Unfortunately, it is not uncommon for dependent children to have problems in school that lead to suspension or expulsion [Kortenkamp et. al, The Well-Being of Children Involved With the Child Welfare System: A National Overview, The Urban Institute No.B-43, p. 2 (2002)]. For these children, a suspension or expulsion can result in further stigmatization, feelings of diminished self-worth, and difficulty keeping up with schoolwork [McNaught, School Discipline and Children in Foster Care: Advocates' Roles, 23 Child Law Practice 137, 138 (2004)]. A suspension or expulsion can adversely impact the child's current placement and make it harder to find a permanent placement for the child [Id.]. Suspension is defined as a temporary removal from school, generally not more than five consecutive days or 20 school days total [Educ. Code §§ 48911(a), 48903(a)]. An expulsion, on the other hand, results in a child being prohibited from attending any school within the district for a minimum of a semester to a year depending on the offense [Educ. Code § 48916(a)]. The Education Code sets out the various offenses for which a child can be suspended or recommended for expulsion [Educ. Code §§ 48900(a)-(q), 48900.2, 48900.3, 48900.4, 48900.7]. Additionally, certain "zero tolerance" offenses carry a punishment of immediate suspension and a mandatory recommendation for expulsion [Educ. Code § 48915(c)]. In order for the act to warrant a possible suspension or expulsion, it must be related to a school activity. This includes acts that occur on school grounds, during travel to and from school, during the lunch period, during a school-sponsored activity or travel to or from such activities [Educ. Code § 48900(r)].

In Goss v. Lopez the United States Supreme Court held that a child suspended for 10 days or less has a due process right to oral or written notice of the charges against them, an explanation of the evidence against them and an opportunity to present his or her version of the story [Goss v. Lopez (1975) 419 U.S. 565, 584, 95 S. Ct. 729 , 42 L. Ed. 3d 725, 740]. Under California law, students who are recommended for suspension for any length of time have these certain due process rights [Educ. Code § 48911(b)]. These rights are usually provided by way of an informal conference between the student and the principal that occurs before the possible suspension. In certain "emergency situations" a suspension can occur before this conference [Educ. Code § 48911(c)]. A suspension should only be imposed when other means of correction fail [Educ. Code § 48900(a)-(e)]. However, certain conduct can result in suspension without the consideration of alternatives [Educ. Code §§ 48900.5, 48900(a)-(e)].

The due process rights of a student facing expulsion are set forth in Education Code section 48918. These rights include a hearing within 30 school days before the district governing board, an administrative panel, or hearing officer [Educ. Code § 48918(a)]. The student is also entitled to written, 10 calendar-day notice of the hearing including a citation to the education code section that the child is alleged to have violated as well as details of the violation, the right to bring a lawyer or other advocate, and the right to present witnesses and other evidence as well as questioning witnesses [Educ. Code § 48918(b)].

Before a student can be expelled it must be demonstrated that 1) the student committed an act prohibited by the education code that was related to a school activity, and 2) other means of correction are not feasible or have failed to bring about proper conduct, or that due to the nature of the act, the present of the student causes a continuing danger to the physical safety of the student or others [Educ. Code § 48915(b)]. However, the second prong above is not required if the child commits certain "zero tolerance" offenses in connection with a school activity [Educ. Code § 48916(c)]. These offenses are:

- Possessing, selling, or furnishing a firearm;
- Brandishing a knife at another;
- Selling a controlled substance;
- Committing or attempting to commit a sexual assault, or committing sexual battery; and
- Possession of an explosive [Educ. Code § 48915(c); CYETF, California Foster Care Education Law Fact Sheets, Fact Sheet Number Seven: School Discipline (CYETF 3d ed. 2008].

If the student is expelled, the district must provide an educational program and recommend a plan for rehabilitation [Educ. Code §§ 48916.1(a), 48919]. A student has 30 days to appeal the expulsion [Educ. Code § 48919]. If the child is expelled, the governing board will recommend a plan of rehabilitation such as improved academic performance, tutoring, job training, counseling or community service [Educ. Code § 48916(b)]. The student can apply for readmission at the end of the expulsion period. The child must be readmitted unless the student has not completed the rehabilitation plan, or the student continues to pose a danger to the campus safety, other students, or district employees [Educ. Code § 48916(c)].

PRACTICE TIP (CHILD'S COUNSEL P.O.V.):

The Role of Children's Counsel in School Discipline Issues. Pursuant to Welfare and Institutions Code section 317(e), children's counsel should investigate the interests of the child as it relates to school discipline issues and report to the court. While some offices that represent children have attorneys experienced in school discipline issues, more often this is an area that will require securing an outside attorney experienced in education law. The attorney representing the child in a school discipline matter may seek less stringent sanctions such as detention or community service. Furthermore if the child has a disability, the attorney will most likely review the IEP or Section 504 plan, attend the manifestation determination meeting and provide input, making sure the special education plan is being followed. Additionally, if the child was not already identified as having a disability, inquiry should be made into whether the school was on notice of a suspected disability. Oftentimes, disciplinary issues and behavior-related disabilities are interrelated.

[ii] School Discipline for Children Eligible for Service Under IDEA

If a child is in special education under IDEA or is suspected of being eligible for such services, certain protections apply. A child can be suspected of being eligible for special education services in one of a few ways. One possibility is that school personnel identify the child as having possible special education issues [34 C.F.R. § 300.534]. Additionally, the child is suspected of being eligible for special education services when the parent expresses concern in writing to the school that the child needs special education or requests the school conduct an evaluation before the disciplinary action-triggering misbehavior occurs [Community Alliance for Special Education and Protection and Advocacy, Inc., Special Education Rights and Responsibilities, pp. 64-65 (9th ed. 2005)].

A special education student may be suspended for up to 10 days in a school year, just like a non-disabled student. However, when one suspension exceeds 10 consecutive school days, or suspensions on different occasions exceed a total of 10 days, and this creates a pattern, the suspension is deemed a "change in placement" necessitating a special process [20 U.S.C. § 1415(k)(1)(C); 34 C.F.R. § 300.530]. Likewise, an expulsion is considered to be a "change in placement." If an intended discipline rises to the level of a "change in placement," the school district is required to hold a manifestation-determination meeting [20 U.S.C. §§ 1415(k)(1)(B), 1415(k)(1)(E); 34 C.F.R. § 300.530(e)]. At this meeting held within 10 days after the decision to discipline the child, and prior to an expulsion proceeding, the IEP team must determine whether the behavior was a manifestation of the child's disability [20 U.S.C. § 1415(k)(1)(E)(i)]. This entails determining: 1) whether the behavior was caused by, or had a direct and substantial relationship to the child's disability, and 2) whether the behavior was directly related to the school's failure to implement the IEP [20 U.S.C. § 1415(k)(1)(E)(i)(I)-(II); 34 C.F.R. § 300.530(e)(i)-(ii)]. If the answer to either question is "yes," the child cannot be expelled or suspended and is returned to his/her school placement unless the parents agree otherwise [20 U.S.C. 1415(k)(1)(E)(ii); 34 C.F.R. § 300.530(f)]. The IEP team must determine whether to conduct a functional behavioral assessment (FBA) and develop a behavior intervention plan (BIP) to address the conduct [20 U.S.C. § 1415(k)(1)(F)(i)-(ii); 34 C.F.R. § 300.530(f)(1)(i)-(ii); 5 C.C.R. § 3052]. However, return to the previous school placement will not occur if the child committed an offense such as possession of a weapon, possession, use or sale of drugs, or infliction of serious bodily injury [20 U.S.C. § 1415(k)(1)(G); 34 C.F.R. § 300.530(g)]. Where these offenses have been committed, the disabled student can be placed in an Interim Alternative Educational Setting (IAES) immediately and for up to 45 days [20 U.S.C. § 1415(k)(1)(G); 34 C.F.R. § 300.530(g)]. Likewise, if the behavior is found not to be related to the disability and not due to the failure to implement the IEP, the child will be placed in an IAES for up to 45 days [20 U.S.C. § 1415(k)(1)(C), (G); 34 C.F.R. §§ 300.530(g), 300.531]. After the 45 days, the special education student can return to the original placement unless the parent and district agree otherwise. If a special education student is expelled or suspended for more than 10 days, the student is still entitled to receive appropriate special educational services [20 U.S.C. § 1415(k)(1)(G)]. These services must enable the student to continue to work towards meeting his or her IEP goals [20 U.S.C. §§ 1412(a)(1), 1415(k)(1)(D); 34 C.F.R. § 530(d)(1)].

[iii] School Discipline for Children under Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973

The rules regarding suspension or expulsion of a disabled child under Section 504 are similar to those applicable to the special education student. When a child receiving services under Section 504 is facing a "change in placement" due to expulsion, suspension of more than 10 consecutive days or a series of suspension creating a pattern, the placement team must meet. As with IDEA students, the initial inquiry is whether the misconduct is caused by the disability [McNaught, School Discipline and Children in Foster Care: Advocates' Roles, 23 Child Law Practice 137, 146 (2004)]. If so, the team will then consider whether the student's current educational placement is appropriate. If, however, the team finds that the misconduct is not caused by the disability, the appropriateness of the current educational placement is not reviewed and the child can be excluded from school just as a child without disabilities [Community Alliance for Special Education and Protection and Advocacy, Inc., Special Education Rights and Responsibilities, pp. 8-19-8-21 (9th ed. 2005); McNaught, School Discipline and Children in Foster Care: Advocates' Roles, 23 Child Law Practice 137, 146 (2004)]. A decision that behavior is not related to the child's disability and any subsequent placement proposal can be challenged by requesting a Section 504 hearing.

[7] Extracurricular, Enrichment, and Social Activities

Children benefit greatly from positive, age-appropriate activities. Dependent children are entitled to participate in such age-appropriate extracurricular, enrichment, and social activities [Welf. & Inst. Code § 362.05]. No state or local policy or regulation can prevent or create barriers to dependent children's participation in such activities [Welf. & Inst. Code § 362.05]. Caregivers are to use a "reasonable and prudent parent standard," as defined in Welf. & Inst. Code § 362.04, in determining whether a child should be permitted to participate in a particular activity, and must take reasonable steps to determine the appropriateness of such activities in terms of the child's age, maturity, and developmental level [Welf. & Inst. Code § 362.05].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
D. Parties and Participants--Standing, Rights, and Appointment of Counsel and GAL

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.63

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.63 The Social Worker and Social Services Agency

[1] Overview

"County child protective services (CPS) agencies are the most important link in the child protection chain ... Indeed, compared to the day-to-day responsibilities of CPS social workers, the responsibilities of doctors, lawyers, judges, and mental health professionals are child's play" [Myers, The Backlash: Child Protection Under Fire (Sage 1994) Ch. 2, Definition and Origins of the Backlash, pp. 28-29]. To those who work in the juvenile dependency system on a day-to-day basis, the truth of these words by the nation's leading expert on evidence in child abuse and neglect cases, Professor John E.B. Myers, is self-evident. This is not to say that all social workers perform their functions perfectly, although most "perform well under extraordinarily trying circumstances" [Myers, The Backlash: Child Protection Under Fire (Sage 1994) Ch. 2, Definition and Origins of the Backlash, p. 29]. Nor is it to say the other "links" of attorneys, judicial officers, medical and mental health professionals are not also important, as recognized by Professor Myers [Myers, The Backlash: Child Protection Under Fire (Sage 1994) Ch. 2, Definition and Origins of the Backlash, p. 28]. Instead, it is merely to emphasize that the role and responsibilities of the child welfare services (CWS) agency and social worker are the very foundation on which the juvenile dependency system is built.

In most counties, the responsibilities of the probation officer for dependency cases have been delegated by the county board of supervisors to the social services department pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 272. The terms "probation officer" and "social worker," as found in juvenile dependency law, are now deemed interchangeable [In re Ashley M. (2003) 114 Cal. App. 4th 1, 8, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 237] . Thus, just as the probation officer serves as the juvenile court's investigatory and supervisorial arm in delinquency proceedings, the social worker serves as an arm of the juvenile court in dependency proceedings [In re Valerie A. (2007) 152 Cal. App. 4th 987, 1011, 61 Cal. Rptr. 3d 403 ; In re Ashley M. (2003) 114 Cal. App. 4th 1, 8, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 237 , citing Seiser & Kumli, California Juvenile Courts Practice and Procedure § 2.63[1] (Matthew Bender); In re Malinda S. (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 368, 376-377, 272 Cal. Rptr. 787, 795

P.2d 1244] . This is also true for an Indian social worker of a tribe which has entered into an agreement with the State Department of Social Services pursuant to Welf. and Inst. Code § 10553.1 concerning child welfare services or foster care payments [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 215, 272(a)(2), 306(a)]. The social worker's role in dependency proceedings, however, is not limited to that of serving as an arm of the court. The social worker has many roles within the dependency system; arm of the court, arm of the state, service provider, case manager, and party to the action. In fulfilling these roles, the social worker is "exercising both executive and judicial functions" [In re Ashley M. (2003) 114 Cal. App. 4th 1, 7, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 237] . These roles are simultaneous, integrated, overlapping, and carried out on an ongoing basis. It is this diversity of roles that has sometimes led to confusion amongst practitioners, courts, and even social services agencies as to the role of the social worker in a particular case or activity.

The social worker has the initial responsibility of investigating abuse and neglect allegations and determining whether a child can remain or be returned to his or her home through the provision of services [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 306, 309]. Further, it is the social worker who is responsible for the decision to file a petition alleging that a child comes within the jurisdiction of the juvenile court due to abuse or neglect [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 311, 325; see discussion in § 328.40 et seq.]. In carrying out these functions the social worker has been likened to a prosecutor [Alicia T. v. County of Los Angeles (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 869, 880, 271 Cal. Rptr. 513] and thus is serving as an arm of the state in this regard, fulfilling an executive function [In re Ashley M. (2003) 114 Cal. App. 4th 1, 7, fn. 3, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 237] . The same is true throughout the dependency process as the social worker exercises his or her independent judgment and discretion to file subsequent, supplemental, and modification petitions under Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 342, 387, and 388, makes recommendations to the court, and carries out a myriad of other responsibilities. Indeed, like a prosecutor in a criminal case, the social worker and social services department bears the burden of proof at most hearings including those for detention, jurisdiction, disposition, review, and permanency planning [see, e.g., Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 350(c), 366.21(e)-(f), 366.22(a), 366.26(c)(1)].

Once a dependency petition is filed, the social worker is required to appear in court to represent and serve the interests of the child [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 202, 280, 361.2(e)], and the case comes under the supervision of the juvenile court [Allen M. v. Superior Court (1992) 6 Cal. App. 4th 1069, 1073-1075, 8 Cal. Rptr. 2d 259] . The social worker is also required to prepare reports for the many hearings held by the juvenile court for dependent children [see, e.g., Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 281, 358, 358.1, 365]. The social worker serves as an impartial arm of the court in preparing these reports [In re Ashley M. (2003) 114 Cal. App. 4th 1, 8, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 237 , citing Seiser & Kumli, California Juvenile Courts Practice and Procedure § 2.63[1] (Matthew Bender); In re Malinda S. (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 368, 376-377, 272 Cal. Rptr. 787, 795 P.2d 1244] and in exercising limited discretion in the implementation of the court's visitation orders [In re Danielle W. (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 1227, 1235, 255 Cal. Rptr. 344] .

PRACTICE TIP (PARENT'S P.O.V.):

Who Has the Burden and What Is That Burden? Attorneys for parents sometimes focus too much on the truth of the allegations and its preponderance of the evidence standard and fail to recognize the heightened standard of proof required at removal. It is critical that at each and every hearing, counsel understand who bears the burden of proof and what that standard is.

In serving as a case manager and service provider the social services department is largely acting as an administrative agency of the state that is subject to the supervision of the California State Department of Social Services [In re Ashley M. (2003) 114 Cal. App. 4th 1, 7, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 237] . The juvenile court exercises control over those services and the management of the case by its orders for the provision of services and its determinations as to whether reasonable services were offered or provided [In re Ashley M. (2003) 114 Cal. App. 4th 1, 7, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 237] . Yet in some aspects of those services, such as visitation, the social worker is also serving as the arm of the court [In re Danielle W. (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 1227, 1235, 255 Cal. Rptr. 344] . It supervises the child, provides or offers services to the family, and assists in carrying out the overall purpose of the Juvenile Court Law. In this way it can be seen that dependency law envisions a cooperative effort between the juvenile court and the county social services department [In re Ashley M. (2003) 114 Cal. App. 4th 1, 7, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 237] . Thus, if reports by a social worker are inadequate or biased yet accepted by the juvenile court, or services by the agency are inadequate or inappropriate yet the juvenile court finds reasonable efforts have been made, the responsibility for such deficiencies must be shared by both the social services agency and the juvenile court, not placed solely on the shoulders of the agency. While the two serve as something of a team in this regard, where the social worker serves as an arm of the court the juvenile court itself bears the ultimate responsibility for ensuring the adequacy and appropriateness of the efforts of its investigatory and supervisorial arm.

In addition to serving as an arm of the state and of the juvenile court in dependency proceedings as already described, the social worker and county social services department also performs many other functions as an arm of the state. Although the work of social services in this regard is sometimes related to the dependency process, it is not always subject to the supervision of the juvenile court. For example, most county social services departments serve as agents of the State Department of Social Services in the evaluation and licensing of community care facilities, including foster homes [Health & Safety Code §§ 1521.5, 1521.6]. Although dependent children and wards of the court may be placed in these facilities, a county social services department is not subject to the supervision of the juvenile court in carrying out these licensing functions. Instead, it is subject to the supervision of the State Department of Social Services, the Office of Administrative Hearings, and through mandamus by the superior court [Health & Safety Code § 1550 et seq.; Gov. Code § 11500 et seq.; Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5]. When the social worker and social services agency makes actual placement decisions for dependent children, however, those discretionary decisions are subject to review by the juvenile court for abuse of discretion [In re Cynthia C. (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 1479, 1489-1490, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1 ; In re Robert A. (1992) 4 Cal. App. 4th 174, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 438 (general placement decisions); Department of Soc. Servs. v. Superior Court (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 721, 734, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 239 (adoptive placement decisions)].

Finally, the social worker is a party to the dependency proceeding. Unlike the probation officer in criminal and delinquency proceedings, the social services agency actually takes positions and litigates in dependency actions. However, as noted by the Supreme Court in pointing out that in long-term foster care cases the agency can actually conduct the six-month review [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.3(d)], the social worker is both "a party and sometimes more than a party" [San Diego County Dep't of Soc. Servs. v. Superior Court (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 882, 891, fn. 4, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 396, 919 P.2d 1329 (emphasis in original)]. This characterization is an extremely accurate one. The social worker has many differing roles and responsibilities within and related to the dependency system. These roles and responsibilities are carried out in a simultaneous, integrated, and ongoing basis. Nevertheless, when possible and appropriate, all parties and courts should take care to ensure they understand which role or responsibility the social worker is fulfilling in a particular activity. This will help to avoid confusion as to that action and how it should be reviewed by the juvenile court, superior court, or administrative agency.

For a discussion of the social worker serving in yet another role as a "court officer" and assisting the court in the courtroom during dependency proceedings, see Ch. 327, Juvenile Courts: Jurisdiction and General Procedures, § 327.21[2][c].

[2] Counsel for the Social Services Agency

When the parent or guardian is represented by counsel, the county counsel or district attorney must, at the request of the juvenile court judge, appear and participate in the hearing to represent the social services department [Welf. & Inst. Code § 318.5]. With the transfer in most counties of responsibility for dependency cases from the probation department to the social services agency [Welf. & Inst. Code § 272], the representation for the agency in dependency cases is now routinely handled by the county counsel's office or by counsel contracted for by the county counsel's office. In many county counsel offices, dependency representation is a career track and attorneys are hired for and remain in dependency units representing social services in dependency matters at the trial and appellate courts. This is the better practice.

For an excellent discussion of the ethical considerations and role of county counsel in representing social services in dependency cases, see the chapter by Lead Deputy County Counsel L. Michael Clark of the Office of County Counsel, Santa Clara County, in 2 Cal. Juvenile Dependency Practice (Cont. Ed. Bar 2002) Representing Petitioner, ch. 14, pp. 757-832. See also Standards of Practice for Lawyers Representing Child Welfare Agencies (ABA 2004); Mimi Laver, Agency Attorneys and Caseworkers: Working Well Together, in Child Welfare Law and Practice: Representing Children, Parents, and State Agencies in Abuse, Neglect, and Dependency Cases (Bradford Pub. 2005) § 19B, pp. 431-442; Laver et al., Foundations for Success: Strengthening Your Agency Attorney Office (ABA 1999).

PRACTICE TIP:

Counsel for the Agency Is Not Always Present. Although in most counties the county counsel's office represents the social services agency in dependency cases, do not assume that attorneys from that office will appear to represent the agency at every dependency hearing. In some counties, counsel only appear for the social services agency at contested hearings. As a result, the social worker carrying the case or a court officer may appear as the agency's representative at uncontested hearings. Attorneys unfamiliar with local practice who desire to consult with counsel for social services should take steps to determine whether counsel for the agency can be expected to appear at a particular hearing. When appropriate, counsel for social services should be contacted ahead of time.

[3] Assignment and Removal of Social Workers

The decision as to what social worker to assign to a case is made by the social services agency. The court has no jurisdiction to order that a particular worker handle a particular case [In re Ashley M. (2003) 114 Cal. App. 4th 1, 9-10, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 237 , citing Seiser & Kumli, California Juvenile Courts Practice and Procedure § 2.64[3] (Matthew Bender)]. The juvenile court does have a responsibility to oversee the provision of services provided by the agency in its function as an arm of the court [In re Robert A. (1992) 4 Cal. App. 4th 174, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 438] . The assignment of individual social workers is not a judicial function, however. Instead, the internal management of the social services agency and the assignment of individual social workers is done as part of the agency's executive function, acting on behalf of the county board of supervisors and subject to the supervision of the State Department of Social Services [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 202.5, 306, 10800-10803, 16500, 16501; In re Ashley M. (2003) 114 Cal. App. 4th 1, 7-10, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 237 ; cf. In re Walter E. (1992) 13 Cal. App. 4th 125, 136-137, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 386] . For the juvenile court to order the social services agency to assign a particular social worker to a case would be a violation of the separation of powers doctrine [Cal. Const., art. III, § 3; In re Ashley M. (2003) 114 Cal. App. 4th 1, 10, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 237] .

Nevertheless, the juvenile court does have the authority to order a social worker removed from a dependency case under very limited circumstances involving a conflict of interest. Any party to the dependency proceeding may bring a motion to have a social worker removed. Although not specifically enumerated in the statute, it would seem appropriate a juvenile court could also initiate a motion under this statute on its own as part of its general oversight responsibilities. The court must grant the motion if it is proven by a preponderance of the evidence that the social worker has a conflict of interest that would interfere with the worker's ability to objectively carry out his or her duties [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16513.5]. A conflict of interest justifying removal may include, but is not limited to, the following circumstances:

- The social worker has had sexual contact with any party to the dependency proceeding [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16513(a)].

- The social worker has a relationship with a person who is adopting or attempting to adopt the child who is the subject of the proceedings, and the relationship is of such a nature that the objectivity of the social worker may be compromised due to a conflict of interest or bias [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16513(b)].

- The social worker has been convicted of perjury with regard to the dependency case in which the motion to have the worker removed has been made [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16513.5(c)].

If the juvenile court had the inherent power to order a social worker removed from a case, these statutory provisions would not have been needed. Thus, the court's authority in this area is very limited. This is understandable, since the assignment of individual social workers is an executive function, not a judicial one. These provisions make clear the court can only order the removal of a social worker from a case when there is a actual conflict of interest, not merely the potential for conflict [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16513.5]. Further, it is not enough for a party to allege a personality conflict with the social worker or for a party to claim he or she would prefer a different social worker. Instead, there must be evidence of an actual conflict of interest that would interfere with the social worker's ability to objectively carry out his or her duties [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16513.5]. The social services agency must, of course, be afforded due process. It must be given notice of any request to remove a social worker from a case and the opportunity to a meaningful hearing at which the matter can be litigated and determined.

PRACTICE TIP:

Talk to the Agency and County Counsel First. No one likes the thought of a social worker having a conflict of interest in a case, especially one as serious as those described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 16513.5(a)-(c). If a social worker has a conflict that interferes with the worker's ability to objectively carry out his or her duties in conjunction with a dependency case, it is to everyone's benefit for a different worker to be assigned to the case. While a practitioner can bring a motion before the juvenile court in the first instance, it is recommended that the social services agency and county counsel be contacted first. If a conflict of interest is clear, the agency should take steps to rectify the problem without the need for a juvenile court order. In some instances, the agency may even choose to change social workers despite the lack of an actual conflict, if is best for all concerned, especially the child. Handling the matter in this way helps to maintain good working relationships and the nonadversarial atmosphere that is preferred in the dependency system [Welf. & Inst. Code § 350(a)(1)]. If the agency fails to view the situation in the same way as the party raising the alleged conflict, a formal motion can then be brought before the juvenile court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16513.5].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
D. Parties and Participants--Standing, Rights, and Appointment of Counsel and GAL

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.64

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.64 Court-Appointed Special Advocate (CASA)

Court-Appointed Special Advocate (CASA) programs are now growing in number throughout California and the United States following the guidelines of the National Court-Appointed Special Advocate Association [see Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 100-109, 356.5; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.655; see also Courter, I Speak For This Child: True Stories of a Child Advocate (Crown 1995)]. A CASA program must adopt and comply with written plan for the program, including, if applicable, articles of incorporation, by-laws, and a board of directors. A CASA program may function under the auspices of a public or private entity, but cannot function under the auspices of a probation department or social services agency [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.655(k)(1)]. If the CASA program is one that functions under the auspices of a public or private agency, its governance plan must specify a clear administrative relationship with the parent organization with delegations of authority and accountability clearly delineated. Such programs must have an active advisory council [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.655(k)(1)-(2)]. Effective July 1, 2004, a CASA program may submit fingerprints and requests for criminal offender record information relating to employees and volunteer candidates to the Department of Justice [Penal Code § 11105.04].

A CASA program must develop and adopt a written description of activities that CASA volunteers are prohibited from doing. The prohibited activities must include, but are not limited to, taking a dependent child to the CASA volunteer's home, giving legal advice or therapeutic counseling, giving money or expensive gifts to the child or family, being related to any of the parties in the case or employed in a position or by an agency that might result in a conflict of interest, and any other activities prohibited by the juvenile court [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.655(g)].

A CASA is a volunteer who may be appointed in a Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 proceeding [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 102(b), 356.5]. A CASA is an officer of the court with all of the relevant rights and responsibilities that pertain to that role [Welf. & Inst. Code § 103(e)]. As such, the court may make an order allowing the CASA access to records and the right to interview parties involved in the case [Welf. & Inst. Code § 103(h)].

A CASA does not have to be either an attorney or a social worker, but may be anyone who has demonstrated an interest in children and their welfare [Welf. & Inst. Code § 103(a)]. Before being sworn in as a CASA, however, the volunteer must complete an extensive training program that includes but is not limited to, the dynamics of child abuse and neglect, dependency court structure and laws, social service systems, child development, interviewing techniques, report writing, roles and responsibilities of a CASA, rules of evidence and discovery procedures, and problems associated with verifying reports [Welf. & Inst. Code § 102(d)].

The role of the CASA is (1) to provide independent, factual information to the court regarding the case; (2) to represent the best interests of the child involved and to consider the best interests of the family; and (3) at the request of the court, to monitor cases to which he or she has been appointed to assure that the court's orders have been fulfilled [Welf. & Inst. Code § 102(c)]. Thus, the CASAs responsibilities are much the same as those of a guardian ad litem [Welf. & Inst. Code § 356.5]. In some counties CASAs are actually appointed to also serve as the child's guardian ad litem, although this is not yet a common practice in California [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 326.5]. Reports written by a CASA are to be received and considered by the court in dependency proceedings [see, e.g., Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 366.21(e)-(f), 366.22(a)].

The fact the CASA has independent responsibilities to the court and child does not mean the CASA works in a vacuum. CASAs often work very closely with both the child's social worker and the child's attorney. This is as it should be, since all have the goal of serving the child's interests and their responsibilities overlap considerably. CASAs, social workers, and children's attorneys may or may not agree as to what is best for the child and thus may make different recommendations to the court. But their need to work together cooperatively for the child's interest is significant [see Piraino, Lay Representation of Abused and Neglected Children: Variations on Court Appointed Special Advocate Programs and Their Relationship to Quality Advocacy, 1 J. Center Children & Cts. 63 (1999)].

Although an officer of the court with specific duties and responsibilities, unless the CASA has been appointed as the child's guardian ad litem, a CASA is not a party to the proceeding and as such has no right to set matters for contested hearing or to question witnesses. Regardless of the nonparty status of the CASA, the CASA is allowed to be present during the dependency hearings and most courts will allow the CASA to address the court where appropriate. Further, a CASA may file a petition pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 as a "person having an interest in a child who is a dependent child" and, if a hearing is granted, will have standing as a party at the hearing on the petition.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
D. Parties and Participants--Standing, Rights, and Appointment of Counsel and GAL

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.65

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.65 Continued Representation by Appointed Counsel

The counsel appointed by the court must represent the parent, guardian, or child at the detention hearing and at all subsequent proceedings before the juvenile court. Counsel must continue to represent the parent or child unless relieved by the court on the substitution of other counsel or for cause. The representation includes representing the parent or the child in termination proceedings and in those proceedings relating to the institution or setting aside of a legal guardianship [Welf. & Inst. Code § 317(d); see In re Tanya H. (1993) 17 Cal. App. 4th 825, 828-833, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 503 (court's policy of relieving counsel post-permanency planning was error); see also In re Ronald R. (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 1186, 1192-1194, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 22 (court relieving counsel for parent who did not appear and with whom counsel had no contact was error)].

While Welf. & Inst. Code § 317(d) does not define "for cause" in regards to relieving attorneys in dependency cases, the words of the statute must be construed in context, "keeping in mind the statutory purpose" [Janet O. v. Superior Court (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 1058, 1063, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 57] . The purpose of Welf. & Inst. Code § 317(a) is to provide counsel to parents who desire counsel, but cannot afford to hire counsel. Thus, in Janet O., the court of appeal found the parents' extended absence and failure to appear in court and stay in contact with their appointed counsel demonstrated the parents no longer desired representation. As such, the juvenile court did not abuse its discretion in relieving counsel [Janet O. v. Superior Court (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 1058, 1064, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 57] . In a case in which the mother fled the jurisdiction of the court with her dependent child, however, the court of appeal found the relieving of the mother's counsel by the juvenile court was required reversal since the mother had not abandoned her child and the lack of counsel contributed to multiple errors in the dependency proceeding [Katheryn S. v. Superior Court (2000) 82 Cal. App. 4th 958, 970-975, 98 Cal. Rptr. 2d 741 , distinguishing Janet O. v. Superior Court (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 1058, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 57] . The relieving of counsel for both parents and children is an area of ongoing litigation. As such, practitioners should watch this area for further developments.

For discussion of relieving counsel for children, see § 328.62[3][d].

For discussion of ineffective assistance of counsel claims, see § 328.193.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
D. Parties and Participants--Standing, Rights, and Appointment of Counsel and GAL

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.66

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.66 Guardian Ad Litem for the Child

Prior to July 1, 2001, the social worker served as the child's guardian ad litem (GAL) unless the court appointed a different person to serve as the child's guardian ad litem [Welf. & Inst. Code former § 326 (repealed eff. 7/1/01, see Stats. 2000, ch. 450, §§ 2, 4)]. Effective July 1, 2001, the Judicial Council was to adopt a rule of court that complied with the federal Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (CAPTA) for the appointment of a GAL for the child. This appointment must be made in any case "in which a petition is filed based upon neglect or abuse of the child" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 326.5]. As with CAPTA, this statutory mandate for the appointment of a GAL is written in permissive language as to who should be appointed. Although persons appointed to be the child's guardian ad litem "may" be attorneys or court-appointed special advocates (CASA), the plain language of the state and federal statutes does not require them to be [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 326.5; 42 U.S.C. § 5106a(b)(2)(A)(ix)]. Nevertheless, it was anticipated most counties would either use attorneys or CASAs for this role, which is consistent with the current interpretation of the federal requirement. The adoption of Cal. Rules of Ct., former Rule 1448(c) effective January 1, 2003, making the child's attorney the child's GAL for purposes of CAPTA, ensures that.

Beginning January 1, 2003, the rules of court have provided that the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (CAPTA) guardian ad litem for a child subject to a juvenile dependency petition is as defined in the rules of court [Cal. Rules of Ct., former Rule 1401(a)(13) (now see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.502(3))]. Under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.622(c) the child's attorney "will serve" as the child's CAPTA guardian ad litem. If an attorney is not appointed for the child, a court-appointed special advocate (CASA) must be appointed to serve as the child's CAPTA GAL [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.662(c)]. These provisions are consistent with the current interpretation of the federal requirements, so long as the court identifies "on the record the person appointed as the child's CAPTA guardian ad litem" [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.662(c)].

The duties of a CAPTA GAL for a child in California dependency proceedings are not clear. This is not surprising since the role of the guardian ad litem in abuse and neglect cases throughout the United States is largely unclear [Mandelbaum, Revisiting the Question of Whether Young Children in Child Protection Proceedings Should be Represented by Lawyers, 32 Loy. U. Chi. L.J. 1, 27, fn. 93 (2000)]. The rule doesn't help this. It provides that when the child's attorney serves as the CAPTA GAL, his or her specific duties and responsibilities are set forth in Welf. & Inst. Code § 317(e) and Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.660 [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.662(e)]. If a CASA is appointed to serve as the CAPTA GAL, his or her specific duties and responsibilities are set forth in Welf. & Inst. Code § 102(c) and Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.655 [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.662(f)]. These provisions essentially equate the role of the child's attorney, the child's CASA, and the child's GAL. The duties and responsibilities of each overlap, but they are not the same [see, e.g., Sagatun & Edwards, Child Abuse and the Legal System (1995) p. 51 ("The role of the GAL is different from that of the attorney.")]. Further, the potential for conflict between the role of the child's attorney and the role of the child's GAL, especially with older children, is very real. In some cases the two roles cannot and should not be filled by the same person [see, e.g., Sagatun & Edwards, Child Abuse and the Legal System (1995) p. 51 ("An attorney and a GAL may take different positions in court when advocating for the same child."); Haralambie, The Child's Attorney: A Guide to Representing Children in Custody, Adoption, and Protection Cases (ABA 1993) pp. 33-35 (child's attorney should consider asking for a separate GAL to advocate for the child's best wishes when the attorney thinks those interests conflict with the child's wishes); see also Patton, Legal Ethics in Child Custody and Dependency Proceedings: A Guide for Judges and Lawyers (Cambridge 2006) pp. 28-35]. This is an area that should be watched for further developments.

The transition in California to using someone other than the social worker to be the guardian ad litem for the child is likely to be a prolonged one, especially when considered with the provisions of Welf. & Inst. Code § 317 mandating the appointment of counsel for children and California's hybrid model of representation. Not all California counties have in the past appointed separate counsel for children in all dependency cases. Further, not all counties have CASA programs, and of those that do it is doubtful any have enough CASAs to appoint one for every child brought into the dependency system. Thus, many counties will have to expand their children's representation programs in terms of attorneys, CASAs, or both. Further, there is considerable debate as to whether it is more effective or even appropriate to use lawyers as guardians ad litem, or whether the role of GAL is more appropriately and effectively served by CASAs. Some studies have concluded attorneys are less effective in this role than CASAs [see Shepherd & England, "I Know The Child Is My Client, But Who Am I?", 64 Fordham L. Rev. 1917, 1924-1932 (discussing studies on the effectiveness of lawyers as GAL's), 1933-1934 (noting the "ongoing debate within the legal profession regarding whether it is appropriate for attorneys to adopt the role of GAL when representing children" and citing articles related to it)]. Certainly the potential for conflict between the role of the child's attorney and the role of the child's GAL exists, especially for older children who are better able to form and communicate their own position as to what they want to happen in the case, which may not be what is best for them. This is further complicated by the substantial confusion and debate that already exists as to exactly what the role of the child's attorney and the role of the GAL should be [see, e.g., Special Issue: Ethical Issues in the Legal Representation of Children, 64 Fordham L. Rev., No. 4 (1996), and the many articles on the representation of children contained therein].

Finally, in West Virginia GAL's are expected to participate not only in the proceedings at the trial court level, but also in the appellate courts [see State ex rel. Jeanette H. v. Pancake (W. Va. 2000) 207 W. Va. 154, 529 S.E.2d 865, 872, fn. 6 , and cases cited there]. Social services agencies in California have always appeared in appellate proceedings regarding dependent children. The California Supreme Court has now ruled the child's GAL at the trial court level continues to be the child's GAL for decisions regarding litigation at the appellate court level [In re Josiah Z. (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 664, 681, 31 Cal. Rptr. 3d 472, 115 P.3d 1133] . But most of the district courts of appeal do not appoint counsel for children in dependency appeals unless the child is the appellant. These and many other issues will need to be addressed as California makes this move toward separate GAL's for children in dependency proceedings.

PRACTICE TIP:

Asking for Appointment of Children's Counsel on Appeal. In appellate districts in which the court does not routinely appoint counsel for the child in a dependency appeal, the child's trial counsel might wish to consider, as the GAL, requesting the appellate court to appoint counsel for the child. While the appellate courts are not required to do so, making the request is an appropriate first step.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
D. Parties and Participants--Standing, Rights, and Appointment of Counsel and GAL

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.67

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.67 Caregivers

Foster parents and relative caregivers have always been a good source of information about children in their care and have always played a significant role in the child welfare system. Though not always done, existing law has encouraged a team approach to foster care that allows both the biological family and the foster family to be part of the team [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16500.1(b)(3)]. It has also encouraged foster parents to "serve as mentors and role models for biological parents" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16500.1(b)(8)]. Provisions for notice to caregivers for hearings and the ability to provide the court with information has also been included in the law [see, e.g., Welf. & Inst. Code § 293(f)]. With the mandate for alternative permanency planning over the twenty years or more, and for concurrent services planning in recent years, the use of caregivers as potential adoptive parents and legal guardians has also been recognized.

Effective January 1, 2004, California has gone even further with its requirements in this area. It has expressly recognized that foster parents "are one of the most important sources of information about the children in their care" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16010.4(b)]. It acknowledges that federal law requires caregivers to receive expanded opportunities for notice, participation in review and permanency hearings, and the right to communicate with the court, and also that state law similarly provides that caregivers may submit their concerns to the court in writing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16010.4(b)]. Still further, California has now expressly found that it is in children's best interest that caregivers be provided information about the children. Such information can be necessary for the caregiver to obtain health and social services for children in their care, enroll those children in school and extracurricular activities, and for the caregiver to provide updated information to social workers and the courts regarding important developments affecting the children in their care [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16010.4(c)].

Caregivers require certain basic information about the children in their care including, but not limited to, the name, mailing address, and telephone number of the child's social worker, that social worker's supervisor, and of the child's attorney and any CASA. They should be informed of the specific juvenile court the child's case is being handled in, the child's juvenile court case number, State DSS identification number, and Medi-Cal or other group insurance plan number. They should also be informed of medications or treatments in effect for the child at the time of placement and any instructions for their use, and the plan outlining the child's needs and services, including visitation with siblings, parents, and other family members. [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 16002(f), 16010.4(e), 16010.5, 16501.1(f)(5)]. Caregivers are to be provided with a "caregiver placement agreement" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16503.5]. Ultimately, the willingness and desire of relative caregivers to provide legal permanency for the child if reunification efforts fail is clearly a factor in considering any relative placement [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.3(a)(6)]. At disposition, if the child is in out-of-home placement, juvenile courts are to be provided with information regarding whether the child's caregivers are willing and desire to provide legal permanency for the child if reunification efforts fail [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 358(b), 358.1(i)].

Caregivers also require occasional babysitting so they can attend medical appointments, go grocery or other shopping, attend meetings, or even have an occasional evening out. Caregivers may arrange for such occasional babysitting, including for supervision of the child in extracurricular, enrichment, and social activities. In selecting appropriate babysitters, caregivers shall use a reasonable and prudent parent standard, which means the "standard characterized by careful and sensible parental decisions that maintain the child's health, safety, and best interest" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 362.04].

The move to more fully inform and involve caregivers, and to recognize their significance in the dependency system and their need for occasional short-term babysitting, is an important and positive move in the child welfare system, and should be seen as potentially beneficial for children, families, and the system itself. It may also serve to aide recruiting of caregivers, and improve the respect afforded caregivers in the system, as well as their own self-respect. All participants in the system, especially social workers, social services agencies, and the courts, should move as quickly as reasonably possible to ensure the child welfare system moves in this very positive direction and implements any changes necessary. These changes will not occur overnight, however, and are not without potential problems. Thus, all must be alert to the issues and be open about discussing them in a cooperative manner. This is an area to be watched for further developments.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
D. Parties and Participants--Standing, Rights, and Appointment of Counsel and GAL

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated §§ 328.68-328.79

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

[Reserved]

§§ 328.68[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
E. Subject Matter and Dependency Jurisdiction

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.80

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.80 Scope of Dependency Jurisdiction

The juvenile division of the superior court has jurisdiction over children in dependency proceedings [see Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 245, 300; see discussion in General Introduction under Jurisdiction of Juvenile Court--Superior Court, above]. Once a dependency petition has been filed, and until such time as that petition is dismissed or dependency jurisdiction is terminated, no other division of any superior court may hear proceedings regarding custody of and visitation with the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 304; see In re William T. (1985) 172 Cal. App. 3d 790, 794-795, 218 Cal. Rptr. 420 (juvenile court jurisdiction is paramount, even if acquired later in time and during pendency of family law proceedings)].

The juvenile court's preemption of superior court jurisdiction over child custody matters is an exception to the general rule that the court that takes jurisdiction first has exclusive jurisdiction [see In re Travis C. (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 492, 499-500, 284 Cal. Rptr. 469 ; In re William T. (1985) 172 Cal. App. 3d 790, 797-798, 218 Cal. Rptr. 420] .

All issues regarding the custody of a dependent child must be heard by the juvenile court. In fact, a juvenile court in a dependency proceeding may even reconsider an issue litigated in a prior family law proceeding [In re Desiree B. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 286, 291, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 254 (collateral estoppel does not apply; rejecting court's earlier contrary dicta in In re Brendan P. (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 910, 916-917, 230 Cal. Rptr. 720); see In re Travis C. (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 492, 501, 284 Cal. Rptr. 469 ; In re Benjamin D. (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 1464, 1471-1472, 278 Cal. Rptr. 468] .

In deciding issues between parents or between a parent and a guardian regarding custody of the dependent child, the juvenile court may review any record that would be available to the domestic relations division of a superior court hearing such a matter. The juvenile court, on its own motion, may also issue an order directed to either of the parents enjoining any action described in Fam. Code § 6218 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 304; see Welf. & Inst. Code § 302(c)].

For discussions relating to child custody proceedings, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender) Ch. 220, Dissolution of Marriage and Related Proceedings , and Ch. 394, Parent and Child ; see also Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure 2d ed., Chs. 30 and 32 (Matthew Bender).

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329

CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
E. Subject Matter and Dependency Jurisdiction

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.81

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.81 Termination of Dependency Jurisdiction

Although the juvenile court may retain jurisdiction over a dependent child until he or she is 21 years old [Welf. & Inst. Code § 303], this is rarely done. This is in part due to the extensive efforts to either return the child to the custody of a parent or to implement a permanent plan of adoption or legal guardianship if reunification efforts fail [In re Holly H. (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 1324, 1337, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 907 , citing Seiser & Kumli, California Juvenile Courts Practice and Procedure § 2.31 (Matthew Bender)]. In most instances, the court will terminate its jurisdiction when the child reaches the age of 18 [see In re Robert L. (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 789, 793-797, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 578 (maintaining dependency jurisdiction to assist children with expense of college reversed as abuse of discretion)]. If the child is returned to the custody of a parent before the child reaches the age of majority and dependency jurisdiction is terminated, thereafter the family law division of a superior court may hear any issues regarding custody [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 304; In re Sarah M. (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 1486, 285 Cal. Rptr. 374 , overruled on other grounds, In re Chantal S. (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 196, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 866, 913 P.2d 1075] . For discussion of termination of dependency jurisdiction when the child reaches the age of majority, see § 328.180[5].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329

CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
E. Subject Matter and Dependency Jurisdiction

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.82

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.82 UCCJEA and Notice Under the Hague Convention

[1] Application of the UCCJEA to Juvenile Dependency Proceedings

California has adopted the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act (UCCJEA), effective January 1, 2000 [Fam. Code § 3400 et seq.]. Previously, California law had been set forth in the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act (UCCJA), which was repealed and replaced by the UCCJEA. The UCCJEA is the exclusive method for determining subject matter jurisdiction for custody proceedings in California [Fam. Code § 3421(b); In re C.T. (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 101, 106, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 897 ; In re Nada R. (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 1166, 1173, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 493] . Its provisions apply to juvenile dependency proceedings [Fam. Code § 3402(d)] and to actions to terminate parental rights. Its policies even apply to international custody disputes [In re Jorge G. (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 125, 131-132, 78 Cal. Rptr. 3d 552 ; In re A.C. (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 854, 860, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 431 ; In re Stephanie M. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 295, 310, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 595, 867 P.2d 706 (interpreting prior UCCJA)]. Cases that were decided under the prior UCCJA are "instructive" in deciding cases under the UCCJEA except where the two vary [In re A.C. (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 854, 860, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 431] .

While all states have adopted some form of the UCCJA or UCCJEA, not all states expressly apply the acts to international custody disputes, nor do they apply them in the same way [see, e.g., Amin v. Bakhaty (La. 2001) 798 So. 2d 75, 83-85 ; Rashid v. Drumm (Mo. Ct. App. 1992) 824 S.W.2d 497, 500-504] . California has, however, adopted the provision of the UCCJEA that makes it apply to international custody disputes [Fam. Code § 3405]. But if the child custody law of a foreign country violates fundamental principles of human rights, the UCCJEA does not apply [Fam. Code § 3405(c)]. Further, the UCCJEA is not reciprocal since foreign countries are not signatories [Rutherford, Removing the Tactical Advantages of International Parental Child Abductions under the 1980 Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction (1991) 8 Ariz. J. Int'l & Comp. L. 149, 152 (discussing the UCCJA)]. Unlike with the other states of this nation, the child custody law of other nations may not provide for communication between courts or countries in child custody cases, particularly where there is no child custody determination or proceeding pending in the other country. Thus, it cannot be assumed a court in another country will communicate with the juvenile court here. Indeed, it may even be expressly forbidden to do so under the laws of that country. Nor can it be assumed the other country has provisions similar to those of California regarding what is a child's "home state." California courts should therefore be careful, creative, and flexible in their approach to cases involving other countries and their application of the UCCJEA.

For detailed discussion of the UCCJEA, see Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2d ed., Ch. 32 (Matthew Bender).

[2] Prerequisites for UCCJEA Jurisdiction

The prerequisites of jurisdiction for a court of this state to make an initial determination of child custody under the UCCJEA are found in Fam. Code § 3421. That section provides for jurisdiction to make an initial child custody determination under any of the following circumstances:

- This state is the home state of the child at the time the proceedings are commenced [Fam. Code § 3421(a)(1)]. Home state is defined as the state in which the child immediately preceding the time involved has lived for at least six consecutive months with the parent or a person acting as a parent. For a child under 6 months of age, it is the state in which the child lived from birth [Fam. Code § 3402(g)].

- This state was the home state of the child within six months before the proceedings are commenced and the child is absent from this state because of removal or retention by someone claiming custody of the child or for other reasons, and there is a parent or a person acting as a parent continuing to live in this state [Fam. Code § 3421(a)(1)].

- A court of another state does not have jurisdiction under Fam. Code § 3421(a)(1) or has declined to exercise jurisdiction on the grounds this state is the more appropriate forum, and the child and at least one parent or a persona acting as a parent have a significant connection with this state other than mere physical presence and there is substantial evidence available in this state concerning the child's care, protection, training, and personal relationships [Fam. Code § 3421(a)(2)].

- All courts having jurisdiction under Fam. Code § 3421(a)(1)-(2) have declined to exercise jurisdiction on the grounds this state is the more appropriate forum to determine the custody of the child [Fam. Code § 3421(a)(3)].

- No other court of any other state would have jurisdiction under any of the criteria for jurisdiction set forth in Fam. Code § 3421(a)(1)-(3).

The physical presence of, or personal jurisdiction over, a child or other party to the action, is neither necessary nor sufficient to make a determination of child custody [Fam. Code § 3421(c)]. Moreover, the mere fact the child is in the state because of a need for medical care is not sufficient to invoke the jurisdiction provisions of the UCCJEA or to make California the child's home state under the UCCJEA when the parents reside in another state or country and the only reason the child is in the state is for medical care [In re A.C. (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 854, 861-862, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 431] .

[3] Temporary Emergency Jurisdiction to Issue Custody Orders

A California court has "temporary emergency jurisdiction" to issue custody orders if the child is present in this state and the child has either been abandoned or it is necessary to protect the child in an emergency because the child, a sibling of the child, or a parent of the child, is subjected to or threatened with mistreatment or abuse [Fam. Code § 3424(a)]. Other than protecting the child from immediate harm, the only prerequisite to having emergency jurisdiction under the UCCJEA is the child's presence in this state [In re Jorge G. (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 125, 132, 78 Cal. Rptr. 3d 552 ; In re Angel L. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 1127, 1138, 72 Cal. Rptr. 3d 88 ; In re Nada R. (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 1166, 1174, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 493] . The mere fact the child is in the state because of a need for medical care is not sufficient to invoke the emergency jurisdiction provision of the UCCJEA [In re A.C. (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 854, 863-864, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 431] .

Where a dependency petition and supporting documents contain allegations of an emergency situation [see Fam. Code § 3424(a)] and hence seek to invoke the UCCJEA's emergency jurisdiction, it is appropriate for the juvenile court to issue interim custody orders to protect the child pending a hearing. Thereafter the juvenile court may conduct a full and fair evidentiary hearing to determine whether an emergency actually exists and therefore whether it properly has jurisdiction [In re C.T. (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 101, 107, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 897 (construing UCCJEA); In re Joseph D. (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 678, 688-689, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 574 (construing provisions of former UCCJA)].

One appellate court has held that unlike under the former UCCJA, the normal jurisdiction hearing held by the juvenile court to determine if the allegations under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 are true is not a hearing to determine temporary emergency jurisdiction under the UCCJEA, but rather goes beyond what is needed to determine if a temporary emergency exists for temporary emergency jurisdiction under the UCCJEA [In re C.T. (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 101, 108, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 897] . As that court noted, "the hearing to determine whether an emergency exists under the Act is a procedure separate and distinct from the section 300 jurisdictional hearing" [In re C.T. (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 101, 109, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 897] . While that is true, it does not mean that in an appropriate case the juvenile court cannot combine such hearings to avoid unnecessary delays, the duplication of evidence, and judicial time, just as jurisdiction and disposition hearings are often combined for the purpose of taking evidence. Even in C.T. the appellate court recognized that although the finding of jurisdiction under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 was not authorized by the UCCJEA until after the court properly determined it had emergency jurisdiction, the true finding under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 "necessarily included a finding under the Act that an emergency existed and it was necessary to protect [the child] from actual or threatened mistreatment or abuse" [In re C.T. (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 101, 109, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 897] .

Regardless, the provisions for temporary emergency jurisdiction set forth in Fam. Code § 3424(a) are intended by the Legislature to be an expansion of the grounds on which the court may exercise temporary emergency jurisdiction and is intended to include the grounds set forth in Fam. Code former § 3403 as that section read on December 31, 1999, "particularly including cases involving domestic violence" [Fam. Code § 3424(e)]. Indeed, it is the intent of the Legislature to "afford all children found in California the protection of California's juvenile court in exigent circumstances" [In re Angel L. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 1127, 1138, 72 Cal. Rptr. 3d 88] .

When a court assumes emergency jurisdiction, it must remember that such jurisdiction is of a temporary nature and the court must therefore take steps to determine whether it is the appropriate forum to continue to determine the matter of the child's custody [In re Joseph D. (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 678, 689-694, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 574 (construing provisions of former UCCJA)]. This does not mean, however, that emergency jurisdiction cannot continue to exist even after the jurisdiction hearing. If the risk of harm that creates the emergency is ongoing, the court continues to have jurisdiction to prevent that harm [In re Jorge G. (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 125, 132, 78 Cal. Rptr. 3d 552 ; In re Angel L. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 1127, 1139, 72 Cal. Rptr. 3d 88 ; In re Nada R. (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 1166, 1174-1176, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 493] . When the court makes a finding of dependency jurisdiction and issues an actual custody order after determining an emergency exists, it does not do so under the court's emergency jurisdiction, but rather under Fam. Code §§ 3421 or 3423, "which are not emergency jurisdiction provisions" [In re C.T. (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 101, 113, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 897] . Thus, before proceeding to making such a custody determination, the juvenile court must have found a basis for jurisdiction under the UCCJEA other than simply temporary emergency jurisdiction.

When the court becomes aware there is an existing child custody order from another state or nation, it must take immediate steps to determine whether that other state or nation desires to exercise or defer its jurisdiction, and, if the matter is ultimately to be resolved by that other state or nation, what period of time is reasonably necessary for that other state or nation to resume consideration of the custody dispute and to make its own further custody orders. This latter information is necessary so the juvenile court in California can know what expiration date to put on any temporary protective custody order it makes under its emergency jurisdiction [In re C.T. (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 101, 109, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 897] . Communication with a court in another state is mandatory if there is an existing child custody order or a pending proceeding in the other state, otherwise it is discretionary [Fam. Code §§ 3410(a), 3424(d), 3426(b); In re Angel L. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 1127, 1138-1139, 72 Cal. Rptr. 3d 88] . Even where discretionary, the better practice is to at least attempt such communication.

The communication between the courts must be made as soon as reasonably possible after learning of an existing proceeding or custody order in another state or nation [Fam. Code § 3424(d); In re C.T. (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 101, 110, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 897] . This does not mean the court must stop the proceeding the instant it learns of the possible applicability of the UCCJEA and immediately telephone the court in the other state or nation. It does mean, however, the court must make that communication "shortly thereafter" [In re C.T. (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 101, 110, n.8, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 897] . While a verbatim recording of the communication is not required, it is necessary that a record be made that can be retrieved in a perceivable form. That can include the notes or transcripts of a court reporter who actually listened to the conference call between the states, a memorandum or electronic record of the communication between the courts, or a memorandum or electronic record made by the court after the communication. Thus, a written memorandum by the court to the file or the verbal recitation of the contents of the communication made by the judicial officer in a hearing at which there is a court reporter is sufficient [In re C.T. (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 101, 110-111, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 897] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Importance of Immediate Communication With Out-of-State Court and the Making of a Record.

In the case of In re Joseph D. (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 678, 693, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 574 , the juvenile court made some effort to contact the court in Pennsylvania that had previously made domestic custody orders for the purpose of discussing the matter of which court should exercise jurisdiction. The record was not clear as to exactly what transpired, however, and no direct communication between judicial officers of the two states was ever accomplished. The same lack of clarity in the record existed in the Nada R. case in which the appellate court noted the record was "unclear whether the juvenile court attempted to communicate with the Saudi Arabian court at any time before or after the jurisdictional hearing" [In re Nada R. (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 1166, 1176, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 493] . While a verbatim transcript of the communication would best avoid any disputes as to what actually was said between the two courts, a verbatim transcript is not required [In re C.T. (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 101, 112, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 897] . A clear record is needed, however, so all parties and the appellate court, if necessary, can know what communications were made.

Direct, immediate interstate judicial communication and consultation is not discretionary in such circumstances, it is mandatory [see Fam. Code § 3424(d); In re C.T. (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 101, 110-111, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 897] . As such, every participant in the dependency proceedings should encourage the court to communicate and consult interstate and to make the record clear as to exactly what transpired in that communication. Counsel should consider requesting to be present when this communication takes place and that a court reporter also be present. Generally, the court should consider such requests favorably. Where possible, telephonic communication should be followed up by written confirmation so that the record is complete.

When making an order of temporary emergency jurisdiction when there is no child custody determination or pending proceeding in the other state, the court should indicate its order shall become a final determination on a specified date, which should be on or after the date by which California would otherwise become the child's home state [Fam. Code §

3424(b)]. If it is not known if there is such a custody determination or pending proceeding in the other state, the court should also consider making such an order, so that if it is learned there is no custody determination or pending proceeding in the other state, or if such a proceeding is not started, the California court's order for temporary emergency jurisdiction will become a final determination [Fam. Code § 3424(b)]. This practice is important since it may be difficult to get another state, or especially another country, to communicate with the court or expressly decline jurisdiction [Fam. Code § 3421(a)(2)-(3)].

[4] Authority to Decline UCCJEA Jurisdiction

Even when the court's jurisdiction is not based upon an emergency situation but is instead based upon one of the other grounds for continuing UCCJEA jurisdiction, the juvenile court may determine that it is an inconvenient forum for the determination of custody based on the circumstances of the case and the availability of a court in another state that is a more appropriate forum [Fam. Code § 3427]. Before making a decision of whether to retain or decline jurisdiction the court should communicate with the court of the other state and exchange information pertinent to the question of the assumption of jurisdiction, the resolution of any emergency, the protection of the child and parties, and the period of duration of any temporary orders [Fam. Code § 3424(d)]. The UCCJEA, as with the former UCCJA, contains no provisions for the transfer of jurisdiction between courts in such cases. Instead, one court is to exercise its own jurisdiction granted under its own state laws and the other court is to decline to exercise the jurisdiction granted to it by its state laws or stay its proceedings [see Fam. Code § 3427(c)].

[5] Notice Under the Hague Convention

While other countries are not signatories to the UCCJEA and their child custody laws may not be similar to the UCCJEA, notice is separate issue. When one of the parents resides in the other country, notice must be given to that parent under the Hague Convention on the Service Abroad of Judicial and Extrajudicial Documents in Civil or Commercial Matters [In re Jorge G. (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 125, 134, 78 Cal. Rptr. 3d 552 ; In re Alyssa F. (2003) 112 Cal. App. 4th 846, 852, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1] . The Hague Convention generally requires notice through a designated central authority, but Article 10 of the convention permits the sending of judicial documents by other means, including through postal channels, if not objected to by the destination country. The exact requirements and meaning of Article 10 and whether the documents that can be sent by postal means includes notice has been the subject of great dispute both throughout this nation and this state. Many courts that hold notice cannot be sent through the mails cite the case of Honda Motor Co. v. Superior Court (1992) 10 Cal. App. 4th 1043, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 861 , which concluded Article 10 of the Hague Convention did not authorize the sending of notice by postal means. But the same court that handed down the Honda Motor Co. decision has looked at the issue more recently, this time considering a U.S. State Department declaration, Special Commission Reports, the understanding of the signatories, and the Handbook on the Convention that were not considered by the court in the Honda Motor Co. case. It concluded "the view that article 10(a) allows service of process by mail represents the better position" [Denlinger v. Chinadotcom Corp. (2003) 110 Cal. App. 4th 1396, 1404, 2 Cal. Rptr. 3d 530] . It is anticipated the Denlinger decision will be followed by other courts in the future due to its more thorough examination of the issue based on additional evidence and authority. Nevertheless, even if service of notice by postal means is authorized by the Hague Convention, notice still must comply with the requirements for the type of notice being given of both California and the destination nation [In re Jorge G. (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 125, 134, 78 Cal. Rptr. 3d 552 ; In re Alyssa F. (2003) 112 Cal. App. 4th 846, 853-854, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1] .

The country to which California dependency notice must be sent most often is Mexico. It has generally been assumed that Mexico has not objected to notice by other means, including postal channels, under Article 10 of the convention [In re Alyssa F. (2003) 112 Cal. App. 4th 846, 854, n.10, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1 , citing the United States State Department website]. But that has recently come into question [OGM, Inc. v. Televisa, S.A. (C.D. Cal., Apr. 15, 2009, No. CV 08-5742- JFW (JCx)) 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 33409] . How the typically delayed service through a central authority could possibly work in dependency proceedings in which the child needs timely decision making is subject to serious question. This is an area to be watched for further developments.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
E. Subject Matter and Dependency Jurisdiction

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.83

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.83 Servicemembers' Civil Relief Act

The Servicemembers' Civil Relief Act (SCRA) replaced the Soldiers and Sailors Civil Relief Act. The SCRA essentially acts to strengthen and expedite national defense by providing servicemembers with protection in civil proceedings so the servicemember may devote his or her full energies to national defense [In re A.R. (2009) 170 Cal. App. 4th 733, 740-741, 88 Cal. Rptr. 3d 448 , citing 50 U.S.C. Appen. § 502]. An application to the juvenile court for a stay under the SCRA must include a letter or other form of communication setting forth the manner in which current military duty requirements materially affect the servicemember's ability to appear and the date when he or she will be available to appear. It must also include a letter or other form of communication from the servicemember's commanding officer stating the servicemember's current military duty prevents appearance and that military leave is not authorized for the servicemember at the time of the letter [50 USCS Appx § 522(b)(2)]. If the application meets these requirements, a 90-day stay must be granted [50 USCS Appx § 522(b)(1); In re A.R. (2009) 170 Cal. App. 4th 733, 741-742, 88 Cal. Rptr. 3d 448 ; George P. v. Superior Court (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 216, 224-225, 24 Cal. Rptr. 3d 919] . Thereafter, additional stays are discretionary.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
E. Subject Matter and Dependency Jurisdiction

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.84

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.84 Grounds for Dependency Jurisdiction

[1] Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 in General

Any child may be adjudged to be a dependent of the juvenile court on any of the grounds set forth in Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(a)-(j) [see In re Jonathan B. (1992) 5 Cal. App. 4th 873, 875-876, 7 Cal. Rptr. 2d 277 (dependency adjudication is proper if evidence supports any one of dependency grounds set forth in Welf. & Inst. Code § 300)].

A child may be brought within the juvenile court's jurisdiction as a result of the conduct or omission of either or both parents that results in the child being described by Welf. & Inst. Code § 300. There is no requirement that there be jurisdictional allegations regarding conduct by both parents [Welf. & Inst. Code § 302(a); In re John S. (2001) 88 Cal. App. 4th 1140, 1143, 106 Cal. Rptr. 2d 476 ; In re Alysha S. (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 393, 397, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 494 ; In re Jeffrey P. (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 1548, 1552-1554, 267 Cal. Rptr. 764] .

Dependency jurisdiction under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 is taken over the child, not the parents, based upon the harm or risk of harm to the child [In re Joshua G. (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 189, 202, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 213 ; In re Daniel S. (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 903, 916, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 646] . It is for this reason that dependency petitions are not found "true" or "sustained" as to a parent. Instead, they are found true as to the child [California Ctr. for Jud. Educ. and Research, Cal. Judges Benchguides, Benchguide 101: Juvenile Dependency Jurisdiction Hearing (Jan. 2009) §§ 101.5 to 101.6, pp. 101-9 to 101-11]. Thus if the conduct or omission of either parent brings the child within the court's jurisdiction, it is sufficient for a jurisdictional finding [In re Joshua G. (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 189, 202, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 213 ; In re Alysha S. (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 393, 397, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 494] .

Jurisdiction over the parents deals primarily with notice and an opportunity to be heard [In re Joshua G. (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 189, 202, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 213 ; In re Daniel S. (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 903, 916, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 646 ;

In re Antonio F. (1978) 78 Cal. App. 3d 440, 447-450, 144 Cal. Rptr. 466 ; In re B.G. (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 679, 688-689, 114 Cal. Rptr. 444, 523 P.2d 244] .

The current form of Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 is largely the result of Senate Bill 243 [Stats. 1987, ch. 1485]. One appellate court viewed the legislative history of Senate Bill 243 as confirming an "unmistakable intention to narrow the grounds on which children may be subjected to juvenile court jurisdiction" [In re Rocco M. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 814, 823, 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 429] . Thus, the court inferred that in the "absence of cogent reasons for a contrary conclusion, facts held insufficient to satisfy the earlier statute will also fail to satisfy the revised statute" [In re Rocco M. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 814, 823-824, 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 429] . It proceeded to follow the principle, as the law had previously held, that "While evidence of past conduct may be probative of current conditions, the question under section 300 is whether circumstances at the time of the hearing subject the minor to the defined risk of harm" [In re Rocco M. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 814, 824, 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 429] . "Thus the past infliction of physical harm by a caretaker, standing alone, does not establish a substantial risk of physical harm; '[t]here must be some reason to believe the acts may continue in the future' " [In re Rocco M. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 814, 824, 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 429 , quoting In re Jennifer P. (1985) 174 Cal. App. 3d 322, 326, 219 Cal. Rptr. 909] . Numerous cases have perpetuated the Rocco M. holdings [see, e.g., In re Savannah M. (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 1387, 1394, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 526 ; In re Nicholas B. (2001) 88 Cal. App. 4th 1126, 1134, 106 Cal. Rptr. 2d 465 ; In re Brison C. (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 1373, 1379, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 746] . But Rocco M. was not entirely correct.

The legislature did want to limit the number of children removed from their homes inappropriately. That is not the same, however, as narrowing the grounds for dependency jurisdiction. As evidenced by the report of the committee that drafted Senate Bill 243, the legislature's unmistakable intention was not to narrow the grounds for dependency jurisdiction, but to clarify and specify the grounds for dependency jurisdiction [Senate Sel. Comm. on Children & Youth/SB 1195 Task Force Rep. on Child Abuse Reporting Laws, Juvenile Court Dependency Statutes, and Child Welfare Services (Jan. 1988) pp. 2-5]. Indeed, the report reflects the changes in Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 were to "clarify areas of uncertainty and enhance the court's ability to protect abused and neglected children" [Senate Sel. Comm. on Children & Youth/SB 1195 Task Force Rep. on Child Abuse Reporting Laws, Juvenile Court Dependency Statutes, and Child Welfare Services (Jan. 1988) p. 2]. The report actually indicated Senate Bill 243 potentially expanded the scope of intervention regarding siblings of children who had been abused [Senate Sel. Comm. on Children & Youth/SB 1195 Task Force Rep. on Child Abuse Reporting Laws, Juvenile Court Dependency Statutes, and Child Welfare Services (Jan. 1988) p. 5]. Significantly, this report documented the intent of the law contained in Senate Bill 243 and has been viewed by the California Supreme Court in that light [Cynthia D. v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 242, 247, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 698, 851 P.2d 1307] . Equally significant, the Rocco M. court did not consider this report. Moreover, the Rocco M. analysis has been examined and this area of the law clarified in the case of In re David H. (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 1626, 1642-1644, 82 Cal. Rptr. 3d 81 , in a manner consistent with this analysis.

The plain language of Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 evidences a clear legislative intent that a child can come under the juvenile court's jurisdiction when a child has "suffered" serious harm or when a child is at "substantial risk" of suffering serious harm [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(a), (b), (d)]. The use of the past tense form "suffered" evidences a clear intent that a child can come under the court's dependency jurisdiction based on past infliction of serious harm by a parent or guardian. This is supported by language throughout the task force report addressing the revised grounds for jurisdiction. For instance, in one place the report echoes the language of the statute noting that "Under SB 243, WIC Section 300(a) specifies that in order for a court to assume jurisdiction, it must find that a child has been injured by a parent or that the child is at 'substantial risk' of injury, and that the injury was 'serious' or was inflicted in such a manner that might have been serious" [Senate Sel. Comm. on Children & Youth/SB 1195 Task Force Rep. on Child Abuse Reporting Laws, Juvenile Court Dependency Statutes, and Child Welfare Services (Jan. 1988) p. 6]. Thus, while Rocco M. is correct that if the jurisdictional allegations are based on risk to the child that risk must be shown to exist as of the date of the jurisdiction hearing. But if the jurisdictional allegations are based on serious harm the child has already suffered, such as serious physical harm or sexual abuse by a parent or guardian, the fact the child has already suffered the harm as a result of a parent's or guardian's act or omission is sufficient to support a true finding [In re David H. (2008) 165 Cal.

App. 4th 1626, 1642-1644, 82 Cal. Rptr. 3d 81] . In such circumstances, the question of current risk becomes one relevant to dispositional considerations such as whether dependency needs to be declared or the child needs to be removed from the home.

At the end of Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 the legislature has included a statement of intent. This includes that it is the intent of the legislature that nothing in Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 should disrupt the family unnecessarily, intrude into family life inappropriately, prohibit reasonable methods of parental discipline, or prescribe a particular parenting method [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300]. The legislature also declared that a physical disability, such as blindness or deafness, is not a bar to raising happy, well-adjusted children. Any finding under this section is to center on whether the parent's disability prevents him or her from exercising appropriate care and control [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300]. Further, a child whose parent is a dependent child of the court shall not be considered at risk of abuse or neglect solely because of the age, dependent status, or foster care status of the parent [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300].

PRACTICE TIP (PARENT'S P.O.V.):

The Impact of Certain Sustained Allegations at Disposition. In deciding how to resolve jurisdiction issues, parent's counsel must look ahead to disposition. Certain allegations may be grounds for a potential bypass of reunification services [see Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361.5(b)(4), (5), (6), (8), (9)].

[2] Serious Physical Harm by Parent or Guardian [Section 300(a)]

The child has suffered, or there is a substantial risk that he or she will suffer, serious physical harm inflicted nonaccidentally by his or her parent or guardian. In this context "guardian" means the legal guardian of the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(a)]. This does not require the parent have intended the child to suffer serious physical harm or to be at substantial risk of such harm, although the evidence may show that. If the Legislature had wanted to require a specific intent on the part of the parent, it could have done so. Instead, it chose the term "nonaccidentally," indicating a volitional act, but without the requirement for a specific intended consequence.

For the purposes of Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(a), a court may find there is a substantial risk of serious future injury based on the manner in which a less serious injury was inflicted, a history of repeated inflictions of injuries on the child or the child's siblings, or a combination of these and other actions by the parent or guardian that indicate the child is at risk of serious physical harm. For the purposes of Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(a), "serious physical harm" does not include reasonable and age-appropriate spanking to the buttocks if there is no evidence of serious physical injury [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(a); see In re Tania S. (1992) 5 Cal. App. 4th 728, 735 n.5, 7 Cal. Rptr. 2d 60 (concluding that state's interest in protecting child from serious physical harm justifies removal over objections by parents based on cultural and religious child rearing beliefs)].

[3] Failure to Adequately Supervise, Protect, or Provide for Child [Section 300(b)]

The child has suffered, or there is a substantial risk that the child will suffer, serious physical harm or illness as a result of (a) the failure or inability of his or her parent or guardian to adequately supervise or protect the child; (b) the willful or negligent failure of the child's parent or guardian to adequately supervise or protect the child from the conduct of the custodian with whom the child has been left; (c) the willful or negligent failure of the parent or guardian to provide the child with adequate food, clothing, shelter, or medical treatment; or (d) the inability of the parent or guardian to provide regular care for the child due to the parent's or guardian's mental illness, developmental disability, or substance abuse. However, no child will be found to be a dependent of the juvenile court for the foregoing reasons solely because of the lack of an emergency shelter for the family [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(b)]. In evaluating the risk of serious physical harm or illness to the child under this subdivision, it is not sufficient for the court to rely on the child's perception of the risk of such harm or illness. The court must evaluate the actual risk. The fact that the parent and child have major differences in politics, beliefs or activities does not justify an assumption of jurisdiction under this subdivision without "a substantial risk of palpable harm to the child" [Nahid H. v. Superior Court (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 1051, 1070, 62

Cal. Rptr. 2d 281] .

Substance abuse by parents is frequently part of the jurisdictional allegations in dependency cases. The question of whether a child born with a positive toxicology for alcohol or other dangerous drugs automatically falls within the jurisdiction of the juvenile court has been answered in the affirmative by the appellate courts [see In re Monique T. (1992) 2 Cal. App. 4th 1372, 1378, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 198 ; In re Troy D. (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 889, 897, 263 Cal. Rptr. 869] . This is especially true when the child is born with a positive toxicology for dangerous drugs and medical treatment is necessary to address the child's withdrawal symptoms [In re Stephen W. (1990) 221 Cal. App. 3d 629, 638-639, 271 Cal. Rptr. 319] . Further, courts have recognized that "prenatal use of dangerous drugs by a mother is probative of future child neglect" [In re Stephen W. (1990) 221 Cal. App. 3d 629, 639, 271 Cal. Rptr. 319] . The enactment of Penal Code § 11165.13 providing that a positive toxicology report alone is not enough to form a basis for a suspected child abuse report, however, suggests that a positive toxicology is now just one of the factors to be considered in determining if a newborn child is at risk [see In re Rocco M. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 814, 825, 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 429 (dependency adjudication was proper when older child had access to drugs at home and mother's neglect of child and her own substance abuse created environment that encouraged child's drug use)]. The significance of substance abuse in dependency cases should not be understated, however [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 300.2]. Moreover, it must be remembered it is the impact of substance abuse on parenting and the danger to the child that is important. As noted by one court, "even legal use of marijuana can be abuse if it presents a risk of harm to minors" [In re Alexis E. (2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 438, 452, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 44 (medical marijuana case)].

Whenever it is alleged that a child comes within the jurisdiction of the court on the basis of the parent's or guardian's willful failure to provide adequate medical treatment or specific decision to provide spiritual treatment through prayer, the court must give deference to the parent's or guardian's medical treatment, nontreatment, or spiritual treatment through prayer alone in accordance with the tenets and practices of a recognized church or religious denomination by an accredited practitioner of the church or denomination, and may not assume jurisdiction unless necessary to protect the child from suffering serious physical harm or illness. In making its determination, the court must consider (a) the nature of the treatment or nontreatment proposed by the parent or guardian; (b) the risks to the child posed by the course of treatment or nontreatment proposed by the parent or guardian; (c) the risk, if any, of the course of treatment being proposed by the petitioning agency; and (d) the likely success of the courses of treatment or nontreatment proposed by the parent or guardian and agency. The child that comes within the jurisdiction of the court on the basis of the parent's or guardian's willful failure to provide adequate medical treatment or specific decision to provide spiritual treatment through prayer must continue to be a dependent child pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(b) only so long as is necessary to protect the child from risk of suffering serious physical harm or illness [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(b)].

[4] Serious Emotional Damage [Section 300(c)]

The child is suffering serious emotional damage, or is at substantial risk of suffering serious emotional damage, evidenced by severe anxiety, depression, withdrawal or untoward aggressive behavior toward self or others, as a result of the conduct of the parent or guardian, or who has no parent or guardian capable of providing adequate care [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(c)].

This subdivision authorizes the taking of jurisdiction under three types of circumstances: where the parent's actions are the initial cause of the child's emotional damage, where the parent's actions are the cause of the child continuing to suffer the emotional damage, and when the parent is unable to provide suitable care for the child's emotional suffering because of the lack of insurance or financial resources [California Ctr. for Jud. Educ. and Research, Cal. Judges Benchguides, Benchguide 101: Juvenile Dependency Jurisdiction Hearing (Jan. 2009) § 101.11, p. 101-16; see also In re Amy M. (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 849, 869-870, 283 Cal. Rptr. 788 (mother unable to put her emotionally fragile child's needs above her own); In re Alexander K. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 549, 559, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 22 (parental conduct branch of § 300(c) seeks to protect against abusive, neglectful and/or exploitative conduct toward a child causing severe emotional harm shown by any of the serious symptoms identified in § 300(c); statute not overly vague)].

The fact that a parent and child are estranged does not automatically mean the child would suffer serious emotional damage if returned to or continued in the custody of the parent [In re Brison C. (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 1373, 1379-1383, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 746] . Some evidence, such as an evaluation or testimony by a psychologist or therapist, will usually be needed to justify jurisdiction under this subdivision in such circumstances [see Nahid H. v. Superior Court (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 1051, 1070, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 281] .

No child will be found to be a person described by Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(c) if the willful failure of the parent or guardian to provide adequate mental health treatment is based on a sincerely held religious belief and if a less intrusive judicial intervention is available [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(c)].

[5] Sexual Abuse [Section 300(d)]

The child has been sexually abused, or there is a substantial risk that the child will be sexually abused, as defined in Penal Code § 11165.1, by his or her parent or guardian or a member of his or her household, or the parent or guardian has failed to adequately protect the child from sexual abuse when the parent or guardian knew or reasonably should have known that the child was in danger of sexual abuse [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(d); In re Tiffany Y. (1990) 223 Cal. App. 3d 298, 303, 272 Cal. Rptr. 733] . The identity of the actual perpetrator of the molest is not essential to a finding under this subsection if it can be shown that the child was molested and that the parent was either unable or unwilling to protect the child [In re Christina T. (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 630, 640, 229 Cal. Rptr. 247 ; see Welf. & Inst. Code § 355.1]. For purposes of dependency proceedings, a person is a member of a child's household if that person is "continually or frequently found in the same household as the child" [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.502(18)]. This takes into account the nontraditional and quasi-familial living arrangements that occur in many American homes, and recognizes that not all members of the household actually reside within the home. Being a member of a household may be more about the relationship between people than the number of hours actually spent in the house [cf. People v. Jeffers (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 984, 992, 239 Cal. Rptr. 886, 741 P.2d 1127] .

Penal Code § 11165.1 defines "sexual abuse" as sexual assault or sexual exploitation as defined by Penal Code § 11165.1(a)-(c). "Sexual assault" is conduct in violation of criminal statutes prohibiting rape, statutory rape, rape in concert, incest, sodomy, lewd or lascivious acts on a child under 14 years of age, oral copulation, penetration of a genital or anal opening by a foreign object, or child molestation [see Penal Code § 11165.1(a); see also Penal Code §§ 261, 264.1, 285, 286, 288a, 289, 647a]. Penal Code § 11165.1 also contains a nonexclusive enumeration by description of further conduct constituting "sexual assault" that should be looked to when the dependency jurisdictional allegations do not fit squarely within one of crimes listed in Penal Code § 11165.1(a) [see Penal Code § 11165.1(b)(1)-(4)].

"Sexual exploitation" refers to matter depicting children engaged in obscene acts in violation of criminal statutes that prohibit preparing, selling, or distributing obscene matter, and employing children to perform obscene acts [see Penal Code § 11165.1(c)(1); see also Penal Code §§ 311.2, 311.4(a)]; knowingly promoting, aiding, assisting, employing, using, persuading, inducing, coercing, permitting, or encouraging a child either to (a) engage in, or assist others to engage in, prostitution or live performance involving obscene sexual conduct, or (b) to either pose or model alone or with others for purposes of preparing a film, photograph, negative, slide, drawing, painting, or other pictorial depiction, involving obscene sexual conduct [see Penal Code § 11165.1(c)(2)]; or depicting a child in, or knowingly developing, duplicating, printing, or exchanging any film, photograph, videotape, negative, or slide in which a child is engaged in an act of obscene sexual conduct [see Penal Code § 11165.1(c)(3)]. One court has held the reference to "obscene" acts or conduct in Penal Code § 11165.1 is "surplusage from a bygone era, which we may safely disregard" [In re Ulysses D. (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 1092, 1098, 18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 430] . It held that photographs of a child engaged in sexual conduct do not have to be obscene to bring the child within the juvenile court's jurisdiction [In re Ulysses D. (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 1092, 1098, 18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 430] .

Although sexual abuse and sexual exploitation may be the result of conduct accompanied by a specific sexual intent, not all such offenses are specific intent offenses. Moreover, as noted by the legislative report that accompanied the enactment of the language found in Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(d), "All instances of sexual behavior between an adult and child are covered" [Sen. Sel. Comm. on Children & Youth/SB 1195 Task Force Rep. on Child Abuse Reporting Laws, Juvenile Court Dependency Statutes, and Child Welfare Services (Jan. 1988) p. 5]. Further, the intent of the law is to provide the maximum safety and protection for children being abused, neglected, or exploited, or who are at risk of such abuse, neglect, or exploitation [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300.2]. Providing maximum protection to the child could also include protection from sexual abuse or risk of sexual abuse that is the result of conduct by a sibling. It more commonly, however, addresses protection from sexual abuse or the risk of sexual abuse by a parent or other adult member of the household. In one case the appellate court upheld the finding that one girl had been molested and her sister was at substantial risk of sexual abuse but, despite acknowledging that such abuse could endanger brothers as well, found the evidence failed to show the girl's two brothers were at substantial risk of sexual abuse [In re Rubisela E. (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 177, 196-199, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 760 (addressing allegation under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(j) but analysis of risk the same as under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(d))]. In other cases, however, the risk to siblings has been found. Each case must be viewed based on the evidence of risk presented.

One appellate court went so far as to find that an 8-year-old boy had been sexually abused within the meaning of Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(d) even though he had not been present when his 11-year-old sister was raped by the father, since he had seen his sister beaten by the father and was told by his sister about the rape immediately thereafter. The appellate court found the boy was not only at risk of sexual abuse, but that he had been sexually abused [In re Karen R. (2001) 95 Cal. App. 4th 84, 89-91, 115 Cal. Rptr. 18] . While other courts may not go as far as the court in Karen R. in finding sexual abuse actually happened, the case demonstrates how broadly the sexual abuse provisions of Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(d) will be read by courts to protect children.

[6] Severe Physical Abuse of Young Child [Section 300(e)]

The child is under the age of 5 and has suffered severe physical abuse by a parent, or by any person known by the parent, if the parent knew or reasonably should have known that the person was physically abusing the child. For the purposes of Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(e), "severe physical abuse" means (1) any single act of abuse that causes physical trauma of sufficient severity that, if left untreated, would cause permanent physical disfigurement, permanent physical disability, or death; (2) any single act of sexual abuse that causes significant bleeding, deep bruising, or significant external or internal swelling; or (3) more than one act of physical abuse, each of which causes bleeding, deep bruising, significant external or internal swelling, bone fracture, or unconsciousness. "Severe physical abuse" also includes the willful, prolonged failure to provide adequate food [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(e)].

This subdivision does not require that the parent personally inflict the severe physical abuse. It is enough to sustain a petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(e) if the parent knew or reasonably should have known the child was being abused [In re E.H. (2003) 108 Cal. App. 4th 659, 667-670, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 740 ; In re Joshua H. (1993) 13 Cal. App. 4th 1718, 1729, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 282] . Even when there is no identifiable perpetrator, jurisdiction under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(e) may still be found based on circumstantial evidence, such as where a child was in the custody of the parents and there is no claim anyone else abused the child. "Otherwise, a family could stonewall the Department and its social workers concerning the origin of a child's injuries and escape a jurisdictional finding under subsection (e)" [In re E.H. (2003) 108 Cal. App. 4th 659, 670, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 740] . Further, resort to the presumption found in Welf. & Inst. Code § 355.1 is not required in such cases [In re E.H. (2003) 108 Cal. App. 4th 659, 669-670, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 740] . The child may not be removed from the physical custody of his or her parent or guardian on the basis of a finding of severe physical abuse, however, unless the social worker has made an allegation of severe physical abuse pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 332, which sets forth the required contents of a juvenile court petition [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(e)].

[7] Causing the Death of Another Child by Neglect or Abuse [Section 300(f)]

The child's parent or guardian has caused the death of another child through neglect or abuse [Welf. & Inst. Code §

300(f)]. It should be noted that previously this subdivision had required that the parent or guardian be convicted of causing the death of the other child before the protection of this subdivision applied [see Welf. & Inst. Code former § 300(f); In re Jessica F. (1991) 229 Cal. App. 3d 769, 776-778, 282 Cal. Rptr. 303] . A conviction is no longer necessary. If there is a conviction, however, it is not required that the conviction be for murder or manslaughter. The court can look behind any lesser conviction to determine whether the facts of the case justify a finding that the parent or guardian caused the death of the other child through abuse or neglect [In re Jessica F. (1991) 229 Cal. App. 3d 769, 776-778, 282 Cal. Rptr. 303] . It should be remembered, however, that plea bargains in criminal cases are entered into for a wide variety of reasons, including a recognition that the evidence may not support a conviction for murder or manslaughter. As such, it should not be presumed that a conviction for a lesser offense related to a child's death automatically means the parent or guardian caused the death of the child within the meaning of Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(f). Instead, the particular facts of the individual case should be reviewed carefully to see whether the parent or guardian caused the death of the other child through abuse or neglect as described in this jurisdictional subdivision [California Ctr. for Jud. Educ. and Research, Cal. Judges Benchguides, Benchguide 101: Juvenile Dependency Jurisdiction Hearing (Jan. 2009) § 101.14, p 101-19].

PRACTICE TIP:

A Double-Edged Sword. The change in the law allowing for a child to come under the provisions of Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(f) without the necessity of a conviction may create a nightmare for social services agencies and juvenile courts in cases where the criminal matter has yet to proceed to trial. In those cases, defense counsel may attempt to use the dependency proceedings as a discovery vehicle for their criminal case, thereby turning the dependency jurisdiction hearing into a mini-murder trial. Agencies should accordingly exercise caution in utilizing this provision as a basis for jurisdiction. The change in the law, however, does obviate the need for the criminal conviction to be final or for there to have been any criminal proceeding at all before the juvenile court can assume jurisdiction under this subdivision. Further, where the conviction is final, collateral estoppel will still preclude its relitigation in the dependency court. As such, the changes in the law in this subdivision may properly be viewed as a double-edged sword for each side.

[8] Child Left Without Provision for Support or Voluntarily Surrendered [Section 300(g)]

The child has been left without any provision for support; the child's parent has been incarcerated or institutionalized and cannot arrange for the care of the child; or a relative or other adult custodian with whom the child resides or has been left is unwilling or unable to provide care or support for the child, the whereabouts of the parent is unknown, and reasonable efforts to locate the parent have been unsuccessful [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(g)]. An incarcerated or institutionalized parent has no burden to prove the arrangements for care the parent has made are suitable [In re S.D. (2002) 99 Cal. App. 4th 1068, 1078, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 518] . Instead, the burden is on the social services agency to prove the jurisdictional allegations [In re Kieshia E. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 68, 79 n.8, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 775, 859 P.2d 1290 ; In re Amy M. (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 849, 859, 283 Cal. Rptr. 788] .

The statutory language does not expressly require the care the parent arranges for the child ensure the child's safety, protection, or physical or emotional well-being [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(g)]. As such, one case has held the arrangements made by an incarcerated or institutionalized parent do not have to be suitable to defeat dependency jurisdiction under this subdivision [In re S.D. (2002) 99 Cal. App. 4th 1068, 1079, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 518] . This holding is an anomaly, however, and inconsistent with the overall purpose of the statutory scheme to ensure the safety and well-being of children [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300.2].

The better view is set forth in two earlier decisions that held the arrangements made by the incarcerated or institutionalized parent had to be adequate or suitable [In re Monica C. (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 296, 305, 36 Cal. Rptr. 2d 910 (the statute "requires only that an incarcerated parent arrange adequately for the care of the child during the period of his or her incarceration"); In re Aaron S. (1991) 228 Cal. App. 3d 202, 212, 278 Cal. Rptr. 861 ("the Legislature did not intend dependencies to be established under this statute where the incarcerated parent is able to make suitable arrangements for his or her children's care"); see also In re Rocco M. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 814, 824, 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 429 (regarding Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(b), "the fact that a child has been left with other caretakers will not warrant a finding of dependency if the child receives good care")]. These decisions impliedly construe the statutory language as part of the overall statutory scheme to provide for the safety, protection, physical and emotional well being of children [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300.2]. This is how dependency statutes should be construed [Cynthia D. v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 242, 253, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 698, 851 P.2d 1307 ; In re Christina A. (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 1153, 1162, 111 Cal. Rptr. 2d 310] .

Providing care for a child involves more than just providing a roof over the child's head. It can involve a whole host of things, including enrolling the child in preschool, authorizing medical care, and having the right to the return of the child if the child wanders off and gets lost. If an incarcerated parent is not able to arrange care that provides for such things, jurisdiction under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(g) may be appropriate [In re Athena P. (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 617, 629, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 46 (distinguishing its facts from those of the S.D. case and finding substantial evidence supported the finding of jurisdiction under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(g)); see also In re Isayah C. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 684, 696, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 198 (noting if the incarcerated parent can make "suitable arrangements" for the care of the child there is no basis for jurisdiction)]. For a child, particularly a very young child, care that is inadequate or unsuitable is not care at all. Thus, while the incarcerated or institutionalized parent bears no burden to prove his or her arrangements for the care of the child are suitable, if the social services agency can prove the arrangements are not adequate or suitable, jurisdiction under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(g) can be sustained.

As of January 1, 2001, jurisdiction may now also taken under this subdivision when the parent voluntarily surrenders an infant 72 hours old or younger pursuant to Health & Safety Code § 1255.7 and the child has not been reclaimed within the 14-day period specified in Health & Safety Code § (e) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(g)]. Provisions for the surrender of such an infant have been expanded since the original passage of the Safe Haven Law. They now permit the infant to have been surrendered at any "safe surrender site" as defined in Health & Safety Code § 1255.7(a)(1), which includes a location designated by the county board of supervisors, or a location within a private or public hospital designated by the hospital for such surrenders [Health & Safety Code § 1255.7(a)(1)]. Any such site must post a sign utilizing the statewide logo for a safe surrender site [Health & Safety Code § 1255.7(a)(3)]. A parent or other individual who surrenders an infant 72 hours old or younger under the Safe Haven Law cannot be prosecuted for a violation of Penal Code §§ 270, 270.5, 271, or 271a [Penal Code § 271.5(a)].

[9] Child Freed for Adoption or Without Adoption Petition [Section 300(h)]

The child has been freed for adoption from one or both parents for 12 months by either relinquishment or termination of parental rights, or an adoption petition has not been granted [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(h)].

[10] Acts of Cruelty [Section 300(i)]

The child has been subjected to an act or acts of cruelty by the parent or guardian or a member of his or her household, or the parent or guardian has failed to adequately protect the child from an act or acts of cruelty when the parent or guardian knew or reasonably should have known that the child was in danger of being subjected to an act or acts of cruelty [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(i)]. This subdivision does not define cruelty. Many people consider sexual molestation or severe physical abuse of a young child to be cruelty, and they may be in certain instances. But if cruelty was already necessarily included in other subdivisions of Welf. & Inst. Code § 300, this separate subdivision would not be required. One approach is to ask whether the cruelty alleged "shocks the conscience." If it does jurisdiction under this subdivision is appropriate regardless of whether the acts or omissions of the parent or member of the household were sexual, physical, or some other form of abuse or neglect.

[11] Abuse or Neglect of Sibling [Section 300(j)]

A petition filed under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(j) is often referred to as a "sibling petition." It applies when the child's sibling has been abused or neglected, as defined in Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(a), (b), (d), (e), or (i), and there is a substantial risk the child will be abused or neglected, as defined in those subdivisions. Thus, there are two prongs to this jurisdictional subdivision: the child's sibling has been abused or neglected as defined in the applicable subdivisions, and there is a substantial risk that this child will be abused or neglected as defined in the applicable subdivisions [In re Ricardo L. (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 552, 566, 135 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72] . There is no requirement in the language of the statute that the child's sibling to have been adjudicated as a dependent under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(a), (b), (d), (e), or (i). The first prong of the statute merely requires the child's sibling to have been abused or neglected as defined in the relevant subdivisions of Welf. & Inst. Code § 300. If the child's sibling has been so adjudicated, however, the parent is barred from relitigating the prior abuse or neglect of the child's sibling by the collateral estoppel aspect of the doctrine of res judicata [In re Joshua J. (1995) 39 Cal. App. 4th 984, 992-993, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 491] . It should also be noted there is no requirement in the language of the statute that the child's sibling still be a minor for this subdivision to apply. It is enough that the child's sibling, who may now be an adult, was abused or neglected while a minor as defined in one of the applicable subdivisions, and the current child is at substantial risk of abuse or neglect as defined in those subdivisions [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(j)].

In considering the second prong of the statute, that of substantial risk, the court must consider the circumstances surrounding the abuse or neglect of the sibling, the age and gender of each child, the nature of the abuse or neglect of the sibling, the mental condition of the parent or guardian, and any other factors the court considers probative in determining whether there is a substantial risk to the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(j)]. This can include consideration of any special circumstance of the already adjudicated prior abuse or neglect of the child's sibling that renders similar abuse or neglect of the present child unlikely to occur [In re Joshua J. (1995) 39 Cal. App. 4th 984, 994-995, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 491] . Sexual abuse of a sibling can support a finding of jurisdiction under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(j), if substantial risk to the child of the same or similar abuse is shown [In re Jason L. (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 1206, 1215, 272 Cal. Rptr. 316] . Further, brothers of molested sisters can also be molested within a family [In re Rubisela E. (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 177, 198, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 760 , citing In re Mark C. (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 433, 439, 8 Cal. Rptr. 2d 856] . But it cannot automatically be assumed that because one child is molested or abused, all other children in the home are at the risk of the same or similar abuse. If there is no evidence the other children are at substantial risk, a finding of jurisdiction under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(j) cannot be supported [In re Rubisela E. (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 177, 198, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 760 (no showing brothers were at risk despite evidence sister was molested)]. Further, if a petition is filed on a child because the child's sibling has already been adjudicated a dependent under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(a), (b), (d), (e), or (i), there still must be evidence introduced of that abuse or neglect and that the child for whom this petition is filed is at substantial risk of the same or similar abuse or neglect. In the absence of such evidence, the fact the siblings are already dependents will not be enough to justify a finding under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(j) [In re Ricardo L. (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 552, 566-569, 135 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Be Sure All Your Evidence Is Admitted. When cases are filed under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(j) based in part on a previous adjudication of a sibling as a dependent, practitioners often mistakenly believe the evidence from the sibling's dependency file will be considered as part of the record for the new case. That is not true unless steps are taken to make it happen. As the appellate court noted in the Ricardo L. case, it appeared the juvenile court relied on evidence that was outside the record and that the appellate court was not privy to. The court noted that if the social services agency wanted evidence from the sibling's case to be considered by the court it should have ensured the court took judicial notice of those documents, or that the court stated on the record it had considered those documents, or that the social services agency attached those documents from the sibling's case to the social worker's report in the current case and incorporated them by reference [In re Ricardo L. (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 552, 569, 135 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72] . Do not assume that because everyone in the courtroom knows about the sibling's case that the juvenile court can rely on that knowledge without steps being taken to introduce that information into evidence.

[12] Independence of Each Jurisdictional Allegation

Jurisdictional allegations may be filed under as many subdivisions of Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 as accurately describe the harm or risk of harm suffered by the child. The allegations under each subdivision alleged, however, must be sufficient to support a jurisdictional finding without regard to the other subdivisions alleged. As stated by the judicial benchguide on the topic, "A simple test to determine this is to ask whether the allegations under one subdivision would be sufficient to support a jurisdictional finding if the allegations under the other subdivisions were found to be untrue" [California Ctr. for Jud. Educ. and Research, Cal. Judges Benchguides, Benchguide 101: Juvenile Dependency Jurisdiction Hearing (Jan. 2009) § 101.7, p. 101-11].

For instance, if the child was brought to the attention of authorities due to sexual molest by the stepfather in the mother's home with the mother failing to protect, and with the father's whereabouts being unknown, an allegation under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(d) could be filed and sustained. This would be true even if the father's whereabouts was known. But an allegation under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(g) alleging the father's whereabouts was unknown could not be sustained under this factual scenario. This is because if the stepfather had not molested the child, there would be no need to assume jurisdiction regardless of the fact that the father's whereabouts was unknown. The allegation under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(d) stands on its own. The allegation under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(g) does not. Thus, under these facts the allegation under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(d) could be properly pled and sustained, but the allegation under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(g) could not.

The filing and sustaining of both such allegations is a common mistake by practitioners and courts who forget or do not understand that jurisdiction is taken over the child, not the parents, and that there is no need to plead jurisdictional facts regarding both parents if the conduct or omissions of one parent bring the child within the court's jurisdiction [In re Alysha S. (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 393, 397, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 494 ; In re Jeffrey P. (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 1548, 1552-1554, 267 Cal. Rptr. 764] . The concern that if no jurisdictional allegation is made about each parent any parent not included in such allegations will be entitled to custody of the child is incorrect. It is true that if the court removes the child from the custodial parent who abused, failed to protect, or neglected the child and the previously noncustodial parent about whom no jurisdictional allegations were pled seeks custody, that parent is entitled to custody of the child. But if such placement would be detrimental to the safety, protection, or physical or emotional well-being of the child, the child will not be placed with that parent [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(a)]. Thus, the question of the appropriateness of the home of the other parent, if that parent was not involved in conduct or omission that harmed the child or placed the child at risk of harm, is determined when that parent steps forward and seeks custody, not as part of the jurisdictional allegations or hearing. If, of course, the other parent actually did fail to protect the child from harm, such failure should be part of the primary jurisdictional allegation, not a missing parent count pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(g).

[13] Protection From Negative Effects of Substance Abuse

While not changing the grounds for jurisdiction under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 or existing case law regarding dependency jurisdiction, the legislature has indicated in a statement of legislative purpose that it views the "provision of a home environment free from the negative effects of substance abuse" as a necessary condition for the "safety, protection and physical and emotional well-being" of children [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300.2]. This statement by the legislature has a firm basis in fact. Those who work in and around the juvenile dependency system learn very quickly that the majority of cases are impacted in some way by substance abuse. Abuse of substances does not have to rise to the level of addiction to impact a person's parenting or to place a child at risk. Nevertheless, notwithstanding this statement of legislative purpose, a child does not come within the juvenile court's dependency jurisdiction solely as a result of a parent or guardian's substance abuse unless it can be shown that such abuse of substances has impacted the person's ability to care for the child to the degree that the health and safety of the child is placed at risk [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(b)].

The impact of the legislative view expressed in Welf. & Inst. Code § 300.2--that a home free from the negative effects of substance abuse is a prerequisite for the safety, protection, and physical and emotional well-being of the child--may have its greatest impact at disposition and review hearings at which the court must decide whether placement with the parent or guardian would put the child at substantial risk. The "safety, protection and physical and emotional well-being" of children is the standard by which decisions regarding placements with parents are made [see Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361(c)(1), 366.21(e), (f), 366.22]. Because the Legislature sees the negative impact of substance abuse as a major factor in determining whether a home poses a risk to the child's safety, protection, and physical and emotional well-being, dependency courts and practitioners must also seriously consider evidence of substance abuse in those placement decisions.

While emphasizing the negative impact of substance abuse by assessing the risk to the child does not change the requirement that the agency must factually show that substance abuse in the home is negatively affecting parenting in addition to placing the child at risk, it does underscore the importance the courts should give this issue in their decisions. It is a significant legislative addition to the statutory scheme, and an area that practitioners should watch for future developments.

For further discussion of the connection between parental substance abuse and dependency, and steps to take to address parental substance abuse in dependency cases, see Milliken & Rippel, Effective Management of Parental Substance Abuse in Dependency Cases, 5 J. Center Children & Cts. 95 (2004).

[14] Family Violence as Basis for Jurisdiction

Family violence, which is often called domestic violence, includes physically abusive and violent acts by one family member against another member of the family [Kashani & Allan, The Impact of Family Violence on Children and Adolescents (Sage 1998) pp. 3-4]. The term "family member" includes, of course, stepparents and "significant others" who reside in or are frequently in the home. While family violence is frequently thought of as being violence between adult members of the family, it is not limited to such violence. As noted by one respected author, "Child abuse is a particular type of domestic violence" [Ann M. Haralambie, Domestic Violence, in Child Welfare Law and Practice: Representing Children, Parents, and State Agencies in Abuse, Neglect, and Dependency Cases (Bradford Pub. 2005) § 12D.1, p. 257]. Family violence may also include sibling violence and elder abuse [Kashani & Allan, The Impact of Family Violence on Children and Adolescents (Sage 1998) pp. 30-31, 41-44]. When family violence is perpetrated by an adult family member toward a child, the basis for dependency jurisdiction is clear both as to that child and any other children in the home who are at risk of the same violence or who suffer from exposure to that violence [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(a)-(c)]. When family violence is perpetrated by one sibling against another sibling and the parent fails to protect the child victim or allows other children to be exposed to or at risk of that violence, dependency jurisdiction may also be found [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(b)-(c)]. When the family violence is spousal or partner abuse, however, consideration must be given to whether the child has suffered or is at substantial risk of suffering serious physical or emotional harm or illness from exposure to that violence [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(a)-(c)].

In dependency cases, there is no requirement that the abusing parent have been convicted in criminal court of family violence before the juvenile court can act. Indeed, even if criminal charges are dropped, juvenile court protection for the child may be both necessary and best [In re Sylvia R. (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 559, 562-563, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 93] . As noted by one court, "Domestic violence is always a serious concern, and any propensity to it is certainly highly relevant as regards children's welfare" [Guardianship of Simpson (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 914, 939, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 389] . Another court noted, "Both common sense and expert opinion indicate spousal abuse is detrimental to children" [In re Benjamin D. (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 1464, 1470, n.5, 278 Cal. Rptr. 468] .

Family violence in the form of spousal or partner abuse is often alleged to have brought the child within the juvenile court's jurisdiction under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(b) [see, e.g., In re Alysha S. (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 393, 396, 58

Cal. Rptr. 2d 494 ; In re Jennifer R. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 704, 706, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 759 ; In re Basilio T. (1992) 4 Cal. App. 4th 155, 161, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 450] . Which subdivision to file under, however, must be determined on a case-by-case basis. In many instances domestic violence involving one or both of the parents may result in the child having suffered serious physical harm or may place the child at substantial risk of such harm. Under such circumstances, jurisdiction may exist under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(a). In other instances family violence may actually be the cause of the child suffering or being at substantial risk of suffering serious emotional damage as described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(c). Expert evidence may be needed to prove such an allegation, making jurisdiction under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(c) difficult to establish. Nevertheless, in an appropriate case, such a finding may be justified. Thus, practitioners should not assume allegations relating to family violence can only be filed under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(b). The child exposed to family violence may come within the court's jurisdiction under one or more of a number of different subdivisions of Welf. & Inst. Code § 300, dependent on the facts of the individual case [see, e.g., In re Robert A. (1992) 4 Cal. App. 4th 174, 179, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 438] .

The opinion in In re Heather A. (1996) 52 Cal. App. 4th 183, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 315 , exemplifies the attention that family violence is now receiving, particularly in dependency cases, and how family violence can be a basis for dependency jurisdiction. In that case it was held "domestic violence in the same household where children are living is neglect; it is a failure to protect [children] from the substantial risk of encountering the violence and suffering serious physical harm or illness from it." As such, the evidence of family violence in that case was found to be sufficient to support the jurisdictional finding under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(b) [In re Heather A. (1996) 52 Cal. App. 4th 183, 194, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 315] . The language of a dependency petition alleging family violence in the form of spousal or partner abuse must allege that the violence was "perceived by or affected the child" or otherwise placed the child at substantial risk of harm [In re Alysha S. (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 393, 398, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 494] . But Heather A. makes it clear such allegations can be sustained.

For discussion of family violence as a basis for removal of the child, see § 328.126[2][b].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
E. Subject Matter and Dependency Jurisdiction

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated §§ 328.85-328.99

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

[Reserved]

§§ 328.85[Reserved]

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
F. Jurisdiction Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.100

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.100 Purpose of Hearing

The purpose of the jurisdiction hearing is to determine whether sufficient grounds exist for the court to find that the child falls within the jurisdiction of the juvenile court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 355]. For a discussion of the jurisdictional grounds under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300, see § 328.33.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
F. Jurisdiction Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.101

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.101 Time and Notice

[1] Nondetention Cases

If the child is not detained, the clerk must, on the filing of the petition, set the petition to be heard and the hearing must be begun within 30 calendar days from the date the petition is filed [Welf. & Inst. Code § 334].

[2] Detention Cases

If the child is detained at the time the petition is filed, the clerk must set the petition to be heard, and the hearing must be begun, within 15 court days from the date of the order of the court directing detention [Welf. & Inst. Code § 334; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.670(f)]. If the child is released from detention before the jurisdiction hearing, the court may reset the jurisdiction for hearing within the time limit prescribed for nondetention cases [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.670(f)].

[3] Calendar Preference

If the child is detained in custody, the case must be granted precedence on the calendar of the court for the day on which the case is set for hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 345].

[4] Notice of Jurisdiction Hearing

After the initial or detention hearing, the clerk of the court must cause notice to be served to the mother, the father or fathers, presumed and alleged, any legal guardian of the child, and the child, if the child is 10 years of age or older [Welf. & Inst. Code § 291(a)(1)-(4)]. Notice must also be given to any known sibling of the child who is the subject of the dependency petition, if that sibling is either a dependent of the court or is the subject of a dependency proceeding. If the sibling is 10 years of age or older, the notice is to be provided to the sibling, the sibling's caregiver, and the sibling's attorney. If the sibling is under 10 years of age, the notice is to be given to the sibling's caregiver and attorney. Separate notice is not required, however, if the sibling's matter is calendared in the same court on the same day [Welf. & Inst. Code § 291(a)(5)]. The clerk must also notify all counsel of record, unless counsel was present in court when the jurisdiction hearing was scheduled [Welf. & Inst. Code § 291(a)(6)]. If there is no parent or guardian residing within the state, or if their place of residence is unknown, notice must also be given to any adult relative residing within the county, or if none, the adult relative residing nearest the court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 291(a)(7)]. Notice must be also given, if the court knows or has reason to know that an Indian child is involved, to the Indian custodian, if any, and the tribe of the child. If the identity or location of the parent or Indian custodian and the tribe cannot be determined, notice shall be given to the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 291(a)(8)]. No notice is required for a parent whose parental rights have been terminated [Welf. & Inst. Code § 291(b)].

The notice must include all of the following [Welf. & Inst. Code § 291(d)]:

- The name and address of the person notified.
- The nature of the hearing.
- Each section and subdivision under which the proceeding has been initiated.
- The date, time, and place of the hearing.
- The name of the child on whose behalf the dependency petition has been filed.
- A copy of the petition.
- A statement that:
  - If the person notified fails to appear, the court may proceed in their absence.
  - The child, parent, guardian, Indian custodian, or adult relative to whom notice is required is entitled to have an attorney present at the hearing.
  - If the parent, guardian, Indian custodian, or adult relative desires counsel, but is indigent and cannot afford counsel, that person must promptly notify the clerk of the juvenile court.
  - If an attorney is appointed for the parent, guardian, Indian custodian, or adult relative, the represented person will be liable for all or part of the costs to the extent of his or her ability to pay.
  - The parent, guardian, Indian custodian, or adult relative may be liable for the support costs of the child in out-of-home care.
- In the case of an Indian child, a statement that the parent or Indian custodian and the tribe have a right to intervene at any stage of the proceeding, and that, on request, the parent or Indian custodian and the tribe will be granted up to 20 additional days to prepare for the proceeding.

If the child is detained and the person to be noticed was not present at the initial hearing, notice shall be given by personal service or by certified mail [Welf. & Inst. Code § 291(e)(1)]. If the child is detained and the person to be noticed was present at the initial hearing, notice shall be given by personal service or by first-class mail [Welf. & Inst. Code § 291(e)(2)]. If the child is not detained, notice shall be given by personal service or by first-class mail, unless the person to be served resides outside of the county, in which case service shall be by first-class mail [Welf. & Inst. Code § 291(e)(3)]. In the case of an Indian child, notice shall be by registered mail, return receipt requested [Welf. & Inst. Code § 291(e)(4)]. Notice may be waived by a general appearance, in person or through counsel, or by a signed written waiver filed on or before the date of the scheduled hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 291(f); In re B.G. (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 679, 689, 114 Cal. Rptr. 444, 523 P.2d 244] .

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
F. Jurisdiction Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.102

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.102 Effect of Failure to Commence Hearing Within Time Limits

At one time, absent a continuance granted under Welf. & Inst. Code § 352 or a time waiver by the parties, when a jurisdiction hearing was not commenced within the appropriate time limits, the rules of court required the petition be dismissed [Jeff M. v. Superior Court (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 1238, 1243, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 343] . This is no longer the rule, since the failure to timely begin the jurisdiction hearing does not deprive the juvenile court of jurisdiction to hear the matter.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
F. Jurisdiction Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.103

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.103 When Hearing May Be Continued

[1] In General

On request of the counsel for a parent, guardian, child, or petitioner, the court may continue any dependency hearing beyond the time limit within which the hearing is otherwise required to be held. However, no continuance may be granted if it would be contrary to the interest of the child. In considering the interest of the child, the court is required to give substantial weight to a child's need for prompt resolution of his or her custody status, the need to provide children with stable environments, and the damage to the child of prolonged temporary placements [Welf. & Inst. Code § 352(a)]. Continuances should not be granted lightly, but instead should be difficult to obtain [Jeff M. v. Superior Court (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 1238, 1242, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 343 ; In re Emily L. (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 734, 743, 260 Cal. Rptr. 810] .

No continuance may be granted if a child has been removed from the custody of parent or guardian and if it would result in the dispositional hearing being completed longer than 60 days after hearing at which the child was ordered removed or detained, unless the court finds that there are exceptional circumstances and enters the facts supporting such a finding on the minutes of the court. Even the fact the parent is incarcerated in another county and cannot exercise his statutory right to be present under Penal Code § 2625 has been held not to be sufficient to justify a continuance beyond the statutory time restrictions [In re Axsana S. (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 262, 272, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 701] . In no event may the court grant a continuance that would cause the hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 361 to be completed more than six months after the hearing pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 319 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 352(b); see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.550(a)(3)]. In some instances, in order to ensure a case is completed within the statutory time lines, the court may need to transfer the case to a different judicial officer, substitute counsel, and even conduct a contested hearing on a continuous day-to-day basis until completed [Renee S. v. Superior Court (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 187, 197-198, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 134] .

To obtain a continuance, written notice, with supporting documents, must be filed and served on all parties at least two court days prior to the date set for hearing, unless the court finds good cause for hearing an oral motion [Welf. & Inst. Code § 352(a)]. The supporting documents must present specific facts showing that a continuance is necessary [Welf. & Inst. Code § 352(a)].

[2] Good Cause Requirement and Duration Limitation

Continuances may be granted only on a showing of good cause, and only for that period of time shown to be necessary by the evidence presented at the hearing on the motion for the continuance [Welf. & Inst. Code § 352(a)]. None of the following, in and of themselves, constitute good cause: (1) a stipulation between counsel; (2) the convenience of the parties; (3) a pending criminal prosecution; and (4) a pending family law matter. Nor is court congestion, standing alone, good cause to continue a matter beyond mandatory statutory timeliness. Illness of a judge, counsel or a party, however, does constitute good cause for a continuance [Jeff M. v. Superior Court (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 1238, 1243, fn. 4, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 343 ; see Renee S. v. Superior Court (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 187, 197-198, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 134] . The court must state in its order the facts requiring any continuance that is granted [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.550(a)(5)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Tactical Reasons for Requesting or Objecting to a Continuance. Beginning January 1, 2009, there is a distinct tactical advantage for the parent of a child who was under the age of 3 years at the time of initial removal, or of a sibling group with such a child, to continue the disposition hearing as long as reasonably and ethically possible, thereby delaying the six-month review hearing and the presumptive end of court-ordered reunification services [see Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361.5(a), 366.21(a)]. The first step toward achieving that end is for parent's counsel in such cases to delay the jurisdiction hearing as long as reasonably and ethically possible. Counsel for the social services agency and usually children's counsel should be watchful for such continuance requests and object, and the juvenile court should adhere carefully to the requirements of Welf. & Inst. Code § 352 in considering all requests for a continuance.

[3] When Consent to Continuance Is Implied

In any case in which a parent, guardian, or child is represented by counsel and no objection is made to an order continuing beyond the time limit within which the hearing is otherwise required to be held, the absence of such an objection will be deemed to be a consent to the continuance [Welf. & Inst. Code § 352(c); In re Richard H. (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 1351, 1362, 285 Cal. Rptr. 917 (time limits are not mandatory for jurisdictional purposes and may be waived by failure to object to continuances)].

[4] Continuance for Appointment of Counsel

At the beginning of the jurisdiction hearing, the court must continue the hearing for a period not to exceed seven calendar days as necessary to make an appointment of counsel, to enable counsel to become acquainted with the case, or to determine whether the parent or guardian or adult relative is unable to afford counsel [Welf. & Inst. Code § 353; see In re C.P. (1985) 165 Cal. App. 3d 270, 273, 211 Cal. Rptr. 498 (court had duty under circumstances to continue hearing even if appointed counsel for out-of-state parent did not request continuance)].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
F. Jurisdiction Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.104

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.104 Commencement of Hearing

[1] Explanation of Petition

At the beginning of the jurisdiction hearing, the petition must be read to those present. On request of any parent, guardian, or adult relative, counsel for the child, or the child, if he or she is present, the court must then explain the meaning and contents of the petition, the nature of the hearing, and its procedures and possible consequences [Welf. & Inst. Code § 353].

[2] Explanation of Right to Counsel

The court must next ascertain whether the parent, guardian, or adult relative, and the child are represented by counsel. If not, the court must advise those persons of their right to have counsel of their choice present and, when applicable, of their right to appointed counsel, subject to a claim of reimbursement as provided by law [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 349, 353]. The court must appoint counsel for the parent, guardian and child where appropriate [Welf. & Inst. Code § 317; see discussion in § 328.60 et seq., regarding the appointment of counsel].

[3] Explanation Concerning Parent or Guardian's Mailing Address

If this is the parent or guardian's first appearance, the court must order the parent or guardian to provide a mailing address [Welf. & Inst. Code § 316.1]. The court must also advise the parent or guardian that the address provided will be used by the court, the clerk, and the social services agency to provide notice of hearings and for mailing all documents related to the proceedings. The court must advise the parent or guardian that, unless the parent or guardian, or the attorney of record for the parent or guardian, provides a written notification of a change of address, use of the address first provided will satisfy notice requirements [Welf. & Inst. Code § 316.1]. The use of form JV-140 (Notification of Mailing Address) to provide the require address information is optional, but preferred [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule

5.534(l)(3)].

[4] Advice by Court of Trial Rights

After explaining the petition and the right to counsel, the court must next advise the parent or guardian of each of their rights during trial, specifically the right to a hearing by the court on the issues raised by the petition, the right to assert the privilege against self-incrimination, the right to confront and to cross examine all witnesses who may be called to testify against the parent or guardian, and the right to use the process of the court to compel the attendance of witnesses on behalf of the parent or guardian [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.682(b)]. The court must also advise the parent or guardian that if the child has been removed and the court finds the child does not come within the juvenile court's jurisdiction, the child must be returned to the parent or guardian within two working days after the court's finding, unless the parent or guardian and the social services agency agree the child will be released at a later date [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.682(b)(5)].

[5] If the Parent or Guardian Fails to Appear

Many juvenile courts have found that the appellate courts do not like it when they use the "D-word," namely "default" [see, e.g., In re Stacy T. (1997) 52 Cal. App. 4th 1415, 1421-1422 , nn.3 & 4, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 319 ; In re Nemis M. (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 1344, 1352, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 324 ; In re Brian W. (1996) 48 Cal. App. 4th 429, 433, fn. 3, 56 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1 ; In re Dolly D. (1995) 41 Cal. App. 4th 440, 444-446, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 691] . There is no statute or statewide rule of court which allows the juvenile court to enter a default in dependency proceedings. As noted by one court, use of default language is "unfortunate and inaccurate, and probably misleading" [In re Dolly D. (1995) 41 Cal. App. 4th 440, 444-445, fn. 2, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 691] . As such, juvenile courts are well advised to never use the word "default" in making findings and orders when a parent or guardian fails to appear for any hearing. Instead, courts should simply make a finding that the parent or guardian has been noticed for the proceedings, has failed to appear, that the failure to appear implies the parent has chosen not to attend, and that the court is going to proceed in the absence of the parent or guardian [In re Christopher A. (1991) 226 Cal. App. 3d 1154, 1162] .

Where counsel has previously been appointed or retained by the missing parent or guardian, counsel can make a motion for a continuance based on the absence of his or her client [Welf. & Inst. Code § 352]. Continuances are discouraged in dependency proceedings, however, and the court must give substantial weight to the child's need for a prompt resolution of the matter [Welf. & Inst. Code § 352(a); In re Gerald J. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 1180, 1187, 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 569] . Moreover, the mere absence of the parent or guardian without more, will not normally constitute the good cause required to justify a continuance [see, e.g., In re Marriage of Teegarden (1986) 181 Cal. App. 3d 401, 405-407, 226 Cal. Rptr. 417 ; Young v. Redman (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 827, 831, 128 Cal. Rptr. 86] . This is especially true where the attorney has not had recent contact with the client [In re Gerald J. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 1180, 1187, 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 569] . Where the attorney has had recent contact with the absent parent or guardian, however, and there is at least some reason for the absence, a stronger case can be made for the granting of a continuance request. The same is true where the parent or guardian has not been previously informed of the consequences of failing to appear. In such cases an attorney may also be entitled to cross-examine the social worker on behalf of the missing client [see In re Stacy T. (1997) 52 Cal. App. 4th 1415, 1424-1425, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 319 ; In re Dolly D. (1995) 41 Cal. App. 4th 440, 444-446, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 691 . See also the discussion in § 328.110[3] (Admissibility of Social Worker's Report)].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329

CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
F. Jurisdiction Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.105

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.105 Admission, Plea of No Contest, and Submission

[1] Prerequisites to Acceptance of Admission or Plea of No Contest

After advising the parent or guardian of his or her trial rights, the court must inquire whether he or she intends to admit or deny the allegations of the petition. If the parent or guardian neither admits nor denies the allegations, the court must state for the record that the parent or guardian does not admit the allegations. If the parent or guardian wishes to admit the allegations, the court must first find and state on the record that it is satisfied that the parent or guardian understands the nature of the allegations and the direct consequences of the admission, and understands and waives the trial rights which were previously explained to the parent or guardian. An admission by the parent or guardian must be made personally by the parent or guardian [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.682(c)(d)]. Although not expressly set forth in the rule, these same requirements must be satisfied for the acceptance of a plea of no contest.

[2] Required Findings on Acceptance of Admission, Plea of No Contest, or Submission

On admission, plea of no contest, or submission, the court must find each of the following, and must note the findings in the order of the court [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.682(f)]:

- Notice has been given as required by law.
- The birth date and county of residence of the child.
- The parent or guardian has knowingly and intelligently waived the right to a trial on the issues by the court, the right to assert the privilege against self incrimination, and the right to confront and to cross examine adverse witnesses and to use the process of the court to compel the attendance of witnesses on the parent or guardian's behalf.

- The parent or guardian understands the nature of the conduct alleged in the petition and the possible consequences of an admission, plea of no contest, or submission.

- The admission, plea of no contest, or submission by the parent or guardian is freely and voluntarily made.

- There is a factual basis for the parent or guardian's admission.

- Those allegations of the petition as admitted are true as alleged.

- The child is a person described under one or more specific subdivisions of Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 (grounds for dependency).

[3] Effect of Admission or Plea of No Contest

A plea of no contest in a dependency proceeding is the "juvenile court equivalent" of a no contest plea in a criminal proceeding [In re Troy Z. (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 1170, 1181, 13 Cal. Rptr. 2d 724, 840 P.2d 266] . As such, it "admits all matters essential to the court's jurisdiction over the minor" [In re Troy Z. (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 1170, 1181, 13 Cal. Rptr. 2d 724, 840 P.2d 266] . A parent or guardian who admits the allegations or enters a plea of no contest waives his or her right to challenge on appeal the legal applicability of Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 to his or her conduct [In re Troy Z. (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 1170, 1181, 13 Cal. Rptr. 2d 724, 840 P.2d 266] . However, the parent or guardian may challenge on appeal the legality of the admission, if he or she was not fully advised of his or her due process rights or if an express personal waiver was not obtained, and the error was not harmless [In re Monique T. (1992) 2 Cal. App. 4th 1372, 1375-1378, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 198] .

Unlike a finding of juvenile court jurisdiction following a submission or contested hearing, which a party may later seek to set aside using a Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 petition based on a change of circumstance or new evidence [In re Brandon C. (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 1168, 1171-1172, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 571 (recantation of victim)], a petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 is not an appropriate vehicle for seeking to set aside an admission or plea of no contest. Instead, a motion to set aside the admission or plea of no contest should be used. The motion must make a showing of circumstances that rendered the plea involuntary or unknowing, as in a criminal case, and not merely attempt to belatedly challenge the sufficiency of the evidence [cf. Pen. Code § 1018; People v. Huricks (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 1201, 1207-1212, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 592] .

[4] Alternative to Admission or No Contest Plea: Submitting to Court's Jurisdictional Determination

In lieu of admitting the allegations of the petition, a parent or guardian may elect to submit the jurisdictional determination to the court based on the information provided to the court in the social worker's reports and waive further jurisdictional hearing [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.682(e)].

As with accepting an admission or plea of no contest, discussed in [1], above, in accepting a submission, the court must first give the requisite advisements and take a waiver [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.682(b), (f); see discussion in [1], above].

A parent or guardian who submits the jurisdictional determination to the court on the reports does not waive his or her right to appeal the jurisdictional finding [In re Tommy E. (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 1234, 1237-1239, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 402 (submission to evidence considered by the court isn't submission that the evidence supports a jurisdictional finding); but see In re Richard K. (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 580, 589-590, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 575 (distinguishing submitting on the reports from submitting on the recommendation of the social worker)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Jurisdiction as Part of Settlement or Agreement. In many cases the parent submits the matter to the court for a jurisdictional determination only after considerable negotiations have successfully taken place on a wide variety of jurisdictional and dispositional issues. To allow the parent to then appeal the finding of jurisdiction undermines such negotiations and may make agencies and children's counsel reluctant to enter into settlement discussions. Where the parent's action on the question of jurisdiction is the result of an agreement on other issues, counsel for the social services agency and the child should consider requiring the parent to admit, plead no contest, or submit the matter with a waiver of the right to appeal any resultant finding of jurisdiction. A waiver of the right to appeal this issue should be made on the record, and the court should make a finding that the waiver was knowingly and intelligently made. This ensures the negotiated settlement is not later undermined by an appeal.

