customarily provide only for the listing broker's compensation and the buyer's agent must obtain compensation from its own client. In any event, both broker and seller would be served by a clear written expression of their understanding.

2.75-1 Broker cooperation; submitting listing to MLS

[Option 1: Residential]

Broker _ _[may/will]_ _ refer the listing to the _ _[name]_ _ multiple listing service and is authorized to cooperate with and compensate any of its members in securing a purchaser.

[Option 2: Commercial]

Broker _ _[may/will]_ __cooperate with other brokers in the marketing and sale of the property _ _[from the outset/after the first _ _[number]_ _ days]_ _ of the listing period _ _[and shall share its commission equally with any broker procuring a buyer]*_ _.

Comment: It could be argued that reference to the MLS is authorized when that conforms with local practice, even if the listing agreement is silent. The broker may want to attempt to sell the property without the services of a cooperating broker to avoid having to split the commission, but may also want to retain the right to submit the listing to the MLS, if necessary. The provision on using an MLS can be either permissive or mandatory.

g. Broker's Compensation

§2.76 (1) Conditioned on Closing

Whichever type of listing is used, the seller should try to negotiate for payment of the commission only if the sale is consummated. On conditional commission provisions, see §§2.110-2.113. On the differences among open listings, exclusive listings, and exclusive right-to-sell listings, see §§2.56-2.60; on net listings, see §2.61. Specific language that conditions payment on the closing actually occurring is preferable to the more common clauses providing that the commission is "payable" on or at close of escrow. Otherwise, the seller may be liable for the commission if the broker produces a buyer who makes an unconditional offer accepted by the seller, whether or not procured under the listing terms and regardless of whether the sale is consummated. See §§2.106-2.109.

When payment of the commission is conditioned on closing, the seller cannot avoid payment by unreasonably preventing the closing and will be liable for the payment if the failure to close arose from the seller's lack of good faith. Stromer v Browning (1966) 65 C2d 421, 55 CR 18; Seck v Foulks (1972) 25 CA3d 556, 102 CR 170. See §2.114. Nevertheless, the broker should attempt to negotiate inclusion of explicit language to this effect at the end of the commission-on-closing clause (e.g., commission is earned if closing prevented by seller's default).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.77 (2) Not Conditioned on Closing

If the commission is not to be conditioned on closing, the seller may wish to provide that, in the event of the buyer's breach, the commission will be limited to half of any damages the seller recovers, not to exceed the agreed commission amount. Language in this form is similar to that in the California Association of Realtors® Residential Purchase Agreement and Joint Escrow Instructions. See §6.24. The purchase agreement may contain such a provision even if the listing agreement does not, in which event the purchase agreement controls (provided that the broker is a party to that agreement), despite the commission provision in the listing agreement. This contract term is not always favorable to the broker. If the amount retained or recovered by the seller is nominal, the broker's recovery may be an inconsequential amount, regardless of any other theory of recovery the broker may have had. Chapman v Gilmore (1963) 221 CA2d 506, 34 CR 515.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.78 (3) Payment From Deposits

Frequently, the only amount really at issue as damages is the deposit, and the seller's right to retain the deposit is governed by statutes on liquidated damages. CC §§1671-1681. If the purchase agreement contains a valid liquidated damages provision and either the listing or purchase agreement provides that the broker shall recover half of any funds recovered by the seller, then the broker is entitled to half of the deposit.

An interesting question arises when the seller elects to return a deposit to which the seller is or may be entitled. Does the provision entitling the broker to half of any funds recovered by the seller entitle the broker to a commission equal to half of the deposit? In Kritt v Athens Hills Dev. Co. (1952) 109 CA2d 642, 241 P2d 606, the listing agreement provided that the commission should be one-half of any deposit retained, but it did not obligate the seller to retain the deposit. It was held that the seller had no obligation to retain deposits to which it was otherwise entitled, and the broker recovered nothing for sales on which deposits were returned.

_ _[number]_ _ percent of the first _ _[dollar amount]_ _ of the gross selling price plus _ _[number]_ _ percent of the gross selling price in excess of _ _[dollar amount]_ _, if, during the listing period or any extension of it,

[Alternative 2: Flat fee]

the total sum of _ _[dollar amount]_ _ regardless of the selling price _ _[or the type or value of any property accepted in exchange for the property]_ _, if, during the listing period or any extension of it,

[Alternative 3: Balance over net price to seller]

the balance of the selling price in excess of _ _[dollar amount]_ _ net to seller after payment of all other costs in escrow except the following, which shall be paid by seller out of seller's net price: _ _[list expenses to be paid by seller]_ _, if, during the listing period or any extension of it,

[Continue]

[Add one of the following alternative circumstances under which the commission is earned]

broker procures a buyer on the terms stated in this listing agreement or any other terms acceptable to seller.

[Alternative 2: Exclusive agency listing]

any broker procures a buyer on the terms stated in this listing agreement or any other terms acceptable to seller.

anyone (including seller) procures a buyer on the terms stated in this listing agreement or any other terms acceptable to seller.

[Continue]

[If applicable, add one or more of the following options]

[Option 1: Commission conditioned on closing or seller's default]

Payment of the commission shall be conditioned on close of escrow, but it shall be deemed earned even if escrow fails to close if that failure arose from seller's default or lack of good faith.

[Option 2: Commission on buyer's default]

If buyer defaults, the commission shall be payable only if and when seller collects damages from buyer, by suit or otherwise, and in an amount not to exceed half the damages recovered after first deducting seller's actual out-of-pocket expenses incurred in connection with the sale (e.g., title, escrow, and inspections and reports prepared at seller's expense), and any expenses of collection, including but not limited to attorney fees.

[Option 3: Withdrawal-from-sale clause]

A commission of _ _ percent of _ _[dollar amount]_ _ shall be payable if seller withdraws the property from sale, encumbers it, leases it, or otherwise renders it unmarketable during the listing period.

[Continue]

[Add if a printed or form agreement is used; set words below in not less than 10-point bold type to comply with Bus & P C §10147.5]

Notice: The amount or rate of real estate commissions is not fixed by law. They are set by each broker individually and may be negotiable between the seller and broker.

Comment: The commission amount is usually a percentage of the sales price or, sometimes, a flat fee. When the amount is a percentage, a sliding scale may be used if the percentage decreases (or, rarely, increases) over a certain sales price. Sometimes commission agreements provide for different percentages to be payable, depending on whether the listing broker sells the property or whether a selling broker procures the buyer.

The language in the last paragraph of the form is required by Bus & P C §10147.5. It must be included in any printed or form agreement for the sale of a mobilehome or residential real property containing four or fewer residential units. Section 10147.5 also provides that the amount or rate of compensation shall not be printed in the agreement. See also §2.118.

2.80-1 Buyers excluded from agency

Broker shall not be entitled to a commission for any sale, lease, exchange, or other transfer to any of the following persons: _ _[names]_ _.

Comment: A seller who signs a listing agreement with a particular broker may already have brought the property to the attention of one or more prospective buyers or have an obligation to another broker under a safety clause. See form in §2.82; for discussion, see §§2.116-2.117. This provision enables the seller to eliminate any claim by the present broker for a commission on a sale to such a buyer. Under an exclusive right-to-sell listing (see §2.56), this provision is essential to protect the seller in the event of a sale to a buyer with whom the seller or previous broker had negotiated. It is also useful in an open listing (see §2.59) or an exclusive agency listing (see §2.58) to avoid disputes about who procured a particular buyer. Many brokers will not accept a listing containing such an exclusion, or will do so only if the exclusion is limited to a brief period of time.

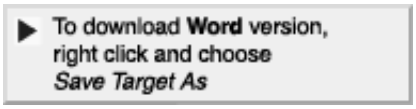
h. Safety Clauses

§2.81 (1) Purpose of Safety Clause



A safety clause or protection clause entitles the broker to the commission if the property is sold within a stated period, after the listing expires, to a buyer identified during the listing term. This type of clause is often contained in exclusive right-to-sell listing agreements. Under the form safety clause in §2.82, the broker must actually have negotiated with the buyer regarding the property. Simank Realty, Inc. v DeMarco (1970) 6 CA3d 610, 86 CR 212. The broker need not be the procuring cause of the eventual sale (Leonard v Fallas (1959) 51 C2d 649, 335 P2d 665; Delbon v Brazil (1955) 134 CA2d 461, 285 P2d 710) unless the agreement calls for that level of involvement (E.A. Strout W. Realty Agency, Inc. v Lewis (1967) 255 CA2d 254, 62 CR 918). See §§2.116-2.117 for discussion of safety clauses and the broker's right to recovery.

2.82-1 Sale after termination of listing agreement (safety or protection clause)

If, within _ _[number]_ _ days after termination of the listing period or any extension of it, seller agrees to _ _[sell/lease/transfer/exchange]_ _ the property _ _[to/with]_ _ anyone with whom broker negotiated concerning a possible purchase of the property during the listing period or any extension of it, broker shall be entitled to a commission in the amount and on the terms specified in the listing agreement. Seller shall have no obligation to pay broker any commission under this provision unless, no later than _ _[number]_ _ days after expiration of the listing period or any extension of it, broker provides to seller a written list of all parties with whom broker has negotiated for a possible sale.

[Option: Termination on broker's failure to perform]

This provision shall not apply if seller terminates this agreement because of broker's failure to perform or breach of duty, or if, during the period specified in this provision, a sale of the property is procured by any other licensed real estate broker under a valid listing agreement.

Comment: The protection period is normally 30 to 60 days and requires the broker to notify the owner in writing of parties with whom the broker has negotiated. This language only requires the seller to agree to the sale within the protection period. The more common, but ambiguous language, "if the property is sold during the term," should be interpreted the same way. The escrow closing date may determine when the commission is payable, but it should not be relevant to the question of whether it has been earned. See discussion of when property is considered sold in §2.112.

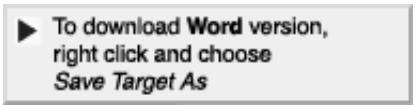
i. Broker's Duties

§2.83 (1) Duties Performed; Use of Due Diligence

The duties performed by the broker vary widely. Preprinted listing agreements rarely spell out the broker's duties. Promotion of a particular property may require services beyond those ordinarily performed by the broker selected. If the seller has specific requirements in mind for the broker's performance, the agreement should specify the services to be provided so that the owner can revoke the listing if the broker fails to perform. The seller may, for example, want the agreement to specify marketing services such as advertising (names of newspapers, frequency of appearance of ads, emphasis of special features), signs (size, design, location, wording), photographs, putting the property on the multiple listing service, and restrictions on showing the premises.



The broker's failure to exercise due diligence in performing its duties may enable the owner to revoke the listing. Coleman v Mora (1968) 263 CA2d 137, 69 CR 166; see §2.148 for discussion of the owner's right to revoke. Whether the broker has performed with due diligence is a question of fact that depends on the circumstances of each case (Whitney Inv. Co. v Westview Dev. Co. (1969) 273 CA2d 594, 78 CR 302), and there are no precise standards for ascertaining whether the broker's duty has been breached. If the seller has listed the services expected of the broker in as much detail as possible, it will be easier to establish a breach if it occurs. The broker's failure to advertise and offer the property to the public in a nondiscriminatory fashion may breach the duty to exercise due diligence by failing to reach a market that would otherwise be available. Crowell v Issacs (1965) 235 CA2d 755, 45 CR 566.

§2.85 j. Arbitration

Any contract to convey real property, or that contemplates a future real property sale, that provides for binding arbitration must set forth the arbitration clause in specific statutory language, and in a particular type size and style. CCP §1298. The arbitration clause also must be separately initialed by the parties. The statutory language informs the parties that, by selecting arbitration, they are waiving certain rights, including the right to a jury trial. These requirements have resulted in litigation over the enforceability of arbitration clauses that did not include the statutory language, or were not in the proper typeface, or were not separately initialed by both parties. Following the United States Supreme Court's decision in Doctor's Assocs., Inc. v Casarotto (1996) 517 US 681, 134 L Ed 2d 902, 116 S Ct 1652, §1298 is probably invalid under the Supremacy Clause as an unreasonable restraint on arbitration in contravention of the federal Arbitration Act (9 USC §§1-16), at least in any transaction involving any aspect of interstate commerce (e.g., any transaction where financing is contemplated). Hedges v Carrigan (2004) 117 CA4th 578, 11 CR3d 787.

When the statute is enforceable, however, failure to follow its requirements will, at a minimum, invalidate the clause and may invalidate the entire contract. As long as it remains on the books, the careful drafter should continue to observe its technical requirements, even though a straightforward arbitration clause (in normal typeface and without separate initials) should be enforceable. The parties can alter the language of the notice to change, e.g., the method of arbitration or the right to discovery. The parties may also want to specify the number of arbitrators (American Arbitration Association Real Estate Industry Arbitration Rule 19 provides for one arbitrator unless the contract provides for more), the place in which the arbitration will be held, and the time period within which the hearing shall be scheduled.

For an example of an arbitration clause, see paragraph 19B of the California Association of Realtors® Residential Listing Agreement (Exclusive Authorization and Right to Sell) in §2.57. On alternative dispute resolution, see California Real Estate Brokers: Law and Litigation, chap 6 (Cal CEB 2009).

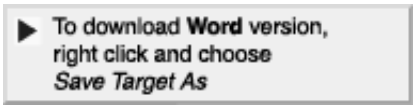
k. Execution; Acknowledgment of Receipt

§2.86 (1) Execution

A broker's listing agreement must be executed by the party to be charged. CC §1624(a). The issue of proper execution typically arises in the context of the broker's attempt to recover a commission, and usually the primary question is whether the party executing the listing agreement was actually the owner of the property. Sometimes a principal of the entity that owns the property executes the listing without properly indicating his or her title or authority. At the very least, the person signing the listing will be bound; but the broker should attempt to ensure that the actual seller is bound as well. Sound practice calls for both the seller and the broker to sign the agreement. If a letter agreement is used, the broker should be required to sign and return a copy to the seller. See form 2.88-1. For a discussion of signature requirements in business contracts, see Drafting Business Contracts: Principles, Techniques & Forms §§18.1-18.33 (Cal CEB 1994).



If a rider or an amendment is added to a printed form, both the form and the final page of the separately drafted provisions should be dated and signed and the other pages initialed. See form 2.87-1 for a provision stating the number of pages or provisions of the rider.

The rider, containing _ _[pages/provisions]_ _ numbered _ _ through _ _, executed concurrently with this agreement and appended to it, constitutes an integral part of this agreement and supersedes inconsistent provisions in it.

Comment: Brokers often prefer to use standard listing agreement forms even when they intend to alter them substantially; these altered terms are set out in a specially drafted rider. See §2.62. To make it clear that the printed form is part of a broader agreement, the rider should refer to the printed form.

Seller acknowledges receipt of a copy of this listing agreement.

[Alternative 2: Letter agreement mailed to broker]

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as evidence of your agreement to its terms.

Comment: These provisions are designed to protect the broker, who is required to give a copy of the agreement to the person signing it (Bus & P C §10142) and is subject to discipline for failure to do so (Bus & P C §10177). Failure to deliver a copy, however, will not affect the broker's right to a commission under a valid listing agreement. Summers v Freeman (1954) 128 CA2d 828, 276 P2d 131.

If the agreement takes the form of a letter to the broker, acknowledgment by the seller is unnecessary and the second alternative should be used to show the broker's assent to the terms of the listing agreement.

C. Buyer-Broker Agreements

§2.89 1. General Considerations

It is less common for brokers to earn their commissions from the buyer rather than the seller, although in some markets it is not unusual in certain kinds of commercial transactions for each party to pay its own broker's commission. Even when the broker is employed by the buyer, it is often understood that the buyer's broker must look to the seller to be paid a commission. In many buyer-broker agreements, the principal is a substantial commercial client interested in locating sites for new ventures, and the broker and the principal have worked together over time and have developed a relationship of mutual trust. For these reasons, their agreement is often not reduced to writing until a purchase agreement is executed. In this less formal atmosphere, it is important that the terms of the broker's employment be clearly expressed and understood by both the buyer and the broker. Oral agreements should be put in writing as soon as possible, even if only in the form of a letter, to avoid disputes and misunderstandings.

The buyer may still be liable to pay the broker commission even if the seller releases the buyer from liability for defaulting under the purchase agreement and failing to close escrow. Schaffter v Creative Capital Leasing Group, LLC (2008) 166 CA4th 745, 752, 83 CR3d 19 (consequences result when people cancel contracts without valid reason).

The various listing agreement provisions set forth in §§2.64-2.88 can be readily adapted for a buyer-broker agreement, as appropriate, regardless of whether a letter or an employment contract format is used. Provisions that might be desired by the buyer or the broker include employment of the broker and term of the agency (see §2.64), characteristics of the property sought, conditions under which the commission will be earned and by whom it will be paid (see §2.79), a safety clause (see §2.82), and the broker's duties (see §2.84).

In response to the opinion in Field v Century 21 Klowden-Forness Realty (1998) 63 CA4th 18, 73 CR2d 784 (buyer-broker has fiduciary duty to client; see §2.124), the California Association of Realtors® revised the buyer-broker agreement. There are now three standard forms: the Buyer Representation Agreement (Nonexclusive/Not for Compensation) (BRNN), the Buyer Representation Agreement—Exclusive (BRE), and the Buyer Representation Agreement—Non-Exclusive (BRNE). See §2.90 for form BRE. In general, the agreements do the following:

- Delineate the scope of the tasks and duties to be performed by buyer and broker;
- Consent to the broker's dual agency; and
- Limit the amount of time a buyer has to bring a legal claim against the broker.

CALIFORNIA ASSOCIATION OF REALTORS®

BUYER REPRESENTATION AGREEMENT - EXCLUSIVE

(C.A.R. Form BRE, Revised 4/07)

1. EXCLUSIVE RIGHT TO REPRESENT: _____ ("Buyer") grants _____ ("Broker") beginning on (date) _____ and ending at: (i) 11:59 P.M. on (date) _____, or (ii) completion of a resulting transaction, whichever occurs first ("Representation Period"), the exclusive and irrevocable right, on the terms specified in this Agreement, to represent Buyer in acquiring real property or a manufactured home. Broker agrees to exercise due diligence and reasonable efforts to fulfill the following authorizations and obligations. Broker will perform its obligations under this Agreement through the individual signing for Broker below, who is either Broker individually or an associate-licensee (an individual licensed as a real estate salesperson or broker who works under Broker's real estate license). Buyer agrees that Broker's duties are limited by the terms of this Agreement, including those limitations set forth in paragraphs 6 and 7.
2. AGENCY RELATIONSHIPS:
   A. DISCLOSURE: If the property described in paragraph 4 includes residential property with one to four dwelling units, Buyer acknowledges receipt of the "Disclosure Regarding Real Estate Agency Relationships" (C.A.R. Form AD) prior to entering into this Agreement.
   B. BUYER REPRESENTATION: Broker will represent, as described in this Agreement, Buyer in any resulting transaction.
   C. (1) POSSIBLE DUAL AGENCY WITH SELLER: (C)(1) APPLIES UNLESS C(2)(i) or (ii) is checked below.) Depending on the circumstances, it may be necessary or appropriate for Broker to act as an agent for both Buyer and a seller, exchange party, or one or more additional parties ("Seller"). Broker shall, as soon as practicable, disclose to Buyer any election to act as a dual agent representing both Buyer and Seller. If Buyer is shown property listed with Broker, Buyer consents to Broker becoming a dual agent representing both Buyer and Seller with respect to those properties. In event of dual agency, Buyer agrees that: (a) Broker, without the prior written consent of Buyer, will not disclose to Seller that the Buyer is willing to pay a price greater than the price offered; (b) Broker, without the prior written consent of Seller, will not disclose to Buyer that Seller is willing to sell Property at a price less than the listing price; and (c) other than as set forth in (a) and (b) above, a dual agent is obligated to disclose known facts materially affecting the value or desirability of the property to both parties.
   OR (2) SINGLE AGENCY ONLY: (APPLIES ONLY IF (i) or (ii) is checked below.)
   ☐ (i) Broker's firm lists properties for sale: Buyer understands that this election will prevent Broker from showing Buyer those properties that are listed with Broker's firm or from representing Buyer in connection with those properties. Buyer's acquisition of a property listed with Broker's firm shall not affect Broker's right to be compensated under paragraph 3. In any resulting transaction in which Seller's property is not listed with Broker's firm, Broker will be the exclusive agent of Buyer and not a dual agent also representing Seller.
   OR ☐ (ii) Broker's firm DOES NOT list property: Entire brokerage firm only represents buyers and does not list property. In any resulting transaction, Broker will be the exclusive agent of Buyer and not a dual agent also representing Seller.
   D. OTHER POTENTIAL BUYERS: Buyer understands that other potential buyers may, through Broker, consider, make offers on or acquire the same or similar properties as those Buyer is seeking to acquire. Buyer consents to Broker's representation of such other potential buyers before, during and after the Representation Period, or any extension thereof.
   E. NON CONFIDENTIALITY OF OFFERS: Buyer is advised that Seller or Listing Agent may disclose the existence, terms, or conditions of Buyer's offer unless all parties and their agent have signed a written confidentiality agreement. Whether any such information is actually disclosed depends on many factors, such as current market conditions, the prevailing practice in the real estate community, the Listing Agent's marketing strategy and the instructions of the Seller.
   F. CONFIRMATION: If the Property (as defined below) includes residential property with one to four dwelling units, Broker shall confirm the agency relationship described above, or as modified, in writing, prior to or coincident with Buyer's execution of a Property Contract (as defined below).
3. COMPENSATION TO BROKER:
   NOTICE: The amount or rate of real estate commissions is not fixed by law. They are set by each Broker individually and may be negotiable between Buyer and Broker (real estate commissions include all compensation and fees to Broker).
   Buyer agrees to pay to Broker, irrespective of agency relationship(s), as follows:
   A. AMOUNT OF COMPENSATION: (Check (1), (2) or (3). Check only one.)
   ☐ (1) _____ percent of the acquisition price AND (if checked ☐) $ _____.
   OR ☐ (2) $ _____.
   OR ☐ (3) Pursuant to the compensation schedule attached as an addendum _____.
   B. BROKER RIGHT TO COMPENSATION: Broker shall be entitled to the compensation provided for in paragraph 3A:
   (1) If during the Representation Period, or any extension thereof, Buyer enters into an agreement to acquire property described in paragraph 4, on those terms or any other terms acceptable to Buyer. (Broker shall be entitled to compensation whether any escrow resulting from such agreement closes during or after the expiration of the Representation Period.)
   (2) If, within ___ calendar days after expiration of the Representation Period or any extension thereof, Buyer enters into an agreement to acquire property described in paragraph 4, which property Broker introduced to Buyer, or for which Broker acted on Buyer's behalf. The obligation to pay compensation pursuant to this paragraph shall arise only if, prior to or within 3 (or ☐ _____) calendar days after expiration of this Agreement or any extension thereof, Broker gives Buyer a written notice of those properties which Broker introduced to Buyer, or for which Broker acted on Buyer's behalf.

(1) Upon completion of any resulting transaction, and if an escrow is used, through escrow.
(2) If acquisition is prevented by default of Buyer, upon Buyer's default.
(3) If acquisition is prevented by a party to the transaction other than Buyer, when Buyer collects damages by suit, settlement or otherwise. Compensation shall equal one-half of the damages recovered, not to exceed the compensation provided for in paragraph 3A, after first deducting the unreimbursed expenses of collection, if any.

D. BUYER OBLIGATION TO PAY COMPENSATION: Buyer is responsible for payment of compensation provided for in this Agreement. However, if anyone other than Buyer compensates Broker for services covered by this Agreement, that amount shall be credited toward Buyer's obligation to pay compensation. If the amount of compensation Broker receives from anyone other than Buyer exceeds Buyer's obligation, the excess amount shall be disclosed to Buyer and if allowed by law paid to Broker, or (if checked) ☐ credited to Buyer, or ☐ other _____.

E. Buyer hereby irrevocably assigns to Broker the compensation provided for in paragraph 3A from Buyer's funds and proceeds in escrow. (2) Buyer warrants that Buyer has no obligation to pay compensation to any other broker regarding property described in paragraph 4, unless Buyer acquires the following property(ies): _____.

4. PROPERTY TO BE ACQUIRED: Any purchase, lease or other acquisition of any real property or manufactured home described as follows: _____
Price range: $_____ to $ _____

5. INTERNET ADVERTISING: Buyer acknowledges and agrees that: (i) properties presented to them may have been marketed through a "virtual tour" on the Internet, permitting potential buyers to view properties over the Internet; (ii) neither the service provider nor Broker has control over who will obtain access to the service or what action such persons might take; and (iii) Broker has no control over how long the information concerning the properties will be available on the Internet.

6. BROKER AUTHORIZATIONS AND OBLIGATIONS:
A. Buyer authorizes Broker to: (i) locate and present selected properties to Buyer, present offers authorized by Buyer, and assist Buyer in negotiating for acceptance of such offers; (ii) assist Buyer with the financing process, including obtaining loan pre-qualification; (iii) upon request, provide Buyer with a list of professionals or vendors who perform the services described in the attached Buyer's Inspection Advisory; (iv) order reports, and schedule and attend meetings and appointments with professionals chosen by Buyer; (v) provide guidance to help Buyer with the acquisition of property; and (vi) obtain a credit report on Buyer.
B. For property transactions of which Broker is aware and not precluded from participating in by Buyer, Broker shall provide and review forms to create a property contract ("Property Contract") for the acquisition of a specific property ("Property"). With respect to such Property, Broker shall: (i) if the Property contains residential property with one to four dwelling units, conduct a reasonably competent and diligent on-site visual inspection of the accessible areas of the Property (excluding any common areas), and disclose to Buyer all facts materially affecting the value or desirability of such Property that are revealed by this inspection; (ii) deliver or communicate to Buyer any disclosures, materials or information received by, in the personal possession of or personally known to the individual signing for Broker below during the Representation Period; and (iii) facilitate the escrow process, including assisting Buyer in negotiating with Seller. Broker informs Buyer that it is in Buyer's best interest to obtain such Inspections.
B. Buyer acknowledges and agrees that Broker: (i) does not decide what price Buyer should pay or Seller should accept; (ii) does not guarantee the condition of the Property; (iii) does not guarantee the performance, adequacy or completeness of inspections, services, products or repairs provided or made by Seller or others; (iv) does not have an obligation to conduct an inspection of common areas or offsite areas of the Property; (v) shall not be responsible for identifying defects on the Property, in common areas or offsite unless such defects are visually observable by an inspection of reasonably accessible areas of the Property or are known to Broker; (vi) shall not be responsible for inspecting public records or permits concerning the title or use of the Property; (vii) shall not be responsible for identifying the location of boundary lines or other items affecting title; (viii) shall not be responsible for verifying square footage, representations of others or information contained in Investigation reports, Multiple Listing Service, advertisements, flyers or other promotional material; (ix) shall not be responsible for providing legal or tax advice regarding any aspect of a transaction entered into by Buyer or Seller; and (x) shall not be responsible for providing other advice or information that exceeds the knowledge, education and experience required to perform real estate licensed activity. C. Broker owes no duty to inspect for common environmental hazards, earthquake weaknesses, or geologic and seismic hazards. If Buyer receives the booklets titled "Environmental Hazards: A Guide for Homeowners, Buyers, Landlords and Tenants," "The Homeowner's Guide to Earthquake Safety," or "The Commercial Property Owner's Guide to Earthquake Safety," the booklets are deemed adequate to inform Buyer regarding the information contained in the booklets and, other than as specified in 6B above, Broker is not required to provide Buyer with additional information about the matters described in the booklets.

8. BUYER OBLIGATIONS:

A. Buyer agrees to timely view and consider properties selected by Broker and to negotiate in good faith to acquire a property. Within 5 (or ☐ _____) calendar days from the execution of this Agreement, Buyer shall provide relevant personal and financial information to Broker to assure Buyer's ability to acquire property described in paragraph 4. If Buyer fails to provide such information, or if Buyer does not qualify financially to acquire property described in paragraph 4, then Broker may cancel this Agreement in writing. D. Buyer is advised to read the attached Buyer's Inspection Advisory for a list of items and other concerns that typically warrant Inspections or investigation by Buyer or other professionals.

9. DISPUTE RESOLUTION:

Paragraph 9B(2) below applies whether or not the arbitration provision is initialed. Mediation fees, if any, shall be divided equally among the parties involved. If, for any dispute or claim to which this paragraph applies, any party commences an action without first attempting to resolve the matter through mediation, or refuses to mediate after a request has been made, then that party shall not be entitled to recover attorney's fees, even if they would otherwise be available to that party in any such action. THIS MEDIATION PROVISION APPLIES WHETHER OR NOT THE ARBITRATION PROVISION IS INITIALED.

B. ARBITRATION OF DISPUTES: (1) Buyer and Broker agree that any dispute or claim in Law or equity arising between them regarding the obligation to pay compensation under this Agreement, which is not settled through mediation, shall be decided by neutral, binding arbitration, including and subject to paragraph 9B(2) below. V. BROKER'S COMPENSATION

§2.91 A. Prerequisites to Broker's Right to Commission

To recover the commission, a broker must be licensed as required by Bus & P C §§10130 and 10150 (see §2.2), have a written commission agreement (or listing agreement) with the principal (CC §1624(a)(4); see §§2.43-2.53, 2.96), and have performed in accordance with that agreement (see §§2.99-2.113).

PRACTICE TIP: In most instances the written commission agreement or listing agreement will control the broker's right to a commission; however, it is equally permissible to include the commission provision in the purchase agreement, lease, or in other documents executed by the party obliged to pay the commission. For that reason, the attorney should carefully review all documents in the entire transaction.

On brokers' compensation and claims, see California Real Estate Brokers: Law and Litigation, chap 7 (Cal CEB 2009).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.92 1. Listing (Seller's) Broker

All types of listing agreements require the listing broker (sometimes referred to as the seller's broker) to demonstrate the procurement of a "ready, willing, and able" buyer to purchase the property on the terms in the listing agreement or other terms accepted by the seller. See §§2.106-2.109. The listing agreement may impose further requirements that must be met before the broker is entitled to the commission. See §§2.110-2.113.

In an open listing (see §2.59), the broker must be the "procuring cause" of the contract between the seller and the buyer in order to earn the commission. In an exclusive agency listing (see §2.58), the broker is entitled to a commission when the property is sold unless the seller was the "procuring cause" of the transaction. In an exclusive right-to-sell listing (see §2.56), the broker earns a commission regardless of who is the procuring cause of the sale. See §§2.99-2.105 for discussion of procuring cause.

§2.93 2. Cooperating (Buyer's) Broker

The buyer's broker in the usual transaction, often called a "cooperating broker" or "selling broker," must satisfy requirements in addition to those described in §2.92 to recover compensation.

DRAFTING TIP: Both brokers and attorneys should choose the term of reference carefully when describing the brokers. It is more difficult to follow a provision in a contract or cause of action that refers to "seller's broker" and "selling broker" because the terms are so similar. Although it is important to understand the synonyms, it is recommended that clearly distinguishable terms such as "listing broker" and "cooperating broker," or "seller's broker" and "buyer's broker," be used to distinguish between the two.

The cooperating broker can sue the listing broker for a share of any commission already paid and for a declaratory judgment that the cooperating broker is entitled to share in future payments, but the cooperating broker cannot recover from the listing broker any unpaid portion of the commission. Iusi v Chase (1959) 169 CA2d 83, 337 P2d 79. Although there must be an express agreement between the brokers to share the commission, the agreement need not be written. Iusi v Chase, supra.

In order to recover from the seller, the cooperating broker must either be a subagent of the listing broker or have a separate written agreement with the seller. Most standard residential purchase and sale agreements and many commercial purchase agreements and leases provide that the seller agrees to pay a commission to both the listing and buyer's brokers. This provision is probably a modification of the original listing agreement and most likely creates an independent contractual relationship between the seller and the buyer's broker for purposes of recovering a commission. See Olsen v Spomer (1961) 192 CA2d 99, 13 CR 392, on the listing broker's obligations to the cooperating broker when the seller fails to perform. A cooperating broker may also have an independent right to sue under a third party beneficiary theory, even if the broker is identified only by classification as a cooperating broker. Colbaugh v Hartline (1994) 29 CA4th 1516, 35 CR2d 213.

Under a multiple listing arrangement in which the listing broker offers to share compensation but does not appoint the cooperating broker as a subagent, the cooperating broker's right to recover a commission directly from the seller (as opposed to the claim against the listing broker for commission sharing) depends on the commission language, if any, in the listing agreement or purchase and sale agreement. For a further discussion multiple listing services, see §§2.39-2.41.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.94 3. License Required to Recover Compensation

An agreement to employ an unlicensed person to perform services that require a real estate license is void and unenforceable. Fellom v Adams (1969) 274 CA2d 855, 79 CR 633. The licensing requirements are intended to protect the public from incompetent and untrustworthy practitioners (Schantz v Ellsworth (1971) 19 CA3d 289, 96 CR 783), and, in furtherance of this policy, an unlicensed agent will not be permitted to recover a commission even if the services were rendered competently (Davis v Chipman (1930) 210 C 609, 293 P 40).

To recover the commission, a broker must be licensed at the time the cause of action for compensation accrues (Bus & P C §10136); the broker need not have been licensed when the listing was executed. Wise v Radis (1925) 74 CA 765, 242 P 90. Although the literal language of §10136 indicates that the crucial period of time is when the commission is earned, rather than when the services are actually performed, several cases have looked to legislative intent, rather than to the language of the statute, to permit recovery by a broker who was licensed at the time the services were performed, even though the license may have lapsed by the time the payment was due. See Estate of Lopez (1992) 8 CA4th 317, 10 CR2d 67 (broker licensed when probate sale was completed—and cause of action accrued—could recover despite lapse of license during time sale was arranged and confirmed); Cline v Yamaga (1979) 97 CA3d 239, 158 CR 598 (plaintiff licensed when work performed but not when commission payable); Page v Principe (1963) 220 CA2d 151, 33 CR 836 (license revoked after services rendered).

If the broker is unlicensed when the services are performed, and if the commission is paid in the form of a promissory note, the broker cannot recover on the note. Hoar v Tuley (1970) 12 CA3d 344, 90 CR 559. If the listing agreement employs the services of two people, one of whom is licensed and one of whom is not, neither person can recover. Estate of Prieto (1966) 243 CA2d 79, 52 CR 80. A mere finder or middleman, however, need not be licensed to recover a fee. Tenzer v Superscope, Inc. (1985) 39 C3d 18, 216 CR 130; see §2.5.

A broker who agrees to share a commission with an unlicensed individual may not be entitled to receive the commission unless the broker performed services, was ignorant of the activities conducted by the unlicensed person for which a license was required, and was not a joint venturer with the unlicensed person. Preach v Monter Rainbow (1993) 12 CA4th 1441, 16 CR2d 320.

A law firm partner who holds a California real estate broker's license may represent a seller who agrees to pay the firm a real estate brokerage commission in lieu of an hourly fee for legal services, but no one in the firm who does not hold a license may perform any acts for which a license is required. 88 Ops Cal Atty Gen 203 (2005).

ETHICAL CONSIDERATIONS: It may be dangerous to blur the line between acting as an attorney in a real estate transaction and also acting as a licensed real estate broker. Aside from the obvious question of whether the attorney's malpractice insurer would cover the attorney or the firm for the attorney's acts as a broker, the duties of an attorney and a broker are separate and distinct and may actually conflict. For instance, a broker representing a seller may have an affirmative duty of disclosure to the buyer but, if simultaneously acting as the seller's attorney, that same broker would have an ethical duty to preserving the seller-client's confidence.

§2.95 4. Written Contract Required

Under the Statute of Frauds, an agreement authorizing or employing a broker to purchase or sell real property or to introduce, find, or procure a buyer or seller of real property for compensation is not enforceable unless the agreement is in writing. CC §1624(a)(4). See §§2.44-2.53. A broker may have introduced the buyer and the seller, negotiated the contract between them, and helped to consummate the transaction, yet have no basis to recover a commission without a written agreement.

A memorandum of the agreement to satisfy the Statute of Frauds may be found in one paper or in several documents, including an exchange of letters or telegrams or both. King v Stanley (1948) 32 C2d 584, 588, 197 P2d 321. See also Seck v Foulks (1972) 25 CA3d 556, 567, 102 CR 170 (it was "of no moment" that "surrounding memorandum" was not signed because it was "clearly relevant" to same subject matter). Once there is a written agreement, the commission amount and payment terms can be modified by an oral agreement (although confirmation in writing is preferable to avoid possible confusion or later dispute). CC §1698(b); Realty Corp. of Am. v Burton (1958) 162 CA2d 44, 327 P2d 948.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.96 5. Broker Must Not Represent Self

A provision in a purchase and sale agreement that allows a commission to be paid to a broker who is also the buyer is unenforceable. Parties representing themselves cannot claim a commission because they have not provided brokerage services, i.e., they have not represented another. Horning v Shilberg (2005) 130 CA4th 197, 205, 29 CR3d 717 ("Horning did not act as a broker by performing services for another for compensation he expected to receive as a broker. Because Horning, as principal, was not entitled to a real estate commission in the first instance, he cannot successfully claim a lost commission when escrow did not close"). However, Horning was entitled to receive the difference between the purchase price and the fair market value on the date of the breach. CC §3306. Accordingly, had Horning sought to recover for having received a reduction in the purchase price under §3306, and presented evidence of the fair market value, the result would have been different.

NOTE: Some attorneys, noting that brokers often receive commissions when representing themselves, argue that the Horning holding resulted from the fact that the broker was attempting to recover a commission based on a breach of the purchase contract. They suggest that this should be distinguished from the situation in which a broker seeks a commission based on a written commission agreement for a completed transaction in which the broker represented himself or herself. In many cases, however, the issue is moot because the self-representing agent is licensed with a broker who is the one to whom the commission actually is paid (even though the agent ultimately may receive practically all of the commission paid to the broker).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.97 6. Contract Provisions Govern

When a valid listing agreement exists, the broker's rights and duties arise from it (Seck v Foulks (1972) 25 CA3d 556, 102 CR 170), and the broker's right to compensation is found within its terms (Blank v Borden (1974) 11 C3d 963, 115 CR 31).

The many reported decisions involving brokers' attempts to collect their commissions underscore the importance of specifying unambiguously in the listing agreement the circumstances under which the commission will be earned. Several issues commonly arise in the brokerage situation, and the courts (and occasionally the legislature) have developed rules for interpreting listing agreements and for determining when the commission is due in the absence of clear and specific provisions in an agreement. Common issues that a practitioner is likely to encounter include whether:

- The broker was the procuring cause in producing the buyer (see §§2.99-2.105);
- The buyer procured is ready, willing, and able (see §§2.106-2.109);
- Payment of the commission depends on some event, such as closing (see §§2.110-2.113);
- The commission is due if the seller withdraws the property from the market (see §2.114); and
- The commission is due if the conveyance occurs after the listing agreement expires (see §§2.115-2.117).

Disputes can be avoided through careful drafting of the listing agreement to specify the conditions that must be satisfied for the commission to be earned. See form 2.79-1 for a sample clause on the broker's right to compensation.

§2.98 7. Transactions Other Than Outright Sale

Occasionally, a property owner executes a listing agreement, intending to sell the property, but then enters into a transaction other than a sale. For example, a seller might grant a lease with an option to purchase, enter into a partnership or joint venture, or accept a loan on the property. When these transactions occur, with or without a broker's assistance, the broker's right to compensation may be unclear. Because the contract limits and defines the broker's right to compensation (see §2.97), these other transactions must be analyzed to ascertain whether they come within the events described in the listing agreement or commission agreement as triggering the broker's right to a commission. Even if the restructuring of a transaction is not done solely to avoid paying the commission, the seller must act in good faith and do nothing intentional to discourage, embarrass, or prevent the completion of the purchase. To do so would violate the covenant of good faith and fair dealing. R.J. Kuhl Corp. v Sullivan (1993) 13 CA4th 1589, 17 CR2d 425.

Alternative transactions include the following:

- Option. When the seller grants an option, the broker is generally not entitled to a commission unless and until the option is exercised (see Williams v United Cal. Bank (1963) 223 CA2d 309, 35 CR 788), but the fact that the exercise comes long after expiration of the listing agreement will not defeat the broker's right as long as the option was procured during the listing period (Anthony v Enzler (1976) 61 CA3d 872, 132 CR 553). For further discussion of options, see chap 8.
- Formation of Partnership or Joint Venture. If the seller elects to form a partnership or a joint venture rather than sell the property, a commission might be earned if the property is conveyed to the partnership or the joint venture and if the listing agreement includes broad language entitling the broker to a commission on "conveyance" of the property. See the California Association of Realtors® Residential Listing Agreement (Exclusive Authorization and Right to Sell) form in §2.57, in which the broker earns a commission if the property is "transferred" or "conveyed." But see Zelkowitz v Tobin (1951) 108 CA2d 69, 238 P2d 19, in which a broker who procured a joint venturer was held not to have earned a commission under the listing agreement.
- Lease or Loan. A lease or a loan transaction in lieu of a sales transaction probably gives rise to a right to a commission only if the transaction is clearly specified in the agreement between the owner and the broker. But see CC §1086(b), which defines "sell" and "sale" in the context of listing agreements to include leases and exchanges.
- Partial Sale or Strawman Transaction. A partial sale of a property is also likely to give rise to a right to a commission. If the transaction is consummated with a sale or transfer to an entity or person closely associated with the original buyer, then the transaction should be closely scrutinized as one created fraudulently or with secret intent to avoid a commission.
- Real Property Exchange. A real property exchange using a facilitator and ultimately resulting in a closing of escrow is routinely considered akin to an outright sale. 2 Miller & Starr, California Real Estate §5:54 (3d ed 2000).

8. Procuring Cause

§2.99 a. Definition

The issue of whether a particular broker is the procuring cause is relevant in the following circumstances:

- When there is an open listing (see §2.59);
- When there is an exclusive agency listing (see §2.56) and the seller claims to be the procuring cause;
- Under a safety clause (see §2.105);
- When the seller refuses to sell; and
- When the broker has not otherwise earned the commission during the term of the listing agreement.

Whether a broker is the procuring cause of a sale is a question of fact. Sessions v Pacific Improvement Co. (1922) 57 CA 1, 206 P 653. "Procuring cause" has been defined as the cause originating a series of events that, without a break in their continuity, result in the contemplated transaction. Rose v Hunter (1957) 155 CA2d 319, 317 P2d 1027. The broker must set in motion a chain of events that proximately causes the buyer and the seller to reach an agreement. Nelson v Mayer (1954) 122 CA2d 438, 265 P2d 52. If the buyer's broker procures a buyer who is ready, willing, and able to purchase the property on the listing terms, the listing broker is also deemed to be the procuring cause. Korstad v Hoffman (1963) 221 CA2d Supp 805, 35 CR 61; Justy v Erro (1911) 16 CA 519, 117 P 575.

b. Factors to Consider

§2.100 (1) Introduction of Parties

To qualify as the procuring cause, it is not sufficient merely to be the first person to contact the eventual buyer. Rose v Hunter (1957) 155 CA2d 319, 317 P2d 1027. Once the broker has introduced buyer and seller, however, the commission cannot be denied on the grounds that the broker was excluded from subsequent negotiations. Justice v Ackerman (1960) 183 CA2d 649, 6 CR 921. If the seller and buyer delay execution of the purchase agreement until after the listing period has expired, intending to evade the broker's claim to a commission, each may be liable to the broker for the commission: the seller under the listing agreement and the buyer in tort. California Auto Court Ass'n v Cohn (1950) 98 CA2d 145, 219 P2d 511; see §§2.120-2.123. See also E.A. Strout W. Realty Agency, Inc. v Lewis (1967) 255 CA2d 254, 62 CR 918 (commission due when broker procured prospective buyers but sellers canceled listing agreement and sold property to brother of buyers for benefit of buyers).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.101 (2) Showing Property

A broker may not be the procuring cause, even after showing the property to the buyer, if the eventual buyer already knows that the property is available and the broker is not instrumental in closing the sale. Fitzpatrick v Underwood (1941) 17 C2d 722, 112 P2d 3. If there is a good faith break in the continuity of the negotiations, preventing the broker from showing that the buyer and seller came to terms as a proximate result of his or her efforts, then the broker is not the procuring cause. Nelson v Mayer (1954) 122 CA2d 438, 265 P2d 52. The broker is entitled to the commission, however, if the broker found the prospective buyer or tenant and then is instructed to do nothing further. Coldwell Banker & Co. v Pepper Tree Office Ctr. Assocs. (1980) 106 CA3d 272, 278, 165 CR 51, disapproved on other grounds in Barrett v Bank of America (1986) 183 CA3d 1362, 229 CR 16.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.102 (3) Completion of Sale

If the listing agreement states that a commission will be paid only on completion of the sale, i.e., at close of escrow, a broker who procures an acceptable buyer is not entitled to compensation if the transaction fails to close. To earn a commission, the broker must be the procuring cause and the transaction must close. Cochran v Ellsworth (1954) 126 CA2d 429, 272 P2d 904; Augustine & Zarrow, California Real Estate Law and Practice §62.30[1] (2007). This analysis also presumes that the seller has not prevented the broker from performing his or her duties. See, e.g., R.J. Kuhl Corp. v Sullivan (1993) 13 CA4th 1589, 17 CR2d 425.

The completion of a sale is not necessary, however, unless the listing agreement states that it is a condition to the payment of the commission. See §2.108. Absent such a condition, the broker is considered the procuring cause and is entitled to a commission by bringing to the seller a ready, willing, and able buyer, regardless of whether the sale occurs. Woodbridge Realty v Plymouth Dev. Corp. (1955) 130 CA2d 270, 278 P2d 713.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.103 (4) Type of Listing Agreement

Under an open listing agreement (see §2.59), the broker must prove that he or she alone and no other party, including the seller or any other broker, was the procuring cause of the sale. In an exclusive agency listing (see §2.58), the broker must prove that someone other than the seller was the procuring cause of the sale. If a broker has an exclusive right-to-sell listing (see §2.56), a sale to any party, even if the buyer is procured by the seller or another broker, entitles the broker to compensation. Thus, being the procuring cause is most important for a broker under an open listing or comparable situation in which several brokers may be showing the property and a prospective buyer may be contacted by other brokers. If more than one broker has contributed to completing the sale, the broker seeking the commission must prove that his or her activities were the predominant cause in bringing about the transaction. Sessions v Pacific Improvement Co. (1922) 57 CA 1, 206 P 653.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.104 (5) Cooperating Broker

When a cooperating broker (i.e., the buyer's or tenant's broker) is the procuring cause of the sale, recovery from the listing broker is limited to the terms of the cooperation agreement. If the listing agreement authorizes cooperation with other brokers but does not authorize the division of the commission, the seller is not liable for breach of the listing agreement if the seller paid a full commission to the listing agent. Colbaugh v Hartline (1994) 29 CA4th 1516, 35 CR2d 213. Under such circumstances, the only remedy available to the cooperating broker is an action against the listing broker.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.105 (6) Safety or Protection Clause

Procuring cause may also be an issue if a broker attempts to recover under a safety or protection clause for a transaction that is completed after the listing expires. Listing agreements often provide that the broker is entitled to the commission if a "sale" is made within a specified time after the listing period expires to a buyer with whom the broker had contact during the listing period. See CC §1086(b), (i) for the meaning of "sale" and "sold." See §2.112 for discussion of CC §1086(i). Apparently, §1086(i) would extend the safety clause to entitle the broker to a commission if a binding contract (i.e., a unconditional contract) for a lease or exchange is created during the safety clause period. A safety clause form is set out in §2.82.

The broker typically may recover in this situation if the broker procured the buyer during the listing period. See §§2.115-2.117. If the question of the procuring cause may become an issue, the broker should immediately notify the seller, in writing, of the names of prospective buyers contacted by the broker. When the listing agreement terminates, a prudent broker should provide a written list of prospects to the seller whether or not the listing agreement calls for such action.

NOTE: Sellers should be warned that terminating a listing contract does not necessarily terminate the broker's right to compensation. In Century 21 Butler Realty, Inc. v Vasquez (1995) 41 CA4th 888, 49 CR2d 1, the sellers fired the broker. The listing agreement contained a safety clause requiring the broker to provide the seller with a list of prospective buyers. The broker failed to do so. The sellers sold their property after the agreement terminated but within the original time limit of the broker's listing. The court held that the seller owed the commission because the sale had occurred within the listing period, regardless of who was the procuring agent.

9. Ready, Willing, and Able Buyer

§2.106 a. Basic Considerations

To earn a commission under any type of listing agreement, the broker must procure a buyer who is "ready, willing, and able" to purchase the property on the terms of the listing agreement. The agreement may require additional conditions to be met before the commission is earned. See §§2.97, 2.110-2.113. An owner who executes an unconditional agreement to sell the property, however, cannot claim, in an effort to avoid paying the broker's commission, that the buyer was not "ready, willing, and able" (Kopf v Milam (1963) 60 C2d 600, 35 CR 614), even if it later turns out that the buyer did not have the ability to complete the purchase. See Cardoza v Moorehouse (1961) 197 CA2d 76, 17 CR 28.

Satisfaction of the "ready" and "willing" parts of the requirement turns on whether the buyer's offer meets all material terms and conditions of the listing agreement. Prather v Vasquez (1958) 162 CA2d 198, 327 P2d 963; see §2.107. If the contract includes conditions (such as an inspection or a financing contingency) that were not in the listing, the buyer is considered "ready" and "willing" only when the conditions are satisfied or waived. Kopf v Milam, supra. See also Born v Koop (1962) 200 CA2d 519, 19 CR 379 (no right to commission; offer deviated from listing).

An "able" buyer is one who has the legal capacity and financial ability to purchase the property. The broker has the burden of proving the buyer's ability to purchase the property under the listing agreement's terms. Herring v Fisher (1952) 110 CA2d 322, 242 P2d 963. Financial ability means that the buyer has sufficient resources available to conclude the sale. Russell v Ramm (1927) 200 C 348, 254 P 532. The buyer need not have cash on hand when the offer is made, but must have sufficient property, credit, or other assets to be able to obtain the necessary funds at the prescribed time. Ramsdell v Krehmke (1928) 95 CA 195, 272 P 333.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.107 b. Offer Rejected by Seller

If the seller refuses to sell the property to a ready, willing, and able buyer, the broker is normally still entitled to a commission (Collins v Vickter Manor, Inc. (1957) 47 C2d 875, 306 P2d 783; Martin v Culver Enterprises (1966) 239 CA2d 925, 49 CR 149), but the broker must be able to prove that the buyer's offer satisfied the terms of the listing agreement, or that the seller waived conditions or frustrated performance by the buyer. If the offer differs materially from the listing, the broker cannot recover a commission. Dea v Davy (1957) 150 CA2d 435, 309 P2d 894. This test emphasizes the need for a listing agreement that precisely specifies the important terms of the sale.

Whether an offer differs materially from the listing agreement is a question of fact to be decided in each case. Rylee v Defini (1955) 134 CA2d Supp 877, 285 P2d 115. Provisions of the buyer's offer that have been considered sufficiently at variance with the listing terms to justify the seller's rejection include the following:

- A provision allowing prepayment of a seller carry-back note (Born v Koop (1962) 200 CA2d 519, 19 CR 379);
- A different method of paying the deposit (Dea v Davy, supra);
- A different time for possession (Adams v Angelich (1964) 231 CA2d 258, 41 CR 767);
- A liquidated damages provision giving the buyer an inexpensive alternative to performance (California Land Sec. Co. v Ritchie (1919) 40 CA 246, 180 P 625); and
- The right to assume an existing loan on the property (Cottingham v Smith (1938) 28 CA2d 345, 82 P2d 479).

Whether a deviation will be considered material depends on the parties' intentions and expectations. Andrews v Waldo (1928) 205 C 764, 272 P 1052. The facts of each case must be individually evaluated. It is risky to rely on past holdings in determining whether certain terms are material.

§2.108 c. Offer Accepted: Sale Not Completed

Unless the listing agreement conditions the broker's commission on consummation of the sale (see §§2.110-2.113), the commission is earned on execution of an unconditional purchase agreement, even if the sale later fails. Deeble v Stearns (1947) 82 CA2d 296, 186 P2d 173. If the offer differs materially from the listing (see §2.107) and the seller's acceptance of the offer is conditional, the conditions must be either satisfied or waived before the commission is earned. Cochran v Ellsworth (1954) 126 CA2d 429, 272 P2d 904. Similarly, mere execution of a conditional purchase agreement does not entitle the broker to the commission; the conditions must be satisfied or waived. Kopf v Milam (1963) 60 C2d 600, 35 CR 614.

If the seller accepts a conforming offer but the transaction fails because of the seller's breach or inability to perform, the broker is entitled to the commission. For example, sellers have been held liable for commissions when they were unable to deliver marketable title (Coulter v Howard (1927) 203 C 17, 262 P 751) and when a spouse or a joint tenant refused to join in the transfer (McAlinden v Nelson (1953) 121 CA2d 136, 262 P2d 627).

On the broker's right to the deposit if the buyer fails to perform, see §2.119.

PRACTICE TIP: Occasionally, the listing broker is willing to forgo any legal claim or remedy against the seller when the seller has withdrawn from the sale or refused to close. The listing broker's rationale is that it will realize a commission on the ultimate sale and it is better to maintain the relationship than attempt to enforce a right to a commission. The cooperating broker, however, may choose to pursue remedies against the seller and should prepare for that possibility. The broker should request and obtain a copy of the listing agreement, make sure there is a written cooperation agreement, if possible, and make sure there is a separate commission agreement with the seller. Alternatively, the cooperating broker should make sure that the purchase agreement designates the cooperating broker as a third party beneficiary of the purchase agreement for purpose of collecting the commission.

§2.109 d. Nonconforming or Conditional Offer Accepted

If the parties execute a purchase agreement on different terms from those in the listing agreement, the seller is presumed to have consented to that variance. Lathrop v Gauger (1954) 127 CA2d 754, 274 P2d 730. If the offer was unconditional or the conditions have been satisfied, the broker is no longer required to prove the readiness, willingness, or ability of the buyer in order to earn the commission (Caine v Briscoe (1926) 78 CA 660, 248 P 774) unless fraud by the broker or the buyer was used to induce the seller's acceptance (Wright v Buzzine (1960) 180 CA2d 426, 4 CR 482). As long as the listing agreement does not state that payment of the commission is conditioned on consummation of the sale (see §§2.110-2.113), a seller who accepts a nonconforming, unconditional offer is liable for the commission. Jauman v McCusick (1913) 166 C 517, 137 P 254; Beazell v Kane (1954) 127 CA2d 593, 274 P2d 224.

If a conditional purchase agreement is executed, the broker is not entitled to compensation until the conditions have been satisfied or waived. Kopf v Milam (1963) 60 C2d 600, 35 CR 614. If a condition benefiting the buyer is waived or satisfied, the seller becomes liable for the commission whether or not the transaction with the buyer is completed. Wesley N. Taylor Co. v Russell (1961) 194 CA2d 816, 15 CR 357. If the condition benefits both the buyer and seller, the seller does not become liable for the commission until the condition is either satisfied or waived by both parties. Yoakum v Tarver (1967) 256 CA2d 202, 64 CR 7. If the condition is inserted solely for the seller's benefit, the seller will be liable for the commission only after the seller has satisfied or waived the condition. Kopf v Milam, supra; Devereaux v Harper (1962) 210 CA2d 519, 26 CR 837.

Once all conditions are satisfied or waived, the broker is entitled to the commission even if the parties later abandon or rescind the purchase and sale agreement (Weber v Ross (1958) 159 CA2d 77, 323 P2d 465), unless the listing agreement conditioned payment of the commission on consummation of the transaction (Cochran v Ellsworth (1954) 126 CA2d 429, 272 P2d 904; see §§2.110-2.113). The broker is entitled to a commission even if the buyer breaches the agreement to buy. Lipton v Johansen (1951) 105 CA2d 363, 370, 233 P2d 648.

§2.110 10. Conditional Commission Provision

The broker's right to a commission depends on the terms of the listing agreement (see §2.97), and the parties are free to impose conditions that must be satisfied before the commission is earned. Blank v Borden (1974) 11 C3d 963, 115 CR 31.

One of the more common conditions is that the commission will be earned and paid only on close of escrow. The listing agreement must be carefully drafted to state the parties' intention that the event that must occur for the commission to be earned is a condition precedent to earning the commission. Seck v Foulks (1972) 25 CA3d 556, 102 CR 170. A mere limitation on the time and manner of payment will not defeat the broker's right to the commission. In RC Royal Dev't and Realty Corp. v Standard Pac. Corp. (Sept. 29, 2009, B206894) 2009 Cal App Lexis 1606, a broker and a buyer entered into an agency agreement which stated that a commission was due if the property was "purchased." The agency agreement defined "purchase" to mean that the buyer acquired a direct or indirect beneficial interest in the property. The court noting that the buyer, by entering into a buy-sell agreement, had acquired conditional, equitable title which was a beneficial interest and therefore, owed the commission even though escrow never closed. The reference in the agency agreement that the commission would be paid at closing merely designated the timing of the payment and was not a condition to payment. See also Miller v Lerdo Land Co. (1921) 52 CA 662, 199 P 1073.

Even under a conditional commission provision, sellers remain liable for payment of the commission if they unreasonably prevent the occurrence of the condition on which payment of the commission depends (Collins v Vickter Manor, Inc. (1957) 47 C2d 875, 306 P2d 783) or act in bad faith in failing to complete the transaction (Stromer v Browning (1966) 65 C2d 421, 55 CR 18). The purpose of the condition is to protect a seller from the buyer's failure to perform. The commission cannot be recovered if the buyer refuses to perform or satisfy the condition. Cochran v Ellsworth (1954) 126 CA2d 429, 272 P2d 904. Furthermore, the broker cannot compel the seller to sue the buyer for breach as a means of recovering the commission. Dunne v Colomb (1923) 192 C 740, 221 P 912.

§2.111 a. Examples of Conditions

Listing agreement conditions are primarily intended to protect the seller from having to pay a commission if no sales proceeds are realized. Examples of conditions that have been used successfully include:

- Payment of commission on completion of the transaction, e.g., when the purchase price is paid and title is transferred (Cochran v Ellsworth (1954) 126 CA2d 429, 272 P2d 904);
- Payment of commission out of funds received from escrow (Dale v Raines (1953) 115 CA2d 309, 252 P2d 22); and
- Payment of commission out of funds received from the buyer (Cannon v Selmser (1927) 85 CA 783, 260 P 332).

b. Provisions in Standard Forms

§2.112 (1) Residential Exclusive Authorization and Right to Sell

The safety clause in the Residential Listing Agreement (Exclusive Authorization and Right to Sell) form (see §2.57), published by the California Association of Realtors® (CAR), states that the commission is due when the seller sells, conveys, leases, or otherwise transfers the property. A property is considered sold "when a legally binding commitment to sell the property comes into existence." CC §1086(i). Thus, absent the provisions for method and time of payment in these agreements, the commission would be earned under §1086(i) when the seller's obligation becomes binding, regardless of whether the transaction is a sale, a lease, or an exchange.

Although CC §1086(i) seems to provide that a property is sold when the seller is bound to sell, regardless of conditions precedent to the buyer's obligation to buy, this interpretation would lead a broker to have potentially earned a commission even if the buyer's conditions are never satisfied. Such a result is not what the legislature intended in enacting §1086, and the better interpretation is that a property is "sold" when all conditions are satisfied and the obligations of both buyer and seller are binding. There are no reported cases addressing this perceived flaw in §1086(i). Case law has defined a "sale" to mean the making of an executory contract by which the property is to be sold. Leonard v Fallas (1959) 51 C2d 649, 652, 335 P2d 665.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.113 (2) Real Estate Residential Purchase Agreement and Receipt for Deposit

The California Association of Realtors® Residential Purchase Agreement and Joint Escrow Instructions (see §6.24) provides that the commission is to be paid on close of escrow or, if escrow does not close, pursuant to a separate written agreement. It is possible that this language conditions the earning of a commission on the occurrence of one of the enumerated events rather than on the property merely being sold within the meaning of CC §1086(i). There are no reported cases, however, deciding whether the CAR residential purchase agreement creates additional conditions to the earning of the commission or whether the contract merely specifies the time and method for payment of the commission. See Steve Schmidt & Co. v Berry (1986) 183 CA3d 1299, 228 CR 689; Austin v Richards (1956) 146 CA2d 436, 304 P2d 132. Usually, the seller will argue that a commission need not be paid unless the transaction closed.

§2.114 B. Broker's Rights Under Withdrawal-From-Sale Clause

Some listing agreements provide that the broker is entitled to a commission if the seller withdraws the property from sale or otherwise renders it unmarketable during the listing period. See, e.g., the California Association of Realtors® Residential Listing Agreement (Exclusive Authorization and Right to Sell) form in §2.57. Somewhat reluctantly, the California courts have enforced withdrawal-from-sale clauses. Alderson v Houston (1908) 154 C 1, 96 P 884; Baumgartner v Meek (1954) 126 CA2d 505, 272 P2d 552. In Ertell v Lloyd's Food Prods. (1953) 115 CA2d 615, 252 P2d 683, the validity of such a provision was recognized, but the court held that the seller's act of leasing a portion of the property enhanced the property's value for sale and thus did not reduce its marketability. In Blank v Borden (1974) 11 C3d 963, 115 CR 31, the supreme court concluded that withdrawal-from-sale clauses are enforceable on the rationale that they constitute a true option for the seller rather than a penalty for forfeiture. If the withdrawal-from-sale clause is enforced, the broker recovers the entire commission, even when the seller decides not to sell and has, in fact, realized nothing. Recovery is not limited to amounts actually spent by the broker. Blank v Borden, supra.

A seller's repudiation of a listing agreement may also entitle the broker to sue for the commission without first producing a ready, willing, and able buyer, on a theory of anticipatory breach of contract. Daum v Superior Court (1964) 228 CA2d 283, 39 CR 443. As a practical matter, a broker may have difficulty recovering a commission if the sale has not closed, unless the broker can demonstrate both substantial effort to market and/or procure a buyer and bad faith conduct on the part of the seller.

C. Sale After Listing Period

§2.115 1. When Broker Can Recover Commission

To earn a commission, a broker must perform the services contracted for within the period of time in the listing agreement or any extensions granted by the seller. Lawrence Block Co. v Scholer (1958) 166 CA2d 608, 333 P2d 396; Ridgway v Chase (1954) 122 CA2d 840, 265 P2d 603. Typically, this means that the property must be sold within the term of the listing. Because CC §1086(i) defines "sold" as the creation of a binding legal commitment to sell (see §§2.110-2.113), the execution of an unconditional, binding contract during the term of the listing will entitle the broker to a commission even if the close of escrow occurs after the listing has expired (assuming that the listing agreement entitled the broker to a commission when the property was sold). This result is also achieved contractually because most listing agreements contain a "safety clause." See §§2.116-2.117.

A broker who procures a buyer after the listing agreement expires is generally prohibited by the Statute of Frauds from recovering a commission. Augustine v Trucco (1954) 124 CA2d 229, 268 P2d 780. This rule is subject to two judicially created exceptions that arise when the broker procures a buyer who is ready, willing, and able to meet the terms of the listing but a binding purchase agreement is not executed during the listing period.

Under the first exception, the termination date in a written contract of employment will be considered extended, or the time limitation waived, and the broker will be entitled to a commission if: (1) the owner urged and encouraged the broker to continue efforts to find a buyer for the property after the expiration date in the employment agreement; (2) the broker did so continue with the knowledge, approval, and encouragement of the owner; and (3) the owner sells the property to a buyer who is produced as a result of the broker's efforts. Kraemer v Smith (1960) 179 CA2d 52, 3 CR 471 (rejecting seller's argument that the original exclusive agency contract had terminated and any authorization in existence between the parties after that date was oral and unenforceable). If the broker subsequently procures an acceptable buyer, the requirement of performance within the listing period is considered waived, and the Statute of Frauds is not a bar to such a waiver. Lewis v Foppiano (1957) 150 CA2d 752, 310 P2d 658.

Under the second exception, if the broker procures a buyer who meets the terms of the listing agreement during the listing period, but the purchase agreement is not executed until after the period has expired, the broker may recover the commission. De La Questa v Armstrong Holdings Co. (1920) 48 CA 487, 192 P 135. Further, under some safety clauses (see §§2.116-2.117), the broker need not prove that he or she is the ultimate procuring cause of the eventual transaction. See also Torelli v J.P. Enters. (1997) 52 CA4th 1250, 61 CR2d 76 (promise to pay does not die with expiration of counter offer; see further discussion of Torelli in §2.52).

§2.116 2. Activity Required to Recover Under Safety Clause

The extent of activity required for the broker to recover under a safety clause varies but is generally strictly construed under the terms of the listing agreement. Some listing agreements require only that the buyer have been "introduced" to the property by the broker. Korstad v Hoffman (1963) 221 CA2d Supp 805, 35 CR 61. Others require the broker to have "negotiated" with the buyer. Delbon v Brazil (1955) 134 CA2d 461, 285 P2d 710. Still others require that the buyer be "procured" by the broker. E.A. Strout W. Realty Agency, Inc. v Lewis (1967) 255 CA2d 254, 62 CR 918. See §§2.99-2.105 for discussion of procuring cause. Safety clauses often also require the broker to "register" or give the seller written notice of the names of potential buyers that the broker contacted during the listing period. Many safety clauses require registration within a specified period of time.

The performance specified has a significant bearing on the broker's right to the commission. If the safety clause requires only introduction or negotiation by the broker, then the broker can recover the commission without proving that he or she was the procuring cause of the eventual sale. Leonard v Fallas (1959) 51 C2d 649, 335 P2d 665; Delbon v Brazil, supra. Courts have, however, generally required that the broker demonstrate some activity in connection with the ultimate sale beyond simply having contacted the prospective buyer. Hobson v Hunt (1922) 59 CA 679, 211 P 242. In Simank Realty, Inc. v DeMarco (1970) 6 CA3d 610, 86 CR 212, a broker with an exclusive right-to-sell listing containing a safety clause was denied a commission when the owner sold the property 1 day after the listing expired, because the broker did not show the buyer the property or negotiate with him, although the broker's sign had "flagged" the buyer's interest in the property. The typical exclusive listing agreement, however, also contains a provision requiring the seller to refer all prospects to the listing broker; so any quick sale on termination of the listing will be suspect.

If the safety clause provides that the commission will be earned only if the broker actually procures a sale, it will be enforced according to its terms and the broker must prove that he or she was the procuring cause. E.A. Strout W. Realty Agency, Inc. v Lewis, supra.

§2.117 3. Danger of Liability for Two Commissions

If a safety clause does not require the broker to be the procuring cause in order to recover the commission, the seller could be liable for two commissions on the same sale. See, e.g., Delbon v Brazil (1955) 134 CA2d 461, 285 P2d 710, in which the listing broker recovered a commission even though a different broker was actually the procuring cause of the sale. A similar result might occur when there is a second listing that is an exclusive listing with no specified exceptions.

PRACTICE TIP: One way for the seller to avoid this problem is to provide in the second listing agreement that no commission will be earned for sales to prospective buyers named in the notification given by the first broker. A form for this purpose is set out in §2.80.

Previous versions of the CAR exclusive authorization and right-to-sell form avoided this problem by waiving the safety clause for a sale that occurred during the protection period if a valid listing agreement had been entered into with another broker. The 2006 version of that form has deleted the relisting exception; therefore, the first broker is entitled to compensation if the "protected" buyer purchases the property during the protection period, even if the seller lists the property for sale with another real estate broker. See §2.57. For more information about the CAR exclusive listing form, see Chin, Significant Developments in Residential Sales, 21 CEB Real Prop L Rep 72, 77 (Apr. 1998). Many multiple listing services (see §§2.39-2.41) provide that, when there is a second listing, either the first broker earns no commission or the commission will be divided.

§2.118 D. Amount of Commission

The amount of the commission is governed by the listing agreement negotiated by the parties. See §2.97. If the listing agreement does not fix the amount, a reasonable commission will be allowed. Beazell v Schrader (1963) 59 C2d 577, 30 CR 534.

PRACTICE TIP: In analyzing the proper amount of a commission, attorneys should carefully inspect and compare references to commissions in the purchase agreement or lease and obtain all written communications between the parties. To the extent the terms of a purchase agreement or lease differ materially from those in the listing agreement, they may be construed as modifying the listing agreement. Similarly, a series of letters or e-mails that discuss the commission may be construed as a modification to the listing agreement. See King v Stanley (1948) 32 C2d 584, 588, 197 P2d 321.

Commissions vary according to the broker, the region, the type of property, and the relative bargaining positions of the parties to the agreement. Brokers commonly charge a percentage of the selling price, although occasionally a broker will accept a flat fee. In large transactions, sellers may prefer a schedule of declining percentages. The commission due under a percentage arrangement is generally computed on the total sale price regardless of the dollar amount of the encumbrances on the property. In installment sales (see chap 9), sellers usually either try to receive enough in the first installment to cover the commission or provide in the listing agreement that the commission will be paid in installments.

Brokers' attempts to set the amount of their commissions have been subject to several legal constraints. Agreements among brokers to fix commission rates violate federal and state antitrust laws. In McLain v Real Estate Bd. (1980) 444 US 232, 62 L Ed 2d 441, 100 S Ct 502, the Supreme Court held in a private action that the effect of the defendant's brokerage activities on interstate commerce was sufficient to establish jurisdiction under the Sherman Antitrust Act (15 USC §§1-7). Local Boards of Realtors® have also been held subject to the Cartwright Act (Bus & P C §§16700-16770). Marin County Bd. of Realtors v Palsson (1976) 16 C3d 920, 130 CR 1; Glendale Bd. of Realtors v Hounsell (1977) 72 CA3d 210, 139 CR 830. See also §2.41.

California statutes and regulations further restrict broker activity in establishing commission rates. For example, Bus & P C §10147.5 requires the following:

- Printed listing agreement forms must state that the commission is not fixed by law and may be negotiated between the seller and the broker; and
- The commission amount shall not be printed in any listing agreement.

Regulations of the Real Estate Commissioner subject the broker to discipline for stating or implying to the seller that the broker is precluded by law, regulation, or the rules of an organization from charging less than the commission the broker has quoted. Bus & P C §§10167, 10177.

In Bartley v California Ass'n of Realtors (1980) 115 CA3d 930, 173 CR 284, allegations that a widely used California Association of Realtors® broker's contract for employment of an independent-contractor salesperson provided for a fixed commission rate were held insufficient to support a cause of action for an antitrust civil conspiracy.

§2.119 E. Buyer's Breach: Broker's Right to Deposit or Damages

Some purchase agreements limit the broker's commission to no more than one-half of any damages the seller is able to recover, minus expenses, in the event of a breach by the buyer. This provision in an executed purchase agreement, to the extent it is signed, ratified, or accepted by the broker, supersedes the listing agreement and limits the commission to one-half of any amounts actually recovered by the seller. If no funds are retained or recovered by the seller, and presuming that the broker has signed, ratified, or accepted the purchase agreement as a bona fide agreement, the broker is entitled to nothing. Chapman v Gilmore (1963) 221 CA2d 506, 34 CR 515. Moreover, the seller has no obligation either to retain the deposit (Huttlinger v Far W. Enters. (1955) 131 CA2d 808, 281 P2d 554) or to bring an action against the buyer for damages (Lipton v Johansen (1951) 105 CA2d 363, 233 P2d 648). An executed purchase agreement, however, constitutes compliance with the Statute of Frauds and entitles the broker to one-half of the deposit or damages, despite the absence of a listing agreement. Beazell v Kane (1954) 127 CA2d 593, 274 P2d 224.

NOTE: A cooperating broker is entitled to the full commission from a buyer when the buyer has refused to complete the transaction without cause, unrestricted by the contract provision. See Chan v Tsang (1991) 1 CA4th 1578, 3 CR2d 14.

The obvious source of recovery for both the seller and the broker in the event of the buyer's breach is the deposit. The seller's right to retain the deposit as liquidated damages is strictly circumscribed by statute. CC §§1671-1681. A liquidated damages provision in an agreement to purchase real property must be printed in at least 10-point bold type or in contrasting red print in at least 8-point bold type, and must be separately initialed by both buyer and seller. CC §1677. In a sale of residential property (defined as a dwelling containing no more than four units in which the buyer intends to reside), the provision is valid only if the deposit is actually paid and does not exceed 3 percent of the purchase price. CC §1675. See §§4.142, 6.10-6.13 on liquidated damages.

If the seller retains the deposit under a purchase agreement containing a valid liquidated damages provision and a provision entitling the broker to one-half of any funds recovered by the seller, the broker's commission will be one-half of the deposit. The amount the broker is entitled to recover in this situation may be significantly less than the amount of the commission. If more than one payment is to constitute liquidated damages, a separate liquidated damages clause meeting the requirements of CC §§1675 and 1677 must be executed for each payment. CC §1678.

F. Recovery of Commission From Buyer

§2.120 1. Implied Covenant to Complete Purchase

Under both listing and purchase agreements, the seller is usually required to pay whatever commissions are due. If the broker is retained by a buyer, however, and the broker located property that the owner agrees to sell at the price offered, the law implies a promise by the buyer to complete the transaction and treat the broker as a third party beneficiary of the purchase agreement between the buyer and the seller. A buyer who then breaches the purchase agreement is liable to the broker for the commission. Chan v Tsang (1991) 1 CA4th 1578, 3 CR2d 14; Donnellan v Rocks (1972) 22 CA3d 925, 99 CR 692. Moreover, the broker is entitled to the commission he or she would have earned if the buyer had performed. Chan, 1 CA4th at 1583.

This rule applies only when the broker and the buyer stand in the relationship of agent and principal. When the broker is employed by the seller, courts have not permitted recovery of the commission from the buyer on the implied promise rationale. Hunter v Vernon (1948) 85 CA2d 525, 193 P2d 139. Under such circumstances, however, the broker may have a claim against the seller, and correspondingly, the seller may have a right of indemnity against the buyer.

§2.121 2. Interference With Prospective Economic Advantage

A broker may be able to use the cause of action for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage to recover the commission from the buyer when the seller has a technical defense such as failure to comply with the Statute of Frauds. Buckaloo v Johnson (1975) 14 C3d 815, 122 CR 745, disapproved on other grounds in Della Penna v Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A. (1995) 11 C4th 376, 45 CR2d 436 (see discussion in §2.122). See also Keely v Price (1972) 27 CA3d 209, 103 CR 531 (action for interference with advantageous economic relationship based on defendant's alleged inducement of other buyers not to pay plaintiff's commission was not barred by fact that agreement was oral); Zimmerman v Bank of America (1961) 191 CA2d 55, 12 CR 319 (tort of interference with advantageous relationship or contract did not depend on nature or enforceability of contract itself). These cases arise when a buyer, who is originally contacted by the broker, approaches the seller directly and induces the seller to close the sale without involving the broker, lowering the price by the commission that would otherwise be paid. Occasionally, buyers have purchased property through other parties in an attempt to conceal this conduct. Golden v Anderson (1967) 256 CA2d 714, 64 CR 404.

Source: Real Property/California Real Property Sales Transactions/2 Brokers/§2.122 a. Elements of Cause of Action

§2.122 a. Elements of Cause of Action

The broker need not plead and prove the existence of a contract in order to recover under a tortious interference theory, because it is interference with an economic relationship, not a contract, that is the gravamen of the action. In Buckaloo v Johnson (1975) 14 C3d 815, 122 CR 745, disapproved on other grounds in Della Penna v Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A. (1995) 11 C4th 376, 45 CR2d 436, the supreme court identified the elements of the cause of action:

- An economic relationship between broker and seller having the probability of future economic benefit to the broker;
- The buyer's knowledge of the existence of the relationship;
- The buyer's intentional acts designed to disrupt the relationship;
- Actual disruption of the relationship; and
- Damages proximately caused by the buyer's actions.

Since Buckaloo, the supreme court has clarified the nature of the acts and intent that must be shown to satisfy the third element of the tort. With respect to conduct, the plaintiff must plead that the defendant engaged in an independently wrongful act. Korea Supply Co. v Lockheed Martin Corp. (2003) 29 C4th 1134, 1164, 131 CR2d 29; Della Penna v Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A. (1995) 11 C4th 376, 45 CR2d 436. For this purpose, an act is independently wrongful "if it is… proscribed by some constitutional, statutory, regulatory, common law, or other determinable legal standard." Korea Supply Co., 29 C4th at 1159. "It is not enough that the act was a product of an improper, but lawful motive; it must be wrongful by some legal measure." 29 C4th at 1159 n11. With respect to intent, the plaintiff need not plead that the defendant had a specific intent or design to interfere with the plaintiff's prospective advantage. Rather, it is enough if the plaintiff pleads that the defendant acted with the "knowledge that interference was certain or substantially certain to occur as a result of its action." 29 C4th at 1164.

§2.123 b. Problems of Proof

Although the leading cases, which all arose on demurrers, hold that a cause of action for tortious interference can be stated, the problems of proof remain substantial. Under the test announced in Buckaloo v Johnson (1975) 14 C3d 815, 122 CR 745, disapproved on other grounds in Della Penna v Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A. (1995) 11 C4th 376, 45 CR2d 436 (see discussion in §2.122), the broker must prove the following:

- The economic relationship was one that included the probability of future economic benefit;
- The buyer knew of the relationship; and
- The buyer proposed to the seller that the parties deal directly with each other to obtain a lower price.

A broker's cause of action against the buyer for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage will not lie when the prospective economic advantage itself is fraudulent, as in the case of a secret commission payable by the seller and not disclosed to the buyer. Renaissance Realty, Inc. v Soriano (1981) 120 CA3d Supp 13, 174 CR 837.

For an example of the broker's use of a cause of action for interference with prospective economic advantage to sue a buyer for a commission when no written commission agreement existed, see Deeter v Angus (1986) 179 CA3d 241, 224 CR 801 (allegation that buyer orally agreed to pay broker's commission if seller would reduce purchase price).

VI. BROKER'S FIDUCIARY DUTIES TO CLIENT

§2.124 A. Standard of Care

The legal standards imposed on real estate brokers in relationships with their clients are based on the common law of agency; thus, a real estate broker owes fiduciary obligations to its principal. Batson v Strehlow (1968) 68 C2d 662, 68 CR 589; Ward v Taggart (1959) 51 C2d 736, 336 P2d 534. The broker's duties are similar to those owed by a trustee to the beneficiary of a trust (Prob C §§16000-16015). The broker owes a duty of utmost care, integrity, honesty, and loyalty in dealings with the principal, in addition to the more general duties (e.g., good faith and fair dealing, diligent exercise of skill and care) owed to both parties to the transaction.

For discussion of a real estate broker's fiduciary duty, see Jorgensen v Beach 'N' Bay Realty, Inc. (1981) 125 CA3d 155, 177 CR 882. For a further discussion of broker as agent, see §§2.36-2.42. On brokers' duties and liabilities to principals, see California Real Estate Brokers: Law and Litigation, chaps 3-4 (Cal CEB 2009).

§2.125 1. Duty Arises When Agency Created

The broker's fiduciary duties generally arise at the creation of the agency relationship, which may precede the execution of a formal employment contract or may exist in the absence of a written agreement (see §2.27). Realty Projects, Inc. v Smith (1973) 32 CA3d 204, 108 CR 71 (mortgage loan broker's duty of fair and honest dealing arises when borrower is only prospective and before any loan documents have been executed). The broker does not, however, owe any fiduciary duty to the client in connection with the negotiation of the terms of the broker's employment.

Although a written agreement is required for a broker to recover a commission (see §2.95), the agency relationship can be created with little or no formality, and is not subject to the Statute of Frauds. The broker, however, does have the duty to preserve the confidentiality of information obtained from the seller even before execution of the listing agreement. Beeler v West Am. Fin. Co. (1962) 201 CA2d 702, 20 CR 190.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.126 2. Duty May Survive Closing

Although selling the property generally terminates the agency relationship, the broker's fiduciary duties include certain post-closing obligations related to the sale. Menzel v Salka (1960) 179 CA2d 612, 4 CR 78. The broker's fiduciary duty requires that, even after the expiration of the agency, the broker not disclose or take advantage of confidential information acquired from the client, although the case of Stephens, Partain & Cunningham v Hollis (1987) 196 CA3d 948, 242 CR 251, seems to suggest that after the agency relationship has terminated, the broker can take a position that conflicts with that of its former principal (loan broker permitted to act as foreclosing trustee on deed of trust given when broker initially arranged for loan). 3 Witkin, Summary of California Law, Agency and Employment §64 (10th ed 2005); Restatement (Second) of Agency §396 (1958).

§2.127 B. Duty to Disclose

The broker must fully and completely disclose to the client all facts material to the pending transaction. CC §2020. See Zikratch v Stillwell (1961) 196 CA2d 535, 16 CR 660. The broker's duty to the client to disclose material facts is a fiduciary duty and arises on the creation of the principal-broker relationship, i.e., even before the purchase contact is created. Exxess Elecronixx v Heger Realty Corp. (1998) 64 CA4th 698, 75 CR2d 376. Material facts include any that might influence the price the client is willing to pay or receive, including the client's willingness to sell or buy. Rattray v Scudder (1946) 28 C2d 214, 169 P2d 371; Fisher v Losey (1947) 78 CA2d 121, 177 P2d 334. Some of the specific matters that must be disclosed are discussed in §§2.129-2.135.

A broker's duty of disclosure is limited to material facts and once the essential facts are disclosed, a broker is not under a duty to provide details that would elaborate on the disclosed facts. See Pagano v Krohn (1997) 60 CA4th, 1, 8; cited in Calemine v Samuelson (2009) 171 CA4th 153, 161 (seller's disclosure of water intrusion adequate, but triable issue of fact existed concerning whether seller should have disclosed existence of prior constructive defect litigation as a matter affecting value and desirability of property).

A buyer's broker has no duty to verify the accuracy of the seller's disclosures or those of the seller's broker. It is incumbent on potential purchasers, therefore, to investigate and make their own informed decision. In presenting the client with information obtained from the seller or other third parties, however, the broker should inform the client of the source of the information and the fact that it has not been verified, if circumstances otherwise might lead the client to believe that the broker had done so. Liability may arise if the client reasonably believes that the information was obtained from the broker's own investigation. See Salahutdin v Valley of Cal., Inc. (1994) 24 CA4th 555, 29 CR2d 463.

The broker has no heightened duty to disclose or investigate merely because the property is located in a planned unit development. See Padgett v Phariss (1997) 54 CA4th 1270, 63 CR2d 373, in which the court held that the brokers had neither a statutory nor a common law duty to discover and disclose matters regarding a pending construction defect lawsuit that the sellers failed to disclose, when the broker's visual inspection of the property provided no reason to conduct a further investigation. See also Assilzadeh v California Fed. Bank (2000) 82 CA4th 399, 98 CR2d 176.

The broker's duty of disclosure does not include a duty to verify the truth or explain the legal or practical implications of disclosed facts. See Pagano v Krohn (1997) 60 CA4th 1, 70 CR2d 1. For a similar decision holding that a listing agent does not have such a duty, see Sweat v Hollister (1995) 37 CA4th 603, 43 CR2d 399, overruled on other grounds in Santisas v Goodin (1998) 17 C4th 599, 609, 71 CR2d 830 (discussion of legal ramifications of disclosed facts not required).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.128 1. Conflicts of Interest

Consistent with the law of agency, the broker's fiduciary duty to its client includes a duty of utmost loyalty, which requires the broker to avoid any conflict of interest and to put the client's interests ahead of those of the broker itself. Field v Century 21 Klowden-Forness Realty (1998) 63 CA4th 18, 25, 73 CR2d 784. However, there are exceptions to this rule when the conflict of interest is fully disclosed and the client's informed consent is obtained. See discussion of dual agency in §2.129.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.129 a. Dual Agency

A broker may not act as an agent for more than one party to a transaction without full disclosure to all parties and their consent. Bus & P C §10176(d). A dual agency may exist, even though the buyer and seller are represented by different agents in different offices, if the agents are licensed under the same broker. CC §2079.13(d).

Dual agency should be disclosed at the earliest practical time, and the clients' consent generally should be obtained in writing. In a residential transaction, this is accomplished with the execution of the statutorily required agency disclosure form. See CC §2079.17; §§2.31-2.37 on requirements for disclosure and consent of agency relationships in residential transactions.

EXAMPLE: Disclosure must be made, and consent obtained, when a broker represents both the buyer and the seller and intends to receive two separate commissions. Ohanesian v Watson (1953) 118 CA2d 386, 257 P2d 1022.

In commercial transactions, written confirmation of the dual agency typically is included in the purchase and sale agreement (or in an earlier letter of intent, should one be used).

A broker may be denied a commission for failing to disclose that a dual agency existed. L. Byron Culver & Assocs. v Jaoudi Indus. & Trading Corp. (1991) 1 CA4th 300, 1 CR2d 680. In Huijers v DeMarrais (1992) 11 CA4th 676, 14 CR2d 232, a divided court held that a listing agent who gave the statutory agency disclosure to the seller when the purchase contract was signed should have done so before the parties entered into the listing agreement, and that the seller would be entitled to relief from the commission obligation as a remedy for the untimely disclosure.

Some commentators criticize dual agency on the grounds that the conflict between the interests of a buyer and seller are so fundamental that a single broker cannot possibly serve both parties and fulfill the agency obligations of undivided loyalty and full disclosure. See 2 Miller & Starr, California Real Estate §3:12 (3d ed 2002); Bernhardt, Making the Broker Pay When the Deal Goes Bad, 29 CEB Real Prop L Rep 242 (Mar 2006). Although these observations are correct, it is also true that the courts have limited dual agency—not prohibited it. L. Byron Culver & Assocs. v Jaoudi Indus. & Trading Corp., supra. The broker must disclose and obtain informed consent for the dual agency, but many clients, especially in commercial transactions, find that dual agency can result in more direct negotiations and more clear and comprehensive disclosure. Dual agency can reduce the potential for adversarial posturing that may threaten the making and closing of a deal. Nevertheless, the clients' informed consent to the dual agency is critical in all transactions, and the broker must be alert to the possibility of conflicts. See also discussion of broker's liability for misrepresentation in §§2.140, 2.142, 2.153.

Source: Real Property/California Real Property Sales Transactions/2 Brokers/§2.130 b. Other Multiple Agency Scenarios

§2.130 b. Other Multiple Agency Scenarios

A traditional dual agency (one broker representing both buyer and seller) is not the only situation in which a broker may represent multiple clients with conflicting interests in the same property or transaction. Occasionally a broker may represent more than one potential buyer for the same property. In that situation, however, in contrast to the more common buyer-seller dual agency, there would be no conflict under usual custom and practice unless the competing buyers were represented by the same sales agent. In that case, disclosure and client consent to the multiple agency are required.

EXAMPLE: If two agents in different offices of the same broker each represent a buyer competing for the same property, it is unlikely that either of them, or their common broker, would even know of the conflict. Requiring disclosure in such circumstances would not be practical, and would not provide any meaningful protection to the client's interests.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.131 c. Self-Dealing

A conflict of interest exists any time a broker (or some third party in a close relationship to the broker) stands to profit personally from the actions taken (or not taken) by the client. As with any other conflict, full and timely disclosure of the facts, and the client's informed consent, are required to avoid a breach of fiduciary duty. See Savage v Mayer (1949) 33 C2d 548, 203 P2d 9; Bus & P C §10176(g). But see Rylander v Karpe (1976) 60 CA3d 317, 131 CR 415 (loan fee was not profit under listing agreement, was obtained under later, separate agreement not involving sellers, and was taken after sales contract was executed).

§2.132 (1) Broker's Purchase of Client's Property: Disclosure Requirements

If the broker purchases the client's property, it will be presumed that the client entered the transaction without sufficient consideration and under undue influence, and the broker will have the burden of proving the fairness of the transaction. Duffy v Cavalier (1989) 215 CA3d 1517, 1531, 264 CR 740 (fiduciary duty of broker-agent has same obligations of diligence and faithful service as trustee); Smith v Zak (1971) 20 CA3d 785, 98 CR 242 (note that this case cites former CC §2235, which was repealed by Stats 1986, ch 820, §7, operative July 1, 1987; now see Prob C §§16002, 16004). See also Prob C §16463, which requires full disclosure and the principal's consent when a trustee deals with trust property, for duties analogous to those owed by the broker to its client.

The broker may purchase the property if the fact that the broker is purchasing it (and all other facts necessary to fully inform the client) is disclosed to all parties. Donnellan v Rocks (1972) 22 CA3d 925, 99 CR 692. Without the required disclosure, the fact that the broker paid a fair price for the property, or that it could not have been sold for a greater price, will not be a defense to liability for nondisclosure. Bate v Marsteller (1959) 175 CA2d 573, 346 P2d 903. On the broker's purchase of the principal's property generally, see Comment, Unprofessional Conduct by Real Estate Brokers: Conflict of Interest and Conflict in the Law, 11 Pac LJ 821 (1980).

Any fact that might conceivably be material to a transaction must be disclosed by the purchasing broker. The broker's failure to disclose a sale of the listed property to the state for taxes, and the broker's subsequent acquisition of the property, are sufficient to state a cause of action for breach of the broker's fiduciary duty. Skopp v Weaver (1976) 16 C3d 432, 128 CR 19.

The broker's duty to disclose all facts relating to the best price obtainable (see §2.138) poses an acute problem for a broker who purchases the client's property for resale. See, e.g., Smith v Zak, supra. Resale at a substantial profit will make it difficult for the broker to demonstrate that full disclosure was made. Smith v Zak, supra. Any broker who does purchase the client's property should carefully document all disclosures and obtain the client's written acknowledgment and consent.

§2.133 (2) Indirect Sales

The duty to disclose the broker's purchase of the listed property extends to purchases by the broker's relatives or employees and entities in which the broker has an interest. In Batson v Strehlow (1968) 68 C2d 662, 68 CR 589, a broker's disclosure to the seller that he was president of the purchasing corporation was held inadequate because he did not also disclose that he and his wife were its sole shareholders and had paid the entire price themselves. The broker concealed that he was dealing for himself as principal and attempting to earn a commission as well. A broker should always disclose to the seller any relationship with a buyer corporation or partnership, even if the broker is only a limited partner or minority shareholder.

Brokers also have a duty to disclose that the buyer is a relative or employee. Smith v Zak (1971) 20 CA3d 785, 98 CR 242 (buyer was broker's salesperson); Loughlin v Idora Realty Co. (1968) 259 CA2d 619, 66 CR 747 (buyer was broker's mother-in-law).

§2.134 (3) Broker's Interest in Property Sold to Client

The buyer's broker must fully disclose all benefits the broker will receive from the transaction. A broker must disclose any interest it has in the property being acquired by the client, as well as any interest held by someone related to the broker. The same disclosure obligations and other considerations apply as when a broker purchases the client's property. Kroeker v Hurlbert (1940) 38 CA2d 261, 101 P2d 101. If the broker fails to disclose an interest in property that is purchased by the client, the broker must disgorge any profits realized. Crogan v Metz (1956) 47 C2d 398, 303 P2d 1029.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.135 d. Secret Profits

The broker is liable to the principal for any secret profits, gratuities, or other benefits obtained in the transaction. See Menzel v Salka (1960) 179 CA2d 612, 4 CR 78. The broker may not retain any benefit derived from the transaction unless the nature and amount of the benefit have been fully disclosed to the principal. It is immaterial that the transaction is otherwise fair to the principal or that the principal receives exactly the desired price for the property or pays no more for it than intended. Menzel v Salka, supra. A narrow exception to the requirement of full disclosure of the broker's interest in, and profit from, the sale may arise when the property is sold under a net listing (see §2.61).

The broker must disgorge all secret profits regardless of whether the principal suffered any actual damages. Savage v Mayer (1949) 33 C2d 548, 203 P2d 9; see §2.177. The principal may recover from the broker and from all others who knowingly shared in the secret profits (Crogan v Metz (1956) 47 C2d 398, 303 P2d 1029), and a fiduciary is liable for secret profits that he or she causes to flow to a third party even if the fiduciary personally does not share in them (St. James Armenian Church v Kurkjian (1975) 47 CA3d 547, 121 CR 214).

Brokers are subject to discipline by the Real Estate Commissioner for realizing undisclosed profits as part of a transaction. Bus & P C §10176(g). In Rylander v Karpe (1976) 60 CA3d 317, 131 CR 415, a surprising exception to the general rule, it was held that the broker did not violate §10176(g) by accepting loan origination fees from the lender without the sellers' knowledge. Rylander appears to be an anomaly. Under Bus & P C §10176(a) it constitutes misrepresentation for a broker for either party in a sale, lease, or exchange who anticipates receiving or receives compensation from a lender in connection with the securing of financing for the transaction, to fail to disclose to both parties before closing, the form, amount, and source of the compensation received or expected. 10 Cal Code Regs §2904.

Kickbacks, referral fees, and other unearned fees from title companies, escrow holders, and the like are prohibited under Bus & P C §10177.4 and the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act of 1974 (RESPA) (12 USC §§2601-2617), whether disclosed by the broker or not. 12 USC §2607(a)-(b). See §15.95 for discussion of RESPA. Violation of RESPA's ban on kickbacks could subject a broker to criminal penalties as well as civil liability for three times the amount of the referral fee. 12 USC §2607(d). See also Stetler v Greenpoint Mortgage Funding Inc. (ED Cal, Jan. 23, 2008) 2008 US Dist Lexis 4880 (court granted summary judgment against claim that mortgage broker failed to disclose alleged kickback payments from a lender because payments were for services rendered—not in violation of RESPA). On kickbacks, referral fees, and other unearned fees from a title company, see California Title Insurance Practice §§1.13-1.14 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997).

§2.136 e. The Dishonest Client

A broker is faced with a different type of conflict when the client seeks the broker's participation in conduct that would violate the law or obligations owed by the broker to other parties. This could arise when the client directs the broker not to disclose material information to which the other party is entitled (or requests the broker's assistance in defrauding a lender). The broker is not shielded or relieved from its duty to disclose or to observe the law by the client's instructions to the contrary. Brokers, unlike attorneys, have no client privilege that prohibits disclosure, and no protection from liability for nondisclosure. As a result, there should be no breach of fiduciary duty when the broker makes the required disclosure despite the client's opposition. Withdrawal from the representation may be another option; and a well-drafted commission agreement may still entitle the broker to compensation in such circumstances (see §2.79).

§2.137 2. Advice on Price and Value

The scope of the services and advice that the broker provides a client will depend on the type of the transaction and the client's experience and sophistication. A residential seller may expect and need a great deal of help from the broker, while the experienced commercial seller may only need help to find a buyer. For a further discussion of services, see §2.24. The broker's duty as a fiduciary, however, remains the same. If the broker does act, he or she must exercise the standard of care of a fiduciary. On the standard of care, see §2.124.

§2.138 a. Best Price Obtainable

An experienced seller may dictate the price to the listing broker, but the broker's advice on the property's fair market value is extremely important for the unsophisticated seller. In such cases the broker, rather than merely suggesting a number, should provide the seller with information regarding comparable sales from which the seller can make a reasonable judgment. The broker must disclose all material facts regarding the value or price of the property, including, when appropriate, the possibility that a higher price might be obtained at a later time or by marketing the property in another way. Smith v Zak (1971) 20 CA3d 785, 98 CR 242; Fisher v Losey (1947) 78 CA2d 121, 177 P2d 334.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.139 b. Statements to Parties About Price

In transmitting offers and counteroffers, the broker may be asked to predict a purchase price that the other party will accept. For example, a seller's broker who tells a prospective buyer that the seller is willing to accept less than the asking price may be breaching a fiduciary duty to the seller, unless the seller has authorized such a communication. Bate v Marsteller (1959) 175 CA2d 573, 346 P2d 903; Mitchell v Gould (1928) 90 CA 647, 266 P 565. On the other hand, generally the seller would not want the broker to discourage a buyer from making any offer below the asking price. The seller can always reject or counter such an offer. A broker's general statement intended to encourage negotiations should be distinguished from the disclosure of confidential information without proper authorization.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.140 c. Speculative Purchases and Resales

The broker's duties to advise a seller-client regarding price and to assist in obtaining the highest price available do not imply a guarantee that those efforts will be successful. A broker may be liable to a seller if the property is resold at a substantially higher price by a speculator, although the law on the extent of a broker's duty in the area of speculative resales is not settled. The mere existence of a price differential on a subsequent sale would probably not be sufficient to establish either negligence (see §2.159) or breach of fiduciary duty (see §§2.127-2.158), because the price might be the result of recent inflationary increases in property values. An immediate price differential, however, raises the question of whether the broker diligently represented the seller's interest in obtaining the best price for the property.

If the broker is aware that a prospective buyer intends to resell the property shortly at a significantly higher price, disclosure to the seller is required. For an agent who represents both buyer and seller, the agent's failure to disclose to the seller that the buyer is an investor who intends to quickly resell the property constitutes a prima facie case of fraud, misrepresentation, and breach of fiduciary duty. Jorgensen v Beach 'N' Bay Realty, Inc. (1981) 125 CA3d 155, 177 CR 882. See also CC §2020; Rattray v Scudder (1946) 28 C2d 214, 169 P2d 371 (plaintiff violated fiduciary duty by failing to disclose truth and making misrepresentations about price at which property could be sold).

The seller's broker must also disclose any discussions with the buyer about the possibility of relisting the property with the broker for resale. Menzel v Salka (1960) 179 CA2d 612, 4 CR 78. See also Bay Shore Homes, Inc. v San Diego Trust & Sav. Bank (1969) 276 CA2d 108, 80 CR 849 (broker denied commission because of failure to disclose agreement to turn over commission to buyer in exchange for listing on resale of property); but see Moody v Osborne (1953) 120 CA2d 598, 261 P2d 783 (failure to disclose broker's loan to buyers to enable them to complete transaction did not violate broker's fiduciary duty).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.141 d. Communicating Offers to Seller

The seller's broker must inform the client of all offers received, regardless of whether they conform to the terms of the listing agreement or whether the broker considers them attractive. Failure to disclose an offer is equivalent to a representation to the seller that no offers were received. Simone v McKee (1956) 142 CA2d 307, 298 P2d 667. This duty exists whether the offer is oral or written. Duin v Security First Nat'l Bank (1955) 132 CA2d Supp 904, 283 P2d 790. Sound business practice may call for a broker to notify the seller of preliminary negotiations or inquiries even before receipt of a formal offer.

The broker's duty to communicate all offers is owed to the client, and not the other party. Thus, if the seller instructs the broker not to entertain offers below a certain level, the broker has no obligation to the prospective buyer to inform the seller of any nonconforming offer.

§2.142 C. Duty to Exercise Reasonable Care

A broker must exercise reasonable skill and care in the performance of services for the benefit of the client (Schoenberg v Romike Props. (1967) 251 CA2d 154, 59 CR 359) and is liable for any damages the client suffers because of unreasonable delay or negligence (see Wilson v Hisey (1957) 147 CA2d 433, 305 P2d 686). The standard of care is that which would be followed by a competent broker under similar circumstances. In a residential transaction, the standard of care is that of a reasonably prudent broker, which is measured by the degree of knowledge through education, experience, and examination required to obtain a broker's license. CC §2079.2. Professional negligence is the failure to exercise the degree of skill or knowledge ordinarily possessed by an average member of the profession. The applicable standard is not one of perfection, however, and the broker is not a guarantor of the transaction's success. As the court stated in a legal malpractice case, a breach of the duty of care is established not by a mere "failure to be brilliant, but a failure to come up to even a minimum standard of professional competence." McKnight v Dean (7th Cir 2001) 270 F3d 513, 518.

In litigation against brokers by clients, it is unusual to see a claim for professional negligence (breach of the duty of care) without accompanying allegations of fraud and breach of fiduciary duty. Thus, reported cases in which breach of the broker's duty of care is addressed are somewhat difficult to analyze because they generally also include and discuss issues of intentional misrepresentation or failure to disclose as well as negligence, and the actual grounds of liability can be difficult to pinpoint. See, e.g., Ford v Cournale (1973) 36 CA3d 172, 111 CR 334. The cases discussed in §§2.143-2.147 demonstrate that courts have held brokers to a duty to advise the client correctly and to investigate certain details of the property and the transaction, especially when the principal is unskilled and is relying on the broker's expertise. In the typical residential transaction, where the client is often an unsophisticated consumer relying on the broker for professional expertise in real estate matters, such reliance generally can be presumed. In the context of commercial transactions, where the client's knowledge and experience may equal or exceed the broker's, industry custom and practice is a helpful guideline for the scope of the broker's duty and the client's reasonable reliance.

§2.143 1. Advice on Financial Soundness

A broker may be asked for advice on financial issues beyond the listing price. When the broker undertakes to advise the client on such issues as the other party's financial soundness or the security offered, the broker can be held liable if there is a breach of the duty of care. See, e.g., Pepper v Underwood (1975) 48 CA3d 698, 122 CR 343, disapproved on other grounds in Stout v Turney (1978) 22 C3d 718, 730, 150 CR 637 (negligent misrepresentation that seller's tax returns were consistent with his financial statements); Banville v Schmidt (1974) 37 CA3d 92, 112 CR 126 (negligent misrepresentation of value of security under deed of trust and financial strength of obligor on note); Timmsen v Forest E. Olson, Inc. (1970) 6 CA3d 860, 86 CR 359 (negligent recommendation of sale to financially unsound buyer).

The broker is not a guarantor of the financial success of the client's investment. The broker should establish a clear understanding with the client regarding the scope of services to be performed. For example, if the client is purchasing a property and the rental income from a particular tenant is essential to the success of the investment, the broker is not required to conduct its own investigation of the tenant's financial condition. However, unless the client has the experience to understand the importance of such an inquiry, the broker should at least inform the client that it should be done, with the assistance of the appropriate professional advisor (e.g., an accountant). If the broker does undertake the task of performing financial due diligence, it must do so competently. See Bank of America v J. A. Williams (1948) 84 CA2d 562, 191 P2d 17.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.144 2. Advice on Title Matters

Brokers may also breach their duty of care by failing to investigate, or failing to advise the client to investigate, matters regarding title. In Brady v Carman (1960) 179 CA2d 63, 3 CR 612, a broker was held liable for erroneously advising a buyer that an easement across the property did not affect its value. In Wilson v Hisey (1957) 147 CA2d 433, 305 P2d 686, a broker's failure to recommend a title search was negligent when he had erroneously stated that there was only one encumbrance on the property. In Pepitone v Russo (1976) 64 CA3d 685, 134 CR 709, a broker was held liable for failing to advise the principal of a due-on-sale clause in a second deed of trust.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.145 3. Advice on Real Estate Matters

Brokers represent themselves to the public as having particular knowledge and skills in the real estate field and are under a corresponding obligation to exercise greater care and skill than is within the capacity of ordinary citizens. Richards Realty Co. v Real Estate Comm'r (1956) 144 CA2d 357, 300 P2d 893. Brokers must meet certain educational requirements (Bus & P C §§10153.3-10153.5) and must update their professional knowledge through continuing professional education (Bus & P C §§10170-10171.5). In addition, they must pass an examination prepared and administered by the state, which tests, among other things, their knowledge of real property law and legal principles. Bus & P C §10153.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.146 4. Advice on Tax Considerations

Brokers may be liable if they advise clients on tax considerations and do so incorrectly. In Santos v Wing (1961) 197 CA2d 678, 17 CR 457, the broker escaped liability for his alleged failure to give advice on the tax consequences of a transaction, because he had advised his principal to seek the advice of an attorney on the question. The broker will not be liable for failing to give tax advice if the contractual documents between the client and broker specifically admonished the client to get tax advice elsewhere. Moreover, such an admonition does not violate public policy, because the legislature has decided that clients should get tax advice from professionals other than real estate brokers. Carleton v Tortosa (1993) 14 CA4th 745, 17 CR2d 734. See CC §2079.16 (requiring disclosure to client that "[i]f legal or tax advice is desired, consult a competent professional").

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.147 5. Advice on Legal Matters

There is a lack of reported case authority on the extent of legal competence required of brokers, but they will incur liability for negligently giving legal advice to their clients or for negligently drafting legal documents. See, e.g., Biakanja v Irving (1958) 49 C2d 647, 320 P2d 16, in which a notary public was held liable for negligence in drafting a will. In People v Sipper (1943) 61 CA2d Supp 844, 142 P2d 960, disapproved on other grounds in Murgia v Municipal Court (1975) 15 C3d 286, 124 CR 204, a real estate broker (not involved in the sale or purchase of property) who prepared, for a fee, a document to secure a loan with real property was held liable for the unauthorized practice of law in violation of Bus & P C §6125. The court held that the practice of law includes "legal advice and counsel and the preparation of legal instruments and contracts by which legal rights are secured." 61 CA2d at 846.

There is no clear definition of what constitutes "basic" real estate legal principles that a broker should understand, or when the line is crossed into the unauthorized practice of law. The cases at either extreme may be easy to identify, but there is a sizeable gray area in between. In evaluating the broker's conduct, the following points must be kept in mind: The broker (1) is not authorized to offer legal advice, but (2) should inform the client when outside legal advice is needed (see Miller & Starr, California Real Estate §3:26 (3d ed 2002)), and (3) will be responsible for the advice it does provide. Biakanja, 49 C2d at 647.

§2.147A 6. Advice on Short Sales

A short sale is an example of an area that may require advice beyond the expertise of a real estate agent or broker. In a recessionary market, a homeowner or real estate investor may be faced with the serious challenge of value shrinking to less than the outstanding loan balance at the same time as interest rates and mortgage payments are rising beyond the owner's means. A short sale may be the best of the available options. A short sale may involve, among other things, knowledge of accounting, taxation, and alternative ways to structure the transaction for the client's needs. The licensee is not expected to have the skill and training to advise on such issues, but is expected to inform the client of the limitations of his or her knowledge and to recommend that the client seek the advice of an appropriately trained lawyer or other professional. An agent who goes beyond his or her area of expertise will be held to the requisite standard of competence and thus risks being negligent or even crossing into the unauthorized practice of law. See Carleton v Tortosa (1993) 14 CA4th 745, 17 CR2d 734 (broker informed client to seek advice from tax counsel on any tax issues); Santos v Wing (1961) 197 CA2d 678, 17 CR 457 (broker urged seller to seek tax counsel). On short sales, see §§6.106C-6.106F; on distressed sales generally, see §§6.106A-6.111.

§2.148 D. Duty to Perform With Diligence

The seller can revoke an exclusive agency or exclusive right-to-sell listing if the broker fails to diligently carry out the terms of the agency. Coleman v Mora (1968) 263 CA2d 137, 69 CR 166. (An open listing is generally characterized as a unilateral offer that the seller may revoke regardless of the broker's diligence. See §2.59.) The broker's lack of diligence will constitute a defense to his or her action for payment of a commission if the seller revokes the listing before accepting an offer procured by anyone other than the broker. In Coleman, the court of appeal held that the principal may revoke a listing agreement for any of the reasons for which contracts may generally be revoked (see CC §1689 for grounds for rescission), including failure to perform. The broker's breach alone does not terminate the listing agreement, however, and to avoid liability for the commission the seller should clearly exercise the right to revoke before the property is sold. See Whitney Inv. Co. v Westview Dev. Co. (1969) 273 CA2d 594, 78 CR 302.

Whether the broker has performed with diligence is a question of fact to be decided in light of the circumstances of each case. Whitney Inv. Co. v Westview Dev. Co., supra. A seller must be careful in exercising the right to revoke, because if the listing is terminated without adequate cause, the broker may be entitled to the commission without any further performance, especially if the listing agreement contains a withdrawal-from-sale clause (see §2.114). Blank v Borden (1974) 11 C3d 963, 115 CR 31.

PRACTICE TIP: The need for adequate cause underscores the importance to the seller of specifying in the listing agreement the services the broker is to perform. See §2.84. It will be easier to establish a breach if the broker's duties were stated in detail and if the broker is notified of the seller's dissatisfaction (and has an opportunity to cure its performance) before termination.

§2.149 E. Duty to Account

The broker must account for all funds held on the client's behalf and cannot commingle the client's funds with personal funds. Bus & P C §10176(e). See also Brown v Gordon (1966) 240 CA2d 659, 49 CR 901 (revocation of license based on commingling of funds). The broker holds the client's funds as trustee and is responsible for their disposition in accordance with the client's directions. Holloway v Thiele (1953) 116 CA2d 68, 253 P2d 131.

The broker may be called on to receive and hold the buyer's deposit as agent for the buyer, as agent for the seller, or as escrow holder under written instructions in the offer or contract. See §§2.67-2.70. The Real Estate Law (Bus & P C §§10000-10580) and regulations adopted by the Real Estate Commissioner (10 Cal Code Regs §§2700-3109) limit the circumstances in which a broker may receive and hold a deposit check before the offer is accepted; they generally require the deposit to be placed in escrow or in the broker's trust account no later than 3 business days after receipt. Bus & P C §10145; 10 Cal Code Regs §2832. A broker may hold funds uncashed only with the seller's written permission. 10 Cal Code Regs §2832. One shortcoming of using preprinted real estate purchase contracts is the implied requirement that a deposit accompany the initial offer. Many brokers and prospective buyers interpret this form as requiring delivery of a check to the broker long before the parties have reached agreement, although the seller's interest would be adequately protected by a deposit at the time the purchase agreement is executed. See §§2.69-2.70.

The DRE regulates brokers' trust funds generally and imposes various recordkeeping requirements on brokers. Bus & P C §10145; 10 Cal Code Regs §§2830.1-2836. A broker must provide quarterly accountings to the client of any advance fees that the broker holds for the client. Bus & P C §10146. In Burch v Argus Props. (1979) 92 CA3d 128, 154 CR 485, the client was permitted to recover the amount of fees advanced, as punitive damages, for the broker's failure to render quarterly accountings as required by Bus & P C §10146, even though the funds had been returned to the client before the action was commenced.

F. Limitations on Broker's Duties

§2.150 1. No Duty to Verify Accuracy of Others' Representations

Although a broker is not required to independently verify the accuracy of another party's representations, it is important that the client know whether the information communicated by the broker has been confirmed or is merely being forwarded from another source without verification. In Salahutdin v Valley of Cal., Inc. (1994) 24 CA4th 555, 29 CR2d 463, the broker knew that the buyers wanted property that could be subdivided and that only parcels of one acre or more could be subdivided. The broker relied on (1) a disclosure in the multiple listing sheet that the property in question contained an acre and (2) a personal inspection that showed a fenced area that contained an acre. The actual property purchased by the buyers contained only 0.998 acres and could not be subdivided. The broker's liability was not founded on a breach of the duty to inspect and disclose (see CC §§2079-2079.6, 2079.12; Easton v Strassburger (1984) 152 CA3d 90, 199 CR 383), but rather on a breach of the fiduciary duty not to make representations of material facts to a client without advising the client that the broker is merely passing on information received from the seller without verifying its accuracy. In Robinson v Grossman (1997) 57 CA4th 634, 67 CR2d 380, however, the court ruled that a listing agent's statutory duty to disclose material facts does not include a duty to verify or disclaim sellers' potentially inaccurate statements. If the client reasonably believes that the information the broker provides is the result of the broker's own independent investigation, the broker will be held accountable for its accuracy; but if it is reasonably clear that the information came from some other source (e.g., the seller or a public record), the broker should not be considered a guarantor of the accuracy of the information by merely passing it on to the client. To avoid dispute, the broker should disclose to the client the source of the information.

§2.151 2. No Duty to Advise on Matters Outside of Broker's Expertise

A broker is expected to possess a certain basic level of knowledge regarding real estate matters generally, and a higher level of knowledge if it promotes itself as an expert in some particular area of real estate. A transaction can involve many issues that are outside the scope of the typical broker's expertise; some, such as legal issues, tax matters, accounting issues, construction, engineering, and hazardous materials, require the assistance of other professionals. One or more these areas may be crucial to a particular transaction, but each requires experience and training beyond that of the average real estate broker. See, for example, §§2.146-2.147.

The broker is not obligated to provide advice in subjects outside its core real estate expertise. A broker, however, may be expected to recognize when an issue requires analysis by another professional, in which case there is a duty to inform the client that such a person should be consulted. See Carleton v Tortosa (1993) 14 CA4th 745, 17 CR2d 734. Finally, if the broker attempts to advise in one of these other areas (without appropriate disclaimer and recommendation that more professional advice be obtained), the broker will be not be excused if its advice is incorrect or incomplete.

VII. CLAIMS AGAINST BROKER

§2.152 A. Breach of Fiduciary Duty

Brokers are subject to two separate and distinct areas of liability for violating their fiduciary duties. Brokers may incur civil liability to the principal under various causes of action (see §§2.124-2.151). Brokers also are subject to disciplinary proceedings before the Real Estate Commissioner under Bus & P C §§10175-10185. See §§2.171-2.174. An aggrieved party may maintain both administrative and legal actions simultaneously. In addition, a real estate agent is liable under CC §51.9 for sexual harassment of a client.

On claims against brokers and on defending brokers, see California Real Estate Brokers: Law and Litigation, chaps 5, 8-9 (Cal CEB 2009); on brokers' error and omission and liability insurance, see RE Brokers, chap 10; on litigating against brokers, see RE Brokers, chaps 11-12.

§2.153 1. Bases of Liability

Both common law and statutory law provide bases of liability for a broker's breach of a fiduciary duty. Under the common law, a broker who breaches the contract with the principal is liable under general contract law, entirely apart from the law of agency. Anderson v Badger (1948) 84 CA2d 736, 191 P2d 768. In addition to contractual rights against the broker, the principal—in both residential and commercial transactions—may find the following common law remedies available under theories of fraud, breach of fiduciary duty, misrepresentation, concealment, deceit, third party tort, and negligence:

- Damages for losses suffered from the broker's breach of fiduciary duty (see §§2.127-2.158);
- Damages for the broker's negligence (see §2.159);
- Recovery of the broker's secret profits (see §2.160);
- Recovery of the broker's commission (see §2.161);
- Punitive damages (see §2.162); and
- Indemnity for damages recovered from the principal by third parties and/or attorneys fees incurred in prosecuting or defending against third party claims (see §2.163).

The court in Easton v Strassburger (1984) 152 CA3d 90, 199 CR 383, held that a residential broker has the affirmative duty to conduct a reasonably competent and diligent inspection of the property. The legislature later codified this duty. CC §§1102-1102.17, 2079-2079.24. See §§2.133-2.134. The enactment of these statutes did not diminish the common law responsibilities of commercial brokers and residential brokers, but rather created an additional statutory duty for residential brokers, who can now be found liable under theories of fraud, breach of fiduciary duty, misrepresentation, concealment, and deceit for breach of their duties to conduct a reasonably diligent inspection and to disclose anything that would affect the value or desirability of the property.

NOTE: The statutory duties imposed on brokers by CC §§1102-1102.17 and 2079-2079.24 and the cases interpreting these sections apply only to residential—not commercial—real estate transactions. Practitioners analyzing a broker's duty in a failed residential transaction must take great care to distinguish and analyze both the common law and statutory theories of liability. These duties are not mutually exclusive. In litigation involving residential transactions, the potential theories of liability under the common law and under the statutes should be appreciated as distinct and parallel bases for separate and distinct liability. Although the theories are legally distinct, the respective rights may overlap. For instance, even before enactment of CC §§1102-1102.17 and 2079-2079.24, brokers were under a general duty to disclose any material defects in a property. Lingsch v Savage (1963) 213 CA2d 729, 29 CR 201.

For an excellent explanation of how the statutory duties under CC §2079 can differ from the broader fiduciary duties of an agent, see Michel v Moore & Associates, Inc. (2007) 156 CA4th 756, 67 CR3d 797. In Michel, a secondary agent, Kirkpatrick, who worked for the cooperating broker, had inspected a home and taken notes of the property's defects. Kirkpatrick's associate, Lagudis, who also worked for the cooperating broker, represented plaintiff-buyers. Lagudis prepared a transfer disclosure statement which did not include certain items in Kirkpatrick's notes. Kirkpatrick reviewed the transfer disclosure statement but did not augment it or tell Lagudis about the other defects he had found. In reversing dismissal of the negligent nondisclosure cause of action against the cooperating broker, the court noted the cause involved elements different from the buyers' §2079 and fraudulent concealment causes of action. The fiduciary duty owed by brokers to their clients was substantially more extensive than the nonfiduciary duty codified in §2079. 156 CA4th at 762.

§2.153A 2. Pre-Litigation and Pre-Arbitration Duty to Mediate

Many residential purchase agreements include a requirement to mediate before resorting to litigation or arbitration. These provisions routinely preclude recovery of attorney fees if the prevailing party did not make a good faith effort to mediate or refused to mediate after a request was made. In Frei v Davey (2004) 124 CA4th 1506, 1508, 22 CR3d 429, the court construed such a provision literally and concluded that it "means what it says and will be enforced." See also Lange v Schilling (2008) 163 CA4th 1412, 78 CR3d 356 (same, quoting Frei).

§2.154 3. Right to Arbitrate Claims

Whether claims against a broker can or must be arbitrated may depend not only on a written contract between the broker and principal, such as a listing agreement or commission agreement, but also may be based on the purchase and sale agreement between the seller and buyer if the broker is deemed to be a party to such agreement.

PRACTICE TIP: Practitioners handling either residential or commercial disputes should obtain and marshal all documents and facts in a chronological fashion as quickly as possible in the early stages of the dispute. With this technique, if an earlier-signed agreement has been modified in any manner by later-signed documents, it will quickly stand out. For instance, rights of the principals or the brokers may have been added or deleted in later-executed documents between the same parties. The executed purchase agreement may provide for attorney fees and expressly allow the broker to rely on that provision, whereas the earlier listing agreement included no such provision. Similarly, the listing or commission agreement may provide for the broker to be paid a certain percentage commission that is later expressly modified in writing.

In Westra v Marcus & Millichap Real Estate Inv. Brokerage Co. (2005) 129 CA4th 759, 28 CR3d 752, the broker was not a party to the purchase and sale agreement, but was nevertheless entitled to enforce the arbitration provision in that agreement as the agent of the signatories to the agreement. In addition, the federal Arbitration Act (9 USC §§1-16) may preempt state arbitration laws when federal financing is contemplated and forms supplied by a national organization are used in the transaction. Hedges v Carrigan (2004) 117 CA4th 578, 583, 11 CR3d 787; see also Westra, 129 CA4th at 764. But see Nguyen v Tran (2007) 157 CA4th 1032, 1038, 68 CR3d 906, in which the court both followed and distinguished Westra. It concluded that the cooperating brokers, as agents of a signatory to the purchase agreement, could compel the buyers to arbitrate under the arbitration clause in the purchase agreement signed solely by the buyers and the sellers but could not, as nonsignatories, compel another nonsignatory, the listing broker, to arbitrate.

§2.155 4. Damages for Breach of Fiduciary Duty

A breach of the broker's fiduciary duty, whether intentional or negligent, makes the broker liable to the principal for damages caused by the breach. See §§2.124-2.126 on breach of fiduciary duty. See also Warren v Merrill (2006) 143 CA4th 96, 49 CR3d 122. However, the appropriate measure of damages for such breach is unclear, and the principal's recovery may vary a great deal, depending on the measure used. Confusion exists because the cases dealing with breach have used terms such as "benefit of the bargain" imprecisely and because the rules articulated in cases involving breach of contract, fraud, and unjust enrichment have been applied to inappropriate fact situations. See Overgaard v Johnson (1977) 68 CA3d 821, 137 CR 412, for an analysis of these conflicting rules. Naturally, the principal will want to frame a lawsuit for breach of fiduciary duty in terms that will bring the case under the broadest possible measure of damages, while the broker will seek to invoke the most restrictive measure.

Under the benefit-of-the-bargain standard, the principal is entitled to recover the difference between the actual value of the property and the value the principal expected to receive, while an out-of-pocket measure would permit recovery only of the difference between the actual value of the property and the amount paid. In between is the loss-of-profits measure, recognized by the California Supreme Court in Stout v Turney (1978) 22 C3d 718, 150 CR 637, which permitted recovery of incidental costs and expenses in recovering secret profits that the broker had obtained in the transaction. See, e.g., Ward v Taggart (1959) 51 C2d 736, 336 P2d 534; Simone v McKee (1956) 142 CA2d 307, 298 P2d 667. See §2.135 on secret profits.

The benefit-of-the-bargain standard is applied if the plaintiff's action against a broker, as a fiduciary, establishes intentional misrepresentation. See Fragale v Faulkner (2003) 110 CA4th 229, 235, 1 CR3d 616 (measure of damages in case of intentional misrepresentation by fiduciary is not limited to out-of-pocket losses).

An extended discussion of the measure of damages for breach of fiduciary duty is contained in Salahutdin v Valley of Cal., Inc. (1994) 24 CA4th 555, 29 CR2d 463, discussed in §2.150. The appellate court in Salahutdin noted that there was an apparent split of authority on the issue but adopted the broader benefit-of-the-bargain measure of damages under CC §§1709 and 3333. See also Strebel v Brenlar Investments (2006) 135 CA4th 740, 37 CR3d 699, in which the court chose not to adopt either the benefit-of-the-bargain or the out-of-pocket loss rule, and allowed the plaintiff to fully recover for all injuries suffered under CC §3333. In allowing the plaintiff to recover appreciation damages incurred after the date of the fraud, the court rejected a formulaic approach and appeared to take a broader, equitable approach to ensuring that the victim of the fraudulent conduct received a full, equitable, and logical recovery.

§2.156 a. Breach of Contract; Fraud Actions

For breach of contract actions, the measure of damages is governed by CC §3300, which authorizes recovery under a benefit-of-the-bargain standard. In fraud cases, recovery is limited to out-of-pocket losses, or to lost profits if the principal acquired the property for profit or gain. CC §3343. Lost profits are unavailable if the property was purchased for residential purposes. See Stout v Turney (1978) 22 C3d 718, 728 n12, 150 CR 637.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.157 b. Tort Action

For breach of fiduciary duty, including fraudulent breach, the tort measure of damages of CC §3333 applies. Section 3333 provides for recovery of an amount that will "compensate for all the detriment proximately caused" by the breach, but it does not include the benefit-of-the-bargain language of CC §3300. Overgaard v Johnson (1977) 68 CA3d 821, 137 CR 412.

The recovery formula to be applied under CC §3333 is unsettled. Some courts have held that the measure of damages under §3333 is the benefit-of-the-bargain rule that applies to actions for breach of contract under CC §3300. Pepitone v Russo (1976) 64 CA3d 685, 134 CR 709; Pepper v Underwood (1975) 48 CA3d 698, 122 CR 343, disapproved on other grounds in Stout v Turney (1978) 22 C3d 718, 730, 150 CR 637. A benefit-of-the-bargain standard for breach of fiduciary duty is provided for in CACI 1924.

In Fragale v Faulkner (2003) 110 CA4th 229, 1 CR3d 616, the court distinguished between intentional and negligent misrepresentation by a fiduciary. Citing dictum in Alliance Mortgage Co. v Rothwell (1995) 10 C4th 1226, 44 CR2d 352, the court held that the purchasers of a home would be entitled to recover the cost of repairing code violations if they prevailed in their claim that their broker intentionally misrepresented that additions to the home were built to code; if they proved only negligent misrepresentation, however, they would be limited to an out-of-pocket measure. See also, CACI 1924, citing and quoting Alliance Mortgage Co. v Rothwell, supra. Other courts have held that §3333 limits the principal's recovery to the extent of the financial injury actually sustained and is not a benefit-of-the-bargain measure. Ward v Taggart (1959) 51 C2d 736, 336 P2d 534; Walters v Marler (1978) 83 CA3d 1, 147 CR 655; Overgaard v Johnson, supra. See also California Attorney's Guide to Damages §2.35 (2d ed Cal CEB 2004).

In Overgaard v Johnson, supra, the seller listed farm property for sale. The broker found a buyer but negligently failed to advise the buyer that the amount of the acreage for sale was less than that stated in the sale documents. The buyer recovered from the seller the difference between the sale price and market value, and the seller then sued the broker for that amount plus attorney fees. The court of appeal held that under CC §3333 the seller was entitled to recover brokerage fees on the price differential and to recover attorney fees, but the seller could not recover the price differential itself because §3333 does not provide for a benefit-of-the-bargain standard.

§2.158 c. Attorney Fees

A broker who commits a fraudulent breach of fiduciary duty is not liable for the defrauded party's attorney fees unless there is an applicable exception to the general rule that each party bears its own attorney fees. Gray v Don Miller & Assocs. (1984) 35 C3d 498, 198 CR 551. In so holding, the Gray court disapproved the portion of Walters v Marler (1978) 83 CA3d 1, 147 CR 655, that upheld a fee award, but did find a partial exception in holding that the buyer's attorney fees incurred in a specific performance action against the seller (brought in reliance on the broker's misrepresentation) were recoverable. The court's rationale was that the buyer had sued the seller based on the "third party tort" of the broker. See also Behniwal v Mix (2005) 133 CA4th 1027, 35 CR3d 320 (sellers' broker was sued on "third party tort theory" and prevailed against claim for attorney fees after it was found that sellers had ratified forged counteroffer signed by sellers' broker); Heckert v MacDonald (1989) 208 CA3d 832, 256 CR 369 (attorney fees on "third party tort theory" were denied because seller had received more than amount in question through increase in sale price arising from broker's wrongful activities).

A broker who successfully defended against his client's fraud and rescission claim was not entitled to attorney fees in Super 7 Motel Assocs. v Wang (1993) 16 CA4th 541, 20 CR2d 193. To take advantage of an attorney fee clause, the claimant usually must be a party to the contract, and the Super 7 broker was neither a party nor a third party beneficiary of the contract. A defendant who is not a party to a contract may sometimes be entitled to fees if the plaintiff would have been able to recover them had he or she prevailed. Because the client's fraud claim against the broker in Super 7 was really an ancillary tort claim, not a contract claim, however, the client would not have been able to recover attorney fees from the broker and, reciprocally, the broker could not recover them from the client.

In Hasler v Howard (2004) 120 CA4th 1023, 1027, 16 CR3d 217, the wording of the attorney fees provision was pivotal; the court stated: "Instead of covering any action or lawsuit arising from the listing agreement, the provision here only applies to actions 'regarding the obligation to pay compensation' under the listing agreement…." A tort action for fraud, breach of fiduciary duty, and breach of duty to disclose did not satisfy the explicit language in the listing agreement. But see Pacific Preferred Props. v Moss (1999) 71 CA4th 1456, 84 CR2d 500, in which the court, on the basis of references to the broker in various sections of the purchase contract, found that the broker was a party to the contract and awarded attorney fees to the prevailing-party seller. For discussion of fees in action between buyer and seller, see §4.140.

In Xuereb v Marcus & Millichap, Inc. (1992) 3 CA4th 1338, 5 CR2d 154, the court was faced with defendants who had prevailed on tort causes of action at trial but had been denied recovery of their attorney fees and costs under the contract. In overturning the ruling on attorney fees, the court noted that the attorney fee provision allowed fees and costs to the prevailing party if a suit or other legal proceeding arose from the agreement. The language was broad enough to encompass both contract and tort claims.

For a good discussion analyzing "prevailing party," see Wakefield v Bohlin (2006) 145 CA4th 963, 52 CR3d 400.

§2.159 B. Damages for Negligence

Generally speaking, a person rendering services is liable for negligence if the damage or injury is foreseeable. Biakanja v Irving (1958) 49 C2d 647, 320 P2d 16. This rule applies to real estate brokers with respect to their duties toward principals in a transaction, whether or not they are in contractual privity. Merrill v Buck (1962) 58 C2d 552, 25 CR 456; Easton v Strassburger (1984) 152 CA3d 90, 199 CR 383. The measure of damages in agency situations is all damages proximately caused by the negligence. CC §3333; Smith v Rickard (1988) 205 CA3d 1354, 254 CR 633.

PRACTICE TIP: Although attorney fees are seldom recoverable in negligence actions, the decision in Perry v Robertson (1988) 201 CA3d 333, 247 CR 74, is an example of the court's liberal treatment of a pleading that asserted both contract and negligence theories because the broker's misdrafting of a contract resulted in an inadequate sale price. The basis for the attorney fees award was a clause in the listing agreement, and the court held that, because the remedy sought and obtained was the same under either theory, the trial court had properly awarded the fees based on a contract theory. This case underscores the importance of the selection of causes of action.

For discussion of attorney fee awards in tort actions between buyers and sellers, see §4.140.

§2.160 C. Recovery of Secret Profits

A broker who obtains secret profits must return them to the principal on the theory that all profits in the transaction, without full disclosure and a specific agreement to the contrary, belong to the principal. Menzel v Salka (1960) 179 CA2d 612, 4 CR 78. See §2.135. The duty extends to persons with whom the broker has no fiduciary relationship and with whom the broker deals at arm's length. Ward v Taggart (1959) 51 C2d 736, 336 P2d 534.

The broker must disgorge all secret profits, not because of injury to the principal, but because all benefits and advantages gained by the agent go to the principal. Savage v Mayer (1949) 33 C2d 548, 203 P2d 9. The remedies typically used by plaintiffs to recover secret profits are imposition of a constructive trust or an equitable lien. St. James Armenian Church v Kurkjian (1975) 47 CA3d 547, 121 CR 214. When the funds have been dissipated, however, an award of money damages is proper. St. James Armenian Church v Kurkjian, supra.

Even if the broker receives no secret profits, if they flow to a third party because of the broker's breach of fiduciary duty, the broker is liable to the principal for those profits. St. James Armenian Church v Kurkjian, supra. The principal may be entitled to rescind the transaction if the wrongful conduct is discovered before the conveyance occurs. Rodes v Shannon (1963) 222 CA2d 721, 35 CR 339.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.161 D. Recovery of Commission

If the broker's breach of fiduciary duty was willful, the principal may be entitled to recover the commission. Sierra Pac. Indus. v Carter (1980) 104 CA3d 579, 163 CR 764; Menzel v Salka (1960) 179 CA2d 612, 4 CR 78. If the breach is merely negligent, the injured party is entitled to actual damages but the broker does not forfeit the commission. Ziswasser v Cole & Cowan, Inc. (1985) 164 CA3d 417, 425, 210 CR 428.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.162 E. Punitive Damages

Punitive damages may be awarded if it is shown, by clear and convincing evidence, that the broker's misconduct was oppressive, fraudulent, or malicious. CC §3294; Haigler v Donnelly (1941) 18 C2d 674, 117 P2d 331; Simone v McKee (1956) 142 CA2d 307, 298 P2d 667. Punitive damages are unavailable for breach of contract—even if the breach is willful and even if the contract creates the fiduciary obligation. CC §3294; Crogan v Metz (1956) 47 C2d 398, 303 P2d 1029. They may be available, however, for breach of fiduciary duty (a noncontract claim) on proof of oppression, fraud, or malice. CC §3294.

The standard for misconduct may differ depending on whether the broker has a fiduciary or nonfiduciary relationship with the plaintiff, and is entirely determined by the factual circumstances. Depending on those factual circumstances, a broker may incur punitive damages for behavior less flagrant than would justify their award against either a nonprofessional or a nonfiduciary. See, e.g., Ward v Taggart (1959) 51 C2d 736, 336 P2d 534.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.163 F. Indemnity

The principal is entitled to implied indemnity from the broker for damages recovered by third parties because of the broker's actions. Walsh v Hooker & Fay (1963) 212 CA2d 450, 28 CR 16; Kruse v Miller (1956) 143 CA2d 656, 300 P2d 855. See Overgaard v Johnson (1977) 68 CA3d 821, 137 CR 412, discussed in §2.157, on the measure of damages in an indemnity situation. See also Trust One Mortgage Corp. v Invest Am. Mortgage Corp. (2005) 134 CA4th 1302, 37 CR3d 83, in which the broker was liable to the lender under a written indemnity provision that did not violate the antideficiency laws.

§2.164 G. Recovery of Unsatisfied Judgments From Recovery Account of Real Estate Fund

The Real Estate Law (Bus & P C §§10000-10580) provides for a special fund (called the Recovery Account, a component of the Real Estate Fund) from which any aggrieved person may satisfy a judgment against a real estate licensee for fraud, misrepresentation, deceit, or conversion. Bus & P C §§10450.6, 10470-10481.

NOTE: A judgment against a licensee is defined as a final judgment in a court of competent jurisdiction, including a federal court, but not a court of another state. Bus & P C §10471(a).