59 of 187 DOCUMENTS

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
F. Jurisdiction Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.106

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.106 Contested Hearing on Petition

[1] Required When Allegations Are Denied

If the parent or guardian denies the allegations of the petition, a contested hearing must be held to determine whether the allegations in the petition are true [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 355].

PRACTICE TIP:

Consult Before Contesting Jurisdictional Issues. Counsel for the parent or guardian should carefully consult with their client before setting a matter for contested jurisdictional hearing. Many times the real issues being contested are dispositional issues, not jurisdictional ones. In such cases it may be more appropriate to submit the jurisdictional determination on the basis of the reports and set the matter thereafter for a contested dispositional hearing.

[2] Burden of Proof

Proof by a preponderance of evidence must be adduced to support a finding that the allegations set forth in the petition are true [Cynthia D. v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 242, 248, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 698, 851 P.2d 1307 , citing Welf. & Inst. Code § 355 and Cal. Rules of Ct., former Rule 1450(f)].

[3] Allegations When Child in Custody of Only One Parent

There is no need to have jurisdictional allegations regarding both parents in the dependency petition. Jurisdiction can be established even when the child is in the custody of only one parent when the circumstances justifying the assumption of jurisdiction occurred and even though the other parent is capable of providing appropriate care [Welf. & Inst. Code § 302(a); In re Jeffrey P. (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 1548, 1552-1554, 267 Cal. Rptr. 764] . As noted by one recent appellate court, the child falls within the juvenile court's jurisdiction "if the actions of either parent bring her within one of the statutory definitions ... " This is consistent with the overall purpose of dependency proceedings, which is to protect children, not prosecute parents [In re Alysha S. (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 393, 397, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 494] .

Many social services departments, attorneys, and juvenile courts continue to mistakenly believe it necessary to file jurisdictional allegations against each parent and speak of taking jurisdiction over the parent [see, e.g., In re Katrina W. (1994) 31 Cal. App. 4th 441, 445-447, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 7] . While jurisdictional allegations should be filed regarding any conduct or omission by either or both parents which bring the child under the jurisdiction of the court pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 300, there is no requirement that there be jurisdictional allegations regarding conduct by both parents [In re Alysha S. (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 393, 397, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 494 ; In re Jeffrey P. (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 1548, 1552-1554, 267 Cal. Rptr. 764] . Dependency jurisdiction under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 is taken over the child, not the parents, based upon the harm or risk of harm to the child. It is for this reason that a dependency petition is not "sustained" or "found true" as to a parent. If the juvenile court finds the child comes within the court's jurisdiction, the petition is simply found true as to the child [California Ctr. for Jud. Educ. and Research, Cal. Judges Benchguides, Benchguide 101: Juvenile Dependency Jurisdiction Hearing (Sept. 2007) § 101.5, p. 101-9].

Jurisdiction over the parents deals primarily with notice and an opportunity to be heard [In re Antonio F. (1978) 78 Cal. App. 3d 440, 447-450, 144 Cal. Rptr. 466 ; In re B.G. (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 679, 688-689, 114 Cal. Rptr. 444, 523 P.2d 244] . Both parents, however, have the right to contest jurisdiction. This is true even when one of the parents is not named in the petition as having done anything to contribute to the child coming within the court's jurisdiction [California Ctr. for Jud. Educ. and Research, Cal. Judges Benchguides, Benchguide 101: Juvenile Dependency Jurisdiction Hearing (Jan. 2009) § 101.6, p. 101-10].

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
F. Jurisdiction Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.107

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.107 Findings Required by Court

[1] Findings Required When Petition Is Not True and When Dismissing Petition

After the presentation of evidence by the petitioner and the child is closed, the juvenile court, on motion of the child, parent or guardian, or on its own motion, must order whatever action the law requires if the court, on weighing the evidence presented, finds that the petitioner did not meet his, her, or its burden of proof. The action that may be taken by the court includes dismissal of the petition and release of the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 350(c)]. A trial court's refusal to take the evidence and testimony offered by the child or the child's counsel before granting a sua sponte motion for dismissal of the petition is grounds for reversal [Guadalupe A. v. Superior Court (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 100, 106-107, 285 Cal. Rptr. 570 ; now see Welf. & Inst. Code § 350(c) (providing that child may introduce evidence before ruling on the motion)]. More recently, another court followed this same approach, holding the child had a right to an evidentiary hearing before the court dismissed the dependency petition based on alleged relinquishments and potential adoptive placement [Taylor M. (2003) 106 Cal. App. 4th 97, 105-107, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 502 , citing Guadalupe A. v. Superior Court (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 100, 104-107, 285 Cal. Rptr. 570 ; Allen M. v. Superior Court (1992) 6 Cal. App. 4th 1069, 1071-1072, 1074-1075, 8 Cal. Rptr. 2d 259 ; and Kimberly R. v. Superior Court (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 1067, 1077-1078, 117 Cal. Rptr. 2d 670] . A parent, however, has no right to present evidence in support of the petition prior to such dismissal [In re Eric H. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 955, 962-969, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 230] . If the motion is not granted, the child, parent, or guardian may offer evidence without first having reserved that right [Welf. & Inst. Code § 350(c)].

If, after hearing all of the evidence, the court determines that the allegations of the petition have not been proved by a preponderance of the evidence, it must make certain findings to be noted in the court order. The court must find the following [Welf. & Inst. Code § 356]:

- That notice has been given as required by law.
- The birth date and residence of the child.
- That the allegations of the petition are not proved.

The court must then order that the petition be dismissed and that the child be discharged from any detention or restriction, if applicable [Welf. & Inst. Code § 356]. In such circumstances, the child should be discharged and returned as quickly as reasonably possible, assuming a decision is not being considered to begin a new detention and file a new dependency petition based on at least some additional evidence or circumstances. Nevertheless, a statute effective January 1, 2004, now provides both that the child shall be returned to the physical custody of the parent or guardian "immediately" after a finding the jurisdictional allegations are not true, but not more than two working days after the date of that finding, unless the parent or guardian and the agency agree to a later date for the child's release [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.1(a)]. This new enactment ensures that bureaucratic delay does not inhibit the timely return of the child without altering any existing remedies a parent or guardian had if the child is not returned immediately following the court's finding that the child is not described by Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.1(a)].

[2] When Sustaining Petition

If, after hearing the evidence, the court determines by a preponderance of the evidence that the allegations of the petition are true, it must make certain findings to be noted in the minutes of the court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 356]:

- Notice has been given as required by law.
- The birth date and county of residence of the child.
- The allegations of the petition are true.
- The child is a person described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 (grounds for dependency), and the specific subdivision of Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 under which the petition was sustained.

All written findings and orders of the court must be served by the clerk of the court personally or by first-class mail within three judicial days of their issuance on the petitioner, the child or the child's counsel, the parent or the parent's counsel, and the guardian or the guardian's counsel [Welf. & Inst. Code § 248.5].

For discussion of the clerk's service of the court's written findings and orders on specified parties, see Ch. 327, Juvenile Courts: Jurisdiction and General Procedures, § 327.32.

[3] Specificity Required

The juvenile court law does not require the making of specific findings; a general finding that the allegations of the petition are true is sufficient to show the facts on which the court exercised its jurisdiction to declare the child to be a ward or dependent child of the court. This rule presupposes, however, that the allegations of the petition state appropriate ultimate facts that set forth the specific charge or factual allegations on which an adjudication is sought [In re J. T. (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 633, 640, 115 Cal. Rptr. 553] . Moreover, although the findings need not be specific, they are required to state ultimate facts and not evidentiary facts or conclusions of law such that, in reviewing the sufficiency of the findings, the same tests are to be applied as those used in determining the sufficiency of an allegation in a pleading [In re J. T. (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 633, 641, 115 Cal. Rptr. 553] .

[4] No True Finding Until All Parents Addressed

One parent may want to admit the allegations in the petition are true while the other parent wants to set the matter for contest. Or, one parent may show up for a jurisdiction hearing prepared to submit the matter on the reports, but the other parent is absent with good cause for a continuance. Under these and similar scenarios, the court sometimes finds itself faced with the need to address each parent's response to the jurisdictional allegations on different days. The court can do so. What it cannot do is to make a true finding on any of the allegations until all parents have been addressed [In re Joshua G. (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 189, 202, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 213] . This is because jurisdiction is taken over the child, not the parents. Thus, if the first parent chooses to admit the allegations on the earlier date, the court accepts the admission, makes its findings that the parent has knowingly and intelligently waived his or her rights, and then takes the matter of jurisdiction under submission until it deals with the other parent at a later date. It is incorrect for the court to make a jurisdictional finding as to one parent without having dealt with the other, since it does not make a finding "against" a parent; instead, it is to make a finding that the child comes within the court's jurisdiction. This it cannot do until the jurisdiction issue has been addressed as to all parents.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329

CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
F. Jurisdiction Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.108

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.108 Continuance Pending Disposition

If the court finds that the child is a person described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 300, it must then proceed to hear evidence on the question of the proper disposition to be made of the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 358(a)]. Prior to hearing evidence as to the appropriate disposition in the case, the court may continue the hearing, on its own motion or on motion of the child, a parent, or guardian. As a general rule, a continuance may not exceed 10 judicial days if the child is detained during the continuance or to a date not later than 30 days after the date of the filing of the petition if the child is not detained. The court may, for good cause, continue the hearing for an additional 15 calendar days, if the child is not detained [Welf. & Inst. Code § 358(a)(1), (2)].

If the probation officer has alleged that Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b) (reunification services not to be provided under specified circumstances) is applicable, the court is required to continue the proceedings for a period not to exceed 30 days, and the probation officer is required to notify each parent of the content of Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b) and inform each parent that, if the court does not order reunification, a permanency planning hearing will be held, and his or her parental rights may be terminated within the time frames specified by the law [Welf. & Inst. Code § 358(a)(3)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Tactical Reasons for Requesting or Objecting to a Continuance. Beginning January 1, 2009, there is a distinct tactical advantage for the parent of a child who was under the age of 3 years at the time of initial removal, or of a sibling group with such a child, to continue the disposition hearing as long as reasonably and ethically possible, thereby delaying the six-month review hearing and the presumptive end of court ordered reunification services [see Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361.5(a), 366.21(a)]. Counsel for the social services agency and usually children's counsel should be watchful for such continuance requests and object, and the juvenile court should adhere carefully to the requirements of Welf. & Inst. Code § 352 in considering a continuance request.

The court in its discretion may make an order to release or detain the child during the period of the continuance [Welf. & Inst. Code § 358(a)(1)].

For a discussion of the general requirements for continuances, see §§ 328.83[5] and 328.105.

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
F. Jurisdiction Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.109

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.109 Discovery

[1] Civil Discovery Rules Do Not Apply

Juvenile dependency proceedings are special proceedings which are governed by their own rules and statutes [In re Chantal S. (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 196, 200, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 866, 913 P.2d 1075] . As such, unless otherwise specified, the requirements that are set forth for civil cases in the Civil Code and the Code of Civil Procedure do not apply [In re Jennifer R. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 704, 711, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 759 , citing Jones T. v. Superior Court (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 240, 245 n.3, 264 Cal. Rptr. 4 , and In re Angela R. (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 257, 273, 260 Cal. Rptr. 612] . The Legislature knows how to make the provisions of other codes applicable to dependency proceedings [see, e.g., Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 213.5, 341, 348]. That it has not done so with the civil discovery rules, indicates the Legislature's intention those rules not apply in dependency proceedings [In re Chantal S. (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 196, 206-207, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 866, 913 P.2d 1075] .

In light of this, and since the dependency system has its own provisions for discovery [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.546], the rules for civil discovery found in Code Civ. Proc. § 2016.010 et seq., including the provisions for depositions, do not apply to dependency proceedings. This is especially appropriate in light of the very short time frames required for hearings in dependency cases [see, e.g., Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 334 (jurisdiction hearing to be held within 15 judicial days from the date of the detention order), 352(b) (disposition hearing must be held within 60 days of the detention order)]. The need for timely resolution of dependency matters is both recognized and statutorily mandated, making the general application of civil discovery rules inappropriate [In re Tabatha G. (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1159, 1166, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 93 ; Joe Z. v. Superior Court (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 797, 801, 91 Cal. Rptr. 594, 478 P.2d 26] . Thus, even if the court applied the new line of decisions that hold the portions of other codes that apply to special proceedings apply to dependency cases unless inconsistent with the overall purpose of the juvenile court law, the Civil Discovery Act would not apply to dependency cases [see, e.g., In re David H. (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 1626, 1638-1639, 82 Cal.

Rptr. 3d 81 ; In re Claudia E. (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 627, 636, 77 Cal. Rptr. 3d 722 ; In re Mark B. (2007) 149 Cal. App. 4th 61, 78-79, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 697] . Instead, discovery in dependency matters rests with the control of the juvenile court as guided by Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.546 [In re Tabatha G. (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1159, 1166, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 93 ; In re Jeanette H. (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 25, 31, 275 Cal. Rptr. 9] .

While the court's discretion in discovery matters is not unlimited, it does have the inherent authority to order such discovery necessary for the administration of justice and the orderly ascertainment of the truth [Clinton K. v. Superior Court (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 1244, 1246, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 140 , citing Joe Z. v. Superior Court (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 797, 801-802, 91 Cal. Rptr. 594, 478 P.2d 26 ; In re Jeanette H. (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 25, 33-35, 275 Cal. Rptr. 9] . Thus, the juvenile court may have some inherent authority to order the taking of depositions if the requirements of due process clearly necessitate such action. Nevertheless, it has no statutory authority to do so except in very limited situations [see Fam. Code § 3411 (deposition of witness in other state under the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act)]. Due to the child's need for a timely determination of the matter and the statutory time lines and public policy supporting that need, it will be the rare and exceptional circumstance in which the court will be justified in exercising its very limited discretion to order depositions.

For discussion of why neither the Civil Code nor the Code of Civil Procedure should apply to dependency cases unless expressly made applicable and the controversy now surrounding that traditional view, see § 328.10[1].

[2] Prehearing Discovery Rules to Be Liberally Construed

The California Rules of Court governing prehearing discovery must be liberally construed in favor of maximizing informal disclosures, subject to the right of a party to show privilege or other good cause not to disclose specific material or information [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.546(a)].

[3] Petitioner's Affirmative Duty to Disclose

On filing the petition, the social services department must promptly deliver to, or make accessible for inspection and copying by, the child and the parent or guardian, or their counsel, copies of the police, arrest, and crime reports relating to the pending matter. Privileged information may be omitted if notice of the omission is given simultaneously [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.546(b)].

The social services department also has an affirmative duty to disclose any evidence or information within its possession or control which is favorable to the child, parent, or guardian [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.546(c)].

[4] Social Services Department's Required Disclosures on Request

Except as to matters subject to protective orders (see discussion in [7], below), the social services department must, on timely request, disclose to the child and parent or guardian, or to their counsel, the following material and information within it's possession or control [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.546(d)]:

- Social services reports prepared in connection with the pending matter relating to the child, parent, or guardian.

- Records of statements, admissions, or conversations by the child, parent, or guardian.

- Records of statements, admissions, or conversations by any alleged coparticipant.

- Names and addresses of any witnesses interviewed by an investigating authority in connection with the pending matter.

- Records of statements or conversations of witnesses or other persons interviewed by an investigating authority in connection with the pending matter.

- Reports or statements of experts made regarding the pending matter, including results of physical or mental examinations and results of scientific tests, experiments, or comparisons.

- Photographs or physical evidence relating to the pending matter.

- Records of prior felony convictions of witnesses that each party intends to call.

[5] Parent's or Guardian's Required Disclosures on Request

Except as to matters subject to protective orders (see discussion in [7], below), the parent or guardian must, on timely request, disclose to the petitioner relevant material and information within the parent or guardian's possession or control. If the parent or guardian is represented by counsel, a disclosure request must be made through counsel [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.546(e)].

[6] Motion for Prehearing Discovery

On refusal of a party to permit disclosure of information or inspection of materials, the requesting party or counsel may move the court for an order requiring timely disclosure of the information or materials. The motion must specifically and clearly designate the items sought, state the relevancy of the items, and state that a timely request has been made for the items and that the other party has refused to provide them. Each court may by local rule establish the manner and time within which a motion must be made [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.546(f)].

[7] Protective Orders

On a showing of privilege or other good cause, the court may make orders restricting disclosures. All material and information to which a party is entitled must be disclosed in time to permit counsel to make beneficial use of them [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.546(g)].

[8] Partial Disclosure

When some parts of materials are discoverable and other parts are not discoverable, the nondiscoverable material may be excised and need not be disclosed if the requesting party or counsel has been notified that the privileged material has been excised. Material ordered excised must be sealed and preserved in the records of the court for review on appeal [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.546(h)].

[9] Conditions of Discovery

An order of the court granting discovery under the rules may specify the time, place, and manner of making the discovery and inspection, and may prescribe terms and conditions. Discovery must be completed in a timely manner so as to avoid the delay or continuance of a scheduled hearing [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.546(i)].

[10] Sanctions for Failure to Comply With Discovery Order

If at any time during the course of the proceedings it is brought to the attention of the court that a person has failed to comply with the rules of discovery or with an order issued under those rules, the court may order the person to permit the discovery or inspection of materials not previously disclosed, grant a continuance, prohibit a party from introducing in evidence the material not disclosed, dismiss the proceedings, or enter any other order the court deems just under the circumstances [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.546(j)].

[11] Continuing Duty to Disclose

If, subsequent to compliance with the rules of discovery or with court orders, a party discovers additional material or information that is subject to disclosure, that party must promptly notify the requesting child and parent or guardian, or their counsel, of the existence of the additional material [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.546(k)].

[12] Access to Records

Despite any other law, counsel in a dependency proceeding must be given access to all records relevant to the case that are maintained by state or local public agencies. Counsel must be given access to records maintained by hospitals or by other medical or nonmedical practitioners or by child care custodians, in the manner prescribed by Evid. Code § 1158, which authorizes inspection and copying of such records on a patient's written authorization [Welf. & Inst. Code § 317(f)]. If the requesting counsel is the child's counsel, all information requested from the social services agency or the child's guardian ad litem must be provided to the attorney for the child within 30 days of the request [Welf. & Inst. Code § 317(f)]. However, in most instances access to information in the possession of the social services agency should be made available in considerably less time than 30 days to any authorized counsel who requests it.

[13] Witness Lists

In a dependency proceeding [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300], the court may compel the pretrial exchange of witness lists shortly before trial that are usually entitled to limited protection as attorney work product [In re Jeanette H. (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 25, 36-37, 275 Cal. Rptr. 9] .

[14] Attorney Work Product Doctrine

The attorney work product doctrine codified in Code of Civ. Proc. § 2018 creates a qualified privilege against discovery of the general work product by an attorney and an absolute privilege for the attorney's impressions, conclusions, opinions, and legal strategies. Where a qualified privilege exists, the court can order discovery of attorney work product if denying discovery will result in unfair prejudice against the party seeking discovery or will result in an injustice [In re Tabatha G. (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1159, 1167, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 93 , citing Code of Civ. Proc. § 2018]. In Tabatha G., the court of appeal held that the juvenile court properly ordered the discovery of a "bonding study" between the mother and the child which the mother had obtained without the knowledge or permission of the social worker, the child's attorney, or the court. To deny discovery of that study would, the appellate court found, unfairly prejudice both the social services agency and the child's attorney in preparing their case for the hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26. It also found that denying discovery of the study would create an injustice, since the child would then have to go through the "unnecessary inconvenience and potential trauma" of another bonding study, which would be contrary to the child's best interest [In re Tabatha G. (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1159, 1167-1168, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 93] .

Although the court of appeal did not decide the issue of whether the bonding study before it legitimately came within the attorney work product doctrine, it questioned whether it would since it was obtained in a manner that was "less than aboveboard" [In re Tabatha G. (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1159, 1167, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 93] . Attorneys should be careful, and appropriate, in their efforts in this area lest a court determine that those efforts do not fall within the attorney work product doctrine and hence are discoverable without requiring a showing of undue prejudice or injustice.

[15] Discovery Under Welf. & Inst. Code § 827

Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.546 provides for discovery between the social services department and the parent, guardian and child. It does not provide for discovery for such persons as de facto parents, relatives or foster parents who may also at times participate in dependency proceedings [compare Cal. Rules of Ct., former Rule 1341(a) (de facto parent included in former prehearing discovery rule), with Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.546 (current rule which does not include de facto parents)]. Persons who are involved in dependency proceedings but not entitled to discovery under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.546, can seek discovery under Welf. & Inst. Code § 827. This allows the juvenile court the ability to determine what discovery should be provided these participants, while recognizing that in most cases they should not receive all the information that a parent, guardian, or child would receive [see California Ctr. for Jud. Educ. and Research, Cal. Judges Benchguides, Benchguide 102: Juvenile Dependency Disposition Hearing (Sept. 2007) §§ 102.15, 102.20, pp. 102-24, 102-27 (suggesting discovery to a de facto parent under Welf. & Inst. Code § 827 be limited to that which is relevant to the issues in which the de facto parent is involved)].

For a discussion of the discovery process under Welf. & Inst. Code § 827 see Ch. 327, Juvenile Courts: Jurisdiction and General Procedures, § 327.34.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
F. Jurisdiction Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.110

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.110 Evidentiary and Contested Hearing Issues

[1] In General

The juvenile court judicial officer conducting dependency proceedings is to control the proceedings with the goal of expeditiously and effectively ascertaining the facts. The court is also to control proceedings with a view toward ascertaining all information that is relevant to the "present condition and future welfare" of the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 350(a)].

[2] Standard of Proof

Proof by a preponderance of evidence must be established to support a jurisdictional finding that the child is a person described by Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 355(a)]. The preponderance of the evidence standard is the standard of proof for many of the determinations made throughout the dependency system [see, e.g., Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 366.21(e), (f), 366.22(a) (burden for establishing detriment to return to a parent or guardian at out-of-home review hearings); Evid. Code § 115 (standard is preponderance of evidence unless otherwise required by law)]. But certain findings require more. The standard of proof for removal from a parent or for nonplacement with a previously noncustodial parent at disposition is that of clear and convincing evidence [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(c); In re Marquis D. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 1813, 1827-1829, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 198] . Clear and convincing evidence is also required for a finding at a selection and implementation hearing that the child is likely to be adopted if parental rights are terminated [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)]. The only finding in dependency proceedings that is required to be made beyond a reasonable doubt arises when termination of parental rights is sought in an case where the Indian Child Welfare Act applies. In such proceedings, the court must find beyond a reasonable doubt that continued custody of the child is likely to result in serious emotional or physical damage to the child [25 U.S.C. § 1912(f)].

[3] Admissibility of Social Worker's Report

Welf. & Inst. Code § 281 authorizes the court to receive and consider the reports and recommendations of the probation officer in determining whether the child is within the jurisdiction of the juvenile court [see In re Malinda S. (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 368, 376, 272 Cal. Rptr. 787, 795 P.2d 1244 ; see Welf. & Inst. Code § 355 (admissibility of evidence)]. A social worker's report containing information relevant to the jurisdiction hearing is admissible if, on the request of the parent or guardian, the probation officer or social worker is made available to be cross examined on the contents of the report [Welf. & Inst. Code § 355(b); In re Malinda S. (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 368, 376, 272 Cal. Rptr. 787, 795 P.2d 1244] . Where the social worker's report merely incorporates the attached reports of other social workers, the right to cross-examine the preparer of the report has been held to also include cross-examining the social workers who wrote the attached reports [In re Stacy T. (1997) 52 Cal. App. 4th 1415, 1425, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 319 (first worker "was just an envelope with a return address, delivering the reports of others")].

One court of appeal has held that the parent's attorney has a right to cross-examine the preparer of report despite the absence of parent [In re Dolly D. (1995) 41 Cal. App. 4th 440, 444-446, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 691] . However, in that case the parent had maintained contact with his attorney and claimed that he was not able to take off work to attend the hearing [In re Dolly D. (1995) 41 Cal. App. 4th 440, 445, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 691] . A similar result was reached where the parent had not been informed of the consequences of failing to appear [In re Stacy T. (1997) 52 Cal. App. 4th 1415, 1424-1425, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 319] . Whether the same holding would have been reached in these cases had the attorney had little or no contact with the parent is open to substantial question, especially in light of the many recent decisions which indicate that a parent's attorney in a dependency case cannot pursue an action without the parent's authorization [see, e.g., Guillermo G. v. Superior Court (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 1168, 1172-1174, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 748 ; In re Alma B. (1994) 21 Cal. App. 4th 1037, 1043, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 592] . As such, Dolly D. and similar decisions should not be viewed as resolving the issue of whether a parent's attorney has the right on the parent's behalf to cross-examine the social worker at a jurisdiction hearing where the parent does not appear and is not in contact with the attorney. Nevertheless, such cases demonstrate the importance of the right of the parent to cross-examine the social worker who prepared the report for the jurisdiction hearing.

Social workers' reports are admissible as evidence not only at the jurisdiction hearing. They are also required and admissible evidence at virtually all dependency hearings, including detention, disposition, review, and hearings pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 [see, e.g., Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 280, 281, 319, 2, 358, 361.5(g), 358.1, 366, 366.1, 366.21(e), 366.22(a), 366.26(b)]. Although the legislature has placed numerous statutory restrictions on the receipt of the social study at the jurisdiction hearing, particularly regarding the hearsay evidence contained in the report [Welf. & Inst. Code § 355], those restrictions do not apply to the admissibility of social workers' reports at other hearings. Rather, at hearings other than the jurisdiction hearing, social workers' reports are admissible subject to the basic fundamental fairness principles of due process regarding notice and opportunity to be heard. Indeed, even the requirement that the agency have the social worker available for cross-examination does not apply at other hearings, although the parent must have the ability to obtain the presence of the worker if desired [Andrea L. v. Superior Court (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 1377, 1387, fn. 3, 75 Cal. Rptr. 2d 851 ; In re Corey A. (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 339, 347-348, 277 Cal. Rptr. 782] .

For a discussion regarding the admissibility of hearsay statements within a social worker's report at a jurisdiction hearing, the child dependency hearsay exception, and the testimony of children, see discussion in [12]-[14], below.

[4] Inapplicability of Exclusionary Rule

The exclusionary rules of criminal law do not apply to dependency proceedings before the juvenile court. This is because the potential harm to the child of not allowing the evidence to be considered by the juvenile court far outweighs to society the benefits of trying to deter, by use of the exclusionary rule, government actions in obtaining evidence illegally [In re Robert P. (1976) 61 Cal. App. 3d 310, 321, 132 Cal. Rptr. 5] . As noted by one court of appeal, "Recognizing the special protection afforded children by the law, we will not ignore the reliable evidence here presented and risk the welfare of the children on the basis the evidence was the result of an unlawful and warrantless search" [In re Christopher B. (1978) 82 Cal. App. 3d 608, 615, 147 Cal. Rptr. 390] . For a discussion of search warrants in child welfare investigations see § 328.42.

PRACTICE TIP:

Admissibility as Distinguished From Liability. The fact that evidence of child abuse and neglect is admissible in juvenile dependency proceedings regardless of the way in which it was obtained does not mean that in an egregious case civil liability may not be found in another forum. It simply means the state's need to protect children who have suffered or are at substantial risk of suffering abuse or neglect is such that the evidence will not be excluded from the juvenile dependency proceedings. For a brief, general discussion regarding immunity and liability of social workers and agencies see § 328.111[6].

[5] Evidence of Detriment as Distinguished From Parental "Unfitness"

The question is often asked as to whether the social services department must prove the parent or guardian is unfit in order to remove the child or terminate parental rights, or whether a finding of detriment to the child is enough. This issue is most frequently raised by parents who are appealing the termination of their parental rights and who argue that California's statutory scheme denies them due process since it does not require a finding of unfitness. As noted by one court of appeal, "The persistence and frequency with which appellate attorneys reproduce the argument, however, appears to be based on the misconception that the words 'parental unfitness' are somehow talismanic in the field of juvenile dependency law. They are not" [In re Cody W. (1994) 31 Cal. App. 4th 221, 225, 36 Cal. Rptr. 2d 848] .

There is no question but that unfitness was the standard in California for many years. With the enactment of the Family Law Act in 1969, however, California shifted from an unfitness standard to one of detriment [In re B.G. (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 679, 694-695, 114 Cal. Rptr. 444, 523 P.2d 244 ; In re Brittany H. (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 533, 552, 243 Cal. Rptr. 763 ; In re B.J.B. (1986) 185 Cal. App. 3d 1201, 1209, 230 Cal. Rptr. 332] . The difference between the concept of unfitness and that of detriment to the child can most easily be summed up by saying that unfitness generally implies that a person is unfit to parent any child under any circumstances, while detriment to the child carries the meaning that the person cannot parent that particular child without causing the child to suffer detriment [In re Cody W. (1994) 31 Cal. App. 4th 221, 225-226, 36 Cal. Rptr. 2d 848] .

Thus, in California the detriment to the child standard is the functional equivalent of the unfitness standard for the particular child in question [In re Dakota H. (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 212, 224, fn. 3, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 337 ; In re Cody W. (1994) 31 Cal. App. 4th 221, 225-226, 36 Cal. Rptr. 2d 848 ; Cynthia D. v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 242, 253, 256, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 698, 851 P.2d 1307 (characterizing without comment the multiple findings of detriment in the dependency statutory scheme as findings of unfitness); see also In re Jasmon O. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 398, 423, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 85, 878 P.2d 1297 (characterizing the required findings under Civ. Code former § 232(a)(7) as "the equivalent of a finding of unfitness"); and In re Sarah C. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 964, 979, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 414 ("Nowhere in the statutory scheme is the court specifically required to find the parent 'unfit.' ")].

[6] Certain Types of Injuries to Child as Prima Facie Evidence of Jurisdictional Grounds

When the court finds, based on competent professional evidence, that an injury, injuries, or detrimental condition sustained by a child are of such a nature as would ordinarily not be sustained except as the result of the unreasonable or neglectful acts or omissions of either parent, the guardian, or other person who has the care or custody of the child, that evidence shall be prima facie evidence that the child is a person described by Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(a), (b), or (d), which describes children suffering from serious physical harm or abuse caused by their parents or guardians [Welf. & Inst. Code § 355.1(a)].

A presumption also arises that a child is a person described by Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(a), (b), (c), or (d), and is at substantial risk of abuse or neglect, if the court finds that a parent, guardian, or other person who resides with or has care or custody of the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 355.1(d)]:

- Has been convicted of sexual abuse as defined in Penal Code § 11165.1;

- Has been convicted in another state of an act that would constitute an act of sexual abuse under Penal Code § 11165.1 if committed in this state;

- Has been found in a prior dependency hearing in this state or in a similar proceeding in another state to have committed an act of sexual abuse; or

- Is required to register as a sex offender pursuant to Penal Code § 290, as a result of a felony conviction.

This presumption was created because the Legislature found that children are put at risk when they have contact with a parent or caretaker who has committed a sex crime. Thus, the presumption in Welf. & Inst. Code § 355.1(d) has been said to call for "the widest application of its terms to individuals having contact with the minor" [In re John S. (2001) 88 Cal. App. 4th 1140, 1145, 106 Cal. Rptr. 2d 476] . For that reason, the presumption applies even if the parent who is a registered sex offender is not the custodial parent. This does not preclude, however, the parent being able to present evidence that he or she does not pose a substantial risk to the child of abuse or neglect, thereby rebutting the presumption. The presumption is not conclusive. It only affects the burden of producing evidence [In re John S. (2001) 88 Cal. App. 4th 1140, 1145-1146, 106 Cal. Rptr. 2d 476] .

The presumption created under Welf. & Inst. Code § 355.1(a) on proof of physical abuse, neglect, or cruel treatment constitutes a presumption affecting the burden of producing evidence [Welf. & Inst. Code § 355.1(c)]. Thus, once the petitioner establishes a prima facie case under Welf. & Inst. Code § 355.1(a), the burden shifts to the parent to show that he or she can properly care for the child [In re Stephen W. (1990) 221 Cal. App. 3d 629, 644, 271 Cal. Rptr. 319] . The juvenile court judge must then weigh the inferences that arise from the testimony that gives rise to the presumption against those of the contrary evidence and resolve the conflict [In re Katrina C. (1988) 201 Cal. App. 3d 540, 547, 247 Cal. Rptr. 784 ; see also In re Esmeralda B. (1992) 11 Cal. App. 4th 1036, 1040-1041, 14 Cal. Rptr. 2d 179 (need for competent professional evidence; presumption as only shifting the burden of producing evidence); In re Monique T. (1992) 2 Cal. App. 4th 1372, 1378-1379, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 198 (presumption in case of drug induced medical problems in infant); In re James B. (1985) 166 Cal. App. 3d 934, 937, 212 Cal. Rptr. 778 (construing former Welf. & Inst. Code § 355.2)]. The presumption is rebutted on the introduction of evidence that supports a finding of its nonexistence [Evid. Code § 604]. This is not to say, however, that all a parent need do is take the stand and deny the allegations or claim to be a good parent for the presumption to be rebutted. If that were the case, the presumption would be meaningless. Instead, some credible evidence that demonstrates the presumption should not apply under the facts of the individual case must be presented to rebut the presumption. Nevertheless, the evidence the parent must produce need not be overwhelming. Hence, neither social services agencies nor the juvenile court should rely solely on Welf. & Inst. Code § 355.1 as the basis for jurisdiction if other evidence justifying the assumption of jurisdiction also exists.

[7] Admissibility of Proof of Abuse of Another Child

Proof that either parent, the guardian, or other person who has the care or custody of a child who is the subject of a petition filed under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 has physically abused, neglected, or cruelly treated another child must be deemed admissible in evidence [Welf. & Inst. Code § 355.1(b); In re Dorothy I. (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 1154, 1158, 209 Cal. Rptr. 5 (construing former Welf. & Inst. Code § 355.5)].

[8] Admissibility of Evidence of Past Events

Although a determination that a child falls within the juvenile court's jurisdiction must be proven to exist as of the date of the jurisdictional hearing [see In re Melissa H. (1974) 38 Cal. App. 3d 173, 175, 113 Cal. Rptr. 139] , most of the jurisdictional subsections of Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 now provide for jurisdiction where the child has either already suffered serious harm or is found to be at substantial risk of serious harm [see discussion in § 328.33].

A change in a parent or guardian's current circumstances is not relevant to the jurisdictional question of whether a child has already suffered serious harm, but may be relevant to a jurisdictional determination of the child being at substantial risk, and at disposition [see California Ctr. for Jud. Educ. and Research, Cal. Judges Benchguides, Benchguide 101: Juvenile Dependency Jurisdiction Hearing (Jan. 2009) § 101.5, p. 101-9 (Focus of Dependency Petition). As such, past events are properly considered in the jurisdictional determination of present risk to the child [see In re Dorothy I. (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 1154, 1158-1159, 209 Cal. Rptr. 5 ; In re Melissa H. (1974) 38 Cal. App. 3d 173, 175, 113 Cal. Rptr. 139 ; see In re Benjamin D. (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 1464, 1469-1470, 278 Cal. Rptr. 468] . A parent's current circumstances will, of course, be relevant at the disposition hearing in deciding whether dependency is needed, whether the child should be removed from the custodial parent or placed with a previously noncustodial parent, and in determining what services should be required as part of the case plan.

[9] Inadmissibility of Testimony in Other Proceedings

Testimony by a parent, guardian, or other person who has the care or custody of the child made the subject of a proceeding under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 is not admissible as evidence in any other action or proceeding [Welf. & Inst. Code § 355.1(f); for a discussion of the immunity a parent or guardian has for such testimony, see § 328.111].

[10] Inapplicability of Certain Privileges

The privilege not to testify or to be called as a witness against a spouse or domestic partner and the confidential marital communication privilege are not available to the parent or guardian [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.684(e)].

[11] Objections Presumed on Behalf of Unrepresented Parent, Guardian, or Child

If the parent or guardian is present and not represented by counsel, it is deemed that objections that could have been made to the evidence were made unless the court has found that the parent or guardian has knowingly and intelligently waived counsel [Welf. & Inst. Code § 355(a)]. If the child is unrepresented by counsel, any objections to the introduction of evidence are deemed to have been made. No waiver of counsel limitation to this statutory provision applies for unrepresented children [Welf. & Inst. Code § 355(a)].

[12] Admissibility at Jurisdiction Hearing of Hearsay Statements in Social Study

[a] Background

For many years California dependency law has held social studies are admissible as evidence to prove the jurisdictional allegations in a juvenile dependency case [In re Jose M. (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 1098, 1104-1105, 254 Cal. Rptr. 364 ; In re Biggs (1971) 17 Cal. App. 3d 337, 345, 94 Cal. Rptr. 519 ; Cal. Rules of Ct., former Rule 1365(d); see also In re Halamuda (1948) 85 Cal. App. 2d 219, 222-224, 192 P.2d 781] .

A minority view developed, however, that held that although the report was admissible as evidence at a jurisdictional hearing, it could not be the sole evidence upon which the juvenile court based its decision [In re Donald R. (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 703, 715, 240 Cal. Rptr. 821] . This reasoning was based upon the argument that the language of former Welf. & Inst. Code § 355 that was in effect at that time required the jurisdiction finding to be based upon evidence admissible in the trials of civil cases, which did not include evidence admitted under the social study exception to the hearsay rule [In re Donald R. (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 703, 715, 240 Cal. Rptr. 821] .

In the case of In re Malinda S. (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 368, 272 Cal. Rptr. 787, 795 P.2d 1244 , the California Supreme Court settled the matter. In that case the social worker's report which was received into evidence at the jurisdiction trial contained a summary of the jurisdictional facts, a social assessment, an evaluation, a reunification plan and a recommendation. It also had attached to it the reports of a medical doctor and another social worker [In re Malinda S. (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 368, 373, 272 Cal. Rptr. 787, 795 P.2d 1244] .

The Supreme Court acknowledged that not all exceptions to the hearsay rule are found within the Evidence Code. The Court found that the Legislature did intend social studies to constitute competent evidence when it enacted Welf. & Inst. Code § 281 ("The court is authorized to receive and consider the reports and recommendations of the probation officer in determining any such matter."). In so doing it also noted the special role that the social worker has as an arm of the court and that social studies are "prepared by disinterested parties in the regular course of their professional duties" [In re Malinda S. (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 368, 377-381, 272 Cal. Rptr. 787, 795 P.2d 1244] . As such, the Supreme Court held that social studies are competent evidence which are made admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule by Welf. & Inst. Code § 281, met the standard required by Welf. & Inst. Code § 355 then in effect, and could be used as the sole support for a jurisdictional determination [In re Malinda S. (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 368, 382, 385, 272 Cal. Rptr. 787, 795 P.2d 1244 (disapproving In re Donald R. (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 703, 714-716, 240 Cal. Rptr. 821 , to the extent inconsistent with its holding)].

The California Supreme Court also made it clear that allowing the social study in as evidence does not deprive the parent of constitutional due process. Looking to the case of Long v. Long (1967) 251 Cal. App. 2d 732, 59 Cal. Rptr. 790 for guidance, the Court found that so long as each party receives a copy of the social study, is given an opportunity to cross-examine the preparer of the report, is given the opportunity to subpoena and examine the persons whose statements are contained in the report, and is permitted to introduce evidence by way of rebuttal, no constitutional due process violation exists [In re Malinda S. (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 368, 382-385, 272 Cal. Rptr. 787, 795 P.2d 1244] .

[b] Current Law

While the holding of the Supreme Court in In re Malinda S. (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 368, 272 Cal. Rptr. 787, 795 P.2d 1244 , was in many ways only a ratification of existing law and of what the juvenile courts in most counties had been doing for decades, a move arose amongst parents' advocates to attempt to overturn the decision legislatively. Initial efforts were unsuccessful, but on January 10, 1995, a bill which could be characterized as being part of the backlash movement [see Myers, The Backlash: Child Protection Under Fire (1994)], was introduced seeking to overturn the Malinda S. decision and the decades of law it upheld. In its initial form, Senate Bill 86 would have provided that the hearsay statements contained in a social study could not be sufficient to sustain a jurisdiction finding unless the statements would be admissible over objection in a civil action, the individuals whose statements were in the report were made available for cross-examination, the parties who appeared in court either in person or through counsel so stipulated, or properly noticed parties failed to appear [see Senate Bill No. 86, as introduced Jan. 10, 1995, Leg. Counsel Dig.]. This would have effectively shifted the burden of producing witnesses almost entirely to the social services agency, substantially lengthening trials, increasing expense, and requiring witnesses to appear who otherwise might not have been called by any of the parties.

In its final form, Senate Bill 86 was more moderate and balanced [see Stats. 1996, ch. 36; see also, In re Lucero L. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1227, 1252-1253, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 56, 998 P.2d 1019 (conc. opn. of Chin, J.), quoting Legis. Analyst, Enrolled Bill Rep., Sen. Bill No. 86 (1995-1996 Reg. Sess.) Apr. 25, 1996, p. 1]. Welf. & Inst. Code § 355 now clearly states that a social study and the hearsay evidence it contains is admissible at a jurisdiction hearing and constitutes competent evidence on which the juvenile court can base a finding of jurisdiction [Welf. & Inst. Code § 355(b)]. As under the Malinda S. decision and previous law, the preparer of the report must be made available for cross-examination on the timely request of any of the parties, although the social worker may be on telephone standby if he or she can be present at court within a reasonable amount of time [Welf. & Inst. Code § 355(b)(2)]. If any party so requests, the juvenile court can grant a continuance of up to 10 days where the social study is not provided to either the parties or their attorneys within a reasonable time before the hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 355(b)(3)].

The big change brought about by Senate Bill 86 dealt with those cases in which a party to the proceedings raises a timely objection to the admission of specific hearsay evidence which is contained in a social study. In such cases the specific hearsay evidence "shall not be sufficient by itself to support a jurisdictional finding or any ultimate fact upon which a jurisdictional finding is based" unless the social services agency establishes that at least one enumerated exception applies [Welf. & Inst. Code § 355(c)(1)]. The quantum of evidence needed in addition to the specific hearsay evidence is slight, and may be direct or circumstantial evidence. It is not necessary that the additional evidence establish by itself that the child comes within the court's jurisdiction [In re B.D. (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 975, 984-986, 67 Cal. Rptr. 3d 810] . An objection is considered timely under this section if it "identifies with reasonable specificity the disputed hearsay evidence" and is made sufficiently prior to a contested jurisdiction hearing as to allow the social services agency enough time to prepare to meet the objection [Welf. & Inst. Code § 355(c)(2)]. The exceptions to this provision which the agency must establish are as follows:

- The hearsay evidence would be admissible under any statutory or decisional exception to the hearsay rule in any civil or criminal proceeding [Welf. & Inst. Code § 355(c)(1)(A)].

- The person who made the hearsay statement is a child under the age of 12 who is the subject of the jurisdiction hearing. Such statements are inadmissible, however, if the party objecting establishes that the child's statement is unreliable because it was the "product of fraud, deceit, or undue influence" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 355(c)(1)(B); but see In re Lucero L. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1227, 1247-1248, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 56, 998 P.2d 1019 (plur. opn. of Mosk, J.) (allowing the statements to be admitted as evidence, but requiring a finding of reliability if the child is "disqualified as a witness because of the lack of capacity to distinguish between truth and falsehood at the time of testifying" and the child's hearsay statements are the sole basis for a finding of jurisdiction)].

- The person who made the hearsay statement is a peace officer as defined by Penal Code § 830 et seq., a health practitioner as defined by Penal Code § 11165.7(a)(21)-(28), a social worker licensed under Bus. & Prof. Code § 4996 et seq., or a teacher with a credential under Educ. Code § 44200 et seq. Statements are admissible under this provision only to the extent they would otherwise be admissible under Welf. & Inst. Code § 355, or if the declarant were actually present and testifying in court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 355(c)(1)(C)].

- The person who made the hearsay statement is available for cross-examination. The court may deem such a witness available for cross-examination if that person is on telephone standby and can be present in court within a reasonable time [Welf. & Inst. Code § 355(c)(1)(D)].

Many courts and practitioners mistakenly believe that if a timely objection is made to hearsay statements contained in the report and the declarant is not available for the objector to subpoena for cross-examination or is otherwise not available, the hearsay statements must be stricken from the report. This is not the case. Instead, they simply cannot be the sole basis on which a "jurisdictional finding or any ultimate fact upon which a jurisdictional finding is based" unless they fall within one of the statutory exceptions [Welf. & Inst. Code § 355(c)(1); In re Lucero L. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1227, 1247-1248, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 56, 998 P.2d 1019 (plur. opn. of Mosk, J.)]. Although Welf. & Inst. Code § 355(c) limits the extent to which hearsay evidence in a social study hearsay can be relied on exclusively for a finding of jurisdiction, there is no limitation, except for fraud, deceit, or undue influence for the hearsay statement of the child, on the admission of the hearsay evidence in the social study [In re B.D. (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 975, 983-984, 67 Cal. Rptr. 3d 810 ; In re Lucero L. (2000) 22 Cal.4th 1227, 1243, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 56, 998 P.2d 1019] . Thus, in most instances the hearsay statements will be admitted despite the objection, but the juvenile court must take the unavailability of the declarant as going to the weight to be given the hearsay statements, particularly if they do not meet the criteria for one of the exceptions [Welf. & Inst. Code § 355(c)(1)].

Nothing in these provisions limits in any way the right of a party to subpoena a witness whose statement is contained in a social study or to introduce admissible evidence which goes to the weight to be afforded the hearsay evidence or to the credibility of the person whose hearsay statement was admitted [Welf. & Inst. Code § 355(d)].

One significant effect of these recent statutory changes has been in the area of lay witnesses whose hearsay statements are contained in the social study or attached documents. Because the statements of lay witnesses will frequently not be covered by one of the exceptions under Welf. & Inst. Code § 355(c)(1)(A)-(C), the social services agency will often need to make such witnesses available for cross-examination by an objecting party [Welf. & Inst. Code § 355(c)(1)(D)] if the statements are to be admitted at a jurisdiction hearing over a timely objection and used as the sole basis for jurisdiction [Welf. & Inst. Code § 355(c)(1)]. This significant change benefits those parents who object to the assumption of juvenile court jurisdiction; often, the appearance of the lay witness for testimony is the most difficult to obtain in a dependency case.

PRACTICE TIP:

Using Section 355 to Your Benefit. The holding in Malinda S. frequently worked to everyone's benefit. Juvenile courts could maximize the use of precious court time by not requiring them to hear witnesses whose testimony was not controverted. Social services agencies could present their case for jurisdiction in a concise fashion without the added cost and inconvenience of calling unnecessary witnesses. Finally, it allowed counsel for the parents to pick and choose which witnesses to call so as to have the greatest impact on the court from a defense perspective. This latter benefit is all too often forgotten, but remains available to parents under Welf. & Inst. Code § 355. The majority of witnesses whose statements are contained in the social study will not help the parent's case if called to testify. Indeed, their testimony may well strengthen the case of the social services department [see In re Malinda S. (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 368, 385 fn. 20, 272 Cal. Rptr. 787, 795 P.2d 1244] . Defense attorneys should remember that Welf. & Inst. Code § 355 is as much a tool for the defense as it is for the social services agency. Counsel should use these tools to their advantage by reviewing the social study carefully in advance, interviewing the witnesses, and then only calling those witnesses whose testimony will actually help the defense, thereby maximizing the impact of the live testimony. Of course, if it is believed that a lay witness is unavailable, defense counsel may be wise to enter a timely objection. Care should be taken in making such a decision, however, since if the social services agency is able to find the witness, the testimony may be damaging to the parents' case. Obviously, this is a tactical decision which must be made by parents' counsel. Parents' counsel must also remember the limitations of Welf. & Inst. Code § 355 only apply at jurisdiction hearings. Those limitations, including the restrictions on hearsay evidence, do not apply at other dependency hearings. Thus, counsel must prepare for the trial of other hearings differently, including having witnesses subpoenaed if counsel desires to cross-examine them regarding their statements contained in the social worker's reports.

[c] Children's Hearsay Statements in Social Studies

It is both surprising and troubling that there should be any question whether a juvenile court charged with the safety and protection of abused and neglected children can consider as evidence the statements of the very children whose safety and protection it is considering. As noted by Justice Chin in his compelling concurring opinion in Lucero L., "If a parent abuses a particularly young child in private and leaves no physical marks, two common scenarios, the child cannot be protected if the trial court does not consider and act on his or her hearsay statements" [In re Lucero L. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1227, 1254, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 56, 998 P.2d 1019 (conc. opn. of Chin, J.), emphasis in original]. Thus, to many the question at the jurisdiction hearing should not be the admissibility of children's hearsay statements, but whether those statements are true or not, and what weight should be afforded them. Nevertheless, juvenile courts have frequently spent considerable time at jurisdiction hearings litigating the admissibility of children's statements contained in social studies. The enactment of Senate Bill 86 [Stats. 1996, ch. 36] helps to limit this.

Under previous decisional law, although a child's statements would normally be received in evidence at a jurisdiction hearing pursuant to In re Malinda S. (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 368, 272 Cal. Rptr. 787, 795 P.2d 1244 , those statements were to be stricken from the social study if an objection was made and the child was found not to have been competent at the time the statement was made [In re Basilio T. (1992) 4 Cal. App. 4th 155, 166-168, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 450] . Although not directly questioned, the Basilio T. holding was clarified and ameliorated in numerous subsequent decisions. If the child was found to lack the ability at trial to distinguish between the truth and a lie and therefore was incompetent to testify at a time after the statement was made, it was held that a non-statutory rebuttable presumption arose that the child was incompetent for the same reason at the time the statement was made as well. The presumption was rebuttable on a showing otherwise [In re Daniel Z. (1992) 10 Cal. App. 4th 1009, 1017-1021, 13 Cal. Rptr. 2d 139 (case remanded; social services agency has burden of producing evidence to rebut presumption)].

It was also held that if the child was found incompetent to testify solely because the child was intimidated by the questioning, earlier hearsay statements could be admitted [In re Kailee B. (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 719, 726, 22 Cal. Rptr. 2d 485 ; In re Dirk S. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 1037, 1043, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 643] . Moreover, it was recognized the statement might be admissible under hearsay exceptions other than the social study exception, such as the spontaneous statement exception to the hearsay rule [see Evid. Code § 1240(b)], in which case it could support a jurisdictional or dispositional order. To be admissible as such, however, the social study report needed to indicate the statement was made while the child was still in a dominating state of nervous excitement [In re Daniel Z. (1992) 10 Cal. App. 4th 1009, 1022, 13 Cal. Rptr. 2d 139 ; see also In re Clara B. (1993) 20 Cal. App. 4th 988, 998, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 56] .

Further, it was held that even though a child does not qualify to testify, the child's hearsay statements could be used not for the truth of the matter asserted that a particular individual harmed the child, but for a nonhearsay purpose such as circumstantial evidence of the child's state of mind [In re Dorinda A. (1992) 10 Cal. App. 4th 1657, 1662, 13 Cal. Rptr. 2d 653 , citing In re Cheryl H. (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d 1098, 1131, 200 Cal. Rptr. 789] . Finally, even if not admissible at the jurisdiction hearing, a child's hearsay statements contained in the social study could be relevant and admissible at a disposition hearing to show whether the child's best interests were served by contact with the parent [In re Dorinda A. (1992) 10 Cal. App. 4th 1657, 1663, 13 Cal. Rptr. 2d 653 , citing In re Cheryl H. (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d 1098, 1132, 200 Cal. Rptr. 789] .

Cases such as Daniel Z., Kailee B., Dirk S., and Dorinda A., although less necessary, retain some general continued application to dependency proceedings. Except for children 12 years of age or older and children who are not the subject of the dependency proceedings, however, the requirement of Basilio T. for testimonial competence as a prerequisite to the admission at the jurisdiction hearing of children's hearsay statements contained in the social study has been legislatively eliminated with the enactment of Senate Bill 86. When it amended Welf. & Inst. Code § 355 to specifically address the admissibility of the hearsay statements of children contained in social studies, the legislature did not include a competency requirement. The mandate of Basilio T. in this regard is therefore no longer applicable law [see Palos Verdes Faculty Assn. v. Palos Verdes Peninsula Unified School Dist. (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 650, 659, 147 Cal. Rptr. 359, 580 P.2d 1155 (legislature is presumed to know existing decisional law regarding statute; when it makes substantial changes in statutory language it is inferred legislature intended to alter the law affected by those changes); In re Chantal S. (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 196, 206-207, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 866, 913 P.2d 1075 (if legislature wanted to include a specific term or requirement, it could have)]. This was the holding of the Supreme Court in the Lucero L. decision [In re Lucero L. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1227, 1242-1244, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 56, 998 P.2d 1019 (plur. opn. of Mosk, J.)]. Thus, the only ground for not admitting the hearsay statements of a child under the age of 12 years who is the subject of the proceedings is a finding the statements are unreliable due to being the product of fraud, deceit, or undue influence [Welf. & Inst. Code § 355(c)(1)(B)]. The lack of testimonial competence is no longer a viable objection in this regard.

In the Lucero L. case the Supreme Court found the provisions of Welf. & Inst. Code § 355 constitutional with regard to the admissibility of children's hearsay statements contained in social studies. This was true even if the child was found to be testimonially incompetent due to the inability to tell truth from falsity [In re Lucero L. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1227, 1243-1244, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 56, 998 P.2d 1019 (plur. opn. of Mosk, J.)]. Nevertheless, the Supreme Court imposed an additional due process requirement in those cases in which the child is testimonially incompetent due to the inability to tell truth from falsity and the child's hearsay statements are the only evidence supporting a finding of jurisdiction. In such cases, although the hearsay statements are admissible under Welf. & Inst. Code § 355, the juvenile court cannot rely on those statements as the sole basis for a jurisdictional finding unless the court makes a finding the child's hearsay statements are reliable [In re Lucero L. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1227, 1244-1248, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 56, 998 P.2d 1019 (plur. opn. of Mosk, J.)]. There is, however, no requirement for corroboration as currently required under the child dependency hearsay exception of Cindy L. [In re Lucero L. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1227, 1248-1249, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 56, 998 P.2d 1019 (plur. opn. of Mosk, J.)]. For a detailed discussion of the factors to be considered by the court in making a finding that a child's hearsay statements are reliable, see § 328.110[13] (Child Dependency Hearsay Exception).

Two points bear mention here. The first is that it will be the rare case in which the child's hearsay statements of abuse will be the only evidence supporting a finding of jurisdiction. Thus, in most cases, even if the child is testimonially incompetent due to the inability to distinguish truth from falsity, no finding of reliability will be required to allow the admission of the child's hearsay statements contained in the social study to be received in evidence. This was the situation in Lucero L. [In re Lucero L. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1227, 1251-1252, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 56, 998 P.2d 1019 (conc. opn. of Kennard, J.)].

The second point is that Lucero L. was a plurality opinion. As the composition of the Supreme Court changes, the possibility exists that a different decision might someday be reached upholding the constitutionality of Welf. & Inst. Code § 355 as written, without a reliability finding in the limited circumstances addressed in that decision. In a compelling concurring opinion, Justice Chin wrote that he would uphold the social study exception in this regard as written by the Legislature. He and Justice Baxter, who joined him in his concurrence, felt the child's hearsay statements contained in the social study should be admitted under the statutory exception and the trial court should then consider all of the evidence. The fact the child's hearsay statements of abuse are admitted in evidence does not compel a finding of jurisdiction. The statute merely allows the statements to be sufficient to support a jurisdictional finding if believed. Thus, Justice Chin felt the case came down to a "simple question of whether substantial evidence supports the trial court's jurisdiction finding" [In re Lucero L. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1227, 1253, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 56, 998 P.2d 1019 (conc. opn. of Chin, J.)]. In reaching this decision, Justice Chin noted that "Section 355 is a balanced statute, giving the parents substantial rights while allowing children to be protected as fully as possible" [In re Lucero L. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1227, 1254, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 56, 998 P.2d 1019 (conc. opn. of Chin, J.)]. He went on to note that "Children able to express themselves but too young to testify are precisely those most in need of the protection that section 355 provides. The can express themselves; they can tell truthfully what is happening to them; they can, in this limited way, try to protect themselves. But then others must listen to what they say" [In re Lucero L. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1227, 1256, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 56, 998 P.2d 1019 (conc. opn. of Chin, J.)]. This compelling concurring opinion is not currently the law, but it offers valuable insight that may well point the way to the future.

It should also be noted that under current law, if a child's out-of-court statements are admissible under case law as an exception to the hearsay rule [see, e.g., In re Cindy L. (1997) 17 Cal. 4th 15, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 803, 947 P.2d 1340 ; In re Carmen O. (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 908, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 848 (child dependency hearsay exception)], they will be admissible under the new statutory provisions as well [Welf. & Inst. Code § 355(c)(1)(A)] because they fall under a decisional exception to the hearsay rule. Further, if they are admissible under some statutory provision as an exception to the hearsay rule [see, e.g., Evid. Code § 1370 (hearsay exception in physical abuse cases)], they will also still be admissible [Welf. & Inst. Code § 355(c)(1)(A)].

For children 12 or over, or children who are not the subject of the proceeding, the hearsay exception contained in Welf. & Inst. Code § 355(c)(1)(B) does not apply. Thus, if there is an objection to the hearsay statement of such a child contained in a social study, it may not be used as the sole basis for a jurisdictional finding [Welf. & Inst. Code § 355(c)(1)]. Even for the statements of these children, however, it is doubtful the holding in Basilio T. remains viable in light of the California Supreme Court's holding in Cindy L. and Lucero L. [In re Cindy L. (1997) 17 Cal. 4th 15, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 803, 947 P.2d 1340 ("incompetence to testify should not be a categorical bar to the admission of a child's out-of-court statements"); In re Lucero L. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1227, 1242-1243, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 56, 998 P.2d 1019 (plur. opn. of Mosk, J.) ("hearsay statements contained in social studies should be admissible even if they do not meet the requirements of the child dependency exception and even if the minor is incompetent to testify")]. Conversely, there may be statements of children who are under 12 but who are not the subject of the jurisdiction hearing, or who are 12 years of age or older, which may have been admissible within the social study under Malinda S. and other case law, that may not be admissible now over objection under Welf. & Inst. Code § 355(c)(1)(B).

[d] Inapplicability of Crawford v. Washington

In 2004 the United States Supreme Court handed down a decision that represented a significant change in its position on the Confrontation Clause and exceptions to the hearsay rule in criminal proceedings [Crawford v. Washington (2004) 541 U.S. 36, 124 S. Ct. 1354, 158 L. Ed. 2d 177]. In Crawford, the Court decided that hearsay evidence that contains "testimonial" statements is inadmissible in criminal prosecutions unless the hearsay declarant either testifies or the prosecution demonstrates a constitutionally acceptable reason for not producing the declarant as a witness and, more importantly, the defendant had an opportunity to confront and cross-examine the declarant at an earlier proceeding. This overruled the Court's decision in Ohio v. Roberts (1980) 448 U.S. 56, 100 S. Ct. 2531, 65 L. Ed. 2d 597 , that held a criminal defendant's right under the United States Constitution's Sixth Amendment to be confronted by the witnesses against him or her did not bar admission, at a criminal trial, of an unavailable witness' statement against the defendant if the statement bore adequate indicia of reliability. This dramatic change in the Supreme Court's approach to the issue has caused a great deal of litigation in criminal proceedings that is likely to continue. What constitutes "testimonial" hearsay in criminal proceedings is one of the biggest issues, since the Court declined to provide a comprehensive definition [Crawford v. Washington (2004) 541 U.S. 36, 124 S. Ct. 1354, 158 L. Ed. 2d 177]. In dependency cases, however, the primary question is whether the Crawford decision has any application at all. It does not [In re April C. (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 599, 610-612, 31 Cal. Rptr. 3d 804 ; Myers, 2 Myers on Evidence in Child, Domestic and Elder Abuse Cases (Aspen 2005) § 7.22[B][2], p. 635].

Although dependency proceedings may at times be adversarial [In re Kristin H. (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 1635, 1662, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 722] , it is neither the goal nor the intention of the dependency system to be an adversarial process [Welf. & Inst. Code § 350(a)(1)]. More importantly, dependency proceedings are not criminal prosecutions. Instead, they are special proceedings of a civil nature, designed not to punish the parent but to protect the child [In re Shelley J. (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 322, 328, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 922 ; In re Chantal S. (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 196, 200, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 866, 913 P.2d 1075 ; In re Malinda S. (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 368, 384, 272 Cal. Rptr. 787, 795 P.2d 1244] . The federal Sixth Amendment right to confrontation and its California counterpart apply only in criminal prosecutions. Because dependency proceedings are not criminal proceedings, the express right of confrontation guaranteed by the federal and state constitutions to criminal defendants does not apply [In re Angel W. (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 1074, 1080, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 659 ; In re Amber S. (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 1260, 1264, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 404] . As such, the Crawford decision does not apply to dependency proceedings [In re April C. (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 599, 610-612, 31 Cal. Rptr. 3d 804 ; see also In re C.M. (Ill. Ct. App. 2004) 815 N.E.2d 49, 52 (holding Crawford does not apply to juvenile dependency case because the Sixth Amendment does not apply); Commonwealth v. Given (Mass. 2004) 441 Mass. 741, 808 N.E.2d 788, 794 n. 9 (holding Crawford has no bearing on hearsay evidence at a civil commitment proceeding because the Sixth Amendment does not apply); Myers, 2 Myers on Evidence in Child, Domestic and Elder Abuse Cases (Aspen 2005) § 7.22[B][2], p. 635].

This does not mean parents have no right to confront the witnesses against them in dependency proceedings. They do, generally. In dependency proceedings, however, that right is based on principles of due process, not the federal Sixth Amendment or its California counterpart. Thus, the parent's right to due process may be satisfied through means other than confrontation [In re Lucero L. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1227, 1242-1249, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 56, 998 P.2d 1019 ; In re Amber S. (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 1260, 1264-1267, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 404] .

[13] Child Dependency Hearsay Exception

Many states have a residual or child witness hearsay exception that can be utilized to allow the introduction of a child's out-of-court statement for the truth of the matter asserted when it is shown the child's hearsay statements are reliable [see Myers, 2 Myers on Evidence in Child, Domestic and Elder Abuse Cases (Aspen 2005) § 7.16, Residual Exception, pp. 587-618]. The Federal Rules of Evidence contain such a residual hearsay exception as well [see Fed. R. Evid., Rule 807]. Until recently, however, California did not have a similar provision. Observing that out-of-court statements of child victims are often reliable yet do not fit within the traditional hearsay exceptions, the Fourth District Court of Appeal, Division One, recognized the "child dependency hearsay exception" in the case of In re Carmen O. (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 908, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 848 , providing for the admission of a child's hearsay statements in dependency cases upon a finding of reliability. Having broken new ground in California, the Carmen O. decision has been called "the pioneering decision in this area" [In re Lucero L. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1227, 1256, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 56, 998 P.2d 1019 (conc. opn. of Chin, J.)]. The California Supreme Court has upheld and modified this judicially created hearsay exception in the case of In re Cindy L. (1997) 17 Cal. 4th 15, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 803, 947 P.2d 1340 . Thus California now has a child dependency hearsay exception.

The child dependency hearsay exception is a limited exception that applies only to juvenile dependency cases. In creating this rule of evidence, the court of appeal was very specific that it was not creating a broad brush residual hearsay rule or a hearsay exception for use in criminal child abuse cases. Instead, it indicated it was merely finding the juvenile court should not be required to "push and twist the facts into old-time hearsay exception rules" when there exists sufficient evidence of the reliability of the child's out-of-court statements [In re Carmen O. (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 908, 922, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 848] . Because it does not apply in criminal proceedings, the holding in Crawford v. Washington (2004) 541 U.S. 36, 124 S. Ct. 1354, 158 L. Ed. 2d 177 , does not apply to the child dependency hearsay exception in dependency proceedings [In re April C. (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 599, 610-612, 31 Cal. Rptr. 3d 804 ; Myers, 2 Myers on Evidence in Child, Domestic and Elder Abuse Cases (Aspen 2005) § 7.22[B][2], p. 635].

The Supreme Court agreed with the appellate court's creation of the exception, finding Carmen O. "basically sound" and holding courts have the power to create new exceptions to the hearsay rule where, such as here, there is a substantial need for the exception and the class of hearsay evidence is intrinsically reliable [In re Cindy L. (1997) 17 Cal. 4th 15, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 803, 947 P.2d 1340] .

In creating the child dependency hearsay exception, the Carmen O. court noted a number of factors that indicated the four-year-old child's hearsay statements were reliable [In re Carmen O. (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 908, 921, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 848] . These included factors surrounding the making of the statements such as the spontaneity of the statements, the fact the statements were made several times, that they were consistent in their content, that the child used developmentally appropriate terminology, and the fact the child had no motive to lie since she still loved the perpetrator and played with him despite the abuse [In re Carmen O. (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 908, 921, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 848] . In upholding the exception in Cindy L. the Supreme Court also found "the time, content, and circumstances" of the almost-four-year-old girl's statement in that case provided an indicia of reliability. The facts supporting a finding of reliability in that case included such factors surrounding the making of the statement as the spontaneity of the statement, that it was repeated consistently to two social workers and a police investigator, and that there was no motive to lie shown, since the child "loved her father and had no wish to harm him" [In re Cindy L. (1997) 17 Cal. 4th 15, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 803, 947 P.2d 1340] .

Factors surrounding the making of a child's statements that may support a finding of reliability are not limited to those cited by the Carmen O. and Cindy L. courts. Indeed, in Cindy L. the court noted the "nonexhaustive list of factors" the United States Supreme Court had cited as being relevant to determining the reliability of a child's hearsay statements included spontaneity, consistent repetition, the child's mental state, the child's use of terminology unexpected from a child of that age, and a lack of motive to fabricate [In re Cindy L. (1997) 17 Cal. 4th 15, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 803, 947 P.2d 1340 , citing Idaho v. Wright (1990) 497 U.S. 805, 821-822, 110 S. Ct. 3139, 111 L. Ed. 2d 638] . And in Lucero

L. the court stated "the factors bearing on a statement's reliability are not limited to those specifically enumerated in Cindy L. or Idaho v. Wright--any factor bearing on reliability may be considered" [In re Lucero L. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1227, 1250, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 56, 998 P.2d 1019 (plur. opn. of Mosk, J.)]. This includes the "child's ability to understand the duty to tell the truth and to distinguish between truth and falsity" [In re Cindy L. (1997) 17 Cal. 4th 15, 30, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 803, 947 P.2d 1340] .

Common sense suggests that any list of reliability factors would of necessity be "nonexhaustive." Perhaps the most complete listings, however, are found in the highly respected treatises by Professor John E.B. Myers. He lists the following as factors surrounding the making of a child's statements that may impact, positively or negatively, its reliability for admission under such a hearsay exception: prior testimony where the adversary had the opportunity to cross-examine the child; testimonial competence of the child when the statement was made; testimonial competence of the child at the time of the trial; spontaneity of the statement; statement overheard by more than one person; statement elicited by questioning and the types of questions used; taped interviews that allow the court to "evaluate firsthand" the types of questions used; mental health counseling before statement was made; consistency of the statements ("complete consistency" is not required for reliability; consistency about peripheral details is less important); the child's state of mind and emotion when statement was made; play and gestures coinciding with the description of abuse; developmentally unusual sexual knowledge; idiosyncratic detail; age and maturity of the child; developmentally appropriate terminology; statement against interest; motive to fabricate; personal knowledge; level of understanding regarding the event; delayed reporting and possible memory loss; and the child testifying at trial [Myers, 2 Myers on Evidence in Child, Domestic and Elder Abuse Cases (Aspen 2005) § 7.16[B], Factors Surrounding Statement, pp. 590-608 (describing factors and providing extensive case authority)]. He has also noted that in all cases it is helpful to consider the child's statements in terms of the "four hearsay risks" of insincerity, memory loss, ambiguity, and misperception. "When the risks are low; admission is appropriate" [Myers, Evidence In Child Abuse And Neglect Cases (John Wiley. 3d ed. 1997) Vol. 2, Hearsay, § 7.51 Factors Surrounding Statement, p. 350].

Factors that corroborate the child's hearsay statements may also impact the determination of the statement's reliability. Such corroborating evidence cannot be used to determine reliability in federal criminal cases [Idaho v. Wright (1990) 497 U.S. 805, 819-820, 110 S. Ct. 3139, 111 L. Ed. 2d 638 ; but see Myers, 2 Myers on Evidence in Child, Domestic and Elder Abuse Cases (Aspen 2005) § 7.16[A], Analysis of Reliability: Idaho v. Wright, pp. 587-589 (criticizing the holding of the majority in this regard)]. In dependency proceedings, however, "corroborative evidence that cannot be considered in criminal litigation should be admissible to assess the reliability of children's hearsay statements offered under residual exceptions" [Myers, Evidence In Child Abuse And Neglect Cases (John Wiley, 3d ed. 1997) Vol. 2, Hearsay, § 7.50, Analysis of Reliability, p. 325-326]. The Carmen O. court appears to have done exactly that. There, in addition to listing the evidence surrounding the making of the statement that supported reliability, the court of appeal also noted that independent evidence was consistent with the child's out-of-court statement of molestation [In re Carmen O. (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 908, 921, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 848] . This appears to have been referring to the medical evidence that "indicated consistency with the possibility of hymen injury" [In re Carmen O. (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 908, 912, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 848] , which was corroborative evidence supportive of a finding of reliability. The Supreme Court's plurality decision in Lucero L. is also supportive of the view that corroborating factors can be considered in determining the reliability of a child's hearsay statements [In re Lucero L. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1227, 1250, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 56, 998 P.2d 1019 (plur. opn. of Mosk, J.) ("any factor bearing on reliability may be considered")]. It should be obvious in analyzing the reliability and admissibility of a child's statements that not all evidence of reliability is corroborative in nature, but all corroborative evidence necessarily impacts reliability.

Just as with the factors surrounding the making of the child's statements, any list of corroborative factors that may impact the reliability or admissibility of the statements is also, of necessity, nonexhaustive. As noted by Professor Myers, "The types of evidence that may corroborate abuse are limitless, and case-by-case analysis is required" [Myers, Evidence In Child Abuse And Neglect Cases (John Wiley, 3d ed. 1997) Vol. 2, Hearsay, § 7.53, Child Hearsay Exception, pp. 361-362]. He lists the following as factors corroborating the child's statement that may "bolster confidence in the reliability of the statement": medical or physical evidence of abuse; changes in behavior; developmentally unusual sexual knowledge; play and gestures indicative of abuse; corroborative hearsay statements; reliability of person who overheard statement; more than one child with the same story; eyewitness testimony; opportunity of the suspect to commit the act; admission by the suspect; evidence of the suspect's prior uncharged misconduct; character evidence; and expert testimony the child was abused [Myers, 2 Myers on Evidence in Child, Domestic and Elder Abuse Cases (Aspen 2005) § 7.16[C], Factors That Corroborate Hearsay, pp. 609-614 (describing factors and providing extensive case authority)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Study Resources Addressing the Reliability of Children's Statements of Abuse. The reliability of children's statements of abuse has always been a factor in the juvenile court's determination of jurisdictional allegations, since the weight to be afforded such statements is always at issue. Now that reliability findings are needed under the child dependency hearsay exception and, in certain limited circumstances, under the social study exception of Welf. & Inst. Code § 355, the need for everyone involved in the dependency process to be familiar with factors impacting the reliability of children's statements is even greater. Professor Myers seminal treatise is an excellent starting place. But there are also many other books and articles that are helpful in understanding the reliability of children's statements [see, e.g., Hewitt, Assessing Allegations of Sexual Abuse in Preschool Children: Understanding Small Voices (Sage, 1999); Poole & Lamb, Investigative Interviews of Children: A Guide For Helping Professionals (American Psychological Association, 1998); Ceci & Bruck, Jeopardy in the Courtroom: A Scientific Analysis of Children's Testimony (American Psychological Association, 1995); Perry & Wrightsman, The Child Witness: Legal Issues and Dilemmas (Sage, 1991)]. Care, of course, must be taken to identify the biases of authors and any limitations of their work [see, e.g., Lyon, The New Wave in Children's Suggestibility Research: A Critique, 84 Cornell L. Rev. 1004 (1999)]. But these and other resources should be on the reading list of social workers, attorneys, advocates, and judicial officers involved in the determination of the reliability of children's statements.

In addition to upholding the child dependency hearsay exception created by Carmen O. the Supreme Court in Cindy L. provided both clarification and limitation to the exception. It held that before a child's hearsay statements can be admitted under this exception the other parties to the dependency action must have notice of the intention to introduce the statements and the opportunity to contest it so that due process is provided [In re Cindy L. (1997) 17 Cal. 4th 15, 29, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 803, 947 P.2d 1340] . It also held there is no requirement the child be found to have been testimonially competent at the time the statement was made for the statement to be admissible under the child dependency hearsay exception. Competency is a factor to be considered in determining reliability, but it is not definitive, nor is it a prerequisite to admissibility under this exception [In re Cindy L. (1997) 17 Cal. 4th 15, 31-35, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 803, 947 P.2d 1340] . This impliedly disapproves the holding in the case of In re Nemis M. (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 1344, 1353-1354, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 324 to the contrary.

The one clear limitation placed on the child dependency hearsay exception by the Supreme Court in Cindy L. deals with corroboration. If the child is not available for cross-examination, there must be corroborative evidence in order for the child's out-of-court statements to be admissible under this exception [In re Cindy L. (1997) 17 Cal. 4th 15, 29-30, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 803, 947 P.2d 1340] . The Supreme Court observed the "predominant view" regarding the admission of child hearsay statements in other jurisdictions is consistent with such a requirement. It also expressed the opinion the factors having bearing on the reliability of a child's hearsay statements are ambiguous and subject to manipulation. Thus, a requirement for corroboration if the child is unavailable for cross-examination "is an additional safeguard against the possibility of fabrication by very young witnesses whose out-of-court statements are insulated from the rigors of cross-examination." Finally, it noted such a requirement would make the rule for the admission of such statements in California the same for criminal and dependency cases [In re Cindy L. (1997) 17 Cal. 4th 15, 30, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 803, 947 P.2d 1340 , citing Evid. Code § 1360]. The requirement for corroboration imposed by Cindy L. was not one required by due process, however. It was an "extra prudential rule" that reflected "prudence in an area in which the truth of a hearsay statement was particularly open to question" [In re Lucero L. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1227, 1248-1249, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 56, 998 P.2d 1019 (plur. opn. of Mosk, J.)].

That the California Supreme Court would acknowledge its imposition of a corroboration requirement was not required by due process is understandable. The United States Supreme Court has held that full reliance on a child victim's hearsay statements does not violate the Confrontation Clause of the Sixth Amendment to the United States Constitution if the statements meet the test of reliability. Consideration of corroborating evidence in that context is not only not required, under federal law it is not permitted [Idaho v. Wright (1990) 497 U.S. 805, 819, 110 S. Ct. 3139, 111 L. Ed. 2d 638] . "The standard of evidence cannot be higher under the due process clause in a dependency hearing than under the confrontation clause in a criminal trial" [In re Lucero L. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1227, 1249, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 56, 998 P.2d 1019 (plur. opn. of Mosk, J.)]. In most jurisdictions where corroboration is statutorily required if the child is not available for cross-examination, however, the hearsay exception utilized is one that covers the admission of such statements in all cases, including criminal cases. In that context a requirement for corroboration is understandable. But to require corroboration in a rule limited to dependency cases virtually ensures that in some rare instances a statement already found to be reliable in a fully contested hearing will nevertheless be held inadmissible under the child dependency hearsay exception due to the lack of corroborative evidence. In such rare instances this may deny the juvenile court the ability to protect the child. As noted by Justice Chin in his insightful concurring opinion in Lucero L., "Government can do few things more harmful than turn a deaf ear to an abused child's plea for help and return that child for more abuse" [In re Lucero L. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1227, 1256, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 56, 998 P.2d 1019 (conc. opn. of Chin, J.)]. The wisdom of a corroboration requirement in a hearsay exception designed solely for dependency cases is therefore open to substantial question and may someday be reconsidered by the Supreme Court. It is, however, now California law.

In light of the requirement for corroborative evidence if the child is unavailable for cross-examination, it should be noted that corroborative evidence is rarely direct and definitive, such as that provided by an eyewitness or conclusive medical evidence of abuse. More often "corroborative evidence is circumstantial" [Myers, Evidence In Child Abuse And Neglect Cases (John Wiley, 3d ed. 1997) Vol. 2, Hearsay, § 7.53 Child Hearsay Exception, p. 361]. Moreover, corroborative evidence is not required to be conclusive. It only needs to support a logical and reasonable inference that the abusive act alleged in the child's hearsay statements occurred [In re Cindy L. (1997) 17 Cal. 4th 15, 35, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 803, 947 P.2d 1340] . As noted by Professor Myers, "Evidence corroborates if it has any tendency to make a proposition more likely" [Myers, Evidence In Child Abuse And Neglect Cases (John Wiley, 3d ed. 1997) Vol. 2, Hearsay, § 7.53 Child Hearsay Exception, p. 361]. As such, the requirement for corroboration "should be applied flexibly so that reliable hearsay is not excluded by a stubborn insistence on corroboration that is impossible to obtain" [Myers, Evidence In Child Abuse And Neglect Cases (John Wiley, 3d ed. 1997) Vol. 2, Hearsay, § 7.53 Child Hearsay Exception, p. 362]. Thus, a court determining whether the corroboration requirement of Cindy L. has been met should consider the evidence in light of the many factors that may corroborate the child's hearsay statements of abuse and not rigidly require diagnostic or other direct evidence conclusively proving the abuse [see Myers, Evidence In Child Abuse And Neglect Cases (John Wiley, 3d ed. 1997) Vol. 2, Hearsay, § 7.52 Factors Corroborating Statement, pp. 350-354 (describing factors and providing extensive case authority); see also In re Lucero L. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1227, 1254, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 56, 998 P.2d 1019 (conc. opn. of Chin, J.) (finding corroboration of the child's statements included the evidence of similar molestation of an older half sister, expert testimony regarding the significance of that evidence, and medical evidence of an anal fissure, which was not conclusive, but significant)].

One other possible limitation that some argue the Supreme Court appeared to have placed on the child dependency hearsay exception is that of restricting its use to cases of alleged sexual abuse. Although Carmen O. involved sexual abuse, the court of appeal did not limit the exception it created to sexual abuse cases. In Cindy L., however, the Supreme Court described the exception as one allowing the admission of a child's hearsay statements in sexual abuse cases [In re Cindy L. (1997) 17 Cal. 4th 15, 18, 28, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 803, 947 P.2d 1340] . It does do that. But there are also other circumstances in which a child's hearsay statements may be reliable, not fit a statutory exception to the hearsay rule, and be both appropriate and needed for the dependency litigation, yet not involve sexual abuse. Elsewhere in the Cindy L. opinion, the Court stated "the requirement of corroboration will make the rule in this state regarding the admission of child hearsay statements consistent in both criminal and dependency proceedings" [In re Cindy L. (1997) 17 Cal. 4th 15, 30, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 803, 947 P.2d 1340 , citing Evid. Code § 1360]. Evidence Code section 1360 is not limited to sexual abuse cases, but instead applies when the statement of the child describes "any act of child abuse or neglect performed with or on the child by another" or any such act attempted by another. Thus, if consistency was a goal, the child dependency hearsay exception should not be limited to cases involving sexual abuse. In Lucero L. the Supreme Court considered the social study exception to the hearsay rule found in Welf. & Inst. Code § 355, not the child dependency hearsay exception. But the Court did summarize its holding in Cindy L. and draw on that opinion. In so doing, it did not characterize the hearsay exception it upheld in Cindy L. as one limited to sexual abuse cases. It indicated the exception dealt with the admission of children's hearsay statements of abuse at a jurisdiction hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 [In re Lucero L. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1227, 1231, 1238, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 56, 998 P.2d 1019 (plur. opn. of Mosk, J.)]. Further, the Basilio T. case, which essentially started the line of cases leading up to Carmen O. and the creation of the child dependency hearsay exception, was a case involving domestic violence, not sexual abuse [In re Basilio T. (1992) 4 Cal. App. 4th 155, 160, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 450 (4-year-old child stated: "My mom and dad fight. I saw blood.")]. Thus, the better view is that Cindy L. merely described the exception in terms of sexual abuse because that was the type of case it was considering at the time, and not because it was limiting the exception to any particular form of abuse. Regardless, the Supreme Court's holding in Cindy L. that courts can create exceptions to the hearsay rule [In re Cindy L. (1997) 17 Cal. 4th 15, 27-28, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 803, 947 P.2d 1340] provides the authority in an appropriate case not involving sexual abuse for a court to consider using or expanding the child dependency hearsay exception to allow the admission of a child's hearsay statements based on a finding of reliability and, if necessary, corroboration.

Finally, the interplay between the child dependency hearsay exception created in Carmen O. and the social study exception found in Welf. & Inst. Code § 355 should be mentioned. The Supreme Court in Cindy L. indicated it would leave to another day the question of whether the legislative amendments to Welf. & Inst. Code § 355 obviate the need for the child dependency hearsay exception [In re Cindy L. (1997) 17 Cal. 4th 15, 28, fn. 6, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 803, 947 P.2d 1340] . In the Lucero L. case, the Supreme Court acknowledged it had left this question for another day, but did not expressly answer it [In re Lucero L. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1227, 1242, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 56, 998 P.2d 1019 (plur. opn. of Mosk, J.)]. Nevertheless, its plurality decision, while somewhat blurring the distinction between the two, impliedly recognizes they are two separate and independent hearsay exceptions. This is as it should be. There is in the everyday practice of dependency law a need for both exceptions. There are, of course, hearsay statements of children that would be admissible under both exceptions. But there are also statements that would only be admissible under one or the other. For instance, a young child's hearsay statement that is reliable, but not corroborated, would be admissible under the social study exception if included in the report, but not under the child dependency hearsay exception if the child was unavailable for cross-examination. Likewise, if the child was 12 years of age or over, or not the subject of the proceedings, the child's hearsay statements would not be admissible under the social study exception if there were an objection and the child was not available for cross-examination, but might be admissible under the child dependency hearsay exception under the same circumstances if found to be reliable and corroborated. Finally, as was the case in Carmen O., there are times when some of the child's statements are not included in the social worker's reports, but are sought to be introduced through the testimony of witnesses [In re Carmen O. (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 908, 915-916, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 848] . Although the social study exception and due process allow detailed cross-examination of witnesses who heard the child's out-of-court statements, Welf. & Inst. Code § 355 does not authorize the introduction of the child's hearsay statements through testimony rather than reports. In such instances where the child's statements were not included in the social study, the child dependency hearsay exception can be utilized to admit the statements through the testimony of witnesses. Thus, both exceptions are necessary.

PRACTICE TIP:

Be Careful in Using the Exception. As a relatively new hearsay exception, the child dependency hearsay exception is still in its early stages of case law development. Reliability of the child's hearsay statements should never be presumed. Social services departments and children's counsel should be careful not to abuse this exception and should make sure the cases in which they seek to apply this > exception actually have sufficient indicators of reliability to justify admission. Parents' counsel should object to the use of this exception without an evidentiary hearing on the reliability of the child's hearsay statements and, if necessary, corroborative evidence. Finally, juvenile courts should state on the record the factors surrounding the making of the statements and corroborating the statements, if any, before making a finding of reliability and admitting a child's out-of-court statements under this hearsay exception.

For further discussion of the inapplicability of the United States Supreme Court's decision in Crawford v. Washington (2004) 541 U.S. 36 , to hearsay exceptions in dependency cases, see § 328.110[12][d].

[14] Testimony of a Child

[a] No Corroboration Required

In California there is no requirement that a child's testimony be corroborated before it can be used to support a finding by a trier of fact [People v. Harlan (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 439, 451-454, 271 Cal. Rptr. 653 , citing Evid. Code §§ 700 (except as provided by statute every person "irrespective of age" is qualified as a witness), 701(a) (only a person incapable of understanding the duty to tell the truth or of expressing his or herself is disqualified to be a witness), 411 (except where required by statute, direct evidence of one witness is sufficient for proof of any fact)]. As noted by the California Supreme Court, "Recent studies have undermined traditional notions regarding the unreliability of child witnesses, their untruthfulness, susceptibility to leading questions, or inability to recall prior events accurately." Thus, "it is now well established that a child's testimony cannot be deemed insubstantial merely because of his or her youth" [People v. Jones (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 294, 315, 270 Cal. Rptr. 611, 792 P.2d 643 , and cases and articles cited there; see also People v. Vargas (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 831, 852, 253 Cal. Rptr. 894] . As in criminal proceedings, the age of a child is merely one factor among many which should be considered in evaluating the child's testimony. The court "should not discount or distrust the testimony of a child solely because he or she is a child" [Penal Code § 1127f (instruction to jury in criminal cases)]. As with the statements of a child included in a social study, the testimony of a child, if believed, is sufficient to support a court's finding in a dependency case without the need for corroboration.

[b] Testimony by Child Outside the Parents' Presence

The testimony of the child may be taken in chambers and outside the presence of the child's parent or parents. The parent or parents must be represented by counsel, who must be present, and at least one of the following circumstances must exist: (1) testimony in chambers is necessary to insure truthful testimony, (2) the child is likely to be intimidated by a formal courtroom setting, or (3) the child is afraid to testify in front of his or her parents. After testimony in chambers, the parent or parents may elect to have the court reporter read back the testimony, or to have the testimony summarized by their counsel. The foregoing rules apply to guardians of the child as well as to parents [Welf. & Inst. Code § 350(b); see In re Katrina L. (1988) 200 Cal. App. 3d 1288, 1297, 247 Cal. Rptr. 754 ; In re Stanley F. (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 568, 574-575, 152 Cal. Rptr. 5 ; see also In re Amy M. (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 849, 859, 283 Cal. Rptr. 788 (due process rights were not violated when both procedures were used)].

The parent has the statutory right to the presence of counsel when the child's testimony is taken in chambers. The taking of the testimony out of the presence of the counsel, without a knowing and intelligent waiver, may be error requiring reversal [In re Laura H. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 1689, 1694-1696, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 285 (reversal required under facts of that case)].

[c] Child Not Testifying

Refusal to allow a child to testify at all may violate the parent's due process right, particularly if no other testimony or evidence is admitted as a substitute and the parent has had no access to the child before the hearing. The court in such a situation has no authority to deny the parent the right to call the child as a witness, although the court may protect the child from trauma by taking the testimony in chambers in the presence of the parent's counsel so as to avoid direct confrontation with the parent [In re Amy M. (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 849, 865-867, 283 Cal. Rptr. 788] .

The Amy M. decision was limited, however, to the facts of that case. The Court of Appeal there noted that no effort had been made in the trial below to have the child found to be psychologically unavailable pursuant to Evid. Code § 240 as had been done in at least one reported appellate opinion [In re Amy M. (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 849, 866, 283 Cal. Rptr. 788 , citing In re Christina T. (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 630, 634, 229 Cal. Rptr. 247] .

The Amy M. decision also noted that there was no substitute for the testimony of the child which would satisfy the requirements of due process under the facts of that case. In this regard it noted that the child's statements were not contained in the social study and that the child had not testified at a prior hearing [In re Amy M. (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 849, 865, 283 Cal. Rptr. 788] . This type of due process substitution was used in the case of In re Jennifer J. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 1080, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 813 , which found that despite the lack of statutory or case law authority, a court has the power based upon the overriding goal of protecting the child to weigh whether the testimony of the child would materially affect the issues to be resolved against the potential psychological injury to the child which would be caused by testifying [In re Jennifer J. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 1080, 1089, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 813 ("It would be a perversion of the procedure to impose upon it a requirement that the child's testimony always be presented, regardless of the trauma resulting to the child therefrom, and regardless of the necessity of such testimony in the resolution of the issues before the court.")].

[d] Competency and the Requirement of an Oath

All witnesses, regardless of age, are presumed competent and are qualified to be a witness [Evid. Code § 700]. Nevertheless, a person is disqualified to testify if the person is incapable of understanding the duty of a witness to tell the truth [Evid. Code § 701(a)(2)]. Further, all witnesses are required to take an oath, although the court can allow a child under the age of 10 years to simply make a promise to tell the truth [Evid. Code § 710]. Therefore, a child witness still must be sworn in a manner that complies with the statutory requirements [In re Heather H. (1988) 200 Cal. App. 3d 91, 95-96, 246 Cal. Rptr. 38 ; see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2094, 2097 (oath or affirmation of witness)]. This requirement may preclude the court from relying on the testimony of a child who is too young to appreciate the meaning of the oath [see Evid. Code § 701(a)(2) (witness who is incapable of understanding duty to tell truth is disqualified); see also In re Heather H. (1988) 200 Cal. App. 3d 91, 96-97, 246 Cal. Rptr. 38 ; but see In re Katrina L. (1988) 200 Cal. App. 3d 1288, 1298-1299, 247 Cal. Rptr. 754 (testimony of unsworn four-year-old child found competent, based primarily on trial court's conclusion that child was being truthful)]. However, no constitutional provision is violated if unsworn testimony is received. If the adequacy of the oath taking is not raised in the trial court, the issue is deemed waived on appeal [In re Katrina L. (1988) 200 Cal. App. 3d 1288, 1299, 247 Cal. Rptr. 754] . Significantly, the court may reserve any ruling on whether the child is competent until the conclusion of direct examination [Evid. Code § 701(b)].

It is important to use questions the child can understand. Many young children cannot define the words "truth" or "lie" and cannot explain the difference between the two. Yet that does not mean they do not understand the difference between the truth and a lie or the importance of telling the truth. Unfortunately, many children are found not competent due to the questions asked, not the child's actual competence or incompetence. The difficulty in determining the competence of a young child is the need for the adult questioning the child to understand the child's developmental stage and how best to communicate with the child. Just as it is developmentally inappropriate to ask a young child to define "truth," it may also be inconclusive to point to a blue jacket and ask the child "If I told you this jacket was yellow, would that be the truth or a lie?" Even if the child knows it would be a lie, the child may be reluctant to tell an adult authority figure the adult is lying. Recent studies suggest that even three-year-old children may be able to demonstrate an adequate knowledge of truth and falsity if tested in an age appropriate manner. To this end, "researchers have developed an oath-taking competency picture task that more sensitively assesses children's understanding of the meaning and morality of lying" [California Ctr. for Jud. Educ. and Research, Cal. Judges Bench Handbook, The Child Victim Witness (September 2002) § 4.6, p. 63]. This method of questioning young children regarding competency was developed by Professor Thomas D. Lyon, J.D., Ph.D., of the University of Southern California Law School, and Professor Karen J. Saywitz, Ph.D., of the Harbor-UCLA Medical Center. It is sometimes referred to as the "Lyon-Saywitz Oath-Taking Competency Picture Task." The use of the method is strongly encouraged [California Ctr. for Jud. Educ. and Research, Cal. Judges Bench Handbook, The Child Victim Witness (September 2002) § 4.6, pp. 62-63; Myers, Evidence In Child Abuse And Neglect Cases (John Wiley, 3d ed. 1997) Vol. 1, Testimonial Competence, § 3.21, Suggestions for Questions During Competency Examinations, pp. 274-283]. Materials explaining this method of examination can be found at hal-law.usc.edu/users/tlyon/articles/competency.PDF, and in various books and journals [see, e.g., Lyon, Child Witnesses and the Oath, in Children's Testimony: A Handbook of Psychological Research and Forensic Practice (Westcott et al., edits., 2002) pp. 244-260; Lyon, Child Witnesses and the Oath: Empirical Evidence, 73 S. Cal. L. Rev. 1017 (2000); Lyon & Saywitz, Young Maltreated Children's Competence to Take the Oath, 3(1) Applied Developmental Science 16 (1999)].

[e] Court's Inherent Authority to Fashion Safeguards

The court has inherent authority to fashion other appropriate reasonable orders concerning the testimony of the child. For example, the court may order that the child's testimony be taken by use of closed-circuit television, to ensure the truthfulness of the child's testimony. The testimony may be taken in chambers, outside the presence of parents, if that would further ensure its truthfulness [In re Amber S. (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 1260, 1264-1267, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 404] .

[f] Child's Preliminary Hearing Testimony

The child's former testimony given at a preliminary examination in a criminal matter in which he or she was the alleged victim of the crime may be admissible in a dependency proceeding despite the hearsay rule. The issues involved must be such that the defendant in the preliminary examination in which the former testimony was given had the right and opportunity to cross-examine the child, with an interest and motive similar to that which the parent or guardian against whom the testimony is offered has at the dependency proceeding [see Evid. Code § 1293(a)]. This rule of evidence was applied in the case of In re Elizabeth T. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 636, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 10 in which it was held that there was no requirement for a showing in the dependency case of unavailability of the child before this section could be applied. The Court of Appeal also found that this procedure does not infringe impermissibly on the due process right of confrontation and cross-examination [In re Elizabeth T. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 636, 640-642, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 10] .

[15] Admissibility of Polygraph Evidence

In noncriminal juvenile matters, such as dependency proceedings, relevant polygraph evidence may be admissible. This is because Evid. Code § 351.1 that prohibits the admission of polygraph evidence in criminal cases absent a stipulation by all parties does not apply [In re Kathleen W. (1987) 190 Cal. App. 3d 68, 70-73, 235 Cal. Rptr. 205 (applying the principles set forth in Witherspoon v. Superior Court (1982) 133 Cal. App. 3d 24, 183 Cal. Rptr. 615)]. A party seeking to admit polygraph evidence may request an evidentiary hearing pursuant to Evid. Code § 400 et seq. to determine if the qualifications of the operator and the mechanics and techniques employed in the test justify admitting the test results into evidence [see In re Kathleen W. (1987) 190 Cal. App. 3d 68, 70-73, 235 Cal. Rptr. 205] . The likelihood of a party of being successful in this regard is not great since as noted recently by the California Supreme Court, there is a deep division in the scientific community as to the reliability of polygraph evidence [People v. Wilkinson (2004) 33 Cal.4th 821, 847, 94 P.3d 551 ; see also United States v. Scheffer (1998) 523 U.S. 303, 309-311, 118 S. Ct. 1261, 140 L. Ed. 2d 413] . Thus, it will be difficult, if not impossible to show that polygraph evidence is sufficiently reliable to justify admission. It should also be noted the exclusion of polygraph evidence has been held not to be a denial of due process in criminal cases, in part because the exclusion of polygraph evidence does not "preclude a defendant from mounting a defense. A defendant can still testify; he can still present corroborating witnesses; he can still cross-examine hostile witnesses" [In re Aoetae D. (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 167, 175, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 176] . Thus, in dependency cases it is not likely the exclusion of polygraph evidence will be found to be a denial of due process.

[16] Relationship Study as Not Privileged

Many courts make use of what are commonly referred to as "bonding" studies. These studies could well be termed "relationship" studies to indicate that their scope is far broader than just the existence or non-existence of a bond: it is the general nature, quality and impact on a child's life of the relationship that is of greatest concern to the court and parties. Although usually performed by a psychologist, the studies are rarely within the patient-psychotherapist privilege of Evid. Code § 1014. Rather than studying the relationship for the purpose of diagnosis or treatment of a mental or emotional condition, these studies are typically performed for the unprivileged purpose of obtaining evidence of the "existence and nature of a relationship" between the adult and the child for use at trial [In re Tabatha G. (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1159, 1168, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 93 , citing Evid. Code § 1011 and People v. Cabral (1993) 12 Cal. App. 4th 820, 826-828, 15 Cal. Rptr. 2d 866] .

[17] Relitigation of Jurisdictional Allegations

True findings as to jurisdictional allegations are appealable from the disposition hearing [In re Candida S. (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 1240, 1249, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 521 ; In re Jennifer V. (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 1206, 1209-1210, 243 Cal. Rptr. 441] . As a result, once the period of time has passed for appealing the jurisdiction and disposition findings and orders, the finding of jurisdiction becomes final and is res judicata for that case [In re Daniel D. (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 1823, 1832-1833, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 245 ; In re Megan B. (1991) 235 Cal. App. 3d 942, 950, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 177] .

Similarly, if jurisdictional allegations have been previously litigated by the parent as to one child, the doctrine of collateral estoppel prevents relitigation of those allegations in a dependency action filed for a sibling where the sibling's case is based on the risk posed to the sibling due to the abuse to the first child. The parent in such a subsequent case can litigate the issue of whether the second child is at risk in light of the abuse to the first child, but cannot relitigate in the subsequent case whether the first child was abused [In re Joshua J. (1995) 39 Cal. App. 4th 984, 992-994, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 491] . Nevertheless, where a significant new development has occurred, such as the recantation of the testimony by a key witness at the jurisdiction hearing, the court may allow a parent to present such evidence by way of a petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 and consider whether the previous jurisdictional finding should be modified or set aside as in the child's best interest [In re Brandon C. (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 1168, 1171-1174, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 571] . The Court in Brandon C. was careful to point out, however, that recantation of testimony will not always constitute "new evidence" or a "change of circumstance" justifying an evidentiary hearing or a change of previous findings. Each case must be determined by the juvenile court on its own specific facts pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 [In re Brandon C. (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 1168, 1172, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 571] .

The importance of the finality of the jurisdictional findings, a significant legal concept in the abstract, is heightened by its special impact in juvenile proceedings. Constant relitigation of these issues can be very traumatic to the child involved, perhaps damaging to his or her psychological well-being. The court can not control its calendars and limited resources, if it is required to constantly relitigate jurisdiction findings. Following a final jurisdictional finding, all parties can be assured that they understand what the issues are as they proceed through the dependency process, both in regards to reunification services and to litigation at subsequent hearings. Nevertheless, one court of appeal has held that where significant new evidence suggests that the previous jurisdiction findings were in error, parents may relitigate jurisdiction findings at subsequent review hearings as to the issue of whether it would be detrimental to return the child to the parent [Blanca P. v. Superior Court (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1738, 1754-1760, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 687] .

Notwithstanding the very insightful recognition of the dangers of inaccurate findings of sexual abuse and the need to carefully examine parent's denials to determine if the denials may be justified, the analysis and holding in Blanca P. are open to substantial question. The court's belief that a psychological evaluation could "exonerate" a parent of allegations of sexual abuse [Blanca P. v. Superior Court (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1738, 1754-1760, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 687] is without precedent and incorrect. Psychologists cannot determine the ultimate fact of whether someone did or did not do a particular act. Such determinations are outside the expertise and role of psychologists. Further, although the court looked to the concept of collateral estoppel and cases dealing with its application [Blanca P. v. Superior Court (1996)

45 Cal. App. 4th 1738, 1754-1760, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 687] , it failed to consider the stricter requirements of res judicata which applied in the case before it. Moreover, in considering the California Supreme Court decision in Cynthia D. v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 242, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 698, 851 P.2d 1307 , as to the importance of safeguards for parents in the dependency process, it failed to recognize that the safeguard of a petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388, which the Supreme Court found so significant in In re Marilyn H. (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 295, 307-310, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 544, 851 P.2d 826 , was the proper vehicle for a parent to raise these issues [Blanca P. v. Superior Court (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1738, 1741, 1758, fn. 17, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 687] . Instead, the Blanca P. court chose to create its own safeguard rather than rely on the one created by the Legislature. Finally, it failed to consider the adverse impact that its ruling will potentially have on both the courts and the children they serve. Frequent relitigation of jurisdictional findings and the uncertainty such relitigation brings can only further clog the courts' already busy calendars and be detrimental to need of children for stability and finality. The Blanca P. decision allowing the relitigation of jurisdictional findings at a review hearing must be viewed as an anomaly, inconsistent with established principles of law, other decisional and statutory authority, and the overall needs and purposes of the dependency system. Thus, it should not be followed by juvenile and appellate courts. Even if the holding is deemed valid, however, it will be the rare case which will not be factually distinguishable from the situation presented in Blanca P. The better, safer, and more correct practice for parents wishing to relitigate a prior jurisdiction finding based on new evidence is to file a petition pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 388.

[18] Failure to Object as Waiver or Forfeiture

The question of whether one has waived or forfeited the right to raise a particular issue on appeal is usually considered in the context of appellate or extraordinary writ proceedings. As such, the topic's inclusion in material designed to address evidentiary and other contested hearing issues would not be anticipated. Nevertheless, waiver and forfeiture have become such frequent issues in dependency appeals and writs that it bears mention here. The general rule is that an issue not raised at the trial court level may not be raised for the first time on appeal or in a writ [see, e.g., In re Dakota H. (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 212, 221-222, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 337 (failure to raise claim a further finding of unfitness was required before termination of parental rights); In re Dakota S. (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 494, 501-502, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 196 (failure to object to assessment's failure to address the foster parent's eligibility, commitment, and suitability as a prospective guardian as waiver); In re Brandon M. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1387, 1400-1401, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 671 (failure to raise objection to "trial home visit" as waiver); In re Christopher B. (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 551, 558-559, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 43 (failure to raise forum non conveniens objection as waiver); In re Kevin S. (1996) 41 Cal. App. 4th 882, 885-886, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 763 (failure to object to setting Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing despite finding of no reasonable efforts as waiver); Steve J. v. Superior Court (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 798, 810-811, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 731 (failure of social services agency to raise issue of father's right to reunification services as waiver); In re Richard K. (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 580, 587-590, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 575 (submission on recommendations of social worker as waiving ability to challenge on appeal the sufficiency of the evidence to support the court's order when the court followed the recommendations)].

Nevertheless, there are some limited issues that some courts have found the waiver rule does not apply to. For instance, a parent who submits on the social worker's report at the jurisdiction hearing, making no argument against a finding of jurisdiction, has been held not to have waived the right to raise the sufficiency of the evidence to support the jurisdiction finding on appeal [In re Tommy E. (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 1234, 1236-1239, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 402] . Further, some courts have held that when a parent objects to the termination of parental rights, no specific objection need be made to the social services agency's alleged failure to establish the likelihood of adoption for the parent to raise the issue on appeal [In re Erik P. (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 395, 399, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 922 ; In re Brian P. (2002) 99 Cal. App. 4th 616, 623, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 326 ; but see, In re Crystal J. (1993) 12 Cal. App. 4th 407, 411-412, 15 Cal. Rptr. 2d 613] . These are the exception, however, not the rule. In most instances the waiver or forfeiture rule will apply. Indeed, the Supreme Court has recently emphasized that appellate courts should only exercise their discretion to excuse forfeiture in rare instances, and must exercise special care in doing so in dependency appeals and writs since "considerations such as permanency and stability are of paramount importance" [In re S.B. (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 1287, 1293, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 786, 90 P. 3d 746] .

Attorneys in dependency proceedings, regardless of the party they represent, must be sure to make and preserve any objections which they or their client have to any of the procedures utilized by the juvenile court, the evidence it receives, or its findings, orders or other rulings. Failure to object may preclude raising the issue on appeal, even if a timely appeal is filed.

[19] Offers of Proof

"An offer of proof is not evidence" [Mundell v. Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control (1962) 211 Cal. App. 2d 231, 239, 27 Cal. Rptr. 62 ; see also Firestone Tire and Rubber Company v. County of Monterey (1990) 223 Cal. App. 3d 382, 394-395, 272 Cal. Rptr. 745 ; Estate of Silver (1949) 92 Cal. App. 2d 173, 176, 206 P. 2d 895] . Instead, it is an unsworn oral or written statement by counsel of the specific, admissible, relevant evidence he or she seeks to introduce [People v. Rodrigues (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 1060, 1176, 36 Cal. Rptr. 2d 235, 885 P. 2d 1 , citing In re Mark C. (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 433, 444-445, 8 Cal. Rptr. 2d 856] . As the California Supreme Court has noted, "It is axiomatic that the unsworn statements of counsel are not evidence" [In re Zeth S. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 396, 413, fn. 11, 2 Cal. Rptr. 3d 683, 73 P.3d 541 , citing In re Heather H. (1988) 200 Cal. App. 3d 91, 95, 246 Cal. Rptr. 38 ; People v. Lee (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 830, 841, 210 Cal. Rptr. 799 ; People v. Superior Court (Crook) (1978) 83 Cal. App. 3d 335, 341, 147 Cal. Rptr. 856 , and Rules of Prof. Conduct, Rule 5-200(e)].

There is some precedent for using non-stipulated offers of proof as evidence in certain family law and child support matters [County of Alameda v. Moore (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 1422, 1427, 40 Cal. Rptr. 2d 18 , overruled in part by Elkins v. Superior Court (2007) 41 Cal. 4th 1337 ; In re Marriage of Stevenot (1984) 154 Cal. App. 3d 1051, 1059, fn. 3, 202 Cal. Rptr. 116] . That authority, however, is mostly dicta and does not address matters involving fundamental rights. Parenting is a fundamental right [In re Marilyn H. (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 295, 306, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 544, 851 P. 2d 826] . Juvenile courts do, of course, have both the power and the need to control their proceedings and make clear that "time is not an unlimited commodity in today's busy juvenile courts" [Ingrid E. v. Superior Court (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 751, 760, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 407] . In so doing, courts can adopt formal and informal local practices and rules to expedite matters and facilitate court business. Courts also have inherent power to manage cases and ensure expeditious proceedings in juvenile matters [In re Jeanette H. (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 25, 33-35, 275 Cal. Rptr. 9] .

Local practices and rules must be reasonable, however, and must not be in conflict with the law [In re Jeanette H. (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 25, 33-35, 275 Cal. Rptr. 9] . Since the law is clear that non-stipulated offers of proof are not evidence, a local practice or rule that purported to make them evidence would be in conflict with existing law and invalid. Further, measures to expedite the hearing process cannot override the requirement of providing litigants due process [Denny H. v. Superior Court (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 1501, 1514, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 89 , citing Seiser & Kumli, California Juvenile Courts Practice and Procedure § 2.110[19] (Matthew Bender); see also Ingrid E. v. Superior Court (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 751, 760, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 407] . Many attorneys would be happy to draft the exact words the attorney wants a witness to say, thereby avoiding potential pitfalls and ensuring the answers are clear, concise, and accurate. When hearings are contested, though, the exact words used by a witness on both direct and cross examination and the demeanor of the witness during all of that testimony, are very important factors in the weight to be given the witness' testimony by the trier of fact. Thus, since offers of proof are not evidence unless stipulated to by all parties and accepted by the court, a local practice mandating the use of non-stipulated offers of proof as evidence in dependency cases will not satisfy the due process rights of any party in dependency proceedings, whether parent, child, or social services agency [Denny H. v. Superior Court (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 1501, 1512-1514, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 89] . This is especially true when dealing with such issues as jurisdiction, removal, denial or termination of services, and the termination of parental rights. Of course, if a party knows the court intends to proceed by way of non-stipulated offers of proof and does not object, the party may be deemed to have acquiesced to the process and the issue may be waived or forfeited for appellate review.

Nevertheless, offers of proof do have legitimate uses in the dependency process. To be a valid offer of proof, the offer must identify the specific admissible evidence sought to be elicited or introduced including, as appropriate, the name of the witness and the specific purpose and content of the testimony to be presented or elicited [People v. Rodrigues (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 1060, 1176, 36 Cal. Rptr. 2d 235, 885 P. 2d 1 , citing In re Mark C. (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 433, 444-445, 8 Cal. Rptr. 2d 856 ; Semsch v. Henry Mayo Newhall Memorial Hospital (1985) 171 Cal. App. 3d 162, 167-168, 216 Cal. Rptr. 913] . Offers of proof may be used for a variety of purposes, including:

- If stipulated to by all parties and accepted by the court, offers of proof may help avoid the necessity for calling certain witnesses in a contested matter by stipulating to what a person would testify to if called as a witness. This may be especially helpful in avoiding the need to call children as witnesses, or to streamline the presentation of evidence and shorten the time required for contested hearings. Where appropriate, the court and all counsel should be encouraged to use this process.

- Offers of proof may be used to convince the court that sufficient admissible, relevant evidence will be presented to justify a contested hearing. Some cases have held this can be required by the court [see, e.g., In re Earl L. (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 1050, 1053, 18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 74 ; In re Tamika T. (2002) 97 Cal. App. 4th 1114, 1120-1122, 118 Cal. Rptr. 2d 873 ; In re Jeanette V. (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 811, 817, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 534 ; Maricela C. v. Superior Court (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 1138, 1146-1148, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 488] . Other cases have held the court cannot require an offer of proof before setting a contested hearing [see, e.g., In re Kelly D. (2000) 82 Cal. App. 4th 433, 439, fn. 4, 98 Cal. Rptr. 2d 188 ; In re James Q. (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 255, 266-267, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 595 ; In re Johnny M. (1991) 229 Cal. App. 3d 181, 189-191, 279 Cal. Rptr. 693 ; see also Ingrid E. v. Superior Court (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 751, 759, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 407 (noting controversy and finding that even assuming court had some discretion to require offer of proof, it abused its discretion under the facts)]. These two differing approaches have now been clarified. A party cannot be required to make an offer of proof for a contested hearing if what the party wants to contest is a finding or issue on which a different party, such as the social services agency, has the burden of proof. A party can be required to make an offer of proof if the issue is one on which that party has the burden of proof [In re Thomas R. (2006) 145 Cal. App. 4th 726, 731-732, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 864 ; David B. v. Superior Court (2006) 140 Cal. App. 4th 772, 779, 44 Cal. Rptr. 3d 799]. Either way, it is good practice to be prepared to make an adequate offer of proof to justify a contested hearing should the court request it.

- Offers of proof can also be used to show the relevance of a question or line of questioning, and may convince the juvenile court to allow a line of questioning or a particular question over a relevance objection.

- Offers of proof can preserve issues for appeal. This is required when the court excludes evidence [Evid. Code § 354(a)]. "Failure to make an adequate offer of proof precludes consideration of the alleged error on appeal" [In re Mark C. (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 433, 444, 8 Cal. Rptr. 2d 856].

An offer of proof is not necessary, however, when it would be futile [In re Catherine H. (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 1284, 1292-1293, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 342].

[20] Disentitlement Doctrine

The disentitlement doctrine holds that a party to an action cannot ask a court for assistance in hearing the party's demands "while he stands in an attitude of contempt to legal orders and processes of the courts of this state" [In re C.C. (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 76, 84, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 354 , quoting MacPherson v. MacPherson (1939) 13 Cal. 2d 271, 277, 89 P.2d 382] . This doctrine has been used in dependency and other child related proceedings. In one dependency case a father absconded with his daughter whom the juvenile court had placed in a foster home, while still appealing the placement order. The appellate court the father's appeal was barred by the disentitlement doctrine, because his conduct in absconding with the child undermined and frustrated the purpose of the dependency statutes and made it virtually impossible for the court to protect the child at an unknown location. Thus, it dismissed his appeal [In re Kamelia S. (2000) 82 Cal. App. 4th 1224, 1228-1229, 98 Cal. Rptr. 2d 816] . In a guardianship case, the disentitlement doctrine precluded grandparents from appealing the denial of their guardianship petition because they had caused the child to be taken to the Bahamas in violation of the court order [Guardianship of Melissa W. (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 1293, 1299, 118 Cal. Rptr. 2d 42] . In a stepparent adoption case, the disentitlement doctrine precluded the mother from contesting the stepmother's petition to terminate the mother's parental rights because the mother had abducted the child [Adoption of Jacob C. (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 617, 623-624, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 591] . While these three cases all involved the abduction of children, the disentitlement doctrine is not limited in the child protection and custody arena to abduction cases. Instead, it also extends to cases in which the party's conduct frustrates the ability of another party or the court from obtaining information needed to protect the rights of the party or the well-being of the child, even if there has been no formal adjudication of contempt for violation of a court order [In re C.C. (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 76, 85, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 354 , citing T.M.S., Inc. (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 377, 379-380, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 834 ; see also Alioto Fish Company, Ltd. v. Alioto (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 1669, 1683-1684, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 244] .

In the C.C. case, the appellate court held that a parent could be denied reunification services under Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(2) if the parent refused to comply with a court order for two psychological evaluations to determine if she suffered a mental disability that rendered her incapable of utilizing reunification services. The appellate court found the provisions of Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(2) implicitly assumed a parent would cooperate with the requirement for the evaluations. If the parent is uncooperative and will not submit to the evaluations, it interferes with the child's rights and with the court's obligation to determine the issues. Thus, if the parent will not submit to the court ordered evaluations, the court has the power under the disentitlement doctrine to deny the parent reunification services [In re C.C. (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 76, 85-86, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 354] . The appellate court also held there was no requirement for the mother to have the specific intent to interfere with the court order. In other words, there was no requirement for a showing of mens rea for the disentitlement doctrine to apply. Although if the trial court found the mother was not capable of submitting to the psychological evaluation, that could be taken into consideration in deciding what consequences to give to the mother's refusal [In re C.C. (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 76, 86-87, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 354] . Nor was it necessary the mother have initiated the proceedings the disentitlement doctrine was applied to [In re C.C. (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 76, 87-89, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 354] . Significantly, the appellate court noted the issue was not solely an appellate issue. Indeed, in that case the issue was whether the juvenile court could utilize the doctrine if it issued the order for the evaluations and the mother refused to comply [In re C.C. (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 76, 88, 91-92, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 354] .

The use of the disentitlement doctrine in dependency cases is relatively new, and it is anticipated additional uses of the doctrine will be attempted and additional case law will result. It is not anticipated the appellate courts will be liberal in their application of this doctrine to dependency cases [see, e.g., In re Claudia S. (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 236, 244, 31 Cal. Rptr. 3d 697] . This is an area to be watched for further developments.

[21] Social Workers as Experts

Social workers are frequently called upon to formulate opinions on issues that require expertise, including the assessment of risk, likelihood of adoption, parent and child relationships, and permanency plans. Whether a social worker actually qualifies as an expert will depend on whether the social worker meets the qualifications required under Evid. Code § 720. As one court has noted, "Social workers are frequently recognized as experts in assessing risk and placement of children and selecting permanent plans for children" [In re Luke M. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 1412, 1427, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 907 ; see also In re Beatrice M. (1994) 29 Cal. App. 4th 1411, 1421, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 162 (juvenile court "properly exercised its discretion in qualifying the social worker as an expert witness")]. In another case, although it does not appear there was a formal qualification of the social worker as an expert, the juvenile court accepted the social worker's opinion over that of the mother's substance abuse program coordinator and case manager.

The appellate court held the juvenile court "was entitled to find the social worker credible and to give greater weight to her assessments and testimony" [In re Casey D. (1999) 70 Cal. App. 4th 38, 53, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 426] . Many agency social workers have advanced degrees, extensive training, experience, or a combination of all three. Some are licensed clinical social workers. Whether a social worker qualifies to render an expert opinion on a particular issue is determined on a case-by-case basis [Evid. Code § 720]. However, even in cases in which the social worker does not qualify to render an expert opinion, the social worker is required to make recommendations and can explain the rationale for the explanation so the court can understand and weigh the appropriateness of the recommendation.

PRACTICE TIP:

Social Workers' Resumes. Some county counsel are now encouraging the agency social workers to keep track of their education, training, and experience and to prepare professional resumes for use in dependency cases, particularly those in which the social worker is going to testify. This is a good practice and should be considered by agency social workers throughout the state.

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
F. Jurisdiction Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.111

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.111 Immunities and Protections Against Disclosure

[1] Immunity for Parents and Guardians

Testimony by a person having custody of a child who is the subject of a dependency proceeding is not admissible as evidence in a criminal proceeding [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 355.1(f)]. Therefore, it has been held there is no abuse of discretion or violation of a custodian's right against self-incrimination in denying a request for a continuance until after criminal proceedings based on the same alleged conduct have been resolved [see, e.g., In re Katrina L. (1988) 200 Cal. App. 3d 1288, 1295-1296, 247 Cal. Rptr. 754 ; see In re Dolly A. (1986) 177 Cal. App. 3d 195, 222 Cal. Rptr. 741].

Nevertheless, it has been argued that statutes such as Welf. & Inst. Code § 355.1(f) do not provide full use and derivative use immunity, and hence are not sufficient to override a parent's or guardian's right against self-incrimination [cf. Kastigar v. United States (1972) 406 U.S. 441, 92 S. Ct. 1653, 32 L. Ed. 2d 212 ; see also Patton, The World Where Parallel Lines Converge: The Privilege Against Self-Incrimination in Concurrent Civil and Criminal Child Abuse Proceedings (1990) 24 Ga. L. Rev. 473]. This is the view taken by the Fourth District Court of Appeal, Division Three, in the Mark A. and Brenda M. cases [In re Brenda M. (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 772, 773-774, 72 Cal. Rptr. 3d 686 ; In re Mark A. (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 1124, 1133-1136, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 106] . But these cases are subject to question.

A strong argument can be made, however, that Welf. & Inst. Code § 355.1(f) does provide full use and derivative use immunity for parents, guardians, and other custodial adults in dependency proceedings. If it didn't, it would be completely ineffective, something the legislature can be presumed not to have intended. Thus, because the juvenile court often needs information from the parents, guardians, and other custodial adults in order to protect children and serve their best interests, the better view is that in this very limited and special area of dependency proceedings it can be implied the legislature intended to provide full use and derivative use immunity for them through the provisions of Welf.

& Inst. Code § 355.1, even without the involvement of the district attorney. This is different from immunity for witnesses other than parents, guardians, or custodial adults for whom the procedures set forth in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.548(d) must be followed.

It is a common practice for counsel for the social services agency to call one or both of the parents or guardians as witnesses in dependency proceedings [Evid. Code § 776(a)]. Children's attorneys and counsel for the other parent may do this also. Although parents and guardians have a right to assert the privilege against self-incrimination [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.534(j)(1)(A)], the immunity the parent and guardian either has or may be granted for any testimony given by them in dependency proceedings [Welf. & Inst. Code § 355.1(f); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.548(d)] means the parent can be ordered by the court to testify even when such testimony is against the parent or guardian's interests [see In re Amos L. (1981) 124 Cal. App. 3d 1031, 1039, 177 Cal. Rptr. 783 , citing Welf. & Inst. Code former § 355.7]. As such, attorneys for parents and guardians should prepare their clients for the possibility of testimony even if they do not intend to call the parent or guardian to testify in his or her own behalf.

The immunity afforded parents and guardians in dependency cases has generally been viewed as extending beyond courtroom testimony. It includes statements made by a parent or guardian in the course of treatment as part of a court-ordered reunification plan, even if that treatment requires an admission by the parent or guardian [In re Candida S. (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 1240, 1249-1251, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 521 ; In re Lamonica H. (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 634, 649-650, 270 Cal. Rptr. 60 ; In re Jessica B. (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 504, 520-521, 254 Cal. Rptr. 883 ; see also Patton, The World Where Parallel Lines Converge: The Privilege Against Self-Incrimination in Concurrent Civil and Criminal Child Abuse Proceedings (1990) 24 Ga. L. Rev. 473, 511-523]. Again, without parents and guardians having full use and derivative use for such admissions, court-ordered reunification plans might be ineffective.

[2] Privilege Against Self-Incrimination

If a person is called as a witness and it appears to the court that the testimony or other evidence being sought may tend to incriminate the witness, the court must advise the witness of the privilege against self-incrimination and of the possible consequences of testifying. The court must also inform the witness of the right to representation by counsel and, if indigent, of the right to have the court appoint counsel [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.548(a)].

[3] Authority of Judge to Grant Immunity

If a witness refuses to answer a question or to produce evidence based on a claim of the privilege against self-incrimination, a judge of the juvenile court may grant immunity to the witness after following the requirements of Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.548(d) and order the question answered or the evidence produced [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.548(b)].

[4] Request for Immunity in Dependency Proceeding

In dependency proceedings under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300, the social services department or the district attorney if involved in the proceedings may make a written request or an oral request on the record that the judge order any witness to answer a question or produce evidence. They may also make the request jointly. If the request is not made jointly, the district attorney must be given the opportunity to show why immunity is not to be granted, and the judge may grant or deny the request as deemed appropriate. If jointly made, the judge must grant the request unless the judge finds that to do so would be clearly contrary to the public interest. The terms of a grant of immunity must be stated in the record. After complying with the order and if, but for Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.548, the witness would have been privileged to withhold the answer given or the evidence produced, any answer given, evidence produced, or any information derived therefrom must not be used against the witness in a juvenile court or criminal proceeding [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.548(d)].

[5] No Immunity From Perjury or Contempt

A witness may nevertheless be subject to proceedings under the juvenile court law or to criminal prosecution for perjury, false swearing, or contempt committed in answering, or failing to answer, or in producing or failing to produce evidence in accordance with an order [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.548(e)].

[6] Order for Social Services Agency to File Report With Law Enforcement

Notwithstanding the protections and immunity afforded parents in dependency proceedings, if the juvenile court believes a child has suffered abuse or neglect that rises to a criminal level, the court may direct a representative of the social services agency to take the actions provided for in Penal Code § 11166(i) for reporting such information to law enforcement for further investigation [Welf. & Inst. Code § 355.1(e)].

[7] Immunity in State Court Civil Proceedings

The issue of immunity and liability for social workers, social services agencies, county counsels, children's attorneys, and others in state court proceedings is one beyond the expertise of most dependency attorneys and the scope of materials on general dependency law. Where such issues arise, it is wise to seek the counsel of a civil litigator experienced in this area and to refer to specific resources and materials addressing liability and immunity issues. This is equally true for government counsel representing social workers and agencies in dependency proceedings. Nevertheless, the following material provides a starting place for considering the question of social worker and agency immunity in state court proceedings.

The courts have held that in conducting an initial investigation and filing of a dependency action a social worker performs the quasi-judicial function of a prosecutor. As such, it has been repeatedly held that a county social worker is absolutely immune in state court proceedings for acts performed during the investigative and prosecutorial phases of the worker's employment [Gensburg v. Miller (1994) 31 Cal. App. 4th 512, 518, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 97 ; Alicia T. v. County of Los Angeles (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 869, 882-883, 271 Cal. Rptr. 513 ; Jenkins v. County of Orange (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 278, 283-284, 260 Cal. Rptr. 645 ; see Gov. Code §§ 820.2, 821.6]. One case has held, however, that a social worker is not immune for any "tortious conduct" in the making of an investigation [see Newton v. County of Napa (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 1551, 1560-1562, 266 Cal. Rptr. 682] . The Newton case is an anomaly, however, that is inconsistent with the great weight of state authority in California. As such, it is of questionable value as precedent and should be viewed cautiously, if not disregarded entirely.