Recovery is also allowed from the Recovery Account following an arbitration award that has been confirmed and reduced to judgment under CCP §1287.4. Bus & P C §10471.

Source: Real Property/California Real Property Sales Transactions/2 Brokers/ 1. Requirements for Recovery/§2.165 a. Licensed Defendant

1. Requirements for Recovery

§2.165 a. Licensed Defendant

The defendant must have been licensed as a broker or a salesperson under the Real Estate Law (Bus & P C §§10000-10580) at the time the misconduct occurred. Bus & P C §10471. See Powers v Fox (1979) 96 CA3d 440, 158 CR 92. For the Recovery Account (see §2.164) to be liable, the transaction that gave rise to the plaintiff's claim must have been one for which a real estate license is required (Bus & P C §10471); recovery is not permitted if the broker was acting on his or her own behalf. See Robinson v Murphy (1979) 96 CA3d 763, 158 CR 246 (defendant not acting as broker when selling own property); McGaughey v Fox (1979) 94 CA3d 645, 156 CR 593 (not acting as broker when selling own share and not acting on behalf of partnership).

§2.166 b. Basis of Judgment

A petition to recover from the Recovery Account will not be granted unless the judgment arose out of fraud, misrepresentation, deceit, or the conversion of trust funds and the broker had the requisite intent to defraud. Bus & P C §10471. The trial court's decision creates a rebuttable presumption of the fraud, misrepresentation, deceit, or trust fund conversion on which the action against the Recovery Account is based. Thus, to this limited extent, the licensee has an opportunity to legally justify why the judgment was in error or why the licensee did not commit fraud. The trial court's findings are conclusive on the licensee, however, as to any other issues. Deas v Knapp (1981) 29 C3d 69, 171 CR 823. Although the DRE is not bound by the trial court's findings, it must overcome a rebuttable presumption on all issues. The burden of proof is on the applicant if the judgment was by default, stipulation, or consent under CCP §594, or if the licensee was defended by a trustee in bankruptcy. Bus & P C §10473. The applicant's claim against the Recovery Account must be based on the statutorily approved grounds; even if the licensee was found liable in the trial court on other grounds, they cannot be asserted against the Recovery Account. Stuart v Department of Real Estate (1983) 148 CA3d 1, 195 CR 524. For instance, in Yergan v Department of Real Estate (2000) 77 CA4th 959, 92 CR2d 189, the applicants were not entitled to payment when the stipulated judgment and underlying settlement were based on the licensee's professional negligence and not on a statutorily approved ground.

§2.167 c. Specified Categories of Actions

Recovery is allowed for specified categories of actions (see §2.166), as long as the action arises "directly out of any transaction in which the defendant, while licensed under [the Real Estate Law], performed acts for which a real estate license was required." Bus & P C §10471(a). This provision appears to codify the reasoning in Merrifield v Edmonds (1983) 146 CA3d 336, 194 CR 104, in which an action against a real estate salesperson for failure to repay two personal loans was found not to have arisen "directly" from a real estate transaction, and recovery from the fund was denied. Similarly, a judgment for losses arising from the salesperson's nonresident property management was not recoverable from the fund because the salesperson was not licensed to perform such work. The court held that, under former Bus & P C §10471, the claimant's loss must derive from a transaction in which the judgment debtor performed acts that required a license, in this case a broker's license. In Merrifield, the nonresident property management contract was invalid because the salesperson was not a licensed broker. Therefore, the court reasoned, the judgment creditor was not protected by the fund as an "innocent member of the public," because he entered into an illegal contract with the salesperson. The court noted that under Bus & P C §10138 the judgment creditor committed a misdemeanor by paying the salesperson.

Merrifield was distinguished in Vinci v Edmonds (1986) 185 CA3d 1251, 230 CR 308, in which a licensed salesperson misrepresented that he was a licensed broker and defrauded the plaintiffs in a short-term swing loan transaction for which a broker's license is required. Although the salesperson was not properly licensed for the acts performed, the Vinci court held the plaintiffs to be innocent members of the public, who were within the class of individuals that the Recovery Account was intended to benefit. The court found that the plaintiffs in Vinci had been deceived about the salesperson's status and were free of any wrongdoing themselves, unlike the plaintiff in Merrifield, who knew the status of the salesperson and knew that it was wrong to pay him. It appears that a ruling like the one in Vinci will be precluded in the future by the 1987 amendment to Bus & P C §10471(a), which requires, as a condition of recovery, that the transaction not be in violation of Bus & P C §10137 or §10138.

Recovery from the Recovery Account for a real estate agent's fraud is limited to acts within the scope of the agent's license. Davis v Harris (1998) 61 CA4th 507, 71 CR2d 591.

Because the Recovery Account is intended to compensate innocent members of the public who are victimized by dishonest licensees, real estate licensees themselves are not within the class of persons entitled to compensation from the account. Wallace v Onate (1991) 2 CA4th 549, 3 CR2d 3.

NOTE: The Recovery Account must deny recovery for injuries inflicted by a salesperson unless the applicant also pursues recovery from the salesperson's broker. Thus, a Recovery Account applicant who holds a judgment against a salesperson, but not the salesperson's broker, will have to show that the salesperson was acting outside the scope of his or her employment or was not employed by a broker at the time of the disputed transaction. Bus & P C §10471(d).

§2.168 d. No Discharge in Bankruptcy

The claimant must represent in its application that the underlying judgment and debt have not been discharged in bankruptcy or, if the debtor's bankruptcy is pending or is filed after the application is filed, that the judgment and debt have been declared nondischargeable. Bus & P C §10471(c)(7)(F). This requirement reduces the risk of collusive judgments obtained for the sole purpose of recovering from the Recovery Account, and puts the burden on the claimant to protect its judgment in the debtor's bankruptcy proceeding. Zinneman v Bagnol (2002) 104 CA4th 656, 128 CR2d 342.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.169 2. Amounts Recoverable

The maximum recovery in causes of action is $20,000 for any one transaction and $100,000 for any one licensee, regardless of the number of fraudulent acts by one broker. Bus & P C §10474; Dombalian v Fox (1979) 88 CA3d 763, 152 CR 86. Proration may be required if valid claims exceed the maximum amount. Bus & P C §10474.5. Within these statutory limits, the claimant is entitled to recover the amount of the judgment that cannot be satisfied from the licensee's assets, including prejudgment and postjudgment interest and costs. Antonio v Hempel (1977) 71 CA3d 128, 139 CR 309; Nordahl v Department of Real Estate (1975) 48 CA3d 657, 121 CR 794.

A party defrauded as part of a scheme involving multiple licensees may be entitled to recovery from the account of any licensed judgment debtor. Bus & P C §10474(d). If multiple licensees are involved in a scheme to defraud, more licensees may be available from whom the plaintiffs can recover the $100,000 limit per licensee, but the involvement of more licensees does not increase the $20,000 limit per real estate transaction. See Edmonds v Augustyn (1987) 193 CA3d 1056, 238 CR 704 (scheme's subagents committed independent fraudulent acts that gave rise to individual liability and permitted victim to seek recovery from account of any licensed judgment debtor, not just from that of scheme's leader).

Only the applicants' direct losses are compensable. In, e.g., Temple v Kerwin (1989) 209 CA3d 1087, 257 CR 651, emotional distress, punitive damages, and costs were held not recoverable. Tax benefits are deducted from amounts claimed (Froid v Fox (1982) 132 CA3d 832, 183 CR 461), as are attorney fees and punitive damages (Lewis v Edmonds (1987) 190 CA3d 1101, 235 CR 835; Acebo v Real Estate Educ., Research & Recovery Fund (1984) 155 CA3d 907, 202 CR 518).

§2.170 3. Procedures

A claimant with a proper judgment may apply to the DRE for an order directing payment of the claim from the Recovery Account. Application must be made within 1 year after the judgment becomes final, and the applicant must show that reasonable attempts were made to levy on the assets of "all judgment debtors and all other persons liable" to the applicant in the transaction or that the applicant has otherwise used reasonable diligence to pursue the available remedies. Bus & P C §10471(c)(7)(E). See Mason v Department of Real Estate (2002) 102 CA4th 1349, 126 CR2d 278. See also Fine v Southern Cal. Bus. Sales (1987) 190 CA3d 480, 235 CR 489.

For details on how the claimant must serve the judgment debtor, response time, the commissioner's rights and duties regarding the application, and the claimant's rights of de novo review upon denial, see Bus & P C §§10471.1-10472.

NOTE: If a federal court issued the underlying judgment, the application may be filed either in the superior court of any California county that would have been a proper venue of the underlying lawsuit or in the superior court of Sacramento County. Bus & P C §10472(a).

On payment from the fund, the license of the broker or salesperson is automatically suspended until the fund has been reimbursed with interest. Bus & P C §10475. The reimbursement obligation is not dischargeable in bankruptcy. 11 USC §523(a)(11).

This automatic suspension does not violate a real estate broker's due process rights. The required notice and opportunity to provide written argument satisfy due process requirements, and a full and formal hearing with oral testimony is not necessary. Rodriguez v Department of Real Estate (1996) 51 CA4th 1289, 59 CR2d 652. The licensee may obtain a judicial review of the suspension by petitioning the appropriate superior court for a writ of mandamus. Such petition must be filed within 30 days of receipt of notice of the Real Estate Commissioner's decision. Bus & P C §10471.5(c).

VIII. DISCIPLINARY PROCEEDINGS

A. Real Estate Commissioner Proceedings

§2.171 1. Grounds for Imposing Discipline

Under the Real Estate Law (Bus & P C §§10000-10580), the Real Estate Commissioner has substantial authority to bring disciplinary proceedings against brokers and salespersons. Bus & P C §§10071, 10176-10177.

NOTE: Jurisdiction for enforcement of the Real Estate Law rests with the Commissioner. There is no private right of action created for a party to sue a broker for a violation of the Real Estate Law. See Moradi-Shalal v Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. (1988) 46 C3d 287, 294, 250 CR 116; Vikco Ins. Servs., Inc. v Ohio Indemn. Co. (1999) 70 CA4th 55, 62, 82 CR2d 442; Grabau v Brown (In re Grabau) (Bankr ND Cal 1993) 151 BR 227.

The grounds for disciplining licensees are broad; they include all breaches of fiduciary duty under general agency law. Bus & P C §§10176-10177; Rhoades v Savage (1963) 219 CA2d 294, 32 CR 885. Effective January 1, 2005, the statutory grounds for discipline include failure to disburse funds in accordance with a loan commitment and intentional delay in closing a loan for the purpose of increasing interest, fees, or other costs payable by the borrower. Bus & P C §10176(k)-(l). In addition, the Real Estate Law specifies several actions that may not be breaches of fiduciary duty under their particular circumstances but that nonetheless may subject the broker to license suspension or revocation. See Bus & P C §§10177-10177.4.

To the extent that regulatory goals would be furthered, licensees may even be disciplined for certain misconduct that is not directly related to their conduct as licensees. Stickel v Harris (1987) 196 CA3d 575, 589, 242 CR 88, quoting Jennings v Karpe (1974) 36 CA3d 709, 111 CR 776. For example, under Bus & P C §10177(f), the DRE can suspend or revoke a real estate license based on the suspension or revocation of a license issued by another government agency. See Herrera v Department of Real Estate (2001) 88 CA4th 776, 106 CR2d 232 (real estate license revoked after licensee was temporarily suspended from practice of law for misappropriating client's funds).

Conviction of a crime, however, alone cannot support either disciplinary action or denial or revocation of a license unless the crime is "substantially related to the qualifications, functions, or duties of the business or profession." Bus & P C §§480(a), 490. See Brandt v Fox (1979) 90 CA3d 737, 153 CR 683 (denial of license based on conviction for possession of controlled substance was not shown to be substantially related to the qualifications, functions, or duties of real estate licensee).

In Chodur v Edmonds (1985) 174 CA3d 565, 220 CR 80, the term "dishonest dealing," a ground for discipline under Bus & P C §10177(j), was held to be not unconstitutionally vague either on its face or as applied. The broker in Chodur had intentionally not made payments on an underlying note, although he received payments from his borrowers under his all-inclusive promissory note, and then used the payments received for his own benefit.

PRACTICE TIP: Claimants may obtain complaint forms from the DRE's website (the website is listed in the Directory). After a complaint is filed, the matter is first turned over to an investigator, who usually contacts the broker and advises the broker of the claim. Brokers and practitioners acting on behalf of the accused should use this investigation period and should respond to the complaint by explaining the conduct in question as completely as possible before an accusation is formally filed. Spurious or nonmeritorious claims can often be defeated in this manner. Claimants should recognize that if there is a pending civil action based on the acts under investigation, the DRE may choose to delay the investigation and/or resolution of the claim until after the legal action is resolved.

On disciplinary procedures, see California Real Estate Brokers: Law and Litigation, chap 9 (Cal CEB 2009).

2. Procedures and Remedies

§2.172 a. Mitigating Factors

If the broker's activities violate the Real Estate Law (Bus & P C §§10000-10580), disciplinary proceedings may be instituted despite the licensee's good faith, the absence of damage, lack of an enforceable agreement to compensate the licensee, absence of gain to the licensee, or absence of any civil action against the licensee. Buckley v Savage (1960) 184 CA2d 18, 7 CR 328 (no pecuniary loss suffered); Abell v Watson (1957) 155 CA2d 158, 317 P2d 159 (absence of damage); de St. Germain v Watson (1950) 95 CA2d 862, 214 P2d 99 (licensee in good faith). In mitigating the penalty, however, Real Estate Commissioner may consider the absence of injury to the principal, advantage to the broker, or intent by the broker to act in a fraudulent or dishonest manner. 95 CA2d at 870.

§2.173 b. Disciplinary Proceedings

Disciplinary proceedings for violating the Real Estate Law (Bus & P C §§10000-10580) are usually in the form of license suspensions or revocations under Bus & P C §10175. With limited exceptions (e.g., fraudulent procurement of license; see Bus & P C §10177.1), the Real Estate Commissioner must hold a hearing before suspending or revoking a license. Bus & P C §10100. Hearings are conducted by an administrative law judge from the Office of Administrative Hearings in accordance with the Administrative Procedures Act (Govt C §§11500-11529). Govt C §11502. Limited discovery may be taken before the hearing. Govt C §§11507.5-11507.7, 11511.

NOTE: A broker charged in a disciplinary proceeding will not be able to obtain, in discovery, copies of audit or enforcement manuals that the DRE uses to enforce its own regulations; these publications are considered confidential and privileged material. Suarez v Office of Admin. Hearings (2004) 123 CA4th 1191, 20 CR3d 618. Thus, the broker must prove its case objectively, by and through existing case and statutory law and the evidence, and not by use of internal DRE regulatory documents.

Rules of evidence may be relaxed under standards governing administrative hearings. Govt C §11513. After the hearing, the hearing officer prepares a Proposed Decision containing the findings and, if applicable, a proposed penalty. Govt C §11517. The Real Estate Commissioner must then adopt the decision in its entirety, adopt the decision but reduce or mitigate the proposed penalty, or reject the proposed decision and penalty. Govt C §11517(c). If a disciplinary proceeding is pending, a real estate licensee may petition the Real Estate Commissioner to accept a voluntary surrender of his or her license. If accepted, relicensing occurs only if the Real Estate Commissioner grants a petition for reinstatement (Govt C §11522). Bus & P C §10100.2.

The procedure for reconsideration of the administrative decision is set forth in Govt C §11521(a). The decision may be judicially reviewed by means of administrative mandamus. Govt C §11523; CCP §1094.5. See California Administrative Mandamus (3d ed Cal CEB 2003). In reviewing the decision, the trial court exercises its independent judgment on whether the evidence supports the findings, and an appellate court will decide whether substantial evidence supports the trial court's findings. Madrid v Department of Real Estate (1984) 152 CA3d 454, 199 CR 520.

To commence a disciplinary proceeding, the Real Estate Commissioner must file an accusation under Govt C §11503 within 3 years from the occurrence of the alleged grounds for the disciplinary action. Bus & P C §10101. If the ground is fraud, misrepresentation, or a false promise, the accusation must be filed within the later of 1 year after the discovery by the aggrieved person of the grounds or 3 years after the occurrence of the grounds. Bus & P C §10101. If the actual misconduct of the licensee is the ground for the discipline, the limitations period begins with the misconduct. If the ground for the discipline is another official action, such as a criminal conviction, civil judgment, or the disciplinary action of another regulatory agency, the 3-year limitations period begins to run when the official action occurs, not on the date of the misconduct that resulted in the official action. See Herrera v Department of Real Estate (2001) 88 CA4th 776, 106 CR2d 232 (§10101 limitations period for real estate licensee suspended from practice of law ran from date of suspension of law license, not date of underlying misconduct); California Real Estate Loans, Inc. v Wallace (1993) 18 CA4th 1575, 23 CR2d 462 (3-year limitations period for discipline based on civil judgment for fraud, misrepresentation, or deceit runs from date of final judgment, not date of underlying acts or omissions).

§2.174 c. Remedies

Most penalties involve some form of temporary license suspension or permanent revocation. Bus & P C §§10175-10176. The Real Estate Commissioner, however, is also empowered to bring a civil action for violations of the Real Estate Law (Bus & P C §§10000-10580) and to issue desist and refrain orders to anyone, including a licensee, who violates that law. Bus & P C §§10081, 10086. A corporation's real estate broker's license cannot be revoked for violation of the Real Estate Law if the violating broker had completely disassociated himself from the corporation at the time of revocation. See Amvest Mortgage Corp. v Antt (1997) 58 CA4th 1239, 68 CR2d 457. Clarifying legislation was passed, effective January 1, 1999, to provide that the DRE may still discipline the corporation or deny it a license, even if the violator has disassociated from the corporation, if the offending officer, director, or stockholder violated the Real Estate Law while acting on behalf of the corporate broker. See Bus & P C §10177. A licensee who receives a desist and refrain order is entitled to an administrative hearing on the order. If the licensee files a verified request for a hearing, alleging that the order precludes him or her from engaging in a substantial portion of the licensee's business, the Real Estate Commissioner must initiate a civil action to enforce the desist and refrain order. Bus & P C §10086.

The Real Estate Law also imposes criminal sanctions for various actions by real estate licensees, including willful violations of the law. Bus & P C §10185. The district attorney of the county in which the violation occurs has jurisdiction to prosecute such actions, and the Real Estate Commissioner may participate in those proceedings. Bus & P C §10130.

The Real Estate Commissioner is authorized under Bus & P C §10175.2 to impose or accept a monetary penalty instead of suspending a licensee's license. The amount may not exceed $250 for each day of suspension or $10,000 for each decision. The money is deposited in the Recovery Account of the Real Estate Fund. See discussion of the Recovery Account in §§2.164-2.170; on the relationship between the Recovery Account and the Real Estate Fund, see Bus & P C §10450.6.

§2.175 B. Local Association of Realtors® Proceedings

As members of the California Association of Realtors® (CAR) and National Association of Realtors® (NAR), brokers and salespersons must conduct themselves according to the NAR Code of Ethics. Violation of the standards of conduct may result in suspension, expulsion, censure, or reprimand. In limited instances, fines may also be levied.

The NAR Code of Ethics also requires members to arbitrate with each other to the extent that the dispute arose from the real estate business. NAR Code of Ethics, art 17. Many local associations' bylaws also require arbitration of disputes with members of the general public. Such arbitration may provide a fast and inexpensive way to resolve some disputes. For local rules, counsel should refer to the bylaws of individual associations.

To obtain a copy of the Code of Ethics and Standards of Practice or the Interpretations of the Code of Ethics, call the National Association of Realtors® at the number given in the Directory.

The California Association of Realtors® also publishes the California Code of Ethics and Arbitration Manual. A copy of this manual can be purchased from CAR or a local association or board. See the Directory.

Multiple listing service (MLS) participants or subscribers who violate the MLS rules are subject to discipline. CAR publishes the Model MLS Rules that have been adopted by most of the local associations and boards, although attorneys should check for local variations.

§2.176 IX. BROKER LIABILITY TO THIRD PARTIES

The broker owes no fiduciary duty to any person other than his or her principal, but the broker has a general duty under the Real Estate Law (Bus & P C §§10000-10580) to deal fairly and honestly with all parties to any real estate transaction. Bus & P C §10176(i). Brokers have been held liable to third parties under a number of theories discussed in §§2.177-2.182.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.177 A. Secret Profits

A broker can be held liable to a third party for secret profits received through fraud or misrepresentation and can be compelled to disgorge those profits whether or not the third party suffered any actual loss. Ward v Taggart (1959) 51 C2d 736, 336 P2d 534.

The broker remains a fiduciary after becoming a principal in the transaction, even if the buyer-broker did not know at the time of purchase that a larger profit would be made by selling the property to a third party buyer. The "secret profit" still must be disgorged to the principal. Roberts v Lomanto (2003) 112 CA4th 1553, 5 CR3d 866. See §2.139 for discussion of a broker's liability to the principal for secret profits.

Source: Real Property/California Real Property Sales Transactions/2 Brokers/§2.178 B. Fraud, Misrepresentation, and Failure to Disclose

§2.178 B. Fraud, Misrepresentation, and Failure to Disclose

A broker's dealings with a third party to the transaction, to whom the broker owes no fiduciary responsibility, are generally measured by the same obligations that the principal owes to the third party, because the broker is the principal's agent. The broker has the same affirmative obligations as the seller to disclose material facts, and not to misrepresent them, whether negligently or intentionally. These obligations are founded in long-standing principles of common law. The obligation to disclose includes matters concerning the value or desirability of the property that the broker knows or reasonably should know. Lingsch v Savage (1963) 213 CA2d 729, 29 CR 201. On the seller's duty to disclose, see §§4.45, 5.6-5.29. These common law obligations of honesty and fair dealing apply in both commercial and residential transactions, but the residential broker will further need to comply with the statutory duties of disclosure set forth in CC §§2079-2079.11.

The identity of the persons receiving the disclosure and their status as parties in the transaction is pivotal in deciding whether the broker has a duty to disclose. The broker owes this duty only to a person or entity who is a party to the transaction. "Only a transferee, that is, the ultimate purchaser, can recover from a broker or agent for breach of these duties." Coldwell Banker Residential Brokerage Co., Inc. v Superior Court (2004) 117 CA4th 158, 165, 11 CR3d 564.

Whether a particular fact regarding the property is sufficiently material to require affirmative disclosure depends on the context of each case. Saporta v Barbagelata (1963) 220 CA2d 463, 33 CR 661. For example, the seller and the broker must disclose the following:

- Known termite and fungus infestation (Saporta v Barbagelata, supra);
- Improvements have been built on landfill (Central Mut. Ins. Co. v Schmidt (1957) 152 CA2d 671, 313 P2d 132);
- Improvements are not within property boundaries (Walters v Marler (1978) 83 CA3d 1, 147 CR 655); and
- The correct size of the property (Cory v Villa Props. (1986) 180 CA3d 592, 225 CR 628).

See also Furla v Jon Douglas Co. (1998) 65 CA4th 1069, 76 CR2d 911 (seller and listing agent who overestimated square footage of residence by more than 20 percent may be liable to buyer). But in Blickman Turkus, LP v MF Downtown Sunnyvale, LLC (2008) 162 CA4th 858, 877, 76 CR3d 325, the court found that a broker who represented the tenant in a complex commercial lease transaction did not have a duty to inform the landlord, after the lease was signed but before possession, about the tenant's deteriorating financial condition. The court noted that any financial information had been obtained by reason of the broker's fiduciary relationship with the tenant and that if the possession of such knowledge were enough to trigger a duty to disclose, it would be impossible for intermediaries such as brokers to act for their principals in business transactions. 162 CA4th at 877. See also FSR Brokerage, Inc. v Superior Court (1995) 35 CA4th 69, 41 CR2d 404 (broker who failed to disclose to buyer alleged defects in residential balcony that later collapsed, injuring and killing buyer's guests, had no duty to guests). Compare FSR Brokerage with Geernaert v Mitchell (1995) 31 CA4th 601, 37 CR2d 483, in which the buyers were able to state a cause of action against a predecessor of their seller for alleged misrepresentations.

The broker also has disclosure responsibilities mandated as statutory duties by various sections of the Real Estate Law (Bus & P C §§10000-10580) and regulations adopted by the Real Estate Commissioner. See §§2.131, 2.171.

If no disclosure is made, the broker and the seller are jointly and severally liable for the full amount of the buyer's damages. If a broker is aware of misrepresentations that the seller has made directly to the buyer, the broker is obligated to correct them; the broker has no duty to conceal fraudulent or dishonest acts of the principal. Willig v Gold (1946) 75 CA2d 809, 171 P2d 754. If the broker misrepresents a material fact to the buyer, the seller will be liable along with the broker under a respondeat superior theory. See §§2.184-2.187. Statutory duties applicable to a residential broker, however, do not relieve the buyer from exercising reasonable diligence to protect its own interests. CC §2079.5.

In Manderville v PCG&S Group, Inc. (2007) 146 CA4th 1486, 55 CR3d 59, the court was concerned with the effect that an express exculpatory clause in favor of the brokers would have on their affirmative misrepresentation that the residential lot could be split. The clause expressly advised buyers of their right to conduct inspections, including the right to investigate matters affecting the value or desirability of the property, such as ordinances affecting future development and zoning of the property. The clause went on to strongly advise the buyer to investigate such conditions. In overruling the claim that the clause precluded justifiable reliance, the court noted that, as a matter of public policy, a contract cannot exempt anyone from responsibility for his or her fraud or willful injury to persons or property.

The statutes of limitation for actions by third parties against brokers correlate to the statutes of limitation for actions by a principal against the broker. The limitations period for actions concerning a residential real estate broker's breach of duty to disclose is 2 years under CC §2079.4, which applies to causes of action against brokers for negligent misrepresentation. Loken v Century 21-Award Props. (1995) 36 CA4th 263, 42 CR2d 683. This statute of limitations does not apply to causes of action for negligence or fraud (Williams v Wells & Bennett Realtors (1997) 52 CA4th 857, 61 CR2d 34) or breach of fiduciary duty (Field v Century 21 Klowden-Forness Realty (1998) 63 CA4th 18, 73 CR2d 784).

§2.179 C. Negligence

A broker who renders service in a negligent manner is generally liable to any third person within the zone of foreseeable risk who is injured by the negligent act. Merrill v Buck (1962) 58 C2d 552, 25 CR 456 (landlord's rental agent liable to tenant for failure to disclose dangerous condition); Easton v Strassburger (1984) 152 CA3d 90, 199 CR 383 (seller's listing agent liable to buyer for failure to disclose damaged property). Whether such duty is owed in a particular case is based on several factors, including the extent to which the transaction was intended to affect the plaintiff, the foreseeability of harm, the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury, the nexus between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered, the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct, and the policy of preventing future harm. Merrill, 58 C2d at 562. See Blickman Turkus, LP v MF Downtown Sunnyvale, LLC (2008) 162 CA4th 858, 891, 76 CR3d 325 (court refused to extend broker's "duty to deal honestly and fairly with all parties in a sales transaction" when plaintiff failed to allege that broker could have prevented foreseeable harm); FSR Brokerage, Inc. v Superior Court (1995) 35 CA4th 69, 41 CR2d 404 (when broker failed to disclose to buyer alleged defects in residential balcony that later collapsed, injuring and killing buyer's guests, court held the broker had no duty to guests). The broker will be held liable to third parties for the negligence of salespersons in his or her employ. Bus & P C §10177(h); CC §2343(3); Merrill v Buck, supra. Easton v Strassburger, supra, enunciated the residential listing broker's affirmative duty to conduct a reasonably competent and diligent inspection of the property listed for sale. This duty was later codified and included in a specific disclosure form to be signed by the seller and the brokers. CC §§1102-1102.17; see §§2.133-2.134.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.180 D. Breach of Contract

Although third party breach of contract cases against brokers are less common than cases brought on tort theories, because a broker typically acts on behalf of a disclosed principal, the breach of contract theory is useful in certain instances. A broker may also be held liable to a third party for breach of an agreement that is ancillary to the contract to convey. In Barr v Rhoades (1969) 274 CA2d 852, 79 CR 505, the sellers and their brokers were held liable for damages when they breached their agreement with the buyer to secure tenants and financing in connection with the sale of an apartment building.

An agent who knowingly enters into a contract without the authority to do so becomes liable as a principal. CC §2343(2).

§2.181 E. Housing Discrimination

Brokers who participate in discriminatory practices in the housing market may incur liability under any of a number of fair housing statutes. Brokers have been held to be covered by California's Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51) (Lee v O'Hara (1962) 57 C2d 476, 20 CR 617; Vargas v Hampson (1962) 57 C2d 479, 20 CR 618), and the fact that a broker was merely following instructions from the principal is not a defense to an Unruh Civil Rights Act suit (Wagnerv O'Bannon (1969) 274 CA2d 121, 79 CR 44). An association of Realtors® or a multiple listing service might also incur liability under the Unruh Civil Rights Act if it accedes to a seller's wish to market property in a discriminatory manner. Wagner v O'Bannon, supra. Furthermore, to deny access to, membership in, or participation in a multiple listing service or other real estate brokerage association or service because of race, color, religion, sex, sexual orientation, marital status, ancestry, disability, familial status, source of income, or national origin is prohibited by Govt C §12955(j). "Religion" includes all aspects of religious belief, observance, and practice. CC §51(e)(3). These enumerated factors include a perception that the person has any particular characteristic within the listed categories or that the person is associated with a person who has, or is perceived to have, any particular characteristic within the listed categories. CC §51(e)(5).

The Fair Housing Act (FHA) (42 USC §§3601-3631; commonly referred to as Title VIII of the Civil Rights Act of 1968) and the Civil Rights Act of 1866 (42 USC §§1981-1982) prohibit discriminatory practices in the sale or rental of a dwelling and serve as potential bases for imposing liability for damages on brokers who participate in discriminatory practices. The FHA applies to selling, renting, making loans secured by residential property, making appraisals, enforcing age discrimination covenants in common interest developments, and advertising residential properties. See 42 USC §§3604-3605; 24 CFR §§100.50(b), 100.75. The FHA covers discrimination by race, color, sex, national origin, religion, familial status, and disability, with exemptions for the following types of housing:

- Single-family homes for sale or rent by the owner, if specified conditions are met (42 USC §3603(b)(1));
- Most rentals by religious organizations and clubs (42 USC §3607(a));
- Housing with reasonable local, state, or federal restrictions on the maximum number of occupants (42 USC §3607(b)(1)); and
- Qualified housing for seniors (42 USC §3607(b)(1)-(3)).

The Supreme Court unanimously held that an individual who was a real estate company's president and sole shareholder was not vicariously liable for violations of the FHA committed by a salesperson employed by the company. Meyer v Holley (2003) 537 US 280, 154 L Ed 2d 753, 123 S Ct 824. Rather, under traditional agency principles, the real estate corporation, not its owner or officer, was the deemed principal or employer and thus subject to vicarious liability for torts committed by its agents or employees. In the absence of a clear congressional intent to expand the common law principles of vicarious liability, neither the right of an officer or shareholder to control the salesperson, nor the overriding societal priority of the FHA's objectives, warranted extending tort-related vicarious liability rules to include the officer and shareholder. Furthermore, the Court found no support under the FHA itself for imposing a nondelegable duty on officers or shareholders to ensure that a corporation's salespersons do not discriminate.

Private actions alleging that brokers engaged in the practice of steering African Americans into, and Caucasians out of, certain neighborhoods were upheld in Gladstone, Realtors v Bellwood (1979) 441 US 91, 60 L Ed 2d 66, 99 S Ct 1601, and Broadmoor Improvement Ass'n v Stan Weber & Assocs. (5th Cir 1979) 597 F2d 568.

Another possible basis for imposing liability on brokers for discriminatory practices is the California Fair Employment and Housing Act (Govt C §§12900-12996). Under Govt C §12920, the "practice of discrimination because of race, color, religion, sex, marital status, national origin, ancestry, familial status, disability or sexual orientation in housing accommodations is declared to be against public policy." Moreover, the "opportunity to seek, obtain, and hold housing without discrimination" by members of these protected classes was declared to be a civil right. Govt C §12921(b).

A broker who supplies information on the race, color, sex, religion, ancestry, or national origin of a prospective buyer, even when requested by the seller, violates the California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt C §§12900-12996). 53 Ops Cal Atty Gen 196 (1970). In Smith v Fair Employment & Hous. Comm'n (1996) 12 C4th 1143, 51 CR2d 700, the supreme court held that the free exercise clauses (guaranteeing freedom of religion) of the federal and state constitutions could not be relied on by a landlord who refused to rent an apartment to an unmarried couple and thereby discriminated against them on the basis of their marital status in violation of Govt C §§12948, 12955(a), (d), and CC §51.

In Thomas v Anchorage Equal Rights Comm'n (9th Cir 2000) 220 F3d 1134, the Ninth Circuit heard a challenge to an Alaska antidiscrimination housing law (similar to California's) brought by Christian landlords who refused to rent to unmarried couples on religious grounds. After first finding for the landlords (see Thomas v Anchorage Equal Rights Comm'n (9th Cir 1999) 165 F3d 692) and creating a religious exception to the antidiscrimination law, the court, sitting en banc, vacated the decision, finding that even if prosecution under the statute was theoretically possible, it was not reasonable or imminent (citing the lack of enforcement) and therefore failed the constitutional requirement of ripeness.

Brokers are also subject to administrative action under the Real Estate Law (Bus & P C §§10000-10580) to revoke the broker's license. Bus & P C §10177(l); 10 Cal Code Regs §§2780-2781. See also Bus & P C §§125.6, 10170.5(a)(4); 10 Cal Code Regs §2725. See discussion of disciplinary actions in §§2.171-2.175. A tort cause of action may also be available.

For a detailed discussion of federal antidiscrimination laws, see California Landlord-Tenant Practice §§2.29-2.47 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997); for a detailed discussion of California antidiscrimination and fair housing laws, see Landlord-Tenant §§2.48-2.60.

§2.182 F. Anti-Money-Laundering Laws

Brokers and attorneys involved in real estate closings may be required to establish anti-money-laundering programs under federal law. Section 352(a) of the Uniting and Strengthening America by Providing Appropriate Tools Required to Intercept and Obstruct Terrorism Act of 2001 (USA PATRIOT Act) (Pub L 107-56, 115 Stat 272) amended the Bank Secrecy Act (31 USC §§5311-5330) to require every financial institution to establish such programs. 31 USC §5318(h). The Bank Secrecy Act defines "financial institution" to include "persons involved in real estate closings and settlements." 31 USC §5312(a)(2)(U). On April 29, 2002, and on November 6, 2002, the Secretary of the Treasury temporarily exempted such persons from the requirement to establish anti-money-laundering programs. 31 CFR §103.170(b)(1)(vi); 67 Fed Regs 21110 and 67547 (2002). The Financial Crimes Enforcement Network, acting under a delegation of authority from the Secretary of the Treasury, has published a notice of proposed rule-making to solicit public comments on whether "persons involved in real estate closings and settlements" pose a significant money-laundering risk and whether such persons should be permanently exempted. 68 Fed Reg 17569 (2003). The deadline for comments was June 9, 2003. When the 2007 edition of this book went to press, the temporary exemption remained in effect and the Secretary of the Treasury had not published a rule on the issue.

If the Secretary of the Treasury ultimately determines that they are subject to the anti-money-laundering requirements, real estate brokers and attorneys will be required to establish programs that include the development of internal policies, procedures, and controls; the designation of a compliance officer; an ongoing employee-training program; and an independent audit procedure to test the programs. 31 USC §5318(h)(1). The Secretary may impose a civil penalty of up to $100,000 for a willful violation and up to $50,000 for a pattern of negligent violations of the requirements. 31 USC §5321(a)(1), (6). In addition, a willful violation is punishable by a criminal penalty of up to $250,000 and 5 years in prison. 31 USC §5322(a).

§2.183 G. Principal to Broker; Indemnification

The broker's duty to disclose property defects is coextensive with the seller's (see §2.178). Lingsch v Savage (1963) 213 CA2d 729, 29 CR 201. Generally, the broker and the seller will be jointly and severally liable for the broker's misrepresentations to a buyer. Saporta v Barbagelata (1963) 220 CA2d 463, 33 CR 661. If a broker merely relays a misrepresentation from the seller to the buyer and is unaware of its falsity, the broker may escape liability for fraud but may still be liable for negligence, although the basis of the seller's liability would be fraud. Gardner v Murphy (1975) 54 CA3d 164, 126 CR 302. In this situation, the broker may be entitled to full indemnification from the principal for any liability incurred. Gardner v Murphy, supra.

The law of equitable indemnity has been adopted into broker-principal situations. In Easton v Strassburger (1984) 152 CA3d 90, 199 CR 383, the court looked for guidance to the leading case in the indemnity area, American Motorcycle Ass'n v Superior Court (1978) 20 C3d 578, 146 CR 182. The Easton court recognized that while full, pre-American Motorcycle indemnification might be appropriate when culpability was heavily weighted in one direction, that case had modified the equitable indemnity doctrine to permit sharing among co-tortfeasors, based on fault. Thus, the former "active-passive" distinction no longer applied. See also Far W. Fin. Corp. v D & S Co. (1988) 46 C3d 796, 251 CR 202, restating the rule of American Motorcycle.

NOTE: The listing agreement may provide for contractual indemnity, which is an entirely different basis for indemnification. The California Association of Realtors® Residential Listing Agreement (Exclusive Authorization and Right to Sell), for example, contains a clause in which the principal agrees to hold the broker harmless for liability incurred when the principal supplies incorrect information or fails to disclose a material fact. See §2.57.

The 2-year statute of limitations for actions concerning a real estate broker's breach of duty to disclose does not apply to an implied contractual indemnity action between sellers and their broker. West v Superior Court (1994) 27 CA4th 1625, 34 CR2d 409.

X. PRINCIPAL LIABLE TO THIRD PARTIES FOR BROKER'S ACTS

§2.184 A. Misrepresentations and Nondisclosure

Under general rules of agency law, a principal is liable to third parties for the agent's actions undertaken on the principal's behalf, whether or not the principal was aware of or authorized the agent's actions. CC §2338; Warshauer v Bauer Constr. Co. (1960) 179 CA2d 44, 3 CR 570. In real property transactions, this rule makes the principal liable for the broker's misrepresentations whether the principal has knowledge of the misrepresentation (Burkett v J.A. Thompson & Son (1957) 150 CA2d 523, 310 P2d 56) or is innocent of it (Miller v Wood (1961) 188 CA2d 711, 10 CR 770). The principal is held liable for the broker's misrepresentations even when the broker is acting as the disclosed agent for both parties to the transaction. Owens v Schneider (1938) 29 CA2d 593, 85 P2d 198.

The broker's negligent, as well as intentional, misrepresentations will subject the principal to liability, whether or not the principal knew of or consented to the statements. CC §2338. Thus, the principal may incur liability if the broker should have known that the broker's statement was false but had no actual knowledge of its falsity. Richard v Baker (1956) 141 CA2d 857, 297 P2d 674. See also Gagne v Bertran (1954) 43 C2d 481, 275 P2d 15.

NOTE: "As against a principal, both principal and agent are deemed to have notice of whatever either has notice of, and ought, in good faith and the exercise of ordinary care and diligence, to communicate to the other." CC §2332. This section allows recovery against a principal based upon the knowledge of the agent.

Both the broker and the seller have an affirmative obligation to disclose property defects that would not be apparent to a buyer (see §2.178). Lingsch v Savage (1963) 213 CA2d 729, 29 CR 201. Because the broker's knowledge is imputed to the seller, a seller without actual knowledge of a defective condition is liable if the broker knows of the defects and fails to disclose them. Rothstein v Janss Inv. Corp. (1941) 45 CA2d 64, 113 P2d 465; CC §§2333, 2338. The broker's knowledge is not imputed to the seller if the broker is acting in a dual capacity and thus has an interest adverse to that of the seller. Herdan v Hanson (1920) 182 C 538, 189 P 440; Owens v Schneider, supra. However, if a dual agent's fraud benefits one principal, the principal so benefited will be liable to the other. CC §2230. When a broker in a dual agency relationship finds that he or she has a conflict of interest related to a duty of disclosure, it may be incumbent on the broker to withdraw from the transaction rather than benefit one client over the other.

On principal's duties to brokers, see California Real Estate Brokers: Law and Litigation, chaps 5, 7 (Cal CEB 2009).

§2.185 B. Effect of Exculpatory "As Is" Provision

Despite a common misperception, an "as is" or similar exculpatory provision in a purchase agreement will not immunize a seller from liability for failure to disclose known, hidden defects (Lingsch v Savage (1963) 213 CA2d 729, 29 CR 201; see Shapiro v Hu (1986) 188 CA3d 324, 233 CR 470; Katz v Department of Real Estate (1979) 96 CA3d 895, 158 CR 766), or from liability for the broker's fraudulent acts of which the seller has knowledge (Herzog v Capital Co. (1945) 27 C2d 349, 164 P2d 8; Lingsch v Savage, supra). Similarly, an "as is" sale does not shield an agent from liability, although the agent is not liable for foundation defects discoverable only by extraordinary efforts beyond the diligent inspection standard. Wilson v Century 21 Great W. Realty (1993) 15 CA4th 298, 18 CR2d 779. An innocent principal, however, is protected by an exculpatory provision from liability for damages for the agent's affirmative acts of misconduct. The injured party's only remedy is rescission. Speck v Wylie (1934) 1 C2d 625, 36 P2d 618.

An unanswered question is whether an exculpatory provision will protect an innocent principal from liability for damages for the broker's failure to disclose defects. See Lingsch v Savage, supra. Because the broker's knowledge of defects is imputed to the principal (see §2.184), and because an exculpatory clause will not protect a seller who knowingly fails to disclose defects, it could be argued that the rule of Speck v Wylie, supra, is limited to misrepresentations and would not apply to the broker's nondisclosure of defects. See Herzog v Capital Co., supra.

§2.186 C. Broker's Failure to Disclose Principal

When a principal has authorized an agent to execute a contract on his or her behalf but the principal is not identified, the agent is personally liable on the contract. Wedge v Security First Nat'l Bank (1933) 219 C 113, 25 P2d 411. If the act is within the course and scope of the agency, the undisclosed principal is also liable. Hulsman v Freland (1928) 205 C 345, 270 P 948. The plaintiff, however, cannot hold both the principal and the agent liable. Wedge v Security First Nat'l Bank, supra. The plaintiff can be forced to decide whether to obtain a judgment against the agent or against the principal. 3 Witkin, Summary of California Law, Agency and Employment §160 (10th ed 2005).

§2.187 D. Liability to Subsequent Purchasers

The seller's liability to third persons for the fraudulent misconduct of the seller or the seller's agent may extend to subsequent purchasers of the property. If the original buyer has a legally enforceable claim for damages for fraud by the seller or the seller's broker, a person who acquires the property from the original buyer can enforce the claim against the seller. Burkett v J.A. Thompson & Son (1957) 150 CA2d 523, 310 P2d 56. See also Shapiro v Sutherland (1998) 64 CA4th 1534, 76 CR2d 101 (subsequent buyer may bring action for fraudulent misrepresentation and material nondisclosure against former property owner who had sold to relocation company); Geernaert v Mitchell (1995) 31 CA4th 601, 37 CR2d 483 (subsequent buyers can sue former owners for fraudulent misrepresentation and concealment). Apparently, the original buyer must assign the claim to the subsequent buyer in order for the subsequent buyer to recover. Cohen v Citizens Nat'l Trust & Sav. Bank (1956) 143 CA2d 480, 300 P2d 14. But see Varwig v Anderson-Behel Porsche/Audi, Inc. (1977) 74 CA3d 578, 141 CR 539 (dealer who sold cars wholesale to another dealer can be liable to ultimate purchaser for misrepresentation of title).

The holding in Cohen that a subsequent purchaser, after learning that the builder had failed to disclose building code violations to the original buyer, could not sue the builder without an assignment of the cause of action from the original buyer, was criticized as "an unacceptably broad limitation of liability" in Barnhouse v City of Pinole (1982) 133 CA3d 171, 183 CR 881. The court in Barnhouse allowed a subsequent buyer to bring a direct action against the builder for failure to disclose underground seeps, springs, and slides to the original purchaser.

§3.1 I. WHAT IS A LETTER OF INTENT?

A letter of intent is a writing in which the parties to a proposed transaction state a mutual interest in or commitment to one or more important terms of an agreement and, in most cases, show a mutual intention to prepare a more definitive contract to embody the complete agreement.

A letter of intent may take a variety of forms, e.g., a commitment letter, a memorandum of agreement, or an agreement in principle. The document may be a formal writing or an informal letter. The letter of intent may be legally binding in whole or in part, or it may be legally nonbinding. In real estate sales transactions, letters of intent are usually intended to be nonbinding.

The distinguishing characteristic of a letter of intent is that it does not and is not intended to contain all the terms and conditions contemplated by the parties to be part of a final complete contract for the deal. Rather, it is intended to contain only the important business and financial terms.

Although the parties may not intend the business terms contained in a letter of intent to be binding, by using a written letter of intent the parties may implicitly agree to negotiate in good faith. See §§3.27-3.30. By failing to negotiate in good faith a party may be subject to reliance damages suffered by the other party. See §3.29. The parties may specifically provide in the letter of intent that there is no obligation to negotiate in good faith, but such a provision may have a chilling effect on the continuing negotiations.

§3.2 II. WHEN ARE LETTERS OF INTENT USED IN REAL PROPERTY SALES TRANSACTIONS?

Practice regarding letters of intent in real estate sales transactions varies considerably. Typically, the decision to use a letter of intent is made by the parties and their brokers. When a letter of intent is used in a real estate sale transaction, its purpose is usually to obtain preliminary written confirmation of the important points in the deal before the parties incur the time and expense of negotiating the details of the transaction and preparing definitive contract documents. In large or complex real estate transactions it is extremely cumbersome and expensive to negotiate basic terms of the deal through the exchange of full-length, detailed contract offers and counteroffers.

Letters of intent can serve the useful purpose of identifying and memorializing the parties' understanding on key points so that further negotiations on contract documents are limited to details. Letters of intent also permit the business participants to address controversial issues during the initial stages of a transaction when both sides are motivated to reach an agreement, before legal counsel begin negotiations. Letters of intent are almost never prepared in single-family residential transactions because residential brokers commonly use standard form purchase agreements such as California Association of Realtors® forms. See §6.3.

Some attorneys frequently use, or at least recommend, letters of intent because they can streamline the negotiation process. Others avoid using letters of intent if the transaction is relatively straightforward and it is more efficient to commence drafting a purchase and sale agreement. Because there does not appear to be a standard practice, the decision of whether to use a letter of intent in a particular transaction is a matter of professional judgment.

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel should consider using a letter of intent in the following situations:

- The transaction is complex;
- Counsel anticipates that the principal terms of the transaction will be aggressively negotiated by the other side; or
- It would be helpful to address certain issues before drafting a definitive statement.

§3.3 A. When Parties Prepare Letter Without Attorney's Assistance

Attorneys are often confronted with a signed letter of intent prepared by the parties without an attorney's assistance. Although sophisticated parties may draft a problem-free letter of intent, any letter of intent can create significant problems if (1) it is unclear, (2) it fails to address one or more major transactional issues, or (3) the parties commence partial performance of the contract before executing a definitive contract.

These problems may be exacerbated if one party asserts that the letter of intent is a binding contract and the other asserts that it is merely a nonbinding statement of intent (see §§3.14-3.26). Because the term "letter of intent" means different things to different people, the parties may honestly disagree on whether they intended to create a binding or nonbinding letter of intent. However, given that the courts have recognized the ability of parties to enter into agreements to negotiate (see §3.27), it may be more difficult to enforce a binding letter of intent without either definitive language in the letter or unequivocal actions showing the parties' intent to be bound by the letter's terms.

PRACTICE TIP: An attorney presented with a signed letter of intent must first ascertain the client's goals. Does the client want to have a definitive contract prepared, the letter of intent enforced, or the letter of intent defended against another party's claim that a binding contract exists? The attorney must ascertain the client's intent and whether either party has begun performance or changed position in reliance on the letter of intent. Unless the client considers the letter of intent to be binding or the attorney forms the opinion that the letter is binding and that it is in the client's best interest to perform, the attorney should advise the client not to take any steps to perform the proposed contract until it is properly documented in a complete, signed agreement. On risks inherent in partial performance, see §§3.10, 3.14-3.26.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.4 B. When Attorney Prepares Letter

As noted in §3.2, practice regarding letters of intent varies considerably, but many parties find them to be an effective tool. Letters of intent may be used in the following ways:

- By either party, as a preliminary negotiating tool with the expectation that the letter of intent will not be an enforceable contract, but merely a guide to further negotiation and contract drafting.
- By a prospective buyer—particularly if multiple buyers are competing for a desirable property—as a binding document, either as a commitment for the purchase and sale on the terms stated in the letter of intent, or as a commitment to exclusive negotiation for a period of time.
- As a cost-effective means of identifying potential "deal-breaking" issues and attempting to resolve them in a nonbinding understanding before time and money are spent on preparation of a detailed contract.

PRACTICE TIP: When drafting or reviewing letters of intent, the practitioner should keep in mind the risks and uncertainties involved in using such documents. The principal risk is the possibility of inadvertently creating a binding contract when the client desires only a nonbinding statement of intent for negotiating purposes. On binding and nonbinding letters of intent, see §§3.14-3.26.

On identifying the client's needs and objectives, see also §§1.23-1.57.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.5 1. Factors to Consider in Using Letter of Intent

In determining whether to recommend that the client use a letter of intent and whether that letter of intent should be binding, the attorney should analyze the following factors:

- The time, cost, and efficiency of negotiating and drafting a letter of intent as compared with drafting a definitive agreement first (see §3.6);
- The structure provided by a letter of intent to guide the client through a complex sales transaction (see §3.7);
- The identification of potential "deal breakers" during the negotiation of a letter of intent, which may save time and money if they are discovered early (see §3.8);
- Streamlining negotiations by focusing the parties' attention on key transactional business issues before dealing with legal drafting details (see §3.9);
- A letter of intent's reduction of the risks inherent in partial performance (see §3.10); and
- The need for a legally binding agreement on certain matters (e.g., confidentiality) before all terms and conditions are agreed on (see §3.11).

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.6 a. Time, Cost, and Efficiency

The attorney must evaluate competing time, cost, and efficiency considerations to ascertain whether negotiating and drafting a letter of intent will be more cost-effective than immediately negotiating and drafting a definitive purchase and sale agreement. If the strategic benefits of using a letter of intent outweigh its drawbacks, the attorney should consider recommending that a letter be drafted.

On the one hand, a letter of intent can be a cost-effective means of evaluating the parties' intent and identifying potential impasses at an early stage. On the other hand, preparing a detailed letter of intent means creating two separate negotiating and drafting projects: the letter of intent and the definitive agreement. The delay in drafting and negotiating the definitive agreement may postpone identification of important unanticipated issues that will appear only when the parties begin to document the details of that agreement.

PRACTICE TIP: The time, cost, and efficiency considerations are closely related to the size and complexity of the transaction. A straightforward sale of a modestly priced property may not justify use of a letter of intent, whereas a complex multi-million-dollar transaction may be more economical to document with a letter of intent as a contract drafting guide.

For further discussion of negotiating and drafting considerations, see §3.31.

§3.7 b. Method of Structuring the Transaction

In complex transactions, a letter of intent can establish the scope of the various parties' responsibilities and the timing and sequence of events. It provides a useful scheme for structuring the transaction through negotiation of a definitive purchase and sale agreement to the closing and postclosing relations.

If one party uses more than one person to negotiate and complete the transaction, the letter of intent can help guide and limit later negotiations. The letter serves as a reminder of the preliminary understanding when persons not involved in the original negotiations attempt to make material changes in the deal.

§3.8 c. Identification of "Deal-Breaker" Issues

A letter of intent can catalog the issues agreed to by the parties and identify issues that need further negotiation. By recognizing their mutual points of agreement, the parties can concentrate during negotiation on potential "deal breakers" and avoid spending time on noncontroversial topics. Even more important, the parties to the transaction are usually more amenable to compromise on "deal-breaker" issues at this stage of the negotiation.

§3.9 d. Effect on Negotiations

Because a letter of intent is often written in everyday business language and targets key issues, it usually receives less scrutiny by the business principals than does a definitive written purchase and sale agreement. Attorneys are often not directly involved in negotiations at this stage but are assisting their clients behind the scenes. For the business person, the relatively easy-to-understand letter of intent can be an important tool for monitoring and controlling negotiation of the definitive purchase and sale agreement.

§3.10 e. Reduction of Risks Inherent in Partial Performance

An attorney's recurring nightmare is a transaction in which the parties begin performance before they execute a definitive agreement. Many litigated letter of intent cases arise from partial performance of a contract in which only some of the terms are reduced to writing in the letter. See, e.g., California Food Serv. Corp. v Great Am. Ins. Co. (1982) 130 CA3d 892, 182 CR 67, discussed in §3.16. If there is partial performance, a party may be able to use a waiver or estoppel theory to render an original nonbinding letter of intent binding. See §§3.14-3.26.

If partial performance occurs, a well-drafted letter of intent can help to

- eliminate litigation by expressly stating that partial performance does not create a contract (see §§3.14, 3.26);
- clarify or protect the parties' rights and duties pending execution of the definitive purchase and sale agreement;
- reduce the risk of surprise when the agreement is completed;
- provide evidence of the contemplated provisions if the definitive agreement is never completed and problems arise; and
- limit damages to liquidated damages agreed to by the parties, rather than imposing specific performance (see §3.12).

EXAMPLE: The buyer may take any number of steps before executing a final purchase and sale agreement—many with the seller's knowledge, including lining up financing, hiring contractors, and commencing due diligence. The attorney should caution buyers about the risks of undertaking such steps before a definite agreement is signed. If the letter of intent will be nonbinding, it should specifically state that partial performance does not create a contract. For sample language for the letter of intent, see form 3.35-1.

§3.11 f. Creation of Legally Binding Agreement on Certain Matters; Due Diligence and Confidentiality

A letter of intent can express a general nonbinding intent to engage in a particular sales transaction, while simultaneously creating specific legally binding agreements as conditions to moving forward with the intended purchase and sale. In a real estate sale, any legally binding portions of a letter of intent typically relate to such matters as access to information, obligations of confidentiality, and agreements not to solicit competing offers. Sometimes there is also an affirmative obligation to negotiate in good faith regarding the definitive agreement, though such an obligation may be implied by law (see §§3.27-3.30).

The letter of intent may allow a buyer the freedom to do a preliminary due diligence investigation, impose indemnification and insurance requirements on the buyer for claims arising from such an investigation, and allow a buyer to terminate further negotiations without liability if the investigation is not satisfactory. For example, a proposed buyer may obtain a limited time in which to conduct an environmental audit of real property. The attorney should, however, carefully consider the possible disadvantages of this approach.

For instance, the seller may find it disadvantageous because, to protect against closing claims, the seller may prefer that any due diligence investigation begin after execution of a definitive agreement. This approach allows the seller to retain control of disclosure by making it in an organized and well-documented manner. The seller may be reluctant to reveal any adverse information about a property on an informal basis under a letter of intent because a buyer who has not executed a definitive contract is generally less willing to accept adverse conditions than one who is committed to a deal. A seller may also wish to avoid disturbing tenants until a binding contract is signed.

The buyer may be unwilling to incur the potentially substantial cost of a due diligence analysis (e.g., environmental studies, engineer's or architect's inspections, analysis of leases) until the property is "tied up" by a binding contract. On environmental investigations generally, see §§7.36-7.44.

PRACTICE TIP: The parties should consider including a binding confidentiality clause in the letter of intent. Some attorneys use a separate confidentiality agreement to better protect sensitive information that might be disclosed if all or part of the letter of intent protecting confidentiality is found to be nonbinding. See form 3.45-1.

§3.12 g. Providing a Liquidated Damages Provision in a Letter of Intent

Parties generally intend for the deal terms listed in their letter of intent to be nonbinding. Sometimes letters of intent can unintentionally be deemed binding (see §§3.14-3.29). For these reasons, an attorney should consider inserting a liquidated damages provision in the letter of intent (see form 3.35-5). There has been no reported case in California that addresses the applicability of a liquidated damages provision in a letter of intent. Nevertheless, it would seem that if a court deemed binding a letter of intent that was otherwise sufficiently drafted to be nonbinding, but the parties' subsequent actions gave the court enough reason to find it binding, the court should also find the liquidated damages provision binding.

If the parties do not intend for the letter of intent to be binding, they should not object to including a liquidated damages provision in the letter of intent. Also, because the letter of intent is not intended to be binding, the parties should not have any expectation of damages if there is no transfer of the property. Therefore, a liquidated damages provision of a nominal sum (such as $100) should be considered an adequate amount, and far less than any party would otherwise need to expend defending a claim by the other party that the letter of intent was intended to be binding. If there are certain provisions within the letter of intent that the parties do intend to be binding, such as confidentiality or indemnification provisions (see §3.11), then the liquidated damages provision can be crafted to exempt specific obligations from the liquidated damages clause. Because no case law exists that addresses the applicability of a liquidated damages provision to a letter of intent, the practitioner is advised to satisfy the provisions of CC §§1671-1681 (dealing with the validity of liquidated damages in real property purchase contracts) as those statutes are applicable to a letter of intent. See form 3.35-5.

§3.13 2. When to Use Binding or Nonbinding Letter of Intent

It is difficult to imagine any circumstances in which a seller in a real property sale transaction would want to have a binding letter of intent. A fundamental reality of real estate sales is that the buyer may gain a distinct advantage after the parties enter into a binding letter of intent. The buyer's performance is usually conditional under such an agreement, providing opportunities to terminate the transaction. The seller's position is different: When the seller becomes contractually bound, the property is removed from the market and the seller is subject to a greater risk of an action for specific performance and the recording of a lis pendens if a dispute develops. Thus, it is usually to the buyer's advantage for the letter of intent to be binding—especially in a rising market.

PRACTICE TIP: If circumstances warrant (or the client otherwise insists) that a letter of intent is to be binding, it is essential to include appropriate standards to resolve any issues that may arise and are not addressed in the letter of intent. For example, the following clause should be included: "The final agreement shall contain such other terms and conditions as are customary in contracts for the purchase and sale of similar properties." See form 3.35-2. An arbitration provision to resolve such issues may also be warranted.

§3.14 III. RISKS OF USING A LETTER OF INTENT: WHEN IS IT BINDING?

The parties to a letter of intent usually do not intend the letter to constitute a binding contract, but merely to act as a tool for further negotiation. A risk exists, however, that as a result of ambiguous or imprecise drafting, or the subsequent conduct of the parties, the parties signing the letter may be bound to perform a contract found to reside in the letter. Indeed, creating an unintended binding obligation is the primary risk of using a letter of intent.

A binding contract may be found under the theory of waiver or estoppel, however, if the parties' subsequent conduct indicates partial performance or material change in position in reasonable reliance on the letter of intent—even with an explicit statement of no intent to be bound. On estoppel, see §3.26. See also Monarco v Lo Greco (1950) 35 C2d 621, 623, 220 P2d 737; Carlson v Richardson (1968) 267 CA2d 204, 208, 72 CR 769. On waiver, see Noel v Dumont Builders (1960) 178 CA2d 691, 3 CR 220.

The seller's attorney should seriously weigh the risks to the seller of the threat of a specific performance action or a lis pendens.

§3.15 A. Unintended Enforceability of Letter of Intent

A court may apply one of three levels of enforceability to a letter of intent otherwise intended to be nonbinding. Depending on how it interprets the parties' intent, the court may treat a letter of intent as creating

- a binding contract between the parties (see §§3.16-3.25);
- a "preliminary commitment," which may be construed to impose on the parties the somewhat uncertain obligation to negotiate further in good faith (see §§3.27-3.30); or
- a basis for a claim of promissory estoppel (see §3.26).

These three levels could be applied to the letter of intent as a whole or to certain clauses only.

PRACTICE TIP: To help avoid the unintended consequences resulting from a court finding enforceable a letter of intent intended to be nonbinding, the attorney should consider providing a liquidated damages provision in the letter of intent (see §3.12 and form 3.35-5).

§3.16 1. Objective Manifestation of Mutual Assent

The basic rules of contract formation govern the interpretation of a letter of intent. Every contract requires mutual assent of the parties. CC §§1550, 1565. A letter of intent may be held to constitute a binding contract when the evidence, including the terms of the document and conduct of the parties, shows an objective manifestation of mutual assent. Restatement (Second) of Contracts §§19, 27 (1981).

In describing the competing interests in determining whether a preliminary agreement is binding, the court in Adjustrite Sys. v GAB Bus. Servs. (2d Cir 1998) 145 F3d 543, 548, said:

> First, courts must be wary of "trapping parties in surprise contractual obligations that they never intended" to undertake. [Citations.] Second, "courts [must] enforce and preserve agreements that were intended [to be] binding, despite a need for further documentation or further negotiation," for it is "the aim of contract law to gratify, not to defeat, expectations."

In California Food Serv. Corp. v Great Am. Ins. Co. (1982) 130 CA3d 892, 897, 182 CR 67, the court enforced a letter of intent because it had all the necessary elements and the parties had performed. In addition to the signed document, the parties' performance "strongly suggest[ed that] both parties considered the terms of the letter of intent as being binding without the need for the execution of additional documents."

In City of Vernon v Board of Harbor Commissioners (1998) 63 CA4th 677, 690, 74 CR2d 497, the court construed a "statement of intent" containing the following clause:

> The parties intend this statement to reflect the basic understanding between them, but agree that the transactions contemplated herein shall be subject to the execution of mutually acceptable definitive and final agreements to be negotiated [and] subject to the approval of the [parties]. This statement does not constitute a legally binding commitment.

Under these circumstances, the court found that there could be no expectation of a binding contract. See also Arcadian Phosphates, Inc. v Arcadian Corp. (2d Cir 1989) 884 F2d 69 (letter of intent not enforced when it contained express disclaimer of binding effect); Teachers Ins. & Annuity Ass'n v Tribune Co. (SD NY 1987) 670 F Supp 491, 498 (letter of intent enforced after exchange of letters constituting commitment agreement stated that borrower and lender had made a "binding agreement").

§3.17 2. How to Determine Intent

Under the "objective test" of contract formation, a contract is formed when the parties have manifested by their words or conduct an intent to enter into a mutual agreement. Courts' interpretations of letters of intent are extremely fact specific. Courts have considered some of the following factors relevant to deciding whether the parties intended to be bound by all or part of the letter of intent:

- The parties' conduct (see §3.18);
- Contemplation of formal documents (see §3.19);
- Word choice (see §3.20);
- Specificity (see §3.21);
- Conditional approvals (see §3.22); and
- The complexity and size of the transaction (see §3.23).

For discussion of factors that courts consider in determining the parties' intent, see Teachers Ins. & Annuity Ass'n v Tribune Co. (SD NY 1987) 670 F Supp 491.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.18 a. Parties' Conduct

Courts carefully examine the parties' conduct at the time of and after execution of the letter of intent to ascertain their intent to be bound. Conduct such as celebrations or ceremonies, press releases announcing the transaction, public filings, suspending or forgoing negotiations with others, preparations for performance, or actual performance can indicate the intent to be bound. See, e.g., Seaman's Direct Buying Serv. v Standard Oil Co. (1984) 36 C3d 752, 760, 206 CR 354, overruled on other grounds in Della Penna v Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A., Inc. (1995) 11 C4th 376, 393, 45 CR2d 436 (execution of letter was "momentous occasion"; performance begun; letter of intent binding); California Food Serv. Corp. v Great Am. Ins. Co. (1982) 130 CA3d 892, 897, 182 CR 67 (performance begun; letter of intent binding); City of Santa Cruz v MacGregor (1960) 178 CA2d 45, 54, 2 CR 727 (same).

PRACTICE TIP: To avoid enforcement, the parties should refrain from publicizing the transaction. They may want to add a clause to the letter of intent requiring confidentiality (see form 3.45-1) and avoidance of certain other conduct. If others must be informed of the transaction, the parties should ensure that press releases, public filings, and other notices confirm the nonbinding nature of the letter of intent.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.19 b. Execution of Formal Documents Expressly Contemplated

A clause in a letter of intent that expressly contemplates the future execution of a formal contract indicates an intent not to be bound (see, e.g., Beck v American Health Group Int'l (1989) 211 CA3d 1555, 1562, 260 CR 237) but is not in itself sufficient to ensure that a court will hold the letter to be nonbinding. An ambiguity in this clause allows a court to interpret it as expressing the intent to reduce an obligation to writing rather than the intent not to be bound until the execution of formal documents. See Arnold Palmer Golf Co. v Fuqua Indus. (6th Cir 1976) 541 F2d 584, 589. Even the statement that an agreement is "subject to" execution of formal contracts has not always prevented the enforcement of letters of intent. See 541 F2d at 590; Teachers Ins. & Annuity Ass'n v Tribune Co. (SD NY 1987) 670 F Supp 491, 499; Texaco, Inc. v Pennzoil Co. (Tex App 1987) 729 SW2d 768.

In City of Santa Cruz v MacGregor (1960) 178 CA2d 45, 2 CR 727, the parties' signed document said that they would enter into a lease after construction of a building on property "located on Water Street." The building was built, but a lease was never executed. The appellant occupied the property and testified that he thought the original agreement was the only one intended. The court held that the document, conduct of the parties, and testimony would support a finding that the appellant had a valid lease (in spite of vague and missing terms) and so could share in compensation for condemnation of the property by eminent domain.

PRACTICE TIP: To minimize the risk of unintended enforcement, the attorney should include an unequivocal statement that the parties (1) do not intend to be bound until they execute and deliver formal documents or (2) do not intent to be bound by the letter of intent at all. See, e.g., Roth v Garcia Marquez (9th Cir 1991) 942 F2d 617; Skycom Corp. v Telstar Corp. (7th Cir 1987) 813 F2d 810, 816; Reprosystem, B.V. v SCM Corp. (2d Cir 1984) 727 F2d 257, 262; Chrysler Capital Corp. v Southeast Hotel Prop. (SD NY 1988) 697 F Supp 794, 801, aff'd without published opinion (2d Cir 1989) 888 F2d 1376. See form 3.35-1.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.20 c. Language Choice and Verb Tense

Language that contemplates being bound only at an indefinite future time ("we will agree in the future") or use of the subjunctive ("if we were to agree") tends to show that the parties did not intend to be bound by the letter of intent. Beck v American Health Group Int'l (1989) 211 CA3d 1555, 1562, 260 CR 237. See also Arcadian Phosphates, Inc. v Arcadian Corp. (2d Cir 1989) 884 F2d 69, 72. Conversely, using the present or past tense ("we agree" or "we have agreed" or "accepted and agreed") demonstrates an intent to be bound. See Harris v Rudin, Richman & Appel (1999) 74 CA4th 299, 87 CR2d 822. See also Texaco, Inc. v Pennzoil Co. (Tex App 1987) 729 SW2d 768; Itek Corp. v Chicago Aerial Indus. (Del 1968) 248 A2d 625, 627.

PRACTICE TIP: Clearly, if the parties do not wish to be bound by the letter of intent, this should be stated as explicitly as possible. See §3.19 and suggested language in form 3.35-1. For language and conduct to use or avoid, see §§3.18-3.19, 3.24, 3.30, 3.35.

It is also imperative to avoid using contractual type language such as "offer" and "acceptance" in a letter of intent. The most common error is the inclusion of a final sentence that establishes a deadline for the addressee to "accept" the terms of the letter of intent by a certain date or the terms will be revoked or the letter of intent terminated. Use of this type of contract language arguably shows an intent to enter into a binding agreement.

Source: Real Property/California Real Property Sales Transactions/3 Letters of Intent/§3.21 d. Specificity of Essential Terms

§3.21 d. Specificity of Essential Terms

Courts may consider the level of specificity as an indication of binding intent. The more specifically the letter of intent addresses the essential terms of the proposed agreement (i.e., the fewer terms left open), the more likely a court will find that the parties intended to be bound. Computer Sys. v IBM (1st Cir 1986) 795 F2d 1086. Because the parties' intent is the test, however, lack of specificity in itself will not preclude the court from determining that the parties intended to be bound. Chrysler Capital Corp. v Southeast Hotel Prop. (SD NY 1988) 697 F Supp 794, 799, aff'd without published opinion (2d Cir 1989) 888 F2d 1376.

PRACTICE TIP: The language provided in the second paragraph of form 3.35-1 establishes that the letter of intent is not intended to include all of the essential terms of the transaction. It should be included whenever circumstances warrant.

An agreement may be enforced as a final contract even if it is incomplete, i.e., if it contains gaps or open issues. Courts require only that the document either state the essential terms of the agreement (and not necessarily its details or particulars) or provide sufficient information to determine the essential terms. The courts may then supply any open issues by inference from the surrounding circumstances (including prevailing custom and practice) or by operation of law. See, e.g., Com C §2305; Roth v Garcia Marquez (9th Cir 1991) 942 F2d 617, 627 (letter of intent that omits essential terms not binding). See also Okun v Morton (1988) 203 CA3d 805, 817, 250 CR 220; Hotel del Coronado Corp. v Foodservice Equip. Distribs. Ass'n (9th Cir 1986) 783 F2d 1323. Deciding which clauses are "essentials" and which are mere "particulars" is a factual determination based on the surrounding circumstances. 783 F2d at 1325.

§3.22 e. Conditional Third Party Approvals

Requirements that the board of directors, legal counsel, or other third parties approve the transaction described in the letter of intent also tend to show an intent not to be bound by a letter of intent. See A/S Apothekernes Laboratorium v I.M.C. Chem. Group (7th Cir 1989) 873 F2d 155; Jewel Cos. v Pay Less Drug Stores NW. (9th Cir 1984) 741 F2d 1555 (merger agreement subject to shareholder approval was not intended to be legally binding, but board of directors did bind itself to refrain from considering other offers).

Such clauses may, however, be interpreted merely as contractual conditions precedent that the relevant party must attempt to satisfy. For example, failure to seek the approval of the board of directors if the letter of intent is conditioned on such approval may constitute a breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing (Jacobs v Freeman (1980) 104 CA3d 177, 163 CR 680), but even disapproval by the board may be found to have been in bad faith (see Texaco, Inc. v Pennzoil Co. (Tex App 1987) 729 SW2d 768, discussed in §3.24).

PRACTICE TIP: Many clients seem to think that simply requiring the approval of the board of directors is sufficient to ensure that a letter of intent will not be binding. It is important to explain that such a condition alone may not achieve that objective. Courts will look to the entire letter of intent and the conduct of the parties to decide the issue. The clause providing that the letter of intent not be binding until approval is granted must be completely unambiguous. See Arnold Palmer Golf Co. v Fuqua Indus. (6th Cir 1976) 541 F2d 584, 590; Teachers Ins. & Annuity Ass'n v Tribune Co. (SD NY 1987) 670 F Supp 491, 499. The clause should also state that such approval is not the only condition to the transaction and that approval may be granted or withheld in the party's sole and absolute discretion.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.23 f. Complexity and Size of Transaction

The complexity of the proposed transaction may be a factor in determining whether a court finds a binding contract to have been formed through a letter of intent. In a simple transaction in which the terms and conditions of a letter of intent more or less cover all the expected issues, a court might find that an objective reading of the document does evidence an enforceable contract. By contrast, in a large complex transaction in which the letter of intent can be seen as only hitting the highlights, with numerous issues remaining to be resolved, a finding that a contract was intended may be less likely. Skycom Corp. v Telstar Corp. (7th Cir 1987) 813 F2d 810; Computer Sys. v IBM (1st Cir 1986) 795 F2d 1086; Reprosystem, B.V. v SCM Corp. (2d Cir 1984) 727 F2d 257.

The courts often find that parties do not intend to become engaged in complex transactions without a detailed description of their rights and obligations. Teachers Ins. & Annuity Ass'n v Tribune Co. (SD NY 1987) 670 F Supp 491, 503. The author knows of no published opinion by a California court that addresses complexity per se as a determinative factor.

PRACTICE TIP: The sobering result in Texaco, Inc. v Pennzoil Co. (Tex App 1987) 729 SW2d 768 demonstrates, however, that one cannot rely on this factor to avoid enforceability. Prudent practitioners make sure that the letter of intent specifically denies an intent to be bound, if this is the desired result. For discussion of Texaco, see §3.24.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.24 3. Unexpected Enforceability in Texaco v Pennzoil

Courts may unexpectedly enforce a letter of intent. In Texaco, Inc. v Pennzoil Co. (Tex App 1987) 729 SW2d 768, Texaco was found liable for tortious interference with a "memorandum of agreement" on Pennzoil's acquisition of the Getty Oil Company. The court upheld a jury verdict for $10.53 billion against Texaco.

The memorandum of agreement did not include language establishing a binding effect. The press release announcing the proposed acquisition agreement referred to it as an "agreement in principle" for a transaction that was "subject to execution of a definitive merger agreement." 729 SW2d at 789. Unexecuted drafts of the final merger documents stated that the parties' obligations accrued "after the execution and delivery of this agreement." 729 SW2d at 790.

Despite these precautions, the court found sufficient evidence of the parties' intent to be bound by the facts and circumstances surrounding the negotiations to enforce the memorandum of agreement. To support the verdict, the court found the following:

- The press release used indicative language (e.g., "the shareholders will receive") instead of conditional language (e.g., "if we were to agree"), demonstrating an intent to be bound. 729 SW2d at 789.
- The clause, "the transaction is subject to execution of a definitive merger agreement," did not undermine the possibility that the memorandum of agreement was also intended to be a binding agreement. 729 SW2d at 789.
- It was reasonable for the jury to conclude that the phrase "after the execution and delivery of this agreement," which appeared before each of the parties' obligations in the unexecuted merger contracts, merely indicated the timing of various acts and did not condition their occurrence on execution and delivery of the contracts. 729 SW2d at 790.
- The phrase "agreement in principle" was sufficiently ambiguous to support the jury's conclusion that it referred to a binding agreement. 729 SW2d at 791.

Many commentators have disagreed with the holding in Texaco, but it provides a clear example of the need for careful analysis and drafting of letters of intent to avoid unintended results. See, e.g., Ranck, Letters of Intent and Preliminary Agreements, 6 Corp Couns Q 1 (1990).

PRACTICE TIP: No clear or definitive rule can be drawn from the cases on when a letter of intent will have binding effect. Thus, when drafting or reviewing a letter of intent, the attorney should make sure that it expressly states whether or not the parties intend to be bound by the letter. If they intend to be bound, the letter should clarify to what extent the parties are bound. In addition, the attorney should advise the client after executing the letter to act in conformance with the intent stated in it. Conduct that suggests a different or greater obligation is likely to waive written disclaimers or limitations of binding intent. Including a liquidated damages provision may help neutralize the adverse effects from inconsistent language in a nonbinding letter of intent and conduct by the parties. Although there is no California case on point, if a court finds the letter of intent binding, despite the stated intent not to be bound, then a liquidated damages provision may be enforceable. See form 3.35-5 and Comment to that form.

§3.25 4. Statute of Frauds

In addition to the other basic elements of a contract (see §4.12), the Statute of Frauds (CC §§1091, 1624(a)(3); CCP §1971) requires a writing signed by the party to be charged in all sales of real property. Not all terms and conditions of a contract must be contained within the writing to constitute an enforceable contract for the sale of real property. By the terms of the statute, only "some note or memorandum" of the agreement needs to be signed by the party to be charged. Clearly, a letter of intent could be such a "memorandum" because by design it would contain at least the most significant terms. On the Statute of Frauds generally, see §4.13.

For cases in which a court enforced a letter of intent even though it did not conform to the strict requirements of the Statute of Frauds, see Seaman's Direct Buying Serv. v Standard Oil Co. (1984) 36 C3d 752, 206 CR 354, overruled on other grounds in Freeman & Mills v Belcher Oil Co. (1995) 11 C4th 85, 88, 44 CR2d 420; Levin v Knight (9th Cir 1986) 780 F2d 786.

§3.26 B. Promissory Estoppel

Promises allegedly made in a letter of intent can be grounds for a promissory estoppel claim. The following are the required elements for promissory estoppel (Thomson v International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees (1965) 232 CA2d 446, 454, 42 CR 785):

- A clear and unambiguous promise;
- Reliance by the party to whom the promise was made;
- Reasonable and foreseeable reliance; and
- Injury to the party asserting the estoppel as a result of its reliance.

See Restatement (Second) of Contracts §90 (1981).

If the letter of intent clearly shows the parties' intent not to be bound, the writing would tend to negate a clear and unambiguous promise on which the other party could reasonably rely. See, e.g., Laks v Coast Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1976) 60 CA3d 885, 890, 131 CR 836; Doll v Grand Union Co. (11th Cir 1991) 925 F2d 1363, 1371; Reprosystem, B.V. v SCM Corp. (2d Cir 1984) 727 F2d 257, 264. In Lange v TIG Ins. Co. (1998) 68 CA4th 1179, 1186, 81 CR2d 39, when the trial court found that extrinsic evidence was necessary to determine the binding nature of a letter of intent, the court of appeal reversed, holding that "if extrinsic evidence is needed to interpret a promise, then obviously the promise is not clear and unambiguous."

Some courts, however, have accepted the possibility that, even if a letter of intent is not generally binding, some of its provisions could support a promissory estoppel theory. See Arcadian Phosphates, Inc. v Arcadian Corp. (2d Cir 1989) 884 F2d 69, 73; Skycom Corp. v Telstar Corp. (7th Cir 1987) 813 F2d 810, 817. Further, the nonbinding nature of the letter of intent does not necessarily defeat a theory of promissory estoppel based on oral promises made in connection with or separate from the letter of intent. See Quan Shew Yung v Woods (1963) 218 CA2d 506, 32 CR 453, in which the seller's oral approval of a sale, coupled with evidence of a letter from the seller to his agent, and the buyer's reliance (expenditures for improvements) were held to estop the seller from asserting the Statute of Frauds. See also Evid C §623.

Other courts have held that, to support estoppel to assert the Statute of Frauds, the injury suffered by the innocently relying party must be substantial and "unconscionable." See Allied Grape Growers v Bronco Wine Co. (1988) 203 CA3d 432, 249 CR 872 (applying Com C §2201, the Statute of Frauds applicable to contract for sale of goods). But see Isaac v A&B Loan Co. (1988) 201 CA3d 307, 247 CR 104, in which the buyer's payment of a deposit under an alleged oral agreement to sell real property was not deemed a material change of position or an injury sufficiently unconscionable to support estoppel.

Claims based on promissory estoppel and the duty to negotiate in good faith (see §§3.26-3.30) may arise from similar fact patterns. See Arcadian Phosphates, Inc. 884 F2d at 74 (buyer relied on seller's clear, unambiguous promise to negotiate in good faith). Such claims differ, however, with respect to the remedies available. Although breach of the duty to bargain in good faith may allow recovery equal to the full expected return on the contract, promissory estoppel may allow the plaintiff to recoup only actual expenses incurred in reliance on the promise. 884 F2d at 73. See also Budget Marketing, Inc. v Centronics Corp. (8th Cir 1991) 927 F2d 421, 428. For an excellent overview on the issue of reliance as a defense, as well as an analysis of what factors justify reliance in the "preliminary agreement" phase, see California Real Property Remedies and Damages §1.53 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002) and Craswell, Offer, Acceptance, and Efficient Reliance, 48 Stan L Rev 481, 536 (1996).

PRACTICE TIP: Because parts of a letter of intent could be held to support an estoppel theory and because allegations of collateral promises are always possible, the attorney should include a "no reliance" statement in a letter of intent that is intended to be nonbinding. For suggested language, see form 3.35-1. Also, as a transaction proceeds after execution of a nonbinding letter of intent, the attorney should remain alert for actions or communications that may form the basis of an estoppel claim and take appropriate preventive action when necessary.

IV. DUTY TO NEGOTIATE IN GOOD FAITH

§3.27 A. Basis for Existence of Duty

Even if a letter of intent does not establish a binding obligation to carry out the contemplated real estate sale transaction, express or implied terms may obligate a party to negotiate in good faith. See Copeland v Baskin Robbins U.S.A. (2002) 96 CA4th 1251, 117 CR2d 875. Before Copeland it was unclear whether an agreement to negotiate was enforceable, because some courts characterized such provisions as unenforceable agreements to agree. See Beck v American Health Group Int'l (1989) 211 CA3d 1555, 1562, 260 CR 237. See also the discussion in Vestar Dev. II v General Dynamics Corp. (9th Cir 2001) 249 F3d 958, 961. Copeland holds, however, that "a contract to negotiate an agreement is distinguishable from a so-called 'agreement to agree' and can be formed and breached just like any other contract." Copeland, 96 CA4th at 1253.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.28 B. Necessity of a Contract

In Copeland v Baskin Robbins U.S.A. (2002) 96 CA4th 1251, 117 CR2d 875, the court stated that (96 CA4th at 1260)

> [w]hen two parties, under no compulsion to do so, engage in negotiations to form or modify a contract neither party has any obligation to continue negotiating nor to negotiate in good faith. Only when the parties are under a contractual compulsion to negotiate does the covenant of good faith and fair dealing attach, as it does in every contract.

In Racine & Laramie, Ltd. v Department of Parks & Recreation (1992) 11 CA4th 1026, 14 CR2d 335, the court held that without a specific agreement imposing an obligation to negotiate in good faith, no such obligation exists. According to the court (11 CA4th at 1034):

> The fact that parties commence negotiations looking to a contract, or to the amendment of an existing contract, does not by itself impose any duty on either party not to be unreasonable or not to break off negotiation, for any reason or for no reason. During the course of negotiations things may be done which do then impose a duty of continued bargaining only in good faith.... For instance… in anticipation of an agreement the parties may, by letter of intent or otherwise, agree that they will bargain in good faith for the purpose of reaching an agreement.

Within the context of an otherwise nonbinding letter of intent, the parties may obligate themselves to "negotiate in good faith," to use "reasonable" or "best" efforts to negotiate a definitive agreement, to "negotiate an agreement containing commercially reasonable terms," or to "negotiate terms that are in accordance with similar transactions in the industry." See Vestar Dev. II v General Dynamics Corp. (9th Cir 2001) 249 F3d 958, 962; Thompson v Liquichimica of Am. (SD NY 1979) 481 F Supp 365; Itek Corp. v Chicago Aerial Indus. (Del 1968) 248 A2d 625, 629. By using this type of language, the parties bind themselves to a duty to negotiate in good faith, thus subjecting themselves to liability or judicial enforcement. In Copeland v Baskin Robbins U.S.A., supra, the only language quoted by the court implying an agreement to negotiate was in a letter from Baskin Robbins to Copeland stating Baskin Robbins would agree, "subject to a separate co-packaging agreement and negotiated pricing," to provide Copeland with a 3-year capacity agreement. 96 CA4th at 1254.

§3.29 C. Recovery Limited to Reliance Damages

Some courts are reluctant to find that an agreement to negotiate is enforceable, in part because of the difficulty in fashioning a remedy for the breach of such an agreement, especially if expectation damages are sought. See Budget Marketing, Inc. v Centronics Corp. (8th Cir 1991) 927 F2d 421; Arcadian Phosphates, Inc. v Arcadian Corp. (2d Cir 1989) 884 F2d 69. The court in Copeland v Baskin Robbins U.S.A. (2002) 96 CA4th 1251, 117 CR2d 875 (see §3.28) resolved this issue by noting that if an entity breaches its obligation to negotiate (96 CA4th at 1263),

> [t]he plaintiff cannot recover for lost expectations (profits) because there is no way of knowing what the ultimate terms of the agreement would have been or even if there would have been an ultimate agreement.

See also Auerbach v Great W. Bank (1999) 74 CA4th 1172, 1191, 88 CR2d 718; Vestar Dev. II v General Dynamics Corp. (9th Cir 2001) 249 F3d 958, 961; Venture Assoc. v Zenith Data Sys. (7th Cir 1996) 96 F3d 275, 278; and Farnsworth, Precontractual Liability and Preliminary Agreements: Fair Dealing and Failed Negotiations, 87 Colum L Rev 217, 263 (1987). The Copeland court held that (96 CA4th at 1262) > damages for breach of a contract to negotiate an agreement are measured by the injury the plaintiff suffered in relying on the defendant to negotiate in good faith. This measure encompasses the plaintiff's out-of-pocket costs in conducting the negotiations and may or may not include lost opportunity costs.

See also Vestar Dev. II v General Dynamics Corp., supra, in which the court reasoned that because California case law requires that damages not be speculative—or rather, that they be proved to a reasonable certainty under CC §3301—a breach of an agreement to negotiate cannot be subject to a remedy of lost profits, but only reliance damages such as "time spent, expenses incurred, opportunities foregone, or perhaps harm to its reputation." 249 F3d at 962.

§3.30 D. Scope of Duty to Negotiate in Good Faith

In most cases, the question of whether an entity negotiated in good faith will be a question of fact for the jury that "ordinary citizens applying their experience and common sense [are very] well equipped to determine." Copeland v Baskin Robbins U.S.A. (2002) 96 CA4th 1251, 1261, 117 CR2d 875 (see §3.28). Meeting the obligation to negotiate in good faith does not necessarily mean that the parties will reach agreement. 96 CA4th at 1257; Teachers Ins. & Annuity Ass'n v Tribune Co. (SD NY 1987) 670 F Supp 491, 498. A duty to negotiate in good faith does not prevent a party from bargaining to its own economic advantage, nor does it require parties to conclude the transaction. Auerbach v Great W. Bank (1999) 74 CA4th 1172, 1191, 88 CR2d 718, quoting with approval from Phoenix Mut. Life Ins. Co. v Shady Grove Plaza Ltd. Partnership (D Md 1990) 734 F Supp 1181, 1190, aff'd without published opinion (4th Cir 1991) 937 F2d 603; Philmar Mid-Atlantic, Inc. v York St. Assocs II. (Pa Super 1989) 566 A2d 1253. See also Topinka & Quarterman, Negotiating and Drafting Engagement Letters Between Investment Bankers and Privately Held Companies, 6 CEB Cal Bus L Prac 126 (Summer 1990); Restatement (Second) of Contracts §§84, 245-246 (1981) (letter of intent imposes good faith requirement to do everything necessary to complete transaction).

It may be, however, that the determination of whether a person negotiated in good faith will be based on the degree to which that person negotiated in bad faith. In his article cited by the court in Copeland v Baskin Robbins U.S.A., supra, Professor Farnsworth identified seven areas that can be considered unfair dealing, including: refusal to negotiate, improper tactics, unreasonable proposals, nondisclosure, negotiation with others, reneging, and breaking off negotiations. See Farnsworth, Precontractual Liability and Preliminary Agreements: Fair Dealing and Failed Negotiations, 87 Colum L Rev 217, 273 (1987).

PRACTICE TIP: To avoid a claim based on the duty to negotiate in good faith, the letter of intent should specifically deny the existence of such a duty and state that, unless a definitive agreement is signed, either party may terminate negotiations at any time for any reason or no reason. See form 3.35-1. If negotiations are terminated, the parties can protect against later litigation by acknowledging in writing that, although they did negotiate in good faith, they were unable to reach a final agreement. Alternatively, just as a party may wish to limit any potential damages resulting from a court's determination that a nonbinding letter of intent is binding, a party may also try to limit its damages for any breach of a failure to negotiate in good faith by including a liquidated damages provision in the letter. See §3.12 and form 3.35-5.

PRACTICE TIP: If the parties desire to be bound by the obligation to negotiate in good faith, they should recite that in the letter of intent. See form 3.35-3. They should also include a deadline or time period for the negotiations; otherwise one party may be able to leverage the other party into prolonged negotiations for fear of breaching the obligation to negotiate if the other party ceases to negotiate. See form 3.46-1.

V. NEGOTIATING AND DRAFTING A LETTER OF INTENT

§3.31 A. Negotiating and Drafting Considerations

Although the basic business points of a real estate sale transaction are usually left to the principals to negotiate, if a letter of intent is to be used, the form should be drafted by an attorney. As noted in §3.4, important contractual risks must be understood and drafted for in a letter of intent. Business principals are rarely attuned to these issues and may say too little or too much in a letter of intent.

As with any transactional documentation, the party who controls the preparation of the first draft can often achieve a negotiating advantage because the first draft commonly sets the format and content of subsequent discussions and revisions. Thus, the attorney usually advises the client to authorize the attorney to prepare the first draft.

§3.32 B. Letter of Intent

The following form illustrates a letter of intent in a transaction for the purchase of an office building. For purposes of this form, assume that the buyer will obtain a new first loan and the seller will take part of the purchase price in the form of a note secured by a second deed of trust on the property.

This form is predicated on the belief that it is best to use a short, simple document. If the circumstances require a long, detailed document, it may be better to forgo a letter of intent and move directly to negotiating and drafting the full contract documentation.

3.35-1 Alternative: Nonbinding letter of intent

This letter of intent is not intended to constitute a binding agreement, but rather to serve as the basis for negotiating and drafting a definitive purchase and sale agreement between the parties containing the terms stated in this letter of intent as well as other terms and conditions to be determined. Neither party will rely on this letter of intent as binding on the other; any such reliance would be imprudent and unreasonable. Neither party will be bound unless and until a definitive agreement has been executed and delivered by both parties and approved by their respective attorneys.

It is understood and agreed that this letter of intent does not contain all the essential terms that the parties expect will be part of an agreement. Further negotiations between the parties are contemplated before a binding agreement will be prepared, but neither party is bound to continue such negotiations, which may be terminated at any time. Further efforts by either party to perform due diligence, arrange or obtain financing, or carry out other acts in contemplation of the possible purchase and sale of the Property may not be deemed evidence of intent by either party to be bound by this letter of intent.

The performance by either party before execution of a formal contract of any of the obligations that may be included in a contract between the parties when negotiations are completed will not be considered evidence of intent by either party to be bound by this letter of intent.

3.35-2 Alternative: Binding letter of intent

The parties contemplate preparation of a more detailed purchase and sale agreement containing additional terms and conditions that are customary for a transaction of the nature contemplated in this letter of intent, but it is understood and agreed that this letter of intent nevertheless binds the parties to the purchase and sale of the Property on the terms and conditions stated in this letter even if a more definitive agreement is not executed.

3.35-3 Alternative: Letter of intent binding only for duty to negotiate in good faith

The parties contemplate preparation of a more detailed purchase and sale agreement containing additional terms and conditions that are customary for a transaction of the nature contemplated in this letter of intent, and they do not intend this letter of intent to constitute a binding agreement for purchase and sale of the Property.

Further efforts by either party to perform due diligence, arrange or obtain financing, or carry out other acts in contemplation of the possible purchase and sale of the Property may not be deemed evidence of intent by either party to be bound by this letter of intent.

The performance by either party before execution of a formal contract of any of the obligations that may be included in a contract between the parties when negotiations are completed will not be considered evidence of intent by either party to be bound by this letter of intent. Despite the foregoing, it is understood and agreed that this nonbinding letter of intent binds the parties to negotiate in good faith for a period of at least _ _[e.g., 30]_ _ days for the completion of such a definitive agreement for purchase and sale of the Property.

3.35-4 Alternative: Letter of intent binding for specific obligations

headings of binding clauses]_ _, the parties acknowledge and agree that this letter is not intended to be or to evidence any legally binding agreement or obligation on the part of either party. No further agreement will be entered into unless and until each party has reviewed, approved (in its sole discretion), and executed, after review by counsel, a definitive written agreement. Neither party has any obligation to negotiate or conclude the business arrangement described in this letter. Each party acknowledges that it will not take action or refrain from taking action in reliance on the portions of this letter intended to be legally nonbinding and that any such reliance will be at its own risk.

The parties agree that the provisions in paragraphs _ _[insert paragraph numbers of binding clauses]_ _, titled _ _[specify headings of binding clauses]_ _, represent the parties' legally binding agreements, enforceable in accordance with their terms. The enforceability of those provisions is not conditioned on further negotiations or the successful outcome of any further negotiations.

If the parties execute a definitive agreement, that agreement will supersede this letter. Failure to achieve a more complete agreement will not, however, limit the enforceability of the clauses in this letter specified to be binding.

3.35-5 Alternative: Liquidated damages for nonbinding letter of intent

Liquidated Damages for Nonbinding Letter of Intent _ _[and Breach of Agreement to Negotiate]_ _

NOTWITHSTANDING THE PARTIES' INTENT THAT THIS LETTER OF INTENT SHALL NOT CONSTITUTE A BINDING AGREEMENT, IF AS A RESULT OF ANY LEGAL ACTION IT IS DETERMINED THAT A PARTY HAS BREACHED ANY OBLIGATION IMPOSED BY THIS LETTER OF INTENT _ _[(INCLUDING/EXCLUDING ANY OBLIGATION TO NEGOTIATE IN GOOD FAITH, CONFIDENTIALITY, INDEMNIFICATION, INSURANCE, ETC.)]_ _, THEN THE PARTIES ACKNOWLEDGE THAT IT WOULD BE EXTREMELY DIFFICULT TO ASCERTAIN THE EXTENT OF ANY DAMAGES RESULTING FROM SUCH BREACH. ACCORDINGLY THE PARTIES AGREE THAT A PAYMENT IN THE AMOUNT OF _ _[dollar amount]_ _ BY THE BREACHING PARTY TO THE NONBREACHING PARTY SHALL BE THE SOLE DAMAGES AND REMEDY IN THE EVENT OF ANY SUCH BREACH. THIS PROVISION SHALL SURVIVE ANY TERMINATION OF THIS LETTER.

Initials _____ _____

Comment: It is difficult to imagine any circumstances in which it would be advisable for a seller to use alternative form 3.35-2 or 3.35-3, which bind the seller to sell or to negotiate exclusively the definitive agreement. This agreement would only tie up the property, effectively removing it from the market before the details of an agreement are completed. It is unlikely that the seller's risks of an action for specific performance by the buyer and the threat of a lis pendens recorded against the property would be sufficiently balanced by any benefit of "binding" the buyer by such provisions. Thus, form 3.35-2 is used only rarely in real estate transactions, and clients should be informed of the consequences of entering a binding letter of intent.

As discussed in §§3.27-3.30, the scope, meaning, and potential remedies available for breach of an obligation to negotiate in good faith are not well settled in California. Use of alternative form 3.35-3 attempts to limit the exposure for breaching this obligation by setting a time limit during which the parties are bound to negotiate in good faith.

Form 3.35-4 might be useful if the parties have agreed on a specific obligation, whether or not a definitive agreement for purchase and sale is concluded. See §3.11. For example, if the seller agrees to provide sensitive financial information or environmental reports to the buyer for review before creation of the definitive agreement, the seller may require covenants of confidentiality and return of all documents.

Given the risk that letters of intent drafted with the intent of being nonbinding might be deemed binding by a court (see §§3.14-3.25), adding the liquidated damages alternative form 3.35-5 to nonbinding letters of intent (with the appropriate adjustment to include or exclude any agreement to negotiate in good faith) may serve as a backup provision. If a court finds the letter to be binding, this provision should also be enforceable, thus allowing the parties to limit their exposure to liability to some reasonably agreed sum. Arguably, because the parties intend the letter to be nonbinding, they also do not expect any damages to result from any failure to comply with its terms; thus, a nominal sum should be reasonable. The liquidated damages provision should be sufficient to provide adequate consideration for the parties to be bound by the obligation created by the liquidated damages provision. Note, however, that no California case has addressed a liquidated damages provision in a letter of intent. Thus, practitioners are advised to satisfy the provisions of CC §§1671-1681 (dealing with the validity of liquidated damages) for a real property purchase contract, such as using 10-point type and initialing.

For further examples of binding and nonbinding clauses in letters of intent, see Drafting Business Contracts: Principles, Techniques & Forms, chap 20 (Cal CEB 1994).

3.40-1 Conditions precedent to buyer's obligations

The definitive agreement will provide that Buyer's obligations are subject to the following conditions precedent _ _[and others that may be included on further negotiations]_ _, the precise statement of which will be subject to the parties' mutual satisfaction (Buyer's Contingencies):

a. Buyer's ability to obtain a first deed of trust loan on the Property in an amount of no less than _ _[dollar amount]_ _ on terms and conditions satisfactory to Buyer. Buyer will have _ _[e.g., 60 days]_ _ from execution of the definitive agreement in which to obtain a commitment for such loan (Financing Contingency).

b. Buyer's review of and satisfaction with each of the following matters, to be determined within the times stated next to each:

(1) Title to the property: _ _[e.g., 15 days]_ _.

(2) Physical inspection, including environmental, engineering, architectural, and other consultants of Buyer's choice: _ _[e.g., 60 days]_ _.

(3) All leases and rental agreements: _ _[e.g., 30 days]_ _.

(4) Service and maintenance contracts: _ _[e.g., 30 days]_ _.

(5) Financial statements, including income and expense statements and rent rolls, certified by Seller as correct: _ _[e.g., 30 days]_ _.

(6) All building permits and all inspection reports in the possession of Seller: _ _[e.g., 30 days]_ _.

(7) Others: _ _[Insert any other contingencies and relevant time periods]_ _.

Comment: As an additional contingency for use if either party (or both) is a partnership, corporation, or other entity, the drafter may wish to add a requirement of evidence that the transaction has been approved by, e.g., the party's partners, board of directors, shareholders. If the letter of intent is binding, such a contingency will include an implied obligation to seek such approval in good faith. See §3.27. See also Jacobs v Freeman (1980) 104 CA3d 177, 163 CR 680.

NOTE: The bracketed optional clause in the first paragraph is intended to avoid claims by a party that the list of conditions precedent are exclusive. If the attorney wants to try to limit the conditions precedent to those listed in the letter of intent, this language should be deleted.

3.41-1 Conditions to buyer's right to inspect

Subject to the following terms and conditions, which are intended to be binding on the parties to this letter of intent, Seller agrees to allow Buyer, its employees, agents, or contractors, at Buyer's sole cost and expense, access to the property for the limited purpose of inspections until the earlier of (i) _ _[e.g. 30 days after the date of the last signatory's execution of this letter]_ _ or (ii) the termination of negotiations under this letter of intent or (iii) the date on which the parties enter into a definitive agreement regarding the property. The following terms and conditions apply to this period of inspection:

a. The inspections shall only occur during business hours at reasonable times on _ _[reasonable/number of days]_ _ advance _ _[written]_ _ notice to Seller. All activities undertaken by or on behalf of Buyer in connection with the inspections shall fully comply with applicable laws and regulations, and Buyer shall promptly restore, at its sole cost and expense, any damage arising in connection with the inspections.

b. Before conducting the inspections, Buyer shall submit for Seller's approval a certificate of insurance naming Seller as an additional insured under a commercial general liability policy with _ _[dollar amount]_ _ combined single limit for bodily injury and property damage coverage.

c. Buyer may not conduct any intrusive or destructive inspections or borings without Seller's prior written consent, which consent shall be at Seller's sole and absolute discretion.

d. Buyer shall have no right to make inquiries of tenants of Seller or its property manager without Seller's prior consent, which may be conditioned on an agent or representative of Seller accompanying Buyer and its agents or representatives during such inquiries.

e. If the parties do not enter into a definitive agreement regarding the property, Buyer shall furnish Seller with copies of any reports relating to the inspections performed by Buyer or its agents, employees, or contractors, and all such reports shall become Seller's property.

f. Buyer agrees to keep confidential and not to disseminate to any third party, and to cause its agents or representatives to keep confidential and not disseminate to any third party, any information Buyer (and/or its agents or representatives) obtains as a result of the inspections, except to the extent disclosure is required by law. This Paragraph _ _[e.g., f]_ _ shall survive the termination of this letter of intent.

g. Buyer hereby releases, indemnifies and agrees to defend and hold Seller free and harmless from and against any and all obligations, lawsuits, injuries, losses, damages, claims, liens, costs, expenses, demands, liabilities, judgments, penalties, investigation costs, including attorney fees and costs, incurred in connection with, arising directly or indirectly out of, or in any way connected with the inspections. Without limiting the generality of this indemnity, Buyer shall (i) keep the property free and clear of any mechanics' or other lien that may be recorded or threatened against the property by any party providing labor, materials, or services in connection with the inspections and (ii) not file or cause to be filed any application or make any request (other than inquiries of the public records) with any governmental or quasi-governmental agency that would or could lead to a hearing before any governmental or quasi-governmental agency or that would or could lead to a note, notice, or violation of law or municipal ordinance, order, or requirement imposed on the property by such an agency, or any change in zoning, parcelization, licenses, permits, or other entitlements or any investigation or restriction on the use of the property, or any part thereof. This Paragraph _ _[e.g., g]_ _ shall survive the termination of this letter of intent.

Comment: The provisions of this early access form are seller-oriented and may be subject to some negotiation by the buyer.

3.42-1 Seller's representations and warranties

The definitive agreement will contain the following representations and warranties by Seller _ _[and others that may be included on further negotiations]_ _, the precise statement of which will be subject to the parties' mutual satisfaction:

a. All documents provided by Seller, including but not limited to rent rolls and financial statements, are true and correct;

b. Seller possesses all licenses, permits, and government approvals necessary for operation of the Property as an office building;

c. The Property is not in violation of any zoning, land-use, environmental, public health, or safety laws;

d. No litigation affecting the Property is pending or currently threatened;

e. Seller has good and marketable title to the Property, and Seller has the unrestricted power and authority to convey the Property to Buyer;

f. The HVAC, plumbing, electrical, mechanical, and other systems of the building will be in good order and operating condition as of the close of escrow;

g. Seller is not aware of any pending or threatened condemnation proceeding affecting the Property;

h. Seller has not discharged or permitted the storage on the Property of any hazardous materials, and Seller is not aware of any discharge or storage or hazardous materials on the Property by any other persons.

Comment: Other representations and warranties might be relevant in a particular transaction. The attorney should also consider which representations and warranties may be unconditional and which may be limited in some way, e.g., "to the best of seller's knowledge" or "to the best of seller's actual knowledge." If such a limitation is used, a definition of its meaning should be added. See §4.107. On seller's representations and warranties generally, see §§4.107-4.120.

NOTE: The bracketed clause in the first paragraph is intended to avoid claims by a party that the list of representations and warranties are exclusive. If the attorney wants to try to limit the representations and warranties to those listed in the letter of intent, this language should be deleted.

3.43-1 Establishing escrow and executing escrow instructions

If a definitive agreement is executed by the parties, escrow for this transaction will be established promptly thereafter at _ _[name]_ _ Title Insurance Company. Both parties will execute escrow instructions and other instruments necessary to close escrow consistent with the definitive agreement. Escrow will close no later than _ _[number]_ _ days after execution of the definitive agreement.

Comment: Closing costs may also be allocated in this clause. On allocation of closing costs generally, see §§15.42-15.46, 15.68-15.70. On escrows generally, see chap 15.

3.44-1 Payment of broker's commissions

If the purchase and sale transaction contemplated in this letter of intent is consummated, commissions will be paid as follows: _ _[Describe, e.g., which party will pay commission, amount of commission, to whom paid, when paid]_ _. Nothing in this letter of intent will be deemed to confer any benefit on any third party regarding any claim for commissions.

Comment: Even if the letter of intent is not binding on the parties, an agreement to pay a commission to the broker may be sufficient to satisfy the Statute of Frauds and give rise to a broker's right to commission, based on a third party beneficiary theory. The final sentence in this form is intended to avoid this problem. For discussion of broker's commissions, see §§2.91-2.123.

Comment: On the advisability of a confidentiality provision, see §§3.11, 3.18. This clause may be expanded to list specific financial or environmental reports, leases, agreements, or other information that a party wants to remain confidential.

3.46-1 Alternative: Nonbinding letter of intent

If the foregoing terms correctly state your understanding of the terms on which we will proceed with negotiations for preparation of a purchase and sale agreement, please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter. As noted above, this letter of intent is not intended to be contractually binding on either party. It will act merely as the basis on which to proceed with further negotiations. If the parties hereto have not entered into a definite purchase and sale agreement with respect to the property within _ _[e.g., 15 days]_ _ after the date of this letter, then upon the expiration of such _ _[e.g., 15-day]_ _ period any obligation contained in this letter to negotiate or do any other act shall terminate and be of no further force or effect, unless otherwise specifically provided to survive such termination.

3.46-2 Alternative: Binding letter of intent

If the foregoing summary of terms forms an acceptable basis on which to proceed with this transaction, please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter. As noted above, although we intend to negotiate and sign a more definitive purchase and sale agreement, this letter of intent will serve as a binding agreement if no further agreement is completed or executed.

Comment: In alternative form 3.46-1, it is recommended that the parties insert a deadline or time period for their negotiations to avoid an open-ended obligation to negotiate. See §3.30.

Alternative form 3.46-2 should be used with caution and only with letters of intent that the parties intend to be binding.

NOTE: If the client wishes to control the first draft of the document, the execution block of the letter of intent could be expanded to state that, on receipt, the sender will direct his or her attorney to begin drafting the proposed purchase and sale agreement.

§3.47 C. Additional Considerations

The letter of intent set forth in §§3.33-3.46 states the principal material terms of the assumed deal. Practitioners will want to consider other potential points that might be included, e.g., the deadline for completion of due diligence, the form of title insurance policy and any endorsements that may be required, inclusion of any particular easements or related rights that may be material to the deal, and representations or warranties of the buyer.

I. FORM OF AGREEMENT

§4.1 A. Introduction

Purchase and sale agreements for all types of real property are covered in detail in this chapter. The purchase and sale of residential properties have additional requirements, which are discussed in chap 6. When preparing to represent a client for a residential transaction, counsel must review both chapters.

§4.2 B. Forms and Appendixes

A purchase and sale agreement with both buyer- and seller-oriented alternative provisions is presented in §§4.166-4.182. The agreement is illustrative and should be adapted for the particular circumstances. The provisions of the form follow the same order as the discussion of the issues in this chapter.

The appendixes include the following:

- A table describing the transfers that trigger reappraisals (see App A);
- Two checklists for commercial property transactions:
- Buyer's checklist for acquisition of commercial property and due diligence (see App B), and
- Checklist of due diligence materials to be delivered by a seller to a buyer in a sale of a property with commercial leases (see App C);
- Examples of documents typically delivered at closing of a commercial real estate transaction:
- Board of directors resolution authorizing purchase for a corporation (see App D),
- Limited liability company certificate authorizing the purchase (see App E), and
- Statement of partnership authority for a general partnership (see App F);
- Documents conveying title to various assets:
- Grant deed (see App G),
- Bill of sale for personal property (see App H),
- Assignment of leases (see App I), and
- Assignment of intangible property (see App J);
- Documents for use in transactions involving commercial leases:
- Estoppel certificate from tenants (see App K), and
- Letter to tenants after closing directing them to pay rent to the new buyer (see App L);
- Waiver to be executed by the nonowner spouse when his or her wife or husband sells property owned separately (see App M);
- Alternative form of disclosure of natural hazard conditions on the property to be sold—a seller of commercial property may prefer to use this form instead of the form used for residential property sales (see App N); and
- Tenancy in common agreement (see App O).

Examples of other types of documents and provisions used in connection with real property sales are in other chapters of this book; see the Table of Forms.

Source: Real Property/California Real Property Sales Transactions/4 The Purchase and Sale Agreement/§4.3 C. Conditional Purchase Agreements

§4.3 C. Conditional Purchase Agreements

In a bilateral contract, the parties' promises must be mutual in obligation; thus, for the contract to bind either party, both must have assumed some legal obligations. If one party is free to perform or not, without even a good faith requirement, that party's promise is illusory and affords no consideration: it is a free and revocable option. Shortell v Evans-Ferguson Corp. (1929) 98 CA 650, 277 P 519.

The good faith implied in a contract, however, may be sufficient to overcome the claim of lack of consideration. In Mattei v Hopper (1958) 51 C2d 119, 330 P2d 625, a sale conditioned on obtaining leases "satisfactory" to the buyer was held to be binding because the buyer's satisfaction is not unfettered but must meet the legal standard of reasonableness or good faith, depending on the nature of the performance. Later decisions upheld contracts conditioned on the buyer's satisfaction with results of a test of a well (Lyon v Giannoni (1959) 168 CA2d 336, 335 P2d 690) and with a subdivision map as finally approved (Rodriguez v Barnett (1959) 52 C2d 154, 338 P2d 907).

In Peak-Las Positas Partners v Bollag (2009) 172 CA4th 101, 90 CR3d 775, a purchase agreement provided for escrow to close on approval of a lot line adjustment and no later than 2 years from the opening of escrow unless the buyer and seller mutually agreed to extend the agreement. Governmental requirements delayed the project and the parties further extended the escrow after an additional deposit by seller. At the expiration of this extension, the seller denied a further extension, pleading in part that he feared the project would never be approved. The buyer by this time had paid 98 percent of the purchase price and spent $5 million in project costs and was diligently trying to obtain a lot line adjustment. The court found that the seller had acted unreasonably and in bad faith in denying consent to the escrow extension and had breached the purchase contract.

If the condition can be measured by an objective standard, as in financial or structural considerations, the party's satisfaction must meet the "reasonable person" test. Mattei v Hopper, supra; Kadner v Shields (1971) 20 CA3d 251, 97 CR 742. If the party's satisfaction depends on matters of taste or judgment, however, the courts require that the party act in good faith. Kadner v Shields, supra. A contract does not fail for lack of consideration or mutuality of obligations because a buyer may approve or disapprove a condition in buyer's sole judgment or discretion. The buyer must, however, exercise such judgment and discretion within the constraints of the implied contractual duty of good faith and fair dealing. See Larwin-Southern California v JGB Inv. Co. (1979) 101 CA3d 626, 162 CR 52. For a general discussion of the covenant of good faith, see Drafting Business Contracts: Principles, Techniques & Forms §9.23 (Cal CEB 1994).

A condition, such as obtaining financing, may be held to include an implied covenant that the party it was intended to benefit will use due diligence in attempting to fulfill the condition. Abrams v Motter (1970) 3 CA3d 828, 83 CR 855; Fry v George Elkins Co. (1958) 162 CA2d 256, 327 P2d 905. It is the seller's burden to prove the buyer's lack of due diligence, but if the buyer admits lack of diligence, the burden shifts to the buyer to prove that the condition could not have been fulfilled in any event. Abrams v Motter, supra. In certain instances, the seller might want to retain the right to obtain performance of the condition if the buyer is unable to do so. Similarly, if the party who controls the occurrence of the condition is required by the agreement to take specific steps in attempting to achieve the condition, courts are likely to find sufficient consideration for mutuality. See White & Bollard, Inc. v Goodenow (Wash 1961) 361 P2d 571; Note, Contracts: Consideration: Effect of Clauses in Real Estate Contracts Conditioning Buyer's Promise, 47 Cal L Rev 753 (1959).

PRACTICE TIP: To avoid an argument regarding mutuality, if the agreement is contingent on the occurrence of a condition that is under the control of a party who is not obligated to actually achieve the condition, then the agreement should obligate the party to perform certain acts in meeting the condition, or should impose standards of reasonableness on the exercise of any approval rights. In any event, the agreement should state that the party is merely obligated to attempt to meet the condition and should negate the implication that the party is actually required to meet it. See 1 Friedman on Contracts and Conveyances of Real Property, chap 1 (7th ed 2006).

The general rule is that a party may waive a condition that is solely for that party's benefit and obtain performance of the agreement. Doryon v Salant (1977) 75 CA3d 706, 142 CR 378. Such a party may be deprived of the right to waive the condition in certain circumstances, e.g., automatic termination. Automatic termination takes place if the agreement provides that it is "void" or that it "ceases and terminates" on the failure of performance of a condition. Nikora v Mayer (2d Cir 1958) 257 F2d 246.

PRACTICE TIP: Parties who wish to reserve the right to waive conditions included for their benefit should provide that they may terminate or proceed at their discretion on the occurrence or failure of the condition.

Unless the agreement expressly permits it, one party cannot waive a condition that is for the benefit of both the buyer and the seller. An example is a condition requiring FHA approval for development, which would enhance the value of the property as security for the seller's purchase money deed of trust. Spangler v Castello (1956) 147 CA2d 49, 304 P2d 752. When the rights of a tenant with an option to purchase are to be eliminated, waiver of that condition by the buyer alone does not suffice, because the seller would be liable to the tenant. Britschgi v McCall (1953) 41 C2d 138, 257 P2d 977.

In some instances, the seller's actions may deprive the buyer of the election to waive a condition.

EXAMPLE: If the buyer adds to the purchase agreement a condition that it is subject to the buyer's ability to obtain financing, without indicating the source, the seller may be able to bind the buyer by agreeing to take back a purchase money deed of trust on the same terms. This procedure could be disadvantageous to the buyer because the seller may be more difficult as a creditor than a third party, such as an institution with established practices. To avoid this result, the buyer should make sure that the agreement gives the buyer the sole option on third party financing.

§4.4 D. Options

A number of California lawyers advocate options that enable buyers to tie up property while investigating it without being bound to buy it. One option permits the seller to retain the deposit as the price for the option if it is not exercised, thus avoiding problems of liquidated damages. Options are discussed in more detail in chap 8. See Patel v Liebermensch (2008) 45 C4th 344, 86 CR3d 366 (discussion of specific performance of real estate option contract). See §4.142 for requirements for liquidated damages provisions.

§4.5 E. Use of Printed Forms

Counsel should carefully review printed forms provided by brokers, title companies, escrow agents, and stationery stores before using them. The advantage of using these forms is that a printed form has a certain authority, some clients accept them readily, and the work needed to amend a form (and resulting cost to the client) may be less than that required to prepare an entire agreement. Many such forms, however, contain provisions that may be objectionable, such as a provision that title is to be taken by the buyer "subject to covenants, conditions, and restrictions of record" or "subject to any state of facts an accurate survey would reveal." If printed forms are used, they should be read carefully to ascertain the propriety and adequacy of their provisions for a particular transaction and their compatibility with the addendums so that the agreement as a whole is consistent and clear. Lawyers who are familiar with a printed form should not assume they know what it says; with laser printers a document can be produced that looks familiar but that has actually been modified. See §§1.119-1.120 on use of printed forms. On reconciling inconsistencies between printed provisions and addendums, see §2.62. For form provisions, see §§2.64-2.88.

TAX CONSIDERATIONS: Many printed forms do not properly consider tax issues, particularly California real property taxes and documentary transfer taxes. Mistakes or omissions in these areas can amount to more than the cost savings in using a preprinted or boilerplate form.

II. ESSENTIAL ELEMENTS OF AGREEMENT

§4.6 A. Requirements for Enforceability

The essential elements of an enforceable contract are these (CC §1550):

- The parties' capacity to contract;
- The parties' mutual consent;
- A lawful object; and
- Sufficient consideration.

Agreements for the sale of real property must meet the additional requirement that the agreement, or a memorandum of it, must be in writing and signed by the party to be bound. CC §1624(a)(3). The buyer's agreement "to pay an indebtedness secured by a mortgage or deed of trust upon the property" must also be in writing. CC §1624(a)(6). To obtain specific performance, the agreement must be sufficiently certain (CC §3390(5)), which requires designating the parties, the purchase price, the method of payment, and the description of the property (see 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §787 (5th ed 2008)).

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.7 B. Parties With Capacity to Contract

To create an enforceable contract, the parties must be capable of contracting. CC §1550. All persons are capable of contracting except minors, persons of unsound mind, and persons deprived by law of their civil rights. CC §1556. The word "person" includes a corporation as well as a natural person. CC §14. Under Corp C §§16204 and 16302, a partnership may also contract in the firm's name concerning property. On partnerships, see §§4.24-4.26. Limited liability companies also have all the powers of a natural person, including the power to make contracts, purchase and sell real property, and transfer or otherwise dispose of their property. Corp C §17003. On limited liability companies, see §4.27. On corporations, see §4.28.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.8 C. Mutual Consent

The consent of the parties to a contract must be free, mutual, and communicated by each to the other. CC §1565. Consent that is not free can be rescinded. CC §1566. See California Real Property Remedies and Damages, chap 1 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002) on rescission. Consent is not real or free if it is obtained through duress, menace, fraud, undue influence, or mistake, and if it would not have been given if that cause had not existed. CC §§1567-1568; see Real Property Remedies, chap 3, on remedies for fraud. Mutual assent is also lacking if the contract is so ambiguous that the parties' intentions cannot be ascertained. On uncertainty, see Real Property Remedies §4.19.

Mistake may, in rare instances, prevent a contract from coming into existence. For example, if the parties have a different understanding of the subject matter, and if neither is at fault or both are equally at fault, there is no contract. Barfield v Price (1871) 40 C 535. Usually, however, mistake does not prevent the formation of a contract but makes it voidable.

On reformation, see Real Property Remedies, chap 2.

Source: Real Property/California Real Property Sales Transactions/4 The Purchase and Sale Agreement/§4.9 D. Description of Property

§4.9 D. Description of Property

The description of the property in the agreement must be sufficiently certain to satisfy the Statute of Frauds (CC §1624(a)(3); CCP §1971) and to make the agreement specifically enforceable (CC §3390(5)). For certainty in descriptions generally, see §§4.31-4.34, 11.14-11.21. For certainty in partial releases of land from deeds of trust, see §§9.100-9.104. On uncertainty as a defense to an action for breach, see California Real Property Remedies and Damages §4.19 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002).

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.10 E. Lawful Object

The object of a contract must be lawful at the time the contract is made. CC §§1550(3), 1596. A contract's object is the performance that the party receiving the consideration agrees to provide. When a contract has but one object and that object is unlawful, the contract is void (CC §1598); but when a contract has several objects, it is void only to the extent that any particular object is unlawful (CC §1599). Unlawfulness is defined as that which is "(1) contrary to an express provision of law; (2) contrary to the policy of express law, though not expressly prohibited; or (3) otherwise contrary to good morals." CC §1667.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.11 F. Consideration

To support a claim in damages for breach or an assertion that the buyer is a bona fide purchaser, an agreement must be based on good (i.e., valuable) consideration. See Horton v Kyburz (1959) 53 C2d 59, 346 P2d 399. Any benefit conferred or detriment suffered (or agreed to be conferred or suffered) is good consideration if it is more than nominal. See CC §1605. If the agreement is to be specifically enforced, however, the consideration must also be adequate (i.e., it must be just and reasonable). CC §3391(2). On specific performance, see §4.143. In both situations, the value or adequacy of the consideration is fixed as of the time the agreement is executed. O'Connell v Lampe (1929) 206 C 282, 274 P 336; Henderson v Fisher (1965) 236 CA2d 468, 46 CR 173.

G. Writing

§4.12 1. General Rules

A contract for the sale of an interest in real property must be evidenced by a writing "subscribed" by the party to be charged. CC §1624(a)(3); CCP §1971. The subscription need not be a handwritten signature but may be typed, printed, or stamped, and it may be initials or any other form, as long as it is intended as the execution. Weiner v Mullaney (1943) 59 CA2d 620, 140 P2d 704.

NOTE: The Uniform Electronic Transactions Act (CC §§1633.1-1633.17) provides that an instrument or a document in electronic form—an electronic record ("a record created, generated, sent, communicated, received, or stored by electronic means") or electronic signature—satisfies the legal requirement of a writing or signature. See also the federal Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act (15 USC §§7001-7031) (Pub L 106-229, 114 Stat 464) regarding signatures for agreements made electronically.

If the writing is subscribed by an agent, written authority must be subscribed by the principal. CC §1624(a)(3). The agent's authority to sign need not be in writing when the act is purely clerical or ministerial, e.g., when the agent is directed by the principal to sign the document for the principal. Murphy v Munson (1949) 95 CA2d 306, 212 P2d 603.

A distinction must be made between the statutory requirement that the agreement be signed by the person to be charged and the effect of the parties' understanding that no agreement exists until both parties sign a formal agreement. Stromer v Browning (1966) 65 C2d 421, 55 CR 18; Apablasa v Merritt & Co. (1959) 176 CA2d 719, 1 CR 500. When the parties intend the latter to occur, both parties must sign and the agreement must take the form intended by the parties before an enforceable contract exists. See also Fugate v Cook (1965) 236 CA2d 700, 46 CR 291 (husband's signature to agreement ineffective if conditioned on wife's signature). But see Angell v Rowlands (1978) 85 CA3d 536, 149 CR 574 (husband bound on contract of sale not signed by wife without a showing that contract was not intended to be complete until signed by all parties named in it).

Letters of intent present special problems of enforceability as written agreements. See chap 3.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.13 2. Statute of Frauds

To satisfy the Statute of Frauds, the writing need not be a formal agreement but may be in the form of a letter, memorandum, or telegram. It must contain the essential elements of a contract, i.e., the names of the buyer and the seller and their identification (on parties to the contract generally, see §§4.7, 4.14-4.28), a description of the property (see §§4.31-4.34, chap 10), the price, and the time and manner of payment (see §§4.35-4.44). Corona Unified Sch. Dist. v Vejar (1958) 165 CA2d 561, 332 P2d 294. But see House of Prayer v Evangelical Assoc. for India (2003) 113 CA4th 48, 7 CR3d 24 (time for performance is not essential term in every contract, and if no time is given, court may imply reasonable time for performance). It is best to reduce the agreement to a formal document to avoid ambiguities and inadequacies.

Despite the somewhat contrary language of CC §1624, courts have uniformly held that noncompliance with the Statute of Frauds renders a contract unenforceable rather than void. An oral contract subject to the statute is effective until its invalidity is urged as a defense to an attempt to enforce it. 1 Witkin, Summary of California Law, Contracts §344 (10th ed 2005). Thus, the statute's use is primarily defensive. For example, it cannot be invoked by a buyer to recover payments made under an oral contract to sell land if the seller is ready and able to perform. Walbridge v Richards (1931) 212 C 408, 298 P 971; Thompson v Schurman (1944) 65 CA2d 432, 437, 150 P2d 509. Moreover, part performance of an oral contract may be sufficient to overcome even defensive use of the Statute of Frauds. CCP §1972. In some cases, a party may be estopped from asserting the Statute of Frauds as a defense.

EXAMPLE: In Sutton v Warner (1993) 12 CA4th 415, 15 CR2d 632, tenants in possession entered into an oral lease with an option to buy. They made a substantial downpayment, increased their monthly rent to the precise amount of the monthly mortgage payment, semiannually reimbursed the owners for property taxes, and made many improvements to the property. When the property appreciated in value, the owners tried to get a higher sales price, but the court enforced the tenants' version of the oral contract, holding that their continued possession of the property and other actions were sufficiently related to the oral option contract to constitute part performance and defeat the bar of the Statute of Frauds.

Some real property contracts do not require a writing, including the following (1 Witkin, Summary, Contracts §385):

- An agreement to share the profits of a sale of real property;
- A partnership agreement to deal in real property;
- A license to use real property;
- An agreement settling a disputed boundary;
- A fully executed partition agreement; and
- A sale of growing crops or mining rights.

III. PARTIES

§4.14 A. Persons Without Capacity to Contract

As noted in §4.7, an essential element of a contract is that the parties have the legal capacity to contract. The major classifications of persons without capacity to contract are minors, persons of unsound mind, persons with a legal disability, and certain prisoners.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.15 1. Minors

An individual under age 18 is a minor (Fam C §6500) and cannot make a contract relating to real property or to any interest in real property (Fam C §6701(b)). Such contracts are absolutely void and thus need not be disaffirmed. Sparks v Sparks (1950) 101 CA2d 129, 225 P2d 238. Not only are such contracts void from their inception, but it has been held that the minor need not even return the consideration. Sparks v Sparks, supra. (Apparently, the only protection even a bona fide purchaser has against any conveyance by a minor is a claim against the title insurance policy or a claim to the property by adverse possession if the buyer, or the buyer's predecessor in interest, has held the property for at least 5 years after the minor reached majority.)

A minor can hold title to real property because the law presumes acceptance of a beneficial grant. People v Fujita (1932) 215 C 166, 8 P2d 1011; Estate of Yano (1922) 188 C 645, 206 P 995. A transfer of title to real property held by a minor requires the appointment of a guardian. See §4.17. An emancipated minor, however, does have the power to buy, sell, lease, encumber, exchange, or transfer an interest in real property. Fam C §7050(e)(3). An emancipated minor is one who has entered into a valid marriage, whether or not such marriage was terminated by dissolution, who is on active duty with the United States Armed Forces, or who has received a declaration of emancipation under Fam C §7122. Fam C §7002.

§4.16 2. Persons of Unsound Mind

Persons of unsound mind are classified in two categories: those entirely without understanding (CC §38) and those of unsound mind but not entirely without understanding (CC §39). The former have no power to make a contract, and any contracts they make are void. Estate of McConkey (1939) 33 CA2d 554, 92 P2d 456. Contracts of persons defined in CC §39, made before judicial determination of their incapacity, are subject to rescission. CC §§39, 1689(b)(7). If incompetence is judicially determined, no conveyance or other contract is valid unless it is made after the incompetent is restored to capacity. CC §40; Carroll v Carroll (1940) 16 C2d 761, 108 P2d 420.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.17 3. Guardianship or Conservatorship for Persons Under Legal Disability

Although minors and incompetents lack the capacity to convey property, a guardian or conservator who is properly authorized may do so in their name. Prob C §2420(b); Estate of Kay (1947) 30 C2d 215, 181 P2d 1. The California guardian and conservatorship law is in Prob C §§1400-3803. See also California Conservatorship Practice §§17.28-17.83 (Cal CEB 2005) for discussion of conservatorship procedures regarding real property.

§4.18 B. Prisoners

Civil rights of persons incarcerated in a state prison may be subject to suspension during their imprisonment but are not forfeited. Pen C §2600. A prisoner has the right to own, sell, or convey real property, but the Department of Corrections may restrict or prohibit sales or conveyances that are made for business purposes. Pen C §2601(a). If one party to an agreement is in a state prison, the other party should verify that the prisoner has a right to enter into the agreement.

§4.19 C. Necessary Parties as Sellers

Before preparing a purchase and sale agreement, counsel must know who has to sign it. To ascertain this, the lawyer for the seller must know who has an interest in the property. (It is preferable to do this preliminary title work before the agreement is signed, to be sure that all persons who own an interest in the property are made parties to the agreement.) See §1.66. A party who signs an agreement to sell an interest greater than that actually owned is liable for both specific performance for the interest that he or she has and damages to the buyer if title to the interest sold cannot be delivered. Armstrong v Sacramento Valley Realty Co. (1921) 52 CA 110, 115, 198 P 217. Seller's counsel should review title to ensure that title can be delivered free of all encumbrances other than any the buyer will take subject to under the agreement.

To learn who holds title and to make sure that the seller can deliver the agreed title, counsel must consider issues such as these:

- If the seller was married when the property was acquired or if a marriage occurred later, the spouse should also sign the agreement (see Fam C §1102(a)) or execute and record a power of attorney in favor of the other spouse.
- If the selling spouse claims that the property is separate property, the other spouse should execute a quitclaim deed or a waiver like the one in App M.
- If the property has been declared a homestead, all owners of homestead rights should join in the agreement. The spouse of an owner declaring a homestead on the owner's own separate property for their joint benefit has an interest in the property. CCP §§704.910-704.950. After a property settlement judgment, a spouse may not claim a homestead in the other spouse's property. Wiltrakis v Wiltrakis (1966) 244 CA2d 257, 53 CR 97.
- If property is held in joint tenancy and a joint tenant dies, the vesting of title in the survivor requires certain formalities, including recording an Affidavit of Death of Joint Tenant. See 1 California Decedent Estate Practice §§4.18-4.20 (Cal CEB 1986).
- If record title is held by someone who is deceased, the administrator or executor must usually obtain court approval of any conveyance. See 1 Decedent Estate Prac §§13.14-13.60.
- If the property is held in cotenancy by several people, all must execute the agreement and deed or execute powers of attorney in favor of the person executing those documents. All tenancy-in-common agreements should also be reviewed to confirm authority to sell the property.
- If the property is held in the name of a limited liability company, a certified copy of the articles of organization should have been recorded. See §4.27.
- If the property is held in the name of a general partnership, a Statement of Partnership Authority must have been filed with the Secretary of State and a certified copy should have been recorded. See §4.24. If it was held in a limited partnership, a Certificate of Limited Partnership (Form LP-1) or an Application for Registration, Foreign Limited Partnership (Form LP-5), showing the names of the current general partners, must have been filed with the Secretary of State. See §4.25.
- If the property is held in the name of a corporation, officers must be available who can sign the deed on behalf of the corporation. Some corporate formalities, e.g., a directors' vote or a shareholders' vote, may have to be observed. See §4.28.
- If the property is held in the name of a trust, the trust document may have to be reviewed for any restrictions on transfers.

D. Methods of Holding Title

§4.20 1. Entities

Most commercial real property is held by entities rather than by natural persons. Counsel for a buyer should consult with the client on the appropriate entity to hold title. If an existing business is to purchase the property, it is often appropriate for the existing entity to acquire the property (or a wholly owned subsidiary, if the existing entity is a corporation). If the property is to be held for investment, it is often appropriate to form a new entity.

When a new entity is to be formed and natural persons are the beneficial owners, many practitioners recommend that a limited liability company (LLC) be formed to hold title. An LLC combines the corporate characteristics of limited liability with the income tax characteristics of a partnership. In contrast to a limited partnership, there is no need to form and capitalize an entity to be the general partner. The unlimited liability of the partners of a general partnership is avoided, as is the double taxation inherent in a corporation taxed under Subchapter C of the Internal Revenue Code. The fee for an LLC doing business in California, however, is higher than for other entities. See Rev & T C §§17941-17943. A corporation taxed under Subchapter S of the Internal Revenue Code has limited liability and avoids double taxation, but will have greater maintenance expenses than does an LLC and will be subject to a 1.5-percent California income tax on its net income. Rev & T C §23802(b)(1). If the buyer intends to obtain conduit loan financing, the lender will frequently require that the borrowing entity be a single-purpose, bankruptcy-remote entity. On conduit loan requirements, see California Real Estate Finance Practice: Strategies and Forms §§1.90-1.107 (Cal CEB 2000).

For discussions of the choice of entity to hold real property, see generally Selecting & Forming Business Entities (2d ed Cal CEB 2007).

Counsel for the seller also needs to be aware of the type of entity holding title to the property and the title company's requirements for delivery of state-certified formation documents or other applicable authority documents such as tenancy-in-common agreements, operating agreements (for limited liability companies), trust agreements (for trusts), or bylaws (for corporations). Additionally, a nonindividual seller is generally required to provide a good standing certificate.

PRACTICE TIP: Although seller's counsel is advised to check the standing of the selling entity early in the sale process, many buyers require a state-certified good standing certificate dated no earlier than 5 business days before closing. Always check with the office of the Secretary of State to determine how quickly good standing certificates are being issued, taking into account peak sale periods such as the end of the year.

§4.21 2. Community Property; Cotenancies; Separate Property

Rather than taking title in an entity (see §4.20), some clients wish to take title with their spouse (as community property), or with any other person or persons as tenants in common or joint tenants. See CC §682. The stated reason is usually simplicity and the desire to avoid the expense of forming a separate entity to hold title.

If buyers wish to take title as joint tenants or tenants in common, many practitioners recommend that the cotenants enter into an agreement spelling out their respective obligations to one another, specifying the method for managing the property, making decisions about it, and obligating themselves to contribute capital as needed. Without such an agreement, cotenants have limited obligations to contribute to the cotenancy other than as needed to preserve the property. See Milian v DeLeon (1986) 181 CA3d 1185, 1195, 226 CR 831 (in partition of joint tenancy, joint tenant who made larger contribution to downpayment not entitled to reimbursement in absence of agreement for reimbursement). Thus, if cotenants wish to require a periodic investment in the property or capital contributions for improvements, a written agreement must so state. It is also customary to waive or modify the right of partition in such agreements. For a form tenancy-in-common agreement, see App O. On cotenancies, see §§4.22-4.23. On severing joint tenancies, see Bernhardt, Changing Course: Secretly Severing Joint Tenancies, 19 CEB Real Prop L Rep 125 (May 1996).

A spouse's separate property is property acquired before marriage; property acquired by gift, bequest, devise, or descent; or property acquired with the profits or proceeds of such property. Fam C §770. The law presumes that property (other than separate property) acquired during marriage is community property (Fam C §§760, 2580-2581), regardless of whether ownership is characterized as joint tenancy or a tenancy in common. See Marriage of Haines (1995) 33 CA4th 277, 39 CR2d 673. The presumption can be overcome by a clear statement in the deed or other document that the property is separate property and not community property. Fam C §2581(a); Marriage of Haines, supra. Thus, when a husband or wife, or both, purchase property, the purchase agreement and the deed should specifically state whether the property is separate property or community property, regardless of how title is to be held. Likewise, a buyer of property from a married person or a married couple will want written evidence from both spouses as to the nature of the property, not merely the form of title by which the property is held.

After June 30, 2001, a husband and wife may hold title to property as "community property with right of survivorship." Thus, if the husband and wife intend that the deceased spouse's 50-percent interest in community property will automatically pass to the surviving spouse, title should expressly state the right of survivorship. CC §682.1(a); Fam C §750.

E. Issues to Consider in Taking Title

1. Cotenancy

§4.22 a. Distinguishing Tenants in Common From Joint Tenants

There are two differences between a tenancy in common and a joint tenancy: First, tenants in common may have unequal undivided interests, but joint tenants' interests must be equal. CC §§683, 685. Second, on the death of a joint tenant, the surviving joint tenants take the entire interest, while the interest of a tenant in common forms part of his or her probate estate. See 12 Witkin, Summary of California Law, Real Property §§33-34 (10th ed 2005). Because of survivorship rights, a joint tenant's interest is not subject to testamentary disposition or, after death, to his or her debts. But see Rupp v Kahn (1966) 246 CA2d 188, 55 CR 108 (survivor's entire interest, resulting from conveyance by insolvent person without consideration, is subject to decedent's debts). A corporation may own land as a tenant in common. Under common law, a corporation cannot be a joint tenant with an individual or another corporation. In American Bible Soc'y v Mortgage Guar. Co. (1932) 217 C 9, 17 P2d 105, the court refused to decide whether common law still applied and held that the joint tenancy created a trust in favor of the charitable corporation named as a joint tenant in the gift deed.

TAX CONSIDERATIONS: A termination of joint tenancy results in a change of ownership for property tax purposes unless the proportionate interest of the joint tenants does not change as a result of the termination. 18 Cal Code Regs §462.040(b)(4). For a table listing events that trigger reappraisal, see App A.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.23 b. Partition of Cotenancy

Of particular importance in cotenancies is an agreement that the entire property will be used to the mutual advantage of all and that none of the cotenants will partition the property (thus destroying the overall development or investment plan) without the others' consent. Although a cotenant's right to partition is absolute rather than discretionary with the courts, the right may be modified or waived in advance either expressly or by implication. Penasquitos, Inc. v Holladay (1972) 27 CA3d 356, 103 CR 717; Thomas v Witte (1963) 214 CA2d 322, 29 CR 412; Asels v Asels (1919) 43 CA 574, 185 P 419.

For further discussion of cotenancies, see Gutierrez, Drafting and Reviewing Residential Cotenancy Ownership Agreements, Part 1, 20 CEB Real Prop L Rep 153 (July 1997). For a form agreement among tenants in common, see App O. (This form provides in paragraph 17 that each cotenant retains the right to unilaterally seek to partition the property, but a cotenant must offer to sell his or her interest to the other cotenants before exercising that right.)

§4.24 2. General Partnerships

Under the Uniform Partnership Act of 1994 (UPA) (Corp C §§16100-16962), which governs all general partnerships, a general partnership is viewed as a legal entity. Consequently, general partners are not co-owners of partnership property and have no transferable interest in such property. Corp C §16501. The partners' transferable interest is limited to their share of profits and losses and the right to receive distributions. See Advising California Partnerships §§14.17, 14.20 (3d ed Cal CEB 1999).

Any partner of a general partnership, or a general partner of a limited partnership, can bind the partnership or convey partnership property. Corp C §§16301-16302. Under UPA, the partnership is bound by acts performed in the ordinary course of partnership business unless the partner had no authority to act and the person with whom the partner was dealing knew or had notice that the partner was not authorized to act. Corp C §16302(b). If an act is performed that is not apparently in the ordinary course of the partnership business, it binds the partnership only if the partner was authorized to act. Corp C §16301(2).

Acquisition of partnership property is governed by Corp C §16204. The partnership's right to contract in the partnership's name concerning property is authorized by Corp C §16302. The usual form of providing notice of authority to act on the partnership's behalf is the Statement of Partnership Authority. Corp C §16303. The mandatory contents of the statement are in §16303. The statement may also specify the authority or limits on the general authority of some or all partners to enter into other transactions on the partnership's behalf in any other matter. Even if the filed statement does not contain all the mandatory information, it nevertheless operates with respect to a third person as if properly completed, as long as it states the partnership name and is executed appropriately. Corp C §16303(c). For a form Statement of Partnership Authority, see App F.

A grant of supplemental authority to transfer real property held in the name of the partnership and contained in a certified copy of a statement that has been filed and duly recorded is conclusive in favor of a person who gives value without contrary knowledge. Corp C §16303(d)(2). A person is considered to know of limitations on authority to transfer partnership real property if a certified copy of the statement containing the limitation is duly recorded. Corp C §16303(e). Authority for transfers of partnership real property not held in the partnership's name is governed by Corp C §§16301-16302.

On a title company's requirements for confirmation of the partners' authority to act, see California Title Insurance Practice §2.30 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997).

§4.25 3. Limited Partnerships

Currently, California limited partnerships may be governed by different statutory frameworks, depending on when they were formed and what elections are made:

- Limited partnerships formed on or after July 1, 1984, but before January 1, 2008, are governed by the California Revised Limited Partnership Act (Revised Act) (Corp C §§15611-15724) (repealed operative Jan. 1, 2010).
- Limited partnerships formed before July 1, 1984, are governed by the California Uniform Limited Partnership Act (ULPA) (Corp C §§15501-15533), unless the partnership elects to be governed by the Revised Act. Corp C §15712(b)(1).
- Limited partnerships formed after January 1, 2008, are governed by the Uniform Limited Partnership Act of 2008 (2008 ULPA) (Corp C §§15900-15912.07); limited partnerships in existence before that date may elect to be governed by its provisions. Corp C §15912.06(a)(2).

NOTE: As of January 1, 2010, all California limited partnerships will be subject to the 2008 ULPA regardless of formation date.

Under the Revised Act, a limited partnership came into existence only when a Certificate of Limited Partnership (Form LP-1) was filed with the Secretary of State. See Corp C §15621. This process is essentially the same for limited partnerships formed after January 1, 2008; an LP-1 is still filed, but the form has changed. See Corp C §15902.01. A copy of the current version of the LP-1 may be obtained from the website of the California Secretary of State. See the Directory for details.

Recordation of the LP-1 creates a conclusive presumption in favor of any bona fide purchaser or encumbrancer of the partnership real property that the persons named as general partners in the certificate are the general partners of the partnership named and that they are all of the general partners of the limited partnership. Corp C §15621(d) (Corp C §15902.01(e), operative Jan. 1, 2008, for new or electing limited partnerships).

If an LP-1 is not filed, but a "Limited Partnership Agreement" is signed, the partners who signed as limited partners would probably be treated as joint venturers or general partners subject to personal liability unless they renounced their interest in the profits of the partnership and took advantage of the "escape clause" in Corp C §15633 (Corp C §15903.6, operative Jan. 1, 2008, for new or electing limited partnerships). See 9 Witkin, Summary of California Law, Partnership §§62, 69 (10th ed 2005).

For forms useful in drafting a limited partnership, see Advising California Partnerships, chap 19 (3d ed Cal CEB 1999).

§4.26 4. Limited Liability Partnerships

Limited liability partnerships may be created under Corp C §§16951-16962 and may hold title to real property. Any domestic partnership, except a limited partnership, may convert to a limited liability partnership on a vote of the partners and by registering as such with the Secretary of State. On conversion to a registered limited liability partnership, real property of the former partnership is vested in the limited liability partnership. Corp C §16955. On converting a partnership to a limited liability partnership, see Advising California Partnerships §§3.12, 6.19, 12.27 (3d ed Cal CEB 1999).

§4.27 5. Limited Liability Companies

The Beverly-Killea Limited Liability Company Act (Corp C §§17000-17654) created a new entity that has both corporate and partnership characteristics. A limited liability company (LLC) is taxed as a partnership for income tax purposes, but, like a corporation, it has limited liability. An LLC may consist of one or more members and comes into existence when articles of organization are filed with the California Secretary of State. Corp C §17050. The LLC's operation is governed by its operating agreement. The operating agreement need not be in writing. Certain provisions, however, such as indemnification of members, must be in writing to be effective; if the LLC is to be run by one or more managers and not by all its members, the articles of organization must so provide. Corp C §17151(b)-(c).

A certified copy of the articles of organization may be recorded. Recordation of the articles creates a conclusive presumption that the statements they contain are true and correct and can be relied on by bona fide purchasers and encumbrancers for value of the LLC's real property located in the county where the certified copy was recorded. Corp C §17052(f). On limited liability companies generally, see Forming and Operating California Limited Liability Companies (2d ed Cal CEB 2007). On converting to a limited liability company, see Limited Liab, chap 11.

For a form of a limited liability company certificate authorizing execution of documents required for the purchase of real property, see App E.

§4.28 6. Corporations

If one party is a corporation, the other party must be assured that the corporation properly authorized the transaction. Corporations Code §313 provides that any conveyance signed by the chairman of the board, the president or any vice president, and the secretary, assistant secretary, chief financial officer, or any assistant treasurer of a California corporation, is not invalid for lack of authority, as long as the buyer did not have actual knowledge of the lack of authority.

NOTE: In Snukal v Flightways Mfg., Inc. (2000) 23 C4th 754, 759, 98 CR2d 1, the California Supreme Court concluded that under Corp C §313 "a contract is binding upon a corporation when an individual who in fact occupies the office of president, chief financial officer, and secretary of a corporation, executes a contract on behalf of the corporation, even when the contract expressly identifies the individual solely as its president."

Another way to establish that a sale of real property was authorized is for the corporate secretary to certify that the transaction was approved by the board of directors. The certification should state (Corp C §1002):

- That the property transferred is less than substantially all the corporation's assets;
- That the transfer is in the corporation's usual or regular course of business; or
- If the transfer is of substantially all the corporation's assets and is not in the corporation's usual and regular course of business, that the transaction has been approved by a majority of the outstanding shares as required by the Corporations Code.

For a form of corporate resolution authorizing execution of documents required for the purchase of real property, see App D.

A corporation comes into existence when its articles are filed with the Secretary of State. An inquiry to that office will ascertain whether a corporate party has filed its articles and is in good standing. Under Corp C §207(a), a corporate seal is no longer required to show corporate authority; thus, documents no longer need a corporate seal.

Agents of corporations entering into agreements that are made "subject to board of directors' approval" have a duty to act in good faith in seeking board approval, and the board must consider the proposal in good faith. Jacobs v Freeman (1980) 104 CA3d 177, 163 CR 680.

On a title company's requirements for confirming the corporation's authority to act, see California Title Insurance Practice, chap 2 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997).

IV. INTRODUCTORY PROVISIONS OF AGREEMENT

§4.29 A. Preamble and Recitals

The preamble to the agreement should include the title of the agreement, its effective date, and the names of the seller and buyer. Often, each of these items is a defined term. It is customary to describe the type of entity for each party, such as a corporation or a limited liability company. If one party is an individual, it is customary to recite whether the individual is dealing in separate or community property. See preamble in form 4.167-1.

Many practitioners include factual recitals in the agreement. By giving the factual background to the transaction, recitals can aid in interpreting the agreement in a default. Recitals can be particularly helpful if the buyer intends to change the use of the property subject to obtaining permits or approvals, or if the seller is selling the property contingent on other transactions or approvals. See recitals in form 4.168-1.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.30 B. Agreement to Buy and Sell

Two essential elements of a contract are the mutual consent of the parties and a sufficient consideration. It is thus customary to state the mutual agreement of the parties at the beginning of the agreement. See form 4.169-1. Agreements also often recite the receipt of consideration, but the recital would not be sufficient if, in fact, no consideration was given. On consideration, see §4.11.

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Description of Property

§4.31 1. Legal Description of Real Property

The legal description of the real property may be incorporated by reference, which avoids having a lengthy legal description in the body of the agreement.

PRACTICE TIP: Making the description an exhibit allows it to be prepared separately or photocopied from the seller's deed or a title insurance policy or preliminary report. This procedure saves time and reduces the chance of error in retyping the description. It is customary to include the assessor's parcel number.

If the property is not described by reference to a recorded subdivision map, the buyer should inquire with the city or county in which the property is located about its compliance with the Subdivision Map Act (Govt C §§66410-66499.37). Virtually every property division, even for leasing or financing, is regulated by that Act. See §4.92. On property descriptions, see chap 11.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.32 2. Improvements and Appurtenances

The property description should describe the improvements being conveyed, including any street address, in order to avoid errors in description. It is customary to recite all other types of improvements on the property, although conveyance of the land includes conveyance of all improvements that are "affixed" to the land or are "fixtures" (CC §658; see Southern Pac. Co. v County of Riverside (1939) 35 CA2d 380, 95 P2d 688), unless the improvements have been severed.

It is also customary to describe all appurtenances to the land in order to avoid error. For example, counsel should ascertain whether the mineral rights are being conveyed with the property. Any appurtenant easements should be identified by legal description to ensure that they will be specifically conveyed by the grant deed and will be covered by the title insurance policy as insured parcels. On description of land, improvements, and appurtenances, see the recitals in form 4.168-1 and sections 1.2.1-1.2.3 of form 4.169-2.

§4.33 3. Personal Property

Personal property that has not become a fixture does not pass to the buyer with the transfer of title to real property. The parties, however, may want to include personal property as part of the sale, and the agreement should specify which items of personal property are included. See section 1.2.4 of form 4.169-2.

PRACTICE TIP: If only a few items will be transferred, they can be listed in the agreement itself; otherwise, an inventory should be prepared and attached to the agreement as an exhibit.

When personal property is transferred, the buyer should be concerned about any liens on the personal property. The buyer achieves reasonable protection by obtaining from the seller a covenant of good title and a warranty that the property is free of encumbrances; the remedy is a claim against the seller for breach. A search of the Uniform Commercial Code Financing Statements filed with the Secretary of State (see Com C §§9302, 9401) will disclose any encumbrances of record, which the seller is then required to clear so that the warranty will be true at the closing.

PRACTICE TIP: The UCC search should be conducted as part of buyer's due diligence review, and should be updated as near to closing as possible.

If no major items of personal property are transferred and the buyer is confident that there are no encumbrances, the use of a warranty without a search may suffice. For a form bill of sale with warranties, see App H. For a discussion of security interests in personal property, see Secured Transactions in California Commercial Law Practice, chap 2 (2d ed Cal CEB 2001).

When substantial personal property is used in connection with normal business operations (as in a hotel), it is common to provide that the seller's warranty on that property is subject to dispositions, replacements, and acquisitions in the normal course of business.

PRACTICE TIP: If the seller is to take back a note secured by the real property and the personal property (i.e., "mixed collateral"), the seller's attorney should carefully consider the effects of the one-form-of-action rule (CCP §726) and the antideficiency rule (CCP §580b) and advise the seller on those rules. See California Mortgages, Deeds of Trust, and Foreclosure Litigation, chap 9 (4th ed Cal CEB 2009).

§4.34 4. Intangible Property

The buyer should also identify whether other items, in addition to the real property (including improvements) and personal property (see §§4.32-4.33), should be included in the description of the property to be conveyed under the agreement, such as leasehold rights, contract rights, plans and specifications, permits, and licenses. If the building is new or if improvements were recently added to the property, warranties may exist that could be assignable to the buyer. Any rights may have considerable value, and buyers usually want a specific assignment of them. Various types of commercial property will also have intellectual property associated with the property, such as trademarks, tradenames, service marks, and telephone numbers. These should also be included in the description. See section 1.2.4 of form 4.169-2. For a form assignment of intangibles, see App J.

V. PURCHASE PRICE AND DEPOSIT

A. Price

§4.35 1. Type of Consideration

The agreement should clearly and completely define the consideration to be delivered by each party and the method of payment, including amounts paid outside of escrow, amounts paid through escrow, and the terms of any notes, to the extent those terms are known. See form 4.170-1—4.170-5.

Under Ins C §12413.1, all title companies and escrow companies controlled by title companies must have good funds (i.e., available for withdrawal) in their possession before closing. Wire transfers are the only method of providing immediate credit and are thus widely used. Cashier's, certified, or teller's checks are not available for disbursement until the business day following the business day of deposit. 12 CFR §229.10.

When the price is by unit, e.g., per acre, it is essential that the total number of units be verified. Because a surveyor cannot certify to the precise number of acres or other units, the degree of certainty should be specified, e.g., to the nearest 1/1000 of an acre. On the need for a survey and matters to consider in determining gross or net area, see §§4.58-4.59, 11.16.

The buyer may wish to pay only for usable land. If the purchase price is stated at a rate per acre of "usable land" or rate per "net acre," misunderstandings are likely to arise unless these terms are defined.

PRACTICE TIP: If the buyer cannot establish how much of the land can be used and its value to him or her, the agreement should include an explicit definition of what constitutes "usable land" or "net acres," by description, by contour or contour changes, or by excluding portions of the property such as those that are or may be dedicated for streets.

A frequently used alternative is to compute the purchase price based on the development density eventually approved for the property by applicable governmental agencies.

EXAMPLE: If the property is to be developed with apartments, the purchase price might be based on the number of units per acre permitted for development. The seller may establish a minimum price and require the buyer to apply for governmental approvals permitting development with a specified number of units per acre.

§4.36 2. Allocation of Purchase Price

For income tax purposes, the buyer and seller must allocate the purchase price to the various types of assets being transferred, and may wish to document that allocation in the sales agreement. The asset types typically found in a real property transaction are land, real property improvements, tangible personal property, and (occasionally) intangible personal property. The differentiation among asset types occurs because land is not depreciable for income tax purposes and the cost recovery methods differ among real property and various types of personal property. The allocation could affect the seller's total tax liability, particularly if the improvements have been fully depreciated and the seller's cost basis for the land is a significant fraction of the purchase price. The buyer may have a conflicting interest, wishing to allocate more of the purchase price to depreciable improvements and personal property and less to land than the seller would prefer. The buyer's allocation may affect the amount of its taxable gain on a subsequent disposition of the property. The buyer will also need to allocate the purchase price among land, real property improvements, and personal property for California property tax purposes.

In ascertaining the income tax rules for allocation of a purchase price among several assets being sold, the parties must first determine whether the assets have been used by the seller or will be used by the buyer in the conduct of a trade or business. If so, the general provision regarding sales of capital assets under IRC §1221 does not apply and the parties must follow the detailed allocation rules set out in IRC §1060. There is no definition in the Internal Revenue Code or its regulations of what activities constitute a trade or business for these purposes. Some cases have held that ownership of a single rental property constitutes a trade or business. See generally Rothman, Capital Assets, 561 Tax Mgmt Portfolio, p A-66 (2001).

If the property is used in a trade or business, the consideration must be allocated first to cash and then to other assets in the order specified in §1060. The consideration allocated to an asset is limited to its fair market value. Any portion of the purchase price in excess of the fair market value of tangible and intangible assets must be allocated to good will (which would be unusual in a real estate transaction). If the parties agree in writing on an allocation of the purchase price, the allocation is generally binding on both the buyer and seller. IRC §1060(a)(2). If the parties do not allocate the purchase price in a written agreement, they still must report the allocation to the Internal Revenue Service on IRS Form 8594 for acquisitions after March 15, 2001. Treas Reg §1.1060-1(e)(1)(ii). See Rothman, p A-103. California's income tax law conforms to the federal law regarding allocation of the purchase price for a trade or business.

If the property is held for the production of income but is not used in a trade or business, as is the case for many parcels of real property, the parties must allocate the purchase price so that the seller may calculate gain or loss and the buyer may calculate the depreciable basis for real property improvements and personal property. In general, the allocation must be in proportion to the fair market value of each asset. See Maule, Taxation of Real Estate Transactions—An Overview, 590 Tax Mgmt Portfolio, p A-138 (2000).

In the authors' experience, few California real property sale agreements have provided for allocation of the purchase price, probably because the interests of the buyer and seller conflicted and the parties could not agree on an allocation. That practice may change for real property used in a trade or business, given the new requirement to file IRS Form 8594. For a form provision allocating the purchase price, see form 4.170-6. For an allocation of purchase price form, see §4.182.

§4.37 B. Deposit

The purpose of the deposit is to demonstrate the buyer's good faith and to provide a fund from which the seller's damages may be recovered. (The latter may be of little immediate help to the seller, however, because escrow holders are generally unwilling to release funds without authorization from the parties after the alleged breach.) The nature and amount of the deposit is for the parties to decide, subject to the restrictions on liquidated damages (discussed in §4.142). Usually, the amount of the liquidated damages is equal to the deposit. The deposit should at least cover all escrow charges and generally be large enough to cause a buyer who may later contemplate backing out considerable discomfort at the prospect of having funds tied up for a long time.

Deposits usually consist of cash, but they may consist of documents readily convertible to cash, such as the assignment of a savings account or a letter of credit with instructions to the escrow holder to draw against it in specified circumstances. A letter of credit often presents problems because it typically expires within a specific period (usually 1 year or less). To ensure that the funds are available if a dispute occurs, the escrow holder must be authorized to draw on the letter of credit before it expires. See section 2.2.4 of form 4.170-2.

Deposit checks should be made payable to the escrow holder, who will hold the funds in trust. It is rarely advisable to make a deposit check payable to the seller, because the seller may cash it before accepting the offer or the broker may deliver it to the seller prematurely. Also, the escrow holder usually requires that funds be deposited into escrow before the escrow opens. If the escrow is canceled, the escrow holder looks to these funds for its cancellation charges.

The parties should instruct the escrow holder to place the deposit in an interest-bearing account and designate which party is to be credited with the interest, unless the size of the deposit and the length of the escrow are such that the return would be insignificant. If cash passes outside of escrow, this fact should be stated in the agreement, including a statement on whether the cash applies against the purchase price and, if the transaction fails, who receives the funds.

On cancellation of escrow, see §15.97; for form escrow cancellation instructions, see App S.

C. Purchasing Subject to Existing Encumbrances

§4.38 1. Credit to Purchase Price

A buyer who acquires real property subject to an encumbrance usually receives a credit against the purchase price in an amount equal to the unpaid principal balance of the secured obligation, plus the accrued interest on the obligation prorated through the date of close of escrow. Taking title subject to an existing encumbrance may permit the buyer and the seller to avoid prepayment penalties and refinancing costs and to retain an existing encumbrance with a favorable interest rate. The terms of the underlying deed of trust and the interest rate on the secured promissory note should be examined by the buyer and compared with those available with new financing. The agreement should also allocate liability between the parties for any other lender charges and should provide for transferring any impound account balances to the buyer with a statement that the seller gets a credit for the sums transferred.

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Review of Loan Documents

§4.39 a. In General

If any existing deed of trust will not be removed of record, the buyer, for its protection, must have an opportunity to examine both the promissory note and the deed of trust securing it. If the agreement merely provides that the buyer takes subject to or assumes the existing note and deed of trust, the buyer has no opportunity to approve them. For example:

- The lender may have the right to accelerate the loan's maturity date on a sale of the property or on the buyer's violation of a covenant;
- Prepayment may not be permitted, or the prepayment penalty may be too costly;
- Destruction of existing improvements or removal of trees and vegetation may be prohibited or result in acceleration;
- There may be restrictions on use;
- The borrower may be obligated to make improvements;
- Release provisions may be nonexistent or unrealistic; or
- The deed of trust may cover additional real property, exposing the buyer to acceleration or foreclosure for a breach over which the buyer has no control.

The buyer should require the lender to provide a beneficiary statement under CC §2943. Such a statement may serve several purposes:

- Because it is signed by the lender (the mortgagee or the beneficiary), a statement may estop the lender from asserting a different balance later;
- Because the last payment date is given, a statement may furnish a clue to possible existing defaults;
- If the creditor has a right to object to the sale, its consent is essential; and
- If the buyer intends to leave any encumbrance in existence, the creditor's insistence that the buyer assume the debt rather than take subject to it (see §§4.41-4.42) may be crucial to the transaction.

On beneficiary statements, see California Title Insurance Practice, chap 2 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997).

§4.40 b. Issues in Securitized Loans

Loans secured by income properties are often pooled together and then transferred to an entity, created for that purpose, which then funds the loans by selling securities. Principal and interest paid on the pooled mortgage loans are used to repay the securities. These securities often are rated by rating agencies (such as Standard & Poor's or Moody's Investors Service) based on the credit-worthiness of both the borrowers on the underlying mortgage loans and the tenants of the commercial properties, and similar factors. The mortgage loans are managed by a company hired for that purpose, often referred to as the "servicer." On securitized loans generally, see California Real Estate Finance Practice: Strategies and Forms, chap 1 (Cal CEB 2000).

Typically, securitized loan documents will

- require the borrower to obtain all necessary consents from the servicer and any other parties (as specified in the loan documents) before the borrower transfers the property;
- require the borrower to pay an assumption fee and the servicer's expenses;
- limit changes in the use of the property;
- require the buyer's credit to be at least as good as that of the seller;
- prohibit prepayment for part or all of the term of the loan; and
- require consent of the rating agency if the securities issued were rated.

Thus, counsel for both the seller and the buyer should carefully review the terms of securitized loan documents and any applicable rating agency requirements to ascertain whether the buyer will be qualified to assume the loan, the steps required during due diligence, and the time required to obtain consent to the loan assumption. Specifically, counsel should be aware of the following:

- The standards set for loan assumption;
- The consents required; and
- The delays often encountered in meeting these standards and obtaining these consents.

3. Buyer's Personal Liability

§4.41 a. Assuming Encumbrances

Except when the note or deed of trust contains a due-on-sale clause (discussed in §4.43), the buyer may assume a loan through a written agreement with either the lender or the seller. If the latter, a recital in the deed constitutes a sufficient writing (CC §1624(a)(6)), and the assuming buyer becomes personally liable to the beneficiary for repayment of the loan under a theory of equitable subrogation (Braun v Crew (1920) 183 C 728, 192 P 531). Assumption of the debt does not release the seller from liability, but the seller's liability becomes that of a surety. Everts v Matteson (1942) 21 C2d 437, 132 P2d 476; Birkhofer v Krumm (1935) 4 CA2d 43, 40 P2d 553. Generally, the suretyship principles of law apply. See Woodward v Brown (1897) 119 C 283, 51 P 542 (effect of release of part of encumbered property); Wise v Clapper (1968) 257 CA2d 770, 65 CR 231 (extension of time for payments). A seller who incurs liability for a deficiency may seek indemnification from the assuming grantee. White v Schader (1921) 185 C 606, 198 P 19; Robson v O'Toole (1919) 45 CA 63, 187 P 110.

These rules are modified if the original loan comes under the antideficiency provisions of CCP §580b. See generally California Mortgages, Deeds of Trust, and Foreclosure Litigation, chap 9 (4th ed Cal CEB 2009). If the loan was initially a purchase money loan under §580b, the assuming grantee will be entitled to the antideficiency protection of that statute, whether the original loan was made by the vendor (Jackson v Taylor (1969) 272 CA2d 1, 76 CR 891 (see also Cornelison v Kornbluth (1975) 15 C3d 590, 125 CR 557)) or a third party (Kistler v Vasi (1969) 71 C2d 261, 78 CR 170). If the original secured obligation was not a purchase money loan, the grantee will not be entitled to §580b protection if the obligation is assumed under circumstances that would make a new loan not a purchase money loan (Brown v Jenson (1953) 41 C2d 193, 259 P2d 425), which is probably also true even if a new loan to the buyer would come under §580b (Jackson v Taylor, supra; see Mortgage & Deed of Trust §9.128).

The agreement should indicate whether the buyer or the seller will pay any loan assumption fee charged by the lender. See form 4.170-3 for loan assumption language; see section 7.8.5 of form 4.175-8 for a provision allocating assumption fees to seller.

§4.42 b. Taking Subject to Encumbrance

A buyer who merely takes subject to an existing encumbrance is not burdened with personal liability for the underlying obligation (Cornelison v Kornbluth (1975) 15 C3d 590, 125 CR 557), but the property remains as security for payment of the obligation. Subject to the effect of CCP §580b, the maker or guarantor of the note, or the person who had previously assumed liability, remains liable (see Ward v De Oca (1898) 120 C 102, 52 P 130); if that person subsequently pays the liability, he or she acquires no rights against the buyer but is subrogated to the mortgagee's right to foreclose against the property (Vincent v Garland (1936) 14 CA2d 725, 58 P2d 1320). See also CC §§2848-2849; Sanders v Magill (1937) 9 C2d 145, 70 P2d 159; Rintala, California's Anti-Deficiency Legislation and Suretyship Law: The Transversion of Protective Statutory Schemes, 17 UCLA L Rev 245, 284 n116 (1969). A nonassuming buyer, however, will be personally liable for bad faith waste and, in the absence of a CCP §580b or §580d defense, for waste resulting from negligent conduct. Cornelison v Kornbluth, supra; Leipziger, The Mortgagee's Remedies for Waste, 64 Cal L Rev 1086, 1129 (1976).

§4.43 4. Due-on-Sale Provision

A due-on-sale provision in the existing note and deed of trust restricts the new buyer's ability to take subject to or to assume the existing obligation. A due-on-sale provision permits the secured lender to accelerate the loan in a sale or other specified transfer or transaction affecting the property. See California Mortgages, Deeds of Trust, and Foreclosure Litigation, chap 8 (4th ed Cal CEB 2009). Enforcement of due-on-sale provisions is governed by the Garn-St. Germain Depository Institutions Act of 1982 (Garn Act) (12 USC §1701j-3), which preempts all state law, including judicial decisions, limiting or restricting enforcement of due-on-sale provisions in real property loans. Under the Garn Act, enforcement of these provisions is governed exclusively by the loan contract. Garn Act §341(b)(1) (12 USC §1701j-3(b)(1)). For further discussion of the Garn Act, see §§9.50-9.52.

§4.44 D. Seller Financing

When the buyer is to take subject to or is to assume an existing encumbrance, information sufficient to identify the loan is all that need be recited. When the seller is to provide financing, however, a fuller description must be given so that no further negotiations are necessary on the terms of the loan.

If possible, the forms of the note and deed of trust should be attached as exhibits. If this is not done, the agreement should specify their essential terms, i.e., interest rate, principal sum, maturity date, and number and amount of installment payments, and should state whether any special provisions, i.e., late charges, prepayment restrictions, or due-on-sale provisions, are to be included. See chap 9 for a complete discussion of seller financing. See form 4.170-4.

§4.45 VI. DUE DILIGENCE

Whether acquiring raw land for development or property improved with existing residential or commercial buildings, buyers need assurance that the property is suitable for the buyer's intended purpose. Buyers also need to know the property's condition and state of repair (or disrepair). A buyer's review of the physical aspects of the property and the various factors that affect its use and value is commonly known as "due diligence."

The importance of a buyer's careful investigation of the property cannot be overstated. Buyers are advised not to rely too much on the representations and warranties in the purchase contract, but to treat the purchase as if it were an unqualified "as-is" purchase. Litigating defects or misrepresentations after closing is rarely a satisfactory substitute for a well-conducted, thorough due diligence investigation. For a buyer's commercial property due diligence checklist, see App B. For a checklist of due diligence materials to be delivered by the seller in a commercial property sale, see App C.

PRACTICE TIP: If the attorney for the buyer takes an active role in completing the due diligence or analyzing information provided by consultants, then the attorney may be liable for any losses the buyer suffers by virtue of purchasing the property without the benefit of material facts known or discovered by the attorney, but not disclosed to the buyer. See, e.g., Keywell Corp. v Piper & Marbury, LLP (WD NY, Feb. 11, 1999, No. 96-CV-0660E) 1999 WL 66700, 1999 US Dist Lexis 1445 (attorneys who directed environmental consultants to limit their investigation and failed to disclose to their client the consultants' concerns about the limited nature of their review could be liable for lost profits from unexpectedly high clean-up costs). Thus, the attorney should obtain client approval of the scope of due diligence, provide full copies of all reports related to the property, highlight all material facts, and encourage the client to separately review such reports.

§4.46 A. Methods of Providing for Due Diligence

The buyer needs time in which to conduct its due diligence investigation. It is common practice to sign a written agreement allowing the buyer to undertake due diligence and to withdraw from the transaction if the property does not meet the buyer's needs. There are a number of ways to arrange this investigation. The most common method is for the parties to sign a purchase agreement that is subject to conditions precedent, warranties, covenants, or combinations of these devices. The agreement is consummated if the conditions are met, the warranties prove true, and the covenants are performed. If not, the party for whose protection the provision was inserted may withdraw from the agreement or seek damages against the other party. The buyer may also be able to obtain specific performance at a reduced purchase price. The exact nature of the remedy depends on the kind of protection written into the purchase agreement.

Another option, which is becoming more widely used in commercial transactions between sophisticated parties, is to allow the buyer to begin conducting its due diligence before the execution of the purchase agreement, but after execution of a letter of intent. For a discussion of letters of intent, see chap 3. In such circumstances, a separate access and indemnity agreement is signed between the parties, the indemnity provisions of which remain binding even if the buyer elects not to proceed with the transaction. For a sample access license and indemnity agreement, see App P. A third alternative is for the parties to enter into an option agreement. For a discussion of option agreements, see chap 8.

B. Due Diligence Conditions

§4.47 1. Purpose of Due Diligence Conditions

Virtually all sales agreements for California real property contain at least one provision conditioning the buyer's obligation to perform on the occurrence or nonoccurrence of some event, the existence or nonexistence of some fact, or on someone's approval or disapproval of something. Commonly called "conditions," "contingencies," or "out" clauses, they allow the buyer to execute an agreement promptly and to withdraw from the transaction if the condition is not met. Typical of such conditions are those requiring the following:

- The approval of a third party, e.g., a planning commission or a lending institution;
- The buyer's satisfaction with the economic performance of the property;
- The buyer's satisfaction with physical conditions that are discoverable only after time-consuming tests, e.g., soil tests or engineering studies (see §§4.77-4.80); and
- The buyer's satisfaction with the condition of title, such as the terms of deeds of trust, leases, or covenants, conditions, and restrictions.

If the execution of an agreement were to be postponed until the buyer could properly check all the conditions, either the seller's property would have to be kept off the market without any commitment from the buyer or the buyer would have to spend time and money checking out property that might be sold to another at any time. An option can often solve these problems as effectively as can conditional agreements. On options, see chap 8. The advantage to the buyer of a conditional sales agreement lies in the return of the deposit if the condition fails. See §4.3 for a discussion of conditional contracts and the application of the implied covenant of good faith to a buyer's approval of due diligence conditions.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.48 2. Drafting Considerations

Conditional sales agreements typically provide the buyer a period of time within which to conduct its due diligence and require the seller to make the property and the seller's documents regarding the property available for the buyer's inspection during the due diligence (or "contingency") period. The length of the due diligence period will vary according to the type of property and the nature and extent of consents that must be obtained (such as development approval from the appropriate city or county or consent from a lender). Sellers typically negotiate for a shorter due diligence period (15 or 30 days) and buyers seek a longer one (60 or 90 days, or longer).

Each party will use various drafting techniques to improve its position. For example, a buyer's tactic is to delay the start of the due diligence period until "all documents" regarding the property have been delivered to the buyer. A buyer also will want the right to approve or disapprove a condition in its sole discretion. For a discussion of the buyer's obligation to undertake its investigation in good faith, see §4.3. A seller's tactics may include the following:

- Starting the due diligence period immediately on execution of the sales agreement;
- Limiting the number of documents the seller must deliver to the buyer; and
- Requiring the buyer to inspect other documents at the seller's office (or at the office of seller's counsel).

Compare Alternatives 1 and 2 in section 3.1 of form 4.171-1. Alternative 2, favoring the seller, limits the documents the seller must deliver to a preliminary report on title, a rent roll, tenant leases, and recent operating statements.

Sellers of commercial property will generally require a buyer and its consultants to carry specified amounts of liability insurance naming seller as an additional insured, and to provide proof of such insurance before commencement of any on-site inspections or testing. For a discussion of liability insurance, see chap 14. Sellers will also seek to obtain an indemnity agreement from the buyer for any property damage caused by buyer's testing and require that the buyer restore the property to its pre-testing condition. For provisions, see section 3.5.2 of form 4.171-5.

Counsel should also specify what happens at the end of the due diligence period, often referred to as the "contingency date." The agreement should specify whether inaction by the buyer will terminate the agreement or operate as a waiver of all the buyer's conditions. The agreement should also provide for return of the deposit to the buyer if the buyer terminates the agreement. See the discussion in §§4.99-4.100.

§4.49 C. Seller's Disclosure Obligations

The seller is obligated to inform the buyer of any facts materially affecting the value or desirability of the property that would not be apparent to the buyer on inspection. Lingsch v Savage (1963) 213 CA2d 729, 29 CR 201. Whether a defect is discoverable on inspection is often a difficult question of fact. Because the seller is usually in the best position to know the condition of the property, the buyer may insist that the seller disclose the defects in the property, whether apparent or not, and give a warranty against any defects other than those disclosed. The older the improvements on the property, however, the more likely it is that defects do exist, and the seller may insist that the buyer make its own inspection and purchase the property "as is" in reliance on that inspection. Even an "as is" provision does not relieve the seller of the obligation to disclose material defects of which the seller is aware. Lingsch v Savage, supra. See §4.120 for discussion of "as is" provisions.

Sellers have a variety of statutory disclosure obligations. For example, under CC §1102.18, sellers must disclose any known release of an "illegal controlled substance" on the property. See §§6.6-6.29 for discussion of a variety of disclosure requirements for one-to-four-unit residential properties. Sellers of nonresidential property must make disclosures concerning any known hazardous substance on the property. Health & S C §25359.7. See the discussion of this requirement in §4.80. The Toxic Mold Protection Act of 2001 (Health & S C §§26100-26156) requires sellers of commercial and industrial properties to disclose to buyers the presence of mold in the property known to the seller if the mold exceeds exposure limits to be established by the Department of Health Services. Health & S C §26140. The disclosure requirement will become effective only after the department adopts standards and guidelines under the Act. Commencing January 1, 2010, a nonresidential building owner or operator must disclose to prospective purchasers the Energy Star Portfolio Manager benchmarking data and ratings for the most recent 12-month period. Pub Res C §25402.10(d). For more information on the Energy Star Program, see the EPA website at the URL in the Directory. For a list of other necessary disclosures, see §1.64. For a discussion of required residential disclosures, see chap 6.

PRACTICE TIP: It is often helpful for a seller to gather its due diligence and disclosure materials before marketing the property and approach the sale as if it were a fully warranted transaction, even when it is not. The result is thoughtful and careful pre-sale due diligence by the seller to ensure that the disclosures are complete, accurate, and made early in the transaction—when they are the least harmful to the seller's negotiating position. Even though most sellers may readily understand the concept of fraud, they may find it more difficult to understand related concepts such as negligent misrepresentation and mistake, especially when these concepts compete with a desire to cultivate the buyer's interest in the property. Counsel for the seller should thoroughly review the disclosure requirements with the client.

A seller's breach of duty to disclose material facts to the buyer may result in liability to subsequent buyers if the seller has reason to expect the misrepresentations will reach subsequent buyers. In Geernaert v Mitchell (1995) 31 CA4th 601, 37 CR2d 483, home buyers were permitted to sue a previous owner of the property for alleged fraudulent misrepresentations the predecessor made to their seller. The court held that if the defendant had reason to expect that the misrepresentations would be repeated and acted on by a third person (the current buyers), the defendant could be liable to that third person.

For discussion of a buyer's remedies for a seller's failure to disclose known material facts, see California Real Property Remedies and Damages, chap 3 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002).

D. Title

1. Marketable Title

§4.50 a. Definitions of Marketable Title

Under California law, a buyer of real property is entitled to "marketable title" as an implied condition of the bargain. King v Stanley (1948) 32 C2d 584, 197 P2d 321. Marketable title must "embrace both the legal and equitable estates, must be free from any encumbrance, [and] must be defensible and salable." Palos Verdes Corp. v Housing Auth. (1962) 202 CA2d 827, 838, 21 CR 225. Title must be sufficiently free from doubt that a reasonable buyer, well informed about the facts and their legal effect and exercising ordinary business prudence, would be willing to accept it. Hocking v Title Ins. & Trust Co. (1951) 37 C2d 644, 234 P2d 625; Wilson v Pacific Coast Title Ins. Co. (1951) 106 CA2d 599, 602, 235 P2d 431. The general rule is that restrictions imposed by law, such as local zoning ordinances, do not impair marketability, because the parties are considered to have contracted in light of applicable law. Hartman v Rizzuto (1954) 123 CA2d 186, 266 P2d 539. A visible encumbrance, such as a road, is not considered to render title unmarketable, because the parties are considered to have contracted with the encumbrance in mind. Evans v Faught (1965) 231 CA2d 698, 42 CR 133.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.51 b. Examples of Unmarketable Title

In general, matters affecting title that are not visible, but are prejudicial, will render title unmarketable. Examples of such defects include:

- Easements of record unless they are visible;
- Judgment liens;
- Deeds of trust and mortgages;
- Covenants, conditions, and restrictions or similar restrictive covenants affecting the property;
- Tax and assessment liens;
- Mechanics' liens;
- Adverse possession; and
- Leases.

On unmarketability of title, see California Title Insurance Practice, chaps 6-7 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997). On discussion of encumbrances that render title unmarketable, see 1 Miller & Starr, California Real Estate §2:23 (3d ed 2000).

Source: Real Property/California Real Property Sales Transactions/4 The Purchase and Sale Agreement/§4.52 c. Statutory Procedures for Curing Certain Title Defects

§4.52 c. Statutory Procedures for Curing Certain Title Defects

The Civil Code provides specific procedures to cure title defects caused by ancient or expired interests in property:

- CC §§882.020-882.040 cover the expiration of ancient mortgages and deeds of trust;
- CC §§885.010-885.070 cover the expiration of powers to enforce conditions subsequent;
- CC §§886.010-886.050 cover the expiration of unperformed contracts for sale of real property; and
- CC §§880.020-880.370 (on marketable record title) simplify and facilitate the transfer of real property in which interests or defects in title were created in remote times and are no longer valid.

See §8.21 for discussion of expiration of unexercised options.

§4.53 2. Title Insurance

Title insurance has become the customary way to protect a buyer against defects in title. Although a title insurance policy does not remove a defect in title (Frabotta v Alencastre (1960) 182 CA2d 679, 6 CR 536), it provides the buyer with a means of recovery of loss or damages if title proves to be unmarketable. Special endorsements are available from title companies to solve some of the more common title problems. The buyer may also be able to negotiate with the title company to eliminate an exception from the policy. Eliminating an exception may not be a permanent solution, however, because there is still the risk that a subsequent buyer might not be able to obtain the same policy coverage. See California Title Insurance Practice (2d ed Cal CEB 1997) for a detailed discussion of title insurance.

PRACTICE TIP: The American Land Title Association (ALTA) has adopted a new title insurance policy and endorsement forms, effective June 17, 2006. See California Title Insurance Practice, chap 6 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997) for a discussion of the ALTA policy and endorsement forms. There is no implied obligation of the seller to furnish title insurance (see Easton v Montgomery (1891) 90 C 307, 27 P 280; Seymour v Shaeffer (1947) 82 CA2d 823, 187 P2d 95, disapproved on other grounds in Ellis v Mihelis (1963) 60 C2d 206, 216, 32 CR 415); the agreement should expressly provide for it. On available policies and endorsements, see Title Ins, chaps 6-7. The amount of coverage is usually the purchase price of the property, though this may vary. In the Bay Area and some other Northern California counties, the buyer generally pays for title insurance. In many Central Valley and northeastern counties, the title insurance cost is split. In Southern California, custom calls for the seller to pay this charge. See §§15.7-15.15, 15.40.

If no title policy will be issued, other title company products are available that provide some information regarding the property. For a discussion of such products, see California Title Insurance Practice, chap 9 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997).

a. Preliminary Report

§4.54 (1) Contents of Preliminary Report

It is standard procedure for the buyer to obtain a preliminary report that summarizes the exceptions to marketable title that the title company has found. Generally, the seller has a certain period of time to obtain the title report following the execution of the purchase agreement, although sophisticated commercial sellers will order the title report before marketing the property. A preliminary report contains a description of the property and encumbrances of record, with a map, which may simply be a copy of the applicable assessor's parcel map or may be a subdivision map showing the surveyed property boundaries. Title companies usually summarize, by reference to recorded documents, the general nature of the items affecting title, such as easements, covenants, conditions, and restrictions, equitable servitudes, monetary liens (such as taxes and deeds of trust), leases, or lis pendens. See §§4.60-4.69. These items will be listed as "exceptions" to coverage in the title policy obtained for the property. To fully understand the nature and extent of these exceptions, the underlying documents must be ordered from the title company and analyzed. Buyer's counsel should review the assembled information with the client to determine whether the property, so impaired, is acceptable or unacceptable.

On obtaining and reviewing the preliminary report, see California Title Insurance Practice, chaps 2-3 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997). On contents of the preliminary report, see Title Ins, chap 5.

PRACTICE TIP: Before marketing the property and executing a purchase agreement, seller may wish to obtain a preliminary report and copies of all title exceptions to determine if there are any title problems that might adversely affect the sale of the property.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.55 (2) Nature of Preliminary Report

In dealing with preliminary reports, the lawyer should keep three key points in mind:

- A preliminary report is not a legal title document, but merely a report of certain information concerning title. There may well be unrecorded matters affecting title that do not appear in the report, and, because mistakes can happen, there may even be recorded matters that the title company has failed to include in the report. On unrecorded defects in title that do not appear on a preliminary report, see §§11.10, 11.78-11.88. See also California Title Insurance Practice, chap 5 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997).
- The map attached to the preliminary report does not assure the client that the property described in the report is exactly the same as the property the client wishes to purchase or sell. For that information (and other information), the client will need to refer to a current survey or have a survey conducted. See §1.100; Title Ins §5.7.
- A preliminary report is not an insurance policy, and cannot be relied on as a representation of the condition of title to the property. For reports issued before January 1, 1982, the California Supreme Court held title companies accountable for the accuracy of such reports based on a negligence standard of care. See White v Western Title Ins. Co. (1985) 40 C3d 870, 221 CR 509; Lawrence v Chicago Title Ins. Co. (1987) 192 CA3d 70, 237 CR 264. Effective January 1, 1982, a preliminary report may not be construed as a representation as to the condition of title to real property, but rather as a statement of the terms and conditions on which the title company is willing to issue its title policy if the offer is accepted. Ins C §12340.11. See also Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v Miller (1989) 215 CA3d 1163, 264 CR 17. Thus, the lawyer should regard the preliminary report as an essential tool in the client's investigation of the condition of title, not as a complete or assured account of that condition. For further discussion, see Title Ins §§5.25-5.29.

Because title companies do not ensure the accuracy of their preliminary reports (in contrast to title insurance policies), counsel should discuss any possible unlisted exceptions to title with the title officer to avoid last-minute difficulties. The preliminary report may include exceptions that can be eliminated, such as expired leases or liens that have been paid. Counsel should investigate each exception and discuss with the title officer any that can be eliminated. On preliminary reports, see Title Ins, chap 5.

PRACTICE TIP: Buyer's counsel should look beyond marketability of title, because the courts have held that some matters that affect the use of the property do not impair title even when they reduce the property's value. For example, in Nishiyama v Safeco Title Ins. Co. (1978) 85 CA3d Supp 1, 149 CR 355, the court held that the facts that the property had been divided in violation of the Subdivision Map Act, and that the owner might be required to comply with conditions that could have been imposed had the property been subdivided in compliance with the law, did not render title unmarketable. See also Hocking v Title Ins. & Trust Co. (1951) 37 C2d 644, 234 P2d 625. For further discussion of marketability, see Title Ins, chaps 6-7, 11. See discussion of visible easements in §4.64.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.56 (3) Fees and Costs

There is generally no charge for a preliminary report unless a title policy is not issued. The fee varies from company to company and from time to time. Fees in the range of $200 to $500 are typical. The lawyer should make sure that the client is aware of this potential expense, provide any assistance the client may need in obtaining specific cost quotes for the title report, and confirm that the client is prepared to incur that expense. On premiums for title policies and methods of reducing same, see California Title Insurance Practice, chap 3 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997).

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.57 b. Purchase Agreement's Title Insurance Provisions

The purchase agreement is ordinarily executed before the buyer has had an opportunity to examine the seller's title. Thus, the agreement should allow the buyer time to examine and approve the exceptions reported by the title company. The seller usually wishes to have the conditions eliminated as soon as possible and will urge a short period of time to review title. The time for approval should run only from receipt of all documents referred to in the preliminary report, not from receipt of the report itself. Sufficient time should be allowed to eliminate objectionable exceptions. See section 3.2 of form 4.171-2 for both a seller's and buyer's form approval provision. Sometimes the agreement instructs the escrow officer to order the preliminary report rather than give the seller this task.

The agreement should set out what is to happen if the buyer disapproves an exception reported by the title company. See section 3.4.2 of form 4.171-4. The effect of the buyer's failure to respond should also be specified. The seller will want the buyer's silence to mean approval, while the buyer will prefer to have it mean disapproval.

PRACTICE TIP: The buyer will want to include in the purchase agreement the right to obtain, 3 to 5 days before the closing, a "date down" of the preliminary report showing any new liens or encumbrances recorded against the property since the date the preliminary report was prepared. See section 3.4.5 of form 4.171-4.

The buyer will usually wish to specify the title company because the buyer will want to obtain coverage from a financially responsible company. Moreover, the buyer may have a long-term working relationship with one particular company. The seller may wish to use the title company that previously insured the title for one of several reasons:

- If title is complicated, to speed preparation of the preliminary report;
- If the seller has a previous relationship with the company, especially when the company is to be the trustee under a deed of trust to the seller; or
- If the seller bought with the title policy a negotiated endorsement, the seller will want the same title company to ensure that the insured exception will again be issued.

The choice of title company may thus be a matter for negotiation, however, the financial condition of the title company should also be considered by the parties in making a selection. The Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act of 1974 (RESPA) (12 USC §§2601-2617), as amended, however, provides that no seller of real property subject to the Act may directly or indirectly require a particular title company as a condition to selling the property. 12 USC §2608. (RESPA is discussed in §15.95.) For a detailed discussion on selecting the title insurer, see California Title Insurance Practice, chap 3 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997). In Northern California, the title company chosen is usually also the escrow holder; in Southern California, the escrow holder is often a different entity from the title insurance company. In most large commercial transactions, however, the title company (or an affiliate) is also the escrow holder. See Title Ins §§3.29-3.30.

Many agreements give the buyer an option to purchase an extended-coverage American Land Title Association (ALTA) policy. The advantage to ALTA coverage is that it discloses matters that can be discerned by an inspection and a survey of the property, such as visible easements (see §4.64), parties in possession, and other off-record matters. See Title Ins §§6.10-6.11. The parties should settle the issue of who is to pay the extra cost of ALTA coverage and any required survey. See §4.134 on allocation of closing costs. See also discussion of ALTA coverage in §15.58 and in Title Ins, chaps 6-8.

© The Regents of the University of California

3. Surveys

§4.58 a. Role of Surveys

It is desirable and often necessary for the buyer to obtain a current survey of the property by a licensed surveyor or civil engineer. A survey will ascertain exact acreage, existence of encroachments and party walls, boundaries (see chap 11), and compliance with setback requirements. Also, lenders usually require surveys as a condition of obtaining an extended-coverage American Land Title Association (ALTA) title insurance policy. If the buyer plans to obtain a loan, counsel should ascertain the lender's survey requirements (including the form of the surveyor's certificate) and obtain the lender's approval of the surveyor to be used.

PRACTICE TIP: It is wise to obtain a survey at the time of purchase, even if neither a loan nor an ALTA title policy is being sought, to avoid the post-closing discovery of an encroachment or other off-record title defect when financing is being sought or the property is put up for sale.

When the sale price is set at a unit rate, rather than a specific amount for the entire parcel, a survey of the property is particularly important. Gross acreage generally includes property such as roads, which revert to the fee owner if abandoned; net acreage excludes such reversionary interests. The seller will generally demand a gross-acreage sale, but the buyer, having no immediate use for the easement, may prefer a net price. This issue is usually resolved by adjusting the price to the parties' satisfaction during negotiations. To avoid future disputes, the parties should make sure that the fee interest under the roads is transferred. If agricultural land is being sold, an accurate survey is needed, especially if the property is being sold at a per-acre price. Counsel should be careful to define whether the price is based on gross or net acreage.

PRACTICE TIP: Buyers often look to their counsel to ascertain the need for a survey (or an expert review of an existing survey, if there is one). The attorney should review with the client the kinds of matters likely to be disclosed by a survey, including encroachments, easement locations, the nature and location of access, and boundary-line discrepancies (including those that may lead to discovery of gaps in the chain of title). Also, counsel should:

- Review the American Land Title Association (ALTA) requirements if an ALTA extended coverage title policy is anticipated;
- Obtain and review with the client cost quotes from the title company for both standard and ALTA extended policies and from the surveyor for both standard and ALTA surveys, so that the client can take these costs into account; and
- Review with the client the desirability of purchasing title endorsements about identification or location of the subject project, e.g., CLTA 116 endorsement (assurances concerning street address and sufficiency of policy plat to show record location and dimensions of land), 116.1 endorsement (assurance that land described in policy is same as shown on plat of survey), and 116.4 endorsement (assurance that land is contiguous to other land).

For discussion of ALTA survey requirements and the types of endorsements available, see California Title Insurance Practice (2d ed Cal CEB 1997).

On the lawyer's role in reviewing surveys, see Title Ins §4.34.

§4.59 b. Seller's Knowledge and Notice of Boundaries

Although a survey will clarify any boundary line or encroachment problems in the transaction, the parties are often unwilling to bear its cost. The seller is presumed to know the boundaries of the property being sold, and a misrepresentation of the quantity of land or its geography constitutes fraud. Wilbur v Wilson (1960) 179 CA2d 314, 3 CR 770. The seller has a duty to become informed of the boundary lines when selling the property (Edwards v Sergi (1934) 137 CA 369, 30 P2d 541) and is not excused from an erroneous representation by evidence that he relied on information from the previous owner (Wilbur v Wilson, supra). See also Williams v Marshall (1951) 37 C2d 445, 235 P2d 372 (number of acres of citrus trees); Soderling v Tomlin (1959) 170 CA2d 169, 338 P2d 946 (location of boundaries); Piazzini v Jessup (1957) 153 CA2d 58, 314 P2d 196 (length of lot); Mills v Hellinger (1950) 100 CA2d 482, 224 P2d 34 (number of acres). For discussion of a warranty provision on acreage, see §4.99.

A misrepresentation of the location of a boundary line is not fraud if the seller relies in good faith on a misplaced surveyor's mark. Roland v Hubenka (1970) 12 CA3d 215, 90 CR 490.

The standard-coverage title insurance policy (see §4.53) does not insure the boundaries, and a survey will be required before the title insurer will provide extended coverage. See California Title Insurance Practice §§4.8, 4.32 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997). On property descriptions generally, see chap 11.

For discussion of a broker's liability for his or her misrepresentations, see §§2.153-2.164.

4. Typical Title Issues

a. Taxes

§4.60 (1) Real Property Taxes

The state and federal governments secure the payment of various taxes by placing liens on real property, which make the title unmarketable. In addition, the lien for real property taxes is superior to earlier recorded private liens and to matters for which the real property may become charged or liable, including but not limited to any recognizance, deed, judgment, debt, obligation, or responsibility. Rev & T C §2192.1. See also 3 Miller & Starr, California Real Estate §§11:143-11:175 (3d ed 2000). Tax liens are normally shown on the preliminary report, and buyers who reserved the right to approve title will have an opportunity to approve or disapprove the item.

The most commonly encountered tax lien is for real property taxes for local government general revenue. The tax fiscal year begins on July 1. The tax lien, however, attaches on January 1 of the year preceding the fiscal year for which the taxes are levied. Rev & T C §2192. The tax is payable in two equal installments, which are delinquent if not paid by December 10 and April 10 of the fiscal year for which the taxes are levied. Rev & T C §§2617-2618. If real property taxes are not paid when due, the property securing them is "declared in default" for the unpaid taxes on July 1 (the start of the fiscal year). Rev & T C §§3351, 3436. If the property is not redeemed within 5 years after the date of default (3 years for nonresidential commercial property, unless the county elects to have the 5-year period apply), the tax collector will attempt to sell the property at public auction. Rev & T C §§3691, 3693. See generally 3 Miller & Starr, California Real Estate §§11:143-11:175; Ehrman & Flavin, Taxing California Property (4th ed 2009).

PRACTICE TIP: If the property is subject to a special tax under the Mello-Roos Community Facilities Act (Govt C §§53311-53368.3) or installment assessments to secure bonds issued under the Improvement Bond Act of 1915 (Str & H C §§8500-8887), a seller must use a "good faith effort" to obtain and provide a disclosure notice from the local agency regarding such liens as provided in Govt C §§53340.2 and 53754. CC §1102.6b. See §6.42. In addition, for residential transactions, a disclosure notice regarding the reassessment of the property must be provided under CC §1102.6c. See §6.43.

Real property taxes are usually prorated to the date of closing unless the parties agree otherwise. See section 7.7.5 of form 4.175-7 for a provision on prorating taxes. See §§4.133, 15.43-15.44, 15.57 for discussions of prorations. When a buyer requests a seller to extend the closing date of escrow, the seller may insist that the original closing date be used as the date for prorations. Delinquent taxes should be paid at or before closing to protect the buyer's title.

PRACTICE TIP: If the closing is to occur within a few days after December 10 or April 10, or if current property taxes are delinquent, buyer should request that seller pay the current or delinquent taxes through the escrow holder before or at closing to ensure that the title company has sufficient evidence of payment to allow it to remove the applicable property tax exception from title at closing. Similarly, if a county property tax lien has recorded against the property, buyer should request that a "release of lien" in recordable form from the county assessor's office be delivered to the escrow agent for recording before or at closing.

When the real property being sold is part of a parcel under one assessment, the periods before and after closing present separate problems. For the period before closing, because segregation of taxes is not possible before ownership is transferred, the division must be made by agreement to prorate. For discussion and provisions, see §15.68. For the period after closing, all taxes should be separately assessed to each parcel resulting from the sale. Segregation is authorized by Rev & T C §2821. The application and affidavit of interest must be made during the current fiscal year. A county may prohibit applications during the 10-day period preceding each tax installment delinquent date (December 10 and April 10) and during the 10-day period before June 30 of each year.

§4.61 (2) Personal Property Taxes

Personal property is also subject to taxation under California law. Rev & T C §§201, 401. A personal property tax is a lien on real property belonging to the owner of the personal property if it is located on the real property on the lien date. An exception exists if the real property is transferred or conveyed to a bona fide purchaser for value after the lien date but before the assessment on the personal property, and the buyer of the real property did not own, claim, possess, or control the personal property at any time from the lien date until the date on which the assessment was made. Then the taxes on the personal property must be placed on the unsecured roll and will not be a lien on the real property. Rev & T C §2189.

If the personal property or improvement on a parcel is owned by someone other than the fee owner, a statement can be filed with the assessor before the lien date, attesting to the separate ownership, so that the real and personal property will then be assessed on separate bills. Rev & T C §2188.2. When a segregated tax bill is issued, the lien for the tax on the personal property does not attach to the land. The personal property tax lien, however, can attach to other real property owned by the owner of the personal property. Because personal property taxes are usually not shown separately on the preliminary report, the tax bills should be reviewed.

PRACTICE TIP: If the preliminary report shows a lien for personal property taxes, the buyer's lawyer should ascertain who owns the property. If the sale does not include the personal property, the buyer should request a separate assessment under Rev & T C §2188.2. The buyer should either receive the amount of the personal property tax from the seller or some security for payment of the tax if the personal property is owned by someone other than the seller.

If the buyer is purchasing all the personal property, "personal property taxes" should be added to the items to be prorated as is done in section 7.7.5 of form 4.175-7. If the buyer is not purchasing the personal property, the phrase "all personal property taxes shown on the tax bill will be paid by Seller through escrow" should be added to the proration provision. If the buyer is purchasing only some of the personal property, the parties should agree on the value of the property transferred to permit proration of the taxes.

§4.62 (3) Federal Tax Liens

In addition to liens for property taxes, which are usually prorated between the buyer and the seller (see §§4.60-4.61), there may also be liens for federal taxes, such as income, withholding, estate, and gift taxes; these liens are not usually paid by the buyer. The seller, however, may be given an opportunity to remove the lien at or before closing without impairing the agreement.

A federal tax lien is not filed against specific property of a taxpayer; it is filed against a named taxpayer and becomes a lien by operation of law. On assessment, federal taxes become a lien against all of the taxpayer's property or rights to property. IRC §6321. Federal tax lien procedures that do not provide for preattachment hearings have been upheld in the face of challenges contending that they deny property owners due process. Baldassari v U.S. (1978) 79 CA3d 267, 144 CR 741. The lien is not valid against a buyer of real property unless notice of the lien is filed with the recorder of the county where the property is located. IRC §6323.

A special lien for estate and gift taxes exists without assessment and includes taxes not paid when due. IRC §6324. There are also special lien provisions for deferred estate taxes (IRC §6166) and for additional estate taxes attributable to a farm or a closely held business valuation (IRC §§6324A-6324B). If unassessed estate tax appears as a possible lien on the preliminary report, written application for its release should be made to the IRS district director under Treas Reg §301.6325-1(c). If a notice of tax lien was filed and the tax was or will be paid from escrow, arrangements can be made to release the lien.

When the taxpayer's name is the same as another property owner in the county, some confusion may occur. On a showing of the facts, a certificate of nonattachment of federal tax lien may be obtained (from the chief of special procedures staff in the district director's office), certifying that the filed lien does not attach to a particular parcel of property. A taxpayer (against whom a federal tax lien has been filed) who is refinancing or purchasing property through third party financing may obtain a similar certificate. This certificate permits the taxpayer to complete the transaction by certifying that the lien does not attach to the lender's interest in the property.

PRACTICE TIP: Instructions on how to apply for a Certificate of Discharge of Property From Federal Tax Lien may be found on the Internal Revenue Service website. The payoff amount on a lien can be ascertained by telephoning the IRS. The website and telephone number are in the Directory. The owner or intended buyer may obtain this information even if he or she is not the taxpayer against whom the lien is filed. Treas Reg §301.6323(i)-1(c). If federal tax lien problems are suspected, the purchase and sale agreement should provide sufficient time before closing to resolve them.

§4.63 b. Special Assessments

The lien of a special assessment to pay for the construction or maintenance of some public improvement, such as a lighting district, a road, or a sewer, arises when a notice of assessment or special tax lien is recorded. Str & H C §§3114-3115. An assessment lien generally affects only the parcels benefited by the improvement. Assessment liens have priority over private liens and matters for which the real property may become charged or liable, including, but not limited to, any recognizance, deed, judgment, debt, obligation, or responsibility. Rev & T C §2192.1; see California Title Insurance Practice §8.15 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997). If assessments are not paid when due, the property may eventually be sold by the tax collector. Rev & T C §3691.

Problems can arise when an improvement has been completed but the government has yet to levy an assessment. In that event, the lien would not be listed as an exception on the preliminary report, because it would not be a lien of record. The buyer would be liable for such an assessment and would have no recourse against the title insurance policy. This matter is often covered by a seller's warranty that will survive close of escrow. For a warranty, see form 4.173-1, Alternative 1, section 5.1.14 (buyer's form of seller's warranties); for a standard survival of closing provision, see form 4.173-3; for a seller's form providing for limited survival of representations and warranties after closing, see form 4.173-4.

PRACTICE TIP: The treatment of assessments is negotiable. The seller usually wants the buyer to bear the burden of the assessment because the buyer will benefit from the improvement. The buyer will argue that the improvements increased the value of the property and were taken into consideration in arriving at the purchase price and should therefore be paid by the seller at closing.

§4.64 c. Easements

An encumbering easement usually destroys marketability of title. Zlozower v Lindenbaum (1929) 100 CA 766, 281 P 102. A visible easement, however, is not treated as a breach of the covenant to sell free of encumbrances (CC §1113), because the parties are presumed to have contracted with it in mind. Rustigian v Phelps (1923) 190 C 608, 213 P 957; McCarty v Wilson (1920) 184 C 194, 193 P 578. Counsel for the buyer must ascertain what easements exist, obtain and review the pertinent documents, and explain their significance to the buyer. The buyer must then decide whether the property is suitable for the intended use.

Ascertaining easements requires more than merely reviewing the preliminary report and the underlying documents. Standard-coverage (CLTA) title insurance protects the insured from losses resulting from easements only if they are revealed in the public record. It excludes interests that are not shown in the public record but that are ascertainable by inspecting the property or inquiring of persons in possession. For discussion of evaluating easements in the title insurance context, see California Title Insurance Practice §5.10 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997). An ALTA policy provides further protection by insuring against defects that are discoverable from an inspection of the property. Both the CLTA and ALTA policies exclude defects known to the insured party but unknown to the title company. On ALTA title insurance policies, see Title Ins, chap 6.

If the buyer does not wish to incur the expense of ALTA coverage, the premises must be inspected and persons in possession questioned about the rights of others to use the property. Protection may also be obtained by including in the purchase and sale agreement the seller's warranty against easements not of record.

An easement that is sufficiently visible to create a prescriptive or an implied easement will bind subsequent buyers, even if it is not shown on the record. Ocean Shore R.R. v Spring Valley Water Co. (1933) 218 C 86, 21 P2d 588; Lindsay v King (1956) 138 CA2d 333, 292 P2d 23. The following are examples of visible easements:

- Portions of a railroad grade and trestle (Ocean Shore R.R. v Spring Valley Water Co., supra);
- A paved portion of property used for access to an adjacent gas station (Amerco, Inc. v Tullar (1960) 182 CA2d 336, 6 CR 71);
- Standpipes for a water pipeline (Johnson v Cella (1953) 122 CA2d 72, 264 P2d 98); and
- A utility easement with wires running 80 feet above the property and visible from various parts of the property (Alcan Aluminum Corp. v Carlsberg Fin. Corp. (9th Cir 1982) 689 F2d 815).

Such visible evidence puts the buyer on inquiry notice, and the buyer can neither assume that the use is abandoned nor be satisfied with the owner's opinion that the easement will not be used. The buyer is charged with constructive knowledge of facts that would be disclosed if a reasonable inquiry were made. Ocean Shore R.R. v Spring Valley Water Co., supra.

Source: Real Property/California Real Property Sales Transactions/4 The Purchase and Sale Agreement/§4.65 d. Party Walls

§4.65 d. Party Walls

If a structure on the property has a wall in common with a structure on adjoining property, the buyer has at least three concerns:

- The wall may affect title (possibly rendering it unmarketable). The right to use a party wall is an easement. CC §801(12). It may not render title unmarketable if the party wall stands equally or partly on the adjoining land and mutual rights and obligations exist, but it may render title unmarketable if the wall stands entirely on the subject property. 3 Casner, American Law of Property §11.49 (1952); Anno, Marketable Title—Party Walls, 81 ALR2d 1020 (1962).
- The wall may limit the buyer's use. The right to demolish an existing structure is subject to the buyer's obligation to maintain the party wall. Nippert v Warneke (1900) 128 C 501, 61 P 96.
- The wall may subject the buyer to expenses and obligations in connection with the wall. Without an agreement to the contrary, each owner is entitled to increase the height and width of the wall as long as no damage is done to the other structure or to the wall itself. Tate v Fratt (1896) 112 C 613, 44 P 1061. Either owner may use its part of the wall for advertising, may deepen the foundation, and may rebuild a dilapidated wall. Injury to the wall is actionable (McCarthy v Mutual Relief Ass'n (1889) 81 C 584, 22 P 933), as is removal (Nippert v Warneke, supra).

A wall may stand entirely on one parcel and still be a party wall. See Tate v Fratt, supra. If it is a party wall, the use of each parcel must not impair the cross-easements of support and beam rights (CC §801(12)) of the adjoining owner. A party wall may give the buyer an easement on the adjoining property. A buyer who considers the party wall an asset should be aware that destruction by fire or other casualty terminates the easements and related rights and duties unless they are preserved by agreement. 5 Powell, The Law of Real Property §691 (1986).

In view of the risks involving party walls, any wall that appears to support a structure on adjoining land as well as one on the subject property is a signal to the buyer to ascertain the following:

- Whether the wall supports both structures;
- The exact location of the boundary line in relation to the wall (normally fixed by a survey); and
- The existence and provisions of any express or implied agreement between the seller or the seller's predecessor and the adjoining property owner or its predecessor.

On implied agreements, see Nippert v Warneke, supra; Bank of Escondido v Thomas (1895) 5 CU 94, 41 P 462; Guttenberger v Woods (1876) 51 C 523.

If no express agreement exists, it may be possible to negotiate and execute one before the close of escrow. On provisions for party wall agreements, see Belsheim, Modern Legal Forms §§6482-6510 (1979).

Source: Real Property/California Real Property Sales Transactions/4 The Purchase and Sale Agreement/§4.66 e. Covenants, Conditions, and Restrictions

§4.66 e. Covenants, Conditions, and Restrictions

Declarations of covenants, conditions, and restrictions (CC&Rs) are frequently recorded in connection with the development of residential subdivisions or office or industrial parks. CC&Rs are intended to restrict uses in the entire development for the mutual benefit of all landowners.

- "Covenants" are promises that, if not performed, give rise to an action for breach. For remedies on breach, see California Real Property Remedies and Damages, chap 4 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002).
- "Conditions" are limitations on the full and unqualified enjoyment of the right or estate granted. Zlozower v Lindenbaum (1929) 100 CA 766, 281 P 102. If the conditions are enforceable, their violation terminates the estate or gives a right of termination.
- The term "restrictions" does not include easements (see Zlozower v Lindenbaum, supra), except in the sense that restrictions are considered to be either "negative" easements or equitable servitudes (Sackett v Los Angeles City Sch. Dist. (1931) 118 CA 254, 5 P2d 23). Not all purported restrictions are enforceable. Some restrictions are unenforceable on constitutional or public policy grounds. See, e.g., Shelley v Kraemer (1948) 334 US 1, 92 L Ed 1161, 68 S Ct 836; Cumings v Hokr (1948) 31 C2d 844, 193 P2d 742 (refusal to enforce racial restrictions).

A buyer at a trustee's sale foreclosing a lien senior to the declaration of restrictions is not bound by the CC&Rs, because the sale extinguishes the junior restrictions. Sain v Silvestre (1978) 78 CA3d 461, 144 CR 478, disapproved on other grounds in Reynolds Metals Co. v Alperson (1979) 25 C3d 124, 129, 158 CR 1.

If there is a common plan for ownership of property in a subdivision, and that plan includes CC&Rs that were recorded before the sale of the property, they are enforceable even if they are not cited in a deed or other document at the time of sale. In Citizens for Covenant Compliance v Anderson (1995) 12 C4th 345, 47 CR2d 898, the court held that because the CC&Rs (1) were recorded before any of the parcels were sold (thus providing constructive notice to subsequent buyers), (2) stated an intent to establish a general plan for the subdivision that would be binding on all buyers and their successors, and (3) described the property the CC&Rs were to govern, the fact that the individual deeds did not refer to the CC&Rs was not fatal to their enforceability.

If there is no agreement to the contrary, the existence of CC&Rs in the chain of title generally renders title unmarketable and entitles the buyer to withdraw from the transaction. Tandy v Waesch (1908) 154 C 108, 97 P 69. Restrictions imposed by law, however, do not impair title, because the parties are considered to have contracted under applicable law. See Hartman v Rizzuto (1954) 123 CA2d 186, 266 P2d 539 (holding, nevertheless, that facts of case relieved buyer of consequences of rule on restrictions imposed by law). Not all restrictions impair the value of the property—some even enhance value by preventing objectionable use of neighboring parcels.

PRACTICE TIP: To ensure that the CC&Rs are acceptable to the buyer in light of the intended use of the property, the agreement should give the buyer the right, as part of its title review, to decide within a reasonable time whether the restrictions are enforceable and tolerable.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.67 f. Encroachments

An encroachment by improvements (such as buildings, parking lots, or retaining walls) will render title unmarketable whether it is by or on the property in question. See 13 Witkin, Summary of California Law, Equity §56 (10th ed 2005). An accurate survey will disclose the existence of any encroachments. An encroachment on the subject property not only limits the buyer's use but may ripen into a prescriptive easement. Jones v Harmon (1959) 175 CA2d 869, 1 CR 192. Moreover, an encroachment on the subject property exposes the buyer to possible liability for its removal or damages. Brown Derby Hollywood Corp. v Hatton (1964) 61 C2d 855, 40 CR 848. A survey will also disclose whether improvements encroach on easements on the property. The encroachment may violate the terms of the easement or it may be subject to removal by the easement holder.

On title insurance endorsements for encroachments, see California Title Insurance Practice, chaps 7-8 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997).

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.68 g. Adverse Possession

Title by adverse possession may arise in the following forms:

- An attempt by the seller to base title on adverse possession; or
- An asserted interest by a third party adverse to the interest the buyer expects to acquire from the seller.

In California, a title by adverse possession is apparently considered unmarketable and need not be accepted by a buyer. See Gwin v Calegaris (1903) 139 C 384, 73 P 851; Benson v Shotwell (1890) 87 C 49, 25 P 249. The practice of requiring "marketable record title" in the agreement, although it would oblige the seller to reduce the adverse interest to record title, may have the undesired effect of waiving record defects unless title insurance is required. Section 6.1.1 of form 4.174-1 requires the seller to deliver "marketable fee simple title" and procure title insurance. This requirement in effect obligates the seller to reduce title to judgment and record it, and it protects the buyer from other record defects.

Ordinarily, adverse interests do not appear on the preliminary report unless they appeared in a recorded judgment or lis pendens in a quiet title action by or against the adverse interests. The buyer is considered to have taken subject to these interests if an examination of the premises would have revealed them (see §§4.64, 4.71). Therefore the buyer should make a physical inspection of the property and consider obtaining a survey.

An ALTA extended-coverage title policy (and the required survey) will insure against adverse claims by parties in possession. On title insurance protection against adverse interests, see California Title Insurance Practice §3.29, chap 7 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997).

§4.69 h. Mechanics' Liens

Persons who supply labor or materials to improve real property are entitled to a mechanics' lien against the property to secure payment. CC §§3109-3154. See generally California Mechanics' Liens and Related Construction Remedies (3d ed Cal CEB 1998). Such a lien makes title unmarketable. The lien takes its priority as of the date work commences on the project. The contractor must record a lien claim within 90 days after completion of the work if no notice of cessation or completion is filed, or 30 days after recordation of a Notice of Completion or Cessation (60 days if original contractor). CC §§3115-3116. An action to foreclose the lien must be brought within 90 days after the lien is recorded unless the time is extended by a recorded grant of credit. CC §3144. The procedure for cancellation of a mechanics' lien is set forth in CC §3154.

If the preliminary report shows any mechanics' liens or an action to foreclose a mechanics' lien, the seller should be required to clear the lien from the preliminary report. Standard form title insurance covers only matters disclosed by the public record. A buyer should therefore obtain a warranty from the seller that no work has been or will be performed during the 90-day period before the close of escrow and that the seller knows of no mechanics' liens other than those shown on the record. If improvements were completed within 90 days before close of escrow, unrecorded mechanics' liens may exist. If so, a notice of completion should be recorded immediately and close of escrow delayed until the 30-day period for filing lien claims has expired. The CLTA 101.1 endorsement insures the buyer against any liens arising from work referred to in the notice of completion. On the CLTA 101.1 endorsement, see California Title Insurance Practice §§7.88-7.89 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997).

If it is not possible to delay the closing for 30 days or if construction continues to the closing date, other devices are needed to protect the buyer from lien claims. Assuming that the contractor did not post a completion bond for the job before its commencement, the buyer can obtain some protection by requiring the remainder of the construction funds to be deposited in escrow and instructing the escrow holder to pay only on receipt of paid bills and partial or complete lien waivers. See §15.93. Another choice is to leave a fund in escrow for a period after closing to be used to clear any liens that may appear. The lender and the buyer, respectively, are protected for work under construction or completed as of the title policy date by CLTA 101.3 and 101.4 endorsements. The title company may, however, require an indemnity agreement or a bond to ensure payment of claims that may arise. Other endorsements are available that give more limited coverage or apply to unusual situations. On CLTA endorsements 101.3 and 101.4 and other mechanics' lien endorsements, see Title Ins §§7.88-7.89, 8.83-8.84.

See section 4.4 of form 4.172-4 for a seller's covenant to keep the property free of mechanics' liens.

§4.70 i. Matters Discoverable by Inspection

The buyer is charged with constructive notice of matters discoverable by inspection of the property. The usual California Land Title Association policy does not insure the physical location of the parcel or against unrecorded easements or other claims of right that an inspection would reveal. See California Title Insurance Practice §3.8 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997).

PRACTICE TIP: To guard against these hazards, the purchaser should make, or have experts make, a physical inspection of the property. If uncertainties exist about boundaries, encroaching improvements, or similar problems, inspection may not be enough; a survey may be needed. On surveys, see §§4.58-4.59.

E. Leases

§4.71 1. In General

An outstanding lease of any part of the property renders title unmarketable. Dennis v Overholtzer (1960) 178 CA2d 766, 3 CR 193, disapproved on other grounds in Ellis v Mihelis (1963) 60 C2d 206, 221, 32 CR 415. Most agreements, however, provide for assumption of existing leases. Because unrecorded leases do not appear on a preliminary report, inquiries must be made of persons in possession to ascertain the tenants' identities and their rights with respect to the owner. The buyer's counsel must study the leases carefully to ascertain the parties' respective rights. Oil and gas leases are not considered leases but rather a profit à prendre, giving an interest in land. Wolf v Price (1966) 244 CA2d 165, 52 CR 889. For a checklist of due diligence materials the seller must deliver to the buyer in sales of properties with commercial leases, see App C.

For further discussion of leases affecting title to property, see California Title Insurance Practice §§5.14, 6.23 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997).

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.72 2. Purchase Free of Leases

If the seller is to deliver the property free of tenants, and a tenant's lease is expiring, the lease must be reviewed to learn the following:

- When the term ends;
- Whether the tenant has an option to extend, a right of first refusal, or an option to purchase the property; and
- What the tenant can remove from the premises on departure.

If the seller has, or plans to enter into, a lease termination agreement with the tenant, that agreement should also be reviewed.

Timing problems arise if the property is to be acquired free of tenants. On termination and eviction procedures generally, see California Landlord-Tenant Practice, chaps 7-13 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997); Office Leasing: Drafting and Negotiating the Lease §29.7 (Cal CEB 1996); Geyer, Ten Steps to Success in Commercial Evictions, 20 CEB Real Prop L Rep 97 (Apr. 1997). If the tenants are on a month-to-month basis, a 30-day notice is required. CC §1946. If the lease has expired, no notice is needed. CCP §1161(1). If the tenants do not leave, unlawful detainer proceedings (CCP §1161) must be instituted, which may be time consuming. The seller does not want to force out tenants without assurance that the buyer will perform, while the buyer wants possession as soon after closing as possible. The following are possible solutions:

- Placing a sufficient deposit in escrow and removing all other conditions to closing so that the seller feels secure that the buyer will perform, but if the buyer does not, there will be funds to pay damages;
- Closing escrow with the tenants in possession and retaining some of the seller's proceeds to pay the buyer's liquidated damages if the tenants do not vacate on time; or
- Closing escrow immediately, with the buyer having to remove the tenants in return for a reduction in the purchase price.

If tenants are to remain after the closing, the rents should be prorated and security deposits transferred to the buyer.

PRACTICE TIP: The possibility that local rent control or condominium conversion ordinances may limit eviction of residential tenants should not be overlooked. See §6.60. For discussion of such ordinances, see Landlord-Tenant, chap 7.

§4.73 3. Purchase Subject to Leases

Unless a lease provides to the contrary, the landlord may sell the property to another with the leases in place. The buyer succeeds to the seller's position in relation to the tenant without the necessity for the tenant's attornment. See CC §1111; Diepenbrock v Luiz (1911) 159 C 716, 115 P 743. Assignments of leases, however, merit more than a perfunctory preparation by escrow holders. The seller may have either a cause of action for waste that should be assigned to the buyer along with the lease (see Hill v Pinque (1922) 56 CA 245, 204 P 1097) or rights on the land that will not pass without express assignment (see Chipman v Emeric (1855) 5 C 49). Moreover, because the buyer is bound by the seller's interpretation of the leases and by any waivers the seller has made (Doll v Maravilas (1947) 82 CA2d 943, 187 P2d 885), the buyer may need the protection of the seller's warranties or the tenants' estoppel certificates. For these reasons, the buyer should reserve the right either to prepare the assignments or to approve them. For a form assignment of leases, see App I.

If current tenants will remain in possession, the buyer should review all leases and any related documents, such as amendments and correspondence. Counsel should examine and outline the following provisions of each lease:

- Term;
- Rent;
- Renewal rights;
- Inflation adjustment provisions;
- Landlord's right to pass increased taxes and operation costs on to the tenant;
- Any options (e.g., to extend the lease term, to lease additional space, to purchase); and
- Any uncompleted obligations of the landlord to make improvements to the premises under any lease.

An estoppel certificate (see App K for form) should be obtained from each tenant to confirm (1) the basic terms of the lease (including term and rent), (2) the absence of defaults by either landlord or tenant, and (3) the absence of other agreements between landlord and tenant. See form 4.174-1, section 6.1.4, Alternatives 1-2, for provisions requiring the seller to deliver estoppel certificates to the buyer. The certificate estops the tenant from claiming otherwise after the closing. See Evid C §622. The leases should also be checked to determine whether the content of the estoppel certificate has been prescribed in the lease. It is not uncommon for large credit tenants to negotiate the content of the certificate as part of their lease negotiations. In Plaza Freeway Ltd. Partnership v First Mountain Bank (2000) 81 CA4th 616, 96 CR2d 865, a tenant was estopped from contradicting a lease termination date in an estoppel certificate given to the landlord when the landlord bought the building subject to the lease; as a result, the tenant lost its opportunity to exercise an option to extend the term of the lease (under the original lease) because it failed to do so before the termination date in the estoppel certificate.

The buyer should also obtain a letter from the seller to be delivered after the closing, instructing the tenants to pay rent to the buyer. For a form of a letter to tenants, see App L. On considerations applicable in commercial leasing situations, see generally Retail Leasing: Drafting and Negotiating the Lease (Cal CEB 2007); Office Leasing: Drafting and Negotiating the Lease (Cal CEB 1996).

PRACTICE TIP: Buyers and their lenders usually want estoppel certificates dated near the closing to ensure that tenants are not in default at the closing. Sellers prefer to deliver estoppel certificates earlier to eliminate possible grounds for disapproving or modifying the purchase and sale agreement if the estoppel certificates reveal unexpected problems.

Often in multi-tenant properties, the parties agree to accept estoppel certificates from less than 100 percent of the tenants if the seller warrants the information that would have been in the tenant's certificate for the tenants who did not sign an estoppel certificate, but buyers should always require originally executed estoppels for major credit or anchor tenants. This provision should dovetail with the requirements of the buyer's lender, if they are known at the time the provision is drafted. See form 4.174-1, section 6.1.4, Alternatives 1-2.

If there are more than a few simple leases, it is common for the buyer to require the seller to prepare and warrant, as accurate and complete, a rent roll or summary that includes, for each lease, an identification of the rent and other charges such as triple net expenses, the terms and option to extend, and other key information. See form 4.171-1, Alternative 2, section 3.1.7, and form 4.174-1, section 6.1.4, Alternatives 1-2, for provisions requiring the seller to deliver a rent roll. Thus, the buyer can rely on the rent roll before receiving estoppel certificates near the end of the escrow period. Other assurances that could be covered by the rent roll or the warranty in this form are the following:

- No tenant has paid advance rent;
- No tenant has any right of first refusal or any option to lease or purchase the property;
- None of the rents due or to become due under any of the leases will be assigned, encumbered, or subject to any lien at the closing;
- No leasing or brokerage fees or commissions will become due or owing after the closing on any lease in effect on the closing date; and
- Any improvements to be made by the seller that are contemplated under or required by the leases have been completed.

§4.74 4. Agricultural Leases

If the transaction pertains to agricultural land, the buyer should be advised that a tenant holding under an expired lease cannot always be ousted quickly. A tenant of agricultural land who holds over for more than 60 days after expiration of the term, without receiving a demand for possession or notice to quit, can continue in possession for another year on the same terms as the prior year. CCP §1161(2).

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.75 5. Ground Leases

If the buyer is purchasing the tenant's interest in a ground lease, counsel should verify the following:

- The seller can transfer the tenant's interest in the lease;
- There are no defaults under the lease or, if there are, that they have been waived;
- There are no lease provisions that could cause early termination of the lease; and
- There are no provisions calling for removal of improvements from the property at the end of the term.

The nature of any restrictions on the use or subleasing of the property should also be reviewed. Counsel should also ascertain whether the ground lease contains the necessary provisions to enable the tenant to obtain financing on the leasehold. See Nellis, Drafting or Reviewing a Ground Lease to Make It "Mortgageable," 1 CEB Real Prop L Rep 49 (May 1978). The seller must also deliver an assignment approved by the ground lessor (if required by the lease) before the closing. For considerations relating specifically to ground leases, see Ground Lease Practice (2d ed Cal CEB 2009).

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.76 6. Third Party Contracts

The buyer should review all third party contracts relating to the property and its operations, including all service and maintenance agreements (e.g., elevator, janitorial, landscaping, fire protections, parking lot maintenance, security) and asset or property management agreements, to determine whether to continue with such service providers after closing or to seek termination of any of the contracts. The contracts should be reviewed for their term and assignability and, if warranted due to the nature or cost of such service, buyer should meet with or speak to representatives of these service companies. Seller may resist terminating longer term contracts if an early termination fee or buyout will be involved. Contract approval or disapproval generally occurs during the due diligence period and proof of termination of the disapproved contracts becomes a closing condition. See form 4.173-1.

F. Physical Condition of Property

§4.77 1. In General

Of equal importance with the state of title is the physical condition of the property and its suitability for the buyer's intended use. Ascertaining the property's condition may require time-consuming work, such as soil tests, engineering studies, hazardous waste reviews, surveys, and termite inspection. It is important that the buyer have the right to approve the results of this work. If the inspections will take a long time, the buyer may wish to obtain an option to buy and conduct tests during the option period. On options, see chap 8. Buyers usually want to avoid purchasing property on an "as is" basis, while sellers usually prefer to sell on that basis. For an "as is" provision for a seller-oriented form, see form 4.173-5. How this conflict is resolved depends on the parties' needs and negotiating strengths.

A first step in ascertaining physical condition is to obtain all plans, specifications, and reports that have already been done and are in the seller's possession. These plans may reveal conditions that will lead the buyer to decide against purchasing; if they do not, the buyer should have an architect or engineer review the reports and decide whether additional or updated information is needed.

EXAMPLE: Although soil does not usually change, previously conducted soil tests may not be conclusive for the particular buyer, because they may have been performed for a different use, for a different location on the property, or under outdated building codes.

The nature of the property and its intended use will dictate the studies needed. For commercial property, the buyer should retain a structural engineer and such other professionals as the engineer suggests to check not only the structure of the building but also the roof; the electrical, plumbing, heating, air-conditioning, and ventilation systems; the elevators; the condition of exterior and interior glass; and all other components of the building. The engineer should survey the building to learn how it conforms to present or proposed housing and building codes, and outline the work and expense necessary to bring the building up to code. If undeveloped land is being purchased, soil tests need to be made to determine the quality, condition, and suitability of the soil for the intended use. On agricultural land, tests on wells may be needed in addition to inspections of improvements on the property.

NOTE: The presence of fill must be disclosed when raw land is being sold. Massei v Lettunich (1967) 248 CA2d 68, 56 CR 232; Clauser v Taylor (1941) 44 CA2d 453, 112 P2d 661. If the property is already improved, failure to disclose that the buildings stand on filled ground is actionable. Central Mut. Ins. Co. v Schmidt (1957) 152 CA2d 671, 313 P2d 132.

Engineering studies for land development that will affect the flow of surface waters are especially important in view of the holding in Keys v Romley (1966) 64 C2d 396, 50 CR 273, that an upper landowner who changes a natural drainage system may be liable to a lower landowner even if the upper landowner's actions are reasonable. The issue of reasonable or unreasonable use is a question of fact after considering the relevant circumstances, including the amount of harm caused, the ability of the person making the change to foresee the harm, and the purpose for which he or she acted. If both owners acted reasonably, the burden of the damage is generally imposed on the upstream owner. For a discussion of the application of California's modified civil-law rule of reasonable use, see 3 Miller & Starr, California Real Estate §§14:20-14:21 (3d ed 2000). For application of the "reasonable" rule to public entities in inverse condemnation cases, see Locklin v City of Lafayette (1994) 7 C4th 327, 27 CR2d 613; but see Arreola v County of Monterey (2002) 99 CA4th 722, 122 CR2d 38 (in an inverse condemnation action by downstream property owners who were flooded because of state's inadequate maintenance of levee system, public policy required application of strict liability standard rather than reasonable standard).

§4.78 2. Buyer's Inspection Rights

Most agreements give the buyer the right to inspect and test the property; see section 3.5.2 of form 4.171-5. The seller may wish to approve the dates and times of inspections and tests to minimize interference with the seller's use of the property. The requirement that a notice of disapproval must describe the alleged defect with particularity is intended to give the seller an opportunity to cure the defect, if possible. If tenants are on the property, the seller's right to authorize the buyer's entry may be subject to the tenants' rights. In this event, the purchase agreement should set appropriate limitations.

Often, the buyer will agree to deliver copies of any studies in its possession to the seller if the transaction does not close. The information is of no further use to the buyer, but it may be useful to the seller and to future buyers.

The seller should be protected from any liability for costs of the tests as well as damages that may arise, such as injury to persons or property arising from entry onto the seller's property. It is customary for the buyer to include a provision indemnifying the seller for damages or injury. See section 3.5.2 of form 4.171-5.

NOTE: The buyer may want to amend the indemnity to provide that the buyer will not be liable for (1) the buyer's (or its agents') exacerbation of existing conditions if the buyer (and its agents) exercised reasonable care to detect such conditions and avoid further damage or harm, or (2) the results of disclosing any existing conditions or contamination discovered during the buyer's inspections.

The seller may wish to have the buyer's obligations secured by a performance bond to ensure that any mechanics' liens arising from the buyer's work will not become the seller's problem. The seller may also require persons working on the property to carry liability insurance.

PRACTICE TIP: The seller should post and record notices of nonresponsibility within 10 days after work is commenced, as provided by CC §3094. The seller should insist that the buyer's deposit in escrow be large enough to cover any mechanics' liens. If the sale does not close, the seller should require delivery of valid lien waivers from the contractors who worked on the property before the buyer's deposit is returned. The seller can learn which contractors have lien rights from the preliminary notices contractors are required to give under CC §3097.

On mechanics' liens generally, see California Mechanics' Liens and Related Construction Remedies (3d ed Cal CEB 1998). On liability insurance, see generally California Liability Insurance Practice: Claims & Litigation (Cal CEB 1991).

§4.79 3. Structural Pest Control Inspection

Damage caused by termites, dry rot, or fungus can be expensive to repair, and there is no implied warranty that the property will be free of latent defects unknown to the seller. Murphy v Sheftel (1932) 121 CA 533, 9 P2d 568. The buyer should require a property inspection by a company registered with the Structural Pest Control Board before close of escrow. On how to contact the board, see the Directory.

Under CC §1099, the seller must furnish the buyer with a copy of any structural pest control inspection report obtained by the seller if such a report or certificate is either a condition of the contract or a requirement for financing. See also 10 Cal Code Regs §2905.

The issues of which party will choose the pest control inspector, pay for the report, and pay for any remedial or preventive work are all subject to negotiation. A common practice is for the buyer to pay for the inspection and report and for the seller to pay for corrective work. Preventive work benefits the new owner, however, and is usually paid for by the buyer (or credited against the purchase price) if the buyer elects to have it done before closing. Other forms permit the buyer to inspect the property and either accept or reject it without a provision for payment for corrective work.

If the buyer bears the cost of corrective work, or if the seller is to pay and fears that the cost of such work will be great, a provision can be inserted allowing the party paying for the repairs to terminate the transaction if the estimated cost exceeds a certain sum. The seller should always either obtain a report and a price quotation for any corrective work before executing a purchase and sale agreement or should insert a provision limiting the amount of its liability for such work. Even if the seller is willing to pay for the repairs, the buyer may wish to retain the right to terminate if the report indicates that extensive corrective work is required, because corrective work may not eliminate the problem.

If the work is to be completed before the close of escrow, it may be necessary to include a provision extending the closing date if repairs are extensive. An alternative is to provide that, if repairs are not completed by the closing date, an amount equal to the cost of the repairs will be held in escrow to be released when the escrow holder receives a notice of work completed under Bus & P C §8519(b) and the buyer indicates that the work was performed satisfactorily.

If the seller is to pay for any work, a lien waiver from the contractor should be obtained so that title insurance can be issued without a mechanics' lien exception.

§4.80 4. Hazardous Substances

The Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 (CERCLA or "Superfund") (42 USC §§9601-9675), as amended, imposes liability on owners or operators of properties for the cost of remedial action when there is an actual or threatened release of hazardous substances into the environment. The term "hazardous substance" is defined in CERCLA and includes a long list of substances, some of which may be found in common household products.

The buyer's counsel should explain that, by merely purchasing a property, the buyer may become liable for its clean-up costs, even if someone else actually disposed of a hazardous substance on the property. The buyer may be protected from this risk by making "appropriate inquiry" into the condition of the property before acquiring it. If, after appropriate inquiry, the buyer neither discovers nor has any reason to be aware of a hazardous substance on the property, the buyer will be deemed an "innocent" landowner. The risk exists, however, that if a hazardous substance existing on the property was not found, a court would rule that the inquiry was not "appropriate." The buyer's best protection, therefore, is to obtain an environmental report on the property, to investigate the property's historical use, and to provide as a condition of closing that no hazardous substance exists on the property. The buyer will also want to obtain a warranty from the seller that no hazardous substances are on the property. See form 4.173-1, Alternative 1, section 5.1.16. The seller, however, will want to be relieved of future liability on the property once it is sold. See chap 7 for discussion of hazardous substance considerations and illustrative contract provisions.

In addition to federal requirements, Health & S C §25359.7 requires sellers of nonresidential real property to disclose in writing to buyers any hazardous substance that they know or have reason to believe is located on or beneath the surface of the property. Failure to so notify a buyer will subject the seller to actual damages and a fine of up to $5000 for each willful failure to notify the buyer of a release of a material amount of a hazardous substance.

Source: Real Property/California Real Property Sales Transactions/4 The Purchase and Sale Agreement/§4.81 5. Natural Hazard Disclosure Statement

§4.81 5. Natural Hazard Disclosure Statement

The transferor of real property is required to disclose to the transferee whether the property lies within any of the following hazard zones:

- Flood (Govt C §§8589.3-8589.4);
- Fire (Govt C §51183.5);
- Wildlands fire (Pub Res C §4136);
- Earthquake fault (Pub Res C §2621.9); or
- Seismic (Pub Res C §2694).

Generally, disclosure must be made if (1) the transferor, or the transferor's agent, has actual knowledge that the property is within a hazard zone, or (2) the property is shown on a map or list of hazard zones posted at the offices of the county recorder, county assessor, and county planning agency.

In transactions involving either real property improved with one to four dwelling units or the resale of a manufactured home or mobilehome, CC §1103.2 requires that any necessary disclosure be made either (1) by using the form of the Natural Hazard Disclosure (NHD) statement set forth in CC §1103.2(a) or (2) under CC §1103.2(e), by way of a Local Option Real Estate Disclosure Statement delivered in the form set forth in CC §1102.6a. See §6.38. For a copy of the statutory form, see §6.39. If the seller fails to deliver the statement before closing, the buyer may terminate the transaction. 84 Ops Cal Atty Gen 141. After closing, the buyer's remedy is limited to actual damages. CC §1103.13.

In transactions involving purely commercial property or residential property with more than four dwelling units, CC §1103's requirement of use of the statutory form does not apply; nonetheless, natural hazards known to the seller or seller's agent or shown on a list or map maintained by the county must be disclosed. The form in App N was adapted from the NHD form in CC §1103.2(a). Unlike the statutory form, the language in App N contemplates that it will be part of a purchase and sale agreement and characterizes the statements as "disclosures," not "representations." This wording may make it more palatable to commercial sellers, who generally wish to reduce the number of representations they make.

The information required in the NHD Statement is now commercially available. See §6.49.

PRACTICE TIP: Other disclosure requirements may also apply to natural disaster hazards. For example, Govt C §8893.2 requires that the seller or its agent give a copy of the Commercial Property Owner's Guide to Earthquake Safety (described in Bus & P C §10147) to all buyers of any precast concrete or reinforced masonry buildings with wood frame floors or roofs built before January 1, 1975.

See Directory for sources of maps or other information on natural hazards.

§4.82 6. Toxic Mold Disclosure Requirements

The Toxic Mold Protection Act of 2001 (Health & S C §§26100-26156) enacted disclosure and remediation requirements regarding mold in buildings. It requires the Department of Health Services to study the adverse health effects of exposure to molds, develop permissible exposure limits, and establish practical standards to assess the health risk of indoor molds. The department must also establish guidelines for identification of molds and guidelines for remediation. The Act will not take effect until the first January 1 or July 1 that occurs at least 6 months after the department adopts standards under Health & S C §§26103 and 26105, and guidelines under Health & S C §26130. After the department adopts standards under Health & S C §§26103 and 26105 and develops guidelines under Health & S C §26130, sellers and transferors of commercial and industrial real property must provide written disclosure to prospective buyers, as soon as practicable before the transfer of title, of the presence of mold known to the seller if the mold exceeds permissible exposure limits or poses a health threat. Health & S C §26140(a). The same disclosure must be given to prospective and current tenants of commercial and industrial buildings, occupants of buildings owned by public entities, and tenants of residential properties. Health & S C §§26140-26147. In addition, parties to a lease of commercial or industrial property, whether landlord or tenant, must remediate mold in the building or the HVAC systems and investigate for the presence of mold if there is "a condition of chronic water intrusion or flood." Health & S C §§26143, 26145.

The Act specifically provides that nothing in it will limit existing obligations of parties to a real estate contract to disclose material facts affecting the value and desirability of the property. Health & S C §26150(a). As a result, there appears to be a duty to disclose the existence of molds in a building by a seller even before the department adopts the standards and guidelines referred to in the Act.

The department's obligation to conduct the studies and develop the guidelines envisioned by the Act is unclear. The department must implement the Act only to the extent that it determines there are available funds for such implementation. Health & S C §26156.

§4.83 G. Financing

When a buyer is willing to purchase only if acceptable financing can be obtained, the agreement must be conditioned on the buyer's success in obtaining that financing. The condition must be clearly stated to avoid uncertainty. On uncertainty as a defense, see California Real Property Remedies and Damages §4.19 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002). To avoid uncertainties, the following points should be observed in drafting conditions relating to financing (see section 3.6 of form 4.171-6):

- Amount. The buyer should state the minimum loan amount expected. The seller should place a realistic maximum on the amount to be borrowed, especially if taking back a subordinate note.
- Interest. Failure to state the interest rate may amount to a fatal uncertainty. The buyer generally states a maximum.
- Amortization and term of loan. With the loan amount and interest rate set, the amortization period fixes the term of the loan (unless there is a balloon payment at the end of the term) and the size of the periodic payment. See Bruggeman v Sokol (1954) 122 CA2d 876, 265 P2d 575. To avoid ambiguity, the parties should be careful that the periodic payments, duration, amount, and interest rate of the loan are consistent. Loan officers at lending institutions are usually willing to furnish this information. The parties may consider the possibility of an alternative to the conventional fixed-rate note. On amortization, see California Real Estate Finance Practice: Strategies and Forms §§1.74-1.79 (Cal CEB 2000).
- Penalties and fees. Loan fees and penalties for prepayment may be costly and should be made part of the condition. Loan fees are often expressed in points. (A "point" is 1 percent of the loan amount, e.g., 5 points on $50,000 is $2500.) The loan fee effectively reduces the amount of new financing the buyer can obtain, whether it is deducted from the loan or paid by the buyer. On points and loan fees, see Real Estate Finance, chap 1.
- Identity of lender. Buyers generally prefer to borrow from institutional rather than private lenders and include the condition that the loan is to come from an institutional source. Otherwise, a seller might be able to put the buyer in default by showing that the loan could be obtained from a private source. The seller may seek to limit the choice to a specific type of institutional lender, e.g., banks or insurance companies, or a specific institutional lender. On sources of financing, see Real Estate Finance §§1.17-1.24.
- Good faith effort. The requirement, express or implied, of a good faith effort to obtain financing is not satisfied if the buyer unsuccessfully applies to only two banks or fails to apply to a mortgage company after being informed that financing may be available from the latter. Fry v George Elkins Co. (1958) 162 CA2d 256, 327 P2d 905. To obviate litigation on whether the buyer satisfied the obligation to seek financing, it may be wise to spell out the precise steps the buyer is expected to take.
- Time in which to obtain financing. If no time limit is stated, a reasonable time is implied. CC §1657. Because a "reasonable" time may have to be fixed by litigation, it is generally better to set a time within which the buyer believes the necessary funds can be obtained.
- Type of commitment required from lender. The lender or the buyer may require a written loan commitment agreement. On loan commitments, see Real Estate Finance, chap 2.
- Subordination and release provisions. If intended subordination and release provisions are not sufficiently specific, the sales agreement may be unenforceable or subject to litigation after the sale is completed. On these provisions, see §§9.66-9.110.

The buyer's financing condition should encompass two provisions: (1) It should waive the buyer's initial contingency to obtain financing (section 3.6 of form 4.171-6) and provide that the deposit will be paid to the seller as liquidated damages on the buyer's default after receipt of a loan commitment (section 9.2 of form 4.177-2), and (2) it should condition the buyer's obligation to close on funding by the lender at closing (section 6.1.5 of form 4.174-1). If the agreement is conditional only on obtaining a commitment rather than on the loan itself, the buyer risks having the lender breach the loan commitment and refuse to close the loan. The buyer would then be in default, and the seller would have the remedies of the agreement and at law for the default. See Patterson v Marchese (1960) 196 NYS2d 903.

Many commitments are subject to numerous conditions, and some lenders breach their commitment when interest rates increase. The loan itself cannot be made until closing, because the buyer must have title to be able to give the required security of a deed of trust. Construction loans usually require that any needed subdivision be completed (see §4.92), necessary use permits be obtained (see §4.87), and building permits be issued. Whether the agreement is conditioned on closing the loan or on obtaining the commitment may be a matter for negotiation, but most buyers cannot take the risk that the loan will not close.

PRACTICE TIP: The seller may wish to limit the buyer to certain types of lending institutions to avoid speculative loans at high interest rates or inflated appraisals. This problem may be controlled to an extent by the interest rates, loan fee, and other agreed terms. The seller may also want assurances that the buyer cannot use the financing condition as an escape provision.

§4.84 H. Seller's Books and Records

Many aspects of the operation of income property may seriously affect its attractiveness to the buyer. To analyze past operations of the property, the buyer should review the seller's books and records. The list of documents below is not exhaustive; see the checklist of due diligence materials to be delivered by the seller for a property with commercial leases in App C. The information the buyer should review includes these items:

- Books of account;
- Collective bargaining agreements;
- Employment agreements;
- Equipment or service rental agreements;
- Income statements;
- Installment purchase agreements;
- Insurance policies;
- Warranties on equipment, such as heating and air-conditioning units;
- Guard service contracts;
- Maintenance contracts; and
- Management agreements.

Such an examination may expose items such as an air-conditioning system that needs repeated repairs or other unexpected recurring expenses. The buyer should compare these figures with the data presented by the seller's broker to verify that the assumptions on which the buyer based the offer are correct.

The seller may have contractual arrangements for management, maintenance, security, and similar matters that the buyer will want to examine and have the right to approve or disapprove. Contracts for services to the property and collective bargaining agreements affecting persons employed by the seller should be examined to make sure that such agreements are acceptable to the buyer or cancelable within a reasonable time after the close of escrow. If not, the buyer may wish to have the seller arrange to terminate the agreements or adjust the purchase price.

See section 3.1 of form 4.171-1.

I. Use and Development of Property

§4.85 1. In General

The buyer must ascertain that the property is suitable for the intended use. Doing so may require obtaining a study from a space planner or an architect, the results of which may not be apparent when the purchase and sale agreement is signed. One approach is to include a broad approval right in the agreement. Sellers will want to limit the time for giving the approval so that the property is not tied up any longer than necessary. Another approach is to specify the matters the buyer must approve, narrowing the scope of the buyer's discretion. To further limit the buyer, the seller could require the buyer to provide the seller with a copy of the opinions from the listed professional advisers that support the buyer's termination of the agreement.

PRACTICE TIP: When drafting a purchase agreement for a development project, buyer's counsel should take care not to draft a "disguised option" that may fail for lack of consideration. In Steiner v Thexton (review granted Sept. 17, 2008, S164928; superseded opinion at 163 CA4th 359, 77 CR3d 632), the court of appeal held that a purchase contract allowing the buyer, in its sole discretion, to terminate the contract if certain entitlements were not obtained was not an enforceable contract but a "continuing offer to sell," which could be revoked by the seller at any time. The court dismissed the buyer's argument that the $60,000 spent to obtain a parcel split was sufficient consideration. For further discussion, see 31 CEB Real Prop L Rep 117 (July 2008). The California Supreme Court has granted review of Steiner.

§4.86 2. Zoning

Zoning can be crucial to the property's value to the buyer. The buyer should confirm the zoning before waiving its conditions to closing and should confirm that the proposed sale will not affect the zoning or proposed zoning.

If the present zoning appears to permit the intended use of the property, the buyer should make confirmation of the zoning with the zoning authorities a condition of closing and should attempt to obtain a warranty from the seller. See buyer-oriented seller's representations and warranties in form 4.173-1, Alternative 1, section 5.1.2. Sellers usually resist any such warranty, however, leaving the buyer to ascertain what zoning and other governmental approvals are required for the intended use.

Sometimes the buyer's plans for the property will require a change in the zoning or land use designation. Because the property will be of little value to the buyer without a change, the buyer will want to obtain the change before risking its deposit. A change can be obtained in one of three ways:

- By amendment to the zoning ordinance;
- By a variance from current zoning; or
- By a conditional use permit.

On the distinctions among these devices and zoning generally, see California Land Use Practice, chap 7 (Cal CEB 2006). Note that even a change in zoning will not give the buyer a vested right to develop the property in accordance with the change. In general, a landowner acquires a vested right in zoning only by obtaining a building permit and, relying on the permit, by incurring obligations or expending funds for actual on-site improvements. Avco Community Developers, Inc. v South Coast Regional Comm'n (1976) 17 C3d 785, 132 CR 386; Raley v California Tahoe Regional Planning Agency (1977) 68 CA3d 965, 137 CR 699. Under the Development Agreements Law (Govt C §§65864-65869.5), however, a landowner can preserve existing zoning for a period of time by entering into a development agreement with the city or county in which the land is located. See also Santa Margarita Area Residents Together v San Luis Obispo County Bd. of Supervisors (2000) 84 CA4th 221, 100 CR2d 740; §1.89. On development agreements, see California Subdivision Map Act and the Development Process, chap 7 (2d ed Cal CEB 2001).

PRACTICE TIP: The seller may not wish to have the zoning changed if the sale does not close. To limit the chances of being bound by an unwanted change, the seller may require that the applications for the change be worded so that the change will not occur if the sale does not close.

The buyer's commitment to file documents and pay fees fortifies the element of mutuality discussed in §4.3. If time expires before a rezoning determination is made or if the determination is adverse, the agreement can give the buyer an option to cancel or waive the condition. This option is more favorable to a buyer than is automatic termination. See Isaacson v G. D. Robertson & Co. (1948) 85 CA2d 71, 192 P2d 486, in which an automatic termination provision prevented the buyer from waiving the benefit of a zoning provision.

In connection with the rezoning, a seller-oriented provision would - require the buyer to file the rezoning application within a certain number of days after execution of the agreement;

- impose a time limit on each step of the proceeding;
- eliminate the buyer's unilateral right to extend the closing; and
- provide for automatic cancellation of the agreement if the buyer fails to rezone within the stated time period.

Zoning ordinance amendments are considered legislative in nature and must be made by an ordinance approved by the local legislative body. A proposal to adopt a zoning amendment triggers the California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA). Pub Res C §21080. See §§4.94-4.98. On CEQA generally, see Practice Under the California Environmental Quality Act (2d ed Cal CEB 2008). Amendments to zoning laws follow the same procedures as adoption of zoning ordinances (Govt C §65853), i.e., the planning commission must hold a noticed public hearing and submit a recommendation to the legislative body (Govt C §§65854-65855). See People v County of Kern (1974) 39 CA3d 830, 115 CR 67. The legislative body must usually hold a hearing as well. Govt C §§65855-65856. In addition, cities and counties are required to amend their zoning ordinances as they become inconsistent with the applicable general plan, and the amendments must be made within a reasonable time. Govt C §65860(c). See Higginbotham, The Compatibility of Economic and Environmental Objectives in Governmental Decision Making, 5 Pac LJ 92 (1974). Because a rezoning determination is made by ordinance, there is a 30-day referendum period during which the decision can be challenged. Elec C §§9141, 9144 (counties), 9235, 9237 (cities).

Zoning changes in recent years have tended to increase the nature and extent of regulations. Other bases for zoning, such as esthetics or local economic considerations, raise new risks of future zoning changes. See Bohannan v City of San Diego (1973) 30 CA3d 416, 106 CR 333; Van Sicklen v Browne (1971) 15 CA3d 122, 92 CR 786; Burk v Municipal Court (1964) 229 CA2d 696, 40 CR 425. See also Hernandez v City of Hanford (2007) 41 C4th 279, 59 CR3d 442 (disapproving inconsistent language of Van Sicklen and clarifying use of "economic considerations" in zoning determinations).

Local planning maps and general plans contain information on projected changes but do not ensure that no other changes will occur, as noted above. The purchase of property for a valid consideration does not confer on the buyer a vested right in present zoning or against future moratoriums or changes in zoning. Avco Community Developers, Inc. v South Coast Regional Comm'n, supra; Morse v County of San Luis Obispo (1967) 247 CA2d 600, 55 CR 710. For a detailed discussion of vested rights and the Avco decision, see California Land Use Practice, chap 16 (Cal CEB 2006).

§4.87 3. Conditional Use Permits and Variances

On a proper showing, existing zoning restrictions may be modified by variances or conditional use permits. On the distinction between the two, see Van Sicklen v Browne (1971) 15 CA3d 122, 92 CR 786, and Tustin Heights Ass'n v Board of Supervisors (1959) 170 CA2d 619, 339 P2d 914. Both are issuable, not as a matter of right but as a matter of grace, within the discretionary power of the granting authority. Tustin Heights Ass'n v Board of Supervisors, supra. See also California Land Use Practice, chap 7 (Cal CEB 2006).

Conditional use permits are provided for in most zoning ordinances. Typically, such permits provide a way to allow different uses to coexist in a zone on a decision by the appropriate zoning body that the use for which the permit is sought will not be inconsistent with public health, morals, safety, or welfare. This permit is administrative in nature, but it differs from a variance in that it allows uses that are only conditionally permitted under the zoning ordinance. See, e.g., Essick v City of Los Angeles (1950) 34 C2d 614, 213 P2d 492. Under Govt C §65901, either the board of zoning adjustment or a zoning administrator must hear and decide applications for such permits. See California Land Use Practice §§7.10-7.21 (Cal CEB 2006).

In general, variances can be granted only when, because of special circumstances applicable to the particular property (e.g., size, topography, location, shape), strict application of the zoning ordinance would unfairly deprive the subject property of the same privileges enjoyed by other properties in the area that are subject to identical zoning classifications. Govt C §65906. Granting a variance for a use or an activity that is not otherwise authorized by the zoning ordinance is prohibited by §65906 (which apparently does not apply to charter cities). The requirement that special circumstances be shown has led to substantial litigation over the years regarding the approval or denial of variances. See, e.g., Broadway, Laguna, Vallejo Ass'n v Board of Permit Appeals (1967) 66 C2d 767, 59 CR 146; Siller v Board of Supervisors (1962) 58 C2d 479, 25 CR 73; Zakessian v City of Sausalito (1972) 28 CA3d 794, 105 CR 105; Hamilton v Board of Supervisors (1969) 269 CA2d 64, 75 CR 106.

It is now clear that the special circumstances claimed to justify the variance must be such that they make the property different from other property in the same zone. Topanga Ass'n for a Scenic Community v County of Los Angeles (1974) 11 C3d 506, 113 CR 836. Because the statutory standards for a variance require that the strict application of the zoning ordinance would deprive the property of privileges enjoyed by other properties in the same area with the same zoning classification, the court must find that unnecessary hardship would be created if a variance were not granted. See Zakessian v City of Sausalito, supra.

On variances generally, see California Land Use Practice §§7.2-7.9.

§4.88 4. Coastal Development Permits

Coastal development permits may be required for any improvement or modification of property within the coastal zone. California Coastal Act (Pub Res C §§30000-30900). The coastal zone extends seaward to the state's jurisdictional limit, includes all offshore islands, and generally extends inland 1000 yards from the mean high tide line. In certain coastal estuarine, habitational, or recreational areas, it may extend up to 5 miles inland. Pub Res C §30103. If the property is within 5 miles of the shoreline, a prospective buyer should check the map on file with the county clerk to ascertain whether the property falls within the coastal zone. If so, development of the property will be subject to stringent controls under the Act. For example, in California Coastal Comm'n v Quanta Inv. Corp. (1980) 113 CA3d 579, 609, 170 CR 263, the court held that the conversion of an apartment building in the coastal zone into a stock cooperative was subject to the permit requirements of the California Coastal Commission.

PRACTICE TIP: To be assured that the property can be developed, the buyer should insist that closing be conditioned on issuance of a coastal development permit, approval of any conditions in it, and expiration of the time to challenge the permit.

If there is an existing coastal development permit, it is assignable under the procedures in 14 Cal Code Regs §13170, which requires the original permittee's submittal of a request for assignment. The buyer should obligate the seller to cooperate in transferring the permit. For further discussion of the California Coastal Act, see California Land Use Practice, chap 14 (Cal CEB 2006).

§4.89 5. Other Permits

If the buyer's use of the property depends on obtaining a governmental approval, such as a liquor license or a building permit, the buyer will want to obtain it before close of escrow. Issuance of a permit or license does not guarantee that the buyer will be able to develop the property as planned, however, nor does issuance of a building permit vest a buyer's right to build the improvements for which it was issued. The buyer must be able to show detrimental reliance on the permit for the rights to vest. A permit holder without a vested right is subject to any change in the law, including a change made after the date of the permit. See discussion in §4.86. Even if the buyer's rights vest, they are limited to the terms and conditions of the permit and do not go beyond the project described in the approval.

Usually, obtaining a permit is as far as a buyer can go during escrow because sellers generally do not allow a buyer to commence construction before the close of escrow.

Often, governmental agencies require the property owner to sign any applications for governmental permits or changes of the status of the property, such as rezoning or subdivision applications. A buyer who wishes to learn whether the permits and other governmental actions required for the project are obtainable before the close of escrow therefore needs the seller's cooperation. The seller, however, must be certain that no change that might affect future development of the property becomes final before the close of escrow, in the event the transaction does not then close.

§4.90 6. Access

The buyer should review what access to the property is needed to accomplish the purchaser's intended use of the property. If the property is to be used for commercial purposes, access is crucial. The buyer should check the ease of entry to and exit from the property and the capacity and traffic flow of nearby streets. The buyer should also check with local officials to learn whether there are any plans to improve, change, or abandon adjacent streets.

EXAMPLE: The addition of a median in a street can have a significant impact on a commercial development because access from one direction is cut off or limited to specific openings in the divider.

The buyer should also check access from nearby major traffic arteries. Traffic planners generally limit the number of curb cuts for access in an attempt to avoid impairing the traffic flow by cars entering at many points along the highway. Such limitations may or may not be compatible with the buyer's intended use.

Even if the property's intended use is not commercial, the buyer should make sure that access to the property is adequate. If local governmental requirements on emergency access are not complied with, a building permit may be denied.

On title insurance products that cover access, see California Title Insurance Practice §§6.27, 7.13, 7.72-7.73, 8.59-8.60 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997).

§4.91 7. Annexation

When the property is in an unincorporated area, its annexation to a city is often essential to a buyer who wants to be certain that services are available for the intended use. In some counties, water, sewer, and other services are provided by special districts to which the property must be annexed in order to obtain the services.

Annexation is governed by the Cortese-Knox-Hertzberg Local Government Reorganization Act of 2000 (Govt C §§56000-57550) and is subject to the powers of the Local Agency Formation Commission (LAFCO). One purpose of LAFCOs is to discourage urban sprawl and encourage the orderly formation and development of local agencies based on local conditions and circumstances. Govt C §56301.

LAFCO proceedings for annexations may be initiated by petition by 5 percent of registered voters in the territory to be annexed or resolution of the city wishing to annex. Govt C §§56650, 56755(a). Petition requirements are in Govt C §§56700-56711; signature requirements for petitions are in Govt C §§56750-56762. A LAFCO itself may initiate proposals in certain circumstances. Factors a LAFCO must consider in initiating or reviewing proposals are specified in Govt C §56375. A LAFCO cannot disapprove the annexation of territory surrounded or substantially surrounded by a city if certain conditions are met. See Govt C §56375(a).

The seller may be liable for unpaid annexation fees if the buyer defaults after annexation has begun. The buyer may find that additional conditions to annexation require the annexing party to finance new or parallel facilities (such as pipelines), to pay a retroactive prorata share of taxes, or to otherwise share in the city's or district's financial burdens.

PRACTICE TIP: Because annexation conditions vary widely, the buyer's attorney should confer with the executive officer of the LAFCO and the city attorney or district counsel, before negotiating the purchase agreement, to ascertain the scope and nature of conditions likely to be imposed.

Source: Real Property/California Real Property Sales Transactions/4 The Purchase and Sale Agreement/§4.92 8. Subdivision

§4.92 8. Subdivision

The buyer should confirm that the property as it is being sold complies with the Subdivision Map Act (Govt C §§66410-66499.37). The Act requires a final subdivision map or a parcel map for any division of land. A sale, lease, or encumbrance of only a portion of a larger parcel triggers application of the Act. Govt C §66499.30. If the property is described by a lot number on a recorded final map or parcel map, it presumably conforms to the Act. Govt C §66499.35(a), (d). If the property is described in any other manner, further investigation is required to ascertain whether the property conforms to the Act.

Under Govt C §66424, "subdivision" is defined to mean > the division, by any subdivider, of any unit or units of improved or unimproved land, or any portion thereof, shown on the latest equalized county assessment roll as a unit or as contiguous units, for the purpose of sale, lease or financing, whether immediate or future.

Government Code §66412 lists the exclusions to the term "subdivision."

A sale, lease, or financing of real property that has not been divided in accordance with the Subdivision Map Act is prohibited unless the owner first records a final map or parcel map. Govt C §66499.30(a)-(b). A contract for sale, lease, financing, or construction that is expressly conditioned on the approval and filing of a final subdivision map or parcel map is permitted. Govt C §66499.30(e). However, this condition cannot be waived. A contract for the purchase and sale of real property is void at inception if the contract allows the buyer to complete the purchase when a final map is recorded, or waive the recording of the final map. Sixells, LLC v Cannery Bus. Park (2008) 170 CA4th 648, 88 CR3d 235. See also Black Hills Invs., Inc. v Albertson's, Inc. (2007) 146 CA4th 883, 53 CR3d 263. On the Subdivision Map Act generally, see California Subdivision Map Act and the Development Process (2d ed Cal CEB 2001).

If the seller has not complied with the Act, the buyer may void the transaction or sue for damages within 1 year after discovering the violation (Govt C §66499.32), and local agencies are barred from issuing any permit or granting any approval necessary to develop the property (Govt C §66499.34). Failure to comply with the Act does not render title unmarketable, however, and a buyer probably has no right of recovery under a standard title insurance policy (Nishiyama v Safeco Title Ins. Co. (1978) 85 CA3d Supp 1, 149 CR 355), unless the buyer has obtained a subdivision endorsement for its title insurance policy. See also California Title Insurance Practice §§6.23-6.25, 6.38, 11.71-11.72 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997).

If the parties believe that the property is in compliance with the Act but wish to confirm its compliance, they may obtain a Certificate of Compliance under Govt C §66499.35(c) from the local agency that approves maps. The procedures for issuing certificates vary from one jurisdiction to another. Title companies will also issue an endorsement confirming that the property complies with the Act. If compliance may be questioned, this endorsement can be a good investment. See Title Ins §7.95.

When land is purchased for subdivision, the buyer usually wants an assurance that the appropriate governmental agency will approve a subdivision map permitting development. Under the Act, cities and counties have the power to regulate and control the design and improvement of subdivisions, and each city or county must adopt an ordinance regulating and controlling subdivisions whenever state law requires a tentative, final, or parcel map. Govt C §§66411-66411.1. See Friends of Lake Arrowhead v Board of Supervisors (1974) 38 CA3d 497, 113 CR 539, on local supplemental ordinances.

The terms "design" and "improvement," which are the elements of subdivisions that may be regulated by cities and counties, are defined broadly. For example, "design" includes street alignments, grades and widths, drainage and sanitary facilities, easements and rights of way, fire roads, lot size and configuration, access, grading, land to be dedicated for park or recreational purposes, and any other specific requirements that are "necessary or convenient" to ensure conformity to or implementation of the local agency's general plan or any adopted specific plan. "Improvement" includes street work and utilities to be installed by the subdivider, highways, easements, and any other specific improvements or types of improvements whose installation is necessary or convenient to ensure conformity to or implementation of the local agency's general or specific plans. Govt C §§66418-66419. See Subdiv Map Act §5.26; 9

Like other conditions to the agreement, delaying execution of the agreement until approval is obtained requires the buyer to spend money and the seller to withhold the property from the market without assurance to either party that an agreement will eventually be signed. Conditioning the agreement on the governmental agency's approval of a subdivision map acceptable to the buyer permits the buyer to seek that approval before completing the purchase. In general, the buyer may not unreasonably withhold acceptance of the approved map. Rodriguez v Barnett (1959) 52 C2d 154, 338 P2d 907. In practice, agreements often give buyers wide discretion and state minimum numbers of lots, lot sizes, and other conditions that must be met before a buyer will approve a subdivision map. Obtaining approval of a subdivision map is often very time consuming, and the seller may not be willing to wait. On the other hand, the purchase price of the property may be justified in the minds of both parties only after the subdivision is approved. For use of options, see chap 8.

§4.93 9. Williamson Act

The buyer needs to determine whether the property's use is restricted by the California Land Conservation Act of 1965 (Williamson Act) (Govt C §§51200-51297.4), which provides for the establishment of agricultural preserves and the formation of long-term contracts between landowners and local governments to restrict the use of agricultural land to agricultural or compatible uses. Land so restricted is assessed for tax purposes according to its restricted use rather than its development potential free of such restriction. Govt C §51252; Rev & T C §§421-430.5. See also Cal Const art XIII, §8.

With certain exceptions, Govt C §66474.4 requires that an application for a tentative map or parcel map must be denied if the local government finds that the land is subject to a Williamson Act contract and either (1) the resulting parcels following subdivision would be too small to sustain their agricultural use, or (2) the subdivision will result in residential development not incidental to the commercial agricultural use of the land. (For discussion of this provision, see California Subdivision Map Act and the Development Process §9.31 (2d ed Cal CEB 2001).) In some cases, it may be necessary to seek cancellation of the Williamson Act contract before the subdivision can be approved. If written notice of the contract's nonrenewal has been served and the contract will expire within 3 years, the subdivision prohibitions do not apply. See Govt C §66474.4(f).

NOTE: State reimbursements to counties for Williamson Act incentives were eliminated by line item veto in the California state budget for fiscal year 2009-2010. For a website on the state budget, see Directory. Existing contracts remain valid, but lawyers and their clients may wish to assess the probability of the renewal of existing contracts and/or new contracts in the current budgetary environment.

For a discussion of the requirements for canceling Williamson Act contracts, see California Subdivision Map Act and the Development Process, chap 4 (2d ed Cal CEB 2001).

§4.94 10. California Environmental Quality Act

The California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA) (Pub Res C §§21000-21177) was enacted in 1970 to enhance the environmental quality of the state by requiring all governmental agencies to consider qualitative factors and long-term benefits and costs as well as economic and technical factors in connection with proposed projects that the agency intends to carry out or approve. Pub Res C §§21000-21001. Government agencies are barred from approving a project as proposed if feasible alternatives or mitigating measures would substantially reduce the project's adverse environmental effects. If specific economic, social, or other conditions make a proposed alternative infeasible, however, an agency may approve the project as originally proposed. Pub Res C §21002.

On CEQA generally, see Practice Under the California Environmental Quality Act (2d ed Cal CEB 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Real Property Sales Transactions/4 The Purchase and Sale Agreement/§4.95 a. Requirement for Environmental Review

§4.95 a. Requirement for Environmental Review

All state and local agencies must review the environmental impact of any project they propose to carry out or approve that may have a significant effect on the environment. Pub Res C §§21100, 21151.

A "project" is an activity that may cause a direct physical change, or a reasonably foreseeable indirect change, in the environment and that (Pub Res C §21065)

- is directly undertaken by any public agency;
- is supported in whole or in part through contracts, grants, subsidies, loans, or other forms of assistance from one or more public agencies; and
- involves the discretionary issuance of a lease, permit, license, certificate, or other entitlement for use by a public agency.

Only projects that entail an exercise of discretion or judgment by the agency require an Environmental Impact Report (EIR). CEQA does not apply to ministerial acts. Pub Res C §21080; 14 Cal Code Regs §15300.1. Ministerial acts include acts required by law on the occurrence of a certain contingency, such as issuance of a building permit or a business license, approval of a final subdivision map, or a utility connection or disconnection. 14 Cal Code Regs §15268. The issuance of a grading permit is not a ministerial act (Day v City of Glendale (1975) 51 CA3d 817, 124 CR 569), nor is the enactment of a rezoning ordinance (56 Ops Cal Atty Gen 404 (1973)).

"Significant effect on the environment" means a substantial or potentially substantial change in the physical conditions in the area that will be affected by the proposed project, including land, air, water, minerals, flora, fauna, ambient noise, and objects of historic or esthetic significance. Pub Res C §§21060.5, 21068.

Whether a project will have a significant effect on the environment is a question of fact that depends on many factors, some of which are listed in 14 Cal Code Regs Div 6, chap 3, App G (environmental checklist). The courts have held that an EIR should be prepared whenever an agency perceives "substantial evidence that the project may have a significant effect environmentally" or that the project "arguably will have an adverse environmental impact." No Oil, Inc. v City of Los Angeles (1974) 13 C3d 68, 85, 118 CR 34. "Substantial evidence" is now defined to include "fact, a reasonable assumption predicated upon fact, or expert opinion supported by fact." Pub Res C §21080(e)(1). On whether a project will have a significant impact on the environment, see Practice Under the California Environmental Quality Act, chap 6 (2d ed Cal CEB 2008).

Local agencies are required to complete the EIR within 1 year after the date that an application requesting approval of a project is filed and accepted as complete. Pub Res C §21151.5(a). See also Sunset Drive Corp. v City of Redlands (1999) 73 CA4th 215, 86 CR2d 209.

§4.96 b. Exemptions and Negative Declarations

If a project that requires a discretionary governmental approval may have a significant effect on the environment, it will require study under CEQA. Such a study does not necessarily mean that an Environmental Impact Report (EIR) will be required. Before an EIR is begun, the agency conducts an "initial study" to decide whether it is required. No EIR is required if the agency issues (1) a notice of exemption because the property is statutorily exempt from CEQA (Pub Res C §§21080(b), 21080.01-21080.33; 14 Cal Code Regs §§15260-15285) or categorically exempt (14 Cal Code Regs §§15300-15333); (2) a negative declaration because it finds that the project will have no significant effect on the environment (14 Cal Code Regs §§15070-15075); or (3) a mitigated negative declaration because the initial study (14 Cal Code Regs §§15060-15065) identified potentially significant effects on the environment but revisions in the plans or proposals would avoid or mitigate them and there is no substantial evidence that the project, as revised, may have a significant effect on the environment (Pub Res C §21064.5). See Practice Under the California Environmental Quality Act, chap 7 (2d ed Cal CEB 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.97 c. Environmental Impact Reports (EIRs)

If the project is not exempt and potential significant effects on the environment cannot be mitigated, an Environmental Impact Report (EIR) must be prepared. Preparation of an EIR must be considered at a very early stage in development planning. An EIR is required to focus on potential effects on the environment that the lead agency has determined are, or may be, significant and may limit the discussion of other effects to a brief explanation of why they are not potentially significant. Pub Res C §21002.1(e). See Practice Under the California Environmental Quality Act, chaps 8-16 (2d ed Cal CEB 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.98 d. Impact on Buyer

If an Environmental Impact Report (EIR) may be required for a project, counsel should review the case law and Title 14 of the California Code of Regulations on interpreting and implementing CEQA. If it appears that CEQA will require some study of the project, counsel should discuss with the buyer the potential costs and delays. The buyer may not wish to proceed with the purchase without an assurance that the project can be built. An option to buy or a long escrow period may be agreed on to allow the buyer time to comply with the EIR process and obtain an agency ruling on the project before committing to purchase the property. The buyer should remember that obtaining governmental approvals does not guarantee a right to develop, because the approval of an EIR, issuance of a negative declaration (mitigated or not), and a determination that the project is exempt are all subject to a court challenge by any persons who feel they will be harmed by the project.

NOTE: Under CEQA, if a notice of determination is properly filed by the agency after its decision, a short statute of limitations (usually 30 days) applies to actions challenging the decision. Pub Res C §§21108, 21167; 14 Cal Code Regs §15075. J. Failure to Meet Due Diligence Conditions

§4.99 1. Issues Regarding Failure of Conditions

When the buyer objects to the title, physical condition, or use of the property within the approval period, several questions arise, and the agreement should be clear on each point:

- Does the objection terminate the agreement automatically, or does it give the buyer an option to terminate? An automatic termination provision limits each party's flexibility and should be carefully considered before including it. If the agreement does not provide for automatic termination, the party for whose benefit the condition exists may be given an election to waive the defect. See section 6.3 of form 4.174-3 for a provision permitting termination but not requiring automatic termination.
- Does the agreement give one party an obligation or election to cure the defect? For a provision obligating the seller to remove monetary defects in title, see section 3.4.2 of form 4.171-4. For provisions giving the seller an election to remove other title defects (except buyer's failure to obtain financing), see section 3.4.4 of form 4.171-4.
- If the defect cannot be cured, what course of action is open to each party? See section 3.4.3 of form 4.171-4, which gives the buyer the option to waive the defect and purchase the property or terminate the agreement.
- If the agreement is terminated, how is the buyer's deposit returned? See discussion of recovery of buyer's deposit in §4.100.

The same questions should be asked if the condition is for the seller's benefit.

§4.100 2. Recovery of Buyer's Deposit

If the agreement and the escrow, if any, are to be canceled because of the buyer's disapproval of some item or failure of performance of some condition, the buyer's primary concern is the speedy return of the deposit or downpayment. Thus, the agreement should normally provide for repayment to the buyer, which is more readily achieved if the deposit or downpayment was placed in escrow rather than delivered to the seller or its broker. A repayment provision might not operate effectively in practice, however. If a dispute arises, the escrow holder may be unwilling to release the funds without both parties' cancellation instructions (signed after the cancellation) and may interplead the funds, creating an unfavorable situation for the buyer. On the interpleader of disputed funds by the escrow holder, see §15.98.

PRACTICE TIP: To avoid the possibility that a dispute will prevent or delay a refund to the buyer when an agreement is canceled for failure of a condition, the buyer should attempt to make a minimal deposit at the time of executing an agreement (perhaps just enough to cover costs), and make a more substantial deposit when the agreement's conditions are approved. This arrangement postpones the buyer's outlay of funds until the agreement becomes unconditional, and it protects the buyer from having funds tied up in a disputed escrow. See form 4.170-2.