The social worker is also entitled to absolute immunity from claims of constitutional rights violations under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 that are brought in state courts [Gensburg v. Miller (1994) 31 Cal. App. 4th 512, 520-522, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 97 ; Alicia T. v. County of Los Angeles (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 869, 878-881, 271 Cal. Rptr. 513 ; McMartin v. Children's Institute International (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 1393, 1404, 261 Cal. Rptr. 437 ; Jenkins v. County of Orange (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 278, 286-288, 260 Cal. Rptr. 645 ; see 42 U.S.C. § 1983]. The county that employs the social worker is immune from these claims as well [Gensburg v. Miller (1994) 31 Cal. App. 4th 512, 525, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 97 ; Alicia T. v. County of Los Angeles (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 869, 883, 271 Cal. Rptr. 513 ; Jenkins v. County of Orange (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 278, 284, 288, 260 Cal. Rptr. 645 ; see also Ronald S. v. County of San Diego (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 887, 896-899, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 418 (social workers and county immune with regard to pre-adoption screening and processing)].

The absolute immunity that is usually extended to a social worker during the initial stages of a dependency case does not automatically extend to fully protect them during their later ongoing supervision of the case, however. Where a social worker fails during the ongoing handling of a dependency case to discharge a mandatory duty which is designed to prevent injury to a child and by that failure the child is injured, absolute immunity is not afforded the social worker or the county and liability may be found [Scott v. County of Los Angeles (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 125, 139-144, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 643] . Nor is a social worker entitled to quasi-judicial prosecutorial immunity when acting outside his or her official capacity [cf. Falls v. Superior Court (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 1031, 1044, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 908 ("when a quasi-judicial officer acts outside his official capacity he does not enjoy immunity," emphasis in original)].

Regardless of what stage the case is in, however, a social worker or other public employee who is authorized to initiate or conduct investigations of proceedings in this area of the law will not have civil immunity in state court proceedings for any act of perjury, fabrication of evidence, failure to disclose known exculpatory evidence, or obtaining testimony by duress, fraud or undue influence when any of these acts are committed with malice [Gov. Code § 820.21(a)]. Within this context, "malice" means that the conduct is intended to cause injury or that it is despicable conduct carried on with a willful and conscious disregard of the rights or safety of others [Gov. Code § 820.21(b)]. These provisions of law are now being litigated in courts throughout the state. How strictly or loosely the courts will interpret these provisions has yet to be fully determined. Thus, this is an area that should be looked to for future developments, and further illustrates the need to consult with an experienced civil litigator who is current on developments in this area in any case involving possible liability or immunity.

PRACTICE TIP:

Immunity in Federal Court Lawsuits. Lawsuits against social workers, county social services agencies, and other public employees are not always filed in state courts. Federal actions are also common [see, e.g., Miller v. Gammie (9th Cir. 2003) 335 F.3d 889 ; Wallis v. Spencer (9th Cir. 1999) 202 F.3d 1126 ; Calabretta v. Floyd (9th Cir. 1999) 189 F.3d 808 ; Coverdell v. Department of Soc. & Health Servs. (9th Cir. 1987) 834 F.2d 758 ; Meyers v. Contra Costa County Dep't of Soc. Servs. (9th Cir. 1987) 812 F.2d 1154] . The immunity afforded social workers and their agencies in the lower federal courts is in many ways similar to the immunity afforded social workers in California state court proceedings. But it is not identical. Indeed, qualified immunity rather than absolute immunity is often the norm for social workers and social services agencies in federal proceedings, rather than the exception. Immunity in the federal courts is beyond the scope of this text. Should a question arise concerning the immunity of social workers and agencies in proceedings brought in federal court, the practitioner is well advised to seek guidance from someone experienced in such proceedings and from references that deal with applicable federal law.

For a discussion of search warrants in child welfare investigations and the potential for civil liability in the federal courts if a home is entered by a law enforcement officer or social worker without a search warrant in the absence of consent or exigent circumstances, as set forth in the case of Calabretta v. Floyd (9th Cir. 1999) 189 F.3d 808 , see § 328.42.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
F. Jurisdiction Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated §§ 328.112-328.119

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

[Reserved]

§§ 328.112[Reserved]

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329

CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
G. Disposition Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.120

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.120 Purpose and Time of Disposition Hearing

If the child is found to be a person described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 (grounds for dependency), a disposition hearing must be held to hear evidence on the question of the proper disposition to be made of the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 358(a)].

Absent exceptional circumstances, the disposition hearing must be held not later than 60 days from the date of initial removal for a child in out-of-home care [Welf. & Inst. Code § 352(b)]. For a child who has not been removed from the parent's care, the disposition hearing must be held not later than six months from the initial or detention hearing []Welf. & Inst. Code § 352(b)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Tactical Reasons for Requesting or Objecting to a Continuance. Except in cases in which the social services agency is recommending to deny reunification services, traditionally it has usually been in everyone's best interest, including the parents, to hold the disposition hearing in as timely a manner as possible. This required the social services agency to prove the jurisdictional allegations and the need for out of home care by the appropriate standards, rather than prolonged reliance on a detention order based on prima facie evidence, enabled reluctant parents to know what allegations were proven and what issues and services needed to be addressed, and moved the child's case forward toward a safe, stable, permanent home in a timely fashion, especially for a child who was under the age of 3 years at the time of initial removal, or was part of a sibling group with such a child.

Beginning January 1, 2009, however, there is a distinct tactical advantage for the parent of a child who was under the age of 3 years at the time of initial removal, or of a sibling group with such a child, to delay the disposition hearing as long as reasonably and ethically possible, thereby delaying the six-month review hearing and the presumptive end of court ordered reunification services [see Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361.5(a), 366.21(a)]. In doing so, parents' counsel should ensure the social services agency is providing the reunification services ordered at the detention hearing and that the parent is utilizing those services to the maximum degree possible and appropriate. This will ensure not just six months of reunification services, but significantly more. Counsel for the social services agency and usually children's counsel should be watchful for requests to set the disposition hearing beyond the 60-day time limit, and object. Courts should adhere fully to the requirements of Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 352, and 358(a), in considering all requests for a continuance of the disposition hearing.

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
G. Disposition Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.121

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.121 Preparation and Contents of Social Study

[1] In General

Prior to every disposition hearing, the social worker must prepare a social study of the child, which must contain all matters relevant to disposition and a recommendation for disposition. If the social worker recommends removing the child from the home, the report must include a discussion of the reasonable efforts made to prevent or eliminate removal and a recommended plan for reuniting the child with the family, including a plan for visitation a plan for achieving legal permanence if reunification efforts fail, and a statement that each parent has been advised of the option to voluntarily relinquish the child if an adoption agency is willing to accept the relinquishment, and the parent's response. If the petitioner alleges that one of the grounds under Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b) applies, the social study must state why under that section reunification services should not be provided [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.690(a); see In re John B. (1984) 159 Cal. App. 3d 268, 274, 205 Cal. Rptr. 321] . Furthermore, if the social worker is recommending that the child be removed from the custody of the parent or guardian, the social worker must give primary consideration to recommending that the child be placed with a relative, provided that such placement will be in the child's best interests and will be conducive to reunification of the family [Welf. & Inst. Code § 281.5].

If the social worker is recommending that a voluntary legal guardianship be ordered pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 360(a), the social worker must include an assessment as required by that section [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.690(a); see discussion in § 328.124[3]].

The social worker must submit the social study and copies of it to the clerk at least 48 hours before the disposition hearing is set to begin. The clerk must make the copies available to the parties and attorneys. A continuance within statutory time limits must be granted on the request of a party who has not been furnished with a copy of the social study, as required [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.690(a); see Welf. & Inst. Code § 352].

Each social study, or evaluation made by a social worker or child advocate appointed by the court, required to be received in evidence pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 358 shall include, but is not limited to, a factual discussion of each of the following subjects [Welf. & Inst. Code § 358.1; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.690(a)]:

- Whether the social services department has considered child protective services as defined in Welf. & Inst. Code § 16500 et seq. as a possible solution to the problems at hand, and has offered such services to qualified parents if appropriate under the circumstances.

- What plan, if any, for return of the child is recommended to the court by the social services department.

- What plan, if any, for achieving legal permanence for the child if reunification efforts fail is recommended to the court by the social services department.

- Whether the best interests of the child will be served by granting reasonable visitation rights with the child to his or her grandparents, in order to maintain and strengthen the child's family relationships [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(h)].

- Whether the child has siblings under the court's jurisdiction and, if so:

  - The nature of the relationships between the child and the siblings.

  - The appropriateness of developing or maintaining the sibling relationships pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 16002.

  - If the siblings are not placed together, why the siblings are not placed together and either what efforts are being made to place them together or why such efforts are not appropriate.

  - The frequency and nature of sibling visitation if the siblings are not placed together.

  - The impact of the sibling relationships, if any, on the child's placement and permanency planning.

  - A factual discussion of indicators of the nature of the child's sibling relationships, including, but not limited to, whether the siblings were raised together, have shared significant common experiences or have existing close and strong bonds, whether either sibling expresses a desire to visit or live with his or her sibling, and whether ongoing contact is in the child's best emotional interest.

- If the parent or guardian is unwilling or unable to make educational decisions for his or her child, or if other circumstances exist that compromise the ability of the parent or guardian to make those decisions, a consideration of whether the right of the parent or guardian to make educational decisions for the child should be limited. If the recommendation of the social services agency is for the court to limit that right, whether there is a responsible adult available to make educational decisions for the child pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.

- Whether the child appears to be a person who is eligible to be considered for further court action to free the child from parental custody and control.

- Whether the parent has been advised of the option of participating in adoption planning for the child and to voluntarily relinquish the child for adoption if an adoption agency is willing to accept the relinquishment.

- The appropriateness of any relative placement pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.3; however, this consideration may not be cause for continuance of the dispositional hearing.

- Whether the caregiver desires, and is willing, to provide legal permanency for the child if reunification efforts fail.

If the child has been placed in foster care, the case plan recommended in the social study must include a summary of the health and education information or records of the child, including mental health information or records. The summary may be in the form of a "health and education passport" or in some other comparable format. It must include, but is not limited to, all of the information detailed in Welf. & Inst. Code § 16010(a), unless some other provision of law imposes a more stringent information requirement, in which case the more stringent requirement shall apply [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16010(a)]. This information must also be included in any report or assessment prepared for the review and permanency planning hearings under Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 366.21, 366.22, and 366.26 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16010(b)].

If the social worker has interviewed a child who is the subject of an investigation as a person believed to be within Welf. & Inst. Code § 300, the social worker shall include the substance of the interview in any written report submitted at an adjudicatory hearing, or if no report is then received in evidence, the social worker shall include the substance of the interview in the social study required by Welf. & Inst. Code § 358 [see Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 328, 328.5; see also Welf. & Inst. Code § 358.1].

[2] Child Welfare Services Case Plan

Every case in which the social services agency is providing services to a child or family is to have a child welfare services case plan. This case plan has been found by the Legislature to be the "foundation and central unifying tool in child welfare services" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16501.1(a)(1)]. Use of the plan is designed to ensure that the child receives necessary protection and appropriate case management. It is also to ensure that parents and other caretakers receive services as appropriate. The plan must document the preplacement assessment of the needs of the child and family for services, any preplacement preventive services provided, and the reasonable efforts made to prevent out-of-home placement [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16501.1(b)]. Formerly the case plan was to be completed within a maximum of 30 days from the date of the initial removal of the child or of the in-person response required by Welf. & Inst. Code § 16501(f), if the child was not removed from his or her home, by the date of the disposition hearing, whichever occurred first. In order to afford social workers with time to actively engage families, including children, parents, relatives, and other interested persons, and to solicit and integrate input from them in the case plan, the time for the case plan to be completed is to be extended to a maximum of 60 days from the date of the initial removal of the child or of the in-person response required by Welf. & Inst. Code § 16501(f), or the date of the disposition hearing, whichever occurs first [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16501.1(d)]. The case plan must be submitted to the juvenile court not later than 60 days from the date of initial removal even if the disposition hearing is continued beyond that date [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.690(c)(1)]. The plan must be updated in conjunction with each review hearing and each hearing pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26, but no less frequently than every six months. It must also be updated as the needs of the child and the family for services dictate [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16501.1(d)]. The case plan is to be comprehensive enough to meet the requirements of dependency proceedings and is to be included with the social study and review reports prepared by the social worker [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16501.1(e), (f)(14)].

The child welfare services case plan is to be developed in the following manner [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16501.1(f)]:

- It must be based on an assessment of the circumstances requiring child welfare services intervention.

- It must identify specific goals and the appropriateness of the services planned to meet those goals.

- It must identify the original allegations of abuse or neglect, the reasons for declaring the child a dependent of the court, and any other precipitating incidents leading to intervention by child welfare services. If the child was removed from a custodial parent and a previously noncustodial parent requested but was denied placement, it should also include the reasons why, if any, the child was not placed with a previously noncustodial parent.

- It must include a description of the schedule of contacts for the social worker with the child and the family or other caretakers. The frequency of these contacts are to be in accordance with State Department of Social Services' regulations.

- If the child is in out-of-home placement, the frequency of contact between the child and the parents or guardians must be specified. The frequency of such contacts must reflect the overall case goals. Information regarding any court-ordered visitation between the child and the parent or guardian, as well as the terms and conditions needed to facilitate that visitation safely, must be provided to the child's caregiver as soon as possible after the court order is made.

- If the child is in out-of-home placement, the case plan must include provisions for the development and maintenance of sibling relationships as set forth in Welf. & Inst. Code § 16002. Information regarding any court-ordered visitation between the child and any siblings, as well as the terms and conditions needed to facilitate that visitation safely, must be provided to the child's caregiver as soon as possible after the court order is made. If dependent siblings have different social workers, those workers must communicate with each other and ensure the siblings are informed of significant life events that occur within their extended family.

- If the child is in a nonrelative, out-of-home placement that is either a substantial distance from the home of the parent or is out-of-state, the case plan must specify the reasons why such placement is in the child's best interest.

- If the goal is reunification and out-of-home services are used, the case plan must describe the services to be provided to assist in reunification.

- If reunification services are provided, the case plan must also describe the services to be provided concurrently to achieve legal permanence for the child if reunification efforts fail, and shall consider the importance of developing and maintaining sibling relationships pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 16002.

- The parents and legal guardians are to participate in the development of the case plan whenever possible. The parents and legal guardians must have the opportunity to review the plan, sign it whenever possible, and must receive a copy of it. In any agreement for voluntary services or placement, the parents or legal guardians must review and sign the case plan. Parents and legal guardians must be advised that neither their signature on the plan nor their acceptance of services pursuant to the plan will constitute an admission of guilt or be used as evidence against them. They must also be advised, however, that their failure to cooperate, except for good cause, in the provision of such services may be used as evidence in dependency review hearings.

- The child is also to be involved in developing the case plan, as age and developmentally appropriate, and to express a preference for foster or permanent placement. If the child is 12 years of age or older and in a permanent placement, the child shall also be given the opportunity to review, sign, and have a copy of the case plan.

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
G. Disposition Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.122

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.122 Evidence and Standard of Proof

The court must receive in evidence and consider the social study of the child prepared by the social services agency and any study or evaluation made by a child advocate appointed by the court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 358(b); see Welf. & Inst. Code § 356.5 (purpose of child advocate)]. While the social worker must be present or available for cross-examination to allow the social study into evidence over objection at a jurisdiction hearing, at other hearings such as the disposition hearing the social study is admissible even in the absence of the preparer. No foundation must be laid for the receipt of the report. To this extent the social study is self-authenticating. To provide due process, however, there must be some vehicle for the objecting parent to get the worker who wrote the report into court for questioning should the parent desire to do so [In re Corey A. (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 339, 347-348, 277 Cal. Rptr. 782] .

Other relevant and material evidence may be offered by the petitioner, the child, or the parent or guardian, including, but not limited to, the willingness of the caregiver to provide legal permanency for the child if reunification efforts fail, and the court may receive other relevant and material evidence on its own motion [Welf. & Inst. Code § 358(b)]. In any judgment and order of disposition, the court must specifically state that the social study and the study or evaluation made by any child advocate appointed by the court have been read and considered by the court in arriving at its judgment and order of disposition. Any social study or report submitted to the court by the social worker must include the individual child's case plan developed under Welf. & Inst. Code § 16501.1 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 358(b)]. If the child is being considered for placement in a foster home, the child has the right to make a brief statement to the court making the placement decision [Fam. Code § 7952; Welf. & Inst. Code § 399].

The trial court is required to hear evidence only if it is relevant to the issues at the proceeding, and the burden of proof as to the substance, purpose, and relevance of the evidence is on the party who offers it [Evid. Code §§ 350, 500]. Thus, if the trial court denies admission of the evidence, the offering party must have made an adequate offer of proof to preserve the issue on appeal [In re Mark C. (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 433, 445, 8 Cal. Rptr. 2d 856] .

The burden of proof at a disposition hearing is on the social services department. The standard of proof at the dispositional phase of dependency proceedings depends on the nature of the intended dispositional order. If the child is to remain in the custodial home, proof by a preponderance of the evidence is sufficient. However, if the child is to be removed from the physical custody of a parent or guardian under Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(c) (discussed in § 328.126), clear and convincing evidence is required. This standard is required even if the child is to be placed with the other parent [In re Katrina C. (1988) 201 Cal. App. 3d 540, 548-549, 247 Cal. Rptr. 784] .

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
G. Disposition Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.123

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.123 Alternative Judgments of Court

[1] In General

Following receipt and consideration of evidence concerning proper disposition, the court may do any of the following [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.695; see Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 360(a), (b), (d), 390]:

- Dismiss the petition with specific reasons stated in the minutes.

- Place the child under a program of informal supervision by the social services agency [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 301] and order that services be provided without declaring the child a dependent.

- Appoint a legal guardian if a guardianship is in the child's best interest, the parent has been advised of the right to reunification services and waived that right, and if all parties, including the child, agree to the guardianship. Normally, this is done without a declaration of dependency, but it may also be done in conjunction with a declaration of dependency [Welf. & Inst. Code § 360(a)]. The letters of guardianship issued by the court are not subject to the confidentiality protections set forth in Welf. & Inst. Code § 827 [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.695(b)(2)(E)]. If the court appoints a guardian and declares dependency, a six-month review hearing must be set [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.695(b)(3)].

- Declare dependency, permit the child to remain at home, and order that services be provided.

- Declare dependency, permit the child to remain at home, limit the control to be exercised by the parent or guardian, and order services to be provided.

- Declare dependency, remove physical custody from the parent or guardian, and do any of the following:

  - Order custody to the noncustodial parent, terminate jurisdiction, and direct that Judicial Council Form Custody Order--Juvenile (JV-200) be prepared and filed [see discussion in § 328.129[5][a]; for a sample form and commentary on its use, see § 328.361].

  - Order custody to the noncustodial parent with services to one or both parents.

  - Make a general placement order and consider granting specific visitation rights to the child's grandparents.

For discussion of the clerk's service of the court's written findings and orders on specified parties, see Ch. 327, Juvenile Courts: Jurisdiction and General Procedures, § 327.32.

[2] Informal Supervision

In some cases the parties may resolve an in-home case at disposition by recommending an order for informal supervision pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 301(a). The court may also determine on its own or following a request by one of the parties that even though it has jurisdiction, the child is placed in the home, and the family is cooperative and able to work with the social services department in a program of informal services without court supervision that can be successfully completed within 6 to 12 months and which does not place the child at an unacceptable level of risk. In such cases the court may order informal services and supervision by the social services department instead of declaring the child a dependent [Welf. & Inst. Code § 360(b); see Welf. & Inst. Code § 301]. An order at disposition for informal supervision is the exception, rather than the rule, and it is the rare case in which this will be appropriate. The court should not make such an order unless it finds the order is appropriate, sufficient to protect the child, and in the child's best interest. All parties, of course, have the right to be heard on this issue before the court makes such an order [Allen M. v. Superior Court (1992) 6 Cal. App. 4th 1069, 1073-1075, 8 Cal. Rptr. 2d 259] . The voluntary supervision program may call for the child to obtain care and treatment for the abuse of or addiction to controlled substances [Welf. & Inst. Code § 301(b)]. If the parent of the child that is the subject of the intended informal supervision agreement is a dependent of the juvenile, the informal supervision program shall not be undertaken until the minor parent has consulted with his or her dependency attorney [Welf. & Inst. Code § 301(c)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Watch for Appropriate Cases for Informal Supervision. Most cases appropriate for informal supervision will have been resolved that way prior to the filing of a dependency petition. Sometimes, however, it takes coming into court to really get a parent's attention and cause the parent to be willing and able to utilize voluntary services while keeping the child safe. All parties, but especially parents' counsel, should be alert for such cases and raise the possibility of an order for informal supervision, if appropriate.

If informal supervision is court ordered pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 360(b), the court "has no authority to take any further role in overseeing the services or the family unless the matter is brought back before the court" through a petition filed by the social worker pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 360(c) [California Ctr. for Jud. Educ. and Research, Cal. Judges Benchguides, Benchguide 102: Juvenile Dependency Disposition Hearing (Jan. 2009) § 102.37 (Decision Process--Declaring Dependency), p. 102-39]. The court's lack of authority to take a further role in overseeing the services or the family is understandable, since if the court felt a need to supervise the matter it would have declared dependency.

If the court agrees to or orders a program of informal supervision, it does not dismiss the dependency petition or otherwise set it aside. The true finding of jurisdiction remains. It is only the dispositional alternative of declaring the child a dependent that is not made. This is because if the family is unwilling or unable to cooperate with the services being provided, the social worker may institute proceedings pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 332 (petition to commence proceedings), alleging that a previous petition has been sustained and that informal supervision was ineffective. After hearing the petition, the court may either dismiss it or order a new disposition hearing to be held [Welf. & Inst. Code § 360(c)].

[3] Voluntary Guardianship

If a jurisdiction finding has been made that the child falls within the jurisdiction of the juvenile court pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 and the parent has advised the court that the parent is not interested in family maintenance or family reunification services and instead agrees to a guardianship, the court may order a legal guardianship in addition to or in lieu of a declaration of dependency [Welf. & Inst. Code § 360(a)]. The court shall not order such a guardianship at a disposition hearing without having first received an assessment which must include the following [Welf. & Inst. Code § 360(a)(1)-(6); see also Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361.5(g), 16010(b)]:

- Current search efforts for a noncustodial parent and notification of that parent as provided in Welf. & Inst. Code § 291.

- A review of the nature and amount of contact between the child and the parents since the filing of the dependency petition.

- An evaluation of the child's medical, developmental, scholastic, mental, and emotional status, including a copy of the child's current health and education summary.

- A preliminary assessment of the commitment and eligibility of the prospective guardian, including a social history, a screening for any criminal records and prior referrals for child abuse or neglect, and addressing the capability of the prospective guardian to meet the child's needs, and the understanding of the prospective guardian of the legal and financial rights and responsibilities of a guardian.

- The relationship of the child to the prospective guardian, including the nature and duration of that relationship, the motivation for seeking a guardianship, and a statement from the child regarding the proposed guardianship, unless the child's age or physical, emotional or other condition prevents a meaningful response in which case the assessment shall include a description of such condition.

- An analysis of the likelihood that the child would be adopted if parental rights were terminated.

One court has held the juvenile court is not restricted in appointing voluntary guardians by the requirements of Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.4 regarding criminal records exemptions [In re Summer H. (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 1315, 1321, 1334, 43 Cal. Rptr. 3d 682] . The reasoning of this decision is highly questionable, however. A voluntary guardianship under Welf. & Inst. Code § 360 is not, at its core, triggered by the parent's consent. It is triggered by the jurisdictional finding and the evidence submitted for the disposition hearing, which may include evidence that reunification services should not be provided, or the proposed concurrent services plan for a prospective adoptive placement. To compare such a situation with a voluntary guardianship under the Probate Code misses the point. Both voluntary guardianships under Welf. & Inst. Code § 360 and dependency guardianships under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 are only done after a true finding of dependency jurisdiction. Both involve the court's mandate to ensure not only the child's best interest, but also the child's safety. Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.4 was enacted to ensure the safety of children who come under the juvenile court's jurisdiction and who are not being placed with their parent. Thus, to suggest the juvenile court is not bound by Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.4 in making a disposition order for a voluntary guardianship is to place the child at potential risk. Nevertheless, while it is hoped that most appellate courts will choose not to follow the Summer H. decision, even that opinion noted that if the proposed guardian has a prior criminal record, it is likely the guardianship is not in the child's best interests, and the recommendation of the social services agency in that regard is entitled to significant weight [In re Summer H. (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 1315, 1334, 43 Cal. Rptr. 3d 682] . Thus, even where the Summer H. decision is followed, it will be the rare case in which a guardianship at disposition should be ordered for a guardian who does not qualify under Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.4.

Before granting the guardianship the court must state on the record that it has read and considered the assessment. It must also advise the parents and the child that no reunification services will be provided if a guardianship is established. If the parties waive the right to such services, agree to the guardianship, and the court determines that legal guardianship with the proposed guardian is in the child's best interest, it may issue letters of guardianship [Welf. & Inst. Code § 360(a)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Voluntary Guardianship as the Exception and Not the Rule. Voluntary guardianships pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 360(a) may at first glance be very appealing. Such proposals must, however, be closely scrutinized. A voluntary guardianship does not result in family maintenance or reunification services to the family; hence, it denies the child the possibility that he or she might stay or return home through the provision of such services. Further, a voluntary guardianship may bypass the finding the child must be removed from the custody of the parent [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(c)], thereby requiring that issue to be litigated if the voluntary guardianship is subsequently terminated at a time when evidence regarding the parent may not be immediately known. A voluntary guardianship does bypass the holding of a Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing, which would normally occur if reunification efforts were attempted and failed, thereby eliminating the possibility at that time of adoption. As such, any proposal for a voluntary guardianship should be reviewed carefully to determine whether it truly is in the best interests of the child.

[4] Relinquishment

The social worker is to advise the parent of the option of voluntarily relinquishing the child for adoption if an adoption agency is willing to accept the relinquishment. Whether the social worker has done this is to be included in the social study [Welf. & Inst. Code § 358.1(f)]. When a parent relinquishes a child who is the subject of a petition for dependency jurisdiction, the agency accepting the relinquishment must give written notice of the relinquishment within five court days to the juvenile court hearing the child's case, the child's attorney, if any, and the attorney for the relinquishing parent [Fam. Code § 8700(h)]. The adoption agency has full care, custody and control of a relinquished child [Fam. Code § 8704(a)]. Hence, if the child is freed by relinquishment prior to the declaration of dependency, the court may exercise its discretion to simply dismiss the dependency matter [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.695(a)(1)]. In such cases, the agency can bring the matter back under a new petition should adoption not be realized within 12 months [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(h)]. Where appropriate, the court may declare the child a dependent child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 360(d)]. A parent may relinquish the child pursuant to Fam. Code § 8700 even after a declaration of dependency [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(b)]. This does not mean, however, that the parent can do a designated relinquishment to the adoption agency without the juvenile court's permission. A designated relinquishment allows the parent to designate who would adopt the child. Allowing that would be inconsistent with previous findings and orders removing the child from the parent and the court's overall supervision of the care, custody, and control of the child [cf. Taylor M. (2003) 106 Cal. App. 4th 97, 107-109, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 502 ; Teresa J. v. Superior Court (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 366, 368, 370, 125 Cal. Rptr. 2d 506] . As such, Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(b) should be construed within the context of the overall statutory scheme to mean only that a parent can unconditionally relinquish the child to the adoption agency if the agency is willing to accept the relinquishment. If the child is already a dependent at the time of the relinquishment, the normal practice is to maintain the dependency until the child is adopted.

The ability of a parent to relinquish a child for an independent or private adoption following the filing of a dependency petition is not the same as the ability of a parent to relinquish the child for an agency adoption. Once a dependency petition is filed, the parent must seek the juvenile court's authorization before the parent can relinquish the child to a private or independent adoption agency [Taylor M. (2003) 106 Cal. App. 4th 97, 107-109, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 502 ; Teresa J. v. Superior Court (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 366, 368, 370, 125 Cal. Rptr. 2d 506] .

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329

CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
G. Disposition Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.124

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.124 Orders After Declaration of Dependency

[1] In General

The court may make any and all reasonable orders for the care, supervision, custody, conduct, maintenance, and support of the child, including medical treatment, subject to the further order of the court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 362(a)]. The court may also direct any and all reasonable orders to the parents or guardians of the child as necessary to carry out the purposes of Welf. & Inst. Code § 362 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 362(c)]. Reasonable orders may also be made directing the parents or guardians of the child to ensure the child's regular school attendance and to make reasonable efforts to obtain the educational services necessary for any specific needs of the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 362(d)].

In all cases in which a child is not placed with a parent, full consideration must be given to placing the child in proximity to the natural parents so as to facilitate visitation and family reunification [In re Luke L. (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 670, 677-680, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 53 ; Fam. Code § 7950(a)]. When a placement in out-of-home care is being made, it must be made, if possible, in the home of a relative, unless the placement would not be in the child's best interest. The social services agency and the juvenile court must make diligent efforts to locate an appropriate relative. Further, before any child is placed in long-term foster care, each relative whose name has been submitted to the social services agency as a possible caretaker for the child must be evaluated as an appropriate placement resource [Fam. Code § 7950(a)(1)].

[2] Orders Relating to Service Providers--Joinder

For the purpose of facilitating coordination and cooperation among government agencies, private service providers, or both, the court may join in the dependency proceedings any agency or private service provider it determines has failed to meet a legal obligation to provide services to the child. Such action may only be done after giving notice to the agency or private service provider and an opportunity to be heard [Welf. & Inst. Code § 362(a)]. The court can only join the agency or private service provider in the dependency proceedings if the agency or private service provider is found to have failed to meet a legal obligation to provide services to the child. The belief the agency or private service provider may at some time in the future fail to meet such a legal obligation is not grounds to join it in the dependency proceedings [Southard v. Superior Court (2000) 82 Cal. App. 4th 729, 98 Cal. Rptr. 2d 733 ; Welf. & Inst. Code § 362(a)].

The court may only order a government agency or private service provider to provide services if it has determined through the administrative process of the agency, which has been joined as a party in the juvenile proceeding, that the child is eligible for the services. The court must not impose duties on the agency or private service provider beyond those mandated by law [Welf. & Inst. Code § 362(a)].

"Private service provider" means any agency or individual that receives federal, state, or local government funding or reimbursement for the provision of services directly to foster children [Welf. & Inst. Code § 362(e)].

[3] Placement Issues Relating to Race, Color, or National Origin

No social services agency or other entity which receives any state assistance and is involved in foster care placements may do either of the following [Fam. Code § 7950(a)(2)]:

- Deny to any person the opportunity to become a foster parent, on the basis of the race, color, or national origin of the foster parent or the child involved [Fam. Code § 7950(a)(2)(A)].

- Delay or deny the placement of a child in foster care on the basis of the race, color, or national origin of the foster parent or the child involved [Fam. Code § 7950(a)(2)(B)].

However, these provisions of law should not be construed to affect the application of the Indian Child Welfare Act [Fam. Code § 7950(b)].

For discussion of sibling placement issues, see § 328.129[6].

71 of 187 DOCUMENTS

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
G. Disposition Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.125

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.125 Indian Children

[1] In General

Many Americans, adult and children, have some Native American ancestry. But only a very small percentage of them are members of federally recognized Indian tribes or eligible for membership in such tribes. The Indian Child Welfare Act (ICWA) does not apply to the many children involved in juvenile dependency proceedings who merely have some vague, distant, or possible Indian heritage. Instead, it only applies to children who are Indian children as defined by federal statute in the ICWA [25 U.S.C. § 1901 et seq.]. For purposes of the ICWA, an Indian child is defined as an unmarried person under the age of 18 who is either a member of a federally recognized Indian tribe or is the biological child of a member of a federally recognized Indian tribe and is eligible for membership in that tribe [25 U.S.C. § 1903(4)]. If the case is an ICWA case, there are numerous additional requirements including special placement preferences and statutorily required findings under the ICWA [25 U.S.C. § 1901 et seq.].

The ICWA does allow states to impose higher standards for the handling of cases involving Indian children [25 U.S.C. § 1921]. When a state imposes higher standards for the protection of the interests of a parent or Indian custodian of an Indian child, the higher standard or greater protection does not become part of the federal ICWA. Instead, it is strictly state law and is reviewed under state standards, including the standard for harmless error [In re S.B. (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 1148, 1158, 1162, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 726] . California has imposed a number of such higher standards through its rules of court, statutes, and appellate decisions. California has not always been clear, however, in noting which state requirements parallel federal requirements, and which are additional state requirements [see, e.g., In re Edward H. (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 1, 4-6, 122 Cal. Rptr. 2d 242] . As a result, practitioners and courts have often been confused and have lumped all the requirements under the blanket term of "ICWA." They should not have done so. With the many new California statutory provisions regarding Indian children and possible Indian children that take effect in 2007, it is now especially important to review prior California appellate decisions, current California rules, and federal statutes to determine if a particular provision is a federal mandate that is also set forth in state law, or only a state provision.

The mandatory federal provisions regarding the ICWA are set forth in federal statutes and regulations [25 U.S.C. § 1901 et seq.; 25 C.F.R. § 23.1 et seq.]. Additional federal guidelines are set forth in the "Guidelines for State Courts" [Guidelines for State Courts (Nov. 26, 1979) 44 Fed. Reg. 67584] . By their own terms, these guidelines are "not intended to have binding legislative effect" [Guidelines for State Courts (Nov. 26, 1979) 44 Fed. Reg. 67584] . They are not, therefore, federal ICWA requirements. Instead, the guidelines are most appropriately viewed as federal "best practice" [see In re N.A.H. (S.D. 1988) 418 N.W.2d 310, 311] . Where the guidelines go beyond the statutory language yet are incorporated into state law, making them mandatory, the state provisions are actually higher state standards of protection and not part of the ICWA [25 U.S.C. § 1921; In re S.B. (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 1148, 1158, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 726] .

The purpose of the ICWA is twofold: (1) to protect the best interests of Indian children, and (2) to promote stable and secure Indian tribal entities [In re Crystal K. (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 655, 661, 276 Cal. Rptr. 619 , citing In re Appeal in Pima County Juvenile Action (1981) 130 Ariz. 202, 635 P.2d 187, 188 ; see 25 U.S.C. § 1902]. In this regard, ICWA is not only concerned with the interests of Indian children and their families, but also with the interests of the Indian tribe itself. Thus, under ICWA the tribe has rights independent of the rights of the Indian parent and the Indian child [In re Kahlen W. (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 1414, 1425, 285 Cal. Rptr. 507 , citing Mississippi Band of Choctaw Indians v. Holyfield (1989) 490 U.S. 30, 109 S. Ct. 1597, 104 L. Ed. 2d 29] . Both federal and California law recognize the interests of Indian tribes, families, and children [25 U.S.C. §§ 1901, 1902; Welf. & Inst. Code § 224].

The ICWA is only applicable when the "Indian tribe" is recognized by the United States government [In re Wanomi P. (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 156, 166-167, 264 Cal. Rptr. 623 (ICWA did not apply to Mic Mac tribe of Maine, U.S.A., and Nova Scotia, Canada, since that tribe was not a federally recognized tribe)]. For purposes of the ICWA an "Indian tribe" means any Indian tribe, band, nation, or other organized group or community of Indians recognized by the Secretary of the Interior, including any Alaska Native village as defined in 43 U.S.C. § 1602(c) [25 U.S.C. § 1903(8)].

The ICWA expressly excludes from its definition of a parent an "unwed father where paternity has not been acknowledged or established" [25 U.S.C. § 1903(9)]. If the possible Indian heritage is through an alleged father who has neither acknowledged or established his paternity, such an alleged father lacks standing to challenge a lack of notice under the ICWA on appeal [In re Daniel M. (2003) 110 Cal. App. 4th 703, 707-708, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 897] . In Daniel M. the alleged father did not acknowledge his paternity; although he had initially asked for paternity testing, he did not show up for that testing, withdrew his request for testing, and only belatedly requested testing again shortly before the hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 [In re Daniel M. (2003) 110 Cal. App. 4th 703, 706-707, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 897] . However, an unwed father who has yet to establish his paternity in court may still invoke the application of the ICWA by openly acknowledging his paternity. Thus, Daniel M. should not be taken too far or read to automatically exclude the possible application of the ICWA when the Indian heritage is through an alleged father, especially if that alleged father acknowledges paternity.

The Indian tribe has exclusive authority to determine whether a child is or is not a member of or eligible for membership in the tribe [Santa Clara Pueblo v. Martinez (1978) 436 U.S. 49, 55-56, 72, n.32, 98 S. Ct. 1670, 56 L. Ed. 2d 106] . The trial court, however, must make a determination as to whether the child is an Indian child within the meaning of the ICWA [Matter of Appeal in Maricopa County (1983) 136 Ariz. 528, 532, 667 P.2d 228, 232 ; Matter of K.A.B.E. (S.D. 1982) 325 N.W.2d 840, 842-843] . This is an important responsibility in cases in which the evidence is not clear, as is sometimes the case, whether the child is a member of or eligible for membership in a tribe, or whether the child's biological parent is a member of the tribe.

PRACTICE TIP:

ICWA as Federal Law. There are many published California appellate decisions dealing with ICWA in a dependency or other child custody context in addition to those cited here. It should be remembered, however, that ICWA is a federal law that has been interpreted by many courts throughout the county. A practitioner with an ICWA case should look for and consider the decisions of courts of other states and federal courts in addition to his or her legal research of the United States Code and California cases.

For further discussion of the ICWA, see Hollinger, Adoption Law and Practice, Ch. 15 (Matthew Bender); Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2d ed., Ch. 176 (Matthew Bender).

[2] Required Notice to Tribe and BIA

[a] Federal Law Regarding Notice

A key requirement in child custody cases involving Indian children is actual notice to the federally recognized tribe of the pending action and of its rights under the ICWA, including the right to intervene [25 U.S.C. § 1912(a); In re Kahlen W. (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 1414, 1421, 285 Cal. Rptr. 507] . Where the social services agency and the court have reason to know the child is an Indian child within the meaning of the ICWA but a specific tribe cannot be identified, the ICWA requires notice to the Secretary of the Interior, Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA), not to all possible tribes [25 U.S.C. § 1912(a); In re Edward H. (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 1, 5-6, 122 Cal. Rptr. 2d 242 ; In re Levi U. (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 191, 198-199, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 648] . Moreover, notice is required regardless of how late in the proceedings the social services agency and the juvenile court discover reason to know the child is an Indian child as defined by the ICWA. Failure to provide such notice is error that may result in any action taken being invalidated [25 U.S.C. § 1914; In re Kahlen W. (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 1414, 1421-1426, 285 Cal. Rptr. 507] . But substantial compliance coupled with timely, actual notice is usually sufficient [In the Interest of J.J.G. (Kan. Ct. App. 2004) 83 P.3d 1264, 1267 ; In the Interest of D.M. (S.D. 2004) 685 N.W.2d 768, 771] .

Notice under the ICWA is not required merely because the child has some Indian heritage. The clear language of the statute only requires notice under the ICWA if the court "knows or has reason to know that an Indian child is involved" [25 U.S.C. § 1912(a)]. A child is an Indian child within the meaning of the ICWA if the child is a member of a recognized tribe or is both eligible for membership and the child of a member of the tribe [25 U.S.C. § 1903(4)]. This does not mean there must be proof of enrollment. The lack of enrollment is not determinative, since not all tribes use enrollment as the indicator of membership [In re Desiree F. (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 460, 470-471, 99 Cal. Rptr. 688] . Further, membership in a tribe need not be certain to require notice. Indeed, when in doubt courts should err on the side of caution and require ICWA notice. But they should not do so based on a mere hint of Indian ancestry. Instead, there must be some evidence to give the court or social services agency reason to know the child is an Indian child as defined by the ICWA [In re Arianna R.G (Wis. 2003) 657 N.W.2d 363, 370-371 ; In re A.L. (N.D. 2001) 623 N.W.2d 418, 420-422] .

The federal guidelines, which are entitled to great weight and help to define best practice in this area, provide further assistance. The guidelines utilize the phrase "reason to believe" rather than "reason to know," but even the guidelines require some substantive information to give the court or social services agency reason to believe or know the child is an Indian child [25 U.S.C. § 1912(a); Guidelines for State Courts (Nov. 26, 1979) 44 Fed. Reg. 67584 , § B.1; see also In re Arianna R.G (Wis. 2003) 657 N.W.2d 363, 370, fn. 18]. The guidelines recommend the court make inquiries to determine if the child "is a member of an Indian tribe or if a parent of the child is a member of an Indian tribe and the child is eligible for membership in an Indian tribe" [Guidelines for State Courts (Nov. 26, 1979) 44 Fed. Reg. 67584 , § B.5(a), and Commentary]. This inquiry is consistent with the statutory language regarding the definition of an Indian child [25 U.S.C. § 1903(4)]. Additionally, the guidelines provide a "list of several circumstances which shall trigger an inquiry by the court and petitioners to determine whether a child is an Indian for purposes of this Act" [Guidelines for State Courts (Nov. 26, 1979) 44 Fed. Reg. 67584 , § B.1, Commentary; In Interest of H.D. (Kan. Ct. App. 1986) 729 P.2d 1234, 1236] . Those circumstances include when the court is informed the child is an Indian child, the social services agency discovers information suggesting the child is an Indian child, the child gives the court reason to believe he or she is an Indian child, the residence or domicile of the child, the biological parents, or the Indian custodian is known by the court to be or shown to be a predominantly Indian community, or an officer of the court involved in the proceedings has knowledge the child may be an Indian child [Guidelines for State Courts (Nov. 26, 1979) 44 Fed. Reg. 67584 , § B.1(c)]. Both the guideline and its commentary must be read together to fully understand these circumstances trigger a duty of inquiry, not notice, something not all courts have understood [see, e.g., Dwayne P. v. Superior Court (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 247, 258, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 639] . If those inquiries lead the court or the social services agency to know or have reason to know the child is an Indian child, notice is required [25 U.S.C. § 1912(a)].

While some may say a duty should be implied, the ICWA does not expressly impose an affirmative duty for the court to inquire about possible Indian heritage in all cases. Instead, the duty is on the party seeking to have the ICWA apply to show Indian heritage [In re C.N. (Ill. 2001) 752 N.E.2d 1030, 1044-1045 ; In the Interest of M.N.W. (Iowa Ct. App. 1998) 577 N.W.2d 874, 876 , citing In re A.G.-G (Colo. App. 1995) 899 P.2d 319, 321 ; In re A.M. (Neb. 1990) 455 N.W.2d 572, 573 .]. The federal guidelines do, however, list circumstances when the court should conduct an inquiry due to information indicating the child is an Indian child [Guidelines for State Courts (Nov. 26, 1979) 44 Fed. Reg. 67584 , § B.1, Commentary]. Further, the federal guidelines recommend that state courts "routinely inquire of participants in child custody proceedings whether the child is an Indian" [Guidelines for State Courts (Nov. 26, 1979) 44 Fed. Reg. 67584 , § B.5, Commentary]. This is federal best practice and strongly recommended, but not a federal mandate. States, however, may impose a higher standard than the ICWA and require inquiry in all cases about possible Native American heritage [In re Elliott (Mich. Ct. App. 1996) 554 N.W.2d 32, 37-38] .

The ICWA does not apply to detention hearings, even regarding a child the social services agency and court know or have reason to know is an Indian child. To so require would result in an absurdity, since the need for a detention hearing is based on the need for emergency removal, while ICWA provisions, particularly ICWA notice provisions, obviously require significant additional time [25 U.S.C. § 1922; In re S.B. (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 1148, 1162-1163, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 726 ; In re J.A.S. (Minn. Ct. App. 1992) 488 N.W.2d 332, 334-335] . Nevertheless, where reasonably possible it is "best practice" to contact an Indian child's tribe or tribal social worker for possible placement and services resources even before formal notice is required or given.

The ICWA does not expressly mandate providing the juvenile court with copies of the notices sent, mailing receipts, or responses [In re Elizabeth W. (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 900, 906, 16 Cal. Rptr. 3d 514 ; In re L.B. (2003) 110 Cal. App. 4th 1420, 1425, n.3, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 16] . Nevertheless, when notice is required the federal guidelines support the best practice of having copies of the actual forms sent to the tribes or BIA, together with any return receipt or other proof of service, filed with the court [Guidelines for State Courts (Nov. 26, 1979) 44 Fed. Reg. 67584 , § B.5(d)]. Best practice also includes filing any documents received in response to those notices with the juvenile court. This ensures the juvenile court has the evidence necessary to make a determination as to whether the ICWA applies and that the appellate court has an adequate record on which to review that decision.

The ICWA does not create jurisdiction in a court that does not otherwise have it [Slone v. Inyo County Juvenile Court (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 263, 267, 282 Cal. Rptr. 126] . Further, it does not supplant normal state rules of appellate procedure. Hence, if an ICWA issue is not raised at the trial court level, normal rules of forfeiture apply and the issue cannot be raised for the first time on appeal [In the Interest of J.D.B. (Iowa 1998) 584 N.W.2d 577, 581 ; Adoption of T.N.F. (Alaska 1989) 781 P.2d 973, 978-980] . Nevertheless, when the issue raised is notice under the ICWA, courts are less inclined to apply the principles of waiver or forfeiture [In re Enrique P. (Neb. Ct. App. 2006) 709 N.W.2d 676, 686] .

[b] California Law Regarding Notice

The ICWA provides that states can impose higher standards [25 U.S.C. § 1921]. Before 2007 California's appellate courts regularly went beyond the clear language of 25 U.S.C. 1912(a) to require notice under the ICWA in almost any case in which there was possible Indian heritage [see, e.g., In re Nikki R. (2003) 106 Cal. App. 4th 844, 848, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 256 (court needs only a suggestion of Indian ancestry to trigger notice requirements); In re Marinna J. (2001)

90 Cal. App. 4th 731, 735-739, 109 Cal. Rptr. 2d 267 (requiring notice based on possible Cherokee heritage); In re Desiree F. (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 460, 469-470, 99 Cal. Rptr. 688 (erroneously placing blame for the child not being enrolled as a member of the tribe on the social services agency's lack of notice, rather than on the family)]. One case went so far as to hold a mere hint of Indian ancestry was enough to trigger the requirement for ICWA notice [Dwayne P. v. Superior Court (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 247, 258, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 639] . These and other similar cases were supported by the rule of court that required notice to at least the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) if the box on the dependency petition is checked saying the child "may be of Indian ancestry" [Cal. Rules of Ct., former Rule 5.664(e)]. Nevertheless, not all California courts required notice based on a mere hint of Indian ancestry [In re Aaron R. (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 697, 707-708, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 921 ; In re O. K. (2003) 106 Cal. App. 4th 152, 155-158, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 276] .

Most practitioners and trial courts believed the cases requiring notice based on a mere hint of Indian ancestry went far beyond the ICWA notice requirements, which only require notice when the court knows or has reason to know the child may be an Indian child as defined by the ICWA [25 U.S.C. §§ 1903(4), 1912(a)]. The ICWA was intended to apply only to Indian children as defined by the ICWA, not to all children who have Indian heritage. Even the guideline for inquiry set forth in the "Guidelines for State Courts" listed "the most common circumstances giving rise to a reasonable belief that a child may be an Indian" [Guidelines for State Courts (Nov. 26, 1979) 44 Fed. Reg. 67584 , § B.1 Commentary]. A requirement for notice based on the mere hint of Indian heritage is not notice based on a reasonable belief the child is or even may be an Indian child. Further, though some courts have suggested otherwise, notice is an onerous requirement [Dwayne P. v. Superior Court (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 247, 254, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 639] . It takes more than a simple preprinted form to satisfy the notice requirements in the opinions of some appellate courts [see In re C.D. (2003) 110 Cal. App. 4th 214, 225-226, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 578] . Further, perfection is rarely possible to achieve, yet appellate decisions routinely applied almost a "strict liability" standard for clerical and other errors in completing the notice forms. Further, personnel costs go up and are compounded by expenses for certified mail and registered mail. Finally, the cost in terms of delays to children are significant, especially when cases are reversed by appellate courts, directly contrary to the goals of the dependency system to move cases expeditiously and for finality of decisions. Mandating notice based on a mere hint of Indian ancestry, even if a name of a possible tribe is attached to that hint, was costly--in many ways. Nevertheless, some believed the cost to the entire system was worth it if only one additional Indian child was discovered by the California notice requirements found in appellate decisions. Experience indicates that may be all there was since statewide the many appellate reversals on ICWA notice issues have failed to result in more than a few, if any, additional Indian children being identified.

California's history regarding Native Americans does complicate the process of tracing a person's possible Indian ancestry. Much was done to either eliminate California's Native American population through death and destruction, or to force their assimilation into the white culture [see, e.g., Norton, Genocide in Northwestern California: When Our Worlds Cried (Indian Historian Press, 1997); Adams, Education for Extinction: American Indians and the Boarding School Experience 1875-1928 (Univ. Press Kan., 1997)]; Heizer, The Destruction of California Indians (Univ. of Neb. Press, 1993); Rawls, Indians of California: The Changing Image (Univ. of Okla. Press, 1986); Garner, The Broken Ring: The Destruction of the California Indians (Westernlore Press, 1982); Carranco & Beard, Genocide and Vendetta: The Round Valley Wars in Northern California (Univ. of Okla. Press, 1981)]. Efforts in California geared to force Indian assimilation into white culture were not limited to California's Native American population. Indian children from other states were also forced by the federal government to attend boarding school in California, at which Native American languages could not be spoken and Indian culture was suppressed. Further, as late as the second half of the twentieth century, the BIA's Urban Indian Relocation Program was relocating Native Americans from reservations to cities, including relocating Indians from reservations in other states to California cities, including the greater Los Angeles and San Francisco areas. Thus, California's Native American population includes individuals from a great number of tribes, not just those originally found in what is now California. Many of these individuals do not know the details of their own ancestry, only their family legend from comments of relatives. To some, this justifies additional efforts in California to seek out the Indian ancestry of any who express a hint of Native American heritage. To others, it is a sad and shameful commentary on our history, but does not justify creating California mandates beyond those of the ICWA.

Regardless of one's views, beginning in 2007 California's notice requirements in this area have changed dramatically, rendering most California appellate decisions on the issue subject to reexamination. The California legislature is presumed to know of existing case law and judicially created rules. When it enacts new statutes on the same subject, does not incorporate the same language, and the plain language of the new statutes provides more limited and contrary requirements, a change is indicated. That is what has happened in the area of California's additional notice requirements. Seeking to incorporate much of the ICWA into California law, the plain language of California's statutory requirements as to notice have now moved far closer to those of the ICWA.

One appellate court stated it clearly when it wrote "both the federal regulations and the California Welfare and Institutions Code require more than a bare suggestion that a child might be an Indian child" [In re Jeremiah G. (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 1514, 1520, 92 Cal. Rptr. 3d 203] . They do. As with the ICWA, California's statutes and rules now only require notice when the court or social services agency knows or has reason to know the child is an Indian child [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 224.3(d), 290.1(f), 290.2(e), 291(g), 292(f), 293(g), 294(i), 295(g), 297(d); In re Shane G. (2008) 166 Cal. App. 4th 1532, 1538-1539, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 513 (despite information the "great-great-great-grandmother was a Comanche princess," a thorough inquiry was done and ICWA notice was not required because there was no reason to know the child was an Indian child)]. The rule of court now echoes that change [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.481(b)(1)]. The California legislature could have written a statute requiring notice based on a mere hint of Indian ancestry. It did not. Instead, like the federal guidelines, California provides a list of circumstances that "may" provide reason to know a child is an Indian child, and thereafter incorporates the federal guidelines' suggested best practice of those circumstances requiring "further inquiry regarding the possible Indian status of the child" and that such further inquiry be done "as soon as practicable" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 224.3(b)-(c)].

The circumstances that "may" provide reason to know the child is an Indian set forth in the statute include, but are not limited to, information suggesting the child is a member of a tribe or eligible for enrollment in a tribe or one or more of the child's biological parents, grandparents, or great-grandparents are or were members of a tribe, the residence or domicile of the child, the child's parents, or Indian custodian is in a predominantly Indian community, or the child or the child's family has received services or benefits from a tribe or services available to Indians from tribes or the federal government, such as Indian Health Services [Welf. & Inst. Code § 224.3(b)]. Depending on the facts of the case, these "may" provide reason to know the child is an Indian child, but definitely give rise to the need for further inquiry as to the child's possible Indian status [Welf. & Inst. Code § 224.3(c)]. Such inquiry includes interviewing the parents, Indian custodian, and extended family members, and contacting any other person that "reasonably can be expected to have information regarding the child's membership status or eligibility" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 224.3(c)]. It even includes, where appropriate, contacting tribes, the BIA, and the State Department of Social Services [Welf. & Inst. Code § 224.3(c)].

Ultimately, however, under California's statutes and rules notice is only required when the court or social services agency "knows or has reason to know that an Indian child is involved" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 224.3(d); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.481(b)(1); In re Shane G. (2008) 166 Cal. App. 4th 1532, 1538-1539, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 513 (despite information the "great-great-great-grandmother was a Comanche princess," a thorough inquiry was done and ICWA notice was not required because there was no reason to know the child was an Indian child)]. This is a significant change in California statutory law and should bring the state back in line with the federal ICWA requirements for when notice is required. Of course, as always, membership in a tribe need not be certain to require notice, especially since only tribes, not state courts, can decide who is a member of the tribe. What is needed is a balanced approach to California's notice requirements. Certainty should not be required, but neither should notice be required based on a mere hint of ancestry or the naming of a tribe without more information. When there is some credible reason to know a child is an Indian child, notice should be required. Further, courts should err on the side of reasonable caution and require ICWA notice if it is a close call.

Unfortunately, not all appellate courts are recognizing this change [In re Alice M. (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 1189, 1198-1200, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 863 ; In re Damian C. (2009) 178 Cal. App. 4th 192, 196-200, 100 Cal. Rptr. 3d 110] . It is true the legislative history of California's statutory changes does not expressly state that a change in notice requirements was intended, but the legislative history is clear the legislature intended to move California more in line with the ICWA. The plain language of the ICWA has never required notice based on a mere hint of Indian ancestry, and when the federal guidelines are read in conjunction with their commentary and the ICWA it is clear the guidelines do not either. It is only California's appellate case law that has required notice based on a mere hint of ancestry or the mere naming of a tribe without more. With California's statutory and rule changes its appellate courts are now free to take a more balanced approach to notice if they choose to do so. Hopefully they will. But it should be expected that some courts will have difficulty changing their views in this regard. As such, whether the Alice M. and Damien C. decisions should be viewed as anomalies on the path to new case law regarding California's notice requirements or a true indicator of the future remains to be seen. This is an area to be watched for further development.

California does impose not only an affirmative but also a continuing duty to inquire whether a child for whom a dependency petition has been filed is or may be an Indian child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 224.3(a)]. While under this additional state duty the burden is on the court and social services agency, competent children's and parents' counsel should also inquire regarding whether the child is or may be an Indian child, particularly since it is the parents and family members who most often have information regarding possible Indian ancestry. If the parent has such information, it is to be expected the parent will provide that information on the appropriate judicial counsel form and that parent's counsel will bring that information forward in a timely fashion [In re Levi U. (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 191, 198, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 648] . This is especially appropriate because the parent will normally have superior access to information regarding Indian ancestry, and the parent's counsel has a duty to help protect the parent's interest, if any, in his or her rights under the ICWA [In re Miracle M. (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 834, 847, 73 Cal. Rptr. 3d 24 ; In re S.B. (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 1148, 1160, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 726] . If a party knowingly and willfully falsifies or conceals a material fact regarding whether the child is an Indian child, or counsels a party to do so, that person is subject to court sanctions [Welf. & Inst. Code § 224.2(e)].

When notice is required, California goes beyond the ICWA in terms of to whom that notice must be sent and what it must include. The ICWA does not require the notice to be sent to all possible tribes if the exact tribe is not known [25 U.S.C. § 1912(a); In re Edward H. (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 1, 5-6, 122 Cal. Rptr. 2d 242 ; In re Levi U. (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 191, 198-199, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 648] . But California requires notice be sent to all tribes of which the child may be a member or eligible in cases where there is reason to know the child is an Indian child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 224.2(a)(3)]. The statutory requirements for who notice must be sent to and what that notice must include are set forth in Welf. & Inst. Code § 224.2(a).

California requires that once notice is sent, it be sent for "every hearing thereafter" unless a determination has been made the ICWA does not apply [Welf. & Inst. Code § 224.2(a)(3)]. The California requirements for such a determination as set forth in Welf. & Inst. Code § 224.3(e). Absent a determination by the tribe or the BIA that the child is not a member or eligible for membership, California law provides the juvenile court cannot make a determination the ICWA does not apply unless proper and adequate notice was given under Welf. & Inst. Code § 224.2, 60 days has elapsed after the tribe or BIA received that notice, and no determinative response has been received [Welf. & Inst. Code § 224.3(e)]. This does not mean the court must wait 60 days after notice is received before it can conduct juvenile court proceedings in the matter. Nor does it mean the substantive provisions of the ICWA must be applied, unless the juvenile court has found the ICWA applies, since there can be no violation of the substantive provisions of the ICWA unless and until the child is found to be an Indian child as defined by the ICWA [In re R.E.K.F. (Iowa 2005) 698 N.W.2d 147, 151] . Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.482(c), does indicate that if a federally recognized tribe responds indicating the child is eligible for membership if certain steps are taken, the juvenile court must proceed as if the child is an Indian child and that it must direct the appropriate individual or agency to make active efforts to secure tribal membership for the child as set forth in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.484(c). But these requirements are directory, not mandatory [In re Melinda J. (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 1413, 1419, 286 Cal. Rptr. 239 ; In re Lamonica H. (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 634, 639-645, 270 Cal. Rptr. 60] . This is understandable, since even with the far more balanced approach found in California statutes beginning in 2007, and an indication the child is eligible for membership, mandating treating the case as if the child is Indian before such a finding is made would still be costly and impractical. Nevertheless, where the indications are the child actually is an Indian child, a juvenile court or social services agency may voluntarily choose to treat the case as if the child is an Indian child. Except for the detention hearing, however, for which notice to a tribe or the BIA may be impractical in light of the exigency and need for a timely hearing, the juvenile court need only wait 10 days after receipt of notice by the parent, Indian custodian, tribe or BIA before conducting proceedings, except that an additional 20 days to prepare shall be granted to the parent, Indian custodian, or tribe on request [Welf. & Inst. Code § 224.2(d)].

When notice is given, California case law has required copies of the actual forms sent to the tribes and BIA, the mailing receipt, and any responses be filed with the juvenile court to establish that proper notice was given [see, e.g., In re Asia L. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 498, 507-508, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 733 ; In re H.A. (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 1206, 1214-1215, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 12] . California statutes and the rules of court now also impose that requirement [Welf. & Inst. Code § 224.2(c); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.482(a)(2)(B), (b)]. Thus, this is now both federal best practice and a California mandate.

Some California courts have held that substantial compliance with the notice provisions, coupled with timely, actual notice is sufficient [see, e.g., In re Jonathon S. (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 334, 343, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 495 ; In re Jonathan D. (2001) 92 Cal. App. 4th 105, 110, 111 Cal. Rptr. 2d 628] . But others have not been as open to this practice [see, e.g., In re Elizabeth W. (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 900, 907, 16 Cal. Rptr. 3d 514 ; In re Asia L. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 498, 503, 507-509, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 733] . In the future, how California courts will address substantial compliance issues for additional California statutory provisions versus federal ICWA requirements remains to be seen.

PRACTICE TIP:

Importance of Strict Compliance With Notice Requirements. The single most common reason for reversal in dependency cases involving children who may be of Indian heritage is the failure of the social services department and the juvenile court to follow the California requirements for notice to Indian tribes, including the requirements for form and content of that notice. Any time information suggests a child may have Indian ancestry, all participants should take steps to ensure proper and adequate inquiry is made to determine if there is reason to know the child is an Indian child as defined by the ICWA. Notice no longer must be give under California law merely because a parent states that somewhere in the child's bloodline there is someone of Indian heritage, but great care must be taken in this regard to ensure an adequate inquiry is made, proper notice is given when required, any reasonable doubt is resolved on the side of caution by giving notice, and when such notice is required documentation is provided to the court of the notice, receipts, and any responses.

The doctrine of harmless error applies to ICWA inquiry and notice issues, particularly where there is substantial compliance and timely, actual notice, and has been used to uphold dependency cases on appeal in the face of ICWA notice challenges [see, e.g., In re A.B. (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 832, 843, 79 Cal. Rptr. 3d 580 ; In re Cheyanne F. (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 571, 576-579, 79 Cal. Rptr. 3d 189 ; In re Miracle M. (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 834, 847, 73 Cal. Rptr. 3d 24 ; In re S.B. (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 1148, 1162, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 726 ; In re Christopher I. (2003) 106 Cal. App. 4th 533, 563-564, 567, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 122 ; In re Antoinette S. (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 1401, 1411, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 15] . In the past, most courts have been reluctant to apply harmless error analysis to an ICWA notice issue. Regardless, it must be remembered the ICWA is a statutory enactment, not a constitutional one. The additional statutory protections regarding notice adopted by California are equally only a statutory provision, not a constitutional one. The California Supreme Court has reminded us of the applicability of the simple harmless error doctrine for statutory errors in other dependency areas, and has noted that appellate courts should remember the delay caused by reversals may harm the child [In re Zeth S. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 396, 413 n.10, 2 Cal. Rptr. 3d 683, 73 P.3d 541 ; In re Celine R. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 45, 59-61, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 432, 71 P.3d 787] . In light of the 2007 statutory enactments that bring California back closer to the ICWA regarding when notice is required, appellate courts should look more favorably on the harmless error doctrine in ICWA cases, particularly where there is no likelihood a child is an Indian child as defined by the ICWA or where there has been substantial compliance with notice requirements.

If a dependency case is reversed on appeal due to an ICWA or California notice issue, the appellate court can only reverse the judgment the appeal was taken from, not any earlier findings and orders, since the error is a statutory one, not a jurisdictional error [Tina L. v. Superior Court (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 262, 268, 77 Cal. Rptr. 3d 628 ; In re Veronica G. (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 179, 187, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 465 ; In re Jonathon S. (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 334, 340-342, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 495 ; In re Brooke C. (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 377, 384-385, 25 Cal. Rptr. 3d 590] . Remand normally is limited to addressing only the ICWA or California notice issue [In re Francisco W. (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 695, 704-710, 43 Cal. Rptr. 3d 171] . This practice is consistent with holdings in other states [In re R.E.K.F. (Iowa 2005) 698 N.W.2d 147, 150-151] . Further, limited remands continue to be appropriate after the legislature revised and recast the state's ICWA statutes and rules [Tina L. v. Superior Court (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 262, 267-269, 77 Cal. Rptr. 3d 628] .

The majority of California case law has allowed parents to raise ICWA or California notice issues for the first time on appeal even long after the juvenile court made a determination the ICWA did not apply [Dwayne P. v. Superior Court (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 247, 251, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 639 ; In re Samuel P. (2002) 99 Cal. App. 4th 1259, 1267-1268, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 820 ; In re Marinna J. (2001) 90 Cal. App. 4th 731, 735-739, 109 Cal. Rptr. 2d 267 ; but see In re Pedro N. (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 183, 189-190, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 819] . Nevertheless, even in California this may only be done once. Thereafter, the parent must make his or her objection to the adequacy of the notice or evidence to support the ICWA determination at the trial court level or have forfeited that issue for further appellate review [In re X.V. (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 794, 804-805, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 893] .

How California courts will treat the questions of waiver and forfeiture, and of notice, as they begin to recognize the difference between the ICWA, California's additional state requirements, and the statutes that took effect in 2007 remains to be seen. This entire area is one to be watched for further developments.

[3] Possible Overriding Principles

[a] Existing Indian Family Doctrine

In 1982 the Supreme Court of Kansas handed down a decision that recognized a limitation on the applicability of the ICWA [Matter of Adoption of Baby Boy L. (1982) 231 Kan. 199, 204-207, 643 P.2d 168] . The approach that court enunciated has come to be known as the "existing Indian family" doctrine. The essence of the doctrine is that for children who are not domiciled on a reservation, tribal membership or eligibility for such membership is not the sole determining factor for the applicability of the ICWA. Instead, the applicability of the ICWA will depend on whether or not the child is part of an existing Indian family that has maintained the Indian culture or otherwise maintained ties with the Indian community. Having examined the purpose of the ICWA, those courts following this doctrine have reasoned that applying the ICWA to children who have never been part of an Indian family or community is inconsistent with the purpose of the ICWA [Matter of Adoption of Baby Boy L. (1982) 231 Kan. 199, 204-207, 643 P.2d 168] . Courts across this nation are divided on this judicially created doctrine. California courts initially rejected the idea that they could create this judicial exception to the ICWA [In re Junious M. (1983) 144 Cal. App. 3d 786, 796, 193 Cal. Rptr. 40 ; Adoption of Lindsay C. (1991) 229 Cal. App. 3d 404, 409-415 ; see also In re Crystal K. (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 655, 663, 276 Cal. Rptr. 619 (case sometimes construed as rejecting the existing Indian family doctrine)]. Later California decisions, however, created a clear conflict of law within California on this issue.

Prior judicial interpretations of the existing Indian family doctrine were examined by the court of appeal in In re Bridget R. (1996) 41 Cal. App. 4th 1483, 1498-1501, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 507 . The court also focused on constitutional limitations to the scope of the ICWA, including the child's liberty interest in stability of life and home and the child's equal protection rights [In re Bridget R. (1966) 41 Cal. App. 4th 1483, 1502-1511, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 507] . It concluded the "ICWA's purpose is not served by an application of the Act where the child may be of Indian descent, but where neither the child nor either parent maintains any significant social, cultural or political relationships with Indian life" [In re Bridget R. (1996) 41 Cal. App. 4th 1483, 1498-1501, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 507 (emphasis in original)]. Another California court of appeal agreed, and went even further by holding the application of the existing Indian family doctrine is not limited to those situations where the child and both parents lack a significant relationship with Indian life, but "is dependent on the unique factors of each situation" [In re Alexandria Y. (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1483, 1493, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 679] . This opinion suggested that in some cases the ICWA might be found not to apply by virtue of the existing Indian family doctrine notwithstanding the fact that one of the parents, or even the child, had maintained at least some involvement with Indian life. Even those who agree with the existing Indian family doctrine should acknowledge this holding had the potential to be taken too far. Indeed, in the case of Crystal R. v. Superior Court (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 703, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 414 , the Court of Appeal considered the approaches of both Bridget R. and Alexandria Y. and indicated it was "inclined to the view in Bridget R., which we believe is more in keeping with the purposes of the ICWA" [Crystal R. v. Superior Court (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 703, 723, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 414] .

Not all later decisions in California embraced the existing Indian family doctrine, however. In the case of In re Alicia S. (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 79, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 121 , that court noted the split of authority on this issue both nationally and in California. It examined the issue itself and rejected the doctrine. In so doing, the court indicated it shared the concern for the dependent child's interest in permanence and stability and acknowledged that in some instances the child's interests outweigh the interests of both the parent and the tribe. Nevertheless, it felt the "good cause" exception that allows the court to not follow the statutory preferences of the ICWA for placement allowed courts to reach essentially the same result as achieved by the application of the existing Indian family doctrine [In re Alicia S. (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 79, 88-89, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 121] . It also found there was no ambiguity in the statutory provisions of the ICWA as to the nature of the relationship that has to exist between the child and the tribe for the ICWA to apply [In re Alicia S. (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 79, 89-90, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 121] . Finally, it expressed its belief the existing Indian family doctrine conflicts with the policy of preserving and protecting the interests of Indian tribes in their children and undermines the ICWA's purpose of establishing "uniform federal standards" for the removal of Indian children from their families [In re Alicia S. (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 79, 90, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 121] . Thus, while acknowledging the many decisions choosing to follow the existing Indian family doctrine, this California court rejected it.

There is much to be said for both positions in this national controversy. Both sides contend their position is consistent with the spirit and intent of the ICWA. It would take an exhaustive study of the full legislative history of the ICWA to know which view is more correct. Even then, it is likely the answer would not be clear. In the final analysis it will probably take a decision by the United States Supreme Court or clarifying federal legislation to put this issue to rest at a national level. The court in Bridget R. noted "in passing" that in 1987 Congress failed to approve amendments to the ICWA that purportedly would have precluded application of the existing Indian family doctrine [In re Bridget R. (1996) 41 Cal. App. 4th 1483, 1501 n.11, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 507] . But to date this controversy has not been resolved at the federal level.

In 1999, however, California enacted legislation for the purpose of eliminating the existing Indian family doctrine in this state. Under this new provision of California law, the juvenile court must apply the ICWA to a dependency case if an Indian tribe determines the child is either a member of the tribe or eligible for membership and a biological child of a member of the tribe [Welf. & Inst. Code former § 360.6(c); now see Welf. & Inst. Code § 224(c)]. This does not resolve the controversy as to what the actual intent of the ICWA is in this regard and whether the existing Indian family doctrine should be recognized under federal law. Further, this new provision of California law does not resolve potential constitutional issues. For a comprehensive analysis of the ICWA, see Joan Heifetz Hollinger, Adoption of Native American Children, in Hollinger, et al., Adoption Law and Practice, Ch. 15 (Matthew Bender).

[b] Child's Constitutional Rights

Both the ICWA and Welf. & Inst. Code § 224(c) are statutory enactments. In recognizing the existing Indian family doctrine in Bridget R., the court found the ICWA to be constitutionally invalid to the extent it impermissibly infringes on a child's constitutionally protected familial rights or right to equal protection [In re Bridget R. (1996) 41 Cal. App. 4th 1483, 1502-1510, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 507] . This holding was reached, however, in the context of a case in which the children had been with their non-Indian adoptive family since birth and had developed a recognizable liberty interest in the continuity and stability of that home. That situation will not arise in the usual ICWA case in which the ICWA is addressed at the outset of the dependency proceeding within a short time following the removal of the child from parental custody. Nevertheless, the argument for not applying the statutory requirements of the ICWA if it violates the child's constitutional rights is still a valid argument that can be upheld despite the enactment of Welf. & Inst. Code § 224(c) [In re Santos Y. (2001) 92 Cal. App. 4th 1274, 1312-1323, 112 Cal. Rptr. 2d 692 ; but see In re Vincent M. (2007) 150 Cal. App. 4th 1247, 1265-1266, 59 Cal. Rptr. 3d 321 (holding children have an interest in a permanent home, but not a constitutional right to one)]. While this argument may support application of the existing Indian family doctrine, it is a separate argument better seen as the child's constitutional rights controlling over the enforcement of the statutory requirements of the ICWA. Under this approach the ICWA still applies, it simply is not enforced to the extent inconsistent with the child's constitutional rights. This is an area that should be watched for further development. For a comprehensive analysis of the ICWA, see Joan Heifetz Hollinger, Adoption of Native American Children, in Hollinger, et al., Adoption Law and Practice, Ch. 15 (Matthew Bender).

[4] Tribal Jurisdiction, Intervention, and Transfer

[a] In General

[i] Federally Recognized Tribes

Under the ICWA, an Indian tribe has exclusive jurisdiction regarding a child custody proceeding involving an Indian child residing or domiciled on the reservation of that tribe, except where federal law has otherwise vested that jurisdiction in the state [25 U.S.C. § 1911(a)]. California is a Public Law 280 state, which gives the state jurisdiction to handle criminal and civil adjudicatory matters that arise on Indian reservations [18 U.S.C. § 1162; 25 U.S.C. §§ 1321-1326; 28 U.S.C. § 1360]. As a result, federally recognized tribes in California do not have exclusive jurisdiction regarding child custody proceedings for Indian children residing or domiciled on that tribe's reservation. In order to regain that exclusive jurisdiction, the tribe must have "reassumed" jurisdiction over Indian child custody proceedings pursuant to 25 U.S.C. § 1918 [see also Welf. & Inst. Code § 305.5(a)]. If, of course, the Indian child is found in California but actually resides or is domiciled on the reservation of an Indian tribe in a non-Public Law 280 state, the provisions of Public Law 280 would not apply.

In child custody proceedings for children who are found to come under ICWA, regardless of whether or not they reside on a reservation, the child's tribe, or any Indian custodian of the child have an absolute right to intervene at any point in the proceedings [25 U.S.C. 1911(c); Welf. & Inst. Code § 224.4; In re Riva M. (1991) 235 Cal. App. 3d 403, 410, 286 Cal. Rptr. 592] .

A tribe with a tribal court also has a qualified right to have the action transferred to its jurisdiction [In re M.A. (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 567, 569, 571-578, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 439] . Many California tribes do not have formal tribal courts, of course, since in light of Public Law 280 the BIA has declined to fund tribal court development for those tribes that have not petitioned for and been granted the resumption of exclusive jurisdiction for child welfare matters under 25 U.S.C. § 1918 [Cohen's Handbook of Federal Indian Law (Matthew Bender 2005) § 6.04[3][c], p. 561]. Nevertheless, this is starting to change and more California tribes are taking steps to set up formal tribal courts, such as the Hoopa Valley Tribal Court, Karuk Tribal Court, Pit River Tribal Court, and the Intertribal Court System of Southern California. Some even have Court Appointed Special Advocate (CASA) programs, such as the Karuk tribal CASA program and the Pit River tribal CASA program. Numerous other California tribes are receiving help from the federal Tribal Courts

Assistance Program (TCAP), which is a special program through the Bureau of Justice Assistance, United States Department of Justice, designed to help federally recognized tribes to develop, implement, enhance, and continue the operation of tribal and intertribal court systems. Thus, more tribal courts in California can be expected. Further, the ICWA expressly recognizes that "tribal courts" for child welfare matters may include other tribal administrative bodies that are vested by the tribe with authority over child custody proceedings [25 U.S.C. § 1903(12); Cohen's Handbook of Federal Indian Law (Matthew Bender 2005) pp. 266-267]. Thus, a formal tribal court is not required for a federally recognized tribe to exercise jurisdiction over child welfare matters involving Indian children, so long as the tribe has vested some administrative body, such as a tribal council, with authority over child custody proceedings.

Transfer to the tribe can be requested by either parent, the child's Indian custodian, or the tribe. Such transfer shall be granted in the absence of good cause, although the tribe may decline such transfer [25 U.S.C. § 1911(b)]. Either parent, however, may veto the transfer of a state court proceeding to the tribe for an Indian child not residing or domiciled on the reservation [In re Larissa G. (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 505, 510-515, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16] . A parent may not, however, veto tribal intervention or application of ICWA [In re Larissa G. (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 505, 514, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16] .

[ii] Non-Federally Recognized Tribes

Beginning in 2007, California has enacted a statutory provision that allows the juvenile court to permit non-federally recognized tribes limited participation in the proceedings if the child is either a member of the non-federally recognized tribe or eligible for membership and the biological child of a member [Welf. & Inst. Code § 306.6(a)]. This goes beyond the provisions of Welf. & Inst. Code § 346, which authorizes the court to admit persons deemed to have a direct or legitimate interest in the particular case or the work of the court. This authorizes the juvenile court to allow the non-federally recognized tribe to actually participate in the proceedings, including being present, addressing the court, requesting and receiving notice of hearings, requesting to examine court documents relating to the proceeding, presenting information to the court that is relevant, submitting written reports and recommendations, and performing such other duties and responsibilities as the court requests or approves [Welf. & Inst. Code § 306.6(b)]. This does not make the non-federally recognized tribe a party to the proceedings, nor does it mean the ICWA applies. Instead, it is designed to ensure the juvenile court receives all the information it needs regarding placement options, service availability within the tribal community, and any other unique interests the child or the child's parents may have as an Indian [Welf. & Inst. Code § 306.6(d)]. California has more than 40 non-federally recognized tribes, many of which have petitions pending with the BIA to regain federal recognition, and there are more than 200 such tribes throughout the United States. Thus, the opportunity for this new provision to apply is great.

Nevertheless, several points regarding Welf. & Inst. Code § 306.6 must be remembered. First, it does not apply unless the child is either a member of the non-federally recognized tribe or eligible for membership and the biological child of a member. Second, it does not require notice to a non-federally recognized tribe unless that tribe has sought and received permission to participate in the proceedings, and the court has thereafter ordered the tribe receive notice of hearings. Third, the decision to allow a non-federally recognized tribe to participate in the proceedings, and the level of participation allowed, are discretionary decisions for the court. Before making such decisions, the court should make such inquiries as it deems appropriate to its decision-making. And fourth, the statute does not expressly authorize the court to receive the information or reports submitted by the non-federally recognized tribe into evidence, nor does it expressly authorize the court to allow the non-federally recognized tribe to call or question witnesses. This is understandable since the non-federally recognized tribe is not a party. That no provision is made for the cross-examination of the preparer of any such information, report, or recommendation, further supports this conclusion. All parties, including the parents, child, and social services agency, can, of course, stipulate the court receive any such information or report as evidence, and the court has the discretion to accept the stipulation. Further, the court can make such use of any information, report, or recommendation submitted by the non-federally recognized tribe as appropriate under the law, including directing the social services agency to investigate and report back to the court regarding the non-federally recognized tribe's assertions and recommendations. This is an area to be watched for further developments.

[b] Effect of Public Law 280

[i] In General

California is a Public Law 83-280 state. That law is commonly called Public Law 280 and gives the state jurisdiction to handle criminal and civil adjudicatory matters that arise on Indian reservations [18 U.S.C. § 1162; 25 U.S.C. §§ 1321-1326; 28 U.S.C. § 1360]. It has been held not to confer civil regulatory jurisdiction, such as taxation, on state courts for matters arising on Indian reservations [California v. Cabazon Band of Mission Indians (1987) 480 U.S. 202, 207-208, 107 S. Ct. 1083, 94 L. Ed. 2d 244 ; Bryan v. Itasca County (1976) 426 U.S. 373, 384-385, 96 S. Ct. 2102, 48 L. Ed. 2d 710] . It has been argued that Public Law 280 was never intended to cover involuntary child welfare matters [Cohen's Handbook of Federal Indian Law (Matthew Bender 2005) § 6.04[3][d][ii], pp. 570-571]. This argument may be stronger in states that characterize juvenile proceedings as distinct from criminal or civil adjudicatory matters, since only criminal and civil adjudicatory jurisdiction was included in Public Law 280 [Cohen's Handbook of Federal Indian Law (Matthew Bender 2005) p. 546, n. 319]. California dependency proceedings have been characterized as special proceedings in which the provisions of California civil law apply only when expressly made applicable [In re Shelly J. (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 322, 328, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 922 ; In re Chantal S. (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 196, 200, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 866, 913 P.2d 1075] . Nevertheless, they are civil in nature [Doe v. Mann (9th Cir. 2005) 415 F.3d 1038, 1057 n.27 , citing In re Malinda S. (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 368, 384, 272 Cal. Rptr. 787, 795 P.2d 1244 , and Seiser & Kumli, California Juvenile Courts Practice and Procedure § 2.10[2] (Matthew Bender)]. After extensive analysis, the federal Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals has held that dependency proceedings are civil adjudicatory in nature, not civil regulatory [Doe v. Mann (9th Cir. 2005) 415 F.3d 1038, 1058-1064] . This conclusion is understandable, since juvenile dependency proceedings focus on the safety and well-being of children, and can result in the termination of parental rights. Thus, the prevailing and better view in California is that juvenile courts have jurisdiction in dependency cases that involve Indian children domiciled on the reservation of a California tribe unless that tribe has petitioned for and been granted resumption of exclusive jurisdiction of child welfare matters for those children [25 U.S.C. § 1918].

The more interesting question is whether federally recognized tribes in Public Law 280 states such as California have concurrent jurisdiction to address child welfare matters involving Indian children, whether residing or domiciled on or off the reservation. The best answer is "Yes." As noted by one respected treatise on federal Indian law, "The nearly unanimous view among tribal courts, state courts and lower federal courts, state attorneys general, the Solicitor's Office for the Department of the Interior, and legal scholars, is that Public Law 280 left the inherent civil and criminal jurisdiction of Indian nations untouched" [Cohen's Handbook of Federal Indian Law (Matthew Bender 2005) § 6.04[3][c], pp. 560-561, footnotes omitted]. That treatise went on to observe that "Public Law 280 did not specifically extinguish any tribal court jurisdiction, and the legislative history reflects no such congressional intent" [Cohen's Handbook of Federal Indian Law (Matthew Bender 2005) § 6.04[3][c], p. 561]. California case law now agrees with this position [In re M.A. (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 567, 574-575, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 439] .

[ii] Indian Children Not Domiciled on the Reservation

By its very terms Public Law 280 does not deal with cases that arise off the reservation. As such, it does not affect a federally recognized tribe's inherent sovereign authority to decide child welfare matters affecting its Indian children when those children are not residing or domiciled on the tribe's reservation. Some precedent exists holding Public Law 280 divests federally recognized tribes in those states of jurisdiction to hear all child welfare matters, but this precedent is older [see, e.g., In re F.P. (Alaska 1992) 843 P.2d 1214, 1215-1216 ; Native Village of Nenana v. State Dept. of Health & Soc. Servs. (Alaska 1986) 722 P.2d 219, 221] . As noted in Cohen's Handbook of Federal Indian Law, "The consensus about concurrent tribal and state jurisdiction under Public Law 280 has developed relatively recently" [Cohen's Handbook of Federal Indian Law (Matthew Bender 2005) § 6.04[3][c], p. 562]. This consensus is consistent with recognition of tribal sovereignty and self-governance, and is the better view. California case law has now joined this consensus [In re M.A. (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 567, 574-575, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 439] .

Further, even if Public Law 280 is viewed as having totally divested federally recognized tribes in Public Law 280 states from exercising jurisdiction in child welfare matters as of the time it was enacted, the ICWA, which is the later law, expressly provides for the transfer of juvenile dependency matters to the tribal court of a federally recognized tribe notwithstanding the fact the tribe is a Public Law 280 tribe. This express authority is found in 25 U.S.C. § 1911(b), which addresses transfer without mention of Public Law 280 restrictions. This is significant since Congress was well aware of Public Law 280's limitation on jurisdiction and addressed it in 25 U.S.C. §§ 1911(a) and 1918 for child welfare matters. The failure to include such a limitation in 25 U.S.C. § 1911(b) evidences a different intent. As noted by the Alaska Supreme Court: "The language and structure of section 1911 reflect congressional intent that all tribes, regardless of their P.L. 280 status, be able to accept transfer jurisdiction of ICWA cases from state courts" [In the Matter of C.R.H. (Alaska 2001) 29 P.3d 849, 852] . As such, notwithstanding Public Law 280, the better and prevailing view is that ICWA affirms, the right of federally recognized tribes to receive transfers of dependency matters from state courts, thereby exercising concurrent jurisdiction. California case law has now joined this prevailing view [In re M.A. (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 567, 574-575, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 439] . Further, beginning in 2007, California now has a state statutory provision addressing such transfers to tribal courts [Welf. & Inst. Code § 305.5(b)].

[iii] Indian Children Residing or Domiciled on the Reservation

The bigger question is whether federally recognized tribes in Public Law 280 states have concurrent jurisdiction in child welfare matters involving Indian children residing on the reservation without having petition for and been granted resumption of jurisdiction under 25 U.S.C. § 1918. As previously indicated, the better view is that federally recognized tribes retain concurrent jurisdiction notwithstanding Public Law 280, and this would include involving child welfare matters for children residing or domiciled on the reservation [Cohen's Handbook of Federal Indian Law (Matthew Bender 2005) § 6.04[3][c], pp. 560-561, footnotes omitted]. Generally, California has practiced concurrent state and tribal jurisdiction in ICWA matters, including for Indian children residing or domiciled on the reservation [Doe v. Mann (9th Cir. 2005) 415 F.3d 1038, 1067-1068 , citing Risling, California Judges' Benchguide: The Indian Child Welfare Act (2000)].

Notwithstanding this practice, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals interpreted California law to restrict transfers to tribes in California when the tribe has not petitioned for and been granted resumption of jurisdiction under 25 U.S.C. § 1918 [Doe v. Mann (9th Cir. 2005) 415 F.3d 1038, 1067-1068 , citing Welf. & Inst. Code § 305.5, and Cal. Rules of Ct., former Rule 1439(c)(1)]. The language in Doe v. Mann to this effect is dicta. Moreover, it is incorrect. Both of those California provisions dealt with the mandate that if the tribe has petitioned for and been granted resumption of "exclusive jurisdiction" over child welfare matters the juvenile court must transfer the case of an Indian child residing or domiciled on the reservation to the tribe [Welf. & Inst. Code § 305.5] and dismiss the dependency petition [Cal. Rules of Ct., former Rule 1439(c)(1)]. Neither addressed the question of concurrent jurisdiction and hence neither are authority for the proposition that Public Law 280 tribes lack concurrent jurisdiction for Indian children residing or domiciled on the reservation. Indeed, the fact both provisions speak of California tribes that have reassumed "exclusive jurisdiction" is further indication that California recognizes the tribes already have concurrent jurisdiction, notwithstanding Public Law 280.

Finally, it must be noted that it would be an absurd result to give federally recognized tribes concurrent jurisdiction over their Indian children who reside off the reservation in Public Law 280 states but to deny them concurrent jurisdiction over their Indian children who reside on the reservation. Courts are to avoid interpreting the law in ways that produce such absurd results [In re Christopher I. (2003) 106 Cal. App. 4th 533, 565, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 122 ; In re Charles T. (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 869, 878, 125 Cal. Rptr. 2d 868] . Thus, the better view is that California's Public Law 280 tribes have concurrent jurisdiction over child welfare matters involving Indian children who reside or are domiciled on the reservation. Further, beginning in 2007, California has a state statutory provision addressing such transfers to tribal courts [Welf. & Inst. Code § 305.5(b)]. Thus, California law is now clear regarding this.

[5] Finding That Continued Custody Is Likely to Cause Serious Damage

[a] The Finding and When It Must Be Made

In cases in which the ICWA applies, the juvenile court cannot order the Indian child placed in foster care unless it finds by clear and convincing evidence that the evidence, including expert testimony, establishes continued custody by the parent or Indian custodian is likely to cause the child serious emotional or physical damage [25 U.S.C. § 1912(e)]. This finding must be made at the disposition hearing.

When termination of parental rights is sought, the evidence, including expert testimony, must establish beyond a reasonable doubt that the continued custody of the Indian child by the parent or Indian custodian is likely to result in serious emotional or physical damage to the child [25 U.S.C. § 1912(f)]. California case law has held that normally this finding should be made at the hearing at which the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing is set. If it is, the court does not need to readdress the issue at the selection and implementation hearing, unless the parent presents evidence of changed circumstances or demonstrates the finding is stale due to the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing being held "substantially longer than the 120-day statutory period" [In re Matthew Z. (2000) 80 Cal. App. 4th 545, 554-555, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 343] . If it was not made at the earlier hearing and the court intends to terminate parental rights, the finding under 25 U.S.C. § 1912(f) must be made at the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing [In re Matthew Z. (2000) 80 Cal. App. 4th 545, 555, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 343] . In either way, the federal requirement under 25 U.S.C. § 1912 is met.

Beginning in 2007, however, California has added its own statutory requirement for the finding supporting the termination of parental rights to be made "at the hearing terminating parental rights" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(2)(B)(ii)]. Whether California's new statutory provision as to when the finding must be made will be interpreted as inconsistent with the ICWA or merely an additional state requirement remains to be seen. Regardless, it is a state, not a federal requirement [In re S.B. (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 1148, 1158, 1162, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 726] .

[b] Qualified Expert Witness

[i] Federal Law

The express terms of the ICWA do not limit in any way who may be a qualified expert in an ICWA, so long as they are qualified [25 U.S.C. § 1911(f)]. Even a social worker handling the case may be the qualified expert witnesses for ICWA purposes under federal law [In re M.P.M. (Mont. 1999) 976 P.2d 988, 992] . The federal guidelines do provide, however, a list of qualifications that may provide the background necessary to qualify as an expert in an ICWA case [Guidelines for State Courts (Nov. 26, 1979) 44 Fed. Reg. 67584 , § D.4(b)]. This background includes: (1) being a member of the Indian child's tribe who is recognized by the tribal community as knowledgeable in tribal customs as they relate to family organization and child rearing practices; (2) a "lay expert" having substantial experience in the delivery of child and family services to Native Americans, and extensive knowledge of the social and cultural standards and child rearing practices of the Indian child's tribe; or (3) a professional having substantial education and experience in the area of his or her specialty [Guidelines for State Courts (Nov. 26, 1979) 44 Fed. Reg. 67584 , § D.4(b)]. A knowledge of tribal culture and child-rearing practices is not always required [Guidelines for State Courts (Nov. 26, 1979) 44 Fed. Reg. 67584 , § D.4(b)(iii)]. Such knowledge will, however, "frequently be very valuable to the court" [Guidelines for State Courts (Nov. 26, 1979) 44 Fed. Reg. 67584 , § D.4, Commentary]. Case law agrees that "Special knowledge of Indian life is not necessary where a professional person has substantial education and experience and testifies on matters not implicating cultural bias" [In re N. L. (Okla. 1988) 754 P.2d 863, 868 ; see also State ex rel. Juvenile Dep't of Lane County v. Tucker (Ore. Ct. App. 1985) 710 P.2d 793] .

Nevertheless, in many cases knowledge of tribal culture and child rearing practices will be necessary for the expert to be qualified to testify on the issue of whether continued custody by the parent or Indian custodian is likely to result in serious emotional or physical damage to the child [25 U.S.C. § 1912(e)-(f)]. Further, looking at the legislative history of the ICWA, some courts have held "a social worker must possess expertise beyond that of the normal social worker to satisfy the qualified expert witness requirement of 25 U.S.C. § 1912(f)" [In re H.M.O. (Mont. 1998) 962 P.2d 1191, 1197 ; see also In re Elliott (Mich. Ct. App. 1996) 554 N.W.2d 32, 37 ; In re N. L. (Okla. 1988) 754 P.2d 863, 868] . Many agency social workers do possess such beyond the norm knowledge in their area or areas of specialty, including risk assessment, sexual abuse, substance abuse, adoptability, and others. Thus, "In the absence of implication of cultural bias, the expert witness may be a social worker who possesses expertise beyond the normal social worker qualifications" [In re M.J.J. (Okla. Ct. App. 2003) 69 P.3d 1226, 1228] . Additionally, some agency social workers are members of federally recognized tribes or have special education, training, or experience in tribal customs and child rearing practices that would qualify them as an expert for ICWA purposes under federal law even if cultural issues are implicated. Whether a particular witness actually qualifies as an expert witness for purposes of the ICWA is a case-by-case determination.

[ii] California Law

Beginning in 2007, California statutory law has been enacted addressing the issue of who is a qualified expert witness under California law for purposes of a case involving an Indian child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 224.5]. It indicates a qualified expert witness may include a social worker, sociologist, doctor, psychologist, traditional tribal therapist and healer, tribal historian, tribal spiritual leader, or tribal elder [Welf. & Inst. Code § 224.5(a)]. It also provides a list of the characteristics most likely to meet the requirements for a qualified expert witness. This list essentially mirrors the federal guidelines [compare Guidelines for State Courts (Nov. 26, 1979) 44 Fed. Reg. 67584 , § D.4(b), with Welf. & Inst. Code § 224.6(c)]. But California has departed from the ICWA in one major requirement: California now holds a qualified expert witness for a case involving an Indian child may not be an employee of the person or agency recommending foster care placement or termination of parental rights [Welf. & Inst. Code § 224.6(a)].

Whether California's statutory restriction against agency employees being qualified expert witnesses will be interpreted as inconsistent with the ICWA or merely an additional state requirement remains to be seen. Regardless, it demonstrates a bias against social services agencies that may in decades past have been warranted, but that is now no longer justified. While exceptions exist, today the significant majority of social workers and social services agencies are supportive of the ICWA and work well with tribes and tribal agencies. The bias against them that is exhibited by the legislation is unfortunate.

Beginning in 2007 California has also imposed a statutory restriction that a declaration or affidavit from the qualified expert witness may only be accepted by the court in lieu of testimony if the parties have so stipulated in writing and the court is satisfied the stipulation is knowing, intelligent, and voluntary [Welf. & Inst. Code § 224.6(e)]. In the past, such affidavits were frequently used to avoid prolonging trials with lengthy direct examination, or to avoid formal contested hearings when parents were not present and tribes had not intervened or objected. It is doubtful that parents' attorneys can, and unlikely parents' attorneys will, enter into such stipulations in the absence of their clients, and they may not do so even with their clients present. Thus, the necessity for a written stipulation will mean that full testimony by the qualified expert witness, both direct examination and cross examination, at all stages of the dependency case, will likely be mandated by the state legislation, thereby significantly prolonging hearings, often to the benefit of no one.

How these state imposed restrictions on who may be a qualified expert witness and the use of stipulations will be treated by the courts, including the delays that may occur in trying to find outside experts or providing for full testimony even though parents are not present or objecting, is an area to be watched for further development.

[6] Finding of "Active Efforts"

Before any foster care placement or termination of parental rights for an Indian child, it must be shown that active efforts were made to provide remedial services and rehabilitative programs that were designed to prevent the breakup of the Indian family and that these efforts were unsuccessful [25 U.S.C. § 1912(d); Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.7]. The Indian tribe itself may become involved in the provision of services and supervision of the case, even without transfer of the case to a tribal court. This is especially true where the tribe has entered into an agreement with the State Department of Social Services pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 10553.1 concerning child welfare services or foster care payments [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 215, 272(a)(2), 306(a)]. There is no requirement in 25 U.S.C. § 1912(d) that expert evidence be presented to support the active efforts finding [see In the Interest of S.A.E. (Utah 1996) 912 P.2d 1002, 1004 (qualified expert evidence only required on detriment issue)].

Active efforts under the ICWA and reasonable reunification efforts under California law are "essentially undifferentiable" [In re Michael G. (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 700, 714, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 642] . Under the ICWA, however, the court must also take into account prevailing social and cultural conditions of the child's tribe, including the tribe's way of life. Moreover, active efforts are to involve the available resources of the extended family, individual Indian care givers, Indian social services agencies, and the tribe [In re Michael G. (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 700, 714, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 642] . A reunification plan for an Indian family involved in the Indian way of life would usually include such considerations and resources under state law for reasonable reunification efforts, since those efforts are to be developed on a case by case basis to serve the needs of the family. As such, the addition of a federal "active efforts" requirement should not be a major addition to a case. Nevertheless, the court must make two separate findings; one regarding reasonable efforts under state law and one regarding active efforts under the ICWA [In re Michael G. (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 700, 714, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 642] . If the parent's whereabouts are not known during the dependency, the requirement for active efforts can be met by the agency's efforts to locate the parent. Thus, where a parent is not found until the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing and the juvenile court does not become aware of the Indian heritage of the child until that time, the termination of parental rights could still be proper without additional services. "The Act requires that active efforts be made to provide services, not that services be provided regardless of when a parent becomes available to receive those services" [In re William G. (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 423, 428, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 436] .

The ICWA is silent as to the standard of proof for the finding of active efforts [see 25 U.S.C. § 1912(d)]. Some states have held that the active efforts finding should be made beyond a reasonable doubt before parental rights may be terminated. Most have done so however, without actually analyzing the issue [see, e.g., People in the Interest of S.R. (S.D. 1982) 323 N.W.2d 885, 887 ; In the Matter of Kreft (Mich. Ct. App. 1986) 148 Mich. App. 682, 693, 384 N.W.2d 843, 848 ; In re L.N.W. (Iowa Ct. App. 1990) 457 N.W.2d 17, 19] , although one out-of-state court did look at the interests being determined before it went on to "recognize" that the beyond a reasonable doubt standard for detriment under 25 U.S.C. § 1912(f) should also apply to the active efforts requirement under 25 U.S.C. § 1912(d) [see In the Matter of the Welfare of M.S.S. (Minn. 1991) 465 N.W.2d 412, 418] .

The better view, however, is that taken by the courts in such states as Alaska, Maine, Idaho, and now California, which have examined the issue and concluded that Congress did not intend to impose the highest standard of proof for the active efforts finding. Instead the proper standard should be that established by the states for reasonable efforts [see K.N. v. State (Alaska 1993) 856 P.2d 468, 476 (looking to congressional history and holding that the standard of proof for the active efforts finding is a preponderance of the evidence); In re Annette P. (Maine 1991) 589 A.2d 924, 928 (looking to the reasoning of Santosky v. Kramer (1982) 455 U.S. 745, 102 S. Ct. 1388, 71 L. Ed. 2d 599 and holding that the standard of proof for the active efforts finding is clear and convincing evidence); see also In the Interest of S.A.E. (Utah 1996) 912 P.2d 1002, 1004 (holding that the only finding that needs to be made beyond a reasonable doubt is the finding of detriment under 25 U.S.C. § 1912(f))]. Applying the state standard for reasonable efforts to the active efforts finding of 25 U.S.C. § 1912(d) and the higher beyond a reasonable doubt standard to the detriment finding of 25 U.S.C. § 1912(f) is consistent with the normal rules of statutory construction and still affords significant importance to the requirement to work with the family that is imposed by both state and federal law. Moreover, this approach is consistent with the meaning of the word "satisfy" within the context of 25 U.S.C. § 1912(d) to the effect that the party seeking to terminate parental rights to an Indian child must "satisfy" the court that active efforts have been made [Doe v. Roe (In re Baby Boy Doe) (1995) 127 Idaho 452, 902 P.2d 477, 482 (finding that active efforts did not have to be found beyond a reasonable doubt under the ICWA)].

This later view is the one taken by the court of appeal in the case of In re Michael G. (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 700, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 642 . In that case the California court examined the decisions on each side of the issue, the language of the ICWA, and the rules of statutory construction. It noted that in enacting the active efforts requirement, "Congress sought solely to rectify the nonprovision of any services to Indian families. There is no indication it sought to impose a beyond a reasonable doubt standard of proof upon state courts" [In re Michael G. (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 700, 711, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 642] . It found the reasoning of In the Matter of the Welfare of M.S.S. (Minn. 1991) 465 N.W.2d 412 "unpersuasive" and held the language of the section and its legislative history "convince us Congress had no intention of imposing a reasonable doubt standard of proof regarding the active efforts determination." As such, noting that the state standard for reasonable efforts for the setting of a Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing from a 12-month review is clear and convincing evidence, it held that clear and convincing evidence was needed to prove active efforts in an ICWA case where services are terminated at that hearing [In re Michael G. (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 700, 712, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 642] . Neither the ICWA nor California's statutory requirements for active efforts requires the finding be made by clear and convincing evidence, but that elevated standard is required by Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.485(a)(1). This is the better practice.

It should also be noted that the Michael G. case acknowledged the question of when the "active efforts" finding should be made in a case in which the termination of parental rights is to be determined. This is an issue California juvenile courts have struggled with, since the state finding of reasonable efforts is made at a time different from the hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 at which parental rights are terminated. The court of appeal noted that it should be made before scheduling a hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26, just as the reasonable efforts finding is made under state law [In re Michael G. (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 700, 713 n.9, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 642] . This ensures the matter can be raised along with any challenge to the reasonable efforts made under state law as part of an extraordinary writ petition. Beginning in 2007, California has added its own statutory requirement to provide that termination of parental rights cannot be ordered for an Indian child if "[a]t the hearing terminating parental rights" the court has found that active efforts were not made as required by Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.7 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(2)(B)(i)]. This does not mean there is a requirement for a new active efforts finding at the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing. Rather, the better view is that the court must review its prior findings to ensure findings were made that active efforts had been made and proven unsuccessful. If, of course, no active efforts finding has been made, the court must consider the evidence on the issue and cannot terminate parental rights unless it makes a finding by clear and convincing evidence that active efforts have been made and have proven unsuccessful [25 U.S.C. § 1912(d); Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361.7(c), 366.26(c)(2)(B)(i); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.485(a)(1)].

[7] Denial of Services in ICWA Cases

In light of the requirement in ICWA cases for "active efforts," it has often been assumed that reunification services cannot be denied in an ICWA case even if services would otherwise be denied under one of the grounds found in Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b) or (e)(1) [see Simmons & Trope, P.L. 105-89 Adoption and Safe Families Act of 1997: Issues for Tribes and States Serving Indian Children, National Resource Center for Organizational Improvement (1999) 7-8]. But the law does not require idle acts [Vigil v. Tansy (10th Cir. 1990) 917 F.2d 1277, 1279 ; Letitia V. v. Superior Court (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 1009, 1016, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 303 , citing Civ. Code § 3532]. In Letitia V. the juvenile court found the ICWA applied, but denied services under Welf. & Inst. Code former § 361.5(b)(10) and (b)(12). Both the mother and the Indian tribe filed petitions for extraordinary writ relief with the appellate court. The Court of Appeal found that where a parent has received substantial but unsuccessful reunification services for one child and the parent has shown no desire to change, duplicating those efforts in a second case involving the same parent but a different child would be an idle act. It also noted the ICWA "says nothing about requiring the state to provide duplicative reunification services" [Letitia V. v. Superior Court (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 1009, 1016, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 303] . The Court of Appeal found the mother was a "chronic abuser of illegal and dangerous drugs." She had received extensive but unsuccessful services in the past to assist her in addressing her longstanding substance abuse problem. As such, it found the juvenile court could not be faulted under either federal or state law for choosing not to expend resources that "merely duplicate efforts that have already been made" [Letitia V. v. Superior Court (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 1009, 1018, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 303] . Thus, in ICWA cases in which active efforts have already been provided at an earlier time, the parent has not changed, and the services needed now would merely duplicate those earlier efforts, services can be denied under California case law.

Is the denial of services in ICWA cases limited to those in which active efforts have previously been provided? No published California decision has yet to deal with this issue. On one side is the argument the "active efforts" requirement in the ICWA is a specific provision of federal law that overrides the federal Adoption and Safe Families Act provisions and any general state law regarding the denial of reunification services [compare 25 U.S.C. § 1912(d) with Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b), (e)(1); see also Cohen's Handbook of Federal Indian Law (Matthew Bender 2005) § 11.08, pp. 855-856; Hazeltine, Speedy Termination of Alaska Native Parental Rights: The 1998 Changes to Alaska's Child in Need of Aid Statutes and Their Inherent Conflict With the Mandates of the Federal Indian Child Welfare Act (2002) 19 Alaska L. Rev 57, 68, 79-80]. On the other side is the argument the provisions for the denial of services found in the federal Adoptions and Safe Families Act of 1997 (ASFA) are the more specific [42 U.S.C. § 671(a)(15)(D)]. This argument will contend ASFA came after ICWA and could have made an exception for ICWA cases on this narrow issue, but didn't. Thus, while the ICWA is controlling over general federal and state provisions for abused and neglected children, ASFA is controlling over ICWA on the very narrow issue of the denial of services. This argument would not eliminate the applicability of the ICWA to other issues, such as tribal intervention and placement preferences, but would allow services to be denied in an appropriate ICWA case even if active efforts had not been previously made. Further, regardless of whether ICWA or ASFA controls on this narrow issue, the law does not require idle or futile acts. This is a fundamental principle of both federal and state law [Vigil v. Tansy (10th Cir. 1990) 917 F.2d 1277, 1279 ; Weaver v. Ewers (8th Cir. 1912) 195 F. 247, 249 ; Letitia V. v. Superior Court (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 1009, 1016] . As such, even ICWA's requirement for "active efforts" may not be mandated when reunification efforts would be fruitless.

Beginning in 2007, however, California has enacted a statutory provision that "[n]otwithstanding Section 361.5" a party seeking involuntary foster care placement or termination of parental rights for an Indian child must prove active efforts have been made and proven unsuccessful [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.7(a)]. This new state statutory provision should not be viewed to alter the conclusion of the Letitia V. case, since there the appellate court held that active efforts had already been made and the ICWA did not require those efforts to be duplicated when there was no showing the parent that had received those efforts had shown no desire to change [Letitia V. v. Superior Court (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 1009, 1016, 1018, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 303] . But it does indicate that California has come down on the side of those arguing that active efforts must be made in an ICWA case, regardless of other federal and state law allowing the denial of services, when no previous active efforts have been provided. The question remains, however, regardless of ASFA and Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5, whether the making of active efforts is required by the ICWA and Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.7 when doing so would be absurd and clearly fruitless [Vigil v. Tansy (10th Cir. 1990) 917 F.2d 1277, 1279 ; Weaver v. Ewers (8th Cir. 1912) 195 F. 247, 249 ; Letitia V. v. Superior Court (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 1009, 1016] . How the courts will determine this issue remains to be seen and this area should be watched for further developments.

For detailed discussion of the grounds for denial of services under California law, see § 328.129[2][b].

[8] Placement Preferences

There are placement preferences established for the Indian child who must be temporarily removed from his or her home or who is to be placed for adoption. They require that preference for foster care placement be given in the following order: to a member of the Indian child's extended family; to a foster home licensed or approved by the Indian child's tribe; to a state or county licensed or certified Indian foster home; or to a children's institution approved by the tribe or operated by an Indian organization and offering a program to meet the Indian child's needs [25 U.S.C. § 1915(b); Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.31(b)]. The Indian child must also be placed in the least restrictive setting that most approximates a family situation, and within reasonable proximity to the Indian child's home, taking into consideration the Indian child's special needs, if any [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.31(b)].

For adoptive placement of an Indian child preference must be given in the following order: to a member of the Indian child's extended family; to other members of the Indian child's tribe; to other Indian families [25 U.S.C. § 1915(a); Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.31(c)].

The prevailing social and cultural standards of the Indian child's tribe, or of the Indian community in which the parent or extended family members reside or maintain social and cultural ties, shall be applied in meeting the placement preferences for the Indian child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.31(f)]. Where appropriate, the preferences of the Indian child or parent shall also be considered [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.31(e)]. An Indian child may only be placed in a non-Indian home if the court finds that a suitable Indian home is not available [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.484(b); see also 25 U.S.C. § 1915(e), and Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.31(k) (requiring court to keep records regarding efforts to comply with placement preferences)] or if the court finds good cause not to follow the normal preference requirements [25 U.S.C. § 1915(a); Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.31(h)]. If no preferred placement is available, active efforts must be made to place the Indian child with a family committed to enabling the child to maintain contact with extended family members and to participate in the cultural and ceremonial events of the Indian child's tribe [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.31(i)]. If the child has been in a non-Indian home for an extended period of time and removal from that home for placement in an Indian home would violate the child's constitutional rights, the child's constitutional right may control over the statutory placement preferences found in the ICWA and California statutory law [In re Bridget R. (1996) 41 Cal. App. 4th 1483, 1502-1510, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 507] . Such circumstances may also justify a finding of good cause not to follow the placement preferences set forth in the ICWA and California statutory law [In re Alicia S. (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 79, 88-89, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 121] .

In determining whether good cause exists to overcome the ICWA placement preferences, the juvenile court is not restricted to consideration of those factors set forth in federal guidelines. Congress intended state courts to have flexibility in this regard [Fresno County Dept. of Children & Family Services v. Superior Court (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 626, 643, 646, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 155 (consideration of detriment that would be caused by separating siblings was proper)]. If an Indian child is placed with a non-Indian relative, however, that is a placement with a member of the child's extended family as required by 25 U.S.C. § 1915(b) and no "good cause" finding need be made [In re Liliana S. (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 585, 590, 10 Cal. Rptr. 3d 553] . On review of a juvenile court's decision regarding a good cause determination the appellate court uses a substantial evidence standard of review [Fresno County Dept. of Children & Family Services v. Superior Court (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 626, 645, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 155] .

If an Indian tribe has designated a home under the ICWA that would be barred from placement due to the requirements of Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.4 regarding criminal background checks, the tribe may request a criminal records exemption. That request may be submitted to either the State Department of Social Services or the county social services agency, if the county has a approved procedure for granting such exemptions. Once the tribe has elected to make the request with either the state or county agency, the request for a criminal records exemption may only be made by the agency to which that request was made. Even if the request is made to the State Department of Social Services, however, the county social worker may still evaluate the home for placement and gather information needed to evaluate the request for a criminal records exemption [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.4(f)].

[9] Waiver of Right to Raise ICWA on Appeal

The normal rules of error preservation are not preempted by the ICWA [In the Interest of J.D.B. (Iowa 1998) 584 N.W.2d 577, 581 ; Adoption of T.N.F. (Alaska 1989) 781 P.2d 973, 978-980] . Thus, the waiver rule normally applies in ICWA cases just as in any other case. For instance, at the trial court level, if the parent fails to object to the lack of expert testimony or the use of a clear and convincing evidence standard of proof, rather than a beyond a reasonable doubt standard of proof, as required by 25 U.S.C. § 1912(f), the parent has waived the right to challenge the court's findings in that regard on appeal [In re Riva M. (1991) 235 Cal. App. 3d 403, 411-412, 286 Cal. Rptr. 592] . The waiver rule also applies to a tribe that has had proper notice [In re Liliana S. (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 585, 589, 10 Cal. Rptr. 3d 553] .

There is a split of authority, however, on the question of whether the normal rules of appellate jurisdiction and waiver apply in a case in which the question is whether proper notice was given under the ICWA. The ICWA does not confer jurisdiction to decide an ICWA issue on a state court that would not otherwise have jurisdiction to determine the issue [Slone v. Inyo County Juvenile Court (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 263, 267, 282 Cal. Rptr. 126] . Since the jurisdiction of appellate courts to determine matters is predicated on a timely notice of appeal, one case has held that if the parent knows of the possibility the ICWA is applicable, but fails to object to a lack of ICWA notice at the trial court level and to raise it in a timely appeal, the parent has waived the right to raise the issue for the first time in a later appeal [In re Pedro N. (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 183, 189-190, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 819] . This is consistent with the normal rules of appellate jurisdiction that require a timely notice of appeal for the Court of Appeal to have jurisdiction to determine the matter [Adoption of Alexander S. (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 857, 864, 245 Cal. Rptr. 1, 750 P.2d 778] . Of course, if there is no showing a parent knew of the consequences of the ICWA and knowingly failed to raise the issue, waiver does not apply [In re Pedro N. (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 183, 189-190, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 819 ; In re Kahlen W. (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 1414, 1425, 285 Cal. Rptr. 507] .

California courts have not been quick to follow the Pedro N. decision, however. Instead, most have disagreed with it. One court has held that even where the parent knew of the ICWA requirements and failed to raise them in a timely manner, the lack of ICWA notice to the tribe could still be raised by the parent in a later appeal [In re Marinna J. (2001) 90 Cal. App. 4th 731, 735-739, 109 Cal. Rptr. 2d 267 , disagreeing with In re Pedro N. (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 183, 189-190, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 819] . The Marinna J. decision fails to consider the lack of appellate court jurisdiction, and instead addresses only the question of waiver. As such, Marinna J. should be considered an anomaly. Other courts, however, have been more inclined to follow the Marinna J. approach than the Pedro N. approach and thus Marinna J. is the prevailing view [see, e.g., Dwayne P. v. Superior Court (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 247, 251, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 639 ; In re Samuel P. (2002) 99 Cal. App. 4th 1259, 1267-1268, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 820] .

Notwithstanding the many cases that have held a parent can raise an ICWA notice challenge in a first appeal without having made a timely objection at the trial court level, one case has now held that there is no right to again raise ICWA notice challenges in a second appeal without having objected at the trial court level. The court held "as an apparent matter of first impression that forfeiture principles preclude a second appellate review in such a case, as further delay harms the paramount interests of dependent children in permanence and stability" [In re X.V. (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 794, 798, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 893] . This one case will not stop the plethora of cases in which parents are able to raise ICWA notice issues in a first appeal without having done anything to preserve the issue, thereby giving the parents a free reversal and delaying stability for the child, even when there is no reasonable likelihood the child is an Indian child as defined by the ICWA. Nevertheless, it is a welcome first step in providing some parameters in this very out of control area of the law. Hopefully other courts will follow it.

If a dependency case is reversed on appeal due to an ICWA notice issue, the appellate court can only reverse the judgment the appeal was taken from, not any earlier findings and orders, since the error is a statutory one and is not a jurisdictional error [In re Jonathon S. (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 334, 340-342, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 495 ; In re Brooke C. (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 377, 384-385, 25 Cal. Rptr. 3d 590] . Remand normally is limited to addressing only the ICWA or California notice issue [In re Francisco W. (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 695, 704-710, 43 Cal. Rptr. 3d 171] . This practice is consistent with holdings in other states [In re R.E.K.F. (Iowa 2005) 698 N.W.2d 147, 150-151] .

Regardless of which view is taken on the issue of ICWA noticing, all parties should take steps to ensure compliance with the ICWA is raised in a timely fashion or run the risk the issue may either be waived or be belatedly raised for the first time in a later appeal by an appellate attorney who has found some reference to possible Indian ancestry somewhere in the record on appeal.

[10] Postadoption Contact for Tribes

When it is best for the dependent Indian child being adopted and all parties agree, the court doing the adoption may provide for postadoption contact between the Indian child and the Indian child's tribe [Fam. Code §§ 8616.5(b)(2), 8620(f)]. For a discussion of postadoption contact agreements, including agreements involving an Indian child's tribe, see § 328.198[7].

[11] Tribal Customary Adoptions

A tribal customary adoption is an adoption carried out under the custom, traditions, or law of an Indian child's tribe. For such an adoption, termination of parental rights is not required [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.24(a)]. Effective July 1, 2010, tribal customary adoptions are a potential permanency planning option for dependent Indian children under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B)(vi). In the case of a tribal customary adoption the provisions of Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.24 shall apply [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(C)]. If the courts finds that termination of parental rights would be detrimental to the Indian child under one of the statutory exceptions, including that found in Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B)(vi), it must state its reasons either in writing or on the record [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(D)].

When an assessment is ordered for a Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing it is to address the option of tribal customary adoption for an Indian child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.24(b)]. In the case of a tribal customary adoption the child's tribe or the tribe's designee shall conduct a trubal customary adoption home study before final approval of the tribal customary adoptive placement [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.24(c)(1)]. The requirements for the home study are set forth in Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.24(c). Significantly, the standard for evaluating the home of a prospective tribal customary adoption parent is "the prevailing social and cultural standard of the child's tribe [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.24(c)(1)(B)]. But a Child Abuse Central Index check must be conducted, state and federal standards for criminal background checks must be adhered to, and a home cannot be approved by the tribe for a tribal customary adoption if the home does not satisfy state and federal standards in this regard [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.24(c)(2)-(5)].

If the Indian child's tribe identifies tribal customary adoption as a potential permanent plan for an Indian child, the juvenile court may continue the hearing for a period not more than 120 days to allow the Indian child's tribe to complete the tribal customary adoption process and file with the court a tribal customary adoption order indicating the tribe has completed the adoption [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.24(c)(6)]. If necessary, the court has discretion to grant a further continuance for a period of no more than 60 days, but if the tribal customary adoption is not completed by that date the juvenile court shall make new findings and orders under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(b) for a permanent plan for the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.24(c)(6)].

Once the juvenile court affords full faith and credit to the tribal customary adoption order and the tribe's approved tribal customary adoption home study, the child is eligible for tribal customary adoption placement [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.24(c)(8)]. Once prospective tribal customary adoption placement parents have signed the tribal customary adoption placement agreement and the adoption assistance agreement under Welf. & Inst. Code § 16120(g), the prospective adoptive parents may file the petition for adoption in the juvenile court. After a period of supervision, if required, and all other requirements including those relating to the child's medical background have been completed, the court may enter the tribal customary adoption decree that must include, but is not limited to a description of the modification of the legal relationship of the birth parents or Indian custodian, including visitation, if any, and responsibilities of the birth parents, the rights of inheritance of the child, and the child's legal relationship with the tribe [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.24(c)(10)]. Once the juvenile court has afforded full faith and credit to the tribal customary adoption and has issued its final adoption decree, the court shall terminate dependency jurisdiction over the Indian child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.24(c)(14)].

The Judicial Council is to adopt rules of court and necessary forms for the implementation of tribal customary adoptions for dependent Indian children. It must also study the tribal customary adoption provisions and their affects on children, birth parents, adoptive parents, Indian custodians, tribes and the court and must submit a report to the Legislature on or before January 1, 2013 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.24(f)]. Absent further legislative action, the tribal customary adoption provisions shall only remain in effect until January 1, 2014 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.24(g)].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329

CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
G. Disposition Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.126

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.126 Order Limiting Control or Removing Custody From Parent

[1] Family Maintenance Cases

[a] Limiting Parental Control

The court may limit the control to be exercised over the child by any parent or guardian by setting forth in its order clearly and specifically all such limitations. The limitations must not exceed those necessary to protect the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(a)]. Included in the limitations the juvenile court can impose is the limitation of the right of the parent or guardian to make educational decisions for the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(a)].

Nothing in these limitations is to prevent a parent from voluntarily relinquishing his or her child, if the adoption agency is willing to accept the relinquishment [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(b)].

For discussion of addressing the educational needs of the child, including limiting the parents' right to make educational decisions and the appointment of a responsible adult to make such decisions, see § 328.62[6].

[b] Orders to Parents Regarding Services and Counseling

If a child is adjudged a dependent child of the court and the court orders that a parent or guardian will retain custody of the child subject to the supervision of the social worker, the parent or guardian is required to participate in child welfare services or services provided by an appropriate agency designated by the court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 362(b)]. The parents or guardian may also be ordered to participate in a counseling or education program or appear before a financial evaluation officer [Welf. & Inst. Code § 362(c)]. To implement its power to issue orders to parents and guardians, the juvenile court may issue citations directing parents or guardians to appear at hearings under Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 200-987 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 362.3]. Family maintenance services may be extended in six month increments if it can be shown that the objectives of the service plan can be achieved within the extended time period [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16506]. Such services can be provided in an appropriate case until the child reaches 18 years of age [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16506(d)].

[2] Removing Child From Parent's Custody

[a] Grounds for Removal

No dependent child may be taken from the physical custody of his or her parents or guardians with whom the child resides at the time the petition was initiated unless, on the hearing, the juvenile court finds clear and convincing evidence of any of the following [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(c)]:

- There is a substantial danger to the physical health, safety, protection, or physical or emotional well-being of the child, or would be if the child was returned home, and there are not reasonable means by which the child's physical health can be protected without removing the child from the child's parents' or guardians' physical custody. The fact that parents may not understand their teenage child or is angry when they discipline her is not a basis for a finding the child must be removed from the parent's custody [In re Jasmine G. (2000) 82 Cal. App. 4th 282, 288-293, 98 Cal. Rptr. 2d 93] . But the fact that a child has been adjudicated a dependent child of the court pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(e) (under age five and suffered severe physical abuse) is prima facie evidence that the child cannot be safely left in the custody of the parent or guardian with whom the child resided at the time of the injury. As a means of protecting the child without removal, the court must consider the option of removing an "offending" parent or guardian from the home. It must also consider allowing a "nonoffending" parent or guardian to retain custody if that parent or guardian presents a plan demonstrating that the he or she will be able to protect the child in the future and the court finds the plan acceptable for that purpose [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(c)(1); In re Isayah C. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 684, 696, 700, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 198 (finding the incarcerated parent could make "suitable" arrangements for the care of the child and there was no basis for removing or not placing the child with that parent)].

  PRACTICE TIP:
  "Offending" and "Nonoffending" Terminology. The use of the terms "offending" and "nonoffending" found in Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(c)(1) should be used with caution in dependency proceedings. It is often not clear who the "offending" parent is, whether one or both parents are "offending," or whether a parent is a nonoffending parent or a non-protecting parent. The better practice is generally considered to be to refer to parents as "custodial" or "noncustodial" rather than "offending" or "nonoffending" [California Ctr. for Jud. Educ. and Research, Cal. Judges Benchguides, Benchguide 101: Juvenile Dependency Jurisdiction Hearing (Jan. 2009) § 101.6, p. 101-10]. The use of the term "nonoffending" in Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(c)(1) should be viewed as placing a requirement on the juvenile court to make a factual determination based on the totality of the circumstances that the person actually is a "nonoffending" parent in the truest sense of the word, so as to ensure the safety of the child.

- The parent or guardian of the child is unwilling to have physical custody of the child, and the parent or guardian has been notified that, if the child remains out of his or her physical custody for the specified statutory period, the child may be declared permanently free from his or her custody and control [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(c)(2)].

- The child is suffering severe emotional damage, as indicated by extreme anxiety, depression, withdrawal, or untoward aggressive behavior toward self or others, and there are no reasonable means by which the child's emotional health may be protected without removing the child from the child's parents' or guardians' physical custody [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(c)(3)].

- The child or a sibling of the child has been sexually abused, or is deemed at substantial risk of such abuse, by a parent, guardian, or member of his or her household, or by another person known to his or her parent and there are no reasonable means by which the child can be protected from further sexual abuse or a substantial risk of sexual abuse without removing the child from his or her parent or guardian, or the child does not wish to return to his or her parent or guardian [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(c)(4); see In re Esperanza G. (1985) 173 Cal. App. 3d 358, 360, 218 Cal. Rptr. 827] .

- The child has been left without any provision for his or her support, or a parent who has been incarcerated or institutionalized cannot arrange for the appropriate care of the child, or a relative or other adult custodian with whom a child has been left by the parent is unable or unwilling to provide care or support for the child and the whereabouts of the parent is unknown and reasonable efforts to locate him or her have been unsuccessful [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(c)(5); see also In re Isayah C. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 684, 696, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 198] .