If, in addition to getting the deposit back, the buyer wishes to reserve the right to damages (if a covenant was breached) or specific performance, the buyer should attempt to make this right explicit in the agreement (although a seller would rarely agree to this). Otherwise, the return of the deposit may be interpreted as terminating the agreement. See California Real Property Remedies and Damages §§4.32-4.38 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002). If the agreement is considered terminated, the buyer is prevented from waiving the defect and buying at a reduced price. See also Beverly Way Assocs. v Barham (1990) 226 CA3d 49, 276 CR 240, in which the buyer disapproved some reports and made proposals for restructuring the transaction. After receiving no response from the seller, the buyer wrote to the seller 60 days later, waiving its objections and offering to complete the purchase. The seller canceled the escrow, and the buyer sued for specific performance. The court held that the buyer's letter disapproving the reports had terminated the contract. To avoid such a result, some agreements expressly reserve the buyer's right to waive the defect and buy at a reduced price.

Under CC §1057.3, if a party wrongfully fails to execute the documents necessary to release a deposit after an escrow fails to close by the date specified in the escrow instructions, the injured party can recover the deposit plus a penalty of three times the deposit (at least $100 but no more than $1000) plus attorney fees. The penalty does not apply if the funds are withheld to resolve a good faith dispute. The statute applies only to residential one-to-four-unit property that the buyer intends to occupy.

VII. COVENANTS PENDING CLOSING

A. Leases

§4.101 1. Covenant by Seller to Obtain Estoppel Certificates

In addition to a closing condition requiring the seller to deliver estoppel certificates signed by the tenants of the property being purchased (see §4.73 and section 6.1.4 of form 4.174-1), some buyers also request that the seller covenant to obtain the estoppel certificates (see section 4.10 of form 4.172-10). The reason for the covenant is to make available a claim for damages if the certificates are not delivered, and therefore many sellers resist such a request. One compromise requires the seller to provide seller's certificates representing and warranting the information that would have been provided in the estoppel certificates not delivered by tenants. The result is that the seller guarantees the leases. Sellers then endeavor to obtain estoppel certificates from the tenants, continuing this effort after closing. For sample estoppel certificate, see App K.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.102 2. Limitations on New Leases

The buyer does not want to be bound by a last-minute lease negotiated by the seller, but may also not want to lose either existing tenants who wish to renew their leases or prospective new tenants. Agreements often provide that the seller may enter into new or renewal leases, but the buyer must approve the lease in writing. The seller might also limit the buyer's veto by requiring that it be exercised within a certain number of days after receiving the proposed lease and that the buyer's silence is deemed to be approval. Louison v Yohanan (1981) 117 CA3d 258, 172 CR 602, is an example of a successful suit for damages for breach of a purchase contract clause providing that no changes would be made in existing leases. See form 4.172-1.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.103 3. Seller's Obligation to Terminate Leases

A buyer who is spending material sums of money or making other arrangements in reliance on termination of existing leases at closing may wish to add a covenant that, no later than a certain number of days (e.g., 15) before closing, the seller must obtain agreements from the tenants under which the tenants agree to terminate the leases at closing and add a condition to closing that such agreements be obtained. These provisions give the buyer both a remedy of damages for the seller's breach if such agreements are not obtained and a remedy against the tenants if the leases are not terminated or the tenants do not vacate the premises in a timely manner. See discussion in §4.72.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.104 B. Seller's Operations of Property

When income property is being purchased, such as office and apartment buildings and shopping centers, the economics of the operation can be as important as the physical condition of the property. The buyer may require that the seller continue to collect rent and otherwise continue to operate in the manner that gave the property its value to the buyer. The seller is usually obligated to maintain the property until the sale closes. See form 4.172-3.

Existing agreements (e.g., management and maintenance agreements) may include provisions that they are binding on heirs, successors, and assigns of the owner. Because buyers usually want to make their own arrangements for the property's maintenance and security, the seller should agree to terminate existing agreements before close of escrow at the buyer's request, even though the buyer does not then become the seller's "successor or assign" in buying the property. The seller may, however, be reluctant to terminate contracts until immediately before the close of escrow because of the possibility that other closing conditions may not be satisfied or that the buyer may default. See form 4.172-11.

§4.105 C. Seller's Construction Covenants

It is not unusual for the seller to agree to complete construction of a building or other work in connection with the transaction. If the work is to be done before closing, several conditions should be met, including the following:

- Receipt of the architect's certificate that the project is complete;
- Recordation of a Notice of Completion of the work;
- Confirmation that the final payment was made to the contractor;
- Receipt of a Certificate of Occupancy or its equivalent from the local governmental authority confirming that work under the building permit was completed; and
- Confirmation that the property is free of liens and that the contractor and all subcontractors have supplied lien releases.

PRACTICE TIP: If the seller will complete work after closing, in addition to the matters mentioned above the buyer may want to put part of the purchase price in escrow, pending completion, and may ask for a payment or a performance bond. The buyer and seller must negotiate which party will control the work. This also applies to tenant improvements under construction by the seller at the time of closing, the completion cost of which should be included in the costs and expenses prorated at closing. See §4.133.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.106 D. Insurance

It is important that the parties understand how the insurance on the property is to be handled. First, the seller should covenant to maintain all existing insurance until closing. The maintenance of hazard insurance must be coordinated with the casualty provisions in the agreement. See §4.137 and form 4.172-2. Second, it must be decided whether any insurance will be transferred to the buyer; if so, the costs will need to be prorated in escrow. Usually, hazard insurance can be transferred directly to the buyer. A transfer of liability insurance may be more difficult, especially if the buyer's intended use of the property differs from the seller's, and is rarely done. Transferring insurance is easier if the property is income property and the same tenants remain in possession, because the insurer's risk is not changed.

If the seller has a blanket policy covering the property being sold and other properties, a transfer may not be possible. If the seller does not object to transferring the insurance, the assumption provision gives the buyer the option of assuming the seller's insurance or obtaining its own. The buyer should be required to allow a sufficient number of days before the closing to permit the insurance agent to handle the paperwork. If the borrower is getting a loan, the lender will not fund the loan until it is satisfied that the property has adequate hazard insurance. If the seller is taking back a note for part of the purchase price, the agreement should set forth the seller's insurance requirements. See chap 13 on property insurance generally.

VIII. REPRESENTATIONS AND WARRANTIES

§4.107 A. Purpose

A warranty or representation is an affirmation by the seller of a fact or facts relating to the property. See generally 4 Witkin, Summary of California Law, Sales §§51-78 (10th ed 2005). Failure of a condition in the agreement generally excuses a party's performance, but breach of a warranty entitles a party to damages and possibly rescission. Unless a warranty is also a condition, its breach will not relieve the buyer from the duty to perform, although any damages might be offset against any sums owed by the buyer. See 1 Witkin, Summary, Contracts §§776-778. The purpose of warranties is to force the seller's full disclosure and provide assurances to the buyer on the property's status or condition. Warranties are often heavily negotiated because the parties have competing objectives: The buyer wants protection from unknown risks, while the seller wants to eliminate warranties or at least limit them to necessary disclosures. If the purchase price is low, or if the buyer negotiated a substantial time period in which to conduct a due diligence investigation, the seller may be unwilling to give more than minimal warranties. For a buyer's form of seller's warranties and representations, see form 4.173-1, Alternative 1; for a seller's form of seller's warranties and representations, see form 4.173-1, Alternative 2.

In a major acquisition, the buyer should request at least the following warranties from the seller:

- There is no litigation arising from or affecting the property;
- There are no known violations of codes or other regulations and no pending zoning changes;
- The seller has disclosed to the buyer all leases, amendments to leases, building service contracts, and similar documents affecting the property;
- There is no violation of any hazardous materials laws; and
- The seller is authorized to enter into the agreement.

Representations and warranties are very negotiable. The extent to which a buyer can obtain extensive warranties or a seller can resist a buyer's demands depends, of course, on the market for properties like the one in question at that particular time. In periods of high demand, sellers can often resist giving extensive warranties.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.108 B. Limitations on Warranties

A warranty can take different forms, based on the standard of knowledge to which the seller will be held:

- An absolute warranty has no limitation.
- A warranty made "to the best of seller's knowledge" includes what the seller actually knows plus what he or she should have known after a reasonable investigation.
- A warranty of the seller's "actual knowledge" includes only matters that the seller actually knows. It does not include matters that the seller might suspect or that, after reasonable investigation, could be learned.

PRACTICE TIP: A seller may want to limit the "actual knowledge" warranty to matters on which he or she has received written notice, such as threatened condemnation or notice of required seismic work. The seller may further limit this actual knowledge warranty by indicating that it means the knowledge of specified persons only, and that the actual knowledge of the seller (or a specified person) does not require any investigation or inquiry. This limitation is especially desirable when the seller is a large organization such as a bank; it may also benefit the buyer, who is thus informed of the knowledge of key persons. See form 4.173-1, Alternative 2, section 5.1.8, for a definition of "seller's knowledge."

§4.109 C. Survival of Warranties

Absent fraud, mistake, agreement, or other special circumstances, the buyer's acceptance of the deed at closing results in a merger of prior negotiations and agreements, and discharges the seller's obligations. The buyer's rights are then measured solely by the deed. Bryan v Swain (1880) 56 C 616; Burnand v Nowell (1948) 84 CA2d 1, 189 P2d 796. Both of these cases appear to be based on the buyer's intent in accepting the deed. However, matters collateral to the conveyance (i.e., those that ordinarily do not become part of the deed) are not merged (Stiles v Bodkin (1941) 43 CA2d 839, 111 P2d 675 (agreement to put in streets)) and, because they survive, may sometimes support an action for damages (Christensen v Slawter (1959) 173 CA2d 325, 343 P2d 341 (agreement on time of delivery)).

The merger often diminishes the seller's obligations because an ordinary grant deed is accepted without an agreement that the covenants or warranties in the purchase agreement survive closing. For covenants of title implied in a grant deed, see §§12.5-12.7. Although one solution to the merger problem is to make sure that the deed contains the necessary covenants and warranties, warranty deeds are seldom used in California. To prevent an inadvertent diminution of rights, the buyer should insist that the agreement provide that the covenants and warranties survive delivery of the deed. For a survival of warranties provision, see form 4.173-4. When the parties agree that only certain warranties will survive the closing, the provision may be drafted to include only obligations on which there is agreement. When warranties will not survive the closing, the buyer should use conditions instead and rely on investigation before the sale closes.

PRACTICE TIP: The seller will wish to limit the duration of the warranties. This can be a highly negotiated point, but a fairly common survival period for warranties on existing buildings is between 6 months and 1 year—and longer for new construction. The seller may also wish to impose a monetary limit on its liability for warranty claims. See form 4.173-4.

Deciding an issue of first impression under California law, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit concluded that a provision in a purchase agreement permitting the parties' representations and warranties to survive closing for 1 year did not also serve as a contractual statute of limitations because the provision did not unambiguously state the parties' intent to contractually reduce the applicable statute of limitations to 1 year. The survival clause merely prescribed the period of time during which a breach could occur; it did not shorten the time to file an action for breach of warranty. Western Filter Corp. v Argan, Inc. (9th Cir 2008) 540 F3d 947.

§4.110 D. Trend Toward Limited Warranties

Modern contracts tend to have few representations and warranties by the seller. One reason for this trend is that many institutional owners of real estate, such as pension funds, take the position that giving warranties will jeopardize the assets of the investor and may be a breach of their fiduciary duty. Because many properties are owned by single-asset entities, with no recourse to the beneficial owner absent fraud, warranties are often of little benefit once the entity disburses the purchase price to its owners. As a result, many contracts are made in which the seller freely grants conditions to the buyer's obligation but limits its warranties to a warranty of authority to enter into and perform the agreement and a warranty of an absence of litigation.

E. Typical Subjects for Seller's Warranties

§4.111 1. Title

The buyer might want to include both a warranty and a condition regarding title, because standard California Land Title Association (CLTA) title insurance does not cover matters that do not appear on the public record but that could be ascertained by inspecting the property or inquiring of persons in possession. A warranty is a supplement to a condition regarding title, but it is not a substitute. On CLTA title insurance policies, see California Title Insurance Practice, chaps 6-7 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997).

If the agreement includes a title warranty, the most important warranty the seller can make is that there are no off-record items that would affect title. Such a provision prevents the seller from remaining silent on any title defects of which he or she is aware. The warranty could also extend to defects of which the seller may be unaware. Moreover, defects such as encroachments are difficult to detect without surveying the property, and the buyer may not want the expense of a survey. See section 5.1.14 of Alternative 1 of form 4.173-1 for a warranty on title. On title insurance coverage generally, see Title Ins, chap 6.

The implied covenant against encumbrances under CC §1113 is not breached by visible easements that are a physical burden on the land; therefore, a warranty that there are no easements on the land other than those shown on the preliminary report should be included among those that survive delivery of the deed if the buyer does not obtain both a survey and an ALTA extended-coverage title insurance policy. If the seller intends to encumber the property with an easement, deed of trust, or otherwise, that fact should be stated. Unlike the rule on visible easements, unrecorded leases, even when known to the buyer, constitute encumbrances under §1113. Evans v Faught (1965) 231 CA2d 698, 42 CR 133.

PRACTICE TIP: Sellers should avoid broad representations that assets conveyed are free from encumbrances. Even a seller who does not act negligently may be liable for misrepresentation if an encroachment impairs the buyer's use of the asset. Quality Wash Group V, Ltd. v Hallak (1996) 50 CA4th 1687, 1694, 58 CR2d 592.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.112 2. Physical Condition of Property

Buyers often ask sellers to warrant that the property is in good condition and repair, that no undisclosed defects exist, that the building is of a certain minimum size, and that the land contains a certain number of acres or square feet. Often the buyer's request covers all the subjects covered in the discussion in §§4.77-4.82 on the buyer's due diligence regarding the property's physical condition. The buyer seeks such warranties to force the seller to disclose defects and to guarantee the size of the property in question. Sometimes buyers request the warranties to avoid the expense and inconvenience of conducting extensive due diligence or obtaining a survey.

NOTE: Representations and warranties relating to the environmental condition of the property have become increasingly important. Very few commercial purchase agreements are silent as to the presence or absence of hazardous materials on, in, under, or around the property. See §4.80. See form 4.173-1, Alternative 1, section 5.1.16 (buyer's form) and Alternative 2, section 5.1.6 (seller's form) for purchase agreement provisions and chap 7 for a detailed discussion on hazardous waste considerations (including alternative purchase agreement provisions).

Sellers frequently respond that the buyer is responsible for conducting its own due diligence. The seller will make its books and records available to the buyer for inspection but will not warrant either the physical condition or the size of the property. Compromise positions often involve limiting the seller's warranties as discussed above. Moreover, the seller is obligated to disclose material facts about the property that would not be apparent to a buyer on an inspection, if those facts are known to the seller. See §4.49. Of course, any misrepresentation by the seller is actionable. See, e.g., Cory v Villa Props. (1986) 180 CA3d 592, 225 CR 628.

Care must be taken to avoid ambiguities about what is included or excluded in the area of the property. One solution is for the seller to give a warranty on the area of the property and state what is excluded in computing the area. If the purchase price is not computed using a formula based on area and if there is no representation setting out the area, the buyer who discovers after the closing that the size of the property is less than he or she believed has no cause of action against the seller. Cory v Villa Props., supra. Some sellers refuse to give such a warranty and insist that the buyer obtain a survey that establishes the area of the property as part of the buyer's due diligence investigation.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.113 3. Zoning

A buyer who does not intend to change the use of the property may request a warranty by the seller that the property and all uses on it comply with existing zoning and that all necessary zoning and use permits have been obtained. The seller will wish to limit any warranty to the existing zoning classification, without broadening the warranty to describe the specific uses covered by the zoning classification. In any event, the buyer's attorney should examine the zoning law and confer with the applicable zoning department to ascertain the property's available uses, bearing in mind the possibility of future zoning changes. In addition, the buyer could obtain a zoning endorsement to its title insurance. On zoning, see §4.86. See also California Title Insurance Practice §§6.36, 7.97-7.99, 8.101 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997).

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.114 4. Subdivision Map Act Compliance

As noted in §4.92, the buyer will want to confirm that the property as it is being sold complies with the Subdivision Map Act (Govt C §§66410-66499.37). Because the seller is in a better position to know the history of the property, the buyer will want a warranty that the property complies with the Act. The seller, however, will prefer that the buyer rely on a certificate of compliance (under Govt C §66499.35(c)) or a title insurance endorsement (see California Title Insurance Practice §7.95 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997)), as described in §4.92. For a provision warranting that the property complies with the Act, see form 4.173-1, Alternative 1, section 5.1.2. If the buyer is purchasing the property to subdivide, a warranty of the property's compliance with the Map Act in its existing condition may still be appropriate. On the Map Act generally, see California Subdivision Map Act and the Development Process (2d ed Cal CEB 2001).

PRACTICE TIP: If the property is being purchased for development, the buyer will want to obtain warranties from the seller that there are no restrictions on such development except as disclosed in recorded documents (such as a development agreement), the tentative map or vesting tentative map, environmental documents (such as the environmental impact report), or other documents provided by the seller to the buyer during its due diligence. See form 4.173-1, Alternative 1, section 5.1.12.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.115 5. Violation of Other Governmental Requirements

The buyer often seeks warranties protecting against violations of law that affect the property or its use. One kind of protection is a warranty that no violations exist. There can be many variables in negotiating this provision. For example, a provision favorable to the buyer might require the seller to cure all violations or indemnify the buyer against claims, liabilities, damages, legal fees, and expenses incurred by the buyer because of violations. In response, the seller may wish to, e.g.:

- Condition the seller's obligation on notification by the buyer within a limited time after discovery of the violation;
- Limit the seller's obligation to violations officially noted in governmental records;
- Limit the warranty to violations in existence at the time of execution, rather than at closing, to prevent the buyer from bringing an enforcement action as a defense to the contract;
- Allow the seller to have the violation dismissed of record rather than curing it;
- Limit the warranty to violations known to the seller;
- Require the buyer to share the expense of curing violations; or
- Limit the cost of curing violations to a fixed amount or to the damage that would otherwise result.

An alternative is a warranty that the seller has no knowledge of (or that seller has not received a notice of) a violation or an order of an applicable governmental authority requiring performance of any repair or improvement, a notice of condemnation, or a notice from a governmental agency or a board of fire underwriters that the property does not comply with current codes or building standards.

In addition to the seller's warranty on the state of the property on the sale date, the buyer will want to know whether any governmental agency is taking any action that would affect the property in the future, including any pending or threatened condemnation or assessment. See form 4.173-1, Alternative 1, section 5.1.9. The seller is in the best position to know of such actions because the property owner must be notified at some stage of the proceeding. The seller will not want to give a warranty as broad as that, because the seller either may not know of such matters or, if the seller did receive notice of a proceeding, may have forgotten or misplaced it. One way to reduce the scope of the warranty is to limit it to the seller's actual knowledge. See form 4.173-1, Alternative 2, section 5.1.8.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Real Property Sales Transactions/4 The Purchase and Sale Agreement/§4.116 6. Litigation

§4.116 6. Litigation

The buyer must know whether litigation affecting the property is pending. Such litigation may include, e.g.:

- Mechanics' lien foreclosure actions;
- Unlawful detainer actions (if the seller is transferring a tenant's interest in a ground lease, such an action could eliminate the estate being transferred); and
- Actions by governmental agencies for violations on the premises.

The preliminary report should show if a notice of pending action (lis pendens) involving litigation affecting the property has been recorded and properly indexed. Under former CCP §409.9, anyone who entered into a contract to transfer an interest in real property and who received a notice of lis pendens concerning the property was required to notify prospective transferees of that notice within 3 days. That requirement was not incorporated into the replacement legislation (CCP §§405.20-405.24). To avoid claims of misrepresentation or concealment by prospective transferees under a contract, it would still be prudent, however, for the transferor of any interest in the property to notify transferees of its receipt of a notice of pendency of action. See California Real Property Remedies and Damages §13.16 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002). Moreover, because the buyer's knowledge of such actions is crucial and the information may not otherwise be easily discoverable, most agreements contain a warranty by the seller regarding litigation. The warranty may be limited to the seller's knowledge, but it often includes the threat of litigation in addition to pending litigation. See form 4.173-1, Alternative 1, section 5.1.6.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.117 7. Books, Records, Leases, and Contracts

The buyer will ask the seller to confirm that all material books, records, leases, contracts, and reports on the property have been delivered to the buyer. For buyer's form, see form 4.173-1, Alternative 1, section 5.1.3. For seller's form, see form 4.173-1, Alternative 2, section 5.1.1.

In particular, the buyer needs to know whether he or she will acquire any contractual obligations by purchasing the property. Many buyers will request a warranty that no undisclosed agreements exist or, if they do, that the seller must compensate the buyer for any liability incurred under them. Some buyers request an assurance from the seller that all documentation delivered to the buyer is accurate; many sellers resist giving such a warranty and state only that accurate copies were delivered.

The buyer also wants to know whether the seller is in default under any leases or other agreements, such as easements, declarations of covenants, conditions, and restrictions, deeds of trust, management or maintenance contracts, or agreements relating to the development of the property or to provide utilities. The seller's default under a lease may entitle the tenant to terminate the lease or withhold rent. A default by the seller under a deed of trust may entitle the lender to accelerate the loan. A requirement that the document be inspected might be enough to satisfy and protect the buyer, but in other cases the buyer may request an estoppel certificate from the other party to the agreement.

§4.118 8. Authority

If the seller is an entity, it will customarily represent that it was duly formed and is duly authorized to enter into and perform the agreement. For buyer's form, see form 4.173-1, Alternative 1, section 5.1.13. For seller's form, see form 4.173-1, Alternative 2, section 5.1.1.

§4.119 F. Typical Buyer's Warranties

Only a few warranties are appropriate for a buyer. If the buyer is an entity, for example, it would be appropriate to warrant that it has been duly organized and is duly authorized to enter into and perform the agreement. See section 5.2.1 in form 4.173-2. Some sellers insist on a warranty that the buyer is financially able to perform under the agreement, and many sellers request that the buyer represent that it is not involved in any litigation affecting the property or the transaction.

Since the enactment of the Uniting and Strengthening America by Providing Appropriate Tools Required to Intercept and Obstruct Terrorism Act of 2001 (USA Patriot Act) (Pub Law 107-56, 115 Stat 272), buyers are often required to provide "anti-terrorism" representations and warranties. Executive Order 13224 prohibits, among other things, transactions in real property with any person identified as a "Specially Designated National" or blocked person. A list of Specially Designated Nationals is published by the Department of the Treasury, Office of Foreign Assets Control (OFAC) and can be found on their website. See Directory for site. Violation of the order carries both civil and criminal penalties, including civil penalties of up to $1 million per violation, as well as jail terms of up to 10 years for individual violators. 31 CFR §501.701.

Sellers should exercise diligence in determining that the buyer is not a Specially Designated National or blocked person. It is advisable to include a representation and warranty to such effect in the purchase agreement. A seller should not rely, however, on the representation alone. A seller (or seller's counsel) should compare the purchaser's identification with the OFAC's list. In the event of a possible match, the seller should evaluate the quality of the match and contact the OFAC's Compliance Programs Division at 1-800-540-6322. From the buyer's perspective, the buyer will want the representation to be narrow in scope, i.e., based on an "actual knowledge" standard or applicable only to itself or, if an entity, to those persons controlling the entity such as members, partners, or shareholders of a privately held corporation. See sample provision in section 5.2 of form 4.173-2.

§4.120 G. "As Is" Provisions

If the seller does not want to make warranties on the condition of the property and if market conditions allow that advantage, an "as is" provision, which puts the entire burden of ascertaining the condition of the property on the buyer, may be used. See form 4.173-5. An "as is" provision does not excuse a seller from disclosing hidden material defects known to the seller. Failure to disclose such matters constitutes fraud, and the "as is" provision applies only to visible, observable matters. Lingsch v Savage (1963) 213 CA2d 729, 29 CR 201. See also Katz v Department of Real Estate (1979) 96 CA3d 895, 158 CR 766. Furthermore, an "as is" provision does not exempt a seller from other disclosure requirements imposed by statute, such as CC §§1102-1102.17 and Health & S C §25359.7. Any waiver of the requirements of CC §§1102-1102.17 is void as against public policy. CC §1102(c). This law supersedes language in Loughrin v Superior Court (1993) 15 CA4th 1188, 19 CR2d 161, that the Transfer Disclosure Statement for one-to-four-unit residential property can be waived if the waiver is done knowingly and explicitly. See §6.8.

IX. CLOSING CONDITIONS

§4.121 A. Purpose of Closing Conditions

There are two sets of conditions in typical purchase agreements: First are the buyer's due diligence conditions; once those conditions are satisfied, the buyer risks losing its deposit and being subject to the seller's other remedies if the buyer defaults. Second, after the buyer's due diligence conditions have been met, agreements customarily include conditions to the obligations of both buyer and seller to close under the agreement.

B. Typical Buyer's Conditions

§4.122 1. Title Insurance

Although the buyer will have approved the state of title during its due diligence investigation (see §§4.50-4.69), its obligation to purchase the property should be subject to an express condition that it obtain title insurance as of closing in the form approved. There is no implied obligation of the seller to provide or pay for title insurance and no implied condition to the buyer's obligation to purchase the property that title insurance be issued. Easton v Montgomery (1891) 90 C 307, 27 P 280; Seymour v Shaeffer (1947) 82 CA2d 823, 187 P2d 95, disapproved on other grounds in Ellis v Mihelis (1963) 60 C2d 206, 216, 32 CR 415. The agreement should expressly provide for it. See section 6.1.1 of form 4.174-1. Payment of the title insurance premiums, however, is a matter of negotiation between the parties; see §4.134.

On the available forms of title insurance, see California Title Insurance Practice, chaps 6-7 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997). The amount of coverage is customarily equivalent to the purchase price, although this may vary. On endorsements, see Title Ins §§7.64-7.103A (owner's endorsements), 8.50-8.118 (lender's endorsements). On selection of a title insurance company, see §4.53.

If the buyer believes that personal property may be encumbered, it should require a UCC search as part of the escrow to discover what encumbrances exist and require the escrow holder to pay the encumbrances at closing. See §4.33. On UCC filings generally, see Secured Transactions in California Commercial Law Practice, chap 3 (2d ed Cal CEB 2001).

If the majority of the seller's assets are being sold, the bulk sales requirements of Com C §§6101-6111 may have to be satisfied.

§4.123 2. Other Conditions

Other typical conditions for the buyer include the following:

- Seller will deliver the documents as required by the agreement (see section 6.1.6 of form 4.174-1);
- Seller's representations and warranties will be true at closing (confirmed by delivery of a certificate) (see section 6.1.3 of form 4.174-1); and
- Seller will perform other obligations (such as delivery of estoppel certificates or completion of construction) at or before closing (see section 6.1.4 of form 4.174-1).

For form of buyer's closing conditions generally, see section 6.1 of form 4.174-1.

§4.124 C. Typical Seller's Conditions

Typical seller's conditions are the following:

- Buyer will deliver the purchase price (see section 6.2.2 of form 4.174-2) and any prorated amounts due from buyer (see §4.133);
- Buyer will deliver all required documents (see section 6.2.3 of form 4.174-2); and
- Buyer's representations and warranties will be true at closing (see section 6.2.4 of form 4.174-2).

For form of seller's closing conditions generally, see section 6.2 of form 4.174-2.

§4.125 D. Releases and Waivers by Buyer

Some sellers request that the buyer waive all claims regarding the property and release all claims against the seller. Such provisions are always highly negotiated. These waivers usually exclude warranties that survive closing, covenants in the grant deed, other obligations of the seller that the parties agree should survive closing (such as indemnity obligations), and claims based on fraud or misrepresentation.

Waivers and releases of claims based on the presence of hazardous substances on the property are often included in the agreement. Sellers take the position that all facts regarding the property that were disclosed to or found by the buyer are reflected in the purchase price, including the presence of any hazardous substances.

The seller remains liable for failure to disclose material facts known to it, and the buyer takes the risk of unknown and undiscovered matters. See form 4.173-6.

§4.126 E. Closing Subject to Another Transaction

For various reasons, one party may not wish to complete the transaction without some other transaction occurring. The contractual solution in virtually all cases is to condition the other party's performance on the occurrence of the other transaction. The protection for the opposing party is to place time limits on various steps in the completion of the other transaction and to be given evidence of completion of those steps. A carefully negotiated agreement would provide the following:

- The party in whose favor the condition runs must enter into the contract for the other transaction by a given date —otherwise, either party may terminate the agreement;
- The party in whose favor the condition runs must complete due diligence in the other transaction by a given date, with mutual termination rights for failure; and
- The other transaction must close either simultaneously with the subject transaction or before it is scheduled to close.

Opposing parties sometimes request that the party imposing the condition also agree to enter into and perform the other transaction, which would give a right of damages if breached. Most parties resist this requirement.

Examples of transactions subject to the closing of another transaction are described in §§4.126-4.131.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.127 1. Simultaneous Exchange

The most common factual circumstance in which closing is subject to another transaction occurs when a seller wishes to engage in a simultaneous three-way exchange under IRC §1031. The seller wishes to defer gain on disposition of its property by exchanging it for another property that it wishes to acquire. Two-party exchanges, in which the seller and the buyer exchange properties they own, are extremely rare. More often, the seller locates the property it wishes to acquire (the "target property") and then structures the transaction as a three-way exchange. The theory is that the buyer buys the target property and exchanges it for the property being disposed of by the seller. In fact, parties conduct the three-way exchange in a single escrow: The buyer places its purchase price in escrow, the seller provides a deed to the buyer for the seller's property, and the owner of the target property provides a deed to the seller for the target property and receives the cash consideration. Subject to adjustment for receipt or payment of cash by the seller or relief of mortgage indebtedness by the seller, the seller's recognition of gain for federal and state income tax purposes is deferred until the target property (or its replacement property) is sold. After the transaction, the cost basis of the target property will be the cost basis of the property disposed of by the seller.

The risk for the buyer is that the purchase of the target property may not close. In addition, sellers often have not selected a target property before the sale of the seller's property to the buyer is ready to close. For these reasons, sellers more often engage in delayed or deferred exchanges (discussed in §4.165). See generally IRC §1031; Treas Reg §1.1031(k)-1; Real Property Exchanges (3d ed Cal CEB 2002).

To protect itself in a simultaneous exchange, the buyer should require the seller to identify the target property within a given time, enter into an agreement to acquire the target property or exchange it by a given date, complete due diligence by a given date, and agree to close that transaction at the same time as the primary transaction. The buyer will also insist that the seller indemnify the buyer for any costs or expenses in connection with the exchange. The buyer will attempt to insist that its acquisition of the seller's property proceed whether or not the exchange occurs, but the seller will usually reject such a requirement because it would incur tax, which the seller is attempting to avoid. For the same reason, a seller would permit the agreement to include conditions in favor of the buyer as discussed in §§4.122-4.123, but it would not include covenants that would give the buyer a remedy for damages or specific performance.

For an accommodation provision for a tax-deferred exchange, see form 4.178-15.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.128 2. Multiple Sellers

If the property being sold is owned by multiple owners with undivided interests, whether tenants in common or joint tenants, the best approach for the buyer is to enter into a single agreement with all owners. Often, the owners' signatures should be obtained with counterpart signatures. For a counterpart signature provision, see form 4.178-14.

When it is not possible for the buyer to enter into a single agreement with all owners of undivided interests, the buyer must enter into several agreements, all conditioned on each other. Each seller may want various deadlines to be met for waiver of due diligence conditions and closing, and all deadlines should be coordinated. The buyer should insist that if it terminates one agreement, for whatever reason, it may terminate all the agreements, and if any seller terminates one agreement, the buyer may terminate all other agreements. A seller may object to such interdependence of multiple agreements. A buyer would note that the better solution, a single agreement, cannot be achieved, owing to the lack of cooperation among the sellers. As a result, in most situations the sale can proceed on no basis other than interdependent conditions among the several agreements. Each seller will want the right to terminate its agreement if conditions are not met by a set date.

§4.129 3. Removal of Title Defect

If a title defect exists that must be removed as a condition of closing, often the party removing the condition must enter into an agreement with the holder of the right in question in order to correct the defect. Examples of removing such defects include the following:

- Purchasing an easement encumbering the property;
- Terminating a right of surface entry held by the owner of the mineral rights under the property; or
- Acquiring an undivided interest held by an uncooperative owner.

Sometimes the seller must remove the defect in order to entice the buyer to purchase the property at the negotiated price. In strong sellers' markets, the buyer might take responsibility for removing the defect. Either way, the party removing the defect must enter into an agreement with a third party and agree to pay the necessary consideration.

All the issues of timing discussed in §4.126 apply to this situation. In some cases, a buyer may not agree to start its due diligence until the seller has entered into an agreement to remove the defect (which itself would be subject to the condition that the buyer close the transaction to purchase the property). Negotiation of such ancillary transactions are often time-consuming and should be provided for in drafting the purchase agreement. Buyer's counsel may (1) make buyer's obligations under the purchase agreement contingent on the seller's entering into an agreement to remove the defect (section 3.4.3 in form 4.171-4), or (2) make buyer's obligation to close conditioned on seller's removal of the defect at or before closing, or both (section 6.1 in form 4.174-1).

§4.130 4. Purchase of Additional Property

A buyer's purpose in purchasing the subject property can often be fully realized only by acquiring additional property. Examples include adjoining property that is necessary to complete the assembly of the parcels required by the buyer or an easement needed for access. Depending on the circumstances, the additional property, easement, or other interest can be acquired by either the buyer or the seller. In any event, the condition in the purchase agreement must state the date when an agreement will be entered into with respect to the other property, when due diligence will be completed on the other property, and when the other transaction will close. Often, a buyer will insist that its due diligence period under the main agreement not expire until an agreement is entered into with respect to the other property and due diligence has been completed. The buyer will also want the right to approve due diligence matters on the other property.

Closing under both agreements is often simultaneous. The seller will insist that a strict timetable be followed, with a cancellation right if it is not. If the seller is to acquire the other parcel or interest, the considerations are similar.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.131 5. Sale of Another Property by Buyer

Frequently, the buyer must sell a property it owns in order to purchase the property in question. This situation occurs most often in residential transactions, but it can also occur in commercial transactions. A likely circumstance in a commercial transaction is the acquisition of property by a user to house its business. In a strong sellers' market, a seller will refuse to permit a condition to the agreement that a third property be sold by the buyer. In other markets, the seller will permit such a condition, but require that a contract for the sale of the other property be entered into by a set date, that due diligence conditions be waived by the buyer of the other property by a set date, and that the closing of both transactions also occur by a date set in the agreement.

X. ESCROW AND CLOSING

§4.132 A. Closing Through Escrow

Virtually all California real estate transactions close through an escrow. Purchase agreements often serve as joint escrow instructions to the escrow holder, although in complex commercial transactions supplemental escrow instructions (often executed jointly between buyer and seller) are usually required. A lender will also require its own form of supplemental escrow instructions relating to the disposition of the loan proceeds and recordation of its security documents. Escrows and closing are discussed in chap 15.

The purchase agreement should state the intended closing date, the last date to close, the documents and funds that will be exchanged at closing through escrow, and the other actions to be taken at closing. For form of escrow instructions within the purchase agreement, see forms 4.175-3 through 4.175-10 under Article 7, which lists the documents and funds to be provided by the buyer and the seller.

The seller must provide the following:

- The deed;
- An assignment of any leases and service contracts to be assigned;
- A bill of sale for any personal property; and
- Certification under the Foreign Investment in Real Property Tax Act of 1980 (FIRPTA) (see IRC §§897, 1445; Rev & T C §18662). For form certification, see App T.

NOTE: Effective January 1, 2007, an alternative calculation exists to determine any required withholding taxes on the purchase price. See Rev & T C §18662. For a detailed discussion, see §§15.75-15.80.

Original copies of leases, a rent roll, documents on the property, and keys to the property are typically delivered outside of escrow.

The buyer must provide the following:

- Funds necessary to close; and
- An agreement assuming any leases and any financing documents.

A timely close of escrow is usually crucial to both parties. Most escrow holders record their documents at the commencement of a business day after checking them over the day before. Some counties do not permit escrow holders to record documents after the commencement of a business day unless special arrangements are made. It is seldom possible to complete the necessary recording on the date scheduled for the close of escrow if all papers and funds are not in the hands of the escrow holder by the business day before the scheduled date to close escrow. See chap 15 on escrows and closing.

§4.133 B. Prorations

The agreement should provide for the proration of income and expense items relating to the property. See form 4.175-7. Taxes, rents, insurance, and all other costs or income items transferred from the seller to the buyer are traditionally computed on a daily basis and divided between the buyer and the seller as of the closing date. The adjustments are usually made in cash through the escrow. The amount of the rent and deposits is set out in the seller's rent statement, which should be subject to the buyer's approval. The buyer can confirm the accuracy of the rent statement from the tenants' estoppel certificates. The seller should be required to warrant the accuracy of the rent statement to the extent it is not feasible to obtain estoppel certificates. See also §§4.73, 4.101.

If rent for the month in which the closing occurs has not been paid, the parties must state in the agreement how that issue will be resolved. Typically, the buyer does not want to inherit the arrearages, and the seller fears that, without the leverage of being the landlord, the sum may never be collected. The usual compromise is that the seller retains the right to collect rent payable before closing from the tenant and the buyer agrees to cooperate with the seller to collect it. If the amount of percentage rent or cost pass-throughs that a tenant pays cannot be calculated at the closing, a provision for a post-closing proration must be added.

If there is no current tax bill and the previous year's bill does not afford a reasonable basis for estimating the current year's bill, the parties may agree on a specified daily amount pending receipt of the future tax bill. This problem arises when the closing occurs between July 1 and the time the tax bill for the current year becomes available, usually sometime in October. See Rev & T C §2610.5. Alternatively, the agreement could provide that a specified sum will be adjusted outside of escrow when the bill is received. This procedure, however, complicates the transaction by requiring that a calculation be made after the closing. To simplify computations, a 30-day month is often specified as the basis for prorations.

The county assessor may make a retroactive change in the assessed valuation if there was new construction or a change in ownership before the sale that is not reflected in the tax roll by the time of the sale. A supplemental tax bill will be issued when the reassessment is made. The prorations provision (and the escrow instructions; see §§15.44, 15.68) should provide for the proper proration of any supplemental tax bill issued before the close of escrow. See section 7.7.5 of form 4.175-7. Any prorations based on a supplemental tax bill issued after the close of escrow will have to be handled between the buyer and the seller by an agreement outside of escrow. On liability for payment of taxes based on escape assessments, see Rev & T C §531.2.

Insurance premiums are prorated only if the seller's insurance can be transferred and if the buyer and the seller desire to transfer it.

Other items that may be prorated are the following:

- Installment payments on personal property being transferred with the real property;
- Homeowner's association assessments in common interest developments; and
- Interest on loans assumed by the buyer.

If a loan being assumed has an impound account, the account should be assigned to the buyer and the seller should be credited with the balance. Interest is not prorated on an underlying note when an all-inclusive note or wraparound deed of trust is used.

Treatment of assessments for improvements encumbering the property must be negotiated. See §4.63. The agreement should specify whether the seller is to pay off the assessment before close of escrow, or the buyer is to take title subject to the assessment but with a credit against the purchase price, or the buyer is to take title subject to the assessment without any credit against the purchase price. Interest on the assessment should be prorated to the closing date if it is assumed by the buyer.

When the real property being sold is part of a parcel under one assessment, the periods before and after closing present separate problems. For the period before closing, because segregation of taxes is not possible before ownership is transferred, the division must be made by agreement to prorate based on an allocation of value between the property sold and the remaining part of the seller's land. For discussion and provisions, see §§15.43, 15.57, 15.68. For the period after closing, all taxes should be separately assessed to each parcel resulting from the sale. Segregation is authorized by Rev & T C §2821. The application and affidavit of interest must be made during the current fiscal year. A county may prohibit applications during the 10-day period preceding each tax installment delinquent date (December 10 and April 10) and during the 10-day period before June 30 of each year.

§4.134 C. Closing Costs

The division of closing costs is negotiable and can be made on any terms to which the parties agree. Once the division is decided, it should be clearly stated to avoid disputes. Almost without exception, the seller pays for all costs of clearing title and delivering the grant deed; the buyer pays for all costs in connection with any new financing. The parties typically follow the custom in each county. The seller often pays the county documentary transfer tax, but customs differ with respect to payment of city or other local transfer taxes, which are often split between the buyer and the seller. The issuance, transfer, or exchange of a security or the making or delivery of an instrument of transfer pursuant to a plan confirmed under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code is exempt from state or local transfer taxes. 11 USC §1146(a). The transfer tax exemption applies only to transfers made pursuant to a confirmed Chapter 11 plan. Florida Dep't of Revenue v Piccadilly Cafeterias, Inc. (2008) ___ US ___, 171 L Ed 2d 203, 128 S Ct 2326. In Bay Area counties, the buyer generally pays both the escrow fee and the title insurance premium; in Southern California, the seller usually pays the title insurance premium, and the escrow fees are divided. Elsewhere, both charges may be divided. See §15.42 on closing costs; and see form 4.175-8.

Other costs that might be specified in this provision are the following:

- The additional cost of an extended-coverage American Land Title Association policy of title insurance above California Land Title Association coverage;
- The cost of any special title policy endorsements;
- The cost of any survey that might be required; and
- Any prepayment penalty charged by a lender.

PRACTICE TIP: Buyer's counsel should investigate the amount of a city's transfer tax before agreeing to split the cost with the seller, because many cities impose a transfer tax significantly higher than the county tax. For example, Oakland's transfer tax is equal to 1.5 percent of the "value of consideration" paid for the property (generally the purchase price). Thus, Oakland's city transfer tax on the sale of a $30 million commercial building is $450,000. Oakland Muni C §4.20.020.

§4.135 D. Brokerage Fees

Both parties will wish to avoid claims for commissions or finder's fees after the closing. The agreement should state the commissions to be paid and provide that each party will indemnify the other against any claims that any other fee or commission is due because of that party's acts. See form 4.175-9.

The broker's commission is determined by the broker's written agreement with the client. See §2.94. Usually, this issue is covered in the listing agreement. If none was executed, the broker must rely, as a third party beneficiary, on the purchase and sale agreement or escrow instructions to supply the writing required by CC §1624(a)(4). See §2.54. To avoid difficulties, the drafter should ascertain who is to receive what commission or fee, who is to pay, and when the commission is considered earned. Then all parties, including the broker, should confirm in writing that the amount is correct. Without the broker's written acknowledgment, confusion will arise over whether the controlling document is the original commission agreement signed by the broker or the later purchase and sale agreement. If this provision is included in the sale agreement, each broker should sign the agreement on the signature page. Many purchase agreements provide that the commission will be paid according to the listing agreement. Payment of the commission should be conditioned on closing the transaction; thus, no commission is due if the sale is not completed.

If a licensed real estate broker or salesperson acting as an agent in the transaction is also a party to the agreement, or holds a direct or indirect interest in one of the parties, the licensee must disclose that fact. Bus & P C §§10176(i), 10177(o). It is immaterial that the transaction is otherwise fair to the parties. Batson v Strehlow (1968) 68 C2d 662, 68 CR 589; Smith v Zak (1971) 20 CA3d 785, 98 CR 242.

§4.136 E. Possession

As a rule, the seller agrees to deliver possession of the property to the buyer at closing. See form 4.175-10. If the seller wishes to remain in possession after the closing date, the parties should agree to a daily rental rate. A sum sufficient to pay the anticipated rent, plus a security deposit, should be delivered to the buyer through escrow at closing pending the seller's delivery of possession. Civil Code §1950.5 limits the amount of the security deposit for residential property. A security deposit protects the buyer if the seller holds over or damages the property or if the buyer must bring an unlawful detainer action to obtain possession. An unlawful detainer action can be initiated, without prior service of notice, against a tenant who holds over after a fixed rental term has expired. CCP §1161(1). The agreement should provide that the seller is a tenant at sufferance after the tenancy term expires, that the provision on holding over survives closing, and that the seller will indemnify the buyer from any losses if the seller fails to vacate the premises on time.

PRACTICE TIP: A "hold-over" provision in the agreement should be used only if the seller will remain in possession for a short period of time and if there are no complicated landlord-tenant issues. As a rule, it is preferable to address a seller's hold-over possession by having the seller sign a lease or rental agreement that will become effective on the closing and will set forth all terms and conditions of the seller's occupancy of the property.

§4.137 XI. RISK OF LOSS

Unless the agreement provides otherwise, the Uniform Vendor and Purchaser Risk Act (CC §1662) governs the risk of a casualty loss to the property or acquisition of all or a portion of the property by eminent domain after the purchase and sale agreement is executed. This Act provides generally that, if all or a material part of the property is destroyed or condemned, the seller cannot enforce the contract and the buyer is entitled to recover any portion of the price paid if neither legal title nor possession was transferred.

NOTE: To avoid the uncertainties and expense of litigation over what constitutes a "material loss," a purchase and sale agreement that apportions risk based on the Act should include a definition. See form 13.5-1.

If the casualty or the portion of the property taken by eminent domain is not "material" (see §§13.4-13.5), the implication of the statute is that the buyer bears the risk of loss but the purchase price is not reduced by the amount of the loss. If either legal title or possession was transferred, all loss falls on the buyer. CC §1662(b). See chap 13 on risk of loss and property insurance, particularly §§13.3-13.14.

In the authors' experience, the provisions of the Act rarely reflect the intentions of parties to agreements. Parties often wish to treat condemnation separately from casualty losses and draft provisions on casualty losses tailored to the property that is the subject of the contract. See form in §4.176. In such cases, however, the parties should specify in the contract the extent to which they intend the Act to apply, because the inclusion of any provision relating to risk of loss may make the entire Uniform Vendor and Purchaser Risk Act inapplicable on the grounds that the parties have "provided otherwise." World Exhibit Corp. v City Bank Farmers Trust Co. (App Div 1946) 61 NYS2d 889, aff'd (1946) 296 NY 586, 68 NE2d 876 (construing statute similar to CC §1662). To meet this problem, it is desirable to state that the Act will apply to the extent it does not conflict with the contract. See §§13.3-13.10.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.138 A. Condemnation Loss

Many agreements include a provision on condemnation that is separate from the provision on casualty losses. See form 4.176-1. Many buyers insist that they have the option to withdraw from the agreement in a condemnation, which leaves the buyer free to choose its course of action. Sellers will attempt to limit the buyer's discretion. The items for negotiation include the portion of any building taken by eminent domain, the portion of the land (excluding buildings) taken, loss of access, and loss of parking. Other matters may be relevant to a particular property. Often, a simple street widening will not harm the buyer's interests, but nevertheless the buyer will often wish to review and approve the actual condemnation, rather than giving a general consent when the agreement is negotiated.

PRACTICE TIP: The parties may often find that negotiation of a condemnation provision tailored to the specific circumstances will serve their interests better than the Uniform Vendor and Purchaser Risk Act (CC §1662).

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.139 B. Casualty Loss

In many transactions, casualty provisions should be specifically negotiated. At the least, the parties should agree on the definition of "material" in terms of the dollar cost of reconstruction. See form 13.5-1. More often, contracts require the seller to maintain casualty insurance and, in a casualty deemed "immaterial" by the agreement, provide that the transaction will proceed, and insurance proceeds under the required insurance and any deductible amount will be paid by the seller to the buyer at closing. In the event of casualty losses with a reconstruction cost larger than the amount specified as "material," the buyer has the option to receive the insurance proceeds and then close or cancel the transaction. In general, it is better to give the buyer the choice in the event of a casualty defined as material, rather than require that the transaction be terminated.

In some transactions, the seller has no insurance (or is self-insured) and demands that all risk of loss be transferred to the buyer when the purchase agreement is executed. At that time, the buyer has an insurable interest and can obtain the insurance it chooses. See §13.11. Most buyers will object to such a provision, however, because possession is usually not transferred until closing and the buyer will not control the use or occupancy of the property until after closing. See discussion in §§13.11-13.12.

It bears repeating that the insurance provisions of the agreement must be coordinated with the casualty provisions. If the seller is at risk after the contract is signed and before closing, it is in the seller's interest to carry appropriate casualty insurance and it is in the buyer's interest to require the seller to do so. If the seller is self-insured or carries a large deductible, the buyer must analyze the credit risks involved and consider modifications to the purchase agreement or establish requirements for seller's insurance that protects the buyer's interests. For a casualty loss form, see form 4.176-2.

XII. DEFAULT AND REMEDIES

§4.140 A. In General

The parties to a real property purchase and sale agreement have a variety of statutory remedies available if the other party breaches the agreement. No contract provisions need be added to secure these remedies, which include the following:

- Damages for breach of contract under CC §3300;
- Buyer's damages under CC §3306, if the seller fails to convey;
- Seller's damages under CC §3307, if the buyer fails to buy;
- Tort damages for fraud and misrepresentation; and
- Equitable remedies of specific performance, rescission, and reformation.

See generally California Real Property Remedies and Damages (2d ed Cal CEB 2002). The drafting issues regarding remedies concern changes the parties wish to make to the remedies that are available in the absence of other provisions. The most common changes are the addition of provisions liquidating the seller's damages in the event of the buyer's breach (see form 4.177-2) and limiting the buyer's remedies for the seller's breach. See form 4.177-4. Also, the parties should add provisions requiring notice to the other party before a default may be declared. See forms 4.177-1, 4.177-3.

B. Seller's Remedies

§4.141 1. Damages

The seller's damages for the buyer's failure to purchase the property are prescribed in CC §3307. The seller can recover the loss of its bargain (i.e., the difference between the purchase price stated in the agreement and the "value of the property to him or her"), consequential damages, and interest. The seller can also recover its special damages for such expenses as brokerage commissions and resale expenses. See California Real Property Remedies and Damages §§4.30-4.38 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002).

In practice, the seller's damages may be limited. It cannot recover its "loss of bargain" damages if the property is worth more than the sale price when the buyer breaches, or if the value exceeds the sales price at or before the time of the trial. See Spurgeon v Drumheller (1985) 174 CA3d 659, 220 CR 195. Nor can the seller recover consequential damages from a defaulting buyer after a sale to another buyer at a higher price; such damages would be contrary to CC §3358, which provides that one cannot recover more as damages for breach "than he could have gained by the full performance thereof on both sides." Smith v Mady (1983) 146 CA3d 129, 133, 194 CR 42. In light of such decisions, sellers often insist on including a liquidated damages provision (see §4.142) in the agreement, particularly in a rising market. Such a provision also reassures the buyer that there is a limit to its exposure.

§4.142 2. Liquidated Damages

Virtually all California real estate purchase agreements contain a provision liquidating the seller's damages for the buyer's breach. The liquidated damages usually equal the amount of the buyer's deposit. Under CC §§1671, 1675-1681, a liquidated damages provision is usually valid unless the party seeking to invalidate it establishes that it was unreasonable under the circumstances existing when the contract was made. CC §1671(b). See generally Guggenhime, California's New Liquidated Damages Law, 1 CEB Real Prop L Rep 17 (Feb. 1978). The statutes do not limit either party's right to seek specific performance, nor do they affect installment land sale contracts under CC §2985. A provision liquidating the seller's damages is in form 4.177-2.

In real property transactions, a provision liquidating damages to the seller for the buyer's breach is subject to the additional requirements that it must be separately signed or initialed by each party to the contract (CC §1677(a)), and, if printed, must be set out in at least 10-point bold type or in contrasting red print in at least 8-point bold type (CC §1677(b)). Liquidated damages provisions in typed agreements should be in capital letters.

In a contract to purchase one-to-four-unit residential property to be occupied by the buyer, CC §1675 imposes additional requirements regarding the deposit:

- Liquidated damages may not exceed the amount actually paid as a deposit;
- If the deposit amount is 3 percent of the purchase price or less, the provision is valid unless the buyer establishes that the amount is unreasonable;
- If the amount exceeds 3 percent of the purchase price, the provision is invalid unless the party seeking to uphold it establishes that the amount is reasonable; and
- "Reasonableness" depends on
- the circumstances at the time the contract was made; and
- the price, other terms, and circumstances in any sale or contract to sell the property made within 6 months after the buyer's default.

For special rules regarding liquidated damages on the sale of a newly constructed attached residential condominium in a project of ten units or more, see §6.45.

If the sum that is to be liquidated damages is increased, e.g., through an additional payment increasing the "buyer's deposit," then a new liquidated damages provision must be signed or initialed with each increase in the deposit. CC §1678.

As a practical matter, the seller will have difficulty enforcing liquidated damages provisions without litigation if the buyer resists, because escrow holders usually require both parties' consent in writing after the breach before they will release the buyer's funds to the seller. Failing such agreement, the escrow holder may interplead the funds into court. The seller would be in a stronger position if the earnest money deposit were paid directly to the seller outside of escrow. The seller would then have the deposit in hand, and the buyer would have to sue to recover any amount claimed to be in excess of the sums allowed by law. For this reason, buyers usually resist requests to release funds from escrow.

Sellers often exclude from the protection of the liquidated damages provision the buyer's obligations under the prevailing-party attorney fees provision and any indemnification in the agreement, such as indemnities against (1) damage or injury arising from the buyer's inspection of the property, and (2) broker's commissions and finder's fees arising from the buyer's conduct.

PRACTICE TIP: Buyers should confirm that the provision states that liquidated damages will be the seller's sole remedy (except for the exclusions noted above). If the provision states only that the amount of damages the seller can recover is liquidated damages, the seller arguably retains a right to equitable remedies, including specific performance.

§4.143 3. Specific Performance

Specific performance is available as a remedy for the buyer's breach if it is not waived in a liquidated damages provision and if the conditions to its availability are met. A seller might wish to preserve the remedy rather than waive it in the customary form of a liquidated damages provision. There are several practical difficulties and legal uncertainties, however, in obtaining specific performance. In the authors' experience, most sellers waive specific performance and agree that liquidated damages will be their sole remedy.

If not waived, specific performance is available only if the following conditions are met (CC §§3384-3395):

- The seller must not have an adequate remedy in the form of money damages;
- The consideration to the buyer must be adequate;
- The contract must be just and reasonable with terms that are sufficiently certain to enforce;
- The buyer must not be subject to undue hardship;
- The ordered performance must be substantially similar to that required by the contract;
- The ordered performance must not be of a type that would be impracticable for the court to supervise; and
- The seller must have performed or tendered performance under the contract and be ready to perform after the judgment.

Two of the requirements in particular cause difficult issues for sellers. The first is whether CC §3307 provides the seller with an adequate remedy for damages, despite the presumption stated in CC §3387 that breach of an agreement to transfer real property cannot be adequately compensated by money damages. In BD Inns v Pooley (1990) 218 CA3d 289, 296, 266 CR 815, the court held that CC §3307 was not intended to eliminate the seller's right to seek specific performance. Commentators have suggested that BD Inns does not settle the matter. See California Real Property Remedies and Damages §§5.28-5.32 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002). At the very least, the seller must allege contrary facts to plead claims for specific performance and general damages under §3307 in the alternative. For the former, the seller must plead that monetary damages are not available, because the value of the property equals the contract price; but for the latter, the seller must plead that the value of the property is below the contract price.

Second, the seller must remain ready to convey the property to the buyer until the action is concluded and must be able to convey good title to the buyer. CC §3394. Most sellers prefer to remarket the property rather than wait for the time required to reach trial in the hope of a judgment requiring the buyer to purchase it.

Most sellers agree to waive all remedies other than liquidated damages. In a rising market, sellers wish to be paid the amount of the liquidated damages and be free to take advantage of the increase in values. In a falling market, sellers often wish to sell the property as soon as possible rather than to risk further losses if the specific performance action is not successful.

C. Buyer's Remedies

§4.144 1. Damages

The buyer may recover general damages if the seller fails to convey the property under CC §3306, special damages for other breaches of the agreement under CC §3300, and damages for fraud and misrepresentation. These remedies are available as a matter of law. The issues in negotiating a purchase agreement are whether the buyer's right to damages should be waived, limited, or liquidated. See form 4.177-4.

Source: Real Property/California Real Property Sales Transactions/4 The Purchase and Sale Agreement/§4.145 a. Civil Code §3306

§4.145 a. Civil Code §3306

Damages for the seller's failure to convey the property under CC §3306 include the following:

- The price paid;
- The difference between the contract price and the value of the property at the time of the breach (see Reese v Wong (2001) 93 CA4th 51, 112 CR2d 669);
- Expenses incurred in examining title and preparing "the necessary papers";
- Expenses incurred in "preparing to enter upon the land";
- Consequential damages, subject to the customary requirement of foreseeability (lost profits are usually not available); and
- Interest.

Obviously, the remedy is much more useful to a buyer in a rising market. The availability of prejudgment interest is subject to CC §3287. See California Real Property Remedies and Damages §§4.12-4.28 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Real Property Sales Transactions/4 The Purchase and Sale Agreement/§4.146 b. Civil Code §3300

§4.146 b. Civil Code §3300

Damages for breaches of the agreement by the seller (other than seller's failure to convey property; see §4.146) are available under CC §3300. These include breaches of covenants, indemnities, representations, or warranties in the agreement. Examples include defective title despite a title warranty, failure to complete construction on the property, failure to remove a mechanic's lien, or a physical condition of the property that is contrary to a representation. The damages must be reasonably foreseeable. See California Real Property Remedies and Damages §§12.17-12.19 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002).

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.147 c. Fraud and Misrepresentation

In the event of the seller's fraud or misrepresentation, the buyer can elect to affirm the contract and sue for damages under CC §3343 or to rescind the contract and seek damages under CC §1692. These claims may be pleaded in the alternative. Damages under §3343 include the difference between the contract price and the value of the property and any consequential damages. Consequential damages and interest may be sought in addition to rescission. Both causes of action can support a claim for punitive damages. See California Real Property Remedies and Damages §§3.11-3.60 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002).

§4.148 2. Methods to Limit Buyer's Damages

Sellers sometimes seek to limit the buyer's broad remedies for damages by limiting the amount of damages available or seeking a waiver of damages claims altogether. Some agreements set a maximum amount of damages for which the seller can be liable, and others simply liquidate the amount of damages. Civil Code §1671(d) permits provisions liquidating the buyer's damages for the seller's breach. Sellers often seek to limit damages for breaches of representations and warranties by limiting the time the representations and warranties survive closing and the amount of damages that can be recovered. See discussion in §4.107, and form 4.173-4. Yet another technique sellers sometimes use to eliminate damages as a remedy is to include a provision limiting the buyer's remedies to either termination of the agreement with return of deposits or specific performance.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.149 3. Specific Performance

Specific performance is available to the buyer for the seller's default unless it is excluded by the purchase agreement. See, e.g., form 4.177-4, Alternative 2. Buyers usually resist strongly any attempt by sellers to restrict or eliminate the buyer's right to specific performance. Limitations usually give the seller means to avoid the contract. The remedy will be available subject to CC §§3384-3395 and the extensive case law on specific performance. See California Real Property Remedies and Damages, chap 5 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002).

A provision liquidating the seller's damages will not prevent the buyer from compelling specific performance of the contract. In Bleecher v Conte (1981) 29 C3d 345, 213 CR 852, the buyers had sought specific performance against the sellers, who argued that, because the liquidated damages provision prevents the seller from obtaining specific performance against the buyer, there was no mutuality of obligation. The court disagreed, saying that there was mutuality of obligation and that CC §3386 eliminated any requirement for mutuality of remedy. See form 4.177-4, Alternative 1.

Specific performance is available to a nondefaulting buyer even if the property is being purchased for investment purposes. See Real Estate Analytics, LLC v Vallas (2008) 160 CA4th 463, 476, 72 CR3d 835 (each parcel of land is presumed to be unique; nonbreaching buyer of commercial investment is entitled to specific performance unless defaulting seller rebuts presumption that monetary damages are inadequate to compensate buyer). In Peak-Las Positas Partners v Bollag (2009) 172 CA4th 101, 90 CR3d 775, the court affirmed a judgment extending escrow on a land sale contract so the buyer could obtain a lot line adjustment, finding that the seller had acted unreasonably in denying consent to an escrow extension and had breached the purchase contract. An amendment to the purchase contract extended the close of escrow for 5 years and provided for future escrow extensions by mutual consent of the buyer and seller, not to be unreasonably withheld or delayed. The buyer had paid 98 percent of the purchase price and spent $5 million in project costs and was diligent in trying to obtain the lot line adjustment.

A court has power to award compensation incidental to a decree of specific performance. Both the seller and buyer are entitled to receive full performance of the contract when specific performance has been granted. When a buyer is deprived of possession of the property pending resolution of the dispute and seller receives rents and profits, the buyer is entitled to a credit against the purchase price for the rents and profits from the time the property should have been conveyed to the buyer. A seller is entitled to receive the value of seller's lost use of the purchase price during the period performance was delayed. Stratton v Tejani (1982) 139 CA3d 204, 187 CR 231. See, however, Kassir v Zahabi (2008) 164 CA4th 1352, 80 CR3d 1 (seller not entitled to interest on sale proceeds if property was overencumbered because entire purchase price would have been used to pay off existing liens).

For a discussion of the availability of lis pendens after filing an action for specific performance, see California Real Property Remedies and Damages, chaps 5, 13 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002).

§4.150 D. Alternative Dispute Resolution

Alternative dispute resolution (ADR) is the name given to any method of resolving a dispute outside a courtroom, thus allowing the parties to avoid the often excessive expense and delay of standard litigation. The ADR process is less cumbersome than standard litigation because many of the rules of civil procedure, including discovery, evidence, hearsay, and even due process and appeal, are suspended or waived. Although there are many methods and combinations of ADR, it generally falls into one of two categories, depending on whether the results are binding on the parties (i.e., whether the parties have recourse to standard litigation if they do not like the ADR result). Arbitration is generally binding on the parties, while mediation is not. On ADR generally, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California (Cal CEB 2005).

NOTE: Despite the name "judicial arbitration" given to court-ordered or court-sanctioned ADR, it actually takes the form of mediation. In the authors' experience, mediation provisions are seldom included in purchase and sale agreements and mediation is only used if it is required by the court under local rules or CCP §§1775-1775.15.

In mediation, the parties agree to suspend their rights and, if they do not like the result, they can resort to traditional litigation with all its rules of civil procedure. In arbitration, the parties waive many of the protections of the rules of civil procedure and agree to be bound by the third party arbitrator's decision. The grounds for challenging a petition to confirm an arbitration award are very narrow. CCP §§1286-1286.6.

Parties cannot be forced to arbitrate; and they must agree in writing to arbitrate. CCP §1297.72. Usually, the agreement to arbitrate is entered into before a dispute arises and is just one provision in a larger contract. See CCP §1297.71.

Specific language must be used to create an enforceable binding arbitration provision in most contracts to convey real property, including purchase and sale agreements and leases with options to buy (but no deeds of trust containing a power of sale) and in related contracts with agents. CCP §1298(a)-(b). Arbitration provisions in such contracts must be clearly titled "ARBITRATION OF DISPUTES." CCP §1298. If the contract is printed, the title must be in at least 8-point bold type or in contrasting red in at least 8-point type; if the contract is typed, the title must be in capital letters. CCP §1298(b). In addition to the required title, CCP §1298(c) requires that specific notice language be set forth in the same size type as required for the title. The statutory language is set forth in section 9.5.2 of form 4.177-5. Immediately following such notice language, a line or a space must be provided for the parties to indicate their assent or nonassent to the arbitration provision. CCP §1298(c). Arbitration provisions in purchase and sale agreements are enforceable only when signed by the buyers and sellers. Marcus & Millichap Real Estate Inv. Brokerage Co. v Hock Inv. Co. (1998) 68 CA4th 83, 80 CR2d 147 (buyer initialed arbitration provision in purchase agreement, but seller did not; broker representing both parties, sued by buyer for negligent misrepresentation, could not compel parties to arbitrate). A contract fraudulently executed is void and an arbitration clause in a void contract is unenforceable. A contract fraudulently induced, however, is voidable and an arbitration clause in a voidable contract is enforceable and parties must arbitrate even though the contract was fraudulently induced. Rosenthal v Great W. Fin. Sec. Corp. (1996) 14 C4th 394, 58 CR2d 875.

PRACTICE TIP: Although attorneys differ on the merits of arbitration, when sellers are foreign entities, there is a compelling reason to include an arbitration provision. Currently, there is no international treaty permitting enforcement of United States judicial decisions in foreign countries. Thus, if a foreign seller breaches a warranty and the buyer is awarded damages in court, that award is not automatically enforceable. A second action must then be brought in the foreign jurisdiction. Under the United Nations Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards (June 10, 1958), commonly known as the New York Convention and signed by many countries, arbitration awards are enforceable in foreign jurisdictions. Enforcement is often subject to limitations set out in the local laws under which the New York Convention was adopted. Attorneys should consult with counsel in the foreign jurisdiction for any such limitations.

For a dispute resolution form providing for arbitration, see form 4.177-5. For a complete discussion of alternative dispute resolution for real property actions, see California Real Property Remedies and Damages, chap 14 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002).

XIII. MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

§4.151 A. Notices

The agreement should include a provision listing the notice addresses for both parties (with any courtesy copy addresses) and the escrow holder. All notices should be required to be in writing to ensure that there is a record of them and to avoid disputes about their contents. It is essential that the agreement provide the acceptable methods for notice and a statement of when the notice will be effective. Certified mail or an overnight delivery service with a return receipt is useful—and even superior to personal service—to establish that the party to whom the notice was sent received it, and to verify the date of receipt. If the parties agree that notices can be sent by facsimile transmission, the provision should require that a confirmation copy be sent by mail. Agreements often state that a facsimile notice is effective when received if confirmed by mail. If it is not effective until receipt of the confirmation copy delivered by mail, then using this method of notice has no particular advantage.

If an agreement does not define "notice," certain statutes may produce unintended results:

- Constructive notice of a fact exists upon "actual notice of circumstances sufficient to put a prudent man upon inquiry as to a particular fact." CC §§18-19.
- A correctly addressed and properly mailed letter is presumed to have been received in the ordinary course of mail. Evid C §641.

PRACTICE TIP: Notice provisions may state that a copy be sent to a party's attorney. A "copy to" provision may not be good practice. First, if notice is provided to a party but not to the attorney, the notice may be ineffective. Second, the language arguably imposes obligations on the attorney with respect to a client the attorney no longer represents. Also, if the attorney moves, must the attorney send a change of address to all parties affected by a notice clause? A "courtesy copy" notice provision may serve as an acceptable alternative.

See form 4.178-1.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.152 B. Time Is of the Essence

A "time is of the essence" provision printed on a form may have little value. Generally, California courts do not tend to strictly enforce these provisions, but look at whether the parties actually intended to strictly restrict a party's performance or merely used boilerplate language, whether the delay was material, and what the defaulting party's loss would be as a result of the forfeiture of contract rights compared with the loss the nondefaulting party would sustain as a result of the delay. See Fowler v Ross (1983) 142 CA3d 472, 479, 191 CR 183; Nash v Superior Court (1978) 86 CA3d 690, 696, 150 CR 394, disapproved on other grounds in Malcolm v Superior Court (1981) 29 C3d 518, 528 n5, 174 CR 694; Williams Plumbing Co. v Sinsley (1975) 53 CA3d 1027, 126 CR 345.

Courts may also decide not to strictly enforce a "time is of the essence" clause because money damages usually compensate the parties for any harm resulting from delayed performance. However, a "time is of the essence" provision is sometimes given effect. In Pittman v Canham (1992) 2 CA4th 556, 3 CR2d 340, the buyer sued the seller for breach of contract in failing to complete the transaction. Neither party had tendered performance by the date set forth in the contract and the escrow instructions. Both documents stated that time was of the essence. The court held that, because of that provision, the failure of both parties to complete the concurrent conditions on time resulted in termination of the contract. But see Ninety Nine Invs., Ltd. v Overseas Courier Serv. (Singapore) Private, Ltd. (2003) 113 CA4th 1118, 1133, 6 CR3d 891, distinguishing Pittman and concluding it is "an aberration in the facts," and 1 Miller & Starr, California Real Estate §1:162, p 688 (3d ed 2000).

NOTE: A court of appeal has held that CCP §12a, which extends the time for performance of an act provided or required by law, does not apply to acts governed solely by contractual provisions. Gans v Smull (2003) 111 CA4th 985, 4 CR3d 353.

Some deposit receipts contain language permitting the broker to extend time, and escrow instructions often direct the escrow agent to close escrow as soon as possible after the closing date. Courts usually have held that the parties have waived the "time is of the essence" provision by failing to include such provisions in the agreement or escrow instructions. Katemis v Westerlind (1953) 120 CA2d 537, 261 P2d 553. Either party may waive strict performance by the other merely by failing to insist on it. Johnson v Goldberg (1955) 130 CA2d 571, 279 P2d 131. Either party may also waive a "time is of the essence" provision by continuing to deal with the other party after the date specified in the contract and not establishing a new time requirement. Galdjie v Darwish (2003) 113 CA4th 1331, 7 CR3d 178. See 1 Miller & Starr, California Real Estate §2:24 (3d ed 2000) for a discussion of "time is of the essence" provisions.

In some circumstances, a client will suffer specific damages if the transaction is not closed in a timely manner. Specifying precisely what those damages will be provides a stronger position to argue for enforceability of the provision. If the seller wants to be able to enforce a right to terminate if escrow does not close by a specified date, the purchase agreement must state this right specifically and unequivocally, and the seller must continue to insist on timely performance throughout the escrow period; take no action inconsistent with this position; and be prepared to tender performance before declaring a default.

The effectiveness of a provision permitting one party to withdraw from escrow against the will of the other depends on the attitude of the escrow holder, which is traditionally cautious. After an alleged breach, escrow holders almost universally refuse to return money and documents in escrow unless all parties consent in writing.

PRACTICE TIP: "Time is of the essence" should be included when one party's failure to perform timely is intended to excuse the other party's performance. Otherwise "time is of the essence" can backfire by releasing all parties from their obligations when concurrent performances are required.

See form 4.178-9.

§4.153 C. Attorney Fees

Most California contracts include a prevailing-party attorney fees provision, as permitted by CC §1717. Attorney fees are not recoverable by the prevailing party in a contract action unless the contract expressly so provides. CCP §1021. They may, however, be awarded to the prevailing party even if the contract purports to award them only to one party. CC §1717. The example in form 4.178-10, in addition to providing for attorney fees between the parties, provides for attorney fees for the prevailing party when the escrow holder interpleads funds. For discussion of attorney fees sought by the broker, see §2.152.

NOTE: An attorney fee provision between the buyer and the seller in a purchase and sale agreement cannot be enforced by the buyer against an intervening non-bona-fide buyer from the seller, against whom the original buyer brings a successful specific performance action. Glynn v Marquette (1984) 152 CA3d 277, 199 CR 306 (intervening buyer, although properly a defendant in specific performance action (CC §3395), was not a party to original purchase and sale agreement and did not assume obligations of agreement).

Contract language permitting recovery of fees "in any action or proceeding arising out of this agreement" can permit recovery of fees as costs in a tort, as well as in a contract action. Lerner v Ward (1993) 13 CA4th 155, 16 CR2d 486. In Lerner, the parties included the language quoted above in their purchase agreement. In a later lawsuit against the sellers, the buyers dismissed their contract claims and proceeded solely on a fraud cause of action. The buyers lost their case, and the sellers sought fees. The trial court denied fees, and the appellate court reversed. Because no contract claim was made, the court could not award fees under CC §1717. Nevertheless, because the tort cause of action for fraud arose from the written agreement and because the parties had agreed to award fees to the prevailing party in actions arising from the agreement, the sellers were entitled to attorney fees as costs under that agreement. See CCP §1021 (attorney fees based on parties' agreement). See also Santisas v Goodin (1998) 17 C4th 599, 71 CR2d 830; Allstate Ins. Co. v Loo (1996) 46 CA4th 1794, 54 CR2d 541.

NOTE: Code of Civil Procedure §1021 has no reciprocal provision, as does CC §1717, under which, if the contract provides for attorney fees to one party, the other party is entitled to its fees if it is the prevailing party. Consequently, if the action is in tort, §1021 cannot be the basis of a claim for attorney fees by a prevailing party if the contract does not specifically provide for attorney fees to that party. Moallem v Coldwell Banker Commercial Group, Inc. (1994) 25 CA4th 1827, 31 CR2d 253.

If a case is dismissed at the pretrial stage, the parties must bear their own attorney fees for contract claims, even if the purchase agreement has a provision awarding attorney fees to the prevailing party.

PRACTICE TIP: The parties should define any of the following terms used in the attorney fees provisions "prevailing party," "court having jurisdiction," and "attorney fees and costs."

§4.154 D. Waiver

Unless otherwise provided, the law may imply waiver when a party entitled to performance accepts partial or defective performance. 1 Witkin, Summary of California Law, Contracts §817 (10th ed 2005). Similarly, because many of the remedies available in a breach are inconsistent, the law may find that the injured party elected to pursue one remedy to the exclusion of others. The parties can modify or nullify the doctrine of election of remedies by contract. 3 Witkin, California Procedure, Actions §196 (4th ed 1996). To avoid a broader waiver than intended or an early election of remedies, a provision stating that waivers must be in writing and limiting the effect of waivers should be included in the agreement. See form 4.178-3.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.155 E. Assignment by Buyer

An agreement is assignable by law unless it was intended to be nonassignable or an assignment would impair the seller's chances of obtaining the buyer's performance. Farmland Irrig. Co. v Dopplmaier (1957) 48 C2d 208, 308 P2d 732. If the parties wish to limit the agreement's assignability, the agreement should so state. An assignor is not relieved of liability unless the agreement so specifies. CC §1457. Thus, unless the assigning buyer is specifically released, the seller can look to the assigning buyer if the assignee fails to perform.

A formal written assignment should be executed between the buyer and the assignee to ensure that the rights to specific enforcement of the agreement are transferred to the assignee.

For a form allowing buyer to assign on notice to seller, see form 4.178-11.

§4.156 1. Entity to be Formed

If the buyer intends to form a corporation, partnership, or other entity to take title, or if the buyer wishes to sell to another, the buyer will want the right to assign the agreement without further consent of the seller. As discussed in §4.157, merely stating "buyer or nominee" in the agreement is inadequate because this description of the buyer is not sufficiently certain. Instead, the buyer should seek a broad right to assign. The seller who wants a more restrictive provision should add to the agreement clauses that (a) require the buyer to hold a specified interest in the assignee and (b) state that the buyer is not relieved of the agreement's obligations until escrow closes. The seller may also require the right to approve the assignee; for example, if the seller is taking back a note for all or part of the purchase price, the seller will want to know the buyer's identity and credit standing.

Often a purchase agreement is executed by a promoter or by an agent of an undisclosed principal in the expectation that an entity will be formed by the principal or the party ultimately buying the property to take title. If there is no misrepresentation by the signator, the seller is apparently bound to perform, but the assignment provision should expressly permit the assignment. If the agreement is executed in the name of a corporation that has yet to be formed rather than in an agent's name, however, the seller can probably withdraw from the transaction before the corporation is formed. See Macy Corp. v Ramey (Ohio CP 1957) 144 NE2d 698. This may also be true if the agreement is executed by a limited partnership or a limited liability company that is not yet in existence because of a failure to comply with the requirements for forming a limited partnership in Corp C §15621 (Corp C §15902.01, operative Jan. 1, 2008, for new or electing limited partnerships) or a limited liability company in Corp C §17050.

When the actual buyer is an entity to be formed, the promoter or agent should complete its formation before the close of escrow for the following reasons:

- The entity can take title as a grantee (and avoid the need for a subsequent transfer of title, which would complicate obtaining title insurance for the actual buyer);
- If the promoter or agent takes title and later conveys to the new entity, the property will be exposed to the promoter's or agent's personal creditors;
- A transfer of title might trigger a due-on-sale provision in an encumbrance; and
- A transfer of title could cause a property tax reassessment or incur a transfer tax.

§4.157 2. Use of Nominees

Although it is relatively common for a buyer to include a reference to an unnamed "nominee" as an alternative purchaser, the author strongly advises against such practice. A provision that allows the party signing the purchase agreement as buyer to designate a nominee is not a satisfactory way of facilitating a transfer to the actual buyer, because the actual buyer, even after being designated the nominee, is not entitled to specific enforcement of the agreement against the seller. In Cisco v Van Lew (1943) 60 CA2d 575, 141 P2d 433, the court concluded that the agreement was uncertain because no memorandum signed by the seller identified the buyer. The court also decided that mere designation of a nominee without a formal assignment did not vest in the nominee (in this case the principal) any right to enforce the agreement and that, without an assumption by the assignee of the buyer's obligations under the agreement, the agreement lacked the mutuality of obligation required for specific performance. See also Ott v Home Sav. & Loan Ass'n (9th Cir 1958) 265 F2d 643 ("nominee" not a synonym for "assignee"); Rivadell, Inc. v Razo (1963) 215 CA2d 614, 30 CR 622. But see JMR, Inc. v Hedderly (1968) 261 CA2d 144, 148, 67 CR 742, in which the court concluded that a corporate nominee should have the opportunity to present evidence "to show that the contract was made in the contemplation of the formation of the plaintiff corporation, and for its benefit, and that it adopted and ratified the contract after its formation."

§4.158 F. Interpretation of Agreement

Several provisions in an agreement set out the agreed rules of interpretation to be used in construing the agreement. One such provision is intended to negate the usual rule (CC §1654) that a document is interpreted against the party who caused the uncertainty to exist. Choice-of-law provisions for contracts among residents of different states for California property usually choose California law (as permitted by CC §1646.5), but exclude the California choice-of-law rules to avoid any interpretation that could lead to the choice of another state's law. See form 4.178-7. Another common provision requires that all amendments be in writing.

PRACTICE TIP: Specific language is also important to clearly document the parties' intent. The following drafting suggestions can help avoid ambiguity in the agreement:

- The word "or" creates mutually exclusive options, but can mean "and." Parties usually intend "or" to mean both "and" and "or." Careful drafting can clarify the parties' intent.
- "Including," in the phrase "including but not limited to" is clearer than "including" alone, which can limit whatever is described to the examples given.
- An easy drafting solution is to state that "or" is not exclusive and "including" is not limiting.

Drafters should avoid using the language, "all parties have participated in the … drafting of this Agreement" if one party has not in fact fully participated. Use the following instead: "Any rule of construction to the effect that ambiguities are to be resolved against the drafting party will not apply in interpreting this Agreement."

§4.159 1. Integration Provision

In the absence of fraud, lack of consideration, and similar defenses, an integration provision expresses the parties' intent to terminate all agreements not set forth in the document in order to eliminate any claim that other agreements exist outside the document. Requiring that all amendments be in writing satisfies the Statute of Frauds and establishes a record of the amendments made. This provision makes extrinsic evidence to vary its terms inadmissible. CCP §1856. Note, however, that despite such a provision courts have been lenient in admitting extrinsic evidence to interpret ambiguities. See 2 Witkin, California Evidence, Documentary Evidence §§74-85 (4th ed 2000). See form 4.178-2.

Although the integration clause is designed to invoke the parol evidence rule, it is not conclusive proof of an integrated agreement. The terms of a "final" expression of agreement may be explained by evidence of consistent additional terms. CCP §1856(a)-(b); Com C §2202(b).

An integration provision should include the phrase "complete and exclusive statement" to duplicate the parol evidence rule. See CCP §1856 and Com C §2202 (a writing intended as a "complete and exclusive" statement of the terms of the agreement may not be explained or supplemented even by evidence of consistent additional terms).

Agreements that include an integration provision should incorporate supporting documents, such as schedules, riders, and exhibits, and provide that (1) no party has been induced to enter into the agreement by any representation or warranty outside those expressly set forth, and (2) no party is relying on such representation or warranty.

§4.160 2. Counterparts

Because the parties are often in a hurry to execute the agreement, using counterparts allows simultaneous execution without requiring all parties to meet. Counterparts, however, increase the possibility of unauthorized alteration of the document because not all parties sign the same document at the same time. To reduce the chances of alteration, each party should execute a complete agreement, not just the signature page. This procedure makes it more difficult to insert a substituted page, and, if the counterparts are later found not to match, it will establish which party signed what form of the document. See form 4.178-14.

Source: Real Property/California Real Property Sales Transactions/4 The Purchase and Sale Agreement/§4.161 3. Binding on Successors

§4.161 3. Binding on Successors

Agreements customarily include provisions stating that the agreement survives the death of a party or assignment of the agreement. The usual rule is that a contractual obligation survives the death of the promisor except for a contract calling for personal services by the promisor. 1 Witkin, Summary of California Law, Contracts §838 (10th ed 2005). Depending on the particular agreement, a court might or might not find a purchase and sale agreement to be for personal services. See, e.g., Central Contra Costa Sanitary Dist. v National Sur. Corp. (1952) 112 CA2d 61, 246 P2d 150. The provision should be limited if the agreement is not freely assignable. See form 4.178-11.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.162 G. Amendments Only in Writing

Generally, only a contract in writing or an oral executed agreement can modify a written contract. However, an oral agreement with new consideration can modify a written contract, and an oral agreement without new consideration can modify a contract for the sale of goods. If the parties wish to preclude later oral modifications, they should include a provision requiring a writing. CC §1698.

The provision, however, may not apply to a fully executed modification. For example, a subcontractor can enforce an oral agreement for extra work after the work is done, even though the contract required the agreement for extra work to be in writing. Nor will the provision apply to an oral novation, an oral rescission, an oral waiver, or when the party attempting to enforce the prohibition is estopped from doing so. CC §1698.

See form 4.178-3.

§4.163 H. No Third Party Benefit

A third party may enforce in its own name an unrescinded contract expressly made for the third party's benefit. A third party may sue the promisor, the promisee, or both. The contract need not specifically name the beneficiary as long as he or she is a member of the class identified. See, e.g., Prouty v Gores Technol. Group (2004) 121 CA4th 1225, 18 CR3d 178 (employees deemed third party beneficiaries and had right to recover severance benefits under contract from parent company and present owner).

The intent to make the contract expressly for the third party's benefit must appear from the contract and the circumstances surrounding its formation. For example, business creditors are third party beneficiaries of contracts in which business liabilities are transferred, and an agreement that expressly provides for payment to a third party is made for the benefit of that party. Therefore, if the parties want to make clear that the contract is not intended to benefit any third parties, it should clearly say so. See form 4.178-12.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.164 I. Severability

Whether a contract is severable or entire depends on the parties' intentions, set forth in the language of the contract and the surrounding circumstances. In a severable contract, separate partial performances by one party are agreed to be exchanged for partial performances by the other. The failure of a party to perform one part of the contract does not bar that party from recovering for performance of another part. In an integrated contract, all performances are common and interdependent, and any material breach justifies termination of that contract.

4.170-1 Amount

ARTICLE 2

PURCHASE PRICE

2.1. Amount. The full purchase price (Purchase Price) for the Property is _ _[amount]_ _ Dollars (_ _[dollar amount]_ _), and is payable in accordance with this _ _[e.g., Article 2]_ _.

4.170-2 Deposits

2.2. Deposits.

2.2.1. Initial Deposit. Within _ _[e.g., 3]_ _ Business Days after the Effective Date, as a deposit against the Purchase Price, Buyer must deposit _ _[dollar amount]_ _ (Initial Deposit) into an escrow (Escrow) to be opened with _ _[name]_ _ (Escrow Holder).

2.2.2. Second Deposit. On the Contingency Date (as defined in _ _[e.g., section 3.2]_ _), if the contingencies set forth in _ _[e.g., Article 3]_ _ have been met and this Agreement has not been otherwise terminated, Buyer must deposit _ _[dollar amount]_ _ into Escrow as an additional deposit against the Purchase Price (Second Deposit).

2.2.3. Requirements for Deposit. Buyer may make the Initial Deposit and the Second Deposit (collectively, the Deposit) in cash, or by check payable to the Escrow Holder, or by electronic transfer of federal funds. The Escrow Holder will hold the Deposit in an escrow account at a bank and invested in investments approved by Buyer, with interest accruing for the benefit of Buyer. On the Closing Date (defined in _ _[e.g., section 7.2.2]_ _), the Deposit will be credited against the Purchase Price and paid to Seller. If this Agreement terminates for any reason except Buyer's default, the Escrow Holder must refund the Deposit to Buyer.

2.2.4. Option to Substitute Letter of Credit. Buyer has the right, at its option, to substitute a letter of credit (Letter of Credit) for all or any portion of the Deposit. The Letter of Credit must be drawn on a reputable bank with an office in _ _[city]_ _, California (Issuing Bank), reasonably acceptable to Seller and must name Escrow Holder as the beneficiary. The Letter of Credit must provide that Buyer may not revoke, cancel, or otherwise modify the Letter of Credit. The Letter of Credit may not impose any conditions to the drawing thereof other than a certificate from the Escrow Holder that Escrow Holder is entitled to draw on the Letter of Credit under this Agreement. The maturity date of the Letter of Credit must be at least _ _[e.g., 45]_ _ days after the expected Closing Date. If Buyer does not renew or extend the Letter of Credit at least _ _[e.g., 30]_ _ days before the maturity date, Escrow Holder must draw down the proceeds of the Letter of Credit. Escrow Holder may not otherwise draw on the Letter of Credit until Escrow Holder is authorized to deliver the Deposit under the terms of this Agreement. If Escrow Holder draws down the Letter of Credit, it must hold all proceeds as the Deposit or as a portion of the Deposit. If, at or before the Closing, Buyer places, or causes to be placed, good and immediately available funds into Escrow to fully replace the Letter of Credit, then Escrow Holder must return the Letter of Credit to Buyer, and the proceeds of the Letter of Credit will not be credited against the Purchase Price.

4.170-3 Assumption of note secured by deed of trust

2.3. Assumption of Note Secured by Deed of Trust. Buyer's purchase of the Property is subject to Buyer's assumption of that certain deed of trust dated _ _[date]_ _, in favor of _ _[beneficiary's name]_ _, recorded on _ _[date]_ _, as Instrument _ _, in book _ _, page _ _ of _ _[identify records]_ _, in the Office of the County Recorder of _ _[name]_ _ County, securing a note with an approximate current unpaid balance of _ _[dollar amount]_ _ (Assumed Loan). Buyer will be credited with the balance of the principal owed under the Assumed Loan on the Closing Date.

4.170-4 Seller financing

2.4. Seller Financing. Buyer agrees to deliver to Seller through Escrow at Closing Buyer's promissory note secured by a deed of trust in favor of Seller in the principal amount of _ _[dollar amount]_ _ (Seller Financed Amount), bearing interest in the amount of _ _[number]_ _ percent per year from the Closing Date, payable in _ _[number]_ _ installments of _ _[dollar amount]_ _ beginning on _ _[date]_ _ and continuing until _ _[date]_ _, unless paid sooner (Seller Financing). The Seller Financed Amount will be credited against the Purchase Price on the Closing Date. The forms of promissory note and deed of trust to be delivered by Buyer at Closing are attached to this Agreement as _ _[e.g., Exhibits B and C]_ _.

4.170-5 Payment of balance

2.5. Payment of Balance. Buyer agrees to pay, or cause to be paid, the balance of the Purchase Price to Seller through the Escrow by depositing cash or a certified or cashier's check payable to the Escrow Holder, or by electronic transfer of federal funds, which must be delivered to the Escrow Holder at least _ _[e.g., 1]_ _ business day before the Closing Date.

4.170-6 Allocation of purchase price

[If applicable, add the following option]

[Option: Allocation of purchase price]

2.6. Allocation of Purchase Price. The Purchase Price will be allocated among various assets constituting the Property in accordance with an exhibit (Allocation of Purchase Price) to be negotiated by the parties in good faith, which exhibit will be prepared in the manner required by §1060 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (Code), as amended, and attached to this Agreement as _ _[e.g., Exhibit I]_ _ to this Agreement at least _ _[e.g., 5]_ _ days before the Closing. Seller and Buyer agree to prepare and file all federal, state, local, and foreign tax returns and other filings reflecting this transaction on a basis consistent with such allocation, and to cooperate with each other in good faith in preparing any and all statements required to be included in their respective tax returns, including IRS Form 8594 and any required exhibits to the tax returns (or other forms required under §1060 of the Code, or other applicable tax laws) reflecting such allocation. Seller and Buyer further agree that they will not make any inconsistent written statement or take any inconsistent position on any tax returns, in any refund claim, or during the course of any Internal Revenue Service or other tax audit, so long as there exists a reasonable basis in law to maintain the position reflected by such allocation. Each party must notify the other party if it receives notice that the Internal Revenue Service or any other taxing authority proposes any allocation that is different from the allocation set forth on the Allocation of Purchase Price.

All other data, correspondence, documents, agreements, waivers, notices, applications, and other records regarding the Property relating to transactions with taxing authorities, governmental agencies, utilities, vendors, tenants, neighbors, and others with whom Buyer may be dealing from and after the Closing Date.

3.1.17. Excluded Records. The Preliminary Documents will not include any books, records, documents, or information on the corporate, financial, and accounting records of the operations of Seller as an entity (as opposed to records concerning the Property), regarding offers or inquiries made by third parties concerning the purchase of some or all of the Property or appraisals of the value of the Real Property that are attorney-client communications of Seller, that are Seller's attorney's work product, or that are not in the possession of Seller or persons under Seller's control.

4.171-2 Buyer's approval of preliminary documents

[Alternative 1: Buyer's form of approval of preliminary documents]

3.2. Buyer's Approval of Preliminary Documents. Buyer's obligation to purchase the Property is expressly conditioned on its approval, in its sole discretion, of the matters disclosed in the Preliminary Documents. Buyer will have the period from the Effective Date until the date that is _ _[number]_ _ days after delivery to Buyer of the last Preliminary Document (Contingency Date) to review the Preliminary Documents and to decide whether to approve the matters disclosed in the Preliminary Documents. On or before the Contingency Date, Buyer will deliver written notice to Seller either accepting the matters disclosed in the Preliminary Documents or terminating this Agreement. If Buyer fails to give such notice on or before the Contingency Date, Buyer will be deemed to have elected to terminate this Agreement.

[Alternative 2: Seller's form of approval of preliminary documents]

3.2. Buyer's Approval of Preliminary Documents. Buyer's obligation to purchase the Property is expressly conditioned on its approval, in its sole discretion, of the matters disclosed in the Preliminary Documents. Buyer will have the period from the Effective Date until the date that is _ _[number]_ _ days after the Effective Date (Contingency Date) to review the Preliminary Documents and to decide whether to approve the matters disclosed in the Preliminary Documents. On or before the Contingency Date, Buyer must deliver written notice to Seller either accepting the matters disclosed in the Preliminary Documents or terminating this Agreement. If Buyer fails to give such notice on or before the Contingency Date, Buyer will be deemed to have accepted the matters disclosed in the Preliminary Documents. By its acceptance or waiver of the contingencies set forth in this _ _[e.g., section 3.2]_ _, Buyer will be deemed to have acknowledged that (a) Seller has provided Buyer with access to the Preliminary Documents and (b) Buyer has had ample opportunity to review and inspect the Preliminary Documents and to make such independent factual, physical, and legal examinations and inquiries as Buyer deems necessary or desirable with respect to matters disclosed in the Preliminary Documents.

4.171-3 Buyer's approval of contracts

3.3. Buyer's Approval of Contracts. Buyer's obligation to purchase the Property is expressly conditioned on its approval, in its sole discretion, of all service contracts, management agreements, maintenance contracts, and other contracts and agreements related to or affecting the operation of the Property and not included as part of the title documents (collectively, the Contracts). Buyer shall have until the date that is _ _[e.g., 10]_ _ business days before the Contingency Date to either approve or disapprove any Contracts (Disapproved Contracts). Seller shall have until _ _[e.g., 5]_ _ business days before the Contingency Date to notify Buyer, in writing, of its agreement to terminate the Disapproved Contracts on or before the Closing Date. In no event, however, shall Seller be required to terminate any Contracts that by their terms are not terminable before the Closing unless Buyer agrees, in writing, to pay at Closing any prorated charges or other costs associated with such early termination. Failure by Seller to agree to terminate the Disapproved Contracts within the specified period shall be deemed Seller's election not to terminate the Disapproved Contracts. On or before the Contingency Date, Buyer shall deliver written notice to Seller either accepting the Disapproved Contracts that Seller elected (or is deemed to have elected) not to terminate or terminating this Agreement.

4.171-4 Approval of title

3.4. Approval of Title. Buyer's obligation to purchase the Property is expressly conditioned on Buyer's approval of the condition of title of the Property in accordance with the following procedure:

3.4.1. Permitted Exceptions. The following exceptions shown on the Preliminary Report (Permitted Exceptions) are approved by Buyer: (a) exceptions for a lien for local real estate taxes and assessments not yet due or payable, including (without limitation) special taxes under Govt C §§53311-53368.3 or installment assessments under Street & H C §§8500-8887,

[Add if appropriate]

[Continue]

(b) the standard preprinted exceptions and exclusions of the Title Company, (c) the lien arising from the Assumed Loan, (d) any other exception shown on the Preliminary Report, other than exceptions for monetary liens (excluding the lien arising from the Assumed Loan), which Buyer does not object to by written notice to Seller within _ _[e.g., 10]_ _ days after delivery of the Preliminary Report (Buyer's Title Notice), or as otherwise provided in this _ _[e.g., section 3.4]_ _. All exceptions on the Preliminary Report other than the Permitted Exceptions will be Title Objections. If Buyer fails to deliver Buyer's Title Notice within the time specified in this _ _[e.g., section 3.4]_ _, Buyer will be deemed to have objected to each title exception shown in the Preliminary Report that is not otherwise a Permitted Exception.

3.4.2. Title Objections. With respect to any Title Objection arising or resulting from any act or omission of Seller, Seller will have _ _[e.g., 10]_ _ days after delivery of Buyer's Title Notice (or Buyer's deemed objection to all exceptions) to specify the manner in which it will remove or cure such Title Objection. With respect to any Title Objection that did not arise or result from any act or omission of Seller, Seller will have _ _[e.g., 10]_ _ days after delivery of Buyer's Title Notice to give notice to Buyer in writing (Seller's Title Notice), stating either (a) the manner in which Seller will remove or cure such Title Objection, or (b) that Seller will not remove or cure such Title Objection. If Seller fails to deliver Seller's Title Notice within the time specified in this _ _[e.g., section 3.4]_ _, Seller will be deemed to have elected not to cure such Title Objection. Despite the foregoing, Seller agrees to remove all liens securing the payment of money that encumber the Property, other than the lien arising from the Assumed Loan.

3.4.3. Seller Elects Not to Cure. If Seller elects not to cure or remove a Title Objection (or is deemed to have so elected), then Buyer will have _ _[e.g., 10]_ _ days after delivery of the Seller's Title Notice to deliver a written notice to Seller (Buyer's Election Notice) of Buyer's election either to (a) proceed with the purchase of the Property, waive such Title Objection, and accept the exception shown in the Preliminary Report as a Permitted Exception, or (b) terminate this Agreement. If Buyer fails to deliver Buyer's Election Notice within the time specified in this _ _[e.g., section 3.4]_ _, Buyer will be deemed to have elected to terminate this Agreement.

3.4.4. Nonmonetary Cure. If Seller is obligated or elects to cure or remove a Title Objection, but the method specified for removing or curing the Title Objection is other than the payment of a specific sum of money, then Buyer will have _ _[e.g., 10]_ _ days after delivery of the Seller's Title Notice to deliver Buyer's Election Notice specifying whether it elects to (a) proceed with the purchase of the Property, subject to Seller's removal of the Title Objection, or (b) terminate this Agreement. If Buyer fails to deliver Buyer's Election Notice within the time specified in this _ _[e.g., section 3.4]_ _, Buyer will be deemed to have elected to terminate this Agreement.

3.4.5. Additional Encumbrances. If any encumbrance or other exception to title arises or is discovered after the delivery of the Preliminary Report (Additional Encumbrance), the party discovering such Additional Encumbrance must promptly give written notice to the other. No later than _ _[e.g., 5]_ _ days after delivery of the notice of such Additional Encumbrance, Buyer will deliver a new Buyer's Title Notice to Seller specifying whether the Additional Encumbrance is a Title Objection or a Permitted Exception. If Buyer objects to the Additional Encumbrance, the parties will proceed in the same manner as set forth above for Title Objections arising from the Preliminary Report. If Buyer fails to deliver Buyer's Election Notice within the time specified in this _ _[e.g., section 3.4]_ _, Buyer will be deemed to have elected to terminate this Agreement.

3.4.6. Seller's Failure to Remove Title Objection. If Seller is obligated or elects to cure or remove a Title Objection and fails to do so least _ _[e.g., 5]_ _ days before the Closing Date, or fails to show that it will be able to do so on Closing, then Seller will be in default under this Agreement, and Buyer will have all its rights and remedies provided by this Agreement.

4.171-5 Review of preliminary documents and physical condition

3.5. Review of Preliminary Documents and Physical Condition.

3.5.1. Due Diligence. Buyer's obligation to purchase the Property is expressly conditioned on its approval, in its sole discretion, of the condition of the Property and all other matters concerning the Property, including without limitation economic, financial, and accounting matters relating to or affecting the Property or its value, and the physical and environmental condition of the Property. Buyer will have until the Contingency Date to conduct such investigations as Buyer may choose (Due Diligence) to determine, in its sole discretion, whether this contingency is met. On or before the Contingency Date, Buyer will deliver written notice to Seller accepting the Property, or terminating this Agreement. If Buyer fails to give such notice on or before the Contingency Date, Buyer will be deemed to have elected to terminate this Agreement.

3.5.2. Access to Property. As part of its Due Diligence, Buyer may investigate economic, financial, and accounting matters relating to or affecting the Property or its value, and conduct inspections, tests, and studies with respect to the physical and environmental condition of the Property. Buyer and Buyer's consultants, agents, engineers, inspectors, contractors, and employees (Buyer's Representatives) must be given reasonable access to the Property during regular business hours for the purpose of performing such Due Diligence. Buyer will undertake the Due Diligence at its sole cost and expense, except as provided in _ _[e.g., section 9.2]_ _.

Buyer will indemnify, defend with counsel reasonably acceptable to Seller, and hold Seller harmless from all claims (including claims of lien for work or labor performed or materials or supplies furnished), demands, liabilities, losses, damages, costs, fees, and expenses, including Seller's reasonable attorney fees, costs, and expenses, arising from the acts or activities of Buyer or Buyer's Representatives in, on, or about the Property during or arising in connection with Buyer's inspections of the Property.

[Option: Seller's clause requiring buyer to assume risk]

3.5.3. Assumption of Risk. Subject to the other provisions of this Agreement, Buyer agrees that, by its acceptance or waiver of the contingency in this _ _[e.g., section 3.5]_ _, it assumes the risk that an adverse condition of the Property may not have been revealed by its own Due Diligence. On Buyer's acceptance or waiver of the contingency in this _ _[e.g., section 3.5]_ _, Seller will have no obligation to repair, correct, or compensate Buyer for any condition of the Property, including defects in the Improvements, noncompliance with applicable laws and regulations, including without limitation zoning laws, building codes, and the Americans with Disabilities Act, whether or not such condition of the Property would have been disclosed by Buyer's Due Diligence.

[Continue]

4.171-6 Financing contingency

3.6. Financing Contingency. Buyer's obligation to purchase the Property is conditioned on Buyer's obtaining, before the Contingency Date, a written commitment for a loan from _ _[name of lender]_ _ of at least _ _[amount]_ _ Dollars (_ _[dollar amount]_ _), secured by a first priority deed of trust on the Property on terms no less favorable than interest at _ _[number]_ _ percent (_ _[number]_ _%) per year, for a term of _ _[number]_ _ (_ _[number]_ _) years, amortized over _ _[number]_ _ (_ _[number]_ _) years, with loan fees not to exceed _ _[e.g., one]_ _ percent (_ _[e.g., 1%]_ _) of the principal amount of the loan, with prepayment permitted at the option of the Buyer subject to a prepayment penalty not to exceed _ _[e.g., one]_ _ percent (_ _[e.g., 1%]_ _) of the then-outstanding principal amount of the loan, and with such other terms and conditions as Buyer may approve in its sole and absolute discretion. Buyer agrees to use commercially reasonable efforts to obtain such a loan commitment. On or before the Contingency Date, Buyer must deliver written notice to Seller indicating whether the contingency set forth in this _ _[e.g., section 3.6]_ _ (Financing Contingency) has been met and waiving the Financing Contingency or terminating this Agreement unless Seller elects to provide such financing. If Buyer fails to deliver such notice on or before the Contingency Date, then Buyer will be deemed to have elected to terminate this Agreement unless the Seller elects to provide such financing. If the Financing Contingency is not met or waived by the Contingency Date, Seller may, but is not obligated to, agree to provide such financing on the terms listed above and in accordance with the note and deed of trust attached to this Agreement as _ _[e.g., Exhibits B and C]_ _. If Seller delivers a written commitment to Buyer within _ _[e.g., 3]_ _ business days after the Contingency Date, the Financing Contingency will be deemed met.

3.7. Termination for Failure of a Contingency. If this Agreement is terminated or deemed to be terminated for failure of a contingency set forth in this _ _[e.g., Article 3]_ _, then immediately on written notice from Buyer, Escrow Holder must refund the Deposit and return any Letter of Credit to Buyer, without offset for any charges or claims. Any cancellation fee or other costs of the Escrow Holder or the Title Company resulting from this termination for failure of a contingency will be borne equally by Seller and Buyer, and each party must pay its own expenses.

4.173-1 Representations and warranties

ARTICLE 5

[Add one of the following alternatives]

[Alternative 1: Buyer's form of seller's representations and warranties]

5.1. Seller's Representations and Warranties. Seller hereby represents and warrants that each of the following is true as of the Effective Date and the Closing Date:

5.1.1. Condition of the Property. The Property is free of any physical or mechanical defects and all building systems in the Improvements (including without limitation heating, ventilating, air-conditioning, elevator, other mechanical, electrical, sprinkler, life safety, and plumbing systems) are in good order and repair.

5.1.2. Compliance With Laws. Neither the Property nor its operation violates in any way any applicable laws, ordinances, rules, regulations, judgments, orders, or covenants, conditions and restrictions, whether federal, state, local, foreign, or private, including without limitation the Americans with Disabilities Act and all life safety requirements. The Improvements are not in violation of any applicable building or zoning codes, building moratorium or environmental protection codes, laws, regulations, or ordinances. Seller has not received any request, oral or written, that Seller modify or terminate any use of the Property. The zoning of the Property permits the current Improvements and use of the Property, there is no pending or contemplated rezoning, and the Property complies with the Subdivision Map Act and local ordinances enacted under that Act.

5.1.3. Documents. All Preliminary Documents delivered to Buyer under _ _[e.g., section 3.1]_ _, and all other documents delivered to Buyer by or on behalf of Seller, are true, correct, and complete copies of what they purport to be. The documents delivered by Seller to Buyer are all the material documents concerning the Property in Seller's possession or under its control.

5.1.4. Leases. The Rent Roll and Updated Rent Roll (defined in _ _[e.g., section 6.1.4]_ _) are true, correct, and complete. Seller has delivered to Buyer true, accurate, and complete copies of all Leases, and there are no leases, subleases, occupancies, or tenancies in effect pertaining to the Property except as stated in the Leases. The Leases are in full force and effect; no party to the Leases is in default under the Leases; and the Leases are subject to no defenses, setoffs, or counterclaims for the benefit of the tenants under the Leases; and no rent has been prepaid nor concessions given to the tenants under the Leases except as disclosed in the Leases. Seller has no notice or knowledge that any tenant of the Property is the subject of a bankruptcy or insolvency proceeding. Seller may not modify, cancel, amend, or extend any Lease or waive any rights under the Leases or enter into any new tenant lease between the Effective Date and the Closing Date without Buyer's prior written approval, which approval must not be unreasonably withheld. Seller is in full compliance with all of the landlord's obligations under the Leases.

5.1.5. Operating Statements. All operating statements furnished to Buyer in connection with or under this Agreement (a) are true and correct in all material respects, (b) have been prepared in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles consistently applied, and (c) accurately reflect the financial position of the Property.

5.1.6. Litigation. There is no pending or threatened private or governmental litigation by any governmental authority or person against Seller relating to the Property that might, if it and all other pending and threatened litigation were adversely determined, result in a material adverse change in the Property or its operation or that challenges the validity of or otherwise materially adversely affects the transactions contemplated by this Agreement.

5.1.7. Other Proceedings. No attachments, execution proceedings, assignments for the benefit of creditors, insolvency, bankruptcy, reorganization, or other proceedings are pending or threatened against Seller or Seller's interest in the Property, nor are any such proceedings contemplated by Seller.

5.1.8. Governmental Action. Seller has no knowledge of, nor has Seller received written notice of, any plan, study, or effort by any agency or party that in any way would materially affect the use of the Property or any portion of it for its current use, or of any intended public improvements that would result in any charge being levied against, or any lien assessed on, the Property. Seller has no knowledge of any existing, proposed, or contemplated plan to widen, modify, or realign any street or highway contiguous to the Property.

5.1.9. Condemnation. Seller has received no notice of any currently pending or contemplated special assessments or proceedings to condemn or demolish the Property or any part of it or any proceedings to declare the Property or any part of it a nuisance.

5.1.10. Utilities. All water, sewer, gas, electric, telephone, drainage facilities, and all other utilities required by law or by the normal operation of the Property are adequate to service the Property in its present use and to permit full compliance with all requirements of law and normal usage by the tenants of the Property.

5.1.11. Licenses. Seller has all licenses, permits, easements, and rights of way, including proof of dedication, building permits, and occupancy permits that are required from any governmental authority having jurisdiction over the Property, or from private parties, in order to continue the present use of the Property and to ensure adequate vehicular and pedestrian access to the Property. Such licenses, permits, easements, and rights-of-way must be in full force and effect on the Closing Date. All permits, rights, and documents to be transferred to Buyer at close of escrow have been fully paid for and are not subject to any liens, encumbrances, or claims of any kind, and their transfer and assignment do not require the consent of third parties other than as set forth in such documents or as required by law. Seller has, and at close of escrow will deliver to Buyer, good and marketable title to all such permits, rights, and documents.

5.1.12. Development Rights. Neither Seller nor any previous owner of the Property has, except by operation of law, sold, transferred, conveyed, or entered into any agreement regarding "air rights," "excess floor area ratio," or other development rights or restrictions relating to the Property, except as otherwise expressly set forth in the Preliminary Report.

5.1.13. Due Authorization. This Agreement and the performance of Seller's obligations under it and all documents executed by Seller that are to be delivered to Buyer at the Closing are, or on the Closing Date will be, duly authorized, executed, and delivered by Seller and are, or at the Closing Date will be, legal, valid, and binding obligations of Seller, and do not, and on the Closing Date will not, violate any provision of any agreement or judicial order to which Seller is a party or to which Seller or the Property is subject. No consent of any partner, shareholder, creditor, investor, judicial or administrative body, government agency, or other party is required for Seller to enter into and/or to perform Seller's obligations under this Agreement, except as has already been obtained. Seller is a corporation organized, validly existing, and in good standing under the laws of the State of _ _[name]_ _[.]

[If not a California corporation, add]

and is qualified to do business in the State of California.

[Continue]

5.1.14. Title to the Property. Seller has good and marketable title to the Property. Seller has no actual knowledge of any unrecorded or undisclosed legal or equitable interest in the Property owned or claimed by anyone other than Seller. Seller has no knowledge that anyone will, at the Closing, have any right to possession of the Property, except as disclosed by this Agreement or otherwise in writing to Buyer. There are no unsatisfied mechanics' or materialmen's lien rights on the Property. No assessment lien or bond encumbers the Property, and no governmental authority has undertaken any action that could give rise to an assessment lien affecting the Property.

5.1.15. Personal Property. Seller has no knowledge that anyone will, at the Closing, have any right to possession of any personal property included in the Purchase Price nor knowledge of any liens or encumbrances affecting such personal property, except as disclosed by this Agreement or otherwise in writing to Buyer.

5.1.16. Hazardous Wastes. The Property is not in violation of any federal, state, or local law, ordinance, or regulation relating to industrial hygiene or to the environmental conditions on, under, or about the Property, including but not limited to soil and groundwater conditions. There are no environmental, health, or safety hazards on, under, or about the Property, including but not limited to soil and groundwater conditions. Neither Seller nor any third party (including but not limited to Seller's predecessors in title to the Property) has used or installed any underground tank, or used, generated, manufactured, treated, stored, placed, deposited, or disposed of on, under, or about the Property or transported to or from the Property any flammable explosives, radioactive materials, hazardous wastes, toxic substances, or related materials (Hazardous Materials), which for purposes of this Agreement include, but are not limited to, substances defined as "hazardous substances, hazardous materials, or toxic substances" in the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980, as amended (42 United States Code §§9601 et seq.); the Hazardous Materials Transportation Safety and Security Reauthorization Act (49 United States Code §§5101 et seq.); the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act (42 United States Code §§6901 et seq.); the substances defined as "hazardous wastes" in California Health and Safety Code §25117 or as "hazardous substances" in California Health and Safety Code §25316; and the chemicals known to cause cancer or reproductive toxicity as published in the Safe Drinking Water and Toxic Enforcement Act of 1986 (California Health and Safety Code §25249.5 et seq.); and in the regulations adopted and publications promulgated under each of the aforesaid laws). Seller has no actual knowledge, except as otherwise disclosed to Buyer in writing, of the existence or prior existence on the Property of any Hazardous Material, other than de minimis amounts of household cleaners or office supplies.

5.1.17. Foreign Person. Seller is not a foreign person and is a "United States Person" as such term is defined in §7701(a)(30) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, as amended.

[Alternative 2: Seller's form of seller's representations and warranties]

5.1. Seller's Representations and Warranties. Despite anything to the contrary in this Agreement, Seller warrants and represents as of the Effective Date that:

5.1.1. Organization; Authority. This Agreement and the performance of Seller's obligations under it and all documents executed by Seller that are to be delivered to Buyer at the Closing are, or on the Closing Date will be, duly authorized, executed, and delivered by Seller and are, or at the Closing Date will be, legal, valid, and binding obligations of Seller, and do not, and on the Closing Date will not, violate any provision of any agreement or judicial order to which Seller is a party or to which Seller or the Property is subject. No consent of any partner, shareholder, creditor, investor, judicial or administrative body, government agency, or other party is required for Seller to enter into or to perform Seller's obligations under this Agreement, except as has already been obtained. 5.1.4. Preliminary Documents. To Seller's knowledge, the Preliminary Documents constitute all books, records, documents, agreements, contracts, reports, and other materials related to the Property that are in Seller's possession or control. To Seller's knowledge, the Preliminary Documents are true, correct, and complete copies of what they purport to be.

5.1.5. No Condemnation. To Seller's knowledge, Seller has received no written notice of any presently pending or contemplated special assessments or proceedings to condemn or demolish the Property or any part of it, or any proceedings to declare the Property or any part of it a nuisance.

5.2. Buyer's Representations and Warranties. Despite anything to the contrary in this Agreement, Buyer hereby warrants and represents that each of the following is true as of the Effective Date and the Closing Date:

5.2.1. Due Authorization. 4.174-1 Buyer's closing conditions

ARTICLE 6

CLOSING CONDITIONS

6.1. Buyer's Closing Conditions. All obligations of Buyer under this Agreement are subject to the fulfillment, before or at the Closing, of each of the following conditions (Buyer's Closing Conditions). Buyer's Closing Conditions are solely for Buyer's benefit and any or all of Buyer's Closing Conditions may be waived in writing by Buyer in whole or in part without prior notice.

6.1.1. Title. It is a Buyer's Closing Condition that, on the Closing Date, Seller convey to Buyer marketable fee simple title to the Real Property by execution and delivery of a grant deed in the form attached to this Agreement as _ _[e.g., Exhibit D]_ _ (Deed) and cause to be delivered to Buyer from the Title Company an ALTA (_ _[B-1970 Form, as amended/June 1, 1987, Form]_ _) Owner's Extended Coverage Policy of Title Insurance with liability in the full amount of the Purchase Price, insuring title to the Real Property in Buyer, subject only to the Permitted Exceptions, together with such endorsements described below or as may be reasonably requested by Buyer (Title Policy). The Title Policy must also include such endorsements or guaranties as Buyer may request. Seller must deliver to the Title Company such instruments, documents, releases, and agreements and must perform such other acts as Title Company may reasonably require in order to issue the Title Policy. Indemnification of the Title Company to induce it to insure any otherwise unpermitted exception to title will not be allowed except with Buyer's prior written consent after full disclosure to Buyer of the nature and substance of such exception and indemnity, which consent will not be unreasonably withheld by Buyer for exceptions not material to marketable title to the Real Property.

6.1.2. Liens. Buyer must have received a certified report, with copies of all documents, satisfactory to Buyer and Buyer's counsel, from the Title Company or a reputable lien search company indicating that there are no personal property liens of record on file with the Secretary of State of California, other than those that will be discharged at the Closing, as of a date no more than _ _[e.g., 10]_ _ business days before the Closing Date, and a confirmation dated no more than _ _[e.g., 3]_ _ business days before the Closing Date that no further liens have been filed since the date of the certified report. Also, Buyer must have received a verified report, satisfactory to Buyer and Buyer's counsel, from the Title Company or a reputable lien search company, indicating that there are no federal or state tax liens of record against the Property and on file with the respective agencies as of a date no more than _ _[e.g., 10]_ _ business days before the Closing Date.

6.1.3. Seller's Representations, Warranties, and Covenants. The representations and warranties of Seller in this Agreement must be true in all material respects on and as of the Closing Date with the same effect as if such representations and warranties had been made on and as of the Closing Date. Seller must have performed and complied with all covenants, agreements, and conditions required by this Agreement to be performed or complied with by it before or on the Closing Date. Buyer must have been furnished with a certificate of Seller dated as of the Closing Date, certifying to the fulfillment of the foregoing conditions. Such certificate will have the effect of a representation and warranty of Seller made on and as of the Closing Date.

[Alternative 1: Buyer's clause for delivery of estoppel certificates]

6.1.4. Tenant Estoppel Certificates. At least _ _[e.g., 5]_ _ days before the Closing Date, Seller must have delivered to Buyer for its approval an updated Rent Roll dated no earlier than _ _[e.g., 10]_ _ days before the Closing Date (Updated Rent Roll). At least _ _[e.g., 5]_ _ days before the Closing Date, Seller must have delivered to Buyer an estoppel certificate from each tenant of the Property in the form attached to this Agreement as _ _[e.g., Exhibit E]_ _ (Tenant Estoppel Certificates), dated no earlier than _ _[e.g., 20]_ _ days before the Closing Date. The Tenant Estoppel Certificates must contain no material discrepancies from the Updated Rent Roll, and must (a) confirm the terms of such tenant's lease and the current rent payable under it, (b) verify to the best knowledge of such tenant that Seller is not in default or subject to any claims or defenses of such tenant, (c) affirm that all construction obligations of landlord under such tenant's lease have been met to such tenant's satisfaction, (d) specify the amount of any deposits or prepaid rent held by Seller, (e) constitute an attornment by such tenant to Buyer and a consent to the assignment of the lease to Buyer. Despite any provisions in this Agreement to the contrary, Buyer will have until the end of the day before the Closing Date to disapprove the Updated Rent Roll and Tenant Estoppel Certificates.

[Alternative 2: Seller's clause for delivery of estoppel certificates]

6.1.4. Tenant Estoppel Certificates. At least _ _[e.g., 10]_ _ days before the Closing Date, Seller must deliver to Buyer an updated Rent Roll dated no earlier than _ _[e.g., 30]_ _ days before the Closing Date (Updated Rent Roll). At least _ _[e.g., 10]_ _ days before the Closing Date, Seller must deliver to Buyer estoppel certificates in the form attached as _ _[e.g., Exhibit E]_ _ or in the form required under each tenant's Lease (Tenant Estoppel Certificates), dated no earlier than _ _[e.g., 30]_ _ days before the Closing Date. In lieu of Tenant Estoppel Certificates from no more than _ _[e.g., 20 percent]_ _ of the tenants occupying no more than _ _[e.g., 10 percent]_ _ of the Property, Seller may substitute its own certificate verifying the information that tenant would have given under the required form of such tenant's Tenant Estoppel Certificate (Seller's Certificate). If a Tenant Estoppel Certificate or Seller's Certificate contains a material discrepancy from the Updated Rent Roll, discloses an alleged material breach by Seller as landlord under such tenant's Lease, or discloses, in Buyer's reasonable opinion, an unsatisfactory condition not discovered by Buyer during the Due Diligence Period, then Buyer may disapprove the Tenant Estoppel Certificates and the Seller Certificates and terminate this Agreement without default by either party, by giving written notice of its disapproval within _ _[e.g., 3]_ _ days before the Closing Date. If Buyer does not give written notice of its disapproval of the Tenant Estoppel Certificates and the Seller Certificates, then Buyer will be deemed to have approved such certificates and this Agreement will not be terminated. If at any time within _ _[e.g., 60]_ _ days after the Closing Date, Seller delivers a Tenant Estoppel Certificate from a tenant for which Seller previously provided a Seller's Certificate and such Tenant Estoppel Certificate contains no material discrepancies from the related Seller's Certificate, then Buyer must accept the Tenant Estoppel Certificate in lieu of the Seller's Certificate, and the Seller's Certificate will be of no further effect between Seller and Buyer.

[Continue]

6.1.5. Financing. The financing that Buyer must obtain as described in _ _[e.g., section 3.6]_ _, above, will be ready to close, and the lender that has committed to provide such financing (New Lender) must be ready to disburse the funds into Escrow as described in _ _[e.g., section 7.4]_ _, subject to no conditions other than conveyance of the Property by Seller to Buyer.

6.1.6. Closing Documents. Seller must have delivered to Escrow the documents and funds it is required to deliver through Escrow at Closing.

6.1.7. Physical Condition. The physical condition of the Property must be substantially the same on the Closing Date as on the Effective Date, reasonable wear and tear excepted.

6.1.8. Adverse Actions. There will exist no actions, suits, arbitrations, claims, attachments, proceedings, assignments for the benefit of creditors, insolvency, bankruptcy, reorganization, or other proceedings, pending or threatened, against Seller or regarding the Property that would materially and adversely affect Seller's ability to perform its obligations under this Agreement or Buyer's title to the Property, and there will exist no pending or threatened action, suit, or proceeding regarding the Seller before or by any court or administrative agency that seeks to restrain or prohibit, or to obtain damages or a discovery order with respect to, this Agreement or the consummation of the transactions contemplated by this Agreement.

6.1.9. Hazardous Material. No Hazardous Materials will have been discovered on the Property after the Contingency Date that were not previously disclosed to Buyer or discovered by Buyer before the Contingency Date.

6.1.10. No Material Changes. No event will have occurred nor will any condition have arisen after the Contingency Date that as of the Closing Date materially and adversely affects all or any part of the Property or its current or prospective operation, use, value, income, expenses, or occupancy.

6.1.11. Consents. All necessary agreements and consents of all parties to consummate the transaction contemplated by this Agreement will have been obtained and furnished by Seller to Buyer.

4.174-2 Seller's closing conditions

6.2. Seller's Closing Conditions. Seller's obligation to sell the Property is expressly conditioned on the fulfillment of each condition precedent at or before the Closing (Seller's Closing Conditions). Seller's Closing Conditions are solely for Seller's benefit and any of Seller's Closing Conditions may be waived in writing by Seller in whole or in part without prior notice.

6.2.1. Approval of Contingencies. It is a Seller's Closing Condition that Buyer must have acknowledged its approval or waiver of all contingencies as required under _ _[e.g., Article 3]_ _.

6.2.2. Purchase Price. Buyer must have delivered the Purchase Price to Escrow.

6.2.3. Delivery of Closing Documents and Funds. Buyer must have delivered to Escrow the documents and funds specified in _ _[e.g., section 7.4]_ _.

6.2.4. Buyer's Representations, Warranties, and Covenants. The representations and warranties of Buyer in this Agreement must be true in all material respects on and as of the Closing Date with the same effect as if such representations and warranties had been made on and as of the Closing Date. Buyer must have performed and complied with all covenants, agreements, and conditions required by this Agreement to be performed or complied with by it before or on the Closing Date. Seller must have been furnished with a certificate of Buyer dated as of the Closing Date, certifying to the fulfillment of the foregoing conditions. Such certificate will have the effect of a representation and warranty of Buyer made on and as of the Closing Date.

4.174-3 Termination for failure of a condition

6.3. Termination for Failure of a Condition. If Buyer's Closing Conditions or Seller's Closing Conditions, as the case may be, have not been previously approved or waived, this Agreement may be terminated by the party in whose favor the Closing Condition runs by written notice to the other. If this Agreement is so terminated, the parties will have no further obligation or liability under this Agreement, except as provided in _ _[e.g., Article 9]_ _ and this _ _[e.g., section 6.3]_ _. Subject to Buyer's obligations and covenants under _ _[e.g., section 6.2]_ _ and subject to _ _[e.g., Article 9]_ _, on such termination, Escrow Holder must return the Deposit to Buyer. Any cancellation fee or other costs of the Escrow Holder and Title Company will be borne equally by Seller and Buyer and each party will pay its own expenses.

7.6. Deliveries Outside Escrow. Seller agrees to deliver the following to Buyer outside Escrow within _ _[e.g., 3]_ _ business days after Closing:

7.6.1. Letters in form and substance satisfactory to Buyer, signed, and stamped by Seller and addressed to each tenant at the Property, stating that the Property has been sold to Buyer and that all rents should be paid to Buyer after the Closing Date (Tenant Notices);

7.6.2. The Updated Rent Roll current through the day before the Closing Date;

7.6.3. The original Leases.

4.175-7 Prorations

7.7. Prorations. All receipts and disbursements of the Property will be prorated as of 11:59 p.m. on the day immediately preceding the Closing Date and the Purchase Price will be adjusted on the following basis:

7.7.1. Property Rents.

(a) Collected Rents. All rents collected by Seller under the Leases in effect on the Closing Date, including rents on account of operating cost pass-throughs, percentage rents, and other charges paid by tenants (Collected Rents) will be prorated as of the Closing by charging Seller and crediting Buyer for any Collected Rents applicable to periods after the Closing. Despite the foregoing, Collected Rents are subject to reproration for _ _[e.g., 1]_ _ year after the Closing Date if there is accurate and definitive evidence that Collected Rents were incorrectly applied to the preclosing or postclosing period. The party receiving such evidence must provide written notice to the other within _ _[e.g., 5]_ _ days after receipt of such information and the parties will reprorate the Collected Rents to adjust for any excess credit by immediate reimbursement for such excess credit. There will be no right to reprorate after the _ _[e.g., first]_ _ anniversary of the Closing Date.

(b) Delinquent Rents. All unpaid rents that are due and owed to Seller under the Leases in effect on the Closing Date, including rents on account of operating cost pass-throughs, percentage rents, and other charges paid by tenants (Delinquent Rents) will not be prorated and will remain the property of Seller. Buyer must deliver any Delinquent Rents received by Buyer to Seller, less the actual costs of collection, on the condition that Buyer will apply all rent received from tenants under the Leases first to any obligations arising under the Leases after the Closing and Buyer will then apply the balance, if any, to the Delinquent Rents. Seller will have the right to collect Delinquent Rents, at Seller's sole cost and expense, on the condition that Seller will have no right to cause the eviction of, and Buyer will have no obligation to evict, any tenants owing Delinquent Rents.

(c) Payable Rents. All unpaid rents that have accrued under the Leases in effect on the Closing Date but that are not due and payable as of the Closing, including rents on account of operating cost pass-throughs, percentage rents, and other charges paid by tenants (Payable Rents), will be prorated as of the Closing by charging Buyer and crediting Seller for any Payable Rents applicable to periods before the Closing, as mutually agreed on by the parties not less than _ _[e.g., 5]_ _ days before the Closing Date. Despite the foregoing, Payable Rents are subject to reproration for _ _[e.g., 1]_ _ year after the Closing Date if there is accurate and definitive evidence that Payable Rents were incorrectly applied to the preclosing or postclosing period. The party receiving such evidence must provide written notice to the other within _ _[e.g., 5]_ _ days after receipt of such information, and the parties will reprorate the Payable Rents to adjust for any excess credit by immediate reimbursement for such excess credit. There will be no right to reprorate after the _ _[e.g., first]_ _ anniversary of the Closing Date.

7.7.2. Security Deposits. At Closing, Buyer will be credited and Seller will be charged with the amount of all security deposits received under the Leases in effect as of the Closing.

7.7.3. Capital Expenditures and Accounts Payable. All capital and other improvements (including labor and material) that are performed or contracted for, by or on behalf of Seller before the Closing Date, and all sums due for accounts payable that were owed or incurred by the Property before the Closing Date, must be paid by Seller.

7.7.4. Leasing Commissions. Seller must pay when due, whether before or after Closing, all leasing commissions payable with respect to Leases and extensions, renewal, and expansions of the Leases that were fully executed before the Contingency Date. Seller will be credited and Buyer will be charged the amount of leasing commissions paid by Seller on account of Leases and extensions, renewals, and expansions of the Leases that were fully executed after the Contingency Date.

7.7.5. Property Taxes. All real and personal property ad valorem taxes and special assessments, if any, whether payable in installments or not, including without limitation all supplemental taxes attributable to the period before the Closing Date for the calendar year in which the Closing occurs will be prorated to the Closing Date, based on the latest available tax rate and assessed valuation.

7.7.6. Utility Charges. Charges for utilities, including water, sewer, electric, and gas, will be prorated within _ _[e.g., 30]_ _ days after the Closing Date based on the then most recent bills for such services. Seller must pay for all utility services to the Property for all periods before the Closing and Buyer must pay for all utility services to the Property for the Closing Date and all periods thereafter.

4.175-8 Closing costs

7.8. Closing Costs. Closing costs will be allocated as follows:

7.8.1. Seller will pay all costs associated with removing any debt encumbering the Property;

7.8.2. Escrow costs will be shared equally by Seller and Buyer;

7.8.3. Seller will pay the cost of the Title Policy;

7.8.4. Buyer will pay the cost of recording the Deed;

7.8.5. Seller will pay costs associated with assigning the Assumed Loan, including the cost of any fees charged by Seller's lender for its consent to the Assumed Loan;

7.8.6. Buyer will pay costs associated with obtaining the financing described in _ _[e.g., section 3.6]_ _

from the New Lender;

7.8.7. Buyer will pay any sales tax; and

7.8.8. The documentary transfer tax and any municipal transfer tax will be paid in accordance with the custom and practice in the county in which the Property is located.

4.175-9 Broker's commission; indemnity

7.9. Broker's Commission; Indemnity. Under separate agreement, Seller must pay _ _[name]_ _ (Broker) for its services as broker in this transaction. Neither party has had any contact or dealings regarding the Property, or any communication in connection with the subject matter of this transaction, through any licensed real estate broker or person, other than the Broker, who can claim a commission or finder's fee as a procuring cause of the sale contemplated in this Agreement. If any other broker or finder perfects a claim for a commission or finder's fee based on any contract, dealings, or communication with a party (Indemnifying Party), then the Indemnifying Party must indemnify, defend, and hold the other party (Nonindemnifying Party) harmless from all costs and expenses (including reasonable attorney fees and costs of defense) incurred by the Nonindemnifying Party in connection with such claim.

4.175-10 Possession

7.10. Possession. Seller will deliver exclusive right of possession of the Property to Buyer on the Closing Date, subject only to the interest of tenants under the Leases.

Comment: If the buyer is not purchasing the personal property, the phrase "all personal property taxes shown on the tax bill will be paid by Seller through escrow" should be added to the proration provision. If the buyer is purchasing only some of the personal property, the parties should agree on the value of the property transferred to permit proration of the taxes. See discussion in §4.61.

For a detailed discussion of escrow and closing, see chap 15. For a form of separate buyer's escrow instructions, see §§15.48-15.61; for a form of separate seller's escrow instructions, see §§15.63-15.73. The form escrow instructions in chap 15 do not conform to the terms of this form purchase agreement.

4.176-1 Condemnation

ARTICLE 8

RISK OF LOSS

8.1. Condemnation. If before the Closing Date any action or proceeding is commenced for the condemnation or exercise of the rights of eminent domain of the Property or any portion of it, or if Seller is notified by the duly authorized officer of a duly empowered condemning authority of the intent to commence such action or proceeding (Condemnation) and if such Condemnation would materially and adversely affect the use or operation of the Property, have the effect of decreasing the square footage of the Improvements, or reduce or eliminate access to the Property, then Buyer may either (a) terminate this Agreement or (b) proceed with the Closing without modifying the terms of this Agreement and without reducing the Purchase Price, on the condition that Seller must assign and turn over, and Buyer will be entitled to keep, all awards for the Condemnation that accrue to Seller. Seller may not negotiate, resist, or stipulate to any Condemnation without Buyer's written consent. Seller must notify Buyer of any notice of Condemnation of all or any portion of the Property within _ _[e.g., 5]_ _ days after the receipt of this notice, and Buyer must exercise its option(s) as provided in this _ _[e.g., section 8.1]_ _ within _ _[e.g., 10]_ _ days after receipt of such notice. If necessary, the Closing Date will be extended to give Buyer the full _ _[e.g., 10]_ _-day period to make such election.

4.176-2 Damage and destruction

8.2. Damage and Destruction. If before the Closing Date any damage or destruction of the Property, or any portion of it, will have occurred that results in an Uninsured Loss of _ _[amount]_ _ Dollars (_ _[dollar amount]_ _) or less, then at the Closing Seller must assign to Buyer the right to collect any Insurance Proceeds with respect to such loss and give Buyer a credit against the Purchase Price in the amount of such Uninsured Loss. If such damage or destruction results in an Uninsured Loss of more than _ _[amount]_ _ (_ _[dollar amount]_ _), then within _ _[e.g., 5]_ _ days after determination of the amount of the Insurance Proceeds Seller must elect either (a) to give Buyer a credit for the entire amount of such Uninsured Loss and assign to Buyer the right to collect any Insurance Proceeds with respect to such loss, or (b) to terminate this Agreement. Despite any such damage or destruction, the Purchase Price for the Property will not be reduced except by the credits referred to above. For purposes of this _ _[e.g., section 8.2]_ _, Uninsured Loss is the difference between (i) the sum of the actual cost necessary for the Seller to fully repair such damage and destruction, as determined by a qualified insurance adjuster selected by the insurance carrier providing insurance for the Property, and (ii) the total amount of Insurance Proceeds, which are the proceeds from any and all insurance with respect to the Property and/or to such loss, including without limitation fire and casualty and liability insurance. Uninsured Losses may arise because of self-insurance, deductible amounts under policies, proceeds of policies insufficient to cover the loss, risks not insured for, or otherwise. If any damage to or destruction of the Property occurs, the Closing Date will be extended until the amount of the Insurance Proceeds is determined and Seller has made any election permitted under this _ _[e.g., section 8.2]_ _.

Comment: On risk of loss, see §§4.137-4.139. For discussion of allocation of risk in accordance with CC §1662 and the Uniform Vendor and Purchaser Risk Act and for related forms, see §§13.3-13.14.

4.177-1 Buyer's default

REMEDIES FOR DEFAULT

9.1. Buyer's Default. Buyer will be deemed to be in default under this Agreement (1) if Buyer fails, for any reason other than Seller's default under this Agreement or the failure of a condition precedent to Buyer's obligation to perform under this Agreement, to meet, comply with, or perform any covenant, agreement, or obligation required on its part within the time limits and in the manner required in this Agreement, or (2) if a material breach of any representation or warranty (made by Buyer) has occurred by reason of Buyer's actual fraud or intentional misrepresentation; provided, however, that no such default will be deemed to have occurred unless and until Seller has given Buyer written notice of this Agreement, describing the nature of the default, and Buyer has failed to cure such default within _ _[e.g., 5]_ _ days after the receipt of such notice (but in any event before the Closing Date, unless such default occurs after Closing).

4.177-2 Remedies for buyer's default

9.2. REMEDIES FOR BUYER'S DEFAULT. IF THE CLOSING FAILS TO OCCUR BECAUSE OF BUYER'S DEFAULT UNDER THE TERMS OF THIS AGREEMENT, BUYER WILL BE RESPONSIBLE FOR ALL CANCELLATION CHARGES REQUIRED TO BE PAID TO ESCROW HOLDER AND ANY ESCROW CHARGES. IN ADDITION, THIS AGREEMENT AND THE RIGHTS AND OBLIGATIONS OF THE PARTIES WILL TERMINATE AND THE DEPOSITS WILL BE IMMEDIATELY DELIVERED BY ESCROW HOLDER TO SELLER ON SELLER'S REQUEST. THE DEPOSITS WILL BE DEEMED LIQUIDATED DAMAGES FOR BUYER'S NONPERFORMANCE AS SELLER'S SOLE AND EXCLUSIVE REMEDY AGAINST BUYER (INCLUDING, WITHOUT LIMITATION, SELLER'S RIGHTS TO SEEK SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE OF THIS AGREEMENT AND TO RECEIVE DAMAGES) FOR BUYER'S FAILURE TO PURCHASE THE PROPERTY, WHICH SUMS WILL BE PRESUMED TO BE A REASONABLE ESTIMATE OF THE AMOUNT OF ACTUAL DAMAGES SUSTAINED BY SELLER BECAUSE OF BUYER'S BREACH OF ITS OBLIGATION TO PURCHASE THE PROPERTY. FROM THE NATURE OF THIS TRANSACTION, IT IS IMPRACTICABLE AND EXTREMELY DIFFICULT TO FIX THE ACTUAL DAMAGES THAT SELLER WOULD SUSTAIN IF BUYER BREACHES SUCH OBLIGATION. THE IMPRACTICABILITY AND DIFFICULTY OF FIXING ACTUAL DAMAGES IS CAUSED BY, WITHOUT LIMITATION, THE FACT THAT THE PROPERTY IS UNIQUE. GIVEN THE FOREGOING FACTS, AMONG OTHERS, BUYER AND SELLER AGREE THAT LIQUIDATED DAMAGES ARE PARTICULARLY APPROPRIATE FOR THIS TRANSACTION AND AGREE THAT SAID LIQUIDATED DAMAGES MUST BE PAID IN THE EVENT OF BUYER'S BREACH OF ITS OBLIGATION TO PURCHASE THE PROPERTY, DESPITE ANY WORDS OR CHARACTERIZATIONS PREVIOUSLY USED OR CONTAINED IN THIS AGREEMENT IMPLYING ANY CONTRARY INTENT. THE PAYMENT OF SUCH AMOUNT AS LIQUIDATED DAMAGES IS NOT INTENDED AS A FORFEITURE OR PENALTY WITHIN THE MEANING OF CALIFORNIA CIVIL CODE §3275 OR §3369 BUT IS INTENDED TO CONSTITUTE LIQUIDATED DAMAGES TO SELLER UNDER CALIFORNIA CIVIL CODE §§1671, 1676, AND 1677. NOTHING IN THIS AGREEMENT WILL, HOWEVER, BE DEEMED TO LIMIT BUYER'S LIABILITY TO SELLER FOR DAMAGES OR INJUNCTIVE RELIEF FOR BREACH OF BUYER'S INDEMNITY OBLIGATIONS UNDER _ _[e.g., SECTION 3.5.2]_ _, OR FOR ATTORNEY FEES AND COSTS AS PROVIDED IN _ _[e.g., SECTION 10.10]_ _.

4.177-3 Seller's default

9.3. Seller's Default. Seller will be deemed to be in default under this Agreement (1) if Seller fails, for any reason other than Buyer's default under this Agreement or the failure of a condition precedent to Seller's obligation to perform under this Agreement, to meet, comply with, or perform any covenant, agreement, or obligation required on its part within the time limits and in the manner required in this Agreement, or (2) if a material breach of any representation or warranty (made by Seller) has occurred because of Seller's actual fraud or intentional misrepresentation; provided, however, that no such default will be deemed to have occurred unless and until Buyer has given Seller written notice of the default, describing its nature, and Seller has failed to cure such default within _ _[e.g., 5]_ _ days after receipt of such notice (but in any event before the Closing Date, unless such default occurs after Closing).

4.177-4 Remedies on seller's default

[Alternative 1: Buyer's clause for remedies on Seller's default]

9.4. Remedies for Seller's Default. If Seller defaults in its obligations under this Agreement to sell the Property to Buyer on the Closing Date through no fault of Buyer, then Buyer at its option may have the right to specific performance of this Agreement or the right to recover the Deposit and all of its general and specific damages. If, after the Closing Date, Buyer determines that Seller has breached any representation or warranty set forth in _ _[e.g., Article 5]_ _, then Buyer will have the right to bring an action for general and specific damages to Buyer. If this Agreement is terminated before the Closing Date for Seller's default, then, in addition to any remedy Buyer has under this Agreement, Seller will reimburse Buyer for the costs incurred by Seller in conducting its Due Diligence.

[Alternative 2: Seller's clause for remedies on Seller's default]

9.4. WAIVER OF RIGHT TO SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE. IF SELLER FAILS TO CONVEY THE PROPERTY TO BUYER IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE PROVISIONS OF THIS AGREEMENT, AND SUCH FAILURE CONSTITUTES A DEFAULT UNDER THIS AGREEMENT, THEN BUYER WILL BE ENTITLED TO THE RETURN OF THE DEPOSIT AND ALL INTEREST ACCRUED ON THAT DEPOSIT WHILE IN ESCROW, BUT BUYER WILL NOT HAVE THE RIGHT TO RECEIVE ANY EQUITABLE RELIEF, INCLUDING WITHOUT LIMITATION THE RIGHT TO RECORD A LIS PENDENS AGAINST THE PROPERTY UNDER APPLICABLE LAW OR TO PURSUE THE SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE OF THIS AGREEMENT, BUT BUYER WILL HAVE THE RIGHT TO PURSUE AN ACTION FOR DAMAGES AGAINST SELLER RELATIVE TO SUCH DEFAULT. SELLER AND BUYER ACKNOWLEDGE THAT THEY HAVE READ AND UNDERSTAND THIS _ _[e.g., SECTION 9.4]_ _ AND BY THEIR INITIALS IMMEDIATELY BELOW AGREE TO BE BOUND BY ITS TERMS.

4.177-5 Resolution of disputes

9.5. Resolution of Disputes. Controversies or claims between Seller and Buyer that arise from (a) this Agreement (including any modifications to this agreement), (b) any document, agreement, or procedure related to or delivered in connection with this Agreement or the Property, (c) any violation of this Agreement, or (d) any claims for damages resulting from any business conducted between Seller and Buyer, including claims for injury to persons, property, or business interests (torts) (collectively Arbitrable Disputes) will be resolved under this _ _[e.g., section 9.5]_ _, which will survive termination of this Agreement. Wherever this Agreement refers to arbitration as the means of resolving disputes between the parties, the parties agree to follow the procedure described immediately below before commencing arbitration procedures. The filing of a judicial action during the term of this Agreement to enforce the other party's performance under this Agreement, e.g., for an order of attachment, injunction, or other remedy, will not constitute a waiver to the filing party's right or breach of the filing party's obligation to arbitrate; provided, however, that in no circumstances following the termination of this Agreement will Buyer be entitled to record a notice of pending action (lis pendens) or take other action or seek other remedies that would have the effect of clouding Seller's title or restricting Seller's ability to convey or encumber the Property, free of any claim by Buyer to the Property.

9.5.1. Arbitration of Disputes.

(a) General. Any controversies or claims between Seller and Buyer that arise from Arbitrable Disputes will be settled by arbitration in the City of _ _[name]_ _, California, in accordance with the Commercial Arbitration Rules (Rules of the American Arbitration Association (AAA)) if not inconsistent with other provisions of this Agreement, and judgment on the award rendered by the arbitrators may be entered in any court having jurisdiction. The parties submit to the jurisdiction of the Superior Court of the State of California, County of _ _[name]_ _, for purposes of confirming any such award and entering judgment. The parties further agree that, despite anything to the contrary that may now or hereafter be contained in the Rules of the AAA, this _ _[e.g., section 9.5.1]_ _ will control.

(b) Appointment. Within _ _[e.g., 10]_ _ days after receipt of a notice of arbitration (Demand) from the other party, each party will appoint one person to hear and decide the dispute. The two persons so chosen will, within _ _[e.g., 10]_ _ days after their appointment, appoint a third impartial arbitrator (who must be an attorney at law licensed to practice in California), and the final majority decision of the three arbitrators will be final and conclusive on the parties to this Agreement. Each appointment of an arbitrator will be deemed complete on delivery by the appointing party of written notice of appointment of that arbitrator to the _ _[name]_ _ Regional Office of the AAA. If either Seller or Buyer fails to designate its arbitrator within the specified period after receipt of the Demand, then the arbitrator designated by the other party will sit as the sole arbitrator and will be deemed to be the single, mutually approved arbitrator to resolve the Arbitrable Dispute. If the party-appointed arbitrators are unable to appoint an impartial arbitrator, the impartial arbitrator will be appointed under the Rules of the AAA. If the parties cannot agree on a rate of compensation for the arbitrators, they will be compensated for their services at a rate to be determined by the AAA.

(c) Costs. Except as provided in this _ _[e.g., section 9.5.1]_ _, each party will bear its own costs and expenses of arbitration, including, but not limited to, filing fees, attorney fees, the fees of the arbitrator appointed by the party, and costs of transcripts, and each party agrees to pay half of the compensation to be paid to the neutral arbitrator in the arbitration. The arbitrators will not have the power or competence to allocate between the parties in their award any costs, expenses, fees, or share of arbitrators' compensation.

(d) Written Opinion. The arbitrators must, on the request of either Seller or Buyer, issue a written opinion of their findings of fact and conclusions of law. On receipt by the requesting party of this written opinion, the party will have the right to file with the arbitrators a motion to reconsider, and the arbitrators must then reconsider the issues raised by this motion and either confirm or change their majority decision, which will then be final and conclusive on the parties.

(e) Applicability of Code of Civil Procedure. It is specifically contemplated and agreed by the parties that California Code of Civil Procedure §1283.05, as it may be amended from time to time, will be incorporated into, made a part of, and made applicable to the arbitration agreement in this _ _[e.g., section 9.5.1]_ _.

(f) Power of Arbitrators. The arbitrators will have the authority to issue any judgment or order, including punitive damages and equitable relief; provided, however, that the arbitrators' power to provide equitable relief or specific performance will be limited to disputes in connection with the administration of this agreement and will not preclude or restrict implementation of the termination provisions of this Agreement.

(g) Statute of Limitations. For purposes of the statute of limitations, the filing of an arbitration under this _ _[e.g., section 9.5.1]_ _ is the equivalent of the filing of a lawsuit, and any claim or controversy that may be arbitrated under this _ _[e.g., section 9.5.1]_ _ is subject to any applicable statute of limitations. The arbitrators will have the authority to decide whether any such claim or controversy is barred by the statute of limitations, and, if so, to dismiss the arbitration on that basis.

(h) Disagreement on Arbitrability. If the parties disagree on whether a dispute is an Arbitrable Dispute, the issue of arbitrability will be resolved by litigation unless both parties in their sole discretion agree to make the issue of arbitrability an issue to be decided by the arbitrators under this _ _[e.g., section 9.5.1]_ _.

9.5.2. Statutory Notice. NOTICE: BY INITIALING IN THE SPACE BELOW, YOU ARE AGREEING TO HAVE ANY DISPUTE ARISING OUT OF THE MATTERS INCLUDED IN THE "ARBITRATION OF DISPUTES" PROVISION DECIDED BY NEUTRAL ARBITRATION AS PROVIDED BY CALIFORNIA LAW AND YOU ARE GIVING UP ANY RIGHTS YOU MIGHT POSSESS TO HAVE THE DISPUTE LITIGATED IN A COURT OR JURY TRIAL. BY INITIALING IN THE SPACE BELOW, YOU ARE GIVING UP YOUR JUDICIAL RIGHTS TO DISCOVERY AND

APPEAL, UNLESS THOSE RIGHTS ARE SPECIFICALLY INCLUDED IN THE "ARBITRATION OF DISPUTES" PROVISION. IF YOU REFUSE TO SUBMIT TO ARBITRATION AFTER AGREEING TO THIS PROVISION, YOU MAY BE COMPELLED TO ARBITRATE UNDER THE AUTHORITY OF THE CALIFORNIA CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE. YOUR AGREEMENT TO THIS ARBITRATION PROVISION IS VOLUNTARY.

THE UNDERSIGNED HAVE READ AND UNDERSTAND THE FOREGOING AND AGREE TO SUBMIT DISPUTES ARISING OUT OF THE MATTERS INCLUDED IN THE "ARBITRATION OF DISPUTES" PROVISION TO NEUTRAL ARBITRATION.

4.178-2 Entire agreement

10.2. Entire Agreement. This Agreement and all exhibits _ _[addenda, schedules, agreements]_ _ referred to in this Agreement constitute the complete, exclusive, and final statement of the terms of the agreement with respect to the sole property between buyer and seller and may not be contradicted by evidence of any prior or contemporaneous agreement. This Agreement specifically supersedes any prior written or oral agreements between the parties. The language in all parts of this Agreement will be construed as a whole in accordance with its fair meaning and without regard to California Civil Code §1654 or similar statutes. Neither party has been induced to enter into this Agreement by, and neither party is relying on, any representation or warranty outside those expressly set forth in this Agreement.

4.178-3 Amendments and waivers

10.3. Amendments and Waivers. No addition to or modification of this Agreement will be effective unless it is made in writing and signed by the party against whom the addition or modification is sought to be enforced. The party benefited by any condition or obligation may waive the same, but such waiver will not be enforceable by another party unless it is made in writing and signed by the waiving party.

4.178-4 Invalidity of provision

10.4. Invalidity of Provision. If any provision of this Agreement as applied to either party or to any circumstance is adjudged by a court of competent jurisdiction to be void or unenforceable for any reason, this fact will in no way affect (to the maximum extent permissible by law) any other provision of this Agreement, the application of any such provision under circumstances different from those adjudicated by the court, or the validity or enforceability of this Agreement as a whole.

4.178-5 No merger

10.5. No Merger. This Agreement, each provision of it, and all warranties and representations in this Agreement will survive the Closing and will not merge in any instrument conveying title to Buyer. All representations, warranties, agreements, and obligations of the parties will, despite any investigation made by any party to this Agreement, survive Closing, and the same will inure to the benefit of and be binding on the parties' respective successors and assigns.

4.178-6 References

10.6. References. Unless otherwise indicated, (a) all article and section references are to the articles and sections of this Agreement, and (b) except where otherwise stated, all references to days are to calendar days. Whenever under the terms of this Agreement the time for performance of a covenant or condition falls on a Saturday, Sunday, or California state holiday, such time for performance will be extended to the next business day. "Business Days" means days other than Saturday, Sunday, and California state holidays. The headings used in this Agreement are provided for convenience only and this Agreement will be interpreted without reference to any headings. The date of this Agreement is for reference purposes only and is not necessarily the date on which it was entered into.

4.178-7 Governing law

10.7. Governing Law. This Agreement will be governed by the laws of the State of California applicable to contracts made by residents of the State of California and to be performed in California.

4.178-8 Confidentiality and publicity

10.8. Confidentiality and Publicity. Before the Closing, the parties must at all times keep this transaction and any documents received from each other confidential, except to the extent necessary to (a) comply with applicable law and regulations or (b) carry out the obligations set forth in this Agreement. Any such disclosure to third parties must indicate that the information is confidential and should be so treated by the third party. Before the Closing, no press release or other public disclosure may be made by either party or any of its agents concerning this transaction without the other party's prior written consent.

4.178-9 Time

10.9. Time. Time is of the essence in the performance of the parties' respective obligations under this Agreement.

4.178-10 Attorney fees

10.10. Attorney Fees. In the event of any action or proceeding to enforce a term or condition of this Agreement, any alleged disputes, breaches, defaults, or misrepresentations in connection with any provision of this Agreement or any action or proceeding in any way arising from this Agreement, including any interpleader of the Deposit by the Escrow Holder, the prevailing party in such action, or the nondismissing party when the dismissal occurs other than by a settlement, will be entitled to recover its reasonable costs and expenses, including without limitation reasonable attorney fees and costs of defense paid or incurred in good faith. The "prevailing party," for purposes of this Agreement, will be deemed to be that party who obtains substantially the result sought, whether by settlement, dismissal, or judgment.

4.178-11 Assignment

10.11. Assignment. This Agreement will inure to the benefit of and be binding on the parties to this Agreement and their respective successors and assigns. Buyer will have the right to assign all or any portion of its interest in this Agreement, provided that Buyer gives written notice of such assignment to Seller before the Closing Date.

4.178-12 No third party beneficiaries

10.12. No Third Party Beneficiaries. Nothing in this Agreement, express or implied, is intended to confer any rights or remedies under or by reason of this Agreement on any person other than the parties to it and their respective permitted successors and assigns, nor is anything in this Agreement intended to relieve or discharge any obligation of any third person to any party to this Agreement or give any third person any right of subrogation or action over against any party to this Agreement.

4.178-13 Remedies cumulative

10.13. Remedies Cumulative. The remedies set forth in this Agreement are cumulative and not exclusive to any other legal or equitable remedy available to a party.

4.178-14 Counterparts

10.14. Counterparts. This Agreement may be executed in one or more counterparts, each of which will be deemed an original, but all of which together will constitute one and the same instrument.

4.178-15 Tax-deferred exchange

10.15. Tax-Deferred Exchange. Seller may use the proceeds from the sale of the Property to effect one (or more) tax-deferred exchange(s) under Internal Revenue Code §1031. Buyer agrees to accommodate Seller in effecting such tax-deferred exchange. Seller will have the right, expressly reserved here, to elect such tax-deferred exchange at any time before the Closing Date. Seller and Buyer agree, however, that consummation of the purchase and sale of Property under this Agreement is not conditioned on such exchange. If Seller elects to make a tax-deferred exchange, Buyer agrees to execute such additional escrow instructions, deeds, documents, agreements, or instruments to effect this exchange, provided that Buyer must incur no additional costs, expenses, or liabilities in this transaction as a result of or in connection with this exchange. Seller agrees to hold Buyer harmless of any liability, damages, or costs, including reasonable attorney fees, that may arise from Buyer's participation in such exchange.

4.178-16 Interpretation

10.16. Interpretation. Throughout this Agreement, (a) the plural and singular numbers will each be considered to include the other; (b) the masculine, feminine, and neuter genders will each be considered to include the others; (c) "shall," "will," "must," "agrees," and "covenants" are each mandatory; (d) "may" is permissive; (e) "or" is not exclusive; and (f) "includes" and "including" are not limiting.

Comment: If facts particular to the transaction cause a party to be concerned about the timing of the closing or other deadlines in the agreement, then the parties may wish to specifically describe those concerns in section 10.9, the "time is of the essence" provision. For instance, either party may be participating in an IRC §1031 exchange or may have other tax reasons for completing the sale by a certain date (e.g., recognition of loss or gain at a particular time), the buyer may need to vacate its current premises by a certain date, or a seller may need the sale proceeds to pay off a matured loan or close another transaction.

For a full discussion of tax-deferred exchanges, see Real Property Exchanges (3d ed Cal CEB 2002).

§5.1 I. INTRODUCTION TO THE PURCHASE AND SALE OF HOTELS

This chapter discusses issues that arise in connection with drafting purchase and sale agreements for buying and selling hotels, motels, and resorts (referred to collectively in this chapter as hotels). Hotel sale transactions usually involve both the transfer of a large parcel of commercial property and the transfer of an operating business. The real property will have significant improvements and may include shops as well as concessions leased to third parties. Hotel sales may also include the transfer of long-term leases of apartments and suites to guests, and possibly the potential for sale of subdivided units such as condominium units within or adjacent to the hotel building. Consequently, hotel sale transactions raise all the issues present in any other major commercial real estate sale and may include residential sale aspects as well.

Hotels, however, are also operating businesses that include lodging rooms, rentals, and the operation of restaurants, bars, shops, and resort facilities. Hotel sales, therefore, also raise all the issues found in the purchase and sale of an operating business. The real estate attorney handling a hotel sale or purchase must be aware of all these issues when negotiating a purchase and sale agreement for a hotel and closing the transaction. For a general discussion of hotel sales, see Hotels 2006: Acquiring, Managing, Developing & Converting the Hot Property (PLI 2006).

Hotel purchase and sale agreements are almost always in the form of a conditional purchase agreement transferring the hotel's assets, similar to the form of a typical purchase agreement for any commercial property. For a commercial purchase agreement form, see §§4.166-4.182. To assist in drafting the hotel purchase and sale agreement, sample form provisions are included in this chapter to provide examples of issues that must be addressed in a hotel purchase and sale agreement.

NOTE: The form provisions in this chapter are not compatible with the form in §§4.166-4.182. Some revising would be necessary before incorporating the provisions in this chapter into the purchase and sale agreement contained in chap 4.

Transfers of hotel properties may also be concluded by merger of the ownership entity with another entity or by sale of the shares of stock or other ownership interests in the entity owning a hotel, but these types of transfers occur infrequently, owing, in large part, to issues relating to the assumption of liabilities of the transferring entity. This topic is beyond the scope of this book. For a discussion of asset sales of a business and transfers of businesses by merger or stock sale, see Sales and Mergers of California Businesses (Cal CEB 2002).

§5.2 A. Nature of Hotel Operations

Hotel sale agreements must reflect the particular nature of the hotel operations conducted at the hotel being sold. Operations at minimum service "all-suite" hotels may involve few revenue generation sources other than the rental of rooms, while operations at "full-service" hotels may involve multiple revenue generation sources. Daily changes in revenue and expenses, and fluctuations in inventories of food, beverages, linens, and items for sale in shops operated by the hotel require particular attention. Often the cutoff time for calculating prorations of income and expense is 3:00 a.m. on the closing date, after the hotel bars and restaurants have closed; income and expenses before that time, and room rentals for the night ending on the closing date, are credited to the seller's account. Hotels often have numerous employees, many of whom may be employed under union contracts. A number of issues regarding employees must be resolved in the agreement, and some of these will depend on whether the employees are employed by the hotel/seller or by the hotel operator/manager. Finally, one of the most important assets of a hotel that operates food and beverage service facilities is its liquor license. Procedures for transfer of a California liquor license add another layer of complexity to a hotel transaction. See Carmichael, Transferring Retail Liquor Licenses in California, 15 CEB Cal Bus L Prac 65 (Summer 2000).

§5.3 B. Referral, Management, and Franchise Agreements

Owners may independently manage their hotels, but this method of operation has become less common. Owners may obtain third party assistance in operating the hotel in at least four ways:

- Membership in a referral system providing access to a reservation system, a national affiliation, and perhaps the opportunity to buy supplies and services together with other owner-operators;
- Operation as part of a license or franchise system, in which the franchisor provides a variety of services and operating standards and systems;
- Leasing the hotel to an operator; or
- Hiring a management company, either as part of a hotel chain or an independent company, to manage the hotel for a fee.

In each of these arrangements, the hotel likely will be part of a chain of hotels, with a brand, often referred to as the "flag" of the hotel. See Eyster, The Negotiation and Administration of Hotel and Restaurant Management Contracts, pp. 1-20 (3d ed 1988).

Separation of ownership and management of hotels is a common method of developing and owning hotels. A national hotel chain may develop the property for a new hotel, sell the assets to an investor, enter into a franchise agreement with the investor (to put the chain's "flag" on the hotel), and require the investor to enter into a management agreement with an affiliate of the hotel chain.

§5.4 1. Issues Involved in Franchise or Management Agreements

Sellers of hotels who have entered into franchise or management agreements, as well as prospective purchasers of such hotels, must consider the provisions of these agreements while planning and negotiating the sale of the hotel assets. Typical issues include:

- Should the hotel continue to operate with the same franchisor or manager?
- Is the consent of the manager or the franchisor required for the sale of the hotel? Must they approve the buyer?
- May the franchise agreement or the management agreement be terminated? Is there a termination fee?

If the manager continues to serve after the sale, many of the practical issues that could arise in closing the sale may be simplified. The manager can act as an independent third party in handling prorations and accounting issues.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.5 2. Buyer's Financing

If the buyer will finance its purchase with a loan from a new lender, it must consider the relations between its lender and the manager and franchisor. In many respects, a lender may view the franchisor and manager in the same way as a lender on an office or retail project views the anchor tenant, as the key to the project. Important issues to be resolved include:

- Must the lender approve the existing franchisor and manager?
- Does the lender want the franchise and management agreements subordinated to its deed of trust and other security interests?
- If their agreements are subordinated to the loan, will the franchisor and manager want the lender to enter into nondisturbance agreements?

PRACTICE TIP: Based on the observations in §5.4 and above, it is clear that when drafting hotel franchise and management agreements, it is important to keep an eye on the eventual sale of the hotel. Opposing interests are at work. The franchisor and manager do not want to be replaced when the hotel changes ownership, at least not without a significant payoff. They want a say in who owns the hotel, because they have to deal with the owner over the long term. They want an experienced hotel owner who understands hotel operations. The hotel owner, however, wants the ability to sell quickly, to the party of his choosing, without having to endure a cumbersome and potentially time-consuming approval process. In addition, on foreclosure, a prospective lender wants to be able to change the manager and the franchisor, especially if the lender believes that the current ones contributed to the project's failure to generate cash flow sufficient to pay off the loan.

§5.6 C. Associated Resort Facilities

Hotels are often associated with resort facilities, such as golf courses, tennis clubs, swim clubs, ski areas, and boating marinas. The relationship between the hotel and the resort facility may be structured in a number of ways. The resort facilities may be owned and operated by the hotel, or they may be separately owned and operated but associated through an arrangement that allows hotel guests to use the facilities. For example, a developer may build a hotel with a golf course, tennis courts, swimming pool, and a golf, tennis, and swim clubhouse for summer visitors and a ski area for winter visitors. After completion of the hotel and resort facilities, the developer may enter into management and franchise agreements for the hotel, sell the hotel building and assets to investors, sell the golf, tennis, and swim club to persons residing in the vicinity to be operated as a private club, and retain and operate the ski area itself. As part of the development process, the developer will enter agreements giving hotel guests the right to use the golf, tennis, and swim club and the ski facilities. These rights may be secured through recorded covenants or easements, or may simply exist contractually.

In a purchase and sale of a resort hotel, counsel for buyer and seller must identify the relationship between the hotel and the resort facilities and ensure transfer of the appropriate rights to the buyer under the purchase and sale agreement. If the hotel does not own the resort facilities, the rights for its guests to use the resort facilities must be assigned to the buyer as an asset of the hotel. If the hotel owns the resort facilities, it often makes the facilities available to members of the public on a membership basis. The membership agreements must be assigned to the buyer as an asset of the hotel. The hotel agreement forms in this chapter do not include assignment documents, but such assignments can be prepared by adapting the Assignment of Leases or the Assignment of Intangibles in Apps I-J.

§5.7 D. Residential and Common Interest Arrangements

Many hotels have facilities for long-term residents, either as part of the hotel itself or affiliated with the hotel. These arrangements vary widely. Perhaps the simplest arrangement is for long-term residents to stay as hotel guests in a suite or an apartment, sometimes with leases. The Waldorf Towers in New York City is a famous example. Many hotels have been built with adjacent apartments or condominiums, whose tenants or owners have rights to use hotel facilities and services. Again, these rights may constitute encumbrances of record against the hotel or may be merely contractual in nature. Often the apartments or condominiums are in the same building as the hotel. The Four Seasons and St. Regis hotels in San Francisco are located in a portion of high-rise buildings, with the remainder of the buildings housing condominiums. In most of these examples, agreements have been entered into by which the hotel owner provides hotel services to the apartment or condominium residents, all of which must be assigned to the buyer in a sale of the hotel. It will be important to determine if there are any prohibitions, conditions, or limitations on the assignability of these service agreements.

In another type of hotel development, some or all of the hotel rooms (or suites) are sold as condominiums (with one owner of each unit), as fractional interest condominiums (with several owners of each unit, each with a right to use it for part of a year), or time-share units (sold either as real estate ownership interests having use rights for 1-week increments, either fixed by time and unit or floating among all units of a similar type, or sometimes as points-based club programs in which the units are owned or held by an owners' association or a trust for the use and benefit of the members). The hotel owner may hold only the remaining facilities needed to operate the hotel, or such facilities and a number of conventional hotel rooms or condominium units not offered separately for sale. In a conventional "condo hotel," the hotel owner owns the "hotel unit," consisting of the lobby, front desk, public rooms, meeting rooms, restaurants, and sometimes the elevators and stairways providing access to the units, and the "back-of-the-house" facilities, such as kitchens, storerooms, and laundry facilities. The hotel rooms will each be a separate condominium unit. Under the condominium documents, the hotel owner agrees to provide hotel services to the condominium owners. The services may include rental management services, with some featuring a rental pool, if a condominium owner wishes to rent the unit for some or all of the time. The manner in which the rental management program is structured and presented to the buyer, including the possible availability of a rental pool, may cause the sale of condominium units to be the sale of a security, raising issues under the federal Securities Act of 1933 (15 USC §§77a-77aa) and similar state securities laws, discussion of which is beyond the scope of this book.

NOTE: Some condo-hotel owners have brought suit against developers across the country alleging that purchasing a unit in a condo-hotel is similar to buying a stock and should, therefore, be subject to regulation by the Securities and Exchange Commission. Wall Street Journal, August 5, 2009, The Property Report.

The ownership structure can become more complicated if some or all of the hotel room units are sold as "time-share" units, entitling the owners to units under some form of shared use program. Time-share units themselves may be structured in a variety of ways, ranging from a fractionalized interest, under which the owner—who holds an interest in real property—is entitled to use the unit for a portion of a year (e.g., "quartershares" providing 3 months of use per year, "twelfth shares" providing 4 weeks of use per year), to time-share "points," under which the units are owned by an owners' association or trust and membership in the association (or ownership of a beneficial interest in the trust) carries with it the right of the owner to use the units based on the number of points that are required to reserve a unit on any given day of the year. In California, the sale of time-share interests is regulated by the California Real Estate Commissioner under the provisions of The Vacation Ownership and Time-Share Act of 2004 (Bus & P C §§11210-11288). Accordingly, the sale of a hotel having a time-share component will present numerous additional issues for both seller's and buyer's counsel. A detailed discussion of common interest hotels is beyond the scope of this book. On timeshares, see Forming California Common Interest Developments, chap 5 (Cal CEB 2004); Muldowney and Spaulding, Time-Share, Fractional Interest, and Vacation Club Projects: A Legal Overview, 32 CEB Real Prop L Rep 117 (Sept. 2009); on timeshares and common interest hotels, see Hanna & Van Atta, California Common Interest

Developments, chaps 8-9 (2d ed 2002); R. Iwamoto, "Condominium Hotels," The ACREL Papers, Spring 2006 (American College of Real Estate Lawyers and ALI-ABA 2006); C. II. PURCHASE AND SALE AGREEMENT PROVISIONS

§5.8 A. Terminology

The hotel industry, like many, uses terms and phrases that may be unfamiliar to the real estate practitioner. For example, a "300-key hotel" means a hotel with 300 lock-off combinations of hotel rooms and suites. Many specialized hotel terms appear in hotel agreements. The description of the tangible and intangible personal property often includes much more detail regarding the various kinds of properties than is found in the sales agreements for other types of commercial property. Different types of tangible personal property either held for sale or used in the operation of the hotel are defined separately, and each type may be subject to a covenant that the seller maintain adequate stock of the items through closing. The financial reports of hotels often follow the standardized formats and account classifications contained in the American Hotel & Lodging Educational Institute's Uniform System of Accounts for the Lodging Industry (10th ed 2006).

The form in §5.9 sets forth the definitions of terms used in a typical hotel purchase and sale agreement.

Comment: This form contains examples of specialized defined terms used in the sale of a hotel. Many defined terms usually found in a sales agreement for any commercial property, however, have not been included in this form. These include definitions of terms such as Buyer, Seller, Land, Real Property (meaning the Land, the Improvements, and the Fixtures), Claims, Closing, Closing Date, Escrow Holder, Escrow Instructions, Permitted Encumbrances, Title Policy, and many others. See the form agreement beginning at §4.166 for these and other defined terms.

For a discussion of why the Cutoff Time is typically 3:00 a.m. as set in the definitions in this provision, see §5.2.

The type of liquor license described in this provision would be used if the hotel has a restaurant. A different liquor license would be required if the hotel operated only a bar, or a separate bar in addition to a bar located with the main restaurant (e.g., a poolside bar). Also, if the rooms contain minibars, there will be a different liquor license for such in-room alcoholic beverage sales.

§5.10 C. Assets Being Sold

As in any asset sales agreement, all the hotel assets being sold must be described in the purchase and sale agreement. The form in §5.11, a typical hotel provision for the transfer of assets and liabilities, incorporates the definitions from §5.9 (and other defined terms usually found in a real property sales agreement). Compare §§4.31-4.34 and form 4.169-2. See Sales and Mergers of California Businesses §§11.28-11.41 (Cal CEB 2002) for similar provisions in connection with a sale of a business.

The equipment used in a hotel is frequently leased, rather than financed through a loan secured by the real and personal property. Examples of equipment that may be leased include data processing equipment, telephone systems, televisions and audio-visual equipment, restaurant stoves, refrigeration and similar equipment, and vehicles. If the equipment is leased, the asset transferred is the lessee's interest in the lease, not ownership of the equipment. See California UCC Sales and Leases, chap 19 (Cal CEB 2002) regarding equipment leasing generally. Attention must be paid to any limitations, restrictions, or consents applicable to the potential assignment of the lessee's interest in such leases.

5.11-1 Hotel assets and liabilities

__. Assets and Liabilities Transferred.

_.1. The Property. Subject to and on the terms and conditions of this Agreement, Seller will sell to Buyer and Buyer will purchase from Seller all of Seller's right, title, and interest in the Property, which will include the Land, the Fixtures, the Improvements, the Furniture and Equipment, the Inventory, the Expendables, the Consumables, the Liquor License, the Service Contracts, the License Agreement, the Management Agreement, the Leases, the Equipment Leases, the transferable Licenses and Permits, the Reservation Deposits, the Goodwill, the Books, Records and Plans, the Advance Bookings, the Intellectual Property, and the Other Property.

_.2. Liabilities Not Assumed. The sale of the Property will be a transfer of assets only, and no indebtedness, accounts payable, liabilities, or obligations of whatever kind or nature (including without limitation any Claims) whether actual or contingent, incurred by Seller before or after the Effective Date or the Closing Date, will be assigned by Seller or assumed by Buyer, except for (a) any liabilities to provide hotel accommodations and services under confirmed reservations for periods subsequent to the Closing Date as permitted by the terms of this Agreement, and (b) those specific liabilities expressly assumed by Buyer in this Agreement.

Comment: Accounts receivable and accounts payable are usually not transferred to the buyer, but are prorated to the closing date. The provision also disclaims the assumption of liabilities.

§5.12 E. Buyer's Due Diligence

The buyer's due diligence in purchasing a hotel includes all the subjects that must be reviewed in buying any commercial real estate property. See §§4.45-4.99 and form 4.171-5. In addition to those generally required in a commercial real estate transaction, additional documents and other materials should be delivered by the seller in a hotel transaction. A typical due diligence provision tailored for hotels is shown in §5.13. A variety of schedules listing tangible personal property to attach to the agreement is provided in form 5.17-1. See Sales and Mergers of California Businesses §§1.39-1.58 (Cal CEB 2002) for a discussion of due diligence in the purchase of a business.

The following is a list of due diligence actions undertaken in hotel acquisitions that are not generally taken in other commercial real property acquisitions:

- Review management and franchise agreements to determine the rights of the manager and franchisor and the procedure for either terminating those agreements or obtaining consents to the continuation of those agreements after the hotel's sale.
- Determine whether hotel employees are employed by the owner or by the manager and whether all or most of the employees will continue to be employed by the buyer (see §5.18), and consider the applicability of the Worker Adjustment and Retraining Notification (WARN) Act (29 USC §§2101-2109).
- Review deposits and funds that will be the buyer's liabilities after closing, such as advance room and banquet bookings, reservation deposits, and escrows maintained under a management agreement for replacement of furniture, equipment, fixtures, and other capital improvements.
- Review operating inventories of linens, supplies, food, and beverages.
- Complete a UCC search, particularly to determine whether there are any equipment leases. Most equipment lessors will file a financing statement if the lease is (or might be characterized as) a security agreement under Com C §§10101-10600. See California UCC Sales and Leases §§19.5-19.18, 19.29-19.37 (Cal CEB 2002).
- Assess the equipment and systems and review service contracts to ensure the continuing maintenance and operation of the equipment (such as restaurant equipment and data processing equipment, in addition to HVAC systems and elevators).
- Consider the applicability of the Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Improvements Act of 1976 (15 USC §18a), which requires pre-merger notification to the Federal Trade Commission for certain transactions. The Act does not apply to hotel sales unless the hotel includes casino facilities or a ski area, or, in some cases, a trademark is being transferred. Nevertheless, counsel should confirm that the transaction is not covered by the Act.
- Review any construction that will continue during the due diligence period. Many hotels are in an almost constant process of refurbishment, which can involve improvements that give rise to mechanics' lien rights. On mechanics' lien provisions in purchase and sale agreements, see §4.69. For a detailed discussion, see California Mechanics' Liens and Related Construction Remedies (3d ed Cal CEB 1998).

Comment: The court of appeal in Steiner v Thexton (review granted Sept. 17, 2008, S164928; superseded opinion at 163 CA4th 359, 77 CR3d 632), held that a purchase agreement is unenforceable as a unilateral option lacking consideration if the buyer has the right, without forfeiture of earnest money, to terminate the purchase agreement at any time before the expiration of the contingency period. Steiner may have application to all real estate sales agreements, including hotel sales agreements, that provide a buyer with a "free look" during and prior to the end of any due diligence period.

5.13-1 Due diligence documents

_. Document Delivery by Seller. Within _ _[e.g., five (5)]_ _ days after the Effective Date, Seller will provide or cause to be provided, at Seller's expense, or make available for Buyer's review (to the extent not previously provided or made available), copies of the following documents to the extent they are in Seller's possession or control (collectively, the Preliminary Documents):

_.1. Agreements. Copies of all Leases, Service Contracts, the License Agreement, the Management Agreement, all Equipment Leases, and all other written easements, covenants, restrictions, agreements, contracts, and other documents in Seller's possession or control that affect the Property or the Hotel, including without limitation any agreements of Seller relating to the insurance, service, operation, repair, supply, advertising, promotion, sale, leasing, or management of the Property or the Hotel.

_.2. Plans. Access to copies of all existing Books, Records, and Plans.

_.3. Operating Statements. Copies of the most recent annual budget and copies of operating statements for the Hotel that will cover the following periods: (a) monthly for each calendar month of the current calendar year to date, and (b) annually for the past _ _[e.g., five (5)]_ _ calendar years.

_.4. Licenses. Copies of the Liquor License and all Permits and Licenses (including without limitation building permits, certificates of completion, certificates of occupancy, and environmental permits and licenses).

_.5. Employees and Employee Plans. A complete list of employees (if any), their job descriptions, and salaries, together with copies of any applicable employee pension or profit-sharing plans.

_.6. Inventories. A copy of the latest itemized lists of the Inventory, Consumables, and Expendables.

_.7. Escrow Balances. A statement of the balance in all escrows for Furniture and Equipment, Fixtures, and capital expenses under the Management Agreement.

_.8. Bookings and Deposits. A complete list of all Advance Bookings and Reservation Deposits.

_.9. Other Documents. Access to current property tax bills, and all data, correspondence, documents, agreements, waivers, notices, applications, and other records with respect to the Property and the Hotel relating to transactions with taxing authorities, governmental agencies, utilities, vendors, tenants, and others with whom Buyer may be dealing after the Closing Date.

Comment: The due diligence documents listed in this form are those appropriate for the purchase of a hotel and are in addition to those a buyer would require in other commercial real property acquisitions (e.g., a survey, a preliminary report on title, documents regarding the physical condition of the improvements, and written disclosures regarding pending and threatened claims). See the form beginning at §4.151 for examples of other documents to be delivered. The time period within which documents must be delivered is often subject to negotiation. Some agreements will ease the delivery requirement by providing that documents may be delivered by the seller "as soon as practicable" after the effective date of the agreement.

§5.14 G. Covenants Pending Closing

Because of the nature of the hotel business, the seller's covenants regarding the hotel's operation after execution of the agreement and pending closing are often more elaborate than standard agreements, such as those discussed in §§4.101-4.106 and included in form 4.173-1. See Sales and Mergers of California Businesses §§11.55-11.70 (Cal CEB 2002) for forms regarding a seller's obligations before closing in the sale of a business. The provisions in form 5.15-1 contain detailed requirements concerning the operation and maintenance of the hotel, including the seller's obligation to continue to solicit and accept room and banquet reservations and to market the hotel's services. The buyer typically will require the seller to keep all of the contracts and agreements affecting the hotel in place, particularly the franchisee's license agreement with the franchisor, the management agreement with the manager, the equipment leases, and any space leases. The buyer will ask the seller to provide copies of all financial information in a timely manner. The agreement will often provide that the buyer may install a "shadow management" team in the hotel to observe the management and day-to-day operations.

5.15-1 Seller's pre-closing covenants

_. Seller's Pre-Closing Covenants. During the Transition Period, and except as otherwise consented to or approved by Buyer in writing and as contemplated by this Agreement, Seller will:

_.1. Operation of Hotel. Operate the Hotel consistent with current practice and will use reasonable best efforts to (a) cooperate with Buyer to preserve present relationships with suppliers, customers, employees, and other persons having business dealings with Seller, (b) maintain present hours of operation, (c) maintain the Hotel's good reputation, (d) maintain in full force and effect all extended coverage, fire, casualty, public liability, and fidelity policies now in effect with respect to the Property and the Hotel, and (e) take all necessary actions to comply with all closing conditions set forth in Article _ _ for which Seller is responsible and to make all deliveries at Closing and do nothing that may hinder or delay the Closing.

_.2. Maintenance. Maintain the Property, including all systems used or needed for the operation of the Hotel, in substantially the same operating condition and repair as on the Effective Date of this Agreement, continue normal operation of the Property and the Hotel, and continue normal practice with respect to normal maintenance and repairs so that the Property will, except for normal wear and tear, be of at least the same quality and quantity on the Closing Date as it was on the Effective Date, and, without limiting the foregoing, maintain the quantity and quality of Personal Property at approximately the current levels.

_.3. No Transfer. Not sell, transfer, assign, or dispose of any of the Property (other than in the ordinary course of the operation of the Hotel) or enter into any tenant lease between the Effective Date and the Closing Date without Buyer's prior written approval, which approval will not be unreasonably withheld, conditioned, or delayed.

_.4. Commitments. With respect to the Property and the operation of the Hotel:

_.4.1. Not (a) modify, extend, renew, cancel, terminate, rescind, or surrender the Management Agreement, the License Agreement, any Lease, any Equipment Lease, employment contracts, Union Contract, or Employee Plans, or reduce any security deposit under any Lease or Reservation Deposit, (b) permit any rental space that is now vacant or becomes vacant to be occupied, or (c) make any sale, transfer, assignment, or other disposition of any right or privilege accruing to Seller; provided, however, that Seller must, before Closing, terminate all Service Contracts other than those identified on the Service Contract Schedule.

_.4.2. Not make or enter into any contract or arrangement, including any series of related contracts, concerning the purchase of Inventory, Expendables, Consumables, Furniture and Equipment, or Fixtures, or the maintenance and operation of the Hotel, which involves receipts, expenditures, or the provision of services with a value of more than _ _[e.g., $10,000]_ _ after Closing in the aggregate, without the prior consent of Buyer, which consent will not be unreasonably conditioned or withheld and which must be given or withheld within _ _[e.g., five (5)]_ _ days after request.

_.4.3. Not consent to any zoning changes, or sell, transfer, assign, dispose of, or consent to the utilization of any development rights, including any air rights, for the Property, or modify or amend or consent to any modification or amendment of the Hotel's certificate of occupancy, unless any such changes or transfers are in the ordinary course of business.

_.4.4. Not make or enter into any rate agreements not in the ordinary course of business without prior notification to Buyer.

_.5. Books. Maintain the books and records of the Hotel in the usual and ordinary manner, on a basis consistent with prior years, and endeavor to comply with all governmental laws, ordinances, and regulations applicable to Seller, the Property, and the conduct of the operation of the Hotel, and perform all of Seller's obligations without default.

_.6. Information. Furnish Buyer, within _ _[e.g., three (3)]_ _ days after Buyer notifies Seller of the Closing Date under section _ _ of this Agreement, with the following:

_.6.1. Seller's most recent operating and financial statements regarding the Hotel's operation and lists of accounts receivable when they are prepared, and keep Buyer informed on inquiry, and on a reasonable basis, about the Hotel's business operations;

_.6.2. A statement in writing of any fact that, if existing or known on the date of this Agreement, would have been required to be set forth in or disclosed under this Agreement;

_.6.3. Updates for all schedules attached to this Agreement bringing current the information provided in the schedules, provided, however, that nothing contained in this section will permit Seller to enter into any agreement, take any action, or incur any liability except as permitted by the provisions of this Agreement;

_.6.4. A list of deposits and advance payments made by Seller before the Closing Date with respect to Property that will be received after the Closing Date; and

_.6.5. All such additional information relating to the Property and the Hotel as Buyer may reasonably request.

_.7. Alterations. Not undertake or commence any renovations of or alterations to the Hotel, or any part of the Hotel or the Property, other than those already in process or within the current year's budget (a copy of which must be provided to Buyer as a Preliminary Document) and those necessary to cure governmental violations, to comply with requirements of governmental authorities and boards of insurance underwriters, or to respond to emergency situations.

_.8. Defaults and Permits. Not knowingly perform any act or omit to perform any act, or knowingly permit any act or omission to act, that will cause a breach or default of any of Seller's contracts, commitments, obligations, including without limitation, the Leases, the License Agreement, or the Management Agreement.

_.9. Reservations Before Closing. Cause Manager under the Management Agreement to continue to solicit and accept reservations for the Hotel, including reservations for any period after the Closing Date. Any of Seller's employees or agents located at the Hotel will continue their usual sales and advertising programs and campaigns to solicit such reservations. Until the Closing, Seller's employees and agents located at the Hotel have used and must continue to use their best efforts to obtain Advance Bookings and will not book into any other hotel owned or operated by Seller or its affiliates any such business that has historically been booked as part of the Hotel.

_.10. Marketing. Cause any of Seller's employees and agents located at the Hotel to continue actively and diligently marketing and promoting the Hotel, and Seller will consult and cooperate with Buyer in connection with marketing and sale promotions.

_.11. Shadow Management. During the Transition Period, permit Buyer to establish a "shadow management" operation with respect to the Hotel. Buyer's personnel, agents, and representatives will have reasonable access during normal business hours to all books, records, and other information in the possession or control of Seller, Manager, or Seller's agents concerning the Hotel, and will have the right (at Buyer's expense) to establish duplicate books and records (whether in tangible or electronic form) in order to effect a smooth transition in the ownership and management of the Hotel. Buyer agrees that its shadow management personnel, agents, and representatives will not unreasonably interfere with the normal management and operation of the Hotel, will have no authority over the management and operations of the Hotel, and will not be deemed to have assumed management responsibilities before Closing by virtue of such shadow management.

_.12. Seller Indemnification Re Pre-Closing Acts. In addition to Seller's other indemnification obligations under this Agreement, Seller agrees to indemnify, defend, and hold Buyer, its partners, limited liability company members, shareholders, directors, officers, affiliates, representatives, employees, and agents harmless from any and all liabilities, costs, damages, claims, suits, judgments, or expenses, including without limitation reasonable attorney fees, incurred by Buyer that arise out of or are connected with (a) Seller's failure to perform under all of the contracts, leases, and agreements of Seller assumed by Buyer, or (b) any act or omission of Seller related to the ownership or operation of the Property or the Hotel before the Closing Date that may result in Seller's liability to any third party.

Comment: The seller may want an indemnification from the buyer (similar to the one in section 12 above) as to any of buyer's activities during the conduct of the shadow management program.

§5.16 I. Representations and Warranties

Seller's representations and warranties are usually the subject of careful negotiations in any purchase and sale agreement. See the discussion in §§4.107-4.120 and forms 4.173-1, Alternatives 1-2, the "as is" form 4.173-5, and the release by the buyer in form 4.173-6. In the particular case of hotel agreements, the nature and extent of the seller's representations and warranties will vary depending on whether a third party manager is involved. A typical provision for use in a hotel transaction appears in §15.17. If the hotel owner also operates the hotel, more extensive representations and warranties seem appropriate. For forms addressing disclosures in the sale of a business, see Sales and Mergers of California Businesses §§11.23-11.52 (Cal CEB 2002).

5.17-1 Seller's Representations and Warranties

_. Seller's Representations and Warranties. Seller makes the following representations and warranties for the benefit of Buyer:

_.1. Ordinances. To Seller's knowledge, neither the Hotel, nor its operation, violates in any way any applicable laws, ordinances, rules, regulations, judgments, orders, or covenants, conditions, and restrictions, whether federal, state, local, foreign, or private. Seller has not received any request, either formal or informal, oral or written, that Seller modify or terminate any use of the Property or the Hotel.

_.2. Utilities. To Seller's knowledge, all water, sewer, gas, electric, cable television, satellite television, Internet service, telephone, and drainage facilities, and all other utilities required by law or by the Hotel's normal operation, are adequate to service the Hotel in its present use and to permit full compliance with all requirements of law and normal usage by the Hotel's guests.

_.3. Licenses and Permits. To Seller's knowledge, Seller has all licenses, permits, easements, and rights of way, including proof of dedication, building permits, and occupancy permits that are required from any governmental authority having jurisdiction over the Hotel, or from private parties, in order to continue the present use of the Hotel and ensure adequate vehicular and pedestrian access to the Hotel. These licenses, permits, easements, and rights-of-way will be in full force and effect as of the Closing Date.

_.4. Operating Statements. All operating statements furnished to Buyer in connection with or under this Agreement (a) are true and correct, (b) have been prepared in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles consistently applied, and (c) accurately reflect the financial position of the Hotel as of their respective dates.

_.5. Insurance and Casualties. Schedule _ _ attached to this Agreement contains a true and complete description of all insurance policies currently carried by Seller affording coverage with respect to the Hotel or the Property. Seller maintains each of such policies in effect and _ _[, except as otherwise noted in Schedule,]_ _ has paid all premiums due in a timely manner through the date of this Agreement. _ _[The/To Seller's knowledge, the]_ _ Hotel has not been materially or adversely affected in any way as a result of fire, explosion, earthquake, accident, labor trouble, requisition, or taking of property by any governmental authority, flood, rainstorm, drought, riot, act of God, or any other casualty, whether or not covered by insurance.

_.6. Claims. Schedule _ _ attached to this Agreement contains a true and correct description of all pending and, to Seller's knowledge, threatened Claims against Seller. There are no other pending Claims of which Seller has received notice to Seller's knowledge, and no threatened Claims, against Seller that in any way involve or affect Seller, the Property, or the Hotel (whether for employee or guest accidents, thefts, property damage, or otherwise). Seller will advise Buyer monthly of any claims brought against Seller, the Property, or the Hotel before Closing.

_.7. Equipment Leases. Schedule _ _ attached to this Agreement contains a true and complete listing of all Equipment Leases (including leases of other Personal Property) entered into by Seller with respect to the Property or Hotel, and in all instances Seller is the lessee under the Equipment Leases (Equipment Lease Schedule). All Equipment Leases are in full force and effect and are valid and subsisting as of the date of this Agreement without modification, except as described in schedule _ _. Seller has received no notice of default from any party to an Equipment Lease and, to Seller's knowledge, there is no outstanding default on the part of Seller or the other party or parties to such Equipment Leases, except as set forth in this schedule _ _. The rents set forth in the Equipment Leases are the actual current rents payable under the Equipment Leases and were actually paid for the month immediately preceding the date of this Agreement. True and complete copies of the Equipment Leases and all amendments, guaranties, and other related documents have been delivered to Buyer.

_.8. Service Contracts. Schedule _ _ attached to this Agreement contains a true and correct description of the Service Contracts (Service Contract Schedule). All Service Contracts, the License Agreement, and the Management Agreement are in full force and effect and neither Seller nor, to Seller's knowledge, any other party is in default in respect of any of the terms or provisions of the Service Contracts. Except as set forth in the Service Contract Schedule, all Service Contracts are terminable by Seller on not more than _ _[e.g., 30]_ _ days' notice from Seller, and there are no disputes or disagreements pending or, to Seller's knowledge, threatened between Seller and any other party under any Service Contract, the License Agreement, or the Management Agreement, nor to Seller's knowledge is there any basis for such a dispute or disagreement. True and complete copies of the Service Contracts, the License Agreement, and the Management Agreement, and all amendments, guaranties, and other related documents have been delivered to Buyer.

_.9. Authorizations. To Seller's knowledge, Schedule _ _ attached to this Agreement contains a true and complete description of all Licenses and Permits held by Seller (Licenses and Permits Schedule). Seller has received no notice of any violations, except as set forth in schedule _ _. Seller is not aware of any action or proceeding for the revocation of any License or Permit or any other action or proceeding before any Governmental Authority that would affect Buyer's ability to conduct the Hotel as currently conducted after the Closing. To Seller's knowledge, no License or Permit is needed other than those set forth in the License and Permit Schedule. True and complete copies of all Licenses and Permits have been delivered to Buyer.

_.10. Inventory. The Inventory to be sold to Buyer under this Agreement will at Closing be owned by Seller free and clear of any lien, and will be lawfully and validly transferable to Buyer or another designated transferee.

_.11. Advance Bookings. Schedule _ _ (Advance Bookings Schedule) attached to this Agreement contains a true and correct description of all Advance Bookings (including without limitation all group bookings) as of the date specified in that schedule for the Hotel (including, with respect to each such booking, the name of the party making the booking, the rooms booked, a summary of the services to be provided, and the total amount billed or to be billed by Seller with respect to such booking) of which Seller has records or information. Schedule _ _ attached to this Agreement contains a true and correct description of all Reservation Deposits and any other amounts prepaid in connection with future services to be rendered in connection with the Hotel (Reservation Deposit Schedule).

_.12. Contract Rooms. Except as set forth in Schedule _ _ attached to this Agreement, there are no contract room arrangements in effect at the Hotel.

_.13. Furniture and Equipment. Schedule _ _ attached to this Agreement contains a true and complete description of all Furniture and Equipment (Furniture and Equipment Schedule).

_.14. Leases. Schedule _ _ attached to this Agreement contains a true and complete description of all Leases affecting the Property or to which the Property is subject (Lease Schedule). Seller is not party to any leases, occupancies, concessions, or tenancies except for the Leases, and there are no amendments or written or oral promises or understandings, agreements, or commitments between Seller and any tenant other than as set forth in the Leases. The Leases are in full force and effect, no rent has been paid in advance except for the current period or as otherwise stated in the Leases, and to Seller's knowledge there are no defenses, setoffs, or counterclaims for the benefit of the tenants, except as disclosed in the Leases. No breach of a Lease has been committed by Seller and Seller has not received or given notice of default under a Lease that has not been cured.

Comment: This form provides extensive representations and warranties by the seller regarding the hotel and its operations. Other seller representations and warranties regarding the real property (see forms 4.173-1—4.173-6) would also be appropriate to include in an agreement for the sale of a hotel. Note that this form contains seller representations and warranties that are favorable in their form for the buyer. Seller's counsel would want to limit the scope of these kinds of representations and warranties as appropriate for the circumstances. For example, limiting the application of many of the representations to material events, not just any event.

§5.18 K. Employees

As in any operating business, employees who operate the hotel and the issues regarding those employees must be covered in the sales agreement. A typical provision covering hotel employees appears in §5.19. In contrast to an office building, operating a hotel may involve a large number of employees. The sales agreement must indicate which party is their employer. If the hotel is operated by a manager, the manager is often the employer. If the manager-employer will be replaced, or if the owner is the employer, then all the employees must be terminated. Often, most employees are rehired by the new owner or manager, with the possible exception of the hotel's senior managers.

If any employees are working under a union contract, the contract must be consulted regardless of whether the union employees will be terminated. The buyer may face a variety of collective bargaining issues that are beyond the scope of this book. See Wrongful Employment Termination Practice, chap 4 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997); Higgins, The Developing Labor Law (5th ed 2006).

If any employees will not continue in their jobs after the sale, a variety of labor and employment issues must be considered. See Advising California Employers and Employees, chap 18 (Cal CEB 2005). If 50 or more employees will be terminated, the federal Worker Adjustment and Retraining Notification Act (WARN Act) (29 USC §§2101-2109) and California law (Lab C §1401) require that notices must be given to the employees at least 60 days before termination. Calculating the number of full-time and part-time employees that will be affected requires a careful review of the statutes. See Advising Employers & Employees §§18.20-18.44. If any of the employees work under a union contract, provisions of the National Labor Relations Act (29 USC §§141-187) are relevant. See Advising Employers & Employees §§18.57-18.74. In addition to potential claims of discrimination under federal and California anti-discrimination laws (see Advising Employers & Employees, chap 15), older workers may be protected by the Older Workers Benefit Protection Act of 1990 (Pub L 101-433, 104 Stat 978), which amended the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 (ADEA) (29 USC §§621-634). See Advising Employers & Employees §§18.3-18.10.

Federal and California statutes may require that continuing health care benefits be made available to employees who are terminated. The Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985 (COBRA) (29 USC §§1161-1169) requires employers with at least 20 employees to offer an election of continuing health care coverage to qualified beneficiaries after involuntary termination (and other events). Some individuals receiving COBRA benefits are eligible for an extended period of benefits under the California Continuation Benefits Replacement Act (Health & S C §§1366.20-1366.29). See Advising Employers & Employees §18.45.

Some buyers will insist that all employees be terminated and that the seller be responsible for all labor and employment issues, including WARN Act notices and COBRA benefits. In other circumstances the seller will insist that the buyer offer employment and continued benefits to almost all employees, to avoid WARN Act and COBRA liability and collective bargaining issues as to those employees.

5.19-1 Employees

_. Employees.

_.1. Manager's Employees. Buyer understands that Seller has no employees, and that _ _[name of Manager]_ _ manages the Hotel and employs all employees involved in the management and operation of the Hotel, and that Seller's representations and warranties in this Agreement with respect to employees do not relate to the employees of _ _[name of Manager]_ _.

_.2. Representation and Warranty. Seller represents and warrants that there are no other employees employed by Seller except as set forth in Schedule _ _ (Employee Schedule). Seller will provide any updated versions of the Employee Schedule to Buyer at least monthly from the date of this Agreement through and including the Closing Date.

_.3. Contracts; Labor Unions. With respect to the Hotel and the operation of the Hotel, Seller represents and warrants that Seller is not a party or subject to:

_.3.1. Any employment or consulting contract or arrangement that is not by its terms terminable at will without penalty to Seller;

_.3.2. Any plan, contract, or arrangement for bonuses or incentive compensation, deferred compensation, retirement payments, or other compensation arrangement for employees, former employees, or their survivors, dependents, and beneficiaries;

_.3.3. Any plan, contract, or arrangement not otherwise disclosed providing for any employee benefit plan, whether or not insured, for any officer or employee, former officer or employee, or their survivors, dependents, and beneficiaries; or

_.3.4. Any Union Contract or other contract or arrangement with any labor union or trade association.

_.3.5. With respect to those employees identified in the Employee Schedule, if any, Seller will not enter into any of the above before the Closing without the prior consent of Buyer _ _[which consent will not be unreasonably withheld, conditioned, or delayed]_ _. To Seller's knowledge, with respect to the employees identified in the Employee Schedule, if any, no movement to designate a collective bargaining representative for any of such employees exists or is threatened and Seller will notify Buyer immediately if Seller learns of any such movement.

_.4. Labor Disputes. To Seller's knowledge, there are no pending or threatened grievances, arbitrations, employment discrimination, or wrongful termination charges, claims, proceedings, or investigation, or other labor disputes involving Seller's employees or the Hotel that affect the Hotel or its business.

_.5. Employee Plans and Benefit Arrangements; ERISA.

_.5.1. Seller does not maintain or otherwise contribute to any "employee benefit plan" as defined in §3(3) of the federal Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA) and which is subject to Title IV of ERISA, that covers any employee or former employee of Seller (Employee Plan).

_.5.2. Seller does not maintain any form of current or deferred compensation, bonus, benefit, welfare, or similar plan or arrangement, whether or not funded, for the benefit of any single employee or former employee or any class or classes of employees or former employees of Seller. Seller does not provide directly or indirectly group medical benefits for its former employees except benefits, if any, provided under the federal Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985 (COBRA).

_.5.3. Neither Seller nor any of its directors or officers nor any of their respective employees or agents, nor any "party in interest" or "disqualified person" as such terms are defined in §3 of ERISA and §4975 of the U.S. Internal Revenue Code (Code), has, with respect to any Employee Plan, engaged in or been a party to any "prohibited transaction", as such term is defined in §4975 of the Code or §406 of ERISA, in connection with which Seller or any of its partners or their respective directors or employees or any Employee Plans or related funding medium could be subject to any liability under Title I of ERISA or to a tax imposed by §4975 of the Code.

_.5.4 No Employee Plan has been terminated and Seller does not expect any such Employee Plan to be terminated within the meaning of Title IV of ERISA; with respect to any Employee Plan that is a "multi-employer plan" as defined in §4001(a)(3) of ERISA, Seller has not incurred nor does it expect to incur any withdrawal liability under Title IV of ERISA, and no such plan is in reorganization status as defined in §4241 of ERISA; with respect to any Employee Plan described in §413(c) of the Code, Seller has not incurred nor does it expect to incur any liability under Title IV of ERISA. Seller is not a "substantial employer" as defined in §4001(a)(2) of ERISA with respect to any Employee Plan, except as identified in Schedule _ _ attached to this Agreement, nor has any Employee Plan subject to Part 3 of Subtitle B of Title I of ERISA or §412 of the Code, or both, incurred any "accumulated funding deficiency" (as defined in ERISA), whether or not waived; Seller has not failed to make any contributions or pay any amounts due and owing as required by the terms of any Employee Plan; nor has there been any "reportable event" within the meaning of §4043(b), §4062(e), §4063(a) or §4041(f) of ERISA with respect to any Employee Plan (other than the transactions contemplated by this Agreement).

_.6. Termination of Employment. Effective at Closing, Seller must terminate all employees listed on the Employee Schedule (if any), without liability to Buyer. Seller will provide Buyer with evidence reasonably satisfactory to Buyer of such terminations at Closing. Seller, at its sole cost and expense, must comply with all notices and other requirements and obligations, if any, required by federal and state "plant closing" laws and other applicable laws and regulations, including without limitation the federal Worker Adjustment and Retraining Notification Act (the "WARN Act"), California Lab C §§1400-1408, and any similar laws or regulations applicable to this Agreement and the transactions contemplated under this Agreement. With respect to all such terminated employees, Seller must comply with and pay all costs and expenses of accrued but unpaid or unearned salary, vacation pay, sick leave, pension benefits, health benefits, and all other employee benefits, and continuation of health and other benefits after termination of employment, including without limitation those under the federal Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985 (COBRA) (29 USC §§1161-1169) and California Health & S C §§1366.20-1366.29.

_.7. Employment by Buyer. Buyer may, but will not be obligated to, offer employment to any or all of the employees on the Employee Schedule at any time. During the Transition Period, Buyer will have the right to interview applicants for employment, which may include employees listed on the Employee Schedule, and which interview process may include drug testing. Seller will provide Buyer, at no charge, with meeting facilities reasonably satisfactory to Buyer so that Buyer may engage in these interviews. Before Closing, Buyer will extend offers of employment to the employees listed on the Employee Schedule (if any) whom Buyer has elected to employ on terms and conditions satisfactory to Buyer.

_.8. No Offers of Employment. Seller and its affiliates will not offer alternative employment to any employee of Seller identified in the Employee Schedule, provided that at least _ _[e.g., five (5)]_ _ days before Closing Buyer will specify those employees of Seller to whom Buyer does not wish to make offers of employment, and Seller then may make offers of employment to those employees. _ _[At no time will Seller/For a period of, e.g., 2 years/6 months following the Closing, Seller will not]_ _ make any offers of employment to those employees to whom Buyer has made offers _ _[and who have accepted such offers from Buyer]_ _.

_.9. Compensation. Except with Buyer's prior written consent _ _[which consent will not be unreasonably withheld, conditioned, or delayed]_ _, (a) no increase will be made in the compensation or rate of compensation that is or will become payable to any employees of Seller or, during any period of employment at the Hotel, to employees of Seller identified in the Employee Schedule, and (b) except to the extent that Seller is currently contractually obligated to do so, no bonus, profit-sharing, retirement, insurance, death, fringe benefits, or other extraordinary compensation will accrue, be set aside, or be paid to any officer or employee of Seller.

_.10. Indemnification. In addition to all other indemnification obligations of Seller under this Agreement, Seller must defend, indemnify, and hold harmless Buyer and its officers, directors, employees, shareholders, partners, limited liability company members, and affiliates from any and all claims, damages, causes of action, and liabilities (including attorney fees, costs, and expenses), with counsel reasonably acceptable to Buyer, arising out of Seller's failure to comply with the provisions of this Article or the termination of Seller's employees as provided in this Article.

Comment: These form provisions assume that a third party manager employs all the hotel employees and that the manager will continue to manage the hotel and continue to employ the employees. In many cases, however, the seller may employ a few persons and the form provisions should then require the seller to assume all liabilities under the worker protection statutes discussed §5.18. See Sales and Mergers of California Businesses §§10.53-10.55, 11.39 (Cal CEB 2002) for other examples of provisions regarding employees in an agreement for the sale of a business.

§5.20 M. Closing Conditions

Hotel agreements often contain additional conditions to the buyer's obligation to close the transaction. These include provisions regarding the management and franchise agreements, the liquor license, bulk sales requirements, and the continuance of the hotel business substantially as it was conducted at the time the agreement was executed.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.21 1. Required Actions by Franchisor and Manager

Hotel management and franchise agreements are discussed in §5.3. The buyer should insist that both the manager and the franchisor approve the buyer as a qualified transferee under the respective agreements, execute an estoppel certificate confirming that there are no defaults under the respective agreements, execute a subordination and nondisturbance agreement with the buyer's lender (if the purchase is being financed by a lender), and execute a consent to the assignment of the agreements by the seller to the buyer. A form of an estoppel certificate for a hotel management agreement is in App R.

§5.22 2. Transfer of Liquor License

If the hotel holds a liquor license, as most do, the liquor license must be transferred from the seller to the buyer following the detailed requirements of the California Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control (ABC) and the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act (Bus & P C §§23000-25762). A discussion of liquor license transfers is beyond the scope of this book. See Carmichael, Transferring Retail Liquor Licenses in California, 15 CEB Cal Bus L Prac 67 (Summer 2000). Complications that arise under the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act and the ABC's regulations include the following:

- An escrow must be opened in which a portion of the purchase price must be deposited pending issuance of the license to the buyer (Bus & P C §24074);
- Detailed applications must be submitted, including background information on corporate officers and directors and on owners of a 10-percent interest in the buyer (4 Cal Code Regs §57); and
- The liquor license itself cannot be pledged as security for a loan (Bus & P C §24076).

§5.23 3. Compliance With Bulk Sales Laws

In states that have adopted the Uniform Commercial Code's revised bulk sales provisions (Article 6) without change, sales of services businesses—including hotels and restaurants—are not subject to the bulk sales requirements. UCC §6-103(1)(a); see UCC Official Comment No. 1 to §6-103. California's modified provision, Com C §6103(a)(1), provides that the requirements are applicable if the seller's principal business is "that of a restaurant owner." Although there appears to be no reported California appellate decision interpreting this provision in the sale of a hotel with a restaurant, bar, and banqueting business, an interpretation of this provision may exclude such a business from the bulk sale laws. Other exclusions from the bulk sales laws exist if the seller has more than one place of business and its executive offices are outside California (Com C §6103(a)(2), (b)), or if the value of the equipment, inventory, and intangible personal property being sold exceeds $5 million (Com C §6103(c)(12)). See California UCC Sales and Leases, chap 14 (Cal CEB 2002) and Com C §§6101-6111.

§5.24 4. Prohibition on Material Adverse Changes

Most real estate sale agreements contain conditions to the buyer's obligation to close that serve to assure the buyer that no material adverse change has occurred to the property. These conditions are usually expressed with respect to particular issues, such as continuation of tenant leases and the absence of an eminent domain proceeding regarding the property or damage to the property. The same concepts can be used in a hotel sale agreement, and expanded to include many facets of the hotel business, such as financial results and occupancy rates. Counsel may also include a clause providing that there must be no material adverse change to the hotel's business.

During the Transition Period there will not have been any event, circumstance, or breach of this Agreement that, individually or in the aggregate, will have a material adverse change or effect on the results of income, operations, or value of the Hotel and its business, taken as a whole.

_.9. Hart-Scott-Rodino Act. This Agreement is subject to the condition that compliance with the reporting requirements of the Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Improvements Act of 1976 (15 USC §18a) is either (a) not required, or (b) required, and the necessary filing is completed with no objections being received under the Act. If the parties, or either of them, determine that this transaction is subject to the Act's reporting requirements, then each party will use its best efforts to expeditiously file a completed notification report under the Act and take all other actions necessary or advisable to comply with the Act and the rules and regulations promulgated under the Act. If such requirements or such other matters as may be required by any governmental agency having jurisdiction under the Act have been complied with by Buyer, but have not been fulfilled or satisfied by Seller to permit closing by the Closing Date, Seller will be deemed to be in default under this Agreement.

O. Escrow and Closing

§5.26 1. Prorations

Prorations of income and expense and similar items are more difficult and complicated in the sales of hotels than in the usual commercial property sales, reflecting the complexity of operating a hotel. Examples of proration in the context of a hotel sale are listed below. A typical provision covering escrow and closing in a hotel sale appears in §5.29.

- Revenues in hotels change on a daily basis, and closings of hotel sales usually do not occur at the end of an accounting period. Customarily, the division of revenue occurs as of the end of a hotel's business day, which occurs after all of the facilities have closed for the night. The cutoff point is sometimes at midnight but often is at 3:00 a.m., after all the bars and restaurants have closed. Hotel room guest revenue for the night before the closing date is usually assigned to the seller, but is sometimes split between the buyer and the seller.
- Expenses, including employee expenses and benefits, are usually prorated as of the revenue cutoff time; the seller is usually responsible for all expenses before that date and time, including any continuation of benefits for terminated employees.
- A physical inventory of "consumables" (food and beverages), "expendables" (linens, tableware, china, glassware, uniforms, and similar goods), and "inventory" (stock in trade, operating inventory, and guestroom supplies) is often taken as of the cutoff time, and minimum balances in each category are specified in the agreement.
- Most hotels perform a cash count at the end of each day, which should be incorporated into the prorations; cash on hand as of the cutoff time belongs to the seller.
- Under the management agreement, funds held by the manager in escrow for future capital expenses will either be credited to seller and assigned to buyer, or paid to seller and replenished by buyer.
- A variety of taxes must be prorated as of the cutoff time, including sales taxes, local hotel taxes, and employment taxes, all of which are the seller's obligation until closing. Because the buyer is continuing the business and has potential liability for those taxes, the seller customarily indemnifies the buyer for all such liabilities arising before the cutoff time.

§5.27 2. Liquor License

The escrow for the transfer of the hotel's liquor license must be coordinated with the closing and the real estate escrow. Many hotel sales agreements do not include the liquor license escrow provisions, and only require transfer of the license as a condition to the closing of the real estate sale. A complete form of liquor license escrow is not presented in this book and is beyond its scope. See Carmichael, Transferring Retail Liquor Licenses in California, 15 CEB Cal Bus L Prac 67 (Summer 2000). Ideally, both escrows should close at the same time. If the sale of the hotel closes before the actual transfer of the liquor license, provisions will have to be made either for the temporary service of alcoholic beverages under some form of agency created for the buyer or the buyer's operator or for the temporary suspension of beverage services until such time as the liquor license transfer is completed.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.28 3. Safe Deposits and Baggage

Many hotels have safe deposit boxes and check baggage as a service to their guests. Sellers will wish to be relieved of responsibility for the contents of safe deposit boxes and checked baggage; buyers wish to confirm that the contents of the boxes and baggage check actually exist before taking responsibility for them. Most agreements provide for an inventory of the contents of safe deposit boxes and baggage check facilities as part of closing.

5.29-1 Escrow and Closing

_. Escrow and Closing.

_.1. Prorations and Adjustments. All Room Revenues and Other Revenues and all operating expenses (e.g., all utilities, etc.) that vary based on the actual operations of the Hotel will be prorated as of the Cutoff Time in accordance with the provisions set forth in section _ _. Advance payments and deposits received by Seller for guest bookings, conventions, meetings, and other Hotel commitments for the period after the Closing Date will be credited to Buyer on the Closing Date. All rents receivable from tenants of the Property earned in or attributable to the period before the Closing Date will be paid to Seller to the extent that such rents have been collected on or before the Closing Date; rents earned in or attributable to the period beginning on the Closing Date and thereafter will be paid to Buyer. Rents receivable from tenants of the Property earned in or attributable to the period before the Closing Date, but received after the Closing, will be paid to Seller. Buyer must cooperate with Seller in the collection of these rents. All amounts in the net working capital account for the hotel operations as of the Closing Date will belong to Seller, and Buyer must replenish such account at Closing or, at Seller's option, credit Seller for such amount at Closing. All operating expenses that are fixed and typically are billed or accrue on a periodic basis and are capable of proration on a per diem basis (e.g., insurance, property taxes, lease rent, etc.) will be prorated as of the Cutoff Time in accordance with the provisions set forth in section _ _. For purposes of calculating prorations, Buyer will be deemed to be in title to the Property (and thus entitled to the income and responsible for the expenses) after the Cutoff Time. Any apportionments and prorations that are not expressly provided for in this Agreement will be made in accordance with customary practice in _ _[city]_ _, _ _[state]_ _. Buyer and Seller will prepare a tentative Operations Settlement not later than _ _[e.g., three (3)]_ _ business days before the Closing Date. Under sections _ _, any adjustments to the Purchase Price related to the Personal Property or cash to be funded into Escrow or paid as of the Close of Escrow, subject to adjustment under the final Operations Settlement, must be made by an increase in the amount funded by Buyer into Escrow and a corresponding increase in the amount to be disbursed to Seller if the prorations result in a net credit to the Seller, or by a decrease in the amount to be funded by Buyer into Escrow and a corresponding decrease in the amount to be disbursed to Seller if the prorations result in a net credit to the Buyer. A copy of the schedule of adjustments as agreed on by Buyer and Seller will be delivered to Escrow Holder before the Closing Date.

_.2. Closing Statement. Escrow Holder will prepare a closing statement on or before the Closing Date, as well as a statement of all of the cash adjustments as a result of the prorations to be made as of the Close of Escrow generally referred to in section _ _.

_.3. Operations Settlement. Buyer's and Seller's accountants will prorate Room Revenues and all Other Revenues and all variable operating expenses as of the Cutoff Time, and the results of this proration together with a statement of the Tray (Guest) Ledger, the City Ledger, credit card receivables, accounts payable, tax liabilities, cash on hand at the Hotel, Inventory, Expendables, Consumables, and the House Funds will be set forth in the Operations Settlement, subject to the following:

_.3.1. Taxes. All general real estate and ad valorem personal property taxes and assessments will be prorated as of the Cutoff Time using the latest available tax rates and assessments. Sales taxes on the sale of goods, taxes on hotel room occupancy, and all employment taxes will be allocated as of the Cutoff Time. Seller will be responsible for all general real estate and ad valorem personal property taxes, all special taxes or assessments accruing with respect to the Property, all taxes on the sale of goods and occupancy of hotel rooms, and all employment taxes for all periods before the Cutoff Time, and Buyer will be responsible for all of such taxes and assessments that accrue after the Cutoff Time. Any tax refunds or rebates that apply to periods before the Cutoff Time will be the property of Seller.

_.3.2. Utilities. Before the Close of Escrow, Seller must notify all utility companies servicing the Hotel of the anticipated change in ownership of the Hotel and request that all billings after the Close of Escrow be made to Buyer at the Hotel address. Utility meters will be read, to the extent that the utility company will do so, during the daylight hours on the calendar day immediately before the Closing Date, with charges accruing before the Cutoff Time paid by Seller and charges accruing thereafter paid by Buyer. Prepaid utility charges will be prorated on the Closing Statement. Charges for utilities that are metered, or charges for the meters that have not been read by the Closing Date, will be prorated between Buyer and Seller as of the Cutoff Time, if the proration can be reasonably estimated. If the proration cannot be estimated, then after the Close of Escrow, Seller or Buyer, as appropriate, will on receipt of such billing submit a copy of the billings to the other party, and such party must pay its prorata share of these charges to the party requesting payment within _ _[e.g., seven (7)]_ _ calendar days from the date of any such request. Seller will be credited and Buyer debited for all deposits previously made by Seller which the utility company in question will apply to Buyer's account.

_.3.3. Service Contracts. All income and expenses with respect to the Service Contracts that Buyer elects to assume on Closing Date will be prorated as of the Cutoff Time. Seller will receive a credit for the amount of any prepaid expenses under any Service Contacts.

_.3.4. Reservations. Buyer will honor, for its account, all reservations and Advance Bookings for dates after the Close of Escrow. Buyer authorizes Seller to continue to accept reservations for guest rooms and meeting rooms for periods after the Close of Escrow, provided the terms and conditions of the reservations are in the ordinary course of Seller's business, and Buyer agrees to honor all such reservations in accordance with their terms. Any pre-closing deposits and Reservation Deposits made to Seller with respect to confirmed reservations for dates after the Close of Escrow will be credited to Buyer. Any post-closing deposits received by Seller with respect to confirmed reservations and Reservation Deposits for dates after the Close of Escrow will be forwarded to Buyer after receipt by Seller.

_.3.5. House Funds, Tray (Guest) Ledger, and Accounts Receivable. All cash on hand in the Hotel in cash registers, cashiers' "banks", and change funds as of the Cutoff Time will remain the sole property of Seller and credited to Seller and debited to Buyer. All House Funds will remain the sole property of Seller and must be applied and returned to Seller on the Close of Escrow. All amounts in the Tray (Guest) Ledger, including charges for rooms, telephone charges, and others, accruing before the Cutoff Time will be credited to Seller at face value, and all amounts in the Tray (Guest) Ledger accruing after the Cutoff Time will belong to Buyer. The entire Tray (Guest) Ledger will then become the property of Buyer. All amounts in the City Ledger accruing before the Cutoff Time will be credited to Seller at their face amount. All accounts receivable related to customer credit card charges must be treated in the same manner as the City Ledger, other than Master Charge and Visa accounts, which will be treated in the same manner as House Funds, and will remain the property of Seller.

_.3.6. Accounts Payable and Expenses. All unpaid accounts payable and expenses relating to operations of the Hotel before Close of Escrow will be paid by Seller, or by Buyer on behalf of Seller, as the case may be, and there will be no proration or decrease in the amount to be funded into Escrow under section _ _ as a result of such payments. By way of illustration, Seller will pay (a) accounts payable and expenses relating to Personal Property, Inventory, or otherwise; (b) expenses arising from items not a part of Inventory (e.g., energy, utilities, insurance, advertising, trade association dues, subscriptions, etc.); and (c) services provided (e.g., by independent contractors, professionals, other consultants, vendors under Service Contracts, etc.). Buyer alone will be responsible for all accounts payable related to Personal Property, Inventory, or otherwise to the extent not yet rendered as of the Close of Escrow, providing same are incurred in the ordinary course of business and such Personal Property, Inventory, or other items are delivered, and/or such services rendered, after the Close of Escrow. In addition to the foregoing, all accounts payable and expenses relating to operations of the Property after the Close of Escrow will be paid by Buyer. Prepaid expenses with respect to all such items as of the Close of Escrow will be credited to Seller.

_.3.7. Employees. All employment compensation accrued as of the Cutoff Time must be paid by Seller. Under section _ _, on the Close of Escrow any of Seller's employees at the Hotel must be terminated by Seller, and at the option of Buyer rehired by Buyer on such terms and in such capacity as may be agreed by Buyer and each such employee, it being understood that Buyer is not assuming any accrued liabilities or obligations with respect to such employees. Any termination of such employees will be undertaken by Seller before the Close of Escrow at the sole cost, expense, and liability of Seller, including continuation of employee health benefits under state or federal law, as provided in section _ _. Employees of _ _[name of Manager]_ _ will remain employees of _ _[name of Manager]_ _.

_.3.8. Other Costs and Expenses. Seller will pay _ _[e.g., one-half]_ _ of the cost for a standard CLTA owner's policy (with no endorsements). Buyer will pay all other premiums for the Title Policy and any endorsements to it required by Buyer that the Title Company is willing to issue. Seller must pay all sales taxes applicable to the sale of the Personal Property. Seller must pay any documentary or other transfer taxes applicable to the sale, if any. Seller and Buyer will share equally all other costs and charges of Escrow and any attorney fees and inspection fee charged by _ _[name of hotel operator]_ _ or _ _[name of Manager]_ _.

_.4. Consumables. As of the Cutoff Time on the Closing Date, Buyer and Seller will take an inventory of all the Consumables. All food and beverages purchased by Seller in the ordinary course of business before the Cutoff Time but delivered to the Hotel after the Cutoff Time will be deemed to have been purchased by Seller for the account of Buyer, and Buyer will pay for such food and beverages as are delivered after the Cutoff Time.

_.5. Licenses/Governmental Certificates and Approvals. Buyer will be fully responsible for, and must pay all costs and fees required to be paid in connection with, the transfer of any and all Licenses and Permits currently held by Seller, and must pay all governmental transfer and license fees in connection with all Licenses and Permits, and apply for and obtain any and all new licenses, permits, certificates, and/or approvals necessary or appropriate in connection with the Hotel's operation and the consummation of the purchase and sale of the Property, subject only to paragraph _ _[e.g., _.3.8 (Other Costs and Expenses)]_ _. Buyer will prosecute its applications in accordance with the rules and procedures set forth under applicable law. Seller will _ _[, at no cost or expense to Seller,]_ _ cooperate as may be reasonably necessary to assist Buyer in obtaining the transfer or issuance of such licenses, permits, certificates, and approvals. Buyer will use reasonable efforts to cause Seller to be released from any liability relating to any Licenses and Permits to be transferred as of the Close of Escrow.

_.6. Adjustments. If any of the payments at closing are based on estimated prorations, the parties agree to make final adjustments to such prorated amounts within _ _[e.g., thirty (30)]_ _ days after Closing.

_.7. Safe Deposit Boxes and Baggage Check.

_.7.1. Any baggage or other property of departed guests held by Seller will remain at the Hotel in the custody of the general manager of the Hotel (General Manager) for a period not to exceed _ _[e.g., ninety (90)]_ _ days after the Cutoff Time. After such period, all such baggage or property will, at the option of Seller, be removed by Seller or abandoned by Seller, and Buyer may dispose of such baggage in any manner deemed appropriate by Buyer in its sole and absolute discretion.

(a) Baggage of Guests Departing Before Cutoff Time. Regarding the baggage or other property of guests who have departed the Hotel prior to the Cutoff Time, Seller agrees to indemnify, defend, and hold Buyer harmless against all claims, losses, and liabilities that Buyer may suffer, sustain, or incur in connection with such baggage or other property, except that Buyer will be responsible for holding for said period such baggage and other property of departed guests as have been placed into the General Manager's custody as of the Cutoff Time.

(b) Baggage of Guests Departing After Cutoff Time. Regarding guests who are still in the Hotel as of the Cutoff Time, all baggage and other property of such guests that has been checked with or left in the care of Seller will be inventoried jointly by Seller and Buyer. Buyer agrees to indemnify, defend, and hold Seller harmless against all claims, losses, or liabilities that Seller may suffer, sustain, or incur with respect to such inventoried baggage arising out of acts or omissions of Buyer after the Cutoff Time. Seller agrees to indemnify, defend, and hold Buyer harmless against all claims, losses, or liabilities that Buyer may suffer, sustain, or incur with respect to such inventoried baggage arising out of the acts or omissions of Seller before the Cutoff Time and all claims with respect to baggage or other property allegedly left at the Hotel before the Cutoff Time but not so tagged and inventoried.

_.7.2. Not later than _ _[e.g., five (5)]_ _ days before the Cutoff Time, Seller will send, or cause the General Manager to send, written notice to guests or other persons who have safe deposit boxes at the Hotel advising of the sale of the Hotel and requesting verification or removal of the contents within _ _[e.g., five (5)]_ _ days. The safe deposit boxes of guests or other persons who have not responded to said written notice as of the Cutoff Time will be opened only in the presence of the General Manager and representatives of both Seller and

Buyer. The contents of all boxes opened as aforesaid will be listed at the time such boxes are opened and each such list must be signed by or on behalf of the General Manager, and Buyer will not be liable or responsible for any items claimed to have been in said boxes unless such items are included in such list. Seller agree to indemnify, defend, and hold Buyer harmless from and against any claims, losses, or liabilities that Buyer may suffer, sustain, or incur with respect to any items claimed to have been in safe deposit boxes but not included on such list. Buyer agrees to indemnify, defend, and hold Seller harmless from and against any claims, losses, or liabilities that Seller may suffer, sustain, or incur with respect to items claimed to have been in safe deposit boxes and included in such list.

_.8. Indemnification.

_.8.1. Seller agrees to defend, indemnify, and hold harmless Buyer from and against any and all loss, damage, cost, claim liability, or expense (including court costs and reasonable attorney fees) suffered or incurred by Buyer as a result of Seller's failure to pay any accounts payable or any sales, use, or occupancy taxes due in connection with the rental of rooms, the sale of goods, or the performance of services before the Cutoff Time, or arising out of any event occurring on or before the Cutoff Time, excluding any loss, damage, cost, claim liability, or expense (including court costs and reasonable attorney fees) resulting from the gross negligence or willful misconduct of Buyer, or any liability or obligation respecting the Property existing as of the Cutoff Time and not assumed by Buyer under this Agreement, except to the extent Buyer has received a credit therefor against the Purchase Price under this Agreement.

_.8.2. Buyer agrees to defend, indemnify, and hold harmless Seller from and against any and all loss, damage, cost, claim, liability, or expense (including court costs and reasonable attorney fees) suffered or incurred by Seller arising out of any events relating to the period following the Cutoff Time, excluding any loss, damage, cost, claim liability, or expense (including court costs and reasonable attorney fees) resulting from the gross negligence or willful misconduct of Seller, or any liability or obligation assumed by Buyer under this Agreement or in any agreement executed and/or delivered at the Closing, or resulting from Buyer's failure to pay any item for which it received a credit against the Purchase Price under this Agreement.

Comment: Sales tax will be payable on the sale of the hotel's tangible personal property, because the seller will hold a resale certificate and there will probably be no exemption from the requirement to pay sales tax. This form provides that the seller will pay the sales taxes. Other agreements provide for an equal division of the sales taxes between the seller and the buyer. See Sales and Mergers of California Businesses §§3.42-3.44 (Cal CEB 2002).

I. INTRODUCTION

§6.1 A. Relationship to Chapter on Purchase and Sale Agreements

Chapter 4 discusses purchase and sale agreements in both residential and commercial contexts and should be reviewed for its general application to residential transactions. This chapter covers additional matters that are unique to the purchase and sale of residential real estate.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.2 B. Attorney's Role in Residential Transactions

Throughout California, residential real estate transactions are typically handled by nonlawyers. Real estate licensees, representing the seller or buyer or both, complete standard form purchase contracts, generally published by state or local Realtor® associations, to document transaction terms. Contract performance is managed by real estate licensees. Escrow is opened at a title company (in Northern California) or private escrow company (in Southern California), which, in accordance with standard form escrow instructions, handles deposits and loan pay-offs, allocates and prorates costs between the buyer and seller, prepares conveyancing documents, processes loan documents, obtains lien releases, coordinates the closing, and prepares a final settlement statement. Title companies research liens, encumbrances, and other matters recorded against the property, and ultimately issue a policy of title insurance. Appraisals and financing are arranged by the buyer directly with a lender or with the assistance of an independent mortgage broker. Property inspections are conducted by licensed pest control and home inspection companies, and certain mandatory statutory disclosures are made for the seller by third party disclosure companies.

Thus, even though nearly every aspect of a residential transaction involves legal rights and obligations, and even though it is unlawful for the nonlawyers entrusted with the transaction to render legal advice, lawyers typically do not become involved in California residential transactions unless and until a dispute arises during the course of the transaction or after closing. Nevertheless, during the transaction, lawyers can provide a valuable service by clarifying the parties' legal rights and obligations and otherwise rendering advice from the perspective of a professional who has no economic interest in consummation of the transaction. After closing, lawyers can also assist clients in resolving disputes.

To most effectively represent the client, an attorney must be familiar with the customs and practices of the relevant residential real estate brokerage community and the terms of its standard form transaction documents, the significant body of relevant federal, state and local laws, principally in the area of seller disclosures, and the underlying common law duties and obligations attendant to the sale of real property. With such knowledge, attorneys can assist at every stage of a residential transaction; they can, for example:

- Explain the provisions of the purchase contract;
- Advise on contractual performance obligations and standards;
- Draft contract language to address issues unique to the transaction;
- Advise on vesting of title;
- Review and advise on title exceptions and insurance;
- Advise on tax issues (if qualified);
- Advise on disclosures, including questions of "materiality" and statutory disclosure compliance;
- Review and advise on common interest development documents and disclosures;
- Advise on the scope of the buyer's due diligence;
- Advise on applicable antidiscrimination laws;
- Review escrow instructions for compliance with transaction terms;
- Resolve disputes between the client and his or her agent or escrow company;
- Review transaction documents after closing for completeness and accuracy; and
- Advise on post-closing disputes and strategies for cost-effective resolution.

II. RESIDENTIAL PURCHASE AND SALE AGREEMENTS

§6.3 A. Standard Form Agreements

For California residential transactions, pre-printed form agreements are customarily used to document transaction terms. Perhaps the most widely used form for the sale of single-family residential property (including separate interests in common interest developments) is the California Association of Realtors'® (CAR) California Residential Purchase Agreement and Joint Escrow Instructions. See §6.24. Some local Realtor® associations publish their own pre-printed purchase contracts, which are tailored to local custom and practice. A few private companies also publish pre-printed forms.

Standard form purchase agreements contain a combination of boilerplate provisions, optional provisions that apply only if a box has been checked, provisions that apply only if they are initialed by both the buyer and seller (e.g., liquidated damages and arbitration clauses), and blank lines to be filled in with specific transaction terms (e.g., purchase price, contingency periods, closing date). Additional or different terms may be included in the purchase agreement by attaching and incorporating either a pre-printed addendum or a custom-drafted addendum.

The CAR form of Residential Purchase Agreement and Joint Escrow Instructions incorporates a mandatory addendum, the Buyer's Inspection Advisory (see §6.25), which advises the buyer of the importance of property inspections. The Residential Purchase Agreement and Joint Escrow Instructions also includes two optional addenda:

- The Purchase Agreement Addendum (see §6.26) allows the contracting parties, by checking a box, to incorporate pre-printed terms covering common situations such as "back-up" offers, retained possession by the seller after closing, tenant information (for rental property), second loan terms, "short sales," and court confirmation.
- The Statewide Buyer and Seller Advisory (see §6.27) advises buyer and seller on a wide range of issues relevant to the seller's disclosures and the buyer's due diligence investigation.

After the parties have executed a Residential Purchase Agreement and Joint Escrow Instructions (see §6.24), if the buyer fails to timely remove a contractual contingency or take other specified action, the seller must use the CAR form Notice to Buyer to Perform (see §6.28) and provide the buyer a specified time period within which to perform or the seller may cancel the agreement. See §6.22.

§6.4 1. Contract Interpretation

Preprinted form purchase agreements are subject to statutory rules of contract interpretation. See CC §§1635-1663. As with any contract, a purchase agreement must be interpreted to carry out the mutual intention of the parties as it existed at the time of contracting. CC §1636. Other rules of construction that are often applied to interpret preprinted real estate contracts include the following:

- When a contract is partly written and partly printed, the written parts control the printed parts. CC §1651.
- Words of a contract will be given their ordinary and popular meaning unless the parties indicate an intention to give them technical or special meanings. CC §1644.
- When technical terms are used, they will be given the meaning understood by persons in the profession or business to which they relate, unless the parties indicate otherwise. CC §1645.
- If all or a material part of the property is destroyed through no fault of the buyer, or is taken by eminent domain before legal title is transferred or the buyer takes possession of the property, then the seller cannot enforce the purchase contract and the buyer is entitled to recover any portion of the purchase price already paid. If, however, the destruction or taking occurs after legal title or possession has been transferred, the buyer is not relieved of the obligation to pay the purchase price and is not entitled to recover any portion of it already paid. CC §1662.

PRACTICE TIP: When the statutory risk-of-loss rules apply, a buyer should not take possession of the property before title is transferred unless the buyer has first secured appropriate insurance coverage for the period between taking possession and the title transfer.

For further discussion regarding rules of contract interpretation, see California Law of Contracts, §§5.1-5.32 (Cal CEB 2007).

§6.5 2. Offer, Acceptance, and Counteroffer

General principles of contract law govern the offer and acceptance process typically followed in residential transactions. The standard form purchase agreement is completed to reflect the terms on which the buyer proposes to purchase the property and is delivered to the seller as the purchase offer. The terms of the offer must be sufficiently definite that the performance promised is reasonably certain. Ladas v California State Automobile Ass'n (1993) 19 CA4th 761, 770, 23 CR2d 810. A contract for the sale of real property is sufficiently definite to be specifically enforced as long as the court can ascertain the seller, the buyer, the purchase price, the property to be transferred, and the time and manner of payment. Patel v Liebermensch (2008) 45 C4th 344, 349, 86 CR3d 366. If time and manner of payment are not specified in the contract, reasonable terms may be implied. 45 C4th at 350 (escrow period is not a necessary term of a real estate sales contract).

The offer typically specifies the manner of acceptance and the date and time by which acceptance must be received by the seller or agent. If these matters are specified, the offer can be effectively accepted only by the method and within the time specified. See Palo Alto Town & Country Village, Inc. v BBTC Co. (1974) 11 C3d 494, 498, 113 CR 705. The offer may be revoked by the offeror at any time before the offeree's acceptance has been communicated. CC §1586. To create a binding contract, acceptance must be absolute and unqualified. CC §1585. A qualified acceptance ends the original offer and constitutes a new proposal or counteroffer. Panagotacos v Bank of America (1998) 60 CA4th 851, 855, 70 CR2d 595; Roth v Malson (1998) 67 CA4th 552, 557, 79 CR2d 226 (interpreting CAR's counteroffer form).

The Residential Purchase Agreement and Joint Escrow Instructions (see §6.24) provides the seller with the options of rejecting the offer, accepting all terms of the offer, or accepting the offer "subject to" an attached counteroffer. The last option, as a conditional acceptance, becomes a new proposal that ends the original offer and does not create a binding contract unless and until properly accepted. The counteroffer should provide that the terms of the original offer are accepted subject to the other party's acceptance of the additional or different terms stated in the counteroffer. The same process of rejection, acceptance, or counteroffer continues until one of the parties unequivocally accepts the other party's terms.

PRACTICE TIP: Multiple counteroffers are common in residential transactions before the parties agree on essential terms such as purchase price, length of contingency periods, and the date for close of escrow. Counteroffers are often drafted quickly and exchanged by fax or e-mail. Because such terms are customized and handwritten, they supersede the pre-printed form if there is any conflict. Accordingly, the parties should make sure that the newly proposed written terms do not conflict with pre-printed terms unless they intend the written terms to supersede. In that situation, the best practice is to reference on the counteroffer form the paragraph of the pre-printed form that the new written term is intended to replace, e.g., "The purchase price in paragraph 1.C shall be $500,000." Similarly, paragraphs the parties agree to delete from the purchase agreement should be specifically referenced in the counteroffer.

§6.6 3. Selected Provisions of the Purchase Agreement

Selected provisions of a residential purchase agreement that are commonly disputed are discussed in §§6.7-6.23. Legal analysis and advice can help resolve these disputes. The discussion refers to the California Residential Purchase Agreement and Joint Escrow Instructions set forth in §6.24. Other forms typically include similar provisions, but they may differ materially and should be carefully reviewed.

a. Description of the Property

§6.7 (1) The Real Property

By definition, real property consists of land, fixtures, rights appurtenant to land (i.e., used with the land for its benefit) such as easements, and things that are immovable by law. CC §658. Every other kind of property is personal property. CC §663. In every residential transaction, the purchase agreement should specifically identify the real property and any personal property interests being transferred.

The real property is typically identified by street address, city, county, and assessor's parcel number. A preliminary title report will include a legal description of the real property and will identify any appurtenances as well as liens and encumbrances. See §6.80.

In a residential transaction a survey confirming the boundaries of the property is rarely performed, even though disputes regarding boundaries, encroachments, and easements frequently arise. Sellers and their agents should not make representations about such matters unless they are based on a reliable survey. In Salahutdin v Valley of Cal., Inc. (1994) 24 CA4th 555, 29 CR2d 463, the seller and listing agent represented that the property contained more than one acre, based on the location of a perimeter fence, without conducting a survey. The buyer's agent communicated these representations to the buyer. The buyer purchased the property with the intent to subdivide it. After the sale, the buyer discovered that the fence did not accurately mark the boundary and that the property was, in fact, less than one acre and thus could not be subdivided. The buyer's agent was found to have breached his fiduciary duty by communicating the seller's representations about the size of the lot to the buyer without disclosing that he had not independently verified its accuracy.

If the precise boundaries of the property are important to the buyer, then the purchase should be made contingent on confirmation of the boundaries by survey. Otherwise, as part of its due-diligence investigation, a buyer should inspect the property for evidence of possible boundary disputes, such as the absence of fencing, or fencing that is inconsistent with the shape of the parcel as depicted on a recorded map, and make appropriate inquiries of the seller. Similarly, the buyer should look for evidence of possible unrecorded easements or other interests (e.g., a sewer pipe running across the property from an uphill property), particularly if the ability to use or develop a particular portion of the property is material to the buyer. In such case, a title insurance endorsement may be available to cover the issue of concern to the buyer. See §§6.82-6.85. For a discussion of buyer's due diligence, see §§6.71-6.77.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.8 (2) Fixtures and Personal Property

A fixture is attached to the land by roots (e.g., trees, vines, or shrubs), imbedded in the land (e.g., walls), permanently resting on the land (e.g., a building), or permanently attached to a building (such as by cement, plaster, nails, bolts, or screws). CC §660. Typically, fixtures are included in the sale of real property, whereas personal property is not. This is the default provision in the Residential Purchase Agreement and Joint Escrow Instructions, ¶8.B; see §6.24. Residential fixtures include electrical, mechanical, lighting, plumbing, and heating fixtures; ceiling fans, fireplace inserts, built-in appliances, window coverings, and attached flooring; and items such as cabinetry, shelving, or other furnishings that are nailed, bolted, screwed, or similarly attached to the dwelling. Fixtures do not include washer/dryers, refrigerators, and other appliances that can be unplugged and moved.

PRACTICE TIP: The Residential Purchase Agreement and Joint Escrow Instructions, ¶8.A (see §6.24) provides that items included or excluded in the Multiple Listing Service (MLS) listing and other advertising materials are not included in or excluded from the sale unless specified in the purchase contract. Thus, sellers need to specify in the purchase agreement any fixtures that are excluded from the sale, and buyers need to specify any personal property they wish to include in the sale.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.9 b. "As Is" Clauses

There are no implied warranties as to quality or condition in the sale of real property except for newly constructed residential dwellings. Pollard v Saxe & Yolles Dev. Co. (1974) 12 C3d 374, 380, 115 CR 648 (implied warranty in new construction that structure is designed and constructed in reasonable, workmanlike manner); East Hilton Drive Homeowners' Ass'n v Western Real Estate Exch., Inc. (1982) 136 CA3d 630, 632, 186 CR 267. Rather, the buyer assumes the risk of the property's quality and condition absent express warranties, fraud, or misrepresentation by the seller. Shapiro v Hu (1986) 188 CA3d 324, 332, 233 CR 470.

"As is" clauses are often used to signal that the property is being sold in its present observable state and condition, without any implied warranties as to quality or condition. 188 CA3d at 332. It has been suggested that by so notifying the buyer, the seller raises a "red flag" that the property may not be "in perfect condition or of ideal quality." 188 CA3d at 333.

An "as is" clause relieves the seller of liability for defects in the property unless the seller, through fraud or misrepresentation, conceals material defects not otherwise known or observable to the buyer. 188 CA3d at 333. In other words, an "as is" clause does not relieve the seller of the common law and statutory duties of disclosure or liability for fraud. See CC §1102.1(a). See also Wilson v Century 21 Great W. Realty (1993) 15 CA4th 298, 304, 18 CR2d 779. For a discussion of statutory disclosure requirements, see §§6.34-6.70.

NOTE: The Residential Purchase Agreement and Joint Escrow Instructions (see §6.24) does not use the term "as is" but, in effect, incorporates the concept by providing in paragraphs 7.A and B that the property is being sold "in its PRESENT physical condition as of the date of Acceptance, subject to the buyer's investigation rights and the seller's duty to disclose known material facts and defects." For an example of an "as is" clause in a commercial purchase and sale agreement, see form 4.173-5.

c. Liquidated Damages and Deposit Forfeiture

§6.10 (1) Owner-Occupied One to Four Units

Civil Code §§1675-1681 govern the validity and legal effect of a liquidated damages clause in a purchase agreement for the sale of a dwelling containing one to four residential units, if at the time of contracting the buyer intended to occupy one or more of the units as a personal residence. CC §1675(a). The validity of liquidated damages in all other contexts is governed by CC §1671. CC §1679. For a more detailed discussion of liquidated damages clauses, see §4.142 and California Real Property Remedies and Damages §§4.35-4.38 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002).

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.11 (a) Formal Requirements

For a liquidated damages provision in a residential purchase agreement (owner-occupied, one-to-four-unit property) to be valid:

(1) The provision must be signed or initialed by each party to the contract (CC §1677(a));

(2) If the provision is pre-printed, it must be in at least 10-point bold type or at least 8-point bold type in contrasting red print (CC §1677(b));

(3) If more than one payment is made, for each subsequent payment a separate liquidated damages provision must be executed, meeting requirements (1) and (2) above (CC §1678);

(4) The provision will be valid only to the extent of payment actually made at the time of the buyer's breach (CC §1675(c)); and

(5) The provision will be valid if the amount actually paid does not exceed 3 percent of the purchase price, unless the buyer establishes that the amount is unreasonable as liquidated damages. If the amount exceeds 3 percent, the provision will be invalid unless the party seeking to uphold it establishes it is reasonable as liquidated damages. CC §1675(d).

These rules do not preclude a seller, upon a buyer's default, from seeking specific performance in appropriate situations. See CC §1680.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.12 (b) Reasonableness

A liquidated damages clause is valid if it was reasonable under the circumstances existing at the time the contract was made. See CC §§1671(b), 1675(e)(1). In the context of a one-to-four-unit residential sale, however, the criteria for reasonableness also include the price and other terms and circumstances of any sale of, or contract to sell, the same property that occurs within 6 months after the buyer's default. CC §1675(e)(2).

The Law Revision Commission Comments to CC §1675 provide guidance to courts on the factors they should consider in determining reasonableness. These include the cost of taxes, interest, and insurance during the period after the original contract to purchase the property was made and any additional broker's fees incurred as a result of the buyer's default. Other relevant factors include the relative equality of the parties' bargaining power, whether they were represented by lawyers when the contract was made, their anticipation that proof of actual damages would be costly or inconvenient, the difficulty of proving causation and foreseeability, and whether the liquidated damages provision is part of a form contract. See Law Revision Commission Comments to CC §1675.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.13 (c) Deposit Forfeiture

The forfeiture of a buyer's deposit on default is not automatic. Although there are no published cases considering the requirement in CC §1675(e)(2) that a sale within 6 months of the buyer's default be considered in determining whether a liquidated damages provision is reasonable, given the overriding duty to mitigate damages, a seller should continue to actively market the property for sale during the 6-month period following default or risk a finding that the provision is unreasonable. Moreover, even if the amount of the deposit does not exceed 3 percent, a buyer might still argue unreasonableness based on CC §1675 if the facts and circumstances are supportive.

Ultimately, a buyer or seller could be liable to the other for failure to authorize the escrow holder to distribute the deposit. CC §1057.3(a). If, within 30 days following a written demand by one party for return of the deposit, the other party fails to execute documents authorizing the escrow holder to release funds, that party will be liable to the demanding party for the amount of the deposit not held to resolve a good faith dispute and treble damages of not less than $100 or more than $1000, plus reasonable attorney fees incurred to enforce this obligation. CC §1057.3(b). To prevail, the demanding party must prove that there was no good faith dispute as to the right to the deposit. CC §1057.3(c).

§6.14 (2) Initial Sale of New Condominiums

Special rules apply to liquidated damages provisions in contracts for the initial sale of certain newly constructed attached residential condominium units. If the unit is located within a structure of ten or more residential units and the amount actually paid to the seller as liquidated damages on the buyer's default exceeds 3 percent of the purchase price, the seller must:

- Make reasonable efforts to mitigate damages (CC §1675(f)(1)(B));
- Perform an accounting of its costs and revenues allocable to the unit within 60 days after its subsequent sale (or 60 days after the seller enters into a contract with a buyer who has a loan commitment to purchase the unit at the same or higher price as the defaulting buyer) (CC §1675(f)(1)(A)); and
- Refund to the buyer, within 90 days after the final close of escrow of all sales and leases of units within the building, the greater of any amount retained by the seller in excess of 3 percent of the original sale price or the amount of the seller's actual losses according to the accounting. CC §1675(f)(1)(B), (2).

If, after the accounting, it is determined that the deposit retained by the seller does not exceed 3 percent, then the amount is considered valid unless the buyer establishes that it is unreasonable as liquidated damages. CC §1675(f)(3).

Beginning January 1, 2009, substantially similar accounting and refund requirements were imposed on the sale of attached residential condominium units located within a building that is over eight stories tall, contains 20 or more residential units, and is located in a high-density infill development, if the purchase price of the unit is more than $1 million. CC §1675(g). In such cases, if the liquidated damages paid exceed 6 percent of the unit's purchase price, the same accounting requirements as under CC §1675(f) apply, and the seller is required to refund the greater of any amount retained in excess of 6 percent of the original sale price or the amount of the seller's actual losses. CC §1675(g)(1)(A). When the retained amount does not exceed 6 percent, the liquidated damages provision is considered valid unless the buyer can establish that it is unreasonable under CC §1675(e). CC §1675(g)(3). See §6.12. If, however, the seller did not provide a specified statutory notice to the buyer regarding the deposit before execution of the purchase contract, the amount of liquidated damages the seller may recover will be limited to 3 percent of the purchase price, subject to the buyer establishing that the amount is unreasonable as liquidated damages or the seller establishing that a greater amount is reasonable as liquidated damages. CC §1675(g)(9). See §1675(c)-(d). Civil Code §1675(g) becomes inoperative on July 1, 2014 unless a later enacted statute, that becomes operative on or before January 1, 2015, extends it. CC §1675(h).

§6.15 d. Alternative Dispute Resolution

The California arbitration law (CCP §§1280-1294.2) governs private arbitration in California unless the contract containing the arbitration clause involves interstate or foreign commerce, in which case the Federal Arbitration Act (9 USC §§1-16) preempts conflicting provisions of state law. See Southland Corp. v Keating (1984) 465 US 1, 12, 79 L Ed 2d 1, 104 S Ct 852. California arbitration statutes specify format and notice requirements for arbitration agreements in real estate contracts and expressly exclude certain types of claims from arbitration. See CCP §1298 and §§6.16-6.17. The relationship between these restrictive provisions and the broad arbitration mandate of the Federal Arbitration Act has been considered by California courts in several decisions, which have broadly construed the reach of the Federal Arbitration Act while taking care to enforce the intent of the contracting parties. See §6.18.

Additionally, parties may use statutory and common law contract arguments against the enforceability of arbitration agreements. See, e.g., Thompson v Toll Dublin, LLC (2008) 165 CA4th 1360, 81 CR3d 736 (arbitration provisions in preprinted documents that builder-seller required new home buyer to execute was unconscionable); Marcus & Millichap Real Estate Inv. Brokerage Co. v Hock Inv. Co. (1998) 68 CA4th 83, 80 CR2d 147 (lack of mutual agreement between the parties).

On alternative dispute resolution generally, see §4.150. See also California Real Property Remedies and Damages, chap 14 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002) and A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California (Cal CEB 2005). For a sample arbitration provision for use in a commercial real estate transaction, see form 4.177-5.

(1) California Arbitration Provisions

§6.16 (a) Format and Notice Requirements

California law requires arbitration agreements in contracts for the sale of real property to satisfy certain format and notice requirements to be enforceable. CCP §1298. The arbitration provision must be entitled "ARBITRATION OF DISPUTES." CCP §1298(b). If the provision is included in a printed contract, it must be in at least 8-point bold type or contrasting red in at least 8-point type, or if the provision is in a typed contract, it must be in all capital letters. CCP §1298(b). Immediately following the arbitration provision there must be a statutorily specified Notice (in 10-point bold type or contrasting red 8-point bold type in printed contracts, or full capital letters in typed contracts), immediately followed by a space or line for the parties to initial or sign, evidencing their assent to the arbitration provision. CCP §1298(c). See the Residential Purchase Agreement and Joint Escrow Instructions, ¶17.B, in §6.24. The notice language itself does not constitute the arbitration agreement. Villacreses v Molinari (2005) 132 CA4th 1223, 1231, 34 CR3d 281.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.17 (b) Exclusions From Arbitration

Under California law, an arbitration provision in a real estate purchase agreement cannot require arbitration of bodily injury or wrongful death claims, or certain construction or design defect claims. CCP §1298.7. See Gravillis v Coldwell Banker Residential Brokerage Co. (2006) 143 CA4th 761, 49 CR3d 531 (claim for emotional distress from nondisclosure of structural defects does not constitute "bodily injury" excluded from arbitration agreement).

NOTE: Paragraph 17.B of the Residential Purchase Agreement and Joint Escrow Instructions (see §6.24) excludes from its mediation and arbitration provisions foreclosure, unlawful detainer, mechanics' liens, small claims, probate, and bankruptcy actions.

(2) Federal Arbitration Act

§6.18 (a) Preemption

Under the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA) (9 USC §§1-16), arbitration agreements in contracts "involving commerce" are enforceable subject only to state laws governing the validity, revocability, and enforceability of contracts in general (as opposed to state laws directed at arbitration agreements specifically). Hedges v Carrigan (2004) 117 CA4th 578, 583, 11 CR3d 787, citing Doctor's Assocs., Inc. v Casarotto (1996) 517 US 681, 686-687, 134 L Ed 2d 902, 116 S Ct 1652 (Montana statute conditioning arbitration agreements' enforceability on inclusion of special notice requirements directly conflicted with and was preempted by FAA as applied to agreement involving interstate commerce). Thus, the FAA preempts conflicting provisions of the California arbitration law in cases "involving commerce," which has been broadly construed. Hedges, 117 CA4th at 585. See also Woolls v Superior Court (2005) 127 CA4th 197, 212, 25 CR3d 426 (party asserting preemption must present facts showing transaction "involves commerce").

In Hedges, the court found that the sale of a single-family residence involved interstate commerce when the purchase was financed with an FHA home loan and the parties used transaction forms copyrighted by the National Association of Realtors®. Therefore, even though the parties' arbitration agreement failed to comply with the formal requirements of CCP §1298, the agreement was valid and enforceable under the FAA's broad arbitration mandate. 117 CA4th at 586. Similarly, in Shepard v Edward Mackay Enters., Inc. (2007) 148 CA4th 1092, 56 CR3d 326, the court found that the FAA preempted CCP §1298.7 when construction of the plaintiff's house involved receipt and use of building materials that were manufactured or produced outside California. It was not necessary that the dispute involve the materials from out of state as long as the number of building materials that came from out of state indicated more than a "trivial" impact on interstate commerce. 148 CA4th at 1101.

To the same effect is Basura v U.S. Home Corp. (2002) 98 CA4th 1205, 120 CR2d 328. There, relying on Doctor's Assocs., Inc. v Casarotto (1996) 517 US 681, 686-687, 134 L Ed 2d 902, 116 S Ct 1652, the court held that purchase contracts between a residential home builder and new home buyers involved interstate commerce when various structural components of the homes, appliances, and fixtures were manufactured outside of California; the builder contracted with out-of-state design professionals and contractors; the builder communicated with them and others by interstate mail and telephone; and the builder advertised throughout the country using interstate media. Basura, 98 CA4th at 1214.

§6.18A (b) Application of State Contract Law

In Marcus & Millichap Real Estate Inv. Brokerage Co. v Hock Inv. Co. (1998) 68 CA4th 83, 80 CR2d 147, the court found that a lack of mutual agreement to arbitrate in the parties' contract is an issue of general California contract law that is not preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA) (9 USC §§1-16). In Marcus & Millichap, the purchase agreement contained an arbitration agreement and the notice language required by CCP §1298, followed by space for the seller and buyer to initial, but only one of the parties initialed. The court stated that, regardless of whether the FAA preempts CCP §1298, the language required by CCP §1298 was actually incorporated into the parties' contract, so the relevant question was whether the language of the contract reflected an agreement to arbitrate. 68 CA4th at 92.

Interpreting the language of the purchase agreement, the Marcus & Millichap court held that the contract contemplated that the arbitration agreement would be effective only if initialed by both parties. Because only one party initialed it, there was no agreement to arbitrate as a matter of California contract law. 68 CA4th at 92. In so holding, the court noted that if the parties' contract had not contained the language required by CCP §1298, the court might have found that the FAA preempted CCP §1298. 68 CA4th at 92.

§6.19 e. Mediation and Attorney Fees

Most purchase agreement forms include a boilerplate provision for the award of attorney fees to the prevailing party in a dispute arising out of the agreement. As attorney fee awards can be substantial, these fee-shifting provisions, including any conditions or exceptions, should be carefully reviewed. For example, Paragraph 22 of the Residential Purchase Agreement and Joint Escrow Instructions in §6.24 provides that the prevailing party in an action, proceeding, or arbitration between the buyer and seller arising out of the purchase agreement is entitled to recover its reasonable attorney fees and costs, except as provided in ¶17.A. Paragraph 17.A requires the parties first to engage in mediation of any dispute (whether or not it is subject to arbitration) and provides that a party who files an action without first attempting to resolve it through mediation, or who refuses a request to mediate, forfeits any right to recover attorney fees, even if they would otherwise be available. Paragraph 17.A has been interpreted as a condition precedent to the recovery of attorney fees, barring recovery by a prevailing party who does not first attempt mediation. Lange v Schilling (2008) 163 CA4th 1412, 1417, 78 CR3d 356, citing Johnson v Siegel (2000) 84 CA4th 1087, 1101, 101 CR2d 412. Courts have repeatedly stated that ¶17.A "'means what it says and will be enforced.'" Lange, 163 CA4th at 1417, quoting Frei v Davey (2004) 124 CA4th 1506, 1508, 22 CR3d 429.

Given the strong policy favoring mediation "at the earliest possible time" and the clear and unambiguous language of ¶17.A, courts have rejected various excuses offered by parties for failing to mediate. Lange, 163 CA4th at 1417. In Frei v Davey, the buyers requested mediation after the sellers canceled the purchase agreement. When the sellers delayed in responding to the buyers' mediation request, the buyers filed a specific performance action. The buyers continued to propose mediation, but the sellers did not agree to mediate until nearly 1 year later, on the eve of trial. Although the mediation provision in the purchase agreement did not specify a response time to the mediation request, the court held that a reasonable time for performance must be allowed and that the sellers' initial delay and subsequent rejection of mediation were unreasonable. 124 CA4th at 1516. The court rejected the sellers' arguments that they had substantially complied with the mediation provision by engaging in settlement discussions and that their refusal to mediate should be excused because they perceived that mediation was unlikely to be successful. 124 CA4th at 1514. Acknowledging the value of mediation at various stages of a dispute, the court nevertheless stated that a 1-year delay in agreeing to mediate defeated the purpose of early-mediation provisions intended to minimize the cost of resolving a dispute. The court also rejected the sellers' argument that the buyers had negated the mediation requirement by filing the lawsuit in order to record a lis pendens against the property, noting that the arbitration provision in the purchase agreement permitted the filing of a lawsuit for that purpose. 124 CA4th at 1517. Thus, even though the sellers ultimately prevailed at trial, the court held that they were precluded from recovering attorney fees because of their refusal to mediate. 124 CA4th at 1520.

Similarly, in Lange v Schilling, the court declined to award a prevailing buyer attorney fees, rejecting all three of the buyer's reasons for failing to engage in mediation before filing his lawsuit. The court rejected the buyer's assertions that:

- He could not locate the sellers, noting that the buyer had hired an investigator to locate the sellers to serve the complaint and could have done the same to serve them with a mediation request. 163 CA4th at 1417;
- His offer to mediate made months after filing and serving the complaint was "substantial compliance" with ¶17.A, stating that doctrine did not apply because ¶17.A clearly mandates that a party attempt mediation before commencing litigation. 163 CA4th at 1418; and
- The sellers waived mediation because their counsel did not respond to a letter from the buyer's counsel unilaterally asserting such a waiver. 163 CA4th at 1418.

Despite courts' strict interpretation of ¶17.A, one court has upheld an award of attorney fees to a prevailing party that filed suit before participating in mediation under the unique circumstances of that case. In Kahn v Chetcuti (2002) 101 CA4th 61, 123 CR2d 606, while counsel were attempting to agree on a mediator, plaintiffs' counsel requested opposing counsel to sign a tolling agreement because the limitations period on plaintiffs' claims was about to run, but opposing counsel refused to do so. Plaintiffs then filed the lawsuit solely to preserve their legal rights. Thereafter, the parties engaged in mediation before proceeding to arbitration. 101 CA4th at 67.

These cases demonstrate that courts will strictly interpret the condition precedent set forth in ¶17.A. However, in certain limited circumstances, the condition may be excused when the pre-mediation filing is necessary to preserve a legal right.

§6.20 f. Contract Contingencies

Typically, a residential purchase agreement contains several contingencies that must be removed within specified time periods after acceptance or one or both of the parties may cancel the purchase agreement. The most common contingencies pertain to financing (the buyer must be approved for a loan in the required amount with certain specified terms); appraisal (the property must appraise at no less than the specified purchase price); buyer's investigations (buyer must approve inspection reports, seller disclosures and documents, and any other investigations and inquiries buyer chooses to make); title (buyer must approve seller's title and accept liens and encumbrances on the property that will survive close of escrow); and sale of another property owned by the buyer (performance not required unless buyer sells a specified property). Form purchase agreements generally require the buyer and seller to specify time periods within which the buyer must satisfy or release each contingency. See, e.g., the CAR Residential Purchase Agreement and Joint Escrow Instructions, ¶14, in §6.24. For an example of a custom provision in a commercial purchase and sale agreement, see §4.171.

§6.21 (1) Conditions Precedent

A contract contingency is, as a matter of contract law, a condition precedent. It is an act that must be performed, or an uncertain event that must happen, before a contractual right accrues or a contractual duty arises. Realmuto v Gagnard (2003) 110 CA4th 193, 199, 1 CR3d 569. See also CC §1436. The party whose performance is subject to a condition precedent must act in good faith and diligently to satisfy or "remove" the condition. Jacobs v Freeman (1980) 104 CA3d 177, 188, 163 CR 680 (officers of corporate seller that conditioned sale on approval of its board breached implied duty of good faith and fair dealing by failing to submit transaction documents to its board); Abrams v Motter (1970) 3 CA3d 828, 837, 83 CR 855 (buyer failed to act diligently in obtaining loan). This obligation derives from the covenant of good faith and fair dealing implied in every contract, which prohibits a contracting party from doing anything that prevents the other party from receiving the benefits of the agreement. Bleecher v Conte (1981) 29 C3d 345, 352, 213 CR 852. See also Peak-Las Positas Partners v Bollag (2009) 172 CA4th 101, 106, 90 CR3d 775 (seller's refusal to extend escrow was in bad faith when developer-buyer had already paid nearly all of purchase price into escrow and spent additional $5 million in project costs, and timing of transaction was not issue for seller). For a discussion of the duty of good faith and fair dealing, see Drafting Business Contracts: Principles, Techniques & Forms §9.23 (Cal CEB 1994).

The contingencies commonly included in residential agreements are referred to as "satisfaction clauses" because the buyer's obligation to perform is conditioned on his or her approval or satisfaction as to specified matters. See Bleecher v Conte, supra (buyer's performance contingent on approval of title report, plat map, and soil, zoning, and engineering reports); Converse v Fong (1984) 159 CA3d 86, 90, 205 CR 242 (buyer's obligation to perform conditioned on approval of termite and roof inspection reports). When a party's satisfaction as to a particular matter is a condition for the party's performance, the party has an implied duty to exercise its judgment in good faith and proceed diligently. Bleecher, 29 C3d at 352; Converse, 159 CA3d at 90. Two standards apply to this duty, depending on the nature of the condition involved. When the condition involves something that can be objectively measured or assessed, such as "commercial value or quality, operative fitness, or mechanical utility," a "reasonable person" standard applies and dissatisfaction cannot be claimed arbitrarily, unreasonably, or capriciously. Mattei v Hopper (1958) 51 C2d 119, 123, 330 P2d 625. However, when the condition involves matters of "fancy, taste, or judgment," the inquiry is limited to whether the person acted in good faith in disapproving the matter. Mattei v Hopper, supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.22 (2) Contingency Removal

When a condition precedent is not timely performed, either party may terminate the purchase agreement. See Consolidated World Invs., Inc. v Lido Preferred Ltd. (1992) 9 CA4th 373, 380, 11 CR2d 524. Contracting parties are free to specify the time and manner in which a contingency must be removed and the consequences of a failure to do so. Paragraph 14 of the Residential Purchase Agreement and Joint Escrow Instructions in §6.24 provides a contingency-removal procedure that, although somewhat complex, ensures a clear record of the parties' intentions with respect to contractual conditions.

Under that procedure, the parties agree to the length of each contingency period (unless the parties expressly agree to waive any of the contingencies). During the contingency period, the buyer may request the seller to make certain repairs or take other action regarding the property, and on completion may remove the applicable contingency. The parties agree, however, that the seller has no obligation to agree or respond to the buyer's requests. The buyer further agrees either to remove the contingency in writing or to cancel the purchase agreement by the end of each contingency period. See ¶14.B(2)-(3) of the form in §6.24. As to certain matters that are within the control of the seller or third parties (such as condominium disclosures and documents), the parties agree that the contingency period will be a specified time period after the buyer receives the relevant materials for review. See ¶14.B(3). If the buyer fails to timely remove a contingency, the seller has the right to cancel the agreement, without penalty to the buyer, after first giving the buyer a Notice to Buyer to Perform. See §6.28. This notice declares the buyer's failure to perform and demands performance within a time-frame agreed to in the contract (24 hours is the default provision). See ¶14.C(1), (4). If a contingency period expires without removal of the contingency, the buyer retains the right to make requests of the seller, remove the contingency, or cancel the agreement up until the time the seller cancels in writing (after first giving the required notice). When the buyer has removed all contingencies (irrespective of timeliness), the seller no longer has the right to cancel the agreement. See ¶14.C(2).

§6.23 g. Allocations, Prorations, and Cost Estimates

The purchase agreement should provide for the allocation of one-time (nonrecurring) transaction costs between the buyer and seller. Recurring costs associated with the property should also be prorated as of the date escrow closes.

Transaction costs include escrow charges, title insurance (covering buyer and lender), transfer taxes (county and city, if any), inspections and reports (including a pest inspection and the natural hazard disclosure report), and the cost to comply with any local governmental requirements. See the Residential Purchase Agreement and Joint Escrow Instructions, ¶4, in §6.24 regarding allocation of costs. All such costs are negotiable between the buyer and seller, but there are customary allocations that vary by county or region, which will be known by local real estate licensees and escrow agents.

EXAMPLE: In Alameda County, it is customary for the buyer to pay escrow and title insurance fees; for the seller to pay the county transfer tax; and for the buyer and seller to split any city transfer tax equally.

Prorated costs include real property taxes, homeowners' association dues, and rents. These costs are prorated by the escrow holder as of the close of escrow, generally based on a 30-day month. See the Residential Purchase Agreement and Joint Escrow Instructions, ¶18, regarding prorations. The escrow holder will prorate mortgage interest and pay off the seller's loan as of the close of escrow and charge the buyer for interest on its new purchase money loan as of the date the loan is funded.

NOTE: These and other transaction costs should be estimated and disclosed to the buyer by his or her real estate agent in conjunction with preparing the buyer's offer.

The Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act of 1974 (RESPA) (12 USC §§2601-2617) requires disclosure of closing (settlement) costs at various stages of a transaction involving a "federally related mortgage loan." 12 USC §§2602(1), 2603. In 2008, the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) promulgated new RESPA rules designed to require more timely and effective disclosure of settlement costs in order to make the mortgage financing process clearer and less costly to consumers. See 73 Fed Reg 68204 (2008). Effective January 1, 2010, a lender or mortgage broker will be required to deliver or mail to the borrower, within 3 days of receiving a loan application or information sufficient to complete an application, a good faith estimate (GFE) of the closing costs the borrower is likely to pay and related information about loan terms and fees. The GFE must be made on a new standardized form created by HUD to be known as Form HUD-GFE. See 24 CFR §§3500.1(b)(2), 3500.7; for copy of form see App X. In addition, before close of escrow, the settlement agent (usually an escrow agent) must provide both the buyer and seller with an estimate of closing costs and, at closing, a final Settlement Statement, prepared on the HUD-1 form (for form see App Y), which fully accounts for the buyer's and seller's sides of the transaction. See 24 CFR §§3500.8. On these new forms, see §15.95.

CALIFORNIA ASSOCIATION OF REALTORS®

BUYER'S INSPECTION ADVISORY

(C.A.R. Form BIA, Revised 10/02)

Property Address: _____ ("Property").

A. IMPORTANCE OF PROPERTY INVESTIGATION: The physical condition of the land and improvements being purchased is not guaranteed by either Seller or Brokers. For this reason, you should conduct thorough investigations of the Property personally and with professionals who should provide written reports of their investigations. A general physical inspection typically does not cover all aspects of the Property nor items affecting the Property that are not physically located on the Property. If the professionals recommend further investigations, including a recommendation by a pest control operator to inspect inaccessible areas of the Property, you should contact qualified experts to conduct such additional investigations.

B. BUYER RIGHTS AND DUTIES: You have an affirmative duty to exercise reasonable care to protect yourself, including discovery of the legal, practical and technical implications of disclosed facts, and the investigation and verification of information and facts that you know or that are within your diligent attention and observation. The purchase agreement gives you the right to investigate the Property. If you exercise this right, and you should, you must do so in accordance with the terms of that agreement. This is the best way for you to protect yourself. It is extremely important for you to read all written reports provided by professionals and to discuss the results of inspections with the professional who conducted the inspection. You have the right to request that Seller make repairs, corrections or take other action based upon items discovered in your investigations or disclosed by Seller. If Seller is unwilling or unable to satisfy your requests, or you do not want to purchase the Property in its disclosed and discovered condition, you have the right to cancel the agreement if you act within specific time periods. If you do not cancel the agreement in a timely and proper manner, you may be in breach of contract.

C. SELLER RIGHTS AND DUTIES: Seller is required to disclose to you material facts known to him/her that affect the value or desirability of the Property. However, Seller may not be aware of some Property defects or conditions. Seller does not have an obligation to inspect the Property for your benefit nor is Seller obligated to repair, correct or otherwise cure known defects that are disclosed to you or previously unknown defects that are discovered by you or your inspectors during escrow. The purchase agreement obligates Seller to make the Property available to you for investigations.

D. BROKER OBLIGATIONS: Brokers do not have expertise in all areas and therefore cannot advise you on many items, such as soil stability, geologic or environmental conditions, hazardous or illegal controlled substances, structural conditions of the foundation or other improvements, or the condition of the roof, plumbing, heating, air conditioning, electrical, sewer, septic, waste disposal, or other system. The only way to accurately determine the condition of the Property is through an inspection by an appropriate professional selected by you. If Broker gives you referrals to such professionals, Broker does not guarantee their performance. You may select any professional of your choosing. In sales involving residential dwellings with no more than four units, Brokers have a duty to make a diligent visual inspection of the accessible areas of the Property and to disclose the results of that inspection. However, as some Property defects or conditions may not be discoverable from a visual inspection, it is possible Brokers are not aware of them. If you have entered into a written agreement with a Broker, the specific terms of that agreement will determine the nature and extent of that Broker's duty to you. YOU ARE STRONGLY ADVISED TO INVESTIGATE THE CONDITION AND SUITABILITY OF ALL ASPECTS OF THE PROPERTY. IF YOU DO NOT DO SO, YOU ARE ACTING AGAINST THE ADVICE OF BROKERS.

E. YOU ARE ADVISED TO CONDUCT INVESTIGATIONS OF THE ENTIRE PROPERTY, INCLUDING, BUT NOT LIMITED TO THE FOLLOWING:

1. GENERAL CONDITION OF THE PROPERTY, ITS SYSTEMS AND COMPONENTS: Foundation, roof, plumbing, heating, air conditioning, electrical, mechanical, security, pool/spa, other structural and non-structural systems and components, fixtures, built-in appliances, any personal property included in the sale, and energy efficiency of the Property. (Structural engineers are best suited to determine possible design or construction defects, and whether improvements are structurally sound.)
2. SQUARE FOOTAGE, AGE, BOUNDARIES: Square footage, room dimensions, lot size, age of improvements and boundaries. Any numerical statements regarding these items are APPROXIMATIONS ONLY and have not been verified by Seller and cannot be verified by Brokers. Fences, hedges, walls, retaining walls and other natural or constructed barriers or markers do not necessarily identify true Property boundaries. (Professionals such as appraisers, architects, surveyors and civil engineers are best suited to determine square footage, dimensions and boundaries of the Property.)
3. WOOD DESTROYING PESTS: Presence of, or conditions likely to lead to the presence of wood destroying pests and organisms and other infestation or infection. Inspection reports covering these items can be separated into two sections: Section 1 identifies areas where infestation or infection is evident. Section 2 identifies areas where there are conditions likely to lead to infestation or infection. A registered structural pest control company is best suited to perform these inspections.

4. SOIL STABILITY: Existence of fill or compacted soil, expansive or contracting soil, susceptibility to slippage, settling or movement, and the adequacy of drainage. (Geotechnical engineers are best suited to determine such conditions, causes and remedies.)
5. ROOF: Present condition, age, leaks, and remaining useful life. (Roofing contractors are best suited to determine these conditions.)
6. POOL/SPA: Cracks, leaks or operational problems. (Pool contractors are best suited to determine these conditions.)
7. WASTE DISPOSAL: Type, size, adequacy, capacity and condition of sewer and septic systems and components, connection to sewer, and applicable fees.
8. WATER AND UTILITIES; WELL SYSTEMS AND COMPONENTS: Water and utility availability, use restrictions and costs. Water quality, adequacy, condition, and performance of well systems and components.