- The child is an Indian child and continued custody of the child by the parent or Indian custodian is likely to result in serious emotional or physical damage to the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(c)(6)]. Federal law requires this finding be supported by the evidence, including the testimony of a qualified expert witness [25 U.S.C. § 1912(e)]. Beginning in 2007, the California statute indicates the finding must be supported by the testimony of the qualified expert witness as described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 224.6 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(c)(6)]. This is a significant difference, and is at odds with the greater protection provided the child under the ICWA, which allows the court to consider all the evidence on this issue, not just the testimony of the qualified expert witness [25 U.S.C. § 1912(e)]. This is particularly true when considered in light of the totality of federal and state law designed to ensure the safety and protection of the child, including Indian children. It is also inconsistent with the provisions of both federal and state law regarding the similar determination required to be made beyond a reasonable doubt prior to the termination of parental rights to an Indian child, which allow all evidence to be considered [25 U.S.C. § 1912(f); Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(2)(B)(ii)]. Thus, to this limited extent, the California statutory restriction on the consideration of other evidence on this issue at the disposition hearing should be deemed invalid.

The distinction between a custodial and noncustodial parent can be confusing in some cases. In Isayah C. the court did not decide the issue, but appeared to view a parent who had joint legal custody as one from whom custody needed to be removed under Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(c), rather than one for whom placement needed to be decided under Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(a) [In re Isayah C. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 684, 695-701, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 198] . This approach is questionable, since Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(c) specifically speaks of removal from the physical custody of the parent. The better approach is to apply Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(c) in cases in which the parent has joint legal and physical custody of the child, and Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(a) in cases in which the parent has only joint legal custody of the child and the child is not being removed from the physical custody of that parent. Either way, all parties and the court should take steps to ensure the record is clear as to whether the parent is being viewed as a custodial or noncustodial parent. When in doubt, the juvenile court should consider making alternative findings under both code provisions.

[b] Removal in Family Violence Cases

Children are often removed from their parent's custody in family violence cases under Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(c). In cases in which one parent is solely a victim of the domestic violence and not a participant or perpetrator, removing children from that parent's custody is viewed by some as further victimizing and penalizing that parent. It may also not be best for the children. Finding shelter and services for that parent, keeping that parent's address confidential, and arranging for visitation with the offending parent to be under controlled circumstances only, may be a way to avoid the necessity of placing children in out of home care [In re Jon N. (1986) 179 Cal. App. 3d 156, 161, 224 Cal. Rptr. 319] . The need for family violence agencies, social services agencies, and juvenile courts to work together in trying to protect both adult victims and child victims of family violence is very important [see National Council of Juv. And Fam. Ct. Judges, Fam. Violence Dept., Effective Intervention In Domestic Violence & Child Maltreatment Cases: Guidelines for Policy and Practice (1999)]. In many cases, however, the nonoffending parent will not separate from the offending parent or other perpetrator, or cannot be trusted to utilize services, stay separated from the offending person, or ensure the child's safety. In such cases, removal may be the only way to protect the child.

One case that found the evidence of domestic violence sufficient to justify dependency jurisdiction, but not sufficient to justify removal was the case of In re Basilio T. (1992) 4 Cal. App. 4th 155, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 450 . In that case there was an ongoing history of family violence and two recent incidents. Both children reported seeing the fighting between the mother and father. The appellate court upheld the finding of jurisdiction under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(b), but reversed the removal order. It noted the "skimpy nature" of the information in the social study regarding the history of domestic violence. It also noted that some of the reports of domestic violence made by neighbors that were contained in the social study "were at least double hearsay and contradicted by a live witness, whom the trial court explicitly found credible." Further, the appellate court found it "significant" the incidents had not "directly affected either minor physically." Thus, it found no substantial evidence to support the finding of removal under Welf. & Inst. Code § 361, "under the requisite clear and convincing standard" [In re Basilio T. (1992) 4 Cal. App. 4th 155, 168-169, 171, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 450] .

The risk to children posed by domestic violence is not only physical, however [see Edleson, Children's Witnessing of Adult Domestic Violence, 14 J. Interpersonal Violence 839 (1999); Kashani & Allan, The Impact of Family Violence on Children and Adolescents (Sage 1998) pp. 33-45]. One case that discussed domestic violence as a basis for removal was the Heather A. case. Based on expert evidence regarding "secondary abuse," the court found that if the young girls' exposure to the father's domestic violence had not already "sown the seeds in them for battered women's syndrome," further exposure might do so. Such exposure could result "in substantial danger to their future physical health in that they would submit to being battered themselves." As such, the evidence supported removing the children from the father's custody [In re Heather A. (1996) 52 Cal. App. 4th 183, 194-196, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 315] . Experts may well question the conclusion that exposing young girls to family violence will necessarily result in them becoming victims as adults. Some may also question whether the juvenile court can or should consider such potential delayed effects years later in determining current risk under Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(c). Nevertheless, there can be no question but that children are affected both directly and indirectly by family violence in the home. The Heather A. decision emphasizes that point for all who work in the dependency system.

PRACTICE TIP:

Evidence of Risk to Child in Family Violence Cases. The difference in the two holdings in the Basilio T. and Heather A. decisions is not due to a difference in the philosophy or viewpoint of the different appellate courts. Instead, it is found in the evidence or lack of evidence that was presented or challenged at the trial court level. In Basilio T. the evidence contained in the social worker's report regarding the history of domestic violence was "skimpy," a credible witness contradicted hearsay statements contained in the report, and the focus was on the physical danger to the children, if any [In re Basilio T. (1992) 4 Cal. App. 4th 155, 170-171, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 450] . In Heather A., however, expert testimony was presented on the issue of risk to the children and much of that focused on psychological risk [In re Heather A. (1996) 52 Cal. App. 4th 183, 194-196, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 315] . Social workers need to include sufficient detail in their reports regarding any history of family violence and of their risk assessment of the current danger to the child. County counsels need to guide the social worker in this regard, and if necessary should call other experts on the issue of risk. Parents' attorneys and children's attorneys should also consider presenting evidence, including expert testimony, to support their position either for or against a finding of risk.

[c] No Immediate Detention or Trial Placement With Parent

Over the years, many courts have utilized an informal, non-statutory practice of "trial placement" or "detention" with a parent in order to have the information necessary to determine whether placement with the parent would actually work. The rationale was that such a practice would encourage the court, social services, and children's counsel to agree to temporarily putting the child in the parent's home at an earlier point in time than they might otherwise do, since the temporary placement could be terminated without the necessity for a Welf. & Inst. Code § 387 petition. In return, while the parent gave up the need for a supplemental petition, the parent was able to receive the child into his or her temporary care at an earlier point in time than might otherwise occur. While in most cases such trial placement or detention orders were made after the child had been removed from the home for a substantial period of time, in others the court actually utilized the procedure at disposition hearings, removing the child and then immediately putting the child back on a trial placement or detention. Where such local practices limited such trial placements or detention to cases in which the child had been out of the home for an extended period of time or made such orders effective for only a short period of time, such as 30 to 90 days, before it became an actual placement order, all parties usually benefitted. Nonetheless, this non-statutory practice has been found to be impermissible by the appellate courts as being inconsistent with statutory mandates for either placement or removal of the child and, at least as implemented in some cases, fundamental policies of dependency law [Savannah B. v. Superior Court (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 158, 161-162, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 428 (60-day visit with parent immediately following removal order not authorized); In re Andres G. (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 476, 480-481, 75 Cal. Rptr. 2d 285 (detention with parent immediately following removal order not authorized); In re Damonte A. (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th 894, 899-900, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 369 (trial placement with parent immediately following removal order not authorized)].

Thus, at disposition the juvenile court must either remove the child from the custody of the parent or leave the child with the parent. Where, however, a child has been previously ordered removed from the parent's custody and the court desires to see if return would now be in order, the better procedure would be to authorize an extended visit for a period of 30 to 90 days, with the agency having discretion to terminate the visit should it not go well or the child becomes at risk [Welf. & Inst. Code § 362.1]. In such circumstances the court may choose to direct that the visitation order become a placement order if the visit is not terminated within the short period of time designated or direct that the matter be brought back before the court to determine if the visit has gone well enough to justify a placement order.

[3] Subsequent Action Under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(a), (d), or (e)

In any case in which the court has ordered that a parent or guardian may retain physical custody of a child subject to supervision of a social worker, and the social worker subsequently receives a report of acts or circumstances that indicate that there is reasonable cause to believe that the child is a person described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(a), (d), or (e) (serious physical harm, sexual abuse, or under age five and having suffered severe physical abuse), the social worker must commence proceedings under Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 200-945. If, as a result of the proceedings required, the court finds that the child is a person described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(a), (d), or (e), the court must remove the child from the care, custody, and control of the child's parent or guardian and commit him or her to the care, custody, and control of the social worker pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 361 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 364(e)].

[4] Additional Findings

In addition, when a child taken from the custody of his or her parents or guardians has been living in out-of-home placement under Welf. & Inst. Code § 319 or 16507.4, the court must, as additional findings, make all the findings required by Welf. & Inst. Code § 366(a), relating to necessity for and appropriateness of current placement, extent of the social services agency's compliance with the case plan, including whether steps have been taken necessary to secure a permanent placement for the child, the need, if applicable, for continued suspension of sibling interaction, the extent of any progress made toward resolving or mitigating the problems which led to foster care placement, and the likely date for the child to be placed in a permanent living situation [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(e)].

[5] Reasonable Efforts Finding

If the child is removed from the custody of the parent, the court must thereafter make a determination as to whether reasonable efforts were made to prevent or eliminate the need for removal of the child from his or her home or, if the child is removed for one of the reasons stated in Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(c)(5), whether it was reasonable under the circumstances not to make any such efforts [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(d)].

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329

CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
G. Disposition Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.127

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.127 Disposition on Removal of Child From Parental Custody

[1] Placement or Nonplacement With Noncustodial Parent

[a] Juvenile Court Custody Orders

When a court orders removal of a child from parental custody pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(c), the court must first determine if there is a parent of the child, with whom the child was not residing at the time that the events or conditions arose that brought the child within the provisions of Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 (grounds for dependency), who desires to assume custody of the child. If such a parent requests custody, the court must place the child with that parent unless it finds by clear and convincing evidence that placement with that parent would be detrimental to the child's safety, protection, physical or emotional well-being [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(a); In re Marquis D. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 1813, 1827-1829, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 198] .

One case has held that if the previously noncustodial parent seeking custody is incarcerated, the court must consider whether that parent can arrange for suitable care while the parent is incarcerated [In re Isayah C. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 684, 700, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 198]. The Isayah C. case was dealing with a muddy factual situation, however, and it was not clear whether the father was a custodial or noncustodial parent. Moreover, apparently no one pointed out that Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(a) does not contain the language regarding an incarcerated parent being able to arrange suitable care that is found in Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 300(g) and 361(c)(5). The lack of that language in Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(a) indicates a different legislative intent for previously noncustodial parents who are incarcerated and seeking custody. For them the focus is on the totality of the evidence relating to detriment to place, not just the incarcerated parent's ability to arrange suitable care. Thus, while the court may consider whether an incarcerated, previously noncustodial parent seeking custody can arrange for suitable care while the parent is incarcerated, that is only one of many factors that may be considered in deciding whether placement with the incarcerated, previously noncustodial parent would be detrimental to the child. Indeed, the Isayah C. case acknowledged the question of sibling relationships was also a factor to consider [In re Isayah C. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 684, 700, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 198 , concurring with In re Luke M. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 1412, 1422-1423, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 907]. Moreover, placement with an incarcerated noncustodial parent who arranges appropriate care for the child is legally a family maintenance placement, which could deny the child the stability of a permanent home since no Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing would take place. Further, the parent could at any time change his or her mind on placement. Yet dependent children have a strong interest in a safe, stable, permanent home. Thus, length of incarceration must also be considered in deciding whether allowing the parent to arrange appropriate care for the child during the parent's incarceration is detrimental to the child due to denying the dependent child permanency and stability.

The evidence the court may consider in determining whether placement with the previously noncustodial parent would be detrimental to the child is not limited to evidence of parental conduct or unfitness. Even when the previously noncustodial parent is a nonoffending parent, it may still be detrimental to place the child with that parent. While a jurisdiction finding is essentially predicated on a finding that parental conduct harmed or places the child at risk, "a detriment finding for purposes of deciding placement with a noncustodial, nonoffending parent need not be" [In re Luke M. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 1412, 1425, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 907] . Thus, in one case it was held the juvenile court could properly consider the emotional harm the children would suffer if separated from siblings in deciding whether placement with the previously noncustodial parent would be detrimental [In re Luke M. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 1412, 1420-1427, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 907] .

If the court places the child with a previously noncustodial parent, it may order that the parent become the legal and physical custodian of the child by means of a juvenile court custody order [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361.2(b), 362.4]. While the statutory provisions indicate that thereafter the court "shall" terminate its jurisdiction [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(b)(1)], the rule of court provides authority for the making of such orders without terminating jurisdiction [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.700(b)]. Although this rule allows the juvenile court to effectively change legal custody while maintaining dependency jurisdiction, normally the court terminates its jurisdiction when it makes a juvenile custody order. Juvenile court custody orders may be made at the disposition hearing, any subsequent review hearing, or upon the granting of a petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 seeking custody and visitation orders [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.620(c)].

In such cases the juvenile court may also provide reasonable visitation by the parent who is now the noncustodial parent. A copy of the juvenile court custody order must be filed in any existing superior court domestic relation, guardianship or paternity proceeding. If there is no such existing proceeding, the order can be used for the opening of a superior court file [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361.2(b); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.700]. In so doing, neither the order nor the juvenile court's jurisdiction is transferred to the superior court. Instead, a certified copy of the juvenile court custody order is placed in the file of the superior court which has its own jurisdiction, and the juvenile court's dependency jurisdiction is terminated.

When making a custody order, the juvenile court is not bound by the presumption in the Family Code [see Fam. Code § 3080] for joint custody [In re Chantal S. (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 196, 206, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 866, 913 P.2d 1075 ; In re Jennifer R. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 704, 711-713, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 759] . Nor is the juvenile court bound by the restrictions of Fam. Code § 3190 in limiting counseling orders to parents to a period of one year. The court may make orders conditioning custody or visitation on a parent's participation in a counseling program without limitation as to the length of such participation so long as the parent is given notice and an opportunity to be heard, including a contested hearing if desired, the court finds the order necessary to protect the child and serve the child's best interest, that determination is based on competent evidence, and the order is narrowly drawn to respect both the parent's rights and the child's needs [In re Chantal S. (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 196, 210-211, 214-215, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 866, 913 P.2d 1075] .

One court of appeal characterized juvenile court custody orders as similar to pendente lite orders under family law and not equivalent to permanent custody orders. This holding was due in large part to its belief that statutory and decisional law allowed such orders to be subsequently modified by the superior court based solely upon a best interest determination [In re John W. (1996) 41 Cal. App. 4th 961, 970-973, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 899] . This characterization was incorrect. Juvenile court custody orders are only made after noticed hearings on the merits at which the parent opposing the making of such orders has the full panoply of rights afforded parents throughout the dependency process, including the right to a contested hearing [see In re Chantal S. (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 196, 210-211, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 866, 913 P.2d 1075 (explaining due process rights of objecting parent)]. As such, they are not properly likened to the temporary orders that family law allows pending litigation [see Fam. Code §§ 3060-3064; In re Marriage of Lewin (1986) 186 Cal. App. 3d 1482, 1487-1488, 231 Cal. Rptr. 433] , but instead have always been the equivalent of a permanent custody order [see Speelman v. Superior Court (1983) 152 Cal. App. 3d 124, 129, 199 Cal. Rptr. 784] .

The suggestion that juvenile court custody orders can be modified by the superior court based on the child's best interest does not change the fact that these orders are the equivalent of permanent family law custody orders. The statutory standard for both temporary and permanent family law custody orders between parents, as well as for the modification of permanent custody orders, is the best interest of the child. Based on principles of res judicata, however, when modifying a permanent custody order a showing of changed circumstances must also be made. This is not a different rule than that of the best interest of the child, but instead is an adjunct to it. The ultimate question remains the best interest of the child [Burchard v. Garay (1986) 42 Cal. 3d 531, 535, 229 Cal. Rptr. 800, 724 P.2d 486] . In this regard, requests for changing a permanent custody order under family law in the superior court, including a juvenile court custody order, are similar to requests to change juvenile court orders during an ongoing dependency through petitions under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388, for which both new evidence or a change of circumstance, and proof that the change will be in the child's best interest are required [Welf. & Inst. Code § 388]. Juvenile court custody orders are made after a hearing on the merits and are intended by both the juvenile court and the parties to remain in effect until circumstances change and the child's best interest requires a different order. They continue unless and until modified by a subsequent order of the superior court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(b)(1)] based on changed circumstances and the child's best interest. Juvenile court custody orders are the equivalent of permanent custody orders under family law.

Since the John W. decision, the Legislature has amended Welf. & Inst. Code § 302 to make clear that any juvenile court custody and visitation order made pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 362.4 is a final judgment and shall remain in effect after dependency jurisdiction is terminated. Such an order "shall not be modified" in a family law proceeding unless the court finds there has been a significant change of circumstances since the juvenile court made the order, and that modification of the order is in the best interests of the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 302(d)].

In addition to making orders regarding custody and visitation, when the juvenile court makes a custody order it may also issue protective orders directed to either parent as specified in Fam. Code § 6218 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 362.4]. For a discussion of restraining orders made pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 213.5, see § 328.87.

PRACTICE TIP:

Don't Say "Exit Order." Some dependency practitioners use the non-statutory term "exit order" to refer to a juvenile court custody order. Supposedly this is because the court makes its custody order and the matter then "exits" the dependency system through the termination of jurisdiction. This term has even found its way into appellate decisions [see, e.g., In re John W. (1996) 41 Cal. App. 4th 961, 970, fn. 13, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 899 ; In re Katherine M. (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 91, 96, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 298 ; In re Jennifer R. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 704, 710, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 759] . The term is inaccurate: the court does not need to terminate its ongoing jurisdiction in order to make a juvenile court custody order [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.700(b)]. Moreover, as a non-statutory term and one not used by family law practitioners, it has the potential of being misunderstood from county to county and from juvenile court to family court. Practitioners and courts are well advised to follow the lead of the California Supreme Court before which the issue was briefed in In re Chantal S. (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 196, 204, 211, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 866, 913 P.2d 1075 , and refer to these orders as "juvenile court custody orders," "juvenile custody orders," or "juvenile custody and visitation orders" [see also In re Sarah M. (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 1486, 1503, 285 Cal. Rptr. 374 ("custody and visitation orders pursuant to section 362.4")].

[b] Ongoing Dependency Jurisdiction

[i] Custody With Three-Month Home Visit

The court may choose to order that the parent assuming custody do so subject to the supervision of the juvenile court and require the social worker conduct a home visit within three months. In deciding whether to take this action, the court must consider any concerns raised by the child's current caregiver regarding the parent [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(b)(2)]. If the court takes this action, the social worker must conduct the home visit and file a report with the court regarding the results of that visit. The court may then either award the parent custody of the child and terminate dependency jurisdiction, or leave the child placed in the parent's home subject to ongoing juvenile court supervision [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(b)(2)]. However, the court is not required to take the action described in this paragraph before taking the action described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(b)(1) or (3) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(b)(2)].

[ii] Custody Subject to Court Supervision

The court may choose to order that the parent assuming custody do so subject to the supervision of the juvenile court. For example, the court may order that reunification services be provided to the parent or guardian from whom the child is being removed, or the court may order that services be provided solely to the parent who is assuming physical custody in order to allow that parent to retain later custody without court supervision, or that services be provided to both parents, in which case the court shall determine, at review hearings held pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366 (6-month status review hearings), which parent, if either, shall have legal custody of the child [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361.2(b)(3), 366.21(e)].

When choosing this option, the court should be very clear as to the nature of the services it is ordering for each parent. Services ordered for the former custodial parent from whom the child was removed may, for example, be intended by the court not to achieve reunification but instead to assist the parent in developing, maintaining or improving that parent's relationship with the child; the court may have no intention of changing its order that the child live with the new custodial parent with whom he or she has now been placed. The court and all parties should be clear so that the parent is not misled [California Ctr. for Jud. Educ. and Research, Cal. Judges Benchguides, Benchguide 102: Juvenile Dependency Disposition Hearing (March 2006) § 102.49, p. 102-36].

[2] Placement With Someone Other Than Parent

When the court orders removal, the court must order the care, custody, control, and conduct of the child to be under the supervision of the social worker who may place the child in any of the following [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(e)]:

- The home of a noncustodial parent.
- The approved home of a relative.
- The approved home of a "nonrelative extended family member" as defined in Welf. & Inst. Code § 362.7.
- A foster home in which the child has been placed before an interruption in foster care, if that placement is in the best interest of the child and space is available.
- A suitable licensed community care facility.
- With a foster family agency to be placed in a suitable licensed foster family home or certified family home that has been certified by the agency as meeting licensing standards.

- A home or facility in accordance with the federal Indian Child Welfare Act.

Ordering that the child be under the care of the social services agency with the agency having the discretion to place the child is referred to as making a "general placement order." While the pertinent statute indicates that a general placement order is the only type of placement order a court can make when a child is removed from a parent and not placed with a previously noncustodial parent [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(e)], case law provides otherwise. Where the social services agency acts as an arm of the court, it is subject to the court's supervision and direction. Where it acts as an arm of the state, it is subject to judicial oversight to ensure it does not abuse its discretion. Thus it has been held that once the court places the custody of the child under the supervision of the agency, the court retains jurisdiction to oversee the agency's choice of placement alternatives even before the agency exercises its discretion to select a placement [In re Robert A. (1992) 4 Cal. App. 4th 174, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 438] . As stated by the Robert A. court, "Although the court does not make a direct placement order itself, it does have the power to instruct the Department to make a particular out-of-home placement of a particular dependent child" [In re Robert A. (1992) 4 Cal. App. 4th 174, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 438] . To the agency and dependency practitioners, of course, the distinction between a "direct placement order" which the court supposedly cannot make and an order to the agency "to make a particular out-of-home placement" is lost. As such, in most counties juvenile courts either make "general placement orders" subject to the court's review of placement decisions for abuse of discretion or "direct placement orders" which require a court order under Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 387 or 388 for a later change of placement.

If a social services agency makes a decision to change a child's placement, the agency must notify the child's attorney and provide the attorney information regarding the child's address, telephone number, and caregiver. The statutory requirement for this is declaratory of existing law [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16010.6(a); see also In re Robert A. (1992) 4 Cal. App. 4th 174, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 438] .

[3] Relative Placement

If the child is removed from the physical custody of his or her parents under Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(c) and not placed with a previously custodial parent under Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(a), consideration is to be given for placement in the home of a relative during the period of removal [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.3]. Throughout the dependency process, the responsibility for identifying potential relative placements is shared by all participants. Parents can, and in most instances should, voluntarily identify possible relative placements. Regardless, the court is to order the parents to provide the social worker with the names, residences, and other identifying information of "any" maternal or paternal relatives of the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.3(a)]. Children too, if old enough to express themselves on the topic, should be asked if there is a relative they might like to be placed with [Welf. & Inst. Code § 309(e)(3)]. Children's attorneys and court-appointed special advocates, if any, should make relative placement a priority in their investigations and advocacy for the child, when appropriate [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 104 (duties of CASA), 317(e) (responsibilities of child's attorney)]. Relatives may themselves step forward and seek placement of the child [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 309 ("If an able and willing relative, as defined in Section 319, ... is available and requests temporary placement"), 361.3(a) ("consideration shall be given to a request by a relative of the child for placement")].

Following the initial removal of the child the social worker is to conduct an investigation to identify and locate grandparents, adult siblings, and other adult relatives as identified in Welf. & Inst. Code § 319(f)(2). That investigation is to be done within 30 days, so it should normally be completed by the disposition hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 309(e)(1)]. Except when the relative's history of family violence makes notification inappropriate, any located relatives are to be noticed that the child has been removed and an explanation of the various options the relative may have to participate in the care of the child and support of the family [Welf. & Inst. Code § 309(e)(1)(A)-(B)]. Thereafter, Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.3 the social worker must "contact the relatives given preferential consideration for placement to determine if they desire the child to be placed with them." If they do, they are to be assessed as required by that section [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.3(a); see also Fam. Code § 7950(a)(1) (the social worker shall make "diligent efforts" to locate an appropriate relative for placement)].

Even the court bears responsibility for ensuring relative placements are considered [Welf. & Inst. Code § 319(d) ("the court shall determine if there is a relative who is able and willing to care for the child")]. Thus, the responsibility for exploring the possibility of relative placements and the failure, if any, in not considering relative placements is shared by everyone, not just the juvenile court and the social services agency.

In determining whether placement with a particular relative is appropriate, the county social worker and the court must consider, but are not limited to consideration of, the following factors [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.3(a)]:

- The best interests of the child, including any special physical, psychological, educational, medical, or emotional needs of the child.

- The wishes of the parent, relative, and child, if appropriate.

- The provisions of Fam. Code § 7950 et seq. regarding placement.

- Placement of siblings and half-siblings in the same home, if found to be in the best interest of each child pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 16002.

- The good moral character of the relative and of any other adult who is residing in the home. This consideration shall include whether any individual living in the home has a been responsible for acts of child abuse or neglect or has a history of violent criminal conduct.

- The duration and nature of the child's relationship with the relative and the desire of the relative to care for, and provide legal permanence for, the child if reunification efforts are unsuccessful.

- The ability of the relative to provide a safe, secure and stable environment, exercise proper and effective care and control of the child, provide a home and the necessities of life, protect the child from his or her parents, facilitate court-ordered reunification efforts with the parents, and facilitate visitation with the child's other relatives.

- The ability of the relative to facilitate the implementation of all elements of the case plan and to provide legal permanence for the child if reunification efforts fail. These two considerations, however, shall not be the sole basis on which a decision to preclude preferential placement with a relative is made.

- The ability of the relative to arrange for safe and appropriate child care where necessary.

- The safety of the relative's home. In this regard the social worker must conduct a "direct assessment" of the safety of the relative's home and must document the result of that assessment in the child's case record.

The social worker must also cause the necessary criminal records and Child Abuse Index checks required by Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 309, and 361.4 to be conducted and abide by the restrictions of those sections [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361.3(a)(8), 361.4]. For discussion of these criminal records checks and the circumstances under which the county may issue a criminal records exemption, see § 328.41[8].

The court is required to order the parents to disclose the names, addresses, and other known identifying information regarding any maternal or paternal relatives of the child. This inquiry does not mean that the child must be placed with any of the relatives identified. The social worker must first contact the relatives to whom preferential consideration is given to see if they wish to have the child placed with them. Relatives desiring placement of the child must be assessed pursuant to the factors found in Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.3(a) and the results documented in the social study prepared pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 358.1 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.3(a)]. When more than one appropriate relative requests preferential consideration, each relative must be considered under the factors set forth above [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.3(b)]. The evaluation of a potential relative placement shall not be cause for the continuation of a disposition hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.3(a)].

The definition of relative for purposes of placement of dependent children is very broad. Any adult who is related to the child by blood, adoption, or affinity within the fifth degree of kinship, including stepparents, stepsiblings, and all adult relatives whose relation to the child is preceded by the words "great," "great-great" or "grand" or the spouse of any such relative is to be considered a relative for purposes of placement. This is even true for spouses of such relatives if the marriage has been terminated by death or dissolution [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.3(c)]. Within this definition of relative, "affinity" refers to the "connection existing between one spouse and the blood or adoptive relatives of the other spouse" [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.502(1)]. Only an adult relative who is a grandparent, aunt, uncle or sibling is to be given preferential consideration, however. In this context, "preferential consideration" only means that the relative asking for placement of the child should be considered and assessed first [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.3(c)]. Relatives of alleged fathers are not considered relatives of the child for purposes of placement until the man has actually been determined to be a biological or presumed father of the child.

Consideration of relative placements may depend on individual circumstances [see In re Rodger H. (1991) 228 Cal. App. 3d 1174, 1185-1186, 279 Cal. Rptr. 406 (disposition order vacated for investigation of relative placement after court gave unclear instructions and relative failed to contact social worker after jurisdiction hearing)]. The relative preference does not presume or require, however, that a child actually be placed with a relative. Instead, it merely requires that it be considered and that a determination be made as to whether the relative home is appropriate based on a consideration of the suitability of the home and the child's best interest [In re Stephanie M. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 295, 320-321, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 595, 867 P.2d 706] .

The process for the granting or denial of criminal records exemptions is an executive function that is not subject to review by the juvenile court, but rather is subject to administrative review [In re S.W. (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 838, 848, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 192 ; In re Hanna S. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 1087, 1091, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 338] . The juvenile court can review, however, the agency's failure to seek an exemption. If an exemption is not granted, the juvenile court cannot override the agency and order the child placed in the home [In re S.W. (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 838, 851-852, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 192 ; In re Hanna S. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 1087, 1092, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 338 ; Los Angeles County Dept. of Children & Fam. Services v. Superior Court (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 1161, 1170, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 254] . The juvenile court does, however, have the ability to review the denial of an exemption to determine if the appropriate legal standard was used. If it appears that it was not, and thus it is believed the social services agency abused its discretion in denying the exemption thereby depriving the court of the ability to consider placement with the relative, the court "is limited to directing the agency to consider the request for an exemption under the appropriate legal standard" [In re Esperanza C. (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 1042, 1050, 81 Cal. Rptr. 3d 556] .

Once the child is placed in the home, however, the fact the relative is no longer approved for placement of the child under the necessary licensing standards or that a criminal records exemption or waiver of child welfare background has not been granted, does not automatically mean the social services agency can remove the child. The juvenile court still has the authority to order the child to remain in a relative placement despite the fact that it is no longer approved. While this may make the placement ineligible for federal funding, once the initial placement has been made juvenile court's have been found to have the authority to order that such placements continue [In re Miguel E. (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 521, 545-546, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 530 ; Los Angeles County Dept. of Children & Fam. Services v. Superior Court (2003) 112 Cal. App. 4th 509, 519-521, 5 Cal. Rptr. 3d 182] .

There is a natural tendency on the part of workers, attorneys and courts to be reluctant to remove a child from a relative placement even where such placement is later determined to be marginal or even potentially dangerous. Thus, the original decision to place a dependent child with a relative should be made with great care as it may prove to be a more enduring placement than originally envisioned or than is best for the child. Moreover, although relative placements are preferred if appropriate for the child, it must be remembered that a child's ongoing caretakers will receive preferential consideration for adoption and legal guardianship if reunification efforts fail [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(4), (k)]. While the ability to provide legal permanence for a child is not the only reason for making or not making a placement with a particular relative [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.3(a)], courts and agencies should ensure that a child's long-term needs are given serious consideration in any relative placement decision. If the court does not place the child with a relative who has been considered for placement pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.3, the court must state for the record the reasons placement with that relative was denied [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.3(e)].

Subsequent to the disposition hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 358, whenever a new placement of the child must be made, consideration for placement must be given to relatives who have not been found to be unsuitable and who will fulfill the child's reunification or permanent plan requirements. In addition to the factors described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.3(a), the county social worker must consider whether the relative has established and maintained a relationship with the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.3(d); see also In re Jessica Z. (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1089, 1099, 275 Cal. Rptr. 323 (when relative requests custody after disposition but before change in placement would damage child, court should order at least an assessment of placement with the relative)].

The Legislature has declared that physical disability, such as blindness or deafness, is no bar to raising children. Thus, a social worker's determination as to a disabled relative's ability to exercise care and control should center on whether the disability prevents the relative from exercising care and control [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.3(a)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Relative Status After Termination of Parental Rights. Different statutes and regulations define "relative" in varying ways. Differing interpretations of those authorities may also cause confusion regarding who is a "relative" in a particular situation. There is ongoing disagreement regarding the status of relatives after parental rights have been terminated. One view is that the termination of the rights of the child's parents also terminates the relative status of the child's birth relatives. Where this view is maintained, relative caretakers who desire to continue caring for the child are required to obtain foster care licensing following the termination of the rights of the child's parents. The better view is that relatives continue to have relative status until such time as an adoption is finalized and the child receives a new birth certificate. This view recognizes that it is the parents' rights that have been terminated, not their bloodline. It is the order of adoption and the naming of the adoptive parents on the child's new birth certificate that result in the child having a new set of relatives. Until that time, although the birth parents have no rights or status, the child's birth relatives continue to be relatives. Since the standards for licensing as a foster parent require more than those for approval as a relative caretaker, this view avoids the difficulties experienced under the previous view where a "former relative" is no long considered a relative yet cannot qualify for a foster care license, resulting in the child needing to be moved. This also appears to be consistent with the growing recognition of the importance of relatives in the lives of children before, during and after dependency proceedings [see, e.g., Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 16605 (Kinship Support Services Program for before and during dependency), 361.3 (relative placement preference during dependency); Fam. Code § 8616.5 (availability of postadoption contact agreements to birth relatives; goal is to remove barriers to adoption by relatives)]. Nevertheless, at this time two very different views on this issue exist. Practitioners need to be aware of these two interpretations and take steps to be knowledgeable as to which view is practiced in the county where the case they are handling is located.

[4] Placement with "Nonrelative Extended Family Member"

California formerly had a process for "certifying" the homes of extended family members and friends of the family who had filed an application to be licensed as a foster home, but had not yet been licensed [Welf. & Inst. Code former § 361.2(h)]. This was a way to recognize "kin" as a possible placement. Effective October 10, 2001, California now has a process for approving the home of a "nonrelative extended family member" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 362.7]. A "nonrelative extended family member" is defined by the statute as an adult caregiver who already has an "established familial or mentoring relationship with the child." When such an individual is being considered for approval for placement of the child, the social services agency must verify the existence of that relationship through interviews with the parent and child, or with one or more third parties. The parties to help verify the existence of the relationship may include the child's relatives, teachers, medical professionals, clergy, neighbors, and family friends [Welf. & Inst. Code § 362.7]. The standards for evaluating, and for approving or denying a "nonrelative extended family member" for placement of the child are to be the same as those for licensing a foster family [Welf. & Inst. Code § 362.7]. The criminal records checks required for relative placements also apply to "nonrelative extended family member" placements [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 309(d), 361.4].

PRACTICE TIP:

Placement With Relatives of an Alleged Father. The relatives of a man alleged to be the father of a child are not relatives for purposes of placement unless and until the alleged father establishes paternity. This has often been problematic when the family of the alleged father is known to the child and desires placement, but the alleged father has not yet established paternity. The process for assessing and approving the home of a "nonrelative extended family member" under Welf. & Inst. Code § 362.7 provides a way to facilitate such placement in an appropriate case even if the alleged father has not established paternity or turns out not to be the father.

[5] Placement Within the County

If the child is taken from the physical custody of the child's parents or guardians and unless the child is placed with relatives, the child must be placed in foster care in the county of residence of the child's parents or guardians in order to facilitate reunification of the family [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(f)(1)].

In the event that there are no appropriate placements available in the parents' or guardians' county of residence, a placement may be made in an appropriate place in another county, preferably a county located adjacent to the parents' or guardians' community of residence [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(f)(2)].

In making its placement decision, the juvenile court must follow the requirement of Fam. Code § 7950(a) to give "full consideration" to placing the child within proximity to the parents so as to facilitate visitation and reunification [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.3(a)(3); In re Luke L. (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 670, 677-680, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 53] . Thus, in light of the importance of visitation to efforts to reunify the family, placement outside of the county during the period for reunification may constitute an abuse of discretion even where such placement is with a relative [In re Luke L. (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 670, 680-681, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 53] . While the Luke L. decision does not hold that a juvenile court can never place a child outside of the county during the reunification period, it makes it clear the court must give great weight to placing the child in proximity to the parent in its balancing of placement considerations during the reunification period. Where a parent is not actively working toward reunification or where placement out-of-county is necessary to ensure the child's safety or well-being, an out-of-county placement may be considered more favorably.

When it has been determined that it is necessary for a child to be placed in a county other than the county of residence of the parents or guardians, the specific reason the out-of-county placement is necessary must be documented in the case plan. If the out-of-county placement is necessary due to the lack of resources in the sending county to meet the specific needs of the child, those specific resource needs shall be documented in the case plan [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(f)(4)].

When it has been determined that a child is to be placed out-of-county either in a group home or with a foster family agency for subsequent placement in a certified foster family home, and the sending county is to maintain responsibility for supervision and visitation of the child, the sending county must develop a plan of supervision and visitation. In addition, the sending county must document information regarding any known or suspected dangerous behavior of the child that indicates the child may pose a safety concern in the receiving county [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(f)(5)].

When a child is to be placed out-of-county, and the sending county plans that the receiving county will be responsible for the supervision and visitation of the child, the sending county must develop a formal agreement between the sending and receiving counties, which specifies the supervision and visitation to be provided the child, and which indicates that the receiving county is responsible for providing the supervision and visitation. The formal agreement must be approved and signed by the sending and receiving counties prior to placement of the child in the receiving county [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(f)(6)].

[6] Child Under Six Years

The Legislature has indicated its intent that very young children, from birth to 6 years of age, who are removed from their home be placed in family homes, not group care or institutional settings [see Stats. 1993, ch. 1088, § 3]. A child under 6 years of age may be placed in a community care facility licensed as a group home for children, or a temporary shelter care facility [see Health & Safety Code § 1530.8] only under any of the following circumstances [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(e)(6)]:

- When a case plan indicates that placement is to provide specialized treatment to the child, the case plan specifies the need for, nature of, and anticipated duration of this treatment, and the facility meets the applicable regulations and standards [see Health & Safety Code § 1530.8; Welf. & Inst. Code § 11467.1]. The specialized treatment period must not exceed 120 days, unless additional time is needed pursuant to the case plan as documented by the caseworker, and approved by the caseworker's supervisor [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(e)(6)(A)].

- When a case plan indicates that placement is to provide family reunification services, the facility offers reunification services that meet the needs of the child and his or her family, permits parents to have reasonable access to their children 24 hours a day, encourages extensive parental involvement in meeting the daily needs of their children, employs trained staff, and one of the following conditions exists:

  - The parent is also a ward or dependent of the court and resides in the facility.

  - The parent is participating in a treatment program affiliated with the facility, and the child's placement in the facility facilitates reunification services.

  - Placement in the facility is the only alternative that permits the parent to have daily 24-hour access to the child in accordance with the case plan, to participate fully in meeting all of the daily needs of the child, including feeding, and personal hygiene, and to have access to necessary reunification services [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(e)(6)(B)].

[7] Placement for Concurrent Permanency Planning

In the past, some counties utilized "fost-adopt" homes for the placement of those potentially adoptable children for whom the likelihood of reunification is only slight. There was no legal impediment to such a practice provided the juvenile court, social services agency and the fost-adopt parents were aware of and followed both the spirit of and requirements for reunification services, and gave the parent a true opportunity at reunification [see In re Steven A. (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 754, 764, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 576] . Foster parents for such fost-adopt programs were usually very carefully selected to ensure this was accomplished and were only utilized in the small number of cases where reunification seemed unlikely. Nevertheless, there were times and jurisdictions when "fost-adopt" placements were disfavored.

Now that concurrent planning for legal permanence is required for all cases where the child is in out-of-home placement and reunification services are being offered, more placements will be made where the caretakers may be willing to consider adoption or legal guardianship if reunification fail. Such caretakers may be relatives or foster parents [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 358.1(b), 361.3(a)(7)(H), 366.21(e), (f), 366.22(a), 366.25(a)(3), 16501.1(f)(9)]. This practice, assuming that it is conducted openly and appropriately as is intended with concurrent planning, is entirely consistent with the dual goals of working toward reunification with the parent and providing the child with stability of placement and permanency if reunification cannot be achieved [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361.5(a), 366.26(k); see also discussion regarding the purpose of dependency proceedings in § 328.11, and concurrent planning in § 328.12[9]]. Without doubt, in some cases fost-adopt or other potential permanency placements, including relatives and nonrelative extended family members, may in fact interfere with reunification efforts. The juvenile court and all parties, including the social services agency and the caretakers, must be very sensitive to the potential for conflicts of interest in such placements and in concurrent planning and must ensure that the nature of the placement and the planning does not defeat the possibility of reunification with the parent [see, e.g., In re Jasmon O. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 398, 430-431, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 85, 878 P.2d 1297 (fact that early in the case the foster parent came to desire adoption did not interfere with reunification efforts which failed)].

[8] Educational Decisions

If the parent or guardian is unwilling or unable to make educational decisions for his or her child, or if other circumstances exist that compromise the ability of the parent or guardian to make those educational decisions, the social worker is to consider in the social study prepared for the disposition hearing whether the rights of the parent or guardian to make educational decisions should be limited. If the social worker makes that recommendation in the social study, the social worker is to identify whether there is a responsible adult available to make educational decisions for the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 358.1(e)]. The social worker must also address this issue in any supplemental report required for the review of a child in foster or relative care [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.1(e)].

If a child is declared a dependent child, the juvenile court must consider the educational needs of the child, regardless of whether the child is removed from the custody of the parent or guardian or not. If appropriate it may limit the right of the parent or guardian to make educational decisions on behalf of the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(a)]. This may be especially appropriate when the child is removed from the custody of the parent or guardian, and this is when the limitation of the right of the parent or guardian to make educational decisions is most commonly seen. Indeed, when the child is placed in foster care and the child's status reviewed, the court must consider whether this action needs to be taken [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366(a)(1)(C)].

The issue of the need for a responsible adult for educational decisions is to be considered at disposition, review hearings, and even post-permanency planning review hearings for children in long term foster care [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 358.1(e), 366(a)(1)(C), 366.3(e)(5)]. Any limitation on the right of a parent or guardian to make educational decisions for the child and any order appointing a responsible adult for educational decisions must be specified in the court order [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.650(a)]. If the child is subsequently moved from the home of a relative or foster parent who has been appointed to make educational decisions for the child, a new responsible adult for educational decisions shall be appointed [Gov. Code § 7579.5(c)].

Educational advocacy on behalf of dependent children is not limited to the activities of a responsible adult or surrogate parent. Counsel for children, CASAs, social workers, and other child advocates, as well as the juvenile court, must take an active role in educational advocacy for dependent children [see, e.g., Espana & Fried, The Expanding Role of the Juvenile Court in Determining Educational Outcomes for Foster Children, 5 J. Center Children & Cts. 83 (2004);

NCJFCJ, Asking The Right Questions: A Judicial Checklist to Ensure That the Educational Needs of Children and Youth in Foster Care Are Being Addressed (NCJFCJ 2005)].

Important questions to ask at all dependency hearings beginning with the initial or detention hearing include, but are not limited to: Is the child in school? What type of school? If the child is enrolled in an alternative school, what is the basis for such a placement? Does the child have appropriate clothing and supplies for school? How is the child getting to and from school? How is the child's attendance at school? Is the child able to participate in school-related extracurricular activities? What was the date of the last educational evaluation or assessment? How is the child performing in school? Who is the child's educational advocate? Are there mental, physical, or language issues that impair the child's ability to learn? Unless the answers to these questions are known, the child's education needs may not be met.

For further discussion of the requirement to address the educational needs of the child, including limiting the parents' right to make educational decisions and the appointment of a responsible adult to make such decisions, see § 328.62[6].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329

CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
G. Disposition Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.128

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.128 Interstate Compact on the Placement of Children

[1] In General

California has adopted the Interstate Compact on the Placement of Children (ICPC) [Fam. Code § 7900]. The purpose of the ICPC is to have the states cooperate with each other in the interstate placement of children to ensure that each child requiring placement receives the maximum opportunity to be placed in a suitable home. It is also the purpose of the ICPC to ensure that the appropriate authorities in a state where a child is to be placed may have a full opportunity to investigate the proposed placement so as to protect the child, so that the authorities of the state placing the child can receive complete information on which to make the placement decision, and to promote appropriate jurisdictional arrangements for the care of children placed in other states [Fam. Code § 7901 (Article 1)].

The ICPC applies any time a government agency, including the juvenile court, sends or otherwise causes a child to be taken to another state for placement. It sets out conditions for placement of a child in another state [Fam. Code § 7901 (Article 3)] and imposes penalties for illegal placements [Fam. Code § 7901 (Article 4)]. It also makes clear that it is the state which sends the child to the other state which retains financial responsibility for the child [Fam. Code §§ 7901 (Article 5), 7902, 7905]. To implement the purposes and provisions of the ICPC, the Judicial Council adopted Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.616.

[2] Visitation Versus Placement

It is considered a placement under the ICPC whenever a court maintaining dependency jurisdiction sends or authorizes a child to be taken to another state without a specific date of return, beyond the ending date of a school vacation period, or with a return date more than 30 days from the start of the visit [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.616(b)]. Thus, any sending or taking of the child to another state under court order for less than those periods is considered a visit and ICPC approval is not required. This is commonly called a "29 day visit." Where done for 29 days or less, such a visit truly is a visit and should not be held violative of the law. Indeed, it may facilitate the child's relations with extended family members and the information gained thereby may assist the court in making future placement decisions. In many instances, however, courts authorize repeated 29-day visits such that the child remains in the other state for months without ever receiving ICPC approval and potentially without that placement ever being supervised. Moreover, it means the child is in the other state without the California juvenile court ever having received the full and complete information the ICPC process is designed to provide. This can result in the child being in a de facto placement that is not best or even safe for the child. Allowing a child to be in another state for repeated and continuous 29-day visits is a practice that violates the spirit, if not the letter of the ICPC and should not be utilized [In re Luke L. (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 670, 681-682, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 53] .

It should be noted, however, that where the proposed placement is a "priority placement" time limits "may be modified by written agreement between the sending court, the sending agency, and the Compact Administrators of the sending and receiving jurisdictions" [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.616(f)(6)]. This would appear to authorize extended visits prior to formal ICPC approval if these entities enter into a written agreement to allow that in the particular case.

At a minimum, the juvenile court, social services agency, and child's attorney should never allow a child to remain in another state for more than a 29-day visit without an agreement with an appropriate agency in the receiving state for at least minimal courtesy supervision, including regular verification of the child's well-being and the provision of services if necessary.

PRACTICE TIP:

Communicate With the Receiving State. As previously noted, some courts will, on occasion, allow a child to go to another state on a "29 day visit" pending ICPC approval for placement. Practitioners should be aware that states differ as to whether they will do ICPC home studies on homes in their state when the child is already visiting in that home. Some will. Some won't. The same is true with regard to providing courtesy supervision services. Moreover, most, if not all states are unwilling to do an adoptive home study until parental rights are terminated. These potential difficulties point out the need for early and ongoing communication with the social services agency in the receiving state as to what they will and will not do in a given case. All parties should ensure that such communication is taking place and that necessary information is received before important decisions impacting on the child's welfare are made.

[3] Applicability to Out-of-State Placements With Parents

In the past there was substantial controversy and uncertainty as to whether the ICPC applies when the juvenile court sends the child to a parent in another state. Two California decisions [In re Johnny S. (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 969, 974-980, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 94 ; Tara S. v. Superior Court (1993) 13 Cal. App. 4th 1834, 1837-1838, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 315] and one federal decision [McComb v. Wambaugh (3d Cir. 1991) 934 F.2d 474] held that use of the ICPC is not required for placement with out-of-state parents. These three holdings were directly at odds with the position taken by the Association of Administrators of the Compact in its regulations and by the vast majority of states [see ICPC Regulation III; ICPC Secretariat Opinions 32, 34, 43]. In disagreeing with the ICPC Administrators, these three decisions looked to the language of the ICPC statute for their conclusion the legislature did not intend the ICPC to be mandated for such placements. With broad disagreement on the issue indicating the meaning of the statute's language is not clear, other sources, such as legislative history and the ICPC Administrator's regulations should be looked to in interpreting the ICPC's application to parental placements. In the view of the ICPC Administrators, such sources supported their belief the ICPC does apply to placements with parents. Recent developments, however, appear to have resolved this controversy.

A joint committee composed of representatives from the National Council of Juvenile and Family Court Judges, the National Association of Public Welfare Administrators, and the ICPC Administrators has created a new process for expedited home studies for priority placements that should resolve much of the dissatisfaction with the slowness of the ICPC process, particularly as to placements with parents [see ICPC Regulation No. 7 effective October 1, 1996; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.616(f)]. In a memorandum regarding the work of that committee, it was noted that:

"Parents have constitutionally-guaranteed custodial rights superior to any non-parent. If the court determines that a non-custodial parent is a non-offending parent and an appropriate caretaker, it may restore physical custody of the child to that parent and dismiss its jurisdiction without invoking the Interstate Compact.

"If a court restores legal and physical custody to a previously non-custodial parent but retains jurisdiction to ensure the appropriateness of that parent, ICPC must be invoked. When supervision of the placement in the receiving state indicates that the child is not at risk of abuse or neglect, a receiving state should not withhold its concurrence to dismissal of sending state jurisdiction." [ICPC Administrators' Memorandum to Joint Committee on ICPC Improvement regarding the Joint Committee's Recommendations to Improve the Placement of ICPC Children, p. 11 (May 8, 1996).]

California accepted this new approach through the adoption of Cal. Rules of Ct., former Rule 1428, effective January 1, 1999. The key question to ask now is whether the California juvenile court intends to retain jurisdiction. If the court is sending the child to the parent in another state and maintaining dependency jurisdiction for supervision of that child, the home study process and compliance with ICPC is required since this is now recognized by California as a placement requiring ICPC adherence [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.616(b)(1)]. On the other hand, if the court is sending the child to the parent in another state and terminating jurisdiction, the ICPC need not be invoked [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.616(b)(1)]. Both the ICPC Administrators' memorandum and Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.616(b)(1) make possible the placement of a child with a parent in another state and the maintenance of California dependency jurisdiction without ICPC compliance if the purpose of ongoing jurisdiction is solely to provide services to or impose conditions on the parent who remains in California. It will be a rare case, however, in which a court may wish to make such an order and whether such an order would ever be appropriate is subject to question.

Nothwithstanding the actions taken by the ICPC Administrators and California's rules of court, one recent California decision has held the ICPC does not apply to placements with out-of-state parents, even if dependency jurisdiction is being maintained [In re John M. (2006) 141 Cal. App. 4th 1564, 1573-1575, 47 Cal. Rptr. 3d 281] . This decision again puts California out of step with the ICPC Administrators and the majority of states that hold the ICPC applies to placements with out-of-state parents when dependency jurisdiction is maintained [see, e.g. State Dept. of Econ. Sec. v. Leonardo (Ariz. Ct. App. 2001) 22 P.3d 513 ; K.D.G.L.B.P. v. Hinds County Dept. of Human Svcs. (Miss. 2000) 771 So.2d 907 ; D.S.S. v. Clay County Dept. of Human Resources (Ala. Civ. App. 1999) 755 So. 2d 584 ; Dept. of Children and Families v. Benway (Fla. App. 1999) 745 So.2d 437 ; In re Adoption of Warren (Mass. App. 1998) 693 N.E.2d 1021 ; State ex rel. Juvenile Dep't of Clackamas County v. Smith (Or. App. 1991) 811 P.2d 145] . This can make placing children in other states difficult, and make other states reluctant to work with California. While the reasoning of the John M. court is subject to question, this is an area in which reasonable minds, and reasonable courts, can and have differed. A revised ICPC, which clarifies its application to placements with parents, has been proposed and Congress has indicated its sense the revised ICPC should be ratified "expeditiously" [Safe and Timely Interstate Placement of Foster Children Act of 2006, Sec. 2 (2006) 109 P.L. 239 (eff. 10/1/06)]. Nevertheless, until the revised ICPC is adopted in California, this is an area to be watched for further developments.

PRACTICE TIP:

ICPC Administrators. For more information on the ICPC, its regulations, and the ICPC Secretariat's Opinions, contact the Association of Administrators of the Interstate Compact on the Placement of Children, 810 First Street, N.E., Suite 500, Washington, D.C. 20002. The national Project Director may be reached at 202-682-0100. In California, the Deputy Compact Administrator may be reached at 916-651-8111.

[4] Priority Placements

A "priority placement" is a placement or request for placement by a court if the court makes a specific finding the proposed placement is with a relative who could receive the child from another relative without ICPC compliance if the child was not under the court's jurisdiction and the court finds the child is under two years of age, in an emergency shelter, or has spent a substantial period of time in the home of the relative proposed for placement [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 5.616(b)(2), 5.616(f)]. As used in this regard, the word relative means a parent, stepparent, grandparent, adult sibling, adult uncle or aunt, or guardian of the child [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.616(f)]. Priority placement provisions may also apply if the receiving state has been in possession of a "properly completed interstate compact placement request form and supporting documentation" for over 30 business days, but the sending agency has not yet received notice of whether the child may be placed in the receiving state [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 5.616(b)(2), 5.616(f)]. When the court determines a proposed placement is a priority placement under one or more of these provisions, procedures apply for an increased communication and an expedited home study [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.616(f)]. Judicial Council Forms JV-565 (Findings and Request for Assistance under Interstate Compact on the Placement of Children) and JV-567 (ICPC Priority--Findings and Orders) are to be used for these purposes.

[5] Placement in Out-of-State Group Homes

California has declared that "the health and safety of children in out-of-state group home care pursuant to the Interstate Compact on the Placement of children is a matter of statewide concern" [Fam. Code § 7912(a)]. To this end, a dependent child cannot be placed in an out-of-state group home unless the court finds that the out-of-state group home is licensed or certified for the placement of children by an agency of the state in which the child will be placed, the out-of-state group home meets the requirements of Fam. Code § 7911.1, and that facilities and programs within California have been determined to be unavailable or inadequate to meet the needs of the child [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361.21(a), 366(d)]. Nor can a child remain in an out-of-state group home placement unless the group home is in compliance with Fam. Code § 7911.1 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366(d)]. Fam. Code § 7911.1 makes it clear that notwithstanding any other provision of law, the California State Department of Social Services will investigate "any threat to the health and safety of children" placed by county social services agencies in an out-of-state group home under the provisions of the ICPC. Out-of-state group homes must also comply with the reporting requirements applicable to California group homes for all children placed in their care, regardless of whether placed by California or not [Fam. Code § 7911.1(a)]. Further, out-of-state group homes accepting California children must also meet California licensing standards [Fam. Code §§ 7911(b), 7911.1(c)].

To further ensure the appropriateness of placements in out-of-state group homes, each county must obtain an assessment and placement recommendation by a county multidisciplinary team for all children placed in such group homes. That assessment and recommendation is to be completed within six months of the effective date of the enacting legislation, which was August 19, 1998. Moreover, effective March 1, 1999, all counties must obtain such an assessment and recommendation prior to the placement of a child in an out-of-state group home [Fam. Code § 7911.1(d)]. For purposes of conducting this assessment and recommendation, a multidisciplinary team "shall consist of participating members from county social services, county mental health, county probation, county superintendents of schools, and other members as determined by the county" [Fam. Code § 7911.1(f)].

[6] Review of Out-of-State Placement

When a child has been placed out-of-state the court must review the placement decision at every regularly scheduled review hearing. The court must determine the continuing appropriateness of the out-of-state placement and whether the placement is in the child's best interest [Welf. & Inst. Code 366(c)]. The juvenile court must review all out-of-state placements in group homes at least every six months to ensure compliance with the requirements of Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.21(a), which includes meeting the requirements of Fam. Code § 7911.1 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.21(b)]. Unless the requirements of Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.21(a) and (b) are met, a county is not entitled to receive or expend public funds for the placement of a child in an out-of-state group home [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.21(c)].

[7] Automatic Stay of Order Placing Child Out-of-State

Code Civ. Proc. § 917.7 provides that "in the absence of a writ or order of a reviewing court providing otherwise," any order of the juvenile court "allowing, or eliminating restrictions against removal" of a dependent child from the state are stayed by operation of law for a period of seven calendar days from the order of the juvenile court. This provision used to stay such orders for a period of 30 days, which is still the law for out-of-state orders in cases other than juvenile dependency cases, but was changed effective January 1, 2000, for dependent children.

Parties objecting to an order placing a dependent child out-of-state should consider asking the juvenile court to stay its order for a specified period of time so review by a higher court can be sought [Code Civ. Proc. § 917.7; see also In re Elijah S. (2005) 125 Cal. App. 4th 1532, 1541, 24 Cal. Rptr. 3d 16] . In the absence of a stay by the juvenile court, however, the party objecting has only seven calendar days to seek a stay from the appellate court by way of a petition for writ of supersedeas pending appeal before the automatic stay of this section expires [see In re Elijah S. (2005) 125 Cal. App. 4th 1532, 1541, 24 Cal. Rptr. 3d 16 (petition for writ of supersedeas granted to stay release of juvenile court documents pending review); In re Nikki R. (2003) 106 Cal. App. 4th 844, 850, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 256 (writ of supersedeas granted to stay change of adoptive placement pending review)]. Such a writ should indicate on its cover that an immediate stay is requested pending the appeal and must be supported by an adequate record, including a copy of the court's minute order, any reports or points and authorities considered by the court in making the order, and either a reporter's transcript or a declaration by counsel as set forth in Cal. Rules of Court, Rule 8.490 [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.116, 8.490].

The question arises whether a court's authorization of an out of state visit triggers the automatic stay found in Code Civ. Proc. § 917.7. The use of the term "removal" suggests something more permanent or lasting than a mere visit of less than 30 days duration at the end of which the child will be returning to this state. Thus, the better and more practical view is that an order allowing a visit to another state for a period less than 30 days does not trigger the automatic stay of Code Civ. Proc. § 917.7. If the visit is a prelude to an anticipated placement in the other state, however, and it is not envisioned the child will be returning to California within 30 days, the automatic stay of Code Civ. Proc. § 917.7 should apply.

If the automatic stay applies, the social services agency, child's attorney, or any other party with standing on this issue may apply by extraordinary writ petition to the Court of Appeal for an order lifting the automatic stay [Code Civ. Proc. § 917.7]. In light of the shortened length of the automatic stay in dependency proceedings, such requests for the lifting of the automatic stay are now less likely to be made, but may still be appropriate in certain cases.

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
G. Disposition Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.129

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.129 Services on Removal

[1] General Requirements and Limitations

Except as noted below, whenever a child is removed from a parent's or guardian's custody, the juvenile court is required to order the social worker to provide child welfare services to the child and the child's parents or guardians for the purpose of facilitating reunification of the family [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(a); see In re John B. (1984) 159 Cal. App. 3d 268, 273-274, 205 Cal. Rptr. 321 (court may not circumvent statutory scheme for reunification even though it appears that reunification is doomed to failure)]. Such services are not a constitutional entitlement, but rather are a "benefit" provided by statutory law [In re Baby Boy H. (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 470, 475, 73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 793] . Further, those services are only a benefit to be ordered for a parent or guardian. The court cannot order other relatives or significant others, such as stepparents or de facto parents, to participate in such services if the child is not placed in their care [In re Silvia R. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 337, 341-342, 345-351, 71 Cal. Rptr. 3d 496 ; see also In re Jody R. (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 1615, 1628, 267 Cal. Rptr. 746] . This is so even if the relative or significant other residing with the parent was the abuser. Instead, the court orders the parent or legal guardian to participate in services to make the home safe for the child, and orders the parent or legal guardian to ensure any other person in the home, including relatives or significant others, are safe. This places the burden on the parent or legal guardian to ensure that person either participates in services and becomes safe for the child or leaves the home [In re Silvia R. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 337, 341-342, 345-351, 71 Cal. Rptr. 3d 496] . As noted in a respected judicial practice guide, "A parent who resides with the perpetrator of child abuse has the responsibility to ensure that the perpetrator makes the progress necessary to allow the child to be returned to the home. Thus, while the perpetrator, who may be a stepparent, may have no independent right to services, such services may flow through the parent. In such a case the plan might read: 'If the mother continues to reside with the stepfather, she shall ensure that the stepfather participate in and complete a course in appropriate disciplinary techniques and that he demonstrate an ability and willingness to use alternative forms of discipline so as to allow the child to be returned to the home safely' " [California Ctr. for Jud. Educ. and Research, Cal.

Judges Benchguides, Benchguide 102: Juvenile Dependency Disposition Hearing (Jan. 2009) § 102.68, p. 102-65].

Where the child is 3 years of age or older at the time of the initial removal from the physical custody of his or her parent or guardian, court-ordered reunification services shall not exceed 12 months from the date the child entered foster care [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361.49, 361.5(a)(1)]. For a child under 3 years of age at the time of the initial removal from the physical custody of his or her parent or guardian, court-ordered reunification services shall be for the period beginning with the disposition hearing and ending with the six-month review hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(e), but no longer than 12 months from the date the child entered foster care [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(a)(1)(B)]. This limitation on the time for services in the case of a very young child has been upheld as not violating a parent's constitutional substantive due process and equal protection rights [Daria D. v. Superior Court (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 606, 610-613, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 668] . The date the child entered foster care is the date of the jurisdiction finding or 60 days from the date the child was removed from the physical custody of the parent or guardian, whichever occurs first. This is true regardless of the age of the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.49].

PRACTICE TIP (PARENT'S P.O.V.):

The Reunification Case Plan. Parents and parent's counsel should be actively involved in the drafting of a client's reunification plan. This means making sure that components are appropriate, available, and no barriers to participation exist. Counsel should also consider recommending particular services that the client will need in order to make return more probable. Finally, it is often said that visitation is the lynchpin of reunification. Visitation is a service. Without frequent visitation, the parent-child bond is diminished or incapable of forming and the parent loses sight of what they are working for. Counsel for parents must take an active role on individual cases and system-wide to ensure visitation is maximized.

The statutory changes effective January 1, 2009, for the period of services for a child under 3 years of age at the time of the initial removal and for bringing motions to terminate court ordered services prior to the normal presumptive period resulted in a major policy change for California. For over two decades it was recognized that under state and federal law reunification services were not ordered for a minimum period of time; they were ordered for a maximum period of time since services were to be time-limited to afford children permanency at the earliest possible stage, if they could not be returned safely [see, e.g., Welf. & Inst. Code former § 361.5(a); In re Christina A. (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 1153, 1159-1164, 111 Cal. Rptr. 2d 310 ; In re Candace P. (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 1128, 1132-1133, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1 ; In re David H. (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 368, 388, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 313 , quoting Sen. Select Com. on Children & Youth/ Sen. Bill No. 1195 Task Force Rep. on Child Abuse Reporting Laws, Juvenile Court Dependency Statutes, and Child Welfare Services (Jan. 1988) p. 2; In re Zacharia D. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 435, 446, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 751, 862 P.2d 751] . The Legislature is presumed to have known that, but the legislative history of the bill rebuts that presumption. Instead, citing dicta from the cases of Daria D. v. Superior Court (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 606, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 668 , and Judith P. v. Superior Court (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 535, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 14 , the Legislature was led to believe first that there were "varying interpretations of existing law regarding reunification service timelines," second that state and federal law intended services to be provided for a minimum period of time, and third that the cases of In re Derrick S. (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 436, 67 Cal. Rptr. 3d 367 , and In re Aryanna C. (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 1234, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 288 , which allowed services to be terminated early in very limited, egregious circumstances, "undermine[d] this intent and due process requirements" [see Senate Rules Comm. Analysis, AB 2341 (1997-1998 Reg. Sess.), Aug. 25, 2008, pp. 4-5]. None of those statements were accurate. Nevertheless, knowingly or unknowingly, California has enacted a major policy shift in the area of services to parents. As such, it can be expected to result, at least initially, in substantial litigation at both the trial and appellate levels. The wisdom of this policy shift and how it will be implemented and interpreted are matters to be watched for further developments.

Notwithstanding the above limitations, the court may extend services up to a maximum time period not to exceed 18 months from the date the child was originally removed from the physical custody of the parent or guardian if it can be shown the permanent plan of return to parent with the child being "safely maintained in the home" can be achieved within the extended time period [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(a)]. Before it extends the time period for court-ordered reunification services, the court must find a substantial probability that the child will be returned to the custody of the parent or guardian within the extended period of time, or that reasonable reunification services have not been provided. The court must also state the factual basis for its determination that there is a substantial probability of return within the extended time period [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(a); see also Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(g)(1) (additional findings necessary to extend reunification period to the maximum of 18 months)]. Physical custody of the child by the parents during the 12-month period does not interrupt the running of the period [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(a)].

Effective January 1, 2009, there is a provision that allows the juvenile court to extend services to a date 24 months from the original removal of the child in certain very limited circumstances pertaining to parents in substance abuse programs, and parents recently released from incarceration or institutionalization [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361.5(a)(4), 366.22(b), 366.25]. Many will question the wisdom of this change, in part because it is likely to require strictly state or county funding, but primarily because it extends the uncertainty of placement and permanency for the child beyond the normal time frames, which may be especially questionable with infants and very young children. Nevertheless, this major shift in policy is now also the law in California. At the 18-month permanency review hearing held under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.22, if the child is not returned to a parent and the juvenile court finds it is in the child's best interest to provide further reunification services to a parent or legal guardian making "significant and consistent" progress in a substance abuse program, or to a parent recently discharged from institutionalization or incarceration and making "significant and consistent" progress in establishing a safe home for the child, the court may continue reunification services to a date not to exceed 24 months from the date of the child's original removal. Continuing the case to the 24-month date does require certain specific findings relating to the substantial probability of return in light of visitation and contact, progress, and a demonstrated capacity to complete their treatment plan and provide for the child's safety, protection, physical and emotional well being, and any special needs. It also requires a finding that it's in the child's best interest, all standards that may be difficult to establish [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361.5(a)(3), 366.22(b)]. This is an area in which substantial litigation is anticipated at both the trial and appellate levels, and should be watched for further developments.

The court must also make findings under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366(a) (necessity and appropriateness of placement, compliance of agency with case plan, need for continued suspension of sibling interaction if applicable, progress towards alleviating or mitigating causes necessitating placement, projection of likely date for return to home, or placement for adoption or guardianship) and of Welf. & Inst. Code § 358.1(f) whether parent has been advised of the option to participate in adoption planning, including the option of entering into a postadoption contact agreement, and voluntarily relinquish the child if an adoption agency is willing to accept the relinquishment [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(a)].

When counseling or other treatment services are ordered, the parent will be ordered to participate in those services, unless the parent's participation is deemed by the court to be inappropriate or potentially detrimental to the child.

When services are ordered for a parent or guardian, the parent or guardian must be advised that neither their signature on the plan nor the acceptance of services constitutes an admission of guilt and cannot be used as evidence against them [Evid. Code § 1228.1(a); Welf. & Inst. Code § 16501.1(f)(11)(B)]. They must also be advised, however, that their failure to cooperate with such services, except for good cause, can be used as evidence at any hearing conducted on a petition filed pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 300, 342, 387 or 388, or any review hearing conducted pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21 or 366.22 [Evid. Code § 1228.1(b); Welf. & Inst. Code § 16501.1(f)(11)(B)].

Except in cases in which the court does not order reunification services [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b); see also discussion under [2], below], the court must inform the parent or parents about permanency planning procedures under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 and must specify that parental rights may be terminated [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(a)].

Family reunification services must be provided or arranged for by county welfare department staff in order to reunite the child separated from his or her parent because of abuse, neglect, or exploitation [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 16507(a)].

In accordance with Welf. & Inst. Code § 16507, family reunification services may not be ordered as part of a child custody or visitation rights proceeding brought under the Family Law Act [Civ. Code § 4609]. However, notwithstanding Welf. & Inst. Code § 16507, family reunification services may not be provided to a child adjudged a dependent because he or she was freed for adoption from one or both parents for 12 months by either relinquishment or termination of parental rights, and for whom an adoption petition has not been granted [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300.1, as amended by Stats. 1987, ch. 1485, § 6; see Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(h)].

If a child is removed from the custody of a parent or guardian and placed with another parent, the court may order that reunification services be provided to the parent or guardian from whom the child has been separated [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(b)(3)]. Although a reunification plan is not required in such a case, the juvenile court should exercise its discretion as to whether or not one should be ordered [In re Katrina C. (1988) 201 Cal. App. 3d 540, 550, 247 Cal. Rptr. 784] .

It should be noted that the court has discretion to grant or deny reunification services to a man who is found by the court to be the biological father of the child or who has been found by another court of competent jurisdiction to be the father of the child, if the court finds that such services will benefit the child. The purpose of reunification is generally only furthered by the provision of services if the biological father has had at least some sort of substantial familial relationship with the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(a); In re Sarah C. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 964, 975-976, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 414 ; see also In re Zacharia D. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 435, 451, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 751, 862 P.2d 751 (biological father who is not presumed father is not "parent" entitled to reunification services or to child custody on removal from a custodial parent, under Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361.2 and 361.5)].

For further discussion of presumed fathers and establishing paternity, see Ch. 412, Paternity and Disputed Paternity Proceedings (Matthew Bender) [see also § 328.60[3]].

[2] When Reunification Services Are Not to Be Ordered

[a] Federal Law Regarding Not Providing Services

Federal law now provides reunification services "shall not be required" if the court finds [42 U.S.C. §§ 671(a)(15)(D), 5106a(b)(2)(A)(xii)]:

- The parent has subjected the child to "aggravated circumstances" as defined in state law. These circumstances may include, but are not limited to, abandonment, torture, chronic abuse, and sexual abuse.

- The parent has committed the murder of another child of the parent.

- The parent has committed the voluntary manslaughter of another child of the parent.

- The parent has aided or abetted, attempted, conspired, or solicited to commit such a murder or voluntary manslaughter.

- The parent has committed a felony assault resulting in serious bodily injury to the child or another child of the parent.

- The parental rights of the parent to another child have been terminated involuntarily.

For discussion regarding not providing services in an Indian Child Welfare Act (ICWA) case, see § 328.32A[7].

For discussion regarding the Americans With Disabilities Act (ADA) in the context of not providing services in a juvenile dependency case, see § 328.129[8].

[b] California's Statutory Exceptions to Providing Services

California's statutory authority for identifying cases in which reunification services are not to be provided began long before federal law provided for such action. Nevertheless, these provisions of California law identify the "aggravated circumstances" in which California has determined services should not be provided. Thus, they are now authorized not only by state law, but by federal law [42 U.S.C. § 671(a)(15)(D)(i)]. The provisions of Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b), (e)(1), for the "denial" of services apply to both the custodial parent from whom the child was removed under Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(c), and the previously noncustodial parent who has asked for and been denied placement under Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(a) [In re Adrianna P. (2008) 166 Cal. App. 4th 44, 53-59, 81 Cal. Rptr. 3d 918] .

Reunification services are, of course, not to be provided to individuals who are not entitled to such services. When the court removes a child from a legal guardian, reunification services are not to be provided if the court terminates the guardianship. In this circumstance, the former guardian is no longer the legal guardian and thus is not entitled to services [In re Alicia O. (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 176, 181-184, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 119] . The juvenile court has the authority to terminate a guardianship previously established by either a juvenile court or a probate court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 728]. A de facto parent is not entitled to reunification services [Clifford S. v. Superior Court (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 747, 752, 45 Cal. Rptr. 2d 333] . Nor is a stepparent [In re Jodi B. (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 1322, 1325-1329, 278 Cal. Rptr. 242] . Even a man who has established he is the biological father of the child, but who does not qualify for presumed father status, is not entitled to reunification services, although he may receive services if he proves they will benefit the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(a); In re Zacharia D. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 435, 451, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 751, 862 P.2d 751] .

Reunification services are not to be provided to a mother, statutorily presumed father, or guardian if the court finds, by clear and convincing evidence, any of the statutory grounds set forth in Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(1)-(15), and (e)(1).

PRACTICE TIP (PARENT'S P.O.V.):

Defending Against the Bypass Case. Bypass of reunification services is a huge issue for parents. Parent's counsel must be familiar with all the grounds for bypass and the case law interpreting those code sections. The agency or child's counsel must be held to their burden of proving the existence of such grounds by clear and convincing evidence. If that standard is met, in most cases, the court can still order services if it finds by clear and convincing evidence that providing reunification services is in the best interest of the child. Parent's counsel should contemplate requesting a 30-day continuance under Welf. & Inst. Code § 358(a)(1) and consider presenting evidence relating to progress in services, the child's positive attachment to the parent, and retaining an independent expert to assess the ability of the parent to benefit from services, all as a way of establishing services to the parent would be best for the child.

[i] Whereabouts Unknown

If the whereabouts of the parent or guardian is unknown, reunification services shall not be provided. A finding pursuant to this provision must be supported by an affidavit or by proof that a reasonably diligent search has failed to locate the parent or guardian. The posting or publication of notices is not required in such a search [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(1)]. This is the one basis for denying services in which the juvenile court cannot immediately set a hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26. Instead, it must set a six-month review hearing.

[ii] Mental Disability

If the parent or guardian is suffering from a mental disability that is described in Fam. Code § 7820 et seq. and that renders him or her incapable of utilizing those services, reunification services shall not be provided [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(2)]. In such circumstances, case law has held that evidence from two experts each of which agree the parent suffers from a mental disability that renders him or her incapable of utilizing those services is necessary [In re Catherine S. (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 1253, 1257-1258, 281 Cal. Rptr. 746 ; In re Rebecca H. (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 825, 838-840, 278 Cal. Rptr. 185] . The majority in one decision held Fam. Code § 7827(a) does not require both experts to agree the parent is unlikely to benefit from services in order for it to deny reunification services. Instead, the majority concluded the statute only requires evidence from two experts regarding the parent's mental disability, "from which the court then can make inferences and base it findings" [Curtis F. v. Superior Court (2000) 80 Cal. App. 4th 470, 474, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 232] . There has always been an argument that Rebecca H. was in error when it concluded the requirements of Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(2) encompassed not only the definition of "mental disability" but also the burden of proof by two experts [see In re Rebecca H. (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 825, 838-840, 278 Cal. Rptr. 185] . But the majority in Curtis F. doesn't address that argument. Indeed, it does not even cite Rebecca H. [Curtis F. v. Superior Court (2000) 80 Cal. App. 4th 470, 473-474, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 232] . Thus, its cursory conclusion is subject to substantial question. This is an area that should be watched for further developments.

[iii] Previous Removal

If the child or a sibling of the child had been previously adjudicated a dependent pursuant to any subdivision of Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 (grounds for dependency) as a result of physical or sexual abuse; following that adjudication, the child who was adjudicated a dependent had been removed from the custody of his or her parent or guardian pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 361 (grounds for removal); the child who was removed has been returned to the custody of the parent or guardian from whom the child had been taken originally; and the child currently being removed pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 361 is being removed because of additional physical or sexual abuse, reunification services shall not be provided [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(3)].

[iv] Death of Another Child

If the parent or guardian of the child caused the death of another child through abuse or neglect, reunification services shall not be provided [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(4); In re Ethan N. (2004)122 Cal. App. 4th 55, 66-69, 18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 504 ; Patricia O. v. Superior Court (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 933, 941-942, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 662 ; In re Alexis M. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 848, 850-851, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 356 ; In re Jessica F. (1991) 229 Cal. App. 3d 769, 779, 282 Cal. Rptr. 303] . As noted by the court of appeal in Alexis M., "given the gravity and nature of the crime involved here--felony child abuse resulting in death of a small infant--the idea of reunification with another infant must be considered as bordering on the frivolous" [In re Alexis M. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 848, 851, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 356] .

[v] Severe Physical Abuse of Young Child

If the child was brought within the jurisdiction of the court under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(e) (under age five and suffered severe physical abuse) because of the conduct of the parent or guardian, reunification services shall not be provided [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(5); Raymond C. v. Superior Court (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 159, 163, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 33] . "Conduct of the parent" for these purposes refers to abuse personally inflicted on the child by the parent or abuse inflicted on the child by another when the parent knew or reasonably should have known that the other person was physically mistreating the child [In re Joshua H. (1993) 13 Cal. App. 4th 1718, 1732, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 282] . Further, it is not required that the identity of the perpetrator of the abuse be known, so long as it is shown the abuse was either inflicted by the parent or someone known by the parent [In re Kenneth M. (2004) 123 Cal. App. 4th 16, 21, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 752 , citing In re E.H. (2003) 108 Cal. App. 4th 659, 667, 670, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 740] .

[vi] Severe Sexual Abuse or Physical Harm

Reunification services are not to be provided if either the child is a dependent as a result of the determination that the child, a sibling, or a half-sibling suffered severe sexual abuse as defined in Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(6), by the parent or guardian, or the parent or guardian inflicted severe physical harm, as defined in Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(6), on the child, sibling, or half-sibling, and the court makes a determination that it would not benefit the child to pursue reunification services with the offending parent [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(6)]. The child who has suffered severe physical harm under this section need not be the child for whom services are being denied. It also applies where the sibling suffered that severe physical harm [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(6); see also Deborah S. v. Superior Court (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 741, 748-751, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 858 (construing earlier version of the statute)]. Further, it is not necessary the parent being denied services as to his or her child also be the parent or guardian of the sibling or half-sibling who was abused by that parent [Anthony J. v. Superior Court (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 419, 422, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 677] .

One case has held that Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(6) only "applies to the parent who inflicted severe physical harm to the minor" [In re Kenneth M. (2004) 123 Cal. App. 4th 16, 21, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 752] . Some may consider that holding dicta, however, since it was not necessary to the ultimate decision upholding the denial of services, and thus is not binding [Katie V. v. Superior Court (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 586, 598, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 320] . Others will note that while the Kenneth M. decision limits the application of Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(6) to a parent who has inflicted the abuse, that does not mean that parent must be the actual perpetrator, only that the parent must be an offending parent as intended by that subdivision. Thus, in the Amber K. case a mother who had given implied consent for the abuse was properly denied services despite not being the perpetrator [Amber K. v. Superior Court (2006) 146 Cal. App. 4th 553, 564, 52 Cal. Rptr. 3d 701].

The better view is that Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(6) should apply whenever the severe sexual abuse or physical harm was inflicted by the parent or guardian whether by act or omission. This is consistent with the interpretation of other subdivisions of Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b) [see, e.g., In re E.H. (2003) 108 Cal. App. 4th 659, 667, 670, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 740] . It is also consistent with the legislative preference to not provide services when doing so is fruitless, and with the overall goal of providing timely stability and permanence for the child [Karen S. v. Superior Court (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 1006, 1010, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 858 ; In re Rebecca H. (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 825, 837, 278 Cal. Rptr. 185] . Finally, it is consistent with the language of the subdivision itself, which includes within the definition of severe sexual abuse acts that were done with the actual or implied consent of the parent or guardian, and includes within the definition of severe physical harm injuries that were accomplished through the act or omission of the parent or guardian [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(6)].

[vii] No Services in Siblings' Case

If the parent is not receiving court-ordered reunification services for a sibling or a half-sibling pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(3), (5) or (6), reunification services shall not be provided [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(7)].

[viii] Child Is the Product of Rape

If the child was conceived by means of the commission of an offense listed in Penal Code § 288 or 288.5, or by an act committed outside of the state which would constitute such an offense if committed here and the parent being denied services is the parent who committed the offense or act, reunification services shall not be provided [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(8)].

[ix] Abandonment Constituting Serious Danger or Voluntary Surrender of Infant

If the child was brought within the court's jurisdiction under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(g) and the court finds that the abandonment itself constituted a serious danger to the child as defined in Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(9), reunification services shall not be provided [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(9)].

Reunification services may also be denied under this subsection if the parent or other person having custody of an infant child 72 hours old or younger voluntarily surrendered the child under Health & Safety Code § 1255.7 and failed to reclaim the child within the 14-day period set forth in that section [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(9)].

[x] Previous Termination of Services

If the court has previously ordered termination of reunification services for any siblings or half-siblings of the child after the sibling or half-sibling was removed from the same parent or guardian described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(a), and the court finds that this parent or guardian has not subsequently made a reasonable effort to treat the problems that led to the removal of the sibling or half-sibling from that parent or guardian, reunification services shall not be provided [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(10); Randi R. v. Superior Court (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 67, 70-72, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 770 (considering previous version of statute); In re Baby Boy H. (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 470, 474-475, 73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 793 (considering previous version of the statute); see also Marlene M. v. Superior Court (2000) 80 Cal. App. 4th 1139, 1148-1151, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 104 (considering previous version of statute); Riverside County Dep't of Pub. Soc. Servs. v. Superior Court (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 483, 486-492, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 777 (services may be denied under this subsection even if permanent plan for other child was implemented after current child was detained but prior to disposition; considering previous version of the statute)].

This provision for the denial of reunification services was previously found in Welf. & Inst. Code former § 361.5(b)(10). That subdivision was divided into two parts, subdivision (a) for the denial of services due to the previous termination of reunification services for a sibling, and subdivision (b) for the denial of services due to the previous termination of parental rights to a sibling. The appellate courts were divided as to whether that previous language required a determination the parent had not subsequently made a reasonable effort to treat the problems that led to the previous removal of the sibling [see Shawn S. v. Superior Court (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 1424, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 80 (holding proof of the parent's failure to make reasonable efforts was a requirement of both subdivisions); Marshall M. v. Superior Court (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 48, 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 891 (expressly disagreeing with Shawn S. and concluding the finding was required under Welf. & Inst. Code former § 361.5(b)(10)(B), but not under Welf. & Inst. Code former § 361.5(b)(10)(A))]. On August 16, 2001, the California Supreme Court ended the conflict by agreeing with the Marshall M. decision [Renee J. v. Superior Court (2001) 26 Cal. 4th 735, 743-749, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 828, 28 P. 3d 876] . The Supreme Court noted that "If we have failed to discern correctly the Legislature's intent in enacting the statute, that body may clarify the statute accordingly" [Renee J. v. Superior Court (2001) 26 Cal. 4th 735, 748-749, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 828, 28 P. 3d 876] . Less than two months later, the Legislature did exactly that. Effective October 10, 2001, Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b) was amended to create two separate subdivisions for the denial of services in this regard [Stats. 2001, ch. 653, §§ 11.3, 23]. Denial of services based on the previous termination of reunification services for a sibling is now addressed in Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(10). Denial of services based on the previous termination of parental rights for a sibling is now addressed in Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(11). Both require a finding the parent or guardian has not subsequently made a reasonable effort to treat the problems that led to the removal of the sibling [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(10)-(11)].

[xi] Previous Termination of Parental Rights

If the parental rights of the parent or guardian regarding any sibling or half-sibling of the child have been terminated and the court finds that this parent or guardian has not subsequently made a reasonable effort to treat the problems that led to the removal of the sibling or half-sibling from that parent or guardian, reunification services shall not be provided [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(11); In re Jasmine C. (1999) 70 Cal. App. 4th 71, 76, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 493 (considering previous version of statute); see also Riverside County Dep't of Pub. Soc. Servs. v. Superior Court (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 483, 486-492, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 777 (services may be denied under this subsection even if permanent plan for other child was implemented after current child was detained but prior to disposition; considering previous version of the statute)]. The provisions of this subdivision apply even if the parent was not the custodial parent of the child for whom parental rights were previously terminated, and even if the parent was only an "alleged father" or a "biological father" to that child [Francisco G. v. Superior Court (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 586, 595-599, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 679 (considering previous version of statute)]. Alleged fathers often deny paternity, sometimes because they truly do not believe they are the fathers, and sometimes because they do not want to be bothered or to be responsible. The Francisco G. holding relating to previous termination of the rights of an alleged father applies in cases in which the alleged father asserted paternity in the previous action. Due process issues may exist, however, if the alleged father did not appear or assert paternity in the previous proceedings. This is an area to be watched for further developments.

[xii] Parent Convicted of Violent Felony

If the parent or guardian has been convicted of a violent felony as defined in Penal Code § 667.5(c), reunification services shall not be provided [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(12); In re James C. (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 470, 484-485, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 270] . Penal Code § 667.5(c) has many different subsections listing violent felonies. These felonies include murder, attempted murder, voluntary manslaughter, mayhem, rape, forcible sodomy or oral copulation, lewd acts on a child under the age of 14, felonies where great bodily injury was inflicted or a firearm was used, arson, kidnapping, carjacking, continuous sexual abuse of a child, and others. If it is believed the parent or guardian may have been convicted of a violent felony as defined in Penal Code § 667.5(c), the practitioner should look to that section for specific definitions and limitations of the crimes listed.

[xiii] Chronic Substance Abuse

If the parent or guardian of the child has a history of "extensive, abusive, and chronic use of drugs or alcohol" and has either resisted prior court-ordered treatment for the problem during the three-year period immediately prior to the filing of the dependency petition, or has refused or failed to comply with a drug or alcohol treatment program required in a case plan pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 358.1 on at least two previous occasions where the programs identified were available and accessible, reunification services shall not be provided [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(13)]. Providing services to a parent who has an extensive history of substance abuse and has resisted or failed prior court-ordered treatment can be a clear abuse of discretion even where the children love the parent and the court desires to give the parent one more chance [In re William B. (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 1220, 1223, 78 Cal. Rptr. 3d 91] . Substance abuse is "notoriously difficult for a parent to overcome, even when faced with the loss of her children" [In re William B. (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 1220, 1228, 78 Cal. Rptr. 3d 91 , citing In re Kimberly F. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 519, 531, fn. 9, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 495] . Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(13) reflects a legislative determination that when the parent is a chronic abuser of drugs or alcohol and has resisted prior substance abuse treatment providing reunification services is generally not in the child's best interest [In re William B. (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 1220, 1228, 78 Cal. Rptr. 3d 91 , citing In re Levi U. (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 191, 200, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 648] . Such a parent has a high risk of reabuse that places the parent's interest in reunifying with the child directly at odds with the child's compelling right to a safe, stable, permanent home [In re William B. (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 1220, 1228, 78 Cal. Rptr. 3d 91 , citing In re Baby Boy H. (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 470, 478 [73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 793 , and In re Marilyn H. (1993) 5 Cal.4th 295, 306, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 544, 851 P.2d 826] .

The requirement in the first basis for denial of services under this subdivision that the resisted treatment be court-ordered treatment was effective January 1, 2003. Prior to that, it was enough the parent had the necessary history of substance abuse and had resisted treatment during the three years prior to the filing of the petition. Thus, the treatment resisted could have been voluntary treatment [see, e.g., Karen H. v. Superior Court (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 501, 504-505, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 665 (mother's resistance to drug treatment that she had entered voluntarily was sufficient)]. Any precedential decision handed down prior to January 1, 2003, must be read carefully to determine whether it would still be a correct interpretation of the law in light of the new amendment.

In one case a parent had attempted rehabilitation on at least four occasions and had previously completed two substance abuse programs. She had relapsed within one year on both occasions. The court of appeal found that although she had technically completed her rehabilitation programs, "her failure to maintain any kind of long-term sobriety must be considered resistance to treatment" and hence upheld the juvenile court's denial of services under this provision [

Randi R. v. Superior Court (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 67, 73, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 770 (considering previous version of statute); see also Laura B. v. Superior Court (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 776, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 472 (considering previous version of statute)]. Further, the definition of resist "encompasses both active and passive behavior. Thus a parent can actively resist treatment for drug or alcohol abuse by refusing to attend a program or by declining to participate once there. The parent also can passively resist by participating in treatment but nonetheless continuing to abuse drugs or alcohol" [Karen S. v. Superior Court (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 1006, 1010, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 858 (upholding denial of services due to passive resistance to substance abuse treatment; considering previous version of statute); see also; In re William B. (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 1220, 1230, 78 Cal. Rptr. 3d 91 (resumption of substance abuse demonstrated resistance to treatment, not a "simple relapse"); In re Brian M. (2000) 82 Cal. App. 4th 1398, 1401-1403, 98 Cal. Rptr. 2d 881 (considering previous version of statute); In re Levi U. (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 191, 199-200, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 648 (considering previous version of statute)]. The statute does not require that any previous rehabilitation program be completed. It only requires the parent resist treatment during the previous three years [Karen H. v. Superior Court (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 501, 504-505, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 665] .

[xiv] Waiver of Services

If the parent or guardian has been advised of his or her right to reunification services and of the consequences of waiving such services, including the possibility of termination of parental rights and adoption, and the parent or guardian waives such services, reunification services shall not be provided. The parent or guardian must be represented by counsel before making such a waiver and must execute the waiver of services form which the Judicial Council is to adopt. The court must not accept the waiver unless it finds that the parent or guardian has knowingly and intelligently waived the right to services. This finding by the court must be stated on the record [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(14); Cynthia C. v. Superior Court (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 1196, 1200-1201, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 669 (juvenile court denial of parent's request to withdraw waiver of services upheld under previous version of statute)].

[xv] Abduction of Child

If the parent or guardian has willfully abducted the child or the child's sibling or half-sibling from his or her placement on one or more occasions and refused to disclose the whereabouts of the abducted child, to return physical custody of the abducted child to the child's placement, or to return physical custody of the abducted child to the social worker, reunification services shall not be provided [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(15)].

[xvi] Incarcerated or Institutionalized Parent

If the parent or guardian is incarcerated or institutionalized and the court determines by clear and convincing evidence that providing services would be detrimental to the child, reunification services shall not be provided [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(e)(1)]. The mere fact that a parent is incarcerated is not, in and of itself, sufficient grounds to deny reunification services [In re Brittany S. (1993) 17 Cal. App. 4th 1399, 1402, 22 Cal. Rptr. 2d 50 ("go to prison, lose your child" is not an appropriate legal maxim)]. Nor is the distance of the prison to be the sole factor in denying visitation or services to an incarcerated parent [In re Jonathan M. (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 1234, 1237-1238, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 208] . In some instances, however, mandating services, including visitation, for a child and the incarcerated parent is detrimental to the child [In re James C. (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 470, 485-486, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 270] . This is especially true "where the very reason a parent is in prison in the first place is the death of another child from child abuse, particularly an infant sibling" [In re Alexis M. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 848, 853, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 356] .

In determining whether providing services to an incarcerated or institutionalized parent would be detrimental to the child, the court must consider the age of the child, the degree of parent-child bonding, the length of the period of incarceration the parent or guardian is serving, the length and nature of the treatment, the nature of the crime or illness, the degree of detriment to the child, if any, if services are not offered, the likelihood of the parent's release from incarceration or institutionalization within the reunification time limits described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(a), for children 10 years of age or older, the child's attitude toward implementation of family reunification services, and any other appropriate factors [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(e)(1)].

If the parent is serving a prison term for child abuse, a sexual offense against a child, or domestic violence, and the court orders reunification services for the other parent, the social services agency may request the Board of Prison Terms to notify it when the incarcerated parent is scheduled to be released [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16507(d); see also Penal Code § 3058.65(a)(1)(B)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Denying Services to Incarcerated Parents. The authority in Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(e)(1) for the denial of services to an incarcerated parent when providing services is detrimental to the child is one of the most underutilized dependency provisions. While providing services to an incarcerated parent is required in most circumstances, there are many cases in which the provision of such services has little or no likelihood of success and thus only serves to delay stability for the child, particularly if the incarcerated parent is the only parent receiving services. This is especially true when the parent will be incarcerated longer than the maximum time periods for reunification efforts. It is also frequently true when the parent is incarcerated in a facility that has no services sufficient to help the parent work toward reunification and there is no reasonable way to provide services to that parent. Indeed, to attempt services in such circumstances may be setting everyone up for failure, including the parent, agency, and child. Thus, in cases such as these, it may be possible to show that providing services to the incarcerated parent would be detrimental to the child since it would delay permanency with no likelihood of success. Juvenile courts and attorneys for social services agencies and children should carefully consider the question of whether providing services to an incarcerated parent would be detrimental to the child and should utilize this provision to deny services when appropriate.

[xvii] Deciding to Order or Deny Services

In deciding whether to order reunification in any case in which Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5 applies, the court must hold a dispositional hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(c)]. The social worker is required to prepare a report, which must be considered by the court [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.690]. The report must discuss whether reunification services should be provided [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(c); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.690(a)(1)(c)]. While the social services agency has to investigate the question of services and provide the court with information about the "prognosis for a successful reunification, it is not required to prove the services will be unsuccessful" [Raymond C. v. Superior Court (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 159, 164, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 33] . If the court determines that one of the provisions for the denial of reunification services applies, "the general rule favoring reunification is replaced by a legislative assumption that offering services would be an unwise use of governmental resources" [In re Baby Boy H. (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 470, 478, 73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 793 ; see also In re William B. (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 1220, 1227, 78 Cal. Rptr. 3d 91] .

If reunification services are not ordered pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(1) because the whereabouts of a parent are unknown, and the whereabouts of the parent become known within six months of the out-of-home placement of the child, the court must order the social worker to provide family reunification services. The time limits specified in Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(a) are not tolled by the parent's absence, however [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(d)].

If it is alleged, pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(2), that the parent is incapable of utilizing services because of mental disability, the court must order reunification services unless competent evidence from mental health professionals establishes that, even with the provision of services, the parent is unlikely to be capable of adequately caring for the child within the time limits specified in Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(a) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(c)]. It should be noted Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(c) previously mandated it be shown the parent was unlikely to be capable of adequately caring for the child "within 12 months." The change effective January 1, 1999, that it be shown the parent is likely to be capable of adequately caring for the child within "the time limits specified in subdivision (a)" evidences the legislature intended to change the law. When considered as a whole in light of the many recent changes to the law, this change means that for children who were under the age of 3 years at the time of the original removal it need only be shown the parent is unlikely to be capable of adequately caring for the child within six months from the date of the disposition hearing, but no longer than 12 months from the date the child entered foster care [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(a)(1)(B), (c)]. For children 3 years of age or older at the time of the original removal, it must be shown the parent is unlikely to be capable of adequately caring for the child within 12 months from the date the child entered foster care [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(a)(1)(A), (c)].

If jurisdiction was taken under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(e) due to severe physical abuse of the child under age 5, the provisions of Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(5) are applicable and the court shall not order reunification services for the parent or guardian whose conduct resulted in such abuse and jurisdiction, unless it finds based on competent evidence that such services are likely to prevent the reabuse or continued neglect of the child or that it will be detrimental to the child not to attempt such reunification because the child is "closely and positively attached to that parent" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(c)]. The social worker is required to investigate the circumstances leading to the removal of the child and advise the court whether there are circumstances that indicate that reunification is likely to be successful or unsuccessful and whether failure to order reunification is likely to be detrimental to the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(c)]. The ordering of reunification services where Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(5) is applicable is not discretionary with the court. The court may not order such services unless it makes the requisite finding described above. No standard of proof is set forth in the statute for this finding, however. As such, it is presumed that the finding must be made by a preponderance of the evidence [Evid. Code § 115].

The failure of the parent to respond to previous services, the fact that the child was abused while the parent was under the influence of drugs or alcohol, a past history of violent behavior, or testimony by a competent professional that the parent's behavior is unlikely to be changed by services are among the factors indicating that reunification services are unlikely to be successful [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(c)]. The fact that a parent or guardian is no longer living with an individual who severely abused the child may be considered in deciding that reunification services are likely to be successful, provided that the court must consider any pattern of behavior on the part of the parent that has exposed the child to repeated abuse [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(c)]. Thus, the court must consider a broad spectrum of evidence under Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(5) in determining the likelihood of success or failure of any reunification services which might be ordered. The likelihood of success of any proposed efforts to reunify is also an important factor for the court's determination whether reunification efforts are in the child's best interest where Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(3), (4), (6), (7), (8), (9), (10), (11), (12), (13), (14), or (15) are applicable.

In considering whether the provision of reunification services would benefit the child in cases where the circumstances of Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(6) or (7) (severe sexual abuse or severe physical harm to the child or the child's sibling or half-sibling; parent not receiving services for sibling or half-sibling pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(3), (5), or (6)) apply, the court must consider any information it deems relevant, including the specific act or omission constituting the severe physical harm or sexual abuse inflicted, the circumstances of the infliction of that abuse or harm, the severity of the emotional trauma suffered by the child victim, any history of child abuse by the parent, the likelihood of safely reunifying with no further supervision within 12 months, and the desires of the child regarding reunification with the offending parent or guardian [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(h)].

If Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(3), (4), (6), (7), (8), (9), (10), (11), (12), (13), (14), or (15) (discussed above) are applicable, the court shall not order reunification services unless it finds by clear and convincing evidence, that reunification is in the best interest of the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(c); see also Riverside County Dep't of Pub. Soc. Servs. v. Superior Court (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 483, 492, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 777] . Thus, where these subdivisions are applicable, the provision of reunification services is not discretionary with the court. Instead, the court cannot order such services unless evidence is presented that establishes that it is in the best interest of the child to attempt to work toward reunification and the court so finds by clear and convincing evidence. One court has held that evidence the parent has ameliorated the problems that led to the dependency of siblings cannot alone support a finding that it would be in the child's best interest to provide services to the parent when Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(4) applies [In re Ethan N. (2004)122 Cal. App. 4th 55, 66, 18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 504] . Instead, the parent must affirmatively show that reunification services are best for the child [In re Ethan N. (2004)122 Cal. App. 4th 55, 66, 18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 504] . The juvenile court has broad discretion when determining whether further reunification services would be in the best interests of the child under Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(c), and an appellate court will only reverse that finding if there is a clear abuse of discretion [In re William B. (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 1220, 1229, 78 Cal. Rptr. 3d 91 , citing In re Angelique C. (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 509, 523, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 395] . But where there is no substantial evidence in the record to support the juvenile court's finding that further services would be in the child's best interests, an order for such services is an abuse of discretion [In re William B. (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 1220, 1229, 78 Cal. Rptr. 3d 91] . This applies to the social services agency as well. Sometimes, notwithstanding the existence of a statutory presumption against the provision of reunification services as set forth in Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b), the social services agency desires to provide reunification services to the parent or family. That desire alone does not authorize the court to order such services. Instead, if the agency desires to provide services notwithstanding a presumption against such services, the agency must present evidence on which the court can base a finding as required by statute that the provision of services is in the child's best interest or that it would be detrimental to the child not to attempt such services.

PRACTICE TIP:

Revisiting the Issue of Services With a Petition Pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 388. If reunification services are denied or later terminated, parents may still pursue services to work towards reunification on their own. If they make substantial progress and there is a change of circumstances that would make the provision of services or even reunification best for the child, the parent may file a petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 to seek that modification [In re Marilyn H. (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 295, 309, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 544, 851 P.2d 826 ; In re Eileen A. (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 1248, 1260-1261, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548] . The reverse is also true. If the juvenile court orders reunification services and circumstances change to justify the denial of services under Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b) or (e)(1), a petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 may be used to modify the court's prior order for services and enter a new order denying services in the child's best interest [Sheila S. v. Superior Court (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 872, 877-879, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 187] . All parties on either side of the services issue should be alert for a change in circumstances that makes it best for the child to file a Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 petition seeking to modify a previous order granting or denying services.

[c] Setting a Selection and Implementation Hearing When Reunification Services Are Not Ordered

If the court, pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(2)-(15) or Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(e)(1), does not order reunification services, the disposition hearing is also considered a permanency hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(f)]. In this way the court is determining the permanent plan for the child. Rather than returning the child to the parent as a permanent plan, the child will instead receive an alternative permanency plan of adoption, guardianship, or long-term foster or relative care. The court must then direct that a hearing pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 be held within 120 days of the disposition and permanency hearing to select and implement the specific alternative permanency plan [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(f)]. The court, however, may not schedule a hearing so long as the other parent is being provided reunification services pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(a) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(f)] because permanent plans are ordered as to children, not as to parents. Unless services to all parents whose rights have not otherwise been terminated have either been denied or tried and terminated, the case is not ready for a permanent plan to be selected and implemented for the child [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.725(h) (purpose of termination of parental rights)].

If the juvenile court orders a selection and implementation hearing following the denial of reunification services, it must orally advise all parties present, and advise by first class mail all parties who are not present, that if the party wishes to preserve any right to review on appeal of the order the court made setting the matter for a hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26, the person must seek an extraordinary writ by filing a Notice of Intent to File Writ Petition and Request for Record [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.450; see Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(l); see also discussion in § 328.190 et seq.].

[3] Concurrent Reunification Plans and Services

The reunification plan is part of the overall child welfare services case plan for the child and family [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16501.1(f)(9)]. The specific reunification plan and services ordered must be designed to serve the particular needs of the individual family related to the reasons the child came into the system [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300], the reasons the child had to be removed from the custodial parent [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(c)], and the reasons for non-placement with the non-custodial parent if that parent is seeking custody [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(a); In re Terry H. (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 1847, 1857, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 271] . The reunification plan may also include requirements to address parental problems that will interfere with the reunification process even though the problems were not themselves sufficient to justify jurisdiction. For instance, the inclusion of a substance abuse component in a reunification plan was not found to be an abuse of discretion where the parent had a substance abuse problem that would interfere with reunification. This was despite the fact that the jurisdictional allegation regarding the parent's substance abuse negatively affecting his ability to parent was found not true [In re Christopher H. (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 1001, 1006-1008, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 861] . A reunification or service plan cannot, however, require a parenting class by a nonoffending parent if there is no evidence either the parent or the child would benefit from the parenting class [In re Jasmine C. (2003) 106 Cal. App. 4th 177, 178-179, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 558] .

Reunification plans must be case limited, case specific, and tailored to the needs of the family. The social services agency and the juvenile court must make a good faith effort to develop and implement these plans [see In re Christina L. (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 404, 414, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 680 ; In re Misako R. (1991) 2 Cal. App. 4th 538, 545, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 217 ; see also California Ctr. for Jud. Educ. and Research, Cal. Judges Benchguides, Benchguide 102: Juvenile Dependency Disposition Hearing (Jan. 2009) § 102.64 to 102.65, pp. 102-61 to 102-62].

PRACTICE TIP:

Case Limited and Case Specific. Reunification plans need to be case limited and case specific. A plan is case limited when it only includes those services actually needed for the parent to achieve reunification. For instance, while most parents in dependency cases would benefit from a parenting class, not all need one to achieve reunification. Nor do they all need a psychological evaluation, individual counseling and drug testing, notwithstanding the fact that most might benefit from such requirements. The plan should be limited to what is needed. Where services are required, the plan must also be specific as to both the service and the goals. If a parenting class is needed the plan should specify what type of parenting class is required, what the parent is expected to learn, and how the parent should demonstrate that. Classes for parenting infants have different goals and content than those for parenting teenagers. If therapy is required the reunification plan should specify what type of therapy, what issues are to be addressed, and what progress is to be demonstrated. Case limited and case specific reunification plans are plans for success. They do not require more than the agency can provide or the parent can complete. Nor do they require more than is necessary. What they do require, however, are very specific services with well defined goals to enable the parent to make and demonstrate progress, not just participation. All parties, the agency, and the court should take an active role in ensuring the reunification plan in every case meets these requirements.

For further discussion of concurrent services planning, see §§ 328.12[9] and 328.129[7].

[4] Reunification Services for Incarcerated or Institutionalized Parents

If the parent or guardian is incarcerated or institutionalized, the court must order reasonable services, unless the court determines, by clear and convincing evidence, those services would be detrimental to the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(e)(1); Mark N. v. Superior Court (1998) 60 Cal. App. 4th 996, 1011, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 603] . In determining what services to order for a parent who is institutionalized or incarcerated, the court must consider the particular barriers to the parent or guardian accessing court mandated services and the ability of the parent or guardian to maintain contact with his or her child. The court must ensure this information is documented in the child's case plan. Services may include, but are not limited to, all of the following [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(e)(1)]:

- Maintaining contact between parent and child through collect phone calls.
- Transportation services, when appropriate.
- Visitation services, when appropriate.
- Reasonable services to extended family members or foster parents providing care for the child if the services are not detrimental to the child.

An incarcerated parent may be required to attend counseling, parenting classes, or vocational training programs as part of the service plan if these programs are available [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(e)(1)]. If the other parent assumes custody, reunification services are not required for an incarcerated parent who fails to request them under a specific available program [In re Jeanette R. (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 1338, 1342, 261 Cal. Rptr. 246 ; see Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(a)].

If the incarcerated parent is a woman seeking to participate in the community treatment program operated by the Department of Corrections [see Penal Code § 3410 et seq. (permitting release of mother and child or children to public or private facility in community suitable to needs of mother and child or children)], the court must determine whether the parent's participation in a program is in the child's best interest and whether it is suitable to meet the needs of the parent and child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(e)(3)].

If the court has ordered reunification services for an incarcerated parent, a good faith effort must be made to provide such services [Robin V. v. Superior Court (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 1158, 1164-1167, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 743 (finding such efforts had not been made for incarcerated parent)]. The social worker cannot evade the responsibility to provide such services by delegating to the incarcerated parent the responsibility of providing the social worker with a list of services available to the parent in the institution [In re Monica C. (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 296, 306-308, 36 Cal. Rptr. 2d 910] . Of course, social services agencies are not involved in the operation of prisons, correctional and other custodial institutions, and have no direct say in where a parent is incarcerated or the services available within that institution [Mark N. v. Superior Court (1998) 60 Cal. App. 4th 996, 1013, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 603 , citing In re Ronell A. (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 1352, 1363, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 474] . Nevertheless, the social worker must contact the institution to notify it that the incarcerated parent is in need of services, determine what services might be available, and explore the possibility of whether the institution can make changes to facilitate the provision of such services "consistent with legitimate prison and public safety concerns" [Mark N. v. Superior Court (1998) 60 Cal. App. 4th 996, 1013, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 603] . Further, if the prison allows visitation and is not excessively distant, the reunification plan and the services provided must include ongoing visitation between the incarcerated parent and the child [In re Jonathan M. (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 1234, 1237-1238, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 208 ; In re Monica C. (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 296, 306-307, 36 Cal. Rptr. 2d 910 , citing In re Brittany S. (1993) 17 Cal. App. 4th 1399, 1406-1407, 22 Cal. Rptr. 2d 50] . Moreover, the age of the child alone, without some evidence showing how the age of the child makes visitation with an incarcerated parent contrary to the child's best interests, is not sufficient to deny visitation [In re Dylan T. (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 765, 774, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 684] .

Reunification services for an incarcerated or institutionalized parent are subject to the normal time limitations which apply to all parents [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(e)(1); see Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(a)].

[5] Visitation for Parents

"No visitation order shall jeopardize the safety of the child" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 362.1(a)(2)]. Although this mandate is set forth by the legislature in the context of visitation orders with parents, its essence is equally applicable to all visitation orders.

[a] Terms and Conditions of Visitation

To maintain ties between the parent and child, and to provide information relevant to deciding if and when to return a child to the custody of his or her parent or guardian, every order placing a child in foster care and ordering reunification services must provide for visitation between the parent or guardian and the child. Visitation must be as frequent as possible, consistent with the well-being of the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 362.1(a)(1)]. But the court will not issue any visitation order that jeopardizes the safety of the child. And in making visitation orders, the court may keep the child's address confidential to protect the safety of the child. [Welf. & Inst. Code § 362.1(a)(2)]. Moreover, if the parent has been convicted of murder in the first degree of the other parent, the court shall only order visitation between the parent and the child "if that order would be consistent with" Fam. Code § 3030, which provides that in such circumstances no person so convicted may receive custody of, or unsupervised visitation with the child "unless the court finds that there is no risk to the child's health, safety, and welfare, and states the reasons for its finding in writing or on the record" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 362.1(a)(2); Fam. Code § 3030(c)]. If the child has been placed out of state, one court of appeal has noted it could find "no authority for the juvenile court ordering the Department to pay" for the cost of the parent flying monthly to the other state for visitation [Los Angeles County Dep't of Children & Family Servs. v. Superior Court (1997) 60 Cal. App. 4th 1088, 1093, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 658] .

Visitation for parents can also serve as a means of maintaining a relationship between a parent and child when reunification is not possible or is not accomplished [In re Nicholas B. (2001) 88 Cal. App. 4th 1126, 1138, 106 Cal. Rptr. 2d 465] . In this way visitation within the reunification program may provide the basis for an exception to the termination of parental rights if the parent-child relationship maintained is sufficiently beneficial to the child to make termination of rights detrimental under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B)(i). Thus, visitation may result in the selection of a permanent plan other than adoption, thereby allowing the parent to maintain their parental interests [cf. In re Monica C. (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 296, 306-310, 36 Cal. Rptr. 2d 910] .

If the juvenile court orders custody to a noncustodial parent, the court may make visitation orders for the other parent [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.700(a)]. The order must be prepared on Judicial Council form of Custody Order--Juvenile Final Judgment (JV-200) [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.700(a)(2)]. If the court is considering making juvenile court custody and visitation orders and terminating its jurisdiction pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 362.4, the court should hear evidence on the question of those orders [In re Michael W. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 190, 194-196 (choosing to follow Roger S., not Elaine E.); In re Roger S. (1992) 4 Cal. App. 4th 25, 30, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 208 (declining to follow Elaine E. and holding court should hear evidence on visitation issue where making custody orders); but see In re Elaine E. (1990) 221 Cal. App. 3d 809, 814, 270 Cal. Rptr. 489 (court did not err by refusing to allow noncustodial parent to present evidence at review hearing in support of request for change in visitation)].

The determination of the right to visitation, the length of visitation, and the frequency of visitation are a part of a judicial function and must be made by the court. The implementation and administration of the court's order, however, may properly be delegated to the Department of Social Services. These ministerial tasks that may be delegated include the time, place, and manner of visitation. The court's order cannot, however, impermissibly delegate to the social worker, children's therapist, or other person unlimited discretion to determine whether visitation is to occur [In re Donnovan J. (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 1474, 1476-1478, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 714 (granting therapist sole discretion to determine if visitation should occur was unlawful delegation of authority); In re Moriah T. (1994) 23 Cal. App. 4th 1367, 1373-1377, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 705 (rejecting dictum in In re Jennifer G. (1990) 221 Cal. App. 3d 752, 755, 756-757, 270 Cal. Rptr. 326 (that court should determine frequency and length of visitation); see also In re Danielle W. (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 1227, 1233-1238, 255 Cal. Rptr. 344 (approving order of visitation "at [Department's] discretion and the children's discretion")]. Nor can the court allow the child to control whether visitation occurs, although the child's desires may be a dominant factor in a court's determination as to visitation [In re S.H. (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 310, 317-319, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 465 ; In re Nicholas B. (2001) 88 Cal. App. 4th 1126, 1138-1139, 106 Cal. Rptr. 2d 465 ; In re Julie M. (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 41, 51, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 354] .

If the court does not order reunification services, the court may continue to permit the parent to visit the child unless it finds that visitation would be detrimental to the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(f)].

Juvenile court visitation orders may be changed by an application for modification under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 [see discussion in § 328.140 et seq.].

[b] Denial of Visitation

The juvenile court can deny visitation to a parent if it finds that visitation would be detrimental to the child [In re Mark L. (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 573, 580, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 499 ; In re David D. (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 941, 954, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 861] . There is a split of authority, however, as to whether that detriment must be proven by clear and convincing evidence or only by a preponderance of the evidence. The Dylan T. and Manolito L. decisions best illustrate this split [In re Dylan T. (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 765, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 684 ; In re Manolito L. (2001) 90 Cal. App. 4th 753, 760, 109 Cal. Rptr. 2d 282] .

In the Dylan T. case, the appellate court recognized that visitation might be found detrimental to a child based on a single factor or a combination of factors, although a child's young age alone is not enough. Regardless, the evidence must show by clear and convincing evidence that visitation would be detrimental to the child before a parent can be denied visitation [In re Dylan T. (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 765, 773-774, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 684] . Further support for this conclusion that clear and convincing evidence is the appropriate standard of proof for denying visitation to a parent, is that parenting is a fundamental right [In re Kieshia E. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 68, 76, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 775, 859 P.2d 1290 ; In re Jennifer G. (1990) 221 Cal. App. 3d 752, 756-757, 270 Cal. Rptr. 326] . The Legislature has declared that visitation between dependent siblings can only be denied if it is found to be detrimental by clear and convincing evidence [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 362.1(a)(2), 16002(b)]. Since sibling contact is not, in most instances, a fundamental right, but parenting is, it would be inappropriate to apply a lesser standard of proof for denying a parent visitation.

In the Manolito L. decision, however, a different appellate court reached a different conclusion. The court noted the standard for granting a petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 for a change of placement is only a preponderance of the evidence. The standard of proof for denying visitation under that same section should not be any different [In re Manolito L. (2001) 90 Cal. App. 4th 753, 760, 109 Cal. Rptr. 2d 282] . Further, in the absence of a statute specifying the standard of proof, Evid. Code § 115 dictates the standard of proof is a preponderance of the evidence [In re Manolito L. (2001) 90 Cal. App. 4th 753, 760-761, 109 Cal. Rptr. 2d 282 , citing In re Marquis D. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 1813, 1827, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 198 , and In re Cheryl H. (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d 1098, 1114, 200 Cal. Rptr. 789] . The appellate court also noted that the Legislature knew how to require clear and convincing evidence when it desired the higher standard to apply. Its failure to require the higher standard of proof in the review hearing statutes indicates it did not intend the higher standard of proof to apply to the denial of visitation after disposition [In re Manolito L. (2001) 90 Cal. App. 4th 753, 761-762, 109 Cal. Rptr. 2d 282] . Finally, the court found the requirements of due process do not mandate application of the higher standard of proof [In re Manolito L. (2001) 90 Cal. App. 4th 753, 762-764, 109 Cal. Rptr. 2d 282] . Its due process analysis was consistent with that of the Supreme Court in Cynthia D. in which it was held parental rights could be constitutionally terminated under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 despite the fact some of the findings made in dependency proceedings are made by only a preponderance of the evidence [Cynthia D. v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 242, 253-256, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 698, 851 P.2d 1307] .

The Dylan T. and Manolito L. decisions are not without their flaws, however. In reaching its conclusion for the application of the higher standard of proof, the Dylan T. court looked to the standard of proof for denying all services to an incarcerated parent under Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(e)(1), rather than any statute dealing strictly with visitation as an order separate from the grant or denial of reunification services [In re Dylan T. (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 765, 770-771, 773-775, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 684] . In reaching its holding for the lower standard of proof, the Manolito L. court overlooked that the standard of proof for removing a child from a parent through the use of a petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 is clear and convincing evidence, not a preponderance of the evidence [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.570(h)(1)]. Further, although the preponderance of the evidence standard normally applies in the absence of a legislative mandate otherwise, that is not always the case. In the Marquis D. decision cited by the Manolito L. court, it was held denying placement to a previously non-custodial parent could only be constitutionally done if it was shown to be detrimental to the child by clear and convincing evidence, notwithstanding the absence of a requirement for the higher standard of proof in Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(a) [In re Marquis D. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 1813, 1828-1829, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 198] .

Thus, the analysis and holdings of both Dylan T. and Manolito L. have strengths and weaknesses. One way to reconcile the two decisions would be to recognize the different stages in the proceedings at which the denial of visitation order was made. In Dylan T. the appellate court was reviewing an order denying visitation that was made at a disposition hearing [In re Dylan T. (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 765, 767, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 684] . In Manolito L. the appellate court was reviewing an order denying a request for visitation raised through a petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 after disposition [In re Manolito L. (2001) 90 Cal. App. 4th 753, 755, 759-762, 109 Cal. Rptr. 2d 282] . Therefore, it could be argued the higher standard of proof should apply at disposition and the lower standard of proof should apply at later proceedings. This would recognize that later in the dependency process a finding for removal of the child from the custodial parent's home and the non-placement of the child in the previously non-custodial parent's home has already been made by clear and convincing evidence [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(c); In re Marquis D. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 1813, 1828-1829, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 198] . This oversimplifies the issue, however, and the analysis still contains potential flaws.

The proper standard of proof for denying parents visitation is something about which reasonable minds can and do differ. Even child advocates can justifiably argue on either side of the issue. The better practice may be to provide parents with visitation unless it is shown by clear and convincing evidence the visitation would be detrimental to the child. Lesser evidence of detriment to the child can then provide the basis for restricting the frequency, length, and conditions of visitation, including requiring any visitation be held in a supervised or therapeutic setting. Until either the Supreme Court or the Legislature resolves this issue, however, it is likely trial and appellate courts will disagree on the proper standard of proof for denying parents visitation. This is an area to be watched for further developments.

[c] Standard of Review

The juvenile court is afforded wide discretion in determining the appropriate terms and conditions of visitation between dependent children and their parents [In re Megan B. (1991) 235 Cal. App. 3d 942, 953, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 177] . Thus, in most cases in which an appellate court is reviewing a juvenile court's visitation order, the proper standard of review is the abuse of discretion standard [In re Julie M. (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 41, 48-51, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 354] .

The standard of review for a juvenile court order that denies a parent visitation, however, has not always been clear. A finding that visitation would be detrimental to the child is a factual finding. Factual findings are normally reviewed using the substantial evidence standard. In the area of the denial of visitation, courts have sometimes mixed the two standards of review, holding that if there is substantial evidence to support the court's order, there was no abuse of discretion. For instance, in the Daniel C.H. case, the appellate court held, "substantial evidence supports the trial court's order of no visitation. There was no abuse of discretion" [In re Daniel C.H. (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 814, 839, 269 Cal. Rptr. 624] . The better approach, however, is to recognize that defining the terms and conditions of visitation is very different from denying visitation. The first is done as part of the juvenile court's broad discretion. The second can only be done if the court finds visitation would be detrimental to the child. Thus, if the juvenile court denies visitation, the appellate court should utilize the substantial evidence standard of review to determine whether substantial evidence supports the detriment finding [see, e.g., In re Mark L. (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 573, 581, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 499 ; In re Cheryl H. (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d 1098, 1133, 200 Cal. Rptr. 789] .

[6] Visitation With Grandparents

When the court has ordered removal of the child from the physical custody of his or her parents pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 361 (grounds for removal), the court must consider whether or not the family ties and best interests of the child will be served by granting visitation rights with the child to the child's grandparents. The court must clearly specify those rights to the supervising social worker [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(h)].

[7] Sibling Placement, Contact, and Visitation

Sibling relationships can be very important to children, particularly when one or more of the children are removed from parental custody. When a child is brought into custody under Welf. & Inst. Code § 306, the social worker is to place the child with any other siblings or half-siblings who are also detained, if that is practical and appropriate. If the child is not placed with the other siblings or half-siblings who are also detained, the report prepared pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 319 is to include a statement of the social worker's continuing efforts to place the siblings together or why such efforts are not appropriate [Welf. & Inst. Code § 306.5]. Social services agencies are to make a "diligent effort" to develop and maintain sibling relationships for dependent children. If siblings are not placed together, the social worker must explain why they have not been placed together in the same home and what efforts the worker is making to place the siblings in the same home, or why such efforts are not appropriate [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16002(b)]. If siblings cannot be placed together, diligent effort must be made by the agency to provide frequent interaction among siblings until family reunification is achieved [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16002(b)]. When the child has been removed from the custody of the parents, the juvenile court must consider whether there are any siblings under the court's jurisdiction, the nature of the relationship between the children, the appropriateness of developing or maintaining the sibling relationships, and the impact of those relationships on the child's placement and planning for legal permanence [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(i)]. The court can even consider the emotional harm a child will suffer if separated from siblings in determining whether placing the child with a previously noncustodial parent would be detrimental to the child [In re Luke M. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 1412, 1419-1427, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 907] .

Sibling visitation is not new in dependency cases. Even before statutes mandated sibling visitation, case law held the requirement for the court to consider the best interests of the child included "an implicit requirement that the court consider whether continuing sibling visitation is in the child's best interest" [In re Elizabeth M. (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 553, 569, 283 Cal. Rptr. 483] . Dependency statutes now make that requirement explicit. They also require the child's caregiver be provided information regarding any court-ordered sibling visitation, including any terms and conditions for facilitating that visitation safely, as soon as possible after the order for the sibling visitation is made [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 362.1(a)(2), 16501.1(f)(8)(B)]. In any case in which reunification services are ordered, the court must order that sibling visitation take place pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 16002 unless the court finds by clear and convincing evidence that sibling interaction is detrimental to either child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 362.1(a)(2)]. The appropriateness of such a high burden of proof for this determination is subject to substantial question. While sibling contact is often beneficial for children, that is not always the case. Further, it is inconsistent with the goal of the safety, protection, physical and emotional well-being of dependent children to mandate visitation between siblings if the juvenile court finds by a preponderance of the evidence that such visitation is detrimental to either child or not in the best interest of one or both of the children. Thus, although well intended, this provision may violate the rights of children in certain cases. For this reason, while child and family advocates usually support the concept of sibling interaction in most cases, many such advocates question this very high standard. This is an area that should be watched for further developments.

A person who desires to assert a sibling relationship with a child who is either a dependent of the juvenile court or the subject of a dependency petition may petition the court to assert that relationship. The petition is to be filed pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(b) and may seek visitation with the dependent child, placement with or near the dependent child, consideration in developing or implementing a case plan or permanent plan for the dependent child, or any other order that may be in the best interest of the dependent child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(b)]. The dependent child may also file such a petition and, if necessary for the dependent child's best interests, the court may appoint a guardian ad litem to file the petition for the dependent child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(b)]. Any such petition must be verified and set forth the following [Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(b)(1)-(4)]: through which parent he or she is related to the dependent child, whether the sibling relationship is by blood, adoption, or affinity, what request or order is sought, and why that request or order is in the best interest of the dependent child. This new provision of Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 does not require there to have been a prior order that is sought to be changed, modified, or set aside [compare Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(a) with Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(b)]. This is understandable, since there may have been no prior order recognizing the existence of the sibling relationship and addressing issues of placement, visitation, or plans. For further discussion of petitions under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388, see § 328.140.

Sibling relationships must also be considered if reunification services are denied to the parent and, if parental rights are terminated, as part of developing the permanent plan for the child [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361.2(i), 362.1(b), 16002(b)]. In very limited circumstances, sibling relationships can even influence the selection of a permanent plan for children [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(E) (substantial interference with sibling relationship exception to termination of parental rights)]. If a child is part of a sibling group that is placed together and for whom adoption as a sibling group is desired, the child may be difficult to place for adoption, resulting in the permanency planning process being extended while further efforts to locate an adoptive family are made [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(3)]. The goal of developing and maintaining sibling relationships and the goal of providing children with safe, stable, permanent homes, with adoption being the preferred permanent plan for children who are not returned to the custody of a parent, are not inconsistent in most cases. The dependency system and its participants must make a sincere effort, when possible and appropriate, to place dependent children in homes that will facilitate ongoing relationships between siblings on a long-term basis. This may mean placement as a sibling group in a home willing to provide legal permanency for all of the children, or providing for contact between siblings in different homes even after permanency plans are selected and implemented [see, e.g., Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.29 (postadoption sibling contact provisions)]. If a prospective adoptive family intends to adopt a sibling group, the siblings are to be assigned the same social worker unless the social services agency determines that assigning the same social worker to all of the children would not be in the best interest of one or more of the children, or of the operation of the agency [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16005]. For a discussion of the "substantial interference with sibling relationship" exception to the termination of parental rights, see § 328.171[5][a][v].