(For more in formation on these items, you may consult an appropriate professional or read the booklets "Environmental Hazards: A Guide for Homeowners ,Buyers, Landlords and Tenants," "Protect Your Family From Lead in Your Home" or both.)
10. EARTHQUAKES AND FLOODING: Susceptibility of the Property to earthquake/seismic hazards and propensity of the Property to flood. (A Geologist or Geotechnical Engineer is best suited to provide information on these conditions.)
11. FIRE, HAZARD AND OTHER INSURANCE: The availability and cost of necessary or desired insurance may vary. The location of the Property in a seismic, flood or fire hazard zone, and other conditions, such as the age of the Property and the claims history of the Property and Buyer, may affect the availability and need for certain types of insurance. Buyer should explore insurance options early as this information may affect other decisions, including the removal of loan and inspection contingencies. (An insurance agent is best suited to provide information on these conditions.)
12. BUILDING PERMITS, ZONING AND GOVERNMENTAL REQUIREMENTS: Permits, inspections, certificates, zoning, other governmental limitations, restrictions, and requirements affecting the current or future use of the Property, its development or size. (Such information is available from appropriate governmental agencies and private information providers. Brokers are not qualified to review or interpret any such information.)
13. RENTAL PROPERTY RESTRICTIONS: Some cities and counties impose restrictions that limit the amount of rent that can be charged, the maximum number of occupants, and the right of a landlord to terminate a tenancy. Deadbolt or other locks and security systems for doors and windows, including window bars, should be examined to determine whether they satisfy legal requirements. (Government agencies can provide information about these restrictions and other requirements.)
14. SECURITY AND SAFETY: State and local Law may require the installation of barriers, access alarms, self-latching mechanisms and/or other measures to decrease the risk to children and other persons of existing swimming pools and hot tubs, as well as various fire safety and other measures concerning other features of the Property. Compliance requirements differ from city to city and county to county. Unless specifically agreed, the Property may not be in compliance with these requirements. (Local government agencies can provide information about these restrictions and other requirements.)
15. NEIGHBORHOOD, AREA, SUBDIVISION CONDITIONS; PERSONAL FACTORS: Neighborhood or area conditions, including schools, proximity and adequacy of law enforcement, crime statistics, the proximity of registered felons or offenders, fire protection, other government services, availability, adequacy and cost of any speed-wired, wireless internet connections or other telecommunications or other technology services and installations, proximity to commercial, industrial or agricultural activities, existing and proposed transportation, construction and development that may affect noise, view, or traffic, airport noise, noise or odor from any source, wild and domestic animals, other nuisances, hazards, or circumstances, protected species, wetland properties, botanical diseases, historic or other governmentally protected sites or improvements, cemeteries, facilities and condition of common areas of common interest subdivisions, and possible lack of compliance with any governing documents or Homeowners' Association requirements, conditions and influences of significance to certain cultures and/or religions, and personal needs, requirements and preferences of Buyer.

Buyer and Seller acknowledge and agree that Broker: (i) Does not decide what price Buyer should pay or Seller should accept; (ii) Does not guarantee the condition of the Property; (iii) Does not guarantee the performance, adequacy or completeness of inspections, services, products or repairs provided or made by Seller or others; (iv) Shall not be responsible for identifying defects that are not known to Broker and (a) are not visually observable in reasonably accessible areas of the Property; (b) are in common areas; or (c) are off the site of the Property; (v) Shall not be responsible for inspecting public records or permits concerning the title or use of Property; (vi) Shall not be responsible for identifying the location of boundary lines or other items affecting title; (vii) Shall not be responsible for verifying square footage, representations of others or information contained in Investigation reports, Multiple Listing Service, advertisements, flyers or other promotional material; (viii) Shall not be responsible for providing legal or tax advice regarding any aspect of a transaction entered into by Buyer or Seller; and (ix) Shall not be responsible for providing other advice or information that exceeds the knowledge, education and experience required to perform real estate licensed activity. - This form is not a substitute for completing a Real Estate Transfer Disclosure Statement, if required, and any other property-specific questionnaire or disclosure.
- The terms of the Purchase Agreement and any Counter Offers and Addenda establish your rights and responsibilities.

BROKER RIGHTS AND DUTIES:

- Any written agreement between Broker and Buyer or Seller establishes the rights and responsibilities of those parties.

1. INSPECTIONS: Buyer and Seller are advised that Buyer has the right to obtain various inspections of the Property under most residential purchase agreements. Buyer is advised to have the Property inspected by a professional property inspection service within Buyer's inspection contingency period. A licensed building contractor or other professional may perform these services. The inspector generally does not look behind walls or under carpets, or take equipment apart. Certain items on the Property, such as chimneys and spark arresters, plumbing, heating, air conditioning, electrical wiring, pool and spa, septic system, well, roof, foundation and structural items may need to be inspected by another professional, such as a chimney sweep, plumber, electrician, pool and spa service, septic or well company or roofer. A general physical inspection typically will not test for mold, wood destroying pests, lead-based paint, radon, asbestos and other environmental hazards, geologic conditions, age, remaining useful life or water-tightness of roof, cracks, leaks or operational problems associated with a pool or spa or connection of the Property to a sewer system. If Buyer wants further information on any aspect of the Property, Broker recommends that Buyer have a discussion with the professional property inspector and that Buyer hire an appropriate professional for the area of concern to Buyer. Brokers do not have expertise in these areas. Brokers do not verify the results of any such inspection or guarantee the performance of any such inspector or service. Any election by Buyer to waive the right to a physical inspection of the Property or to rely on somebody other than an appropriate professional is against the advice of Brokers. Not all inspectors are licensed and licenses are not available for all types of inspection activities.

2. SQUARE FOOTAGE, LOT SIZE AND BOUNDARIES: Buyer and Seller are advised that only an appraiser or land surveyor, as applicable, can reliably confirm square footage, lot size, Property corners and exact boundaries of the Property. Representations regarding these items that are made in a Multiple Listing Service, advertisements, and from property tax assessor records are often approximations, or based upon inaccurate or incomplete records. Fences, hedges, walls or other barriers may not represent actual boundary lines. Brokers have not verified any such representations. Brokers do not have expertise in this area. If Buyer wants information about the exact square footage, lot size or location of Property corners or boundaries, Broker recommends that Buyer hire an appraiser or licensed surveyor to investigate these matters during Buyer's inspection contingency period.

3. SOIL AND GEOLOGIC CONDITIONS: Buyer and Seller are advised that real estate in California is subject to settling, slippage, contraction, expansion, subsidence, earthquakes and other land movement. The Property may be constructed on fill or improperly compacted soil and may have inadequate drainage capability. Any of these matters can cause structural problems to improvements on the Property. Civil or geo-technical engineers are best suited to evaluate soil stability, grading, drainage and other soil conditions. Additionally, the Property may have known or unknown mines, mills, caves or wells. Brokers do not have expertise in this area. If Buyer wants further information, Broker recommends that Buyer hire an appropriate professional. Not all inspectors are licensed and licenses are not available for all types of inspections.

4. GEOLOGIC HAZARDS: Buyer and Seller are advised that California has experienced earthquakes in the past, and there is always a potential of future earthquakes. Damage caused by an earthquake may not be discoverable by Buyer's or Broker's visual inspection. Inspection by a licensed, qualified professional is strongly recommended to determine the structural integrity and safety of all structures and improvements on the Property. If the Property is a condominium, or located in a planned unit development or in a common interest subdivision, Buyer is advised to contact the homeowners association about earthquake repairs and retrofit work and the possibility of an increased or special assessment to defray the costs of earthquake repairs or retrofit work. Buyer is encouraged to obtain and read the booklet entitled "The Homeowners Guide to Earthquake Safety." In most cases a questionnaire within the booklet must be completed by Seller and the entire booklet given to the Buyer if the Property was built prior to 1960. If the Property was built before 1975, and contains structures constructed of masonry or precast (tilt up) concrete walls, with wood frame floors or roof, or if the building has unreinforced masonry walls, then Seller must provide Buyer a pamphlet entitled "The Commercial Property Owner's Guide to Earthquake Safety." Many areas have a wide range of geologic problems and numerous studies have been made of these conditions. Some of this information is available for public review at city and county planning departments. Buyer is encouraged to review the public maps and reports and/or obtain a geologist's inspection report. Brokers do not have expertise in this area. Buyer may be able to obtain earthquake insurance to protect their interest in the Property. Sellers who agree to provide financing should also consider requiring Buyers to obtain such insurance.

5. ENVIRONMENTAL HAZARDS: Buyer and Seller are advised that the presence of certain kinds of organisms, toxins and contaminants, including, but not limited to, mold (airborne, toxic or otherwise), fungi, mildew, lead-based paint and other lead contamination, asbestos, formaldehyde, radon, methane, other gases, fuel oil or chemical storage tanks, contaminated soil or water, hazardous waste, waste disposal sites, electromagnetic fields, nuclear sources, urea formaldehyde, or other materials may adversely affect the Property and the health of individuals who live on or work at the property as well as pets. If Buyer wants further information, Buyer is advised and Broker recommends that Buyer have the Property inspected for the existence of such conditions and organisms, and conditions that may lead to their formation. Not all inspectors are licensed and licenses are not available for all types of inspection activities. Buyer is also advised to consult with appropriate experts regarding this topic during Buyer's inspection contingency period. Brokers do not have expertise in this area. Broker recommends that Buyer and Seller read the booklets titled, "Residential Environmental Hazards: A Guide for Homeowners, Homebuyers, Landlords and Tenants," and "Protect Your Family From Lead In Your Home."

6. MOLD: Buyer and Seller are advised that the presence of certain kinds of mold, fungi, mildew and other organisms, sometimes referred to as "toxic mold" (collectively "Mold") may adversely affect the Property and the health of individuals who live on or work at the Property as well as pets. Mold does not affect all people the same way, and may not affect some people at all. Mold may be caused by water leaks or other sources of moisture such as, but not limited to, flooding, and leaks in windows, pipes and roof. Seller is advised to disclose the existence of any such conditions of which he or she is aware. Buyer should carefully review all of Seller's disclosures for any indication that any of these conditions exist. It is, however, possible that Mold may be hidden and that Seller is completely unaware of its existence. In addition, Mold is often undetectable from a visual inspection, a professional property inspection and even a structural pest control inspection. Brokers do not have expertise in this area. If Buyer wants further information, Broker recommends that Buyer have the Property tested for Mold by an environmental hygienist or other appropriate professional during Buyer's inspection contingency period. Not all inspectors are licensed and licenses are not available for all types of inspection activities.

7. WATER INTRUSION: Buyer and Seller are advised that many homes suffer from water intrusion or leakage. The causes of water intrusion are varied, and can include defective construction, faulty grading, deterioration of building materials and absence of waterproof barriers. Water intrusion can cause serious damage to the Property. This damage can consist of wood rot, mold, mildew and even damage to the structural integrity of the Property. The cost of repairing and remediating water intrusion damage and its causes can be very significant. The existence and cause of water intrusion is often difficult to detect. Because you, your Broker or a general home inspector cannot visually observe any effects of water intrusion, Buyer and Seller should not assume that such intrusion does not exist. Broker recommends that Buyer have the Property inspected for water intrusion by an appropriate professional. Brokers do not have expertise in this area.

8. SEPTIC SYSTEM(S): Buyer and Seller are advised that a property may be served by one or more septic systems even though adjoining properties are connected to a sewer line. Buyer and Seller are also advised that some septic tanks and systems may have been abandoned or have leaked into ground water sources. Buyer is advised to contact the appropriate government agency to verify that the Property is connected to a sewer or served by a septic system. If the Property is served by a septic system it may consist of a septic tank, cesspool, pits, leach lines or a combination of such mechanisms ("collectively, System"). No representation or warranty is made by Seller or Broker concerning the condition, operability, size, capacity or future expansion of a System, nor whether a System is adequate for use by the intended occupants of the Property. A change in the number of occupants or the quantity, composition or methods of depositing waste may affect the efficiency of the System. In addition, the amount of rainfall and ground water table may also affect the efficiency of the System. Many factors including, but not limited to, natural forces, age, deterioration of materials and the load imposed on a System can cause the System to fail at any time. Broker recommends that Buyer obtain an independent evaluation of any System by a qualified sanitation professional during Buyer's inspection contingency period. Brokers do not have expertise in this area. Buyer should consult with their sanitation professional to determine if their report includes the tank only, or other additional components of the System such as pits and leach fields. Not all inspectors are licensed and licenses are not available for all types of inspection activities. In some cases, Buyer's lender as well as local government agencies may require System inspection. System-related maintenance costs may include, but not be limited to, locating, pumping or providing outlets to ground level. Brokers are unable to advise Buyer or Seller regarding System-related issues or associated costs, which may be significant. If Buyer and Seller agree to obtain a System inspection, Buyer and Seller are cautioned that the inspection cost may include, but not be limited to, the costs of locating, pumping or providing outlets to ground level.

9. WELL AND WATER SYSTEM(S): Buyer and Seller are advised that the Property may be served by one or more water wells, springs, or private community or public water systems. Any of these private or public water systems may contain bacteria, chemicals, minerals and metals, such as chromium. Well(s) may have been abandoned on the Property. Buyer is advised to have both the quality and the quantity of water evaluated, and to obtain an analysis of the quality of any domestic and agricultural water in use, or to be used at the Property, from whatever source. Water quality tests can include not only tests for bacteria, such as coliform, but also tests for organic and inorganic chemicals, metals, mineral content and gross alpha testing for radioactivity. Broker recommends that Buyer consult with a licensed, qualified well and pump company and local government agency to determine whether any well/spring or water system will adequately serve Buyer's intended use and that Buyer have a well consultant perform an extended well output test for this purpose. Water well or spring capacity, quantity output and quality may change at any time. There are no guarantees as to the future water quality, quantity or duration of any well or spring. If Buyer wants further information, Broker recommends that Buyer obtain an inspection of the condition, age, adequacy and performance of all components of the well/spring and any water system during Buyer's inspection contingency period. Brokers do not have expertise in this area.

10. WOOD DESTROYING PESTS: Buyer and Seller are advised that the presence of, or conditions likely to lead to the presence of, or other infestation or infection of wood destroying pests and organisms may adversely affect the Property. Inspection reports covering these items can be separated into two sections: Section 1 identifies areas where infestation or infection is evident. Section 2 identifies areas where there are conditions likely to lead to infestation or infection. Brokers do not have expertise in this area. If Buyer wants further information, Buyer is advised and Broker recommends that Buyer have the Property inspected for the existence of such conditions and organisms, and conditions that may lead to their formation by a registered structural pest control company during Buyer's inspection contingency period.

11. EASEMENTS, ACCESS AND ENCROACHMENTS: Buyer and Seller are advised that confirming the exact location of easements, shared or private driveways or roadways, and encroachments on or to the Property may be possible only by conducting a survey. There may be unrecorded easements, access rights, encroachments and other agreements affecting the Property that may not be disclosed by a survey. Representations regarding these items that are made in a Multiple Listing Service, advertisements, or plotted by a title company are often approximations, or based upon inaccurate or incomplete records. Brokers have not verified any such representations. If Buyer wants further information Buyer is advised and Broker recommends that Buyer hire a licensed surveyor during Buyer's inspection contingency period. Brokers do not have expertise in this area.

12. EARTHQUAKE FAULT ZONES AND SEISMIC HAZARD ZONES: Buyer and Seller are advised that California Public Resources Code Sections 2622 and 2696 require the delineation and mapping of "Earthquake Fault Zones" along known active faults and "Seismic Hazard Zones" in California. Affected cities and counties must regulate certain development projects within these zones. Construction or development on affected properties may be subject to the findings of a geological report prepared by a registered California geologist. Generally, Seller must disclose if the Property is in such a zone and can use a research company to aid in the process. If Buyer wants further information, Broker recommends that, during Buyer's inspection contingency period, Buyer make independent inquiries with such research companies or with appropriate government agencies concerning the use and improvement of the Property. Brokers do not have expertise in this area. Buyer is advised that there is a potential for earthquakes and seismic hazards even outside designated zones.

13. FIRE HAZARDS: Buyer and Seller are advised that fires annually cause the destruction of thousands of homes. Due to varied climate and topography, certain areas have higher risks of fires than others. Certain types of materials used in home construction create a greater risk of fire than others. If the Property is located within a State Fire Responsibility Area or a Very High Fire Hazard Zone, generally Seller must disclose that fact to Buyer under California Public Resources Code Section 4136 and California Government Code Sections 51178 and 51183.5, and may use a research company to aid in the process. If Buyer wants further information Broker recommends that, during Buyer's inspection contingency period, Buyer contact the local fire department and Buyer's insurance agent regarding the risk of fire. Brokers do not have expertise in this area. Buyer is advised that there is a potential for fires even outside designated zones.

14. FLOOD HAZARDS: Buyer and Seller are advised that if the Property is located within a Special Flood Hazard Area, as designated by the Federal Emergency Management Agency, or an area of Potential Flooding pursuant to California Government Code Section 8589.3, generally Seller must disclose this fact to Buyer and may use a research company to aid in the process. The National Flood Insurance Program was established to identify all flood plain areas and establish flood-risk zones within those areas. The program mandates flood insurance for properties within high-risk zones if loans are obtained from a federally-regulated financial institution or are insured by any agency of the United States Government. The extent of coverage and costs may vary. If Buyer wants further information, Broker recommends that Buyer consult his or her lender and/or insurance agent during Buyer's inspection contingency period. Brokers do not have expertise in this area. Buyer is advised that there is a potential for flooding even outside designated zones.

15. BUILDING PERMITS, ZONING AND CODE COMPLIANCE: Buyer and Seller are advised that any structure on the Property, including the original structure and any addition, modification, remodel or improvement may have been built without permits, not according to building codes, or in violation of zoning laws. Further, even if such structure was built according to the then-existing code or zoning requirement, it may not be in compliance with current building standards or local zoning. It is also possible that local law may not permit structures that now exist to be rebuilt in the event of damage or destruction. Buyer is advised to check with appropriate government agencies or third party professionals to verify permits and legal requirements and the effect of such requirements on current and future use of the Property, its development and size. If Buyer wants further information Broker recommends that Buyer discuss the issue with an appropriate professional during Buyer's inspection contingency period. Brokers do not have expertise in this area.

16. VIEWS: Buyer and Seller are advised that present views from the Property may be affected by future development or growth of trees and vegetation on adjacent properties and any other property within the line of sight of the Property. Broker makes no representation regarding the preservation of existing views. If Buyer wants further information, Broker recommends that Buyer review Covenants, Conditions and Restrictions, if any, and contact neighboring property owners, government agencies and homeowner associations, if any, during Buyer's inspection contingency period. Brokers do not have expertise in this area.

17. FUTURE REPAIRS, REPLACEMENTS AND REMODELS: Buyer and Seller are advised that replacement or repairs of certain systems or remodels of portions of the Property may trigger requirements that homeowners comply with laws and regulations that either come into effect after Close of Escrow or are not required to be complied with until the replacement, repair or remodel has occurred. Permit or code requirements or building standards may change after Close of Escrow, resulting in increasing costs to repair existing features. In particular, changes to state and federal energy efficiency regulations impact the installation, replacement and some repairs of heating and air conditioning units (HVAC). Federal regulations now require manufacturers of HVAC units to produce only units meeting a new higher Seasonal Energy Efficiency Rating (SEER). This will likely impact repairs and replacements of existing HVAC units. State regulations now require that when installing or replacing HVAC units, with some exceptions, duct work must be tested for leaks. Duct work leaking more than 15 percent must be repaired to reduce leaks. The average existing duct work typically leaks 30 percent. More information is available at the California Energy Commission's website http://www.energy.ca.gov/title24/changeout. Home warranty policies may not cover such inspections or repairs. If Buyer wants further information Broker recommends that Buyer discuss the issue with an appropriate professional during Buyer's inspection contingency period. Brokers do not have expertise in this area.

18. ERRANT GOLF BALLS: Buyer and Seller are advised that if the Property is located adjacent to or near a golf course there is a possibility that golf balls may damage the Property or injure persons or pets on it. Additionally, persons playing golf may enter the Property to retrieve errant golf balls or for other purposes. Broker recommends that Buyer investigate this possibility during Buyer's Inspection contingency period. Brokers do not have expertise in this area.

19. SCHOOLS: Buyer and Seller are advised that children living in the Property may not, for numerous reasons, be permitted to attend the school nearest the Property. Various factors including, but not limited to, open enrollment policies, busing, overcrowding and class size reductions may affect which public school serves the Property. School district boundaries are subject to change. Buyer is advised to verify whether the Property is now, and at the Close of Escrow will be, in the school district Buyer understands it to be in and whether residing in the Property entitles a person to attend any specific school that Buyer is interested in. Broker recommends that Buyer contact the local school or school district for additional information during Buyer's inspection contingency period. Brokers do not have expertise in this area.

20. NEIGHBORHOOD NOISE SOURCES: Buyer and Seller are advised that even if the Property is not in an identified airport noise influence area the Property may still be subject to airplanes and other aircraft, commercial or military or both, flying overhead. Other common sources of noise include traffic on streets and highways, trains and general neighborhood noise from people, dogs and other animals. Noise levels and types of noise that bother one person may be acceptable to others. Buyer is advised to satisfy him/herself with regard to any sources of and amounts of noise at different times of day and night. Brokers do not have expertise in this area.

21. PETS AND ANIMALS: Buyer and Seller are advised that the current or previous owner(s) may have had domesticated or other pets and animals at the Property. Odors from animal urine contamination may be dormant for long periods of time and then become active because of heat, humidity or other factors and may not be eliminated by cleaning or replacing carpets or other cleaning. Pet urine and feces can also damage hardwood floors and other floor coverings. Additionally, an animal may have had fleas, ticks and other pests that remain on the Property after the animal has been removed. If Buyer wants further information, Broker recommends that Buyer discuss the issue with an appropriate professional during Buyer's inspection contingency period. Brokers do not have expertise in this area.

22. SECURITY AND SAFETY: Buyer and Seller are advised that state and local Law may require the installation of barriers, access alarms, self-latching mechanisms and/or other measures to decrease the risk to children and other persons of existing swimming pools and hot tubs, as well as various fire safety and other measures concerning other features of the Property. Compliance requirements differ from city to city and county to county. Unless specifically agreed, the Property may not be in compliance with these requirements. Brokers do not have expertise in this area. If Buyer wants further information, Broker recommends that Buyer contact local government agencies about these restrictions and other requirements.

23. RETROFIT: Buyer and Seller are advised that state and local Law may require the installation of operable smoke detectors, bracing or strapping of water heaters, and completion of a corresponding written statement of compliance that is delivered to Buyer. Some city and county governments may impose additional retrofit standards, including, but not limited to, installing low-flow toilets and showerheads, gas shut-off valves, and tempered glass. Brokers do not have expertise in this area. Broker recommends that Buyer and Seller consult with the appropriate government agencies, inspectors, and other professionals to determine the retrofit standards for the Property, the extent to which the Property complies with such standards, and the costs, if any, of compliance.

24. WATER SHORTAGES AND CONSERVATION: Buyer and Seller are advised that the Property may be located in an area that could experience water shortages. The policies of local water districts and the city or county in which the Property is located can result in the occurrence of any or all of the following: (i) limitations on the amount of water available to the Property, (ii) restrictions on the use of water, and (iii) an increasingly graduated cost per unit of water use, including, but not limited to, penalties for excess usage. For further information, Broker recommends that Buyer contact the supplier of water to the Property regarding the supplier's current or anticipated policies on water usage and to determine the extent to which those policies may affect Buyer's intended use of the Property. If the Property is serviced by a private well, Buyer is advised that drought conditions and/or a low water table may make it necessary to arrange, through a private supplier, for delivery of water to the Property. Buyers should contact water truck companies for the costs involved. Brokers do not have expertise in this area.

25. NEIGHBORHOOD, AREA; PERSONAL FACTORS: Buyer and Seller are advised that the following may affect the Property or Buyer's intended use of it: neighborhood or area conditions, including schools, proximity and adequacy of law enforcement, crime, fire protection, other government services, availability, adequacy and cost of any speed-wired, wireless internet connections or other telecommunications or other technology services and installations, proximity to manufacturing, commercial, industrial, airport or agricultural activities or military ordnance locations, existing and proposed transportation, construction, and development, any other source that may affect noise, view, traffic, or odor, wild and domestic animals, other nuisances, hazards, or circumstances, protected species, wetland properties, botanical diseases, historic or other governmentally-protected sites or improvements, cemeteries, conditions and influences of significance to certain cultures and/or religions, and personal needs, requirements and preferences of Buyer.

26. INSURANCE: Buyer and Seller are advised that Buyer may have difficulty obtaining insurance regarding the Property if there has been a prior insurance claim affecting the Property or made by Buyer but unrelated to the Property. Seller is required by C.A.R. Form RPA to disclose known insurance claims made during the past five years. Sellers may not be aware of claims prior to their ownership. If Buyer wants further information, Broker recommends that, during Buyer's inspection contingency period, Buyer conduct his or her own investigation for past claims. Buyer may need to obtain Seller's consent in order to have access to certain investigation reports. If the Property is a condominium, or is located in a planned unit development or other common interest subdivision, Buyer and Seller are advised to determine if the individual unit is covered by the Homeowner Association Insurance. Broker recommends that Buyer consult Buyer's insurance agents during Buyer's inspection contingency period to determine the need, availability and possibility of securing any and all forms of other insurance or coverage or any conditions imposed by insurer as a requirement of issuing insurance. If Buyer takes possession prior to Close of Escrow or Seller remains in possession after Close of Escrow, whether for a limited or extended period of time, Broker recommends that Buyer and Seller each consult with their own insurance agent regarding insurance or coverage that could protect them in the transaction (including but not limited to: personal property, flood, earthquake, umbrella and renter's). Brokers do not have expertise in this area.

27. CALIFORNIA FAIR PLAN: Buyer and Seller are advised that insurance for certain hillside, oceanfront and brush properties may be available only from the California Fair Plan. This may increase the cost of insurance for such properties and coverage may be limited. Broker recommends that Buyer consult with Buyer's own insurance agent during Buyer's inspection contingency period regarding the availability of coverage under the California Fair Plan and the length of time it may take for processing of a California Fair Plan application. Brokers do not have expertise in this area.

28. HISTORICAL DESIGNATION, COASTAL COMMISSION, ARCHITECTURAL, LANDSCAPE, AGRICULTURAL OR OPEN SPACE AND OTHER RESTRICTIONS ON BUILDINGS OR IMPROVEMENTS: Buyer and Seller are advised that the Property may be: (i) designated as a historical landmark, (ii) protected by a historical conservancy, (iii) subject to an architectural or landscaping review process, (iv) within the jurisdiction of the California Coastal Commission or other government agency, or (v) subject to a contract preserving use of all or part of the Property for agriculture or open space. If the Property is so designated or within the jurisdiction of any such, or similar, government agency then there may be restrictions on Buyer's ability to develop, remove or trim trees or other landscaping, remodel, make improvements to and build on or rebuild the Property. Broker recommends that Buyer satisfy him/herself during Buyer's inspection contingency period if any of these issues are of concern to Buyer. Brokers do not have expertise in this area.

29. 1915 BOND AND MELLO-ROOS COMMUNITY AND OTHER FACILITIES DISTRICTS: Buyer and Seller are advised that the Property may be subject to an improvement bond assessment under the Improvement Bond Act of 1915 and/or a levy of a special tax pursuant to a Mello-Roos community facilities or other district. Seller is generally required to make a good faith effort to obtain a disclosure notice from any local agency collecting such taxes and deliver such notice to Buyers. Brokers do not have expertise in this area.

30. HOMEOWNER ASSOCIATIONS AND COVENANTS, CONDITIONS AND RESTRICTIONS (CC&Rs): Buyer and Seller are advised that if the Property is a condominium, or located in a planned unit development, or in a common interest subdivision there are typically restrictions on use of the Property and rules that must be followed. Restrictions and rules are commonly found in Declarations of Covenants, Conditions and Restrictions (CC&Rs) and other governing documents. Further there is likely to be a homeowner association (HOA) that has the authority to affect the Property and its use. Whether or not there is a HOA, the Property may still be subject to CC&Rs restricting use of the Property. The HOA typically has the authority to enforce the rules of the association, assess monetary payments (both regular monthly dues and special assessments) to provide for the upkeep and maintenance of the common areas, and enforce the rules and assessment obligations. If you fail to abide by the rules or pay monies owed to the HOA, the HOA may put a lien against your Property. The law requires the Seller to provide the Buyer with the CC&Rs and other governing documents, as well as a copy of the HOA's current financial statement and operating budget, among other documents. Buyer is advised to carefully review all HOA documents provided by Seller and the CC&Rs, if any, and satisfy him/herself regarding the use and restrictions of the Property, the amount of monthly dues and/or assessments, the adequacy of reserves, current and past insurance coverage and claims and the possibility of any legal action that may be taken by or against the HOA. The HOA may not have insurance or may not cover personal property belonging to the owner of the unit in the condominium, common interest or planned unit development. See paragraph 26 for further information regarding insurance. Brokers do not have expertise in this area.

31. COMMUNITY ENHANCEMENT AND PRIVATE TRANSFER FEES: Buyer and Seller are advised that some areas or communities may have enhancement fees or user-type fees, or private transfer fees, over and above any stated association fees. Private transfer fees: (A) may last for a fixed period of time or in perpetuity, (B) are typically calculated as a percentage of home's sales price, and (C) may have private parties, charitable organizations or interest-based groups as their recipients. Brokers do not have expertise in this area.

32. GENERAL RECALL/DEFECTIVE PRODUCT/CLASS ACTION INFORMATION: Buyer and Seller are advised that government entities and manufacturers may at any time issue recall notices and/or warnings about products that may be present in the Property, and that these notices or warnings can change. There is no single, all-inclusive source of information on product recalls, defective products or class actions; however, the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission (CPSC) maintains a website that contains useful information. If Buyer wants further information regarding the items listed below, Broker recommends that Buyer consult the CPSC website at http://www.cpsc.gov during Buyer's inspection contingency period. The following are examples of recall/defective products/class action information. The information is not exclusive. If Buyer wants further information, Broker recommends that Buyer contact the sources below. Brokers do not have expertise in this area and will not determine if any aspect of the Property is subject to a recall or is affected by a class action lawsuit. (NOTE: While the information below is believed to be current as of the revision date of this form, phone numbers and web addresses may change or be discontinued.)

A. FURNACES: Buyer is advised that the CPSC has issued a warning regarding certain gas-fired horizontal forced-air furnaces that present a substantial risk of fire. The furnaces in question were manufactured from 1983 to 1994 by Consolidated Industries and were marketed under many different brand names. Homes built before 1983 or after 1994 could still have the furnaces in question due to replacements or remodeling. If Buyer wants further information, Broker recommends that Buyer contact CPSC's hotline at (800) 638-2772.

B. WHIRLPOOL MICROWAVE-HOOD COMBINATION: Buyer is advised that Whirlpool Corporation has voluntarily recalled approximately 1.8 million microwave-hood combinations that have been known to overheat and catch fire. The units at issue are installed above ranges and are sold under the Whirlpool, KitchenAid and Kenmore brand names. If Buyer wants further information, Broker recommends that Buyer contact Whirlpool by phone at (800) 785-8897 or at its website, http://www.repair.whirlpool.com.

C. ROOF TILES: Buyer is advised that there is a class action lawsuit concerning certain fire free tiles and quantum panels manufactured and installed by RE-Con Building Products, Inc. from December 1993 to November 1997. If Buyer wants further information, Broker recommends that Buyer call (800) 966-3696 or view the website at http://www.firefreeclaims.com.

D. FIRE SPRINKLER: Buyer is advised that Central Sprinkler Company is recalling 35 million fire sprinkler heads that may be defective. If Buyer wants further information, Broker recommends that Buyer consult the CPSC website at http://www.cpsc.gov or Central Sprinkler Company at (866) 505-8553 or http://www.sprinklerreplacement.com.

E. WATER HEATER: Buyer is advised that certain water heaters manufactured by a variety of companies between 1993 and 1997 may be defective. If Buyer wants further information, Broker recommends that Buyer discuss the issue with an appropriate professional who can determine if the water heater on the Property is defective.

F. ALUMINUM WIRING: Buyer is advised that some properties in California are wired in whole or in part with aluminum wiring which was approved at the time of construction but subsequently determined to be a potential hazard. If Buyer wants further information, Broker recommends that Buyer discuss the issue with an appropriate professional who can determine if the wiring on the Property is defective.

G. GALVANIZED, ABS, POLYBUTELENE AND COPPER PIPE: Buyer is advised that galvanized steel water pipes may corrode and leak after several years and that ABS plastic drain waste and vent pipe may be subject to failure. Buyer is also advised that the adhesive used in the installation of polybutelene pipe has been subject to failure. Additionally, copper pipe installed in slabs may develop leaks as result of reaction to certain soils. If Buyer wants further information, Broker recommends that Buyer discuss the issue with an appropriate professional who can determine if the water pipes and drains on the Property are defective.

H. WATER HEATER GAS CONTROL VALVES: Buyer is advised that the CPSC in cooperation with Robertshaw Controls Company has announced a voluntary recall of approximately 178,000 gas control valves installed on water heaters manufactured between July 2005 and August 2005 with production date codes 5-31 through and including 5-33 under brand names American Proline, Bradford White, GE, GSE, Hotpoint, Jetglas, John Wood, Lochinvar, Premire Plus, Powerflex, Rheem, Richmond, Ruud, Vanguard, Whirlpool and U.S. Craftsman. The CPSC reports that the screws on the valves could break allowing gas to escape from the valves. If Buyer wants further information, Broker recommends that Buyer consult the CPSC website at http://www.cpsc.gov or contact Robertshaw Controls at (888) 225-1071 or http://www.robertshaw.com.

I. ARC-FAULT CIRCUIT BREAKER: Buyer is advised that the CPSC in cooperation with Schneider Electric has announced a voluntary recall of approximately 700,000 Square D Q® and Homeline® AFCI circuit breakers manufactured by Schneider Electric North American Operating Division. The recalled arc-fault interrupter circuit breakers are designed for use in 15 and 20-amp branch circuits; have a blue test button and were manufactured between March 2004 and September 2004. Tests show that these circuit breakers may not provide the arc-fault protection required by the 2001 California Electrical Code, Section 210-21. If Buyer wants further information, Broker recommends that Buyer consult the CPSC website at http://www.cpsc.gov or contact Schneider Electric at (877) 202-9064 or http://www.us.squared.com/recallafci.

33. RENTAL PROPERTY RESTRICTIONS: Buyer and Seller are advised that some cities and counties impose restrictions that limit the rent that can be charged to a tenant, the maximum number of tenants who can occupy the property and the right of a landlord to terminate a tenancy and the costs to do so. If Buyer wants further information, Broker recommends that Buyer investigate the issue with an appropriate government authority during Buyer's inspection contingency period. Brokers do not have expertise in this area.

34. LAND LEASE: Buyer and Seller are advised that certain developments are built on leased land. This means that: (i) Buyer does not own the land, (ii) the right to occupy the land will terminate at some time, (iii) the cost to lease the land may increase at some point in the future, and (iv) Buyer may not be able to obtain title insurance. If Buyer wants further information, Broker recommends that Buyer discuss the issue with an attorney or other appropriate professional. Brokers do not have expertise in this area.

35. HOME WARRANTY: Buyer and Seller are advised that Buyer and Seller can purchase home warranty plans covering certain standard systems of the Property both before and after Close of Escrow. Seller can obtain coverage for the Property during the listing period. For an additional premium, an upgraded policy providing additional coverage for air conditioning, pool and spa and other features can be purchased. Home warranties do not cover every aspect of the Property and may not cover inspections or upgrades for repairs required by state or federal laws. Broker recommends that Buyer review the policy for details. Brokers do not have expertise in this area.

36. INTERNET ADVERTISING: Buyer and Seller are advised that Broker may employ a service to provide a "virtual tour" or Internet marketing of the Property, permitting potential buyers to view the Property over the Internet. Neither the service provider nor Broker has control over who will obtain access to the service or what action such persons might take. Buyer and Seller are advised that Brokers have no control over how long the information concerning the Property will be available on the Internet. Brokers do not have expertise in this area.

37. ESCROW FUNDS: Buyer and Seller are advised that California Insurance Code Section 12413.1 provides that escrow companies cannot disburse funds unless there are sufficient "good funds" to cover the disbursement. "Good funds" are defined as cash, wire transfers and cashiers' or certified checks drawn on California depositories. Escrow companies vary in their definitions of "good funds." Broker recommends that Buyer and Seller ask the escrow company regarding its treatment of "good funds." All drafts and out-of-state checks are subject to waiting periods and do not constitute "good funds" until the money is physically transferred to the escrow holder's account. Brokers do not have expertise in this area.

38. NOTICE OF YOUR "SUPPLEMENTAL" PROPERTY TAX BILL: Buyer and Seller are advised that pursuant to Civil Code § 1102.6(c), Seller or his or her agent is required to provide the following "Notice of Your 'Supplemental' Property Tax Bill" to the Buyer:

"California property tax law requires the Assessor to revalue real property at the time the ownership of property changes. Because of this law, you may receive one or two supplemental tax bills, depending on when your loan closes.

The supplemental tax bills are not mailed to your lender. If you have arranged for your property tax payments to be paid through an impound account, the supplemental tax bills will not be paid by your lender. It is your responsibility to pay these supplemental bills directly to the Tax Collector.
If you have any questions concerning this matter, please call your Tax Collector's Office."

Although the notice refers to loan closing as a trigger, it is actually the change of ownership which triggers this reassessment. Therefore, the Property can be reassessed even if there is no loan involved in the purchase of the Property. The purchase agreement may allocate supplemental tax bills received after the Close of Escrow to the Buyer. If Buyer wants further information concerning these matters, Broker recommends that Buyer discuss the issue with the County Assessor or Tax Collector. Brokers do not have expertise in this area.

39. NON CONFIDENTIALITY OF OFFERS: Buyer is advised that Seller or Listing Agent may disclose the existence, terms, or conditions of Buyer's offer unless all parties and their agent have signed a written confidentiality agreement. Whether any such information is actually disclosed depends on many factors, such as current market conditions, the prevailing practice in the real estate community, the Listing Agent's marketing strategy and the instructions of the Seller.

40. FIRPTA/CALIFORNIA WITHHOLDING: Buyer and Seller are advised that: (i) Internal Revenue Code Section 1445 requires a Buyer to withhold and remit to the Internal Revenue Service 10% of the purchase price if Seller is a non-resident alien, unless an exemption applies. Seller may avoid withholding by providing Buyer a statement of non-foreign status. The statement must be signed by Seller under penalty of perjury and include Seller's tax identification number. Buyer can also avoid the federal withholding requirement if the property price is $300,000 or less, and the Buyer signs an affidavit stating Buyer intends to occupy the property as a principal residence. (ii) California Revenue and Taxation Code Section 18662 requires that a Buyer withhold and remit to the California Franchise Tax Board 3 1/3% of the purchase price unless the Seller signs an affidavit that the property was the Seller's (or the decedent's if a trust or probate sale) principal residence or that the sales price is $100,000 or less or another exemption applies. Exemptions from withholding also apply to legal entities such as corporations, LLCs, and partnerships. Brokers cannot give tax advice. Broker recommends that Buyer and Seller seek advice from a CPA, attorney or taxing authority. Brokers do not have expertise in this area.

41. LIQUIDATED DAMAGES: Buyer and Seller are advised that a liquidated damages clause is a provision Buyer and Seller can use to agree in advance to the amount of damages that a seller will receive if a buyer breaches the agreement. The clause usually provides that a seller will retain a Buyer's initial deposit paid if the Buyer breaches the agreement, and generally must be separately initialed by both parties to be enforceable. For any additional deposits to be covered by the liquidated damages clause, there generally must be another separately signed or initialed agreement. However, if the Property contains from 1 to 4 units, one of which the Buyer intends to occupy, California Civil Code Section 1675 limits the amount of the deposit subject to liquidated damages to 3% of the purchase price. Even though both parties have agreed to a liquidated damages clause, an escrow company will usually require either a judge's or arbitrator's decision or instructions signed by both parties in order to release the Buyer's deposit to the Seller. Buyers and Sellers must decide on their own, or with the advice of legal counsel, whether to agree to a liquidated damages clause. Brokers do not have expertise in this area.

42. MEDIATION: Buyer and Seller are advised that mediation is a process by which the parties hire a neutral person to facilitate discussion and negotiation between the parties with the goal of helping them reach a settlement of their dispute. The parties generally share in the cost of this confidential, non-binding negotiation. If no agreement is reached, either party can pursue further legal action. Under C.A.R. Form RPA-CA; (i) the parties must mediate any dispute arising out of their agreement (with a few limited exceptions, such as matters within the jurisdiction of a small claims court) before they resort to arbitration or court, and (ii) if a party proceeds to arbitration or court without first attempting to mediate the dispute, that party risks losing the right to recover attorney fees even if he or she prevails.

43. ARBITRATION: Buyer and Seller are advised that arbitration is a process by which the disputing parties hire a neutral person to render a decision. Generally, arbitration is faster and less expensive than resolving disputes by litigating in court. The rules are usually less formal than in court, and it is a private process not on the public record. By agreeing to arbitration the parties give up the right to a jury trial and to appeal. Arbitration decisions have been upheld even when arbitrators have made a mistake as to the law or the facts. If the parties agree to arbitration, then any dispute arising out of their agreement (with a few limited exceptions) must be submitted to binding arbitration. Buyer and Seller must weigh the benefits of a potentially quicker and less expensive arbitration against giving up the right to a jury trial and the right to appeal. Brokers cannot give legal advice regarding these matters. Buyers and Sellers must decide on their own, or with the advice of legal counsel, whether to agree to arbitration. Brokers do not have expertise in this area.

SHORT SALE ADDENDUM
(C.A.R. Form SSA, 4/09)

This is an addendum to the ☐ California Residential Purchase Agreement, ☐ Counter Offer, ☐ Other _____ _____ ("Agreement"), dated _____, on property known as _____ ("Property"), between _____ ("Buyer") and _____ ("Seller").

A. SHORT SALE APPROVAL. This Agreement is contingent upon Seller's receipt of written consent from all existing secured lenders and lienholders ("Short-Sale Lenders"), no later than 5:00 P.M. on _____ (date) ("Short-Sale Contingency Date"), to reduce their respective loan balances by an amount sufficient to permit the proceeds from the sale of the Property to pay the existing balances on loans secured by the Property, real property taxes, brokerage commissions, closing costs, and other monetary obligations the Agreement requires Seller to pay at Close Of Escrow (including, but not limited to, escrow charges, title charges, documentary transfer taxes, prorations, retrofit costs and Repairs) without requiring Seller to place any funds into escrow or have any continuing obligation to Short-Sale Lender. If by the Short-Sale Contingency Date, either (i) Seller does not receive Short-Sale Lenders' written consent or (ii) Seller fails to give Buyer a copy of Short-Sale Lender's written consent then either Seller or Buyer, respectively, may cancel the Agreement in writing, and Buyer shall be entitled to a return of any deposit. Seller shall reasonably cooperate with existing Short-Sale lenders in the short-sale process.

B. TIME PERIODS: BUYER'S DEPOSIT CHECK:

1. Time periods in the Agreement for inspections, contingencies, covenants, and other obligations: (i) shall begin as specified in the Agreement; or (ii) (if checked) ☐ shall begin the Day After Seller delivers to Buyer written notice of Short-Sale Lenders' consent. However, even if Paragraph B1(ii) is checked, time periods for providing pre-approval/pre-qualification letters and verification of down payment and closing costs shall nonetheless begin as otherwise specified in the Agreement.
2. Buyer's deposit check shall be: (i) immediately handled as provided in the Agreement; or (ii) (if checked) ☐ held uncashed until the Day After Seller delivers to Buyer a written notice of Short Sale Lenders' consent.

C. NO ASSURANCE OF LENDER APPROVAL. Buyer and Seller understand that Short-Sale Lenders (i) are not obligated to give consent to a short-sale; (ii) may require Seller to forward any other offer received; and (iii) may give consent to other offers. Additionally, Short-Sale Lenders may require that, in order to obtain their approval for a short sale, some terms of the Agreement, such as the Close of Escrow, be amended or that Seller sign a personal note or some other obligation for all or a portion of the amount of the secured debt reduction. Buyer and Seller do not have to agree to any of Short-Sale Lenders' proposed terms. Buyer, Seller and Brokers do not have control over whether Short-Sale Lenders will consent to a short-sale, or any act, omission, or decision by any Short-Sale Lender in the short-sale process.

D. BUYER AND SELLER COSTS. Buyer and Seller acknowledge that each may incur costs in connection with rights or obligations under the Agreement. These costs may include, but are not limited to, payments for loan applications, inspections, appraisals, and other reports. Such costs will be the sole responsibility of the party incurring them, if Short-Sale Lenders do not consent to the transaction or either party cancels pursuant to the Agreement.

E. OTHER OFFERS. Unless otherwise agreed in writing, Seller may continue to market the Property despite acceptance of Buyer's offer, and to present to Short-Sale Lender(s) any additional offers that are received on the Property.

F. CREDIT, LEGAL AND TAX ADVICE. Seller is informed that a short-sale may have credit or legal consequences and may result in taxable income to Seller. Seller is advised to seek advice from an attorney, certified public accountant or other expert regarding such potential consequences of a short-sale.

By signing below, Buyer and Seller each acknowledge that they have read, understand, accept and have received a copy of this Short Sale Addendum.

§6.29 III. SELLER'S DISCLOSURES

A seller of residential real property in California has a duty to disclose to a buyer facts materially affecting the value or desirability of the property. The existence and contours of this duty are established in case law, and specific disclosure requirements are set forth in various federal and state statutes and local ordinances. The common law duty of disclosure is discussed in §§6.30-6.33. Statutory disclosure requirements are discussed in §§6.34-6.70.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.30 A. Common Law Duty of Disclosure

There are no implied warranties in the sale of real property as to the quality or condition of the property, with the exception of new home construction. Pollard v Saxe & Yolles Dev. Co. (1974) 12 C3d 374, 115 CR 648; East Hilton Drive Homeowners' Ass'n v Western Real Estate Exch., Inc. (1982) 136 CA3d 630, 632, 186 CR 267; see also CC §1113 (specifying the covenants implied in a grant deed). Nevertheless, in all real estate transactions, whether commercial or residential, a common law duty of disclosure arises when the seller knows of facts materially affecting the value or desirability of the property that are known to or accessible only to the seller and knows that such facts are not known to, or within the reach of the diligent attention and observation of, the buyer. Stevenson v Baum (1998) 65 CA4th 159, 165, 75 CR2d 904; Shapiro v Sutherland (1998) 64 CA4th 1534, 1544, 76 CR2d 101. Whether a seller had actual knowledge of an undisclosed fact is a question of fact. 64 CA4th at 1544.

A seller does not have a duty to inspect property or investigate facts that may be material to a buyer. See Corbett v Otts (1962) 205 CA2d 78, 84, 22 CR 849; Watt v Patterson (1954) 125 CA2d 788, 792, 271 P2d 200. A seller who is ignorant of a fact will not be liable for failure to disclose it, no matter how material it may be. San Diego Hospice v County of San Diego (1995) 31 CA4th 1048, 1055, 37 CR2d 501. However, a seller will be deemed to have knowledge of facts actually known to the seller's current agents or employees or contained in the seller's records. Herzog v Capital Co. (1945) 27 C2d 349, 353, 164 P2d 8; San Diego Hospice v County of San Diego, supra. See also CC §2332 (agent's knowledge imputed to principal).

Breach of the duty of disclosure gives rise to a cause of action for both rescission and damages. Shapiro, 64 CA4th at 1544; Karoutas v HomeFed Bank (1991) 232 CA3d 767, 771, 283 CR 809. See also Herzog v Capital Co., supra; CC §1572 (actual fraud includes "suppression of that which is true by one having knowledge or belief of the fact"); CC §1710 (deceit includes suppression of a fact by one who is bound to disclose it). See also California Real Property Remedies and Damages, chaps 1, 3 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002).

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.31 1. Materiality

A fact must be disclosed if it is sufficiently material that it affects the property's value or desirability. Shapiro v Sutherland (1998) 64 CA4th 1534, 1544, 76 CR2d 101; Lingsch v Savage (1963) 213 CA2d 729, 737, 29 CR 201. Facts are deemed sufficiently material, in this context, if they would have a significant and measurable effect on the market value of the property. Shapiro, 64 CA4th at 1544; Reed v King (1983) 145 CA3d 261, 267, 193 CR 130; Nece v Bennett (1963) 212 CA2d 494, 496, 28 CR 117 (a fact that does not affect value of property is not material). Materiality may be decided on the basis of expert testimony or on the personal knowledge and experience of the trier of fact. Alexander v McKnight (1992) 7 CA4th 973, 977, 9 CR2d 453. Generally, whether information is sufficiently material to effect the value or desirability of property is a question of fact. Calemine v Samuelson (2009) 171 CA4th 153, 89 CR3d 495; Stevenson v Baum (1998) 65 CA4th 159, 165, 75 CR2d 904. In some cases, however, the issue may be resolved as a question of law. See Reed, 145 CA3d at 265, 267.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.31A a. Physical Property Conditions

Case law has found certain physical conditions to be sufficiently material as to require disclosure. These include:

- Improvements constructed on fill (see, e.g., Snelson v Ondulando Highlands Corp. (1970) 5 CA3d 243, 251, 84 CR 800);
- Land subject to flooding (Stowe v Nieto (1945) 71 CA2d 375, 377, 162 P2d 837);
- Prior landslide (Barnhouse v City of Pinole (1982) 133 CA3d 171, 189, 183 CR 881);
- Structural defects, such as a roof leak (Herzog v Capital Co. (1945) 27 C2d 349, 352, 164 P2d 8);
- Termite infestation (Godfrey v Steinpress (1982) 128 CA3d 154, 177, 180 CR 95);
- Building code violations (Lingsch, 213 CA2d at 735; Curran v Heslop (1953) 115 CA2d 476, 480, 252 P2d 376);
- Improvements constructed without permit or in violation of zoning regulations (Milmoe v Dixon (1950) 101 CA2d 257, 261, 225 P2d 273; Barder v McClung (1949) 93 CA2d 692, 697, 209 P2d 808); and
- The existence of an easement (Brady v Carman (1960) 179 CA2d 63, 68, 3 CR 612).

§6.31B b. Other Matters

Various matters unrelated to the physical condition of the property have been found to be sufficiently material as to require disclosure. These include:

- Noisy and disruptive neighbors (Shapiro, 64 CA4th at 1539 (neighbors, over a period of years, were the source of excessive noise and commotion, including loud arguments and late-night parties, causing seller to call the police on several occasions); Alexander, 7 CA4th at 977 (neighbors were an "overtly hostile family who delight[ed] in tormenting their neighbors" with noise and parties));
- Multiple murders at the property (Reed, 145 CA3d at 263);
- Use of the property violates the applicable zoning ordinance (Coons v Gunn (1968) 263 CA2d 594, 600, 69 CR 876); and
- The state is interested in buying and developing the property (Storage Servs. v Oosterbaan (1989) 214 CA3d 498, 508, 262 CR 689).

§6.32 c. Corrected Conditions

A few cases have considered whether a seller has a duty to disclose to a buyer a property condition that has been repaired or corrected. In Wood v Kalbaugh (1974) 39 CA3d 926, 114 CR 673, for example, the court held that the seller's repair of a gas-line leak during the escrow period was not sufficiently material as to require disclosure. The leak had resulted from a rusted pipeline, was immediately replaced and tested by the seller, and later passed city safety requirements. 39 CA3d at 931. The Wood court was persuaded by the fact that the gas leak was readily repairable and had actually been repaired. 39 CA3d at 931. Similarly, in Pagano v Krohn (1997) 60 CA4th 1, 10, 70 CR2d 1, the court held that the past occurrence of moisture intrusion in the garage of the seller's condominium unit was not a material fact when the source of the moisture had been remedied well over a year before the sale by adjusting sprinklers so as not to spray the affected area and the buyer was otherwise aware of a general water intrusion problem affecting the entire condominium development.

The court reached a contrary conclusion in Barnhouse v City of Pinole (1982) 133 CA3d 171, 183 CR 881, holding that a seller's belief that preexisting slides, seeps, and springs had been permanently repaired did not excuse the failure to disclose them to the buyer. The court observed that when a seller has knowledge of "progressive destruction or substantial impairment," the seller has a duty to disclose the relevant circumstances even if he or she has reason to believe that the problem has been halted. 133 CA3d at 190. There was evidence in Barnhouse that the structural repair of the preexisting slides had been inadequate. 133 CA3d at 189.

PRACTICE TIP: These cases provide guidance for evaluating whether to disclose other types of past repairs. If the defect or condition can be repaired in a reliable fashion (e.g., replacement of a rusted gas line) and has been so repaired, disclosure may not be necessary. But if the defect or condition is progressive in nature or likely to recur, and repair of the condition is therefore unreliable (e.g., a landslide), the seller should disclose it. In questionable cases, or out of an abundance of caution, it is best to advise sellers to err on the side of disclosure.

§6.32A 2. Scope and Extent of Disclosure

Once a seller discloses "essential facts" about a material condition, it has satisfied its duty of disclosure and need not "elaborate" on those facts. Calemine v Samuelson (2009) 171 CA4th 153, 161, 89 CR3d 495; Pagano v Krohn (1997) 60 CA4th 1, 10, 70 CR2d 1. See also Sweat v Hollister (1995) 37 CA4th 603, 609, 43 CR2d 399, disapproved on other grounds in Santisas v Goodin (1998) 17 C4th 599, 71 CR2d 830 (seller does not have duty to advise or opine on legal ramifications of disclosed fact); Stevenson v Baum (1998) 65 CA4th 159, 166, 75 CR2d 904 (notice in purchase contract that title is subject to easements of record satisfied seller's disclosure duty when recorded easement agreement revealed essential facts about easement).

In Calemine v Samuelson, supra, plaintiff-buyers sued the seller of a condominium for failing to fully disclose the history of water intrusion in the development and related construction litigation. The seller had made written and oral disclosures to the buyer regarding the existence of past water intrusion, outlined repairs that had been made, and urged the buyers in writing to obtain a physical inspection. Evidence of the past water intrusion was confirmed during the professional property inspection. A few years later, the buyers experienced water intrusion in their unit and learned that, 20 years earlier, the HOA and individual unit owners had filed construction defect lawsuits against the developer and subcontractor while the seller was on the HOA board. The buyers also learned that the HOA settled for a fraction of their consultant's estimated repair costs and then performed only a partial repair. None of these facts were disclosed to the buyers.

The court rejected the buyers' contention that the seller was required to disclose more detail about the type and scope of repairs. The court found such further information to be an "elaboration" on the basic disclosed fact, which is not part of the seller's duty of disclosure. 171 CA4th at 164. Nevertheless, the appellate court reversed the trial court, finding that a triable issue of fact remained as to whether the prior lawsuits were material facts that the seller should have disclosed.

The court held that a seller's common law duty of disclosure encompasses disclosure of a lawsuit affecting property but not the details of the lawsuit. 171 CA4th at 166. The court observed that disclosure of the lawsuits would have permitted the buyer to examine the details of those actions and evaluate its purchase in light of that information. Without the predicate disclosure of the existence of the lawsuits, these facts were not within the buyer's diligent attention and thus had to be disclosed by the seller. 171 CA4th at 166. See also Assilzadeh v California Fed. Bank (2000) 82 CA4th 399, 98 CR2d 176; Pagano, 60 CA4th at 10 (once buyer is made aware that water intrusion resulted in litigation against developer, details about lawsuit were within buyer's diligent attention and need not be disclosed by seller).

PRACTICE TIP: Determining what constitutes an "essential fact" as opposed to an "elaboration" will depend on the facts and circumstances of each particular case and requires the exercise of sound judgment. Although Calemine does not hold that past litigation is always material and must be disclosed in every case, it comes close to doing so. It is advisable to disclose all past litigation which relates to a disclosed material condition, particularly conditions such as water intrusion that often are not reliably repaired or otherwise may recur. This effectively shifts the burden to the buyer to investigate and discover details that may include material facts. It is also advisable for a buyer, on receipt of a litigation disclosure from a seller, to fully investigate the allegations and ultimate disposition of the lawsuit. In addition to reviewing public records, a buyer can request specific information from the seller, which may effectively shift the burden back to the seller to "elaborate" on the original disclosure.

§6.33 3. Public Policy Limitations on the Duty to Disclose

The legislature has limited the duty of disclosure in certain situations when it has concluded that public policy concerns outweigh the benefits of private disclosure. For example, there is a strong public policy in California favoring the establishment of various types of residential care facilities and day care homes to provide a wide range of nonmedical care and social services. See the California Community Care Facilities Act (Health & S C §§1500-1567.8). In furtherance of that policy, the Act provides that, in connection with the transfer of real property, a licensed care facility that serves six or fewer persons is to be considered a residential use of property by a single family. Health & S C §1566.5. The fact that a single family lives at a property is not material and therefore need not be disclosed. Moreover, although no court has addressed the issue, the California Attorney General has consistently opined that care facilities serving six or fewer persons are not nuisances because they have been expressly authorized by statute (CC §3482), and their existence in a neighborhood is not a material fact that must be disclosed. 79 Ops Cal Atty Gen 112 (1996) (domestic violence shelter is not a nuisance and need not be disclosed by a seller of residential property). However, in response to a direct inquiry, disclosure is permitted as long as it is factual and not used to aid discrimination against or segregation of the facility within the community. See 73 Ops Cal Atty Gen 58, 67 (1990).

PRACTICE TIP: As no court has yet addressed this disclosure issue, it may be advisable for a seller to disclose the existence of a licensed care facility serving more than six persons, particularly if it is close to the property. The disclosure should be strictly factual and avoid statements that might be construed as discriminatory.

§6.34 B. Statutory Disclosure Requirements

Numerous federal and state statutes and local ordinances require sellers to make specific disclosures to buyers of residential real property. These laws reflect legislative determinations that certain matters are always sufficiently material such that their disclosure should be mandated. See, e.g., Realmuto v Gagnard (2003) 110 CA4th 193, 200, 1 CR3d 569 (identifying California legislature's stated purposes in enacting statutory transfer disclosure requirements). These statutory disclosure requirements do not replace the common law duty to disclose facts that materially affect the value or desirability of a property. See CC §§1102.1, 1102.8.

Documentation of residential transactions in California often includes a jumble of disjointed standard form disclosures that are required to discharge various statutory obligations. The extent to which a real estate licensee in a given transaction explains, or is qualified to explain, these standard forms will vary depending on the skill and experience of the licensee. Attorneys can assist both buyers and sellers by explaining the legal significance of the underlying statutory obligations and making sure that all required statutory disclosures have been made.

Federal and state (and a few local) disclosure requirements that apply to the typical residential sale transaction are discussed in §§6.35-6.70. These requirements are organized according to the authorizing statutory scheme or substantively as follows:

- Transfer disclosures (§§6.35-6.46A);
- Local disclosures (§§6.38-6.41);
- Natural hazards disclosures (§§6.47-6.50);
- Health and safety disclosures (§§6.51-6.59);
- Common interest development (CID) disclosures (§§6.60-6.63);
- New home sales disclosures (§6.64); and
- Miscellaneous disclosures (§§6.65-6.70).

§6.35 1. Transfer Disclosures

Civil Code §§1102-1102.17 set forth various disclosures that must be made in every transfer of real property or a residential stock cooperative improved with one to four dwelling units, by sale, exchange, installment land sale contract (as defined in CC §2985), lease with an option to purchase, any other option to purchase, or ground lease coupled with improvements. CC §1102(a). These disclosures must also be made in the resale of a manufactured home or a mobilehome that is classified as personal property and intended for use as a residence. CC §1102(b). See Health & S C §§18007, 18008 for the definitions of manufactured homes and mobilehomes. The individual required disclosures are discussed separately in §§6.36-6.46.

Civil Code §§1102-1102.17 do not apply to the following transactions, which are exempt:

- Transfers that require a subdivision public report under Bus & P C §11018.1 or that can be made without a public report under Bus & P C §11010.4 (CC §1102.2(a));
- Transfers under court order (e.g., probate sales, foreclosure sales, transfers by a bankruptcy trustee, transfers under to a writ of execution) (CC §1102.2(b));
- Transfers by foreclosure sale after default or by deed in lieu of foreclosure; transfers by a mortgagee or beneficiary under a deed of trust who acquired the property at a trustee's sale, foreclosure sale, or by deed in lieu of foreclosure; or transfers by foreclosure of a security interest in a manufactured home or mobilehome; see Assilzadeh v California Fed. Bank (2000) 82 CA4th 399, 98 CR2d 176 (CC §1102.2(c));
- Transfers by a fiduciary in the course of administering a decedent's estate, guardianship, conservatorship, or trust; however, this exemption does not apply to a transfer when the trustee is a natural person who is the sole trustee of a revocable trust and is the former owner of the property or an occupant of the property within the preceding year (CC §1102.2(d));
- Transfers between co-owners (CC §1102.2(e));
- Transfers to a spouse or persons "in the lineal line of consanguinity" (direct ancestors or descendants) (CC §1102.2(f));
- Transfers between spouses in connection with marital dissolution proceedings (CC §1102.2(g));
- Transfers by the State Controller in administering the Unclaimed Property Law (CCP §§1500-1582) (CC §1102.2(h));
- Transfers resulting from failure to pay property taxes under Rev & T C §3771 (CC §1102.2(i)); and
- Transfers or exchanges to or from any governmental entity (CC §1102.2(j)).

Even in exempt transactions, however, the transferor still has a common law duty of disclosure. Karoutas v HomeFed Bank (1991) 232 CA3d 767, 773, 283 CR 809. For a discussion of common law standards, see §§6.30-6.33.

When CC §§1102-1102.17 apply, any waiver of the requirements they set forth is void as against public policy. CC §1102(c). See CC §1102.1(a) ("as is" clause does not waive duty to deliver transfer disclosure statement required by §1102.6). The transfer disclosures must be made in good faith, for which the standard is honesty in fact in the conduct of the transaction. CC §1102.7. Delivery of transfer disclosures must be by personal delivery or mail to the transferee or prospective transferee or his or her spouse, unless otherwise provided in the purchase contract. CC §1102.10. The real estate licensees in the transaction are responsible for delivering the transfer disclosures. CC §1101.12. An escrow agent is not an agent of the transferor or transferee for purposes of fulfilling disclosure requirements, unless otherwise agreed in writing. CC §1101.11.

If any of the transfer disclosures are made after execution of a purchase contract, the buyer or other transferee has 3 days after delivery in person, or 5 days after delivery by deposit in the mail, to terminate his or her offer by delivery of written notice to the transferor or the transferor's agent. CC §1102.3(b). See Realmuto v Gagnard (2003) 110 CA4th 193, 201, 1 CR3d 569 (when buyer's offer was accepted before transfer disclosures were delivered, the right to "terminate an offer" in §1102.3 is, in fact, a right to rescind a contract). A previously delivered transfer disclosure may be amended in writing by the seller or his or her agent, but such amendment triggers the transferee's termination right. CC §1102.9.

PRACTICE TIP: Delivery of transfer disclosures to the transferee's agent may not be sufficient to trigger the applicable 3- or 5-day rescission right. Thus, in every transaction in which transfer disclosures are delivered after the purchase contract has been executed, the transferor (or agent) should make sure that the transferee has actually received each transfer disclosure, signed and dated it, and acknowledged receipt, to establish the date from which the rescission right runs for that disclosure. Better yet, the safest course is to deliver transfer disclosures to a prospective buyer before accepting a purchase offer and to require the buyer to submit a signed and dated acknowledgement of receipt with the offer. The transferor should be careful to complete the transfer disclosures fully and accurately to avoid the need for an amendment that would retrigger the rescission period.

Neither the transferor nor the agents in the transaction will be liable for an error, inaccuracy, or omission in any transfer disclosure if the information disclosed was not within their personal knowledge, was based on information provided by public agencies or certain qualified professionals, and ordinary care was exercised in obtaining and transmitting such information. CC §1102.4(a). For purposes of this liability protection, qualified professionals include a licensed engineer, land surveyor, geologist, structural pest control operator, contractor, or other expert when dealing with matters within the scope of the individual's professional license or expertise. CC §1102.4(c). Delivery of information by such qualified professionals relieves the transferor and agents of any further duty of disclosure with respect to that item (assuming such persons do not have actual knowledge of material facts pertaining to that item). CC §1102.4(b).

PRACTICE TIP: It is now common for California sellers to have third party qualified professionals complete "substitute disclosures" to fulfill the transfer disclosure requirements, except for the disclosures required on the Transfer Disclosure Statement (see §6.36), which must be completed by the transferor and agents. Two commonly used substitute disclosure companies are JCP Geologists and Property ID. See the Directory for their website addresses. The cost for a report covering the substitute transfer disclosures is generally less than $100, and the providers expressly indemnify the transferor for liability resulting from errors, inaccuracy, or omissions in the substitute disclosures. Additional disclosures are also available from both providers.

If information required to be disclosed is unknown or unavailable to the transferor and a reasonable effort is made to obtain such information, the transferor may use an approximation, provided he or she identifies it as such and it is reasonable and based on the best information available and not made to evade disclosure requirements. CC §1102.5. If a transfer disclosure is rendered inaccurate because of events that occur after its delivery, the resulting inaccuracy does not violate the transfer disclosure requirements. CC §1102.5. If, however, such subsequent events are actually known to the transferor or agent and are material, they must be disclosed under the common law duty. See §§6.30-6.33.

A failure to comply with the requirements of CC §§1102-1102.17 does not, by itself, invalidate a transfer. However, a person who willfully or negligently fails to discharge the transfer disclosure duties will be liable for actual damages suffered by the transferee. CC §1102.13. See Saunders v Taylor (1996) 42 CA4th 1538, 1543, 50 CR2d 395 ("actual damages" as used in CC §1102.13 means "out-of-pocket" damages as measured by CC §3343).

§6.36 a. Real Estate Transfer Disclosure Statement

The heart of the transfer disclosures is the Real Estate Transfer Disclosure Statement (TDS). The TDS is a standard form set forth in CC §1102.6, on which the transferor and agents must make certain transfer disclosures. The California Association of Realtors'® (CAR) Form TDS, which reproduces the statutory form, is commonly used. See §6.37. The legislature has also prescribed a statutory form to be used to make the disclosures required by CC §1102(b) in the case of the resale of a manufactured home or mobilehome that is classified as personal property. See CC §1102.6d. The TDS is not a warranty or a part of the purchase contract. Brasier v Sparks (1993) 17 CA4th 1756, 1760, 22 CR2d 1.

When required, the TDS must be delivered as soon as practicable before either (1) transfer of title, in the case of a sale, or (2) execution of a contract if the transaction involves one of the other forms of transfer covered. CC §1102.3. The transferor must indicate compliance with transfer disclosure requirements either on the purchase contract, lease, or an addendum thereto, or in a separate document. CC §1102.3(b). If the seller fails to deliver a TDS to the buyer, the seller cannot later pursue an action for specific performance or breach of contract against the buyer, because delivery of the TDS is a nonwaivable condition precedent to the buyer's duty to perform. Realmuto v Gagnard (2003) 110 CA4th 193, 201, 1 CR3d 569.

The TDS form has four parts to be completed. See §6.37. Part I, Coordination With Other Disclosure Forms, requires the seller to specify which substitute transfer disclosures the seller is delivering to the buyer and states that the substitute disclosures are intended to satisfy disclosure obligations on the TDS when the subject matter is the same. Parts III and IV, respectively, are to be completed by the listing agent and the selling (buyer's) agent, if any, to disclose material facts discovered during the agent's reasonably competent and diligent visual inspection of accessible areas of property as required by CC §2079.

Part II, Seller's Information, is to be completed by the seller. It has three subparts. Subpart A lists various components of a residential property and requires the seller to check off the items that apply to the subject property. After doing so, the seller must state, to the best of seller's knowledge, whether any of the components identified "are not in operating condition." For those that are not operable, the seller is required to describe the condition. Subpart B requires the seller to disclose whether he or she is aware of "any significant defects/malfunctions" in any structural component of the property. If so, the seller is required to explain. Subpart C requires the seller to state whether he or she is aware of any of 16 problems that may affect the property and, if so, to explain. These problems include many of the items that have been deemed sufficiently material as to require disclosure under the common law standard. They include various environmental hazards, adjacent-neighbor issues (e.g., common fences or walls, encroachments, easements), common interest development disclosures, nuisances, governmental notices or litigation affecting the property, zoning or permit noncompliance or violations, and physical conditions (e.g., fill, settling, flooding, drainage problems, major damage from natural hazards).

PRACTICE TIP: The seller must exercise a great deal of judgment in completing the TDS. Although Subparts A and B only require disclosure of components that are "not in operating condition" or have "significant defects/malfunctions," to avoid future disputes it is generally advisable for a seller to disclose all known operational difficulties and any other known property defects or malfunctions.

c. Local Disclosure and Transfer Requirements

§6.38 (1) Local Option Transfer Disclosure Statement

In addition to the disclosures on the TDS, CC §1102.6a(a) authorizes a city or county to require disclosures on the Local Option Real Estate Transfer Disclosure Statement set forth in §1102.6(b). See §6.39. A city or county may use a different disclosure form in connection with ordinances adopted before July 1, 1990, and may specify addenda to the Local Option TDS to facilitate the required disclosure. CC §1102.6a(a), (c).

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel should investigate whether the city or county in which the property is located has adopted a Local Option TDS or mandated other local disclosures or transfer requirements. A real estate licensee who routinely sells property within that city and county can facilitate compliance with such local requirements.

§6.40 (3) Residential Building Records Report

Cities may, by ordinance, require the owner of residential property to obtain from the city a report of residential building records (3-R Report) showing the authorized use, occupancy, and zoning classifications of the property. Govt C §38780. The ordinance must provide that it is unlawful for the owner to sell or exchange residential real property without having obtained and delivered a 3-R Report to the transferee. Govt C §38783. When required, the owner must deliver the 3-R Report to the buyer or other transferee prior to "the consummation of the sale or exchange." Govt C §38781. Failure to deliver a 3-R Report, when required, does not invalidate the sale or exchange unless the act or omission would be a valid ground for rescission independent of the statutory requirement. Govt C §38785. These requirements do not apply to the first sale of residential property in a subdivision if a final map has been duly approved and recorded within 2 years before the first sale. Govt C §38784.

§6.41 (4) "Point of Sale" Ordinances

Many localities, particularly in urban areas of the state, have enacted ordinances mandating compliance with certain governmental retrofit standards or requiring certain inspections and reports to be completed before the close of escrow. These ordinances vary depending on local conditions and concerns.

EXAMPLE: The City of Berkeley has enacted a comprehensive Residential Energy Conservation Ordinance (RECO). See Berkeley Muni C ch 19.16. RECO provides that, before the sale or exchange of any residential structure or unit, the seller or agent (if any) must provide the buyer with a copy of a certificate of compliance with the ordinance. Berkeley Muni C ch 19.16.070.

§6.42 d. Mello-Roos Act and 1915 Bond Act

If the seller's property is subject to a continuing lien securing the levy of special taxes under the Mello-Roos Community Facilities Act of 1982 (Govt C §§53311-53368.3) or a fixed lien assessment collected in installments to secure bonds issued under the Improvement Bond Act of 1915 (Str & H C §§8500-8887), the seller must make a good faith effort to obtain a disclosure notice regarding the special tax or assessment, as provided for in Govt C §§53340.2 and 53754, from each local agency that levies such a special tax or collects such assessment installments, and deliver the notice or notices to the prospective buyer. CC §1102.6b(b). These taxes and assessments, when they apply, can materially increase the cost of property ownership. Transfers that do not require a TDS are also exempt from this notice requirement. CC §1102.6b(a)(1). See CC §1102.2 for exempt transfers (listed in §6.35). A seller may obtain the required notices directly from the agencies involved or, as is more common, contract with a nongovernmental source to provide the disclosure notice. CC §1102.6b(d). Once a seller delivers the required special tax or assessment notices, the seller need not provide any additional information and is deemed to have satisfied his or her responsibility to inform the buyer on the subject. CC §1102.6(e).

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.43 e. Supplemental Property Tax Bill

The seller of residential real property containing one to four dwelling units, or the seller's agent, must provide a written notice to a prospective buyer advising that the buyer may receive one or more "supplemental property tax bills" based on the revaluation of the property after the transfer of ownership. CC §1102.6c. The notice must also state that the supplemental tax bills are not mailed to the buyer's lender and that payment is the responsibility of the buyer-taxpayer. Section 1102.6c specifies the language and font size of the required notice.

§6.44 f. Former Federal or State Ordnance Locations

The seller of residential real property who has actual knowledge of any former federal or state ordnance locations within one mile of the property must give written notice of that knowledge to the buyer as soon as possible before the transfer of title. CC §1102.15. A former federal or state ordnance location is defined as an area identified by federal or state government as having once been used for military training purposes that may contain potentially explosive munitions. CC §1102.15.

§6.45 g. Window Security Bars and Safety Release Mechanisms

Sellers must disclose, on the TDS form or the Local Option TDS form, the existence of any window security bars and any safety release mechanisms on them. CC §1102.16. Written disclosures of the existence of safety release mechanisms on security window bars may also be included in existing transactional documents, such as a real estate sales contract or receipt for deposit. Health & S C §17958.4.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.46 h. Industrial Use Zone

If the seller has actual knowledge that the property is adjacent to or zoned to allow an industrial use described in CCP §731a, or is affected by a nuisance created by such industrial use, the seller must give written notice of such knowledge to the buyer before transfer of title. CC §1102.17. An industrial use zone is an area established by a city or county where certain manufacturing, commercial, or airport uses are expressly permitted. CCP §731a. An industrial use within a zone or district that has been lawfully established is deemed a nuisance only when "unnecessary and injurious methods of operation" are used, excluding, however, the regulation and working hours of canneries, fertilizing plants, refineries, "and other similar establishments" that produce offensive odors. CCP §731a.

§6.46A i. Private Transfer Fees

As of January 1, 2008, when delivering the transfer disclosure statement, sellers must disclose to buyers whether the property is subject to a private transfer fee imposed by a covenant, condition, or restriction contained in a deed, contract, security interest, or other document affecting the transfer or sale of the property (or any interest in the property). The disclosure statement must include:

- Notice that payment of the transfer fee is required;
- The amount of the fee based on the asking price of the property and how the fee is calculated;
- Notice that the final amount of the fee may be different if it is calculated on the basis of a percentage of the final sale price;
- The entity to which the fee will be paid;
- The purposes of the fee; and
- The date or circumstances under which the obligation to pay the transfer fee expires.

CC §1102.6e. The definition of "transfer fee" in CC §1098 excludes, among other things, authorized assessments, charges, fees, and penalties imposed in connection with the transfer of a separate interest in a common interest development. On disclosure of transfer fees, see Advising California Common Interest Communities, chap 2 (Cal CEB 2003).

§6.47 2. Natural Hazard Disclosures

Certain disclosures of natural hazards must be made in every transaction in which a transfer disclosure is required. CC §1103. (For a general discussion of transfer disclosures, see §6.35.) In addition, natural hazard disclosures must be made in two types of transactions that are exempt from the transfer disclosure requirements: (1) a transaction that requires a subdivision public report (or that can be made without one under Bus & P C §11010.4) and (2) foreclosure of a security interest in a manufactured home or mobilehome. CC §1103.1.

The same standards and requirements that apply to transfer disclosures in general are restated in, and apply to, natural hazard disclosures:

- A waiver of the disclosure requirement is void as against public policy. CC §1103(d).
- The disclosure must be made in good faith. CC §1103.7.
- The disclosures must be delivered personally or by mail to the transferee or transferee's spouse or real estate agent. CC §§1103.10-1103.11.
- Delivery must made as soon as practicable before transfer of title or execution of the contract, and the transferor must indicate compliance in writing. CC §1103.3(a)-(b).
- If the disclosures or material amendments to them are delivered after the purchase offer is executed, then the buyer has a right of rescission. CC §1103.3(c).
- The seller has qualified liability protection for erroneous disclosures. CC §1103.4(a).
- Certain substitute disclosures are authorized. CC §1103.4(b).
- Compliance discharges further disclosure duties with respect to the same subject matter, except the duty to disclose known material facts. CC §§1103.5(a), 1103.8.
- A disclosure subsequently rendered inaccurate as a result of changed circumstances is not a violation. CC §1103.5(b).
- Noncompliance does not invalidate a transfer, but if noncompliance is willful or negligent, the transferor is liable for actual damages suffered by transferee. CC §1103.13.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.48 a. Natural Hazard Zones

In every transaction in which a natural hazard disclosure must be made (see §6.47), the transferor or the transferor's agent must disclose to the transferee whether the property is located in one or more of the following six "natural hazard" zones (see CC §1103(c)) when such disclosure is required by statute:

- A "special flood hazard area" as designated by the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) (see Govt C §8589.3);
- An area of potential flooding designated under Govt C §8589.5 (see Govt C §8589.4);
- A very high fire hazard severity zone that is subject to the maintenance requirements of Govt C §51182, as identified by the State Director of Forestry and Fire Protection under Govt C §51178 (see Govt C §51183.5);
- An earthquake fault zone designated by the State Geologist under the Alquist-Priolo Earthquake Fault Zoning Act (Pub Res C §§2621-2630) (see Pub Res C §2621.9);
- A seismic hazard zone designated under Pub Res C §2696 (see Pub Res C §2694); and
- A state responsibility area, e.g., a wildland area that may contain substantial forest fire risks and hazards, as determined under Pub Res C §4125 (see Pub Res C §4136).

As between the transferor and its agent, the transferor is responsible for making the "very high fire severity zone" disclosure and "state responsibility area" disclosure. The transferor's agent is responsible for making the other disclosures, but if the transferor is acting without an agent, the transferor is responsible. CC §1103(c).

Disclosure is required under CC §1103(c) in the following circumstances:

- If the transferor or agent has actual knowledge of the property's location within a natural hazard zone;
- If the local jurisdiction has compiled and posted notice in certain county offices of a list of properties that are located within the zone; or
- When a map of such properties has been provided to the local jurisdiction by the designated state agency, if the local jurisdiction has posted notice of the location of the map and any information regarding changes to it received by the local agency.

In transfers not subject to the natural hazard disclosure requirements, the transferor or agent may make the required disclosures in a separate writing. CC §1103.1(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.49 b. Natural Hazard Disclosure Statement

The natural hazard disclosures must be made on the statutorily mandated Natural Hazard Disclosure Statement (NHDS) form set forth in CC §1103.2. For the California Association of Realtors® form, see §6.50. The disclosure may also be made on the Local Option Real Estate Disclosure Statement described in CC §1102.6a (see §6.39) as long as it includes substantially the same information and warnings as required on the NHDS form. CC §1103.2(e). The NHDS form states that the disclosures are not a warranty and are not intended to be part of the parties' contract, and further states that the hazards disclosed may limit the transferee's ability to develop the property, obtain insurance, or receive assistance after a disaster. CC §1103.2.

As in the case of other transfer disclosures (except those made by the transferor and agents in the TDS), it is now standard practice for the transferor to contract with a third party "expert" disclosure company, for a modest fee, to make the natural hazard disclosures. When such substitute disclosure is used, three additional disclosure requirements are imposed. First, the expert must determine whether the property is located within an "airport influence area" as defined in Bus & P C §11010, and if so, a statutorily mandated Notice of Airport in Vicinity must be given to the transferee. CC §1103.4(c)(1). Second, the expert must determine whether the property is located within the jurisdiction of the San Francisco Bay Conservation and Development Commission as defined in Govt C §66620, and if so, a statutorily mandated Notice of San Francisco Bay Conservation and Development Commission Jurisdiction must be given to the transferee. CC §1103.4(c)(2). Third, the expert must determine whether the property is located within one mile of a farm or ranch land designated by the California Department of Conservation, Division of Land Resource Protections, and if so, a statutorily mandated "Notice of Right to Farm" must be given to the transferee. CC §1103.4(c)(3).

The Natural Hazard Disclosure Statement is a disclosure between the transferor and agent, on the one hand, and the transferee, on the other, and may not be used for any purpose by any third party, including lenders, insurers, and governmental agencies. CC §1103.2(g).

3. Health and Safety Disclosures

§6.51 a. Lead-Based Paint Disclosure

Under the federal Residential Lead-Based Paint Reduction Act of 1992 (42 USC §§4851-4856) and implementing regulations (40 CFR §§745.100-745.119), before a buyer or lessee becomes obligated to purchase or lease a single-family or multi-unit dwelling that was built before 1978 and is used or will be used for residential purposes, the seller, the lessor, or the real estate agent (if any) must do all of the following (42 USC §4852d(a)(1)):

- Provide the buyer or lessee with a lead hazard information pamphlet prescribed by the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, entitled "Protect Your Family From Lead in Your Home";
- Disclose to the buyer or lessee the presence of any known lead-based paint or lead-based paint hazards and provide any available lead hazard evaluation report; and
- Allow the buyer a 10-day period (unless the parties mutually agree to a different period) to conduct a risk assessment or inspection for lead-based paint hazards.

In addition, the purchase agreement must contain a prescribed Lead Warning Statement and a statement signed by the purchaser stating that he or she has read the statement and understands it, has received the required pamphlet, and has had the 10-day opportunity (or alternative mutually acceptable period) to conduct lead hazard inspections. 42 USC §4852d(a)(2)-(3).

The following types of housing are exempt from the law:

- Housing built on or after January 1, 1978, with certain exceptions (40 CFR §745.103);
- "Zero bedroom" units, including efficiencies, lofts, and dormitories (40 CFR §745.103);
- Housing sold at foreclosure sale (40 CFR §745.101(a));
- Short-term leases for less than 100 days without option to extend or renew (which would not include month-to-month tenancies) (40 CFR §§745.101(c)); and
- Housing otherwise covered that has been found to be lead free by a certified inspector (40 CFR §745.101(b)).

Failure to comply with the Act will not invalidate or render unenforceable any purchase contract, lease, or loan, or create a title defect. 42 USC §4852d(c). Knowing violations of the Act by sellers, lessors, and agents, however, subject them to civil monetary penalties and joint and several liability for three times the damages incurred by the purchaser or lessee plus attorney fees and costs, as well as injunctive relief and criminal penalties. 42 USC §4852d(b); see Smith v Coldwell Banker Real Estate Servs. (D Conn 2000) 122 F Supp 2d 267, 273 (a "knowing" violation of the Act does not require a showing of bad faith or willfulness).

PRACTICE TIP: The lead disclosure requirements may be satisfied by completing CAR Form FLD and by delivering to the purchaser CAR's publication entitled "Environmental Hazards: Guide for Homeowners and Buyers." The Act requires disclosure only and does not require a seller to test for lead or abate known lead paint or hazards at a property.

§6.52 b. Earthquake Hazards

For residential real property built before January 1, 1960, comprising one to four living units of conventional light-frame construction (as defined in Uniform Building Code §2320.11.3) the transferor must, as soon as practicable before the transfer, (1) deliver to the transferee a copy of the pamphlet entitled "Homeowner's Guide to Earthquake Safety" (Homeowner's Guide) published by the Seismic Safety Commission under Bus & P C §10149; and (2) complete an earthquake hazards report disclosing the transferor's actual knowledge of whether the property has any of the deficiencies listed in Govt C §8897.2(a). Govt C §8897.1(a). These include the absence of anchor bolts, the existence of unbraced perimeter cripple walls, unbraced first-story walls, a perimeter foundation composed of unreinforced masonry, unreinforced masonry dwelling walls, a habitable room above a garage, or an unbraced water heater. Govt C §8897.2(a). The Homeowner's Guide includes a Residential Earthquake Hazards Report form, which is typically completed by the transferor to satisfy this disclosure requirement. The transferor must also disclose any actual knowledge regarding corrective measures taken to address any of the above deficiencies. Govt C §8897.2(b).

In addition, for any unreinforced masonry building with wood-frame floors or roofs built before January 1, 1975, the transferor must, as soon as practicable before the transfer, deliver to the transferee a copy of another pamphlet, entitled "Commercial Property Owner's Guide to Earthquake Safety" (Commercial Guide), published by the Seismic Safety Commission under Bus & P C §10147.

Exemptions are essentially the same as those that apply to the TDS and NHDS (see §6.35), with the additional exemption of transfers in which the transferee has agreed in writing to demolish the dwelling within 1 year of the date of transfer. Govt C §§8897.1(c), 8893.3(j).

If the Homeowner's Guide or Commercial Guide is delivered to a transferee, the transferor is not required to provide any additional information about geologic and seismic hazards in general, and the information in the guides will be deemed sufficient to inform the transferee about such hazards. CC §2079.8(a). Delivery of the guides, however, does not alter the transferor's duties under the transfer disclosure and natural hazard disclosure laws or the duty to disclose the existence of known hazards. CC §2079.8(b).

PRACTICE TIP: Delivery of the Homeowner's Guide and the Residential Earthquake Hazard Report is advisable in all residential transactions, even if not mandatory, because the protections in CC §2079.8(a) are not limited to transactions in which the Guide and Report are mandatory.

c. Environmental Hazards

§6.53 (1) Mandatory Disclosure

The only mandatory state disclosure requirement pertaining to environmental hazards is found in the TDS. (See §6.51 for discussion of the federal lead hazard disclosure requirements.) The TDS (Part II.C.1) requires the transferor to disclose any known "substances, materials, or products which may be an environmental hazard"; specific examples include asbestos, formaldehyde, radon gas, lead-based paint, mold, fuel or chemical storage tanks, and contaminated soil or water. See §6.36. See also chap 7 for a discussion of hazardous waste aspects of real property sale transactions. Actual knowledge of the presence of any of the items enumerated in the TDS must be disclosed. In addition, a seller must consider whether any substance, material, or product present at the property, other than those specifically enumerated on the TDS, "may be an environmental hazard," and if so, disclose it. See §§6.35-6.36.

EXAMPLE: Spray-on acoustical ("popcorn" or "cottage cheese") ceilings and pipe and duct wrapping of a certain age (generally pre-1988) and appearance may contain asbestos. If the seller does not know whether these materials in his or her home contain asbestos, but knows they may, it would be most prudent either to disclose the materials and disclaim any knowledge of their contents, or have the materials tested and disclose the results of the tests. The presence of suspected asbestos-containing materials should also be noted in a competent home inspection report.

NOTE: There are currently no statutory mold disclosure requirements in California. Although the state legislature has enacted comprehensive mold legislation known as the Toxic Mold Protection Act of 2001 (Health & S C §§26100-26157), which amended the TDS form to add "mold" to the list of environmental hazards, the disclosure requirements of the Act do not take effect until after the California Department of Public Health (CDPH) has adopted standards and guidelines for permissible exposure limits (PELs), assessing health threats from mold spores, and remediation of indoor mold. Health & S C §26140(d). In April 2005, CDPH staff released a report concluding that sound, science-based PELs for indoor molds could not be established at that time. A July 2008 CDPH update restates that conclusion. Thus, it is uncertain if and when the Act's disclosure requirements will take effect.

Local ordinances should also be consulted for any environmental matters that should be disclosed.

EXAMPLE: Under the City and County of San Francisco Health Code, if a real property owner has reason to believe that an abandoned underground storage tank (UST) is located under the property, or the immediately adjacent sidewalk or public street, the owner must make a reasonable effort to locate the UST, and if located, submit a plan to close or update, register, or permit the UST. SF Health C, art 21, §1153. San Francisco sellers customarily disclose this requirement to buyers and provide buyers with a written report by a qualified licensed contractor, stating that no USTs have been located. Absent delivery of such a report, buyers should obtain a professional inspection for USTs before the close of escrow.

§6.54 (2) Voluntary Disclosure

The seller and broker can partially satisfy their disclosure duties regarding environmental hazards by providing the transferee with a copy of the consumer booklet "Residential Environmental Hazards: A Guide For Homeowners, Homebuyers, Landlords and Tenants," published by the California Department of Toxic Substances Control. The booklet generally covers the hazards enumerated in the TDS as well as "household hazardous waste." Bus & P C §10084.1. Upon delivery of the booklet to the transferee, the seller and broker will have satisfied the disclosure requirement regarding the common household environmental hazards described in the booklet, and the transferee is deemed to have been adequately informed on the subject. CC §2079.7(a). However, the seller and agent must still disclose any known environmental hazards on or affecting the real property. CC §2079.7(b).

§6.55 d. Drug Lab Cleanup Order

The Methamphetamine Contaminated Property Cleanup Act of 2005 (Health & S C §§25400.10-25400.47) requires local officials, upon determining that a property has been contaminated from the manufacture or storage of methamphetamines, to issue a cleanup order to the property owner. See Health & S C §25400.22. Until the owner receives a notice from the local health official that no further cleanup action is required, the owner must provide written notice and a copy of the order to a prospective buyer, who must acknowledge receipt in writing. Health & S C §25400.28(a).

§6.56 e. Registered Sex Offenders ("Megan's Law")

"Megan's Law" statutes require law enforcement agencies to make available to the public information about registered sex offenders, including their identity, location, and criminal history. See 42 USC §§14071-14073 and final guidelines at 62 Fed Reg 39009 (1997); Pen C §§290.4, 290.45, 290.46. Every contract for the sale of residential real property comprising one to four dwelling units entered into after July 1, 1999, must contain a specified statutory notice regarding access to the database of registered sex offenders maintained by the Department of Justice. CC §2079.10a. The content of the notice differs depending on when the parties entered into the purchase agreement. See CC §2079.10a(a)(3) (required notice language for contracts entered into on or after April 1, 2006).

NOTE: The Megan's Law notice language is incorporated into the CAR California Residential Purchase Agreement and Joint Escrow Instructions, ¶5.C (see §6.24). See CC §2079.10a(1).

On delivery of the required notice, the seller, lessor, or broker is not required to provide additional information regarding the proximity of registered sex offenders; however, compliance with the notice requirement does not alter any existing duty of disclosure under other statutes or case law. CC §2079.10a(b)-(c). Delivery of the notice does not give rise to a cause of action by the registered sex offender against the disclosing party. CC §2079.10a(b).

§6.57 f. Smoke Detector Compliance Statement

In California, all dwelling units intended for human occupancy must have operable smoke detectors that have been approved and listed by the State Fire Marshal and installed in accordance with the Fire Marshal's regulations. Health & S C §§13113.7-13113.8. Local ordinances requiring smoke detectors in single-family dwellings may be enacted as long as they satisfy statutory minimum requirements. Health & S C §13113.8(h).

Before the transfer of a single-family dwelling, the seller must deliver to the buyer, in the purchase contract or the addendum or in a separate document, a written statement that the property complies with the statutory smoke detector requirements. Health & S C §13113.8(b). Delivery must be in-person or by mail to the buyer or his or her spouse, unless the purchase contract provides otherwise, or to the buyer's authorized agent in the transaction. Health & S C §13113.8(c). CAR Form WHSD can be used to satisfy this requirement. Exceptions to the smoke detector compliance statement requirement are set forth in §13113.8(d) and essentially track the exemptions set forth in CC §1102.2 (discussed in §6.35). The failure to deliver a compliance statement does not invalidate a transfer of title; rather, the exclusive remedy is an award of actual damages not to exceed $100, exclusive of attorney fees and costs. Health & S C §13113.8(g).

PRACTICE TIP: Although the statute requires delivery of a compliance statement only in the sale of a "single-family dwelling," the substantive smoke detector requirements apply to all types of residential dwellings, and the compliance statement is typically given voluntarily by sellers of condominiums and other residential property interests.

§6.58 g. Water Heater Compliance Statement

All existing residential water heaters, and new and replacement water heaters sold in California, must be braced, anchored, or strapped, to resist falling or horizontal displacement caused by earthquake motion, in accordance with the requirements of the California Plumbing Code or local modifications to it. Health & S C §19211(a). "Water heater" is defined to include those with a capacity of not more than 120 gallons for which a pre-engineered strapping kit is readily available. Health & S C §19211(d). The Division of the State Architect has published "Guidelines for Earthquake Bracing of Residential Water Heaters," which is available on the Publications page of the State Architect's website. See the Directory for the address.

A seller of real property that contains a water heater must certify to a prospective buyer in writing that the water heater complies with this law. Health & S C §19211(b). There are no exemptions. CAR Form WHSD may be used to comply with this law.

§6.59 h. Structural Pest Control Inspection Report

There is no statutory requirement that a seller obtain and deliver to the buyer a structural pest control inspection report prepared under Bus & P C §8516. When the purchase agreement or lender requires such a report as a condition of the transfer or financing, however, the seller or agent must deliver a copy of the report to the buyer as soon as practicable before the transfer of title. CC §1099(a). Delivery may be in-person or to the buyer or his or her spouse or agent. CC §1099(c). A seller's failure to comply with §1099 will not invalidate the transfer of title unless the seller's conduct would be a valid ground for rescission absent the statute. CC §1099(d). If the seller obtains more than one pest control inspection report, copies of all such reports must be delivered to the buyer. Godfrey v Steinpress (1982) 128 CA3d 154, 173, 180 CR 95.

§6.60 4. Common Interest Development Disclosures

Three statutory disclosure requirements apply to the sale of separate interests in common interest developments (CIDs), including condominiums, stock cooperatives, community apartment projects, and planned developments:

- For all transactions involving CIDs, required disclosures are set forth in the Davis-Stirling Common Interest Development Act (Davis-Stirling Act) (CC §§1350-1378). CC §1368. See §6.61.
- For transactions involving the sale of newly converted condominiums, required disclosures are set forth in CC §1134. See §6.62.
- For transactions involving the sale of units in a new CID project, required disclosures are set forth in Bus & P C §11018.6. See §6.63.

For further information on common interest developments, see Forming California Common Interest Developments (Cal CEB 2004); Advising California Common Interest Communities (Cal CEB 2003).

§6.61 a. Davis-Stirling Act Disclosures

Under CC §1368, the owner of a separate interest in a CID must make extensive disclosures of the following information and documents to a prospective buyer as soon as practicable before transfer of title (CID disclosures):

- A copy of the CID's "governing documents," including the declaration (i.e., CC&Rs), articles of incorporation (or an authorized statement that the association is unincorporated), bylaws, operating rules, and any other documents governing the operation of the CID or the association that manages it (CC §1368(a)(1));
- If the CID is age-restricted in a manner not authorized by CC §51.3 ("senior citizen" housing), a statement that the restriction is enforceable only to the extent permitted by CC §51.3 (CC §1368(a)(2));
- A copy of the CID's operating budget, summary of reserves, insurance, and other financial documents and information prepared and distributed by the association to its members in accordance with CC §1365 (CC §1368(a)(3));
- A statement from an authorized representative of the association of current assessment amounts, any unpaid assessments, monetary fines or penalties levied on the owner's unit, and any late charges, interest, or costs that may become a lien on the owner's interest in the CID (CC §1368(a)(4));
- A copy or summary of any unresolved notice of violation of the governing documents sent to the owner (CC §1368(a)(5));
- A copy of any initial list of construction defects prepared in accordance with CC §1375, unless the association and builder have settled and the association has complied with the post-settlement disclosure requirements of §1375.1, in which case such disclosures must be made (CC §1368(a)(6)-(7)); and
- Any changes in the association's assessments that have been approved but are not yet due and payable (CC §1368(a)(8)).

Homeowners' associations are required, within 10 days of receiving a written request, to provide the owner with a copy of all of the above documents, and may charge a reasonable fee based on the association's actual cost to comply with the request. CC §1368(b). This is the extent of the homeowners' association's legal obligation in connection with CID disclosures. The association does not owe a disclosure duty to the potential purchaser of a separate interest in a CID. See Kovich v Paseo Del Mar Homeowners' Ass'n (1996) 41 CA4th 863, 866, 48 CR2d 758 (association has no duty to disclose construction defects to potential purchaser of condo).

A failure to comply with the requirements of §1368 does not invalidate transfer of title. A person who willfully violates §1368, however, is liable to the purchaser of the separate interest for actual damages, a civil penalty not to exceed $500, and attorney fees. CC §1368(d)-(e).

§6.62 b. Disclosures in First Sale of Conversion Units

When an existing dwelling has been converted to a condominium, stock cooperative, or community apartment project, the owner or subdivider, before transfer of title for the first sale of a unit and after performing a reasonable inspection, must deliver to a prospective buyer a written statement that either lists all substantial defects or malfunctions in the major systems in the unit and the common areas of the project or disclaims any knowledge of any such defect or malfunction. CC §1134(a).

As with the Transfer Disclosure Statement (see §6.35), if the statement is delivered after the buyer has executed a purchase contract, the buyer has 3 days after personal delivery of the statement, or 5 days after delivery by deposit in the mail, to rescind the purchase contract in writing. If delivered after the contract is executed, the statement must include a statement of the buyer's right, method, and time to rescind. CC §1134(b).

The written statement is not intended to abridge or limit other applicable disclosure obligations. CC §1134(g). Failure to comply with §1134 will not invalidate a transfer of title. CC §1134(f). A person who willfully violates §1134, however, is liable for actual damages suffered by the buyer. CC §1134(d). In addition, the injured party may pursue any other available legal remedies. CC §1134(e).

§6.63 c. Disclosures in First Sale of Units in a New Common Interest Development

In the case of a new common interest development (CID) for which a public report is required, the seller of the separate interests must allow a potential buyer to review the following (and must give an actual buyer copies as early as possible in advance of the title transfer): the governing documents for the subdivision, current financial information and related statements specified in CC §1365(a) to the extent they are available (see §6.61), and a statement of outstanding delinquent accounts. Bus & P C §11018.6. In addition, when the public report is delivered, the developer must also give the potential buyer the detailed statement of general information about CIDs specified in Bus & P C §11018.1(c).

§6.64 5. New Home Sales Disclosures

Residential dwellings built after January 1, 2003, are subject to certain minimum standards for residential construction. CC §896. For example, builders of such homes must provide a minimum 1-year express written limited warranty covering the fit and finish of certain specified building components. CC §900. In addition, detailed alternative dispute resolution (ADR) and other pre-litigation procedures govern the resolution of construction defect disputes involving such homes. CC §§910-945.5. (For a thorough discussion of construction defect actions from the developer's perspective, see Forming California Common Interest Developments §§8.30-8.63 (Cal CEB 2004); for a discussion from the homeowner associations' perspective, see Advising California Common Interest Communities §§10.25-10.41 (Cal CEB 2003).)

Under CC §912, a builder must provide the following information and documents to a new home buyer "in conjunction with the initial sale of the residence" and thereafter within 30 days of service of a written request for documents at the homeowner's expense:

- Copies of all maintenance and preventive maintenance recommendations that pertain to the homeowner's residence (CC §912(b));
- Copies of all manufactured products maintenance, preventive maintenance, and limited warranty information (CC §912(c));
- Copies of all of the builder's limited contractual warranties in effect at the time of the original sale (CC §912(d));
- Disclosure (by recording on title) of the ADR and pre-litigation procedures established by CC §§910-938, with a statement that these procedures affect homeowners' legal rights (CC §912(f));
- A written copy of CC §§895-945.5 (CC §912(g)); and
- An instruction to the homebuyer that he or she must provide subsequent buyers with "any documents provided in conjunction with the original sale" (CC §912(h)).

A builder who fails to timely comply with any of the above requirements is not entitled to the protection of CC §§895-945.5, and the homeowner may pursue an action against the builder without having to comply with the ADR and other pre-litigation procedures in the law. CC §912(i).

6. Miscellaneous Disclosures

§6.65 a. Death or Illness of Occupant of Property

To address uncertainty about a seller's and broker's obligation, if any, to disclose the death of an occupant of residential property, or the fact that the occupant was afflicted with, or died from, the virus that causes AIDS, the legislature enacted CC §1710.2. The concern regarding disclosure of death at a property arose out of Reed v King (1983) 145 CA3d 261, 193 CR 130 (multiple murder that occurred at property 10 years before sale was material and had to be disclosed if it could be shown the murder significantly affected market value). The need to address AIDS disclosures arose out of what the legislature characterized in 1986 as "public fears or anxieties [regarding AIDS] approaching, in some circumstances, panic or hysteria." Stats 1986, ch 498, §1(b).

A seller or its agent will not be liable to a buyer for failing to disclose that an occupant died on the property, or the manner of death, if the death occurred more than 3 years before the date of the buyer's purchase offer, or that an occupant of the property had, or died from, the virus that causes AIDS. CC §1710.2(a). This liability protection does not modify any other disclosure obligation pertaining to physical or mental conditions or diseases (other than AIDS) or the physical condition of the property, and does not immunize a seller or agent who intentionally misrepresents the facts regarding a death at the property in response to a direct question from a prospective buyer. CC §1710.2(d).

If an occupant dies within 3 years before the date of the purchase offer from a cause other than AIDS, the death must be disclosed if it significantly affects market value. See Reed, 145 CA3d at 268. Reed, which was decided at the pleading stage, held that the issue of whether a particular death significantly affected the market value of a property must be proved with competent evidence and that, in deciding the question, the trier of fact may rely on expert opinion and common knowledge and experience. Reed v King, supra. To date, no published decision has considered whether death from a cause other than a multiple murder—such as death from a single murder or suicide or natural causes (including diseases other than AIDS)—would be material so as to require disclosure.

PRACTICE TIP: It is probably most prudent to disclose the death of an occupant that occurred within 3 years before a purchase offer, regardless of the cause of death (other than death from AIDS). This eliminates the need to evaluate materiality generally or under the specific facts of the transaction, and thus avoids exposure to liability. The seller should disclose the manner of death only if it is known. The seller has no duty to investigate an unknown cause of death.

§6.66 b. Advisability of Title Insurance

In a transaction for the purchase or simultaneous exchange of real property for which title insurance will not be issued to the buyer or the parties to the exchange, a specified notice regarding the advisability of purchasing title insurance must be provided to, and signed and acknowledged by, the buyer or exchange parties. CC §1057.6. For a discussion of available title insurance, see California Title Insurance Practice (2d ed Cal CEB 1997).

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.67 c. FHA/HUD Inspection Disclosure

For every resale of residential real property containing one to four units that will involve Federal Housing Administration (FHA) mortgage insurance, the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) requires the lender to deliver to the buyer a disclosure form entitled "For Your Protection: Get a Home Inspection" (Form HUD 92564-CN). See HUD Mortgagee Letters 99-18, 99-33, 06-24, available on the HUD website; see the Directory for the website address.

§6.68 d. Flood Disaster Insurance Requirements

If a person has received federal flood disaster assistance on the condition that flood insurance be maintained, and the person fails to maintain such insurance, federal law prohibits the use of federal funds for the repair, replacement, or restoration of damage to that person's personal, residential, and commercial property. 42 USC §5154a(a). If such property is not insured, then on transfer of the property the transferor must give written notice to the transferee, in the transfer documents, of the requirement to obtain and maintain flood insurance on the property. 42 USC §5154a(b)(1). If the transferor fails to give the required notice and the transferee receives federal relief in a subsequent flood disaster, the transferor will be required to reimburse the federal government. 42 USC §5154a(b)(2).

§6.69 e. Financing Disclosures

If a seller finances any portion of the buyer's purchase price for a property with up to four residential units, and the terms of the financing are negotiated or arranged by a third person who receives direct or indirect compensation for doing so, the credit arranger must provide to the buyer and seller—and the parties must provide to each other—written disclosure of certain information within their personal knowledge. CC §2956. The matters that must be disclosed include identification of the note and security and various warnings regarding the dangers of such financing. CC §2963. Attorneys representing any of the parties to the credit transaction are exempt from the disclosure requirements. CC §2957(a)(1). Disclosure is not required when the buyer is entitled to receive a disclosure under the Federal Truth in Lending Act (15 USC §1604), the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act (RESPA) (12 USC §2601), or Bus & P C §10240. CC §2958.

If the loan is made for more than 1 year, is secured by a deed of trust on property with one to four residential units, and has a balloon payment at the end of the loan term, the holder of the note must comply with CC §2966 by sending to the borrower, 90 to 150 days before the loan is due, a statement that includes the following:

- The name and address of the person to whom the balloon payment is to be made (CC §2966(a)(1));
- The due date of the balloon payment (CC §2966(a)(2));
- The exact amount of the balloon payment or, if unknown, a good faith estimate of the amount (CC §2966(a)(3)); and
- A statement that the borrower has a contractual right to refinance the final payment, when the borrower has such a right (CC §2966(a)(4)).

§6.70 f. Home Energy Rating Program

Public Resources Code §25402.9 requires the State Energy Commission to publish an informational booklet about the statewide home energy rating program adopted under Pub Res C §25942. When the booklet becomes available, a transferor who delivers a copy of the booklet to the transferee will not be required to provide additional information to the transferee about home energy ratings, and the booklet will be deemed sufficient to inform the transferee on the subject matter. CC §2079.10. As with other such consumer information booklets and guides, delivery of the booklet by the transferor does not alter the duty of disclosure under any other law. CC §2079.10(b).

NOTE: Federal law requires sellers of newly constructed homes and units to disclose the type, thickness, and R-value of insulation installed or to be installed in all parts of the house. 16 CFR §460.16.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.71 IV. BUYER'S DUE DILIGENCE

The seller's disclosures are primarily intended to provide a buyer with information on material aspects of the transaction that are known to or accessible only to the seller and not known to or within the diligent attention or observation of the buyer. See §6.30. Conversely, buyers must act with reasonable care or "due diligence" in a transaction to protect their own interests, which includes discovering matters that are obvious and patent and investigating the details regarding facts disclosed by the seller. See §§6.72-6.77.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.72 A. Buyer's Duty of Self-Protection

A buyer has a duty to exercise reasonable care to protect himself or herself in a real estate transaction. In Easton v Strassburger (1984) 152 CA3d 90, 103, 199 CR 383, which established the duty of the seller's agent to investigate and disclose reasonably discoverable defects to the buyer, the court noted that the agent's duty does not relieve a buyer of its own duty "to exercise reasonable care to protect himself." Although Easton cited no authority for such a buyer's duty, in 1985 the legislature codified Easton's holding in CC §§2079-2079.24*,* which it characterized as declarative of the common law. CC §2079.12(a)(4). The agent's duty of disclosure does not relieve "a buyer or prospective buyer of the duty to exercise reasonable care to protect himself or herself, including [the duty to investigate] those facts which are known to or within the diligent attention and observation of the buyer or prospective buyer." CC §2079.5. Whether the buyer reasonably protected himself or herself is an issue of fact that depends on all the circumstances of the case. Furla v Jon Douglas Co. (1998) 65 CA4th 1069, 1079, 76 CR2d 911.

Before the enactment of CC §2079.5, it was well established that a buyer will be deemed to be aware of matters that are within his or her diligent attention and observation and conditions that are obvious and patent. 65 CA4th at 1079, citing Tarrant v Butler (1960) 180 CA2d 235, 4 CR 230. Whether a condition is obvious and patent is a question of fact. 180 CA2d at 240; Sanfran Co. v Rees Blow Pipe Mfg. Co. (1959) 168 CA2d 191, 202, 335 P2d 995.

PRACTICE TIP: Because the buyer will be deemed to know of matters within his or her diligent attention and observation, it is always advisable that the buyer personally inspect the property in addition to the inspections required of the agents in the transaction, even though CC §2079.5 does not impose an affirmative duty on a buyer to inspect or investigate facts material to the contemplated purchase. Moreover, unless the buyer has expertise in matters such as residential construction, major building components and systems, and wood-destroying organisms, it is recommended that professional inspections be performed. See §§6.75-6.77.

§6.73 B. Buyer's Duty to Investigate

The issue of the buyer's duty to investigate generally arises in defense of fraud and negligence claims brought by a buyer against the seller and agents in a transaction. Defendants usually argue that the buyer's failure to act diligently or exercise reasonable care in a transaction negates an essential element of the buyer's fraud claim (e.g., reasonable or justified reliance on the alleged misrepresentation), or defeats a negligence claim to the extent that the buyer's own lack of care was the proximate cause of its damages, or that defendants' liability should be reduced to the extent of the buyer's comparative negligence.

It is a well-established general rule that a buyer is justified in relying on a seller's representation of fact without independent investigation or verification, even if the buyer had an opportunity to conduct an investigation that would have disclosed the falsity of the seller's representation. See, e.g., Hobart v Hobart Estate Co. (1945) 26 C2d 412, 437, 159 P2d 958; Seeger v Odell (1941) 18 C2d 409, 115 P2d 977 (buyer's failure to investigate matters of public record not defense to active, affirmative misrepresentation); Storage Servs. v Oosterbaan (1989) 214 CA3d 498, 508, 262 CR 689. See also Manderville v PCG&S Group, Inc. (2007) 146 CA4th 1486, 1503, 55 CR3d 59 (buyer's reliance on selling agent's intentional misrepresentation negates buyer's contractual duty to investigate).

A buyer cannot claim justified reliance, however, if, under all the circumstances, including the buyer's knowledge, experience, and intelligence, such reliance was "preposterous and irrational," or if the buyer was aware of facts that would reasonably create a suspicion that the seller's representation was false, or if the buyer discovers the falsity of a material representation. Hobart, 26 C2d at 442; Hartong v Partake, Inc. (1968) 266 CA2d 942, 965, 72 CR 722; Tarrant v Butler (1960) 180 CA2d 235, 239, 4 CR 230; Carpenter v Hamilton (1936) 18 CA2d 69, 75, 62 P2d 1397. Under such circumstances, the buyer has a duty to further investigate the facts. For the definition of constructive notice, see CC §19.

A duty to investigate also arises once a seller discloses an essential fact to the buyer, after which additional details about the disclosed matter will be deemed to be within the buyer's own diligent attention. Stevenson v Baum (1998) 65 CA4th 159, 166, 75 CR2d 904 (statement in purchase agreement that title is subject to easements of record created duty for buyer to inspect public records to learn details about easements); Pagano v Krohn (1997) 60 CA4th 1, 10, 70 CR2d 1 (once seller disclosed existence of water intrusion and related litigation against developer, buyer had a duty to investigate contents of the lawsuit). When the buyer actually conducts an inspection of the property, the buyer will be presumed to know all information that would be disclosed by an inspection conducted with ordinary diligence. Gifford v Roberts (1947) 81 CA2d 712, 718, 184 P2d 942.

PRACTICE TIP: If a buyer chooses to rely on seller representations without independent investigation, a subsequent fraud claim by the buyer is unlikely to succeed if the matter involved is found to have been obvious and patent such that it would have been discovered in the course of a reasonably diligent inspection, or if the buyer failed to investigate the relevant details of an essential fact disclosed by the seller.

§6.74 C. Scope of Buyer's Due Diligence

In every real estate transaction, the buyer must determine the appropriate scope of due diligence. This will depend, among other things, on the type and condition of the property, its intended use, its location, and the extent and quality of the seller's disclosures, as well as the buyer's knowledge, experience, and particular issues of concern. A competent real estate attorney, considering these factors, can assist the buyer in designing an appropriate scope of due diligence for the transaction.

The California Residential Purchase Agreement and Joint Escrow Instructions (see §6.24) gives the buyer the right, but not the obligation, to investigate the condition and suitability of the property to be purchased, all aspects of the property, and all matters affecting its value or desirability. See Manderville v PCG&S Group, Inc. (2007) 146 CA4th 1486, 1503, 55 CR3d 59. CAR's Buyer's Inspection Advisory (Form BIA), which is typically incorporated into the purchase contract (see §6.25), is useful for this task, as is the more detailed Statewide Buyer and Seller Advisory (Form SBSA), which is also widely used (see §6.27).

In most transactions, the buyer's due diligence with respect to the physical condition of the property will include the buyer's review of seller disclosures, agents' written disclosures of defects observed during their visual inspections of accessible areas of the property, a wood-destroying organism (pest) inspection and report, a home inspection and report, and the buyer's own property inspection. During inspections, the buyer, agents, and professionals should also be alert to property conditions that might suggest an unrecorded easement, such as the presence of sewage pipes, or fences, gates, and pathways, the purpose of which are not apparent. Regardless of the results of the buyer's inspections, the buyer may elect to conduct further inspections of major systems, such as roof, fireplace, septic system, as well as drainage, soil, and geologic conditions. Property inspections are discussed in §6.75.

The buyer should also investigate off-site conditions that may affect the use and enjoyment of the property, particularly if the buyer is unfamiliar with the neighborhood or has particular concerns. This off-site investigation may include the identity of the owners or occupants of adjacent properties and any unresolved neighbor disputes, the proximity of any registered sex offenders, neighborhood crime statistics, noise, unusual odors, and other nuisances.

In addition, the buyer should investigate matters of record that affect title to the property, such as recorded easements. See §§6.78-6.81. The buyer should obtain and review full copies of all documents recorded against the property.

If the property is a common interest development (CID), the buyer should carefully review, with the assistance of competent counsel, the extensive CID Disclosures, including the subdivision's governing documents, operating rules, and financial information. See §§6.60-6.63. Some of the more important matters to consider include whether the development has age or rental restrictions; the allocation of responsibility, as between owners and the homeowners' association, for maintenance, repair, and replacement of the separate interests, common area, and exclusive-use common areas; the association's insurance coverage (including property, liability, and earthquake coverage, if any), deductibles, and policy limits; and architectural controls and the procedure for obtaining approval of proposed modifications.

The buyer should also investigate governmental regulations that may affect the use of the property, such as zoning, permit requirements, development policies and restrictions, and future proposed, planned, or approved development nearby. If the property is a rental, the practitioner must research and advise the client on any applicable rent control ordinances or eviction controls and their effect on the client's ability to adjust existing rents, evict existing tenants, or freely rent the property in the future.

A buyer with children should contact local school districts regarding school assignment policies and practices. The buyer should also confirm the insurability of the property with a local insurance agent.

§6.75 D. Property Inspections

In most residential transactions, a wood-destroying pest or organism inspection ("pest inspection") and a home inspection are typically performed, followed by any additional inspections that may be recommended or desired based on the condition of the property and the buyer's particular concerns. These inspections cover different matters and are regulated by different statutes.

§6.76 1. Pest Inspection

Pest inspections are regulated by Bus & P C §§8500-8697.5. Pest inspectors, referred to in the statute as "field representatives," must be duly licensed by the Structural Pest Control Board and employed by a registered pest control company. Bus & P C §§8506.1, 8507. The address of every property inspected must be reported to the Board on a prescribed form no later than 10 business days after the inspection. Bus & P C §8516(b). The inspector must deliver to the person requesting the inspection, within the same time period, a report of the inspection on an approved form, meeting detailed statutory requirements. Bus & P C §8516.5. The report, among other things, must identify areas of the property that were inaccessible or otherwise not inspected and include recommendations for corrective measures. Bus & P C §8516(b)(9)-(10). These recommendations are separated into "Section 1" work for infestation or infection that is evident, and "Section 2" work for conditions that are deemed likely to lead to infestation or infection, and must include cost estimates for each such item (if cost estimates are requested and the pest company performs corrective work). Bus & P C §8516(c)(1)-(2). The inspection company must retain the original report and field notes for 3 years and must make reports available to the Board for inspection and copying or submit a copy to the Board upon request. Bus & P C §8516(i).

There is no statutory requirement that conditions identified in a pest report be corrected. If the party responsible for correction of pest work in the transaction chooses not to have the corrective work performed, the pest inspector and pest control company will not be liable for any resulting damages. However, they may be liable if found to have been negligent in the performance of the inspection. Bus & P C §8516(d). The buyer and seller may, as a matter of contract, allocate responsibility between them for correcting all or a portion of the pest work. See the California Residential Purchase Agreement and Joint Escrow Instructions, ¶4.A, in §6.24. Separately, the buyer's lender, if it has requested and reviewed the pest inspection report, may require completion of some or all of the pest work as a condition to funding the buyer's loan.

When corrective work is performed, the pest control company must complete, on a form specified by the Board, a notice of work completed and not completed, and deliver the form to the property owner and file it with the Board within 10 working days after completing the work. Originals must be retained by the pest company for 3 years, made available to the Board to review and copy, or submitted to the Board within 2 business days of a request. Bus & P C §8518. A reinspection may be performed to inspect corrective work that has been completed and must be reported on a specified form. After 4 months, however, another original inspection is required. Bus & P C §8516(b)(13). When the pest inspection has disclosed no infestation or infection, or after all corrective work has been performed and reinspected, the pest company must, on request, execute a certification that the property is free of "evidence of active infestation or infection" in visible and accessible areas. Bus & P C §8519. This certification may be given even if Section 2 work has been identified in the pest report. Bus & P C §8516(e). For information about obtaining copies of inspection reports from the Structural Pest Control Board, see the Directory.

PRACTICE TIP: The cost to correct pest infestation or infection can be material to a transaction. Therefore, it is generally advisable for a seller to have a pest inspection before marketing the property for sale. This eliminates surprises during the buyer's inspection period and allows the parties to account for the pest work in the purchase price or other transaction terms. In a "seller's market," with multiple offers on properties, a pest inspection report is typically given to potential bidders to review with the implicit understanding that a successful bidder will assume responsibility for the pest work. In a "buyer's market," the buyer will often require the seller to agree, in the purchase agreement, before a pest inspection has even been performed, to correct all Section 1 conditions and obtain a pest certification or "clearance," and even to correct Section 2 conditions. It is not advisable for sellers to assume contractual responsibility to perform Section 1 (or Section 2) work until after a pest inspection has been performed, because this exposes the seller to a potentially substantial, unknown liability. One alternative is for the parties to address all issues involving the physical condition of the property (including those revealed during the home inspection) at one time in conjunction with the buyer's removal of its inspection contingency. See §§6.20-6.22.

§6.77 2. Home Inspection

Home inspections are regulated by Bus & P C §§7195-7199. A "home inspection" is a noninvasive physical examination, performed for a fee in connection with the transfer of real property, of the essential systems, components, or structure of a residential dwelling of one to four units, which is designed to identify material defects. Bus & P C §7195(a)(1). A "material defect" is defined as a condition that significantly affects the value, desirability, habitability, or safety of the dwelling, without reference to style or aesthetics. Bus & P C §7195(b). A home inspection also includes any consultation regarding the property that is represented to be a home inspection "or any confusingly similar term." Bus & P C §7195(a)(1). A home inspection may also include, if requested by the client, an inspection of the energy efficiency of the property. Bus & P C §7195(a)(2). See also Pub Res C §25401.7 (home inspector to provide contact information for governmental and private entities that provide home energy information).

A home inspector is any person who performs a home inspection. Bus & P C §7195(c). A home inspector who is not a licensed general contractor, structural pest control operator, architect, or registered professional engineer must perform a home inspection with the degree of care that a reasonably prudent home inspector would exercise. Bus & P C §7196. That standard is established by the standards of practice and code of ethics of the California Real Estate Inspection Association, the American Society of Home Inspectors, or other nationally recognized professional home inspection associations. Stats 1996, ch 338, §1.

A home inspection report is a written report prepared for a fee that is issued after the home inspection and clearly describes and identifies the inspected systems, structures, or components of the dwelling, and any material defects identified, and makes recommendations regarding conditions observed that may warrant further investigation or evaluation by other appropriate persons. Bus & P C §7195(c). Thus, the home inspection often functions much like an examination by a medical general practitioner, who makes appropriate referrals to specialists depending on the conditions observed during the exam. Based on the home inspector's recommendations or particular concerns of the buyer, additional inspections are often made of the roof, fireplace and chimney, swimming pool, foundation, and site drainage, and samples may be taken of suspected asbestos-containing materials and lead paint.

Any contractual provision purporting to waive the statutory duty of care for a home inspection or limiting the liability of the inspector to the fee for the inspection is contrary to public policy and invalid. Bus & P C §7198. The limitations period for an inspector's breach of the duty of care is 4 years from the date of the inspection. Bus & P C §7199.

Under the home inspector statute (Bus & P C §7197(a)), it is an unfair business practice for an inspector or inspection company, or an affiliated company, to do any of the following:

- Offer to perform for a fee any repair to a structure for which they performed an inspection within the past 12 months;
- Inspect any property in which they have an interest;
- Pay brokers or agents for referrals; or
- Accept an engagement or a fee that is contingent on the conclusions of the report, preestablished findings, or the close of escrow.

The above prohibitions do not prevent a structural pest control operator from performing repairs as a result of a structural pest control inspection. Bus & P C §7197(b).

PRACTICE TIP: The quality of home inspectors and their work product varies widely depending on the inspector's background, education and experience, and familiarity with the type of construction in the locality, among other things. The client should investigate the inspector's qualifications and membership in professional associations and the standard to be applied to the inspection. The client should also request evidence of errors and omissions coverage. Counsel should review the home inspection company's form contract for questionable provisions, including efforts to limit the inspector's liability or a requirement that the client indemnify the inspector from and against third party claims.

§6.78 V. TITLE AND VESTING

Buyers' decisions regarding title issues go to the heart of every real estate transaction but often are given only passing consideration in residential transactions. The three main areas that require attention are:

- The condition of title, including all recorded and unrecorded matters affecting title (see §§6.79-6.81);
- Selection of an appropriate scope of title insurance coverage (see §§6.82-6.85); and
- Vesting of title (see §§6.86-6.92).

Decisions on these issues establish the precise real property interests being purchased, the persons and entities that are acquiring such interests and, if more than one, their respective interests and rights to convey and devise their interests, and insurance protection against challenges to such rights.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.79 A. Condition of Title

A buyer of real estate is entitled to receive "marketable title" to the property being acquired. King v Stanley (1948) 32 C2d 584, 197 P2d 321. On marketability of title, see §§4.50-4.51 and California Title Insurance Practice §§6.24-6.26 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997). Ultimately, the buyer will be required to accept title subject to both recorded and unrecorded matters, except for monetary liens that the buyer is not assuming and other matters affecting title that the seller has agreed in writing to remove. See the CAR California Residential Purchase Agreement and Joint Escrow Instructions, ¶12.B, in §6.24. Therefore, in every residential transaction, the buyer must have an opportunity to review and approve title, with the assistance of a competent professional.

§6.80 1. Recorded Interests in the Property

In every transaction, a Preliminary Report should be ordered from the title company the parties have selected to issue a policy of title insurance at closing. The Preliminary Report discloses, as of a specified date:

- The estate or interest in land being conveyed (e.g., fee, condominium in fee);
- The legal description of the land;
- The identity of the person in whom title to the estate or interest is vested;
- Liens, encumbrances, and other matters recorded against the land, which will be excepted and excluded from coverage; and
- Various informational notes regarding the form of title insurance contemplated, recent conveyances of the subject estate or interest, and other relevant matters.

If the property is a separate interest in a common interest development, the preliminary report will also:

- Identify the type of interest being conveyed (condominium, planned development, stock cooperative);
- Describe the separate unit or lot (generally by reference to a condominium map);
- Specify any exclusive-use common areas appurtenant to the unit or lot (e.g., deck, storage area, parking space) and the allocated percentage interest in the common area; and
- Identify the recorded declaration of conditions governing the development.

The Preliminary Report should be updated through the closing date to capture any newly recorded interests. For a more detailed discussion of the Preliminary Report, see California Title Insurance Practice §5.29 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997).

The Preliminary Report is not a representation as to the condition of title, but rather is an offer, in consideration for payment of a specified premium, to issue a specified title insurance product insuring against loss resulting from defects, liens, and encumbrances that are not shown as exceptions and exclusions in the Preliminary Report and are not otherwise excluded in the policy's pre-printed language attached to the Preliminary Report. Lawrence v Chicago Title Ins. Co. (1987) 192 CA3d 70, 74, 237 CR 264; Ins C §§12340.11, 12414.30(b).

The buyer's approval of the condition of title should be a contingency of every residential transaction. The only time this rule would not apply is when the buyer has received a Preliminary Report from an acceptable title insurer and has evaluated the title, with professional advice, before submitting a purchase offer. The CAR California Residential Purchase Agreement and Joint Escrow Instructions, ¶12.A (see §6.24) makes the buyer's approval of title a contingency of the transaction.

The scope of a buyer's review and evaluation of the Preliminary Report will depend on the nature of the property and the liens and encumbrances affecting it, as well as the buyer's intended use or other personal concerns. On reviewing preliminary reports, see California Title Insurance Practice §§2.5-2.11 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997). On preliminary reports generally, see Title Ins, chap 5. A buyer who intends to make improvements to the property should consider having an architect, engineer, or contractor review the report for locations of easements, setbacks, and the like (in addition to investigating local land use requirements applicable to the property). See §6.74.

At a minimum, in every transaction the buyer's title review should include the following:

- Confirm the vesting of title. Often title to residential property is held by a revocable trust (for estate planning purposes) but the seller is identified as the person who is the trustor. In that case, the trust documents should be reviewed by the title company to confirm that the seller-trustor or any successor trustee has the legal capacity to convey the property. Alternatively, as is more customary, the title company should obtain from the seller a Certification of Trust pursuant to Prob C §18100.5. See Drafting California Revocable Trusts §22.1 (4th ed Cal CEB 2003). If title is vested in a married person as his or her separate property, a quitclaim deed from the other spouse is advisable.
- Review the legal description of the property. The extent to which this review is conducted depends on the type of property involved. For example, a metes-and-bounds description usually is not verified unless boundaries or easement locations are material to the particular buyer. When property is described by reference to a parcel map, the map should be reviewed. Maps often depict the location of easements or disclose other matters affecting title. For common interest developments, the separate interest being purchased is typically described by reference to a recorded map that depicts the "unit" or "lot" and depicts any exclusive-use common areas (deck, storage area, parking space) appurtenant to the separate interest, to which an exclusive easement is granted.

For a thorough discussion of property descriptions, see chap 11.

- Review easements and liens. Review documentation of all easements and liens that will survive closing and will be excepted and excluded from title insurance. This crucial task is often overlooked. The buyer should obtain from the title company the underlying documentation of every lien on the property, except for monetary liens that are to be paid off at closing (e.g., the seller's loan, unless it is being assumed by the buyer). The identification of recorded documents in the Preliminary Report is intended to put the buyer on notice. The buyer must then obtain the document to ascertain its terms. For example, if the property is subject to an easement, the buyer should review the easement agreement, which may contain payment terms and other rights and obligations that run with the land.

After the buyer completes the title review and before the agreed contingency period expires, the buyer should provide the seller, in writing, with a list of any matters affecting title that are disapproved and require the seller to agree to remove such matters before, and as a condition of, closing. Supplemental escrow instructions, typically prepared by the escrow company, should reference the title exceptions that will survive escrow. These instructions should be reviewed carefully to make sure that no matters disapproved by the buyer have been included. On escrow instructions, see §§15.31-15.74.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.81 2. Unrecorded Interests in the Property

The seller has a duty to disclose to the buyer all known matters affecting title, whether or not recorded. See §§6.36-6.37. Nevertheless, the buyer should be advised, as part of its property inspection, to look for any evidence of undisclosed interests (e.g., easements), particularly if the buyer intends to develop or use the property in a manner different from its existing use. If unrecorded interests affecting the use and development of the land are a concern, the buyer should attempt to secure a title insurance endorsement covering such matters. See California Title Insurance Practice, chap 6 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997).

§6.82 B. Residential Title Insurance Policies

The most commonly used forms of title insurance in California are published by the California Land Title Association (CLTA) and the American Land Title Association (ALTA). Both CLTA and ALTA offer separate policy forms for owners and lenders. In residential transactions in California involving one to four residential units, it is now most common to use the CLTA Homeowner's Policy in conjunction with the ALTA Loan Policy. ALTA's Homeowner's Policy is also used, although its coverage is generally not as broad as the CLTA Homeowner's Policy. Both the CLTA and ALTA policies are written in "plain language" and only insure "natural persons," which is defined to include trustees, including institutional trustees. The CAR California Residential Purchase Agreement and Joint Escrow Instructions, ¶12.E (see §6.24) provides that the buyer will receive the CLTA/ALTA Homeowner's Policy. For a copy of the CLTA/ALTA Homeowner's Policy form, see California Title Insurance Practice, App O (2d ed Cal CEB 1997). For a detailed discussion of residential title insurance policies, see Title Ins §§7.36-7.49.

The following sections generally discuss key provisions of the CLTA Homeowner's Policy with reference to differences in coverage under the ALTA Homeowner's Policy. Because the scope of coverage and application of exclusions is often complex, the following discussion is necessarily a summary intended to familiarize the practitioner with the issues. An attorney representing a residential buyer should review specific policy language, as well as available endorsements, to make sure that the broadest coverage is obtained.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.83 1. Coverage Statement

The Coverage Statement in the CLTA/ALTA Homeowner's Policy provides that the title insurer will insure against actual loss from 29 enumerated "Covered Risks" that existed on the policy date. See California Title Insurance Practice §7.39 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997) for a list of covered risks. Deductibles and policy limits apply to certain of the risks. The policy also insures against loss from covered risks that materialize after the policy date, including:

- Various claims of superior title, title defects, or rights to use the property, including easements;
- Liens for labor and materials furnished before the policy date;
- Damage to improvements because of the future exercise of a right to use the surface;
- A third party's attempt to enforce a discriminatory covenant, condition, or restriction;
- Supplemental real estate taxes assessed because of construction or change in ownership or use that occurred before the policy date; and
- An encroaching structure built by a neighbor (other than a boundary wall or fence).

The insurer assumes a duty to defend the insured in any legal action, but only with respect to the part of the action that is based on a covered risk not excepted or excluded from coverage in the policy. The insurer has the right to end its duty to defend by taking various actions, including paying or settling the claim.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.84 2. Exceptions and Exclusions

The title policy will state exceptions to title, which are the recorded liens and encumbrances identified in the Preliminary Report. In addition to those exceptions, the policy includes various exclusions from coverage. The CLTA Homeowner's Policy excludes the following:

- With certain exceptions, the exercise of governmental police power or the existence or violation of an ordinance, law, or regulation concerning building, zoning, land use, improvements on land, land division, and environmental protection, unless notice of the violation or enforcement of such matters appears in the public records at the policy date;
- The failure of existing structures on the property to comply with applicable building codes, unless notice of such violation appears in the public records at the policy date;
- The right to take the land by condemnation unless notice of the exercise of the right appears in the public records at the policy date or the taking occurred before the policy date without the insured's knowledge and is binding on the insured;
- Risks that are created, allowed, or agreed to by the insured; that are known to the insured, but not the insurer, at the policy date (unless a matter of public record); that result in no loss to the insured; or that occur after the policy date (except for those post-policy-date risks expressly covered);
- The failure to pay value for the title to the property; and
- With certain exceptions, lack of a right to land outside of the property described in the policy and in streets, alleys, or waterways that touch the land.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.85 3. Endorsements

Both CLTA and ALTA have prepared standard form endorsements (more than 150 CLTA endorsements and nearly 50 ALTA endorsements) for use with their policies. Some of these apply to residential transactions and may be available for payment of an additional premium, but availability varies by title insurer. Whether an endorsement is desirable in a particular transaction should be evaluated by an attorney who has knowledge of the property and the circumstances of the transaction, and can evaluate the potential title defects or claims that may exist or arise, in consultation with a knowledgeable title officer. Certain endorsements will require a chain-of-title search by the insurer and physical inspection of the property. In the extremely rare situation when the title policy and available endorsements do not address the needs of the insured, the insured may be able to negotiate a special endorsement with the title insurer to cover the unique circumstance. For a list of available endorsements see California Title Insurance Practice, App I (2d ed Cal CEB 1997).

Standard form endorsements exist that extend coverage to such matters as:

- Verification that an access easement described in the title policy provides access to a named public street and has not been extinguished by adverse possession, encroachment, or other unrecorded matters;
- Encroachments onto adjoining land or an easement;
- Violations of recorded covenants, conditions, and restrictions or judicial enforcement of such violations;
- Mechanics' liens;
- The boundaries of common area in a common interest development; and
- Judgments requiring the removal of a residential structure or cessation of its use for residential purposes based on a zoning ordinance violation that existed on the policy date.

§6.86 C. Vesting of Title

Co-owners of property have several options for taking and holding title to property. Before 2001, the primary forms of co-ownership in California were (1) joint tenancy, (2) tenancy in common, (3) community property (for married spouses only), and (4) tenancy in partnership. CC §682. In 2001, California added a new form of property ownership, community property with right of survivorship (CC §682.1), and in 2003 extended the same rights of property ownership enjoyed by married persons to registered domestic partners, retroactive to 2000 (Rev & T C §62) (Fam C §297.5). The salient characteristics of each of these forms of co-ownership are outlined below. The form of co-ownership that is most appropriate for a particular client's situation should be determined by knowledgeable real estate, estate planning, and tax attorneys after careful consideration of the financial arrangement between the co-owners, their marital or domestic-partnership status, their investment objectives, estate plans, and the tax implications of each form of ownership. In addition, other forms of ownership, such as use of a revocable trust, should be considered.

§6.87 1. Joint Tenancy

A "joint interest" or joint tenancy is an interest in property owned by two or more persons in equal shares. CC §683. Each joint tenant concurrently owns an undivided equal share of the entire property. Rupp v Kahn (1966) 246 CA2d 188, 196, 55 CR 108. When one joint tenant dies, by operation of law the surviving joint tenant owns the entire property. Grothe v Cortlandt Corp. (1992) 11 CA4th 1313, 1317, 15 CR2d 38. Thus, a joint tenancy interest cannot be disposed of by will. This "right of survivorship" was, for centuries, unique to joint tenancy until the new "community property with right of survivorship" was created in 2001. See §6.91. A joint tenancy may be terminated by one of several actions, including the unilateral conveyance by one joint tenant to a third person, recordation of a written declaration, agreement of the joint tenants, a partition decree, or judgment. When the joint tenancy is severed, it becomes a tenancy in common and the right of survivorship terminates. Estate of Propst (1990) 50 C3d 448, 455, 268 CR 114. Thereafter, each tenant in common may make a testamentary disposition of his or her interest in the property. Estate of Grigsby (1982) 134 CA3d 611, 618, 184 CR 886. For a discussion of language to use in a deed creating a joint tenancy, see §10.31.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.88 2. Tenancy in Common

A tenancy in common is any interest owned in common by two or more persons that is not a joint tenancy, tenancy in partnership, or community property. CC §§685-686. Each tenant in common has an equal right of possession and cannot exclude the other(s) from any part of the property, unless the co-tenants agree otherwise. Estate of Horn (1951) 102 CA2d 635, 640, 228 P2d 99. Unlike a joint tenancy, however, tenancy-in-common interests need not be equal, and there is no right of survivorship. Estate of England (1991) 233 CA3d 1, 4, 284 CR 361. Therefore, co-owners can conform their ownership interests to their respective contributions to the cost of purchasing and owning a property, and each can make a testamentary disposition of his or her interest. For a discussion of language to use in a deed creating a tenancy in common, see §10.32.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.89 3. Community Property

A husband and wife can hold property as a joint tenancy, a tenancy in common, community property, or community property with right of survivorship. Fam C §750. Community property is defined as property acquired by a married person during marriage while domiciled in California. CC §687; Fam C §760. California law requires marriage to be between a man and a woman. Fam C §§308, 308.5. Community property rights have also been extended to a "putative spouse," who believes in good faith, but incorrectly, that the parties are married (Patillo v Norris (1976) 65 CA3d 209, 217, 135 CR 210), but not to knowingly unmarried, cohabitating parties (Marvin v Marvin (1976) 18 C3d 660, 681, 134 CR 815).

California community property law involves a complex body of rules and principles beyond the scope of this chapter; the discussion here addresses only whether a husband and wife, who will purchase the property using only assets acquired during their marriage, should take title as community property or otherwise. With community property, as with a joint tenancy, a husband and wife have equal interests during their marriage. Fam C §751. Unlike joint tenancy, however, spouses with community property interests have the flexibility, both before and during marriage, to specify their property interests in writing, alter or transmute those interests, and compromise their interests in dissolution of marriage. See Fam C §§850-853, 1500, 2550. Also unlike joint tenancy, there is no right of survivorship attendant to community property unless specified in the conveyance document. Nevertheless, if a spouse dies without a will, the community property interest of the deceased spouse passes to the survivor. Prob C §6401. A spouse may, of course, dispose of his or her one-half community interest by will. Prob C §§100-101, 6101.

For a discussion of language to use in a deed creating a community property interest, see §10.33. For a discussion of language to use in changing title from joint tenancy to community property, see §10.33.

§6.90 4. Registered Domestic Partners

In 2003, the California legislature enacted the California Domestic Partner Rights and Responsibilities Act of 2003 (Stats 2003, ch 421), which extends the rights and responsibilities of marriage to registered domestic partners. Fam C §297.5. "Domestic partners" are defined as two adults "who have chosen to share one another's lives in an intimate and committed relationship of mutual caring." Fam C §297(a). A domestic partnership is established when both persons file a Declaration of Domestic Partnership with the Secretary of State as specified in the Act and, at the time of filing, they have a common residence, are not married or in another domestic partnership, not related by blood in a way that would prevent them from marrying, are both at least 18 years old, and are either of the same sex or of the opposite sex if one of the partners is over the age of 62 and meets certain Social Security eligibility requirements. Fam C §297(b).

The Act provides, among other things, that registered domestic partners shall have "the same rights, protections, and benefits, and shall be subject to the same responsibilities, obligations, and duties" as are granted to or imposed on spouses, or on a widow or widower. Fam C §297.5(a), (c). Revenue and Taxation Code §62 affirms this right as of 2000.

§6.91 5. Community Property With Right of Survivorship

In 2001, the California legislature created a new form of property ownership, community property with right of survivorship, which combines the attributes of community property and joint tenancy ownership. CC §682.1(a). By virtue of the California Registered Domestic Partner Rights and Responsibilities Act of 2003, this new form of co-ownership is available to duly registered domestic partners. See §6.90. For the parties to effectively take title as community property with right of survivorship, the transfer document must include an express declaration that the property is community property with right of survivorship, which may be accepted in writing on the face of the document by a statement signed or initialed by the grantees. While still alive, the spouses or registered domestic partners may terminate the right of survivorship by the same procedures used to terminate a joint tenancy. CC §682.1(a). See §6.87. On the death of one of the spouses or registered domestic partners, the property passes to the survivor, without administration, in the same manner as joint tenancy property.

PRACTICE TIP: Under this new form of ownership, a surviving spouse or surviving registered domestic partner is able to avoid the cost and delay of probate (as with joint tenancy); however, only a surviving spouse can realize the federal tax benefit of a step-up in the tax basis of the entire property because federal law does not recognize same-sex marriage or its equivalent. The new form of ownership would not be appropriate if one or both spouses or registered domestic partners wishes to devise his or her property interest to a third party, typically a child from a previous relationship. In such case, community property without the right of survivorship (if the couple is married) or a trust should be considered.

§6.92 6. Tenancy in Partnership

Tenancy in partnership is not a common form of ownership of residential property. A "partnership interest" in property is defined as one owned by several persons in partnership, for partnership purposes. CC §684. Partnership property is not co-owned by the individual partners, as in the other forms of co-ownership (see §§6.87-6.91). Rather, the property is owned by the partnership, which is an entity distinct from the individual partners, formed to conduct a business for profit. Corp C §§16201, 16202(a), 16203. Thus, the individual partners have no legal right in the partnership property that can be transferred. Corp C §16501. Rather, their rights are limited to sharing in the profits and losses of the partnership and the right to receive distributions. Corp C §16502. Furthermore, a partner cannot devise partnership property. Rather, upon death the partner is "dissociated" from the partnership, and the partnership must purchase his or her interest. Corp C §§16601(7)(A), 16701(a).

§6.93 VI. TAX CONSIDERATIONS

The purchase and sale of residential real property is subject to taxation on the federal, state, and local levels. Particularly in view of the significant appreciation in the market value of California real estate in recent decades, the tax consequences of a transaction are generally of primary importance to both sellers and buyers. Tax rules and regulations tend to be detailed and complex, with numerous exclusions and exemptions. Therefore, clients should usually be referred to qualified tax attorneys or accountants for advice on the tax implications of a particular transaction. Nevertheless, attorneys representing clients in residential transactions should have a basic understanding of the relevant tax laws and regulations.

This section briefly discusses the following tax issues commonly encountered in a residential transaction:

- Withholding tax (see §6.94);
- Transfer tax (see §6.95);
- Property tax (see §6.96); and
- Capital gains tax (see §6.97).

For a discussion of tax-deferred exchanges, see Real Property Exchanges (3d ed Cal CEB 2002).

§6.94 A. State and Federal Withholding Taxes

State and federal laws require buyers, under certain circumstances, to withhold a portion of the sale price from the seller and forward the amount withheld to the appropriate tax authority, unless an exemption applies.

California law generally requires the buyer of a California real property interest to withhold 3-1/3 percent of the gross sale price from the seller and to transmit the withheld amount to the Franchise Tax Board unless an exemption applies. Rev & T C §18662(e)(2)(A). For further discussion regarding California withholding requirements, see §§15.75-15.79.

If the seller is a "foreign person," the Foreign Investment in Real Property Tax Act of 1980 (FIRPTA) (Pub L 96-499, 94 Stat 2682) requires a buyer to withhold 10 percent of the gross sales price from the seller and to transmit the withheld amount to the Internal Revenue Service. IRC §1445(a). For further discussion regarding FIRPTA withholding requirements, see §§15.80-15.84.

§6.95 B. Transfer Tax

The Documentary Transfer Tax Act (Rev & T C §§11911-11913) authorizes counties to impose a transfer tax on the conveyance, transfer, or assignment of an interest in real property at the rate of 55 cents per $500 in value transferred. Rev & T C §11911(a). If a county has imposed a transfer tax, any city within that county may impose a transfer tax of one-half of the amount of the county tax, which is credited against the county tax. Rev & T C §11911(b)-(c). In addition, charter cities may impose by ordinance an additional transfer tax that exceeds the statutory limits. See Cal Const art XI, §5; Fisher v County of Alameda (1993) 20 CA4th 120, 124, 24 CR2d 384 (city is empowered to impose real estate transfer tax, taking precedence over conflicting provisions of state law by virtue of home-rule powers conferred on charter cities by Cal Const art XI, §5).

Statutory exemptions from the transfer tax include:

- Written instruments given to secure a debt (Rev & T C §11921);
- Certain transfers by inter vivos gift or inheritance (Rev & T C §11930);
- Certain transfers in lieu of foreclosure (Rev & T C §11926);
- Certain interspousal transfers (Rev & T C §11927);
- Transfers of certain partnership interests (Rev & T C §11925); and
- Transfers made to effect a reorganization plan in bankruptcy or receivership proceedings, or whereby a mere change in identity, form, or place of organization is effected (Rev & T C §11923).

Additional exemptions may be found in each county or city ordinance that authorizes the transfer tax.

PRACTICE TIP: Several California charter cities impose steep transfer taxes in addition to the county transfer tax. For example, the City of Berkeley and City of Oakland each impose a transfer tax of $15 per $1000 of value. See Berkeley Muni C §7.52.040; Oakland Muni C §4.20.020. These taxes can significantly increase the buyer's cost to purchase a property and decrease the seller's profit from a sale. Practitioners should determine whether the city in which the subject property is located imposes a transfer tax, and evaluate potentially applicable exemptions in the statute as well as county and city ordinances. Although allocation of transfer taxes between seller and buyer is negotiable, the Documentary Transfer Tax Act requires the seller to pay the county (and statutory city) transfer tax. Rev & T C §11912. Any city transfer tax is typically allocated between seller and buyer based on local custom (often split 50/50).

§6.96 C. Property Tax

Proposition 13 was adopted by California voters in 1978 with the stated goal of providing real property tax relief. Under Proposition 13, when there is a change in ownership of California real property, the property is reassessed at its current fair market value (typically, the sale price) and the new owner's property tax is calculated based on the reassessed value. Rev & T C §50. Many common transfers, however, are deemed not to involve a change in ownership that would trigger a reassessment. These include:

- Certain transfers that change the method of holding title but not the proportional interests held (Rev & T C §62(a));
- Transfers into a revocable trust (Rev & T C §62(d));
- Interspousal transfers (Rev & T C §63);
- Transfers between ex-spouses under a property settlement agreement or decree of dissolution or legal separation (Rev & T C §63(c));
- Transfers between registered domestic partners (commencing on January 1, 2000, with a right to apply for reversal of any reassessment made between January 1, 2000, and January 1, 2006, in contravention of the exemption) (Rev & T C §62(p); see Fam C §297);
- Transfers between parents and children of the principal residence or up to $1 million of "full cash value" of all other real property (Rev & T C §63.1(a)); and
- Transfers from grandparents to grandchildren, only if the grandchild's parents are deceased (Rev & T C §63.1(a)(3)).

For a detailed chart listing transfers that do and do not trigger a reassessment, see App A.

In certain circumstances, a taxpayer who is age 55 or older, or is severely and permanently disabled, may transfer the base-year value of his or her principal residence (i.e., its original assessed value under Proposition 13 plus permitted inflation adjustments) to a replacement principal residence of equal or lesser value. See Rev & T C §69.5(a)(1)-(2), (g)(2). See Rev & T C §69.5(g)(5) (defining "equal or lesser value"), 69.5(g)(12) (defining "severely and permanently disabled"). This transfer right applies only if the replacement dwelling is located in the same county as the original property or in another county in which the board of supervisors has adopted an ordinance permitting an intercounty transfer of base-year value. Rev & T C §69.5(a). The transfer right may only be exercised once, except that a taxpayer who exercises the right based on his or her age may do so again if he or she thereafter becomes severely and permanently disabled. Rev & T C §69.5(b)(7). A claim for exemption from reassessment must be filed within 3 years of the date the replacement dwelling was purchased or construction of a replacement dwelling was completed. Rev & T C §69.5(f).

Similarly, the base-year value of a property substantially damaged or destroyed by a qualified disaster may be transferred to a comparable replacement property (i.e., similar in size, utility, and function) that is newly acquired or constructed within 3 years after the disaster. See Rev & T C §69.

Finally, certain types of construction are exempt from reassessment, including construction to make a dwelling more accessible to a severely and permanently disabled person who resides in the dwelling, and certain seismic retrofitting work. See Rev & T C §§74.3, 74.5.

§6.97 D. Capital Gains Tax

An individual's principal residence is a capital asset. IRC §1221. Gain on its sale will therefore be taxed as long-term or short-term capital gain, depending on the taxpayer's holding period. Since enactment of the Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997 (Pub L 105-34, 111 Stat 788), sellers who have owned and used a home as their personal residence for at least 2 of the 5 years before the sale can exclude at least some of the gain on the sale from income. IRC §121(a). There are a few limited exemptions from the 2-year requirement that apply if the primary reason for the sale or exchange is a change in place of employment, health, or unforeseen circumstances, in which case the amount of the exclusion is prorated. See Treas Reg §1.121-3. The exclusion applies to individuals as well as to grantors of revocable trusts. IRC §676.

The exclusion is subject to several important limitations:

First, the exclusion can be used only once every 2 years. IRC §121(b)(3).

Second, single persons can exclude up to a maximum of $250,000. IRC §121(b)(1).

Third, joint filers can exclude up to $500,000 if either spouse has owned the home for at least 2 of the 5 years before the sale; both spouses must have used the home as their principal residence for at least 2 of the 5 years before the sale; and neither spouse is ineligible for the exclusion because of the once-every-2-year limitation. IRC §121(b)(2)(A). If joint filers do not meet all of these requirements, they may determine the exclusion amount on an individual basis; thus, the allowable exclusion would be equal to the sum of the individual exclusions to which each spouse would have been entitled if they had not been married. IRC §121(b)(2)(B).

Fourth, an unmarried individual whose spouse is deceased on the date of the sale may exclude up to $500,000 if the sale occurs not later than 2 years after the date of the spouse's death and the joint-filer requirements were satisfied immediately before the date of death. IRC §121(b)(4).

Fifth, the Housing and Economic Recovery Act of 2008 (Pub L 110-289, 122 Stat 2911) added an important new limitation on the exclusion, which applies to sales and exchanges that occur after December 31, 2008. IRC §121(4). (Note: This Act enacted a second subparagraph(b)(4).) New IRC §121(4) provides that when an individual converts a rental property or second home to his or her principal residence after December 31, 2008, the taxable portion of any gain on a subsequent sale will be determined by use of a fraction—the numerator of which is the amount of time beginning on January 1, 2009, that the property was used as a rental or second home, and the denominator of which is the total number of years of ownership of the property (including prior to January 1, 2009). IRC §121(4). Gains from the investment/rental use of the property will be taxed at prevailing capital gains rates, and gains from the principal residence use will be taxed subject to the exclusions applicable to the sale of a principal residence. If the gain on the sale exceeds the amount of the exclusion, the excess will be taxed at the applicable capital gains rate. A seller may not deduct losses on the sale of his or her principal residence.

EXAMPLE: Seller purchased a property on January 1, 1998, for $200,000 and owned the property for 20 years through December 31, 2017. Seller lived in the property as her principal residence for 10 years from January 1, 1998, through December 31, 2007. On January 1, 2008, Seller converted the property to a rental, and rented it for 5 years through December 31, 2012. She then moved back into the property on January 1, 2013, and sold it 5 years later on January 1, 2018, for $600,000. To determine taxable gain, the numerator would be 4 (the number of years after January 1, 2009, that the property was rented), and the denominator would be 20 (the total number of years of ownership). The Seller's gain would be $400,000 (assuming no improvements were made to the property that increased her cost basis). Twenty percent (20% or 4/20) of that gain ($400,000) is $80,000, which would be taxed at the prevailing capital gains rate at the time of the sale. Of the remaining $320,000 in gain, $250,000 would be excluded on the basis of the principal residence use, and the remaining $70,000 over the exclusion would be taxed at the prevailing capital gains rate.

§6.98 VII. FAIR HOUSING AND ANTIDISCRIMINATION LAWS

Various federal, state, and local laws and ordinances prohibit discrimination against certain protected classes in the sale, leasing, and use of residential property, and provide procedures and remedies for redressing such discrimination. For other discussions of these laws, see California Landlord-Tenant Practice §§2.29-2.60 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997) and Advising California Common Interest Communities §§8.42-8.60 (Cal CEB 2003).

Housing discrimination in California is principally governed by two federal statutes and two state statutes. The federal statutes are the Civil Rights Act (42 USC §§1981, 1981a, 1983, 1988) and the Fair Housing Act (FHA) (42 USC §§3601-3631), enacted as Titles VIII and IX of the Civil Rights Act of 1968, as amended by the Fair Housing Amendments Act of 1988 (42 USC §§3601-3631). The state statutes are the Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51) and the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt C §§12900-12996). Although these statutes often overlap, depending on the type of discrimination alleged, they differ in terms of covered classes, exemptions, procedural rights, and remedies. Therefore, in determining which statutes apply, the practitioner must consider the type of discrimination involved, the context in which it has arisen, and the redress sought by the client. The individual Acts are discussed in more detail in §§6.99-6.102.

§6.99 1. Civil Rights Act of 1866

The Civil Rights Act (42 USC §§1981, 1981a, 1983, 1988) prohibits discrimination based on race. 42 USC §1982. There are no exemptions. Private litigants who are U.S. citizens may file a claim under the Civil Rights Act in state and federal court. Sullivan v Little Hunting Part, Inc. (1969) 396 US 229, 24 L Ed 2d 386, 90 S Ct 400. Remedies include injunctive relief, compensatory damages including out-of-pocket expenses, mental anguish, and personal humiliation (Phiffer v Proud Parrot Motor Hotel, Inc. (9th Cir 1980) 648 F2d 548), and punitive damages (Woods-Drake v Lundy (5th Cir 1982) 667 F2d 1198). The prevailing party may also recover attorney fees and costs. 42 USC §1988(b).

§6.100 2. Fair Housing Act

The Fair Housing Act (FHA) (42 USC §§3601-3631) applies more broadly than the Civil Rights Act and adds an administrative remedy, but also has several exemptions. The FHA prohibits discrimination against any person—not just U.S. citizens—in the sale or rental of a dwelling, or in related advertising and lending, based on the person's race, color, religion, sex, familial status, or national origin. 42 USC §3604.

The FHA also prohibits discrimination based on a person's "handicap" and requires landlords to make reasonable accommodations and to allow reasonable modifications to a dwelling unit for a person with a handicap. 42 USC §3604(f); 24 CFR §§100.201-100.205. "Handicap" is defined to include an actual or perceived physical or mental impairment that substantially limits one or more of a person's major life activities, but does not include illegal drug use or addiction. 42 USC §3602(h). The Unruh Act also contains a similar prohibition against physical and mental "disability" discrimination, without the FHA's "substantial limitation" requirement. See §6.101.

The FHA does not cover discrimination based on marital status, age, or sexual orientation; however, these are covered by California antidiscrimination law. See §§6.101-6.102.

The following are exempt from the FHA:

- Single-family homes for sale or rent by the owner(s), if specified conditions are met (42 USC §3603(b)(1));
- Rooms or units in a dwelling with no more than four families living independently of one another, one unit of which is owner-occupied (42 USC §3603(b)(2));
- Rentals by religious organizations and private clubs, if specified conditions are met (42 USC §3607(a));
- Housing with reasonable local, state, or federal restrictions on the maximum number of occupants (42 USC §3607(b)(1)); and
- Qualified senior housing (42 USC §3607(b)(1)-(3); see §6.103).

The FHA preempts state and local laws that provide less protection to covered classes, but expressly authorizes state laws that grant additional protections. 42 USC §3615.

There are two independent means for private enforcement of the FHA. Under the first, an aggrieved person may file an administrative complaint with the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD). 42 USC §3610. HUD, or the state agency to which the complaint may be referred under 42 USC §3610(f), serves the complaint on the respondent for an answer and then investigates the claim and engages in a conciliation process. 42 USC §3610(a)-(b). If no conciliation agreement results and HUD determines there is reasonable cause to believe housing discrimination has occurred, the Secretary of HUD must issue a charge under 42 USC §3612 or dismiss the complaint. 42 USC §3610(g)(3). If a charge is issued, the respondent has a right to an administrative hearing or may elect to have the charge decided in a judicial proceeding. 42 USC §§3610(h), 3612(a). The administrative law judge may issue an order with remedies including actual damages, injunctive and other equitable relief, civil penalties up to $50,000 for each separate and distinct act of discrimination, and an award of attorney fees and costs to the prevailing party. 42 USC §3612(g), (p). The order is subject to judicial review. 42 USC §3612(i).

Under the second private enforcement alternative to the FHA, an aggrieved person may commence a civil action in state or federal court without having to exhaust administrative remedies. 42 USC §3613. The filing of an administrative complaint does not bar the filing of a civil action on the same claim; however, if an administrative hearing on the claim has commenced or a conciliation agreement has been executed, a civil action may not be filed except to enforce the agreement. 42 USC §3613(a)(2)-(3). On timely application, the Attorney General may intervene in such a civil action on a finding that the case is of general public importance or initiate a civil enforcement action when, in addition, there has been a pattern and practice of discrimination. 42 USC §§3613(e), 3614. The same remedies can be obtained in a civil action as in an administrative action. 42 USC §3613(d).

§6.101 1. Unruh Act

The Unruh Civil Rights Act (CC §51) prohibits "all business establishments of every kind whatsoever" from arbitrary discrimination based on personal characteristics, which include sex, race, color, religion, ancestry, national origin, disability, medical condition, marital status, and sexual orientation. CC §51. Age discrimination in the sale or renting of housing is also prohibited. CC §51.2.

The characteristics listed in the Unruh Act are illustrative rather than restrictive. The Act covers all arbitrary discrimination by a business establishment. Harris v Capital Growth Investors XIV (1991) 52 C3d 1142, 1152, 278 CR 614; see In re Cox (1970) 3 C3d 205, 90 CR 24 (exclusion of a man from a shopping center because of long hair and unconventional dress violated the Act). Moreover, discrimination based on the perception that a person has one or more of the protected characteristics or associates with a person who has, or is perceived to have, such characteristics, is also prohibited. CC §51(e)(5).

"Business establishment" is not defined in the Unruh Act, but has been broadly interpreted. See Warfield v Peninsula Golf & Country Club (1995) 10 C4th 594, 620, 42 CR2d 50. In the context of the purchase and sale of residential real property, the following have been found to be business establishments subject to the Act:

- Condominium homeowners' associations (O'Connor v Village Green Owners Ass'n (1983) 33 C3d 790, 191 CR 320);
- Subdividers (Burks v Poppy Constr. Co. (1962) 57 C2d 463, 468, 20 CR 609);
- Landlords (Marina Point, Ltd. v Wolfson (1982) 30 C3d 721, 730, 180 CR 496); and
- Mobilehome park owners (Winchell v English (1976) 62 CA3d 125, 129, 133 CR 20).

The Unruh Act may be enforced by private persons, as well as the California Attorney General, in a civil action in state court. Available remedies include injunctive relief (Burks, 57 C2d at 470), compensatory damages, statutory penalties, attorney fees, and costs. CC §52(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.102 2. Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA)

The Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt C §§12900-12996) declares that the right to seek, obtain, and hold housing without discrimination based on race, color, religion, sex, sexual orientation, marital status, national origin, ancestry, familial status, disability, or any other basis prohibited by the Unruh Act is a civil right and that such discrimination is against public policy. Govt C §12955. Like the Unruh Act, FEHA protects against the perception that a person has one of the protected characteristics or associates with a person who has or is perceived to have such characteristics. Govt C §12955(m).

In enacting FEHA, the legislature expressly intended to regulate employment and housing discrimination without limiting the application of the Unruh Act. Govt C §12993(c). Thus, FEHA provides greater protection than the FHA by prohibiting discrimination based on ancestry, disability, marital status, and sexual orientation and by providing a more restrictive exemption for senior housing. See Govt C §12955.9. See discussion of senior housing in §6.103.

Under FEHA, discrimination with respect to protected classes includes, among other things, refusal to sell and rent housing or to negotiate for its sale or rental; a false representation that housing is not available for sale or rental; any other denial or withholding of housing; provision of inferior terms, conditions, privileges, facilities or services, or harassment in connection with housing; cancellation or termination of a sale or rental agreement; and providing segregated housing accommodations. Govt C §12927(c)(1). Specific discriminatory acts that are prohibited are enumerated in Govt C §12955. See Hall v Butte Home Health, Inc. (1997) 60 CA4th 308, 319, 70 CR2d 246 (restrictive covenant prohibiting residential care facility for elderly disabled was unenforceable under Govt C §12955).

Discrimination under FEHA does not include refusal to rent a portion of an owner-occupied house to a boarder, provided that no more than one boarder will live in the house and as long as no discriminatory advertisement is used, nor does it include an advertisement for the sharing of living areas in a dwelling that states or implies the housing is available only to a person of one sex. Govt C §12927(c)(2). FEHA does not prohibit religious organizations from limiting the sale, rental, or occupancy of dwellings owned or operated for noncommercial purposes to persons of the same religion, unless membership in the religion is restricted on account of race, color, or national origin. Govt C §12955.4.

The procedures for enforcing FEHA and available remedies are substantially similar to the procedures and remedies under the FHA. See Govt C §§12980-12989.3 and §6.100. An aggrieved party may proceed under FEHA as well as the Unruh Act, if applicable, but if an action has been filed under the Unruh Act, proceedings under FEHA will be stayed pending resolution of that action. Govt C §12980(a).

FEHA also creates procedures for the modification of recorded covenants to remove discriminatory restrictions and makes recording of a document to add a racially restrictive covenant a misdemeanor. Govt C §§12956.1(c), 12956.2. If the discriminatory restriction is in the governing document of a common interest development, however, the owner must follow the procedure described in CC §1352.5 to remove the restriction.

§6.103 C. Senior Citizen Housing

Senior citizen housing that meets certain statutory requirements is exempt from both federal and state antidiscrimination provisions. 42 USC §3607(b)(2); CC §51.3; Govt C §12955.9. These laws involve the intersection of two competing public policies: the desire to establish and preserve housing to meet the needs of senior citizens and prevention of housing discrimination against families with children under the age of 18. California's senior-housing exemption is to be construed to afford greater rights and remedies to aggrieved persons than those afforded under federal law. Govt C §12955.6.

Under the federal FHA, qualified "housing for older persons" (HOP) is exempt from the prohibition against "familial status" discrimination, which refers to discrimination against persons under age 18 living with a parent or person with legal custody or their designee, or a pregnant person, or persons seeking legal custody of a minor. 42 USC §§3607(b)(2), 3602(k). See also Govt C §12955.2 (definition of "familial status" under FEHA). HOP is defined to include housing (1) provided under certain state and federal programs to assist the elderly, or (2) intended for, and solely occupied by, persons 62 years of age or older, or (3) intended and operated for occupancy by persons 55 years of age where at least 80 percent of units are occupied by at least one person who is at least 55 years old, and the housing facility or community publishes and adheres to policies and procedures demonstrating the intent to restrict the age of residents and complies with certain rules for verification of occupancy. 42 USC §3607(b)(2).

California's FEHA exempts from the prohibition against familial-status discrimination HOP, which it defines to include housing provided under state and federal programs that meet the standards for senior housing set forth in the Unruh Act. Govt C §12955.9(a), (b)(1), (2). (FEHA also exempts mobilehome parks that meet the federal definition of HOP. Govt C §12955.9(b)(3).)

Under the Unruh Act, a "senior citizen housing development" is exempt from the Act's age discrimination prohibition except to the extent preempted by the federal FHA's prohibition against familial-status discrimination. CC §51.2(a). A "senior citizen housing development" is defined as a residential development that is developed or substantially rehabilitated or renovated for senior citizens and that has at least 35 dwelling units (only 20 dwelling units are required in Riverside County). CC §§51.3(b)(4), 51.11(b)(4), (j). In addition, senior housing must be designed to meet the physical and social needs of senior citizens. CC §51.2(d). These design requirements do not apply to housing constructed before February 8, 1982, or to housing located in Riverside County. CC §51.2(a), (c). Senior housing constructed on or after January 1, 2001, is presumed to meet applicable design requirements if certain criteria are met. See CC §§51.2(d), 51.4, 51.12.

"Senior citizen" is defined as a person age 62 or older, or a person age 55 or older in a senior citizen housing development. CC §51.3(b)(1); see Park Redlands Covenant Control Comm. v Simon (1986) 181 CA3d 87, 226 CR 199 (covenant restricting residents to persons age 45 and older held invalid under CC §53). As long as one "senior citizen" resides in a dwelling unit, persons who are deemed "qualified permanent residents" may also reside there. CC §51.3(c). Under CC §51.3(b)(3), these include:

- A person age 45 or older, or a spouse, cohabitant, or person providing primary physical or economic support to the senior citizen and residing with the senior citizen before death, hospitalization, or other prolonged absence of, or dissolution of marriage with, the senior citizen; or
- A child or grandchild of the resident (senior citizen or qualified permanent resident) who needs to live with that resident as a result of a physical or mental disability as defined in CC §54(b) or who has a condition that results in such a disability.

For further discussion of senior citizen housing, see Forming California Common Interest Developments §§7.107-7.115 (Cal CEB 2004).

§6.104 1. Residential Facilities and Family Day Care Homes

By statute, a residential facility for the elderly serving six or fewer persons is deemed to be a residential use of property by a single family. Health & S C §1569.87. Therefore, recorded covenants that permit only residential use of property cannot be applied to preclude use as a residential facility for the elderly. Broadmoor San Clemente Homeowners Ass'n v Nelson (1994) 25 CA4th 1, 8, 30 CR2d 316. See Health & S C §1569.2(k) (defining "residential care facility for the elderly").

Similarly, Health & S C §1597.40 provides that restrictions on the acquisition, use, and occupancy of real property as a family day care home for children are void. See Barrett v Dawson (1998) 61 CA4th 1048, 71 CR2d 899 (statute may be applied retroactively). See also Health & S C §1596.78 (definition of "family day care home").

§6.105 2. Disabled Access to Condominiums

The Davis-Stirling Common Interest Development Act (CC §§1350-1378), which regulates common interest developments in California, permits a unit owner in a condominium (but not in any other form of common interest development) to modify the unit, at the owner's expense, to facilitate access for persons who are blind, visually handicapped, deaf, or physically disabled. CC §1360(a)(2).

§6.106 E. Local Ordinances

Neither the federal nor the state fair-housing scheme is exclusive. Local jurisdictions may prohibit discrimination against classes of persons that are not covered by such laws. See, e.g., Rolon v Kulwitzky (1984) 153 CA3d 289, 291, 200 CR 217 (upholding local ordinance prohibiting discrimination based on sexual orientation before that class was added to the Unruh Act (CC §51)).

§6.106A VIII. SALE OF DISTRESSED PROPERTY

The recent economic downturn has resulted in an unparalleled number of distressed sales of residential real property. The combination of reckless lending practices, overinflated property values, and widespread refinancing to "cash out" accrued equity left an unprecedented number of homeowners with little, if any, economic stake in their property. When property values then plummeted, their homes or investment properties became worth less than the outstanding amount of their loan(s) or they could not afford their mortgage payments either after their loan rate(s) adjusted up or because of a job loss. In lieu of foreclosure, which has an adverse credit impact on the defaulted borrower and is costly to the secured lender, several transaction structures designed to facilitate the transfer and sale of distressed property have again become prominent, as has concern about unscrupulous practices designed to take advantage of elderly and financially unsophisticated property owners who face foreclosure.

The following sections briefly look at transaction structures designed to transfer or sell property in lieu of foreclosure: the "deed in lieu of foreclosure" (§6.106B), the "short sale" (§6.106C), and the home equity sales contracts (§6.107). In addition, §6.110 discusses unique issues that arise in the post-foreclosure sale of bank-owned ("REO") property. For a more in-depth treatment of foreclosure, including debtor's strategies in dealing with foreclosure and bankruptcy issues, see California Mortgages, Deeds of Trust, and Foreclosure Litigation, chaps 7, 10, 12 (4th ed Cal CEB 2009).

§6.106B A. Deeds in Lieu of Foreclosure

One strategy for avoiding foreclosure is for the borrower to deed the property back to the lender by delivering a "deed in lieu of foreclosure" or "deed in lieu." For delivery of the deed to be effective, the lender must accept the deed. Perry v Wallner (1962) 206 CA2d 218, 222, 23 CR 352. Acceptance may be evidenced by the lender's retention or recordation of the deed. A lender that rejects the conveyance may effectively do so by recording a notice of nonacceptance of the deed. CC §1058.5.

Delivery of a deed in lieu does not extinguish the note or deed of trust and, unlike foreclosure, does not extinguish junior liens. Because junior liens survive, a lender is most likely to be amenable to accepting a deed in lieu when there are no junior liens or the junior liens are held by the same lender. A deed in lieu transaction benefits the lender by avoiding the cost, delay, and uncertainty of foreclosure proceedings. On the other hand, the lender who accepts a deed in lieu becomes subject to the rights of any junior lienholders and risks being subject to subsequent actions by the borrower or its creditors to set aside the conveyance. Streiff v Darlington (1937) 9 C2d 42, 68 P2d 728.

From the borrower's perspective, a deed-in-lieu transaction is beneficial to the extent it stops foreclosure proceedings, may be less injurious to the borrower's credit rating than foreclosure, and eliminates the borrower's exposure to a possible deficiency judgment (when applicable). On the other hand, the transaction may expose the borrower to income tax liability to the extent of the forgiveness of the underlying debt (except when the debt is non-recourse under CCP §580b) as well as capital gains tax liability. Therefore, it is essential that the tax consequences of a particular transfer by deed in lieu be evaluated by a qualified tax professional. Moreover, it is generally advisable that the transaction be documented, including an agreement by the lender to accept the deed in lieu, cancel the underlying note, and reconvey the deed of trust.

For a detailed discussion of deeds in lieu (including a form), see California Mortgages, Deeds of Trust, and Foreclosure Litigation §§7.2-7.21, §§10.28-10.32 (4th ed Cal CEB 2009).

§6.106C B. Short Sales

"Short sale" refers to a transaction in which a secured lender agrees to accept less than the outstanding loan balance as full satisfaction of the loan obligation. The lender has no obligation under the note, deed of trust, or otherwise to entertain a proposed short sale. As with a deed in lieu (§6.106B), the lender's primary incentive for doing so is to avoid the cost, delay, and uncertainty of foreclosure proceedings and the subsequent ownership, marketing, and sale of the property. A deed-in-lieu transaction is beneficial to the borrower to the extent it stops foreclosure proceedings, may be less injurious to the borrower's credit rating, and eliminates the borrower's exposure to a possible deficiency judgment.

PRACTICE TIP: Typically, a lender will report a short sale to credit agencies as settlement of a financial obligation for less than the full balance. In addition, a lender may have reported one or more late payments made by the borrower before the short sale. Therefore, a borrower's credit will generally be adversely affected by a short sale. A borrower may request that the lender not report the short sale to credit agencies, but the lender has no obligation to agree not to do so.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.106D 1. Standard Forms Used; Disclosure Requirements Apply

A short-sale transaction is like any other residential transaction between a buyer and seller. The parties may use a standard form purchase contract (e.g., CAR Form RPA-CA). See §6.24. CAR has drafted a "Short Sale Addendum" to Form RPA-CA (CAR Form SSA), which should also be used. See §6.28A. The lender is not a party to the purchase contract. Rather, as set forth on the Addendum, the purchase contract is made contingent on receiving written consent from all existing lienholders to the terms of the proposed short sale by a date certain. This consent includes an agreement by all lienholders to accept, as satisfaction of the outstanding loans, the net proceeds from the parties' agreed purchase price less all seller monetary obligations agreed to in the purchase contract, including payment of attendant costs, such as brokerage commissions, real property taxes, and closing costs. The Addendum also advises the seller that the short-sale transaction may have adverse credit and legal consequences and may result in taxable income to the seller.

NOTE: A short sale is not exempt from any of the seller disclosure obligations imposed by common law or statute. Moreover, the buyer has the same duty to inspect the property, even though, practically speaking, the seller is unlikely to agree to correct deficiencies in the property.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.106E 2. Lender's Evaluation and Requirements

A lender's agreement to a short sale is strictly a business decision; the lender is under no legal obligation to accept less than full repayment of the outstanding debt. In evaluating a short sale proposal, lenders typically consider the current market value of the property as compared with the amount of the proposed short-sale payoff, market conditions in the area where the property is located, the borrower's financial situation, and evidence that the buyer is capable of performing quickly (such as a cash buyer or loan-preapproved buyer who is offering a short escrow period with few, if any, contractual contingencies).

Lenders typically will require the seller to submit substantial documentation to establish his or her financial distress, including a written statement of hardship, tax returns, paycheck stubs, bank statements, and other financial information. In addition, lenders will require information about the transaction, including the purchase contract, title report, escrow instructions, and estimated settlement statement.

NOTE: Until January 1, 2014, beneficiaries of deeds of trust must prepare and deliver a short-pay demand statement within 21 days of receiving a short-pay request from an entitled person. The short pay statement must set forth an amount less than the outstanding debt, together with any terms and conditions, under which the beneficiary will execute and deliver a reconveyance of the deed of trust. A beneficiary who elects not to proceed with the proposed transaction may refuse to provide a short-pay demand statement but must provide a written statement within 21 days indicating that it has elected not to proceed with the transaction. CC §2943.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.106F 3. Tax Considerations

The tax implications of a short sale, like a deed-in-lieu transaction, are complicated and will vary depending on the unique facts and circumstances of each case. Therefore, a seller's decision to propose a short sale should follow a qualified tax professional's careful evaluation of the tax implications to the seller. Among other things, a short sale may result in ordinary income or capital gain to the seller. For example, the difference between the outstanding loan balance and the lesser net amount the lender agrees to accept as payment in full is treated as "cancellation of debt," which is generally taxable as ordinary income. This could make a short sale undesirable, particularly when a substantial amount of the loan balance is forgiven.

There are certain important exceptions to this general rule, including the exception set forth in IRC §108(a)(1)(E), added as part of the Mortgage Forgiveness Debt Relief Act of 2007 (Pub L 110-142). Under the Act, discharge of indebtedness income will not be taxed if:

- The property sold is the taxpayer's principal residence (IRC §121);
- The debt is "qualified principal residence indebtedness" (IRC §108(h)(2) (a loan used to acquire, construct or substantially improve a residence); and
- The debt discharge (up to certain maximum amounts) occurred between January 1, 2007 and January 1, 2013. IRC §108(a)(1)(E).

Because this exemption only applies to "purchase money" loans, however, a short sale involving a refinanced loan would not qualify for the exception.

In addition, the short-sale seller may be exposed to capital gains tax in connection with the transaction. In that regard, the amount that is exempt from taxation as ordinary income under IRC §108(a)(1)(E) is applied to reduce the taxpayer's basis of the subject property. IRC §108(h). Therefore, a short-sale seller may face a substantial capital gains tax liability, subject to the exclusion of up to $250,000 (if single) or $500,000 (if married) that applies to the sale of a principal residence.

NOTE: SB 1055, enacted in 2008, conforms Revenue and Taxation Code §17144.5 to the Mortgage Forgiveness Debt Relief Act of 2007 except that the California statute applies only to property sold on or after January 1, 2007, and before January 1, 2009, and specifies lower limits on the maximum amount of debt forgiveness.

§6.107 C. Home Equity Sales Contracts

The Home Equity Sales Contracts Act (CC §§1695-1695.17) governs certain residential sale transactions entered into between the commencement of foreclosure proceedings and the date of a foreclosure sale. The Act is supported by legislative findings that homeowners whose residences are in foreclosure, especially the poor, elderly, and financially unsophisticated, are often vulnerable to people who seek to purchase the homeowner's equity between the commencement of foreclosure proceedings and the date of the foreclosure sale ("equity purchasers"). Typically, these equity purchasers will, through schemes involving oral and written misrepresentation, deceit, and intimidation, induce homeowners to sell their homes at prices far below the fair market value. See CC §1695 (legislative findings and declaration). By definition, "equity purchasers" do not include persons who purchase the property for use as a personal residence, or who acquire title by deed in lieu, trustee's sale, or other statutory sale, by order or judgment of a court, or from a spouse, blood relative, or blood relative's spouse. CC §1695.1(a). See Spencer v Marshall (2008) 168 CA4th 783, 85 CR3d 752. An "equity seller" is the seller of a "residence in foreclosure" (a residential one to four unit dwelling, of which the equity seller occupies one unit as his or her principal residence and against which an outstanding notice of default is recorded). CC §1695.1(b), (c). See In re Phelps (2001) 93 CA4th 451, 113 CR2d 217 (legislature intended regulation of home equity sales contracts to apply only to owner-occupied property). Contracts, agreements, offers, and other arrangements between equity purchasers and equity sellers are home equity sales contracts subject to the Act. CC §1695.1(e).

For further discussion regarding the Home Equity Sales Contract Act, see California Real Property Remedies and Damages §4.63 (2d ed Cal CEB 2002).

§6.108 1. Requisites for Enforceability

A home equity sales contract must meet certain formal requirements to be enforceable. It must be written in at least 10-point bold type in the language principally used by the home equity seller and must be fully executed and dated before execution of any instrument conveying the property. CC §1695.2. The contract must contain certain specified provisions (CC §1695.3), including two statutory notices regarding the equity seller's 5-day cancellation right, which must meet specified font size and type requirements and be placed in immediate proximity to the space reserved for the equity seller's signature. CC §§1695.3(g)-(h), 1695.5(a). The contract must also attach a form of notice of cancellation, although the equity seller need not use this form for a cancellation to be effective. CC §§1695.4(c), 1695.5(b).

The equity purchaser must provide the equity seller with a copy of the contract, attaching the notice of cancellation. CC §1695.5(c). Until the equity purchaser provides the copy of the contract and notice, the equity seller may cancel the contract. CC §1695.5(d).

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.109 2. Prohibited Conduct and Remedies

During the equity seller's 5-day cancellation period, the equity purchaser may not take any deed from the equity seller, record any document, transfer or encumber the property, or pay the equity seller any consideration. CC §1695.6(b). If the equity seller delivers notice of cancellation of contract, the equity purchaser must, within 10 days of receipt, return without condition the contract and any other documents signed by the equity seller. CC §1695.6(c). The equity purchaser cannot make untrue or misleading statements about the value of the property, the foreclosure proceeds the equity seller will receive, the equity seller's rights related to the transaction, or the transaction documents or terms. CC §1695.6(d). If the equity purchaser takes title to the property while purporting to give the equity seller an option to repurchase the property, the equity purchaser is prohibited from encumbering or transferring the property or any interest in it without the equity seller's written consent. CC §1695.6(e). Moreover, such a purported absolute conveyance will be presumed to be a mortgage and the transaction a loan; however, the presumption will not apply to a bona fide purchaser or encumbrancer for value who does not have notice of a violation of the home equity sales contract law, even if he or she knows the property was an owner-occupied residential foreclosure. CC §1695.12.

An equity purchaser who commits any of the prohibited acts set forth in CC §1695.6, or who otherwise engages in fraudulent or deceitful conduct, is liable on conviction for a fine of not more than $25,000 or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both, for each violation. CC §1695.8. An equity seller may recover damages and other equitable relief against the equity purchaser, plus attorney fees and costs. In addition, an equity seller may be awarded exemplary damages for certain violations, or a civil penalty of up to $2500, but not both. CC §1695.7; see Boquilon v Beckwith (1996) 49 CA4th 1697, 57 CR2d 503 (attorney fees not available for time not reasonably spent).

In addition, it is unlawful for any person to negotiate, enter into, or consummate a transaction with an equity seller involving property in foreclosure on terms that take unconscionable advantage of the equity seller. CC §1695.13. Such a transaction is voidable and may be rescinded by the property owner, within 2 years of recordation of the conveyance, by delivering a notice of rescission to the equity purchaser and recording such notice; however, the property owner cannot rescind a transaction with a bona fide purchaser or encumbrancer for value if the purchase or encumbrance occurred before recordation of the notice of rescission. CC §1695.14.

§6.110 D. Bank-Owned (REO) Sales

An "REO" (real estate owned) sale refers to the sale of real property owned by a bank. Typically, the bank acquires the property by foreclosure or deed in lieu. An REO sale is like any other residential real estate transaction except that the seller is a financial institution rather than an individual owner-occupant or investor. Although the bank is not distressed in the same sense as a borrower in default, the bank generally is similarly motivated to close a transaction quickly, perhaps at a discounted purchase price.

The process of contracting in an REO sale can be complicated. Most lenders insist on using their own custom purchase contracts, which often are drafted for national use. These lender contracts often are not customized to California requirements and/or may otherwise contain seller-oriented provisions that are undesirable. Local real estate agents who are familiar with the CAR forms or other locally used standard contract forms are not qualified, or legally permitted, to advise buyers on these custom contract forms. Therefore, an attorney's involvement is essential. Further complicating matters, the bank's listing agent often requests that purchase offers be submitted on the CAR or local customary contract form along with an executed addendum prepared by the lender. The addendum typically provides that its terms govern any conflict with the CAR form (and there often are many). Nevertheless, lenders are typically reluctant or unwilling to negotiate any of the terms of their form contracts.

PRACTICE TIP: Depending on market conditions and the particular lender involved, it may be possible to negotiate certain terms of the lender's REO purchase contract or at least prepare an addendum that resolves inconsistencies between provisions in the standard form contract and the lender's custom addendum. As in any negotiation in which the other side has the stronger bargaining position, newly proposed or revised terms are more likely to be considered if they are limited in number and clearly and succinctly drafted.

REO sales are generally exempt from the transfer disclosure requirements if the property was acquired by the bank by foreclosure, deed in lieu, or at a trustee's sale. See §6.35. As such, the bank need not provide a Real Estate Transfer Disclosure Statement (TDS) (see §§6.36-6.37), a Natural Hazard Disclosure Statement (NHDS) (see §§6.49-6.50), or any other disclosure that is required when a TDS is required. The bank is not exempt, however, from certain statutorily mandated disclosures, including the smoke detector and water heater compliance disclosures (see §§6.57-6.58), Megan's Law database disclosure (see §6.56), federal lead-based paint disclosure (see §6.51), and certain natural hazard zone disclosures (although use of the statutory NHDS is not required). Moreover, as the property owner, the bank is subject to the common law duty to disclose known material facts affecting the value or desirability of the property (see §§6.30-6.33). This includes facts about the property contained in the bank's records or known to its employees and agents. See §6.30. CAR has published an REO Advisory, which informs buyers about the unique contractual and disclosure issues in REO sales. See form in §6.111.

Agents of a lender often discover material information about an REO property during the course of managing and marketing it for sale. In addition, the defaulted borrower or tenants at the property often inform one of the lender's agents of defects and other property conditions that should be disclosed. Lenders often disclaim any knowledge about the property condition. But that is irrelevant to the question whether the lender, through its agents, has discovered material information that gives rise to a duty of disclosure. Like any seller, an REO lender-seller is subject to liability for fraud for failure to disclose, or concealment of, known material facts.

PRACTICE TIP: Some lenders, in an effort to minimize exposure to fraud claims, have included onerous provisions in their required transaction documents, including broad "as is" clauses and liability releases, which are likely unenforceable in California or at the very least ineffective to waive or limit common law disclosure duties. It is therefore advisable for buyers of REO property to consult with an attorney regarding the terms of lender-drafted purchase agreements. Ultimately, it is advisable for buyers of REO properties to conduct a high level of due diligence, including thorough pest and home inspections, careful review of title information and public records, interviews of representatives of any homeowners' association and review of HOA records, as well as interviews of any current or former occupants of the property and neighbors.

REO ADVISORY
For Properties Being Sold by a Lender After Foreclosure
(C.A.R. Form REO, 4/08)

Property Address: _____ ("Property").
The Seller of the Property is a lender who has acquired title to the Property either by foreclosure or through a deed given in lieu of foreclosure. Many obligations imposed upon sellers, particularly sellers of real property containing one-to-four dwelling units, may not be applicable to the sale of the Property. However, even though Seller is exempt from many obligations, Seller must still comply with many others. Further, even though a Seller may be exempt from certain obligations, a real estate broker's obligations may still apply. This Advisory is intended to inform Buyer and Seller of their rights and obligations independent of those established by the contract between them.

EXEMPTIONS:

1. TDS, NHD, Mello-Roos, Improvement Bond Act, Supplemental Property Taxes, Private Transfer Fee: Seller is exempt from providing Buyer with the Real Estate Transfer Disclosure Statement (TDS), Natural Hazard Disclosure Statement (NHD), a Mello-Roos district lien disclosure, an Improvement Bond Act of 1915 notice, a Supplemental Property Tax notice, and a Notice of Private Transfer Fee pursuant to California Civil Code §§ 1102 et seq.

2. Earthquake Guides: Seller is exempt from providing either a Homeowner's or Commercial Property Owner's Guide to Earthquake Safety.

REQUIREMENTS:

1. Disclosures: Seller is not exempt from common law and statutory duties concerning fraud and deceit, even though the specific TDS Form is not required to be completed. Seller remains obligated to disclose known material facts affecting the value and desirability of the Property.

2. Hazard Zones: Seller is not exempt from applicable statutory obligations to disclose earthquake fault zones, seismic hazard zones, state fire responsibility areas, very high fire hazard severity zones, special flood hazard areas and flood hazard zones pursuant to the Public Resources Code, Government Code and United States Code, even though, pursuant to the Civil Code, the specific NHD Form is not required to be completed.

3. Smoke Detectors: The sale is not exempt from the State requirements that, for single family residences, operable smoke detectors be in place and that a written statement of compliance be provided to Buyer. It is negotiable between Buyer and Seller who is to pay for the cost of compliance.

4. Water Heaters: The sale is not exempt from the State requirement that water heaters be properly anchored, braced or strapped and that Seller provide a written statement of compliance to Buyer. It is negotiable between Buyer and Seller who is to pay for the cost of compliance.

5. Lead-based Paint: The Seller is not exempt from the federal obligation to: (i) disclose known lead-based paint and lead-based paint hazards; (ii) provide Buyer copies of reports or studies covering lead-based paint and hazards on the Property; (iii) provide Buyer with the pamphlet "Protect Your Family From Lead In Your Home;" and (iv) give Buyer a 10-day opportunity to inspect for lead-based paint and hazards, if the Property contains residential dwelling units and was constructed prior to 1978.

6. Megan's Law Database Disclosure: The sale is not exempt from the requirement that residential sales contracts contain the following notice regarding the availability of information about registered sex offenders. "Notice: Pursuant to Section 290.46 of the Penal Code, information about specified registered sex offenders is made available to the public via an Internet Web site maintained by the Department of Justice at www.meganslaw.ca.gov. Depending on an offender's criminal history, this information will include either the address at which the offender resides or the community of residence and ZIP Code in which he or she resides." (Neither Seller nor Brokers are required to check this website. If Buyer wants further information, Broker recommends that Buyer obtain information from this website during Buyer's inspection contingency period. Brokers do not have expertise in this area.)

7. Tax Withholding: The sale is not exempt from providing information pertaining to the withholding obligation under either the federal "FIRPTA" or the California withholding requirements upon the sale of real property. However, an REO Seller which is a corporation or limited liability company, formed within the United States, and either qualified with the Secretary of State to do business in California or with a permanent place of business in California, will be exempt from withholding under both Federal and California law.

8. Brokers:
   A. Inspection: The sale is not exempt from the Broker's obligation to conduct a reasonably competent and diligent visual inspection of the accessible areas of the Property and disclose to Buyer material facts revealed by such an inspection in the sale of residential property containing one-to-four dwelling units. Brokers may do so on C.A.R. Form AVID.

   B. Agency: The sale is not exempt from the obligation to provide agency relationship disclosure and confirmation forms in the sale of residential property containing one-to-four dwelling units.

OTHER CONSIDERATIONS:

1. Local Law: Local law may impose obligations on the transfer of real property (such as the installation of low flow toilets or shower heads, emergency gas shut-off valves or installation of smoke detectors). Local law should be consulted to determine if sales of Lender-owned property are exempt from such requirements.

2. Amendments to Contract: Lender-prepared addenda, amendments, or counter-offers to a Buyer and Seller Agreement, or a Lender-Prepared contract may conflict with, contradict or be inconsistent with terms in Buyer's offer. Brokers cannot advise Buyer or Seller: (i) which specific terms in any offer may be affected; (ii) whether the terms in any such lender-prepared documents are permissible under California Law; or, (iii) in the event of a discrepancy between the Lender-prepared documents and the Buyer-Seller Agreement, which document or which terms may supercede the other. Buyer is advised to seek legal counsel to discuss the applicability and interpretation of any lender-prepared documents prior to signing any such documents.

By signing below, the undersigned acknowledge that each has read, understands and has received a copy of this REO Advisory.

I. TOXIC CONTAMINATION

§7.1 A. Introduction

Concern about toxic contamination has become a primary issue in acquiring, selling, and leasing real property. In representing a client in a purchase and sale or lease transaction, the attorney must be able to guide the client through the toxic investigation and evaluation process and negotiate a buyer's or seller's (or lessor's or lessee's) rights and obligations regarding toxic contamination that may exist on or under a parcel of land or in a building.

This chapter is not intended to be a thorough review of the statutes and cases related to toxic contamination. Rather, it is an overview of the issues that most real property attorneys are likely to encounter (1) in dealing with toxic contamination as part of a real property purchase and sale or lease transaction and (2) in seeking to protect a client from unexpectedly finding that it owns a contaminated parcel of property or building. This chapter is also not intended to address the California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA) (Pub Res C §§21000-21177) or the federal or California Endangered Species Acts (16 USC §§1531-1544; Fish & G C §§2050-2116) and their effect on a purchase of property. These Acts may, however, be of concern in particular transactions. For a complete discussion of CEQA, see Practice Under the California Environmental Quality Act (2d ed Cal CEB 2008).

A typical real property purchase and sale transaction, and many lease transactions, involve three phases related to toxics:

- Investigation of the property for toxic contamination;
- Evaluation of the extent and nature of the contamination; and
- Negotiation and documentation of each party's rights and responsibilities regarding toxic contamination and its remediation or removal.

The investigation and evaluation (or due diligence) process, including the use of consultants, documenting the seller's disclosures, and addressing due diligence issues, is discussed in §§7.36-7.59. Allocation of the parties' respective rights and responsibilities regarding toxic contamination and documentation of the negotiated allocation are discussed in §§7.60-7.85.

Although for simplicity this chapter uses the terms "toxic contamination" or merely "contamination," these are inexact terms that generally refer to any number of chemicals, substances, or by-products defined variously as hazardous wastes, hazardous substances, and petroleum fractions. The latter terms are defined in the statutes referred to in §§7.8-7.9. Other terms used in this chapter may also be defined in the statutes discussed in this chapter:

- "Release" (defined in 42 USC §9601(22));
- "Response" (defined in 42 USC §9601(25)); and
- "Removal," "remedy," and "remedial action" (defined in 42 USC §9601(23)-(24)).

Most practitioners use the term "remediation" instead of the statutory terms "remedy" or "remedial action," and in practice "remediation" is often used to include both "remedial actions" and "removal," even though their statutory definitions are mutually exclusive.

B. What Is Toxic Contamination?

§7.2 1. Frequently Encountered Toxics

The common types of toxic contamination are best categorized in terms of the portion of the property that is affected, e.g., soil (see §7.3), groundwater (see §7.4), or buildings (see §7.5). A contamination problem may affect any or all categories. In addition, underground storage tanks and air quality issues may require special attention (see §§7.6-7.7).

§7.3 a. Soil Contamination

Soil can become contaminated from any number of sources, including leakage from underground or aboveground storage tanks, releases of chemicals used in a building on the property, disposal of toxic contaminants on the property, or agricultural pesticide and fertilizer use. Soil contamination can usually be remediated or removed by excavation and disposal, chemical treatment, or bioremediation. A vitrification, or glassification, process that encases contaminated soil in a glasslike substance without removing the soil has also been used in limited circumstances.

Source: Real Property/California Real Property Sales Transactions/7 Hazardous Waste Considerations/§7.4 b. Groundwater Contamination

§7.4 b. Groundwater Contamination

Releases of toxic contaminants may result in groundwater contamination. Contaminants affecting soil can percolate through the soil to reach groundwater at various depths below the surface, or contaminants leaking from underground tanks or other underground sources can leak directly into the groundwater. The potential for contaminant seepage through the soil to groundwater depends on various factors, including the nature of the contaminant, the porosity of the soil, the depth to groundwater, and the strata in which the release occurred.

When groundwater has been contaminated, the investigation should address whether the contaminated groundwater is limited to an isolated area or whether it is migrating vertically, through the strata above or below the contamination, or horizontally through the groundwater or soil within the contaminated strata. If the contamination is migrating horizontally, treating the problem may require gaining access to adjacent property under which the contaminated groundwater flows in order to install monitoring and remediation facilities. If contamination is migrating vertically, it may affect underground drinking water sources, depending on whether and at what level groundwater is used for drinking water in the area and the strata between the contaminated groundwater and drinking water.

Remediation of groundwater contamination usually requires drilling pumping wells to remove the groundwater and filtering it through systems that remove the contaminants. In limited situations, chemicals can be injected into the groundwater to treat the contamination where it is found. Remediating groundwater contamination usually takes substantially longer than remediating soil contamination.

§7.5 c. Building Contamination

Buildings can be contaminated by products used in the construction of the building or by the activities that have occurred in the building. The most common toxic contaminants historically used in the construction of buildings were asbestos-containing materials (ACMs) and polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs). ACMs were often used as a fire retardant on steel girders and as insulation wrapped around pipes, in ceiling and floor tiles, and in acoustical ceiling spray. Although general use of ACMs as a fire retardant on steel girders continued only until the mid-1970s, other asbestos-containing building materials continued to be used through the 1980s. PCBs are typically found in various electrical equipment, including older fluorescent lamp ballasts.

Inquiries about asbestos should address whether identified ACMs are friable or nonfriable. Friable ACMs, i.e., ACMs that are easily crumbled, are more likely than nonfriable ACMs to result in a release of asbestos fibers into the atmosphere. Nonfriable ACMs can become friable when they deteriorate, and buyers should consider having them removed or encapsulated to avoid asbestos releases. Nonfriable ACMs can often be treated by an in-place maintenance and management program, commonly known as an Operations and Maintenance Program. Although friable ACMs can also be addressed by an Operations and Maintenance Program, almost all buyers require removal. The Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) currently recommends adopting an Operations and Maintenance Program rather than removal for ACMs when such a program is feasible. See Managing Asbestos in Place, A Building Owner's Guide to Operations and Maintenance Programs for Asbestos-Containing Materials, an EPA guidance document issued in 1990.

An owner generally need not remove, or pay a subsequent owner for the cost of removing, ACMs that are part of a building and were installed as building materials in its construction. 3550 Stevens Creek Assocs. v Barclays Bank (9th Cir 1990) 915 F2d 1355. In Stevens Creek, the court found that a buyer of property had no recourse against the seller for the cost of asbestos removal, because the installation of building materials did not require the disposal of a hazardous substance under the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 (CERCLA), as amended (42 USC §§9601-9675). 915 F2d at 1361. For notification requirements regarding released substances and the definitions of "disposal" and "hazardous waste," see 42 USC §§6903, 9601(29). The Stevens Creek court further reviewed the legislative history of the Superfund Amendments and Reauthorization Act of 1986 (Pub L 99-499, 100 Stat 1613) and found the following language in the Senate Report to be instructive (915 F2d at 1364):

> Specifically, [the Bill] makes clear the exclusion from remedial or removal action of a release or a threat of a release… from products which are part of the structure of, and result in exposure within a facility….

The analysis in Stevens Creek should similarly apply to PCBs.

There are, however, exceptions to this general rule. In City of Greenville v W.R. Grace & Co. (D SC 1986) 640 F Supp 559, aff'd (4th Cir 1987) 827 F2d 975, a manufacturer of asbestos-containing Monokote fireproofing materials was found liable to a building owner for the cost of removing the Monokote on theories of negligence and product warranty when the ACMs had fallen off the beams in the building and contaminated it and when the manufacturer was found to have been aware of the risks of asbestos before supplying the Monokote for construction of the building. In CP Holdings v Goldberg-Zoino & Assocs. (D NH 1991) 769 F Supp 432, the court held the seller of a hotel liable to the buyer for the cost of asbestos removal when the buyer, with the seller's foreknowledge, demolished the building after the sale. The court held that, because the sellers knew the building would be demolished, the sale of the building constituted "disposal" of asbestos by the sellers. 769 F Supp at 438.

Use of solvents or corrosive chemicals inside a building as part of a manufacturing process, without adequate controls, can result in toxic contamination of parts of the building, such as walls, ceiling tiles, or floors. If the chemicals seep through the floor or are disposed of outside the building, the soil or groundwater below and around the building may also become contaminated. The presence of chemicals is not always apparent. Dust and dirt in a manufacturing facility sometimes contain significant concentrations of contaminants from the manufacturing processes that were housed in the building. Remediation of such contamination typically involves cleaning the surfaces of walls, ceilings, and floors or removing and replacing parts of the building, or both.

§7.6 d. Storage Tanks

Storage of chemicals and hazardous substances in aboveground or underground tanks is a frequent cause of soil and groundwater contamination. Owing to the frequency of tank leaks and the fact that leakage from underground tanks is often undetected, these tanks are the subject of separate legislation requiring permits for such tanks and periodic testing. 42 USC §§6991-6991m; Health & S C §§25280-25299.206. Buyers who do not intend to use the tanks should consider having them removed before acquiring the property.

§7.7 e. Air Quality

Potential buyers may wish to investigate whether the existing or proposed use of a parcel of property could affect air quality, either directly or indirectly. Although residential and office projects are not usually direct sources of air pollution, they may become subject to air quality regulations designed to address indirect sources.

Health and Safety Code §40716 (added in 1988 as part of the California Clean Air Act) authorizes the adoption and implementation of regulations by air quality management or air pollution control districts to reduce or mitigate indirect sources of air pollution. Although §40716 also provides that it is not intended to infringe on the land use authority of cities and counties, many practitioners are concerned that regulation of indirect sources may result in an additional tier of government approvals for California projects. When the regulations cover transportation controls, the districts may delegate that responsibility to city and county governmental agencies that have adopted their own measures. Health & S C §40717(e).

Another portion of the Clean Air Act authorizes the South Coast Air Quality Management District to impose fees on indirect sources of emissions that it regulates. Health & S C §40522.5. Developers and landowners will likely be subject to even further regulation in the effort to control air pollution resulting directly or indirectly from property use, so their counsel should review the rules promulgated by the air quality management district for the area in which the property is located.

2. Legal Definitions of Toxics

§7.8 a. Federal Statutes

The primary federal statutes dealing with toxic contamination are the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 (CERCLA) as amended (42 USC §§9601-9675) and the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act of 1976 (RCRA) as amended (42 USC §§6901-6992k). CERCLA generally addresses releases of hazardous substances and the procedures, costs, and responsibilities for remediating or removing such substances, while the RCRA is intended to regulate and ensure appropriate protections on the generation, storage, treatment, transportation, and disposal of hazardous wastes. In most real property purchase and sale transactions, CERCLA is the more important statutory scheme.

CERCLA authorizes the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) to prepare a list of substances designated as hazardous based on a determination that certain substances, when released into the environment, may present a substantial danger to the public health or welfare or to the environment. 42 USC §9602(a). The substances so designated, as well as other substances designated under or meeting the definitions of other specified federal statutes, are defined as "hazardous substances." 42 USC §9601(14). They include, but are not limited to, hazardous wastes designated under or having the characteristics identified in the RCRA (42 USC §6921) and toxic pollutants listed under the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 USC §1317(a)).

Under 42 USC §6921(b), the EPA must identify hazardous wastes that are subject to the RCRA, "taking into account toxicity, persistence, and degradability in nature, potential for accumulation in tissue, and other related factors such as flammability, corrosiveness, and other hazardous characteristics." 42 USC §6921(a). The actual definition of hazardous waste under the RCRA also encompasses the potential for wastes to affect health or the environment. 42 USC §6903(5). Petroleum is expressly excluded from the definition of hazardous substances under CERCLA unless it is otherwise designated as a hazardous substance under one of the other Acts incorporated in the definition by reference. 42 USC §9601(14). The EPA's position, however, is that hazardous substances that are added to petroleum, or that increase in concentration solely because of contamination of petroleum during use, do not come within the petroleum exclusion. See memorandum from EPA General Counsel to EPA Assistant Administrator for Solid Waste and Emergency Response (July 31, 1987). The Ninth Circuit endorsed the EPA's position in Cose v Getty Oil Co. (9th Cir 1993) 4 F3d 700, 704. Thus "waste oil" or "used oil" does not fall within the petroleum exclusion.

Despite the general exclusion for petroleum, petroleum leaks are still a concern that must be addressed because of the federal and California underground storage tank statutes, 42 USC §§6991-6991m and Health & S C §§25280-25299.206. For example, 42 USC §6991(2) defines "regulated substance" as all hazardous substances (other than RCRA hazardous wastes) and petroleum. Moreover, it was held in Zands v Nelson (SD Cal 1991) 779 F Supp 1254 that a civil cause of action exists for leaked petroleum under 42 USC §6972(a)(1)(B), which provides that anyone may commence a civil action on his or her own behalf against anyone "who has contributed or who is contributing to the past or present handling, storage, treatment, transportation, or disposal of any solid or hazardous waste." 779 F Supp at 1262. The court further stated that, although CERCLA "explicitly and specifically excludes petroleum," the RCRA has no petroleum exemption. 779 F Supp at 1263 n6.

NOTE: The terms "hazardous substance" and "hazardous waste" are often used carelessly and may often be intended to refer not only to the CERCLA and RCRA definitions (including other statutes incorporated in those Acts by reference) but to lesser known federal and state statutes and to local ordinances, rules, and regulations on toxic liability and remediation requirements. See definition of hazardous materials in §7.48.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.9 b. California Statutes

California has adopted two acts that parallel the primary federal statutes: the Carpenter-Presley-Tanner Hazardous Substance Account Act (HSA) (Health & S C §§25300-25395.45), which is often called the California Superfund and, like CERCLA, addresses issues related to releases of toxic contamination, and the Hazardous Waste Control Law (HCL) (Health & S C §§25100-25257.1). The HCL not only parallels the goals and provisions of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act of 1976 (RCRA), as amended (42 USC §§6901-6992k), but was adopted to be implemented in lieu of the federal program in accordance with the RCRA, which expressly authorized states to adopt in-lieu programs. Health & S C §25101(d); 42 USC §6926.

Not surprisingly, the definitions of "hazardous substance" and "hazardous waste" under the California acts are similar to, and rely in part on, the definitions in the federal acts. Under the HSA, "hazardous substance" is defined to include any hazardous substance designated in accordance with 42 USC §9602, any hazardous waste so defined in 42 USC §6921, certain other substances designated under other federal statutory provisions, and any hazardous waste as defined or designated under the HCL. Health & S C §25316. Petroleum is excluded from the HSA definition of hazardous substance unless it is otherwise specifically designated in one of the code sections incorporated by reference in Health & S C §25316. Health & S C §25317.

The HCL defines hazardous waste in the same terminology as the RCRA definition and expressly incorporates all hazardous wastes so designated under the RCRA. Health & S C §25117. The HCL also requires the State Department of Toxic Substances Control to establish criteria for identifying, and to adopt a list of, hazardous wastes. Health & S C §§25140-25141.

The state underground storage tank statutes have a separate definition of hazardous substance, which differs from the HSA definition in that it includes (in addition to the hazardous substances defined in §25316) regulated substances under 42 USC §6991(2) and materials classified by the National Fire Protection Association as flammable liquids or class II or class III-A combustible liquids. Health & S C §25281(h). These provisions bring petroleum, gasoline, and certain other petroleum fractions that are not normally considered hazardous under the HSA within the California underground storage tank statutes.

§7.10 C. Remediation Obligations and Defenses

Toxic contamination is a significant issue in real property transactions because a property owner, operator, or lessee may be required to remediate contamination or may be liable to third parties for their remediation costs, even if the owner or operator did not cause the contamination or no longer owns the property.

The government may seek the imposition of joint and several liability on defendants unable to demonstrate that liability can be apportioned. However, the Supreme Court has held that apportionment among defendants is proper if there is a reasonable basis for determining the contribution of each defendant to a single harm. See Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v U.S. (2009) 556 US __, 173 L Ed 2d 812, 129 S Ct 1870. In Burlington Northern, the Ninth Circuit had found that the evidence supporting the district court's allocation was insufficient to establish the precise portion of the railroad's liability. In reversing, the Supreme Court held that the evidence need not be precise; there simply must be facts in the record reasonably supporting the apportionment. Here, the district court had used a formula that included the percentage of land leased, the period of ownership, and the types of chemicals spilled.

Defenses to CERCLA liability are limited because CERCLA imposes strict liability. New York v Shore Realty Corp. (2d Cir 1985) 759 F2d 1032, 1042; U.S. v Maryland Bank & Trust Co. (D Md 1986) 632 F Supp 573, 576. As a result, purchasers and lessees should take reasonable steps to protect themselves from buying or leasing contaminated property, and sellers of potentially contaminated property need to address buyers' concerns.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.11 1. Potentially Responsible Parties

Among the "potentially responsible parties" (PRPs) who may be responsible for remediation or removal, or for its costs, are owners, operators, owners or operators at the time of disposal, transporters, persons arranging for transportation or disposal, and disposal facility owners and operators. 42 USC §9607(a) (CERCLA); Health & S C §25323.5 (HSA); U.S. v Maryland Bank & Trust Co. (D Md 1986) 632 F Supp 573, 577 (current owner may be liable without also being current operator, and vice versa, despite poorly drafted language of 42 USC §9607(a)(1), which refers to "owner and operator").

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.12 a. Owners

Buyers and sellers of real property generally focus on the liability of owners as PRPs. The parties that face liability as owners may include a current owner of the property (whether or not that owner disposed of or contributed to the toxic contamination) or the owner "at the time of disposal." 42 USC §9607(a)(1)-(2). See also New York v Shore Realty Corp. (2d Cir 1985) 759 F2d 1032, 1044 ("section 9607(a)(1) unequivocally imposes strict liability on the current owner … without regard to causation"). In Tanglewood E. Homeowners v Charles-Thomas, Inc. (5th Cir 1988) 849 F2d 1568, a residential developer was held potentially liable for toxic contamination caused by the prior owner who abandoned the site, and the court denied the developer's motion to dismiss. The developer was found potentially liable both as a current owner, without regard to causation of the problem (849 F2d at 1573), and as a prior owner on the ground that certain of its development activities constituted "disposal."

An owner is liable under CERCLA (42 USC §§9601-9675) unless the owner can demonstrate one of the "innocent landowner" defenses (see §§7.24-7.31). Thus, an owner who did not cause the contamination but who is a potentially liable party is likely to be jointly and severally liable under CERCLA. U.S. v Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (9th Cir 2007) 479 F3d 1113, 1136 (case was consolidated and cert granted Oct. 1, 2008) 2008 US Lexis 5437, 171 L Ed 2d 931, 129 S Ct 30 (landowners "typically" cannot prove that costs should be divisible among parties, and are thus jointly and severally liable).

Under CERCLA, prior owners "at the time of disposal of any hazardous substance" are also liable for cleanup costs. 42 USC §9607(a)(2). The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals has held that, in most situations, the migration of contamination through the soil does not constitute "disposal." Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v Unocal Corp. (9th Cir 2001) 270 F3d 863. Past owners, therefore, who acquired property after an initial deposit of hazardous waste and then sold it are probably not liable parties under CERCLA. The court in Carson Harbor held that the passive soil migration was not like a leaking underground storage tank, "or a vessel or some other container that would connote 'leaking.'" 270 F3d at 879. The court concluded, therefore, that there was no disposal, but cautioned that it was "mindful that the statute will be applied in a myriad of circumstances, many of which we cannot predict today.… This approach does not rule out the scenario in which 'spilling,' 'leaking,' or perhaps other terms in some circumstances, encompasses passive migration." 270 F3d at 880.

The practical consequence is that current owners are likely to have fewer past owners to share in any cleanup costs. Thus, environmental due diligence before acquisition is more important than ever.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.13 b. Lessees as "Owners"

According to most district courts that have considered the question, site control is a sufficient indicator of ownership to impose CERCLA "owner" liability on lessees or sublessors. See, e.g., Servco Pac., Inc. v Dods (D Haw 2000) 106 F Supp 2d 1034, 1045 (lessee had sufficient control and possessory interest in property under 50-year lease to be deemed "owner"); Louisiana v Braselman Corp. (ED La 1999) 78 F Supp 2d 543, 551 (lessee exercised sufficient control over and responsibility for use of property to be deemed "owner"); U.S. v A & N Cleaners & Launderers, Inc. (SD NY 1992) 788 F Supp 1317, 1333 ("The undisputed facts establish that [the sublessor] exercised a degree of site control over the Property, [which] confers ownership status upon it for purposes of CERCLA §107(a)."); U.S. v South Carolina Recycling & Disposal, Inc. (D SC 1985) 653 F Supp 984, 1003, aff'd sub nom U.S. v Monsanto Co. (4th Cir 1988) 858 F2d 160 ("[The lessee] maintained control over and responsibility for the use of the property and, essentially, stood in the shoes of the property owners.").

The Second Circuit, in holding that a lessee was not an owner in Commander Oil Corp. v Barlo Equip. Corp. (2d Cir 2000) 215 F3d 321, 330, set forth five criteria that could render a lessee an "owner" under CERCLA:

- The lease is for an extensive term and the lessor may not determine how the property is used;
- The lessor cannot terminate the lease before it expires by its terms;
- The lessee may sublet all or some of the property without notifying the lessor;
- The lessee is required to pay all taxes, assessments, insurance, and operation and maintenance costs; and
- The lessee is required to make all structural and other repairs.

The Second Circuit noted that this list of factors is "non-exclusive." The guiding principle for the court was whether the lessee is a de facto owner, not whether it exercises control over the premises. 215 F3d at 331.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.14 c. Operators, Arrangers, Transporters

An owner or lessee may also be liable as an "operator," "arranger," or "transporter" of hazardous substances. 42 USC §9607. Tanglewood E. Homeowners v Charles-Thomas, Inc. (5th Cir 1988) 849 F2d 1568, 1573. Moreover, officers or directors may be personally liable under CERCLA and California law if the person had control over the day-to-day management and operation of the facility that released the hazardous substances. California Dep't of Toxic Substances Control v Celtor Chem. Corp. (ND Cal 1995) 901 F Supp 1481.

§7.15 2. Remediation Orders

If there "may be an imminent and substantial endangerment to public health or welfare or the environment," the President may order a party to take remedial action to abate or remediate a release or to cause the Attorney General to seek an injunction requiring remediation. 42 USC §9606(a); U.S. v Price (D NJ 1983) 577 F Supp 1103, 1112. The President's authority under this section has been delegated to the Environmental Protection Agency. 42 USC §9606(c). Similar authority exists under California law for responses to an imminent or substantial endangerment. Health & S C §25358.3(a)(1), (3). Failure to comply with an order from the EPA or Department of Toxic Substances Control (DTSC) may result in fines up to $25,000 per day (42 USC §9606(b)(1); Health & S C §25359.2) and punitive damages in an amount equal to at least three times the cost of cleanup (42 USC §9607(c)(3); Health & S C §25359(a)).

A private party in compliance with a DTSC remediation agreement or order may pursue contribution and treble damages from a private party who is subject to the agreement or order and has not complied. Health & S C §25359.4.5.

Cleanup orders under 42 USC §9613 have generally survived constitutional challenges (see U.S. v Conservation Chem. Co. (D Mo 1985) 619 F Supp 162), and the courts have rejected due process challenges to "section 106 orders." See Wagner Seed Co. v Daggett (ED NY 1986) 1986 US Dist Lexis 30030, aff'd (2d Cir 1986) 800 F2d 310; U.S. v Reilly Tar & Chem. Co. (D Minn 1985) 606 F Supp 412. In General Elec. Co. v EPA (DC Cir 2004) 360 F3d 188, there was a facial due process constitutional challenge to CERCLA §105 orders in general (42 USC §§9606, 9613) as opposed to a challenge to a specific EPA order or action. The court held that a constitutional challenge is supported by 42 USC §9613.

California cities and redevelopment agencies also have authority to issue cleanup orders and recover costs from private parties. Redevelopment agencies derive such authority from the Polanco Redevelopment Act (Health & S C §§33459-33459.8). See Redevelopment Agency v Salvation Army (2002) 103 CA4th 755, 127 CR2d 30 (redevelopment agency need not comply with CERCLA to recover from former property owner costs of removing contaminated soil from property); see also Brown & Winters, The Polanco Redevelopment Act: California's Most Important Brownfields Statute, 26 CEB Real Prop L Rep 174 (Sept. 2003). The Fourth District Court of Appeal has held that a redevelopment agency can sue private parties for injunctive relief under the Polanco Act, and that the agency does not need to show that an "imminent and substantial endangerment" exists or that it incurred any costs or suffered injury. Redevelopment Agency v San Diego Gas & Elec. Co. (2003) 111 CA4th 912, 4 CR3d 317. California law also authorizes cleanup orders by cities. Health & S C §§25401-25402.3. However, cities are preempted from using their ordinances to address sites listed by the Department of Toxic Substances Control. City of Lodi v Randtron (2004) 118 CA4th 337, 13 CR3d 107.

Only the government, however, has the authority to issue remediation orders. Under CERCLA, a private party cannot require a prior owner who caused contamination on the property to remediate it and is limited to an action to recover costs actually incurred. Cadillac Fairview/Cal. v Dow Chem. Co. (9th Cir 1988) 840 F2d 691, 696; New York v Shore Realty Corp. (2d Cir 1985) 759 F2d 1032, 1048. Under the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act of 1976 (RCRA) (42 USC §§6901-6992k), however, a private party can obtain an injunction requiring investigation and cleanup. Lincoln Props. v Higgins (ED Cal 1993) 1993 US Dist Lexis 1251. See also 42 USC §6972(a). As a practical matter, however, cost recovery actions (see §7.16) are often used by owners who have incurred some response costs as leverage to force a responsible party to agree to take over the remediation in settlement of the action.

§7.16 3. Cost Recovery and Contribution

Federal and state statutes permit a party who incurs remediation or removal costs (including the federal or state government) to seek cost recovery from the responsible parties. 42 USC §9607(a)(4)(A)-(B); Health & S C §§25360, 25363(e). Such actions may proceed whether or not the party initiating the action incurred its response costs under a government remediation order, but a plaintiff seeking to recover costs under CERCLA must demonstrate that the response costs were incurred in a manner consistent with the National Contingency Plan (NCP). 42 USC §9607(a)(4)(B). Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v Unocal Corp. (9th Cir 2001) 270 F3d 863; Cadillac Fairview/Cal. v Dow Chem. Co. (9th Cir 1988) 840 F2d 691. The NCP in 40 CFR pt 300, required under 42 USC §9605, sets forth the government's cleanup process guidelines. Among other things, the NCP requires parties embarking on a cleanup to provide a meaningful opportunity for public comment on the proposed remediation plan. See 40 CFR §300.430(c). Failure to accommodate such participation has been held to bar the recovery of response costs. Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v Unocal Corp., supra. An owner who acquires contaminated property may recover from its seller or from any other prior owner, if the seller or prior owner owned the property "at the time of disposal of any hazardous substances." 42 USC §9607(a)(2); Tanglewood E. Homeowners v Charles-Thomas, Inc. (5th Cir 1988) 849 F2d 1568, 1573. A buyer who later becomes a seller can also become subject to the same exposures from its buyers.

§7.17 a. Parties Eligible for Cost Recovery Actions

For many years, only parties who were not potentially responsible parties (PRPs) themselves could bring cost recovery actions under CERCLA §107 (42 USC §9607) and seek joint and several liability. See Pinal Creek Group v Newmont Mining Corp. (9th Cir 1997) 118 F3d 1298 (party partly responsible for hazardous waste site was entitled to seek contribution under CERCLA from other PRPs, but such contribution was limited to several liability, not joint liability). In 2007, however, the Supreme Court ruled that a PRP may bring a cost recovery action under §107(a)(4)(B) (42 USC §9607(a)(4)(B)) against other PRPs and that those PRPs so sued are themselves able to bring a contribution claim against other responsible parties under CERCLA §113(f) (42 USC §9613(f)). U.S. v Atlantic Research Corp. (2007) 551 US 128, 168 L Ed 2d 28, 127 S Ct 2331. A PRP who has not been subject to a §107 cost recovery action is not entitled to seek contribution under §113 but may proceed under §107 for cost recovery. Kotrous v Goss-Jewett Co. (9th Cir 2008) 523 F3d 924, 934.

The Supreme Court has ruled that PRPs seeking costs under the CERCLA contribution provision (CERCLA §113; 42 USC §9613) may not proceed with such an action unless (1) the claim has been brought "during or following" a civil action under CERCLA §106 or §107 (42 USC §9613(f)(1)), or (2) the plaintiff has resolved its liability to the state or the United States "in an administratively or judicially approved settlement" (42 USC §9613(f)(3)(B)). Cooper Indus. v Aviall Servs., Inc. (2004) 543 US 157, 160 L Ed 2d 548, 560, 125 S Ct 577.

It is unclear whether a PRP who cannot meet the eligibility requirements for a contribution action under §113 may pursue a contribution claim under §107. The Supreme Court has expressly left unaddressed the question of whether "§107(a) contains an additional implied right to contribution for PRPs who are not eligible for relief under §113(f)," but suggested the answer would be no. U.S. v Atlantic Research Corp. (2007) 551 US 128, 168 L Ed 2d 28, 41 n8, 127 S Ct 2331.

California's Superfund law, the Carpenter-Presley-Tanner Hazardous Substance Account Act (HSA) (Health & S C §§25300-25395.45), does not have restrictive eligibility language like CERCLA §113; it allows any person who has incurred costs in accordance with the HSA to seek contribution. Health & S C §25363(e). Thus, a party's ability to bring a contribution action under the HSA is not affected by Cooper Indus. v Aviall Servs., Inc., supra.

§7.18 b. Liability and Damages Issues

Although an owner who remediates can pursue an action under cost recovery provisions, recovery actions are often expensive and may not have the desired results. The seller may try to defend the action by claiming that response costs were not incurred in accordance with the National Contingency Plan (42 USC §9607(a)(4)(B); Cadillac Fairview/Cal. v Dow Chem. Co. (9th Cir 1988) 840 F2d 691, 695) or may try to minimize its liability by alleging that the buyer either contributed to the problem in some way (see Chemical Waste Mgmt., Inc. v Armstrong World Indus. (ED Pa 1987) 669 F Supp 1285) or partially benefited from the remediation it performed. In such cases, a potentially responsible party (PRP) may still be able to assert contribution claims against another PRP under 42 USC §9613(f); it may not, however, claim joint and several liability under 42 USC §9607(a) unless it proves it is an innocent landowner under CERCLA. Boyce v Bumb (ND Cal 1996) 944 F Supp 807. See §7.12.

A party that incurs response costs under a remediation order may also be entitled to recovery from the federal Superfund if the claimant can prove by a preponderance of the evidence either that it is not liable for response costs under 42 USC §9607 or that the remediation order was arbitrary or capricious. 42 USC §9606(b)(2). Most parties cannot make either showing. The California statutory scheme provides few recovery rights from the state Superfund and requires the property involved to be an owner-occupied, single-family residence. Health & S C §25375(a)(3)(A).

§7.19 c. Attorney Fees

A private litigant's attorney fees in a CERCLA recovery action (42 USC §9607(a)(4)(B)) are not generally recoverable as response costs. Key Tronic Corp. v U.S. (1994) 511 US 809, 128 L Ed 2d 797, 114 S Ct 1960. Only fees for services performed by the attorney for work "that is closely tied to the actual clean up" may be response costs covered by CERCLA. 511 US at 820, 128 L Ed 2d at 807. Under 42 USC §9607(a)(4)(A), however, the government can recover its reasonable attorney fees as a part of its response costs. U.S. v Chapman (9th Cir 1998) 146 F3d 1166.

A private party may recover attorney fees in an action for injunctive relief under the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act of 1976 (RCRA), but under that statute a plaintiff must show that the hazardous waste "may present an imminent and substantial endangerment." 42 USC §6972(a)(1)(B), (e). Cleanup costs, however, cannot be recovered under the RCRA. In Meghrig v KFC W., Inc. (1996) 516 US 479, 134 L Ed 2d 121, 116 S Ct 1251, the Supreme Court held that the RCRA did not authorize a private cause of action to recover environmental costs for the cleanup of toxic waste that does not continue to endanger health or environment at the time of suit. Noting that the citizen-suit provision of 42 USC §6972 is not intended to provide compensation for past cleanup efforts, the Court held that for that provision to become effective there must be "imminent and substantial endangerment to health or the environment" at the time the suit is brought. 516 US at 484, 134 L Ed 2d at 127.

§7.20 d. Common Law Actions

Common law actions for nuisance and trespass may be available to a current owner seeking recovery or contribution. See Meghrig v KFC W., Inc. (1996) 516 US 479, 134 L Ed 2d 121, 116 S Ct 1251. See also Chevron U.S.A. Inc. v Superior Court (1994) 44 CA4th 1009, 54 CR2d 324 (property owner's nuisance and trespass claim for environmental remediation costs against fuel tank installer). There is, however, a 3-year limitations period for commencing an action for trespass and other injuries to real property (CCP §338(b)), which is often a significant hurdle for plaintiffs in recovery actions. A plaintiff can maintain an action for a "continuing" trespass or nuisance, but must demonstrate that the environmental harm is abatable and that the cost of abatement is reasonable. Mangini v Aerojet-Gen. Corp. (1996) 12 C4th 1087, 51 CR2d 272. Regarding diminution in the value of contaminated property, the courts have held that such damage can be recovered only as a consequence of a permanent trespass or nuisance. FDIC v Jackson-Shaw Partners No. 46, Ltd. (ND Cal 1994) 850 F Supp 839, 842; see also CAMSI IV v Hunter Tech. Corp. (1991) 230 CA3d 1525, 282 CR 80; Mangini v Aerojet-Gen. Corp. (1991) 230 CA3d 1125, 281 CR 827.

CERCLA establishes a discovery rule in cases brought under state law for personal injury or property damage caused or contributed to by exposure to any hazardous substance. If the applicable state limitations period for such action provides an earlier commencement date than the federally required commencement date, the more lenient federal commencement date will apply. 42 USC §9658(a). The federally required commencement date is the date a plaintiff knew or reasonably should have known that the property damages were caused or contributed to by the hazardous substances concerned. 42 USC §9658(b)(4)(A). See O'Connor v Boeing N. Am., Inc. (9th Cir 2002) 311 F3d 1139; California v Montrose Chem. Corp. (9th Cir 1997) 104 F3d 1507.

§7.21 4. Private Agreement Limitations

Although parties to a transaction can allocate liabilities for remediation costs between themselves (e.g., a seller might indemnify a buyer for preexisting conditions), such allocations are, at least in the Ninth Circuit and California, ineffective against the federal or state government or against third parties bringing actions under 42 USC §9607(a)(4)(B). 42 USC §9607(e); Health & S C §25364. Both statutes provide, in effect, that no indemnification, hold-harmless, conveyance, or similar agreement is effective to transfer liability under the respective statutory schemes from one party to another, even though neither statute was intended to bar the effectiveness of such agreements between the parties. The cases addressing the statutory limitations are discussed further in §7.61.

Ironically, although third parties are not bound by an agreement between two parties to allocate cleanup costs, at least one court has held that such an agreement may constitute a waiver of rights against third parties. In Southdown v Allen (ND Ala 2000) 119 F Supp 2d 1223, 1241, the court said that the seller's agreement with the buyer to clean up the site "at the seller's sole expense" waived the seller's CERCLA contribution rights against third parties because the agreement was silent on the issue. Thus, parties should include language preserving contribution rights if they wish to ensure that they retain them.

Landlords and lessees typically agree on allocation of costs and liabilities for environmental problems. Although such agreements are generally upheld, a provision requiring a lessee to clean up "any" contamination might not be enforced, depending on a variety of factors (including the length of the lease term, the cost of complete cleanup and its relationship to the rental cost, and the parties' expectations). SDC/Pullman Partners v Tolo Inc. (1997) 60 CA4th 37, 70 CR2d 62 (toxic substance clause in lease did not require lessee to spend potentially enormous sums to extract de minimis amounts of certain molecules to avoid purely speculative environmental liability).

§7.22 5. CERCLA Defenses

Four defense provisions of CERCLA are usually relevant to purchase and sale transactions. These are the third party defense (see §7.23), the "innocent landowner" defense (see §7.24), the "contiguous property owner" defense (see §7.30), and the "bona fide prospective purchaser" defense (see §7.31).

The difference between the third party defense and the others is that a third party defense depends on establishing that no "contractual relationship" existed with the defendant landowner (or other potentially responsible party), while the innocent landowner and the bona fide prospective purchaser defenses are used when a contractual relationship exists but is legally negated by the innocent landowner provisions of 42 USC §§9607(b)(3) and 9601(35).

The contiguous property owner and bona fide prospective purchaser defenses are actually variations of the innocent landowner defense that were created as part of the 2002 amendment of CERCLA by the Small Business Liability Relief and Brownfields Revitalization Act (Pub L 107-118, 115 Stat 2356, 2368). In California, the third party and the innocent landowner defenses are incorporated into the Carpenter-Presley-Tanner Hazardous Substance Account Act (HSA) (Health & S C §§25300-25395.45) (see §7.9) under Health & S C §25323.5(b); but rather than amending that Act to include the new federal defenses, the legislature included them in a separate statute, the California Land Reuse and Revitalization Act of 2004 (Health & S C §§25395.60-25395.119) (also known as AB 389). Health & S C §§25395.69, 25395.70. See §7.32.

The so-called secured creditors exemption can also be important to a purchase and sale transaction, but because it is generally more relevant to lender considerations it is covered in §7.88, discussing lender concerns.

Defenses also exist for someone who acquires property by inheritance or bequest (42 USC §9601(35)(A)(iii)); and, theoretically, for contamination caused by acts of God or war (42 USC §9607(b)(1)-(2)), but in practice such defenses almost always fail.

The Ninth Circuit has held that only statutory defenses are available in CERCLA actions; equitable defenses, such as laches, are not available. California v Neville Chem. Co. (9th Cir 2004) 358 F3d 661.

§7.23 a. The Third Party Defense

Under 42 USC §9607(b)(3), the third party defense is available when a third party:

- Caused contamination by its act or omission;
- Is not an employee or agent of a landowner or another potentially responsible party (PRP); and
- Did not act or fail to act in connection with a contractual relationship (direct or indirect) with the landowner or other PRP.

The landowner or other PRP must also show that "(a) he exercised due care with respect to the hazardous substance concerned… and (b) he took precautions against foreseeable acts or omissions of any such third party and the consequences that could foreseeably result from such acts or omissions." 42 USC §9607(b)(3). For purposes of the third party defense, contractual relationships are defined as including "land contracts, deeds, easements, leases, or other instruments transferring title or possession." 42 USC §9601(35)(A). Contractual relationships have been found with purchasers who failed to achieve innocent landowner status (U.S. v Pacific Hide & Fur Depot, Inc. (D Idaho 1989) 716 F Supp 1341, 1347) and lessors (U.S. v Monsanto Co. (4th Cir 1988) 858 F2d 160, 169); indirect contractual relationships have been found with sublessees (Washington v Time Oil Co. (WD Wash 1988) 687 F Supp 529, 533). Obviously, the third party defense is available only in limited circumstances.

EXAMPLE: In Monsanto, the court noted that if the defendants had shown that they removed all their waste from the disposal facility, they might have been able to successfully assert a third party defense. See U.S. v Monsanto Co. (4th Cir 1988) 858 F2d 160, 171 n21.

§7.24 b. The Innocent Landowner Defense

The innocent landowner defense under CERCLA is found in 42 USC §9601(35), which excludes from the term "contractual relationship" any relationship in which the "defendant" acquired its property after it was contaminated and did not know and had no reason to know of the contamination when it acquired the property. 42 USC §9601(35)(A). The criteria for the innocent landowner defense are defined as follows (42 USC §9601(35)(B)):

> (B) Reason to know.
> (i) All appropriate inquiries. To establish that the defendant had no reason to know of the matter described in subparagraph (A)(i), the defendant must demonstrate to a court that—
> (I) On or before the date on which the defendant acquired the facility, the defendant carried out all appropriate inquiries, as provided in clauses (ii) and (iv), into the previous ownership and uses of the facility in accordance with generally accepted good commercial and customary standards and practices; and
> (II) the defendant took reasonable steps to—
> (aa) stop any continuing release;
> (bb) prevent any threatened future release; and
> (cc) prevent or limit any human, environmental, or natural resource exposure to any previously released hazardous substance. [Emphasis added.]

§7.25 (1) Requirements to Qualify for Innocent Landowner Status

Because the innocent landowner defense is part of 42 USC §9601(35), a party seeking to use the defense must still meet the other requirements of 42 USC §9607(b)(3). Therefore, to qualify as an innocent landowner, an owner must have:

- Acquired the property after it was contaminated;
- Undertaken "all appropriate inquiries" on or before the date of acquiring the property as required by 42 USC §9601(35);
- Exercised due care with regard to the contamination (presumably after discovering it); and
- If applicable, taken precautions against foreseeable acts or omissions of third parties as required by §9607(b)(3).

Because the terminology of §9601(35)(A) refers to a defendant who acquired the property after the disposal of contamination on the facility, the CERCLA definition of "disposal" and the cases applying that definition as discussed in §7.12 should be relevant to any effort to claim innocent landowner status. One court has held that a landowner who did not cause the initial release of hazardous substances still will not qualify as an "innocent landowner" if that owner actively spreads the contaminated soil (even if the owner did not know the soil was contaminated). Lewis Operating Corp. v U.S. (CD Cal 2007) 533 F Supp 2d 1041, 1047.

PRACTICE TIP: For inquiries made before May 31, 1997, the level of inquiry necessary to satisfy §9601(35)(B) is still unclear. In some circumstances, an inquiry may not be necessary at all. U.S. v Pacific Hide & Fur Depot, Inc. (D Idaho 1989) 716 F Supp 1341, 1348, citing U.S. v Serafini (MD Pa 1988) 706 F Supp 346. What is clear is that the required level of inquiry depends on the circumstances (U.S. v Pacific Hide & Fur Depot, Inc., supra) and that, in most cases, some level of inquiry will be required to establish the defense. The Pacific Hide court suggested that the appropriate guideline should be that "[c]ommercial transactions are held to the strictest standard; private transactions are given a little more leniency; and inheritances and bequests are treated the most leniently…." U.S. v Pacific Hide & Fur Depot, Inc., supra.

§7.26 (2) Application to Property Purchased Before May 31, 1997

In 2002, CERCLA was amended by the Small Business Liability Relief and Brownfields Revitalization Act (Pub L 107-118, 115 Stat 2356, 2368) to clarify the standards for establishing the innocent landowner defense. For property purchased before May 31, 1997, a court shall take into account these factors:

- The defendant's specialized knowledge or experience, if any;
- The relationship of the purchase price to the uncontaminated value of the property;
- Any commonly known or reasonably ascertainable information about the property;
- The obviousness of the presence or likely presence of contamination at the property; and
- The ability of the defendant to detect the contamination by appropriate inspection. 42 USC §9601(35)(B)(iv)(I).

§7.27 (3) Application to Property Purchased Between May 31, 1997, and November 1, 2006

As part of the 2002 CERCLA amendments, Congress directed the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) to establish "all appropriate inquiries" standards for property purchased on or after May 31, 1997. 42 USC §9601(35)(B)(iv)(II). Until the EPA promulgated the regulations, which became effective November 1, 2006, the procedures of the American Society for Testing and Materials (ASTM) Standard E1527-97 or Standard E1527-00 (entitled "Standard Practice for Environmental Site Assessments: Phase 1 Environmental Site Assessment Process") satisfied the "all appropriate inquiries" requirements. 42 USC §9601(35)(B)(iv)(II); 70 Fed Reg 66069-66113 (2005). To obtain the ASTM Standards, see the ASTM website in the Directory.

§7.28 (4) Application to Property Purchased On or After November 1, 2006

In response to the 2002 congressional directive, the EPA issued final regulations that became effective November 1, 2006. See 40 CFR §§312.1-312.31. Any party who claims protection from CERCLA liability as an innocent landowner, a bona fide prospective purchaser, or a contiguous property owner must meet what is commonly known as the "all appropriate inquiries" requirement under 42 USC §9601(35)(B). Parties who receive grants under the EPA's Brownfields Grant program to assess and characterize properties also must make all appropriate inquiries.

All appropriate inquiries must be conducted or updated within 1 year before the date of acquisition of a property. 40 CFR §312.20(a). If all appropriate inquiries are conducted more than 180 days before the acquisition date, certain aspects of the inquiries must be updated. 40 CFR §312.20(b). Many of the inquiry's activities must be conducted by, or under the supervision or responsible charge of, an individual who qualifies as an environmental professional who has met specific requirements for education and experience. 40 CFR §312.10(b). The environmental professional's inquiry must include (40 CFR §312.21):

- Interviews with past and present owners, operators, and occupants (see 40 CFR §312.23);
- Reviews of historical sources of information (see 40 CFR §312.24);
- Reviews of federal, state, tribal, and local government records (see 40 CFR §312.26);
- Visual inspections of the facility and adjoining properties (see 40 CFR §312.27);
- Commonly known or reasonably ascertainable information (see 40 CFR §312.30); and
- An assessment of the degree of obviousness of the presence or likely presence of contamination at the property and the ability to detect the contamination (see 40 CFR §312.31).

Additional inquiries that must be conducted by or for the prospective landowner or grantee include (40 CFR §312.23):

- Searches for environmental cleanup liens (see 40 CFR §312.25);
- Assessments of any specialized knowledge or experience of the prospective landowner (or grantee) (see 40 CFR §312.28);
- An assessment of the relationship of the purchase price to the fair market value of the property, if the property was not contaminated (see 40 CFR §312.29); and
- Commonly known or reasonably ascertainable information (see 40 CFR §312.30).

§7.29 (5) Comparison of "All Appropriate Inquiries" Standards

The EPA's "all appropriate inquiries" standard does not differ significantly from the ASTM Standard E1527-05. (This document can be obtained through the ASTM website; see the Directory.) The current EPA regulations include all the main activities that previously were performed as part of environmental due diligence, such as site reconnaissance, records review, interviews, and documentation of recognized environmental conditions. However, the current regulations extend the scope of some of the environmental due diligence activities and require that significant data gaps or uncertainties be documented. Under the current regulations:

- The subject property's current owner or occupants must be interviewed. (ASTM E1527-00 requires only that the environmental professional make a reasonable attempt to conduct such interviews.)
- Past owners and occupants of the subject property must be interviewed if that is necessary to meet the objectives and performance factors. (ASTM E1527-00 requires the environmental professional to inquire about past uses of the subject property when interviewing the current property owner.)
- If the subject property is abandoned, an owner of a neighboring property must be interviewed. (ASTM E1527-00 requires such interviews at the environmental professional's discretion.)
- There is no specification regarding who is responsible for performing record searches, including searches for use limitations and environmental cleanup liens. (ASTM E1527-00 specifies that these record searches are the responsibility of the user and requires that the results be reported to the environmental professional.)
- Tribal and local government records must be examined. (ASTM E1527-00 has no such requirement.)
- Data gaps must be explicitly identified and documented. (ASTM E1527-00 has no such requirement.)
- There are specific documentation requirements if the subject property cannot be visually inspected. (ASTM E1527-00 has no such requirements.)

§7.30 c. The Contiguous Property Owner Defense

The 2002 CERCLA amendments created a new defense for owners whose property lies over contaminated groundwater, if a number of conditions are met. To qualify for the defense, a "contiguous owner" must establish the following eight conditions by a preponderance of the evidence (42 USC §9607(q)):

- The contiguous owner did not cause, contribute to, or consent to the contamination;
- The contiguous owner is not potentially liable, or affiliated with anyone who is, either "through any direct or indirect familial relationship or any contractual, corporate, or financial relationship" (other than one created by a contract for the sale of goods or services), or as a result of a reorganization of a potentially liable business entity;
- The contiguous owner has taken reasonable steps to
- stop any continuing release;
- prevent any threatened future release; and
- prevent or limit human, environmental, or natural resource exposure to any hazardous substance released on or from property owned by that person (this does not require the contiguous owner to conduct groundwater investigations or cleanup, except in accordance with EPA policy of May 24, 1995, concerning owners of property containing contaminated aquifers);
- The contiguous owner has provided "full cooperation, assistance, and access" for cleanup and restoration;
- The contiguous owner is in compliance with any land use restrictions established or relied on for the cleanup, and has not impeded the effectiveness or integrity of any institutional control;
- The contiguous owner is in compliance with any EPA information request or subpoena;
- The contiguous owner has provided "all legally required notices with respect to the discovery or release of hazardous substances" at the property; and
- When the contiguous owner acquired the property, the contiguous owner (1) conducted all appropriate inquiries, and (2) did not know or have reason to know that the property was or could be contaminated by an offsite release.

The contiguous owner defense suffers from the same limitation as the original innocent landowner defense: If contamination was detected before the contiguous owner acquired the property, the defense is not valid. However, the amendments state that a contiguous owner who fails to qualify because contamination was detected can still seek to qualify as a bona fide prospective purchaser under §9601(40) if the person is otherwise described in that section. 42 USC §9607(q)(1)(C). See §7.31.

Those who do qualify as contiguous owners can request two key legal assurances from the EPA: (1) a covenant not to sue, and (2) CERCLA contribution protection. 42 USC §9607(q)(3).

§7.31 d. The Bona Fide Prospective Purchaser Defense

The 2002 CERCLA amendments created a new defense that (unlike the innocent landowner and contiguous owner defenses) applies even if the contamination was detected. A person, or tenant of a person, who acquires ownership of a facility after January 11, 2002, and establishes the following eight facts by a preponderance of the evidence, is a "bona fide prospective purchaser" (BFPP) and is not liable for contamination (42 USC §9601(40)):

- All disposal of hazardous substances occurred before the BFPP acquired the facility;
- The BFPP is not potentially liable, or affiliated with anyone who is potentially liable, for response costs at a facility through any direct or indirect familial relationship, or through any contractual, corporate, or financial relationship (other than one created by a contract for sale of goods or services), or as a result of a reorganization of a potentially liable business entity;
- The BFPP has taken reasonable steps to
- stop any continuing release,
- prevent any threatened future release, and
- prevent or limit human, environmental, or natural resource exposure to any previously released hazardous substance;
- The BFPP has provided "full cooperation, assistance, and access" for cleanup and restoration;
- The BFPP is in compliance with any land use restrictions established or relied on for the cleanup, and has not impeded the effectiveness or integrity of any institutional control;
- The BFPP is in compliance with any EPA information request or subpoena;
- The BFPP has provided "all legally required notices with respect to the discovery or release of hazardous substances" at the facility; and
- On acquisition of the property, the BFPP conducted all appropriate inquiry.

PRACTICE TIP: The statutory language excusing contiguous owners from conducting groundwater investigations or cleanup (42 USC §9607(q)(1)(D)) is not included in the statutory language relating to BFPPs. This creates an argument, of course, that a BFPP may be required to take action with respect to groundwater.

§7.32 6. California Land Reuse and Revitalization Act of 2004

Under California's "brownfields" statute, the Land Reuse and Revitalization Act of 2004 (Health & S C §§25395.60-25395.109), buyers of contaminated properties in "urban infill areas" can agree to clean up the property and pay state oversight costs and, in return, receive limited liability protections and a right of contribution to pursue liable parties and recover attorney fees. In 2006, the Act was amended to extend those benefits to long-term lessees. The Act provides immunities under certain circumstances at certain sites.

The Act also creates an option for a prospective purchaser of contaminated property (termed a "bona fide purchaser"; see Health & S C §§25395.69, 25395.80; §7.31) to get a preview of what an agency is likely to require for cleanup by entering into a "consultative services agreement" with an agency (e.g., the State Water Resources Control Board, a Regional Water Quality Control Board, or the Department of Toxic Substances Control). See Health & S C §25395.116. The prospective purchaser pays for the agency's services. Health & S C §25395.116(c)(1). The agency is directed to meet to discuss the environmental data and develop plans within 30 days of submission, and then provide comments on (1) what information, if any, might be needed to formulate a cleanup plan; (2) any proposed response actions that may be necessary; and (3) an estimate of the time required to approve a bona fide purchaser agreement. Health & S C §25395.116(c)(3), (d). If the agency declines to enter into a consultative services agreement, it must provide "specific reasons for its decision" to the prospective purchaser; however, the agency's entry into such agreements is "subject to available staff and resources, as determined by the agency." Health & S C §25395.116(d).

§7.33 a. Eligible Property

A buyer seeking brownfield status must obtain a determination from the governing agency that the subject property is eligible under the Act. The site cannot be a listed federal or state Superfund site or a petroleum-release-only site eligible for reimbursement under the state Underground Storage Tank Cleanup Fund. Health & S C §25395.79.2(b). The property must be located in both an "urban area" and an "infill area." Health & S C §25395.79.2(a). An "urban area" is defined as an incorporated city, or an unincorporated area "completely surrounded by one or more incorporated cities," in which (1) the unincorporated area, and the surrounding incorporated cities, have populations of 100,000 or more, and (2) the population density of the unincorporated area is at least as great as the density of the surrounding cities. Health & S C §25395.79.2(c)(2). An "infill area" is defined as "a vacant or underutilized lot of land within an urban area that has been previously developed or that is surrounded by parcels that are or have been previously developed." Health & S C §25395.79.2(c)(1).

Source: Real Property/California Real Property Sales Transactions/7 Hazardous Waste Considerations/§7.34 b. Bona Fide Purchaser

§7.34 b. Bona Fide Purchaser

If the property qualifies, the purchaser must meet all of the qualifications for a "bona fide purchaser" under the California Land Reuse and Revitalization Act of 2004. The qualifications are essentially the same as those required to be a "bona fide prospective purchaser" under CERCLA (42 USC §9601(40)). The contamination must have occurred before the purchaser acquired the site, and the purchaser must not be potentially liable, or affiliated with anyone who is. Health & S C §25395.69(a). In addition, the purchaser must prove "by a preponderance of the evidence" that the purchaser (Health & S C §25395.80):

- Made "all appropriate inquiries" into the previous ownership and uses of the site on or before acquisition;
- Exercised "appropriate care" with respect to the contamination;
- Provided "full cooperation, assistance, and access" to persons authorized to clean up;
- Complied with land use controls relating to a cleanup and did not impede any cleanup;
- Complied with all requests for information from any agency; and
- Provided "all notices and satisfie[d] reporting requirements required by state or federal law with respect to the discovery or release of hazardous substances at the site."

Under Health & S C §29395.64, the purchaser must enter into an agreement with the State Water Resources Control Board, a Regional Water Quality Control Board, or the Department of Toxic Substances Control to:

- Perform a site assessment and, if the agency determines it is necessary, prepare and implement a response plan (Health & S C §29395.92(a));
- Reimburse the agency for all costs (Health & S C §29395.93(b)); and
- Provide notice and opportunity for public participation if a response plan is required (Health & S C §29395.96(a)).

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.35 c. Immunity From Cleanup Costs

The California Land Reuse and Revitalization Act of 2004 (Act) protects bona fide purchasers from nonagency claims for cleanup costs and some other damages under state statutes. Specifically, the participating purchaser "is not liable under any applicable statute for a claim made by any person, other than an agency, for response costs or other damages associated with a release or threatened release of a hazardous material at the site." Health & S C §25395.81(a)(1).

PRACTICE TIP: The legislative counsel's digest for the Act (Stats 2004, ch 705) asserts that it provides immunity from claims "under specified state statutory and common laws"; however, that language is not in the Act itself. The Act defines the phrase "applicable law" to include certain common law actions (see Health & S C §25395.66), but the phrase "applicable law" is not used in the section providing liability immunity (Health & S C §25395.81); instead, the phrase "applicable statute" is used. This discrepancy may be a drafting error, but it is not an error that a buyer can assume will be corrected. The phrase "applicable statute" is likely to be interpreted to mean what it says. Thus, the Act likely will not insulate a bona fide purchaser from common law claims.

Common law claims represent only one category of claims from which a bona fide purchaser is not protected. Others include the following:

- Claims under federal statutes (such as CERCLA and RCRA) (see Health & S C §§25395.66 ("applicable law" does not include federal statutes), 25395.81 (providing immunities under "state statute"));
- Claims for bodily injury or wrongful death (Health & S C §25395.86(a)(1));
- Claims under the state Hazardous Waste Control Law (Health & S C §25395.86(a)(2));
- Criminal acts and permit violations (Health & S C §25395.86(a)(3)-(4));
- Claims by a redevelopment agency under the Polanco Act (Health & S C §25395.86(b)); and
- Claims by the State Water Resources Control Board, a Regional Water Quality Control Board, or the Department of Toxic Substances Control that are "necessary to protect public health and safety or the environment pursuant to an applicable statute" (Health & S C §25395.86(c)).

The Act explicitly provides the participating purchaser with a right of contribution (Health & S C §25395.85), including attorney fees and experts' fees, if the purchaser prevails and had served a written demand (which does not include attorney fees or experts' fees) for cleanup costs at least 20 calendar days before trial. Health & S C §25395.84.

NOTE: There is a potential hurdle in seeking to exercise a right of contribution. The Seventh Circuit has held that cleanup costs are not recoverable under a state contribution statute unless they are consistent with the National Contingency Plan (NCP), the EPA's cleanup process regulations. PMC, Inc. v Sherwin-Williams Co. (7th Cir 1998) 151 F3d 610, 617. The court reasoned that Congress created a sanction in CERCLA by prohibiting private parties from recovering cleanup costs inconsistent with the NCP, and that a private party cannot nullify that sanction by recovering costs under a general state contribution statute. Whether courts in the Ninth Circuit will accept or reject (or perhaps distinguish) the PMC decision remains to be seen.

The Act also allows an agency to file a lien on the property for any "unrecovered costs" in an amount not to exceed (1) the increase in fair market value attributable to the cleanup at the time of the property's disposition, and (2) the unrecovered response costs actually incurred by the agency. Health & S C §25395.83.

D. Investigation and Review of Environmental Conditions

§7.36 1. California Toxic Disclosure Statutes

The due diligence process for toxic contamination in California has been made somewhat easier by California's statutory disclosure requirements. Two sets of statutes basically require sellers of residential and commercial real properties to disclose known toxic contamination to buyers and, in certain circumstances, other third parties.

Under Health & S C §25359.7(a), an owner of nonresidential real property must disclose releases of hazardous substances located on or beneath the property to purchasers, lessees, or renters of the property when the owner either knows of such a release or has reasonable cause to believe that it has occurred. (Section 25359.7(b) requires lessees to make the same disclosures to owners or lessors.) A seller or lessee who breaches this disclosure obligation will be - responsible for actual damages;

- potentially liable for a civil penalty of $5000 for each violation; and
- subject to any other remedies that may be provided by law.

Sellers of residential real property must comply with CC §§1102-1102.17, which establish an obligation for disclosures and a statutory disclosure form for residential real property transfers. The statutory form (see §6.37) specifically requires the seller to answer the following question (CC §1102.6):

> II. SELLER'S INFORMATION
> C. Are you (Seller) aware of any of the following:
> 1. Substances, materials, or products which may be an environmental hazard such as, but not limited to, asbestos, formaldehyde, radon gas, lead-based paint, mold, fuel or chemical storage tanks, and contaminated soil or water on the subject property. ___ Yes ___ No

In short, any seller of real property in California must disclose the existence of toxic contaminants of which it is aware, and for nonresidential property a disclosure is also required if the seller has reasonable cause to believe that contamination may exist. See §§7.46-7.52 for discussion of the provisions the parties might include in an agreement to address the fact that no contamination is known to exist or that known contamination has been disclosed.

2. Environmental Assessments

§7.37 a. Phase I Reports

Usually, one party in a commercial transaction is likely to obtain a so-called Phase I Environmental Report (Phase I Report). In most larger commercial transactions, the lender will require a Phase I Report, but in smaller commercial transactions or residential purchases it will be the parties' decision (usually the buyer's), based on the available information about the property and surrounding area and the desired level of protection. The buyer's counsel should consult with the buyer on the need for a Phase I investigation and the risks of failing to make such an investigation.

Phase I Reports sometimes go by other names, including "preliminary site assessments" and "environmental site surveys." Most site assessments follow the protocol set out in American Society for Testing and Materials (ASTM) Standard E1527-05 ("Standard Practice for Environmental Site Assessments: Phase I Environmental Site Assessment Process"; see the Directory for the ASTM website, which provides a summary of this document and instructions on how to order it). The ASTM has revised its standards to incorporate the EPA's regulations regarding "all appropriate inquiries." See §§7.53-7.54.

A Phase I Report normally includes the following:

- A review of various lists maintained by the EPA, Regional Water Quality Control Board (RWQCB), the Department of Health Services (DHS), and others identifying properties known to have been affected by toxic contamination;
- Discussions, if possible, with various agency representatives to ascertain whether a site is known or believed to have been affected by toxic contamination but is not yet on the relevant lists;
- Review of the historical uses of the site by interviewing surrounding property owners, reviewing historical aerial photos, and reviewing historical title chains (if title chains are provided to the consultant or ordered by the consultant for an additional fee); and
- A site inspection by the consultant to ascertain whether any signs of contamination are visible at the property itself.

It is sometimes appropriate to provide historical title chains to consultants for their review. Title chain reviews that identify previous owners of record, including lessees or lenders, are available from most title companies, and may indicate the past uses of the property.

The reviews usually focus on the property that is the subject of the report and on surrounding properties for a distance of a quarter mile to one mile, depending on the extent of nearby development. Surrounding properties are reviewed to enable the consultant to identify potential offsite sources of toxic contamination.

EXAMPLE: Disclosure of groundwater contamination on adjacent property might lead the consultant to recommend that groundwater samples be collected and tested from the property to be acquired, unless the owner of the contaminated property has already identified the perimeter of the contamination.

On chain of title guaranties, see California Title Insurance Practice §9.18 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997). On the role of recorded document guaranties in environmental due diligence, see Title Ins §§9.16-9.17.

Some buyers request a modified Phase I Report in which the consultant is asked to undertake asbestos samplings concurrently with its site inspection. A normal Phase I investigation merely identifies potential asbestos-containing materials (ACMs), while taking samples of the potential ACMs is deferred to a Phase II investigation.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.38 b. Phase II Reports

When the parties are aware of toxic contamination that affects or has a significant potential to affect the property, the buyer will likely require a Phase II Report, which typically involves the collection and analysis of samples of soil, groundwater, or both. Phase II Reports are often done in stages, in which a few samples are taken initially and further samples are taken if contamination is shown.

The focus of a Phase II investigation first should be to confirm whether the potential contamination disclosed by the Phase I Report or by the seller actually exists. If it does, the next step is to ascertain the types of contaminants present, whether they exist in quantities that will require them to be reported or remediated (sometimes referred to as threshold quantities or action levels), and the approximate quantity of contamination to be remediated.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Real Property/California Real Property Sales Transactions/7 Hazardous Waste Considerations/§7.39 c. Remedial Investigation/Feasibility Study/Remedial Action Plan

§7.39 c. Remedial Investigation/Feasibility Study/Remedial Action Plan

Before proceeding with remediation, most owners require preparation—and, if applicable, governmental approval—of a remedial investigation report, a feasibility study (assessing various cleanup options), and a remedial action plan. The costs of remediation usually cannot be reliably estimated until the plan is completed, but if the contamination identified for removal in preceding reports can be quantified, that information may be useful for preliminary cost estimates. Remediation plans often include land use restrictions, which are recorded and run with the land. CC §1471.

EXAMPLE: A modified Phase I Report that includes asbestos sampling should include sufficient information on the quantity of asbestos-containing materials to permit a fairly reliable estimate. In contrast, it is unlikely that any reliable cost estimate for groundwater remediation will be possible before a remedial action plan is completed.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.40 3. Seller's Review of Property

It is generally preferable for a seller to be aware of toxic contamination affecting its property before entering into an agreement to sell it, especially if the seller has reason to believe that contamination may exist that would have to be disclosed under Health & S C §25359.7(a). See §7.36. If the seller does not disclose the existence of possible contamination and the buyer's consultant identifies the potential for toxic contamination in a Phase I Report, the buyer will typically disapprove of the physical condition of the property under normal due diligence provisions of the agreement. See §§7.53-7.59. The buyer will then decide whether it is still interested in acquiring the property in light of the contamination. If the buyer decides to proceed, a further delay will occur until the parties agree on the manner in which the contamination will be remediated or removed, which party will be responsible, and any appropriate price adjustments. See §7.60. If the buyer decides not to buy the property, the seller will have lost substantial time and money in marketing, negotiating, and documenting a transaction that will not occur.

Alternatively, if the seller initiates an investigation before marketing the property, it will be able to either inform a buyer that the property is free of contamination or address and negotiate the steps that must be taken to remediate the contamination. The seller may then be able to market the property while simultaneously undertaking Phase II investigations or having a remediation plan prepared and approved. When the seller later finds a buyer for the property, it can disclose what is known about the contamination and what will be done about it and, possibly, have an approved remediation plan that can become a part of the purchase and sale agreement. The agreement will then clearly outline each party's rights and responsibilities on any required remediation and the time frames for performance.

The risk of performing studies in advance, however, is that the seller may have to disclose problems that are found to a potential buyer or a governmental agency, or begin remediation sooner than desired. To avoid this risk, many sellers avoid obtaining a Phase I Report until the buyer is identified and an agreement signed. Other sellers defer a Phase I Report in order to try to shift the cost of preparing the report to the buyer as part of its due diligence costs.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.41 4. Buyer's Review of Property

Most buyers will wish to have their consultant prepare a Phase I Report unless they have already been given one by the seller. To qualify for CERCLA's defenses, a prospective buyer must complete a Phase I Report that is consistent with EPA's regulations requiring "all appropriate inquiries." See §§7.22-7.31. See also the discussion in §§7.53-7.54 of the buyer's due diligence provisions. In reviewing a Phase I Report supplied by the seller or prepared for the buyer, the buyer should focus on matters that would affect, or potentially affect, the use or development of the subject property, as well as on potential liability issues.

A parcel of land that is designated as hazardous waste property or as border-zone property under Health & S C §25229 may not be used for certain purposes; for example, a border-zone property, although not itself contaminated, may not be used for residential, hospital, school, or day-care buildings. Health & S C §25232(a)-(b).

Sophisticated buyers may be able to help focus the environmental consultant on issues that would normally be beyond the scope of the Phase I Report, based on their own walk-through at the property.

EXAMPLE: If the buyer has noticed soil discoloration or learned that a gas station was formerly located on the property, then, based on discussions with the local planning department, the consultant can be instructed to take soil or groundwater samples concurrently with the Phase I investigation. The buyer may also wish to instruct the consultant to do asbestos sampling concurrently with the Phase I investigation if the building's age indicates that asbestos-containing materials were likely used in its construction.

If a Phase I Report identifies potential contamination problems, a qualified environmental consultant (see §7.42) is best equipped to advise the buyer of the issues that should be reviewed as part of a Phase II Report.

© The Regents of the University of California

5. Use of Environmental Consultants

§7.42 a. Scope of Work

To obtain the best possible work product from an environmental consultant, it is important to establish a clear scope of work for the consultant to perform at each step of the process. If a full Phase I Report is desired, the consultant's employer should confirm that the consultant's proposal includes all the typical elements of a Phase I Report (as discussed in §7.37) and should review the full report to make sure that all the steps agreed to by the parties were performed. Many parties will request a draft Phase I Report to enable them or their counsel to offer recommendations for the final product. If the work involves Phase II investigations, the employer should be integrally involved in deciding such matters as the number and type of samples to be taken, the location of sampling sites, and whether sampling will be performed on the entire site at once or in phases.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.43 b. Confidentiality

Property owners usually would like to prevent a consultant or a buyer from disclosing to governmental entities or third parties contamination that it discovers as part of due diligence. Under 42 USC §9603, the legal responsibility for notifying the Environmental Protection Agency of a release lies with the individual in charge of the facility where the release occurred. Thus, a prospective buyer or an environmental consultant need not disclose contamination that it discovers to governmental agencies and can accept a seller's requirement that the parties maintain the confidentiality of the information they find. As with most nondisclosure provisions, the parties may wish to provide in the agreement for permitted disclosures when required by a court or a governmental agency.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.44 c. Principal-Agent Considerations

Whether the seller or the buyer retains the environmental consultant, the parties should remember that the consultant is the agent of the party that hired it and must take its instructions from that party. As an agent, a consultant can also bind its principal when the agent has actual or, sometimes, apparent authority. This may be important when the consultant is directing remediation activities, hiring contractors, or reporting to governmental agencies on behalf of an owner. In preparing a contract with an environmental consultant, counsel may wish to review CC §§2295-2357, covering agency relationships, as well as provide clear instructions on the scope of the consultant's authority as agent and the consultant's responsibility for liabilities that it may create for its principal.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.45 II. CONTRACTUAL PROVISIONS ON TOXIC CONTAMINATION

The provisions that parties to a purchase and sale or lease transaction should include in their agreement will depend on the known or expected environmental condition of the property at the time the agreement is signed. Because contamination problems vary greatly and are very complex, the forms used will vary considerably. The provisions used in this chapter are illustrative forms addressing typical situations; they do not address all of the unique situations presented as examples in the text.

Drafting provisions on toxic contamination usually occurs in one of three different situations:

- No known contamination. When there is no known toxic contamination, the agreement will usually be limited to provisions (1) containing the seller's representation and warranty that no toxic contamination is known to exist on the property, (2) giving the buyer the right to investigate the environmental condition of the property, and (3) making the buyer's satisfaction with the investigations a condition precedent to the closing. In a larger transaction, the agreement might also include a de minimis clause under which one party takes responsibility for any discovered contamination that will cost less than a fixed dollar amount to remediate.
- Previously completed Phase I Report. If the seller has already completed a Phase I Report (defined in §7.37) or other environmental inspection, it should be reviewed by the buyer's counsel and environmental consultant before the buyer executes an agreement. Any problems identified in that report, or any further testing that the report requires or recommends, should be covered in the agreement.
- Problems discovered after execution of agreement. Any environmental problems identified as part of the buyer's due diligence and not previously covered in the agreement will probably need to be addressed in one or more amendments to the agreement. See §7.60. Of course, if the parties cannot agree on how to resolve the environmental problems found during the due diligence period, one or both parties will likely terminate the transaction.

© The Regents of the University of California

A. Seller's Documentation of Knowledge

§7.46 1. Disclosure of Knowledge

The seller of real property must disclose any known toxic contamination to the buyer and, for nonresidential property, suspected toxic contamination. Health & S C §25359.7(a); CC §§1102-1102.17. See §7.36.

The seller, to avoid disputes on what has been disclosed, should include its disclosures in the purchase and sale agreement or in a separate writing. If the disclosures are based on an environmental report, the agreement should identify the report by reference or include a copy of it as an exhibit. If the seller has not had a Phase I Report prepared before signing the purchase and sale agreement and does not know of any contamination, the agreement should clearly state which party will be responsible for having the report prepared and should state that both parties are relying on the consultant's investigation.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.47 2. Representations and Warranties

Most buyers of real property will want some form of representation and warranty from the seller that the property is unaffected by toxic contamination. Representations are negotiable and can cover a range of liability scenarios. Four examples of typical representation and warranty clauses are provided in §§7.49-7.52: an absolute representation (§7.49); a representation made to the best of the seller's actual knowledge (§7.50); and representations limited to specific individuals (§7.51) or specific facts disclosed by a Phase I Report (§7.52). A seller may also choose to make no representations at all.

Though such provisions are unlimited as to time, many sellers try to limit their representations to the period when they owned the property. From a buyer's standpoint, this limitation is undesirable because the buyer risks liability regardless of when the contamination occurred.

Each form in §§7.49-7.52 assumes that the term "hazardous materials" is already defined elsewhere in the agreement. A typical, but simple, definition of hazardous materials appears in §7.48. See §4.173 for form provisions on seller's representations.

7.48-1 Definition of "hazardous materials"

The term "hazardous materials" when used in this Agreement shall mean any hazardous waste or hazardous substance as defined in any federal, state, or local statute, ordinance, rule, or regulation applicable to the property, including, without limitation, as amended, the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 (Title 42 United States Code §§9601-9675), the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act of 1976 (Title 42 United States Code §§6901-6992k), the Carpenter-Presley-Tanner Hazardous Substance Account Act (Health and Safety Code §§25300-25395.45), and the Hazardous Waste Control Law (Health and Safety Code §§25100-25250.28). "Hazardous materials" shall also include asbestos or asbestos-containing materials, radon gas, and petroleum or petroleum fractions, whether or not defined as a hazardous waste or hazardous substance in any such statute, ordinance, rule, or regulation.

Comment: As used in this chapter, the term "hazardous materials" generally conforms to this definition. Some attorneys use a more extensive definition, which may include the federal and state underground storage tank statutes and other federal or state statutes.

Seller hereby represents and warrants that to the best of Seller's knowledge, and except as otherwise disclosed by that certain environmental report dated _ _[date]_ _ prepared by _ _[name of environmental services company]_ _, a copy of which report is attached as Exhibit _ _ and incorporated in this document by this reference (Environmental Report), that no hazardous materials are located on or under the property; that there has been no release, storage, treatment, generation, or disposal of any hazardous materials on, under, or from the property; and that no hazardous materials have been transported from the property. Buyer understands and acknowledges that Seller has not undertaken any investigation or inspection of the property with regard to environmental matters and that both Seller and Buyer are relying solely on the Environmental Report as the only investigation and inspection undertaken by Seller with regard to these matters.

§7.53 B. Buyer's Rights Regarding Unknown Contamination

The agreement should include various provisions that give the buyer an opportunity to investigate the property for contamination and define the buyer's rights as to contamination it may discover. See §4.171 for form provisions on buyer's contingencies. Various statutes require the property owner to report the discovery of contamination to regulatory agencies, so an owner who learns of the buyer's discovery may have reporting obligations (and the buyer may have such obligations after acquisition of the property). See, e.g., Health & S C §§5411.5, 25189, 25359.4, 25359.7(a); Wat C §§13260, 13264, 13271. Most of these provisions will need to be included even if the seller has already disclosed some contamination.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.54 1. Conditions Precedent for Due Diligence

In addition to a representation and warranty on environmental matters, a buyer usually wants the right to conduct its own review of the environmental condition of the real property and to condition its completion of the purchase on its satisfaction with or waiver of such review.

A seller who has already had a Phase I Report prepared may want the buyer to review the report and waive any contingency related to environmental matters before signing a purchase and sale agreement. Most buyers, however, will still want to have an opportunity after signing the agreement to review the report and perform follow-up testing, if the buyer decides such testing is necessary or appropriate. Even when a Phase I Report prepared for the seller concludes that contamination is unlikely, the buyer should retain its own environmental consultant to review that report either before or after signing the agreement, as applicable, because the report may indicate contamination of nearby properties that the buyer should know about.

If the seller has not prepared a report, the parties will need to negotiate the time period in which the buyer will have the right to complete its Phase I Report or other review and to satisfy or waive its contingency. If a Phase I Report is the only review that must be completed, the typical real property due diligence period of 30 days is usually adequate for most properties. If, however, a previously prepared Phase I Report indicates the need for Phase II investigations, then a 30-day due diligence period will probably not be enough to complete sampling and laboratory testing. Both parties should review the appropriate time frames with their environmental consultants, based on the work anticipated, and then try to agree on the time frame to complete it.

If the buyer plans to undertake more than a Phase I Report, the seller should make sure that the agreement contains appropriate protections intended to ensure that the work will be performed properly and without undue delay. The parties should agree on the scope of the investigation, and the seller should retain the right to require split samples, which it can have separately analyzed to verify the buyer's findings. These provisions should also be a part of any amendment addressing Phase II work after initial due diligence discloses previously unknown contamination. The exact nature of such protective provisions will vary greatly with the nature of the reviews to be undertaken, the relationship between the parties, and each party's knowledge of and comfort with the consultant performing the reviews. Because so many variables affect the drafting of such provisions, a sample form has not been included in this chapter. See §8.68 for a broad form of access provision.

§7.55 2. Lessee's Estoppel Provision

If the property to be acquired is leased to one or more third parties, especially if the tenant is using the property for industrial purposes, the buyer will want to include, as an element of the buyer's due diligence process, confirmation that the lessees are not aware of any toxic contamination. Such confirmation would typically take the form of a statement in the estoppel letter to be obtained from the lessees, before closing, to the effect that: "Lessee is not aware of the existence, storage, treatment, release, or disposal of any hazardous materials on, under, or from the property except as set forth below." For a form definition of "hazardous materials," see §7.48. The disclosure of contamination by a tenant should permit the buyer to withdraw from the transaction or otherwise address the issue. See also §7.41 for discussion of the buyer's review of the property. The buyer or its counsel should also review any leases affecting the property and verify that they require contamination caused by the lessee or lessees to be remediated or removed.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.56 3. Seller's De Minimis Obligation to Remediate

In larger transactions, buyers and sellers will sometimes seek to obligate one party or the other, usually the seller, to remediate or remove all toxic contamination found on the property as a result of the buyer's due diligence, to the extent that the cost of remediating or removing it does not exceed a fixed dollar amount. If the agreement includes such an obligation, it will be beneficial for the parties to similarly address the various other provisions outlined in this chapter to ensure that the agreement reflects the entire agreement intended by the parties. For a typical provision requiring the seller to remediate de minimis contamination, see form 7.57-1.

7.57-1 Seller to remediate de minimis contamination

If Buyer identifies hazardous materials on or under the property during the due diligence period, Seller shall be obligated to diligently cause the remediation or removal of such hazardous materials before the close of escrow, as long as they can be remediated or removed in _ _[e.g., 120]_ _ days or less, and as long as the cost of this remediation or removal does not exceed _ _[e.g., $50,000]_ _. If Seller is required to remediate or remove hazardous materials under this section, the closing date shall be extended by _ _[e.g., 120]_ _ days or such lesser period as Seller requires to complete the remediation or removal, including preparing a work plan for the remediation or removal and obtaining all necessary governmental approvals for the work. Despite any contrary provisions, Seller shall have no remediation or removal obligations under this agreement, may cease any remediation or removal efforts previously commenced, and may terminate this agreement if: (a) the identified hazardous materials cannot be remediated or removed without the removal or demolition of any portion of the improvements on the property; (b) the remediation or removal cannot actually be completed within _ _[e.g., 120]_ _ days despite Seller's diligent efforts to do so; or (c) the actual cost of remediation or removal, or the actual costs incurred plus the estimated costs to complete the remediation or removal at any time prior to completion of the same, exceeds _ _[e.g., $50,000]_ _. If Seller proceeds to commence remediation or removal of the identified hazardous materials but cannot complete the remediation or removal within _ _[e.g., 120]_ _ days, Seller may, at its option, extend the closing date for an additional period of up to _ _[e.g., 60]_ _ days to enable it to complete the remediation or removal before close of escrow. As long as Seller completes the remediation or removal of the identified hazardous materials under this section, Buyer shall have no right to terminate this agreement on account of its discovery of hazardous materials. If Seller elects to terminate the agreement under this section, Buyer shall have the right, within _ _[e.g., 10]_ _ days after receipt of Seller's notice of termination, to waive Seller's obligations under this section and accept the property in its then current condition as long as: (a) Buyer provides Seller with assurances reasonably satisfactory to Seller that Buyer will complete the remediation of the identified hazardous materials diligently after closing; and (b) Buyer releases Seller from any liability or obligations with regard to the identified hazardous materials and their remediation or removal.