As used in these sections, "sibling" means a child who is related to another person by blood, adoption, or affinity through a common legal or biological parent [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 362.1(c), 16002(f)]. "Affinity" refers to the "connection existing between one spouse and the blood or adoptive relatives of the other spouse" [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.502(1)].

[8] Other People Important to the Child

Parents, relatives, siblings, and caregivers are not the only people significant to children. Other people may be important to a child as well. This may be especially true for children in the dependency system who may not have regular contact with the family members, including parents and siblings, who were in their lives prior to coming into the dependency system.

Beginning January 1, 2004, a number of statutory provisions have been enacted to address the issue of people who are important to the child other than parents, relatives, and siblings. Initially, the primary focus of these provisions were children who were 10 years of age or older and had been placed in a group home for six months or longer from the date the child entered foster care [Welf. & Inst. Code former §§ 366(a)(1)(B), 366.1(g)]. Now the statutory provisions pertain to all children who are 10 years of age or older and who have been in out of home care for six months or longer from the date the child entered foster care as described by Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.49 [Welf. & Inst. Code §§

366(a)(1)(B), 366.1(g), 366.35]. The new provisions are being phased in gradually [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.35].

Social workers must ask dependent children 10 years of age or older who have been in out of home placement for six months or longer from the date the child entered foster care whether there are people important to the child, other than siblings, consistent with the child's best interest. The social worker may also ask dependency children younger than 10 years old who are in groups home whether there are any people important to the child, other than siblings, consistent with the child's best interest [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.1(g)].

Review reports are to include information regarding efforts to maintain relationships between a child who is 10 years of age or older and has been place in out of home placement for six months or longer from the date the child entered foster care and any individuals important to the child, consistent with the child's best interest [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 366.1(g), 366.21(c)]. At review hearings the court must consider this information and make such orders as are appropriate in this regard, consistent with the child's best interest [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366(a)(1)(B)]. If a child is found difficult to place for adoption and the child's hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 is continued for additional efforts to find an adoptive placement, the agency must ask a child 10 years of age or older who has been in out of home placement for six months or longer from the date the child entered foster care, and may ask a child under 10 years of age, to identify persons who are important to the child. This is to help identify potential adoptive placements [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(3)]. Further, for any child given a permanent plan of long-term foster care in out of home placement for six months or longer from the date the child entered foster care who is 10 years of age or older, the court must determine whether the social services agency has made reasonable efforts to maintain relationships between the child and individuals other than the child's siblings who are important to the child, consistent with the best interests of the child, and may make appropriate orders for the maintenance of those relationships [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 366.21(g), 366.22(a)]. For children with a plan of long-term foster care or another planned permanent living arrangement, who are not in relative care or a group home, the social worker and court must also address this issue [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.3(e)]. Finally, when dependent children turn 18 and are to leave the dependency system, the social services agency must provide assistance in maintaining relationships with individuals who are important to the child if the child had been placed in out of home care for six months or longer from the date the child entered foster care, consistent with the child's best interests [Welf. & Inst. Code § 391(b)(5)].

It is best practice to determine and consider whether there are individuals who are important to children in the dependency system, regardless of the dependent child's age or placement. All parties and participants, including social workers, court appointed special advocates, and children's counsel, should be encouraged to determine and consider whether such people exist in a dependent child's life and what steps, if any, should be taken to facilitate and maintain such relationships whenever reasonably possible and appropriate, consistent with the child's best interest.

[9] Concurrent Permanency Planning Services

Concurrent services planning in California is defined as:

> The process of immediate, simultaneous and continuous assessment and case plan development that provides a continuum of options to achieve early, family-based permanency for every child removed from his or her family. Concurrent services planning is a court/agency/family collaboration which must include the probability of reunification, availability of extended family resources and identification of a family who will commit to legal permanency for the child [The Governor's Adoptions Initiative: Progress Report II, Report to the Legislature February 1, 1997 & March 1, 1997, California Department of Social Services, p. 19 (1997)].

More simply stated, "Concurrent planning provides for reunification services while simultaneously developing an alternative plan, in case it is needed" [Katz, Spoonemore, & Robinson, Concurrent Planning: From Permanency Planning to Permanency Action, Lutheran Social Services of Washington and Idaho, p. 9 (1994)]. Thus,

> In concurrent services planning, alternative forms of permanency are identified, and implemented early in the case planning process. The case plan addresses both how reunification can be achieved ... and how legal permanency ... can be achieved if efforts to reunify fail. ... The development of both tracks simultaneously is necessary to achieve the goal of timely, legal permanency [Concurrent Services Planning: Resource Guide, California Department of Social Services, p. I-3 (rev. 6/19/98)].

Concurrent services planning "is both a philosophy and a case management method emphasizing candor, goal setting and time limits" in the agency and juvenile court's working with parents and families in the dependency system [Katz, Spoonemore, & Robinson, Concurrent Planning: From Permanency Planning to Permanency Action, Lutheran Social Services of Washington and Idaho, p. 9 (1994)]. To effect this, the child welfare services case plan developed for a child and his or her family and the social study must now include such concurrent services planning for permanency where reunification services are being provided [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 358.1(b); 16501.1(f)(9)]. Thus, in any case where the child is placed outside of the parent's home and reunification services are ordered, there must be two concurrent services "tracks": the concurrent reunification services track and the concurrent permanency planning track. This is a major shift from the "sequential" planning that was done under previous law. Now, instead of waiting until after reunification efforts fail to begin permanency planning efforts, both must considered and worked towards concurrently.

As part of the effort to achieve early stability and permanence for children, the social study must also indicate that the parent has been advised of the option of participating in adoption planning for the child, including the option of entering into a postadoption contact agreement, and relinquishing the child voluntarily if an adoption agency is willing to accept the relinquishment [Welf. & Inst. Code § 358.1(f)]. Even after the child is a dependent, the parent has the option of relinquishing the child if the agency is willing to accept the relinquishment [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(b)]. The parent may also waive reunification services [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(14)].

Moreover, the law now specifically requires that the disposition social study include information regarding whether the caregiver is willing and desires to provide legal permanency for the child if reunification efforts fail [Welf. & Inst. Code § 358.1(i)]. One of the factors to consider in considering potential relative placements is the relative's desire to provide legal permanency for the child if reunification efforts fail [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.3(a)(6)]. The law also provides that the fact a child has been placed in a preadoptive home or with a family that is eligible to adopt the child, that the case plan includes services to achieve legal permanence if reunification fail, or that such services to achieve permanency were provided concurrently with reunification services shall not be deemed, in and of itself, a failure to provide or offer reasonable reunification services to the parent or guardian [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 366.21(e), (f), 366.22(a)]. Such potential permanency placements are not limited to foster homes, but may include relative placements as well [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.3(a)(6), (a)(7)(H)].

Concurrent services planning helps emphasize that the number one permanent plan for children in California is return to parents when it can be done safely [see Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361.5(a) (services can be extended up to 18 months if it can be shown "that the permanent plan for the child is that he or she will be returned and safely maintained in the home within the extended time period"), 366.3(g) (at post permanency planning review for child in another planned permanent living arrangement, such as permanent placement with a foster or relative caregiver committed to caring for the child on a permanent basis "the court shall consider all permanency planning options for the child including whether the child should be returned to the home of the parent")]. Indeed, return to parents is the only permanent plan that accomplishes all three of the goals of the dependency system: protection of the child, preservation of the family, and the provision of a stable, permanent home. Where efforts to reunify fail, however, the child should not have to wait for legal permanence and stability. Thus, concurrent services planning provides an excellent way to work towards both reunification with the parent and legal permanence for the child if reunification fails. Taking concurrent planning objectives into account when making early placement decisions may help to minimize the disruption and trauma children often have to experience when a permanent placement is sought after reunification efforts fail, resulting in the child needing to be moved. Nevertheless, despite the positive benefits of concurrent services planning, all parties and the court must be very sensitive to the potential for conflicts between concurrent reunification efforts and concurrent permanency planning efforts.

PRACTICE TIP:

Watch For And Openly Discuss Concurrent Services Planning. The federal Adoption and Safe Families Act of 1997 and concurrent services planning are not without their detractors [see, e.g., Brooks, The Case for Adoption Alternatives, 39 Fam. Ct. Rev. 43 (2001); Gordon, Drifting Through Byzantium: The Promise and Failure of the Adoption and Safe Families Act of 1997, 83 Minn. L. Rev. 637 (1999)]. Their arguments are better made to the legislature, however, than to the trial court. In the trenches of the juvenile dependency system, social services agencies statewide are working to develop and implement their approaches to concurrent services planning. While the first indication of such planning may be the social study, CASAs, attorneys and judicial officers involved in dependency proceedings should be alert for such concurrent planning to be taking place at all stages of the proceedings. The need for agencies, CASAs, courts, and attorneys to discuss how concurrent planning will take place in their respective counties is great. Moreover, as concurrent planning is implemented and counties see what works and what doesn't work, the need for ongoing discussion regarding and development of this philosophy and practice will continue.

Concurrent permanency planning services will vary from case to case, just as concurrent reunification services do. Parents and family members should be encouraged to be involved in decision making regarding relative placements, potential permanency placements, and the entire reunification and permanency planning process. In an appropriate case, this may result in going directly to a legal guardianship or in the waiver of services and the setting of a hearing pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 360(a), 361.5(b)(14)].

In some cases the plan for the child will be to place the child in a permanency planning placement that is prepared to provide legal permanence for this child should reunification efforts fail. For younger children this will probably be a relative or foster home placement willing to consider adoption. For older children this may simply be a home willing to accept legal guardianship. Although not a determinative issue to be considered in the dependency proceeding itself, if the child is placed in a home that is willing to adopt the child if efforts to reunify fail, postadoption contact agreements if parental rights are terminated may also be discussed as part of concurrent permanency planning services [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.29]. In an appropriate case, sibling placement, visitation, and permanency planning may also be discussed as part of concurrent services planning [see, e.g., Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 306.5, 388(b), 366.26(c)(1)(B)(v), 16002].

It is hoped that in many cases discussions with parents regarding concurrent permanency planning will result in parents being more diligent in their reunification efforts and in the permanent plan of reunification being achieved. It is also hoped that in those cases in which reunification is unlikely, discussions with parents regarding concurrent permanency planning may result in parents participating in permanency planning and voluntarily relinquishing their child for adoption. Where it does not, however, it may still result in a less traumatic transition for the family and the child to an alternative plan of legal permanence for the child, such as adoption or guardianship. Regardless, if implemented correctly, concurrent permanency planning will result in children suffering fewer placements and in their receiving stability and permanence in a more timely fashion.

PRACTICE TIP:

Findings and Orders for Concurrent Permanency Planning. Concurrent permanency planning is required in all cases in which reunification services are ordered. Thus, courts should review the plans for achieving legal permanence if reunification efforts fail that are to be included in each social study and review report. If such information is not contained in the report, the court should find out why and take steps to ensure concurrent permanency planning efforts are made. If included in the report, the court should indicate, just as it does with reunification plans, that it has read and considered the plan for achieving legal permanence if reunification efforts fail, and whether reasonable efforts to develop and implement an alternative permanency plan for the child have been made. Thereafter, the court should make such other orders as it deems necessary and appropriate to ensure concurrent permanency planning efforts are appropriately made. Agency attorneys, counsel for children, and court-appointed special advocates should bring the need for and appropriateness of such findings and orders to the court's attention should the court not address the issue on its own.

For further discussion of concurrent services planning, see §§ 328.12[9] and 328.129[3].

[10] Americans With Disabilities Act

Recently a new argument has been heard in dependency cases involving parents with special needs and disabilities. In addition to arguing social services agencies have not complied with state law regarding reasonable efforts for such parents [In re Victoria M. (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 1317, 1327-1330, 255 Cal. Rptr. 498] , attorneys for parents are also raising the challenge that the agency's failures violate the Americans With Disabilities Act (ADA). Courts in some states have assumed it does [see, e.g., In re Angel B. (Me. 1995) 659 A.2d 277, 279 ; Robinson (Wash. 1995) 78 Wn. App. 222, 229-230, 896 P.2d 1298, 1302 ; In the Interest of C.M. (Iowa 1994) 526 N.W.2d 562, 566 ; see also Stone v. Daviess County Div. of Children & Family Servs. (Ind. 1995) 656 N.E.2d 824, 830] .

Congress knows how to make federal law directly applicable to state court proceedings such that it can be raised within those proceedings. Indeed, it did so with the Indian Child Welfare Act [25 U.S.C. § 1901 et seq.]. That it did not do so with the ADA suggests a different legislative intent [Cf. In re Chantal S. (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 196, 206-207, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 866, 913 P.2d 1075] . Thus, the better view is that the ADA creates a separate, private, federal cause of action that can be instituted in federal court separate and apart from any challenge raised under state law in the dependency action. An alleged violation of the ADA regarding services cannot be raised in the state dependency proceeding. This is the position taken in other states in which the issue has been examined [In re B.S. (Vt. 1997) 166 Vt. 345, 693 A.2d 716, 720-722 ; In the Interest of Torrance P. (Wis. 1994) 187 Wis. 2d 10, 15-16, 522 N.W.2d 243, 245-246] . This is also the view that has now been adopted in California [In re Anthony P. (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 1112, 1115-1116, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 423 ; In re Diamond H. (2000) 82 Cal. App. 4th 1127, 98 Cal. Rptr. 2d 715 , disapproved on other grounds to the extent inconsistent, Renee J. v. Superior Court (2001) 26 Cal. 4th 735, 748, n. 6, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 828, 28 P.3d 876] . As noted in Diamond H., "the ADA does not directly apply to juvenile dependency proceedings and cannot be used as a defense in them." Thus, in Diamond H. the appellate court held the mother's claimed violation of the ADA could not be used to attack the juvenile court's order denying reunification services under Welf. & Inst. Code former § 361.5(b)(10) [In re Diamond H. (2000) 82 Cal. App. 4th 1127, 1139, 98 Cal. Rptr. 2d 715 , disapproved on other grounds to the extent inconsistent, Renee J. v. Superior Court (2001) 26 Cal. 4th 735, 748, n. 6, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 828, 28 P.3d 876] .

[11] Visitation for Teen Parent

If the dependent child is a teen parent who has custody of his or her child, and that child is not a dependent of the juvenile court, the court must make orders for visitation among the teen parent, the child's noncustodial parent, and appropriate family members, unless the court finds by clear and convincing evidence that such visitation would be detrimental to the teen parent [Welf. & Inst. Code § 362.1(a)(3)]. A shared responsibility plan shall also be developed [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16501.25].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329

CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
G. Disposition Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.130

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.130 Selecting Therapist or Evaluator

In many cases the juvenile court will direct that there be therapy or a psychological evaluation, but not make the actual selection of the therapist or evaluator. This has been found to be proper [In re Walter E. (1992) 13 Cal. App. 4th 125, 135-136, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 386 (juvenile court determines need for expert, the selection of whom is delegated to the social services department)]. As the court of appeal in Walter E. noted, "The Department ... is clearly the entity best able to perform the task of selecting the particular psychologist to perform a clinical examination" of the child [In re Walter E. (1992) 13 Cal. App. 4th 125, 137, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 386] . Although the juvenile court does not select the expert, it retains ultimate control over the exercise of this function through its review of the expert's report [In re Walter E. (1992) 13 Cal. App. 4th 125, 136, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 386] .

Moreover, the juvenile court need not appoint a second expert of the parent's choosing [In re Walter E. (1992) 13 Cal. App. 4th 125, 137, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 386 (parent has no due process right to appointment); In re Jennifer J. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 1080, 1084, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 813] . Rather, the parent may employ his or her own expert to evaluate the results of tests and data collected by the expert selected by the social services department, if applicable [In re Walter E. (1992) 13 Cal. App. 4th 125, 138, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 386] .

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329

CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
G. Disposition Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.131

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.131 Detention Pending Execution of Disposition Order

Whenever a person has been adjudged a dependent child of the juvenile court and has been committed or otherwise provided for, the court may order the child detained in a sheltered care facility, or otherwise as to the court seems fit, until execution of the order of commitment or of other disposition [Welf. & Inst. Code § 367(a)].

In any case in which a child is detained for more than 15 days pending the execution of the order of commitment or of any other disposition, the court will periodically review the case to determine whether the delay is reasonable. Such reviews are held at least every 15 days, commencing from the time the child was initially detained pending the execution of the order of commitment or of any other disposition. During the course of such review, the court will inquire regarding the action taken by the social services department to carry out its order, the reasons for the delay, and the effect of the delay on the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 367(b)].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
G. Disposition Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.132

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.132 Reduction of Public Assistance

If the parent or person legally responsible for the care of a child declared to be a dependent child of the court on the grounds that the home is an unfit place by reason of neglect, cruelty, depravity, or physical abuse receives public assistance or care, any portion of which is attributable to the child, a copy of the order of the court providing for the removal of the child from the home is furnished to the appropriate social services official, who reduces the public assistance and care furnished the parent or other person by the amount attributable to the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 363].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
G. Disposition Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.133

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.133 Setting a Six-Month Review

Once the juvenile court has completed making all of its findings and orders regarding the disposition of the case and if those orders include the continuing jurisdiction of the court under a family maintenance, family reunification or permanency planning order, the court shall set the matter for a future six-month review. The six-month review is to be held six months from the date of the disposition hearing, but not more than 12 months from the date the child entered foster care, and must be put on the appearance calendar [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 364(a), 366, 366.21(a), (e)]. The juvenile court must advise all persons present at the disposition hearing of the date of the review hearing, and of their right to be present and represented by counsel [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(a)].

For discussion of date for the six-month review hearing in cases in which the child has been removed from the home of the parent or guardian, see § 328.152.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
G. Disposition Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated §§ 328.134-328.139

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

[Reserved]

§§ 328.134[Reserved]

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
H. Supplemental and Subsequent Petitions

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.140

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.140 Petitions for Modification of Orders

[1] Availability

Petitions for modification of orders are brought under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388, can be filed by any interested person, and seek to modify a previous order of the juvenile court based upon new evidence or a change of circumstances which require a change in the court's order so as to serve the child's best interest [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.570]. The petition can also be used to address sibling relationship issues [Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(b)]. And it must be used if a party desires to terminate court ordered reunification services prior to the regularly scheduled review or permanency hearings for the child [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361.5(a)(1)(C), 388(c)].

Any order made by the juvenile court in the case of a dependent child subject to its jurisdiction, may at any time be changed, modified, or set aside, as the court deems proper, subject to certain statutory procedural requirements [Welf. & Inst. Code § 385]. One exception to this general rule is that once a court has terminated parental rights pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 it has no jurisdiction to modify its termination of parental rights order, except in the very limited situation in which the child asks that parental rights be reinstated because the child is no longer likely to be adopted [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(i); In re Ronald V. (1993) 13 Cal. App. 4th 1803, 1805-1806, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 334] .

Petitions for modification of court orders can be used in a wide variety of situations [see, e.g., Sheila S. v. Superior Court (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 872, 877-879, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 187 (to modify previous disposition order for reunification and have services denied under Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(2)); In re Michael D. (1997) 51 Cal. App. 4th 1074, 1080, 1086, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 575 (to set aside dependency guardianship and return child to mother); In re Jasmon O. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 398, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 85, 878 P.2d 1297 (to change permanency planning order); In re Stephanie M. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 295, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 595, 867 P.2d 706 (to seek a change in placement of the child); In re John F. (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 1365, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 225 (brought by dependent child to change permanent plan); In re Brandon C. (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 1168, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 571 (to show evidence of recantation of testimony on jurisdictional issue); In re Hirenia C. (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 504, 22 Cal. Rptr. 2d 443 (to seek visitation); In re Heather P. (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 886, 257 Cal. Rptr. 545 (to change orders after permanency planning hearing); Ansley v. Superior Court (1986) 185 Cal. App. 3d 477, 483-488, 229 Cal. Rptr. 771 (to raise due process challenge based upon lack of notice)]. They may also be used to obtain recognition of a sibling relationship and to address such issues as sibling visitation, placement, and case planning [Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(b)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Is a "388" Petition Needed? The question frequently arises as to whether a petition pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 is needed to raise a particular issue at a regularly scheduled review hearing or at some other statutory hearing within the dependency process. A simple test to answer this question is to ask the following: Is the issue sought to be raised one which the court must already consider at the hearing due to the criteria for the hearing which are set forth in statute, decisional law, or rules of court? If the answer is "yes," no petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 is necessary. If the answer is "no," a petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 is necessary. An example of this is the issue of whether such a petition is needed at a regularly scheduled post-permanency planning review hearing for a child in long-term foster care in order for the court to consider a request for a change in permanent plan. Since the court must already consider the "continuing appropriateness" of the child's permanent plan at that hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.3(e)(2)], no petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 is necessary for the court to consider such a request [In re John F. (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 1365, 1375, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 225 ; cf. San Diego County Dep't of Soc. Servs. v. Superior Court (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 882, 887-892, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 396, 919 P.2d 1329] . Should a party seek such a change between review hearings, however, when the matter of the child's permanent plan is not otherwise before the court, a petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 would be necessary.

The juvenile court, of course, has the inherent jurisdiction to modify any previously made interim order, except for the termination of parental rights, particularly if that order was erroneously or inadvertently made, or to prevent an injustice. Such modification can be made sua sponte, on the court's own motion, without a Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 petition. Notice and an opportunity to be heard are required [Welf. & Inst. Code § 385; Le Francois v. Goel (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 1094, 1104-1108, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 249, 112 P.3d 636] .

[2] General Requirements

Any parent or other person having an interest in a child who is a dependent child of the juvenile court, including the social worker and the child him or herself, may, on grounds of change of circumstance or new evidence, petition the court in the same action in which the child was found to be a dependent child for a hearing to change, modify, or set aside a previously made order of the court or to terminate the jurisdiction of the court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(a)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Person Filing Petition Need Not Be Party. The language of Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(a) allowing a petition for modification to be filed by any person having an interest in the child suggests that the person filing the petition need not be a party to the dependency proceedings so long as a recognizable interest in the child is demonstrated. A nonparty might have to utilize the procedures in Welf. & Inst. Code § 827 to obtain sufficient information to file the petition and would not be entitled to the appointment of counsel for the bringing of the petition. Nevertheless, this would allow such nonparties as CASAs and relatives to file petitions under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(a).

A petition may also be filed by any person who desires to assert a sibling relationship with a child who is either a dependent of the juvenile court, or the subject of a dependency petition. The petition may seek visitation with the dependent child, placement with or near the dependent child, consideration in developing or implementing a case plan or permanent plan for the dependent child, or any other order that may be in the best interest of the dependent child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(b)]. The dependent child may also file such a petition and, if necessary for the dependent child's best interests, the court may appoint a guardian ad litem to file the petition for the dependent child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(b)]. The primary purpose of this provision as enacted by the Legislature is to facilitate keeping dependent siblings together or in contact with each other while they are in the dependency system. Its applicability to nondependent siblings is limited and questionable, since the juvenile court has no jurisdiction over nondependent siblings.

PRACTICE TIP:

Standing to File Sibling Petition. Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(b) starts out with the words "Any person ..." This can be misleading if the entire sentence as to who can file a sibling petition is not read in context. Any person with a legally recognizable interest can file a petition for modification of a prior court order under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(a). But only persons seeking to file a petition "as a sibling related by blood, adoption, or affinity through a common legal or biological parent" may file a sibling petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(b). Thus, only dependent children, the siblings of dependent children, or those persons having legal custody of the dependent children or their siblings may file petitions under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(b). A parent whose parental rights have been terminated or who does not have legal custody of any of the children would not have standing to file a sibling petition [see In re Ronald V. (1993) 13 Cal. App. 4th 1803, 1805-1806, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 334 ; In re Frank L. (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 700, 702-704, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 88] . This is an area that should be watched for further developments.

If a party, including the dependent child, desires to terminate court-ordered reunification services prior to the date of the six-month review hearing for a child who was under 3 years of age at initial removal, or part of a sibling group with one such child, or prior to the 12-month permanency hearing for a child who was 3 years of age or older at the time of initial removal, petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 must be used [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(a)(1)]. The petition used for this purpose must allege one of the following two circumstances exist [Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(c)(1)]:

- A change of circumstance or new evidence exists that satisfies a condition set forth in Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b) or (e) exist justifying termination of court-ordered reunification services.

- The action or inaction of the parent or guardian including, but not limited to, the parent or guardian's failure to visit the child, or the failure of the parent or guardian to participate regularly and make substantive progress in a court-ordered treatment plan, creates a substantial likelihood that reunification will not occur.

In determining whether the parent or guardian has failed to visit the child or participate regularly or make progress in the treatment plan, the juvenile court must consider factors including, but not limited to, the parent or guardian's incarceration, institutionalization, or participation in a residential substance abuse treatment program [Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(c)(2)]. The juvenile court shall grant the petition and terminate reunification services only if it finds by a preponderance of evidence that reasonable services have been offered or provided, and that by clear and convincing evidence one of the conditions in Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(c)(1)(A) or (B) exists [Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(c)(3)]. Of course, before granting the petition the court must also find the termination of court ordered reunification services prior to the presumptive time is in the child's best interest.

The petition must be in writing [In re Baby Boy L. (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 596, 609, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 654] and on the Judicial Council Form JV-180. The petition must be verified and, if made by a person other than the child, must state the petitioner's relationship to or interest in the child and set forth in concise language any change of circumstance or new evidence that is alleged to require a change in the order or termination of jurisdiction [Welf. & Inst. Code § 388]. It is not enough to make general averments relating to new evidence or a change of circumstance without actually stating in the petition specific allegations describing the evidence which are alleged to constitute the new evidence or change of circumstances required for the granting of a hearing [In re Anthony W. (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 246, 250-251, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 422 ; In re Edward H. (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 584, 593, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745] .

If the petition is brought for the purpose of recognizing a sibling relationship or to address sibling visitation, placement, or case planning issues, the petition must be verified and set forth the following [Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(b)(1)-(4)]: through which parent he or she is related to the dependent child, whether the sibling relationship is by blood, adoption, or affinity, what request or order is sought, and why that request or order is in the best interest of the dependent child.

If the petition states a change of circumstance or new evidence, and it appears that the best interest of the child may be promoted by the proposed change of order or termination of jurisdiction, or that clear and convincing evidence supports revocation or termination of court-ordered reunification services, the court must grant a hearing on the petition. If the petition seeks recognition of a sibling relationship, a hearing must be ordered if it appears the best interests of the child may be promoted by recognition of the sibling relationship [Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(d)]. A petition for modification must be liberally construed in favor of its sufficiency for the granting of a hearing [In re Marilyn H. (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 295, 309, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 544, 851 P.2d 826 , citing In re Jeremy W. (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 1407, 1413-1414, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 148 , and In re Heather P. (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 886, 891, 257 Cal. Rptr. 545] . It is not necessary that the petitioner show a probability of prevailing on the petition at a full hearing. The petitioner only needs to make a prima facie showing to trigger the requirement of a full hearing [In re Aljamie D. (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 424, 432, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 811 ; In re Hashem H. (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1791, 1798-1799, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 294] .

If the petition fails to state any change of circumstance or new evidence that might require a change of order or termination of jurisdiction, the court may deny the petition without a hearing at which evidence is taken or even ex parte. While many courts are reluctant to deny a petition without a hearing, since the petition is to be liberally construed in favor of granting a hearing, the law is nonetheless clear that a hearing is not required if the petition fails to make a sufficient showing to justify one [In re Zachary G. (1999) 77 Cal. App. 4th 799, 807-808, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 20 ; In re Jamika W. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1446, 1450-1451, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 513 ; In re Elizabeth M. (1997) 52 Cal. App. 4th 318, 323, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 557 ; In re Edward H. (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 584, 591-593, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745]. As noted by one court, the petition may not be conclusory. Merely asserting that a parent has participated in and completed programs and visits the child, without mention of dates or names of counselors may not be enough. Successful petitions often include declarations or other attachments that demonstrate the showing the petitioner will make should a hearing be granted on the petition. Without such supporting documents, courts may find the unsubstantiated assertions in the petition to be conclusory and deny a hearing on the petition [In re Anthony W. (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 246, 250-251, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 422] . The basis for any decision denying a hearing on the petition should be set forth clearly in the court's order [see In re Jeremy W. (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 1407, 1413-1414, fn. 11, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 148] .

Petitions filed under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 may be filed by facsimile filing if authorized by local rule or written instruction by the juvenile court [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.522]. This authorization is only applicable, however, to parties, attorneys of record, social services, probation, the office of the district attorney, the office of the county counsel, and court-appointed special advocates [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.522; see § 328.130[2]].

PRACTICE TIP:

Argument on Whether to Grant a Hearing. Some courts allow argument by the parties before making the judicial decision to grant or deny a hearing on a petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388. This has the advantage of ensuring the court has all of the arguments in mind to allow for the making of an informed decision and of making a good record of the basis for the court's decision granting or denying a hearing on the petition. Such a practice is not required, however, and can contribute to calendar congestion. Other courts make the decision to grant or deny a hearing ex parte. Where the decision to grant a hearing has been made ex parte, the better practice is to allow the parties the opportunity to argue at the beginning of the hearing for and against the granting of a hearing should they so desire. Practitioners who believe the petitioner has not made a sufficient showing to justify the granting of a hearing should state that position at the start of any hearing granted ex parte and ask for the opportunity to argue the issue.

If all parties stipulate to the requested modification, the court may order modification without a hearing. If the modification will be contested because the parties do not agree to the requested modification, or if the court desires to receive further evidence on the issue, the court must order that a hearing on the petition for modification be held within 30 calendar days after the petition is filed [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.570(d); see Welf. & Inst. Code § 388].

PRACTICE TIP:

Use of Petition and Attached Documents as Evidence. Some confusion exists among practitioners as to the use of the statements alleged in the petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 or in declarations and documents attached thereto. Such information is provided to the court for its consideration in granting or denying a hearing on the petition and may be considered by the court for that limited purpose. In this way the statements alleged in the petition or the documents attached thereto are in the nature of offers of proof as to what the petitioner would seek to establish if a hearing were granted. If a hearing is actually granted, however, the rules of evidence are less clear. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.570(g), provides the court with discretion to allow proof to be made by declaration and other documentary evidence, or by testimony, or both, which suggests the attachments to the petition could be used as evidence. If the petition requests removal from the home of the parent or guardian, or to a more restrictive level of care, or if there is a due process right to confront and cross-examine witnesses, the normal rules for disposition hearings must apply [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.570(h)]. Such due process rights will normally exist if the petition seeks anything significant, is at all complex, or is hotly contested [see, e.g., Los Angeles County Dep't of Children & Family Servs. v. Superior Court (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 1299, 1305-1306, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 618 ; In re Matthew P. (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 841, 849-851, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 269] . As such, practitioners would be wise to assume and courts to rule that at the hearing the statements alleged in the petition or the documents attached thereto will be considered inadmissible hearsay unless they fall within an exception to the hearsay rule, such as the social study exception, and an opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses is provided. Nevertheless, in an appropriate case the parties may wish to stipulate to the admissibility of such information as evidence at the hearing on the modification petition if it is uncontroverted, would constitute the testimony of the declarant if called as a witness, or would otherwise speed up the hearing in a way all parties find acceptable.

[3] When Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 Hearing Has Been Set

A parent may also file a Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 petition to seek return of the child or renewed reunification services, based on changed circumstances, after reunification services have been terminated and a hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code Section 366.26 has been set [see In re Marilyn H. (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 295, 308-309, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 544, 851 P.2d 826] . Because reunification is not an option that can be considered at the selection and implementation hearing [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(b); In re Marilyn H. (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 295, 303-304, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 544, 851 P.2d 826] , the availability of the modification hearing in this circumstance provides a parent with substantive due process, under both the state and federal constitutions, to exercise the parent's interest in having an opportunity to reunify with a child [In re Marilyn H. (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 295, 309, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 544, 851 P.2d 826] . Juvenile courts sometimes combine the hearing on the modification petition with the selection and implementation hearing in the interest of judicial economy. This is because the evidence that would be presented on the question of return or further services may be substantially the same evidence to be produced on the issue of the beneficial relationship exception under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(A). Whether the hearings are combined or heard separately, the court must determine whether to grant the petition for return or further reunification services first, since the granting of the petition would be inconsistent with the holding of a selection and implementation hearing [In re Marilyn H. (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 295, 308-310, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 544, 851 P.2d 826 ; In re Sean E. (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 1594, 1599, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 193 ;

In re Jeremy W. (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 1407, 1416, fn. 14, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 148] . If the court denies the modification petition, it then goes on to make its findings and orders under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26.

It is also common for parents to file petitions under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 seeking placement of the child with a different relative or foster caregiver, or seeking to modify the court's visitation orders with the parent. A petition to modify the out-of-home placement of the child or visitation orders is not necessarily inconsistent with the selection of a permanent plan for the child, even if the recommended plan is adoption. Visitation between a parent and child may be positive and pleasant, yet not enough to make the beneficial relationship exception to the termination of parental rights applicable [see, e.g., In re Derek W. (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 823, 827, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 739 ; In re Beatrice M. (1994) 29 Cal. App. 4th 1411, 1418-1420, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 162] . Further, the specific out-of-home placement of the child may affect which family receives preferential consideration for adoption [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(k)]. But in most cases it does not affect the selection of a permanent plan, unless the child is only likely to be adopted or receive a legal guardian if in a particular home. Finally, if parental rights are terminated and the child placed with the agency for adoptive placement, any prior orders for visitation and placement may be moot, since it is the agency that is normally given "exclusive care and control" of the child following the termination of parental rights [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(j); Los Angeles County Dep't of Children & Family Servs. v. Superior Court (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 1, 9-10, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 369 ; Department of Soc. Servs. v. Superior Court (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 721, 732-733, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 239] . Thus, when the modification petition does not seek return or resumption of reunification services, but only seeks a change of out-of-home placement or additional visitation, in most instances the court should determine the selection of the permanent plan first, and thereafter consider whether it can or should grant the requested modification of prior court orders. If parental rights are terminated, a parent normally loses any standing he or she might have to seek a change in placement. If the court has deferred consideration of the parent's Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 petition for a change in placement until after the hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26, however, it may be appropriate to allow the parent continued standing for the limited purpose of determining the change in placement sought in the parent's petition. This helps ensure the decision to defer consideration of the Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 petition was not an abuse of discretion or a denial of due process. Nevertheless, in considering the petition for a modification of placement after the termination of parental rights the court must recognize the change in the law regarding placement of a freed child [In re Harry N. (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 1381-1382, 1397-1399, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 46 ; Los Angeles County Dep't of Children & Family Servs. v. Superior Court (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 1, 9-10, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 369 ; Department of Soc. Servs. v. Superior Court (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 721, 732-733, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 239 ; but see Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(n)].

For examples of decisions involving the use of a Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 petition to attempt to vacate a Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing, see In re Casey D. (1999) 70 Cal. App. 4th 38, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 426 ; In re Sean E. (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 1594, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 193 , and In re Jeremy W. (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 1407, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 148 .

[4] Required Notice

No order changing, modifying, or setting aside a previous order may be made unless prior notice of the petition for the modification has been given to the social worker and to the child's counsel of record or, in the absence of counsel, to the child and his or her parent or guardian [Welf. & Inst. Code § 386; see also Welf. & Inst. Code § 302(b) (general requirement of notice to both parents of all juvenile court proceedings involving their child)]. The specific requirements for notice of a petition for modification of a prior court order under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(a) or for a sibling petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(b) are set forth in Welf. & Inst. Code § 297(c).

[5] Required Showing

The party seeking modification of a prior court order has the burden of showing a change of circumstances or new evidence to warrant modification of the previous order and that the requested change of order is in the child's best interest [Welf. & Inst. Code § 388]. Except in situations where the request change of orders will result in removal from the home of a parent or guardian, the burden of proof is by a preponderance of the evidence. Where, however, the petition seeks removal from the parent, the court must find by clear and convincing evidence that one of the circumstances justifying removal under Welf. & Inst. Code § 361 exists [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.570(f)]. If the request is for a more restrictive level of placement, the rule of court requires clear and convincing evidence that a change of placement is needed to protect the child's physical or emotional well-being [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.570(f)]. The rule's requirement for clear and convincing evidence when a higher level of care is sought but the removal is not from a parent is incorrect. Clear and convincing evidence is needed to remove from a parent, but it is the best interest of the child by a preponderance of the evidence that governs where the child should be placed once the child is in out-of-home care. This limited portion of the rule should be considered invalid.

It has often been argued that when the modification petition demonstrates an earlier failure to conduct adequate search efforts for a parent or to provide proper notice the petition must be granted [Ansley v. Superior Court (1986) 185 Cal. App. 3d 477, 481, 487-488, 229 Cal. Rptr. 771] . This argument either presumes granting the petition in such circumstances will automatically be in the child's best interest or that no showing of best interest is required. Neither is correct. The Ansley decision was both distinguished and clarified in the later Justice P. decision that made it clear that even when the petition demonstrates a lack of adequate search or notice efforts a showing that granting the petition is in the child's best interest still must be made [In re Justice P. (2004) 123 Cal. App. 4th 181, 189-192, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 801] .

Where the person filing the petition for modification demonstrates both a change of circumstances and that it would be in the child's best interest to modify the order, it is an abuse of discretion for the court to deny the petition [In re Kimberly F. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 519, 532-535, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 495 (reversing juvenile court's order denying modification petition)]. As one court has noted, however, "A petition which alleges merely changing circumstances and would mean delaying the selection of a permanent home for a child to see if a parent, who has repeatedly failed to reunify with the child, might be able to reunify at some future point, does not promote stability for the child or the child's best interests" [In re Casey D. (1999) 70 Cal. App. 4th 38, 47, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 426 (trial court found mother's circumstances "were changing, rather than changed" [70 Cal. App. 4th 38, 49])] .

One approach to determining whether granting a petition to modify a prior court order as being in the child's best interest is suggested in the Kimberly F. case. The approach used there was to consider the seriousness of the problem that originally led to the dependency, the reason, if any, for continuation of the problem, the strength and nature of the relationship between the child and both the parent and the caretaker, the degree to which the continuing problem may be easily resolved, and the degree to which the problem actually has been resolved [In re Kimberly F. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 519, 532, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 495] . This approach is appropriate in some cases, but is by no means the only way for the court to consider the issues presented in a petition for modification under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388.

When a change of placement is sought after the court has terminated reunification services with a child's parents, the focus shifts to the "needs of the child for permanency and stability," and a rebuttable presumption exists that continued foster care is in the best interest of the child [In re Stephanie M. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 295, 324-325, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 595, 867 P.2d 706 (reversing appellate court decision to remove child from foster care and place her with maternal grandmother)]. In such circumstances, the approach of the court in the case of In re Kimberly F. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 519, 532, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 495 , may not be appropriate since it fails to give full consideration to this shift in focus.

The new provisions of Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(b) regarding petitions brought for the recognition of a sibling relationship, or for orders addressing sibling placement, visitation, or case planning, do not require there to have been a prior order that is sought to be changed, modified, or set aside [compare Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(a) with Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(b)]. This is because there may have been no prior order recognizing the existence of the sibling relationship and addressing issues of placement, visitation, or plans. The standard for petitions brought under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(b) is the best interests of the child. This is consistent with the traditional petitions brought under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(a) for changing, modifying, or vacating prior orders of the court. This is an area that should be watched for further development, however. For further discussion of sibling relationship issues, see § 328.127.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
H. Supplemental and Subsequent Petitions

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.141

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.141 Supplemental Petitions

[1] In General

Supplemental petitions brought under Welf. & Inst. Code § 387 seek to modify a previous placement order of the juvenile court by removing the child from the physical custody of a parent, guardian, or relative and placing the child in a foster home or other licensed facility. It is often considered by practitioners to be a petition to move the child to a "higher" or "more restrictive" level of court ordered care based upon the child's needs and the ineffectiveness or inappropriateness of the previous placement order. While this is true in some cases, a petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 387 is not the only vehicle to be used in such circumstances. Nor is it required for all moves to higher levels of care. Instead, it is only required where the child is being removed from a court ordered placement with a parent, guardian, or relative, and being placed in a foster home or other facility. A common example of the proper use of a supplemental petition is a family maintenance case in which the court has placed the child with a parent and the agency now believes it necessary to move the child to a foster placement. In such circumstances a supplemental petition is required unless new jurisdictional grounds are being alleged pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 300, 342.

In most instances, a supplemental petition must allege facts sufficient to show the previous placement order has not been effective in the rehabilitation or protection of the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 387(b); In re Javier G. (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 453, 459-460, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 383] . A supplemental petition which seeks to move the child from a specific court-ordered relative placement to a more restrictive level of care, however, must show that the relative placement is no longer appropriate in light of the criteria set forth in Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.3. Pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 387, only a social worker may file a supplemental petition.

Welf. & Inst. Code § 387 mentions removal from or placement with a "friend." This language is held over from the placement orders which the juvenile court could make under juvenile court law prior to the enactment of Senate Bill 14

(Stats. 1982, ch. 978) when the juvenile court had broad discretion and power over who it could place a dependent child with. Welf. & Inst. Code § 387 has never been brought up to date by the Legislature to mirror the changes in the placement order statutes which no longer provide for such flexibility [see Welf. & Inst. Code former § 362 (Stats. 1977, ch. 21); Welf. & Inst. Code former § 362 (Stats. 1982, ch. 978); now see Welf. & Inst. Code 361.2]. Unless the friend of the family, including a de facto parent, is licensed as a foster home or is approved as a "nonrelative extended family member," neither the court nor county social services can place the child in that home [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(e); Health & Safety Code § 1536.1]. Nevertheless, the continued inclusion of the term "friend" in Welf. & Inst. Code § 387, can be interpreted to mean that the licensed home of a friend is a higher level of care than a relative, but a lower level of care than some other foster home to which the child is a stranger.

A supplemental petition may only be granted after a noticed hearing as set forth in Welf. & Inst. Code § 297(b) [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 297(b), 387(c)].

A supplemental petition and a detention hearing is not required, however, when a previously declared dependent child of the court is removed from a foster home and placed in a county receiving home to await further placement [In re Timothy N. (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d 862, 870, 121 Cal. Rptr. 880] . Nor is a supplemental petition required where the child is being moved from one relative or foster care placement to another under a general placement order that has given the social services department the discretion to make the specific out-of-home placement of the child. Such changes of placement do not require a change or modification of a previous court order and thus are left to the agency's discretion under the general placement order, subject to the court's review of that discretion [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(e); In re Cynthia C. (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 1479, 1489-1490, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1 ; In re Robert A. (1992) 4 Cal. App. 4th 174, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 438] .

By its very language, a petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 387 is also not required to move a child from a foster home to a Foster Family Agency (FFA) home or licensed group home. This is because the petition is only required to change or modify a previous order by removing a child from a "parent, guardian, relative, or friend" and placing the child in a foster home or other facility [Welf. & Inst. Code § 387]. If the child is already in a foster home under a court order that does not include placement in a group home and the social services agency desires to move the child to a licensed group home, a petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 may be used. For these same reasons, a petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 387 is not required to move a child from court ordered placement with the parent to a court ordered placement with a relative. Many counties use supplemental petitions for this purpose, which may be the better practice and does provide all parties with notice and the opportunity to be heard. The proper vehicle for moving the child from the parent's custody to placement with a relative, however, is a modification petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388, utilizing the higher level of clear and convincing evidence and requiring grounds be found to exist for removal under Welf. & Inst. Code § 361 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 388].

For discussion of modifications petitions under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388, see § 328.140. For an illustrative form of supplemental petition and commentary on its use, see § 328.371.

[2] Filing and Notice of Hearing

The supplemental petition must be filed by the social worker in the original matter and should contain a concise statement of facts sufficient to support the conclusion that the previous disposition has not been effective in the rehabilitation or protection of the child or that placement with the relative is no longer appropriate [Welf. & Inst. Code § 387(b); In re Javier G. (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 453, 459-460, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 383] . On the filing of a supplemental petition, the clerk of the juvenile court sets the petition for hearing within 30 days and the probation officer causes notice to be served on the required persons in the manner prescribed by Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 290.1 and 291 [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 297(b), 387(c)].

Petitions filed under Welf. & Inst. Code § 387 may be filed by facsimile filing if authorized by local rule or written instruction by the juvenile court [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.522]. This authorization is only applicable, however, to parties, attorneys of record, social services, probation, the office of the district attorney, the office of the county counsel, and court-appointed special advocates [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.522(c); see § 328.130[2]].

[3] Procedures for Conduct of Hearing

An order for the detention of the child pending adjudication of the petition may be made only after a detention hearing has been conducted [Welf. & Inst. Code § 387(e)].

The procedures relating to jurisdiction hearings for dependent children apply to the determination of the allegations of a supplemental petition [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.565(e)(1)]. The procedures relating to disposition hearings for such children apply to the determination of further dispositional issues following adjudication of a supplemental petition [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.565(e)(2)]. Nevertheless, hearings on a petition pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 387 are post-dispositional hearings which do not necessarily involve allegations which would provide an additional basis for jurisdiction. As such, they are not jurisdiction or disposition hearings and should not be referred to as such. Instead, they only follow the procedures for such hearings which allow for the allegations in the petition to be adjudicated first and then, if found true, allow for the court determining what further dispositional orders need to be made.

At the adjudication hearing, the sole issue is whether the allegations in the supplemental petition are true that the previous disposition order has been ineffective in the protection or rehabilitation of the child, or that continued placement with the relative is no longer appropriate in light of the circumstances set forth in Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.3 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 387(b); In re Javier G. (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 453, 460, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 383] . While most supplemental petitions allege the previous disposition order was not effective in the protection of the child, a supplemental petition can be based solely on the allegation the previous disposition order has not been effective in the rehabilitation of the child [In re Javier G. (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 453, 459-460, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 383] . The supplemental petition need only be found true by a preponderance of the evidence [Evid. Code § 115]. It is at the further disposition hearing thereafter that the juvenile court considers whether there is a need to actually remove the child from his or her current level of placement [In re Javier G. (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 453, 460-462, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 383] . If the child is to be removed from a parent or guardian, rather than removal from a relative, the same requirement for clear and convincing evidence justifying such removal under Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(c) is required [In re Paul E. (1995) 39 Cal. App. 4th 996, 1000-1003, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 289] . If the disposition order is for removal from the parent or guardian, the court must make a finding whether reasonable efforts were made to prevent or eliminate the need for removal from the parent or guardian [In re Javier G. (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 453, 463, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 383] . Further, as with jurisdiction and disposition hearing, a finding the allegations in a supplemental petition are true is not an appealable judgment. Instead, an appeal can be taken from the further disposition hearing following the adjudication of the supplemental petition [In re Javier G. (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 1195, 1199, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 837] . For general discussions of the procedures in the jurisdiction and disposition stages of dependency proceedings, see § 328.100 et seq. and § 328.120 et seq., respectively.

It should be noted that one court of appeal has held that a child's custodial relative is entitled to contest a supplemental petition filed for the purpose of removing the child, at least in situations in which the conduct of the relative and the removal of the child from the relative's care are at issue [In re Jonique W. (1994) 26 Cal. App. 4th 685, 691-693, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 601 ; see also In re Antonio G. (2007) 159 Cal. App. 4th 369, 378, 71 Cal. Rptr. 3d 79 , citing In re Jonique W. (1994) 26 Cal. App. 4th 685, 693, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 601] . Its holding in this regard is an anomaly, however, since it would suggest that a relative who had only had the child in his or her custody for a period of months, weeks, or even days would have standing to contest removal of the child. This would grant the relative caretaker far more rights than either the law or common sense would require. The better view is that taken later in the decision to the effect that where the relative caretaker has been granted de facto parent status and a supplemental petition is filed for the removal of the child, the de facto parent has standing to contest the allegations [In re Jonique W. (1994) 26 Cal. App. 4th 685, 693-697, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 601] . This holding is consistent with existing law regarding de facto parents. Thus, where the relative caretaker has not been granted the status of a de facto parent due to the positive psychological parent-child bond resulting from the child being in that person's care for an extended period of time, that relative caretaker should only be entitled to notice and an opportunity to address the court, either orally or in writing [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 5.534(f), 5.565]. If, however, as was the case in Jonique W., the relative applies for and receives de facto parent status, standing to contest the supplemental petition should result from that status as a de facto parent. The same general approach should be used with foster parents as well. If a relative is not the caregiver, but makes a request for placement when a new placement is required [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.3], the relative does not have the right to contest the denial or failure to consider the request for placement unless the relative has been granted de facto parent status, but may have standing to appeal the denial or failure to consider the request for placement [cf. In re Antonio G. (2007) 159 Cal. App. 4th 369, 371-372, 376-377, 71 Cal. Rptr. 3d 79] .

If a supplemental petition for removal from a parent is granted, it does not return the case to "square one" for the provision of reunification services [In re N.M. (2003) 108 Cal. App. 4th 845, 853, 134 Cal. Rptr. 2d 187 ; Carolyn R. v. Superior Court (1995) 41 Cal. App. 4th 159, 166, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 669 ; In re Steven A. (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 754, 765, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 576] . If a dependent child was returned to parental custody at a 12-month review hearing [see discussions in § 328.150 et seq.], or at a subsequent interim hearing, and a supplemental petition is thereafter sustained and the child removed once again, the court must set a permanency planning hearing pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26, unless the court finds that there is a substantial probability of return within the next six months or, if more than 12 months had expired at the time of the prior return, within whatever time remains before the expiration of the maximum 18-month period [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.565(f)]. If the child was returned to the custody of the parent at an earlier point in the reunification process and a supplemental petition for removal is subsequently granted, the court has discretion to order reunification services to resume if the parent has received less than 12 months of services, has not received reasonable services, or there is a substantial probability of return to the parent within 18 months of the date that the child was originally removed from the parent [Carolyn R. v. Superior Court (1995) 41 Cal. App. 4th 159, 166, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 669] . One court has even held that when a child is removed from the parent's custody at the detention hearing and then returned at the disposition hearing, the entire time of both family maintenance and family reunification services counts toward the 18-month maximum [In re N.M. (2003) 108 Cal. App. 4th 845, 854-855, 134 Cal. Rptr. 2d 187] . Thus, close attention must be paid to this to determine whether the court can order additional services following the subsequent removal and, if so, whether the court should order additional services following the subsequent removal.

For examples of cases in which supplemental petitions pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 387 were used, see Carolyn R. v. Superior Court (1995) 41 Cal. App. 4th 159, 162, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 669 (removal from mother's home); In re Jonique W. (1994) 26 Cal. App. 4th 685, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 601 (removal from grandmother's care); In re Joel H. (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 1185, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 878 (removal from relative placement); In re John V. (1992) 5 Cal. App. 4th 1201, 7 Cal. Rptr. 2d 629 (removal from father's custody).

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329

CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
H. Supplemental and Subsequent Petitions

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.142

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.142 Subsequent Petitions

If a child was found to be a person described by Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 (grounds for dependency), and the petitioner alleges new facts or circumstances, other than those under which the original petition was sustained, sufficient to state that the child is a person described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 300, the petitioner must file a subsequent petition. However, this does not apply if the jurisdiction of the juvenile court has been terminated prior to the new allegations [Welf. & Inst. Code § 342]. A subsequent petition may also be filed if the family is unwilling or unable to cooperate with services previously ordered pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 360(b) (informal supervision ordered for a period of time consistent with Welf. & Inst. Code § 301 following a finding of jurisdiction) [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.560(b)(3)].

All procedures and hearings required for an original petition are required for a subsequent petition, including the notice provisions [Welf. & Inst. Code § 297(a)]. Also, a subsequent petition must be verified and must contain the information required in an original petition [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.565(a)]. The procedural requirements for a subsequent petition hearing are the same as those discussed for a supplemental petition in Supplemental Petitions, above [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.565] except for the distinction that a hearing on a subsequent petition actually is a hearing on a new jurisdictional allegation. Nevertheless, as with a supplemental petition or a petition for modification of orders, the finding of the petition true does not automatically start the time clock over for the provision of reunification services [see In re Barbara P. (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 926, 933-934, 36 Cal. Rptr. 2d 27 ; see also In re Steven A. (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 754, 765, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 576] .

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
H. Supplemental and Subsequent Petitions

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated §§ 328.143-328.149

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

[Reserved]

§§ 328.143[Reserved]

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329

CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
I. Periodic Review Procedures

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.150

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.150 Family Maintenance Review Hearings

[1] In General

Every case in which an order is made placing a child under the supervision of the juvenile court and in which the child is not removed from the physical custody of his or her parent or guardian or in which the child has been returned to the physical custody of his or her parent or guardian with family maintenance services ordered must be continued to a specific future date not to exceed six months after the date of the original dispositional hearing. The continued hearing must be placed on the appearance calendar. The court must advise all persons present of the date of the future hearing, and of their rights to be present and to be represented by counsel [Welf. & Inst. Code § 364(a)]. Notice of the hearing is to be provided pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 292]. The provisions of Welf. & Inst. Code § 364 also apply when the juvenile court has removed the child and thereafter returned the child at a six-, 12-, or 18-month hearing under continued court supervision [Bridget A. v. Superior Court (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 285, 313-316, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 647]. It can be presumed they would also apply if the child is returned at the 24-month hearing.

[2] Review Report for Family Maintenance Review Hearing

At least 10 days prior to the hearing, the social worker must file a supplemental report with the court describing the services offered to the family and the progress made by the family in eliminating the conditions or factors requiring court supervision. The social worker must also make a recommendation regarding the necessity of continued supervision. A copy of this report must be furnished to all parties at least 10 days prior to the hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 364(b)].

In Los Angeles County, a separate statute provides for service of the social worker's report [Welf. & Inst. Code § 364.05]. This is in response to the case of Judith P. v. Superior Court (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 535, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 14 . In that case, the juvenile court had directed the review report be provided to all parties at least two days before the review hearing, notwithstanding the statutory provision for providing the report ten days before the hearing. Nevertheless, the report was provided to the parties the morning of the hearing [Judith P. v. Superior Court (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 535, 540, 542, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 14] . At the appellate level, despite the agreement of the social services agency to a reversal, a full opinion was issued; apparently, the appellate court saw a systemic problem of untimely review reports in Los Angeles County [Judith P. v. Superior Court (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 535, 545, fn. 7, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 14] . The Judith P. decision held the requirements for providing the court, parents, and counsel with a copy of the review report for an out-of-home review hearing ten days before the hearing were mandatory, not directory, and that prejudice was presumed. It held that in the absence of either a continuance or an express waiver, failure to provide the report ten days before the hearing was reversible per se [Judith P. v. Superior Court (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 535, 547-558, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 14] . Legislation was introduced to clarify the time requirements for providing reports are directory, not mandatory, to provide a way for juvenile courts to be able to find an absence of prejudice to the parties, and to restore a level of balance on the issue so as not to unnecessarily delay proceedings. What became clear, however, was that only Los Angeles County was being affected by the Judith P. decision. In other counties it was recognized that while well-intentioned, the decision's legal analysis was flawed and its ultimate holding went far beyond the language of the statutes and legislative intent. Courts in other counties recognized that the statutory language for provision of the reports ten days before the hearing was directory, prejudice should not be presumed, waivers can be express or implied, and courts should balance the totality of the circumstances, including any prejudice, in considering the need for a continuance if review reports were not timely served. Thus, the proposed legislative solution would have helped restore balance in Los Angeles County, but would have imposed restrictions and burdens on other counties that were not required by their courts or the law. Ultimately, the result was a bill that was applicable to Los Angeles County only.

In Los Angeles County, the review report is to be provided to all parties at least 10 calendar days prior to the review hearing. The statute specifically provides that the provision of the report to parties can be accomplished by mailing the report at least 15 calendar days before the hearing if the party's address is in California, or at least 20 calendar days before the hearing if the party's address is outside of California [Welf. & Inst. Code § 364.05]. The juvenile court in Los Angeles County shall grant a reasonable continuance for up to 10 calendar days if the report was not provided to the parties at least 10 calendar days prior to the hearing, unless the party or the party's counsel has expressly waived the requirement, or the juvenile court has found the party's ability to proceed at the hearing was not prejudiced by the untimely service of the report [Welf. & Inst. Code § 364.05]. In making that determination, the Los Angeles County juvenile court must presume the party was prejudiced by the lack of a timely report and can only find the party was not prejudiced by clear and convincing evidence to the contrary [Welf. & Inst. Code § 364.05].

[3] Conduct of the Hearing

Presentation of evidence at the review hearing is limited to the issue of whether conditions for continuing juvenile court jurisdiction and supervision exist [Welf. & Inst. Code § 364(c)]. If the court is considering making juvenile court custody and visitation orders and terminating its jurisdiction pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 362.4, the court should also hear evidence on the question of those orders [In re Michael W. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 190, 194-196 (choosing to follow Roger S., not Elaine E.); In re Roger S. (1992) 4 Cal. App. 4th 25, 30, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 208 (declining to follow Elaine E. and holding court should hear evidence on visitation issue); but see In re Elaine E. (1990) 221 Cal. App. 3d 809, 814, 270 Cal. Rptr. 489 (court did not err by refusing to allow noncustodial parent to present evidence in support of request for change in visitation)].

After hearing any evidence presented by the social worker, the parent, the guardian, or the child, the court must determine whether or not continued supervision is necessary. The court must terminate its jurisdiction unless the social services department establishes by a preponderance of evidence that the conditions still exist that would justify initial assumption of jurisdiction under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 (grounds for dependency) or that these conditions are likely to exist if supervision is withdrawn. Failure of the parent or guardian to participate regularly in a court-ordered treatment program constitutes prima facie evidence that the conditions that justified initial assumption of jurisdiction still exist and that continued supervision is necessary [Welf. & Inst. Code § 364(c)].

If the court retains jurisdiction, it must continue the matter to a specified date, not more than six months from the time of the hearing, at which point the court must again follow the review hearing procedure specified in Welf. & Inst. Code § 364(c) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 364(d)].

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329

CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
I. Periodic Review Procedures

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.151

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.151 General Requirements for Out-of-Home Review and Permanency Hearings

[1] Notice

Status review and permanency hearings relating to children who have been placed outside of the home of a parent and for whom a permanent plan has not yet been selected are governed by Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 366.21 and 366.22.

Notice for the six-month review, 12-month permanency hearing, 18-month permanency review, and the 24-month hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 366.21, 366.22 and 366.25 shall be given to the mother, the presumed father or any father receiving services, any legal guardian of the child, and the child, if the child is 10 years of age or older [Welf. & Inst. Code § 293(a)(1)-(4)]. Notice must also be given to any known sibling of the child who is the subject of the dependency petition, if that sibling is either a dependent of the court or is the subject of a dependency proceeding. If the sibling is 10 years of age or older, the notice is to be provided to the sibling, the sibling's caregiver, and the sibling's attorney. If the sibling is under 10 years of age, the notice is to be given to the sibling's caregiver and attorney. Separate notice is not required, however, if the sibling's matter is calendared in the same court on the same day [Welf. & Inst. Code § 293(a)(5)]. If the child has been removed from the physical custody of the parent or guardian, notice must also be given to the foster parents, relative caregivers, community care facility, or foster family agency having physical custody of the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 293(a)(6)]. The social worker must also notice all counsel of record, unless counsel was present in court when the hearing was scheduled [Welf. & Inst. Code § 293(a)(7)]. If the court knows or has reason to know that an Indian child is involved, notice must also be given to the Indian custodian, if any, and the tribe of the child. If the identity or location of the parent or Indian custodian and the tribe cannot be determined, notice shall be given to the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 293(a)(8)]. No notice is required for a parent whose parental rights have been terminated [Welf. & Inst. Code § 293(b)].

In addition to the date, time, and place of the hearing, the notice must include all of the following [Welf. & Inst. Code §

293(d)]:

- The nature of the hearing and any change in the custody or status of the child that is recommended by the social services agency.

- The right of the child, parents, and legal guardians, if any, of the right to be present, to be represented by counsel, to request the appointment of counsel, and to present evidence.

- If the parent or guardian fails to appear, the court may proceed in their absence.

- If the parent or guardian fails to appear, the court may proceed in their absence.

- In the case of an Indian child, a statement that the parent or Indian custodian and the tribe have a right to intervene at any stage of the proceeding, and that, on request, the parent or Indian custodian and the tribe will be granted up to 20 additional days to prepare for the proceeding.

- Notice to a foster or relative caregiver, a foster parent who has been approved for adoption, or the State Department of Social Services when it is acting as an adoption agency in a county that does not have its own adoption agency, the notice shall also indicate the person may attend all hearings or may submit information he or she believes relevant to the court in writing.

Notice shall be served not less than 15 days nor more than 30 days before the hearing. In the case of an Indian child in which notice is given to the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA), the BIA shall have 15 days after receipt to provide notice to the parent or Indian custodian and the tribe [Welf. & Inst. Code § 293(c)].

Service of the notice shall be by first-class mail to the last known address of the person to be notified of the hearing or by personal service on the person. Service may also be by certified mail, return receipt requested, or by any other form of notice that is equivalent to service by first-class mail [Welf. & Inst. Code § 293(e)(1)]. In the case of an Indian child, notice must be given by registered mail, return receipt requested [Welf. & Inst. Code § 293(e)(2)].

[2] Social Workers' Reports

The social worker must file a report with the court at least 10 calendar days before the out-of-home review or permanency hearing regarding the concurrent services provided or offered to the parent or guardian to enable him or her to assume custody and the efforts made to achieve legal permanence if reunification efforts fail, the progress made, and when relevant, the prognosis for return of the child to the physical custody of his or her parent or guardian [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(c)]. The social worker must also make his or her recommendation for further disposition at the hearing. If the recommendation is not to return the child to a parent, the report must specify why the return of the child would be detrimental to the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(c)].

The social worker must provide the parent or legal guardian, counsel for the child, and any court appointed special advocate with a copy of the supplemental report, including his or her recommendation for disposition, at least 10 calendar days prior to the hearing. Within that period, the social worker must also provide a summary of his or her recommendation for disposition to any foster parents, relative caregivers, community care facility, or foster family agency having the physical custody of the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(c)].

In Los Angeles County, a separate statute provides for service of the social worker's report [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.05]. This is in response to the case of Judith P. v. Superior Court (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 535, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 14 . In that case, the juvenile court had directed the review report be provided to all parties at least two days before the review hearing, notwithstanding the statutory provision for providing the report ten days before the hearing.

Nevertheless, the report was provided to the parties the morning of the hearing [Judith P. v. Superior Court (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 535, 540, 542, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 14] . At the appellate level, the social services agency's agreed with reversal, but a full opinion was ultimately issued apparently due to what the appellate court saw as a systemic problem in that county with the timely provision of review reports [Judith P. v. Superior Court (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 535, 545, fn. 7, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 14] . The Judith P. decision held the requirements for providing the court, parents, and counsel with a copy of the review report for an out-of-home review hearing ten days before the hearing were mandatory, not directory, and that prejudice was presumed. It held that in the absence of either a continuance or an express waiver, failure to provide the report ten days before the hearing was reversible per se [Judith P. v. Superior Court (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 535, 547-558, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 14] . Legislation was introduced to clarify the time requirements for providing reports are directory, not mandatory, to provide a way for juvenile courts to be able to find an absence of prejudice to the parties, and to restore a level of balance on the issue so as not to unnecessarily delay proceedings. What became clear, however, was that only Los Angeles County was being affected by the Judith P. decision. In other counties it was recognized that while well-intentioned, the decision's legal analysis was flawed and its ultimate holding went far beyond the language of the statutes and legislative intent. Courts in other counties recognized that the statutory language for provision of the reports ten days before the hearing was directory, prejudice should not be presumed, waivers can be express or implied, and courts should balance the totality of the circumstances, including any prejudice, in considering the need for a continuance if review reports were not timely served. Thus, the proposed legislative solution would have helped restore balance in Los Angeles County, but would have imposed restrictions and burdens on other counties that were not required by their courts or the law. Ultimately, the result was a bill that was applicable to Los Angeles County only.

In Los Angeles County, the review report is to be provided to all parties at least 10 calendar days prior to the review hearing. The statute specifically provides that the provision of the report to parties can be accomplished by mailing the report at least 15 calendar days before the hearing if the party's address is in California, or at least 20 calendar days before the hearing if the party's address is outside of California [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.05]. The juvenile court in Los Angeles County shall grant a reasonable continuance for up to 10 calendar days if the report was not provided to the parties at least 10 calendar days prior to the hearing, unless the party or the party's counsel has expressly waived the requirement, or the juvenile court has found the party's ability to proceed at the hearing was not prejudiced by the untimely service of the report [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.05]. In making that determination, the Los Angeles County juvenile court must presume the party was prejudiced by the lack of a timely report and can only find the party was not prejudiced by clear and convincing evidence to the contrary [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.05].

[3] Report by Child's Caregiver

Before any review hearing involving a child in the physical custody of a community care facility or foster family agency that may result in the return of the child to the physical custody of his or her parent or guardian, or in adoption or the creation of a legal guardianship [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26], the facility or agency must file with the court a report containing its recommendation for disposition. Before any such hearing involving a child in the physical custody of a foster parent or relative caregiver, the foster parent or relative caregiver may file with the court a report containing his or her recommendation for disposition. The court must consider any such report and recommendation prior to determining any disposition [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(d)].

[4] If Child Placed Out-of-State

At any review hearing where the child has been placed out-of-state, the court must address the question of whether the out-of-state placement continues to be the most appropriate placement for the child and in the child's best interest [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366(c)]. If the child is in an out-of-state group home it must also conduct the review required by Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361.21 and 366(d) to ensure the out-of-state group home is in compliance with Fam. Code § 7911.1.

For further discussion of placements in out-of-state group homes, see § 328.128[5].

[5] Evaluating "Detriment to Return"

At each out-of-home review or permanency hearing held during the reunification period the court must consider the return of the child to the parent's custody. The child must be returned unless the social services agency proves by at least a preponderance of the evidence that return to the custody of the parent would create a substantial risk of detriment to the child's safety, protection, physical or emotional well-being [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 366.21(e)-(f), 366.22(a), 366.25(a)]. While the parent's or guardian's failure to participate regularly and make substantive progress in a court ordered treatment program is prima facie evidence that return would be detrimental [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 366.21(e), (f), 366.22(a), 366.25(a)], mere participation in services required by a reunification plan does not mean the child should be returned. The question is whether the parent or guardian has made sufficient progress to allow the child to be returned safely [In re Joseph B. (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 890, 899-900, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 900] . Even if the parent has "largely complied" with his or her reunification plan and some evidence justifies return of the child, the court must look to the totality of the facts, including the parent's progress, and may find that return would be detrimental if those facts warrant such a determination [Constance K. v. Superior Court (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 689, 703-711, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 780] .

The court must also consider the effect on the child of return, since the statutes governing out-of-home review and permanency hearings phrase the question of return in terms of the effect on the child, i.e., whether return would be detrimental to the child. One appellate court has held that this allows the juvenile court to consider factors unrelated to the original jurisdictional allegations or reasons for removal in determining detriment to return at the out-of-home review [In re Joseph B. (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 890, 900, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 900] . Another court has interpreted the Joseph B. decision so as to limit its holding to "when the risk of detriment at the 18-month review hearing was caused by the parent's actions leading to the out-of-home placement" [In re Dustin R. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1131, 1140, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 269] . This does not appear to be an accurate interpretation of the Joseph B. decision. Although the Joseph B. court did indicate that under the facts of that case the detriment to return was a "manifestation of the original basis for dependency" [In re Joseph B. (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 890, 903, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 900] , that was not the basis of its ruling. Instead, the court in Joseph B. was very clear that if return would be detrimental out-of-home placement "must continue regardless of whether that detriment mirrors the harm which had required the child's removal from parental custody" [In re Joseph B. (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 890, 900, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 900] . Thus, there appears to be a conflict of decisional law on this issue. While the Joseph B. decision is the better supported and reasoned decision, practitioners need to be aware of the conflict and argue whichever case better supports their position.

If the detriment to the child is not related to the original jurisdictional allegations or basis for removal, note that the question of whether reasonable services have been offered or provided to the parent should include consideration of whether services were offered or provided to address this additional detrimental concern. Where the parent or guardian has made sufficient progress to remedy the original basis of jurisdiction and removal, a finding of a new and unrelated detriment to the child may justify an order for additional services [cf. In re Daniel G. (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 1205, 1209, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 75 ; In re Dino E. (1992) 6 Cal. App. 4th 1768, 1779, 8 Cal. Rptr. 2d 416] . If the parent or guardian has not resolved the original problem, the addition of another one does not require any extension of time for additional services beyond the normal time limit [cf. In re Barbara P. (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 926, 933-934, 36 Cal. Rptr. 2d 27 ; In re Steven A. (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 754, 765, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 576 ; In re Michael S. (1987) 188 Cal. App. 3d 1448, 1452-1459] .

[6] Determination of Sibling Issues

At each out-of-home review hearing conducted prior to the completion of the hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26, the court must also determine whether the child has any siblings under the court's jurisdiction. If siblings exist, the court must determine the nature of the relationship between the child and the siblings, the appropriateness of developing or maintaining the sibling relationship, and the impact of the sibling relationship on the child's placement and planning for legal permanence. It the children are not placed together, it must also determine why they are not together and what efforts are being made to place them together, or why such efforts are not appropriate. Further, if the siblings are not placed together the court must determine the frequency and nature of sibling visitation. In making these determinations regarding sibling relationships, the court may consider whether the siblings were raised together, have shared significant common experiences, have close and strong bonds, and whether either sibling expresses a desire for placement or visitation with the other sibling. It may also consider whether ongoing contact is in the child's best interests, and any other relevant factors [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366(a)(1)(C)].

For discussion of sibling placement and visitation issues, see § 328.129[6].

[7] If Parent Has Absconded With Child

If a parent has absconded with a child prior to the initial or detention hearing and both the parent and the child are missing, the court cannot go forward with the normal jurisdiction, disposition, and review hearing process. Instead, all it can do is issue a warrant of arrest for the parent [Welf. & Inst. Code § 339], a protective custody warrant for the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 340], and wait until at least the child is found [In re Claudia S. (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 236, 245-251, 31 Cal. Rptr. 3d 697] .

Similarly, if a parent has absconded with a dependent child during the ongoing dependency, the court can neither terminate dependency jurisdiction nor go on with its normal process for permanency planning. Instead, it should issue a warrant of arrest for the parent [Welf. & Inst. Code § 339], a protective custody warrant for the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 340], and await their return [In re Jean B. (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 1443, 1446-1447, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522 ; Katheryn S. v. Superior Court (2000) 82 Cal. App. 4th 958, 969, n. 11, 98 Cal. Rptr. 2d 741] . This does not mean the matter should be taken off calendar and not brought back into court until the parent or child is found. The court should continue to conduct limited review hearings at which it can review the efforts made to locate the child and parent, and whether any additional information is available.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329

CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
I. Periodic Review Procedures

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.152

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.152 Six-Month Out-of-Home Review Hearing

The statute provides that the six-month review hearing is held six months after the date of the disposition hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(e)]. In the past some asserted the six-month review hearing for children who were under the age of 3 years at the time of initial removal or that are part of a sibling group that was removed together and one of the siblings was under the age of 3 years at the time of initial removal should be six months from the date the child entered foster care, as defined in Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(a), rather than six months from the date of disposition [compare Welf. & Inst. Code former § 361.5(a)(2)-(3) with Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(e)]. Others disagreed, contending the language of Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(e) was clear the hearing should be held six months from the date of the initial disposition hearing. The rule of court indicated the review should be held no more than six months from the disposition date, but no later than six months after the date the child is determined to have entered foster care [Cal. Rules of Ct., former Rule 5.569(h)]. All three arguments had considerable validity. One appellate court agreed with the Judicial Council's interpretation, recognizing the many amendments that were made in the statutes to bring California into compliance with the federal Adoption and Safe Families Act of 1997. It characterized the California Legislature's failure to amend Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(e) as an oversight and ruled the proper date for the six-month review hearing is six months from the date the child entered foster care [In re Christina A. (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 1153, 1159-1164, 111 Cal. Rptr. 2d 310] . It was. Nevertheless, effective January 1, 2009, California has made a major policy shift for court-ordered reunification services, particularly those for a child who was under the age of 3 years at the time of initial removal, or part of a sibling group with such a child. Now the court-ordered reunification services for a child who was under the age of 3 years at the time of initial removal, or part of a sibling group with such a child, extend for six months from the date of disposition, but not more than 12 months from the date the child entered foster care [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(a)(1)].

For discussion of California's major policy shift on court ordered services brought about by the enactment of Assembly Bill 2341 [stats. 2008, ch. 457], see § 328.129[1].

[1] Whether Child Should Return to Custody of Parent or Guardian

At the six-month review hearing the court must order the return of the child to his or her parents' or guardians' physical custody unless, by a preponderance of the evidence, it finds that the return of the child would create a substantial risk of detriment to the safety, protection, or physical or emotional well-being of the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(e)]. Although not expressly stated in the statute, it is clear this finding need only be made as to any parent or guardian receiving reunification services. If the court denied services for one parent pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b) or (e)(1) at disposition, but ordered services for the other parent, it should be presumed the child is not returning to the parent for whom no services were ordered and the only question is whether return to the parent receiving services would create a substantial risk of detriment. If a parent was denied services and wishes to seek return of the child, a Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 petition must be filed [Kimberly H. (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 67, 71-72, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 344] .

The social services department has the burden of establishing that detriment. The failure of the parent or guardian to participate regularly and make substantive progress in any court-ordered treatment programs will constitute prima facie evidence that return would be detrimental. In making its determination, the court must do the following [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(e)]:

- Review and consider the social worker's report and recommendations.

- Review and consider the report and recommendations of any child advocate appointed under Welf. & Inst. Code § 356.5.

- Consider the efforts or progress, or both, demonstrated by the parent or guardian and the extent to which he or she cooperated and availed himself or herself of services provided [see In re Amanda D. (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 813, 818-819, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 108 (father's involvement in fight while incarcerated resulting in loss of privileges, including programs and visitation, is evidence he did not fully comply with plan)].

- Specify a factual basis for the court's determination that return of the child would or would not be detrimental to the child. The court must do this regardless of whether it returns the child or not.

- Make appropriate findings under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366(a) (relating to necessity for and appropriateness of current placement, compliance with case plan, sibling interaction, progress in resolving or mitigating the reasons that necessitated foster care placement, and a projected date for the child receiving a permanent placement either with the parent or an alternative permanent home).

If the court returns the child to the custody of a parent, the court may continue court supervision as a family maintenance case and set the matter for a review hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 364 [Bridget A. v. Superior Court (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 285, 313-316, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 647]. If the child is not returned to the parent or guardian but reunification services are continued, the court must also inform the parent or guardian that, if the child cannot be returned home by the 12-month permanency hearing, a proceeding pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 may be instituted. Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21 does not apply when, pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5, the court at the disposition hearing ordered that reunification services will not be provided [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(e)].

For a discussion of determining whether it would be detrimental to return the child, see § 328.151[5].

[2] Placement With Previously Noncustodial Parent

If the child was placed under court supervision with a previously noncustodial parent pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2, with reunification services being provided to the parent from whom the child was removed, the court may be faced with determining whether return of the child to the previously custodial parent or remaining in the current parental placement is appropriate. Although the statutes are not clear on this issue, it appears appropriate for the court to consider evidence from all parties on this issue, if so requested, and to determine this issue based on the best interests of the child, without the need for a determination of detriment or the filing of a petition pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 388. If there is evidence that return to the parent from whom the child was removed would create a substantial risk of detriment to the child, then return would not be in the child's best interest. But if both parents are now appropriate as placements for the child, the court should determine which placement is best. If the court returns the child to the parent from whom the child was removed, a period of family maintenance services and supervision will normally be appropriate. If the court determines that continued custody in the current parental placement continues to be appropriate, the court must determine whether supervision is still necessary. The court may terminate supervision and transfer permanent custody to that parent, as provided for by Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(e); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.710(h) (Final Judgment--Juvenile (JV-200) must be prepared and filed under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.700); for a sample form and commentary on its use, see § 328.361].

[3] Concurrent Reunification and Permanency Planning Services

If the child is not returned to his or her parent or parents, the court must determine whether reasonable services have been provided or offered to the parent or parents that were designed to aid the parent or guardian to overcome the problems that led to the initial removal and the continued out-of-home custody of the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(e)]. The fact that a child has been placed in a preadoptive home or with a family that is eligible to adopt the child, or that the case plan includes concurrent planning for legal permanence, or that services to achieve legal permanence for the child if reunification efforts are unsuccessful have been provided concurrently with services to reunify shall not be deemed, in and of itself, a failure to provide or offer reasonable reunification services to the parent or guardian [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(l)].

Visitation between a child and a parent is an important component of any reunification plan [In re Alvin R. (2003) 108 Cal. App. 4th 962, 972, 134 Cal. Rptr. 2d 210 ; In re Mark L. (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 573, 580-581, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 499 ; In re Luke L. (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 670, 679, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 53] . Thus the question of whether reasonable visitation has been offered or provided to the parent is one aspect of the reasonable efforts determination. If the child is reluctant to visit and conjoint or family therapy is necessary to address the issue and promote visitation, that therapy may also be critical to reunification, and the failure to take steps to overcome obstacles to providing that therapy may result in a finding that reasonable reunification services have not been provided [In re Alvin R. (2003) 108 Cal. App. 4th 962, 972-973, 134 Cal. Rptr. 2d 210] . Further, while the child may be allowed to refuse to attend a particular visit, the child cannot be allowed to have the power to stop all visits [In re S.H. (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 310, 317-319, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 465] . Even if it has been determined visitation would be detrimental to the child, reunification services should not thwart the potential for future contact by giving the child complete control of whether visitation will take place or by denying the court adequate information on which to base its decision regarding such future contact. If it does, the court may be justified in making a finding that reasonable reunification services have not been offered or provided to the parent [In re Mark L. (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 573, 585, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 499] . Such a decision must be made based on the totality of the evidence regarding reunification services, however, and should not be limited solely to the visitation issue.

The court must also determine whether reasonable efforts to provide legal permanence for the child if reunification fails have been made, including efforts for a child who is 10 years of age or older and placed in out of home care to maintain relationships with people who are important to the child, consistent with the child's best interest. The court must make whatever findings and orders are appropriate in this regard [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366(a)(1)(B)].

If reunification efforts are not terminated, the court must order those services be initiated or continued, provided that the court may modify the terms and conditions of those services as appropriate. The court should also make whatever orders are necessary and appropriate regarding the provision of concurrent permanency planning services to achieve legal permanence if reunification efforts fail. The court must then set the matter for a 12-month permanency hearing, to be held no later than 12 months after the date the child entered foster care as described by Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.49 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(e)-(f)].

For a discussion of concurrent reunification and permanency planning services, see § 328.129[1], [3], [4], [5], and [6].

[4] Termination of Services and Setting of a Selection and Implementation Hearing

There are five circumstances under which the court at a six-month review hearing may terminate reunification efforts and set the matter for a selection and implementation hearing pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 to be held within 120 days [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(e)]. If the juvenile court orders a selection and implementation hearing following the denial of reunification services under any of these five circumstances, it must orally advise all parties present, and advise by first class mail all parties who are not present, that if the party wishes to preserve any right to review on appeal of the order the court made setting the matter for a hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26, the person must seek an extraordinary writ by filing a Notice of Intent to File Writ Petition and Request for Record [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.450; see Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(l); see also discussion in § 328.189 et seq.]. The court may, however, terminate services for one parent and continue them for the other [In re Jesse W. (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 49, 64-65, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 435] . In such circumstances, a Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing is not set.

[a] Child Under Three Years of Age at Initial Removal or Member of Sibling Group in Which One Child Was Under Three Years of Age at Initial Removal

"When the child is under the age of three, the maximum period of reunification services is generally six months" [Sara M. v. Superior Court (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 998, 1009, fn. 4, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 89, 116 P.3d 550 , citing Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(a)(2)]. If the child was under three years of age at the time of the initial removal and the court at the six-month review hearing finds by clear and convincing evidence that the parent has failed to regularly participate and make substantive progress in the court-ordered treatment program, the court may schedule a hearing pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26. Such orders may also be made for all or some of the members of a sibling group if the children were removed at the same time and one of the children was under the age of 3 years at the time of the initial removal [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361.5(a)(3), 366.21(e)]. If, however, the court determines there is a substantial probability of the return of the child to the custody of the parent or guardian within six months or that reasonable services have not been provided, the court shall not schedule a hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26, but shall instead continue the case for further services [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(e)].

One court has held that a Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing may also be set at the six-month review hearing for a child who was under the age of 3 years at the time of initial removal if there is no substantial probability of return by the 18-month permanency review date [Armando D. v. Superior Court (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 1011, 1020-1025, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 189] . That holding was questioned by many as incorrect. Regardless, it was based on language in Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(a) that has since been amended in a way that makes the analysis and holding of Armando D. no longer applicable. As such, the current language of Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(e) that sets forth under what circumstances the court may terminate services and set a Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing for a child under the age of 3 years at the time of initial removal should be considered dispositive on the issue.

Practitioners should not misread the requirements of Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361.5(a) and 366.21(e) regarding the termination of services for parents whose child was under the age of 3 years at the time of the initial removal. It is not correct, as some believe, that unless the parents can prove there is a substantial probability of return by the 12-month permanency hearing date services must be terminated. Instead, to terminate services at the six-month review hearing for a child who was under the age of 3 years at the time of the initial removal the social services agency must first prove it has offered or provided reasonable reunification services. It must then prove by clear and convincing evidence the parent has "failed to participate regularly and make substantive progress in a court-ordered treatment plan" [Welf. &

Inst. Code § 366.21(e)]. If the agency does not do this, the parent has no obligation to attempt to prove there is a substantial probability of return by the 12-month permanency hearing date in order for services to continue. It is only if the agency meets its burden by clear and convincing evidence to show the parent has failed to participate in the court ordered treatment plan and make substantial progress that the parent, or any other party seeking to extend services, must show by a preponderance of the evidence there is a substantial probability of the return of the child by the 12-month permanency hearing. If the court finds there is such a probability, it must continue the case to the 12-month permanency hearing.

It should also be noted, however, that if the agency proves the parent has not made substantial progress even though participating in services, the requirement for the parent to prove the substantial probability of return applies. At one time Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(e) provided that if the court found "the parent failed to participate regularly in any court-ordered treatment plan, the court may schedule a hearing pursuant to Section 366.26 within 120 days." Effective January 1, 2000, however, the language "and make substantive progress" was added to replace the words "in any" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(e), Stats. 1999, ch. 805]. To give meaning to the statutory change, the phrase "participate regularly and make substantive progress" must be read as two related, but independent requirements. If the agency proves by clear and convincing evidence the parent has either failed to participate regularly in the court ordered treatment plan or that the parent has participated but failed to make substantive progress, the court must schedule a Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing unless the parent establishes there is a substantial probability of return by the date of the 12-month permanency hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(e)].

One appellate court held that when the juvenile court considers whether the parent has established there is a substantial probability of return within six months, it should consider a full six-month period so long as that does not exceed 18 months from the date of original removal. Under that holding, the date of the 12-month permanency hearing was irrelevant for making the determination of substantial probability of return [Dawnel D. v. Superior Court (1999) 74 Cal. App. 4th 393, 399, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 870]. The Dawnel D. decision was an anomaly, however. While purporting to be consistent with the totality of the statutory scheme, it actually focused on the phrase "within six months," construing it strictly without regard to the full intent of the legislature to comply with federal mandates and move quickly toward timely stability for children [see In re Christina A. (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 1153, 1159-1165, 111 Cal. Rptr. 2d 310]. A different court disagreed with the Dawnel D. analysis, finding it inconsistent with the overall statutory scheme, and holding the juvenile court should only consider whether there is a substantial probability of return by the date of the 12-month permanency hearing [Jessica A. v. Superior Court (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 636, 643-645, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 488].

The California Supreme Court granted review in a third case to settle the conflict of authority. It found the language of the statute was ambiguous and thus looked to the legislative intent and other sources to determine its meaning. The Court noted the statutory scheme established three different review periods with three "corresponding distinct escalating standards for the provision of reunification services to parents of children under the age of 3 [Tonya M. v. Superior Court (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 836, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 96, 172 P.3d 402]. Significantly, it observed "juvenile courts lack the authority to order services extending beyond the next review hearing" [Tonya M. v. Superior Court (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 836, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 96, 172 P.3d 402]. It concluded the most logical position, and one supported by the legislative intent and history, and the rule of court was that at the six-month review hearing for a child under 3 years at the time of initial removal, the juvenile court should only consider whether there is a substantial probability of return by the date of the 12-month permanency hearing, regardless of whether that hearing was less than six months away [Tonya M. v. Superior Court (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 836, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 96, 172 P.3d 402]. Disapproving the holding in Dawnel D., the Supreme Court noted: "In urging the rule we here adopt, one leading treatise on dependency law describes Dawnel D. as 'an anomaly' [citation]. We agree" [Tonya M. v. Superior Court (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 836, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 96, 172 P.3d 402 , citing Seiser & Kumli, California Juvenile Courts Practice and Procedure § 2.152[4][a] (Matthew Bender)].

Thus, the statutory language "within six months" presumes the six-month review is held in a timely manner. When it is not, the phrase must be read within the context of the entire statutory scheme. In so doing, the phrase should be interpreted to mean within six months, but not more than 12 months from the date the child entered foster care [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361.5(a)(1)-(2), 366.21(f); In re Christina A. (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 1153, 1159-1165, 111 Cal. Rptr. 2d 310]. As the Supreme Court noted, "reunification services and timing of review hearings are to be determined relative to the child's initial removal into custody or the jurisdictional or dispositional hearing, not the length of previous services or the dates of previous review hearings" [Tonya M. v. Superior Court (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 836, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 96, 172 P.3d 402].

Parent advocates should note the Tonya M. decision does not inappropriately limit the services the parent might receive, since services actually began at the detention hearing, were more formally ordered at the disposition hearing, and continued throughout any continuances of the six-month review hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 319(e), 361.5(a)]. By the date of the 12-month permanency hearing the parent should have been offered or provided 12 months of reunification services since the date the child entered foster care, and more since removal, regardless of when the six-month review hearing was held. Care should be taken to ensure these provisions are applied correctly.

The significance of presumptively ending reunification services for a parent or guardian of a young child at the six-month review hearing, as distinguished from presumptively ending reunification services at the 12-month permanency hearing for a child who was 3 years of age or older at the time of initial removal, has been greatly reduced with California's major policy shift effective January 1, 2009. As indicated, previously the six-month review hearing was held six months from the date the child entered foster care and the 12-month permanency hearing was held 12 months from the date the child entered foster care [In re Christina A. (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 1153, 1159-1164, 111 Cal. Rptr. 2d 310] . Thus, the presumptive difference was six months. With the enactment of Assembly Bill 2341 [stats. 2008, ch. 457], setting the presumptive time for services for the young child as six months from disposition, the concept of expedited permanency for children who were under the age of 3 years at the time of initial removal, or for sibling groups with one such child, has been substantially undermined. Unless the disposition hearing is held within 60 days of removal or nearly so, the practical difference between six months from the date of disposition and 12 months from the date the child entered foster care may be little or nothing. This is an area to be watched for further developments.

PRACTICE TIP:

Setting a ".26" Hearing for Sibling Groups. Many believe the area in which the juvenile dependency system most frequently fails children is that of maintaining sibling contact and togetherness. There is a mandate that attempts be made to place siblings together, unless such placement is not in one or more of the children's best interests. There is also a mandate to provide for regular contact between siblings if they cannot be placed together, unless such contact is detrimental [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16002]. The decision to terminate services and set a case for a Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing for a sibling group can be a difficult one. Many times the court does not want the children to be on different "tracks" or to receive different plans. But different "tracks" and different plans are not always inappropriate. When making such decisions at a six-month review hearing, the court is to consider a multitude of factors including: whether the children were removed from parental care as a group; the "closeness and str ength of the sibling bond"; the ages of the children; the appropriateness of keeping the children together; the detriment to the child if sibling ties are not maintained; the likelihood of finding an alternative permanent home for all of the siblings; whether the children are currently placed together in a home that is a potential permanent home for the children; the wishes of each child, if able to provide "a meaningful response"; and the best interest of the children [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(e)]. It must also be remembered that if not placed together and one or more of the children are adopted, provisions may still be available for post-adoptive sibling contact in appropriate cases [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.29; see discussion in § 328.198[5]]. There is no one correct solution for all sibling groups. Each must be looked at individually. Sometimes all of the sibling group should be set for a Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing together; sometimes such a hearing should only be set for part of the group from the six-month review hearing; and sometimes the family should receive additional services for all of the children, if permitted by law. In making its decision, the court must state its factual basis for determining it is best for some or all of the children to set a hearing pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(e)]. All parties should ensure the court has all relevant information on this very important issue.

For discussion of California's major policy shift on court-ordered services brought about by the enactment of Assembly Bill 2341 [stats. 2008, ch. 457], see § 328.129[1].

[b] Parents' Whereabouts Are Still Unknown

If the child was removed initially under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(g) (child left without provision for support; parent incarcerated or institutionalized and cannot arrange for child's care; relative or custodian with whom child resides or has been left is unwilling or unable to provide care or support and whereabouts of parent unknown), and the court finds by clear and convincing evidence that the whereabouts of the parent are still unknown, the court may schedule a hearing pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.710(f)(1)(A)]. This form of abandonment recognizes that a parent's initial absence as recognized in Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(g) may not actually be due to abandonment, but that if the parent's whereabouts are still unknown six months thereafter, abandonment should be presumed.

[c] Parent Has Failed to Contact and Visit the Child

If the court finds by clear and convincing evidence that the parent has failed to contact and visit the child, the court may schedule a hearing pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 [Sara M. v. Superior Court (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 998, 1017, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 89, 116 P.3d 550 ; In re Monique S. (1993) 21 Cal. App. 4th 677, 682, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 863] . This can be done even if the parent has had some nominal or chance contact with the child during the 6-month period [In re Tameka M. (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 1747, 1753-1754, 40 Cal. Rptr. 2d 64] . To terminate services due to the parent's failure to contact and visit the child, there is no requirement the original finding of jurisdiction have been under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(g). Instead, this recognizes that a parent can abandon a child whether that parent's whereabouts is known or unknown. Either way, the effect on the child is the same [Sara M. v. Superior Court (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 998, 1016, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 89, 116 P.3d 550 , citing Seiser & Kumli, California Juvenile Courts Practice and Procedure § 2.152[4][c] (Matthew Bender)]. This is also consistent with the law as it existed before the enactment of Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 for the termination of parental rights of dependent children. At that time a dependent child could be freed if the parent abandoned the child by failing to communicate with the child for six months. This was without regard to the basis for juvenile court jurisdiction, and could even be done without the juvenile court's authorization [see former Civ. Code § 232(a)(1), now see Fam. Code § 7822; see also In re Jasmon O. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 398, 411-412, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 85, 878 P.2d 1297 , and cases cited therein]. This form of abandonment due to a failure to contact and visit the child was incorporated into the dependency system as a basis for the termination of services and of parental rights through the enactment of Senate Bill 243 [Stats. 1987, ch. 1485].

[d] Parent Convicted of Felony Indicating Parental Unfitness

The court may also schedule a hearing pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 within 120 days if it finds by clear and convincing evidence that the parent has been convicted of a felony indicating parental unfitness [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.710(f)(1)(C)]. The language of the statute for the termination of services based on a conviction of a felony indicating parental unfitness is akin to that of Fam. Code § 7825 for termination of parental rights [In re Cody W. (1994) 31 Cal. App. 4th 221, 225, fn. 1, 36 Cal. Rptr. 2d 848] . Thus, in the absence of case law interpreting this provision of Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(e), courts and practitioners should look by analogy to case law interpreting Fam. Code § 7825 and former Civ. Code § 232(a)(4).

In addition to the nature of the felony conviction itself, the trial court "may properly consider past criminal activities in determining whether a natural parent has rendered himself an unfit parent for the future by commission of a felony" [In re Geoffrey G. (1979) 98 Cal. App. 3d 412, 421, 159 Cal. Rptr. 460 ; see also Adoption of D.S.C. (1979) 93 Cal.

App. 3d 14, 26-27, 155 Cal. Rptr. 406] . In one case a father was convicted of voluntary manslaughter of the mother. The father had numerous previous arrests and convictions for intoxication, and the trial court could reasonably infer the father would continue his drinking habits and either do physical harm to the child while in a drunken rage or because of such intoxication fail to properly provide for the child. The finding that he had been convicted of a felony indicating parental unfitness was upheld [In re Geoffrey G. (1979) 98 Cal. App. 3d 412, 416, 420, 159 Cal. Rptr. 460] . In another case a father was convicted of armed burglary. He had a propensity to violent crime, however, and the facts showed he did not hesitate to involve family members of a tender age in his crime, would turn to crime in the future should he find difficulty in making a living, and might violate parole thereby placing himself at risk of being taken from his family and returned to prison. The finding he had been convicted of a felony indicating parental unfitness was also upheld [Adoption of D.S.C. (1979) 93 Cal. App. 3d 14, 25, 155 Cal. Rptr. 406] .

Courts should not assume a felony conviction, even a heinous one, automatically means the parent is unfit to parent, however. Instead, close consideration must be given to the facts of the underlying conviction, any prior criminal history or lack thereof, and all other relevant circumstances [In re James M. (1976) 65 Cal. App. 3d 254, 259, 266, 135 Cal. Rptr. 222 (denial of termination of parental rights upheld where father convicted of murder of mother by stabbing her 22 times, but evidence supported conclusion the crime was one of passion, not the result of a violent and vicious character, and understandable "within the framework of human folly, weakness and imperfection")].

[e] Parent Is Deceased

The rules of court provide a fifth circumstance in which the court may order a hearing pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 at the six-month review hearing: if the parent is deceased [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.710(f)(1)(D)].

[5] Educational Decisions

The need for limiting a parent's right to make educational decisions, to appoint a responsible adult for educational decisions, or for the court to make educational decisions for the child should to be considered at any review hearing, including post-permanency planning review hearings for children in long term foster care [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361(a), 366(a)(1)(C), 366.3(e)(5)]. Educational advocacy on behalf of dependent children is not limited to the activities of a responsible adult or surrogate parent for the making of educational decisions for the child. Counsel for children, CASAs, social workers, and other child advocates, as well as the juvenile court, must take an active role in educational advocacy for dependent children [see, e.g., Espana & Fried, The Expanding Role of the Juvenile Court in Determining Educational Outcomes for Foster Children, 5 J. Center Children & Cts. 83 (2004); NCJFCJ, Asking The Right Questions: A Judicial Checklist to Ensure That the Educational Needs of Children and Youth in Foster Care Are Being Addressed (NCJFCJ 2005)].

For discussion of the requirement to address the educational needs of the child, including limiting the parents' right to make educational decisions and the appointment of a responsible adult to make such decisions, see § 328.62[6].

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
I. Periodic Review Procedures

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.153

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.153 Twelve-Month Permanency Hearing

The 12-month permanency hearing must be held within 12 months of the date the child entered foster care, which is the date of the jurisdiction finding or 60 days from the date the child was originally removed from the physical custody of the parent or guardian whichever occurred earlier [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361.5(a), 366.21(f)].

In some cases continuances and delays will cause the 12-month permanency hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(f) to be completed 18 months or more from the date the child was physically removed from the custody of the parent. When that happens, there is a difference of opinion whether the hearing should be considered a 12-month permanency hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(f) or an 18-month permanency review hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.22. One case has commented that an 18-month hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.22(a) can only occur when the matter has been continued at a 12-month hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(f), (g)(1). Thus, if there has been no 12-month hearing and no continuance of the matter to the 18-month date, it is not an 18-month hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.22 [In re Ricky H. (1992) 10 Cal. App. 4th 552, 557, fn. 2, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 578] . This view is consistent with the plain language of the statutes, but fails to construe the statutes "in the context of the entire dependency process of which [they] are a part" [Cynthia D. v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 242, 253, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 698, 851 P.2d 1307] .

The better and more widely followed view recognizes the time frames for reunification services are limited [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(a); Denny H. v. Superior Court (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 1501, 1509, fn. 3, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 89 , citing Seiser & Kumli, California Juvenile Courts Practice and Procedure § 2.153 (Matthew Bender)]. The law does not establish a minimum number of months of services for a parent. Instead, the emphasis of the law is on "setting outside limits to the length of time a child may be kept in foster care before a permanent plan is established" [In re David H. (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 368, 388, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 313] . The statutes assume the 12-month permanency hearing will be held in a timely fashion and will conclude prior to the time for the 18-month permanency review hearing. When it does not, the passage of time will cause the two hearings to merge, with the result that the 12-month permanency hearing will become the 18-month permanency review hearing without the necessity for a second or separate hearing [see In re Brian R. (1991) 2 Cal. App. 4th 904, 917, 924, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 768] . Under either view, the statutory mandate for limiting reunification services to a maximum of 18 months from the date of the original removal will control over any conflict in the statutes [Denny H. v. Superior Court (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 1501, 1509, fn. 3, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 89 , citing Seiser & Kumli, California Juvenile Courts Practice and Procedure § 2.153 (Matthew Bender); In re David H. (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 368, 385-389, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 313] .

For detailed discussion of 18-month permanency review hearings, see § 328.154.

[1] To Determine Whether Child Should Return to Custody of Parent or Guardian

At the 12-month permanency hearing, the juvenile court must order the return of the child to the physical custody of his or her parent or guardian unless, by a preponderance of the evidence, it finds that return of the child would create a substantial risk or detriment to the safety, protection, or physical or emotional well-being of the child. The social services department has the burden of establishing that detriment [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(f)]. Although not expressly stated in the statute, it appears clear this finding need only be made as to any parent or guardian receiving reunification services. If the court denied services for one parent pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b) or (e)(1) at disposition or terminated such services for one parent pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(e) at the six-month review, but ordered services for the other parent, it should be presumed the child is not returning to the parent for whom services were denied or terminated and the only question is whether return to the parent receiving services would create a substantial risk of detriment.

The failure of the parent or guardian to participate regularly and make substantive progress in any court-ordered treatment programs constitutes prima facie evidence that return would be detrimental. In making its determination, the court must [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(f)]:

- Review and consider the social worker's report.

- Review and consider the report and recommendation of any child advocate appointed pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 356.5.

- Consider the efforts or progress, or both, demonstrated by the parent or guardian and the extent to which he or she cooperated and availed himself or herself of services provided.

- Specify the factual basis for its determination that return of the child would or would not be detrimental to the child. The court must do this regardless of whether it returns the child or not.

- Make a finding under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366(a) (relating to necessity for and appropriateness of current placement, compliance with case plan, sibling interaction, progress toward resolving or mitigating the reasons that led to foster care placement, and the likely date by which the child will receive a permanent placement either in the home of the parent or an alternative permanent home).

If the court returns the child to the custody of a parent, the court may continue court supervision as a family maintenance case and set the matter for a review hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 364 [Bridget A. v. Superior Court (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 285, 313-316, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 647].

For a discussion of determining whether it would be detrimental to return the child, see § 328.151[5].

[2] Placement With Previously Noncustodial Parent

If the child was placed under court supervision with a previously noncustodial parent pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2, the court must determine whether supervision is still necessary. The court may continue supervision and services, or make juvenile custody orders granting custody to that parent and either continue supervision and services or terminate dependency jurisdiction [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.715(c)(2) (Custody Order--Juvenile Final Judgment (JV-200) must be prepared and filed under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.700)]. For a discussion of how the court may view placement alternatives when reunification services were ordered for the parent from whom the child was removed and the child was placed with the previously noncustodial parent, both of whom may now desire placement of the child, see § 328.152[2].

[3] Determining a Permanent Plan for the Child

At the 12-month permanency hearing the court must determine the permanent plan for the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(f)]. If the child is returned to the custody of a parent or guardian that permanent plan for the child is reunification. If the child is not returned, however, the court must make a determination of whether to continue working toward the permanent plan of reunification or to terminate reunification efforts and select an alternative permanency plan for the child. The social worker must recommend a hearing be held pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 if the child is in foster care, or enters foster care, on or after January 1, 1999, and the child has been in foster care for 15 of the most recent 22 months, unless certain circumstances apply [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16508.1]. If a child is not returned to the custody of a parent or guardian at the 12-month permanency hearing, the court must do one of the following [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(g)]:

- Continue the case for up to six months for a permanency review hearing, provided that the hearing must occur within 18 months of the date of the original removal of the child from the physical custody of the parent or guardian [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(g)(1)]. If 18 months has already passed since the date of the child's original removal, this option is not available to the court [In re David H. (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 368, 385-389, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 313] . The court must continue the case only if it finds that there is a substantial probability the permanent plan of having the child returned and safely maintained in the physical custody of his or her parent or guardian will be achieved within that time frame or that the social services agency has not proven by clear and convincing evidence that reasonable services have been provided or offered to the parent or guardian [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361.5(a), 366.21(g)(1)]. In order to determine there is a substantial probability the child will be returned to the parent or guardian and safely maintained in that home within the extended period of time the court must find all of the following [Cal. Rules of Court, Rule 5.715(c)(3)]: (1) the parent or guardian has "consistently and regularly contacted and visited with the child" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(g)(1)(A)]; (2) the parent or guardian has made "significant progress" in working on their plan and resolving the problems that led to the child's removal [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(g)(1)(B)]; and (3) the parent or guardian has shown the "capacity and ability" to complete his or her treatment plan objectives and to "provide for the child's safety, protection, physical and emotional well-being, and special needs" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(g)(1)(C)]. Moreover, the court must inform the parent or guardian that, if the child cannot be returned home by the next permanency review hearing, a permanent plan will be developed at that hearing and a hearing pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 may be set [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(g)(1)].

- Order that a hearing be held within 120 days, pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26, if the court finds that there is no substantial probability of return to the parent or guardian within 18 months of the date the child was originally removed from the physical custody of the parent or guardian, and finds by clear and convincing evidence that reasonable services have been offered or provided to the parent or guardian [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(g)(3)]. In this case the court is determining the permanent plan of the child to be an alternative plan other than return to parent. The setting of the hearing pursuant to Welf.

& Inst. Code § 366.26 is for the purpose of selecting which alternative permanent plan is to be ordered for the child.

- Order that the child remain in long-term foster or relative care, if the court does not continue the matter for further services and finds by clear and convincing evidence, based on the evidence already presented to it, that the child is not a proper subject for adoption and has no one willing to accept legal guardianship [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(g)(2)]. In making this determination the court shall consider any recommendation by a licensed adoption agency or the State Department of Social Services when acting as a licensed adoption agency, that "there is a compelling reason for determining that a hearing held pursuant to Section 366.26 is not in the best interest of the child because the child is not a proper subject for adoption and has no one willing to accept legal guardianship" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(g)(2)]. The statute provides that the recommendation of the agency in this regard "shall constitute a compelling reason for the court's determination" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(g)(2)]. This latter provision should not be read to suggest the court must accept the recommendation as conclusive and does not have to consider the factual basis for that recommendation or to make its own determination of whether the child is a proper subject for adoption. To so hold would impermissibly invade and restrict the role and responsibilities of the court. Instead, it should be interpreted to mean that the recommendation of the licensed adoption agency that the child be found to not be a proper subject for adoption is a sufficient basis for the court to make such a finding if the court finds the facts of the case as then presented to it provide clear and convincing evidence to support that recommendation and determination. It must be remembered that it will be the rare case in which the court will have sufficient facts before it to make such a determination at the time of the permanency hearing. In most cases, the more complete assessment required for the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing will be necessary before the court can factually make such a determination.

PRACTICE TIP:

Not a Proper Subject for Adoption. Prior to January 1, 1996, the criteria for "cutting out" to a permanent plan of long-term foster care required that the court have clear and convincing evidence that the child "is not adoptable" [see Welf. & Inst. Code former § 366.21(g)(2)]. This was a very objective standard. The current criteria of "not a proper subject for adoption" is a very subjective standard which is not defined in statute. This is a major departure from the strict requirements of Senate Bill 243 [Stats. 1987, ch. 1485] which limited juvenile court discretion in this regard so as to ensure that children were provided the maximum opportunity for a permanent plan of adoption or guardianship if they cannot be returned home. The additional language effective January 1, 1999, regarding a "compelling reason" as recommended by the adoption agency creates the potential for further undermining the policy of taking all reasonable steps to ensure the most stable and permanent plan for the child through a full assessment at the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing. Juvenile courts, county counsel, children's counsel, and court-appointed special advocates should be wary of utilizing or agreeing with the use of this "cut out" unless they have a very complete report, similar to an assessment for a selection and implementation hearing, which provides sufficient details on the topic of adoption for the child so as to allow the court to make an informed decision. Even then use of this "cut out" should be the exception, not the rule. Counsel for parents and guardians, however, should attempt to utilize this subjective standard to avoid a selection and implementation hearing thereby limiting the permanency planning possibilities whenever possible. How the appellate courts will interpret the phrase "not a proper subject for adoption" remains to be seen and this area should be watched for further developments.

[4] Concurrent Reunification and Permanency Planning Services

The court must also determine whether reasonable services have been provided or offered to the parent or parents, which were designed to aid the parent or parents to overcome the problems that led to the initial removal and continued custody of the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(f)]. The fact that a child has been placed in a preadoptive home or with a family that is eligible to adopt the child, or that the case plan includes concurrent planning for legal permanence, or that services to achieve legal permanence for the child if reunification efforts are unsuccessful have been provided concurrently with services to reunify shall not be deemed, in and of itself, a failure to provide or offer reasonable reunification services to the parent or guardian [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(l)].

Visitation between a child and a parent is an important component of any reunification plan [In re Mark L. (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 573, 580-581, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 499 ; In re Luke L. (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 670, 679, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 53] . Thus the question of whether reasonable visitation has been offered or provided to the parent is one aspect of the reasonable efforts determination. Even if it has been determined visitation would be detrimental to the child, reunification services should not thwart the potential for future contact by giving the child complete control of whether visitation will take place or by denying the court adequate information on which to base its decision regarding such future contact. In one case visitation was found to be detrimental at the six-month review, but the juvenile court prevented the child's therapist from communicating with the social services agency or the court based on the assertion of the psychotherapist-patient privilege. The appellate court upheld the finding that visitation would be detrimental, but found that preventing the therapist from providing circumscribed information to accomplish the information-gathering goal of therapy effectively thwarted the potential for visitation, resulting in a failure to provide reasonable reunification services between the 6-month and 12-month hearings [In re Mark L. (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 573, 585, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 499] . Any determination of this nature should, of course, be based on the totality of the evidence regarding reunification services and normally should not be limited solely to the visitation issue.

The court should also determine whether reasonable efforts to provide legal permanence for the child if reunification fails have been made, including efforts for a child who is 10 years of age or older and placed in out of home care to maintain relationships with people who are important to the child, consistent with the child's best interest. The court must make whatever findings are appropriate in this regard [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366(a)(1)(B)].

If a hearing pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 is set, the court must terminate reunification services. Visitation must be continued, however, unless the court determines visitation would be detrimental to the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(h)]. If reunification efforts are not terminated, the court must order those services be initiated or continued, provided that the court may modify the terms and conditions of those services as appropriate. The court should also make whatever orders are necessary and appropriate regarding the provision of concurrent permanency planning services to achieve legal permanence if reunification efforts fail. The court must then set the matter for a 18-month permanency review hearing, to be held no later than 18 months after the date the child was originally removed from the physical custody of the parent or guardian [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 366.21(f)-(g), 366.22(a)].

For a discussion of concurrent reunification and permanency planning services see § 328.129[1], [3], [4], [5], and [6].

[5] Setting a Selection and Implementation Hearing

If the court orders that a Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing must be held, it must also orally advise all parties present, and advise by first class mail all parties who are not present, that if the party wishes to preserve any right to review on appeal of the order the court made setting the matter for a hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26, the person must seek an extraordinary writ by filing a Notice of Intent to File Writ Petition and Request for Record [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.715(d)(3); see Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(l); see also discussion in § 328.189 et seq.].

[6] Educational Decisions

The need for limiting a parent's right to make educational decisions, to appoint a responsible adult for educational decisions, or for the court to make educational decisions for the child should to be considered at any review hearing, including post-permanency planning review hearings for children in long term foster care [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361(a)

, 366(a)(1)(C), 366.3(e)(5)]. Educational advocacy on behalf of dependent children is not limited to the activities of a responsible adult or surrogate parent for the making of educational decisions for the child. Counsel for children, CASAs, social workers, and other child advocates, as well as the juvenile court, must take an active role in educational advocacy for dependent children [see, e.g., Espana & Fried, The Expanding Role of the Juvenile Court in Determining Educational Outcomes for Foster Children, 5 J. Center Children & Cts. 83 (2004); NCJFCJ, Asking The Right Questions: A Judicial Checklist to Ensure That the Educational Needs of Children and Youth in Foster Care Are Being Addressed (NCJFCJ 2005)].

For discussion of the requirement to address the educational needs of the child, including limiting the parents' right to make educational decisions and the appointment of a responsible adult to make such decisions, see § 328.62[6].

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329

CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
I. Periodic Review Procedures

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.154

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.154 Eighteen-Month Permanency Review Hearing

The 18-month permanency review hearing must be held within 18 months of the original removal of the child from the physical custody of the parent or guardian [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361.5(a)(2), 366.21(g)(1), 366.22(a)]. Due to the length of time that passed between the original removal and the finding of jurisdiction or 60 days, and due to any continuances of the 12-month permanency hearing, the 18-month permanency review hearing will be held less than six months after the 12-month permanency hearing.

[1] To Determine Whether Child Should Return to Custody of Parent or Guardian

The procedures at the 18-month permanency review hearing are essentially the same as those at the 12-month permanency hearing (discussed in § 328.153) in regards to the determination of whether the child should be returned to the custody of the parent or guardian. Thus, the court must order the child returned to parental custody unless, by a preponderance of the evidence, it finds that return of the child would create a substantial risk of detriment to the safety, protection, or physical or emotional well-being of the child. Although not expressly stated in the statute, it appears clear this finding need only be made as to any parent or guardian receiving reunification services. If the court has denied or terminated services for one parent, but ordered services for the other parent, it should be presumed the child is not returning to the parent for whom services were denied or terminated and the only question is whether return to the parent receiving services would create a substantial risk of detriment. The social services department has the burden of establishing the detriment. The failure of the parent or guardian to participate regularly and make substantive progress in any court-ordered treatment programs constitutes prima facie evidence that return would be detrimental [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.22(a)].

In making its determination, the court must review and consider the social worker's report and recommendations, and must review and consider the report and recommendations of any child advocate appointed pursuant to Welf. & Inst.

Code § 356.6 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.22(a)]. The court must also consider the efforts or progress, or both, demonstrated by the parent or guardian and the extent to which he or she cooperated and availed himself or herself of services provided. The court must specify the factual basis for its conclusion that return would or would not be detrimental regardless of whether it orders the child returned or not [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.22(a)]. If the court returns the child to the custody of a parent, the court may continue court supervision as a family maintenance case and set the matter for a review hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 364 [Bridget A. v. Superior Court (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 285, 313-316, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 647].

Parental rights may not be terminated without holding an 18-month hearing where such a hearing is required [In re Rubin P. (1991) 2 Cal. App. 4th 306, 310, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 301 (failure to allow contested 18-month hearing is grounds for reversal of order terminating parental rights)].

For a discussion of determining whether it would be detrimental to return the child, see § 328.151[5].

[2] Concurrent Reunification and Permanency Planning Services

[a] Findings and Orders

The court must also determine whether reasonable services have been provided or offered to the parent or parents, which were designed to aid the parent or parents to overcome the problems that led to the initial removal and continued custody of the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.22(a)]. The fact that a child has been placed in a preadoptive home or with a family that is eligible to adopt the child, or that the case plan includes concurrent planning for legal permanence, or that services to achieve legal permanence for the child if reunification efforts are unsuccessful have been provided concurrently with services to reunify shall not be deemed, in and of itself, a failure to provide or offer reasonable reunification services to the parent or guardian [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.22(a)].

Visitation between a child and a parent is an important component of any reunification plan [In re Mark L. (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 573, 580-581, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 499 ; In re Luke L. (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 670, 679, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 53] . Thus the question of whether reasonable visitation has been offered or provided to the parent is one aspect of the reasonable efforts determination. In one case visitation was found to be detrimental, but the juvenile court prevented the child's therapist from communicating with the social services agency or the court based on the assertion of the psychotherapist-patient privilege. The appellate court upheld the finding that visitation would be detrimental, but found that preventing the therapist from providing circumscribed information to accomplish the information-gathering goal of therapy effectively thwarted the potential for visitation, resulting in a failure to provide reasonable reunification services [In re Mark L. (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 573, 585, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 499] . Any determination of this nature should, of course, be based on the totality of the evidence regarding reunification services and normally should not be limited solely to the visitation issue. The burden of proof for the reasonable services finding at the 18-month permanency review hearing is a preponderance of the evidence [Katie V. v. Superior Court (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 586, 594-598, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 320] . While a finding regarding reasonable services must be made at this hearing, the authority of the juvenile court to set a hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 does not require the court to have made a finding at the 18-month permanency review hearing that reasonable services were offered or provided [Denny H. v. Superior Court (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 1501, 1511-1512, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 89 ; Mark N. v. Superior Court (1998) 60 Cal. App. 4th 996, 1015-1016, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 603] .

The court should also determine whether reasonable efforts to provide legal permanence for the child if reunification fails have been made, including efforts for a child who is 10 years of age or older and placed in out of home care to maintain relationships with people who are important to the child, consistent with the child's best interest. The court must make whatever findings are appropriate in this regard [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366(a)(1)(B)].

[b] Limited Circumstances for Services Beyond 18 Months

While a reasonable efforts finding at the 18-month permanency hearing is not essential to setting a selection and implementation hearing if there has been a previous finding that reasonable services have been provided, the court has discretion to continue the matter beyond the 18-month time frame for the provision of reunification services if it finds that no reasonable services have been provided [see In re Daniel G. (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 1205, 1209, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 75 ; In re Dino E. (1992) 6 Cal. App. 4th 1768, 1779, 8 Cal. Rptr. 2d 416] . But as one court of appeal noted in a case in which the father made little effort to visit the child and could have raised the question of visitation far sooner, "A noncustodial parent may not refuse to participate in reunification treatment programs until the final reunification review hearing has been set and then demand an extension of the reunification period to complete the required programs" [Los Angeles County Dep't of Children & Family Servs. v. Superior Court (1997) 60 Cal. App. 4th 1088, 1092-1093, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 658] . "Neither may a parent wait silently by until the final reunification review hearing to seek an extended reunification period based on a perceived inadequacy in the reunification services occurring long before that hearing" [Los Angeles County Dep't of Children & Family Servs. v. Superior Court (1997) 60 Cal. App. 4th 1088, 1093, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 658] . Further, the mere fact the previous hearings had been continued and delayed for so long the parent did not receive a full period of reunification services is not controlling. The statutes do not provide for a minimum period of reunification services. "To the contrary, the emphasis throughout the statutes is upon setting outside limits to the length of time a child may be kept in foster care before a permanent plan is established" [In re David H. (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 368, 388, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 313] . Thus, if the parents "request or accede in delays" of the dependency adjudication process, they "may not complain if a hearing under section 366.26 is ordered after an abbreviated period of reunification services [In re David H. (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 368, 388, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 313] .

One court of appeal has held that a juvenile court has the discretion to order services beyond the 18-month hearing date where appropriate to help a "special needs" parent work towards reunification [In re Elizabeth R. (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 1774, 1787, 42 Cal. Rptr. 2d 200] . In that case, the mother was hospitalized throughout much of the reunification period for psychological problems. Although the court criticized the evidence regarding reasonable services, it did not actually determine that the juvenile court's finding of reasonable services at the 18-month hearing was not supported by substantial evidence [In re Elizabeth R. (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 1774, 1789-1792, 42 Cal. Rptr. 2d 200] . As such, its holding that the juvenile court had discretion to order further services is a marked departure from statutory mandates and previous decisional precedents, including the cases of In re Daniel G. (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 1205, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 75 , and In re Dino E. (1992) 6 Cal. App. 4th 1768, 8 Cal. Rptr. 2d 416 , which it cites as supportive authority [In re Elizabeth R. (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 1774, 1793-1796, 42 Cal. Rptr. 2d 200] . Nevertheless, although an anomaly, this case stands for the proposition that a special needs parent can receive more than 18 months of services. It should be noted that where cited by other appellate courts, Elizabeth R. is usually mentioned only in dicta for the proposition that in "rare" instances a parent or guardian may get more than 18 months of services, with the court then going on to distinguish the facts in the case at hand [see, e.g., Cresse S. v. Superior Court (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 947, 954, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 56] . Another court has noted that in each of the decisions that have upheld or ordered the provision of services beyond the 18-month limit there were "extraordinary circumstances" that favored the extension of services. These circumstances "uniformly involved some external factor which prevented the parent from participating in the case plan" [Andrea L. v. Superior Court (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 1377, 1388, 75 Cal. Rptr. 2d 851] . Such treatment emphasizes the very limited nature of the Elizabeth R. holding.

The better and more frequently utilized approach is that taken in the case of Los Angeles County Dep't of Children & Family Servs. v. Superior Court (1997) 60 Cal. App. 4th 1088, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 658 in which the court of appeal reversed a juvenile court's order extending services beyond the 18 month date. There the court noted the statutory limitation of 18 months for the provision of reunification services and found the court's order for services beyond that date exceeded the juvenile court's jurisdiction [Los Angeles County Dep't of Children & Family Servs. v. Superior Court (1997) 60 Cal. App. 4th 1088, 1091-1092, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 658] . The court of appeal also found the juvenile court's order to be an abuse of discretion, since the father in that case had made no showing he could complete the programs necessary to achieve reunification within the extended period of time [Los Angeles County Dep't of Children & Family Servs. v. Superior Court (1997) 60 Cal. App. 4th 1088, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 658] . While the facts of this case did not involve a parent with special needs and thus is distinguishable from Elizabeth R., the court of appeal's recognition of the limits of the juvenile court's jurisdiction in this regard is significant and should be remembered in all cases in which the juvenile court is asked to extend services beyond the maximum period allowed by law [Denny H. v. Superior Court (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 1501, 1511, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 89 ("When extraordinary special needs are not at issue, the approach taken in Los Angeles County Dept. of Children etc. Services v. Superior Court (1997) 60 Cal. App. 4th 1088 [70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 658] makes sense")].

It should also be noted that within the cases addressing whether a court can extend services beyond 18 months is the question of the appropriate vehicle for doing so. Most courts have held that Welf. & Inst. Code § 352, which allows any dependency hearing to be continued beyond the statutory time limits if the continuance is not contrary to the interests of the child, is the proper vehicle [see, e.g., Mark N. v. Superior Court (1998) 60 Cal. App. 4th 996, 1016-1017, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 603 ; In re Elizabeth R. (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 1774, 1797-1799, 42 Cal. Rptr. 2d 200] . It is doubtful, however, that Welf. & Inst. Code § 352 was ever intended to allow hearings to be continued for a period of six months, particularly in light of the mandate to resolve dependency cases in a timely manner. An 18-month review that is continued for six months is no longer an 18-month review. It is a 24-month review, which does not exist in California's dependency statutes [Denny H. v. Superior Court (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 1501, 1511, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 89 , citing Seiser & Kumli, California Juvenile Courts Practice and Procedure § 2.154[2][b] (Matthew Bender)]. Thus, the more appropriate use of Welf. & Inst. Code § 352 is for the normal continuances caused by missing or sick witnesses, calendar conflicts, and the like. A different approach was taken by the court of appeal in the case of In re Daniel G. (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 1205, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 75 . Having found that reasonable reunification services had not been offered or provided, the court of appeal determined that under the facts of that case the juvenile court had discretion to continue the matter for services [In re Daniel G. (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 1205, 1211-1215, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 75] . Although a court's discretion in such circumstances must of necessity be very limited, it is probably more consistent with the overall purposes of the dependency system to hold the court has some very limited inherent authority to continue matters beyond the time limits statutorily mandated in cases where the necessary services have not in any way been provided and the needs of the child require such a continuance. Nevertheless, regardless of which approach is utilized, it should be the rare case in which services are ever ordered beyond the statutory time frames.

PRACTICE TIP:

Arguments for and Against Further Services. Counsel for parents and guardians should note that the Elizabeth R. decision does not define "special needs" parent. As such, it may be argued that any parent or guardian with serious or "special" problems falls within the parameters of the Elizabeth R. case and should be given additional services where necessary and appropriate, regardless of whether they have already received 18 months of services or not. Counsel for the social services agency and most children should argue that Elizabeth R. was incorrectly decided, is inconsistent with both statutory and decisional precedents, and thus is not binding on local trial and appellate courts insofar as it purports to grant authority to juvenile courts to order services beyond the 18-month date where reasonable services have already been provided. Courts should be cautious in their use of the Elizabeth R. decision in light of its many inconsistencies with established law. Regardless of whether a court chooses to consider Elizabeth R. as correct or not, however, it will be the rare case which is not factually distinguishable from the unique situation presented there.

[c] Continuing the Case for a 24-Month Hearing

Effective January 1, 2009, the juvenile court has a new option at the 18-month permanency review hearing. In certain limited circumstances it can continue the matter for up to six months, but not more than 24 months from the date of the initial removal, for a "subsequent permanency review hearing" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.22(b)]. This major policy shift on court-ordered services was brought about by the enactment of Assembly Bill 2070 [stats. 2008, ch. 482]. If the court finds by clear and convincing evidence the best interests of the child would be served by providing additional reunification services to a parent or guardian who is making "significant and consistent progress" in a substance abuse treatment program, or who has been recently released from institutionalization or incarceration and is making "significant and consistent progress" in establishing a home that is safe for the child to return to, the court may continue the case for up to six months, but not more than 24 months from the date of the initial removal. The court can only do this, however, if it finds there is a substantial probability the child will be returned to the physical custody of the parent or guardian, and be safely maintained in that home, within the extended period of time. The court can also do this if it finds reasonable services have not been offered or provided to the parent or legal guardian [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.22(b)]. Indeed, for parents or legal guardians who fall under the provisions of this limited subdivision, the court may not order a hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 unless it finds by clear and convincing evidence that reasonable services have been provided or offered to the parent or legal guardian [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.22(b)].

In order for the court to find a substantial probability the child will be returned to the parent or guardian and maintained safely in that home within the extended period of time, the court must find all of the following [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.22(b)(1)-(3)]:

- The parent or legal guardian had consistently and regularly contacted and visited the child;

- The parent or legal guardian has made "significant and consistent progress" in the previous 18 months in resolving the problems that led to the child's removal from the home; and

- The parent or legal guardian as demonstrated both the capacity and ability to complete the objectives of his or her substance abuse treatment plan, or to complete a treatment plan after discharge from institutionalization or incarceration, and to provide for the safety, protection, physical and emotional well being, and special needs of the child.

It is anticipated that it will be the rare case in which all of the requirements are met for continuing the matter to the 24-month date. Nevertheless, if the court does continue the matter for a 24-month hearing, it must inform the parent or legal guardian that if the child cannot be returned to the home by the date for the 24-month hearing, a hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 may be set [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.22(b)]. The court's decision continuing the matter to the 24-month date is statutorily determined to be a compelling reason for deciding that setting a hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 is not in the child's best interest [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.22(b)].

For discussion of California's major policy shift on court ordered services brought about by the enactment of Assembly Bill 2070 [stats. 2008, ch. 482], see § 328.129[1].

[3] Determining a Permanent Plan for the Child

If the child is returned to the custody of the parent or guardian, the permanent plan of reunification has been achieved. If the child is not returned to a parent or guardian at the 18-month permanency review hearing, the court must develop an alternative permanent plan, except in the very limited circumstances where it sets a 24-month hearing. The social worker must recommend a hearing be held pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 if the child is in foster care, or enters foster care, on or after January 1, 1999, and the child has been in foster care for 15 of the most recent 22 months, unless certain circumstances apply [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 366.22(b), 16508.1]. In most cases, the court must order that a selection and implementation hearing pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 be held to determine whether adoption, guardianship, or another planned permanent living arrangement, such as permanent placement with a foster or relative caregiver committed to caring for the child on a permanent basis, is the most appropriate alternative permanency plan for the child. The hearing must be held no later than 120 days from the date of the 18-month permanency review hearing. The court must also order termination of reunification services to the parent. However, the court must continue to permit the parent to visit the child unless it finds that visitation would be detrimental to the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.22(a)].

However, if the court finds by clear and convincing evidence, based on the evidence already presented to it, that the child is not a proper subject for adoption and has no one willing to accept legal guardianship, the court may order as an alternative permanency plan that the child remain in another planned permanent living arrangement, such as permanent placement with a foster or relative caregiver committed to caring for the child on a permanent basis. The court may not select long-term foster care in order to extend reunification services beyond 18 months or because it does not have an adoptive home whose application has been approved [In re John F. (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 1365, 1377-1379, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 225 ; In re Emily L. (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 734, 743, 260 Cal. Rptr. 810 ; see Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.22(a)]. In making this determination the court shall consider any recommendation by a licensed adoption agency or the State Department of Social Services when acting as a licensed adoption agency, that "there is a compelling reason, as described in paragraph (2) of subdivision (g) of Section 366.21, for determining that a hearing held under Section 366.26 is not in the best interest of the child because the child is not a proper subject for adoption and has no one willing to accept legal guardianship" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.22(a)]. For a discussion of "compelling reason" recommendations by licensed adoption agencies, see § 328.153[3].

If the court sets a selection and implementation hearing, the court must also orally advise all parties present, and advise by first class mail all parties who are not present, that if the party wishes to preserve any right to review on appeal of the order the court made setting the matter for a hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26, the person must seek an extraordinary writ by filing a Notice of Intent to File Writ Petition and Request for Record [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.450; see Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(l); see also discussion in § 328.189 et seq.].

[4] Educational Decisions

The need for limiting a parent's right to make educational decisions, to appoint a responsible adult for educational decisions, or for the court to make educational decisions for the child should to be considered at any review hearing, including post-permanency planning review hearings for children in long term foster care [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361(a), 366(a)(1)(C), 366.3(e)(5)]. Educational advocacy on behalf of dependent children is not limited to the activities of a responsible adult or surrogate parent for the making of educational decisions for the child. Counsel for children, CASAs, social workers, and other child advocates, as well as the juvenile court, must take an active role in educational advocacy for dependent children [see, e.g., Espana & Fried, The Expanding Role of the Juvenile Court in Determining Educational Outcomes for Foster Children, 5 J. Center Children & Cts. 83 (2004); NCJFCJ, Asking The Right Questions: A Judicial Checklist to Ensure That the Educational Needs of Children and Youth in Foster Care Are Being Addressed (NCJFCJ 2005)].

For discussion of the requirement to address the educational needs of the child, including limiting the parents' right to make educational decisions and the appointment of a responsible adult to make such decisions, see § 328.62[6].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
I. Periodic Review Procedures

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.155

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.155 Twenty-Four-Month Subsequent Permanency Review Hearing

The 24-month subsequent permanency review hearing must be held within 24 months of the original removal of the child from the physical custody of the parent or guardian [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361.5(a)(3), 366.22(b), 366.25(a)].

[1] To Determine Whether Child Should Return to Custody of Parent or Guardian

The procedures at the 24-month subsequent permanency review hearing are essentially the same as those at six-month review hearing, the 12-month permanency hearing, and the 18-month permanency review hearing in regards to the determination of whether the child should be returned to the custody of the parent or guardian. Thus, the court must order the child returned to parental custody unless, by a preponderance of the evidence, it finds that return of the child would create a substantial risk of detriment to the safety, protection, or physical or emotional well-being of the child. Although not expressly stated in the statute, it appears clear this finding need only be made as to any parent or guardian receiving reunification services. If the court has denied or terminated services for one parent, but ordered services for the other parent, it should be presumed the child is not returning to the parent for whom services were denied or terminated and the only question is whether return to the parent receiving services would create a substantial risk of detriment. The social services department has the burden of establishing the detriment. The failure of the parent or guardian to participate regularly and make substantive progress in any court-ordered treatment programs constitutes prima facie evidence that return would be detrimental [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.25(a)(1)].

In making its determination, the court must review and consider the social worker's report and recommendations, and must review and consider the report and recommendations of any child advocate appointed pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 356.6 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.25(a)(1)]. The court must also consider the efforts or progress, or both, demonstrated by the parent or guardian and the extent to which he or she cooperated and availed himself or herself of services provided. The court must specify the factual basis for its conclusion that return would or would not be detrimental regardless of whether it orders the child returned or not [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.25(a)(1)-(2)]. The court must also make a finding as to whether reasonable reunification services have been offered or provided to the parent [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.25(a)(3)].

For a discussion of determining whether it would be detrimental to return the child, see § 328.151[5].

[2] Determining a Permanent Plan for the Child

If the child is returned to the custody of the parent or guardian, the permanent plan of reunification has been achieved. If the child is not returned to a parent or guardian at the 24-month subsequent permanency review hearing, the court must develop an alternative permanent plan. The social worker must recommend a hearing be held pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 if the child is in foster care, or enters foster care, on or after January 1, 1999, and the child has been in foster care for 15 of the most recent 22 months, unless certain circumstances apply [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16508.1]. In most cases, the court must order that a selection and implementation hearing pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 be held to determine whether adoption, guardianship, or another planned permanent living arrangement, such as permanent placement with a foster or relative caregiver committed to caring for the child on a permanent basis, is the most appropriate alternative permanency plan for the child. The hearing must be held no later than 120 days from the date of the 24-month permanency review hearing. The court must also order termination of reunification services to the parent. However, the court must continue to permit the parent to visit the child unless it finds that visitation would be detrimental to the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.25(a)(3)].

However, if the court finds by clear and convincing evidence, based on the evidence already presented to it, that the child is not a proper subject for adoption and has no one willing to accept legal guardianship, the court may order as an alternative permanency plan that the child remain in another planned permanent living arrangement, such as permanent placement with a foster or relative caregiver committed to caring for the child on a permanent basis. In making this determination the court shall consider any recommendation by a licensed adoption agency or the State Department of Social Services when acting as a licensed adoption agency, that there is a compelling reason for determining that a hearing held under Section 366.26 is not in the best interest of the child because the child is not a proper subject for adoption and has no one willing to accept legal guardianship" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.25(b)(3)].

If the court sets a selection and implementation hearing, the court must also orally advise all parties present, and advise by first class mail all parties who are not present, that if the party wishes to preserve any right to review on appeal of the order the court made setting the matter for a hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26, the person must seek an extraordinary writ by filing a Notice of Intent to File Writ Petition and Request for Record [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.450; see Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(l); see also discussion in § 328.189 et seq.].

[3] Educational Decisions

The need for limiting a parent's right to make educational decisions, to appoint a responsible adult for educational decisions, or for the court to make educational decisions for the child should be considered at any review hearing, including post-permanency planning review hearings for children in long term foster care [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361(a), 366(a)(1)(C), 366.3(e)(5)]. Educational advocacy on behalf of dependent children is not limited to the activities of a responsible adult or surrogate parent for the making of educational decisions for the child. Counsel for children, CASAs, social workers, and other child advocates, as well as the juvenile court, must take an active role in educational advocacy for dependent children [see, e.g., Espana & Fried, The Expanding Role of the Juvenile Court in Determining Educational Outcomes for Foster Children, 5 J. Center Children & Cts. 83 (2004); NCJFCJ, Asking The Right Questions: A Judicial Checklist to Ensure That the Educational Needs of Children and Youth in Foster Care Are Being Addressed (NCJFCJ 2005)].

For discussion of the requirement to address the educational needs of the child, including limiting the parents' right to make educational decisions and the appointment of a responsible adult to make such decisions, see § 328.62[6].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
I. Periodic Review Procedures

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.156

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.156 Subsequent Periodic Review Reports by Social Worker

The court may require the social worker or any other agency to render periodic reports concerning children committed to its care, custody, and control following a disposition hearing as the court deems necessary or desirable. The court may require that the social worker, or any other public agency organized to provide care for needy or neglected children, perform such visitation and make such periodic reports to the courts concerning children committed under disposition proceedings as the court deems necessary or desirable [Welf. & Inst. Code § 365].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
I. Periodic Review Procedures

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.157

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.157 Issuance of Custody Orders on Termination of Jurisdiction

If the juvenile court terminates dependency jurisdiction prior to the child's 18th birthday and places the child with a parent, it may also make a juvenile court custody order and protective orders [Welf. & Inst. Code § 362.4 (not applicable where termination of dependency jurisdiction is due to an adoption being finalized)]. For a discussion of juvenile court custody orders, see § 328.127[1][a]. For a discussion of restraining orders, see § 328.87.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
I. Periodic Review Procedures

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.158

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.158 Post-Permanency Planning Review Hearings

For a discussion of the review process for cases in which a permanent plan has been selected, see § 328.180 et seq.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
I. Periodic Review Procedures

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated §§ 328.159-328.169

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

[Reserved]

§§ 328.159[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
J. Permanency Planning Procedures

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.170

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.170 Children in Parental Custody

While it could be said that the permanent plan for a child who has not been removed from parental custody is for permanent placement with his or her parent, California's statutory scheme for dependent children generally considers permanency planning as something which is done for children who have been removed from the care of their parent or guardian. Thus, while the number one permanent plan for children who have been removed from parental custody is return to a parent's custody in a safe, stable, permanent home, there are no statutory requirements or provisions for permanent plans for children who have not been removed from parental custody. Instead, continued review hearings are held for these children every six months until the court terminates its dependency jurisdiction [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 364]. Nevertheless, the provision of family maintenance services to enable a child to remain safely in the custody of a parent is consistent with the fundamental goals of protecting children, preserving families, and providing stability and permanence for children. Thus, while maintenance in the family home is not a court ordered permanent plan, it is consistent with the concept that reunification is the number one permanent plan for children if it can be done safely.

If the child was removed from a parent's custody and later placed with either the previously noncustodial parent or, following a period of reunification services, with the parent from whom the child was removed, and the court determines parental custody provides the child with a safe, stable, permanent home, the permanent plan of return to parent is achieved.

For discussions relating to review hearings for children not removed from parental custody or for children who have been returned to parental custody with family maintenance services ordered, see § 328.150 et seq.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
J. Permanency Planning Procedures

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.171

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.171 Selecting and Implementing an Alternative Permanency Plan

[1] Assessment Reports

Whenever the court orders that a selection and implementation hearing be held for a child it must direct the agency supervising the child and the licensed county adoption agency, or the State Department of Social Services when it is acting as an adoption agency in counties that are not served by a county adoption agency, to prepare an assessment that must include the following [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361.5(g), 366.21(i), 366.22(b), 366.25(b) 16010(b)]:

- Current search efforts for an absent parent or parents.

- A review of the amount and nature of any contact between the child and his or her parents since the time of placement. This does not require, however, that the assessment include a breakdown of visitation by minutes, hours, or other measure [In re Lorenzo C. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1330, 1336-1337, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 562] . Nor does it require that a relationship study be done by a psychologist in order to review the nature of the child's relationship with the parent [In re Lorenzo C. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1330, 1338-1341, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 562] .

- A review of the amount and nature of any contact between the child and his or her extended family since the time of placement. The "extended family" of each child is reviewed on a case-by-case basis; the term includes, but is not limited to, the child's siblings, grandparents, aunts, and uncles].

- An evaluation of the child's medical, developmental, scholastic, mental, and emotional status, including a copy of the child's current health and education summary as described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 16010(a).

- A preliminary assessment of the eligibility and commitment of any identified prospective guardian or adoptive parent, particularly the caretaker, to include a social history including screening for criminal records and prior referrals for child abuse or neglect, the capability to meet the child's needs, and the understanding of the legal and financial rights and responsibilities of adoption and guardianship. If a proposed guardian is a relative who was assessed for placement of the child before January 1, 1998, the assessment shall also consider all of the factors set forth in Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.3(a). The definition of relative in regards to this assessment is the same as set forth in Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 319 and 361.3. Effective July 1, 2010, this assessment must include any prospective tribal customary adoptive parent.

- The relationship of the child to any identified prospective adoptive parent or guardian, the duration and character of the relationship, the motivation for seeking adoption or guardianship, and a statement from the child regarding placement and the adoption or guardianship, unless the age of the child or the child's physical, emotional, or other condition precludes a meaningful response in which case a description of that condition is to be included. Effective July 1, 2010, this assessment must include any prospective tribal customary adoptive parent.

- A description of any efforts made to identify a prospective adoptive parent or legal guardian, including any child specific recruitment or listing on an adoption exchange.

- An analysis of the likelihood the child will be adopted if parental rights are terminated.

Effective July 1, 2010, if the child is an Indian child the report must also include an assessment of the likelihood the child will be adopted through a tribal customary adoption when such an adoption is recommended in consultation with the child's tribe [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(g)(1)(G), eff. July 1, 2010]. If a tribal customary adoption as defined by Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.24 is recommended, the assessment must include an analysis of whether tribal customary adoption would or would not be detrimental to the Indian child, whether the Indian child can be returned to the home of the Indian parent, and the reasons for each conclusion [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(g)(1)(G), eff. July 1, 2010].

PRACTICE TIP:

Don't Wait Until July 1, 2010 to Assess for Tribal Customary Adoptions. Although the provisions relating to tribal customary adoptions do not take effect until July 1, 2010, the assessment process for such hearings begins 120 days before. Further, requests for continuances of Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearings can be anticipated for those that are set within a few weeks or months before July 1, 2010. As such, in cases involving Indian children social services agencies should start consulting with Indian tribes and considering tribal customary adoption recommendations beginning in early 2010.

A relative caregiver's preference for legal guardianship over adoption shall not constitute the sole basis for recommending removal of the child from the relative caregiver for purposes of adoptive placement, if the preference is due to circumstances that do not include an unwillingness to accept legal or financial responsibility for the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(g)(2)(A)]. Moreover, a relative caregiver is to be given information regarding the alternative permanency options of guardianship and adoption, including the long-term benefits and consequences of each option, prior to establishing legal guardianship or pursuing adoption [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(g)(2)(B)].

The assessment must be provided to the parent or guardian and all counsel of record, and filed with the court at least 10 days prior to the selection and implementation hearing. A copy of the assessment should also be provided to any court appointed special advocate. Further, a summary of the recommendations must be provided to the present custodians of the child and the tribe of any Indian child [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.725(c); cf. Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(c)].

[2] Notice

If a juvenile court schedules a hearing pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26, the social worker must give notice to the following persons [Welf. & Inst. Code § 294(a)]:

- The mother of the child.

- Any presumed father or alleged father of the child. Although not specifically required by Welf. & Inst. Code § 294, any man who has been found by the court to be the biological father of the child should also be noticed [see discussion in § 328.60 et seq.].

- The child if he or she is 10 years of age or older.

- Any sibling of the child involved in the dependency process, the sibling's caregiver, and the sibling's attorney, except that separate notice is not required if the sibling's dependency case is scheduled in the same court on the same day.

- The grandparents of the child, if their whereabouts are known and if the parent's whereabouts are not known.

- Any counsel of record.

- If the court knows or has reason to know the child is an Indian child, to the Indian custodian and the child's tribe; if the identity or location of the parent or Indian custodian and the tribe cannot be determined, to the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

- To any unknown parent by publication, if ordered pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 294(g)(2).

- Although not required by Welf. & Inst. Code § 294, notice must also be given to any court-appointed child advocate, the child's present caregiver, and any de facto parent [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.725(b)].

If a parent or alleged father has relinquished his or her child for the purpose of adoption and that relinquishment has been accepted and filed as required by Fam. Code § 8700, no notice need be given to that parent. Similarly, if the alleged father has signed a denial of paternity and waiver of rights form, no notice need be given. Further, no notice is required to a parent whose parental rights have already been terminated [Welf. & Inst. Code § 294(b)].

The notice must advise the person of the date, time and place of the hearing, the right to appear, the parents' right to counsel, the nature of the proceedings, and the recommendation of the social services agency [Welf. & Inst. Code § 294(e)(1)-(5)]. It must also include a statement that at the hearing the court is required to select a permanent plan of adoption, legal guardianship, or long-term foster care [Welf. & Inst. Code § 294(e)(6)]. In the case of an Indian child, the notice shall contain a statement that the parent or Indian custodian and the tribe have a right to intervene at any point in the proceedings and a right to be granted, on request, up to 20 additional days to prepare for the hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 294(e)(7)].

Service of the notice must be completed at least 45 days before the date of the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing, except that service in cases in which publication is ordered must be completed at least 30 days before the date of the hearing. Service is deemed complete at the time of personal service to the person identified for the notice, 10 days after the notice was placed in the mail, or at the expiration of the time prescribed by the order for publication, whichever is applicable [Welf. & Inst. Code § 294(c)(1)]. If the child is an Indian child, notice to the Indian custodian and the tribe must be completed at least 10 days prior to the hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 294(c)(2)]. In the case of an Indian child, if notice is given to the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA), the BIA shall have 15 days after receipt of the notice to notify the parent or Indian custodian and the tribe [Welf. & Inst. Code § 294(c)(3)].

Notice of the hearing to the child, if required, and to any counsel of record must be by first-class mail [Welf. & Inst. Code § 294(h)].

In the case of an Indian child, notice to the tribe shall be by registered mail, return receipt requested [Welf. & Inst. Code § 294(i)].

Notice may be given to a parent by means of any of the following [Welf. & Inst. Code § 294(f)]:

- If the parent was present at the hearing at which the court scheduled the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing, the court shall advise the parent of the date, time, and place of the hearing, their right to counsel, the nature of the proceedings, and that at the hearing the court must select an alternative permanent plan of adoption, legal guardianship, or long-term foster care. The court must then order the parent to appear for the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing and then direct the parent be notified thereafter by first-class mail to the parent's usual place of residence or business only.

- Certified mail, return receipt requested, if the social services agency receives a return receipt signed by the parent.

- Personal service to the parent named in the notice.

- Delivery to a competent person who is at least 18 years of age, at the parent's usual place of residence or business, and thereafter mailed to the parent named in the notice by first-class mail at the place where the notice was delivered.

- If the place of residence is outside the state, service in the manner prescribed in subparagraph (1), (3), or (4), above, or by certified mail, return receipt requested.

- If the recommendation of the petitioner is limited to legal guardianship or long-term foster care, service may be made by first-class mail to the parent's usual place of residence or business.

- If the father or mother of the child, or any person alleged or claiming to be the father or mother, cannot, with reasonable diligence, be served as provided above, the social worker must file an affidavit with the court at least 75 days before the date of the stating the name of the parent and describing the efforts that have been made to locate and serve the parent [Welf. & Inst. Code § 294(f)(7)].

- If the court determines that there has been due diligence in attempting to locate and serve the parent, and the petitioner limits the recommendation to legal guardianship or long-term foster care, the court must order that notice be given to the grandparents of the child, if there are any and if their residences and relationships to the child are known. Notice to grandparents must be given by first-class mail. No further notice to the parent is required. If the residence of the parent subsequently becomes known, notice must immediately be served on that person pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 294(f)(2), (3), (4), (5), or (6) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 294(f)(7)(B)-(C)].

- If the court determines that there has been due diligence in attempting to locate and serve the parent, and the petitioner does not limit the recommendation to legal guardianship or long-term foster care, the court must order that service to the parent be by certified mail, return receipt requested, to the parent's counsel of record, if any. If the parent does not have counsel of record, the court must order that service be made by publication of a citation requiring the father, mother, or alleged father or mother to appear at the time and place stated in the citation. The citation must be published in a newspaper designated as most likely to give notice to the parent. Publication must be made once a week for four successive weeks. Regardless of whether notice is to the attorney of record or by publication, notice must also be given to the grandparents of the child by first-class mail [Welf. & Inst. Code § 294(f)(7)(A)]. If the residence of the parent becomes known, notice must immediately be served on the parent as set forth in Welf. & Inst. Code § 294(f)(2), (3), (4), (5), or (6) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 294(f)(7)(C)].

In cases in which the parent is missing, notice to the grandparents is more than just an idle act or one done merely for the grandparents' benefit. Grandparent notification "is intended, at least in part, as an attempt to get notice to the missing parent." Consequently, when that required notice is not given, the parent has standing to raise the issue on appeal [In re Steven H. (2001) 86 Cal. App. 4th 1023, 1032-1033, 103 Cal. Rptr. 2d 649] .

If the identity of one or both of the parents or alleged parents of the child is unknown or if the name of either or both of the parents or alleged parents is uncertain, that fact must be set forth in the social worker's affidavit. If the court determines there has been due diligence in attempting to identify the unknown parent, the court is unable to identify the "natural or possible natural parent," and no one has appeared claiming to be the "natural parent," the court shall issue an order dispensing with notice [Welf. & Inst. Code § 294(g)(1)]. However, if the court finds that notice by publication is likely to lead to actual notice to the unknown parent and the social services agency is recommending termination of parental rights and adoption, the court may order notice by publication. In ordering publication, the court must order the published citation to be directed to either the father or the mother, or both, of the child, and to all persons claiming to be the father or mother of the child, naming and otherwise describing the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 294(g)(2)]. If the court finds there has been due diligence in attempting to identify one or both parents and the social worker is not recommending adoption, no further notice to the unknown parent is required [Welf. & Inst. Code § 294(g)(3)].

Service is deemed complete at the time the notice is personally delivered to the party named in the notice, or 10 days after the notice has been placed in the mail, or at the expiration of the time prescribed by the order for publication, as appropriate [Welf. & Inst. Code § 294(c)(1)].

Notwithstanding the requirements of Welf. & Inst. Code § 294(a), if counsel of record is present at the hearing when the court sets the selection and implementation hearing, no further notice is required to counsel except as required by Welf. & Inst. Code § 294(f)(7)(A) for substitute service for a parent [Welf. & Inst. Code § 294(j)].

If the court finds the person entitled to notice has been properly noticed for the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing and the matter is continued, the full requirements of Welf. & Inst. Code § 294 for notice are not mandated for each continuance. Instead, so long as the recommendation has not changed, notice may be provided by first class mail to any last known address [Welf. & Inst. Code § 294(d); In re J.I. (2003) 108 Cal. App. 4th 903, 909-910, 134 Cal. Rptr. 2d 342] . Previous case law also authorized a written notice from the parent's attorney, or an oral notice if the parent appeared in court [see In re Phillip F. (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 250, 259, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 693] . This should still be sufficient [see In re J.I. (2003) 108 Cal. App. 4th 903, 909-910, 134 Cal. Rptr. 2d 342] . If the recommendation has changed, however, notice must be given as set forth in Welf. & Inst. Code § 294 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 294(d)]. If the hearing is continued, the court must state on the record the reasons why good cause exists to continue the hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 294(l)].

Although detailed here as applicable to dependency proceedings, the provisions of Welf. & Inst. Code § 294 also apply when a hearing pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 is scheduled pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 727.31 for a child who has been adjudged a ward of the juvenile court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 294(k)].

[3] Scope of Hearing Under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26

[a] In General

At the selection and implementation hearing, the juvenile court must [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(b)]:

- Receive into evidence the social worker's assessment [see also Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361.5, 366.21, 366.22, 366.25].
- Receive into evidence the report of any court-appointed child advocate.
- Indicate that it has read and considered the report(s).
- Receive such other evidence as the parties present.

The court must then do one of the following [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(b)]:

- Permanently sever parental rights and order that the child be placed for adoption.
- Without permanently terminating parental rights, identify adoption as the permanent placement goal and order that efforts be made to locate an appropriate adoptive family for the child for an additional period not to exceed 180 days for further efforts to be made to find an adoptive home for the child.
- Without permanently terminating parental rights, appoint a legal guardian for the child and issue letters of guardianship.
- Order that the child be placed in long-term foster care, subject to the regular review of the juvenile court.
- Effective July 1, 2010, without terminating parental rights the court also may order a permanent plan of tribal customary adoption as described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.24 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(b)(2), eff. July 1, 2010].

Although detailed here as applicable to dependency proceedings, the provisions of Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26, except for Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(j), also apply pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 727.31 for a child who has been adjudged a ward of the juvenile court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(m)].

[b] Return to Parent Is Not an Option

Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 does not give the court discretion to consider, as a dispositional option at the hearing, the return of a child to a parent once reunification services have been terminated by court order [In re Marilyn H. (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 295, 304-305, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 544, 851 P.2d 826] . However, a parent who seeks return of the child or further reunification services because of changed circumstances can petition the court under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 for modification of the prior order terminating reunification [In re Marilyn H. (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 295, 309, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 544, 851 P.2d 826] . The court will first hear and act on the modification petition and then proceed to hearing on the selection and implementation of the alternative permanency plan [In re Marilyn H. (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 295, 308-309, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 544, 851 P.2d 826] .

Requiring the parent to proceed under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 does not deprive the parent of substantive or procedural due process under either the federal or the state constitution [In re Marilyn H. (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 295, 309, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 544, 851 P.2d 826] . On the contrary, when Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 366.26 and 388 are viewed together, it is clear that the Legislature has provided the parent with an adequate opportunity to seek further reunification services and has given the juvenile court the chance to consider evidence warranting such services prior to the Welf. & Inst. Code §

366.26 hearing without unnecessarily disrupting the focus and efforts of the court to establish permanency for the child [In re Marilyn H. (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 295, 310, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 544, 851 P.2d 826] . In this way, the dependency statutory scheme as a whole balances both the parent's liberty interest in the care, custody, and companionship of a child and the child's liberty interest in a stable and permanent home [In re Marilyn H. (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 295, 306-307, 310, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 544, 851 P.2d 826] .

For discussion of Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 petitions when a Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing has been set, see § 328.140[3].

[c] Limited Context for Consideration of Changed Circumstances

Changed circumstances also may be considered at the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing, but only to a limited extent. At the hearing, the question is no longer whether the child should be returned to the parent, an issue already decided in the negative with the permanent plan of return to the parent having been rejected. Instead, the issue is whether the child is adoptable and what the alternative permanency plan should be. Nevertheless, the court may consider evidence of the parent's present circumstances at the time of the hearing, if relevant to resolving whether the child would benefit from continuing the parent-child relationship, which might support a decision pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B)(i) not to terminate parental rights [see In re Edward R. (1993) 12 Cal. App. 4th 116, 127, 15 Cal. Rptr. 2d 308 ; see also In re Autumn H. (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 567, 575-576, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 535] .

[4] Appointment of Counsel

Although the parties appearing at a selection and implementation hearing usually have counsel, if a child or parent is not represented the juvenile court must first proceed as follows [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(f)]:

- The court must consider whether the interests of the child requires the appointment of counsel. If the court finds that the interests of the child do require this protection, the court must appoint counsel to represent the child, whether or not the child is able to afford counsel. The child must not be present in court unless the child or the child's attorney so requests or the court so orders.

- If a parent appears without counsel and is unable to afford counsel, the court must appoint counsel for the parent, unless this representation is knowingly and intelligently waived. The same counsel may not be appointed to represent both the child and his or her parent. The public defender or private counsel may be appointed as counsel for the parent.

- Private counsel appointed under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(f) must receive a reasonable sum for compensation and expenses, and the amount must be determined by the court. The amount must be paid by the real parties in interest, other than the child, in any proportion that the court deems just. However, if the court finds that any of the real parties in interest are unable to afford counsel, the amount must be paid out of the general fund of the county.

The court may continue the proceeding for not more than 30 days as necessary to appoint counsel and to enable counsel to become acquainted with the case [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(g)].

[5] Decision Process for the Adoptable Child

[a] Relative Guardianship Cutout

In the past, adoption has been the preferred alternative permanency plan for all dependent children in California who cannot be safely returned to their parents' care. This was because it gave dependent children their best chance at receiving the permanency and stability of a complete commitment from a responsible and loving caregiver [In re

Celine R. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 45, 53, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 432, 71 P.3d 787 , quoting In re Jasmine D. (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 1339, 1348, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 644]. The legislature recognized that although legal guardianship is more stable than foster care and its attendant "foster care drift," it still falls short of the kind of stability and permanency that is best for dependent children [In re Celine R. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 45, 53, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 432, 71 P.3d 787 , quoting In re Lorenzo C. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1330, 1344, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 562]. Effective January 1, 2008, however, California has made a major shift in its permanency policy for children. Now if a relative caregiver is unwilling or unable to adopt the child, but is willing and able to provide the child with a stable home through legal guardianship, and removal from the relative's home would be detrimental to the emotional well-being of the child, the court shall not terminate parental rights even though there is clear and convincing evidence the child is likely to be adopted if parental rights are terminated [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(A)]. For an Indian child the term "relative" as used in this provision includes "extended family member" as defined by the Indian Child Welfare Act in 25 U.S.C. § 1902(2) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(A)].

The wisdom of this controversial change in California policy will not be known for many years, but the immediate effect is likely to be an increase in contested hearings and appeals on these issues, a significant decrease in the number of relative adoptions for dependent children, and a gradual increase in the number of failed or troubled dependency guardianships as these children reach adolescence and strain the patience and commitment of their relative guardians. Regardless, while this may be a step backward for California's dependent children in terms of permanency, it brings California more in line with the rest of the nation, which has rarely emphasized relative adoption for dependent children to the degree California has for the last two decades [see 42 U.S.C. § 675(5)(E)(i) (termination of parental rights not required if "at the option of the State, the child is being cared for by a relative")].

In apparent anticipation of relative guardianships that may later become troubled, the legislature has added a provision for consideration of reunification services if the child has to be removed from the relative guardian [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.3[b]]. Previously, relative guardians appointed through the dependency process could be provided family maintenance or other voluntary services, but case law held they could not receive reunification services [In re Jessica C. (2007) 151 Cal. App. 4th 474, 483, 59 Cal. Rptr. 3d 855 ; In re Carlos E. (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 1408, 1420-1421, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 317]. Not all courts, social services agencies, and practitioners agreed with that case law, and reunification services were provided in some cases. Nevertheless, while the new provision does not create a right to reunification services on the part of the guardian, the addition of a provision clearly giving the juvenile court discretion to provide those services is significant.

Under the relative guardian cutout, a mere preference for guardianship by the relative caregiver is not enough to stop the termination of parental rights for an adoptable child. This is consistent with existing case law [In re Zeth S. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 396, 410, 2 Cal. Rptr. 3d 683, 73 P.3d 541 ; In re Rachel M. (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 1289, 1298, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 153]. Instead, the relative caregiver must be unwilling or unable to adopt the child due to circumstances that do not include an unwillingness to accept financial or legal responsibility for the child, but be willing and able to provide the child with a stable home through legal guardianship [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(A)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Watch for Relatives Being Pressured to Ask for Guardianship. In the past, concern was sometimes voiced that relative caregivers were being pressured by the dependency system and social services agencies to accept adoption or face the possibility of having the child removed [see In re P.C. (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 279, 288, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 17 (conc. opn. of McDonald, J.)]. Now the risk is that relative caregivers will be pressured by the parents, parents counsel, or even children's counsel in some cases to say they want guardianship, and are not willing to adopt. As with the other form of pressure, courts should be alert for this. Neither type of pressure is appropriate.

Further, removal from the relative's home must be shown to be detrimental to the emotional well-being of the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(A)]. Removal from any placement often causes the child's emotional well-being some short-term trauma. If this short-term trauma was enough to stop the termination of parental rights, it would make the statutory requirement for a showing of detriment unnecessary, since in almost all cases there will be some short-term emotional detriment. Instead, the showing must be of a more substantial and enduring nature. It does not, however, have to rise to the level of a compelling reason outweighing the benefits of adoption and making termination of parental rights detrimental, as it did before this provision was enacted.

The findings that the relative caregiver is unwilling or unable to adopt, is willing and able to provide a stable home through legal guardianship, and that removal from the relative caregiver's home would be detrimental to the child's emotional well-being must be made by a preponderance of the evidence [Evid. Code § 115]. In such circumstances, the court shall not terminate parental rights even though there is clear and convincing evidence the child is likely to be adopted if parental rights are terminated [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(A)]. This relative cutout is expected to be the subject of frequent litigation at both the trial and appellate levels, and should be watched for future development.

[b] The Likelihood of Adoption

In determining which alternative permanent plan should be ordered for the child, the court must terminate parental rights only if it first determines, by clear and convincing evidence, that it is likely the child will be adopted if parental rights are terminated [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1); see Cynthia D. v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 242, 249-250, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 698, 851 P.2d 1307 ; In re Amelia S. (1991) 229 Cal. App. 3d 1060, 1065, 280 Cal. Rptr. 503] . Some attorneys have argued that notwithstanding any evidence of adoptability the court should not make such a finding unless the child is already in an approved adoptive home. In this way, they argue, the court ensures the child does not become a "legal orphan." Some courts have mistakenly accepted this argument and philosophy. The law has never required, however, that the child already be in an adoptive home before the court make a finding by clear and convincing evidence that the child is likely to be adopted if parental rights are terminated.

The legislature has clarified existing law by providing that the fact the child is not yet placed in a preadoptive home or in the home of a relative or foster parent prepared to adopt, "shall not constitute a basis for the court to conclude that it is not likely the child will be adopted" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)]. This does not mean the court can take the question of adoptability for granted. Although some may argue that all children are adoptable if enough time and resources are spent seeking an adoptive placement, which may well be true, the reality is that adoptive homes are not always found for children. Thus, while the child need not be in an adoptive placement to support freeing the child, the court must require credible evidence the child is likely to be adopted if parental rights are terminated. This requirement is often met by the opinion of an experienced adoptions worker that an adoptive placement can be found for the child, and an explanation of the reasons for that opinion.

If there are prospective adoptive parents, the parent may introduce or develop through cross-examination evidence of some legal impediment to adoption by those prospective adoptive parents. Where the prospective adoptive parents are the only possibility for adoption, such evidence is relevant to a determination of whether the child is likely to be adopted if parental rights are terminated. However, if the child is generally adoptable the parent is not entitled to ask questions concerning the suitability of the prospective adoptive parents [In re Carl R. (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 1051, 1061, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 612 ; In re Scott M. (1993) 13 Cal. App. 4th 839, 844, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 766 (questions irrelevant to issue of whether child is likely to be adopted)]. Further, even when the child will require extensive care for life, it is not an appropriate inquiry to challenge whether particular prospective adoptive parents are suitable based on their specific plans for the special education needs for the child. "Although in order to meet a child's needs, the parents must educate the child (Ed. Code, § 48200), there is no authority requiring the court to assess the specifics of how the child will be educated. Because the Agency's obligation is to provide only preliminary information, the court's inquiry should also be preliminary, and need not include an in-depth assessment of specific educational plans" [In re Carl R. (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 1051, 1061, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 612] . Additionally, so long as the assessment provides a synopsis of the child's medical needs and the prospective adoptive parent is fully aware of the child's medical needs and is prepared to meet them, the court is not precluded from finding the child likely to be adopted. As noted by one court,. "Nowhere in the statutes or case law is certainty of a child's future medical condition required before a court can find adoptability" [In re Helen W. (2007) 150 Cal. App. 4th 71, 79, 57 Cal. Rptr. 3d 914]. Nor may the court find a child is not likely to be adopted solely because the child is bonded to foster caregivers the court believes would be too old by the time the child became a teenager to be qualified adoptive parents, when there are other families also available to adopt the child [In re Josue G. (2003) 106 Cal. App. 4th 725, 733-735, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 92 ; see also In re T.S. (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 1323, 1328-1329, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 173] .

If the court finds by clear and convincing evidence that the child is likely to be adopted if parental rights are terminated, the findings pursuant to (1) Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b), (e)(1) that reunification services shall not be offered, or (2) pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(e) that (a) the whereabouts of a parent have been unknown for six months or (b) the parent has failed to visit or contact the child for six months or (c) the parent has been convicted of a felony indicating parental unfitness, or (3) pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21 or 366.22 that a child cannot or should not be returned to his or her parent or guardian within the applicable statutory time period shall then constitute sufficient basis for termination of parental rights, unless the court finds that termination would be detrimental to the child due to the existence of one of six statutory circumstances, or unless the relative guardianship cutout applies [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)]. The court may not, however, terminate the rights of only one parent, under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26, unless that parent is the only surviving parent or the rights of the other parent have been terminated under Fam. Code §§ 200, 7660 et seq., 7800 et seq., or 8604-8606, or the other parent has relinquished custody of the child to the welfare department [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.725(a)]. The court also cannot "stay" the order terminating parental rights [In re Melvin A. (2000) 82 Cal. App. 4th 1243, 1247-1250, 98 Cal. Rptr. 2d 844] .

Where clear and convincing evidence establishes that the child is likely to be adopted if parental rights are terminated, the parent or other party, including the agency, seeking to show that termination of parental rights would be detrimental to the child bears the burden of proof for the existence of one of the six statutory circumstances set forth in Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(A)-(E) [In re Zachary G. (1999) 77 Cal. App. 4th 799, 809, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 20 ; In re Lorenzo C. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1330, 1345, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 562 ; In re Cristella C. (1992) 6 Cal. App. 4th 1363, 1373, 8 Cal. Rptr. 2d 342]. The juvenile court has no sua sponte duty to determine an exception to adoption applies if it is not raised by a party [In re Rachel M. (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 1289, 1295, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 153] . The burden of proof in establishing one of the enumerated circumstances is by a preponderance of the evidence [Evid. Code § 115].

[i] Beneficial Relationship Exception

[A] Autumn H. Line of Cases

If a parent can prove he or she has maintained regular visitation and contact with the child, and the child would benefit from continuing the relationship to such a degree that terminating parental rights would be detrimental to the child, the court cannot terminate parental rights even though the child is likely to be adopted if parental rights are terminated [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B)(i)]. The standard of review at the appellate court level is the substantial evidence test [In re Autumn H. (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 567, 576-577, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 535] . One court has disagreed with the use of that standard, finding the abuse of discretion standard of review is more appropriate. But that court mischaracterized the determination being made at the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing as one involving a custody determination [In re Jasmine D. (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 1339, 1351, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 644] . It is not. The court initially must make a finding by clear and convincing evidence the child is likely to be adopted if parental rights are terminated. Second, for the beneficial relationship exception to apply, the court must find termination of parental rights is detrimental to the child because of the beneficial parent-child relationship. Adoptability and detriment findings are more appropriately reviewed utilizing the substantial evidence standard. As recognized by the court in Jasmine D., most courts have "routinely applied the substantial evidence test to the juvenile court's finding under section 366.26, subdivision (c)(1)(A)" [In re Jasmine D. (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 1339, 1351, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 644] . This is the better view.

The beneficial relationship exception has two prongs that must be met. First, the parent must establish that he or she has maintained regular visitation and contact with the child. Second, the parent must establish that the benefit to the child of maintaining the parent-child relationship outweighs the benefit of adoption [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B)(i)]. The first prong is somewhat self-explanatory. The second is not. The seminal case on this second prong of the "beneficial relationship exception" is the case of In re Autumn H. (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 567, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 535 .

In Autumn H. the court interpreted the beneficial relationship exception to mean "the relationship promotes the well-being of the child to such a degree as to outweigh the well-being the child would gain in a permanent home with new, adoptive parents." It went on to say, "the court balances the strength and quality of the natural parent/child relationship in a tenuous placement against the security and the sense of belonging a new family would confer. If severing the natural parent/child relationship would deprive the child of a substantial, positive emotional attachment such that the child would be greatly harmed, the preference for adoption is overcome and the natural parent's rights are not terminated" [In re Autumn H. (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 567, 575, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 535] . The court explained the beneficial relationship exception has to be examined on a "case-by-case basis," taking into account the many variables that affect a parent/child relationship. These variables may logically include the age of the child, the portion of the child's life spent with the parent, the effect of interaction between parent and child, and the child's needs [In re Autumn H. (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 567, 576, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 535] . The court also noted that interaction between a birth parent and a child "will always confer some incidental benefit to the child." But this was not enough. "The exception applies only where the court finds regular visits and contact have continued or developed a significant, positive, emotional attachment from child to parent" [In re Autumn H. (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 567, 575, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 535] .

Numerous cases have followed the Autumn H. standard [see In re Jasmine D. (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 1339, 1350, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 644 ("a parental relationship is necessary for the exception to apply, not merely a friendly or familiar one"); In re Zachary G. (1999) 77 Cal. App. 4th 799, 811, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 20 ("When the benefits from a stable and permanent home provided by adoption outweigh the benefits from a continued parent/child relationship, the court should order adoption."); In re Brittany C. (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 847, 853, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 737 ("To require that the parent need only show some, rather than great, harm at this stage of the proceedings would defeat the purpose of dependency law"); In re Derek W. (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 823, 827, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 739 ("While the relationship between [the father] and Derek is pleasant and emotionally significant to Derek, it bears no resemblance to the sort of consistent, daily nurturing that marks a parental relationship"); In re Casey D. (1999) 70 Cal. App. 4th 38, 51, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 426 ("The Autumn H. standard reflects the legislative intent that adoption should be ordered unless exceptional circumstances exist"); In re Amanda D. (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 813, 821, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 108 ("Beatrice M. and Autumn H. do not enlarge the parent's burden; they simply define it."); In re Sylvia R. (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 559, 563, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 93 (mother's relationship with children "was more of a peer than a parent"); In re Lorenzo C. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1330, 1341-1342, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 562 (balancing process can include balancing child's bond with prospective adoptive parents as compared to bond with father); In re Elizabeth M. (1997) 52 Cal. App. 4th 318, 324, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 557 (at best the mother occupied a "pleasant place" in the child's life); In re Teneka W. (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 721, 728-729, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 666 (strength and quality of relationship between children and father who had killed children's mother and had history of violence did not outweigh benefit of adoption); In re Beatrice M. (1994) 29 Cal. App. 4th 1411, 1418-1420, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 162 (frequent and loving contact does not outweigh benefit of adoption when parental role has not been occupied by the parent)].

One case has suggested the Fourth District Court of Appeal, Division One, has "recently characterized the nature of the determination required under section 366.26, [former] subdivision (c)(1)(A) in an even more flexible way" [In re Jasmine D. (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 1339, 1349, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 644] . It did not. What the court in Jasmine D. refers to is the case of Zachary G., from which it quotes guidance that each case must be determined on a case-by-case basis, taking into account many variables [In re Jasmine D. (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 1339, 1349-1350, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 644 , quoting In re Zachary G. (1999) 77 Cal. App. 4th 799, 811, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 20] . But the guidance in Zachary G. is actually a direct reference and partial quote from Autumn H. regarding the need to examine each case on a case-by-case basis and to take the many variables affecting the child's relationship with the parent into account [In re Zachary G. (1999) 77 Cal. App. 4th 799, 811, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 20 , citing In re Autumn H. (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 567, 576, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 535] . Zachary G. does not characterize the beneficial relationship exception in a more flexible way than did Autumn H. It merely restated that which Autumn H. had already said. The beneficial relationship exception as interpreted in Autumn H. was not intended to be a totally rigid exception. It was merely intended to recognize the Legislature's strong preference for adoption if the child cannot be returned to the parent, its desire the standard be high, and the belief that only a strong and positive parent-child relationship from which the child benefits more than the child would benefit from the stability of an adoptive family should be enough to override the preference for adoption. That did not change with Zachary G. It was merely restated.

[B] S.B. Decision

Many view another case from the Fourth District, Court of Appeal, Division One, as a significant departure from the Autumn H. line of cases [In re S.B. (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 289, 79 Cal. Rptr. 3d 449] . It is, and it is not. In the S.B. decision the appellate court overturned a finding that the beneficial parent child relationship exception did not apply. The father had used methamphetamine on and off for 30 years, and had been diagnosed with combat-related posttraumatic stress disorder following his service during the Vietnam War. He suffered recurrent bouts of anger and aggression. His treatment included psychotropic medications, and individual and group therapy. His physical health was also poor, suffering heart and stomach problems and acute degenerative osteoarthritis, which caused severe neck and back pain. Nevertheless, the father had been the child's primary caregiver. The child came into the dependency system at 3 years of age. During her placement with the grandmother, the father had supervised visitation two to three times each week, and the father and child had a consistent and positive relationship. Even during visits, however, the child looked to her grandmother for security, safety, guidance and parenting, not her father. The psychologist who did the relationship study believed the father's relationship with the child vacillated between parental and peer-like, but characterized the relationship as "fairly strong" or "moderate." He opined the detriment a child would suffer if parental rights is terminated is difficult to predict, but that in this case it was his opinion there was potential for the child to suffer harm if she were to lose the parent-child relationship. The social worker opined any harm the child would suffer from termination of parental rights would be outweighed by the benefits of adoption. The juvenile court agreed and terminated parental rights. The father appealed [In re S.B. (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 289, 293-296, 79 Cal. Rptr. 3d 449] .

The S.B. appellate court reversed finding the father had a positive parent-child relationship with his daughter before removal, participated fully in services, and continued his significant relationship with the child during the dependency despite the lack of daily contact. While the child had a parental relationship with her grandmother, the court noted it was self-evident that a child could have a parental relationship with more than one parent, and that here she derived significant benefit from both relationships. Further, the fact any emotional loss might be healed by time and the support of the grandmother did not mean the child would not be greatly harmed by the termination of the father's parental rights [In re S.B. (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 289, 300, 79 Cal. Rptr. 3d 449] . It noted "Neither section 366.26, subdivision (c)(1)(B)(i), nor Autumn H. requires proof that the child has a 'primary attachment' to a parent or that the noncustodial parent has maintained day-to-day contact with the child" [In re S.B. (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 289, 300, 79 Cal. Rptr. 3d 449] . Further, the court indicated it did not believe a parent should lose his or her parental rights "on the basis of an unenforceable promise of future visitation by the child's prospective adoptive parents" [In re S.B. (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 289, 300, 79 Cal. Rptr. 3d 449] . It thus reversed the termination of parental rights.

What is unusual about the S.B. decision is there was significant evidence on both sides of the issue, which under the substantial evidence standard of review would normally result in the termination of parental rights being affirmed. Yet the appellate court found "the only reasonable inference" was the child "would be greatly harmed by the loss of her significant, positive relationship" with her father and reversed [In re S.B. (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 289, 301, 79 Cal. Rptr. 3d 449] . Nevertheless, the decision should be viewed less as a departure from the Autumn H. line of cases and more the result of a very unique factual situation. Thus, although the individual holdings within the analysis are both clarifying and significant, the ultimate S.B. decision will be factually distinguishable in most cases. Dependency practitioners and courts must be very familiar with both the facts and the analysis of this case and be prepared to address the decision any time the beneficial parent-child relationship exception is raised. How the appellate courts will view this decision remains to be seen, and this is an area that should be watched for further developments.

PRACTICE TIP:

Arguing the S.B . Decision. Until further appellate clarification is available, parents' attorneys should argue the S.B. decision substantially weakens the standard set by the Autumn H. line of cases and results in a far more flexible test for application of the beneficial parent-child relationship exception. Agency attorneys should argue S.B. is not a change in the standard, only a clarification of some of the individual points of the analysis, and that it is factually distinguishable from the individual case before the court. Children's counsel should normally agree with the agency approach on the law, but look to the individual circumstances of their client to determine what is best for the child and whether to argue the S.B. decision is distinguishable from the case being argued.

[C] Proving the Beneficial Relationship Exception Applies

Many have contended Autumn H. set a standard that was difficult, if not impossible, to meet, especially for parents who are not providing daily care for the child. One appellate court has even suggested the beneficial relationship exception to the termination of parental rights "may be the most unsuccessfully litigated issue in the history of law" [In re Eileen A. (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 1248, 1255, n. 5, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548] . As already shown in the discussion of the S.B. decision, the exception can be proven [In re S.B. (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 289, 300-301, 79 Cal. Rptr. 3d 449] . Further, in Casey D. the Fourth District Court of Appeal, Division One, reviewed its decision in Autumn H. and found "the Autumn H. language, while setting the hurdle high, does not set an impossible standard nor mandate day-to-day contact." It recognized the required "showing will be difficult to make in a situation, such as the one here, where the parents have essentially never had custody of the child nor advanced beyond supervised visitation." But it noted that difficulty is caused by the factual circumstances of the case in which the parents failed to reunify and to establish a parental relationship, rather than just a "caretaker or friendly visitor relationship with the child." It also noted a strong and beneficial relationship might exist such that termination of parental rights would be detrimental to the child despite the absence of day-to-day contact and interaction, "particularly in the case of an older child" [In re Casey D. (1999) 70 Cal. App. 4th 38, 51, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 426)]. That the burden can be met on appeal has been shown in another decision from the Fourth District Court of Appeal, Division One. In the Jerome D. case, the juvenile court found the beneficial relationship exception did not apply and terminated parental rights. At the time of the termination of rights the child was nine years old. He had lived with his mother for the first six-and-one-half years of his life, and had expressed a desire to live with her again. The mother was having unsupervised overnight visits with the child. A psychologist opined the child and mother had a strong and well developed parent-child relationship. Under the facts of that case, the appellate court found there was "insufficient evidence to support the determination that Mother did not meet her burden of showing a beneficial relationship" [In re Jerome D. (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 1200, 1207, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 449] .

Other examples demonstrate the ability of a parent to meet the burden to establish the beneficial relationship exception. In the Brandon C. case the juvenile court determined the parent had met the burden of establishing a beneficial relationship that made the termination of parental rights detrimental. The court of appeal upheld that determination [In re Brandon C. (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 1530, 1533-1537, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 505] . In Brandon C. the children were being cared for by a grandmother who preferred to adopt, although she intended the children to continue having a relationship with their mother. The mother had visited the children, had a good relationship with them, and testified she had wanted additional visitation, but it had not been afforded her. The social services agency provided little evidence as to the nature of the parental relationship with the children. Under these circumstances, many courts following the Autumn H. line of cases would have terminated parental rights. But the juvenile court in Brandon C. found the beneficial relationship exception applied, denied the request to terminate parental rights, and ordered a legal guardianship. Citing Autumn H. and Beatrice M. with apparent approval, the court of appeal applied the substantial evidence rule and upheld the order for guardianship [In re Brandon C. (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 1530, 1533-1537, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 505] .

One difficulty with the Brandon C. decision exists, however. The court stated that the "benefit of continued contact between mother and children must be considered in the context of the very limited visitation mother was permitted to have" [In re Brandon C. (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 1530, 1537-1538, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 505] . This changes the focus of the beneficial relationship determination from the child to the parent and to this limited extent the Brandon C. decision must be considered incorrect. Nevertheless, it is a decision that should be looked to by all who oppose the termination of parental rights through the utilization of the beneficial relationship exception found in Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B)(i), because it demonstrates that in an appropriate case, the circumstances set forth in the beneficial relationship exception can be met to avoid the termination of parental rights.

The Jasmine D. case is also of assistance in arguing that the beneficial relationship exception should apply to prevent the termination of parental rights. In that case the court dealt with a mother's contention that Autumn H. and Beatrice M. applied an interpretation of the beneficial relationship exception that was overly broad. The Jasmine D. court disagreed [In re Jasmine D. (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 1339, 1347, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 644] . But it did note its belief that a "more flexible" application of Autumn H. was "most appropriate." In so doing, it stated that "Parent child relationships do not necessarily conform to a particular pattern. The juvenile court should be concerned not with finding a certain type of parental relationship but with the interests of the particular child or children before it, and whether there is a compelling reason not to terminate parental rights" [In re Jasmine D. (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 1339, 1350, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 644] . The court did go on to express its agreement the relationship must be parental in nature, "not merely a friendly or familiar one" [In re Jasmine D. (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 1339, 1349-1350, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 644] . And obviously only the existence of one of the statutory exceptions to the termination of parental rights can constitute a "compelling reason" not to terminate parental rights [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B), (c)(4)]. But the Jasmine D. language is of assistance to those arguing against the termination of parental rights in a particular case.

Finally, the case of Amber M. is also of assistance in showing the beneficial parent-child relationship exception to adoption can be established. In that case the trial court found the exception did not apply, but the appellate court found the mother had established the exception applied. There it found a common theme in the evidence from the psychologist who did the relationship study, the therapists, and the CASA was there was a beneficial parent-child relationship that outweighed the benefits of adoption. Only the social worker disagreed. Thus, the appellate court reversed the termination of parental rights [In re Amber M. (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 681, 689-691, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 19] .

The S.B, Amber M., Jerome D. and Brandon C. cases, together with the dicta in Jasmine D. serve as a reminder. Although adoption is the preferred permanent plan if a child cannot be returned safely to the care of the parent, there are cases in which adoption is not appropriate due to one of the statutory exceptions that make it detrimental to the child to terminate parental rights. The burden on the parents is, and should be, high. But it should not be impossible to meet. Nor should juvenile courts, social services agencies, or child advocates assume that adoption is always appropriate or that the parents will always fail to meet their burden. Instead, all must approach their assessment of the beneficial relationship exception in a balanced fashion. As stated by the court in Autumn H., every case must be "examined on a case-by-case basis" with the many variables that affect a child's relationship with the parent being taken into consideration [In re Autumn H. (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 567, 576, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 535] . In most cases, adoption is both appropriate and mandated. Sometimes, however, those variables will mean the statutory exception should apply and a plan other than adoption should be selected.

PRACTICE TIP:

Postadoption Contact Agreements Are Not At-Issue in a Selection and Implementation Hearing. Voluntary postadoption contact agreements are "applicable and available" to all dependent children meeting the requirements of Fam. Code § 8616.5, if such agreements are voluntarily entered into [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(a)]. Practitioners and courts should note, however, that such agreements are considered by the court at the time of the hearing on the petition for adoption. They are not at issue in a hearing pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 [see In re Kimberly S. (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 405, 411-412, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 740 ; In re Zachary D. (1999) 70 Cal. App. 4th 1392, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 407] . Moreover, it would not be wise to consider such agreements as part of the balancing process under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B)(i), since the parties to a postadoption contact agreement entered into prior to the selection and implementation hearing may change their minds prior to the hearing on the adoption petition, the court hearing the petition for adoption may find that at that later time the agreement is not in the best interest of the child or not voluntarily entered into, or the agreement may never be lived up to or enforced [see In re David H. (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 368, 380-385, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 313 (claim, among others, that fraudulent representation adoptive parents would allow postadoption contact induced parents to submit at selection and implementation hearing not grounds to vacate termination of parental rights; there are no guarantees); Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(a) (such agreements available to all dependent children "if the post adoption contact agreement has been entered into voluntarily"); Fam. Code § 8616.5(b) (court hearing adoption must find postadoption contact agreement was voluntarily entered into and in best interests of the child)]. Where parents and children have a beneficial relationship that outweighs the benefits of adoption, California law calls for a permanent plan other than adoption [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B)(i)]. If parents with a beneficial relationship truly want the adoption to take place, they can relinquish the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(b); Fam. Code § 8700]. Indeed, as part of the efforts toward concurrent permanency planning, the possibility of a postadoption contact agreement may already have been explored with the birth and adoptive parents. Nevertheless, they are not at issue in the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing. For discussion of postadoption contact agreements, see § 328.198[6].

[ii] Child 12 Years or Older Objecting

If it is established that the child is 12 years of age or older and objects to the termination of parental rights, the exception found in Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B)(ii) may apply. A finding the child 12 years of age or older objection to the termination of parental rights is a factual finding to be made by the juvenile court and reviewed by the appellate court using the substantial evidence standard. This is not a "child veto" exception, however. If the juvenile court finds the child 12 years of age or older objects to the termination of parental rights, it must consider that objection in light of the totality of the circumstances and determine whether the objection to adoption outweighs the benefits of adoption to such a degree that termination of parental rights would be detrimental to the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B)]. This balancing is done in much the same way that it is done under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B)(i) or Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B)(v) [see In re Autumn H. (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 567, 575-576, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 535 ; In re L.Y.L. (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 942, 952-953, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 688] .

Admittedly, if the child 12 years of age or older clearly objects to termination of parental rights, it will almost always be detrimental to the child to terminate such rights to avoid making the child a legal orphan [Fam. Code § 8602 (child over 12 years of age must consent to adoption)]. But the child may want to be adopted or willing to be adopted yet have mixed feelings or reservations, sending an unclear or mixed message. This is common, since it is frequently very difficult for children to make such decisions [In re Leo M. (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 1583, 1593, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 253] . In such cases, the juvenile court's weighing of any possible objection voiced by the child against the benefits of adoption may be critical to relieving the child of the emotional burden of agreeing to the termination of parental rights, while still ensuring the child receives the needed stability and permanence of adoption.

The juvenile court's balancing of the child's objection against the benefits of adoption is not inconsistent with the provisions of Fam. Code § 8602, which provides "The consent of a child, of over the age of 12 years, is necessary to the child's adoption." A child can consent to adoption and yet have reservations about it. A child can consent to adoption and still have some objections. At the adoption it is the child 12 years of age or older who balances any reservations or objections he or she has and decides whether to consent to the adoption [Fam. Code § 8602]. At the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing it is the juvenile court that does the balancing and decides whether, in light of any objection by the child, the termination of parental rights would be detrimental to the child.

Should the child change his or her mind after the termination of parental rights and decide not to consent to the adoption, the ability exists to set aside the termination of parental rights if it is best for the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(i)(2)].

[iii] Child in a Residential Facility

If it is established the child is placed in a residential treatment facility, adoption is unlikely or undesirable, and continuation of parental rights will not prevent finding the child a permanent family placement if the parents cannot resume custody when the residential care is no longer needed, the court cannot terminate parental rights if on balance with the benefits and stability of adoption the court finds that terminating parental rights would be detrimental to the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B)(iii)]. If the child is "unlikely" to be adopted, the court will never reach the possibility of this exception applying, since the court could not have found it likely the child would be adopted within a reasonable amount of time as required before even considering the exceptions [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)]. Further, what the statute means by adoption being "undesirable" is unclear. This exception is the least utilized exception, if indeed it has ever been utilized. Nevertheless, it is one of the potential statutory exceptions to the termination of parental rights [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B)(iii)].

[iv] Limited Exceptional Circumstances Exception

If it is established that the child is living with a foster parent or Indian custodian who is unable or unwilling to adopt the child due to exceptional circumstances that do not include an unwillingness to accept legal or financial responsibility for the child, but who is willing and capable of providing the child with a stable and permanent environment, and the court finds removal of the child from the physical custody of his or her foster parent or Indian custodian would be detrimental to the emotional well-being of the child, parental rights cannot be terminated if on balance with the benefits and stability of adoption the court finds that terminating parental rights would be detrimental to the child [*Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.*26(c)(1)(B)(iv]. This exception does not apply, however, to a child who is either under 6 years of age or a member of a sibling group, with a sibling under the age of 6, and the sibling group is or should be permanently placed together [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B)(v)].

This exception was seldom used and had little explanatory case law when it included relative caregivers. It is anticipated that it will now be used even more infrequently. Nevertheless, it is clear from prior case law dealing with relatives that the exception found in Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B)(iv) does not apply merely because a foster parent or Indian custodian prefers a lesser plan than adoption [In re Zeth S. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 396, 410, 2 Cal. Rptr. 3d 683, 73 P.3d 541 ; In re Rachel M. (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 1289, 1298, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 153]. Further, neither guardianship nor some other planned permanent living arrangement, such as long-term foster care, are irrevocable. Thus they fall short of providing the child with the kind stability and permanence the Legislature intended [In re Celine R. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 45, 53, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 432, 71 P.3d 787 , quoting In re Jasmine D. (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 1339, 1348, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 644 , and In re Lorenzo C. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1330, 1344, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 562]. This preference for adoption is especially strong since the implementation of the federal Adoption and Safe Families Act of 1997 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16131]. Thus, it will be the rare case in which this exception to the termination of parental rights and adoption applies.

PRACTICE TIP:

Relative Caregivers Are No Longer Included. For years this exception to the termination of parental rights included relative caregivers and an Indian child's extended family members under Welf. & Inst. Code former § 366.26(c)(1)(D). Effective January 1, 2008, those caregivers are not included in this exception. Instead, a separate relative guardianship cutout has been added as Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(A). For an explanation of that relative guardianship cutout see § 2.171[5][a].

[v] Substantial Interference with Sibling Relationship Exception

If it is established that termination of parental rights would be detrimental to the child because it would create substantial interference with a dependent child's sibling relationships and the maintenance of that sibling relationship outweighs the benefits of adoption, parental rights are not to be terminated. In reaching this determination, the court is to take into consideration the nature and extent of the sibling relationship, including but not limited to, whether the children were raised in the same home, whether they shared significant common experiences, whether there is an existing close and strong bond, and whether ongoing contact is in the child's best interest, including the child's long-term emotional interest, as compared with the benefit of legal permanence and stability through adoption [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B)(v)]. This section was enacted as part of a broader statutory scheme intended to protect and maintain a dependent child's relationships with his or her siblings [In re Valerie A. (2007) 152 Cal. App. 4th 987, 997-998, 61 Cal. Rptr. 3d 403] .

This exception effective January 1, 2002, was not made retroactive. It only applies in cases in which termination of parental right is being considered on or after January 1, 2002 [In re Raymond E. (2002) 97 Cal. App. 4th 613, 616-618, 118 Cal. Rptr. 2d 376 ; In re Daniel H. (2002) 99 Cal. App. 4th 804, 812, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 475] . The exception is based on the subjective belief of some child advocates that in some cases sibling relationships may be more important to dependent children than the stability of adoption. Numerous statutory provisions already exist to help develop and maintain sibling relationships for dependent children [see, e.g., Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 306.5, 362.1(a)(2), 388(b), 16002]. There is also a provision for postadoption sibling contact agreements [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.29]. Thus, the necessity for and wisdom of this new exception that can result in children being denied the stability and love of an adoptive home is questionable. Nevertheless, it is now the law. Whether psychological evidence can establish the necessity for denying the child the stability of adoption in favor of posing fewer restrictions on a sibling relationship will have to be determined on a case-by-case basis. It will be the rare case in which this exception actually applies. Substantial litigation at both the trial and appellate levels is anticipated, however.

PRACTICE TIP:

A Tool for Parents. The "substantial interference with sibling relationship" exception to the termination of parental rights was intended to help children. It holds the potential, however, to be a stronger and more frequently used tool for parents to try to prevent termination of parental rights. Experienced child advocates know the substantial benefits to children brought by the love of an adoptive family and the stability of adoption. Thus, it should be the rare case in which child advocates argue this exception applies. But under this exception parents can argue that parental rights should not be terminated because it will cause substantial interference with a sibling relationship, even though the parent did little to work toward reunification or to maintain a beneficial parent-child relationship. This gives parents a significant new tool to argue against termination of parental rights in an appropriate case.

The substantial interference with a sibling relationship exception to the termination of parental rights creates a "heavy burden for the party opposing adoption" [In re Daniel H. (2002) 99 Cal. App. 4th 804, 813, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 475] . The exception only applies when the juvenile court determines "there is a 'compelling reason' for concluding that the termination of parental rights would be 'detrimental' to the child due to 'substantial interference' with a sibling relationship" [In re Daniel H. (2002) 99 Cal. App. 4th 804, 813, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 475 ; see also In re Celine R. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 45, 61, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 432, 71 P.3d 787 , citing Daniel H. with approval]. Adoption is still the "norm" and substantial interference with a sibling exception to the termination of parental rights must be considered in view of the preference for adoption when reunification efforts fail [In re Celine R. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 45, 53, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 432, 71 P.3d 787] . The party opposing adoption must first show that termination of parental rights would substantially interfere with the sibling relationship" [In re L.Y.L. (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 942, 951-952, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 688] . To do this, the existence of a "significant sibling relationship" must be shown, "the severance of which would be detrimental to the child." As noted by one court, "Many siblings have a relationship with each other, but would not suffer detriment if that relationship ended. If the relationship is not sufficiently significant to cause detriment on termination, there is no substantial interference with that relationship" [In re L.Y.L. (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 942, 952, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 688 ; see also In re Megan S. (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 247, 252, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 876 (although siblings were bonded, there was no evidence severing the relationship would be detrimental)]. The L.Y.L. decision suggested that mere sadness would not be enough to show substantial detriment to the child [In re L.Y.L. (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 942, 952, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 688] . But another court noted that sometimes all a child can express is sadness, yet courts should be open to the possibility that such sadness may be significant to the child and consider any evidence demonstrating whether sadness will result in substantial detriment to the child [In re Jacob S. (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 1011, 1017, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 654] . Indeed, it noted that in some cases sibling relationship studies may be indispensable in determining whether the substantial interference with a sibling relationship exception applies in a given case [In re Jacob S. (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 1011, 1018, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 654] .

If a "sibling relationship exists that is so strong that its severance would cause the child detriment, the court then weighs the benefit to the child of continuing the sibling relationship against the benefit to the child adoption would provide" [In re L.Y.L. (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 942, 952-953, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 688 ; see also In re Celine R. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 45, 61, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 432, 71 P.3d 787 , citing L.Y.L. with approval]. The language of the substantial interference with a sibling exception to the termination of parental rights is "strikingly similar" to the language of In re Autumn H. (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 567, 575, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 535 [In re L.Y.L. (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 942, 951, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 688] . As with the beneficial parent-child exception, the juvenile court "must balance the beneficial interest of the child in maintaining the sibling relationship, which might leave the child in a tenuous guardianship or foster home placement, against the sense of security and belonging adoption and a new home would confer" [In re L.Y.L. (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 942, 951, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 688 , citing In re Autumn H. (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 567, 575, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 535] . Thus, the burden is a high one. Nevertheless, the requirements for the two exceptions are not identical. Thus, as is clear from the statutory language, regular visitation and contact are required for the beneficial parent-child relationship exception, but not for the substantial interference with a sibling relationship exception [In re Valerie A. (2007) 152 Cal. App. 4th 987, 1007-1009, 61 Cal. Rptr. 3d 403]

The enactment of the substantial interference with sibling relationship exception raises a number of questions that are not answered by the statutory language. Many of these have already been answered by the appellate courts.

- Can this exception be raised by the parents at the trial court level? Yes. A determination of any of the five exceptions to the termination of parental rights "directly affects the parent's interest in the relationship with the minor; the parent is an aggrieved party in that determination." Thus, the parent has standing to assert the sibling exception found in Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B)(v) [In re L.Y.L. (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 942, 951, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 688 ; see also In re Jacob S. (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 1011, 1016, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 654 ; In re Erik P. (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 395, 402, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 922 ; In re Daniel H. (2002) 99 Cal. App. 4th 804, 811-812, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 475] . The parent also has standing to request a guardian ad litem be appointed for a nondependent sibling adopted by a relative so the nondependent sibling could appear through the guardian ad litem regarding the substantial interference with a sibling relationship exception, although the parent would not have standing to appeal the denial of that request [In re Valerie A. (2007) 152 Cal. App. 4th 987, 1000, 61 Cal. Rptr. 3d 403] .

- Can this exception be raised by a sibling at the trial court level? That depends. Even dependent siblings are not parties to another sibling's dependency case, despite the fact each of their cases may be heard at the same time, and non-dependent siblings certainly are not parties. Thus, there is no automatic right for siblings to participate in the hearing at which parental rights may be terminated [In re Hector A. (2005) 125 Cal. App. 4th 783, 791, 23 Cal. Rptr. 3d 104 , citing Seiser & Kumli, California Juvenile Courts Practice and Procedure § 2.171[5][a] (Matthew Bender)]. To have standing to raise the sibling exception, a sibling must first establish a right to be involved in the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing at which termination of parental rights is being considered. This is done through a petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(b), which allows a sibling to file a petition seeking recognition of the sibling relationship and asking for "consideration" as the permanent plan for the dependent child [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 388(b), 16002(d); In re Hector A. (2005) 125 Cal. App. 4th 783, 791-793, 23 Cal. Rptr. 3d 104] . The standard is the best interest of the dependent child for whom adoption is being sought [Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(d)]. Thus, for a sibling to have standing to assert the sibling exception should apply to prevent the termination of parental rights of the dependent child whose case is before the court, the sibling must first prove under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(b), (d) that allowing the sibling to litigate the sibling exception is in the best interest of the dependent child that is before the court. This does not mean the petition must allege the sibling exception should apply, since that is to be determined at the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing itself. Instead, a Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(b) petition for sibling standing to litigate the exception need only show there is a sufficiently strong and positive relationship between the siblings that it is in the adoptive child's best interest to grant the sibling standing and to have the juvenile court fully consider the sibling exception under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(E) [In re Hector A. (2005) 125 Cal. App. 4th 783, 793-795, 23 Cal. Rptr. 3d 104] . If that standing is granted, the sibling then bears the burden of showing the exception should be found to exist.

- Is the right to raise the exception at the appellate level waived if the issue is not raised at the trial court level? Yes [In re Erik P. (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 395, 402-403, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 922] .

- Which child is the focus of the sibling exception? The focus is on the child for whom adoption is being considered. As noted by one appellate court, "the language focuses exclusively on the benefits and burdens to the adoptive child, not the other siblings. The court is specifically directed to consider the best interests of the adoptive child, not the siblings, and must ultimately determine whether adoption would be detrimental to the adoptive child, not the siblings" [In re Daniel H. (2002) 99 Cal. App. 4th 804, 813, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 475] . The California Supreme Court has agreed, holding "the sibling relationship exception permits the trial court to consider possible detriment to the child being considered for adoption, but not a sibling of that child" [In re Celine R. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 45, 54, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 432, 71 P.3d 787] . This does not mean the effect on the sibling who is not being considered for adoption will always be irrelevant. The non-adoptive sibling's views may be relevant as indirect evidence of the effect the adoption might have on the adoptive child, and the non-adoptive sibling's emotional resistance towards the proposed adoption may also be relevant to the interests of the adoptive child. The ultimate question, however, is whether termination of parental rights and adoption would be detrimental to the adoptive child, not the sibling [In re Celine R. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 45, 55, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 432, 71 P.3d 787] .

- Can the exception apply when the relationship is with a biological sibling who has already been adopted by a different family? There is a split of authority on this issue. One court has held it cannot [In re Erik P. (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 395, 403, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 922] . In doing so, it recognized that termination of parental rights could not affect the dependent child's relationship with the previously adopted sibling since the biological parent no longer had a legal relationship with the adopted child. Thus, the termination of parental rights could not be detrimental to the dependent child under this exception [In re Erik P. (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 395, 403, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 922] . This is consistent with the fact an adopted child gets a new birth certificate giving the child new parents and relatives, and severing the legal relationship with his or her biological family [Fam. Code §§ 8512, 8614, 8615, 8616]. Nevertheless, one court has held the substantial interference with a sibling relationship exception can apply because of the relationship between a dependent child and an already adopted sibling [In re Valerie A. (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1523-1524, 43 Cal. Rptr. 3d 734] . In so doing, it held that none of the authorities it examined indicated a sibling relationship ended at adoption [In re Valerie A. (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1523, 43 Cal. Rptr. 3d 734] . While this may be true emotionally, and efforts are to be made to maintain and facilitate post-adoption sibling contact when appropriate, the legal relationship does change in light of the fact adoption gives the child a different birth certificate, parents, and family. Further, the Valerie A. decision does not even mention that Erik P. came to a different conclusion. The better view is that of Erik P., but regardless, it will be the rare case in which a dependent child has a sufficiently significant relationship with a previously adopted sibling for the exception to apply. This is an area to be watched for further developments.

● At what point does a conflict of interest between dependent siblings exist that requires separate counsel to be appointed for the dependent children so that different positions can be advocated? An attorney who represents a sibling group only needs to be relieved and separate counsel appointed if there is an actual conflict of interest [Carroll v. Superior Court (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 1423, 1426-1431, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 891 (conflict existed in case of seven dependent siblings in multiple placements with varying degrees of attachment; recommendation was adoption for three of the siblings, legal guardianship for three of the siblings, and a continuance for the seventh for further assessment); see also In re Celine R. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 45, 58, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 432, 71 P.3d 787 , citing Carroll with approval]. This is an area to be watched for further development, however. As noted by the California Supreme Court, now that it is clear the substantial interference with a sibling exception only applies to the adoptive child, it is not clear how likely it is an actual conflict will arise or how the exception as interpreted by the Court will affect determinations of actual conflict [In re Celine R. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 45, 58, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 432, 71 P.3d 787] . If an attorney believes the court is erroneously requiring the attorney to represent more than one child, the attorney can consider taking a traditional writ for extraordinary relief, rather than wait to have the issue raised on appeal. The attorney should only do so, however, if the attorney believes it is in his or her clients' best interest, not simply because the attorney believes the court is in error. As is clear throughout the dependency process, delay may cause children harm [In re Celine R. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 45, 60, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 432, 71 P.3d 787] . Any error in this regard will be reviewed using the simple harmless error test [In re Celine R. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 45, 59, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 432, 71 P.3d 787] . For further discussion of conflict issues regarding children's counsel, see § 328.62[3][b].

● Does the social services agency have a duty to provide detailed information on any sibling relationships and to establish whether the substantial interference with a sibling relationship applies? No. It is only required to provide a "review" of the amount and nature of any contact the child has had with extended family members, including siblings [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361.5(g)(2), 366.21(i)(2), 366.22(b)(2)]. It is not required to provide a detailed account of that contact [see In re Lorenzo C. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1330, 1336-1338, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 562 (social worker's assessment not required to provide detailed account of parent-child contact)]. Nor is it required to establish whether the sibling exception applies, or whether the child would suffer detriment if separated from the sibling, unless it is advocating for the exception to apply [In re Megan S. (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 247, 252, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 876] . The strong preference for a child likely to be adopted is for an alternative permanent plan of adoption [In re Zachary G. (1999) 77 Cal. App. 4th 799, 809, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 20] . In most cases the sibling exception will not apply. There is no requirement in the statutes for the social services agency to prove the absence of an exception before parental rights can be terminated [In re Cristella C. (1992) 6 Cal. App. 4th 1363, 1372-1373, 8 Cal. Rptr. 2d 342] . Unless the social services agency is advocating for the exception to apply, to require it to establish whether the exception applies in each case would require a substantial increase in the assessment requirements and workload for the social worker, something the legislature did not mandate. As an arm of the court, it must objectively provide the court with the information required by the statute. As a party and an arm of the state, however, it must be free to advocate for the position it determines is best for the child. If that is adoption, to require it to establish the application of the exception would be inconsistent with its role. Instead, the burden to prove the sibling exception applies is on whichever party seeks to prevent the termination of parental rights [In re Zachary G. (1999) 77 Cal. App. 4th 799, 809, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 20 ; In re Lorenzo C. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1330, 1343-1345, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 562] .

- Does the juvenile court have a sua sponte duty to determine whether the sibling exception applies in a particular case? No. First, to require the juvenile court to determine in every case whether the exception applies would consume a significant amount of judicial time, something the court has all too little of. The legislature did not require that. More importantly, there is a strong preference for an alternative permanent plan of adoption for a child who is likely to be adopted if parental rights are terminated [In re Zachary G. (1999) 77 Cal. App. 4th 799, 809, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 20] . It will be the rare case in which the sibling exception applies. Unless one of the parties seeks to prevent the termination of parental rights based on the substantial interference with the sibling exception, the court has no duty to determine the application of the exception and the strong preference for adoption should apply.

- Previously it had been clearly established the Legislature had not created a "best interest" exception to the termination of parental rights in dependency cases [In re Tabatha G. (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1159, 1164-1165, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 93] . Does the requirement the court consider whether "ongoing contact is in the child's best interest" now create a "best interest" exception in cases in which sibling relationships are raised? No. The court's consideration of whether ongoing contact is in the child's best interest is only one of the factors the court is to consider in determining whether termination of parental rights is detrimental to the child under this statutory exception. Thus, the better view is that overall it is a determination of detriment, not best interest. This would be consistent with the language of Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B) and the many appellate decisions interpreting the beneficial parent-child relationship exception found in Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B)(i).

- Previously the question of postadoption sibling contact provisions under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.29 was not a factor to be considered at a hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26. Does the enactment of the substantial interference with sibling relationship exception now make such agreements relevant to the termination of parental rights determination? Probably not. As with postadoption contact agreements for other biological family members and the child's tribe, if the ICWA applies, postadoption sibling contact provisions are entered into and made part of the court's order in the adoption process, not the termination of parental rights process [see Fam. Code § 8616.5; In re Kimberly S. (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 405, 411-412, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 740] . Even if the parties, including the prospective adoptive parents, are in agreement with a postadoption sibling contact provision at the time of the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing, one or more of the persons involved may change their mind prior to the adoption being finalized. Thus, there is no guarantee that postadoption sibling contact provisions would actually be made a part of the adoption order [In re Megan S. (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 247, 254, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 876] . This makes the consideration of such provisions at the time of the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing questionable.

- What is the proper standard of review at the appellate level? Although the juvenile court considers whether ongoing contact with the sibling is in the dependent child's best interest as one of the factors involved in this exception, the exception only applies when the court finds on balance with the benefits of adoption that termination of parental rights would be detrimental to the child because it would cause substantial interference with a sibling relationship that is important to the child. A finding of detriment is reviewed using the substantial evidence standard. Thus, that is the appropriate standard of review [see, e.g., In re Jacob S. (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 1011, 1019, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 654 ; In re Megan S. (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 247, 251, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 876] .

For further discussion of sibling relationships, see §§ 328.129[7] (sibling placement, contact, and visitation), 328.198[5] (post adoption sibling contact agreements).

[vi] California Exception for Indian Child

Beginning in 2007, there is another potential exception to the termination of parental rights that is applicable only to Indian children in California. It may apply if the court finds the child is an Indian child as defined by the Indian Child Welfare Act and first determines termination of parental rights would not be in the Indian child's best interest for a reason directly related to that status, including but not limited to: (i) the termination of parental rights would substantially interfere with the child's connection with his or her tribal community, or with the child's tribal membership rights; or (ii) Effective July 1, 2010, this exception may also apply to cases in which the child's tribe has recommended a tribal customary adoption [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 366.24, 366.26(c)(1)(B)(vi), eff. July 1, 2010].

PRACTICE TIP:

Consider the Relative Guardianship Cutout if the Caregiver Is an Extended Family Member Under the ICWA. While this exception may apply when the caregiver is an extended family member under the ICWA, it requires a higher showing than the new relative guardianship cutout found in Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(A), which does not require a detriment finding. Thus, for an Indian child both this exception and the relative guardianship cutout should be considered if the child's caregiver is an extended family member under the ICWA. For an explanation of that relative guardianship cutout see § 328.171[5][a].

As with the substantial interference with a sibling relationship exception that also allows the court to consider the child's best interest as a factor in its decision-making, the initial burden under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B)(vi) is significant. In determining what is best for the Indian child, it is not enough that there may be some interference with the Indian child's connection with his or her tribe or tribal membership rights; it must be a substantial interference [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B)(vi); cf. In re L.Y.L. (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 942, 951-952, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 688 ; In re Megan S. (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 247, 252, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 876] . Nor is it enough the child's tribe has merely identified a permanent plan other than adoption law, since California law requires both a finding of best interests and a finding that termination of parental rights would be detrimental to the Indian child because of this exception [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B); cf. In re Laura F. (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 583, 593, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 859 (court not required to give full faith and credit to tribal resolution against adoption under 25 U.S.C. § 1911(d), since it is inconsistent with California law)].

Guardianship and other lesser plans fall short of the kind of permanence the legislature has determined is best for dependent children [In re Celine R. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 45, 53, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 432, 71 P.3d 787 ; In re Lorenzo C. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1330, 1344, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 562] . Many federally recognized tribes have tribal courts and could request transfer of the dependency case, following which the tribal court could select any permanent plan it found appropriate. This exception should not be used as a vehicle to sidestep the tribal responsibilities entailed in requesting the matter be transferred to the tribal court while still receiving the benefit of being able to prevent adoption. Further, even if the child is currently an Indian child as defined by the ICWA, there are no guarantees tribal membership will continue or tribal benefits will actually be received. Federally recognized tribes are sovereign nations and can change their minds about membership and benefits at any time [Lamere v. Superior Court (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 1059, 1063-1064, 31 Cal. Rptr. 3d 880 ; In re Barbara R. (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 941, 954-955, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 687] . The Indian child's need for stability and permanence, however, does not change.

The juvenile court's finding termination of parental rights is not in the best interest of the Indian child pursuant to this subdivision does not end the issue. As with all the exceptions to the termination of parental rights, the juvenile court still must consider that finding in light of the totality of the circumstances and determine whether the finding outweighs the benefits of adoption to such a degree that termination of parental rights would be detrimental to the Indian child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B)(vi)]. The balancing is done in much the same way that it is done under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B)(i) or Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B)(v) [see In re Autumn H. (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 567, 575-576, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 535 ; In re L.Y.L. (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 942, 952-953, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 688] . In many instances, if the court finds terminating parental rights will not be in the Indian child's best interest it will also find that terminating parental rights will be detrimental to the Indian child. But this will not always be the case, since the two terms are not synonymous.

Thus, as with the other similar exceptions, the final question is whether terminating parental rights will be detrimental to the Indian child. The court balances what it found to be in the Indian child's best interest against the benefits of adoption, which is what the legislature has found is best in the absence of detriment due to one of the statutory exceptions. By doing so and following the statutory scheme, the court acts in the child's best interest [see, e.g., In re Zeth S. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 396, 410, 2 Cal. Rptr. 3d 683, 73 P.3d 541 ("The Legislature, however, has determined that what is in the child's best interests is best realized through implementation of the procedures, presumptions, and timelines written into the dependency statutes"); In re Jessica G. (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 1, 8, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 811 (best interest is "implied throughout dependency law"); In re Tabatha G. (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1159, 1165, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 93 (best interest is "inherent in the legislative procedure")].

The juvenile court's balancing of its best-interest determination against the benefits of adoption is not inconsistent with the child being an Indian child. Adoption is still the "norm," even for Indian children, and the exception under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B)(vi) must be considered in view of the strong preference for adoption when reunification efforts fail [In re Celine R. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 45, 53, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 432, 71 P.3d 787] . Further, this exception to the termination of parental rights is not found in the Indian Child Welfare Act. This is solely a California statutory exception that California has chosen to enact, and should not be viewed as if it were part of the ICWA [25 U.S.C. § 1921; In re S.B. (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 1148, 1158, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 726] . Instead, it must be recognized the ICWA permits and the Adoption and Safe Families Act [Public Law 105-89] and other federal law strongly favors adoption when reunification efforts fail [25 U.S.C. § 1912(f); 42 U.S.C. § 675(5)(E)]. Thus, it is appropriate the person or tribe seeking to establish the applicability of this exception bear a heavy burden [In re Daniel H. (2002) 99 Cal. App. 4th 804, 813, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 475] .

Finally, in some cases, the Indian child's right to association with the prospective adoptive family the child has been placed with and to a safe, stable, permanent home in a timely fashion will rise to a constitutional level. In such cases, the Indian child's constitutional rights may outweigh this California statutory exception to the termination of parental rights [In re Santos Y. (2001) 92 Cal. App. 4th 1274, 1312-1323, 112 Cal. Rptr. 2d 692 ; In re Bridget R. (1996) 41 Cal. App. 4th 1483, 1502-1510, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 507] .

This new California statutory exception to the termination of parental rights is an area to be watched for further developments.

[vii] Findings Not Required

The court is not required to make an express finding as to the statutory exceptions to adoption found in Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B) unless the court finds that one of the exceptions does apply under the facts of the case to make termination of parental rights detrimental to the child [see In re Jesse B. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 845, 851, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 516] .

If parental rights are terminated, the court is not required to specifically find the parent unfit [In re Amanda D. (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 813, 819, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 108 , quoting In re Brittany M. (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 1396, 1403, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 57 ; see In re Sarah C. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 964, 979, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 414 ; see also discussion in [i], above], or that termination would be in the best interest of the child [In re Jennifer J. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 1080, 1089, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 813 (holding there is no fifth "best interest" exception to termination of parental rights)].

[b] No "Best Interest" Exception

Despite the clear legislative intent for the original enactment of Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 to create only four statutory exceptions to the termination of parental rights for a child likely to be adopted [see Senate Sel. Comm. on Children & Youth/SB 1195 Task Force Rep. on Child Abuse Reporting Laws, Juvenile Court Dependency Statutes, and Child Welfare Services (Jan. 1988) pp. 11-12], some have argued that the language of former Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(4) to the effect that the court should not terminate parental rights if such termination "is not in the interests" of the child, or if one of the conditions of Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(A)-(D) exist, created a "best interest" exception to the termination of parental rights. This argument was considered and rejected by the court of appeal in In re Tabatha G. (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1159, 1164-1165, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 93 . Other appellate courts concluded similarly [see, e.g., In re Jasmine J. (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 1802, 1807-1808, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 560 ; In re Jennifer J. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 1080, 1090, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 813] . At least one court, however, disagreed with the Tabatha G. decision and held the language of that subdivision did create a "best interest" exception to adoption, although in that case it found that it did not apply [see In re Jose V. (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 1792, 1800-1801, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 684] .

Effective January 1, 1998, the language of Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(4) was amended to further clarify the Legislature's intent that there is no "best interest" exception. That subdivision now prohibits the termination of parental rights if the court finds that adoption of the child or termination of parental rights is not in the interest of the child because one of the statutory exceptions found in Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1) applies [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(4) (emphasis added)]. This clarification indicates a clear legislative determination that only where one of the enumerated exceptions to adoption exists or the court has never found reasonable efforts to reunify were offered or provided when required can the court find that termination of parental rights for an adoptable child is detrimental to the child and thus not in the child's best interest. Nevertheless, parents have on occasion continued to raise arguments for additional exceptions to the termination of parental rights. In the case of In re Jasmine T. (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 209, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 128 a parent attempted to avoid termination of her rights by contending the fact the potential adoptive placement was a relative made it such that a legal guardianship would fulfill the goal of family preservation. As that court noted, however, placement with a relative "is not tantamount to family preservation" and upheld the termination of parental rights [In re Jasmine T. (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 209, 213-214, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 128] .

[d] Consideration of Child's Wishes

At all termination proceedings, the court must consider the wishes of the child, and must act in the child's best interests [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(h); In re Diana G. (1992) 10 Cal. App. 4th 1468, 1480, 13 Cal. Rptr. 2d 645 ; In re Jennifer J. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 1080, 1086 n. 5, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 813 ; In re Jesse B. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 845, 853, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 516] . The juvenile court must consider the child's wishes to the extent ascertainable [In re Amanda D. (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 813, 820, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 108 ; In re Leo M. (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 1583, 1591, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 253 ; In re Juan H. (1992) 11 Cal. App. 4th 169, 173, 13 Cal. Rptr. 2d 716] . The court may receive direct evidence of the child's wishes by direct formal testimony in court, informal direct communication with the court in chambers on or off the record, reports prepared for the hearing, letters, telephone calls to the court, or electronic recordings [In re Amanda D. (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 813, 820, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 108 ; In re Leo M. (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 1583, 1591, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 253 ; In re Diana G. (1992) 10 Cal. App. 4th 1468, 1480, 13 Cal. Rptr. 2d 645] . If the child is too young to understand or even express his or her wishes, the court may determine the child's wishes from his or her behavior while in the presence of the parent [In re Juan H. (1992) 11 Cal. App. 4th 169, 173, 13 Cal. Rptr. 2d 716] . The child's presence in court is not required [In re Diana G. (1992) 10 Cal. App. 4th 1468, 1480, 13 Cal. Rptr. 2d 645] . Nor is a direct statement required from the child if that is contrary to the child's best interest [In re Amber M. (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 681, 687, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 19] .

Although evidence of the child's wishes is not determinative of what is in the child's best interest, it can be powerful evidence of what is best for the child [In re Michael D. (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 1074, 1087, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 575] . Nevertheless, in honoring the dignity of children and giving them a voice in permanency planning decisions, it must be remembered that in some cases it can be harmful to a child to make direct inquiries or to make the child feel responsible for the ultimate decision. As very eloquently stated by one appellate court, "we must be mindful that we should not carelessly impose upon them decisions which are heavy burdens even for those given the ultimate responsibility to decide. To ask children with whom they prefer to live or to ascertain what they wish through other evidence is one thing. To ask those children to choose whether they ever see their natural parent again or to give voice to approving that termination is a significantly different prospect. We must have regard for the possible and readily conceivable anguish that such confrontational choices could create in a short lifetime already filled with trauma" [In re Leo M. (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 1583, 1593, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 253] . It is for this reason that in considering a child's expression of preferences, it is not always necessary that the child specifically be made to understand that the proceeding may result in the termination of parental rights [In re Amanda D. (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 813, 820, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 108 , quoting In re Leo M. (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 1583, 1593, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 253 ; but see In re Diana G. (1992) 10 Cal. App. 4th 1468, 1480, 13 Cal. Rptr. 2d 645] .

[e] Constitutionality of Procedures

A decision to terminate parental rights can be made where the finding of adoptability has been made by clear and convincing evidence, even though some of the previous findings of detriment to return and reasonable services have been made by only a preponderance of the evidence [Cynthia D. v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 242, 254, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 698, 851 P.2d 1307] .

The lesser standard of proof is permitted in the context of the entire proceeding because the purpose of the permanency planning hearing is not to accumulate further evidence of parental unfitness and danger to the child, but to begin the task of finding the child a permanent alternative family placement. In effect, by the time the dependency proceedings have reached the permanency planning hearing stage, there have been multiple specific findings of parental detriment or unfitness [Cynthia D. v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 242, 253, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 698, 851 P.2d 1307 ; see, e.g., Welf. & Inst. Code former § 361(b) (grounds for initial removal of child from parental custody required to be been established by clear and convincing evidence), now see Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(c); Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 366.21(e), (f), 366.22(a) (6-, 12-, and 18-month hearings to review reunification efforts; statutory presumption at each hearing that child should be returned to parental custody); see also discussion in § 328.110[5]].

Additionally, when considered in the context of the entire process for terminating parental rights under the dependency statutes, the procedure at the permanency planning hearing for termination of parental rights on a preponderance of the evidence comports with federal constitutional due process requirements. This is because the precise and demanding substantive and procedural requirements that the petitioning agency must have satisfied before proposing termination are carefully calculated to constrain judicial discretion, diminish the risk of erroneous findings of parental inadequacy and detriment to the child, and otherwise protect the legitimate interests of the parents [Cynthia D. v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 242, 256, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 698, 851 P.2d 1307] .

Finally, at a stage in the proceedings as late as the selection and implementation hearing, the evidence of detriment is already so clear and convincing that more cannot be required without prejudice to the interests of the adoptable child, with which the petitioning agency must align itself. Proof of some of the previous findings by a preponderance of the evidence is therefore sufficient in this context [Cynthia D. v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 242, 256, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 698, 851 P.2d 1307] .

[f] Requirement for Previous Findings

[i] Requirement for Previous Reasonable Efforts Finding

The court may not terminate parental rights if at each and every hearing at which the court was required to consider reasonable efforts or services, the court has found that reasonable efforts were not made or that reasonable services were not offered or provided [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(2)]. The court is not required to have made a reasonable efforts finding at each of the prior hearings. If at any of the prior hearings a finding that reasonable services had been offered or provided to the parent, the court may terminate parental rights [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.725(f)(1)].

[ii] Requirement for Previous Detriment Finding

In most instances one or more findings of detriment will already have been made regarding each parent before the case ever gets to a Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing, and that prior finding forms part of the basis for the termination of parental rights [Cynthia D. v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 242, 253, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 698, 851 P.2d 1307]. But that will not always be the case. Sometimes parents have not sought custody of their child during the dependency proceedings and hence no detriment finding has ever been made [cf. Robert L. v. Superior Court (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 619, 628, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 41 ; In re Terry H. (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 1847, 1857, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 271]. If the parent is a mere biological parent, that is not a problem since the rights of a mere biological parent can be terminated based on a finding adoption is in the child's best interest [Fam. Code § 7664; Adoption of Kelsey S. (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 816, 824-825, 831, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 615, 823 P.2d 1216]. If the parent is a biological parent who stepped forward at the earliest time and fully accepted the role and responsibilities of a parent, however, a finding of detriment by clear and convincing evidence must be made at some time during the case before parental rights may be terminated [Adoption of Kelsey S. (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 816, 849, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 615, 823 P.2d 1216] . Also, if the parent is a presumed parent, a finding of detriment by clear and convincing evidence must be made at some time during the case before parental rights may be terminated [In re G.S.R. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 1202, 1210-1212, 72 Cal. Rptr. 3d 398 ; In re Gladys L. (2006) 141 Cal. App. 4th 845, 848, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 434] .

If the parent is a presumed parent, a finding of detriment by clear and convincing evidence must generally be made at some time during the case before parental rights may be terminated [In re G.S.R. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 1202, 1210-1212, 72 Cal. Rptr. 3d 398 ; In re Gladys L. (2006) 141 Cal. App. 4th 845, 848, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 434] .

The Gladys L. decision indicated that if a finding of detriment for a presumed parent had not been previously made this would require sending the matter back to determine if a jurisdiction finding under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 could be made as to that presumed parent [In re Gladys L. (2006) 141 Cal. App. 4th 845, 849, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 434] . This was incorrect, however [In re P.A. (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 1197, 1212, 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 783] . Jurisdiction findings are not made as to parents. They are made as to children, and there is no need for jurisdictional allegations as to both parents [In re Alysha S. (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 393, 397, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 494 ; In re Jeffrey P. (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 1548, 1552-1554, 267 Cal. Rptr. 764] . Instead, what is needed in this situation is for the juvenile court to enter a detriment finding at the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing for any presumed or Kelsey S. parent for whom no prior detriment finding has been made, if evidence exists to support that finding, before it terminates parental rights [cf. In re Matthew Z. (2000) 80 Cal. App. 4th 545, 555, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 343 and In re Michael G. (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 700, 713 n.9, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 642 (ICWA findings will normally have been made before the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing, but if not they must be made at the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing)]. If a detriment finding is requested to be made at a ".26 hearing," notice and an opportunity to be heard on this issue must be afforded the presumed or Kelsey S. parent. In this way the due process rights of all presumed and Kelsey S. parents are protected before parental rights are terminated.

Can a presumed or Kelsey S. parent be found to have forfeited the right to a detriment finding or can it be implied by the parent's abandonment of the child? The Gladys L. court refused to imply such a finding or find a presumed father had forfeited such a right, despite the presumed father's three-year absence after he had noticed the child was in out-of-home care as a dependent [In re Gladys L. (2006) 141 Cal. App. 4th 845, 849, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 434] . This is somewhat understandable in that case; at the time there was no decisional law dealing with the issue, and the appellate court mistakenly believed a jurisdictional finding was required as to that parent [In re P.A. (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 1197, 1212, 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 783] . If an adequate search had been done for the missing presumed parent, however, the juvenile court could have made a detriment finding at the disposition hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 361, and the functional equivalent of a detriment finding under Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(1), due to the presumed father's whereabouts being unknown, as was done in a factually similar case [In re P.A. (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 1197, 1212, 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 783] . Thus, the better view is that such a finding can be forfeited or implied if the record indicates adequate search efforts were done for the missing presumed or Kelsey S. parent. Juvenile courts must take steps to ensure adequate search efforts are completed and documented, however, or the appellate court will have no basis on which to base a holding of forfeiture or an implied finding of detriment. Further, all parties and the juvenile court should ensure the issue is addressed if there is a missing presumed or Kelsey S. parent, and that parent later appears. This is an area to be watched for further developments.

For a discussion as to whether recent case law from the California Supreme Court renders the Gladys L. decision inapposite for a presumed parent who has not stepped forward and assumed a parental role, see § 328.60[7].

[g] Adoption as Goal for Difficult-to-Place Child

[i] In General

If the court finds (1) that termination of parental rights would not be detrimental to the child under the exceptions found in Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B), (2) that the child has a probability for adoption but is difficult to place for adoption, and (3) there are no prospective adoptive homes available to the child, the court may identify adoption as the permanent placement goal and continue the matter for further efforts to locate an adoptive home for the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(3)].

One appellate court has held the standard of proof for finding a probability of adoption is clear and convincing evidence. That court noted the juvenile court has to find that termination of parental rights would not be detrimental to the child under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B), and that subdivision requires clear and convincing evidence of the likelihood of adoption. Thus, the court believed it "is reasonably understood" the clear and convincing standard of proof also applies to the finding the child has a probability of adoption [In re Ramone R. (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 1339, 1351, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 344] . This is not correct for two reasons. First, the language of the statute places the finding the child has a probability for adoption after the language that the court must find termination of parental rights would not be detrimental to the child under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B), not before [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(3)]. Thus, the requirements of Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1) cannot be said to apply to the finding of a probability for adoption. Second, if the juvenile court found there was clear and convincing evidence the child had a probability for adoption, it is doubtful the court would need to continue the matter, since the same evidence would usually also prove by clear and convincing evidence that it is likely the child would be adopted within a reasonable period of time. A requirement the finding the child has a probability for adoption be made by clear and convincing evidence would limit, if not eliminate, the need for the entire provision, making Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(3) essentially superfluous, an interpretation courts are to avoid [In re J. W. (2002) 29 Cal. 4th 200, 210, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 897, 57 P.3d 363 ; In re Tanyann W. (2002) 97 Cal. App. 4th 675, 678, 118 Cal. Rptr. 2d 596] . Thus, the better view is the finding the child has a probability for adoption need only be shown by a preponderance of the evidence [Evid. Code § 115].

A child may only be found to be difficult to place for adoption if there is no prospective adoptive home available because of the child's membership in a sibling group, because of the presence of a diagnosed medical, physical, or mental handicap, or because the child is seven years old or older. Without terminating parental rights, the court may order that efforts be made to locate an appropriate adoptive family for the child for a period not to exceed 180 days. During this period, the public agency responsible for seeking adoptive parents shall conduct a search in the same manner as prescribed for children in Fam. Code §§ 8708 and 8709. If the child is 10 years of age or older and has been placed in out of home care for six months or longer from the date the child entered foster care, the agency must also, to the extent possible, ask the child to identify any individuals, other than the child's siblings, who are important to the child. The purpose of this is to help identify potential adoptive parents [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(3)]. The agency may also ask any younger child who is a member of the sibling group, as appropriate, regarding individuals important to that child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(3)]. Although the purpose of these efforts is to locate a potential adoptive home, it may also result in a home appropriate for legal guardianship or for another planned permanent living arrangement being found.

The emphasis on concurrent services planning, including concurrent permanency planning, should greatly reduce the need for the use of this option, since by the time of the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing more children will already be in a home that is willing to keep them on a permanent basis if reunification efforts fail. Indeed, if social services agencies are doing their job effectively, it will be the rare child for whom this option will be needed. Courts, children's counsel, and court-appointed special advocates must take steps to ensure social services agencies are actively seeking permanent homes for children during the reunification period so the delay authorized by this provision of law will not be needed.

At the continued Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing, the court shall proceed to determine the appropriate permanent plan. One appellate court has noted that effective January 1, 2004, the statute provides that only termination of parental rights or legal guardianship are permanency planning options at the continued hearing [In re Ramone R. (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 1339, 1349, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 344] . The court was correct the plain language of the statute was amended in that way [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(3); Stats. 2003, ch. 813, § 7; Stats. 2004, ch. 810, § 5]. Nevertheless, that cannot have been the intent of the Legislature, since at the continued hearing there may be no family willing to adopt or accept legal guardianship. The option of another planned permanent living arrangement (long term foster care) must exist at the continued Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing. Otherwise, if the child was not found likely to be adopted by clear and convincing evidence at the continued hearing and there was no one willing and appropriate to be the child's legal guardian, the child would be left without a permanent plan. While both federal and state legislation has sought to reduce the number of children who are not reunified with a parent or adopted, and to eliminate to the maximum degree possible the number of children placed in long term foster care, the Legislature could not have intended a difficult to place child be left at the continued Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing without a permanent plan. Indeed, interpreting the statute to leave such a child without a permanent plan would be an absurd result, something the courts are to avoid even when the statute appears clear on its face [In re Christopher I. (2003) 106 Cal. App. 4th 533, 565, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 122 ; In re Charles T. (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 869, 878, 125 Cal. Rptr. 2d 868] .

Thus, the better view is that notwithstanding the language of the statute, at the continued hearing all three permanency planning options are available to the court: adoption, legal guardianship with a nonrelative, and long-term foster care (another planned permanent living arrangement) [In re Y.R. (2007) 152 Cal. App. 4th 99, 111, 60 Cal. Rptr. 3d 820] . This is consistent with the goal of the overall statutory scheme to provide children with as much safety, stability, and permanence as possible and appropriate, which is how dependency statutes should be construed [Cynthia D. v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 242, 253, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 698, 851 P.2d 1307 ; In re Christina A. (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 1153, 1162, 111 Cal. Rptr. 2d 310] . Surprisingly, in 2009 the California Supreme Court took the narrow view that at the continued hearing long-term foster care is not available [In re S.B. (2009) 46 Cal. 4th 529, 535-536, 94 Cal. Rptr. 3d 24, 207 P. 3d 525 , citing In re Gabriel G. (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 1428, 1436-1438, 36 Cal. Rptr. 3d 847] . Fortunately, effective July 1, 2010, the legislature has amended Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(3), correcting the legislative oversight and making it clear that all possible permanent plans, including long-term foster care, are available at the continued hearing for the child who is difficult to place for adoption [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(3), eff. July 1, 2010 (Stats. 2009 [AB 1325], ch. 287 § 15)].

[ii] Finality of Findings and Appealability

One court of appeal held a decade ago that the determination under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(3) identifying adoption as the goal for a difficult-to-place child is immediately appealable. It made this determination, however, on the erroneous assumption that at the subsequent hearing at which parental rights are terminated the juvenile court would not be dealing with the issue of the child's adoptability [In re Edward H. (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 584, 590-591, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745] . The Edward H. analysis in this regard has been characterized as "flawed," however [In re Cody C. (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 1297, 1301, 17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 928] . The original determination identifying adoption as a probable permanent plan for the difficult to place child is only an interim finding, however, and should not be immediately appealable. At the original hearing the court does not make a finding by clear and convincing evidence that the child is adoptable as required under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1), if it continues the matter for a difficult-to-place child. Instead, it only finds that the child has the probability for adoption [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(3)]. Thus, the better view is that no final determination has been made as to whether it is likely the child will be adopted if parental rights are terminated and the issue is not yet ripe for review [In re Y.R. (2007) 152 Cal App. 4th 99, 108-109, 60 Cal. Rptr. 3d 820 ; In re Cody C. (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 1297, 1301, 17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 928 ; In re Jacob S. (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 1011, 1019, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 654] .

The more difficult question has been whether the determination that termination of parental rights would not be detrimental to the child under one of the statutory exceptions should be immediately appealable.

In Jacob S. the Court of Appeal found the issue of adoptability not yet ripe for review, but determined on the merits whether substantial evidence supported the finding the substantial interference with a sibling relationship exception did not apply [In re Jacob S. (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 1011, 1017-1019, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 654] . It appears, however, that the question of whether the finding termination of parental rights would not be detrimental to the child was appealable at that time was not raised, and a decision does not stand for a proposition that was not actually determined in the case [People v. Harris (1989) 47 Cal. 3d 1047, 1071, 255 Cal. Rptr. 352, 767 P.2d 619] . The Court in Edward H. did state that if the finding no exception to adoption applied was not appealed from the first hearing, it could not be raised in a later appeal if parental rights were terminated [In re Edward H. (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 584, 590-591, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745] . In light of the erroneous conclusion in Edward H. allowing the issue of adoptability to be raised on appeal from a hearing at which adoption was only identified as the permanent placement goal, however, its holding in this regard must be questioned too. Nevertheless, the statutory language supports a conclusion the finding that no exception to adoption applies is a final determination that would be subject to appeal [Welf. & Inst. Code § 395]. Under this approach, if a parent or the child wishes to later raise an exception to adoption at the continued hearing, it would have to be done based on a petition pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 if new evidence or a change of circumstances would justify a finding that a different order would be best for the child in regards to one of the statutory exceptions to the termination of parental rights. This approach helps ensure further efforts toward finding an adoptive home aren't made when an exception to adoption applies.

Another approach, however, is to recognize that although the court has made an interim determination that termination of parental rights would not be detrimental, it has not terminated the parents' rights and as such they continue to have the right to visitation, which may affect the parent-child relationship and justify a later finding the beneficial parent child relationship exception should apply [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 366.21(h), 366.22(a), 366.26(c)(1)(B)(i)]. During the continuance, the child may also reach the age of 12 years and be able to raise the exception in Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B)(ii). Sibling visitation may also be continuing, which could affect a determination under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B)(v). At the continued hearing the juvenile court is required to proceed pursuant to paragraph (1) or (4) of subdivision (b) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(3)]. Those paragraphs specifically deal with implementing a permanent plan, not selecting one. The provisions for the selection of a permanent plan, including a permanent plan of adoption, however, are found in the next subdivision, which only allows termination based upon a finding by clear and convincing evidence the child is likely to be adopted, and that the adoption would not be detrimental pursuant to the statutory exceptions [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(b), (c)(1)]. This suggests that at the continued hearing the juvenile court should consider not only the evidence of adoptability, but also evidence on the question of whether one of the statutory exceptions to the termination of parental rights exists. Under this approach, none of the findings at the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing would be appealable until the continued hearing was held and a permanent plan actually selected. This view has its merits also, but creates the possibility the exceptions to adoption could be fully litigated at both hearings, a result the legislature is unlikely to have intended.

The best approach is a combination of the two. Under this approach the parties could not relitigate the question of whether one of the statutory exceptions to adoption applied at the time of the continued hearing in the absence of a Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 petition demonstrating prima facie evidence of a change in circumstances or new evidence that would make it in the child's best interest to apply one of the exceptions found in Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B), but none of the findings would be appealable until the continued hearing was actually concluded and a permanent plan selected [In re Cody C. (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 1297, 1301, 17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 928 ("Because the permanency hearing has not been concluded, there is nothing yet to appeal.")]. In this way the appealability of the findings and interim orders made at the initial and continued hearings under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 would be much like those at jurisdiction and disposition hearings, i.e., not appealable until the completion of the later hearing [In re Meranda P. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 1143, 1150, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 913 ; In re Sheila B. (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 187, 196, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 482] . Requiring the parent, sibling, or other party to file a petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 if it is alleged a change in circumstances supports a modification of the finding the termination of parental rights would not be detrimental to the child because the exceptions to adoption do not apply is not a denial of due process and does not inappropriately shift the burden to the parent, sibling, or other party, since that finding will already have been fully litigated and the focus has shifted to finding an adoptive home [see In re Marilyn H. (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 295, 307-310, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 544, 851 P.2d 826] . This approach avoids unnecessary relitigation of the exception issue and the need for multiple appeals. It also recognizes that if clear and convincing evidence the child is likely to be adopted is not presented at the continued hearing, the parent or child opposing adoption will have no need on appeal to challenge the sufficiency of the evidence on the exception issue, since adoption will not have been selected as the actual permanent plan. This approach is the better view.

Unfortunately, at this point in time it is not the prevailing view. In 2009 the California Supreme Court reviewed the conflict of decisions on this issue and held the findings under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(3), are immediately appealable [In re S.B. (2009) 46 Cal. 4th 529, 537, 94 Cal. Rptr. 3d 24, 207 P. 3d 525] . It disapproved the cases of In re Y.R. (2007) 152 Cal App. 4th 99, 60 Cal. Rptr. 3d 820 ; In re Cody C. (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 1297, 1301, 17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 928 ; and In re Jacob S. (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 1011, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 654 , to the extent they conflict with this conclusion [In re S.B. (2009) 46 Cal. 4th 529, 537 n.5, 94 Cal. Rptr. 3d 24, 207 P.3d 525] . How long the S.B. decision will remain dispositive of the issue is uncertain, for two reasons. First, it invited legislative action if the Legislature did not want the findings made pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(3), to be immediately appealable [In re S.B. (2009) 46 Cal. 4th 529, 537, 94 Cal. Rptr. 3d 24, 207 P.3d 525] . Second, effective July 1, 2010, the legislature has already amended Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(3), correcting the legislative oversight the Supreme Court found significant and making it clear that all possible permanent plans, including long-term foster care, are available at the continued hearing for the child who is difficult to place for adoption [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(3), eff. July 1, 2010 (Stats. 2009 [AB 1325], ch. 287 § 15)]. This is an area to be watched for further developments.

PRACTICE TIP:

Continue the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 Hearing. In light of the California Supreme Court's decision in the S.B. case, practitioners on all sides of the issue may wish to simply utilize Welf. & Inst. Code § 352 and request a continuance of the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing for a period of up to 180 days for the social services agency to continue to seek an adoptive placement. This avoids unnecessary appeals for all concerned. Further, unless the parent feels their relationship with the child will be weaker in six months, it avoids the need for parents to file a Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 petition at the continued hearing if they wish to show an exception to the termination of parental rights applies. To be consistent with the statutory scheme, juvenile courts should be receptive to such motions but only for a period of 180 days. If an adoptive home is not found in that time the court should go forward with the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing and select a lesser alternative permanent plan.

There may, of course, be other orders made at the initial Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing, such as interim visitation or placement orders. An immediate appeal of these orders may not be concluded by the time of the continued hearing and thus would be ineffective. Such orders are more effectively challenged by traditional writ petition, if the appellate court will determine the petition on its merits. Thus, if an objection to the interim orders is made, the better approach would be to view such orders as able to be raised from any appeal taken from the final orders at the continued Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing, but subject to an immediate writ petition.

[h] Finality of Termination of Parental Rights Order

[i] In General

Any order of the juvenile court permanently terminating parental rights is conclusive and binding on the child, the parent or parents, and all other persons who have been served with citation by publication or otherwise as provided by Welf. & Inst. Code § 200 et seq. After making such an order, the court generally has no power to set aside, change, or modify it [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(i); In re Jerred H. (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 793, 796-798, 17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 481 (juvenile court could not grant child's petition to reinstate parental rights or to declare the child's stepfather his presumed father, since the rights of all possible parents were terminated pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26); In re Rachel M. (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 1289, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 153 (writ of error coram vobis to overturn termination of parental rights order was not proper absent extrinsic fraud); In re Ronald V. (1993) 13 Cal. App. 4th 1803, 1806, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 334 (court has no jurisdiction to modify Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 termination order pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 for change of circumstances, because Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 removes jurisdiction from court to set aside, change, or modify the order); In re David H. (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 368, 380-385, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 313 (absent both extrinsic fraud and meritorious defense, juvenile court lacks authority to vacate termination of parental rights)]. However, the parties retain the right to appeal the order or to seek a rehearing if the matter was heard by a referee [In re Roderick U. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 1543, 1553, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 555 ; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.725(f)(2)]. The court must advise all parties of their appeal rights [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.725(i); see also Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.585].

PRACTICE TIP:

Consider Postadoption Contact Agreement Before Filing Notice of Appeal. After terminating parental rights and advising parties of their appeal rights the court usually makes the following order: "Counsel for the parents is relieved upon the filing of the notice of appeal or the expiration of the appeal period whichever occurs first." If the child is placed with a person who desires to adopt the child, the parent's attorney should discuss the possibility of a postadoption contact agreement [Fam. Code § 8616.5] with his or her client before filing a notice of appeal. This issue may have already been raised as part of concurrent permanency planning. In this way, if the birth parent desires to attempt to reach a postadoption contact agreement with the prospective adoptive parents, the birth parent's attorney can assist the birth parent with this effort prior to filing any notice of appeal or the expiration of the appeal period. Care must be taken, however, to ensure the time for filing the notice of appeal is not missed, since the appeal period runs from the date of the termination order. For a discussion of postadoption contact agreements see § 328.198[6].

[ii] Reinstating Parental Rights

Recognizing there will be situations in which a freed child's circumstances have changed and the child is no longer adoptable, leaving the child a "legal orphan," California has enacted a provision to allow children who have not been adopted after at least three years from the date parental rights were terminated to petition the juvenile court to reinstate parental rights [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(i)(2)]. A petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 shall be used for this purpose [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(i)(2)]. If the child and the social services agency stipulate the child is no longer likely to be adopted, the child may file the petition prior to the expiration of the three-year period [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(i)(2)]. If a hearing is set on the petition, notice must be given to the child's former parent. The court must grant the petition if it finds by clear and convincing evidence the child is no longer likely to be adopted and the reinstatement of parental rights is in the child's best interest [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(i)(2)]. This provision is intended to be retroactive regardless of the date parental rights were terminated [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(i)(2)].

The question arises whether the reinstatement of parental rights is an all or nothing issue. In other words, if the court reinstates the parental rights of one former parent, must it automatically reinstate the parental rights of the other former parent? The answer is no. Unlike termination of parental rights under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c), which requires the parental rights of all parents be terminated to free the child for adoption [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.725(a)(2)], a hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(i)(2), is triggered by the child filing a petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 and focuses on the freed child's best interest. As such, the court may find it is appropriate to reinstate the parental rights of one former parent, the other former parent, or both former parents, depending on the individual child's circumstances and best interest. Indeed, the child may only be asking for the reinstatement of one former parent's rights, and that may be best for the child, particularly where the other former parent seriously abused the child.

Must notice be given to both former parents regardless of whether the child is asking for reinstatement of both former parents' rights? The answer to that is unclear. An argument can be made that notice is only required to the former parent whose rights the child seeks to have reinstated. But notice must be given in the manner set forth in Welf. & Inst. Code § 294(f) for a recommendation of adoption, which implies notice must be given to all former parents whose rights were terminated pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c), even if the child is only asking parental rights be reinstated as to one former parent [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(i)(2)]. In any event, notice to all such former parents may be best practice, since if the child seeks to have one former parent's rights reinstated it may be in the child's best interests to notice both former parents and to provide them the opportunity to express their views.

If the child petitions for reinstatement of one former parent's rights may the court nevertheless reinstate both former parents' rights if the court finds it is in the child's best interest? Again, the answer is unclear. A strong argument can be made that if the child's Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 petition only seeks reinstatement of one former parent's rights, that is the only issue before the court and the court has no authority to reinstate both former parents' rights. Indeed, the freed child may have a very good reason for only wanting one former parent's rights reinstated, such as where the other former parent seriously abused the child. Nevertheless, the purpose of the enabling legislation was to empower juvenile courts to act in the child's best interest when the freed child's circumstances change such that the child is no longer adoptable, and to avoid leaving the freed child a "legal orphan" when that is not in the child's best interest [Stats. 2005, ch. 634, § 2 (AB 519)]. Once the freed child files the petition, the issue of what is best for the child and whether the child should remain a "legal orphan" is before the court. As such, the better position is that the juvenile court does have the inherent ability to reinstate both former parents' right even if the child only petitions for the rights of one former parent to be reinstated. It will be the rare case, however, in which the juvenile court should do so, since it will rarely be in the child's best interest to reinstate the rights of a former parent the child does not desire to be his or her parent. Regardless, the standing afforded the former parents at the hearing on the child's petition is very limited unless and until the court reinstates parental rights to one or both former parents. Thus, the former parents have no automatic right to the appointment of counsel or to a contested hearing on the question of whether one or both parental rights should be reinstated.

If parental rights are reinstated to one or both former parents, the court must then consider placement and a new permanent plan. This is a post-permanency planning situation and the presumption is still for continued out-of-home care [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.3(e)]. At this point, however, any former parent whose rights have been reinstated will once again have a right to request the appointment of counsel, and the right to seek placement or reunification services under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.3(e), if the parent or parents can prove it is in the child's best interest. If the court reinstates parental rights for one or both former parents of a child who is under the age of 12 years and the new permanent plan is not for reunification with a parent or legal guardian, the court must state the factual basis for its findings that it is in the child's best interest to reinstate parental rights [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26[i][2]]. Best practice is, of course, for the court to state its factual basis for the reinstatement of parental rights regardless of the age of or new permanent plan for the child.

[i] Visitation and Placement of Freed Child

[i] In General

If the court, by order or judgment declares the child free from the custody and control of both parents, or one parent if the other does not have custody and control, the court must at the same time order the child referred to the State Department of Social Services or a licensed adoption agency for adoptive placement by the agency. However, no petition for adoption may be granted until the appellate rights of the natural parents have been exhausted. With the consent of the agency, the court may appoint a guardian of the child, who must serve until the child is adopted [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(j)].

Once parental rights are terminated and the child referred for adoptive placement, the State Department of Social Services or licensed adoption agency is responsible for the custody and supervision of the child, and is normally entitled to the "exclusive care and control of the child at all times" until a petition for adopted is granted [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(j)]. Thus, once parental rights are terminated it is the social services agency that is normally responsible for making placement decisions for the child. The juvenile court can, however, review those decisions for abuse of discretion [In re Harry N. (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 1381-1382, 1397-1399, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 46 ; Los Angeles County Dep't of Children & Family Servs. v. Superior Court (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 1, 9-10, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 369 ; Department of Soc. Servs. v. Superior Court (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 721, 732-733, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 239] .

The transition, adoptive placement, and finalization process can be critical to the success of the child's stabilization and well-being in the adoptive home. For this reason, decisions regarding visitation for the child should also be made by the social services agency that is vested with exclusive care and control of the child, with the juvenile court limited to reviewing those decisions for abuse of discretion [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(j)]. Because usually the agency has been given exclusive care and control of the child, in most circumstances no petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 387 is needed for the agency to move the child from a relative placement to a prospective adoptive home after parental rights have been terminated [In re A.O. (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 1054, 1059-1061, 16 Cal. Rptr. 3d 117] .

Having given the exclusive care and control of a freed child to the adoption agency, the legislature has recognized that "only in exceptional circumstances" will the juvenile court intervene in placement decisions for a child after parental rights have been terminated [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.28(a)]. When the juvenile court is called upon to review the adoption agency's placement decision, however, delays caused by appeals from the court's decision can delay permanence for the child and thus cause substantial detriment. As a result, the legislature has made such decisions made on or after January 1, 2005, not appealable, but instead has directed a writ procedure be utilized much like that used for challenging the setting of a Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.28; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.454, 8.456]. This process does not affect the right of a parent, guardian, or the child to appeal the orders made at a Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing if those orders are otherwise appealable [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.28(c)].

For discussion of the writ process for review of juvenile court decisions designating specific placement of a dependent child after parental rights have been terminated, see § 328.195.

For discussion of adoptive placement decisions, and postadoption visitation agreements, including postadoptive sibling contact, see § 328.198.

[ii] Court Designated Prospective Adoptive Parents

Effective January 1, 2005, the juvenile court may designate a current caregiver as a prospective adoptive parent, which will then limit the exclusive care and control normally given the social services agency for a freed child, and allow the juvenile court to make best interest determinations regarding placement for the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(n)]. This is a significant first step by those who oppose the social services agency having exclusive authority for placement decisions subject only to review by the juvenile court for abuse of discretion. The rules of court addressing this process are at Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 5.726 et seq.

For the court to designate a current caregiver as the child's prospective adoptive parent, the child must have lived with the caregiver for at least six months, the caregiver must express a current commitment to adopt the child, and the caregiver must have taken at least one step to facilitate the adoption process [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(n)(1)].

Although the statute does not expressly require the court to make a finding the caregiver actually is sincerely committed to adopting the child, a requirement for such a finding should be inferred. It should also be inferred that this status will not be granted if there is a legal impediment to adoption. The decision to designate the current caregiver as a prospective adoptive parent is one committed to the discretion of the court.

Steps to facilitate the adoption process include, but are not limited to [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(n)(2)]:

- Applying for an adoption homestudy. This would appear to mean turning in the actual written adoption homestudy application.

- Cooperating with an adoption homestudy. This would appear to mean working with the social worker in a cooperative fashion to facilitate the timely completion of the adoption homestudy after the written application is submitted to the adoption agency.

- Being designated by the court or the licensed adoption agency as the adoptive family. This step will need further clarification.

- Requesting de facto parent status. Because only the court can grant de facto parent status, this would appear to mean the filing of the written application for de facto parent status with the court, regardless of whether that application has yet been granted. If de facto parent status was requested but denied, this step would not apply.

- Signing an adoptive placement agreement. This step is self-explanatory.

- Engaging in discussions regarding a postadoption contact agreement. This step will need further clarification, but the better view is this will require the discussions be relatively recent and be part of the overall permanency planning process, not merely a brief mention of possible postadoption contact and being in agreement with providing that contact.

- Working to overcome any impediments to adoption that have been identified by the adoption agency. Again, this will need further clarification.