Comment: An alternative de minimis clause that some parties use requires the buyer to accept the property despite the discovery of toxic contamination if the estimated cost of remediation does not exceed a maximum amount. However, given the uncertainty of remediation cost estimates, the continuing nature of environmental liability, and the fact that ownership of any contaminated soils, materials, or, in some cases, groundwater, remains with the party that disposes of it (see §§7.10-7.16), most buyers prefer to avoid such alternative provisions.

§7.58 5. Rights to Terminate

Without a de minimis clause (see §§7.56-7.57), a buyer typically has the right to terminate a transaction if toxic contamination is found as part of the buyer's due diligence. In the purchase and sale agreement, the right to terminate would normally be included in the provision that makes the buyer's review and approval of the condition of the property, including environmental matters, a contingency to closing. See discussion in §4.99. See §4.171 for form provisions on buyer's contingencies, and specifically sections 3.1.14 and 3.5 in form 4.171-5.

Like the buyer, the seller may also want to have the right to terminate the agreement because of environmental concerns, unless the agreement includes other provisions addressing the parties' rights and obligations regarding the identified toxic contamination. See §§7.61-7.72. Even if the seller is released and indemnified by a buyer, the seller of contaminated property (depending on the seller's activities on the property) may have continuing liability to the government or third parties for remediation costs as a prior owner. 42 USC §9607(e); Health & S C §25364; see §7.21. Accordingly, it is in the seller's best interests to ensure that the remediation is handled properly. Without assurances that the buyer would properly and expeditiously complete remediation, the seller may wish to terminate its agreement with the buyer and complete the work itself.

§7.59 6. Loan Contingency Relationship

In the course of negotiating the environmental due diligence and condition precedent provisions, the parties must also keep in mind that the buyer's lender will likely require a Phase I Report showing that the property is free of environmental problems. Any contingencies in the buyer's favor will need to be drafted with due regard for lender requirements and time frames.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.60 C. Renegotiation of Price or Other Terms When Undisclosed Toxics Are Found

If the buyer discovers previously undisclosed toxic contamination during its due diligence period, various provisions of the purchase and sale agreement will likely need to be amended if the parties wish to proceed with the transaction. Such provisions might include the following:

- The purchase price; the closing date; release clauses (see §§7.61-7.65);
- Indemnification provisions (see §§7.66-7.72);
- Allocation of the costs of, responsibility for, and control over the remediation process (see §§7.73-7.76); and
- Escrow holdbacks and other measures to secure payment of the remediation costs by seller or buyer as protection for the other party (see §§7.78-7.83).

The parties and their counsel will need to negotiate the various issues. Foremost among others, the parties must decide whether the buyer will (1) purchase the property without a price adjustment if the seller remediates the discovered contamination; or (2) for an appropriate price adjustment, either accept the property in its contaminated state or agree to remediate after closing. For further discussion, see §7.74. After that initial negotiation is completed, the general features of most of the remaining provisions discussed in §§7.61-7.83 will fall into place.

§7.61 D. Release Clauses

A buyer and seller may agree between themselves that one will release the other from liability under CERCLA and the HSA (the Carpenter-Presley-Tanner Hazardous Substance Account Act (Health & S C §§25300-25395.45)); however, such agreements will not relieve the released party from liability to the government or to third parties making a claim under 42 USC §9607. 42 USC §9607(e); Health & S C §25364; Mardan Corp. v C.G.C. Music, Ltd. (9th Cir 1986) 804 F2d 1454, 1458. See also Niecko v Emro Mktg. Co. (ED Mich 1991) 769 F Supp 973, 987. The extent to which any particular release provision is effective will be a state law issue. Mardan Corp. v C.G.C. Music, Ltd., supra.

Both CERCLA and the HSA provide that no indemnity, hold harmless, or similar agreement is effective to transfer any liability under CERCLA and the HSA, but that neither Act is intended to bar such an agreement. 42 USC §9607(e); Health & S C §25364. The Ninth Circuit has held that under §9607(e) all responsible parties are fully liable to §9607 claimants regardless of their agreements, but that private parties are free to enter into release agreements among themselves in order to assign ultimate liability. Mardan Corp. v C.G.C. Music, Ltd. (9th Cir 1986) 804 F2d 1454, 1459.

In Mardan, the court held that a release and settlement agreement between a buyer and a seller of a manufacturing property was effective to relieve the seller of liability to the buyer under CERCLA despite the lack of an express reference to CERCLA. The court also found that the release agreement was permitted under §9607(e) and was effective under state law to relieve the seller from CERCLA liability to the buyer. 804 F2d at 1458, 1460.

Courts in different circuits have construed §9607(e) differently. Some federal courts have held that parties may bargain over indemnification for, or release from, CERCLA liability under all circumstances. These courts have found the first and second sentences of §9607(e)(1) to be inconsistent, with the result that the second sentence negates the first. That section states:

> (1) No indemnification, hold harmless, or similar agreement or conveyance shall be effective to transfer from the owner or operator of any vessel or facility or from any person who may be liable for a release or threat of release under this section, to any other person the liability imposed under this section. Nothing in this subsection shall bar any agreement to insure, hold harmless, or indemnify a party to such agreement for any liability under this section.

Under this rule, the parties' agreement as to who bears liability may be effective to specify the party directly liable to third party claimants. The Ninth Circuit and other courts, however, have held that §9607(e) permits private parties to contract among themselves with respect to indemnification and contribution, but that such contractual provisions will not relieve either party from liability to the government or other §9607 claimants. A third rule was articulated by the Northern District of Ohio in AM, Int'l, Inc. v International Forging Equip. (ND Ohio 1990) 743 F Supp 525, which stated that §9607(e)(1) forbids giving effect to releases between tortfeasors in CERCLA suits but does give effect to indemnity agreements by parties who are not otherwise liable. See discussions in Jones-Hamilton Co. v Kop-Coat, Inc. (ND Cal 1990) 750 F Supp 1022, 1026, rev'd in part on other grounds sub nom Jones-Hamilton Co. v Beazer Mat'ls & Serv. (9th Cir 1992) 973 F2d 688; Mardan Corp. v C.G.C. Music, Ltd., supra; Niecko v Emro Mktg. Co. (ED Mich 1991) 769 F Supp 973.

An environmental release clause should be tailored to fit the precise circumstances of the transaction. For a typical release clause on known contamination and future discoveries of unknown contamination, see forms in §§7.62-7.63. Despite the provisions of any release, however, the California courts will probably not relieve a seller for failure to meet its disclosure obligations under Health & S C §25359.7 (see §7.36) or any other disclosures required by law.

To avoid waiving rights against third parties (see §7.21), an express provision preserving such rights should be included. For release forms containing provisions preserving these rights, see §§7.62-7.63, 7.65. On indemnification, see §7.66; for indemnification forms, see §§7.68, 7.70. See form 4.173-2 on buyer's representations and warranties, and form 4.173-6 for a release clause.

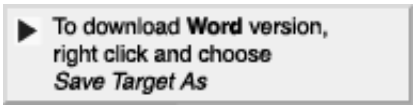
7.62-1 Broad clause releasing seller

Buyer hereby releases Seller, its officers, directors, shareholders, affiliates, and subsidiaries from any and all claims, liabilities, costs, or damages that Buyer may suffer arising from (a) the existence of the soil contamination identified in Section 2 of that certain Phase I Environmental Report prepared by _ _[name of environmental services company]_ _ and dated _ _[date]_ _, a copy of which is attached to this document as Exhibit _ _, or (b) the discovery or existence after the close of escrow of any other hazardous materials on, under, or around the property, whether or not caused by Seller or any predecessor-in-interest of Seller, and whether or not known to Seller or Buyer at or before the close of escrow. Buyer expressly preserves its rights against other parties and does not release, or waive its rights to contribution against, any other party.

Comment: Clause (a) of this form must be tailored to fit the circumstances. Some attorneys include an express waiver of CC §1542 on the ground that an environmental release may constitute a general release waiving claims not known to the party executing the release. Such a waiver seems inconsistent with that section, which provides that it applies to a general release, while the environmental release clause appears to be a release of liability for specific matters and not a general release. Nonetheless, it may be better to err on the side of caution.



For a general release provision, see form 4.173-6.

§7.63 2. Form: Limited Clause Releasing Seller; Seller Retains Some Responsibilities

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§7.48-7.80.

7.63-1 Limited clause releasing seller; seller retains some responsibilities

Buyer hereby releases Seller, its officers, directors, shareholders, affiliates, and subsidiaries from any and all claims, liabilities, costs, or damages that Buyer may suffer arising from any hazardous material identified or discovered on, in, or under the property after the close of escrow unless it (a) consists of or was caused by one or more of the chemicals, substances, or hazardous substances or wastes identified in Exhibit _ _, attached to this agreement; or (b) was caused by or permitted to occur by Seller as a result of Seller's use of the property before close of escrow. Buyer expressly preserves its rights against other parties and does not release, or waive its rights to contribution against, any other party.

Comment: The release clause can be tailored by altering the "arising from" clause in form 7.62-1 to language that reflects the parties' intent. For example, when the buyer will be responsible for remediating new contamination but the seller will continue to be responsible for any contamination that is discovered after close of escrow but is found to have been caused from chemicals used by the seller in its manufacturing process, the "arising from" clause might be modified as shown in the form above.

Clause (a) is a narrower alternative, which if usable reduces the likelihood of future litigation over who caused contamination discovered after close of escrow because it specifically identifies contaminants for which the seller is not released. The exhibit would be a schedule of chemicals or toxics used or generated by the seller in its use of the property. Before agreeing to the list, the seller would also want to make sure that the buyer does not use or generate the same substances. Clause (b) is broader but is likely to lead to litigation over which party, buyer or seller, caused the later-discovered contamination.

§7.64 3. "As Is" Clauses as Release Clauses

Despite Mardan Corp. v C.G.C. Music, Ltd. (9th Cir 1986) 804 F2d 1454 (see §7.61), there is some risk in drafting a clause that, while not a clear release clause, purports to relieve a seller from liability for toxic contaminants that are unknown at the date of the transaction. Such provisions may be challenged under a line of cases holding "as is" clauses ineffective to release CERCLA liability. Wiegmann & Rose Int'l Corp. v NL Indus. (ND Cal 1990) 735 F Supp 957; International Clinical Labs. v Stevens (ED NY 1989) 710 F Supp 466, 469; Mardan Corp. v C.G.C. Music, Ltd. (D Ariz 1984) 600 F Supp 1049.

In Wiegmann, the court reviewed the "as is" clause, which it described as standard boilerplate language routinely included in every contract and deed transferring property owned by NL Industries (Wiegmann & Rose Int'l Corp., 735 F Supp at 961), and held that it was not effective to relieve the seller of CERCLA liability. The court, comparing the case with the district court opinion in Mardan, stated that in Mardan the parties were aware that the property contained hazardous waste and that the EPA might require action to be taken, while in Wiegmann, the purchasers had no knowledge of the contamination. (The district court in Mardan addressed both an "as is" clause in the initial purchase and sale agreement between the parties and a subsequent settlement and release agreement, while the court of appeals in Mardan addressed only the latter.) The Wiegmann court concluded that (735 F Supp at 962) > allowing an otherwise "responsible party" to avoid liability under [CERCLA] Section 107, based on an "as is" clause in the deed conveying the property, would clearly circumvent both the intent and the language of the statute. This is particularly true when the conveyance occurred prior to the enactment of CERCLA and the purchasers had no knowledge of the contamination.

Despite Wiegmann, the discussions in Jones-Hamilton Co. v Kop-Coat, Inc. (ND Cal 1990) 750 F Supp 1022, rev'd in part on other grounds sub nom Jones-Hamilton Co. v Beazer Mat'ls & Serv. (9th Cir 1992) 973 F2d 688, and Niecko v Emro Mktg. Co. (ED Mich 1991) 769 F Supp 973, and the court of appeals decision in Mardan Corp. v C.S.C. Music, Ltd., supra, make it clear that responsible parties are permitted to contract for a release from CERCLA liability as a buyer and a seller even if the seller has no knowledge of the contamination before the closing of the transaction as long as the contract's provisions are valid under state law. See Mardan Corp. v C.G.C. Music, Ltd. (9th Cir 1986) 804 F2d 1454, 1460. Apparently, the Ninth Circuit will enforce a modified disclaimer clause that clearly expresses the parties' intent to disclaim a seller's liability for toxic contamination. A seller's normal "as is" clause, with the addition of language that makes clear what the parties intended, should suffice as a disclaimer clause. See form 7.65-1. See form 4.173-2 for provisions on buyer's representations and warranties, and form 4.173-5 for an "as is" clause.

7.65-1 Expanded "as is" clause

Buyer agrees that, as of the close of escrow, it will be acquiring the property in "as is" condition with all faults and conditions then existing on the property, including any hazardous substances or hazardous wastes that may be located on, under, or around the property, whether known or unknown. Buyer assumes all responsibility for such faults and conditions. Buyer expressly preserves its rights against other parties and does not release, or waive its rights to contribution against, any other party.

Comment: This additional language should differentiate the clause from the "as is" clauses discussed in the district court opinions in Mardan Corp. v C.G.C. Music, Ltd. (D Ariz 1984) 600 F Supp 1049 and International Clinical Labs. v Stevens (ED NY 1989) 710 F Supp 466, both of which were held ineffective to release CERCLA liability under New York law because an as-is clause precludes only actions based on warranty theory. Mardan Corp., 600 F Supp at 1055; International Clinical Labs., 710 F Supp at 470. This clause also incorporates language similar to that which was found effective to release seller's liability under the Michigan Leaking Underground Storage Tank Act in Niecko v Emro Mktg. Co. (ED Mich 1991) 769 F Supp 973, 986. Nonetheless, until an appropriate disclaimer clause is tested in the Ninth Circuit, counsel may prefer to use an environmental release clause that at least facially conforms to the existing Ninth Circuit cases.

§7.66 E. Indemnification

Although 42 USC §9607(c) applies to both release and indemnification clauses, the two types of clauses differ substantially in effect. For this reason they are discussed separately in this chapter, but many of the issues discussed in §§7.61-7.65 on the effectiveness of a release clause also apply to indemnification clauses discussed in §§7.67-7.72. The practical effect of a release clause is to relieve the released party from liability to the releasing party if suit is brought against the releasing party on matters for which the released party or parties would otherwise be liable. A release clause will not, however, bar a suit against the released party brought by a third party. An indemnity clause goes a step further and gives the indemnitee (usually the released party) a right to recover from the indemnitor (usually the releasing party) in the event of such a third party action. Some buyers may be willing to release a seller from liability for known or unknown contamination but may not be willing to take the next step and indemnify the seller for claims brought by third parties against the seller because of the contamination. As with any indemnification, the party being indemnified will want assurance that the indemnitor has adequate financial resources, and will have such resources in the future, to meet its obligations.

Attorney fees incurred in enforcing an indemnity claim are not recoverable unless the indemnity agreement expressly provides for them. See Jacobus v Krambo Corp. (2000) 78 CA4th 1096, 1105, 93 CR2d 425; Otis Elevator Co. v Toda Constr. (1994) 27 CA4th 559, 32 CR2d 404. The Ninth Circuit, however, has held to the contrary. 1. Seller's Indemnification of Buyer

§7.67 a. Factors to Consider

A buyer who wishes to purchase real property may want the seller to take the risk of liability for preexisting known or unknown contamination and will seek an indemnity from the seller as protection. When contamination on the property is known and the seller agrees to remediate it before close of escrow, the buyer will, at a minimum, want to be indemnified for liability arising from the seller's failure to complete a remediation or the removal process or from claims for personal injury or property damage that resulted from the contamination before the date the buyer purchased the property.

The extent of any such indemnity and the seller's willingness to provide it will depend on several factors, including:

- The severity of the environmental problem;
- The price agreed on between the parties; and
- The degree to which the parties are comfortable with the environmental investigations on which they are relying.

The enforceability of such an indemnity seems to be confirmed by the district court's holding in Jones-Hamilton Co. v Kop-Coat, Inc. (ND Cal 1990) 750 F Supp 1022, aff'd in part on this issue and rev'd in part on other grounds sub nom Jones-Hamilton Co. v Beazer Mat'ls & Serv. (9th Cir 1992) 973 F2d 688, subject to interpretation of the indemnity's effectiveness under state law. See Mardan Corp. v C.G.C. Music, Ltd. (D Ariz 1984) 600 F Supp 1049. Without this indemnification, a buyer would still have a claim against the seller under CERCLA and the Carpenter-Presley-Tanner Hazardous Substance Account Act (HSA) (under 42 USC §9607(a)(4)(B) and Health & S C §25363(e), respectively). However, the claim would not be as complete and may be subject to limitations. See §7.16.

Although a seller may be willing to indemnify the buyer for known contamination, many sellers will not be willing to indemnify a buyer for unknown contamination that may exist at the time of the sale but has not yet been discovered, particularly when both parties are relying on an environmental consultant's report. An alternative indemnification form that is limited to known conditions is provided in §7.68. As a practical matter, such a clause protects the buyer if the seller fails to completely remediate the known contamination, because the clause applies only when the buyer will not accept the property with the contamination, in which event the seller must remediate it. This form is also limited to an indemnity of the buyer and does not extend to the buyer's successor-in-interest.

7.68-1 Seller's limited indemnification of buyer

Seller hereby agrees to indemnify and hold harmless Buyer, its directors, officers, employees, and agents, from and against any and all costs, damages, claims, and liabilities, including reasonable attorney fees, foreseeable or unforeseeable, directly or indirectly arising from the release, treatment, use, generation, storage, or disposal on, under, or from the property of the hazardous materials identified in the environmental report before close of escrow, including, without limitation, the cost of any required or necessary remediation or removal of such hazardous materials, any cost of repair of improvements on the property or surrounding property necessitated by the remediation or removal of such hazardous materials, and the costs of any testing, sampling, or other investigations or preparation of remediation or other required plans undertaken in connection with the remediation or removal of such hazardous materials. Seller's indemnity shall survive the close of escrow. Seller expressly preserves its rights against other parties and does not release, or waive its rights to contribution against, any other party.

Comment: To avoid making the effect of this clause broader than intended, counsel must carefully define both the hazardous materials identified in the environmental report and the areas of the property affected.

2. Buyer's Indemnification of Seller

§7.69 a. Assumed Toxic Condition

A seller who is relying on the buyer to complete remediation, or who has reduced the price of the property as a trade-off for the buyer to accept it with the contamination, will want indemnification by the buyer for all claims arising from the condition of the property at the time of the sale or from the buyer's failure to proceed with or properly perform the remediation or removal. Such an indemnification would give the seller the right to recover from the buyer for:

- Third party claims for personal injury or property damage arising after the close of escrow because of conditions existing before close of escrow;
- Third party claims for property damage or personal injury arising from the buyer's actions in the course of remediating or removing the assumed contamination; and
- Costs resulting from remediation orders or claims for response costs or other sums brought by the government or third parties.

For a form by which the buyer indemnifies the seller for all contamination that existed before or is discovered after close of escrow, see form 7.70-1.

7.70-1 Buyer's broad form indemnification of seller

Buyer hereby agrees to indemnify and hold harmless Seller, its directors, officers, employees, and agents from and against any and all costs, damages, claims, and liabilities, including reasonable attorney fees, foreseeable or unforeseeable, directly or indirectly arising from any release, treatment, use, generation, storage, or disposal of hazardous materials on, under, or from the property at any time before or after close of escrow, including, without limitation, the cost of any required or necessary remediation or removal of such hazardous materials, any costs of repair of improvements on the property or surrounding properties necessitated by such remediation or removal and costs of any testing, sampling, or other investigation or preparation of remediation or other required plans undertaken prior to such remediation or removal. Buyer expressly preserves its rights against other parties and does not release, or waive its rights to contribution against, any other party.

Comment: The "arising from" clause can be modified to address only known contamination, e.g., "arising from those certain hazardous materials identified in an environmental report prepared by John Doe Environmental Services of January 1, 2007, a copy of which is attached as Exhibit A."

c. Postclosing Discoveries

§7.71 (1) Preexisting Conditions

When negotiating the buyer's indemnification of the seller for claims related to toxic contamination, the parties must consider whether the indemnification will cover only preexisting conditions that the parties were aware of at the time they entered into the purchase and sale agreement (or at the time of any applicable amendment to the agreement), or whether the indemnification will extend to matters that may exist at the closing but are undiscovered. See form 7.70-1 and Comment. This issue is somewhat similar to the issue of what should be covered in a release clause (see §§7.61-7.65), and counsel must rely on the bargaining power of each party and on the agreement that is ultimately reached. Usually, a buyer who accepts contaminated property, and assumes responsibility for its remediation, has evaluated the risk that the property may contain more contamination. Counsel's role is then to learn the extent of the risk the buyer is prepared to assume and draft the agreement accordingly. Cross-indemnities may be necessary, in which the buyer indemnifies the seller for known contamination and the seller indemnifies the buyer for additional problems discovered during remediation. One risk of cross-indemnification, however, is that a buyer's broad indemnity, if it becomes public knowledge, may then become an invitation to claimants to initiate lawsuits.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.72 (2) Conditions Caused by Buyer After Closing

A seller may wish to include an indemnification provision regarding the buyer's future use of the property when the buyer will continue an industrial use. The indemnity should address all contamination attributable to the buyer's activities on the site after closing. If the indemnity clause later becomes the subject of litigation, the primary issues will be (1) proving the cause of the contamination, and (2) establishing which party has the burden of proof. Burden of proof can be addressed in the agreement, but it may be difficult to draft a provision that addresses as yet unknown evidence. Typically, the environmental reports prepared by the parties before closing will provide evidence of the conditions at closing, and any new conditions would then, prima facie, be conditions caused by the buyer.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.73 F. Remediation

If the property is found to be affected by toxic contamination but the parties still wish to proceed with the transaction, they must agree on who will pay for the remediation or removal and who will be primarily responsible for its completion. Reaching such agreements might at first seem to be fairly simple, but many transactions fail because the parties cannot agree on these issues. The party acquiring the property wants the property to be as free of contamination as possible while bearing as little of the remediation or removal cost as possible, and the selling party wants to remove or remediate only as much contamination as is absolutely necessary and at the lowest cost possible. Given these two viewpoints, it may be surprising that parties are ever able to agree on remediation provisions.

The more that is known about the extent and nature of the contamination and the cost and nature of the remediation effort required, the easier it will be to negotiate these provisions. It is not unusual in complex situations for the parties, after discovering previously unknown contamination, to amend the purchase and sale agreement to address the scope of, and responsibility and time frames for, further investigations, and to add a second amendment later to cover remediation after the investigations are completed. See also §§7.10-7.31 on remediation.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.74 1. Responsibility for Costs

There is no standard that governs liability for the costs of remediation. They can be allocated completely to either party or can be shared in any number of ways. Most transactions fall into one of two categories:

- The seller will bear all responsibility for the performance and costs of remediation (to be done either before or after closing), and the purchase price is based on the fair market value of the property in uncontaminated condition; or
- The buyer will assume the complete cost of and responsibility for remediation, with an adjustment to the purchase price based on remediation cost estimates from environmental consultants.

If the transaction does not fit either category and the parties decide to share the remediation costs, many allocation methods are possible. The parties may agree to split the costs based on a percentage ratio or on the various tasks undertaken by each party. They may agree that the seller will be responsible for cleaning up only certain items, while the buyer takes a partial reduction in the purchase price and will be responsible for other items.

PRACTICE TIP: The benefit of sharing the costs on some prorata basis is that both parties will then be conscious of the cleanup costs and will have an incentive to focus on the level of contamination to be remediated or removed. If the cost is borne solely by one party, the other party has less incentive to cooperate with governmental agencies to establish alternative limits for the level to which the contamination must be remediated. However, remediation cost estimates are uncertain, and buyers (other than those willing to assume all cost responsibility) should be wary of entering a prorata sharing arrangement without obtaining either a cap on their share of costs or very precise cost estimates.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.75 2. Control of Process

Regardless of who will pay for the remediation, both parties will want some degree of control over establishing and implementing the remediation or removal program. Usually, before any work is begun, a remedial action plan must be prepared and approved by the governmental agencies that will have control over the remediation process. Typically, the lead agency will be the Department of Health Services or County Health Care Agency, for soil contamination, or the Regional Water Quality Control Board, for groundwater contamination. A seller may be willing to forgo any control if the buyer agrees to assume all obligations for the remediation and its costs, close escrow before remediation is completed, and release and indemnify the seller from and for claims arising from the particular contamination. The seller still assumes some risks in such circumstances, but a client may choose to risk future claims in order to be relieved of current cash expenditures.

PRACTICE TIP: When the remedial action plan can be prepared, agreed on by the parties, and approved by the governmental agencies before close of escrow, the parties may not be as concerned about the degree of control each has over the actual performance of the work. However, if the work includes preparing a remedial action plan and obtaining the governmental agencies' approval of it, both parties must make sure that they are adequately involved in the process and that they will be comfortable working with each other throughout the process.

Once the remedial action plan has been approved, the parties will need to address how, or whether, they will share the decision of selecting or replacing both an environmental consultant and the contractors who will perform the work. They must also decide how to perform the work so as to cause the least interference with the use and operation of the property. They may also wish to address whether newer, more efficient technology could be used in remediation if it becomes available during the process.

Typically, the environmental consultants that each party uses in the process will have been selected by the parties before or during the escrow period, but if the party primarily responsible for remediation later wishes to change consultants, the other party may want to be involved in the decision. This issue often arises when the individual consultant who is primarily responsible for the project changes companies. Similarly, the party who is not primarily responsible may also want to be involved in the selection of a general contractor for the remediation work. If each party has its own consultant, the parties will also need to decide whether both consultants will meet with the relevant governmental agencies throughout the process or whether only the consultant for the party primarily responsible for completing the remediation will attend such meetings. On one hand, both parties will want to feel that they are fully informed on the status of the process. On the other hand, if fewer people attend, the meetings can retain a more informal nature and sometimes run more efficiently and effectively.

§7.76 3. Disposal

Under both the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act of 1976 (RCRA), as amended (42 USC §§6901-6992k) and the Hazardous Waste Control Law (HCL) (Health & S C §§25100-25257.1), any hazardous waste that is transported or disposed of must be properly documented. 42 USC §§6922(a)(5), 6924(a)(1)-(2), (7); Health & S C §25160. The party responsible for disposing of toxic contamination as part of a remediation or removal process will be listed on state waste manifests as the generator of the waste, and thus will be considered a liable party if the landfill where the waste is disposed of later requires remediation. 42 USC §§6922(a)(5), 6924(a)(1)-(2), (7); Health & S C §25160. To the extent that liability exists for the future costs of cleaning up a site, the party who is responsible for the disposal and who thereby becomes the record owner of the contaminated waste will be a likely defendant for some of the costs of a subsequent cleanup of the site. 42 USC §9607(a)(3); see Chemical Waste Mgmt., Inc. v Armstrong World Indus. (ED Pa 1987) 669 F Supp 1285. Thus, whether the final remediation of the property occurs before or after close of escrow, most buyers require that any contamination be disposed of under a disposal permit issued in the seller's name.

§7.77 4. Agency Assurances—Comfort Letter and Prospective Purchaser Agreement

One uncertainty facing buyers and sellers of contaminated property is the type and extent of remediation work that will be required by the lead agency. Reflecting the national "brownfields" trend (the recent tendency of regulatory agencies to be more realistic in setting remediation requirements and thereby encouraging development or redevelopment of contaminated properties), the California Department of Toxic Substances Control (DTSC) has adopted a policy, largely followed by the California State Water Resources Control Board, to provide owners and prospective purchasers with assurances about who will be held liable for existing contamination and the type and extent of remediation work that will be required. See California Department of Toxic Substances Control, Prospective Purchaser Policy, Policy No. EO-96-005-PP (July 3, 1996); California State Water Resources Control Board, Guidance Memo Regarding Brownfields: Prospective Purchaser Agreements and Agreements With Current Owners for Cleanup of Polluted Property (July 9, 1996). The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) has adopted a similar policy. See EPA, Guidance on Agreements With Prospective Purchasers of Contaminated Property and Model Prospective Purchaser Agreement, 60 Fed Reg 34789-34792 (1995).

Under the State Water Resources Control Board's version of the programs, these assurances can take the form of either a "comfort letter" or a "prospective purchaser agreement." At the most basic level, a Regional Water Quality Control Board (RWQCB) can issue a "comfort letter," which does not constitute a formal legal release but advises the recipient about the investigation and remediation work performed to date and identifies which party or parties the RWQCB is holding responsible for contamination and remediation. Particularly in situations in which the contamination has been characterized and a remedial action plan has been approved and substantially implemented, a comfort letter may provide sufficient assurance to allow the parties to complete the transaction.

When more detailed and binding assurances are needed, a prospective buyer can negotiate with the RWQCB or the DTSC and enter into a "prospective purchaser agreement." The terms of the agreement typically include a detailed scope of remediation work and a covenant by the buyer to undertake the work, as well as a covenant by the RWQCB or the DTSC not to sue the buyer if the agreed-on remediation work is completed. The prospective purchaser agreement facilitates the sale of the property by allowing the buyer to identify an upper limit on the type and cost of remediation work that will be required, which allows the buyer to understand and more accurately quantify the expense and timing risks associated with the contamination and to establish a more reliable budget for the acquisition and use of the property.

G. Securing Remediation Costs

§7.78 1. Remediation Cost Estimate

If property is known to be contaminated before the sale is closed but will not be remediated until after closing, the party responsible for remediation should be asked to provide proof of financial ability to complete remediation or removal, or provide adequate security to ensure that funds will be available to complete the cleanup. There are several mechanisms that may be used to ensure that funds will be available to cover remediation costs. See §§7.79-7.83.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.79 2. Escrow of Funds

If the seller is responsible for the costs of remediation after closing, a new escrow may be funded from the purchase price otherwise payable to the seller at the time of closing. If the buyer is responsible for the remediation, a new escrow can also be established, but the buyer will need to fund the new escrow separately. The provisions requiring the creation and governing of the new escrow can be included (1) as part of the purchase and sale agreement, (2) as an amendment to it, or (3) in a separate escrow agreement to be executed by the parties before or concurrently with the close of escrow. Generally, it is preferable to have a separate escrow agreement (because the escrow agent is typically a party to the escrow agreement, but not to the purchase and sale agreement), and to provide in the purchase and sale agreement only for disbursement to the new escrow.

The separate escrow agreement will include the following:

- Instructions to the escrow holder for the investment of the funds that are deposited into or remaining in escrow from time to time;
- Instructions for disbursement of funds during the term of the escrow to pay for the costs of the remediation, subject to appropriate approvals of disbursements by one or both parties; and
- Provisions for additional deposits into escrow when necessary and if applicable to the transaction.

The escrow agreement should also state that the amount deposited into the escrow account does not constitute a limitation on the responsible party's obligation to make expenditures to complete the remediation of the property, unless the parties have reached an agreement that the liability of the party funding the escrow for the costs of remediation will be capped at the escrowed amount. A form remediation escrow agreement is set forth in §7.80.

7.80-1 Escrow agreement

ESCROW AGREEMENT

This ESCROW AGREEMENT (Agreement) is made and entered into as of _ _[date]_ _, by and between _ _[name]_ _ (Seller) and _ _[name]_ _ (Buyer).

A. Prior to the date of this Agreement, Buyer and Seller entered into a purchase and sale agreement (Purchase Agreement), dated _ _[date]_ _, providing for the sale by Seller to Buyer and the purchase by Buyer from Seller of certain real property and the improvements located on it (Property) as more particularly described in the Purchase and Sale Agreement.

B. Buyer and Seller now desire to open and to provide the terms of and instructions for an escrow (Escrow), to be opened with _ _[name of escrow company]_ _ (Escrow Holder), for the costs of _ _[e.g., remediating groundwater contamination]_ _ under a portion of the Property as identified in that certain Environmental Report dated _ _[date]_ _, prepared by _ _[name of environmental consultant]_ _ regarding the Property (Contamination) in accordance with an Approved Remediation Plan (as defined in this Agreement).

NOW, THEREFORE, in consideration of the recitals set forth above and for other good and valuable consideration, the receipt and sufficiency of which is hereby acknowledged, the parties agree as follows:

1. Opening of Escrow. On the Closing under the Purchase Agreement (as that term is defined in the Purchase Agreement), the Escrow shall be established with Escrow Holder by Seller's deposit into the Escrow of the sum of _ _[amount]_ _ Dollars (_ _[dollar amount]_ _) from the proceeds otherwise due Seller from the Closing under the Purchase Agreement.

2. Investment of Funds. All funds deposited with Escrow Holder for the Escrow, or which may from time to time be held by Escrow Holder in the Escrow, shall be placed in such investments as the parties to this Agreement may from time to time direct. If Escrow Holder has not received instructions on the investment of funds before the initial deposit of funds is made into Escrow or the maturity of any investment into which the funds in Escrow are deposited, then Escrow Holder shall, until Escrow Holder receives further instructions, deposit the funds then held by it in the Escrow into an interest-bearing account with a financial institution reasonably selected by Escrow Holder. Escrow Holder shall have no responsibility for any investment decisions made by the parties to this Agreement.

3. Instructions. This Agreement shall constitute Escrow Holder's instructions regarding Escrow. The parties agree to execute any further reasonable instructions that Escrow Holder may request that are not inconsistent with this Agreement.

4. Disbursements to Seller. Seller may instruct Escrow Holder to disburse funds from the Escrow from time to time to pay costs (Costs) incurred for or in relation to the remediation, including without limitation, costs of preparing and obtaining government approvals of remediation plans for the Contamination (such plans, after approval of the same by those governmental agencies having jurisdiction over the Property and subject to such modifications as may from time to time be required by such agencies, are referred to collectively as the "Approved Remediation Plan"); costs of performing work required under the Approved Remediation Plan; costs of design, construction, or installation of any facilities required under the Approved Remediation Plan; and prepayments or deposits required to order materials.

Escrow Holder shall disburse funds to such parties as Seller may identify at least _ _[e.g., 15]_ _ days and no more than _ _[e.g., 30]_ _ days after Escrow Holder's receipt from Seller of a demand for payments accompanied by all of the following:

(a) A schedule and copies of the invoices that Seller is instructing Escrow Holder to pay;

(b) The amount of costs that Seller is instructing Escrow Holder to pay on account of each such invoice and the party to whom such amount should be paid;

(c) An address to which payment on account of each such invoice should be sent.

5. Disbursement Disputes. If, within _ _[e.g., 15]_ _ days after Escrow Holder receives an instruction to disburse funds in payment of an invoice in accordance with section _ _[e.g., 5]_ _ of this Agreement, Buyer determines that the payment which Escrow Holder has been instructed by Seller to make is for an improper purpose or is for work not yet performed (other than prepayments or deposits for materials) in relation to the remediation of the Contamination, then Buyer may, within the _ _[e.g., 15]_ _-day period, provide notice to Escrow Holder and Seller that Buyer disapproves Seller's disbursement instruction. Such notice shall identify the particular invoice on which payment is disapproved, the amount of the payment that is disapproved, and the reason for the disapproval. On receipt of such notice, Escrow Holder shall continue to make all disbursements that it has been instructed to make other than the disapproved item. Escrow Holder shall retain in Escrow the funds that would have been disbursed with regard to the disapproved amount until Escrow Holder receives further instructions from Buyer and Seller or the dispute as to such disapproved item is otherwise resolved.

6. Resolution of Disputes. If Buyer disapproves any disbursement that Escrow Holder was instructed to make by Seller, the parties shall, within _ _[e.g., 30]_ _ days after Buyer's notice of such disapproval, seek to reach an agreement on whether the disputed amount should properly be included within Costs and whether the work on account of which such invoice was submitted to Seller by a third party was performed. If the parties cannot agree on a resolution of the dispute within the _ _[e.g., 30]_ _-day period, then each party shall, within _ _[e.g., 10]_ _ days after the end of such _ _[e.g., 30]_ _-day period, select a qualified environmental consultant, and the two qualified environmental consultants so selected shall, within _ _[e.g., 15]_ _ days after both are selected, each determine whether all or part of the disputed amount should be disbursed from Escrow. The average of the amounts that each environmental consultant determines shall constitute the amount that Escrow Holder shall be instructed to disburse. Buyer shall pay the fees and costs of the environmental consultant selected by Buyer, and Seller shall pay the fees and costs of the environmental consultant selected by Seller.

7. Final Disbursement

(a) On completion of the remediation, Seller's environmental consultant shall issue a letter (Release Letter), certifying that the remediation is complete. On delivery of a copy of such letter to Escrow Holder and to Buyer, Escrow Holder is hereby instructed to disburse to Seller all funds remaining in the Escrow.

(b) If Escrow Holder has not received such letter by, on, or _ _[e.g., 2 years]_ _ after the date of this Agreement, then Escrow Holder shall disburse to Seller all funds remaining in Escrow, whether or not the funds are the subject of a dispute between Seller and Buyer with regard to a previous payment instruction, unless before such date Escrow Holder receives a joint instruction from Buyer and Seller to continue the Escrow. If Escrow Holder receives such joint instruction, the Escrow shall be extended for a period of _ _[e.g., 1 year]_ _, at which date the provisions of this section 7(b) related to extending the Escrow shall again be applied. Seller and Buyer agree to execute a joint instruction to Escrow Holder to continue the Escrow if, before the applicable date for disbursement of funds under this section 7(b), remediation is not complete or the Seller's environmental consultant has not issued the Release Letter.

8. Escrow Holder's Fees and Expenses. Escrow Holder's fees and expenses shall be paid half by Seller and half by Buyer.

9. Conflicting Demands

(a) If any disagreement arises between Seller and Buyer that results in conflicting or adverse claims or demands being made in connection with this Agreement or the Escrow, Escrow Holder shall be entitled, at its option, to refuse to comply with any such claim or demand, as long as the disagreement shall continue, and, in so doing, Escrow Holder shall not become liable for damages or interest to any party for its failure or refusal to comply with the conflicting or adverse claims or demands. Escrow Holder shall be entitled to continue to so refrain and refuse to act until the conflicting or adverse claims or demands have been resolved in accordance with the procedures set forth in this Agreement or by a court of competent jurisdiction;

(b) Escrow Holder may also file a suit in interpleader to have the respective rights of any adverse claimants adjudicated, and deposit with the court all documents and funds held by Escrow Holder under this Agreement. In this event, Seller and Buyer shall each pay half of Escrow Holder's costs, and attorney fees incurred in the action shall be paid by the losing party, or in such other manner as the court may order.

10. Duties of Escrow Holder. Seller and Buyer agree that Escrow Holder's duties are only those specified here, that such duties are purely ministerial in nature, and that Escrow Holder shall not incur any liability except for willful misconduct or gross negligence as long as it has acted in good faith.

11. Resignation or Removal of Escrow Holder. Escrow Holder shall have the right, on _ _[e.g., 30]_ _ days' prior written notice to Seller and Buyer, to resign from its position as Escrow Holder, as long as it finds a replacement Escrow Holder that is acceptable to both Seller and Buyer, before the effective date of Escrow Holder's resignation. Seller and Buyer shall have the right, on _ _[e.g., 20]_ _ days' prior written notice to Escrow Holder, to remove and replace Escrow Holder with an escrow holder mutually acceptable to Seller and Buyer. In the event of any such resignation or removal, Escrow Holder shall be entitled to receive its reasonable costs and expenses incurred as of the effective date of its resignation or removal.

12. General Provisions

(a) Notices. Any notice given in connection with this Agreement shall be given in writing to the parties at their respective addresses set forth below. Any notice, instruction, or demand given to Escrow Holder by either party shall be provided to the other party by the same notice method and concurrently with the giving of such notice to Escrow Holder. Any such notice shall be given by personal delivery or United States mail, postage prepaid, and shall be deemed to have been delivered, if by personal delivery, on the delivery of the notice, or if by United States mail, _ _[e.g., 3]_ _ days after the deposit of the same into the United States mail, postage prepaid.

[List parties' addresses]

Any party to this Agreement may change the address for notice specified above by providing notice of such change of address in accordance with the provisions of this section.

(b) Further Assurances. Seller and Buyer agree to execute and deliver such other instruments and documents and take such other actions as may be reasonably required in order to effectively complete the objectives contemplated by this Escrow Agreement.

(c) Captions and Headings. The captions and section headings used in this Escrow Agreement are inserted for convenience of reference only and are not intended to define, limit, or affect the interpretation or construction of any term or provision of this Agreement.

(d) Attorney Fees. In the event of any dispute arising out of the terms of this Agreement, the prevailing party or parties in the dispute shall be entitled to recover costs of suit, including attorney fees.

(e) Governing Law. This Agreement shall be governed by and construed in accordance with the laws of the State of California.

§7.81 4. Letters of Credit

The responsible party's obligation to advance remediation funds may be secured by a letter of credit in favor of the party for whose benefit the remediation obligation is being secured. The amount of the letter of credit may be the estimated cost of remediation or an amount that would, in effect, constitute liquidated damages to the benefited party if the responsible party should fail to perform its obligations. The benefited party, however, incurs the risk that remediation costs might eventually exceed the amount of the letter of credit. Because most letters of credit have a limited term, the parties will need to agree that the letter of credit will be renewed before it expires unless remediation has then been completed, and that the letter of credit may not be drawn on if it is not so renewed in a timely manner.

§7.82 5. Guaranty

If the entity that owns the property and is agreeing to be financially responsible for the remediation is a shell subsidiary or is thinly capitalized, the party for whose benefit the work will be performed will probably wish to obtain a guaranty from the performing party's parent company or affiliated entities or such entity's individual shareholders, as the case may be. Such a guaranty will constitute a suretyship obligation and, much like a loan guaranty, will be subject to suretyship laws (CC §§2787-2856) and existing case law on guaranties, although the guarantor can waive most rights. See generally California Real Estate Finance Practice: Strategies and Forms, chap 6 (Cal CEB 2000).

§7.83 6. Offset Against Buyer's Note

One creative solution for securing remediation costs can be used when the seller is accepting a promissory note for part of the purchase price. The buyer can require an offset, against the balance due on the note, of remediation costs incurred but not paid by the seller. The seller should be careful about which expenses the buyer is permitted to offset. For example, a provision allowing the buyer to take an offset against the note if the seller fails to complete remediation will almost certainly end in litigation. Offsets are best when they are permitted only for known established amounts or amounts that can be quickly established by an impartial third party. If the seller refuses to complete the remediation after receiving written notice from the buyer that work has stopped, an offset provision might permit the buyer to offset the amount that a consultant estimates as the remaining cost of the remediation work. Alternatively, the offset might be only for out-of-pocket costs actually incurred and paid and evidenced by invoices. Once again, the offset should not be a bar to further liability if actual costs later incurred by the buyer exceed the amount offset. Such an offset will impair the negotiability of a promissory note, and the seller should reject it if it is important to have the flexibility to sell the note before it matures.

H. Miscellaneous Provisions

§7.84 1. Arbitration Clause

The parties may wish to provide for the arbitration of disputes between them over the performance or the costs of the remediation. If the disputes to be arbitrated arise under the purchase and sale agreement, the form and content of the arbitration clause in the agreement must comply with CCP §§1298-1298.8. These sections contain the requirements for type size and style, for a notice on the effect of the provision, and for separate initialing by the parties. See §4.150. See sections 9.5.1-9.5.2 in form 4.177-5 for provisions on alternative dispute resolution.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.85 2. Access to Property

If a seller will be obligated to perform the remediation work after closing, whether at its own expense or partially at the buyer's expense, or if it wants the right to monitor the progress of remediation being performed by the buyer after closing, the seller will need a postclosing right of access to the property as needed to complete the remediation or perform the monitoring. Such access rights can be in the form of a right-of-entry provision in the purchase and sale agreement, in a separate agreement that includes the seller's obligations on the remediation, or in a separate license or easement agreement. The parties' selection of the appropriate documentation should consider the possibility that the buyer will sell the property to a third party before remediation is completed, the types of facilities that may need to be installed on the property to complete the remediation, and the nature of the work that must be performed even if no facilities will be installed. If an easement is the access right selected, it should be recorded and should be drafted as an easement in gross.

See §8.68 on options for an illustrative form of access provisions.

III. INSURANCE MATTERS

§7.86 A. Title Insurance Products

Environmental contamination has seldom been covered by recorded instruments or disclosed by surveys, so title insurance companies are not very useful sources for protection from a claim for toxic contamination. The California Land Title Association (CLTA) policies do not normally cover off-record matters, and the 2006 American Land Title Association (ALTA) form specifically excludes from coverage "[a]ny law, ordinance, permit or governmental regulation… relating to… environmental protection, or the effect of any violation of these laws, ordinances or governmental regulations…."

Title insurance companies will issue CLTA Endorsement No. 110.9 to a lender's policy, assuring that there are no environmental liens of record or filed in the United States District Court for the district in which the land is located. On environmental liens and title insurance, see California Title Insurance Practice §§4.6, 6.62, 6.86, 7.17, 11.63-11.64 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997). On endorsements protecting against environmental liens, see Title Ins §§8.77-8.78. On the effect of contamination on the marketability of property under a title insurance policy, see Title Ins §§6.25, 11.62.

It may be beneficial to obtain a chain of title search by a reputable title company to identify the historic owners and lessees of a parcel of property. The search may not be helpful if the names of the companies appearing in the chain of title are unrecognizable; however, it would be useful to know, for example, that for 20 of the last 30 years the property was owned by ABC Chemical Manufacturing. A chain of title review is an important component of establishing that "all appropriate inquiries" have been made into previous ownerships and uses, as required for the innocent landowner defense. See §7.24. Although the "all appropriate inquiry" rule does not on its face require a chain of title report, it does require the review of "historical documents," which "may include" chain of title documents. 40 CFR §312.24(a). Thus, failure to search the chain of title may allow a future plaintiff to argue that the defendant's inquiry was insufficient. Furthermore, to the extent chain of title searches become customary for Phase I Reports in the future, or are now customary in particular areas or circumstances, they may become prerequisites to an innocent landowner defense.

If a prior use of the property disclosed by the Phase I Report creates concern about potential contamination, a chain of title search might be useful in identifying the parties that owned the property during the time period in which contamination is thought to have occurred in order to permit contact with that owner or owners. A chain of title search would also benefit a property owner that finds itself the owner of contaminated property and is attempting to identify the parties that might have caused the contamination in order to seek a recovery or information from such parties, or to identify potential defendants. On chain of title guaranty, see Title Ins §9.18.

For a sample provision on buyer's closing conditions regarding title, see section 6.1.1 in form 4.174-1.

§7.87 B. Environmental Liability Insurance

The insurance industry offers coverage to manage the risk of unknown contamination. For example, property transfer liability insurance, which can be very useful in the sale of real property, provides coverage against the following risks:

- Cleanup costs for contamination existing on the property on the closing date but not discovered until a later date within the policy period;
- Cleanup costs for contamination known to exist on the property on the closing date, not then required to be cleaned up, but required by a governmental agency to be cleaned up at a later date during the policy period;
- Bodily injury, property damage, and other third party claims arising from contamination on the property or migrating off the property; and
- Costs of defense.

The insurer or its broker ordinarily will conduct a due diligence review of the property to assess the underwriting risk, and coverage is usually written on a claims-made-and-reported basis. Premium costs, although substantial, have fallen in recent years as the market for such products has become more competitive. Such coverage provides a way to allocate responsibility away from both the seller and the buyer and to establish with greater certainty their respective liabilities for contamination discovered after the closing.

IV. LENDER CONCERNS

§7.88 A. Nature of Lender's Liability and Underwriting

Before financing a real property purchase, a lender will evaluate how contamination—existing or potential—could affect the lender's risk in making the loan or realizing on the security. To complete a purchase and sale transaction, most buyers and sellers will need to address the lender's concerns.

The secured-creditor exemption in CERCLA, as amended, gives lenders some protection by excepting from the definition of an "owner or operator" persons who hold "indicia of ownership" primarily to protect their security interest "without participating in the management" of the property. 42 USC §9601(20)(A). Thus, a city was still eligible for the secured-creditor exemption, even though its initial motivation for purchasing land was to further economic development, as long as the city "'[held] indicia of ownership primarily to protect' its security interest in the property during the period when the pollution occur[red]." Monarch Tile, Inc. v City of Florence (11th Cir 2000) 212 F3d 1219, 1223.

The courts have had difficulty applying the "participating in the management" element of the exemption, as the following brief review of the case law shows:

- Management criteria. Although early cases distinguished between financial and operational management, the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that a lender may lose the secured-creditor exception by becoming involved in day-to-day operational management or by participating in the financial management "to a degree indicating a capacity to influence the corporation's treatment of hazardous wastes." See U.S. v Fleet Factors Corp. (11th Cir 1990) 901 F2d 1550, 1557. The breadth of the language in Fleet Factors caused some concern that loan provisions allowing a lender to participate in operational management, even if unenforced, would be sufficient to trigger liability. These concerns were assuaged when the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal held in In re Bergsoe Metal Corp. (9th Cir 1990) 910 F2d 668, 672, that "there must be some actual management of the facility before a secured creditor will fall outside the exception." (Emphasis in original.)
- Acquisition of property. Whether or not a lender was protected under the secured-creditor exemption while it was a lender, if it later acquires the property (e.g., at a foreclosure sale), the lender becomes liable as an owner. Guidice v BFG Electroplating & Mfg. Co. (WD Pa 1989) 732 F Supp 556, 563; U.S. v Maryland Bank & Trust Co. (D Md 1986) 632 F Supp 573, 579. But see U.S. v Mirabile (ED Pa 1985) 1985 US Dist Lexis 15411, 15 Envtl L Rep 20992 (4 months' time as owner insufficient to create liability as "owner" under CERCLA).
- Short-lived EPA guidelines. The EPA attempted to provide some guidelines for lenders on what constituted actual management, but the court in Kelley v EPA (DC Cir 1994) 15 F3d 1100 vacated those regulations on the ground that the EPA lacked statutory authority to "define liability for a class of potential defendants" by regulation. 15 F3d at 1107. The EPA then removed the regulations in complying with a presidential directive to remove obsolete or unduly burdensome regulations.
- 1996 Asset Conservation Act. The Asset Conservation, Lender Liability, and Deposit Insurance Protection Act of 1996 (Subtitle E of the Omnibus Appropriations Act (Pub L 104-208, 110 Stat 3009)) gave lenders further protection from liability under CERCLA. A foreclosing lender is exempt from the definition of "owner or operator" if the lender did not participate in management of the property before foreclosing and, after foreclosing, seeks to sell, release (in the case of a lease finance transaction), or otherwise divest the property at the earliest practicable, commercially reasonable time on commercially reasonable terms, taking into account market conditions and legal and regulatory requirements. 42 USC §9601(20)(E). Title 42 USC §9601(20)(F) provides the following:
- To "participate in management" requires more than merely having the capacity to influence, or the unexercised right to control; and
- A lender holding indicia of ownership primarily to protect a security interest "shall be considered to participate in management only if, while the borrower is still in possession of the [property] encumbered by the security interest," the lender exercises day-to-day decision-making control over environmental compliance of the property.

For further discussion of this legislation, see California Mortgages, Deeds of Trust, and Foreclosure Litigation, chap 12 (4th ed Cal CEB 2009).

In 1996, the California legislature enacted Health & S C §§25548-25548.7 to dispel or minimize uncertainties about "the type of lender and fiduciary conduct that will not incur liability for hazardous material contamination." Health & S C §25548(b). For detailed discussion of the state legislation, see Mortgage Deed of Trust Foreclosure, chap 12.

Because of the potential for liability, institutional lenders now routinely include as part of the underwriting process an assessment of the actual or possible effects of toxic contamination on the property; such an assessment should also be part of the private lender's due diligence analysis. Although the 1996 state and federal statutes that attempted to minimize lenders' concerns may provide some comfort regarding the scope of liability, many lenders continue to seek additional comfort either from underwriting analysis (showing that a resale of the property after foreclosure would enable the lender to recover both its loan amount and its share of any cleanup costs) or from the borrower in the form of an indemnification or other provisions.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.89 B. Loan Application Provisions

Under most loan applications, the lender must be given a Phase I Environmental Report from an environmental consultant approved by the lender, along with the balance of the due diligence materials, before the lender will issue the loan or a firm commitment for it. If the lender requires a commitment fee before it completes any environmental reviews, the buyer-borrower will want to learn whether all or part of that fee is recoverable if the lender disapproves of the environmental reviews.

Some loan applications require that, in addition to providing the lender with a Phase I Environmental Report, the borrower must represent and warrant to the lender that it knows of no toxic contamination affecting the property at the time of applying for the loan.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.90 C. Loan Document Provisions

Lenders often include provisions on environmental contamination in their loan documents, and buyers negotiating the purchase of property should be aware of the lender's requirements. Sellers, too, should be prepared to address lenders' concerns in order to facilitate a purchase and sale transaction. The lender's rights were substantially enhanced in 1992 by significant exceptions to the one-action rule of CCP §726 and other California antideficiency laws (CCP §§564(c)-(e), 726.5, 736; CC §2929.5). See §§7.90-7.95.

One result of these amendments is that fewer lenders use separate environmental indemnity agreements. Separate indemnities were previously used to minimize the risk of antideficiency protections, which barred recovery after foreclosure under environmental indemnity provisions in deeds of trust. See §7.95. Because these statutes confirm that environmental indemnities are enforceable whether or not such provisions are in the deed of trust, most lenders now include such provisions in their deeds of trust. See California Mortgages, Deeds of Trust, and Foreclosure Litigation, chap 4 (4th ed Cal CEB 2009).

§7.91 1. Representations

In addition to requiring environmental reviews of the property before making a loan, a lender will expect the borrower to make certain representations on the environmental condition of the property as part of the loan documentation. Most lenders also require provisions stating that, if the borrower becomes aware of any environmental problem after the loan date, the borrower will then notify the lender and provide it with copies of any reports and studies on the problem that the borrower has prepared.

§7.92 2. Assurances on Remediation

Some years ago lenders would not even consider making loans on properties that were affected by contamination, but they are often more willing to do so today if the extent of the contamination and the expected cost of remediation has been well established and if the lender is comfortable with the parties' ability to complete and pay for the remediation. Because groundwater contamination takes longer to remediate and can also migrate, lenders may be more likely to provide financing for a property affected solely by soil contamination than one that is also affected by groundwater contamination. If the soil contamination can be remediated quickly and efficiently, however, the lender may require remediation before it will lend the funds.

In either circumstance, if the lender decides to fund the purchase, it will want assurances that the remediation will be completed. If the seller will be responsible for remediation after closing, the lender will probably require the same sort of assurances that the buyer requires of the seller. The lender may also seek a collateral assignment of the buyer's rights, if any, to require the seller to perform remediation, or else the right to require the buyer to enforce the seller's obligations to remediate, or both. If the buyer agrees to undertake remediation in exchange for acquiring the property at a price that reflects the existence of the contamination and the buyer assumes the obligation to remediate or remove it, the lender will probably want assurances that the buyer will perform the remediation. In either situation, the lender will probably require indemnities, reserve accounts, and possibly third party guaranties to be assured that the party undertaking remediation completes it.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.93 3. Right to Waive Security

The most important aspect of the statutory enhancements of lenders' rights discussed in §7.90 is the material change to the antideficiency and one-action rules. These rules previously put a lender at risk because, if a property's value was impaired by contamination, a foreclosing lender would not be able to obtain a deficiency judgment (CCP §§580b, 580d) yet was required to foreclose on the property as the first effort to recover on a defaulted loan (CCP §726).

Now, under CCP §726.5, a lender may waive its security and proceed as if it held an unsecured loan if the real property collateral has been environmentally impaired and the borrower caused or permitted the contamination, or failed to disclose known contamination to the lender for loans, extensions of credit, guaranties, or other obligations made, renewed, or modified on or after January 1, 1992. A property will be considered environmentally impaired if a court confirms that the remediation or removal costs would exceed 25 percent of the fair market value of the property (without regard to the contamination) or the value of all security for the loan, whichever is greater, or if the property is the only parcel securing the loan and is listed on the National Priorities List under 42 USC §9605 or as a seriously contaminated property by the California Department of Health Services. CCP §736. For further discussion of the lender's ability to waive the security, see California Mortgages, Deeds of Trust, and Foreclosure Litigation, chap 4 (4th ed Cal CEB 2009).

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.94 4. Access, Right to Remediate, and Receivership

As a result of the provisions of the Civil Code and the Code of Civil Procedure that became effective January 1, 1992, lenders' documents often provide for (1) a lender's right of entry and inspection when foreclosure has commenced or the lender has a reasonable belief that toxic contamination has occurred (see CC §2929.5) and (2) a lender's right to perform remediation and appoint a receiver in connection with its performance (see CCP §564).

Source: Real Property/California Real Property Sales Transactions/7 Hazardous Waste Considerations/§7.95 5. Survival of Indemnities and Other Agreements After Foreclosure

§7.95 5. Survival of Indemnities and Other Agreements After Foreclosure

A lender may bring a separate action against a borrower for breach of any environmental provision regarding real property security, and such an action will not constitute an action under CCP §726 or a deficiency judgment that would otherwise be barred by CCP §580a, §580b, or §580d. CCP §736. This permits lenders to bring actions to address environmental problems without proceeding against the property by foreclosure or to recover further damages for environmental problems after a foreclosure. CCP §736(a).

Under CCP §736(b), damages are limited to the following:

- The reasonable cost of remediation or removal of contamination;
- Indemnity for third party claims relating to the contamination, as long as they arise from acts or omissions of parties, other than the lender, occurring while the borrower is still the owner or operator of the property; and
- Attorney fees and costs related to the breach.

Damages specifically available do not include principal and accrued interest or amounts attributable to contamination caused or knowingly permitted by the lender or its agents or affiliates. CCP §736(b). No benefit is derived from §736 for loans that are under $200,000 and meet other criteria set forth in CCP §736(c).

A more extensive discussion of the risks and benefits to lenders of different types of indemnities is beyond the scope of this book. Buyers and sellers of real property should, however, be generally aware of these different issues as they draft documentation for the purchase and sale of the property and enter into the loan application and documentation phases of the transaction. For further discussion of environmental indemnities, see California Mortgages, Deeds of Trust, and Foreclosure Litigation, chap 4 (4th ed Cal CEB 2009).

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES

§8.1 A. Definition of Option

An option contract is an irrevocable unilateral contract by one party (the optionor) to buy property from or sell property to another party (the optionee). County of San Diego v Miller (1975) 13 C3d 684, 688, 119 CR 491. When the option is exercised, a bilateral agreement is created for the purchase and sale of the property on the specified terms and conditions contained in the contract. Jenkins v Tuneup Masters (1987) 190 CA3d 1, 7, 235 CR 214; Hudson Props. Co. v Governing Bd. (1985) 168 CA3d 63, 72, 213 CR 909. An option itself does not transfer an interest in property. Rather, it is a grant of a right to purchase (or sell) the property. Claremont Terrace Homeowners' Ass'n v U.S. (1983) 146 CA3d 398, 406, 194 CR 216.

Option contracts are subject to the same customary rules of construction as other contracts. See, e.g., Goodwest Rubber Corp. v Munoz (1985) 170 CA3d 919, 216 CR 604; Erich v Granoff (1980) 109 CA3d 920, 167 CR 538. To be enforceable, an option contract must involve adequate consideration and must contain the material terms of the agreement. See §§8.9-8.13. Option contracts relating to the purchase and sale of real property fall within the statute of frauds and therefore must be in writing. See §§4.13, 8.15.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.2 B. Types of Options

An option contract can take the form of a separate agreement entered into between the parties or can be part of another agreement between the parties, such as a lease. Common relationships between the parties to an option contract include:

- Basic purchase option: Seller makes an irrevocable offer to sell property to the buyer and the buyer may elect to accept and exercise its option at its discretion (see §§8.8-8.17);
- Right of first refusal: Buyer is given the right to buy property on the same terms as a third party offer received by the seller (see §8.58); and
- Put: Buyer makes an irrevocable offer to purchase the property that seller may elect to accept in its discretion (see §8.53).

Options outside the real estate context, most frequently in the corporate context, are not covered in this chapter.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.3 C. Options in the Residential Context

In the residential context, the characterization of a contract as an option rather than a purchase agreement may have important consequences. In Allen v Smith (2002) 94 CA4th 1270, 114 CR2d 898, the buyer breached and the seller attempted to retain the entire deposit as the price paid for an option. The court, however, characterized the contract as a purchase and sale agreement instead of an option agreement. As a result, the court found that the seller was limited to the liquidated damages provided for in the contract rather than the entire deposit made on entering the contract.

When entering into residential option contracts, the parties must also consider compliance with the applicable statutory disclosure requirements. Although the option aspect of the option agreement may not invoke any disclosure obligations, the purchase and sale aspect of the option contract should be approached as any other residential purchase agreement. For a discussion of required disclosures in a residential purchase agreement, see §§6.29-6.70.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.4 D. Options as Two Agreements

The option contract anticipates the completion of two necessary agreements: (1) the unilateral and irrevocable grant by the optionor to the optionee of the right or obligation to purchase the property (see §8.5), and (2) the underlying agreement of purchase and sale containing the material terms and conditions, including mutual obligations, that the parties must perform to close the transaction (see §8.6). The second agreement is contingent on the exercise of the first.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.5 1. Unilateral Contract for Right to Purchase

As noted in §8.4, the first agreement in an option contract is a unilateral contract. County of San Diego v Miller (1975) 13 C3d 684, 119 CR 491; Riverside Fence Co. v Novak (1969) 273 CA2d 656, 660, 78 CR 536. One party (the optionee) gives consideration in exchange for the optionor's binding and enforceable promise to sell the property to or buy the property from the optionee; the consideration given can be either monetary or nonmonetary. See §§8.10-8.13. City of Turlock v Paul M. Zagaris, Inc. (1989) 209 CA3d 189, 194, 256 CR 902; Erich v Granoff (1980) 109 CA3d 920, 927, 167 CR 538. The optionor's binding and enforceable promise to sell (or buy) the property is a unilateral offer. As such, the optionee (the offeree) is commonly said to have exercised its option when it decides to accept the offer. In an option contract, the optionee is under no obligation to purchase (or sell) the property unless the option is exercised. T.M. Cobb Co. v Superior Court (1984) 36 C3d 273, 282, 204 CR 143, citing Warner Bros. Pictures v Brodel (1948) 31 C2d 766, 771, 192 P2d 949.

§8.6 2. Bilateral Contract for Purchase and Sale

Once the unilateral contract (see §8.5) is accepted by the optionee (i.e., the option is exercised), the option contract is converted into a bilateral contract for the purchase and sale of the property, with binding obligations to be performed by both parties. Claremont Terrace Homeowners' Ass'n v U.S. (1983) 146 CA3d 398, 406, 194 CR 216; Anthony v Enzler (1976) 61 CA3d 872, 132 CR 553.

The second agreement (the bilateral agreement) contained in an option contract involves the establishment of the terms and conditions of the purchase and sale of the property; thus, it is advisable to devote the same care to the drafting of this aspect of the option contract as any other purchase and sale agreement. For this reason, some practitioners attach a form of purchase and sale agreement to the option contract. Some parties prefer to delay drafting detailed purchase and sale provisions in order to, e.g., present the other side with a short document or save costs or time in the face of a purchase that is not yet certain. As a result of this approach, however, (1) the parties may be unable to close because the material terms of the purchase have not been set forth in sufficient detail, or (2) the client may be able to close but has not obtained the benefit of the representations, warranties, or covenants that otherwise would have been expected if a purchase and sale agreement had been negotiated at the outset.

§8.7 3. Additional Provisions in Option Contracts

An option contract generally must contain the two agreements described in §§8.4-8.6. However, when using an option contract to purchase real property, it is often advisable to include a number of additional provisions. For example, if an optionee intends to conduct environmental testing or other physical inspections and testing at the property, the optionee may require optionor's cooperation and optionor may require evidence of adequate insurance before allowing optionee to conduct testing. See §8.68. The additional provisions that may be appropriate will depend on the particular goals of the option contract. See §§8.66-8.72.

Although these additional mutual agreements may be necessary or helpful to carry out the intent of the parties, counsel for the optionee should consider whether the added mutual agreements have altered the unilateral nature of the option, which may affect the optionee's ability to easily exercise the option. For example, if the optionee must undertake certain acts such as processing land use entitlements within a given time and to a given standard, the optionee may be unable to exercise the option if those conditions are not met. The attorney should also consider the potential liabilities that may be created as additional agreements are incorporated into the option contract. For example, by adding duties of cooperation or confidentiality, the parties may create potential independent liabilities if they fail to perform these obligations.

§8.8 II. CREATION OF OPTION CONTRACT

Option contracts are subject to statutory and case law requirements. Further, as with purchase and sale agreements, certain transactions have additional requirements. See §§6.29-6.70.

A. Essential Elements of an Option Contract

§8.9 1. Essential Terms

An option contract must contain all of the essential terms of the purchase. These terms must be set forth in sufficient detail so that a court can enforce them. (On essential terms in a purchase and sale agreement, see §§4.6-4.13.) These terms include the following:

- The names of the parties;
- The price;
- The duration of the option; and
- A description of the property.

Stockwell v Lindeman (1964) 229 CA2d 750, 40 CR 555, citing King v Stanley (1948) 32 C2d 584, 589, 197 P2d 321. The California Supreme Court rejected the method and time of payment terms required by Stockwell and King, as essential terms. See Patel v Liebermensch (2008) 45 C4th 344, 86 CR3d 366. See also Sterling v Taylor (2007) 40 C4th 757, 772, 55 CR3d 116.

The bulleted terms are the minimum required to create an enforceable contract for the purchase of real property. Hennefer v Butcher (1986) 182 CA3d 492, 501, 227 CR 318. A court may imply other terms using custom and intent of the parties. See Patel, 45 C4th at 351 (time of payment); CC §1657 (time for performance of an act).

§8.10 2. Consideration for Option

For an option contract to be enforceable, legally sufficient consideration must be given by the optionee for its option to purchase (or sell). Without consideration, the option contract is not binding on either party. An option contract that is not supported by consideration may be considered a mere offer that may be revoked at any time before acceptance. Torlai v Lee (1969) 270 CA2d 854, 76 CR 239. For a more detailed discussion on consideration in general, see §4.11.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.11 a. Adequacy of Consideration

California courts have consistently stated that any consideration, however small, is sufficient to support the enforceability of an option contract. Kowal v Day (1971) 20 CA3d 720, 98 CR 118 (use of a car); Wheat v Morse (1961) 197 CA2d 203, 17 CR 226 (payment of $1); Stough v Hanson (1941) 46 CA2d 504, 116 P2d 77 ($1 in cash); Marsh v Lott (1908) 8 CA 384, 97 P 163 (payment of 25 cents). The consideration, however, must actually be given. In one case where the option contract provided that the optionor was required to return the option payment if the optionee did not exercise the option, the court held that the option contract failed for lack of consideration. Torlai v Lee (1969) 270 CA2d 854, 858, 76 CR 239; but see Kowal, 20 CA3d at 728 (holding that the optionor's ability to hold the option payment was sufficient consideration).

A price for the option may or may not be drafted into the option contract; if not, courts have little trouble finding sufficient consideration. See, e.g., Kowal v Day, supra (use of automobile sufficient consideration to support option). Practitioners, however, should clearly draft consideration for the option and also focus attention on drafting separate consideration for the purchase of the property. Although consideration is adequate regardless of amount, the purchase price may affect the availability of a specific performance remedy for breach of an option contract. See §4.149. In evaluating whether specific performance should be granted in a claim for breach of an option contract, case law has not focused on the consideration given for the first part of the option contract (i.e., the irrevocable offer to buy or sell the property; see §§8.4-8.5). See Auslen v Johnson (1953) 118 CA2d 319, 323, 257 P2d 664; Polinsky v Vaughan (1968) 268 CA2d 183, 73 CR 764.

PRACTICE TIP: To strengthen the specific performance remedy available in the event of a breach by the optionor, a prudent optionee should consider proposing an option payment provision that bears a reasonable relationship to the purchase price and the term of the option contract. In addition, a sophisticated optionor is likely to require a significant option payment, especially in an appreciating market.

A disproportionately large amount of consideration can result in the option contract being recharacterized as a hidden financing device. For a discussion of the use of an option as a financing device, see §8.54.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.12 b. Consideration for Options Within Other Agreements

In the context of options contained in other agreements, such as a right of first refusal or right of first offer contained in a lease, general contract principles are applied (e.g., a single consideration supporting multiple promises). Alpha Beta Food Markets, Inc. v Retail Clerks Union (1955) 45 C2d 764, 771, 291 P2d 433. In the lease context, the consideration supporting the lease can also support an option agreement contained within the lease. For a discussion regarding office leases with an option to purchase, see Office Leasing: Drafting and Negotiating the Lease §1.75 (Cal CEB 1996).

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.13 c. Consideration Other Than Money

Traditional contract law rules apply to determine the adequacy of consideration for making a binding contract; thus, services or actions may also constitute valid consideration. The optionee needs to show that this consideration was bargained for and known to the optionor. Kowal v Day (1971) 20 CA3d 720, 726, 98 CR 118; Kelley v Rouse (1961) 188 CA2d 92, 10 CR 235; Prather v Vasquez (1958) 162 CA2d 198, 327 P2d 963. For example, the optionee may obtain valuable land use approvals for the property but if this work is not proven to be bargained-for consideration, and no other consideration is given, then the option contract may fail for lack of consideration. In addition, if the optionee is under no obligation to perform such work, then the option contract may also fail for lack of consideration. See Steiner v Thexton (review granted Sept. 17, 2008, S164928; superseded opinion at 163 CA4th 359, 77 CR3d 632) (optionee's obligation to deliver to optionor results of optionee's inspections of subject property was not sufficient consideration because optionee was under no obligation to perform such inspections). If the work improves the value of the property, however, the offeree may be able to recover the reasonable value of its services under CC §3343. See Sixta v Ochsner (1960) 187 CA2d 485, 9 CR 617.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.14 3. Definiteness

If the essential terms of a contract are not sufficiently clear and definite, a court may refuse to enforce the contract. Roberts v Adams (1958) 164 CA2d 312, 320, 300 P2d 900 (option clause to purchase property for amount "payable as mutually agreed by both parties" is not sufficiently certain, and lessee's ability and offer to pay cash on exercise of lease's option did not cure uncertainty about terms of payment in option clause). Although courts occasionally interpret the language of a contract to make it more definite, the better practice is to make the provisions sufficiently definite. Alameda Belt Line v City of Alameda (2003) 113 CA4th 15, 18, 5 CR3d 879 (parol or extrinsic evidence can be used to explain meaning of ambiguous option terms, thus making them "sufficiently certain").

In the option portion of the option contract (i.e., the unilateral contract described in §8.5), the description of the parties and of the property raises issues identical to those in a contract to purchase real property. See, e.g., Malerbi & Assocs. v Seivert (1961) 191 CA2d 760, 12 CR 852 (contract that failed to name the buyer-optionee was found inadequate). See §§4.6-4.7.

Every option contract contains two different price components: (1) the option price, and (2) the purchase price for the property subject to the option. When a formula or reference is used to determine the purchase price, rather than a fixed dollar amount, the formula or reference must be sufficiently clear. In Goodwest Rubber Corp. v Munoz (1985) 170 CA3d 919, 216 CR 604, the purchase price was defined as the "fair market value" of the property and the term of the option was 5 years. The court held that the exercise price was sufficiently clear to enforce the contract, siding with the optionee's view that setting a fixed purchase price for a date 5 years into the future was difficult.

PRACTICE TIP: Although the term "fair market value" is commonly used in the real estate industry, reasonable parties can disagree over the calculation of the actual dollars at issue. Detailed directions for calculating the purchase price can avoid this problem.

§8.15 4. Statute of Frauds

An option contract that relates to the purchase of real property must satisfy the requirements of the statute of frauds. CC §1624(a)(3); Woods v Bradford (1967) 254 CA2d 501, 62 CR 391; In re Watts (Bankr ND Cal 2000) 244 BR 823. The contract or a memorandum of the contract must be in writing, and the writing must be signed by the party to be charged. On requirement of a writing, see §§4.12-4.13.

§8.16 5. Term of Option and Rule Against Perpetuities

The length of the time within which an option may be exercised is an essential term in an option contract; otherwise, the contract violates the rule against perpetuities. If the term is omitted, however, the court may set a reasonable term, depending on the facts and circumstances of the case. Southern Christian Leadership Conf. v Al Malaikah Auditorium Co. (1991) 230 CA3d 207, 222, 281 CR 216; Auslen v Johnson (1953) 118 CA2d 319, 257 P2d 664.

California abolished the common law rule against perpetuities in 1991 in favor of a modified, statutory construction. Probate Code §21205 requires that an interest in real property vest either within the period of a life in being plus 21 years, or 90 years after creation. However, at the same time the legislature enacted the statutory rule against perpetuities, it also enacted Prob C §21225, which effectively exempts nondonative transfers from the rule. The rule against perpetuities does not apply to commercial, nondonative transfers, including options, preemptive rights of first refusal, future leases, and conditional leases. Shaver v Clanton (1994) 26 CA4th 568, 574, 31 CR2d 595. The rule against perpetuities applies to transfers rooted in family ownership, even if nondonative. Examples would include options granted under marital agreements, separation or divorce settlements, as consideration for a duty of support, and reciprocal transfers. Prob C §21225.

Even before 1991, only unusual situations triggered the rule against perpetuities. For example, in Alamo Sch. Dist. v Jones (1960) 182 CA2d 180, 6 CR 272, the court held that a right of first refusal that was effective only if the property was no longer used for school purposes violated the rule against perpetuities. See also Strong v Theis (1986) 187 CA3d 913, 232 CR 272; Taormina Theosophical Community, Inc. v Silver (1983) 140 CA3d 964, 190 CR 38.

NOTE: Practitioners should keep in mind that, apart from the options analysis, statutory law limits the duration of leases in certain circumstances. See, e.g., CC §§715-719.

§8.17 6. Special Notices Required for Option Agreements

In general, statutory notices that would be required in connection with a purchase and sale agreement for a given property will be required when an option agreement is entered into with respect to the property. Notices are required, for example, under CC §1102 (real estate transfer disclosure statements and mobilehome transfer disclosure statements), §1102.6(a) (additional requirements that may be established by local governments), §1102.6(b) (Mello-Roos Community Facilities Act special tax or assessment disclosures), §1103 (natural hazard disclosures). For a list of required notices, see §§6.29-6.70.

§8.18 B. Recording Option Contracts; Priority Issues

Recording the option agreement or a memorandum of option in the real estate records in the county where the property is located establishes constructive notice to third parties of the option agreement. See Thaler v Household Fin. Corp. (2000) 80 CA4th 1093, 95 CR2d 779. When the optionee has no actual notice of a prior option agreement, the recordation would give the optionee priority over the prior option agreement. Moreover, any subsequent purchaser of the property would take subject to the recorded option. The recording of the option agreement or memorandum can defeat a claim by a purchaser or encumbrancer of property that it is a bona fide purchaser or encumbrancer who should take title free of the optionee's rights. See CC §1214.

Constructive notice of the existence of an option to purchase property expires either 6 months after the recorded instrument states the option expires by its terms or, if the instrument does not state a term, then 6 months after the recordation date of the instrument. CC §884.010.

Once the option is exercised, the title acquired by the optionee relates back to the date the option was granted. Anthony v Enzler (1976) 61 CA3d 872, 132 CR 553. The relation-back rule does not apply when the optionee obtains title to the property outside the purview of the option. If there is a failure of a condition, expiration of the option, or a material breach by the optionee that would preclude specific performance, the relation-back rule does not apply. Wachovia Bank v Lifetime Indus. (2006) 145 CA4th 1039, 52 CR3d 168.

§8.19 C. Title Insurance for Option Contracts

Title insurance is available for option contracts. An optionee may want to insure the priority of the option right and the optionee's right to enforce the option or to insure that the optionor holds vested title to the property. Most title companies will issue insurance for an option in a form based on a standard owner's policy. See California Title Insurance Practice §§7.50-7.53 (2d ed Cal CEB 1997).

III. EXERCISE OF OPTION

§8.20 1. Method of Exercise

If the option contract prescribes the method by which the option must be exercised, that method must be strictly followed. Palo Alto Town & Country Village, Inc. v BBTC Co. (1974) 11 C3d 494, 498, 113 CR 705; Jenkins v Tuneup Masters (1987) 190 CA3d 1, 7, 235 CR 214; Riverside Fence Co. v Novak (1969) 273 CA2d 656, 662, 78 CR 536. When the option contract does not specify the method by which the optionee can communicate its intention to exercise the option, any reasonable and customary method will be acceptable. Palo Alto Town & Country Village, Inc., 11 C3d at 499; Riverside Fence Co., 273 CA2d at 661. In California, under CC §1583 an option requiring written notice is exercised when the written acceptance is deposited in the mail. Palo Alto Town & Country Village, Inc., 11 C3d at 501.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.21 2. Time to Exercise

The exercise must be strictly within the time period specified in the contract. A late exercise of the option is generally not effective. See Wachovia Bank v Lifetime Indus. (2006) 145 CA4th 1039, 52 CR3d 168; Allen v Smith (2002) 94 CA4th 1270, 114 CR2d 898. However, courts have enforced a late exercise of an option when the delay was minor. See Holiday Inns of Am. v Knight (1969) 70 C2d 327, 74 CR 722 (court provided optionee relief from forfeiture).

Although the duration of an option is a material term, some courts have rescued the optionee by implying a reasonable duration. See Bergin v Van Der Steen (1951) 107 CA2d 8, 236 P2d 613 (agreement obligated optionor to allow additional time because contract language allowed for hiatus in obligation during war).

The language used to draft the duration can be fertile grounds for disagreement, which is why it is generally preferable, whenever possible, to identify a specific time and calendar date for an option's expiration. Wilson v Gentile (1992) 8 CA4th 759, 10 CR2d 713, is an example of how a court may interpret the duration provisions of an option agreement. In Wilson, the court construed an option to purchase requiring its exercise "within thirty days prior to the expiration of this option." A question arose about whether a fixed end point was established in the option language, i.e., the date the option expired. The court determined that the beginning point of the time for lawful exercise of the option is defined as the given number of days before the end point. The interval between the beginning date and the ending date is the period "within" which the relevant event—in this case the exercise of the option—must occur.

In Wilson, the court distinguished between an option to buy and an option to renew a lease. In a lease renewal, the Wilson court felt it would be absurd to require the landlord to wait until the very end of the term to know whether the tenant was going to stay. The Wilson court, in the lease renewal situation, would be willing to substitute the words "at least" for the word "within." 8 CA4th at 765. See also 12 Witkin, Summary of California Law, Real Property §§533-534 (10th ed 2005).

The optionor cannot, however, evade or prevent actions that are required for the exercise of the option and then deny the effectiveness of an option that is otherwise timely exercised. D-K Inv. Corp. v Sutter (1971) 19 CA3d 537, 545, 96 CR 830; Riverside Fence Co. v Novak (1969) 273 CA2d 656, 663, 78 CR 536.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.22 3. Priority of Option on Exercise

On exercise of the option, the bilateral contract to purchase and sell created by the exercise relates back in time to the moment the option was initially granted. Claremont Terrace Homeowners' Ass'n v U.S. (1983) 146 CA3d 398, 406, 194 CR 216. Because it relates back in time, when an option is properly exercised it has a right of priority over any encumbrance or other interest in the property that is acquired after the date of the initial grant of option. See Marriage of Joaquin (1987) 193 CA3d 1529, 1533, 239 CR 175 (property obtained through exercise of option during marriage is separate property if option created before marriage); Claremont Terrace Homeowners' Ass'n v U.S., supra (after exercise, option was transformed into an indefeasible right to acquire property which related back to date on which optionee first acquired option, which preceded recorded tax lien). That right of priority, like any other, can be defeated by a subsequent bona fide purchaser for value who acquires without actual or constructive notice of the option. Gates Rubber Co. v Ulman (1989) 214 CA3d 356, 364, 262 CR 630.

PRACTICE TIP: The optionee obtains important protection by recording a memorandum of the option. Recording can provide an optionee with priority over other option holders as well as purchasers of the property. See §§8.18, 8.81.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.23 4. Waiver of Defective Exercise

In general, to be effective, the option must be exercised in strict accordance with its specified terms for acceptance. See §8.20. However, the optionor may waive the requirement of strict compliance. The waiver may be express or may be implied by the optionor's conduct.

EXAMPLE: The optionor may be deemed to have waived the defective exercise by not giving notice to the optionee, specifying the defects in the exercise of the option. Rollins v Stokes (1981) 123 CA3d 701, 713, 176 CR 835; Collins v Marvel Land Co. (1970) 13 CA3d 34, 40, 91 CR 291; Riverside Fence Co. v Novak (1969) 273 CA2d 656, 661, 78 CR 536.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.24 5. Changed Terms, Added Conditions, or Termination of Option After Exercise

When the optionee purports to exercise the option but makes the exercise conditional in some way or changes the contract terms, the exercise of the option may be defective. In such a case, the classic rules of formation of contract apply to treat this as a counteroffer that rejects and thus terminates the original offer. See State v Agostini (1956) 139 CA2d 909, 912, 294 P2d 769 (acceptance of option must be unqualified and unconditional and according to terms of option).

Relief may be available, however, for an optionee who gives a conditional exercise of the option but withdraws these conditions before the option exercise period has expired. In C. Robert Nattress & Assocs. v CIDCO (1986) 184 CA3d 55, 229 CR 33, the court held that a conditional exercise was not a counteroffer that terminated the contract if not accepted. Rather, the conditions were considered additional terms that the optionor rejected. Because the conditional exercise did not terminate the option, the optionee was still able to accept the terms as stated in the option agreement.

In McCulloch v M & C Beauty Colleges, Inc. (1987) 194 CA3d 1338, 240 CR 189, a lessee had a right of first refusal (in effect an option; see §8.58) to purchase the property from its landlord. A third party made an offer to purchase the property and secure a note with a separate property. The lessee then exercised its option by making an identical offer but securing its note with different property. After the landlord sold to the third party, the lessee did not recognize the sale and refused to pay rent. The court held that the sale was valid because the value of the security for the note was of legitimate concern to the seller, as it was part of the consideration for the sale. The seller's decision regarding the sufficiency of the security is governed by the "reasonable person" standard. If the security is insufficient, the holder of a right of first refusal does not have automatic priority. 194 CA3d at 1346.

IV. TRANSFER AND TERMINATION OF OPTIONS

A. Transferability of Options

§8.25 1. When Option Is Assignable

In general, option contracts are freely assignable. See Mott v Cline (1927) 200 C 434, 450, 253 P 718. However, parties are free to contractually prohibit or limit the ability to assign an option contract. In the absence of an agreement, courts have presumed an intent by the parties to prohibit an assignment when an assignee's performance would differ from the original party's performance. Masterson v Sine (1968) 68 C2d 222, 230, 65 CR 545. See also Pritchard v Kimball (1923) 190 C 757, 214 P 863 (court found option nontransferable when optionor entered into option agreement in reliance on financial position and credit record of optionee).

If the option is contained in a lease, an assignment of the lease will also assign the option in the absence of an express restriction on assignability of the option. Maron v Howard (1968) 258 CA2d 473, 484, 66 CR 70. In addition, the option may be separated from the lease and separately assigned if a prohibition of assignment is not expressed. Spaulding v Yovino-Young (1947) 30 C2d 138, 141, 180 P2d 691. If the lease has a clause that expressly prohibits assignment, that prohibition will also apply to separate assignment of the option. Gatley v Shockley (1932) 215 C 604, 611, 12 P2d 436.

§8.26 2. Transfer of Property Subject to Option

The transfer of the option property does not in and of itself terminate the option contract. If the optionor owns the property, the option may be enforced against the transferee of the property if the transferee has actual or constructive (recordation of a memorandum of the option contract) notice or is otherwise not a bona fide purchaser. Claremont Terrace Homeowners' Ass'n v U.S. (1983) 146 CA3d 398, 406, 194 CR 216. The optionee also has traditional breach of contract remedies against the optionor.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.27 3. Death of Optionor or Optionee

The death of the optionor does not affect the validity of the option. It remains enforceable against the deceased optionor's heirs or successors. County of San Diego v Miller (1975) 13 C3d 684, 688, 119 CR 491.

An option is also generally considered transferable on the death of the optionee, at which time it becomes an asset of the optionee's estate. See Prob C §9734; Estate of Watts (1984) 162 CA3d 1160, 1164, 208 CR 846. An option that by its terms is personal to the optionee, however, does not transfer on death; instead, it terminates. Strong v Theis (1986) 187 CA3d 913, 232 CR 272.

§8.28 B. Effect of Bankruptcy

If the optionor files a petition in bankruptcy before the optionee exercises the option, exercise will be automatically stayed pending further action of the bankruptcy court. 11 USC §362(a). Further, the trustee has the power to assume or reject an executory contract of the debtor, subject to the bankruptcy court's approval. 11 USC §365(a). In the bankruptcy context, therefore, it can be important to ascertain whether a paid for but unexercised option is, in fact, executory.

An executory contract is one "on which performance remains due to some extent on both sides." Unsecured Creditors' Comm. of Robert L. Helms Constr. & Dev. Co. v Southmark Corp. (In re Robert L. Helms Constr. & Dev. Co.) (9th Cir 1998) 139 F3d 702, 705 (quoting NLRB v Bildisco & Bildisco (1984) 465 US 513, 522 n6, 79 L Ed 2d 482, 104 S Ct 1188). In Helms, the Ninth Circuit disapproved earlier cases holding that option contracts are by their nature executory and determined that whether a purchase option is executory depends on the particular characteristics of the option. The test is whether, at the time the bankruptcy petition is filed, the option requires that each party take some further action to avoid materially breaching the contract. If the answer is no, the option is not executory. The Helms court suggested that most options should not be considered executory, because the optionee typically does not commit a breach by doing nothing, i.e., by permitting the option to expire. This may or may not be the case. Most option agreements do impose continuing obligations on the optionee, such as the obligation to indemnify the optionor if the optionee's entry on the property causes damage to the property. Whether these types of obligations are sufficient to render the option agreement executory will depend on whether the optionee's obligations are sufficiently material that the optionee's failure to perform them would excuse the optionor's performance under the option agreement. Thus, when the optionee has announced that the option will be exercised but has not followed through with the purchase at the option price, the option may be executory. 139 F3d at 706.

In the final analysis, whether the option agreement is or is not executory may not be critical in terms of completing the sale of the property. If it is not executory, the result is simply that the optionee is permitted, with court authorization, to exercise the option, and a bilateral executory agreement is created between the optionor, as seller, and the optionee, as purchaser. This does not put the optionee in a significantly better position than when a debtor optionee has exercised the option before filing a bankruptcy petition. In that event, the Bankruptcy Code treats the contract as a real estate purchase contract and applies executory contract principles. Thus, when appropriate, the trustee of an optionee who is a debtor in bankruptcy may accept (assume) or reject the contract following the prepetition exercise of the option. In re Carlisle Homes, Inc. (Bankr D NJ 1988) 103 BR 524. Court approval is required for the debtor either to reject or assume an executory contract. Maroon v Four Star Pizza, Inc. (In re Four Star Pizza, Inc.) (Bankr WD Pa 1992) 135 BR 498, 501; Paul Harris Stores, Inc. v Mabel L. Salter Realty Trust (In re Paul Harris Stores, Inc.) (Bankr SD Ind 1992) 148 BR 307, 313.

However, if the agreed purchase price for the property is below market value, the optionee has great incentive to prevail upon the court to hold that the purchase option is not executory so that the optionee can obtain the property. If the purchase option is held executory then it may be rejected by the debtor optionor. Rejection of a debtor's executory contract is deemed a breach of that contract, occurring immediately before the petition date. 11 USC §365(g). The nonbreaching party, the optionee in this case, is entitled to a claim for damages under contract principles when an executory contract is rejected in bankruptcy. In re Aesthetic Specialties, Inc. (Bankr 9th Cir 1984) 37 BR 679. Typically, this will be a general unsecured claim, treated pro rata with all other prepetition general unsecured claims against the debtor. As in many bankruptcy cases, the general unsecured debtor will not be paid the full amount of its claim, so the optionee would likely lose the full economic benefit of the purchase option.

In the case of an optionor-debtor, the optionee can try to protect itself against the optionor's bankruptcy by securing the optionor's obligations under the option agreement, and under the agreement of purchase and sale that would exist on exercise, by the lien of a deed of trust on the property. Such a deed of trust would list as the secured obligations not only the optionor's obligations under the option agreement and any resulting purchase agreement, but also any monetary damages resulting from the optionor's default under either agreement. Although such an arrangement might be challenged as void under ipso facto principles, the optionee can argue that the security arrangement is effective for any breach of the applicable agreements, not only a breach in a bankruptcy context. Of course, any such deed of trust would generally have to be given with the consent of any existing secured lender, and such a lender may be hesitant to agree to the recording of such a deed of trust, even with strong intercreditor protections.

For further discussion, see Cherkis, Collier Real Estate Transactions and the Bankruptcy Code §4.02 (1992).

PRACTICE TIP: Another method of protecting against a bankruptcy by the optionor is to structure the ownership of the property so that it is held in a single-purpose bankruptcy-remote entity. If the property is the only asset of such an entity and the entity is not allowed to guarantee or otherwise stand behind any debts or other obligations that do not relate to the property, there is a better chance that the property will not be subject to bankruptcy. The optionor, however, may not be inclined to restructure its ownership of the property to achieve this added protection.

C. Condemnation and Destruction

§8.29 1. Condemnation

If property that is subject to an option is condemned before the option is exercised and the option agreement does not otherwise address the issue, the optionee may receive that portion of the condemnation award that is in excess of the option purchase price. County of San Diego v Miller (1975) 13 C3d 684, 119 CR 491. When the option expires before the condemnation action is filed, however, the optionee has no compensable interest. County of San Diego v Miller (1980) 102 CA3d 424, 162 CR 480; City of Walnut Creek v Leadership Hous. Sys. (1977) 73 CA3d 611, 140 CR 690. For a discussion regarding valuing condemned property, see California Land Use Practice §21.113 (Cal CEB 2006).

A right of first refusal is similar to an option to purchase, which does not ripen until the owner of the property voluntarily decides to sell the property and receives a bona fide offer to purchase it from a third party. See §8.58. Condemnation for public need constitutes an involuntary taking and preempts a private party's preexisting right of first refusal to purchase. Campbell v Alger (1999) 71 CA4th 200, 83 CR2d 696 (county flood control district's condemnation of property for flood control purpose did not trigger private right of first refusal).

§8.30 2. Destruction

Unless the parties specifically agree otherwise, the destruction of real property that is subject to a purchase and sale contract is governed by the Uniform Vendor and Purchaser Risk Act (CC §1662). See §§13.3-13.14. Although there have been no reported cases in California that have considered the effect of destruction of property subject to a purchase option before the option is exercised, it seems likely that the Act would apply, allowing the optionee to recover the option payment when the optionee did not cause the destruction and had not taken possession.

Although the California courts have not expressly considered the effect of a casualty on property subject to an unexercised purchase option, one case did examine the effect of the destruction of real property subject to a tenant's option to extend the lease term. In 11382 Beach Partnership v Libaw (1999) 70 CA4th 212, 82 CR2d 533, the parties could terminate the lease if, during the last 2 years of the original term, the premises suffered damage that could not be repaired within 30 working days. The property was destroyed by fire less than 2 years before the expiration of the original lease term; immediately after the fire, the tenant exercised the option to extend the lease term, but the landlord terminated the lease. The court held that the tenant's option rights did not cut off the landlord's existing contractual right to terminate and that termination under such circumstances provides no basis for applying the rule against forfeiture.

PRACTICE TIP: Because the reasoning of the Beach case appears to apply to purchase options as well, counsel should keep these issues in mind when negotiating the casualty and condemnation provisions in a purchase option agreement.

§8.31 3. Effect on Optioned Property

The effect of condemnation and destruction on real property subject to an option is uncertain. Because of this uncertainty in the law, the parties should specifically address these issues in the option contract. See §§8.71-8.72. What the parties provide with respect to condemnation and destruction during the period before the option is exercised may well differ from their agreement for the period after its exercise. The concerns are distinct, and their relative importance to the parties often varies, depending on whether the option is exercised or on other issues related to the contract. Thus, counsel should consider carefully the effect that either destruction or condemnation might have before and after exercise of the option and also consider the parties' ensuing insurance needs.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.32 D. Termination

An option to purchase real property will terminate if not exercised within the time period set forth in the option agreement. Rosenaur v Pacelli (1959) 174 CA2d 673, 676, 345 P2d 102. On termination, the optionee has no further interest in the property. See City of Walnut Creek v Leadership Hous. Sys. (1977) 73 CA3d 611, 140 CR 690.

However, an option granted by two cotenants was not terminated when one of them subsequently sold his cotenancy interest to the optionee before the option term expired. The option continued in effect between the optionee and the remaining cotenant with respect to the remaining cotenant's interest in the property. Penasquitos, Inc. v Holladay (1972) 27 CA3d 356, 103 CR 717.

§8.33 V. ENFORCEMENT AND REMEDIES

Typically, an option contract raises the same enforcement and remedy issues that arise in real property purchase and sale contracts, including damages and specific performance. The discussion of such issues in §§4.140-4.150 is applicable.

Two situations are peculiar to the option contract. They arise when (1) the optionor wrongly repudiates the option contract, and when (2) the optionee chooses not to exercise the option and brings suit based on the unilateral contract for the option instead of the bilateral contract for the purchase and sale.

In Schmidt v Beckelman (1960) 187 CA2d 462, 9 CR 736, the optionor wrongly repudiated the option, and the optionee sued for damages but never exercised the option. The court held that the proper measure of damages was the actual damage incurred by the optionee, which would at least include the difference between the amount paid for the option and its actual value. The court rejected the trial court's application of CC §3306 to establish damages as the difference between the property's purchase price and its fair market value. 187 CA2d at 471.

In Holiday Inns of Am., Inc. v Knight (1969) 70 C2d 327, 74 CR 722, the optionor wrongly repudiated an option in the fourth year of its 5-year term while the optionee was developing adjacent land and apparently not ready to exercise the option. The optionee sued for and obtained a declaratory judgment that the option contract was still effective.

NOTE: The option expired before the supreme court's opinion reversing the trial court and ordering entry of declaratory judgment that the option was effective. The supreme court did not address the issue of whether the option could still be exercised.

§8.34 VI. TAX CONSIDERATIONS

Tax issues are an inescapable aspect of every real property transaction. It is essential to consider the federal and state income tax implications for both the optionor and the optionee. The following is a general discussion of the basic tax principles that apply in most real property option contracts. For a more detailed discussion of the tax treatment of options, see 2 Bittker & Lokken, Federal Taxation of Income, Estates and Gifts ¶¶40.8.3, 57.3 (3d ed 1999); Robinson, Federal Income Taxation of Real Estate ¶12.06 (6th ed 1995).

© The Regents of the University of California

A. Income Tax Treatment of Option Payment

§8.35 1. Optionor

Generally, payments to acquire options are not taxable to the optionor when received. Although some early authorities (and some commentators) suggest that option payments that are not applied against the purchase price of the property on exercise of the option are immediately taxable (Virginia Iron, Coal & Coke Co. v Commissioner (4th Cir 1938) 99 F2d 919; Augustine & Zarrow, California Real Estate Law and Practice §70.53[1]-[2]), that rule is not generally followed by more recent authorities and is not endorsed by most commentators (see Johnie Vaden Elrod (1986) 87 TC 1046, 1067; Carl E. Koch (1976) 67 TC 71, acq 1980 Cum Bull 1; Robinson, Federal Income Taxation of Real Estate ¶12.06 (6th ed 1995); 2 Bittker & Lokken, Federal Taxation of Income, Estates and Gifts ¶40.8.3 (3d ed 1999). If the option is exercised, the option payments are included in the optionor's amount realized for the property for the purpose of determining the optionor's gain or loss on the sale. If the optionee does not exercise the option, the option price is taxable to the optionor as ordinary income on the date the option expires. Robinson, Taxation of Real Estate ¶12.06.

In some cases, the Internal Revenue Service may take the position that amounts called "option payments" by the taxpayer should be recharacterized. For example, the IRS may claim that option payments made by a lessee or licensee are, in whole or in part, rent or royalty payments (see, e.g., Commissioner v Dill (3d Cir 1961) 294 F2d 291), or that option payments are wholly or partly interest on an installment sale of the property (see, e.g., Carl E. Koch, supra). If the IRS were successful in such a recharacterization, the taxation of the option payment would depend on its true nature.

Care should be taken when payments related to the option agreement are to be made over a course of years, because the option agreement may be considered an installment sale. IRC §453. If the agreement is considered an installment sale, the option payments are considered income when received. To avoid installment sale treatment, a single payment for the option is advisable, but in some cases the parties may want a series of payments. In such instances, the parties may want to provide that the payments are not applicable to the purchase price.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.36 2. Optionee

The option consideration is treated by the optionee as part of the purchase price, if the option is exercised, and is added to the basis of the property even if it is not applied to the purchase price. C.H. Mead Coal Co. v Commissioner (4th Cir 1934) 72 F2d 22. If the option lapses, the optionee is treated as having a loss in the amount of the option payments made from the sale of the option occurring on the date the option expires. IRC §1234(a)(2). In that case, the loss will be capital or ordinary depending on the character the property would have had in the hands of the optionee if it had been acquired, and, if capital, will be short- or long-term depending on the optionee's holding period for the option. Treas Reg §1.1234-1(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.37 B. Tax Implication of Transfer of Option Right

The optionee's transfer of the option right results in a taxable gain or loss to the optionee that has the same character as the property to which the option relates would have had if it were owned by the optionee. IRC §1234(a)(1). Thus, the transfer of an option in real property that would be capital gain property in the hands of the optionee will produce a capital gain or loss to the optionee on the transfer.

§8.38 VII. ADVANTAGES AND DISADVANTAGES FOR OPTIONOR AND OPTIONEE

Generally, options are considered to be most favorable to optionees, whose only risk is the loss of the option price and any other investment in the transaction. The optionor incurs a greater risk, for which the option price is intended to compensate. The optionor should not consider the option price as "found" money but should seriously evaluate the detriment of the option as an element in establishing its price. An option does, however, have certain benefits to an optionor. See §§8.39-8.41.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.39 A. Substitute for Liquidated Damages

Many sellers prefer to structure their dispositions of real estate as options because they believe that the consideration for the granting of the option would provide a more certain claim to the money than an action for breach of contract or to enforce a liquidated damages provision. Payment of the option price may avoid the issue for the seller of whether retention of the deposit is enforceable as liquidated damages. Many sellers using the option consideration approach, however, include a "protective liquidated damages provision," stating that if the option consideration is held to be liquidated damages, then those liquidated damages are enforceable as such. This provision must comply with CC §§1671-1681. Counsel should note, however, that an unreasonably high option price may cause the transaction to be recharacterized as a purchase agreement with a deposit so large as to cause an unreasonable forfeiture if the transaction is not consummated. See, e.g., Scarbery v Bill Patch Land & Water Co. (1960) 184 CA2d 87, 7 CR 408.

For tax purposes, an option payment that is too high in relation to the ultimate purchase price may cause the transaction to be recharacterized as an installment sale, with periodic option payments treated as interest on an installment note. See Johnie Vaden Elrod (1986) 87 TC 1046; Rev Rul 82-150, 1982-2 Cum Bull 110.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.40 B. Tax Deferral

The option payment is generally not taxable to the optionor until the option is exercised. See §8.35. The opportunity for a tax deferral is often desirable to sellers.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.41 C. Inducement to Investigate

Sellers of real property try to minimize their obligations of disclosure and their warranties about the property. See §§1.70-1.93. One way to do this might be to give a prospective purchaser an option with the ability to fully investigate the property before exercising the option. This could allow the seller to effectively bargain for minimal disclosure and warranties, and can be a powerful inducement to the buyer to perform its due diligence.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.42 D. Risk of Better Price

The principal risk to the optionor under an option contract is the potential increase in property value during the option period. Another potential buyer may even approach the optionor and offer a better price for the property during the option term. The optionee, however, has bought the optionor's commitment to sell at a fixed price and the price the optionee paid for the option is intended to compensate the optionor for this risk.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.43 E. Uncertainty of Sale

The most obvious disadvantage to the optionor is that the optionee may choose not to exercise the option. In the meantime, the optionor's property has been tied up, drilling or other investigation activities may have been performed, land use applications may have been filed, or other opportunities for the property may have been missed. The optionor and the attorney should consider and address these issues in the option contract as specifically as possible in light of the particular circumstances of the property and the parties to the transaction.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.44 VIII. USES OF OPTIONS

Options are used for many purposes. Some common and some more creative uses are discussed in §§8.44-8.58, together with some of the principal motivations for entering into an option contract instead of directly entering into a purchase and sale agreement.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.45 A. Land Acquisition and Land Use Development

Option contracts are often used by developers who believe a particular property is suitable for development, but expect that it will take considerable time to verify the feasibility of acquiring and developing it. Option contracts are also often used by developers who wish to obtain land use approvals before committing to purchasing the property. Obtaining land use approvals can be expensive and time consuming in California, and a developer may have no interest in owning the property if land use approval cannot be obtained. A number of issues should be considered when using an option contract in these contexts.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.46 1. Investigating Property

A developer-optionee will generally require access to the property to complete a feasibility review of the property, including an environmental review, soils testing, surveys, appraisals, and other investigations. See form 8.68-1 and §§4.46-4.49, 4.77-4.82. For a discussion of preliminary preparation steps in the land use permitting process, see California Land Use Practice §1.37 (Cal CEB 2006). In such cases it is common for the developer-optionee to require the owner-optionor to reasonably cooperate with such activities. However, an owner-optionor should consider obtaining protection from the developer-optionee against personal or property injuries that may arise in the course of developer-optionee's investigation. Further, the owner-optionor should obtain copies of any reports produced as a result of such investigations. With respect to property feasibility and investigation issues, the optionor and optionee have many of the same concerns as arise under a purchase and sale agreement. However, because the optionee has complete discretion to decide whether to exercise an option and proceed with the purchase, questions of good faith and satisfaction of conditions do not arise.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.47 2. Processing Land Use Applications

In general, development of land in California, whether improved or unimproved, including changing its permitted uses, is subject to a variety of governmental approvals. A number of these governmental approvals are discretionary, which means that the applicable agency can deny a request or condition the issuance of its approval on the satisfaction of an increasingly complicated and time-consuming set of requirements that can take years to satisfy. See California Land Use Practice §§1.39-1.43 (Cal CEB 2006). Because a developer may have no interest in owning the property (and thus incurring all of the costs and obligations of ownership) if the required land use approvals cannot be obtained, an option on the property may suit the developer's goals.

As a mere optionee and not the property owner, the developer may lack the authority to enter into land use agreements with applicable government agencies. Accordingly, a developer may require the owner-optionor to sign documents to be submitted to government agencies that request land use approvals, or to take actions such as appearing at public hearings and speaking in favor of a project. The owner should be concerned about, and address any issues that arise from, allowing any land use action that will obligate the owner in the event the developer does not exercise the option and purchase the property. One way the property owner may protect itself is to require that any land use changes must be made final only after the property is sold to the developer.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.48 3. Purchase Price

A property owner will not be inclined to enter into an option contract that will potentially tie up the property for years only to sell the property at the market price prevailing at the time the option agreement is signed. The lure presented by the developer to the owner is a purchase price above market price. The purchase price is thus a topic of negotiation, and the property owner and developer will need to speculate on the estimated future value of the property as well as the property owner's potential costs in tying up its property for the option period.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.49 B. Obtaining Financing

Most properties are purchased with some amount of third party financing. To satisfy a lender, a potential borrower may be required to provide a substantial equity contribution or cure property conditions (e.g., environmental contamination). These conditions may take considerable time to satisfy. An option contract can be used to obtain the necessary commitment by the owner to sell, and also provide time to satisfy the lender's conditions. Alternatively, a purchase agreement may provide for a financing contingency. See §4.83.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.50 C. Speculating on Value Increase

Using an option contract solely to tie up property at the current market price in the hope that the value will increase is becoming increasingly rare. Optionors have previously entered into such agreements only with the expectation that the optionee would undertake improvements to the property to increase its value. In some cases, however, a landowner may allow the optionee to enter into an agreement without requiring improvements if it is satisfied with the receipt of the option payment.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.51 D. Assembling Multiple Parcels

One risk a developer faces in assembling multiple parcels for a planned development is that the developer may not be able to acquire a key parcel. To minimize this risk, the developer can acquire options on the various parcels until the rights to every parcel needed for the development are obtained. An assemblage can present some unique problems. The developer may want to keep its goals quiet yet at the same time will likely have a desire to close on the entire assemblage once it has obtained appropriate financing and land use approvals. Some artful drafting may be required to coordinate the purchases and achieve these goals. For example, the developer may include confidentiality provisions in its options and may provide that the closing of the purchase is subject to conditions that would apply to all of the properties in the assemblage.

§8.52 E. Positioning for an Exchange Transaction

As various means of tax deferral in real estate transactions have been restricted or eliminated, exchanges of like-kind property have become increasingly popular for tax deferral. One problem with an exchange is coordinating the timing so that the exchange property is available and the transaction can close as required to meet the requirements of IRC §1031. Although the advent and acceptability of deferred exchanges, including so-called reverse exchanges or parking transactions, have eased the pressure somewhat, the time limits for a deferred exchange still necessitate having the exchange property, or a potential buyer, available as early as possible. Many of the timing problems may be solved or at least minimized by using an option. For a discussion of the use of options in real property exchanges, see Real Property Exchanges §4.33 (3d ed Cal CEB 2002). See also §§1.101, 4.165.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.53 F. "Put" in Favor of Seller

A seller may have an option to require a purchaser to buy property at a fixed price during a prescribed period of time. This situation may occur, for example, in a cotenancy agreement in which a deceased cotenant's estate has the option to "put" the property to the survivor, thus requiring the survivor to purchase the decedent's interest. Another use may arise when the parties want to complete a finished transaction for some reason (such as needing to meet timing requirements in an exchange), but the purchaser is uncertain about some element of the property. The seller then may give the purchaser the right to require the seller to repurchase the property. These are only two situations in which a "put" may be useful.

The considerations discussed in §§8.38-8.43 regarding the option agreement will be identical for a "put." An additional consideration that the holder of a "put" must take into account is that the other party must be in a position to close the transaction at all times during the option term. The holder of the "put" may require security, such as a letter of credit or an institutional financing commitment, to ensure the purchaser's continuing ability to perform.

In contrast to an option to purchase, the "put" must be supported by consideration running from the seller to the purchaser. If the seller does not give adequate consideration, the purchaser's obligation to buy is unenforceable. See §§8.10-8.13. Dawson v Goff (1954) 43 C2d 310, 273 P2d 1.

§8.54 G. Option as Financing Device

What would otherwise be a loan secured by a deed of trust may be structured instead as a sale-leaseback that gives the seller-tenant an option to repurchase the property. If properly structured and documented, this form of transaction will be respected and may produce more satisfactory tax consequences for the parties. For a detailed discussion of sale-leasebacks and their tax consequences, see Maule, Taxation of Real Estate Transactions—An Overview, 590-2d BNA Tax Mgmt Portfolio A18-A19 (2005).

A seller-tenant-optionee who has an option to repurchase will sometimes contend that it is actually a security instrument and that the buyer-landlord-optionor is obligated to comply with antideficiency, foreclosure, or other rules applicable to real property loans and security instruments. See, e.g., Develop-Amatic Eng'g v Republic Mortgage Co. (1970) 12 CA3d 143, 91 CR 193. In general, courts look to the intent of the parties to determine whether the agreement should be deemed a security instrument. See Beeler v American Trust Co. (1944) 24 C2d 1, 23, 147 P2d 583; Gronenschild v Ritzenthaler (1947) 81 CA2d 138, 145, 183 P2d 720. The adverse aspect of an option agreement being deemed a security instrument is that the document probably was not drafted as a security instrument. For example, it will probably not contain a power-of-sale provision, which will limit the offeree to a suit for judicial foreclosure to acquire the property. A judicial foreclosure is likely to be more expensive and time consuming than a foreclosure by a power of sale. Additionally, a judicial foreclosure is subject to reinstatement and redemption protections for the offeror. See California Mortgages, Deeds of Trust, and Foreclosure Litigation, chap 3 (4th ed Cal CEB 2009).

§8.55 H. Convertible Mortgages

An option may be used as part of a financing package by giving the lender an option to purchase all of the property or an interest in it. This practice may produce better loan terms for the borrowing developer while giving the lender an enhanced profit if the project is successful.

A traditional concern in such a transaction was whether it constituted a "clogging of the equity of redemption." That concern was eliminated in 1984 with the adoption of CC §2906. See Wachovia Bank v Lifetime Indus. (2006) 145 CA4th 1039, 1057, 52 CR3d 168. This section makes such transactions valid except those involving residential real property of four or fewer units or those in which the right to exercise the option depends on the occurrence of a default. For further discussion of convertible mortgages, see California Mortgages, Deeds of Trust, and Foreclosure Litigation, chap 1 (4th ed Cal CEB 2009).

Few institutional lenders have taken an option to acquire the subject collateral as one of the loan terms in a nondefault situation. Some institutional lenders would face regulatory difficulties in doing so (e.g., national banks). It is more common for lenders to use a shared appreciation loan, which allows the lender to share in the subject collateral's operating cash flow or appreciation as an element of "additional interest." See*, e.g.*, CC §§1917-1917.006.

§8.56 I. Joint Ownership Agreements

Most well-drafted agreements between co-owners of property contain one or more options. There may be an option to purchase on death, bankruptcy, or some other disruptive event. An option to purchase may be used as a mechanism for resolving disputes. The use of options for these purposes is discussed in more depth in Nellis & Murray, Negotiating and Drafting a Real Estate Joint Venture Agreement: Major Issues and Provisions, Part II, 12 CEB Real Prop L Rep 1 (Jan. 1989).

In these agreements, the principal issue will be the method of establishing the purchase price for the property. Another issue that should be addressed specifically in the contract—and that is atypical of an ordinary option agreement—is whether the option provisions will encumber or benefit a successor to one of the original parties to the agreement. See Strong v Theis (1986) 187 CA3d 913, 232 CR 272. See paragraph 12 of App O for a sample form.

§8.57 J. Options to Purchase in Lease

When an option to purchase real property is included in a lease of the property, certain added considerations apply, as well as some modifications of the general option contract rules.

- No separate consideration for the option is required to make it enforceable if the option is part of a lease. The tenant's consideration in the lease in the form of rent is sufficient. Spaulding v Yovino-Young (1947) 30 C2d 138, 141, 180 P2d 691.
- When there is no separate consideration for the option, termination of the lease will also terminate the option. Wallace v Imbertson (1961) 197 CA2d 392, 17 CR 117.
- The rule against perpetuities probably does not apply to an option that is part of a lease, although California law is still unsettled on this issue. See §8.16.
- An assignment of a lease will also assign the option unless the option's assignment is specifically prohibited, and, conversely, the option may be assigned separately from the lease unless that too is specifically prohibited. See §8.25.
- If the lease is extended or renewed by an agreement or by an option right in the lease, the option to purchase will likewise be extended or renewed if that was the parties' intention. Riverside Fence Co. v Novak (1969) 273 CA2d 656, 78 CR 536. It is important in drafting the option contract to make the parties' intent clear.

An option to purchase in a lease is generally for a significantly longer term than is ordinarily the case in nonlease options. The option might not even become effective until some portion of the lease term has expired. Thus, the parties may be unable to establish the purchase price for the property at the time the lease is executed, and some mechanism such as a formula or appraisal may be necessary. On options to purchase, see Ground Lease Practice, chap 6 (2d ed Cal CEB 2009) and Office Leasing: Drafting and Negotiating the Lease §1.75 (Cal CEB 1996).

§8.58 K. Right of First Refusal; Right of First Offer

Rights of first refusal and rights of first offer are alternative forms of option agreements. They must satisfy the same essential requirements as options, such as definiteness (see §8.14) and consideration (see §§8.10-8.13). However, some issues are particular to these types of option agreements.

A right of first refusal affords the optionee the right to match or better an offer to purchase received by the optionor. A right of first offer requires the optionor to offer to sell the property to the optionee before offering it to anyone else. A right of first offer allows the optionor to proceed to sell the property on the same or better terms if the optionee does not accept the optionor's offer.

In general, a right of first refusal is triggered by a proposed voluntary sale by the offeror. See Pellandini v Valadao (2003) 113 CA4th 1315, 7 CR3d 413. An involuntary condemnation of the property does not trigger the right of first refusal. See Campbell v Alger (1999) 71 CA4th 200, 83 CR2d 696.

In contrast to traditional option agreements, under a right of first refusal the optionee may not be in control of the terms and conditions set forth in the offer to purchase. In general, an optionee is not required to match exactly the offer to purchase received by optionor if the offer is of a nature that cannot be easily matched by anyone other than the offeror. Courts will consider commercial realities in evaluating whether the optionee has matched or bettered the offer to purchase. Arden Group, Inc. v Burk (1996) 45 CA4th 1409, 53 CR2d 492. See also San Diego Watercrafts, Inc. v Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2002) 102 CA4th 308, 125 CR2d 499; McCulloch v M & C Beauty Colleges, Inc. (1987) 194 CA3d 1338, 240 CR 189. But in Hartzheim v Valley Land & Cattle Co. (2007) 153 CA4th 383, 394 n6, 62 CR3d 815, the court seemed to imply in a footnote that because the optionee was unable to match the unique terms of the offer, the optionee could not have exercised its right of first refusal.

The mechanics of a right of first refusal or right of first offer must be addressed when drafting the agreement. The agreement should specify whether the option applies only to the first instance in which it can be exercised or whether it renews if the optionor does not successfully close the offer. For the offeree, it is useful to establish objective guidelines for the terms and conditions that the offer must follow so that there will be less room for disagreement as to whether offeree has matched such offer.

A right of first refusal is considered more likely to have an adverse, rather than favorable, effect on the price at which the offeror can sell the property. A prospective purchaser will be less inclined to spend the time and money to evaluate the property and negotiate a purchase agreement if the purchaser is aware that the offeree could step in under its right of first refusal and acquire the property by matching the purchaser's offer.

From an offeree's point of view, the right of first offer represents a way to validate the proposed purchase terms because an independent third party is willing to purchase the property on those terms. A right of first offer allows the offeror to market the property more easily after offering the property to the offeree. However, the offeror may not be sufficiently knowledgeable about the market value of the property to present an offer to the offeree. This deficiency can be addressed if the offeror consults brokers or appraisers or potential buyers before presenting the offer to offeree. From the offeree's point of view, the offeree may not have a sufficient basis to determine whether the offered price and terms reflect the current market.

The parties should consider including specific requirements for the terms and conditions of the right of first offer, such as requiring the purchase price to be all cash. If the offer is not limited to a cash purchase price it may be difficult for the offeree to match the offer.

In either a right of first refusal or a right of first offer, the offeror may want to limit the representations and warranties to be made to the offeree, as opposed to the third party purchaser, because the offeree is likely to be more knowledgeable about the property than a third party purchaser. Because the right of first offer is often part of another transaction, such as a lease, it may be appropriate to limit the assignment of this right, and the offeror should consider limiting the offeree's ability to transfer the right of first offer.

8.59-1 Introduction; parties; recitals

Option Agreement

This Option Agreement is made between _ _[name]_ _ (Optionor) and _ _[name]_ _ (Optionee). This Option Agreement is dated _ _[date]_ _, for reference purposes only.

Comment: The issues of identifying the parties are identical to those discussed in the context of the purchase and sale contract. See §§4.7, 4.14-4.21, 4.29, 8.9. Dating the agreement for reference purposes only is a convenient way to ensure that the agreement date is not omitted. Signature dates can then be used on the signature page. See §8.80.

Recitals of relevant facts can follow the introductory paragraph. These recitals often help clarify the agreement by explaining background facts and can also serve as a place to establish important definitions (such as the property description) at the beginning of the document.

8.60-1 Grant of option

1. Grant of Option. Optionor grants to Optionee the option to purchase the real property described in the attached Exhibit _ _[e.g., A]_ _ (Property). This option is on the terms and conditions set forth in this Option Agreement. The purchase and sale of the Property on exercise of this option shall be on the terms and conditions set forth in the Purchase and Sale Agreement, attached as Exhibit _ _[e.g., B]_ _ (Purchase Agreement).

Comment: Because an adequate property description is an essential element of an option contract (see §8.9), it is good practice to make a legally sufficient description a part of the option contract. See §§11.14-11.41 for discussion of what constitutes a legally sufficient property description.

The ultimate agreement for purchase and sale can be attached as an exhibit as suggested by the form, or it can be made a part of the option contract. See §§4.166-4.182 for a form of the purchase and sale agreement.

[If appropriate, add]

As long as this Option Agreement remains in effect, Optionee may extend the term of the option for the periods described in _ _[e.g., 3.2]_ _ by timely payment of the extension payment amounts described in that section.

3. Consideration.

3.1. Payment of Consideration. On the execution and delivery of this Option Agreement, Optionee shall pay to Optionor, in immediately available funds, the sum of _ _[dollar amount]_ _ as consideration for the option. The option consideration set forth in this section, as well as any other consideration deemed to have been received by Optionor under this Option Agreement, is and shall be deemed consideration solely for the granting of the option by Optionor. On expiration of the option term, Optionor shall retain all option consideration. If the option is exercised, the consideration _ _[shall/shall not]_ _ be credited against the purchase price of the Property,

[Add if consideration is to be applied to purchase price]

if closing occurs in accordance with the Purchase Agreement.

Comment: The phrase "if closing occurs in accordance with the Purchase Agreement" is included to be certain that, if something has happened that changes the purchase agreement but the parties proceed to close, the price provisions will not be automatically applied without further review by the parties in light of the changed circumstances.

[If applicable, add the following option]

[Option: Optionee may extend term and make successive payments]

3.2. Successive Payments to Extend Option Term. Optionee may extend the term of the option from the expiration of the Initial Term until _ _ _ a.m./p.m. (California time) on _ _[date]_ _ (First Extended Term), by payment to Optionor, in immediately available funds, the sum of _ _[dollar amount]_ _ on or before the _ _[e.g., 14th]_ _ day before the expiration of the Initial Term.

[If appropriate, add]

As long as Optionee has extended the term of the option for the First Extended Term, Optionee may extend the term of the option from the expiration of the First Extended Term until _ _ _ a.m./p.m. (California time) on _ _[date]_ _ (Second Extended Term), by payment to Optionor, in immediately available funds, the sum of _ _[dollar amount]_ _ on or before the _ _[e.g., 14th]_ _ day before expiration of the First Extended Term.

_ _[All]_ _ Payments made under this section _ _ _ _ _[shall/shall not]_ _ be applied to the purchase price of the Property.

Comment: This form should be used in conjunction with the form in §8.61 if options to extend the option term are granted. This form provides that the extension of the option term occurs on payment. The optionee should make sure that payment is accompanied by written notice specifying that the payment is in consideration of the extension.

Additional extended terms (e.g., Third Extended Term, Fourth Extended Term) may, of course, be added. The option agreement should address whether the additional option payments are to be applied against the purchase price.

8.65-1 Sequential exercise of option

[If applicable, add the following option]

[Option: More than one parcel is subject to the option]

4.2. Sequential Exercise of Option. The Property is described in Exhibit _ _[e.g., A]_ _ as _ _[e.g., Parcel I, Parcel II, and Parcel III]_ _. Optionee may exercise the option to purchase one or more of those parcels in accordance with the following provisions, and within the term and in the manner set forth in this Option Agreement.

Optionee may elect to purchase Parcel I, and the purchase price for Parcel I shall be _ _[dollar amount]_ _. _ _[*The option to purchase Parcel I must be exercised, if at all, on or before _ _[date]_ _.]_ _ If Optionee has elected to purchase Parcel I, Optionee may elect to purchase Parcel II, and the purchase price for Parcel II shall be _ _[dollar amount]_ _. _ _[*The option to purchase Parcel II must be exercised, if at all, on or before _ _[date]_ _.]_ _ If Optionee has elected to purchase Parcels I and II, Optionee may elect to purchase Parcel III, and the purchase price for Parcel III shall be _ _[dollar amount]_ _. _ _[*The option to purchase Parcel III must be exercised, if at all, on or before _ _[date]_ _.]_ _ On the exercise of any such option, the parties shall insert into the Purchase Agreement the description of the parcel for which the option is exercised, as that description is set forth in Exhibit _ _[e.g., A]_ _, and the purchase price for that parcel.

[Continue]

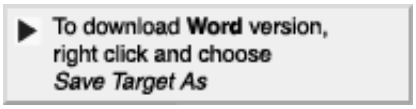
Comment: This clause anticipates that the developer may put the development together in stages and may decide not to pursue all stages. In such an agreement, the optionor must exercise care to ensure that, if the option is exercised for only a part of the property, the remaining parcels will be left with access and other factors important to satisfactory use by the optionor.



When a developer is trying to assemble a block of properties, it may condition the exercise and closing of the purchase on its ability to sign an option or purchase agreement for the balance of the properties. This may prove to be a delicate negotiation as it may not be in the developer's interest to let the property owners know that a block assemblage is intended.

Comment: Typically, the optionor should give the same covenants and warranties on the property for the option term as are given for the purchase after the option is exercised, although in some instances there may be facts that can be warranted only after the option is exercised. §8.67 I. Form: Condition of Title

The form text in this section is part of a larger form. For your convenience, downloading any one of the sections included in the form will download the entire form. The inclusive section numbers are §§8.59-8.83.

8.67-1 Condition of title

6. Condition of Title.

6.1. Preliminary Report. Within _ _[e.g., 10]_ _ days after execution of this Option Agreement, Optionor shall deliver to Optionee a current preliminary report on the Property prepared by _ _[specify]_ _ Title Company, together with copies of all documents identified as exceptions in the report (collectively, Preliminary Report). Optionee shall have _ _[e.g., 15]_ _ days after receipt of the Preliminary Report in which to approve or disapprove any or all of the exceptions shown in the Preliminary Report.

6.2. Approval of Exceptions in Preliminary Report. Optionee shall disapprove exceptions shown in the Preliminary Report only by delivering written notice to Optionor within _ _[e.g., 15]_ _ days. If Optionee does not give written notice of disapproval within that time, Optionee shall be deemed to have approved all the exceptions shown in the Preliminary Report.

6.3. Clearing of Exceptions in Preliminary Report. If Optionee disapproves any exception to title, as provided above, Optionor shall notify Optionee within _ _[e.g., 10]_ _ days after receipt of such notice of disapproval if Optionor is unwilling to clear the disapproved exceptions. Optionor covenants that, if the option is exercised, Optionor shall, on or before closing under the Purchase Agreement, cause all disapproved exceptions to be removed as encumbrances against title to the Property except any exceptions that Optionor has notified Optionee that Optionor will not remove, in accordance with the notice provisions of this section.

6.4. Failure to Clear Exceptions in Preliminary Report. If Optionor notifies Optionee that Optionor will not remove one or more disapproved exceptions, Optionee may elect by delivering written notice to Optionor, within _ _[e.g., 5]_ _ days after receipt of Optionor's notice, to terminate this option and receive a refund of the option consideration paid to Optionor or to waive this condition, and this option shall then remain in full force and effect. Optionee's failure to give notice shall _ _[waive this condition/terminate this option]_ _.

Comment: The optionee has two principal reasons for wanting a preliminary report. The first is to investigate the state of record title and recover the option payment if title is not acceptable to the optionee. The second is to create a record of the encumbrances against title at the time of entering into the option, which can be referred to in the purchase and sale agreement with respect to both the covenant against further encumbrances and the condition addressing title to the property at closing.

An alternative, although less common, solution is for the optionee to obtain a preliminary report before entering into the option agreement and to set forth in the option agreement the condition of title the optionor agrees to convey at closing. On approval of condition of title generally, see §§4.50-4.70.

8.68-1 Investigation of property

7. Investigation of Property.

7.1. Optionee's Right to Investigate Property. At any time and from time to time during the term of the option, Optionee may enter the Property for purposes of inspection, survey, tests, design of improvements, and other actions reasonably related to the investigation by Optionee of the suitability of the Property for the Optionee's business purposes.

7.2. Indemnification. Optionee will indemnify, defend, and hold harmless Optionor from any loss, damage, claim, cost, lien, action, liability, or judgment (including, without limitation, Optionor's attorney fees and defense costs) (1) incurred for, from, or by any person or entity acting on behalf of, at the request of, or for the purpose of the actions of Optionee under this section; and (2) for personal injury, property damage, or other loss or damage of any kind arising from, resulting from, or in any way related to such entry.

7.3. Changes to Property. Optionee may make minor changes in the Property in the course of any investigation permitted under this Option Agreement (e.g., soils borings), provided that the change or damage is only temporary, that it is reasonably necessary to the investigation of the physical characteristics of the Property, and that Optionee repairs such damage and restores the Property to its original condition promptly on completion of the investigation.

7.4. Survival of Obligation. The obligation under this section shall survive the termination of this Option Agreement or the expiration of the term of the option. On the termination of the Option Agreement for any reason or on expiration of the term of the option without exercise of the option, Optionee shall immediately restore the Property to its physical condition as of the date of this Option Agreement, at Optionee's sole cost.

7.5. Insurance. Optionee shall secure and maintain at all times during the term of this Option Agreement (1) a commercial general liability policy of insurance, including bodily injury and property damage coverage, written on an "occurrence" basis, with limits of not less than _ _[e.g., $3,000,000]_ _ insuring Optionee against injury to persons or damage to property arising from or in connection with any action permitted under this Option Agreement, naming Optionor as an additional insured under that coverage, and containing coverage for contractual liability for Optionee's obligations under this Option Agreement; and (2) workers' compensation and employers' liability insurance in accordance with California law. Optionee shall deliver to Optionor a copy of certificates evidencing such coverage in force, together with copies of the policies of insurance, before entering onto the Property. Each policy will contain a provision that such policy may not be terminated until _ _[e.g., 30]_ _ days after written notice of the proposed termination has been delivered to Optionor.

7.6. Compliance With Law. Optionee shall comply with all applicable governmental laws, ordinances, and regulations in the conduct of activity on the Property under this section. Before undertaking any activity on the Property that requires a governmental permit, Optionee will obtain the permit and pay any fee or expense required to obtain or carry out the permit.

Comment: This clause gives a broad right of inspection to the optionee. Such a broad right is most appropriate when there is no serious risk of liability to the owner or of damage to the property from the investigation activity, which is likely to be the case when, e.g., the property is unimproved land. These expansive investigation rights should be carefully considered in light of the specific nature of the property involved and of the potential risk to the owner. See discussion in §8.7. (An owner should be particularly cautious in allowing environmental investigation that the owner does not completely control. There are a number of risks to the owner from such an investigation (see chap 6), but of particular concern is the duty, required in many environmental statutes, to report environmental contamination once it is discovered.) 8.69-1 Governmental permits

8. Governmental Permits.

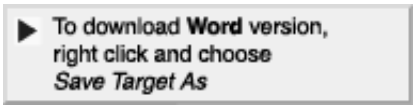
8.1. Parties' Cooperation. During the term of this Option Agreement, Optionee will seek certain governmental permits to develop the Property. Optionor shall cooperate with Optionee, shall take all actions and join in all applications, and shall execute all documents reasonably necessary to allow Optionee to pursue applications for and obtain such governmental permits, subject to the following terms and conditions:

8.2. Indemnification. Optionor shall not bear or become obligated to pay any expense or assume any liability in connection with any such governmental permit activity, and Optionee shall indemnify, defend, and hold harmless Optionor from any cost, loss, liability, or expense (including, without limitation, Optionor's attorney fees and defense costs) arising from or in connection with any such governmental permit activity.

8.3. Burdens on Property. Without Optionor's prior written consent, no governmental permit or approval that shall impose or increase any lien, encumbrance, tax, assessment, or other obligation (financial or otherwise) on the Property, or change the status of the Property in any manner that would increase the financial or other burdens or obligations of ownership of the Property or adversely affect the Optionor's ability to continue the current use of the Property, shall have any effect before closing under the Purchase Agreement. Optionor acknowledges that the processing by Optionee of applications to obtain governmental permits and investigation by Optionee with regard to the Property may directly or indirectly result in the discovery of toxic substances, endangered species, earthquake faults, title defects, or other matters that could affect the market value of the Property. If Optionee elects not to exercise its option to purchase, Optionor acknowledges that it may be required to undertake remedial actions on such defects. Optionee shall not be responsible for any loss in market value or any other damages Optionor incurs as a result of defects or conditions in the Property uncovered by any investigation of the Property conducted by Optionee or as a result of the applications for governmental permits.

8.4. Disclosure of Applications. Optionee shall submit to Optionor, at least _ _[e.g., 5]_ _ days before submission to the applicable governmental authority, copies of all applications and all studies, reports, and other documents that are part of such applications submitted for such governmental permits.

8.5. Assignment of Applications and Permits. All applications and governmental permits submitted or issued in the name of Optionee shall, to the maximum extent permitted by law, be assignable to Optionor and shall, in the event of expiration or earlier termination of the option, be assigned and transferred to Optionor. If Optionee does not exercise the option or complete the closing in accordance with the Purchase Agreement, Optionee shall assign to Optionor on request, and to the extent legally possible, all agreements between Optionee and its consultants and all reports procured by Optionee with regard to the Property.



Comment: This provision assumes that the optionee will proceed with the governmental approval process, but the optionor will have significant control rights as protection against the effects that the process may have on the optionor's property. Like the investigation provisions of §8.68, this clause must be carefully considered and structured to address the specific issues that arise from the nature of the property and the governmental approval process, as well as from the rights that each party is willing to give the other and the obligations each party is willing to incur. If this issue is addressed in the option agreement, the clause is likely to be heavily negotiated and individually tailored to the specific transaction. On use and development of the property, see §§4.85-4.98.

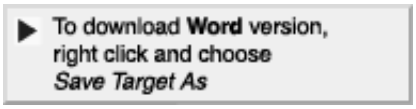
8.71-1 Risk of loss

10. Risk of Loss. If material loss or damage occurs to the Property during the option term but before exercise of the option, Optionee may elect to terminate this option by delivering written notice to Optionor within _ _[e.g., 30]_ _ days after discovering such loss or damage, and on such election Optionor shall immediately refund to Optionee the option consideration paid to Optionor (prorated on the basis of the number of days before termination compared with the number of days after termination until the end of the option term). Optionee shall have no other right or remedy in the event of such loss or damage.



Comment: If loss or damage occurs after exercise of the option but before transfer of title or possession, the purchase and sale agreement should include provisions that will control the rights of the parties. This provision addresses the possibility of loss or damage before exercise of the option. In that case, the option consideration may be prorated, as suggested in this provision, or the risk of loss may be placed wholly on either the optionor (in which case the full option consideration is refunded if a loss occurs) or the optionee (in which case the optionor retains the full option consideration). If loss or damage occurs after exercise of the option, the purchase and sale agreement should include provisions controlling the parties' rights. On risk of loss, see §§4.137-4.139, 13.77-13.83.

8.72-1 Condemnation

11. Condemnation. If at any time during the term but before exercise of the option either Optionor or Optionee receives notice of any condemnation or eminent domain proceeding, or any proceeding in lieu of condemnation, initiated against the Property, the party receiving notice shall promptly notify the other party of that fact. Optionee may elect to terminate this option by delivering written notice to Optionor within thirty days after Optionee receives such notice, and on such election Optionor shall immediately refund to Optionee the option consideration paid to Optionor (prorated on the basis of the number of days before termination compared with the number of days after termination to the end of the option term). Optionee shall have no other right or remedy in such condemnation or eminent domain action.

Comment: The issues of a provision addressing the parties' rights in a condemnation action arising either before or after exercise of the option are substantially identical to the risk-of-loss issues discussed in the comment in §8.71.

8.73-1 Memorandum of option to be recorded

12. Memorandum of Option to be Recorded. On execution of this Option Agreement, Optionor and Optionee shall execute and record in the official records of the county in which the Property is located a memorandum of option in the form of the attached Exhibit _ _[e.g., C]_ _. Optionee shall pay the recording cost. Optionee covenants to execute and deliver to Optionor immediately on the expiration or earlier termination of the term of this Option Agreement a quitclaim deed in recordable form releasing and reconveying to Optionor all right, title, and interest of Optionee in the Property.

Comment: A recorded Memorandum of Option is vitally important to the optionee to protect against the priority of subsequent bona fide purchasers. See §8.22. For a form of Memorandum of Option, see §8.81.