If the juvenile court designates the current caregiver as the prospective adoptive parent, before the agency can change the child's placement the agency must give notice to the court, the designated prospective parent, the child's attorney, and the child, if the child is 10 years of age or older [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 366.26(n)(3), 16010.6]. The agency must also notify the current caregiver, "if that caretaker would have met the threshold criteria to be designated as a prospective adoptive parent" pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(n)(1) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(n)(3)]. This latter requirement is unclear and likely to result in extensive litigation. If it means the agency must notice any current caregiver who has had the child for at least six months and made any mention of wanting to adopt the child, the requirement will be onerous and agencies will have err on the side of caution and notice any caregiver who even comes close to qualifying for designating as a prospective adoptive parent. The better and more practical view, however, is that such notice should only be required if the current caregiver has had the child for at least six months, clearly and recently expressed to the social worker a desire to adopt the child, and has clearly taken at least one of the steps listed in Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(n)(2).

Following notice, the child, the child's attorney, or the designated prospective adoptive parent has five court days or seven calendar days, whichever is longer, in which to file a petition with the court objecting to the proposal to move the child. In response to such a petition, or on its own motion within the same time, the court may set a hearing regarding the proposal [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(n)(3)(A)]. For good cause the court may extend the filing period [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(n)(3)(A)]. Further, the current caregiver who would have met the threshold criteria for designation as a prospective adoptive parent may file a petition objecting to the proposed move and a petition for designation as the prospective adoptive parent [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(n)(3)(A)].

The hearing process is one in which the court determines whether the proposed move is in the child's best interest. If the current caregiver has requested designation as a prospective adoptive parent, the court should decide that issue first, since it will affect the standing the caregiver has to object to any move. The fact the caregiver is designated a prospective adoptive parent does not make the caregiver a party to the action or confer standing to object to any other action by the social services agency [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(n)(3)(B)-(C)].

If no petition is filed objecting to the move and the court does not set the matter for a hearing on its own motion, the child may be moved without a hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(n)(3)(D)].

The child may also be moved without a hearing if the agency determines the child must be removed due to a risk of physical or emotional harm, however, notice must be given as soon thereafter as possible and not longer than two court days after the child is removed [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(n)(4)].

While the legislative history suggests these new provisions are not likely to cause extensive litigation, the reality of the dependency system strongly suggests otherwise. This new legislation can be expected to result in an increase in requests for de facto parent status, cases in which notice is an issue, many cases in which courts will be asked to designate current caregivers as prospective adoptive parents, many cases in which courts will have to decide whether to allow a child to be removed from a designated prospective adoptive parent, and many contested hearings and appeals on all of these issues. Numerous published appellate decisions will be needed to provide the guidance the dependency system will need in implementing this new legislation. This is an area to be watched for further developments.

[6] Decision Process for Non-Relative Guardianship or Another Planned Permanent Living Arrangement as the Alternative Permanent Plan

[a] In General

If the court finds it has not been proven the child is likely to be adopted if parental rights are terminated or that one of the conditions in Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B) applies, the court must either order that the present caretakers or other appropriate persons become legal guardians of the child or order that the child remain in another planned permanent living arrangement, such as permanent placement with a foster or relative caregiver committed to caring for the child on a permanent basis. Legal guardianship must be considered before another planned permanent living arrangement, if it is in the best interests of the child and if a suitable guardian can be found.

PRACTICE TIP:

Another Planned Permanent Living Arrangement. California statutes still often speak of the third alternative permanent plan for children as long-term foster care [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(4) (long-term foster care); but see Welf. & Inst. Code § 366(a)(2) (another planned permanent living arrangement)]. Federal law no longer considers long-term foster care an appropriate permanent plan, since it is not a permanent living situation for a child [Renne, Reasonable Efforts to Finalize A Permanency Plan for "Another Planned Permanent Living Arrangement", 21(3) ABA Child Law Prac. 33 (May 2002)]. Instead, it speaks of "another planned permanent living arrangement," emphasizing the goal of permanency planning when reunification, adoption, or legal guardianship are not appropriate or available should still be to find the child a home committed to permanency [42 U.S.C. § 675(5)(C)]. Thus, if a child cannot be returned home and neither adoption nor legal guardianship is available or appropriate under the law, the remaining alternative permanent plan should be for another planned permanent living arrangement with a foster or relative caregiver committed to caring for the child on a permanent basis. While some of California's statutes speak of another planned permanent living > arrangement, the California dependency system is still becoming familiar with this new language and how to achieve it. One case has held that long-term foster care is still a permanent plan that can be chosen, although it is not preferred and efforts to achieve another planned permanent living arrangement should continue [In re Stuart S. (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 203, 207-209, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 856] . At the least, the phrase "another planned permanent living arrangement" reminds us that all children need stability and permanency, even those in long-term foster care. We should all be working toward that end in cases in which neither return home, nor adoption or legal guardianship are appropriate.

If the child is living with a relative or a foster parent who is willing and capable of providing a stable and permanent environment, but not willing to become a legal guardian, the child must not be removed from the home if the court finds that removal would be seriously detrimental to the emotional well-being of the child because the child has substantial psychological ties to the relative caretaker or foster parents [Welf & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(4)(B)]. When the court has placed a child in another planned permanent living arrangement with a relative pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26, the court may authorize the relative to provide the same legal consent for the child's medical, surgical, and dental care, and education as the custodial parent of the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.27(a)]. It may also limit the right of the parent or guardian to make educational decisions for the child so the caregiver may exercise the educational consent duties found in Educ. Code § 56055 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.27(b)].

[b] Guardianship Pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26

A proceeding for the appointment of a guardian for a child who is a dependent of the juvenile court must be in the juvenile court. Neither a separate guardianship petition nor a separate guardianship hearing is required. Instead, the appointment of a guardian is done at the selection and implementation hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(d)]. If the court finds that legal guardianship is the appropriate permanent plan, it must appoint the legal guardian and issue letters of guardianship. The assessment prepared for the selection and implementation hearing must be read and considered by the court prior to the appointment and its consideration noted in the minutes of the court. The person preparing the assessment may be called and examined by any party to the proceeding [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(d)].

There was a split of authority on the issue of visitation orders made in conjunction with a legal guardianship pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26. In the case of In re Jasmine P. (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 617, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 562 , the appellate court held a visitation order was not required when the juvenile court made an order for legal guardianship. The appellate court construed Welf. & Inst. Code former § 366.26(c)(4) narrowly, and held a visitation order was only required when the court ordered long-term foster care, not when the court ordered legal guardianship [In re Jasmine P. (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 617, 621, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 562] . The appellate court in the case of In re Randalynne G. (2002) 97 Cal. App. 4th 1156, 118 Cal. Rptr. 2d 880 disagreed. It held that a visitation order for parents was required when guardianship was ordered, unless the court found visitation would be detrimental to the child [In re Randalynne G. (2002) 97 Cal. App. 4th 1156, 1163, fn. 7, 118 Cal. Rptr. 2d 880] . The Randalynne G. holding was the better analysis and more practical approach. Still, there was a conflict of decisions. The requirement for visitation orders in conjunction with guardianship orders was reviewed by the California Supreme Court in the case of In re S.B. (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 1287, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 786, 90 P.3d 746 . By the time the Supreme Court reached its decision, however, the statute had been inadvertently changed through a drafting error and was clear that a visitation order was only mandated when long term foster care was ordered, not when legal guardianship was ordered [In re S.B. (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 1287, 1295-1296, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 786, 90 P.3d 746] . Effective January 1, 2005, however, the statute was changed once again to rectify the drafting error and clarify that an order for visitation for the parent or guardian must be made whenever the court orders a permanent plan of guardianship or long term foster care unless the court finds by a preponderance of the evidence that visitation would be detrimental to the child's physical or emotional well-being [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(4)(C); see also In re S.B. (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 1287, 1296, fn. 3, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 786, 90 P.3d 746] . Thus, courts must ensure that if a visitation order is requested for a parent in conjunction with a legal guardianship, that an order is made that determines whether there should be such visitation, or whether visitation would be detrimental to the child [In re M.R. (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 269, 273-274, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 629] . The determination of whether the parents should have visitation or whether such visitation would be detrimental to the child is a decision well suited for judicial determination. If there is no request, the issue is, of course, waived [In re Dakota S. (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 494, 501-502, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 196] .

If a parental visitation order is made in conjunction with an order for legal guardianship, the question then becomes how much discretion may be given to the guardian to control the frequency, time, place, length, and manner of such visitation. Again, on this issue there are differing opinions and authorities. The best view takes into account several factors. First, when a legal guardianship is ordered the case is no longer in reunification and the mandate for frequent parental visitation to facilitate reunification no longer applies [Welf. & Inst. Code § 362.1]. Instead, the focus is on achieving and maintaining stability for the child [In re Marilyn H. (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 295, 309, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 544, 851 P.2d 826] . In this respect, guardians are normally viewed as having a level of control for the child's life and well-being similar to that of a natural parent [Prob. Code § 2108(a)]. Second, guardians must have a significant degree of flexibility and authority in their care, custody, and control of the child. While not limited to older children, most guardianships in dependency cases are ordered for children who are at or reaching the age at which school, extracurricular activities, and childhood friends take on great significance and require increased time. Even custodial and noncustodial parents of children who have not been through the dependency system often see their children less during these years of transition from childhood to young adulthood. Children who are the subject of a guardianship are no different, so flexibility is needed. Finally, if the guardian and the parent get along and work well together, it is to everyone's benefit to give them the maximum degree of flexibility to work together in maintaining contact between the parent and child. In such cases, an order for "reasonable visitation as directed by the guardian in the child's best interest" may be sufficient. If the guardian and the parent do not get along, however, some guidelines and specificity as to the minimum visitation to be afforded the parent and the terms and conditions of that visitation are necessary. In those cases, the court may need to make an order such as "unsupervised visitation is to occur at least once per month for a minimum of four hours, with additional contact and visitation, if requested by either the child or the parent, and the time, length, and manner of such visitation and contact being at the discretion of the guardian consistent with the best interest of the child." Until further guidance is received from the appellate courts or the legislature, juvenile courts would be wise to ensure all of the above factors are considered in defining the terms and conditions of a guardianship visitation order, that the record reflects the reasons for the terms and conditions of the order, and that the order is clearly stated in the letters of guardianship.

The guardianship provisions of the Probate Code (Prob. Code § 1500 et seq.) do not apply to guardianships established in juvenile court. If no specific provision of the Welfare and Institutions Code or the California Rules of Court is applicable, however, the provisions of the Probate Code governing administration of guardianship and conservatorship estates (Prob. Code § 2100 et seq.) govern so far as they are applicable to like situations [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.4; see Prob. Code § 1517].

In the case of relatives appointed legal guardians pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26, such relatives are to be eligible for aid under the kinship guardianship assistance payment (Kin-GAP) program as provided for in Welf. & Inst. Code § 11360 et seq. [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 366.21(j), 366.22(c)]. For purposes of this assistance program, the term "relative" is defined in the same way as set forth in Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 319, 361.3 [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 366.21(k), 366.22(d)].

[c] Long-Term Foster Care With Foster Family Agency

If the court finds that the child should not be placed for adoption, that legal guardianship will not be established, and that there are no suitable foster parents except exclusive-use homes available to provide the child with a stable and permanent environment, the court may order the care, custody, and control of the child transferred from the county welfare department or probation department to a licensed foster family agency. The court must consider the written recommendation of the county welfare director or chief probation officer regarding the suitability of such a transfer. The transfer will be subject to further court orders [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(5)].

The licensed foster family agency must place the child in a suitable licensed or exclusive-use home that has been certified by the agency as meeting licensing standards. The licensed foster family agency must be responsible for supporting the child and for providing appropriate services to the child, including those services ordered by the court. Responsibility for the support of the child will not, in and of itself, create liability on the part of the foster family agency to third persons injured by the child. Those children whose care, custody, and control are transferred to a foster family agency will not be eligible for foster care maintenance payments or child welfare services, except for emergency response services pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 16504 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(5)].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
J. Permanency Planning Procedures

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.172

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.172 Retention of Jurisdiction After Permanency Plan

If a juvenile court orders a permanent plan of adoption or legal guardianship pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26, the court must retain jurisdiction over the child until the child is adopted or the legal guardianship established [In re Rosalinda C. (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 273, 279, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 58 (reversing dismissal of dependency case as premature; juvenile court has continuing responsibility to account for welfare of dependent child until permanent and stable home established)]. The status of the child must be reviewed every six months to ensure that the adoption or guardianship is completed as expeditiously as possible. At the review hearing, the court must consider the report of the petitioner and the report of any court-appointed child advocate. Notice of the hearing must be given as required by Welf. & Inst. Code § 295.

Dependency jurisdiction is usually terminated once a guardianship is established by the juvenile court for a dependent child [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.735(d)(3)]. In this way, the court continues to maintain jurisdiction over the guardianship without requiring ongoing review hearings. Instead, the matter only comes back before the court if there is a problem with some aspect of the guardianship orders, someone desires to terminate the guardianship, or if a more permanent plan for the child is sought [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.3].

If guardianship is ordered for an adoptable child for whom parental rights were not terminated because of an exception to the termination of parental rights as set forth in Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B)(i) or (v), the juvenile court should consider whether dependency jurisdiction should be maintained despite the appointment of a legal guardian so the court can ensure the child has continued contact with the parent or sibling whose relationship with the child caused the exception to apply. The court must consider the need, if any, for ongoing dependency supervision, as well as the legislative mandate to provide the child with stability and permanence. Whether dependency jurisdiction should be maintained in such circumstances must be determined on a case-by-case basis.

In the past some counties routinely ordered guardianships without dependency jurisdiction being terminated, especially when the guardian was a relative. Thus, counties established practices regarding the termination of dependency jurisdiction following the appointment of a guardian that differed markedly from county to county.

PRACTICE TIP:

Know the Practice of the Court. It is important that all parties to a potential guardianship be aware of the practice of the juvenile court regarding maintaining or terminating dependency jurisdiction after the appointment of a guardian. This may be especially important in cases where dependency jurisdiction may be transferred to another county, since the policy of the receiving county may be different than that of the sending county and may result in dependency jurisdiction being terminated notwithstanding the policy of the original court for the maintenance of dependency jurisdiction. Thus, such information needs to be considered in making the decision for legal guardianship and in making any subsequent decision for transfer of dependency jurisdiction if such jurisdiction was maintained.

Effective January 1, 1999, the statute was changed to provide that if a relative has been appointed as guardian for the child and the child has been in that home for over 12 months, the court must terminate dependency jurisdiction absent a finding of exceptional circumstances [former Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.3(a)]. This was designed to help eliminate the many cases in which a relative guardian has been appointed, but dependency was maintained in certain counties. The difficulty had been that once dependency jurisdiction was terminated a relative caretaker who had accepted guardianship had not previously been eligible for the same benefits as an unrelated caretaker who had accepted guardianship. In most counties, relative caretakers were advised of this change in benefits and considered that change in making their decision to be appointed as legal guardians. In a few counties, however, courts developed the practice of continuing dependency jurisdiction notwithstanding the appointment of a relative guardian so as to ensure continued financial benefits for the guardian. This practice contributed to court congestion and negated many of the benefits of legal guardianship. Recognizing these problems, the National Center for State Courts recommended the Judicial Council take steps through its Juvenile Law Subcommittee to identify and where possible correct such financial disincentives to permanency planning [National Ctr. for State Cts., California Court Improvement Project Report (Apr. 1997) pp. 47-49]. Effective January 1, 2000, a kinship guardianship assistance payment (Kin-GAP) program was enacted to help remedy this situation [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 366.21(j), 366.22(c), 11360 et seq.]. Nevertheless, effective January 1, 2001, the statute was again amended. Now the relative guardian may object to the termination of jurisdiction, in which case the court is not required to terminate dependency jurisdiction [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.3(a)]. Maintaining dependency jurisdiction after ordering a legal guardianship defeats much of the purpose of ordering the guardianship in the first place, however. Thus, in most cases, if a guardianship is ordered as the permanent plan for the child, dependency jurisdiction will be terminated. The juvenile court will continued to have jurisdiction over the guardianship if a modification of the guardianship orders becomes necessary [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.4].

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329

CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
J. Permanency Planning Procedures

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.173

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.173 Permanency Planning for Children Adjudged Dependents Prior to January 1, 1989

When Senate Bill 243 [Stats. 1987, ch. 1485] was enacted it created two separate systems for permanency planning in dependency cases. For those children declared dependents of the juvenile court before January 1, 1989, the prior system remained in effect. This meant the selection of a permanent plan was done under former Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.25 and that termination of parental rights was done under a separate action filed pursuant to former Civil Code § 232 (now see Fam. Code § 7800 et seq.). For children declared dependents on or after January 1, 1989, permanency planning was accomplished in a new way. Under the procedures set forth in Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 the permanent plan would be both selected and implemented as part of the dependency process. No separate termination of parental rights action was required or permitted for such dependent children. This new system for the termination of parental rights was upheld by the California Supreme Court in the case of Cynthia D. v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 242, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 698, 851 P.2d 1307 .

Effective January 1, 1999, former Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.25 was repealed [Stats. 1998, ch. 1054, sec. 35]. Now permanency planning for all children is done through Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 [Stats. 1998, ch. 1054, sec. 36]. This is a positive step forward to ease the cumbersome process of permanency planning for those children who were declared dependents prior to January 1, 1989, and are still in the dependency system.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
J. Permanency Planning Procedures

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated §§ 328.174-328.179

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

[Reserved]

§§ 328.174[Reserved]

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
K. Post-Permanency Planning Procedures

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.180

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.180 Periodic Review Process

[1] In General

Regardless of whether a child's permanent plan was ordered at a permanency planning hearing pursuant to former Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.25 or a selection and implementation hearing pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26, so long as the child remains a dependent of the juvenile court the child's case shall be reviewed every six months following the procedures set forth in Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 366.3, 16503 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366(b)].

Unless their parental rights have been permanently terminated, the parent or parents of the child are entitled to receive notice of, and participate in, those hearings. Notice of the hearing must be given as required by Welf. & Inst. Code § 295 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 295].

The need for limiting a parent's right to make educational decisions, to appoint a responsible adult for educational decisions, or for the court to make educational decisions for the child should to be considered at any review hearing, including post-permanency planning review hearings for children in long term foster care [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361(a), 366(a)(1)(C), 366.3(e)(5)]. Educational advocacy on behalf of dependent children is not limited to the activities of a responsible adult or surrogate parent for the making of educational decisions for the child. Counsel for children, CASAs, social workers, and other child advocates, as well as the juvenile court, must take an active role in educational advocacy for dependent children [see, e.g., Espana & Fried, The Expanding Role of the Juvenile Court in Determining Educational Outcomes for Foster Children, 5 J. Center Children & Cts. 83 (2004); NCJFCJ, Asking The Right Questions: A Judicial Checklist to Ensure That the Educational Needs of Children and Youth in Foster Care Are Being Addressed (NCJFCJ 2005)].

Where the child has been placed out-of-state, the court must consider whether the out-of-state placement continues to be the most appropriate placement for the child and continues to be in the child's best interest [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366(c)].

For discussion of the requirement to address the educational needs of the child, including limiting the parents' right to make educational decisions and the appointment of a responsible adult to make such decisions, see § 328.62[6].

For discussion of placements in out-of-state group homes, see § 328.128[5].

[2] Review Where Plan Is Adoption or Guardianship

If the permanent plan selected was one of adoption or legal guardianship pursuant to either Welf. & Inst. Code § 360 or Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26, the juvenile court must retain jurisdiction until the guardianship is established or the adoption is finalized [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.3(a)]. If the court has ordered parental rights terminated and the child placed for adoption, the post-permanency planning review hearings must be held by the court at least every six months. If the court has not ordered parental rights terminated and has not ordered the child placed for adoption, the review may be heard by either the court or an appropriate local agency [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.3(d)]. For the review of a child for whom the court has ordered parental rights terminated and that the child be placed for adoption, the social services agency must prepare a report regarding the child's placement and status. The report must also detail the progress made toward adoption, including whether the child has been placed in an adoptive home, whether adoptive placement papers have been signed, whether the actual adoption order should include postadoptive sibling contact provisions pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.29, any impediments to adoption, and any recommended orders the court could make that will assist in the child being placed for adoption or adoption being finalized. The court must determine whether reasonable efforts have been made to "make and finalize" a permanent placement for the child. The court must make any appropriate orders to "protect the stability of the child and to facilitate and expedite the permanent placement and adoption of the child" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.3(f)].

At the review hearings, the court shall review the status of the child to ensure that the adoption or guardianship is completed as expeditiously as possible. When the child is adopted the court shall terminate its jurisdiction over the child. When legal guardianship is granted the court will normally terminate its dependency jurisdiction and retain jurisdiction over the guardianship pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.4. The court may, however, continue its dependency jurisdiction after the granting of the legal guardianship. If the guardian is a relative who has had the child in his or her care for at least 12 months, however, the court may only continue dependency jurisdiction following appointment of the relative guardian if it finds exceptional circumstances require it to do so or if the relative guardian objects to the termination of dependency jurisdiction [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.3(a)]. For a discussion of the question of terminating or continuing dependency jurisdiction following the appointment of a legal guardian, see § 328.172.

[3] Review Where Plan Is Another Planned Permanent Living Arrangement

If the permanent plan selected was that of another planned permanent living arrangement or long-term foster or relative care, the reviews which are held every six months may be conducted by the court or an appropriate local agency. The court must conduct the review on the request of the child's parents or guardian or of the child and must conduct the review 12 months after the hearing at which the permanent plan of long-term foster or relative care was ordered and every 12 months thereafter [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.3(d), (g)].

Each licensed foster family agency must submit reports for each child in its care, custody, and control to the court concerning the continuing appropriateness and extent of compliance with the child's permanent plan, the extent of compliance with the case plan, and the type and adequacy of services provided to the child. At the review hearing, the court must consider the report of the petitioner and the report of any court-appointed child advocate [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.3(e)].

The reviewing body must inquire about the progress being made to provide a permanent home for the child and must determine the appropriateness of the placement, efforts made to determine and facilitate relationships with individuals important to the child if the child is 10 years of age or older and has been placed in out of home care for six months or longer from the date the child entered foster care, the continuing appropriateness and extent of compliance with the permanent plan for the child, the extent of the social services agency's compliance with the case plan in providing the child with a permanent home the adequacy of services provided to the child, the extent of any progress the parents may have made toward reresolving or mitigating the reasons that necessitated placement of the child in foster care, and the likely date by which the child may be returned to and safely maintained in parental custody, placed for adoption or legal guardianship, or placed in some other permanent living arrangement. The reviewing body must determine whether reasonable efforts have been made to make and finalize a permanent placement for the child. The review must also include a determination of the services needed to assist a child who is 16 years old or older in making the transition from foster care to independent living [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 366.3(e), 391]. Further, it must make determinations regarding sibling relationships [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.3(e)(7); see discussion in § 328.129[6], regarding sibling placement and visitation issues].

Once the court makes the findings and orders that returning a child to his or her parents would create a substantial risk of detriment to the child, terminating reunification services, and selecting a permanent plan other than return to parent, the court is not required to continue to make such findings at each subsequent review [In re Heather P. (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 886, 890, 257 Cal. Rptr. 545 ; In re Elizabeth G. (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 1327, 1332, 253 Cal. Rptr. 161] . Instead, it is presumed that continued out-of-home care is in the interests of the child, unless the parent or parents prove, by a preponderance of the evidence, that further efforts at reunification are the best alternative for the child. In those cases, the court may order that further reunification services to return the child to a safe environment be provided to the parent or parents for a period not to exceed six months [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.3(e); Nahid H. v. Superior Court (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 1051, 1071, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 281] .

In the past, the proper means to challenge an order for out-of-home placement of the child after reunification services have been terminated has been through a petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388. Thus, where a parent sought return of a child in long-term foster or relative care, the parent would petition the court to modify the order on the ground that there was a change of circumstances or new evidence justifying return and that the change in order is in the child's best interest. If the court determined the best interests of the child might be promoted by the change, it would order a hearing on the matter [see In re Heather P. (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 886, 891, 257 Cal. Rptr. 545] . This is still the procedure that must be followed in most situations. The law now requires, however, that at each review for a child in long-term foster care, the court consider all permanency planning options "including whether the child should be returned to the home of the parent" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.3(g)]. The court must also determine the likely date by which the child "may be returned to and safely maintained in the home," placed for adoption or legal guardianship, or placed in some other permanent living arraignment [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.3(e)]. These provisions mean that at a post-permanency planning review hearing for a child in long-term foster care the court should consider a parent's argument that further services should be offered or provided or that the child should be returned without the need for a petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388. It does not mean, however, that the parent is automatically entitled to a contested hearing on the issue. Instead, if the parent makes an offer of proof as to what evidence the parent would present at the contested hearing, the court should consider that offer of proof and exercise its discretion as to whether the offer of proof is sufficient to justify setting a contested hearing on the matter so as to ensure the child's best interests are served [Maricela C. v. Superior Court (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 1138, 1147, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 488] .

[4] Changing the Permanent Plan

If circumstances have changed since the permanent plan was ordered, the court may order a new permanent plan under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 at any regularly scheduled subsequent review hearing, or any party may seek at any other time a new permanent plan by means of an application for a modification of the court's previous order [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.3(c), (g), (h); San Diego County Dep't of Soc. Servs. v. Superior Court (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 882, 887-892,

55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 396, 919 P.2d 1329 ; In re John F. (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 1365, 1375, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 225] .

The Legislature's intent that children not languish in long-term foster care if the possibility of a more permanent placement exists has now been made very clear through the provisions of Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.3(d)-(h), which require the juvenile court or other reviewing body to consider all permanency planning options, including return to the parent, at each review hearing for children in long-term foster care [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.3(g)]. At such hearings, the court must order a hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 to consider selecting a more permanent plan unless it is clear there is a compelling reason to determine a hearing under that section is not best for the child because the child is being returned to the home of a parent, or is not a proper subject for adoption and no one is willing to accept legal guardianship of the child. If the court determines it is unlikely the child will be adopted or that one of the conditions set forth in Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(A)-(E) exists, that determination shall constitute a compelling reason not to set a hearing pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.3(g)]. The court should be careful, however, to ensure it has sufficient information on which to base such a determination. Review reports, particularly post-permanency planning review reports, frequently lack sufficient information to allow the court to make such findings. It is for this reason that "cutting out" to another planned permanent living arrangement, such as permanent placement with a foster or relative caregiver committed to caring for the child on a permanent basis at a 12-month permanency hearing or an 18-month permanency review hearing is the exception rather than the rule. Even in a post-permanency planning setting, the court, children's counsel, and any court-appointed special advocate should ensure sufficient information is presented to the court to justify making a finding that there is such a compelling reason not to order a Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing. Only if the court makes that determination may it order the child remain in another planned permanent living arrangement, such as permanent placement with a foster or relative caregiver committed to caring for the child on a permanent basis, without ordering a selection and implementation hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.3(g)].

For discussion of "cutting out" to another planned permanent living arrangement, such as permanent placement with a foster or relative caregiver committed to caring for the child on a permanent basis, at a 12-month permanency hearing, see § 328.153[3].

The juvenile court also has the authority to consider the appropriateness of changing a permanent plan of guardianship to one of adoption, even where dependency jurisdiction has been terminated with the establishment of a dependency guardianship. Where the social services agency becomes aware of changed circumstances following the establishment of a dependency guardianship which indicate adoption may be an appropriate plan for the child, the agency shall notify the juvenile court of that information. The court may vacate its previous order terminating dependency jurisdiction and set the matter for a selection and implementation hearing at which it will determine whether adoption or continued guardianship is the appropriate permanent plan [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.3(c); In re Heraclio A. (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 569, 574-576, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 713] .

For a general discussion of applications for modification, see § 328.140 et seq.

[5] Terminating Jurisdiction When Child Reaches Age of Majority

The juvenile court may, in an appropriate case, maintain dependency over a child who has reached the age of majority, but not yet reached the age of 21 years [Welf. & Inst. Code § 303]. In most instances, however, the court will terminate its jurisdiction when the child reaches the age of 18 [see, e.g., In re Holly H. (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 1324, 1330, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 907 , citing Seiser & Kumli, California Juvenile Courts Practice and Procedure § 2.31 (Matthew Bender); In re Robert L. (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 789, 793-797, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 578 (maintaining dependency jurisdiction to assist children with expense of college reversed as abuse of discretion)]. If the child has reached the age of majority, the child must be present at any hearing to terminate dependency jurisdiction, unless the child does not wish to attend the hearing or the child is unavailable to attend the hearing and the social services agency has documented efforts to locate the child [Welf. & Inst Code § 391(a)(1)]. At the hearing the agency must submit a report verifying the following information, documents, and services have been provided to the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 391(a)(2)]:

- Written information regarding child's dependency case including the child's Indian heritage or tribal connections, if applicable, the child's family history and placement history, any photographs of the child or his or her family that are in the possession of the social services agency, other than forensic photographs, the whereabouts of any siblings under the court's jurisdiction unless the court determines sibling contact would jeopardize the safety of the sibling, instructions on how to access the child's documents under Welf. & Inst. Code § 827, and the date on which dependency jurisdiction is to be terminated.

- The child's social security card, certified birth certificate, health and education summary as described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 16010(a), identification card as described in Veh. Code § 13000, death certificate of deceased parent or parents, proof of citizenship or residence, and a letter prepared by the social services agency that includes the child's name and date of birth, the dates during which the child was within the juvenile court's jurisdiction, and a statement that the child was a foster child in compliance with the state and federal financial aid documentation requirements.

- Assistance in obtaining health insurance or completing an application for Medi-Cal, referral transitional housing, if available, or assistance in obtaining other housing, and assistance in finding employment or other financial support.

- Assistance in applying for admission to college or to another education institution, including a vocational training program, and in obtaining financial aid, where appropriate.

- Assistance in maintaining relationships with individuals who are important to the child if the child had been placed in a group home for six months or longer from the date the child entered foster care, based on the child's best interests.

The social services agency must also file Judicial Council form JV-365 (Termination of Dependency Jurisdiction, Child Attaining Age of Majority), which provides check boxes for each of these items. The form must be filed with the juvenile court at least 10 calendar days before the hearing to terminate dependency jurisdiction. Copies of the form must be provided to all counsel of record, the child, the parents or guardians, and any court-appointed special advocate at least 10 calendar days before the hearing [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.740(d)].

The burden of proof is with the agency when it is seeking to terminate dependency jurisdiction for a dependent child who has turned 18 years of age. The agency cannot contend dependency jurisdiction must be terminated unless it is an unusual case. Instead, it must show termination of dependency jurisdiction is in the child's best interest [In re Tamika C. (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 1153, 1160-1161, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 597] .

If a dependent child has turned 18, however, and will not cooperate with the court or social services in facilitating the assistance and information mandated by Welf. & Inst. Code § 391, the court can terminate dependency jurisdiction. As noted by one court, when a child turns 18, the youth is no longer a child, but an adult, and the court "may not, and should not, force her to accept its services" [In re Holly H. (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 1324, 1337, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 907] .

If the social services agency has not met the requirements of Welf. & Inst. Code § 391(b) and the court finds termination of jurisdiction would be harmful to the best interests of the child, the court may continue dependency jurisdiction. The continuance of dependency jurisdiction for this reason shall only be for that period of time necessary for the agency to meet these requirements. If the social services agency has offered the required services and the child has either refused them or cannot be located despite reasonable efforts by the agency to locate him or her, the court may terminate jurisdiction. Nothing in Welf. & Inst. Code § 391 shall be construed to limit the discretion of the juvenile court to maintain dependency jurisdiction for other reasons [Welf. & Inst. Code § 391(c)].

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
K. Post-Permanency Planning Procedures

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.181

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.181 Setting Aside or Modifying Legal Guardianships

Notwithstanding Prob. Code § 1601, a petition to terminate a dependency guardianship, to appoint a successor guardian, or to modify or supplement orders relating to a guardianship established by the juvenile court must be filed in the juvenile court that retains jurisdiction over the guardianship or the juvenile court in the county in which the child and guardian reside, whichever is in the child's best interest, unless the guardianship is being terminated because of emancipation or adoption of the child [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.3(b)]. If dependency was terminated at the time of or subsequent to the appointment of the guardian, and dependency is later declared in another county, proceedings to terminate the guardianship may be held in the juvenile court with current dependency jurisdiction [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.740(c)].

Not less than 15 court days before the date of a hearing to terminate the guardianship, the petitioner must serve notice of the hearing on the social services department, the guardian, the child, if 10 years or older, the parents whose parental rights have not been terminated, the court that established the guardianship, if in another county, and counsel of record for those entitled to notice [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.740(c)(2)]. Before hearing the petition, the court must order the social services agency that has jurisdiction or jointly with the social services agency in the county where the child and guardian currently reside to prepare a report. That report must include an evaluation of whether the child could safely remain in the guardian's home with the provision of services without terminating the guardianship. The report must also identify recommended services and a plan for accomplishing this, if applicable [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.3(b)].

At the hearing on the petition to terminate the guardianship, the court may do one of the following [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.740(c)(3)]:

- Deny the petition.

- Deny the petition and request the social services department to provide services to the guardian and the ward for the purpose of maintaining the guardianship, consistent with Welf. & Inst. Code § 301 (informal supervision by social worker) [see discussion in § 328.155].

- Grant the petition.

The burden of proof for a parent seeking to establish a change of circumstances that make termination of a dependency guardianship and return to the parent in the child's best interest is a preponderance of the evidence [In re Michael D. (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 1074, 1086-1087, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 575] . If the social services agency is seeking to terminate a guardianship in the juvenile court, it must establish by clear and convincing evidence that termination of the legal guardianship is best for the child [In re Merrick V. (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 235, 254, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 490 (terminating probate guardianship); In re Alicia O. (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 176, 183, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 119 (terminating dependency guardianship)].

If the petition is granted and the court continues or resumes dependency, the court must order that a new plan be developed to provide stability and permanency to the child. The court must conduct a hearing to review the child's status within 60 days. Parents whose parental rights have not been terminated must be notified of the hearing on the new plan [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.740(c)(4); see Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.3(b)]. The court may consider further efforts at reunification only if the parents prove, by a preponderance of the evidence, that reunification is the best alternative for the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.3(b); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.740(c)(4)].

If the court terminates a guardianship established in another county, the clerk of the county of current dependency jurisdiction must transmit a certified copy of the order terminating guardianship within 15 days to the court that established the original guardianship [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.740(c)(5)].

For a discussion of the termination of probate guardianships in the juvenile court, see § 328.60[7].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
K. Post-Permanency Planning Procedures

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated §§ 328.182-328.188

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

[Reserved]

§§ 328.182[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
L. Appeal and Extraordinary Writs

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.189

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.189 Standing

[1] General requirements

As a general rule, a litigant may only assert his or her own constitutional rights or immunities [McGowan v. Maryland (1961) 366 U.S. 420, 429, 81 S. Ct. 1101, 6 L. Ed. 2d 393] . To have standing, a person must have rights that suffer injury; the person must be aggrieved [Clifford S. v. Superior Court (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 747, 751, 45 Cal. Rptr. 2d 333] . To be aggrieved, an appellant must have a legally cognizable interest that is affected injuriously by the juvenile court's decision [In re Paul W. (2007) 151 Cal. App. 4th 37, 55, 60 Cal. Rptr. 3d 329] . The objection that a person lacks standing cannot be waived by failure to raise it; lack of standing may be raised at any point in the proceedings [Pillsbury v. Karmgard (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 743, 758, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 491] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Always Look at Standing Issues. Practitioners should always ensure that individuals seeking to participate in appellate matters have standing to do so. The issue of standing is never waived, and it may be an easy way to prevent protracted appellate litigation.

In dependency appeals, the social services agency, the child and the parent or guardian has the right to appeal from any order specified in Welf. & Inst. Code § 395, which allows any judgment to be appealed "in the same manner as a final judgment" [Cal. Rules of Court, Rule 5.585(b)]. But Welf. & Inst. Code § 395 does not eliminate the requirement for standing. Although an appeal may be taken from any juvenile court judgment, only "aggrieved" parties have standing to appeal [Code of Civ. Proc. § 902]. An appellant's legally cognizable interest must be injuriously affected by the trial court's ruling in an immediate and substantial manner, and not as a nominal or remote consequence [In re Joshua S. (1986) 186 Cal. App. 3d 147, 150, 230 Cal. Rptr. 437] . As such, it is not enough that an appellant has a personal interest in the judgment; it must be a legally cognizable interest that is injured to give standing. Nevertheless, standing determinations should be liberally construed and resolved in favor of the right to appeal [Ajida Technologies, Inc. v.

Roos Instruments, Inc. (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 534, 540, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 686] .

The mere fact a parent has a fundamental right to parent his or her child does not automatically confer standing to appeal [In re Carissa G. (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 731, 736-737, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 561] . For instance, a parent has no standing on appeal to seek reversal of the judgment based upon an assertion that the rights of the other parent were violated, unless appellant can also assert that he or she suffered harm [In re Jenelle C. (1987) 197 Cal. App. 3d 813, 818, 243 Cal. Rptr. 89] . Likewise, standing to challenge a ruling is not established simply because a parent takes a position on a particular issue that has some affect on the child. Without a showing that a parent's personal rights are affected by a ruling, the parent does not establish standing [In re D.S. (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 671, 674, 67 Cal. Rptr. 3d 450 , citing In re Frank L. (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 700, 703, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 88] .

Generally in dependency cases, a parent's interest is in reunification. The interest of other relatives in their relationship with the child is separate from that of the parent [In re Devin M. (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 1538, 1541, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 666] .

[2] First Party Standing--Do the Rights Interweave?

Many cases that discuss standing hold that when the interests of two parties are intertwined, either party has standing to litigate issues related to each other. This is known as "first party standing" "Where the interests of two parties interweave, either party has standing to litigate issues that have a[n] impact upon the related interests. This is a matter of first party standing" [In re Caitlin B. (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 1190, 1193, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 480 , quoting In re Patricia E. (1985) 174 Cal. App. 3d 1, 6, 219 Cal. Rptr. 783 , disapproved on other grounds in In re Celine R. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 45, 60, 71 P. 3d 787] .

In the Patricia E. case, the appellate court held the father had standing to appeal the juvenile court's order appointing the county counsel to represent his daughter, even though it already represented the social services agency. The court found that "Independent representation of the daughter's interests impacts upon the father's interest in the parent-child relationship. Further, the child's welfare and the parent-child relationship were both at issue and intertwined because the father sought to have his child returned to his care [In re Patricia E. (1985) 174 Cal. App. 3d 1, 5, 219 Cal. Rptr. 783] . Without the presence of interrelated interests, "a parent is precluded from raising issues on appeal which did not affect his or her own rights" [In re Jasmine J. (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 1802, 1806, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 560] .

Subsequent cases have distinguished the Patricia E. decision. In the case of In re Frank L. (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 700, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 88 , the court held that a mother lacked standing to appeal one child's placement order despite the fact the mother's position may be intertwined with other siblings in a different placement. The court noted the remaining siblings did not appeal the court's order, and the mother could not do so for them [In re Frank L. (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 700, 703, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 88] . The Frank L. court also found that the child was in long-term foster care, and unlike the situation in Patricia E., the parent-child relationship was no longer an issue because placement with the mother was not an option [In re Frank L. (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 700, 704, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 88 ; see also In re Devin M. (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 1538, 1541-1542, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 666 (mother lacked standing in Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 appeal to argue child's bond with foster parents should not be disrupted; mother's rights not intertwined or implicated where parental rights were terminated and the interest at stake was not reunification)].

Cases where courts have found standing include In re Elizabeth M. (1997) 52 Cal. App. 4th 318, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 557 (mother had standing to appeal Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 petition seeking placement with her cousin); In re Paul H. (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 753, 5 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1 (alleged father has standing to appeal to raise issues concerning his parental interest in the child), and In re Esperanza C. (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 1042, 81 Cal. Rptr. 3d 556 (child has standing to appeal section 388 decision denying placement with relative because child has a legally cognizable interest in placement with relative).

A good example of the necessary interest to find standing is the case of In re Silvia R. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 337, 344, 71 Cal. Rptr. 3d 496 , in which the juvenile court ordered a stepfather and adult brother to participate in sexual perpetrator counseling as part of the mother's reunification plan. The mother appealed the orders, and the appellate court found she had standing to raise the issue because her "... immediate and substantial interest is her liberty interest in parenting her daughter, with which the state has now substantially interfered" [In re Silvia R. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 337, 344, 71 Cal. Rptr. 3d 496] . Because her ability to reunify with her daughter was directly impacted by the court's orders requiring the non-parties to engage in services, the court allowed her to challenge those orders on appeal. "The manner in which she is ordered to address that problem, and the validity of the orders encompassed within her disposition plan, are issues which Mother necessarily has standing to address" [In re Silvia R. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 337, 345, 71 Cal. Rptr. 3d 496] .

However, published dependency decisions are more likely to address situations in which standing was not found to exist [see, e.g., In re Valerie A. (2007) 152 Cal. App. 4th 987, 1000, 61 Cal. Rptr. 3d 403 (mother lacked standing to appeal the denial of her request for a guardian ad litem for Valerie's sibling); Amber R. v. Superior Court (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 897, 901, 43 Cal. Rptr. 3d 297 (biological mother whose rights were terminated lacking standing to bring Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 petition requesting to be identified as an important person in the child's life); In re Neil D. (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 219, 224, 65 Cal. Rptr. 3d 771 (children lacked standing to appeal court order requiring mother to participate in residential drug treatment because not aggrieved by court's order); In re Daniel H. (2002) 99 Cal. App. 4th 804, 809-812, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 475 (mother lacked standing to appeal sibling visitation related issues because not aggrieved by court's order); In re Crystal J. (2001) 92 Cal. App. 4th 186, 190, 111 Cal. Rptr. 2d 646 (dependent child does not have standing to appeal the denial of de facto parent status to her former caregivers); In re Frank L. (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 700, 703-704, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 88 (parent may not argue child's counsel was ineffective and child should not be separated from siblings); In re Devin M. (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 1538, 1541-1542, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 666 (mother has no standing in Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 appeal to argue that the child's bond with foster parents should not be disrupted); In re Cliffton B. (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 415, 425, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 778 (parent has no standing to argue in appeal from the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing that the child had a right to sibling visitation)].

A good example of an insufficient interest resulting in a denial of standing is the case of In re D.S. (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 671, 67 Cal. Rptr. 3d 450 , in which the mother's Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 petition requesting visitation and reunification services was denied by the juvenile court. The father did not join in the mother's petition. The court terminated parental rights, and the father appealed, contending the juvenile court erred in denying the mother's modification petition. The appellate court dismissed the father's appeal because he did not have standing. Standing to challenge an adverse ruling is not established merely because a parent takes a position on an issue that affects the child [In re Frank L. (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 700, 703, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 88] . Here, the father lacked standing because he did not show how the denial of the mother's Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 petition affected his interests when he did not join the mother's petition and made no showing his personal rights were implicated [In re D.S. (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 671, 674, 67 Cal. Rptr. 3d 450] .

[3] Standing to Appeal the Dismissal of a Dependency Petition

Currently, a conflict exists in case law determining whether a parent is sufficiently aggrieved to have standing to appeal an order dismissing a dependency petition after a contested jurisdictional hearing. In 1990, the appellate court in the case of In re Tomi C. (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 694, 267 Cal. Rptr. 210 held the father lacked standing to appeal the juvenile court's order dismissing the dependency petition. In that case, the social services agency filed a petition claiming the father sexually molested his children. A family law court subsequently placed the children with their mother, and the juvenile court granted the agency's request to dismiss the petition. The father appealed, but the court noted that "[e]ven if father could have successfully defended against the allegations in the petition, he could not thereby regain custody of his children since the custody issue had already been decided in family court" [In re Tomi C. (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 694, 698, 267 Cal. Rptr. 210] . In addition, the court noted the father could petition the agency to file another petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 329. Therefore, the appellate court concluded the father was not aggrieved by the court's order dismissing the petition [In re Tomi C. (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 694, 698, 267 Cal. Rptr. 210] .

But in 1996, a different appellate court held in the case of In re Lauren P. (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 763, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 170 that a mother had standing to appeal the juvenile court's order dismissing the petition. In that case, the mother retained custody of her child after a contested jurisdictional hearing where the court dismissed a petition alleging the father sexually abused the child. Relying on a parent's general constitutional interest in the companionship, care, and custody of his or her child, the court there found the mother had "a natural interest in obtaining the state's protection for her daughter against future sexual abuse. Dismissal of the petition injuriously affected this interest" [In re Lauren P. (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 763, 770-771, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 170] .

Three years later, yet another appellate court ruled in a different case that a mother lacked standing to appeal the juvenile court's dismissal of the dependency petition alleging sexual abuse by the father [In re Carissa G. (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 731, 736, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 561] . Relying on the reasoning in Tomi C. and rejecting the reasoning of Lauren P., the Carissa G. court found the dismissal order did not alter the child's custody status with the mother. In addition, although the Carissa G. court acknowledged the mother's fundamental right to parent her child, it further noted the dismissal order "did not impact that right" [In re Carissa G. (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 731, 736, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 561] . "Thus, the mere fact a parent takes a position on a matter at issue in a juvenile dependency case that affects his or her child does not alone constitute a sufficient reason to establish standing to challenge an adverse ruling on it" [In re Carissa G. (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 731, 736-737, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 561] .

Because the Tomi C. case involved a father seeking to appeal the dismissal of a dependency petition alleging he molested his children, that decision is significantly different than the Lauren P. and Carissa G. decisions that addressed whether a mother seeking to protect her children could appeal the dismissal of a dependency petition that had alleged the father molested the children. Strong arguments can be made in support of both the Lauren P. and Carissa G. decisions, and this is an area to be watched for future developments.

[4] Standing in De facto Parent Cases

Individuals seeking de facto parent status have standing to appeal the court's denial of their motion [In re Joel H. (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 1185, 1195, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 878] . But a de facto parent lacks standing to challenge whether the provision of reunification services offered to him were reasonable since de facto parents are not entitled to those services in the first place [Clifford S. v. Superior Court (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 747, 751-756, 45 Cal. Rptr. 2d 333] . Indeed, de facto parents have no right to reunification services, custody, or visitation merely because they are de facto parents, and thus normally lack standing to appeal orders relating to those issues [In re P.L. (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 1357, 1361-1362, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 6 , citing In re Kieshia E. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 68, 82, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 775, 859 P.2d 1290 ; and Clifford S. v. Superior Court (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 747, 752, 45 Cal. Rptr. 2d 333] .

In some cases, however, de facto parents have standing to appeal a court's order removing a dependent child from their home under Welf. & Inst. Code § 387 [In re Joel H. (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 1185, 1196, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 878] . In the Joel H. case the juvenile court had already selected adoption as the permanent plan with the de facto parents identified as willing to adopt the children [In re Joel H. (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 1185, 1189-1190, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 878] . Similarly, in the case of In re Vincent M. (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 943, 952-953, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 755 , de facto parents who intended to adopt a child were found to have standing to appeal an order finding a biological father who had not been identified earlier in the case was a presumed father and entitled to services without a showing of best interest. But in a case in which the de facto parent had vacillated regarding adoption and steps had already been taken to transition the child to an different home for adoption, the de facto parent was found to lack standing to appeal [In re P.L. (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 1357, 1361-1362, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 6] . Thus, whether a de facto parent has a legally cognizable interest in continued placement of a child such that the de facto parent has standing to appeal findings and orders impacting that placement will depend on the individual facts of the case. Normally a mere de facto parent will not have standing to appeal an order impacting placement of the child, but where the child has been in the home for an extended period of time with the intent of the home providing permanency for the child, the de facto parent may have standing to appeal an order impacting that placement.

Courts also limit a parent's ability to raise on appeal the court's denial of a de facto parent motion, reasoning that a parent's interest in a dependency action proceeding is in reunification with the child, while a de facto parent's interest is his or her separate interest in the relationship with the child. A court's denial of a de facto parent motion does not preclude a parent from presenting evidence regarding his or her relationship with the child [see In re Vanessa Z. (1994) 23 Cal. App. 4th 258, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 313 ; In re Daniel D. (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 1823, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 245] . At least one court has extended that reasoning to a child's attempt to appeal the denial of a de facto motion as well, reasoning that the child can still present evidence regarding his or her relationship with the proposed de facto parent and argue that he or she should be placed there [see In re Crystal J. (2001) 92 Cal. App. 4th 186, 191-192, 111 Cal. Rptr. 2d 646] .

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
L. Appeal and Extraordinary Writs

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.190

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.190 Appeal in Dependency Cases

[1] Right of Appeal

Welf. & Inst. Code § 395 provides that a judgment in a proceeding under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 may be appealed from in the same way as any final judgment. The judgment the statute is referring to has been held to be the declaration of dependency at the disposition hearing [In re Meranda P. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 1143, 1150, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 913 ; In re Melvin S. (1976) 59 Cal. App. 3d 898, 900, 130 Cal. Rptr. 844] . The statute goes on to say that "any subsequent order may be appealed from as from an order after judgment" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 395]. Thus, in dependency cases there is no "one final judgment" from which an appeal is taken. Instead, the orders at disposition and "all subsequent orders are directly appealable without limitation" except for those orders setting a hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 which are reviewed by extraordinary writ [In re Meranda P. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 1143, 1150, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 913 ; see also In re S.B. (2009) 46 Cal. 4th 529, 532, 94 Cal. Rptr. 3d 24, 207 P. 3d 525] .

This does not, of course, mean that interim findings and orders are immediately appealable, such as where a contested review hearing is conducted on several dates and the court makes an interim visitation order pending the completion of the contested hearing. In such circumstances, a common sense interpretation of Welf. & Inst. Code § 395 would suggest that only final orders are directly appealable without limitation and the interim orders could be raised either by way of a traditional writ petition if appropriate or on appeal from the conclusion of the contested hearing. Nevertheless, practitioners and courts should be aware of the Supreme Court's decision in the S.B. case that held the findings and orders made under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(3) are immediately appealable even though the hearing is not yet completed and is instead continued for up to 180 days for a child who is difficult to place for adoption [In re S.B. (2009) 46 Cal. 4th 529, 537, 94 Cal. Rptr. 3d 24, 207 P. 3d 525] . The broad view of Welf. & Inst. Code § 395 taken by the Supreme Court in the S.B. decision may open the floodgates for practitioners to seek appellate review of other interim findings and orders. Appellate courts should be cautious in considering such requests.

As indicated, the first hearing from which an appeal can be taken in a dependency case is the disposition hearing [In re Meranda P. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 1143, 1150, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 913 ; In re Sheila B. (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 187, 196, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 482 ; In re Tracy Z. (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 107, 112, 240 Cal. Rptr. 445 ; In re Melvin S. (1976) 59 Cal. App. 3d 898, 900, 130 Cal. Rptr. 844] . As a result, a court's finding of jurisdiction cannot be raised in a separate appeal from the jurisdiction hearing, but may be raised on appeal from a disposition hearing [In re Candida S. (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th. 1240, 1249, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 521 ; In re Jennifer V. (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 1206, 1209-1210, 243 Cal. Rptr. 441] . The previous findings and orders made at the detention hearing, however, are generally made moot by the jurisdiction and disposition determinations and thus cannot be considered on appeal [In re Raymond G. (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 964, 967, 281 Cal. Rptr. 625] .

The need to timely file an appeal from a dependency hearing at which the juvenile court makes findings or orders which one disagrees with is important, since once the time for filing an appeal from that hearing has expired those findings and orders are res judicata and cannot be considered on appeal from a subsequent hearing [In re Meranda P. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 1143, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 913 ; In re Daniel D. (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 1823, 1832-1833, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 245] . Where, however, the parent was not provided with notice of the right of appeal or the right to file a petition for writ relief, or otherwise suffered error that fundamentally undermined the statutory scheme, the normal waiver rule upheld in Meranda P. may not be followed. Nevertheless, the burden to demonstrate the waiver rule should not apply is high [In re Janee J. (1999) 74 Cal. App. 4th 198, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 634 ; In re Cathina W. (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 716, 722-724, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 480] . Thus, timely appeals are important.

PRACTICE TIP:

Use of Petitions for Extraordinary Writ in Lieu of Appeals. Although the traditional means of seeking review of the various findings and orders of the juvenile court in dependency cases is by appeal, the appeal process is often too slow to provide a plain, speedy, and adequate review. This is especially true when the orders of the court place the child outside of the parent's home, constitute an unauthorized detention order, or deny visitation [see, e.g., Savannah B. v. Superior Court (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 158, 159-160, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 428 ; In re Jonathan M. (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 1234, 1238, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 208 ; Zenide v. Superior Court (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 1287, 1293, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 703] . This may also be true in the case of lengthy or repeated continuances which take the matter beyond statutory time lines [Renee S. v. Superior Court (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 187, 189, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 134 ; Jeff M. v. Superior Court (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 1238, 1239-1240, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 343] . Traditional writs are also appropriate to challenge a discovery order as violating a privilege against disclosure [In re Jeanette H. (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 25, 30, 275 Cal. Rptr. 9] . Practitioners should give serious consideration in appropriate cases to filing petitions for extraordinary writ relief in lieu of or in addition to a notice of appeal [In re Matthew P. (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 841, 844, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 269 ; In re Pablo D. (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 759, 761, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 247] .

For a discussion of traditional writs, see § 2.192, below.

[2] Appeal or Writ Must Be Approved by Party Appealing

In dependency cases it is a frequent occurrence that one or more of the parents involved in the case have at one time appeared and had counsel appointed, but are no longer in touch with their attorney, the social worker or the court. While their attorney in many instances will continue to represent the absent parent's interest in the dependency case to the best of his or her ability, an attorney cannot file an appeal on behalf of the missing parent without some contact with that parent and the parent's approval of the appeal [In re Sean S. (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 350, 352, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 766 ; In re Alma B. (1994) 21 Cal. App. 4th 1037, 1043, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 592] . The same is true with regard to filing a petition for extraordinary writ [Janice J. v. Superior Court (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 690, 691-692, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 227 ; Suzanne J. v. Superior Court (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 785, 788, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 25 ; Guillermo G. v. Superior Court (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 1168, 1172-1174, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 748] . Moreover, "a trial attorney has no legal or ethical duty to file a notice of appeal on behalf of a parent who has not consented to its filing" [In re Sean S. (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 350, 353, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 766] . The same is true with regard to extraordinary writ petitions [Janice J. v. Superior Court (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 690, 692, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 227 ; Suzanne J. v. Superior Court (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 785, 788, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 25] . Thus, an attorney has neither the duty nor the ability to file a notice of appeal or petition for extraordinary writ in a dependency case without the actual consent of the client.

Nevertheless, a notice of appeal may be signed by either the party or the attorney for the party. If the parent's trial counsel signed the notice of appeal it is presumed he or she has the approval of the parent for the signing of the notice of appeal, absent strong factual evidence to the contrary [In re Helen W. (2007) 150 Cal. App. 4th 71, 78-79, 57 Cal. Rptr. 3d 914 , citing Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.400(c)]. The same is not true, however, with regard to the filing of a notice of intent to file a writ petition challenging the setting of a Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing, since the rule of court requires the notice of intent be signed by the party [In re Helen W. (2007) 150 Cal. App. 4th 71, 79, n.3, 57 Cal. Rptr. 3d 914 , citing Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.450(e)(3)]. This will change effective July 1, 2010, when the rule is revised to allow the notice of intent to be signed by either the party or the attorney of record for the party, so long as the client has authorized the attorney to sign the notice of intent on his or her behalf [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.450(e)(3), eff. July 1, 2010].

The exception to the requirement for client authorization is when the appeal is based on the allegation the appellant did not receive proper notice of the trial court proceedings. In such cases, if the record on appeal contains no evidence the appellant was made aware of what transpired at the trial court level within the time limit for the filing of a notice of appeal, there is no requirement the appellant personally authorize the appeal. Instead, in this one instance, the trial attorney can file the notice of appeal on the parent's behalf without the parent's personal authorization [In re Steven H. (2001) 86 Cal. App. 4th 1023, 1031, 103 Cal. Rptr. 2d 649] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Be Realistic In Advice to Client. An appeal is not an opportunity to re-litigate the issues you challenged at the trial court level. Under the substantial evidence and abuse of discretion standards of review the appellate court cannot re-weigh the evidence and must view the evidence in the light most favorable to the trial court's judgment. Thus, the standards of review at the appellate level favor affirming whatever action the trial court took. Whether your client is a parent, de facto parent, or social services agency, the client should be advised the odds of winning an appeal are not good. If your client is the child and you are making that decision on behalf of the child, this must be considered also. Appeals should not be filed merely because someone does not like the outcome in the trial court. They should be filed because one of the parties does not like the outcome and believes there is a realistic chance of success at the appellate level despite the uphill battle posed by the standards of appellate review. Don't delay resolution of the issues by giving your client false hope or the idea the appeal will be a second bite of the apple. Be realistic in your advice regarding the likelihood of success on appeal and help your client make a wise decision about whether to file a notice of appeal.

For a discussion regarding the standards of review in appeals and writs, see § 2.190[14].

[3] Stay Pending Appeal

No appealable order or judgment in a dependency case is stayed by the appeal [Code Civ. Proc. § 917.7; Welf. & Inst. Code § 395(a)(1)].

The juvenile court does have discretion to stay its orders pending an appeal [Code Civ. Proc. § 917.7]. It is rare, however, for a juvenile court to stay any of its orders pending appeal since its orders are generally viewed as being necessary for the child's well-being and best interest at the time that they are made.

By statute, however, an order of the juvenile court placing a dependent child out of state or allowing a dependent child to leave the state is stayed for a period of seven days [Code Civ. Proc. § 917.7]. Some juvenile courts and practitioners are not aware of this provision. Where appropriate, practitioners should bring it to the court's attention. While this automatic stay is not long enough to take an appeal, it does allow time for the filing of an extraordinary writ petition. Practitioners opposing the child leaving the state should be aware, however, that the statute also provides for the court of appeal to enter an order allowing the child to leave the state before the expiration of the seven days. Thus, it may be a "race to the courthouse."

For a discussion of whether allowing a child to go on an out of state visit triggers the automatic stay of Code Civ. Proc. § 917.7, see § 328.128[2].

For a discussion on whether or not to file a petition for writ of supersedeas in order to seek a stay by the appellate court pending a decision on an appeal, see § 2.192[2].

[4] Time for Filing a Dependency Appeal

The timely filing of a notice of appeal is a jurisdictional requirement [Mauro B. v. Superior Court (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 949, 953, 281 Cal. Rptr. 507] . As a general rule, an appeal from a juvenile court order must be filed within 60 days after pronouncement of the order in open court [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.400(d)(1); In re Alyssa H. (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 1249, 1253-1254, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 809 ; In re Markaus V. (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 1331, 1337, 260 Cal. Rptr. 126] . If one party files a timely appeal, the time for any other party to appeal from the same judgment or order of the juvenile court is extended until 20 days after the superior court clerk mails notification of the first appeal [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.400(d)(4)].

One court of appeal has held as an exception to the general rule, that an appeal of a Welf. & Inst. Code § 362.4 juvenile court custody order made upon the termination of juvenile court jurisdiction must be filed within 60 days after issuance and filing of the written order if that occurs after the oral pronouncement [In re Markaus V. (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 1331, 1337, 260 Cal. Rptr. 126 (basing its decision on the language of this particular statute, which "plainly envisions that a written order be 'issued' ")].

A notice of appeal is to be liberally construed to avoid denying an appeal for a technical defect [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.100]. Nevertheless, the law is clear a notice of appeal must clearly indicate what judgment is being appealed. It does not include other judgments that are directly, separately, and independently appealable, and not identified on the notice of appeal, particularly when those other judgments were on other dates [Sole Energy Co. v. Petrominerals Corp (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 212, 239, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 798 ; DeZerega v. Meggs (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 28, 43, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 366 ; In re Marriage of Weiss (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 106, 119, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 339] . One court of appeal, however, has held that on appeal from a Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing the court may also consider issues from a separate hearing on a Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 petition, so long as the judgment on the petition was made within 60 days of the filing of the notice of appeal [In re Madison W. (2006) 141 Cal. App. 4th 1447, 47 Cal. Rptr. 3d 143] . The superficial analysis in the Madison W. decision, however, is an anomaly. For instance, the case it cites for the rule of liberal construction speaks of liberally construing a notice of appeal when the notice can be reasonably be interpreted as being from a particular judgment, such as when incorrect terminology is used but the meaning is reasonably clear what is being appealed and there is no prejudice, such as where the notice of appeal lists an "order" rather than a "judgment" [Vibert v. Berger (1966) 64 Cal. 2d 65, 67-68, 410 P.2d 390] . An appeal from an order terminating parental rights can reasonably be said to include an appeal from the denial of a Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 petition on that same date, or where the contested hearing was held on multiple dates with the two matters being heard together. But an appeal from an order terminating parental rights on one date cannot reasonably be interpreted as meaning the denial of a Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 petition on another date, absent those special circumstances, something not apparent in the Madison W. decision. To do so would create appellate jurisdiction where none exists, and will promote further litigation, not avoid it. Further, the Madison W. decision fails to even mention the extensive body of law that holds a separate notice of appeal, or a notice of appeal listing multiple judgments, must be filed when there are multiple judgments, including those that are close in time [Sole Energy Co. v. Petrominerals Corp (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 212, 239, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 798] . Finally, Madison W. would open a Pandora's Box of attempts to expand the decision to other dependency hearings, findings, and orders. Thus, it is doubtful other appellate courts will follow the Madison W. decision. Nevertheless, this is an area to be watched for further developments.

Historically, some parents have sought to file late notices of appeal under the "constructive filing" doctrine, which applies in some criminal cases. There were two difficulties with this argument. First, the constructive filing doctrine only applies in criminal cases in which the person seeking to timely file a notice of appeal is incarcerated or otherwise in custody and has been thwarted in his or her effort to timely file the notice of appeal due to his necessary reliance on prison officials or his reasonable reliance on his attorney [In re Benoit (1973) 10 Cal. 3d 72, 86, 109 Cal. Rptr. 785, 514 P.2d 97 ("we believe that in the interest of justice the principle should be extended to apply to situations like the instant one where the defendant is incarcerated or otherwise in custody after having been properly notified of his appeal rights by the sentencing judge and has made arrangements with his trial attorney to file a notice of appeal for him."); People v. Slobodion (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 362, 367, 181 P.2d 868 ("when appellant timely deposited his notice of appeal with the state's employees as required by the state prison rules, such action constituted a constructive filing of the specified notice.")]. Second, numerous cases have held the constructive filing doctrine is not available in appeals from orders terminating parental rights, based on the child's special need for finality in adoption-related proceedings [see, e.g., In re Alyssa H. (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 1249, 1254, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 809 ; In re Issac J. (1992) 4 Cal. App. 4th 525, 530-534, 6 Cal. Rptr. 2d 65 ; Mauro B. v. Superior Court (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 949, 955, 281 Cal. Rptr. 507] . Indeed, allowing use of the constructive filing doctrine in cases involving the termination of parental rights could delay or cause great confusion over when an adoption could be finalized. Even when termination of parental rights is not involved, the need of children for the timely resolution of their dependency cases and related appeals is a compelling interest. Thus, the prevailing view has been that the constructive filing doctrine does not apply in dependency appeals.

Effective January 1, 2006, however, a limited form of the constructive filing doctrine has been added to the California Rules of Court for dependency appeals. If the superior court receives a late notice of appeal by mail from a custodial institution but the envelope shows the notice was mailed or delivered to custodial officials for mailing within the time for filing a notice of appeal, the notice will be deemed timely [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.400(e)]. In such a case, the clerk must retain the envelope in which the notice was received [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.400(e)]. Significantly, the new rule provision does not provide for application of the constructive filing doctrine when a late notice of appeal for an incarcerated parent is filed by counsel.

The constructive filing doctrine is a very limited exception to the normal rules governing the filing of notices of appeal in criminal and now dependency cases. It is only applicable to incarcerated defendants or parents in cases in which the delay in the filing of the notice of appeal resulted from the conduct or representation of counsel in criminal cases, or prison officials in criminal or dependency cases upon which the prisoner reasonably relied, and is not substantially due to any fault on the part of the prisoner [In re Ricky H. (1992) 10 Cal. App. 4th 552, 559-560, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 578 ; In re Benoit (1973) 10 Cal. 3d 72, 86, 109 Cal. Rptr. 785, 514 P.2d 97 ; People v. Slobodion (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 362, 367, 181 P.2d 868] . Few parents will satisfy all the criteria of the constructive filing doctrine under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.400(e), including both incarceration and the absence of fault [see In re Ricky H. (1992) 10 Cal. App. 4th 552, 560, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 578 ("The constructive filing doctrine is not intended to save an appellant from the natural consequences of his or her own decisions.")]. As such, even with the new rule provision the doctrine of constructive filing is unlikely to be found available in dependency appeals except in rare instances.

[5] Appeal From Orders Made by Referees

Whenever the approval of a juvenile court judge is required for a referee's order to become effective, the referee's order becomes final 10 calendar days after service of a written copy of the referee's findings and orders or 20 judicial days after the hearing at which the findings and orders are made, whichever comes later [In re Clifford C. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 1085, 1093, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 873, 938 P.2d 932 (harmonizing Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 250 and 253)]. In any other instance, the orders of the referee become immediately effective, subject to the right of the minor, parent or guardian to apply for a rehearing within 10 calendar days of the service of a written copy of the referee's findings and orders. The finality of the orders is also subject to the ability of a juvenile court judge to order a rehearing on his or her own motion with 20 judicial days of hearing at which the referee's orders were made, but not more than 10 calendar days after the service of a copy of the written findings and orders [In re Clifford C. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 1085, 1093, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 873, 938 P.2d 932 (harmonizing Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 250 and 253)]. If a referee sits as a temporary judge, his or her orders become final in the same manner as orders made by a judge [Welf. & Inst. Code § 250].

A notice of appeal from a judgment or subsequent order made by a referee not sitting as a temporary judge must be filed within 60 days of the date on which the order of the referee becomes final under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.540(c), if no such request for rehearing was filed or a rehearing granted [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.400(d)(2); In re Miguel E. (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 521, 537-538, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 530] . If an application for rehearing of a judgment or order entered by a referee not sitting as a temporary judge was filed and denied, the notice of appeal must be filed within 60 days after the referee's order is served under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.538(b)(3), or within 30 days after the order denying the application for rehearing, whichever is later [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.400(d)(3)]. If one party files a timely appeal, the time for any other party to appeal from the same judgment or order of the juvenile court is extended until 20 days after the superior court clerk mails notification of the first appeal [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.400(d)(4)]. Effective July 1, 2010, these requirements will be found in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.406.

[6] Indigents

The reviewing court may appoint counsel to represent an indigent child, parent, or guardian appealing from a dependency proceeding [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.585(b)]. Effective January 1, 2007, the appellate court must appoint separate counsel for a child who is an appellant, and may appoint separate counsel for a child in other circumstances [Welf. & Inst. Code § 395(b); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.661]. Effective July 1, 2010, the rule provisions for the appointment of counsel on appeal will be found in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.403. For a discussion of this process and the factors to consider in recommending separate counsel for the child on appeal see § 2.62[3][e].

An appellant unable to afford counsel must be provided a free copy of the transcript in any appeal. The record on appeal must be prepared and transmitted immediately after filing of the notice of appeal, without advance payment of fees. If the appellant is able to afford counsel, the county may seek reimbursement for the cost of the transcript as though the appellant had been granted permission to proceed in forma pauperis [Welf. & Inst. Code § 395].

[7] Precedence of the Appeal

The appeal of any appealable order in a dependency case has precedence over all other cases in the court to which the appeal is taken [Welf. & Inst. Code § 395]. Judgments freeing a dependent child from parental custody and control, as well as those denying a recommendation to free the child, are given particular precedence. To enable the child to be available for adoption as quickly as possible and to minimize the anxiety to all [Code of Civ. Proc. § 45], the appellate court must require a showing of "exceptional" good cause before granting an extension of time to a court reporter or attorney in a case terminating parental rights [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.416(f)].

The same exceptional cause requirement is applicable to all dependency appeals in Imperial, Orange, and San Diego counties, not just those involving termination of parental rights issues [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.416(a)(1)(A)]. These three counties utilize a "fast-track" procedure for all appeals in dependency cases, not just termination of parental rights appeals [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.416(a)(1)(B)]. Hopefully, this special rule will become a statewide requirement so that all dependency appeals throughout California will receive expedited handling by the appellate courts, regardless of whether the termination of parental rights is involved. A significant step in that direction takes effect July 1, 2010, when

Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.416(a)(1), will make these "fast-track" procedures applicable for dependency appeals in any county where the juvenile court and the applicable appellate court have agreed and adopted a local rule so providing.

[8] Wende Briefs Not Permitted

According to prior case law, an indigent appellant whose appointed counsel submitted a brief that raised no specific issues or described the appeal as frivolous was nevertheless entitled to a Wende review on appeal from an order in proceedings under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 or to terminate parental rights [In re Brian B. (1983) 141 Cal. App. 3d 397, 398-399, 190 Cal. Rptr. 153 ; In re Joyleaf W. (1984) 150 Cal. App. 3d 865, 198 Cal. Rptr. 114] . When applicable, Wende requires the appellate court to undertake a review of the entire trial record to determine whether any arguable issues exist [see People v. Wende (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 436, 441-443, 158 Cal. Rptr. 839, 600 P.2d 1071] . After numerous more recent appellate decisions held that Wende review was not required in dependency writs and appeals, the California Supreme Court settled the matter: Wende briefs are not permitted in appeals from dependency and termination of parental rights cases [In re Sade C. (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 952, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 771, 920 P.2d 716] .

Notwithstanding the holding in Sade C., many appellate attorneys argued that Sade C. merely held that Wende review was not mandated in dependency and termination of parental rights appeals. They contended Sade C. still left the appellate court with discretion to review the record for error where appellate counsel finds no issue. This issue too has been put to rest. The Sade C. decision leaves no room for such discretionary review. Where neither appellate counsel nor appellant has made any specific claims of error, the appeal is "implicitly abandoned" and should be dismissed [In re Sara H. (1997) 52 Cal. App. 4th 198, 200-202, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 434 ; see also Glen C. v. Superior Court (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 570, 579-580, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 103] .

There has been a difference of approach by the various appellate districts as to whether an appellant in a dependency case has a right to file a pro per supplemental brief after his or her appellate counsel files a Sade C. brief indicating the attorney can find no arguable issue. Some appellate districts automatically extended appellant the right to file a pro per supplemental brief within 30 days, others routinely dismissed the appeal [California Juvenile Dependency Practice (Cal. CEB 2009) No Wende Review Under Sade C., § 10.69, pp. 791-793]. In the Supreme Court's decision in the Conservatorship of Ben C. case, however, a footnote suggested the right to file a supplemental brief following a no issues brief might extend beyond the criminal arena [Conservatorship of Ben C. (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 529, 543, 544 n.6, 53 Cal. Rptr. 3d 856, 150 P.3d 738] . The Court settled that issue for dependency appeals in the Phoenix H. case. It held there is no such right following the filing of a Sade C. brief in a dependency case, but that appellate courts have discretion to allow pro per supplemental briefs in such cases if good cause is shown [In re Phoenix H. (2009) 47 Cal. 4th 835, 102 Cal. Rptr. 3d 481, 220 P.3d 524] .

Practitioners should remember that duties of zealous advocacy and communication require the appellate attorney to communicate with his or her client, if the client can be located, before filing a Sade C. brief to inform the client the attorney is considering filing a Sade C. brief and to see if the appellant can help identify an issue the attorney may have missed. At the same time the appellate attorney can ask if the client wants to file a pro per supplemental brief and identify any issue the client wishes to raise. In this way, at the same time the Sade C. brief is filed appellate counsel can simultaneously file a request for the filing of a pro per supplemental brief identifying the issue the client intends to raise in that brief, thereby seeking to provide justification for the appellate court to exercise its discretion to allow the supplemental brief. This is an area to be watched for further development as to practices within appellate districts following the Phoenix H. decision.

[9] Order Denying or Terminating Services

An order by the juvenile court denying or terminating reunification services and directing that a selection and implementation hearing be held under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26, is not immediately appealable but review must first be sought by extraordinary writ in order to preserve any right of later appeal if the writ petition is not decided on its merits [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(l); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.450, 8.452].

The Legislature made this change in 1995 in response to the decision of the California Supreme Court in In re Matthew C. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 386, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 765, 862 P.2d 765 , which held that the juvenile court's nonappealable order terminating reunification services and setting a "selection and implementation" hearing was reviewable on appeal from the juvenile court's final order terminating parental rights at the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing. Matthew C. overturned what was then established practice in the majority of the state that an order setting a selection and implementation hearing was only reviewable by extraordinary writ petition and was not reviewable in a subsequent appeal [see, e.g., In re Amanda B. (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 935, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 922 ; In re Taya C. (1991) 2 Cal. App. 4th 1, 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 810 ; In re Rebecca H. (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 825, 278 Cal. Rptr. 185] .

The statutory change in the law requiring the filing of an extraordinary writ petition to preserve any right of appeal was suggested by the Supreme Court in footnote 13 of its Matthew C. decision and is not subject to serious question as to its continued validity [see In re Matthew C. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 386, 400 fn. 13, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 765, 862 P.2d 765] .

As currently set forth by both statute and rule, an order of the juvenile court directing that a hearing pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 be held is not appealable at anytime unless each of the following applies: (1) an extraordinary writ petition was timely filed; (2) the writ petition substantively addressed the specific issues to be challenged and supported that challenge by an adequate record; and (3) the extraordinary writ petition was summarily denied or otherwise not decided on the merits by the reviewing court. Review on appeal of the order setting a hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 is limited to issues that were raised in the previous extraordinary writ petition that were supported by an adequate record [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(l); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.450, 8.452].

Case law has carved out an exception to the writ requirement in Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(l) in cases where ithe juvenile court failed to advise the parent of the writ requirement as required under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(l)(3)(A). For example, the appellate court in the case of In re Cathina W. (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 716, 722, 724, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 480 allowed the mother to raise issues regarding the referral to the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing in an appeal from the order terminating her parental rights because she was not timely or correctly advised of the writ requirement [see also In re Lauren Z. (2008) 158 Cal. App. 4th 1102, 1110, 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 583] . Another court has held that a parent who was not given the writ advisement can appeal from the order terminating services and setting a Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing [In re Merrick V. (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 235, 247-249, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 490] . But the better view is that set forth in the case of Jennifer T. v. Superior Court (2007) 159 Cal. App. 4th 254, 260, 71 Cal. Rptr. 3d 293 , in which the appellate court found good cause to treat the mother's appeal from the referral order as a petition for writ of mandate, disagreeing with the Merrick V. decision and recognizing the right to appeal is statutory and therefore the appellate court could not grant the mother the right to appeal where it was not provided by statute.

PRACTICE TIP:

Advisory on Writ Requirements. Lawyers representing parents should ensure the juvenile court advises their clients of the writ requirement when it terminates services and refers a case to a Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing whether the parent is present in court at the time the orders are made or not [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 248.5, 366.26(l)(3)(A)]. In addition, in cases where the juvenile court fails to advise the parent of this requirement, but where the parent later wants to seek appellate review of the orders, parent's counsel should ensure when the brief is filed that the appellate court is aware the lower court failed to give the appropriate advisement.

If the juvenile court denies or terminates reunification services but does not set a hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26, the orders may be appealed immediately and the requirement for writ review does not apply [In re Nada R. (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 1166, 1178-1179, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 493 ; Wanda B. v. Superior Court (1996) 41 Cal. App. 4th 1391, 1395, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 175] .

[10] Orders Related to the Referral Order

The manner in which appellate courts will treat orders made at the same time as the order setting the selection and implementation hearing was uncertain under the statutes. Decisional law has clarified this issue, however. Orders that are deemed integrally related to reference orders may also be considered reviewable only by extraordinary writ [In re Charmice G. (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 659, 669-671, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 212] . One court of appeal has also held that where the court denies services to both parents at the disposition hearing and sets the matter for a hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26, all jurisdiction and disposition issues must be raised in an extraordinary writ petition [In re Anthony B. (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 1017, 1021-1024, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 594] . More recently, however, one court held "All court orders, regardless of their nature, made at a hearing in which a section 366.26 permanency planning hearing is set must be challenged by a petition for extraordinary writ" [In re Merrick V. (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 235, 247, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 490] . This is the better view and the only way to ensure that all issues, including otherwise appealable issues, will be dealt with by the appellate court before the selection and implementation hearing is held and thus should be the law regardless of the hearing from which the selection and implementation hearing is set. This places an added burden on trial counsel to brief some issues, rather than appellate counsel. Nevertheless, it is a judicially economical and time sensitive means of ensuring that the issues are dealt with in a timely and effective manner. This assumes, of course, that the appellate court considers the issues raised in all writ petitions under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.452 on the merits. Not all appellate courts have accepted and met that responsibility.

Historically, related nonappealable orders included orders rejecting reunification services [In re Tammy H. (1992) 11 Cal. App. 4th 48, 51, 14 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16 (claim that court erred in terminating reunification services, based on challenge to sufficiency of reunification plan, not cognizable on appeal from order authorizing termination action); In re Jennilee T. (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 212, 217-218, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 101 (order made in conjunction with order to place child for adoption); In re Catherine S. (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 1253, 1256, 281 Cal. Rptr. 746 (order made in conjunction with order setting permanency planning hearing); In re Rebecca H. (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 825, 836-837, 845, 278 Cal. Rptr. 185 (order made in conjunction with order setting permanency planning hearing); In re Kristin W. (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 234, 246, 271 Cal. Rptr. 629 (order implied from order to initiate proceedings to terminate parental rights); but see In re Violet J. (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 600, 605-607, 275 Cal. Rptr. 139 (finding that order to file termination proceedings was not appealable on basis that it impliedly terminated parent's reunification services and, in dicta, observing that separate order expressly terminating reunification services would arguably have been appealable)] and an order limiting the visitation rights of the parents [In re Steven H. (1992) 6 Cal. App. 4th 1752, 1755-1757, 8 Cal. Rptr. 2d 535 (order made in conjunction with order for permanent placement proceedings)]. Now all court orders made at the hearing in which the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing is to be set must be raised by petition for extraordinary writ relief [In re Merrick V. (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 235, 247, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 490] .

For a discussion of petitions for extraordinary writ relief, see § 328.191.

[11] Notice to the Parties

When a notice of appeal has been filed in a juvenile dependency case, the clerk of the court shall mail a notice of the filing of the notice of appeal to each party other than the appellant, including the child if the child is 10 years of age or older, all attorneys of record, any de facto parent, any court-appointed special advocate, and to the tribe of an Indian child [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.400(h)]. Effective July 1, 2010, these requirements will be found in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.405(b).

[12] Confidentiality of Juvenile Dependency Appeal

In juvenile dependency appeals all records, briefs, or other documents that are filed by the parties to the appeal, and all opinions or orders filed by the court, shall protect the anonymity of the parties. The record on appeal, and the briefs may only be inspected by court personnel, the parties, the attorneys for the parties, and such other persons as are designated by the appellate court. A person or entity that is considering filing an amicus curiae brief may also inspect filed documents. The briefs and other documents filed by the parties in dependency appeals are to protect the anonymity of the parties. Additionally, the court of appeal may limit or even prohibit the admission of the public to hearings regarding the dependency appeal [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.400(b)]. Effective July 1, 2010, these requirements will be found in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.401.

PRACTICE TIP:

Party Names. When writing dependency appeals and writs, it is important to remember the mandate that the anonymity of the parties is to be protected [see, e.g., T.N.G. v. Superior Court (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 767, 770 n.1, 94 Cal. Rptr. 813, 484 P.2d 981 ("Attorneys have similarly not mentioned a minor's last name in briefs and petitions.")]. As such, the last names of the parties should not be included. Terms such as "appellant" or "petitioner" are sometimes used, but often the best approach is to simply refer to the "mother," "father," or "child." Descriptive identifications such as "the mother" or "the father" are best. One court recently held that in order to protect the privacy of the children involved in dependency and family law cases, it would refer to the parties only by their initials, consistent with an "informal recommendation of the Reporter of Decisions" [Adoption of O.M. (2008) 169 Cal. App. 4th 672, 675 n.1, 87 Cal. Rptr. 3d 135] . But this practice made it difficult for practitioners to keep track of appellate cases and created confusion in cases with the same initials. Subsequent to the O.M. decision, Presiding Justice Kline of the First District Court of Appeal, Division Two, wrote in the Edward S. decision that despite the comment in O.M., the court would refer to the parties by their first name and last initial because that was consistent with the rules of court and because the court believed "... the use of initials only would make it increasingly difficult for legal researchers to keep track of and differentiate between and among the growing number of appellate opinions in delinquency and dependency and family law cases, create confusion, and impair the readability of many such opinions" [In re Edward S. (2009) 173 Cal. App. 4th 387, 392 n.1, 92 Cal. Rptr. 3d 725] . For the reasons stated in the Edward S. opinion, Justice Klein sets forth the better approach. Indeed, effective July 1, 2010, the rule of court will provide that parties are to be referred to by their first name and last initial. If the first name is unusual, however, or other circumstances would defeat the objective of anonymity if the first name was used, "the parties initials may be used" [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.401(a)(2), eff. July 1, 2010].

Using the first initial of the last name, such as "Mr. J." or "Ms. C.," is also an acceptable means of identification. While the requirement for anonymity is only mandated for the parties, it is recommended that this practice be used for all nonprofessionals mentioned in documents filed with the appellate court, including relatives ("the grandmother") and foster parents ("the foster mother"). Writing "sanitized" briefs as if they might be used later as writing samples for a job interview or as the basis for a published opinion is an excellent means of ensuring the anonymity of the parties is protected.

[13] Post-Judgment Evidence

The general rule for all appeals is that the correctness of a trial court's judgment will be reviewed as of the time the judgment was made and on a record of that evidence the trial court had before it for its consideration. This general rule applies in dependency appeals as well [In re Zeth S. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 396, 405, 2 Cal. Rptr. 3d 683, 73 P.3d 541] . This is especially true in appeals from the termination of parental rights in which the California Supreme Court has made clear that post-judgment evidence is not to be considered by the appellate court pursuant to Code of Civ. Proc. § 909 for the reversal of the termination of rights except in a "rare and compelling case" not present or defined in that decision [In re Zeth S. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 396, 400, 413-414, 2 Cal. Rptr. 3d 683, 73 P.3d 541 , disapproving to the extent inconsistent, In re Jonathan M. (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 1234, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 208 ; In re Eileen A. (2000) 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548 ; In re Jeremy S. (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 514, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 280 ; and In re Jayson T. (2002) 97 Cal. App. 4th 75, 118 Cal. Rptr. 2d 228] . The Supreme Court did note one exception to the general rule regarding post-judgment evidence in termination of parental rights appeals. That exception was found in the Elise K. case in which all parties stipulated that circumstances had changed and the child was no longer adoptable, thereby undermining the foundation for the order terminating parental rights [In re Zeth S. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 396, 413, fn. 11, 2 Cal. Rptr. 3d 683, 73 P.3d 541 , citing In re Elise K. (1982) 33 Cal. 3d 138, 187 Cal. Rptr. 483, 654 P.2d 253] . But it provided no further express guidance regarding the particular circumstances in which post-judgment evidence might be appropriate in a termination of parental rights appeal, or in any other dependency appeal. Some general guidance is found within the decision, however:

- The post-judgment evidence sought to be presented to the appellate court pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 909 should actually be evidence. In Zeth S. it was not. It was the unsworn statement of the child's appellate counsel, which the Supreme Court noted was not evidence [In re Zeth S. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 396, 403, 414, fn. 11, 2 Cal. Rptr. 3d 683, 73 P.3d 541] . Unsworn statements of the child's appellate counsel or other individuals are not appropriate for consideration by appellate courts following Zeth S. [In re Merrick V. (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 235, 258, fn. 9, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 490 ; In re Rachel M. (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 1289, 1294, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 153] .

- The post-judgment evidence should be evidence that would be relevant and admissible at the trial court level. In Zeth S. it was not. The Supreme Court noted the grandfather's preference for legal guardianship would not, in likelihood, have been relevant or admissible at the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing, since the child was adoptable and the grandfather was willing to accept adoption [In re Zeth S. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 396, 410, 2 Cal. Rptr. 3d 683, 73 P.3d 541] .

- The post-judgment evidence should be relevant to the issue or issues raised by the appealing party, and the standards of appellate review. In Zeth S. it was not. The mother appealed the termination of parental rights contending she had a beneficial parent-child relationship that made adoption detrimental to the child under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(A). The child did not appeal and the child's trial attorney supported adoption, but the post-judgment evidence was sought to be introduced by the child's appellate attorney to show the termination of parental rights was not best for the child. The Supreme Court noted that allowing such post-judgment evidence in support of reversal would dispense with such basic formalities as the need for a notice of appeal and to first raise issues at the trial court level, and would impose a new standard for reversal based on the child's best interest [In re Zeth S. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 396, 412-413, 2 Cal. Rptr. 3d 683, 73 P.3d 541] .

- The post-judgment evidence should either be agreed to by all parties or not reasonably subject to dispute. In Zeth S. it was not. There the unsworn statements of the child's appellate counsel were later refuted and clarified by the grandfather's sworn declaration that was attached to the petition for rehearing [In re Zeth S. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 396, 403-404, 2 Cal. Rptr. 3d 683, 73 P.3d 541] . The only circumstance the Supreme Court expressly approved for the use of post-judgment evidence, however, was that of the Elise K. decision in which all parties agreed a change of circumstances existed [In re Zeth S. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 396, 413, fn. 11, 2 Cal. Rptr. 3d 683, 73 P.3d 541 , citing In re Elise K. (1982) 33 Cal. 3d 138, 187 Cal. Rptr. 483, 654 P.2d 253] .

- Finally, the post-judgment evidence normally must be in support of affirming the judgment, not of reversing the judgment. Again, in Zeth S. it was not. It was sought to be used to reverse the judgment. The Supreme Court noted the "state's strong interest in the expeditiousness and finality of juvenile dependency proceedings" [In re Zeth S. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 396, 412, 2 Cal. Rptr. 3d 683, 73 P.3d 541 ; see also Alicia B. v. Superior Court (2004) 116 Cal. App. 4th 856, 867, 11 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1] . It also noted the delay caused by reversing a dependency judgment may be contrary to, rather than in, a child's best interests [In re Zeth S. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 396, 413, fn. 10, 2 Cal. Rptr. 3d 683, 73 P.3d 541 , quoting In re Celine R. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 45, 59, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 432, 71 P.3d 787] .

These guidelines are consistent with existing law regarding the acceptance of post-judgment evidence in appeals under Code of Civ. Proc. § 909, and should be considered by any appellate court to which a request to receive post-judgment evidence is made in a dependency appeal.

Given the strong holding in the Zeth S. decision, it is anticipated appellate courts will move very carefully in finding that postjudgment evidence should be received in a dependency appeal, particularly one involving termination of parental rights. For example, in the case of In re Valerie W. (2008) 162 Cal. App. 4th 1, 75 Cal. Rptr. 3d 86 , the court refused to grant the child's counsel's motion to consider postjudgment evidence of facts set forth in counsel's declaration in determining whether substantial evidence supported the trial court's order terminating parental rights. The issues that post-judgment evidence will be most clearly relevant to, and thus most likely to be accepted if all other factors support acceptance, are: mootness, harmless error, and stipulated reversals. Appellate courts have demonstrated a willingness to accept additional evidence in certain limited situations since Zeth S. [In re Karen G. (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 1384, 1389-1390, 18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 301 (considering evidence of subsequent events to show appeal was moot); In re S.M. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1117, fn. 5, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 606 (ICWA notices) ; In re Louis S. (2004) 117 Cal. App. 4th 622 ; 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 110 (ICWA notices) ; Alicia B. v. Superior Court (2004) 116 Cal. App. 4th 856, 865-867, 11 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1 (ICWA notices)] . This area is an area to be watched for further developments.

[14] Standards of Appellate Review

[a] De Novo Review

Pure questions of law that do not involve the resolution of disputed facts are subject to de novo review. The appellate court decides the matter after its own review of the case, without giving any deference to the trial court's ruling [Ghirardo v. Antoniolo (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 791, 801, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 418 ; In re Daniel M. (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 1151, 1154, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 17].

Courts will review the interpretation of a statute de novo, since it is a question of law [In re Fernando M. (2006) 138 Cal. App. 4th 529, 535, 41 Cal. Rptr. 3d 511 ; Robin J. v. Superior Court (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 414, 420, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 417].

[b] Substantial Evidence Test

Generally, appellate courts review a trial court's factual findings to determine whether or not they are supported by substantial evidence [Jennifer A. v. Superior Court (2004) 117 Cal. App. 4th 1322, 1341, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 572]. Many factual findings made throughout the dependency process are subject to the substantial evidence standard of review on appeal. For example, appellate courts will affirm jurisdictional findings if substantial evidence supports them [see, e.g., In re Heather A. (1996) 52 Cal. App. 4th 183, 193, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 315 ; In re Kristin H. (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 1635, 1649, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 722 ; In re S.O. (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 453, 461, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 554]. Courts also use the substantial evidence test to review the finding that reasonable reunification services have been offered or provided to the parent [Angela S. v. Superior Court (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 758, 762, 42 Cal. Rptr. 2d 755 , citing James B. v. Superior Court (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 1014, 1020, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 762)]. Further, a trial court's determination that it would be detrimental to return a child to parental custody is also reviewed under the substantial evidence test [In re Shaundra L. (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 303, 316, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 299]. Many other findings and orders are also reviewed under the substantial evidence standard [see, e.g., Cheryl P. v. Superior Court (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 87, 96, 42 Cal. Rptr. 3d 504 (ordering denying reunification services reviewed for substantial evidence); In re Jacob S. (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 1011, 1017, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 654 (substantial evidence used to review court's finding that sibling bond exception applies to termination of parental rights); In re Sheila B. (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 187, 198-199, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 482 (order dismissing dependency petition reviewed for substantial evidence); In re Erik P. (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 395, 399-400, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 922 (court reviews finding that child likely to be adopted within reasonable amount of time for substantial evidence); In re Y.R. (2007) 152 Cal. App. 4th 99, 103, 112,

60 Cal. Rptr. 3d 820 (adoptability determination reviewed for substantial evidence)].

In reviewing a challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence, the appellate court must view the evidence in the light most favorable to the prevailing party. "We must indulge in all legitimate and reasonable inferences to uphold the verdict. If there is substantial evidence supporting the judgment, our duty ends and the judgment must not be disturbed" [In re Misako R. (1991) 2 Cal. App. 4th 538, 545, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 217]. Further, when " 'two or more inferences can reasonably be deduced from the facts,' either deduction will be supported by substantial evidence, and 'a reviewing court is without power to substitute its deductions for those of the trial court' " [In re Misako R. (1991) 2 Cal. App. 4th 538, 545, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 217 , quoting In re Eric J. (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 522, 527, 159 Cal. Rptr. 317, 601 P.2d 549 ; see also In re J. I. (2003) 108 Cal. App. 4th 903, 134 Cal. Rptr. 2d 342 (sufficiency of evidence to establish given fact is question for trial court; if substantial evidence supports its conclusion, determination not open to review)].

On appeal from a juvenile court's factual findings, the appellate court's role is not to reweigh the evidence or to express an independent judgment about the evidence presented [In re Shelley J. (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 322, 329, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 922]. "The ultimate determination is whether a reasonable trier of fact could have found for the respondent based on the whole record" [Kuhn v. Department of General Services (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 1627, 1633, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 191]. As stated by one appellate court: "The Court of Appeal is not a second trier of fact and a writ petition is not a trial brief. We are bound to uphold the challenged order, particularly if supported by findings of fact, if it is supported by substantial evidence. Evidence not favorable to the petitioner cannot be simply ignored as if it does not exist" [James B. v. Superior Court (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 1014, 1021, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 762]. As noted by the appellate court in the A.A. decision, "The juvenile court's reasoning is not a matter for our review. [Citation.] It is judicial action not judicial reasoning which is the proper subject of appellate review. [Citation.] [Para.] Further, appellants approach the question of the children's adoptability by picking and choosing evidence from the record in support of their argument. This is not an approach we may follow on review. The purpose of an appellate court asked to assess the sufficiency of the evidence begins and ends with a determination of whether there is any substantial evidence, whether or not contradicted, which will support the conclusion of the trier of fact" [In re A.A. (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 1292, 1313, 84 Cal. Rptr. 3d 841, 858-859] .

Nevertheless, while the standard is high for reversal of a finding of fact under the substantial evidence standard of review, it does not mean that review of substantial evidence questions will always result in affirmance. As has been repeated by many courts: " '[S]ubstantial evidence is not synonymous with any evidence. [Citations.] A decision supported by a mere scintilla of evidence need not be affirmed on appeal. [Citation.]' " [In re David M. (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 822, 828, 36 Cal. Rptr. 3d 411 , quoting In re Savannah M. (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 1387, 1393-1394, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 526]. Further, while substantial evidence may be composed of inferences, such inferences must be supported by evidence and be the product of logic and reason. Inferences resulting from mere conjecture or speculation are not sufficient to constitute substantial evidence to support a trial court's factual finding on appeal [In re David M. (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 822, 828, 36 Cal. Rptr. 3d 411 ; In re Savannah M. (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 1387, 1393-1394, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 526]. Instead, the "ultimate test is whether it is reasonable for a trier of fact to make the ruling in question in light of the whole record" [In re Savannah M. (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 1387, 1394, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 526 , quoting Roddenberry v. Roddenberry (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 634, 652, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 907].

Some appellate courts have said that on review of a finding made by clear and convincing evidence, the court of appeal will employ the substantial evidence test, but will bear in mind the heightened burden of proof [see, e.g., In re Alvin R. (2003) 108 Cal. App. 4th 962, 971, 134 Cal. Rptr. 2d 210 ; In re Lukas B. (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 1145, 1154, 94 Cal. Rptr. 2d 693 ; In re Angelia P. (1981) 28 Cal. 3d 908, 924, 623 P. 2d 198]. Other courts conclude that at the appellate level the clear and convincing evidence standard "disappears" and the substantial evidence test becomes the governing standard of review. This second view recognizes the heightened burden of proof is a standard for decision-making at the trial court level, not a standard of review [In re Mark L. (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 573, 580-581, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 499 ; Sheila S. v. Superior Court (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 872, 880-881, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 187 ; Crail v. Blakely (1973) 8 Cal. 3d 744, 750, 505 P. 2d 1027]. The second view is the better view; requiring different levels of substantial evidence at the appellate court for the review of findings made by different standards of proof in the trial court would inevitably result in appellate courts reweighing the evidence, something the appellate courts are not to do. Nevertheless, under either method, the result in most cases will be the same.

[c] Abuse of Discretion

Generally, courts review a trial court's discretionary rulings for abuse of discretion. This is an even higher standard of review than the substantial evidence standard. The appropriate test on appeal for abuse of discretion is whether the trial court exceeded the bounds of reason. When two or more inferences can reasonably be deduced from the record, the reviewing court has no authority to substitute its decision for that of the juvenile court [In re Stephanie M. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 295, 318-319, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 595, 867 P.2d 706]. Thus, where a trial court has discretionary power to decide an issue, a reviewing court may not disturb the trial court's decision unless the trial court exceeded the limits of legal discretion by making an arbitrary, capricious, or patently absurd determination [In re K.D. (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 1013, 1018, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 711 ; In re Raymundo B. (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 1447, 1456, 250 Cal. Rptr. 812].

A reviewing court employs the abuse of discretion standard in many instances where the trial court exercises its discretion in determining what is best for the dependent child [see, e.g., In re Jasmon O. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 398, 415, 419, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 85, 878 P.2d 1297 ; In re Brittany K. (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 1497, 1505, 1507, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 487 (court reviews summary denial of Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 petition under abuse of discretion standard); In re Jesse C. (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 1481, 1487, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 609 (appointment of counsel for dependent child reviewed for abuse of discretion); In re Nada R. (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 1166, 1179, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 493 (decision whether to offer reunification services to parent losing custody to previously noncustodial parent reviewed for abuse of discretion); In re Sabrina H. (2007) 149 Cal. App. 4th 1403, 1420-1421, 57 Cal. Rptr. 3d 863 (juvenile court's placement orders reviewed under abuse of discretion standard); In re Marilyn A. (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 285, 300, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 647 (court reviews for abuse of discretion trial court's decision to make juvenile court custody order and terminate dependency jurisdiction)].

PRACTICE TIP:

When Standard of Review Is Unclear or in Conflict. It may be unclear in some cases which standard of review applies [see, e.g., In re Sheila B. (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 187, 199, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 482 , noting the case of In re Christina T. (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 630, 229 Cal. Rptr. 247 , "articulates all three standards of review--abuse of discretion, sufficiency of the evidence, and error as a matter of law--and uses them interchangeably"; see also In re Robert L. (1993) 21 Cal. App. 4th 1057, 1065-1066, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 654] . Further, in some circumstances there is a split of authority as to which standard applies [compare In re Jasmine D. (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 1339, 1351, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 644 (abuse of discretion standard applies to determination whether beneficial parent child relationship exception to termination of parental rights applies) with In re Zachary G. (1999) 77 Cal. App. 4th 799, 809, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 20 , and In re Derek W. (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 823, 827, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 739 (exception reviewed for substantial evidence)]. Under either the abuse of discretion or the substantial evidence standards, however, the reviewing court's task is not to reweigh the evidence or to express its independent judgment thereon [In re Jasmine D. (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 1339, 1351, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 644] . Thus, in cases where you are unsure which standard of review applies, or where there is a split of authority as to which standard applies, argue that under either standard your client should prevail, and explain why.

[15] Briefing Guidelines

In general, appellant's opening briefs and any petitions for extraordinary writ relief should contain a concise statement explaining how the lower court erred, the appropriate standard of review that the appellate court should use in reviewing the claim, and an analysis of the appropriate outcome. It is not necessary to raise every possible claim of error on appeal; the better course is to limit appellate review to those issues that raise a serious question of error.

When the respondent or real party in interest files a responsive brief, it is important to limit arguments to those claims raised in the opening brief or writ petition, and not raise new issues that were not briefed initially by the appellant or petitioner [see, e.g., In re S.J. (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 953, 84 Cal. Rptr. 3d 557 (respondent erred in raising applicability of code section in respondent's brief that did not apply to the case and not initially raised by appellant)].

Parties should also be aware that in the case of In re R.H. (2009) 170 Cal. App. 4th 678, 88 Cal. Rptr. 3d 650 , the court held that a father in propria persona who filed 13 writs or appeals in his son's dependency matter was a vexatious litigant who was therefore subject to prefiling requirements found in the Code of Civ. Proc. § 391 before he could file additional appellate briefs. In cases where a party files numerous appeals or writs that are without merit, opposing counsel may be able to have the appellate court declare appellant to be a vexatious litigant, preventing additional frivolous filings.

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329

CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
L. Appeal and Extraordinary Writs

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.191

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.191 Review by Rule 8.452 Extraordinary Writ Petition

[1] In General

[a] Notice of Intent to File Writ Petition

The current rules of court for extraordinary writ petitions challenging the termination of services and setting of a Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing are now Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.450, and 8.452. Originally the rule provisions for these writ petitions were found in Cal. Rules of Ct., former Rule 39.1B. Later they were moved to Cal. Rules of Ct., former Rules 38, and 38.1. As such, many published decisions resulting from these writ petitions have used the older rule numbers and practitioners and courts should be aware of the changes.

A Notice of Intent to File Writ Petition and Request for Record must be filed with the clerk of the court within 7 days of the date of the order setting the selection and implementation hearing or, if the order was made by a referee not sitting as a temporary judge, within 7 days after the order of the referee becomes final. Judicial Council form JV-820 (Notice of Intent to File Writ Petition and Request for Record) may be used for this purpose. Where the party received notice by mail only of the order setting the hearing pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26, the period for filing the notice of intent to file a writ and the request for record is 12 days after the date the clerk mailed the notification [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.450(e)]. The notice of intent to file a writ petition must be signed by the party intending to file the writ petition unless, based on a declaration by the attorney of record, the court of appeal finds good cause to waive the party-signature requirement [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.450(e)(3); Janice J. v. Superior Court (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 690, 691-692, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 227 ; Suzanne J. v. Superior Court (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 785, 788, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 25 ; Guillermo G. v. Superior Court (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 1168, 1172-1174, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 748] . Where the notice of intent to file a writ petition is filed on behalf of the child, the attorney of record for the child must sign the notice [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.450(e)(3)].

[b] Preparation of the Record

Upon the filing of a Notice of Intent to File Writ Petition and Request for Record, the clerk of the court shall immediately assemble the record, including immediately notifying the court reporter by telephone and in writing to prepare and deliver the reporter's transcript within 12 days. The clerk must prepare the clerk's transcript within 20 days after the notice of intent is filed. The record must include all the minute orders and reports from the juvenile court file, the notice of intent, proof of service, the reporter's transcript from all sessions of the hearing at which the order setting a selection and implementation hearing was made, and any additional documents or evidence which were considered by the court at the hearing [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.450(f)-(g), 8.404(a)]. In those cases where the reviewing court requires additional records or transcripts, the court may grant up to 15 additional days for the preparation and submission of the additional clerk's or reporter's transcripts [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.452(f); see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.452(e), eff. July 1, 2010]. Immediately on completion of the record, the clerk shall certify it and deliver it by the most expeditious means to the reviewing court. The clerk shall also transmit copies of the record to the petitioner and parties, or counsel of record, by any method which is as fast as the express mail service of the United States Postal Service. The clerk of the reviewing court is also required upon receipt of the record to notify all parties that the record has been filed and to indicate the date on which the 10-day period for the filing of the writ will expire [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.450(h)-(i)].

[c] Augmentation or Correction of Record by Petitioner

Any request by petitioner for augmentation or correction of the record must be filed within 5 days of receiving the initial record or within 10 days if the record exceeds 600 pages [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.452(f); see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.452(e), eff. July 1, 2010].

[d] Petition Requirements

The petition must be served on all parties entitled to receive notice under Welf. and Inst. Code § 294, and to any CASA and de facto parent, and filed within 10 days after the filing of the record in the reviewing court [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.452(c)-(d)]. The petition may be filed on Judicial Council form Writ Petition--Juvenile (JV-825) or other petition for extraordinary writ. Those petitions which are filed on the Judicial Council form will be accepted by the reviewing court. All petitions shall be liberally construed in favor of their sufficiency [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.452]. Thus, these writs should not be denied on technical grounds of format [Cresse S. v. Superior Court (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 947, 955, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 56] .

Nevertheless, "litigants must not be misled by the brevity of form No. JV-825." An adequate record and points and authorities are still required [Rayna R. v. Superior Court (1993) 20 Cal. App. 4th 1398, 1406-1407, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 259] . Indeed, one appellate court has said that "use of the truncated Judicial Council form petition, without more, is the functional equivalent of a request for Wende review" [Nahid H. v. Superior Court (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 1051, 1056, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 281] . The extraordinary writ petition must summarize the factual basis for the petition, although it need not repeat the facts as they appear in the attached or submitted record, provided that references to specific portions of the record and their significance to the issues raised, as well as any disputed aspects of the record, be noted to assist the reviewing court. Points and authorities in support of the petition must be attached [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.452(b); see Rayna R. v. Superior Court (1993) 20 Cal. App. 4th 1398, 1407, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 259 (emphasizing the need for points and authorities)].

The writ petition should be dismissed as abandoned if it does not summarize the facts supporting the petition, refer to specific portions of the record, relate the facts of the case to the error alleged, note any disputed aspects of the record, and have attached a memorandum of points and authorities that is actually particularized to the specific case [Cheryl S. v. Superior Court (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 1000, 1005, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 520 ; Cresse S. v. Superior Court (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 947, 955, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 56] . As noted by one appellate court, "counsel are enjoined to function as professionals, not as mere scriveners" [Nahid H. v. Superior Court (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 1051, 1056, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 281] . The fact that a trial attorney may be paid a flat fee that does not provide extra compensation for such writs does not relieve counsel of the obligation to prepare a sufficient writ [Cresse S. v. Superior Court (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 947, 955, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 56] . Nevertheless, where refusal to consider an inadequate petition would "risk grave injustice" due to the unusual facts of the case, a court may choose not to dismiss an otherwise insufficient petition [Nahid H. v. Superior Court (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 1051, 1055-1056, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 281] .

[e] Augmentation Request and Response

Any request by a responding party for augmentation of the record shall be filed within 5 days of the filing of the writ petition. Any responding brief must be served and filed within 10 days of the filing of the writ petition, or within 15 days after filing if the writ petition was served by mail, or within 10 days of any request by the reviewing court for a response, unless a shorter time is designated by the reviewing court [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.452(c), (f); see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.452(e), eff. July 1, 2010].

[f] Oral Argument

Oral argument "shall be held" no later than 30 days after the response is filed or due to be filed, unless waived or unless the time period for argument is extended for good cause by the court [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.452(h); see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.452(g), eff. July 1, 2010].

[g] Decision on the Merits

The purpose of the rules is to encourage and assist appellate courts to determine the writ petitions on their merits and to achieve a meritorious review by the reviewing court of the issues raised in the writ petition within the 120-day period for the holding of the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing. The rules indicate that absent "exceptional circumstances" the appellate court "must" determine such petitions on the merits by written opinion [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.452(i); see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.452(h), eff. July 1, 2010]. Unfortunately, not all appellate courts have accepted this responsibility. Where the court does not routinely determine all such writ petitions on the merits, parents clearly suffer since their challenges are not determined until long after the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing. In dealing with the lives of children and families, such delay is almost inevitably detrimental if the challenge has any merit to it at all. Nevertheless, practitioners need to be familiar with what the practice of the appellate court is in their district or division and act accordingly.

Where courts of appeal do routinely render decisions on the merits in these writs proceedings, they have not been consistent in the past as to the procedures utilized. At least one appellate court issued either an alternative writ or an order to show cause [see In re Shaundra L. (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 303, 314-316, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 299] . Others believed that neither an alternative writ nor an order to show cause were required and instead utilized a procedure of briefing followed by an opportunity for oral argument [see, e.g., Joyce G. v. Superior Court (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 1501, 1506, 1509-1510, 45 Cal. Rptr. 2d 805 ; Steve J. v. Superior Court (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 798, 805-810, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 731] . However, the Judicial Council has since mandated that in all cases where the appellate court intends to issue a decision on the merits, it must issue either an order to show cause or an alternative writ [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.452(e); see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.452(d), eff. July 1, 2010; but see Maribel M. v. Superior Court (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 1469, 1473-1477, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 536 (finding these requirements as previously set forth in Cal. Rules of Ct., former Rule 39.1B to be unconstitutional)].

[h] Notice of Decision

Any notice of decision shall be promptly transmitted by the clerk of the reviewing court to the parties. Where the reviewing court has directed an order to the trial court the clerk of the reviewing court shall also promptly transmit a certified copy of the order to that court. If the writ or order prohibits or stays a proceeding set to occur within seven days, or in any other urgent situation, the clerk of the reviewing court shall make a reasonable effort to give telephone notice to the clerk of the trial court, in which case the juvenile court clerk must then notify the judicial officer most directly concerned by the order [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.452(i)(2)-(3); see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.452(h)(2)-(3), eff. July 1, 2010]. The clerk of the reviewing court is not required to give telephonic notice of the summary denial of a writ, unless a stay had been previously issued and will be dissolved [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.452(i)(4); see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.452(h)(4), eff. July 1, 2010].

[2] No Stay of Dependency Proceedings

The rules also provide that no request for a stay of the hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 shall be granted by the appellate court unless there is an exceptional showing of good cause [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.452(g); see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.452(f), eff. July 1, 2010].

[3] Trial Counsel Is Responsible for Writ Petition

Trial counsel is responsible for the filing of the writ petition [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.450(c); see Rayna R. v. Superior Court (1993) 20 Cal. App. 4th 1398, 1403-1405, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 259] . Such trial counsel are encouraged to seek assistance from, or consult with, attorneys experienced in writ procedures [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.450(c)]. In the absence of an attorney, the party is responsible for the filing of the writ [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.450(c)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Competent Counsel and Writ Practice. The simultaneous enactment of these writ requirements and the provision of Welf. & Inst. Code § 317.5(a) for competent counsel makes it imperative that all attorneys practicing in dependency proceedings, regardless of the party they represent, learn at least the basics of how to draft and respond to extraordinary writ petitions. Under the requirements established by the Judicial Council, competent counsel in dependency proceedings are to be familiar with the procedures for filing petitions for extraordinary writs [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.660(d)(1)]. Local juvenile courts and county bar associations should be encouraged to establish ongoing seminars and training programs to ensure attorneys practicing in juvenile dependency cases achieve this basic level of competency.

[4] Failure to File Writ Precludes Later Appellate Review

The failure to file a petition for extraordinary writ review as specified in the rules precludes that party from obtaining any subsequent review on appeal of the findings and orders setting the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(l); but see discussion in § 328.190 regarding limited exceptions]. Nevertheless, a writ petition challenging the termination of services and the setting of a selection and implementation hearing should only be filed where there is merit to the challenge [Cresse S. v. Superior Court (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 947, 956, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 56] .

[5] Time Lines for Writ Are Generally Mandatory

The time lines set forth in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.450 and 8.452 for the filing of the Notice of Intent and of the actual writ petition (see discussion in [1], above) are mandatory absent some showing of good cause [Jonathan M. v. Superior Court (1995) 39 Cal. App. 4th 1826, 1830-1831, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 688 (dismissing writ petition when notice of intent was filed one day late); Karl S. v. Superior Court (1995) 34 Cal. App. 4th 1397, 1403-1405, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 84 (dismissing writ petition when notice of intent was filed two months late)].

[6] Confidentiality of Dependency Writ Proceedings

As with dependency appeals, extraordinary writ proceedings in dependency cases are confidential. The record, petition, and responses may be inspected only court personnel, the parties, the attorneys for the parties, and such other persons as are designated by the appellate court, including individuals or entities that are considering filing an amicus curiae brief. All records, briefs, or other documents which are filed by the parties, and all opinions or orders filed by the court, must protect the anonymity of the parties. Further, the court of appeal may limit or even prohibit the admission of the public to hearings regarding the dependency writ proceedings [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.400(b); see T.N.G. v. Superior Court (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 767, 770, fn. 1, 94 Cal. Rptr. 813, 484 P.2d 981 ("Attorneys have similarly not mentioned a minor's last name in briefs and petitions."). See also discussion in § 328.190[12] (Confidentiality of Juvenile Dependency Appeals)].

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
L. Appeal and Extraordinary Writs

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.192

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.192 Traditional Writ Petitions

[1] In General

Traditional writs, also called extraordinary writs, are becoming more common in juvenile matters and may be an effective way to obtain more immediate relief from a reviewing court. Proceedings for writ of mandate, prohibition, and certiorari are governed by the Code of Civ. Proc. §§ 1067-1110(b), and Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.486. Traditional writs are discretionary writs, however, and appellate courts will entertain these writs and render a decision on the merits only in extraordinary circumstances [Babb v. Superior Court (1971) 3 Cal. 3d 841, 851, 92 Cal. Rptr. 179, 479 P.2d 379].

Courts will generally not grant writ relief unless there is no plain, speedy, or adequate remedy in the ordinary course of the law [Code of Civ. Proc. §§ 1068(a), 1086, 1103(a)]. If a right to a direct appeal exists, the petitioner must show some special reason why an appeal would be inadequate based on the specific facts of petitioner's case [Phelan v. Superior Court (1950) 35 Cal. 2d 363, 370, 217 P.2d 951 ; see also Oceanside Union School Dist. v. Superior Court (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 180, 185, n.4, 373 P.2d 439 ("In most cases ... the parties must be relegated to a review of the order on appeal from the final judgment.")].

PRACTICE TIP:

Monitor Deadline for Filing Notice Of Appeal. Most traditional writ petitions are summarily denied, without reaching the merits, and thus do not preclude the filing of an appeal. A party filing a traditional writ petition should monitor the deadline for filing a notice of appeal so the notice can be filed, if desired, should the appellate court not decide the traditional writ petition before the time to appeal expires, or should the court summarily deny the writ petition during that time.

In order to have standing to seek a writ, a party must be beneficially interested and have some special interest to be served or some particular right to be preserved or protected [Code of Civ. Proc. §§ 1086, 1103(a); Syngenta Crop Protection, Inc. v. Helliker (2006) 138 Cal. App. 4th 1135, 1181, 42 Cal. Rptr. 3d 191] . Writ petitions must be verified [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.486(a)(4)].

In addition, counsel preparing the writ petition is responsible for preparing an "adequate record," including copies of the ruling from which the petitioner seeks review, and all documents and exhibits submitted to the court supporting and opposing the petitioner's position [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.486(b)(1)]. This is an important requirement, which dependency counsel must be sure not to overlook. If an adequate record on which to determine the merits of the writ petition is not filed with the writ petition, it will be summarily denied.

A reporter's transcript of the proceeding in question must also be submitted, and if a transcript is not available, the record must include a declaration by counsel explaining why the transcript is not available and "fairly summarizing the proceedings," or providing the court with an expected date by which the transcript will be submitted to the reviewing court. If counsel proceeds by the latter course, counsel must provide the court with a date upon which the transcript will be submitted that is before any action requested of the reviewing court, aside from a request for a stay [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.486(b)(1), (3)].

Aside from specific statutory time limits that apply to matters outside the dependency context, there is no general statutory time limit on filing traditional writ petitions. Some courts have imposed a judicially created 60-day time limit generally applicable to appeals, but reviewing courts have discretion to hear a traditional writ petition filed beyond this time limit [People v. Superior Court (Brent) (1992) 2 Cal. App. 4th 675, 682, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 375 ; Jones v. Superior Court (1980) 107 Cal. App. 3d 496, 499, 165 Cal. Rptr. 748]. If there has been a delay in filing a traditional writ petition, however, counsel should explain the reason for the delay and why the petition should still be heard.

PRACTICE TIP:

Whether to File a Traditional Writ Petition. Writs are rarely granted and are timely to prepare [In re Sheila B. (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 187, 198, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 482] . Counsel should carefully consider the likely outcome of filing a writ petition and should only do so in extraordinary circumstances. Appellate courts are only likely to entertain a traditional writ petition if it involves an issue of great importance or a significant legal issue, and even then it must be shown there is no adequate remedy under the law [Holtz v. Superior Court (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 296, 301 n.4, 475 P.2d 441 ; James B. v. Superior Court (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 1014, 1021, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 762] . Nevertheless, many believe too few traditional writ petitions are filed in dependency cases, and counsel should be alert to those circumstances in which a timely traditional writ petition may be the only effective means of review by a higher court.

[2] Writ of Supersedeas

A writ of supersedeas is an auxiliary writ that suspends the trial court's authority to compel execution of its appealed judgment or order. Its purpose is to preserve appellate jurisdiction pending review by appeal and a ruling on the merits [California Code of Civil Procedure § 923; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.112(a)]. There are two prerequisites to filing a writ of supersedeas: first, a notice of appeal must be filed and included with the writ [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.112(a)]. Second, the petitioner must exhaust trial court remedies [Eisenberg, Horvitz and Weiner, Cal. Prac. Guide: Civil Appeals & Writs (TRG 2006 rev.) § 7:276, 7.278, p. 7-56].

In order to prevail in a writ of supersedeas, the petitioner must show that irreparable harm will occur if the petition to preserve the status quo pending the appeal is not granted [California Table Grape Commission v. Dispoto (1971) 14 Cal. App. 3d 314, 316, 92 Cal. Rptr. 268]. In addition, the petitioner must establish that the underlying appeal has merit, although no showing the petitioner will prevail is required, since that is reserved for the appeal itself [Deepwell Homeowners' Protective Ass'n v. City Council of Palm Springs (1965) 239 Cal. App. 2d 63, 66-67, 48 Cal. Rptr. 321 (petitioner must show "substantial questions" will be raised in the appeal)]. The petitioner may request the reviewing court to issue an immediate stay pending a ruling on the petition [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.112(c), 8.116].

Writs of supersedeas are especially appropriate in dependency cases where the juvenile court makes an order that places a child at immediate risk, since the child will have already been exposed to the risk of harm while the appeal is pending. These writs have been granted in numerous dependency cases to stay enforcement of the judgment pending the appeal [see, e.g., In re Elijah S. (2005) 125 Cal. App. 4th 1532, 1541, 24 Cal. Rptr. 3d 16 (release of juvenile court records of deceased child); In re Emmanuel R. (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 452, 455, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 320 (Interstate Compact on Placement of Children does not apply to court-ordered visits); In re Santos Y. (2001) 92 Cal. App. 4th 1274, 1281, 112 Cal. Rptr. 2d 692 (order removing child from foster home and placing child in another state)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Clearly Alert the Court. If you are asking the reviewing court for an immediate stay pending its full review of the writ petition, be clear about the request on the cover of the writ petition. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.116 requires the cover "prominently" include the notice "STAY REQUESTED," and other specific information about the proceeding or act sought to be stayed. In addition to putting that information on the cover, be sure to stress in your introduction and your prayer that you are seeking and immediate temporary stay pending full decision on the writ petition.

Finally, the petitioner must include the name of the trial court, the department, and the name and phone number of the trial judge involved in the case. This must either be on the cover or in the beginning of the text [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.116(b)]. If these additional rules are not followed, the reviewing court may decline to consider the request for writ of supersedeas or temporary stay [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.116(c)]. It is also wise to include fax numbers for all parties and the juvenile court on the proof of service so the reviewing court can inform the parties and the court quickly if it issues the stay.

PRACTICE TIP:

Whether to File a Traditional Writ Petition. Writs are rarely granted and are timely to prepare [In re Sheila B. (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 187, 198, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 482]. Counsel should carefully consider the likely outcome of filing a writ petition and should only do so in extraordinary circumstances. Appellate courts are only likely to entertain a traditional writ petition if it involves an issue of great importance or a significant legal issue, and even then it must be shown there is no adequate remedy under the law [Holtz v. Superior Court (1970) 3 Cal.3d 296, 301, fn. 4, 475 P. 2d 441 ; James B. v. Superior Court (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 1014, 1021, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 762]. Nevertheless, many believe too few traditional writ petitions are filed in dependency cases, and counsel should be alert to those circumstances in which a timely traditional writ petition may be the only effective means of review by a higher court.

[3] Writ of Mandamus

A writ of mandamus, or mandate, is generally used to compel the performance of an act or mandatory duty by the trial court if petitioner has a beneficial interest in compelling that duty and a clear legal right relief to the relief sought. Writs of mandate are governed by the Code of Civ. Proc. §§ 1085-1097 and Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.486. Any court may issue a writ of mandate to any inferior tribunal or to any corporation, board, or person [Code Civ. Proc. § 1085(a).]. As noted above, courts will generally not grant a writ of mandate unless there is no plain, speedy, or adequate remedy in the ordinary course of the law [Code Civ. Proc. § 1086].

Courts of Appeal may grant a writ of mandate in order to resolve issues of great public importance and where a quick resolution is necessary, issues often common to juvenile dependency matters. For example, in Jeff M. v. Superior Court (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 1238, 1243-1244, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 343 , the court noted that "[w]hile each division of the court is vitally important to the litigants and to society, there is no division of greater importance than the juvenile court, which deals with the sensitive parent-child relationship and the potential of horrendous damage to children." There, after more than one year of continued hearings, the court issued a writ of mandate ordering the juvenile court to conduct a contested jurisdictional and dispositional trial every day until completion [Jeff M. v. Superior Court (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 1238, 1243-1244, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 343 ; see also Ingrid E. v. Superior Court (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 751, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 407 (writ issued where juvenile court abused its discretion when it denied request for contested Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.22 hearing); Rosa S. v. Superior Court (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 1181, 1187-1188, 122 Cal. Rptr. 2d 866 ("dependency cases are among the most compelling that come before the superior court"; writ issued where juvenile court erroneously denied reunification services to mother entitled to receive them); Taylor M. v. Superior Court (2003) 106 Cal. App. 4th 97, 107-111, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 502 (child entitled to evidentiary hearing before court dismissed petition)].

Courts may also deny petitions for writ of mandate on the merits [see, e.g., Los Angeles County Department of Children and Family Services v. Superior Court (2003) 112 Cal. App. 4th 509, 513, 5 Cal. Rptr. 3d 182 (DCFS petition for writ of mandate seeking removal from particular placement denied since Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.4 doesn't apply to existing placements); Los Angeles County Department of Children and Family Services v. Superior Court (2005) 126 Cal. App. 4th 144, 146-147, 24 Cal. Rptr. 3d 256 (mandamus proper to challenge erroneous placement under Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.4, but writ petition denied since issue was moot); Melinda K. v. Superior Court (2004) 116 Cal. App. 4th 1147, 1150, 11 Cal. Rptr. 3d 129 (parent couldn't appeal reasonable services finding when services were continued, but appeal treated as petition for writ of mandate; writ petition denied where substantial evidence supported finding); Joe B. v. Superior Court (2002) 99 Cal. App. 4th 23, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 722 (parent cannot both appeal and also seek writ relief from order denying reunification services)].

[4] Writ of Prohibition

In general, writs of prohibition are used to restrain or prevent judicial action taken without or in excess of jurisdiction [Code Civ. Proc. § 1102]. Like a writ of mandate, courts will entertain writs of prohibition upon the verified petition of a person beneficially interested and where no other plain, speedy, or adequate remedy exists [Code Civ. Proc. § 1103(a)].

A court will issue a writ of prohibition when the trial court judge refuses to disqualify himself or herself when required to do so under Code Civ. Proc. § 170.6 [Calhoun v. Superior Court (1958) 51 Cal. 2d 257, 262, 331 P.2d 648], or where the hearing officer questions witnesses called by the parties to the point of establishing the agency's case for it, thereby violating the parent's right to due process [Lois R. v. Superior Court (1971) 19 Cal. App. 3d 895, 903, 97 Cal. Rptr. 158].

PRACTICE TIP:

Which Writ Petition to File. Writs of mandate and prohibition are similar in several aspects and are sometimes used interchangeably. Consider asking for both types of relief in your writ petition. This gives the reviewing court more leeway in granting appropriate relief [Teresa J. v. Superior Court (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 366, 125 Cal. Rptr. 2d 506 (petitions for mandate and prohibition filed seeking review of court order invalidating relinquishment; mandate granted;) In re Carmen M. (2005) 141 Cal. App. 4th 478, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 117 (petition for mandate and prohibition filed to set aside court order requiring dependent child to undergo drug testing; mandate denied)].

[5] Writ of Habeas Corpus

Habeas corpus is a process guaranteed by both federal and state Constitutions to obtain prompt judicial release from illegal restraint [Cal. Const., Art. I, § 11; U.S. Const., Art. I,, § 9]. Use of the writ in California is governed by Pen. Code § 1473, et seq., and Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.380 and 8.384. Practitioners unfamiliar with the writ of habeas corpus and its use in the dependency system, particularly regarding claims of ineffective assistance of counsel, should review the excellent concurring opinion of Justice Bamattre-Manoukian in the case of In re Paul W. (2007) 151 Cal. App. 4th 37, 60 Cal. Rptr. 3d 329 .

The normal function of the writ is set forth in Pen. Code § 1473(a): "[E]very person unlawfully imprisoned or restrained of his liberty, under any pretense whatever, may prosecute a writ of habeas corpus, to inquire into the cause of such imprisonment or restraint." As the California Supreme Court stated: "Habeas corpus has become a proper remedy in this state to collaterally attack a judgment of conviction which has been obtained in violation of fundamental constitutional rights. [Citations.] The denial of a fair and impartial trial amounts to a denial of due process of law [citation] and is a miscarriage of justice within the meaning of that phrase as used in section 4, article VI, of the Constitution of this state. [Citations.]" [In re Harris (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 813, 825-826, 855 P.2d 391].

Habeas corpus will not ordinarily lie as a substitute for an appeal or as a form of second appeal [In re Harris (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 813, 825, 855 P. 2d 391]. The general rule is that habeas corpus is reserved as an avenue of relief to those for whom the standard appellate system failed to operate properly. Moreover, in such cases, the habeas corpus petition should normally be filed in conjunction with the direct appeal [see People v. Pope (1979) 23 Cal. 3d 412, 426-427, n.17, 152 Cal. Rptr. 732]. Habeas corpus cannot serve as a substitute for an appeal, and, in the absence of special circumstances constituting an excuse for failure to employ that remedy, a writ of habeas corpus will not lie where the claimed errors could have been, but were not, raised in a timely appeal [In re Dixon (1953) 41 Cal. 2d 756, 759, 264 P.2d 513].

" 'Because the rules on habeas corpus petitions evolved in the context of prisoners asserting unlawful confinement or conditions of confinement, they do not fit the dependency context well' " [In re Paul W. (2007) 151 Cal. App. 4th 37, 53, 60 Cal. Rptr. 3d 329 , quoting Abbott, et al, Cal. Juv. Dependency Prac. (Cont. Ed. Bar 2006 supp.) Appeals and Writs, § 10.113, p. 586]. Nonetheless, writs of habeas corpus are used in various types of child custody proceedings. For example, the writ will lie when a person entitled to custody is denied custody [Adoption of Alexander S. (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 857, 867-868, 750 P.2d 778]. It is also appropriate to protect a child from imminent danger [In re Dowell (1935) 4 Cal. App. 2d 688, 41 P.2d 596]. But courts are split as to whether or not a parent can challenge an order terminating parental rights by way of a writ of habeas corpus [see In re Meranda P. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 1143, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 913 (Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(i) limits review of termination order to direct appeal only); In re Ronald V. (1993) 13 Cal. App. 4th 1803, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 334 ; but see In re Darlice C. (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 459, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 472 (parent entitled to seek review of termination order by writ of habeas corpus); In re O.S. (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 1402, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 571 ; In re Carrie M. (2001) 90 Cal. App. 4th 530, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 856]. In addition, habeas petitions are proper vehicles to raise claims of ineffective assistance of counsel in dependency cases [In re Paul W. (2007) 151 Cal. App. 4th 37, 60 Cal. Rptr. 3d 329 ; In re Darlice C. (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 459, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 472]. But the fact that a parent is a party to the dependency proceedings does not mean that parent will have standing as a party in a habeas corpus proceeding for ineffective assistance of counsel as to the other parent [In re Paul W. (2007) 151 Cal. App. 4th 37, 65, 60 Cal. Rptr. 3d 329]. For a discussion of ineffective assistance of counsel claims, see § 328.193[4].

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
L. Appeal and Extraordinary Writs

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.193

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.193 Claims of Ineffective Assistance of Counsel

[1] Statutory Right

Effective January 1, 1995, all parties in dependency proceedings who are represented by counsel are statutorily entitled to competent counsel [Welf. & Inst. Code § 317.5]. This statutory entitlement to competent counsel must be distinguished from the due process right to competent counsel under the federal constitution that has been found by the courts to exist in certain limited circumstances in dependency proceedings [see In re Arturo A. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 229, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 131 ; In re Emilye A. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1695, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 294 ; discussion in [2], below].

In order to help accomplish the goal of competent counsel in dependency cases, the Judicial Council adopted state rules regarding the appointment of competent counsel in dependency proceedings [Welf. & Inst. Code § 317.6(a); see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.660].

The California rule for competency of counsel in dependency proceedings defines "competent counsel" as "an attorney who is a member in good standing of the State Bar of California, who has participated in training in the law of juvenile dependency, and who demonstrates adequate forensic skills, knowledge and comprehension of the statutory scheme, the purposes and goals of dependency proceedings, the specific statutes, rules of court, and cases relevant to such proceedings, and procedures for filing petitions for extraordinary writs" [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.660(d)(1)].

The state rule also requires that attorneys appointed in dependency cases have either completed a minimum of eight hours of training or education in dependency proceedings or have sufficient recent experience in dependency cases in which the attorney has demonstrated competence. In addition to training on the law, training and education for dependency attorneys must include information regarding child development, child abuse and neglect, and services and efforts designed to achieve family preservation and reunification. Attorneys appointed in dependency cases are to complete a minimum of eight hours of continuing dependency education within every three years [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.660(d)(3)]. Attorneys are also expected to meet regularly with their clients, including child clients, to contact social workers and other professionals associated with the case, to work with other counsel and the court to resolve cases where possible, and to adhere to the mandated time lines established for dependency cases [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.660(d)(4)].

The superior court of each county was to amend its local rules regarding the representation of parties in dependency proceedings on or before January 1, 2002. These local rules are to address time lines and procedures for settlements, mediation, discovery and other issues related to contested hearings. They are also to address procedures for the screening, training and appointment of counsel in dependency cases. Minimum standards of experience, training and education are also to be established by the local rules, as are procedures for reviewing and resolving complaints by parties regarding the performance of attorneys. Additionally, the local rules are to address procedures for informing the court of interests of the child which may require further investigation, intervention or litigation [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.660(a)].

All attorneys in dependency cases, including attorneys for the social services agency, court-appointed counsel, and counsel who volunteer their services, are required by statute to participate in domestic violence training if available through existing programs at no cost to the county [Welf. & Inst. Code § 218.5]. While this statutory provision is not directly linked to the requirements for competent counsel, the knowledge and ability of attorneys to recognize and handle family violence issues is important in many dependency cases. Counties should therefore include this training among their requirements for dependency attorneys. In some cases, challenges claiming ineffective assistance of counsel may include the attorney's failure to appropriately handle domestic violence issues within the dependency case.

The statutory right to competent counsel found in Welf. & Inst. Code § 317.5(a) is still relatively new and hence does not yet have fully developed case law to interpret it [In re Kristin H. (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 1635, 1660, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 722] . It is clear, however, that claims of a violation of the statutory right to counsel must be timely made [In re Kristin H. (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 1635, 1667, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 722 ("untimeliness may in many cases preclude review of claims of ineffective assistance of counsel"), and cases cited there]. Moreover, unlike cases where a violation of the constitutional right to counsel is made and the claimant must first establish that the constitutional right to such counsel exists under the facts of that particular case, an analysis of a statutory right to competent counsel claim, if timely raised, will start instead with the question of whether counsel was ineffective, followed by the question of whether any prejudice has been shown [In re Kristin H. (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 1635, 1667-1672, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 722] . This is because the statutory right to competent representation is already established by the statute itself.

[2] Federal Constitutional Right

[a] Factors to Consider

A federal due process constitutional right to effective counsel only exists in those situations where the right to counsel rises to a constitutional level [Katheryn S. v. Superior Court (2000) 82 Cal. App. 4th 958, 971-972, 98 Cal. Rptr. 2d 741] . In analyzing a claim to a federal constitutional right to effective counsel the court should consider [In re Arturo A. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 229, 238, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 131 ; In re Emilye A. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1695, 1707, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 294] :

- The nature of the proceedings from which the claim of ineffective counsel is being raised.

- A case-by-case analysis of the facts of the case and the interests involved, including the complexity of the case and the likelihood that counsel might sway the outcome.

- Whether counsel actually was ineffective.
- Whether the person raising the claim has been prejudiced by the ineffective representation.

[b] Nature of the Proceedings

In the case of In re Arturo A. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 229, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 131 , the court of appeal noted that in the cases of children declared dependents of the court prior to January 1, 1989, the parent's right to the appointment of counsel was statutory, not constitutional, since the parent was not threatened with termination of parental rights within the dependency proceedings as a potential outcome [In re Arturo A. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 229, 238, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 131 , citing In re Ammanda G. (1986) 186 Cal. App. 3d 1075, 1080, 231 Cal. Rptr. 372 , and In re James S. (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 930, 936, 278 Cal. Rptr. 295 ; but see In re Christina H. (1986) 182 Cal. App. 3d 47, 49, 227 Cal. Rptr. 41] .

With the enactment of Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26, however, termination of parental rights for dependent children was incorporated into the ongoing dependency review process, thus necessitating a new look at claims of ineffective assistance of counsel.

In the Arturo A. case, the court of appeal premised a parent's ability to assert a violation of the due process right to effective assistance of counsel on whether the particular hearing in which counsel was allegedly ineffective had the potential of termination of parental rights [In re Arturo A. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 229, 239-240, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 131] . The Arturo A. court included in the list of hearings that had such "potential" any of the review hearings that resulted in the setting of a selection and implementation hearing pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 as well as the selection and implementation hearing itself. It indicated that at any other hearing the right to counsel would only be a statutory right [In re Arturo A. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 229, 239-240, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 131] . Thus, the first step in claiming a violation of the constitutional right to counsel under Arturo A. is to show that the hearing the claim is raised from had the potential for the termination of parental rights. It was only after that initial hurdle was met that the Arturo A. court moved to a case-by-case analysis to determine if the constitutional right to effective counsel existed under the facts of that case [In re Arturo A. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 229, 238-240, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 131] .

[c] Case-by-Case Analysis

Shortly after the Arturo A. case was decided, a different appellate court handed down the case of In re Emilye A. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1695, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 294 , which came to a different conclusion. The Emilye A. decision utilized the three-prong test of Lassiter v. Department of Soc. Servs. (1981) 452 U.S. 18, 101 S. Ct. 2153, 68 L. Ed. 2d 640 , to determine if there was a federal due process right to counsel in that case.

Applying that test to the facts of the case before it, the court of appeal held that a father who was alleged to have molested his daughter had a federal due process right to counsel, and, therefore, to the effective assistance of counsel at the jurisdictional hearing, thereby implying that a right to effective assistance of counsel could potentially arise from any dependency hearing [In re Emilye A. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1695, 1711, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 294] .

Regardless of whether one follows the approach of In re Arturo A. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 229, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 131 (constitutional right to effective counsel can only arise from a hearing pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 or one terminating services and setting a selection and implementation hearing), or In re Emilye A. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1695, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 294 (constitutional right to effective counsel can potentially arise from any dependency hearing), a constitutional right to effective counsel only arises in dependency proceedings on a case-by-case basis.

Under the Arturo A. approach the question of whether the right to counsel rises to a federal constitutional dimension in a particular case "will depend upon the complexity of the issues presented and the likelihood that counsel might sway the outcome" [In re Arturo A. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 229, 238, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 131 , citing In re Christina P. (1985) 175 Cal. App. 3d 115, 128-129, 220 Cal. Rptr. 525] .

Under the Emilye A. approach, the three-pronged test noted in Lassiter v. Department of Soc. Servs. (1981) 452 U.S. 18, 101 S. Ct. 2153, 68 L. Ed. 2d 640 is used to determine if there is a due process right to counsel in a particular case [see also Mathews v. Eldridge (1976) 424 U.S. 319, 335, 96 S. Ct. 893, 47 L. Ed. 2d 18] . That three-pronged test requires the court to balance the private interest of the person raising the claim of ineffective assistance of counsel, the government's interests, including its interest in protecting the child, and the risk the procedures will lead to an erroneous decision in the absence of legal representation [In re Emilye A. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1695, 1708, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 294] . Noting that there is a presumption that there is no federal constitutional right to counsel in cases where the party is not subject to a loss of personal freedom, the Emilye A. court held that a court considering such a claim must balance the three factors and that the "net weight of such factors when so weighed must be sufficient to rebut that presumption and lead to the conclusion that due process requires the appointment of counsel" [In re Emilye A. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1695, 1708, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 294 , citing Lassiter v. Department of Soc. Servs. (1981) 452 U.S. 18, 27, 31, 101 S. Ct. 2153, 68 L. Ed. 2d 640 ; see also Katheryn S. v. Superior Court (2000) 82 Cal. App. 4th 958, 971-972, 98 Cal. Rptr. 2d 741 , citing In re Meranda P. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 1143, 1153, fn. 6, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 913] . This was the approach used by the court in the O.S. case in which it was found an alleged father had a federal constitutional right to counsel. In that case the attorney's failure to contact the alleged father, take steps to seek to establish his paternity, as he desired, or to challenge the lack of notice to the alleged father prevented him from seeking or attaining biological or presumed father status in the dependency case [In re O.S. (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 1402, 1407, 1410-1412, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 571] .

Under either the Arturo A. or Emilye A. approach it is clear that even when parental rights have been terminated pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26, not every case will give rise to a federal constitutional claim of ineffective assistance of counsel. Each case must be examined on its own facts to determine if a due process right to counsel exists [In re Arturo A. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 229, 238, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 131 ; In re Emilye A. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1695, 1708, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 294 ; see also Lassiter v. Department of Soc. Servs. (1981) 452 U.S. 18, 27, 31, 101 S. Ct. 2153, 68 L. Ed. 2d 640] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Ineffective Assistance of Counsel Claims. Whenever a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel is raised, the party making the claim should assert that both their statutory right to competent counsel [Welf. & Inst. Code § 317.5(a); In re Kristin H. (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 1635, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 722] , and their federal constitutional right to effective counsel [In re Arturo A. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 229, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 131 ; In re Emilye A. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1695, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 294] , have been violated [see In re Meranda P. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 1143, 1150-1151, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 913 (mother claiming violation of constitutional and statutory right to effective assistance of counsel)].

[3] Determining Claim Where Right Exists

[a] Determining Whether Counsel Was Ineffective

Where a federal constitutional right to effective assistance of counsel has been established or the claim is raised under the statutory right to competent counsel, the person raising the claim must meet the standards set forth in People v. Pope (1979) 23 Cal. 3d 412, 152 Cal. Rptr. 732, 590 P.2d 859 and Strickland v. Washington (1984) 466 U.S. 668, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674 . This involves a two-pronged test. The first prong of this test requires a showing that the attorney's representation fell below an objective standard of reasonableness under prevailing professional norms [In re Kristin H. (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 1635, 1667-1668, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 722 ; In re Emilye A. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1695, 1711, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 294 , quoting Strickland v. Washington (1984) 466 U.S. 668, 688, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674 ; see also In re Christina P. (1985) 175 Cal. App. 3d 115, 129, 220 Cal. Rptr. 525] .

For instance, given the admissibility of social studies and other materials pursuant to In re Malinda S. (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 368, 272 Cal. Rptr. 787, 795 P.2d 1244 , reasonably competent counsel need not object to admitting such materials [In re Christopher A. (1991) 226 Cal. App. 3d 1154, 1162] . Moreover, it is within the purview of a parent's attorney as diligent trial counsel to control ordinary trial strategy, including whether a particular witness should be called to testify, whether certain evidence should be sought to be introduced, and whether an objection should be made to evidence proffered by opposing counsel [In re Kerry O. (1989) 210 Cal. App. 3d 326, 333] . Thus, on the whole, appellate courts should avoid second-guessing an attorney's informed choice among tactical alternatives [People v. Pope (1979) 23 Cal. 3d 412, 424, 152 Cal. Rptr. 732, 590 P.2d 859] . There is also no requirement for competent counsel to file a writ petition where the facts of the case are clear that reunification services were adequate [Glen C. v. Superior Court (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 570, 584, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 103 (dealing with Cal. Rules of Ct., former Rule 39.1B)]. Thus, the mere fact that a parent's attorney did not file a writ to challenge the setting of a hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 does not automatically mean counsel was ineffective [Cresse S. v. Superior Court (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 947, 956, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 56] . Further, in one case the child's attorney had put her teenage client on the witness stand and questioned the child about her recantation of the molest allegations. In closing argument the attorney informed the court what the child's stated desire was, but also pointed out her duty to argue what was best and that the attorney disagreed with the child's recantation and desire to go home. The appellate court found the attorney was not ineffective because she "performed her duties under Welf. & Inst. Code, § 317, zealously and effectively by conducting a factual investigation and advocating a position, supported by the evidence, which served to protect the child's welfare" [In re Kristen B. (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 1535, 1542, 78 Cal. Rptr. 3d 495] .

The failure of a parent's attorney to raise a lack of notice issue was found to be ineffective assistance of counsel where a parent was not given notice of what could happen at a selection and implementation hearing, and subsequently failed to appear, resulting in parental rights being terminated [In re Anna M. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 463, 469, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 831] . In another case counsel for the parent filed a petition for extraordinary writ under Cal. Rules of Ct., former Rule 39.1B (now see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.452), but it was woefully deficient. The court of appeal pointed out that while such a petition should not be filed if there are no meritorious issues, if it is filed counsel must comply with the requirements for an adequate petition, including points and authorities that identify the issues being challenged, point out the factual support in the record, and offers argument and authorities to assist the court in determining the contested issues. Failure to do this may result in sanctions [Glen C. v. Superior Court (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 570, 583-584, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 103] . In a case involving an alleged father, the appellate court found the attorney's failure to contact the alleged father, to take steps to seek to establish his paternity as he desired, and to challenge the lack of notice to the alleged father that had occurred at previous hearings, was ineffective assistance of counsel [In re O.S. (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 1402, 1407, 1410-1412, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 571] .

For discussion of conflict issues regarding the representation of children, see § 328.62[3][b][i] -[iii].

[b] Prejudice Arising From Ineffective Representation

Where the claimant has established that his or her counsel was ineffective, there still must be a prima facie showing of prejudice arising from that ineffective representation [In re Eileen A. (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 1248, 1258-1260, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548 ; In re Kristin H. (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 1635, 1671-1672, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 722 ; In re Arturo A. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 229, 245, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 131] . This is the second prong of the two-pronged test. The standard is whether there is a "reasonable probability that, but for counsel's unprofessional errors, the result of the proceeding would have been different. A reasonable probability is a probability sufficient to undermine confidence in the outcome" [In re Emilye A. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1695, 1711, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 294 , quoting Strickland v. Washington (1984) 466 U.S. 668, 694, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674 ; see also In re Kristin H. (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 1635, 1668, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 722 , citing People v. Watson (1956) 46 Cal. 2d 818, 836, 299 P.2d 243] .

For example, in the case of In re Emilye A. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1695, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 294 , the attorney's failure to call the child as a witness did not meet the second prong of Pope and Strickland since there was no showing that except for counsel's error, the outcome in the case would have been different. There the child's statements in the social study were already admissible under exceptions to the hearsay rule, and even if not admissible, the social worker had testified to those statements and that testimony had not been objected to on appeal. Thus, there was no reasonable probability that the outcome would have been different if counsel had called the child to testify [In re Emilye A. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1695, 1712-1715, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 294] .

In another case, however, the court found that the prejudice "virtually leaps from the record." In that case an attorney had failed to raise the issue that the mother had not received notice of what might happen at the hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26. She had been led to believe that guardianship would be the outcome and was not advised of a change in recommendation. The result of counsel's failure to raise the notice issue was that the juvenile court went forward when the mother did not appear and terminated her parental rights. Had counsel raised the issue, the court would have been required to continue the matter [In re Anna M. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 463, 468, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 831] . Likewise, in the Eileen A. case, the appellate court found the mother's regular visitation, and taking her own steps to participate in counseling, parenting classes, Al-Anon, and to keep the perpetrator of the abuse out of her life made a petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 a "clear winner." Thus, it found the mother had made a prima facie showing of prejudice based on the failure of her trial counsel to file such a petition to vacate the setting of the Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing [In re Eileen A. (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 1248, 1260-1262, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548] . Further, in a case involving an alleged father who desired to establish his paternity and had made multiple attempts to contact his counsel, the appellate court found the attorney's failure to contact the alleged father, to take steps to seek to establish his paternity, and to challenge the lack of notice prevented the alleged father from seeking or attaining biological or presumed father status in the dependency case, established the prima facie evidence of prejudice required for a new hearing [In re O. S. (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 1402, 1407, 1409-1412].

Although the question of whether the claimant has made an adequate showing of prejudice does not have to be considered until after it has been demonstrated his or her counsel was ineffective, an appellate court need not evaluate whether counsel's performance was deficient before it looks at the question of prejudice. If no prejudice is shown, the court may reject a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel without ever having examined the question of whether counsel was actually ineffective or whether a conflict of interest existed for the attorney [In re Nada R. (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 1166, 1180, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 493] .

[4] Manner and Time for Raising Claim of Ineffective Counsel

It is generally recognized that claims of ineffective assistance of counsel are most appropriately raised through the filing of petition for extraordinary writ relief, usually a writ of habeas corpus [People v. Mendoza Tello (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 264, 267, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 437, 933 P.2d 1134 ; In re Darlice C. (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 459, 463, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 472] . Raising the claim as part of an appeal virtually ensures there will not be sufficient information in the record to establish ineffective assistance of counsel. This is because the reasons for the actions and inactions of trial counsel are not normally reflected in the record on appeal. Utilizing writ review as the vehicle for raising the claim of ineffective assistance of counsel allows the record to be supplemented with additional evidence, including declarations from trial counsel, the parent, or other individuals as appropriate [In re Arturo A. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 229, 243, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 131 ; see also In re Daisy D. (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 287, 292-295, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 242 (termination of parental rights affirmed where appeal failed to establish ineffective assistance or prejudice)]. Nevertheless, a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel can be raised by way of appeal if " 'there simply could be no satisfactory explanation' for trial counsel's action or inaction" [In re Eileen A. (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 1248, 1254, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548 , quoting People v. Pope (1979) 23 Cal. 3d 412, 426, 152 Cal. Rptr. 732, 590 P.2d 859 ; see also In re Darlice C. (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 459, 463, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 472 ; In re Dennis H. (2001) 88 Cal. App. 4th 94, 98, fn. 1, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 705] . This will, of course, rarely be the case.

Whether the claim is based on a violation of the statutory or of the constitutional right to effective counsel, an ineffective counsel claim must be made in a timely manner or it will usually be lost. In one leading case on the issue, the appellate court considered the claim of a mother that her statutory and constitutional right to counsel and to effective counsel were violated at the numerous hearings throughout the dependency process which had preceded the hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 at which her parental rights were terminated. She had never appealed any of those previous orders, however, and had not filed a petition for extraordinary writ review of the decision setting the selection and implementation hearing [In re Meranda P. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 1143, 1150-1151, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 913] . The question the court addressed was whether the "waiver rule" precluded the subsequent challenge of the orders made at the previous hearings that were now long since final even though the claim was based on a lack of effective assistance of counsel. In a particularly thorough and well-reasoned decision, the court of appeal analyzed the question an d determined that the waiver rule prevents a challenge of those previous findings and orders on a later appeal from the termination of parental rights. Basing its decision on the many safeguards provided to parents throughout the dependency process, the shift of focus to the needs of the child after the termination of reunification services and parental rights, and the interests of the child and the state in the finality of proceedings [In re Meranda P. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 1143, 1151-1160, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 913] , the court held that once parental rights are terminated, a parent cannot challenge the findings and orders of the juvenile court at earlier hearings based on a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel.

The holding in Meranda P. has been clarified in the case of In re Janee J. (1999) 74 Cal. App. 4th 198, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 634] . As the Janee J. court explained, "this is the crux of Meranda P.: the waiver rule will be enforced unless due process forbids it." It went on to note that "in the usual case, application of the waiver rule will note offend due process" [In re Janee J. (1999) 74 Cal. App. 4th 198, 208, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 634] . With this holding, the decisions in Meranda P., above, and In re Cathina W. (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 716, 719-724, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 480 , which had allowed a mother to raise issues from earlier hearings following the termination of her parental rights due to the failure to provide her with notice of the right to file a writ petition, and other notice errors, are found to be not in conflict. Nevertheless, rather than reconcile Meranda P. in the way the Janee J. court did, some courts have simply chosen to question or disagree with the Meranda P. analysis [In re Darlice C. (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 459, 464, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 472 ("we join several courts that have rejected or questioned In re Meranda P.'s analysis")]. Thus, there are a number of decisions and approaches practitioners and courts can look to in this regard.

A claim of ineffective assistance of counsel can still, of course, be raised on an appeal from an order terminating parental rights if the claimed ineffective representation occurred at the hearing at which parental rights were terminated. The same is true for any hearing where an appeal or extraordinary writ petition is timely filed and a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel at that hearing is raised. Moreover, the court in Meranda P. expressly did not decide whether it would apply the waiver rule to claims of ineffective assistance of counsel at prior hearings that are raised before parental rights are terminated [In re Meranda P. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 1143, 1160, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 913] . In one case an appellate court found the failure of trial counsel to file a Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 petition to vacate the setting of a Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing was so clearly ineffective assistance of counsel and prejudicial to the parent that the court allowed it to be raised in the appeal of the termination of parental rights [In re Eileen A. (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 1248, 1256-1258, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548] . Whether other appellate courts would go as far as the court did in Eileen A. is questionable. Nevertheless, it demonstrates the need for appellate counsel to raise a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel when appropriate, even if uncertain the challenge is timely, since the appellate court may follow the lead of Eileen A., rather than Meranda P.

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
L. Appeal and Extraordinary Writs

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.194

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.194 Harmless Error

[1] When Error Claimed Is Statutory

The traditional standard for answering the question of whether error was harmless in a dependency case is that found in People v. Watson (1956) 46 Cal. 2d 818, 299 P.2d 243 [In re Nalani C. (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 1017, 1028, 245 Cal. Rptr. 264 ; In re Justin L. (1987) 188 Cal. App. 3d 1068, 1078, 233 Cal. Rptr. 632] . That standard is whether it is reasonably probable that a result more favorable to the person appealing would have been reached if the error had not occurred [People v. Watson (1956) 46 Cal. 2d 818, 836, 299 P.2d 243 ; see also Cal. Const., art. VI, § 13]. This is also the standard that is applied to a violation of the statutory right to competent counsel pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 317.5(a) [In re Meranda P. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 1143, 1153, 1165, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 913 ; In re Kristin H. (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 1635, 1668, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 722 ; In re Malcolm D. (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 904, 914-919, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 148 ; In re Ronald R. (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 1186, 1195-1197, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 22] . This includes violations of the statutory right to competent counsel for children, which may arise in a number of contexts including conflicts of interest in the representation of sibling groups [In re Celine R. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 45, 59, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 432, 71 P.3d 787 (rejecting the conclusion of In re Patricia E. (1985) 174 Cal. App. 3d 1, 219 Cal. Rptr. 783 that standards from criminal cases should apply, including that errors in the representation of multiple defendants are not subject to harmless error analysis)].

[2] When Error Claimed Is of a Federal Constitutional Dimension

The question arises, however, as to what standard should be applied when the violation that has been shown is of a federal constitutional dimension such as a violation of federal constitutional due process, as distinguished from statutory due process, or that of the federal constitutional right to competent counsel pursuant to either In re Arturo A. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 229, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 131 , or In re Emilye A. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1695, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 294 . This is to be distinguished from error that may be alleged under the California Constitution, since the California Constitution mandates the standard "miscarriage of justice" or simple harmless error test in California cases [In re Celine R. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 45, 59-60, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 432, 71 P.3d 787 , citing People v. Watson (1956) 46 Cal. 2d 818, 836, 299 P.2d 243] . Some argue that the appropriate standard for error of a federal constitutional dimension must be that expressed in Chapman v. California (1967) 386 U.S. 18, 24, 87 S. Ct. 824, 17 L. Ed. 2d 705 , of harmless beyond a reasonable doubt, since the error is one of a constitutional dimension. It has even been argued that denial of a constitutional right to effective assistance of counsel in dependency and termination of parental rights cases should be reversal per se, although a harmless beyond a reasonable doubt standard was considered a "best alternative" [see Patton, Standards of Appellate Review for Denial of Counsel and Ineffective Assistance of Counsel in Child Protection and Parental Severance Cases, 27 Loyola Chicago L. J. 195 (1996)]. Such extreme standards are neither required nor appropriate in dependency cases even for the denial of a constitutional right. Nevertheless, the other argument occassionally heard, that the Watson standard for simple harmless error should apply, places too little weight on the denial of a constitutional right.

Unfortunately, where courts have utilized a standard for error of a constitutional dimension in dependency cases they have generally done so without actually analyzing the issue [see, e.g., In re Stacy T. (1997) 52 Cal. App. 4th 1415, 1426, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 319 ; see also In re Dolly D. (1995) 41 Cal. App. 4th 440, 446, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 691 , and In re Amy M. (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 849, 868, 283 Cal. Rptr. 788 , both citing without analysis Arizona v. Fulminante (1991) 499 U.S. 279, 111 S. Ct. 1246, 113 L. Ed. 2d 302] . Other courts have simply avoided the question [see, e.g., In re Laura H. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 1689, 1696, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 285 ("We need not resolve this conflict, however, for under either standard [the resolution of present issue remains the same]")].

It must be remembered, however, that the Chapman and Fulminante decisions were criminal cases in which the standard of proof at trial was that of beyond a reasonable doubt. Such is not the standard of proof in dependency proceedings or termination of parental rights cases even though such cases involve the constitutional right to parent. Instead the standard of proof is in some instances that of clear and convincing evidence [see In re Angelia P. (1981) 28 Cal. 3d 908, 915-922, 623 P.2d 198 ; Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(c)], and in others only a preponderance of the evidence [see Cynthia D. v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 242, 253-256, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 698, 851 P.2d 1307 ; Welf. & Inst. Code § 355].

The Chapman standard of harmless beyond a reasonable doubt is thus inappropriate in dependency cases even for a violation of the constitutional right to effective counsel. This appears to have been recognized by the court of appeal in the well-reasoned Meranda P. decision which considered the issue of the timeliness of claims of ineffective assistance of counsel and the principle of waiver [In re Meranda P. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 1143, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 913] . The court there was critical of the decision in In re Laura H. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 1689, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 285 and set forth in a footnote some of its concerns. In concluding that footnote, the court wrote: "The Laura H. court also applied the 'harmless beyond a reasonable doubt' standard of Chapman v. California (1967) 386 U.S. 18, 87 S. Ct.824, 17 L. Ed. 2d 705 , even though the criminal reasonable doubt standard of persuasion does not apply at any stage of a dependency proceeding" [In re Meranda P. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 1143, 1157-1158, fn. 9, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 913] . The court in Denny H. also noted the beyond a reasonable doubt standard of proof did not apply in dependency cases [Denny H. v. Superior Court (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 1501, 1514, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 89] . The proper standard of persuasion for harmless error regarding constitutional violations in dependency proceedings is not proof beyond a reasonable doubt.

The question remained what the appropriate standard for harmless error in dependency proceedings should be for violations of federal constitutional rights such as the constitutional right to effective assistance of counsel or denial of due process. That question was answered in the Denny H. case [Denny H. v. Superior Court (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 1501, 1512-1514, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 89] . Because most violations of federal constitutional rights in dependency cases, including the constitutional right to effective counsel where applicable, arise from a single act or hearing, the appropriate standard for harmless error for violations of federal constitutional rights should be that of clear and convincing evidence [cf. In re Angelia P. (1981) 28 Cal. 3d 908, 915-922, 623 P.2d 198 ; but see In re Andrew S.

(1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 541, 548-549, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 670] . This recognizes both the special nature and purpose of dependency proceedings as well as the importance of the right to parent, and assigns an increased significance to the federal constitutional error established, such as violation of the federal due process constitutional right to counsel [In re Arturo A. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 229, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 131 ; In re Emilye A. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1695, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 294] , over that of a statutory error, such as a violation of the statutory right to effective counsel which utilizes the simple harmless error standard [Welf. & Inst. Code § 317.5(a); In re Celine R. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 45, 59, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 432, 71 P.3d 787 ; In re Kristin H. (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 1635, 1668, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 722] . This was the conclusion reached by the Denny H. court [Denny H. v. Superior Court (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 1501, 1514, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 89 , citing Seiser & Kumli, California Juvenile Courts Practice and Procedure § 2.194[2] (Matthew Bender)]. The thorough analysis by that court should resolve this issue. Unfortunately, it has not.

One appellate court has expressly disagreed with the Denny H. decision in this regard, holding the correct standard for harmless error of a federal constitutional dimension in a dependency proceeding is indeed the Chapman standard of harmless beyond a reasonable doubt [In re Mark A. (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 1124, 1145, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 106] . The Mark A. Court suggested the Denny H. Court had mistakenly merged the burden of persuasion at the trial court with the burden of persuasion at the appellate court [In re Mark A. (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 1124, 1146, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 106] . It had not. Instead, it had impliedly recognized the reasoning used by the United States Supreme Court for the burden of proof at the trial court level for terminating the constitutionally protected right to parent was equally persuasive for the appropriate burden of harmless error at the appellate level in those same proceedings [Santosky v. Kramer (1982), 455 U.S. 745, 769-770, 102 S. Ct. 1388, 71 L. Ed. 2d 599].

The Court in Mark A. also felt the appellate court could take the burden of persuasion at the trial court level into account when deciding if federal constitutional error was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt [In re Mark A. (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 1124, 1145, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 106] . It could. But using two different standards of proof in the same analysis can be confusing. Indeed, even the Mark A. Court recognized such an analysis could yield different results depending on the burden of persuasion at the trial court level [In re Mark A. (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 1124, 1145, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 106] .

Finally, the Mark A. Court felt it inappropriate to balance a federal constitutional right against the state created right recognizing the special nature and purpose of dependency proceedings [In re Mark A. (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 1124, 1146, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 106] . The protection of children, preservation of families where appropriate, and the need of children to have safe, stable, permanent homes is not just a state recognized right, however [see, e.g., Santosky v. Kramer (1982), 455 U.S. 745, 789-790, 102 S. Ct. 1388, 71 L. Ed. 2d 599 (dis. opn. of Rehnquist, J.; "A stable, loving homelife is essential to a child's physical, emotional, and spiritual well-being"].

The California Supreme Court has noted the differences between criminal proceedings and dependency cases and explained its caution against using the criminal structural error doctrine in dependency proceedings to require automatic reversal [In re James F. (2008) 42 Cal. 4th 901, 915-917, 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 358, 174 P.3d 180] . But the harmless beyond a reasonable doubt standard also comes close to automatic reversal [Traynor, The Riddle of Harmless Error (1970) pp. 35, 43]. This is especially inappropriate in dependency cases because such proceedings involve evidence, such as psychological evidence, that is "rarely susceptible to proof beyond a reasonable doubt" [Santosky v. Kramer (1982), 455 U.S. 745, 768-769, 102 S. Ct. 1388, 71 L. Ed. 2d 599 ; see also In re Jasmon O. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 398, 430, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 85, 878 P.2d 1297 ("Without the testimony of psychologists, in many juvenile dependency and child custody cases superior courts and juvenile courts would have little or no evidence, and would be reduced to arbitrary decisions based upon the emotional response of the court")].

The Mark A. court emphasized, "The United States Constitution is the supreme law of the land" [In re Mark A. (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 1124, 1146, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 106] . It is. And it is the United States Supreme Court that is the supreme arbiter of what is required by the United States Constitution. The United States Supreme Court has never required a beyond a reasonable doubt standard at either the trial or appellate levels when dealing with federal constitutional rights in the context of the fundamental right to parent. Instead, it has applied the "elevated standard" of clear and convincing evidence standard [Santosky v. Kramer (1982), 455 U.S. 745, 764, 769-770, 102 S. Ct. 1388, 71 L. Ed. 2d 599]. California should do the same. The many valid reasons for not applying the beyond a reasonable doubt standard in dependency cases at the trial court level apply equally to appellate review. The California Supreme Court has not yet addressed this issue [In re James F. (2008) 42 Cal. 4th 901, 911 n.1, 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 358, 174 P.3d 180] . Interestingly, in the James F. case the Court found due process error in the appointment of a guardian ad litem was trial error that was harmless under the facts of that case, but did not indicate which standard of harmless error it was applying [In re James F. (2008) 42 Cal. 4th 901, 905, 918-919, 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 358, 174 P.3d 180] . Subsequent to the James F. decision, one appellate court has applied harmless beyond a reasonable doubt, without deciding the issue, because it "provides a more cautious approach in that if the error is harmless beyond a reasonable doubt it will also be harmless by clear and convincing evidence" [In re Esmeralda S. (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 84, 94, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 585] . Until the Supreme Court resolves this issue, practitioners and courts must be aware of the controversy and prepared to address it.

PRACTICE TIP:

Argue Alternative Standards. Until more courts have considered the Denny H. decision, parties would be wise to argue alternative standards. Appellants should argue the Chapman standard of harmless beyond a reasonable doubt should apply, but even the Denny H. standard of harmless by clear and convincing evidence has not been met. Respondents should argue the Denny H. standard applies, but even the Chapman standard has been met. This is consistent with the holding in Denny H. that recognized it was treading on new ground, and held that under either standard the error in that case was harmless [Denny H. v. Superior Court (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 1501, 1515, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 89] .

[3] Structural Error

The concept of structural error originated in the criminal context and involved basic protections without which a criminal trial could not reliably serve its function as a method for the determination of guilt or innocence, and no criminal punishment could be regarded as fundamentally fair [Arizona v. Fulminante (1991) 499 U.S. 279, 310, 111 S. Ct. 1246, 113 L. Ed. 2d 302]. The U.S. Supreme Court has held structural error " 'necessarily render[s] a criminal trial fundamentally unfair or an unreliable vehicle for determining guilt or innocence' " [Washington v. Recuenco (2006)548 U.S. 212, 126 S. Ct. 2546, 2551, 165 L. Ed. 2d 466 , quoting Neder v. United States (1999) 527 U.S. 1, 9, 119 S. Ct. 1827, 144 L. Ed. 2d 35]. On the other hand, "trial error" is error that occurs during the presentation of the criminal case. An error that occurs during the criminal trial process itself does not require automatic reversal because a court may quantitatively assess such error in the context of other evidence presented in order to determine whether the error was harmless [Arizona v. Fulminante (1991) 499 U.S. 279, 307-308, 111 S. Ct. 1246].

In more than 60 years, however, only in rare criminal cases has the high court held that an error is structural requiring automatic reversal [Arizona v. Fulminante (1991) 499 U.S. 279, 309-310, 111 S. Ct. 1246, 113 L. Ed. 2d 302 ; see also Neder v. United States (1999) 527 U.S. 1, 8, 119 S. Ct. 1827]. More often than not, the U.S. Supreme Court has found federal constitutional error in criminal cases subject to harmless error standards, rather than finding the error to require reversal per se. "[T]he Court has applied harmless-error analysis to a wide range of errors and has recognized that most constitutional errors can be harmless" [Arizona v. Fulminante (1991) 499 U.S. 279, 306, 312, 111 S. Ct. 1246, 113 L. Ed. 2d 302 (due process violation occurring with use of coerced confession subject to harmless error analysis, not structural error); see also Chapman v. California (1967) 386 U.S. 18, 87 S. Ct. 824, 17 L. Ed. 2d 705 (error not structural despite privilege against self-incrimination being violated when prosecution commented on defendant's failure to testify in a trial); Washington v. Recuenco (2006)548 U.S. 212, 126 S. Ct. 2546, 2553, 165 L. Ed. 2d 466 (harmless error applied to Blakely violation for failure to submit fact to jury that serves as basis for sentencing enhancement)]. Thus, structural error rarely applies even in criminal cases.

Nonetheless, some courts have applied the theory of structural error to errors of a federal constitutional dimension in dependency cases [see, e.g., In re Jasmine G. (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 1109, 1115-1116, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 394 (agency failed to make any attempt to provide parent notice of Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing); In re DeJohn B. (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 100, 102, 109-110, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 649 (failure to make any effort to provide notice of review hearing at which services were terminated and a Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing was set); In re C.G. (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 27, 33-34, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 872 (error in appointment process for guardian ad litem); Judith P. v. Superior Court (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 535, 554-557, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 14 (requirement for review report to be filed 10 days prior to hearing, but see Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.05 enacted thereafter)]. Most courts considering a claim of structural error, however, have rejected the application of structural error, holding that a harmless error standard is appropriate [see, e.g., In re Celine R. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 45, 58-59, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 432, 71 P.3d 787 (appointment of separate children's counsel); In re Sabrina H. (2007) 149 Cal. App. 4th 1403, 1419-1420 & n.14, 57 Cal. Rptr. 3d 863 (notice)]. To date they have not gone so far as to say structural error does not apply in dependency cases. The California Supreme Court, however, has come close.

In a case dealing with the failure to follow the necessary procedures for the appointment of a guardian ad litem, the California Supreme Court has clearly implied structural error should never apply in dependency cases and has provided a persuasive rationale for that position [In re James F. (2008) 42 Cal. 4th 901, 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 358, 174 P.3d 180] . Without addressing what due process required in the context of appointment of a guardian ad litem, the Court noted that "juvenile dependency proceedings differ from criminal proceedings in ways that affect the determination of whether an error requires automatic reversal of the resulting judgment" [In re James F. (2008) 42 Cal. 4th 901, 915, 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 358, 174 P.3d 180] . It went on to note, "These significant differences between criminal proceedings and dependency proceedings provide reason to question whether the structural error doctrine that has been established for certain errors in criminal proceedings should be imported wholesale, or unthinkingly, into the quite different context of dependency cases" [In re James F. (2008) 42 Cal. 4th 901, 915-916, 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 358, 174 P.3d 180] . The Court also noted the United States Supreme Court has never applied structural error outside of criminal proceedings or that "harmlessness is irrelevant when the right of procedural due process ... has been violated" [In re James F. (2008) 42 Cal. 4th 901, 917, 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 358, 174 P.3d 180] . Significantly, it stated, "We cannot agree with the Court of Appeal majority that prejudice is irrelevant in a dependency proceeding when the welfare of the child is at issue and delay in resolution of the proceeding is inherently prejudicial to the child" [In re James F. (2008) 42 Cal. 4th 901, 917, 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 358, 174 P.3d 180] .

The view clearly implied by the Supreme Court in James F. is the better view. Structural error should not apply in dependency proceedings even when dealing with errors of a federal constitutional dimension. Structural error considers only the error and the interest of the parent. It fails to consider the weight of the facts or the interest of the child who is both a party to and the subject of the proceedings [Welf. & Inst. Code § 317.5(b)]. An examination of California dependency cases in which appellate courts found structural error before the Supreme Court's James F. decision reveals the courts conducted little to no analysis as to whether structural error should apply in dependency cases. Instead, it was simply assumed the concept of structural error could apply in dependency cases, just as it does in criminal cases [see, e.g., In re C.G. (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 27, 34, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 872 ; In re Jasmine G. (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 1109, 1118, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 394 ; Judith P. v. Superior Court (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 535, 554, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 14] . But the U.S. Supreme Court and the California Supreme Court have been clear that criminal standards do not apply in dependency proceedings, and that due process requirements afforded to parents in dependency court differ from those due criminal defendants [see, e.g., Lassiter v. Department of Social Servs. (1981) 452 U.S. 18, 32, 101 S. Ct. 2153, 68 L. Ed. 2d 640 ; Santosky v. Kramer (1982), 455 U.S. 745, 769-770, 102 S. Ct. 1388, 71 L. Ed. 2d 599 ; Cynthia D. v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 242, 256, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 698, 851 P.2d 1307 ; In re Lucero L. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1227, 1247-1248, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 56, 998 P.2d 1019 ; In re Malinda S. (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 368, 384, 272 Cal. Rptr. 787, 795 P.2d 1244 (dependency proceedings not criminal in nature; purpose is to protect child, not punish parent)]. These cases support the position that structural error does not apply in dependency cases.

Further, courts have found that children have fundamental interests of their own that may "diverge from the interests of the parent" [In re Jasmon O. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 398, 419, 878 P. 2d 1297]. Indeed, the California Supreme Court has said that children "have compelling rights to be protected from abuse and neglect and to have a placement that is stable, permanent, and that allows the caretaker to make a full emotional commitment to the child" [In re Marilyn H. (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 295, 306, 851 P.2d 826]. Thus, where the rights of children and parents conflict, the legal system traditionally protects the child's interest [Cynthia D. v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 242, 254, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 698, 851 P.2d 1307 (where a child has been abused or neglected by a parent, "the child's interest must be given more weight")]. At the very least, the system must provide a level playing field that balances the interests of the child with the interests of the parent. The structural error concept does not do that.

An unlevel playing field, such as that resulting from the reversal per se standard, is not appropriate in a system designed to protect both the child and the family [Cynthia D. v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 242, 255, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 698, 851 P.2d 1307]. This is not to say cases should never be reversed. Sometimes error at the trial court level will constitute reversible error at the appellate court level. But reversal should not be presumed merely because there is a fundamental error, even when it is of a federal constitutional dimension. The more egregious the error the less likely it is the error will be found to be harmless under a harmless error analysis, but it is inappropriate in a dependency case to regard any error as justifying reversal per se, thereby giving no weight whatsoever to the interests of the child.

For a discussion trial error of a federal constitutional dimension in dependency cases, see § 328.194[2].

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
L. Appeal and Extraordinary Writs

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.195

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.195 Review by Writ Petition of Court Orders Designating the Specific Placement of a Freed Child

[1] Notice of Intent to File Writ Petition

The Judicial Council adopted rules that set forth strict time lines for the filing of extraordinary writ petitions that challenge juvenile court orders designating the specific placement of a child for whom parental rights have been terminated [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.454, 8.456]. These rules must be followed in order to preserve any right to appeal. In directing these rules be adopted by the Judicial Council, the legislature recognized the juvenile court intervenes in the specific placement of freed children only in exceptional circumstances. It also recognized, however, that appeals taken from such decisions can delay stability and permanence for the child, which can cause substantial detriment [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.28(a); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.454(b)].

A Notice of Intent to File Writ Petition and Request for Record must be signed by the party seeking review of the court's decision and filed by the party's counsel, unless the petitioner was not represented by counsel. If the petition is to be filed on behalf of the child, the notice of intent must be signed and filed by the child's attorney. The appellate court can waive the requirement for the party's signature if it finds good cause based on a declaration from counsel of record explaining why the party could not sign the notice of intent [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.454(e)(3)]. Effective July 1, 2010, the notice of intent must be authorized by the party seeking review of the court's decision, but may be signed by either that party or the party's counsel [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.454(e)(3), eff. July 1, 2010].

When a Notice of Intent to File Writ Petition and Request for Record is filed pursuant to Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.454, the superior court clerk must immediately mail a copy of the notice to all counsel of record, all parties, including the child, the present caregiver, any legal guardian, and any person granted de facto parent status and given standing to participate in the juvenile court proceedings, the social worker, any court appointed special advocate, and the tribe of an Indian child, if any [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.454(g)(1)]. The clerk must also promptly send a copy of the notice of intent and a proof of service list to the reviewing court, which may be done by facsimile or first-class mail [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.454(g)(2)]. The clerk must also immediately notify the court reporter by telephone and in writing to prepare a reporter's transcript within 12 days after the notice of intent was filed, and the clerk must prepare a clerk's transcript within 20 days of the filing of the notice of intent that includes the notice of intent, proof of service, and all items listed in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.404(a) [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.454(h)].

When the transcripts are certified as correct and filed with the reviewing court, the reviewing court's clerk must immediately notify the parties, indicating the date on which the 10-day period for filing the writ petition will expire [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.454(j)(2)].

[2] Rule 8.456 Writ Petition

The writ petition to challenge a juvenile court's order designating a specific placement for a dependent child after termination of parental rights must be filed within 10 days after the record is filed in the reviewing court [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.456(c)]. Trial counsel filing such writ petitions are encouraged to seek assistance from attorneys that are experienced in writ procedure [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.454(c)]. Judicial Council form JV-825 Petition for Extraordinary Writ--Juvenile Dependency may be used for this purpose. As with writ petitions challenging the setting of a hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26, however, counsel should not be misled by the brevity of the Judicial Council form. Adequate points and authorities and references to the record are necessary [Rayna R. v. Superior Court (1993) 20 Cal. App. 4th 1398, 1406-1407, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 259 ; Nahid H. v. Superior Court (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 1051, 1056, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 281] . Requests by the petitioner to augment or correct the record must be filed within five days of the receipt of the record, unless the record exceeds 600 pages, in which case the petitioner must file any request to augment or correct the record within 10 days of the receipt of the record [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.456(f)(2); see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.456(e)(2), eff. July 1, 2010].

Writ petitions filed pursuant to Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.456 must include the identities of the parties, the date of the juvenile court order designating the specific placement of a child after the termination of parental rights, a summary of the grounds on which the petition is filed, and the relief requested [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.456(a)]. The writ petition must be accompanied by points and authorities that provide a summary of the significant facts contained in the record, set forth each point under a separate heading or subheading summarizing the point, support each point by argument and citation of authority, and support any reference to a matter in the record by a citation to the record, explaining the significance of any cited portion of the recording and noting any disputed aspects of the record [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.456(b)]. If the writ petition seeks a stay of the juvenile court's placement order for a freed child, the petition must demonstrate that implementation of the specific placement order pending the reviewing court's decision is likely to cause detriment to the child is the placement order is ultimately reversed [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.456(g)].

Any response to the writ petition must be served and filed within 10 days of the filing of the writ petition, unless the writ petition was served by mail, in which case the response must be filed within 15 days [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.456(c)(2)]. If the respondent receives a request from the reviewing court for a response, the response must be filed within 10 days, unless the court specifies a shorter time [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.456(c)(2)]. Any request by the responding party to augment or correct the record must be served and filed within five days after the writ petition is filed [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.456(f)(2); see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.456(e), eff. July 1, 2010].

The rule states that absent exceptional circumstances, the reviewing court must review the petition and decide it on the merits by a written opinion [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.456(i); see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.456(h), eff. July 1, 2010]. If the reviewing court intends to issue a decision on the merits, it must issue an order to show cause or an alternative writ [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.456(e); see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.456(d), eff. July 1, 2010]. Oral argument must be heard within 30 days after the response is file or due to be filed, unless the court extends the time for good cause or counsel waives argument. If argument is waived, the matter is deemed submitted not later than 30 days after the response is filed or due to be filed [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.456(h); see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.456(g), eff. July 1, 2010].

This writ procedure is a relatively new procedure that was expected to be infrequently used [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.28(a)]. It is anticipated that much of the law regarding the mandatory timelines and procedures for writ review of decision setting hearings under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 will be held to apply to writ petitions under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.454 and 8.456, where applicable. This is an area to be watched for further development.

While it was anticipated that all decisions affirming or rejecting placement decisions for dependent children who had been freed for adoption would be challenged by way of extraordinary writ petition pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.28, thereby ensuring all such decisions were reviewed quickly by the appellate courts, that has not proven to be the case in all courts. One appellate court has taken the position that if a Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 petition for placement of a freed child is denied due to the juvenile court's determination the social services agency did not abuse its discretion in its adoptive placement decision, that judgment is to be reviewed by way of appeal, not by way of petition for writ [In re Daniel C. (2006) 141 Cal. App. 4th 1438, 1440, 47 Cal. Rptr. 3d 137 ; In re Shirley K. (2006) 140 Cal. App. 4th 65, 68, 70-71, 43 Cal. Rptr. 3d 897] . These decisions resulted from a plain reading of Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.28, without a close examination of what that statute was trying to accomplish. They create the anomaly that had the Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 petition been granted, thereby resulting in the juvenile court making a direct order for placement of the freed child, it could only be reviewed by way of writ under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.28, but if it is denied, it can only be reviewed by way of appeal under Welf. & Inst. Code § 395. Whether the legislature will act to clarify its intent in this regard, and whether other courts will choose to follow the Shirley K. and Daniel C. court remains to be seen. This is an area to be watched for further developments.

For discussion of the law regarding the juvenile court's review of the agency's discretionary placement decisions for children who have been freed for adoption, and other adoption related issues, see §§ 328.171[5][h], and 328.198.

110 of 187 DOCUMENTS

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
L. Appeal and Extraordinary Writs

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.196

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.196 Waiver or Forfeiture of Right to Raise Issue on Appeal or by Writ

One very common determination made by appellate courts in dependency proceedings is that the parent, guardian, or other aggrieved person has waived or forfeited the right to raise a particular issue on appeal or in writ proceedings by having failed to object or otherwise raise the issue at the juvenile court level. Generally, an issue not raised at the trial court level may not be raised for the first time on appeal or in a writ [see, e.g., In re Dakota S. (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 494, 501-502, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 196 (failure to object to assessment's failure to address the foster parent's eligibility, commitment, and suitability as a prospective guardian as waiver); In re Amanda D. (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 813, 819-820, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 108 (failure to object to lack of child's testimony regarding wishes for permanent plan as waiver); In re Brandon M. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1387, 1400-1401, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 671 (failure to raise objection to "trial home visit" as waiver); In re Christopher B. (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 551, 558-559, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 43 (failure to raise forum non conveniens objection as waiver); In re Kevin S. (1996) 41 Cal. App. 4th 882, 885-886, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 763 (failure to object to setting Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing despite finding of no reasonable efforts as waiver); Steve J. v. Superior Court (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 798, 810-811, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 731 (failure of social services agency to raise issue of father's right to reunification services as waiver); In re Richard K. (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 580, 587-590, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 575 (submission on recommendations of social worker as waiving ability to challenge on appeal the sufficiency of the evidence to support the court's order when the court followed the recommendations)]. While most courts and practitioners use the term "waiver," the California Supreme Court has indicated the correct legal term for the loss of the right to raise a claim based on the failure to timely assert it is "forfeiture" [In re S.B. (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 1287, 1293, n.2, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 786, 90 P.3d 746].

Nevertheless, there are exceptions to the general waiver or forfeiture rule. For instance, a parent who submits on the social worker's report at the jurisdiction hearing, making no argument against a finding of jurisdiction, has been held not to have waived the right to raise the sufficiency of the evidence to support the jurisdiction finding on appeal [In re Tommy E. (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 1234, 1236-1239, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 402]. Further, some courts have held that when a parent objects to the termination of parental rights, no specific objection need be made to the social services agency's alleged failure to establish the likelihood of adoption for the parent to raise the issue on appeal [In re Erik P. (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 395, 399, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 922 ; In re Brian P. (2002) 99 Cal. App. 4th 616, 623, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 326 ; but see In re Crystal J. (1993) 12 Cal. App. 4th 407, 411-412, 15 Cal. Rptr. 2d 613].

It should also be noted that, although not commonly done, appellate courts have discretion to consider forfeited issues in certain circumstances, such as where the issue presented is an important legal issue [see, e.g., In re Charles T. (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 869, 873, 125 Cal. Rptr. 2d 868 ; Rosa S. v. Superior Court (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 1181, 1188, 122 Cal. Rptr. 2d 866 ; In re C.T. (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 101, 110, n.7, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 897]. The Supreme Court has emphasized, however, that appellate courts should only exercise their discretion to excuse forfeiture in rare instances, and must exercise special care in doing so in dependency appeals and writs since "considerations such as permanency and stability are of paramount importance" [In re S.B. (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 1287, 1293, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 786, 90 P.3d 746].

Finally, it should be noted that many cases have stated that pure issues of law are not subject to the forfeiture rule, particularly where they can be decided on undisputed facts in the record [see, e.g., Ward v. Taggart (1959) 51 Cal. 2d 736, 742, 336 P.2d 534]. A more accurate statement would be that pure issues of law are not automatically forfeited, since an appellate court may decline to hear an issue of law raised for the first time on appeal [Eisenberg, et al., Cal. Prac. Guide: Civil Appeals & Writs (TRG 2005) P 8:240.1, p. 8-139; Hussey-Head v. World Savings & Loan Assn. (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 773, 783, n.7, 4 Cal. Rptr. 3d 171]. Nevertheless, appellate courts have discretion to consider such issues [see, e.g., In re Lauren R. (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 841, 854, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 151 ; People v. Koontz (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 1041, 1075, n.4, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 859, 46 P.3d 335 ; People v. Butler (1980) 105 Cal. App. 3d 585, 588, 164 Cal. Rptr. 475 ; Panopulos v. Maderis (1956) 47 Cal. 2d 337, 341, 303 P.2d 738]. It is in the area of pure issues of law that can be decided on the undisputed facts in the record that appellate courts are most likely to consider issues raised for the first time on appeal.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
L. Appeal and Extraordinary Writs

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.197

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

[Reserved]

§ 328.197[Reserved]

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
M. Adoption of Dependent Children

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.198

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.198 Adoption and Related Issues

[1] Adoption in the Juvenile Court

Although many counties conduct adoptions in the juvenile court building, adoptions are traditionally superior court proceedings which are separate and distinct from the limited jurisdiction of the juvenile court [see Fam. Code § 8500 et seq.]. In dependency cases, however, the adoptive parent and social services agency may choose to have the adoption done by the juvenile court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(e)]. When an adoption is done in the juvenile court for a dependent child it is given a separate confidential adoption file with an adoption case number which is different from the dependency case number. Judicial Council forms have been developed for such juvenile court adoptions and a rule of court sets forth the procedures to be followed by the juvenile court [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.730; see also Judicial Council forms for Petition for Adoption of Dependent Child (JV-360), Consent and Agreement to Adoption (JV-361), and Order of Adoption (JV-362)]. In conducting an adoption in the juvenile court, the full report required by Fam. Code § 8715 must be read and considered by the court prior to ordering the adoption. The minutes of the court must reflect that such report was read and considered by the court. The person who prepared the report may be called and examined by any party to the adoption proceeding [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(e)].

For a discussion of tribal customary adoptions, which do not require the termination of parental rights, see § 328.125[11].

[2] Caretaker Preference for Adoption

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the application of any person who, as a relative caretaker or foster parent, has cared for a dependent child for whom the court has approved a permanent plan for adoption or who has been freed for adoption must be given preference with respect to that child over all other applications for adoptive placement if the agency making the placement determines that the child has substantial emotional ties to the relative caretaker or foster parent, and removal from the relative caretaker or foster parent would be seriously detrimental to the child's emotional well-being [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(k)].

"Preference" means that the application must be processed, and, if satisfactory, the family study must be completed, before the processing of the application of any other person for the adoptive placement of the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(k)].

[3] Adoptive Placement Decisions

If the juvenile court has terminated parental rights pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26, the court must at the same time order the child referred to the State Department of Social Services or a licensed adoption agency for adoptive placement by the agency. The State Department of Social Services or licensed adoption agency is responsible for the custody and supervision of the child, and is entitled to the exclusive care and control of the child at all times until a petition for adopted is granted. With the consent of the agency, however, the court may appoint a guardian of the child, who must serve until the child is adopted [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(j)]. Notwithstanding this clear authority setting forth the agency as being responsible for the care of the child pending adoption, some juvenile courts and practitioners have assumed that in a dependency case it is the court itself that makes such placement decisions. Recent cases have clearly held otherwise, except in cases involving court designated prospective adoptive parents under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(n), in which cases the social services agency is responsible for the placement, care, and control of the child, but the court can intercede and make an independent best interest determination regarding placement [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(n)].

In the case of Department of Soc. Servs. v. Superior Court (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 721, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 239 , the two dependent children who had been freed for adoption had two homes available to them for placement and potential adoption. The agency chose one home. The juvenile court chose the other, substituting its judgment for that of the agency, and directed the agency to place the children there. On appeal the juvenile court's order was reversed. The court of appeal held the legislature has clearly and expressly given the licensed adoption agency "exclusive care and control" of the child after the termination of parental rights [Department of Soc. Servs. v. Superior Court (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 721, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 239 , quoting Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(j) and Fam. Code § 8704(a)]. It also held, however, that the discretion of the agency in placing the child pending adoption is subject to review by the juvenile court to determine if the agency has abused its discretion [Department of Soc. Servs. v. Superior Court (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 721, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 239] . In reviewing the agency's placement decision the juvenile court cannot substitute its own judgment for that of the agency. It merely determines whether the agency's placement decision "is patently absurd or unquestionably not in the minor's best interests" and thus an abuse of discretion [Department of Soc. Servs. v. Superior Court (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 721, 734, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 239] . In that case the court of appeal found there was no evidence the agency had abused its discretion and thus reversed the juvenile court's orders [Department of Soc. Servs. v. Superior Court (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 721, 741-743, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 239] .

In the case of Los Angeles County Dep't of Children & Family Servs. v. Superior Court (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 1, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 369 , the court of appeal dealt with a similar question. Finding that it was "greatly assisted" by the decision in Department of Soc. Servs. v. Superior Court (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 721, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 239 , the court indicated "the issue for us is simply whether given this statutory scheme, the trial court properly rejected Department's request that [the child] be placed with Ms. B. pending adoption." The court of appeal found the juvenile court had not properly rejected the agency's request because the juvenile court had improperly substituted its judgment for that of the agency [Los Angeles County Dep't of Children & Family Servs. v. Superior Court (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 1, 9-10, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 369] .

The case of In re Harry N. (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 46 , also dealt with this issue. In that case there were two families that wanted to adopt the child. One was the foster family the child had been placed with since he was only a few days old. The other was a relative home in Puerto Rico that had not previously been available due to a delay in obtaining the necessary home study. After parental rights were terminated the social services agency sought to move the child to the relative home for adoption. The child's counsel and the foster parents opposed the move. Ultimately, the juvenile court sided with the child's counsel and the foster parents. In so doing, however, the juvenile court did not determine whether the agency's decision to move the child for adoption by the relatives had been an abuse of discretion [In re Harry N. (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 1381-1382, 1398-1399, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 46] . The Court of Appeal noted that "We agree with the line of cases that, absent an abuse of discretion, gives the Department authority for placement at this stage in the proceedings. The Department has been given the resources for investigation and evaluation of the placement decision. The juvenile court's role is to decide if there was an abuse of discretion in the decision" [In re Harry N. (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 1398, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 46] . In exercising its discretion, the social services agency must process an application by the current caregivers as a prospective adoptive placement, but it is not prevented from considering other applications as well [In re Harry N. (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 1396-1397, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 46] . Since the juvenile court had made its own decision regarding placement, rather than determining whether the agency had abused its discretion, the matter was reversed and remanded for consideration by the juvenile court of that issue. In so doing, of course, the juvenile court would also of necessity have to consider any further developments in the case that occurred while the appeal was pending [In re Harry N. (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 1398-1399, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 46] .

Some may view these decisions as restricting the juvenile court's authority. It can also be said, however, that these cases expand the court's authority, since prior to these decisions it was thought by many that the juvenile court had no role in the review of adoptive placements. Instead, such decisions by the agency were only subject to an administrative review process and mandamus [see Cain v. Adoption Agency (1976) 54 Cal. App. 3d 1127, 126 Cal. Rptr. 836] . Nevertheless, both statutory and decisional law are now clear that the agency makes the placement decisions pending adoption, but that the juvenile court has the power to review the agency's placement decisions utilizing an abuse of discretion standard.

For discussion of the writ process for review of juvenile court decisions designating specific placement of a dependent child after parental rights have been terminated, see § 328.195.

[4] Same Social Worker for Adoption of Sibling Groups

If a prospective adoptive family intends to adopt a sibling group, the siblings are to be assigned the same social worker unless the social services agency determines that assigning the same social worker to all of the children would not be in the best interest of one or more of the children, or of the operation of the agency [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16005].

[5] No Court-Mandated Postadoption Visitation

California follows a general policy of closed adoptions, with clear law that the court cannot order postadoption visitation. Recognizing the need for the adoptive family to solidify their relationships within the family, California allows the adoptive parents the discretion to determine what is in the adopted child's best interest without the interference of the child's biological relatives. This also promotes the public policy of providing children with stable, permanent homes that are free from protracted litigation of custody and visitation [Huffman v. Grob (1985) 172 Cal. App. 3d 1153, 1157-1158, 218 Cal. Rptr. 659] . Not even the argument that such visitation would promote the child's best interests is sufficient to allow for an order requiring postadoption visitation [Marckwardt v. Superior Court (1984) 150 Cal. App. 3d 471, 480, 198 Cal. Rptr. 41] . Consistent with the law of adoption found in Fam. Code §§ 8616 and 8617, following adoption the child and the adoptive parents shall have the legal relationship of parent and child and the birth parents are relieved of any responsibility.

Only one California case has held that a juvenile court can order visitation that would survive an adoption [see In re Hirenia C. (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 504, 517-520, 22 Cal. Rptr. 2d 443] . Perhaps outraged by the facts before it, the appellate court issued an opinion that is an anomaly. The decisional law it relied on for support of its conclusion the juvenile court could enter an order for visitation that would survive an adoption does not provide such support. Instead, the cited cases dealt with visitation in a variety of dependency and termination of dependency contexts, none of which included adoption [see In re Hirenia C. (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 504, 518-520, 22 Cal. Rptr. 2d 443 , citing In re Jennifer R. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 704, 712, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 759 ; In re Roger S. (1992) 4 Cal. App. 4th 25, 30, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 208 ; In re Michelle M. (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 326, 328, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 64 ; In re Robin N. (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 1140, 1146, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 512] . Nor does Welf. & Inst. Code § 362.4, which the Hirenia C. court also looked to, provide authority or support for its conclusion. By its very terms, that section authorizes the juvenile court to make custody, visitation and restraining orders when it terminates dependency jurisdiction under a variety of situations, none of which include adoption [Welf. & Inst. Code § 362.4]. Hirenia C. must therefore be viewed as inconsistent with established decisional and statutory law, and with the public policy of this state for closed adoptions; it should be questioned, not followed. Indeed, in one decision determined well after the Hirenia C. case, a court of appeal was asked to be "the first court to change the rule" that California law does not provide for court-ordered open adoptions. Without even citing the Hirenia C. decision, that court indicated, "Not now, and maybe not ever" [In re Sylvia R. (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 559, 563, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 93 , citing Huffman v. Grob (1985) 172 Cal. App. 3d 1153, 1158, 218 Cal. Rptr. 659] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Voluntary Open Adoptions. Although the juvenile court lacks the authority to order an open adoption, nothing prevents the adoptive parents and the biological family from formally or informally agreeing between themselves to some form of open adoption. While such voluntary agreements cannot be entered into by the social services agency and cannot be ratified or enforced by the court except in the very limited circumstances of sibling interaction provisions and postadoption contact agreements described in the next subsections, in cases where there are no animosities between the biological and adoptive families they can provide a very viable way for the families to work together for the good of the child. Voluntary arrangements should not be viewed as contrary to the public policy of this state, since they are entered into voluntarily by the adoptive parents and hence are simply a reasonable exercise of their discretion as the adoptive parents. Only when the court attempts to order an open adoption, or to somehow ratify one, without direct statutory authority, is the public policy of California for closed adoptions violated. Where appropriate, parties and attorneys in a dependency action in which termination of parental rights and adoption is anticipated may wish to explore the possibility of a voluntary open adoption as a means of providing the child with the stability of adoption while still retaining contact with his or her biological family.

[6] Facilitating Postadoptive Sibling Contact

It has always been good social work practice to consider the appropriateness of facilitating postadoptive sibling contact in cases in which the siblings by blood or marriage are not part of the same adoptive family but have an existing relationship. Indeed, in addition to giving social workers and juvenile courts the responsibility of maintaining sibling contact and relationships at all times throughout the dependency process unless it is detrimental to the child to do so [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 306.5, 362.1(b), 16002(b)], California law requires efforts be made to provide for sibling interaction "as part of developing the permanent plan for the child" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16002(b)]. While efforts must be made to keep siblings placed together [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16002(a)] or to facilitate sibling contact where appropriate, California's juvenile court law does not require that siblings actually be placed together, kept in contact, or receive the same permanent plan [In re Gerald J. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 1180, 1187-1188, 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 569] . This is understandable, since every case and situation is different and it cannot be presumed that placing siblings together or facilitating contact is best, workable, or even possible. Nevertheless, social workers and adoptive parents have often worked to informally facilitate sibling contact in a postadoptive setting when it is best for the children to do so.

Effective January 1, 1999, statutory authority exists for final adoption orders to include provisions for the adoptive parents to facilitate postadoptive sibling contact, when such provisions are made with the adoptive parents' consent [

Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.29(a)]. To help encourage prospective adoptive parents to agree to such provisions, social services agency are to take several steps, except in those cases in which the court has determined sibling interaction is detrimental to the child. The agency is to include in the training provided to prospective adoptive parents "information about the importance of sibling relationships to the adopted child and counseling on methods for maintaining sibling relationships" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16002(e)(1)]. Prospective adoptive parents are also to be provided information about the child's siblings and half-siblings. The address of the siblings and half-siblings is not to be disclosed, however, unless the court finds good cause to order the release of the address [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16002(e)(2)]. Finally, prospective adoptive parents are to be encouraged to make a plan for facilitating postadoptive contact between the child they are adopting and the child's siblings or half-siblings [Welf. & Inst. Code § 16002(e)(3)].

The adoption report prepared by the agency regarding the adoption must include information regarding the plan, if any, for postadoptive sibling contact [Fam. Code § 8715(b)]. If the court hearing the adoption petition has the agreement of the prospective adoptive parents, it may include in the adoption orders provisions for the agreed on provisions for facilitating postadoptive sibling contact [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.29(a)]. The juvenile court hearing the dependency matter lacks jurisdiction to order such provisions unless the adoption petition has been filed in the juvenile court and the provisions are made in conjunction with the entering of the adoption orders [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(e), 366.29(a)]. The continued validity of the adoption is not contingent on the adoptive parents facilitating sibling contact. Moreover, the provisions for contact do not impair the ability of the adoptive parents to change their residence, including moving outside the state [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.29(a)]. Further, once the provisions are made, the adoptive parents can at any time determine sibling contact "poses a threat to the health, safety, or well-being of the adopted child" and terminate the contact. If such a decision is made by the adoptive parents, they must submit to the court within ten days of terminating the contact, written notification of the reasons why continued sibling contact would threaten the health, safety, or well-being of the adopted child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.29(b)]. Nevertheless, the requirement for the training and encouragement of prospective adoptive parents to facilitate such contact and the authorization for the court hearing the adoption to include such provisions in the adoptive orders are positive steps to help maintain sibling relationships in a postadoptive setting where best for the child.

Once the petition for adoption of a dependent child is granted and the order of adoption issued, the jurisdiction of the juvenile court terminates as to the dependency proceedings. Nevertheless, the court granting the petition of adoption maintains jurisdiction over the child for purposes of enforcing the postadoption sibling contact agreement. The court may only order compliance with the agreement upon a finding that the party seeking enforcement of the agreement participated in good faith in mediation or other appropriate alternative dispute resolution proceedings regarding the postadoption sibling contact agreement prior to filing the request for enforcement, and that enforcement of the agreement is in the best interest of the child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.29(c)].

[7] Postadoption Contact Agreements

As part of California's effort to provide stability to children through the benefits of adoption and with the recognition that many relative caretakers do not desire to enter into a traditional adoption thereby changing family structure and relationships, effective January 1, 1998, California authorized adopting relative caretakers to enter into adoption agreements with biological parents and other relatives that could be enforced by the courts after the adoption is completed [Fam. Code former §§ 8714.5, 8714.7 (Stats. 1997, ch. 793); see also In re Kimberly S. (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 405, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 740 ; In re Zachary D. (1999) 70 Cal. App. 4th 1392, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 407] . This law was California's initial step into the uncertain waters of court-approved open adoptions. It was limited, however, to adopting relatives. Indeed, its purpose was to "expedite legal permanency for children who cannot return to their parents and to remove barriers to adoption by relatives" [Fam. Code former § 8714.5(a)]. Effective January 1, 2001, this law was changed. While still available when the adopting parents are relatives, the law was expanded to allow any adoptive parent of a dependent child to enter into a "postadoption contact agreement" with the child's birth relatives, including the child's birth parents [Fam. Code §§ former 8714.5, 8714.7 (Stats. 2000, ch. 930)]. As noted in the statement of legislative intent, "some adoptive children may benefit from either direct or indirect contact with birth relatives, including the birth parent or parents, after being adopted [Fam. Code § former 8714.7(a), emphasis added (Stats. 2000, ch. 930, § 3)]. Effective January 1, 2004, these provisions were amended and renumbered, making the applicable provision Fam. Code § 8616.5 (Stats. 2003, ch. 251). At the same time, provisions were enacted to allow postadoption contact agreements with the child's Indian tribe if the case is governed by the ICWA [Fam. Code § 8620(f) (Stats. 2003, ch. 469)]. These were added to Fam. Code § 8616.5 the next year [Fam. Code § 8616.5(b)(2) (Stats. 2004, ch. 858)]. Thus, the breadth of potential postadoption contact agreements has greatly expanded from what was originally available.

Postadoption contact agreements are intended to ensure adopted children of an "achievable level of continuing contact" with birth relatives when that contact is beneficial to the child, and when the agreements are voluntarily entered into by the birth relatives and adoptive parents. Thus, these agreements cannot be forced on the adoptive parents or the birth relatives. They must be entered into voluntarily [Fam. Code § 8616.5(a)]. Postadoption contact agreements with the child's Indian tribe, when the case is an ICWA case, are also to be entered into and ordered when beneficial to the child [Fam. Code § 8616.5(f)].

This law does not provide for court-ordered open adoptions. Instead, it provides that nothing in California's adoption laws "shall be construed to prevent" adoptive parents from entering into an agreement with one or more of the child's birth relatives, including the birth parents, for postadoption privileges where the court finds at the time of the granting of the adoption petition that the agreement is in the child's best interest and voluntarily entered into [Fam. Code § 8616.5(a)]. Further, the law is clear that no subsequent failure of any of the parties to the adoption agreement to comply with that agreement or any modification thereof can serve as the basis for an order setting aside a decree of adoption, rescinding a relinquishment, or modifying an order terminating parental rights [Fam. Code § 8616.5(k)].

The child who is the subject of the adoption petition is to be considered a party to any adoption agreement. Where the child is 12 years of age or older, the child's written consent to the agreement and any subsequent modifications of the agreement is a "necessary condition" to the granting of the privileges contained in the agreement or modification, unless the court finds the agreement or modification is in the child's best interest. This finding, if made by the court, must be made by at least a preponderance of the evidence. If the child being adopted is a dependent of the juvenile court or a petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 has been filed regarding the child, the child must be represented by counsel "for purposes of consent to the kinship adoption agreement" [Fam. Code § 8616.5(d)].

The allowable provisions of a postadoption contact agreement are very limited. Such an agreement may only include one or more of the following [Fam. Code § 8616.5(b)(2)(A)-(C)]:

- provisions for visitation between the child being adopted and other birth relatives, including birth parents, siblings, and the child's Indian tribe if the case is an ICWA case;

- provisions for future contact between birth relatives, including birth parents and siblings, and the child's Indian tribe if the case is an ICWA case, with the child being adopted, the adoptive parents, or both; or

- provisions for the future sharing of information about the child.

No other provisions are authorized. Further, the law is clear that a postadoption contact agreement need not include all of these provisions, nor involve all of the child's relatives or the child's Indian tribe if the case is governed by the ICWA [Fam. Code § 8616.5(b)]. And, if the child does not have an existing relationship with the birth relative, the terms of the postadoption agreement "shall be limited to the sharing of information about the child" [Fam. Code § 8616.5(b)(3)].

The postadoption contact agreement must include in bold-type warnings that the adoption cannot be set aside due to the failure of any of the parties to follow through with the agreement, the validity of the adoption is not affected by a disagreement between the parties regarding the agreement, and that the court will not consider a petition to change or enforce a postadoption contact agreement unless the petitioner has in good faith participated in or attempted to participate in some form of mediation or other dispute resolution proceedings to resolve the disagreement [Fam. Code § 8616.5(e)].

Where an adoptive parent has entered into a postadoption contact agreement with the birth parent, a copy of that agreement must be attached to the petition for adoption [Fam. Code § 8714(c)]. The adoption report prepared by the adoption agency must deal with the question of whether the adoption agreement is in the best interests of the child being adopted, and whether it was entered into voluntarily [Fam. Code § 8715(c)]. If, at the time the adoption petition is granted, the court finds the postadoption contact agreement has been entered into voluntarily and is in the child's best interest, the court entering the adoption decree may grant the postadoption privileges contained in the agreement [Fam. Code § 8714.7(c)].

Only the court that grants the petition of adoption shall have continuing jurisdiction to enforce the postadoption contact agreement it approved at the time of the adoption. The court must make a finding that the party petitioning for enforcement of the agreement participated, or attempted to participate, in good faith in dispute resolution prior to the filing of the petition for enforcement of the agreement. It must also make a finding that enforcement of the agreement is in the child's best interest. This court may utilize documentary evidence or offers of proof as the basis for its decision regarding enforcement of the agreement. It may not, however, order any further investigation or evaluation by any agency or individual unless it finds by clear and convincing evidence that the further inquiry "will not disturb the stability of the child's home to the detriment of the child" and that the child's best interest may be advanced or protected only by such inquiry. No evidentiary hearing or testimony is required for the court in such enforcement proceedings [Fam. Code § 8616.5(f)]. A postadoption contact agreement can be modified or terminated following similar procedures where there is a substantial change of circumstances or where all of the parties, including the child if at the time of the requested modification or termination the child is 12 years of age or older, have signed and filed a modified agreement with the court which granted the adoption petition [Fam. Code § 8616.5(h)]. No monetary damages may be awarded as a result of the filing of an action for enforcement of a postadoption contact agreement under this section [Fam. Code § 8616.5(g)], although costs and fees of litigation may be awarded in certain circumstances [Fam. Code § 8616.5(i)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Postadoption Contact Should be Approached Carefully. Postadoption contact agreements are a valuable tool in helping provide children with the stability of adoption while still maintaining contact with family and tribal members within the terms of the adoption agreement. They will only work, however, where all parties entering into such an agreement do so willingly and with the full intention of working together. Such agreements should not be pushed on any of the parties by social workers, attorneys, or the courts. To the extent that birth parents are urged to relinquish, submit to the termination of parental rights, or forego appeals in favor of a kinship adoption agreement when they do not truly desire to do so and potentially have a viable defense or appeal to the termination of rights, such agreements may later have a detrimental impact on family relationships and the child. Further, to the extent that adopting caretakers are urged to enter into such agreements to get parents to relinquish, submit to the termination of parental rights, or forego appeals when the adoptive parents do not truly desire to enter into such an agreement, such agreements may also later have a detrimental impact on family relationships and the child. Any decision to enter into a postadoption contact agreement should only be made after a full consideration by all of the parties of all of the issues involved. Moreover, any determination by a court that such an agreement is in the child's best interest and was entered into voluntarily should only be made after a full consideration of the totality of the circumstances. Not all postadoption contact will be in the best interest of the child. This is a very new area of the law and postadoption contact agreements should be approached with caution to ensure that all parties, including and especially the child, are truly served by such agreements.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
N. Sealing Juvenile Court Records

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.199

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.199 Sealing Record

[1] Availability of Procedure

In any case in which a petition has been filed with a juvenile court to commence proceedings to adjudge a person a dependent child of the court, in any case in which a person is cited to appear before a probation officer or is taken before a probation officer by a police officer, or in any case in which a child is taken before any officer of a law enforcement agency, the person or the probation officer or social worker may petition the court for sealing of the records, including records of arrest, relating to the person's case, in the custody of the juvenile court and probation officer and any other agencies, including law enforcement agencies, and public officials as the petitioner alleges to have custody of such records [Welf. & Inst. Code § 389(a)].

For a form of application to seal juvenile court records, see Ch. 329, Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings § 329.290.

[2] Time for Filing Petition to Seal Records

Such a petition may be presented five years or more after the jurisdiction of the juvenile court has terminated as to the person or, in a case in which no petition is filed, five years or more after the person was cited to appear before a probation officer or was taken before a probation officer or was taken before any officer of a law enforcement agency or, in any case, at any time after the person has reached the age of 18 years [Welf. & Inst. Code § 389(a)].

[3] Determination of Petition to Seal Records

On receipt of a petition to seal records, the court notifies the district attorney of the county and the county probation officer. The district attorney, the county probation officer, and any other person having relevant evidence may testify at the hearing on the petition. If the court finds that the individual has not been convicted of a felony or of any misdemeanor involving moral turpitude and that rehabilitation has been attained to the satisfaction of the court, it must order sealed all records, papers, and exhibits in the person's case in the custody of the juvenile court, including the juvenile court record, minute book entries, and entries on dockets and other records relating to the case in the custody of such other agencies and officials as are named in the order [Welf. & Inst. Code § 389(a)].

[4] Effect of Order Sealing Records

After an order to seal records has been given, the proceedings in the case are deemed never to have occurred and the person may properly reply accordingly to any inquiry about the events [Welf. & Inst. Code § 389(a)].

The court sends a copy of the order to each agency and official named in the order directing the agency to seal its records and to destroy them five years thereafter, and each agency and official is then required to seal the records, advise the court of its compliance, and seal the order for sealing of the records [Welf. & Inst. Code § 389(a)].

The person who is the subject of the records sealed may thereafter petition the superior court to permit inspection of the records by the persons named in the petition. Otherwise, except as discussed below in actions for defamation, the records may not be opened for inspection [Welf. & Inst. Code § 389(a)].

[5] Reopening of Sealed Records

In any action or proceeding based on defamation, a court, on showing of good cause, may order any records sealed to be opened and admitted into evidence. The records must be confidential and must be available for inspection only by the court, jury, parties, counsel for the parties, and any other person who is authorized by the court to inspect them. On the judgment in the action or proceeding becoming final, the court shall order the records resealed [Welf. & Inst. Code § 389(b)].

[6] Destruction of Sealed Records

Five years after a juvenile court record has been sealed, the court must order the destruction of the sealed juvenile court record unless for good cause the court determines that the juvenile court record must be retained. Any other agency in possession of sealed records must destroy its records five years after the records were ordered sealed [Welf. & Inst. Code § 389(c)].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
A. Related Secondary References

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.200

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.200 Matthew Bender Publications

Discussion and forms relating to enforcement of support orders. Kirkland, Lurvey & Richmond, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed. (Matthew Bender)

Discussion relating to the Indian Child Welfare Act. Hollinger, Adoption Law and Practice, Ch. 15, Adoption of Native American Children (Matthew Bender)

Discussion and forms relating to the Uniform Interstate Family Support Act. Vitek, Disputed Paternity Proceedings, 5th ed., Ch. 7, Establishing Paternity Under the Uniform Interstate Family Support Act: A Step Toward Simplicity (Matthew Bender)

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
A. Related Secondary References

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.201

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.201 Other Text References

Aldridge & Wood, Interviewing Children: A Guide for Child Care and Forensic Practitioners (1998)

Cahn & Johnson, Children Can't Wait: Reducing Delays in Out-of-Home Care (1993)

California Juvenile Dependency Practice (CEB 2002)

Ceci & Bruck, Jeopardy in the Courtroom: A Scientific Analysis of Children's Testimony (1995)

Children's Testimony: A Handbook of Psychological Research and Forensic Practice (Westcott et al., edits., 2002)

Courter, I Speak For This Child: True Stories of a Child Advocate (1995)

Expert Witnesses in Child Abuse Cases (Ceci & Hembrooke edits. 2001)

Faller, Understanding and Assessing Child Sexual Maltreatment (2d ed. 2003)

Goodman & Bottoms, Child Victims, Child Witnesses: Understanding and Improving Testimony (1993)

Haralambie, The Child's Attorney: A Guide to Representing Children in Custody, Adoption, and Protection Cases (ABA 1993)

Hewitt, Assessing Allegations of Sexual Abuse in Preschool Children: Understanding Small Voices (1999)

Hubner & Wolfson, Somebody Else's Children: The Courts, The Kids, And The Struggle To Save America's Troubled Families (1996)

Janko, Vulnerable Children, Vulnerable Families: The Social Construction of Child Abuse (1994)

Memory and Suggestibility in the Forensic Interview (Eisen et al., edits. 2002)

Myers, Myers on Evidence in Child, Domestic and Elder Abuse Cases (Aspen 2005)

National Center for State Courts, California Court Improvement Project Report (1997)

National Center for State Courts, Coordinating Council on Life-Sustaining Medical Treatment Decision Making by the Courts, Guidelines for State Court Decision Making in Life-Sustaining Medical Treatment Cases (2d ed. 1993)

National Council of Juv. and Fam. Ct. Judges, RESOURCE GUIDELINES: Improving Court Practice in Child Abuse & Neglect Cases (1996)

Patton, Legal Ethics in Child Custody and Dependency Proceedings: A Guide for Judges and Lawyers (Cambridge 2006)

Perry and Wrightsman, The Child Witness: Legal Issues and Dilemmas (1991)

Peters, Representing Children in Child Protective Proceedings: Ethical and Practical Dimensions (Matthew Bender 2001)

Poole & Lamb, Investigative Interviews of Children: A Guide for Helping Professionals (1998)

Psychological Evaluations for the Courts: A Handbook for Mental Health Professionals and Lawyers (Melton, et al., edits., 2d ed., 1997)

Sagatun and Edwards, Child Abuse and the Legal System (1995)

Saltzman & Furman, Law in Social Work Practice (2d ed. 1999)

Schreier and Libow, Hurting for Love: Munchausen by Proxy Syndrome (1993)

Sen. Sel. Comm. on Children & Youth/SB 1195 Task Force Rep. on Child Abuse Reporting Laws, Juvenile Court Dependency Statutes, and Child Welfare Services (Jan. 1988)

The Backlash: Child Protection Under Fire (Myers, edit. 1994)

The Handbook of Juvenile Forensic Psychology (Ribner, edit. 2002)

Walker, Handbook on Questioning Children: A Linguistic Perspective (ABA 1994)

Whitcomb, When the Victim Is a Child (Nat. Inst. of Just.) (2d ed. 1992)

Wilson & Powell, A Guide To Interviewing Children: Essential Skills for Counsellors, Police, Lawyers and Social Workers (2001)

Zwiers & Morrissette, Effective Interviewing of Children: A Comprehensive Guide for Counselors and Human Service Workers (1999)

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
A. Related Secondary References

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.202

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.202 Law Reviews

Appell, Children's Voice and Justice: Lawyering for Children in the Twenty-First Century, 6 Nev. L.J. 692 (2006)

Berry, Adoptive Parents' Perceptions of, and Comfort with, Open Adoption, LXXII Child Welf., No. 3, 231 (1993)

Curtis, The Dialectics of Open Versus Closed Adoption of Infants, LXV Child Welf., No. 5, 437 (1986)

Davidson, The Child's Right to be Heard and Represented in Judicial Proceedings, 18 Pepperdine L. Rev. 255 (1991)

Doueck, English, DePanfilis & Moote, Decision-Making in Child Protective Services: A Comparison of Selected Risk-Assessment Systems, LXXII Child Welf., No. 5, 441 (1993)

Duquette and Ramsey, Using Lay Volunteers To Represent Children In Child Protection court Proceedings, 10 Child Abuse & Neglect 293 (1986)

Edwards, The Juvenile Court and the Role of the Juvenile Court Judge, 43(2) Juv. & Fam. Ct. J., 1 (1992)

Foerster, Children Without A Voice, 42(4) Juv. & Fam. Ct. J., 9 (1991)

Haralambie, Humility and Child Autonomy in Child Welfare and Custody Representation of Children, 28 Hamline J. Pub. L. & Pol'y 177, 189 (2006)

Jones, Overview and Essential Requirements of the Americans with Disabilities Act, 64 Temple L. Rev. 471 (1991)

Krug, Who Is My Father? The Case For Early Determination Of Paternity In California Juvenile Dependency Proceedings, 18 Thomas Jefferson L. Rev. 143 (1996)

Larsen, Does the Child's Lawyer Owe "The Whole Truth" To the Court in Neglect-Abuse Cases?, 47(2) Juv. & Fam. Ct. J., 49 (1996)

Lyon, Child Witnesses and the Oath: Empirical Evidence, 73 S. Cal. L. Rev. 1017 (2000)

Lyon, The New Wave in Children's Suggestibility Research: A Critique, 84 Cornell L. Rev. 1004 (1999)

Lyon & Saywitz, Young Maltreated Children's Competence to Take the Oath, 3(1) Applied Developmental Science 16 (1999)

Lyon, Giles, & Cory, Medical Evidence of Physical Abuse in Infants and Young Children, 28 Pac. L.J. 93 (1996)

Myers, A Decade of International Legal Reform Regarding Child Abuse Investigation and Litigation: Steps Toward a Child Witness Code, 28 Pac. L J. 169 (1996)

Myers, Saywitz, & Goodman, Psychological Research on children as Witnesses: Practical Implications for Forensic Interviews and Courtroom Testimony, 28 Pac. L.J. 3 (1996)

Patton, The World Where Parallel Lines Converge: The Privilege Against Self-Incrimination in Concurrent Civil and Criminal Child Abuse Proceedings, 24 Ga. L. Rev. 473 (1990)

Patton, Legislative Regulation of Dependency Court Attorneys: Public Relations and Separation of Powers, 24 Notre Dame J. of Legis. 3 (1998)

Patton, Standards of Appellate Review for Denial of Counsel and Ineffective Assistance of Counsel in Child Protection and Parental Severance Cases, 27 Loyola Chicago L. J. 195 (1996)

Patton & Latz, Severing Hansel from Gretel: An Analysis of Siblings' Association Rights, 48 Univ. of Miami L. Rev. 745 (1994)

Shotton, Making Reasonable Efforts In Child Abuse and Neglect Cases: Ten Years Later, 26(2) Cal. Western L. Rev., 223 (1990)

Weinstein, And Never the Twain Shall Meet: The Best Interests of Children and the Adversary System, 52 Univ. of Miami L. Rev. 79 (1997)

Wald, State Intervention on Behalf of "Neglected" Children: Standards for Removal of Children from Their Homes, Monitoring the Status of Children in Foster Care, and Termination of Parental Rights, 28 Stan. L. Rev. 623 (1976)

Wald and Woolverton, Risk Assessment: The Emperor's New Clothes? LXIX Child Welf., No. 6, 483 (1990) Special Issue: Ethical Issues in the Legal Representation of Children, 64 Fordham L. Rev. No. 4 (1996) Beyond Status: The Americans with Disabilities Act and the Parental Rights of People Labeled Developmentally Disabled or Mentally Retarded, 83 Calif. L. Rev. 1415 (1995)

Note, California Welfare and Institutions Code Section 317: Advocating a Change to Require Independent Counsel for All Children, 23 Loy. L.A.L. Rev. 1385 (1990)

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
A. Related Secondary References

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated §§ 328.203-328.209

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

[Reserved]

§§ 328.203[Reserved]

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
1. Overview of Dependency Proceedings

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.210

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.210 Federal Statutes

Indian Child Welfare Act (ICWA). 25 U.S.C. § 1901 et seq.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
1. Overview of Dependency Proceedings

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.211

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.211 State Statutes

Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act (UCCJEA). Fam. Code § 3400 et seq.

Uniform Parentage Act (UPA). Fam. Code § 7600 et seq.

Interstate Compact on the Placement of Children (ICPC). Fam. Code § 7900 et seq.

Arnold-Kennick Juvenile Court Law. Welf. & Inst. Code § 200

Purpose of Chapter. Welf. & Inst. Code § 202

California law pertaining to Indian children and possible Indian children. Welf. & Inst. Code § 224 et seq.

Purpose of Juvenile Court Law. Welf. & Inst. Code § 300.2

Special session of court for juvenile proceedings. Welf. & Inst. Code § 345

Public as prohibited from attending juvenile proceedings. Welf. & Inst. Code § 346

Use of court reporter in juvenile proceedings. Welf. & Inst. Code § 347

Application of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to variance and amendment of pleadings in juvenile proceedings.

Welf. & Inst. Code § 348

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
1. Overview of Dependency Proceedings

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.212

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.212 California Rules of Court

Appeals and Writs in Juvenile Cases. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.400 et seq.

Definitions. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.502

Judicial Council Forms for Juvenile Proceedings. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.504

General limitations on continuing juvenile court proceedings. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.550

Confidentiality of Records. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.552

Dependency hearing continuances. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 5.672, 5.686

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
1. Overview of Dependency Proceedings

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.213

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.213 Decisions

Overview of dependency proceedings. In re Marilyn H. (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 295, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 544, 851 P.2d 826 ; Cynthia D. v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 242, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 698, 851 P.2d 1307

Civil Code and Code of Civil Procedure as not applying to dependency proceedings unless expressly made applicable. In re Shelley J. (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 322, 328, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 922 ; In re Chantal S. (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 196, 200, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 866, 913 P.2d 1075 ; In re Jennifer R. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 704, 711, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 759

Provisions of Civil Code and Code of Civil Procedure that apply to special proceedings do apply to dependency proceedings if they are consistent with the overall goal of the dependency system. In re David H. (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 1626, 1638-1639, 82 Cal. Rptr. 3d 81 ; In re Claudia E. (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 627, 636, 77 Cal. Rptr. 3d 722 ; In re Mark B. (2007) 149 Cal. App. 4th 61, 78-79, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 697

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
1. Overview of Dependency Proceedings

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.214

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.214 Attorney General Opinions

"Homeless" children, as defined by San Francisco Mayor's Criminal Justice Council, as falling within provisions of former Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(a), (b) (now see Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(b)). 69 Ops. Cal. Atty. Gen. 241, 243, 245 (1986)

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
1. Overview of Dependency Proceedings

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated §§ 328.215-328.219

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

[Reserved]

§§ 328.215[Reserved]

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
2. Intake, Investigation, and Commencement Procedures

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.220

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.220 State Statutes

[1] In General

Initial investigation by social worker. Welf. & Inst. Code § 328

Obligations of social worker on application by affidavit to commence dependency proceedings. Welf. & Inst. Code § 329

Program of supervision as alternative to filing. Welf. & Inst. Code § 301

Review of social worker's decision not to file petition commencing dependency proceedings. Welf. & Inst. Code § 331

Contents of petition to declare child a dependent child of the court. Welf. & Inst. Code § 332

Petition as required to be verified. Welf. & Inst. Code § 333

[2] Places and Conditions of Detention

Secure and nonsecure facilities defined. Welf. & Inst. Code § 206

Segregation of children described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 from children brought into detention under Welf. & Inst. Code § 601 (wardship for habitual truancy or disobedience) or 602 (wardship for criminal offenses). Welf. & Inst. Code

§ 206

Restrictions on detention in jail or lockup. Welf. & Inst. Code § 207

Restrictions on detention in state hospital or other state facility. Welf. & Inst. Code § 208

[3] Temporary Custody of Child

Official in charge of child day-care facility as required to provide peace officer with address and telephone number of parents of child released to peace officer. Health & Safety Code § 1596.876

Notice of filing of dependency petition and of date, time, and place of initial or detention hearing. Welf. & Inst. Code § 290.1

Temporary custody of child by peace officer without warrant. Welf. & Inst. Code § 305

Temporary custody of child by social worker in county welfare department. Welf. & Inst. Code § 306

Temporary custody of child by Indian social worker of tribe that has entered into agreement with State Department of Social Services pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 10553.1 concerning child welfare services or foster care payments. Welf. & Inst. Code § 306(a)

Alternatives available to peace officer taking child into temporary custody. Welf. & Inst. Code § 307

Requirement that parent, guardian, or relative be informed that child has been taken into custody and that written statement is available explaining parent's or guardian's procedural rights and preliminary stages of dependency investigation and hearing. Welf. & Inst. Code § 307.4

Peace officer as authorized to take child in temporary custody to community service program for abused or neglected children. Welf. & Inst. Code § 307.5

Notification of parents that child has been taken into temporary custody. Welf. & Inst. Code § 308(a)

Right of child ten years of age or older to make completed telephone calls to parent and attorney after being taken into temporary custody. Welf. & Inst. Code § 308(b)

Procedure upon delivery of child to social worker. Welf. & Inst. Code § 309

Assessment of relatives and nonrelative extended family members for temporary placement of child. Welf. & Inst. Code § 309(d)

Written promise to appear as condition for release by social worker. Welf. & Inst. Code § 310

Filing of dependency petition and setting of matter for a detention hearing. Welf. & Inst. Code § 311(a)

Time limitations for filing petition when child is held in custody. Welf. & Inst. Code § 313(a)

Written explanation by social worker as required when a child who has been held in custody for more than six hours is subsequently released and no petition filed. Welf. & Inst. Code § 313(b)

Time limitations for filing petition when child willfully misrepresents age. Welf. & Inst. Code § 314

[4] Child of Dependent Minor

Child of a dependent minor is not at risk solely because of the age, dependent status, or foster care status of the parent. Welf. & Inst. Code § 300

Teen Parents in Foster Care Act. Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 16002.5, 16004.5

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
2. Intake, Investigation, and Commencement Procedures

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.221

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.221 California Rules of Court

Intake guidelines. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.514

Factors to consider in intake decisions. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.516

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
2. Intake, Investigation, and Commencement Procedures

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated §§ 328.222-328.229

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

[Reserved]

§§ 328.222[Reserved]

127 of 187 DOCUMENTS

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
3. Standing and Right to Counsel

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.230

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.230 State Statutes

Appointment of counsel. Welf. & Inst. Code § 317

Right to competent counsel. Welf. & Inst. Code § 317.5(a)

Child as party to dependency proceedings. Welf. & Inst. Code § 317.5(b)

Guardian ad litem for child. Welf. & Inst. Code § 326.5

Court-appointed special advocates. Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 100-109, 356.5

Guardian ad litem for minor parent. Welf. & Inst. Code § 326.7

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
3. Standing and Right to Counsel

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.231

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.231 California Rules of Court

Persons entitled to be present. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.530

De facto parents. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.502(10)

Relatives. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.502(26)

Procedures for determining parentage. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.635

Court-Appointed Special Advocates. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.655

Standards for appointed counsel; interests of child. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.660

Conflict of interest guidelines for counsel representing siblings. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.660(c)

Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (CAPTA) Guardian Ad Litem for child. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.662

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
3. Standing and Right to Counsel

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.232

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.232 Decisions

[1] Biological and Presumed Fathers and Mothers

A Kelsey S. father is not a presumed father. In re Vincent M. (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 943, 957, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 755

Parent whose parental rights are terminated cannot later become a presumed parent by receiving the child into her home and holding the child out as her own. A request for presumed parent in those circumstances would be an impermissible collateral attack on the termination of parental rights. In re Cody B. (2007) 153 Cal. App. 4th 1004, 1006-1007, 63 Cal. Rptr. 3d 652

Biological father who is not presumed father is not "parent" entitled to child custody on removal from custodial parent under Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2. In re Zacharia D. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 435, 452-453, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 751, 862 P.2d 751

Declaration of paternity equivalent of presumption of paternity. In re Liam L. (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 739, 743-747, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 13

Presumption that man is father of child is not necessarily rebutted by evidence the man is not the biological father. Court must determine whether it is an appropriate action in which to allow the presumption to be rebutted by evidence of nonpaternity. In re Jesusa V. (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 588, 10 Cal. Rptr. 3d 205, 85 P. 3d 2 ; In re Nicholas H. (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 56, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 146, 46 P.3d 932

Paternity statutes applicable to determinations of maternity, and presumption that woman is mother of child is not necessarily rebutted by evidence the woman is not the biological mother. In re Salvador M. (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 1353, 4 Cal. Rptr. 3d 705 ; In re Karen C. (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 932, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 677

Case law requiring hearing for appointment of guardian ad litem is not retroactive. Contra Costa County Children and Family Services Bureau v. Superior Court (2004) 117 Cal. App. 4th 111, 118-119, 11 Cal. Rptr. 3d 459

[2] Guardian Ad Litem

Failure to follow due process procedures for appointment of guardian ad litem for parent in dependency proceedings is not structural error, but is subject to harmless error analysis. In re James F. (2008) 42 Cal. 4th 901, 905, 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 358, 174 P. 3d 180

Appointment of guardian ad litem pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. §§ 372 and 373 as required for developmentally disabled or mentally ill parent who is incapable of understanding juvenile dependency proceedings involving his or her child. In re Lisa M. (1986) 177 Cal. App. 3d 915, 918-919, 225 Cal. Rptr. 7

Standard for appointment of guardian ad litem for parent as that found in Penal Code § 1367. In re Christina B. (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 1441, 1449-1451, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 918

Standard for appointment of guardian ad litem for parent will usually be that found in Penal Code § 1367, but guardian ad litem for parent should also be appointed if standards of Probate Code § 1801 is met. In re Sara D. (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 661, 667, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 909

If parent objects to appointment of guardian ad litem for parent, court must conduct a hearing at which parent may be heard before making the appointment. In re Joann E. (2003) 104 Cal. App. 4th 347, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 189 ; In re Sara D. (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 661, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 909

Court must appoint guardian ad litem for child parent. In re D.D. (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 646, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 578

[3] De Facto Parents

Grandmother who had cared for children and amply provided for their needs as being entitled to de facto parent status. In re Ashley P. (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 23, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 383

Nonparent who commits sexual or other serious physical abuse on child in his or her charge as barred from participating in that child's dependency proceeding as a "de facto parent." In re Kieshia E. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 68, 78-79, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 775, 859 P.2d 1290

Nonparent whose conduct contributes to grounds for dependency proceeding falls within the Kieshia E. prohibition for de facto parent status. In re Merrick V. (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 235, 257, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 490 ; In re Jacob E. (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 909, 920, 18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 15 ; In re Leticia S. (2001) 92 Cal. App. 4th 378, 382, 111 Cal. Rptr. 2d 810

Conduct of grandparent who took children and kept them in hiding for purpose of allowing abusing parent free access falls within the Kieshia E. prohibition for de facto parent status. In re Michael R. (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 150, 156-158, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 842

De facto parent status as not terminating by operation of law or by any other automatic mechanism except when dependency itself if terminated; rather, to terminate status, department must file noticed motion to terminate based on change of circumstances. In re Patricia L. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 61, 67, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 631

Juvenile court as properly granting continuing visitation rights to de facto parent. In re Robin N. (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 1140, 1141, 1146-1147, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 512

Juvenile court as lacking legislative authority to order de facto parent to comply involuntarily with reunification or child welfare requirements. In re Jody R. (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 1615, 1628, 267 Cal. Rptr. 746

De facto parent status as determined at permanency planning hearing by preponderance of evidence because grant of de facto parent status not automatic grant of custody and neither severs parent-child relationship nor affects parents' due process interests in liberty or privacy. In re Joshuia S. (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 119, 122, 125, 252 Cal. Rptr. 106

De facto parents with no other legal or blood relation to dependent child as not having same right to family reunification services under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.2(e) as parents or guardians; denial of reunification services as not violating de facto parents' due process rights. In re Jamie G. (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 675, 679, 684, 241 Cal. Rptr. 869

Juvenile court as abusing discretion in summary refusal to permit foster parent to participate in status review hearing, because foster parent may have standing as de facto parent. Christina K. v. Superior Court (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 1463, 1466-1469, 229 Cal. Rptr. 564

Participation of de facto parents, such as foster parents, as not restricted to limited role of amicus curiae; such persons as permitted to appear as parties to assert and protect their own interests in companionship, care, custody, and management of child. Katzoff v. Superior Court (1976) 54 Cal. App. 3d 1079, 1084, 127 Cal. Rptr. 178

[4] Relatives

Participation by grandparent or other close blood relative in permanency planning hearing as permitted under prior dependency laws, although de facto parent status is lacking, if actions in undertaking participation suggest to court that it would profit by hearing his or her views as to child's best interests. Charles S. v. Superior Court (1985) 168 Cal. App. 3d 151, 156-157, 214 Cal. Rptr. 47

[5] Guardians

Process for initiating hearing to terminate probate guardianship in the juvenile court involves two steps: a recommendation to the juvenile court to terminate the probate guardianship; and the juvenile court ordering the appropriate agency or counsel to file a motion pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 728. In re Angel S. (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 1202, 1207, 67 Cal. Rptr. 3d 792

[6] Right to Counsel

Indigent parent's due process right to appointment of attorney in proceeding to terminate parental rights as determined on case-by-case basis. Lassiter v. Department of Social Services (1981) 452 U.S. 18, 31, 101 S. Ct. 2153, 68 L. Ed. 2d 640

Welf. & Inst. Code § 318 as permitting district attorney to act as prosecutor of parents and as appointed counsel for children without conflict of interest per se. In re Albert B. (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 361, 382-383, 263 Cal. Rptr. 694

Petitioning county agency as not required to be represented by counsel unless both conditions of Welf. & Inst. Code § 318.5 are met. In re Jessica B. (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 504, 513, 254 Cal. Rptr. 883

Parent as having no standing to claim that petitioning agency has been denied effective assistance of counsel. In re Jessica B. (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 504, 512-513, 254 Cal. Rptr. 883

Counsel for sibling group of dependent children as having conflict due to differing circumstances and possible positions of children facing Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing in light of substantial interference with a sibling relationship exception to the termination of parental rights. Carroll v. Superior Court (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 1423, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 891

Standards for conflict of counsel in the representation of dependent sibling groups. In re Celine R. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 45, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 432, 71 P.3d 787

Attorney's failure to contact alleged father, take steps to seek to establish his paternity, as he desired, or to challenge the lack of notice to the alleged father prevented him from seeking or attaining biological or presumed father status in the dependency case and was ineffective assistance of counsel. In re O.S. (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 1402, 1407, 1410-1412, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 571

Child previously represented by counsel of own choice as required to be permitted to continue representation unless court first determines that child is incapable of choosing or has not chosen competent counsel. Akkiko M. v. Superior Court (1985) 163 Cal. App. 3d 525, 527, 530-531, 209 Cal. Rptr. 568

In counties in which there is public defender, Welfare and Institutions Code as authorizing appointment and compensation of private counsel for persons financially unable to employ counsel after public defender has refused to represent them in juvenile proceedings. In re J. G. L. (1974) 43 Cal. App. 3d 447, 452-453, 117 Cal. Rptr. 799

Appointment of and payment for counsel for indigent appealing decision from juvenile court as authorized. In re Simeth (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 982, 985, 115 Cal. Rptr. 617

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
3. Standing and Right to Counsel

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated §§ 328.233-328.239

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

[Reserved]

§§ 328.233[Reserved]

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
4. Initial or Detention Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.240

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.240 State Statutes

Assessment of suitability of relative or nonrelative extended family member for temporary placement. Welf. & Inst. Code § 309

Time limitation for detention hearing. Welf. & Inst. Code § 315

Initial explanation by court at detention hearing. Welf. & Inst. Code § 316

Duty of court to inquire regarding identity and address of all presumed or alleged fathers. Welf. & Inst. Code § 316.2

Appointment of counsel. Welf. & Inst. Code § 317

Representation of petitioner by county counsel or district attorney. Welf. & Inst. Code § 318.5

Criteria for release or detention at detention hearing. Welf. & Inst. Code § 319

Request for rehearing of detention proceeding when no parent or guardian is present and no parent or guardian has had actual notice of hearing. Welf. & Inst. Code § 321

Request for rehearing for presentation of a prima facie case. Welf. & Inst. Code § 321

Motion for continuance. Welf. & Inst. Code § 322

Order for child or parent or guardian to appear. Welf. & Inst. Code § 323

Transfer of child between counties. Welf. & Inst. Code § 324

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
4. Initial or Detention Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.241

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.241 California Rules of Court

Inquiry and notice for possible Indian child. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.481

Service of petition and notice of initial or detention hearing. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.667

Language of notice. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.667(b)

Explanation of proceedings at commencement of initial or detention hearing. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.668

Time limits for filing petition and setting initial hearing if child is not in custody. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.670(a)

Time limits for filing petition if child is taken into custody. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.670(b)

Detention of child in medical facility. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.670(c)

Time of detention hearing. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.670(d)

Detention hearings pursuant to warrants issued by juvenile court, transfers between counties, and changes of placement under juvenile court order. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.670(e)

Time limits for setting jurisdiction hearing. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.670(f)

Visitation orders pending jurisdiction hearing. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.670(g)

Continuances. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.672

Conduct of initial or detention hearing. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.674

Admission, no contest, or submission. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.674(a)

General Conduct. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.674(b)

Examination by court and receipt of evidence. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.674(c)

Rights of child, parent, or guardian. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.674(d)

Requirements for detention. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.676(a)

Evidence to be considered by court. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.676(b)

Findings in support of detention. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.678(a)

Factors to be considered as grounds for detention. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.678(b)

Findings by the court regarding reasonable efforts. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.678(c)

Order vesting custody with the social services agency. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.678(d)

Detention alternatives. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.678(e)

Rehearing of detention hearing. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.680

Prima facie hearings for further evidence. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.680(d)

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
4. Initial or Detention Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.242

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.242 Decisions

Dependency petition is not to be dismissed merely because court finds a prima facie showing of dependency jurisdiction has not been made. Los Angeles County Dept. of Children & Family Serv. v. Super. Ct. (2008) 162 Cal. App. 4th 1408, 1418, 77 Cal. Rptr. 3d 52

Prima facie case for removal must be made by relevant evidence. In re Raymond G. (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 964, 972, 281 Cal. Rptr. 625

Failure of social services department to file petition in a timely fashion does not require juvenile court to release the child at detention hearing if detention is warranted. Los Angeles County Dept. of Children's Services v. Superior Court (1988) 200 Cal. App. 3d 505, 509, 246 Cal. Rptr. 150

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
4. Initial or Detention Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated §§ 328.243-328.249

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

[Reserved]

§§ 328.243[Reserved]

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
5. Jurisdiction Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.250

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.250 State Statutes

Jurisdiction requirements for the declaration that a child is a dependent child of the court. Welf. & Inst. Code § 300

Purpose of dependency proceedings. Welf. & Inst. Code § 300.2

Assumption of jurisdiction over child in custody of one or both parents. Welf. & Inst. Code § 302

Retention of jurisdiction over dependent children. Welf. & Inst. Code § 303

Commencement of proceeding by filing petition. Welf. & Inst. Code § 325

Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (CAPTA) guardian ad litem for child. Welf. & Inst. Code § 326.5

Venue for dependency proceedings. Welf. & Inst. Code § 327

Time limitations for setting of jurisdictional hearing. Welf. & Inst. Code § 334

Issuance of citation. Welf. & Inst. Code § 338

Issuance of warrant for arrest. Welf. & Inst. Code § 339

Issuance of warrant for protective custody of child. Welf. & Inst. Code § 340

Issuance of subpoenas. Welf. & Inst. Code § 341

Child and any person entitled to notice of hearing as entitled to be present at jurisdictional hearing. Welf. & Inst. Code § 349

Judge of juvenile court as controlling all proceedings with a view to ascertaining jurisdictional facts of all information relative to the present condition and future welfare of the child in an informal, nonadversary atmosphere, except when there is a contested issue of fact or law. Welf. & Inst. Code § 350

Provisions for continuance. Welf. & Inst. Code § 352

Initial explanation by judge as to allegations, nature of hearings, its procedures and possible consequences. Welf. & Inst. Code § 353

Provision for ascertaining need for and appointment of counsel. Welf. & Inst. Code § 353

Informing dependent child of right to modify order or terminate jurisdiction. Welf. & Inst. Code § 353.1

Evidence and proof at jurisdictional proceedings including receipt of social studies. Welf. & Inst. Code § 355

Presumptions affecting the burden of producing evidence on the issue of jurisdiction. Welf. & Inst. Code § 355.1

Findings and orders as to jurisdictional allegations. Welf. & Inst. Code § 356

Jurisdiction to dismiss petition or set aside findings. Welf. & Inst. Code § 390

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
5. Jurisdiction Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.251

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.251 California Rules of Court

[1] Time Limitations

Time limitations for setting jurisdiction hearing. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.670(f)

[2] No Contest or Submission

Right to plead no contest or submit jurisdictional determination to court and waive further jurisdictional hearing. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.682(e)

[3] Admission of Allegations of Petition

Prerequisites to acceptance of admission of petition. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.682(c)

Requirement that admission be made personally by parent or guardian. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.682(d)

Required findings on acceptance by court of admission, plea of no contest, or submission on reports. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.682(f)

[4] Conduct of Hearing

Explanation of petition at jurisdiction hearing. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.682(a)

Advice by court of trial rights of parent or guardian. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.682(b)

When contested hearing must be held. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.684(a)

[5] Continuance of Hearing

Limitations on continuances. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.550(a)

Continuance pending disposition hearing. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.686(a)

Continuance when nonreunification requested. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.686(b)

[6] Discovery and Evidentiary Rules

Prehearing discovery. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.546

Privilege against self-incrimination. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.548(a)

Authority of judge to grant immunity. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.548(b)

Request for immunity. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.548(d)

No immunity for perjury, false swearing, or contempt in juvenile court proceeding. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.548(e)

Admissibility of evidence. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.684(b)

Admissibility of social worker's report. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.684(c)

Objections to and admissibility of hearsay in social worker's report. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.684(d)

Inapplicable privileges. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.684(e)

[7] Posthearing Findings and Procedures

Court findings when allegations of petition are true. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.684(f)

Disposition if allegations found to be true. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.684(g)

Court findings when allegations of petition are not proved; dismissal. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.684(h)

Release or detention of child during continuance pending disposition hearing. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.686(c)

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
5. Jurisdiction Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.252

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.252 Decisions

[1] Petition

Once a dependency petition is filed, it may not be voluntarily dismissed by the petitioner should further investigation show a lack of grounds. The petition may be dismissed only by the juvenile court after an evidentiary hearing to determine whether dismissal is in the child's best interest. Allen M. v. Superior Court (1992) 6 Cal. App. 4th 1069, 1073-1075, 8 Cal. Rptr. 2d 259

Bare recital of conclusive words of Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 as insufficient notice of specific facts on which petition is based. In re Jeremy C. (1980) 109 Cal. App. 3d 384, 397, 167 Cal. Rptr. 283

To satisfy due process requirements, petition to commence proceedings in juvenile court as required to contain concise statement of facts, separately stated, to support conclusion that child on whose behalf petition is being brought is person within definition of each section and subdivision under which proceedings are being instituted. In re J. T. (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 633, 639, 115 Cal. Rptr. 553

Motion akin to a demurrer must be made at trial court or it is waived for appeal. In re S.O. (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 453, 459-460, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 554 ; In re James C. (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 470, 481, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 270 ; In re Shelley J. (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 322, 328, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 922 ; but see In re Alysha S. (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 393, 397, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 494

[2] Presumptions

Parent being a registered sex offender presumptive for dependency jurisdiction under Welf. & Inst. Code § 355.1(d). In re John S. (2001) 88 Cal. App. 4th 1140, 1145, 106 Cal. Rptr. 2d 476

Filing of dependency petition based on parent's alleged substance abuse as not creating "conclusive presumption of unfitness" when parent is entitled to, and does, present evidence in attempt to demonstrate that he or she can adequately care for child. In re Stephen W. (1990) 221 Cal. App. 3d 629, 640-641, 271 Cal. Rptr. 319

Child born under influence of dangerous drugs ingested by mother as born with detrimental condition, thereby creating presumption that child was person described by former Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(a) (now cf. Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(b)). In re Troy D. (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 889, 897, 263 Cal. Rptr. 869

[3] Due Process Rights of Parents

At jurisdiction hearing the parent's attorney has right to cross-examine preparer of report despite absence of parent. In re Dolly D. (1995) 41 Cal. App. 4th 440, 444-446, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 691

A parent who admits the allegations of the petition at the jurisdiction hearing waives any objections based on inadequate notice of the facts at issue. Thus, in one such case a court held that a mother received adequate notice of the grounds for removal of her son, even though "new" facts were alleged at the disposition hearing, because those facts merely explained the ultimate fact alleged in the original petition. In re Rodger H. (1991) 228 Cal. App. 3d 1174, 1181-1182, 279 Cal. Rptr. 406

Court as not erring when it considered transcript of child's in camera testimony in prior proceedings on counsels' stipulation without extracting personal waiver of parents' constitutional rights. In re Kerry O. (1989) 210 Cal. App. 3d 326, 334, 258 Cal. Rptr. 448

Parent who initially appeared at dependency proceedings with appointed counsel and thereafter was unable to be located as receiving adequate notice of proceedings when, in addition to mailing notice to her last known address, county made "due diligence" efforts, and court authorized her counsel to hire investigator to locate her. In re Larry P. (1988) 201 Cal. App. 3d 888, 896-897, 247 Cal. Rptr. 472

Parent's interest in companionship, care, custody, and management of child as compelling and as giving rise to requirement of adequate notice and opportunity to be heard before state may deprive parent of this interest. In re Larry P. (1988) 201 Cal. App. 3d 888, 893, 247 Cal. Rptr. 472

Parent as having no express constitutional right to physically confront child during civil dependency hearing; when child testifies outside parent's presence in such hearing, parent's due process right to confrontation as protected by his or her counsel's confrontation of child. In re Mary S. (1986) 186 Cal. App. 3d 414, 419, 422-423, 230 Cal. Rptr. 726

Juvenile court as having duty under Welf. & Inst. Code § 353 to continue jurisdiction hearing to preserve rights to notice and hearing of out-of-state parent who did not appear and who had no contact with appointed counsel, even though appointed counsel did not contest issue of dependency or request continuance. In re C.P.(1985) 165 Cal. App. 3d 270, 271, 273-274, 211 Cal. Rptr. 498

Notice of specific facts on which removal of child from parental custody is predicated as fundamental to due process. In re Jeremy C. (1980) 109 Cal. App. 3d 384, 397, 167 Cal. Rptr. 283

Right to notice of allegations on which deprivation of custody is predicated and to notice of time and place of hearing as fundamental to due process; parent as entitled to be apprised of charges to be met in order to prepare case and to be given opportunity to be heard and to cross examine accusers. In re Neal D. (1972) 23 Cal. App. 3d 1045, 1048, 100 Cal. Rptr. 706

[4] No Contest Plea or Submission on Reports

Parent who submits on the recommendations in the social worker's report waives the right to challenge on appeal the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings and orders which the court makes in accordance with those recommendations. In re Richard K. (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 580, 587-590, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 575

Parent or guardian who admits or pleads no contest to allegations in petition as waiving right to challenge on appeal the legal applicability of Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 to his or her conduct. In re Troy Z. (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 1170, 1181, 13 Cal. Rptr. 2d 724, 840 P.2d 266

Parent or guardian who submits jurisdictional determination to court as not waiving right to appeal jurisdictional finding. In re Tommy E. (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 1234, 1237-1239, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 402

[5] Discovery and Evidentiary Issues

[a] Discovery Policies and Procedures

Trial court as not abusing discretion in denying parent's discovery request for matter not available to petitioner in dependency proceeding, especially in view of lack of particularized claim showing how matter was relevant to proceeding. In re Dolly A. (1986) 177 Cal. App. 3d 195, 204, 222 Cal. Rptr. 741

[b] Privileges

Court's exclusion of testimony of psychologist who examined child upheld when child's attorney had not been contacted and had not given permission for parents to have child examined. In re Katrina W. (1994) 31 Cal. App. 4th 441, 447-448, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 7

Parent's access to psychotherapist's records and testimony as denied by analogy to former Health & Safety Code § 1795.14(a)(2) (now see Health & Safety Code § 123115(a)(2)) if disclosure will harm child's therapeutic relationship or have detrimental effect on child's psychological well-being. In re Daniel C.H. (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 814, 827-828, 269 Cal. Rptr. 624

Molested child as entitled to assert psychotherapist-patient privilege against parent. In re Daniel C.H. (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 814, 829, 269 Cal. Rptr. 624

Juvenile court referral for psychiatric counseling after dependency finding as not equivalent of court-ordered examination, and as therefore not excepted by Evid. Code § 1017(a) from psychotherapist-patient privilege. In re Eduardo A. (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 1038, 1041, 261 Cal. Rptr. 68

In dependency proceeding, statements by four-year-old child to psychotherapist as within statutory exception of Evid. Code § 1027 to psychotherapist-patient privilege when child had been sexually molested by mother's boyfriend and therapist reasonably believed that disclosure was in best interests of child; mother's statements to therapist as also not protected by psychotherapist-patient privilege pursuant to exception contained in Evid. Code § 1024, permitting disclosure of otherwise privileged communication to prevent danger to another, when mother defended boyfriend's conduct and there was basis for concluding that mother's mental or emotional condition endangered child. In re Courtney S. (1982) 130 Cal. App. 3d 567, 574-575, 181 Cal. Rptr. 843

Juvenile court may prospectively order the child's therapist to provide reports to the court, but the order must be limited in scope to what is necessary and must preserve the confidentiality of details and statements made by the child in therapy. In re Kristine W. (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 521, 528-529, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 369 ; In re Eduardo A. (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 1038, 1044, 261 Cal. Rptr. 68

Juvenile court may retroactively order child's therapist to reveal information otherwise protected by psychotherapist-patient privilege, but the order must be limited in scope to that which is needed and must preserve the confidentiality of details and statements made by the child in therapy. In re Mark L. (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 573, 584, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 499 ; In re Pedro M. (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 550, 554, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 839

[c] Children as Witnesses

Truthful child, who does not understand duty to testify truthfully, as incompetent to testify. In re Crystal J. (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 596, 602, 267 Cal. Rptr. 105

Improved procedure for determining if child understands difference between truth and a lie, and understands the duty to testify truthfully. Lyon, Child Witnesses and the Oath, in Children's Testimony: A Handbook of Psychological Research and Forensic Practice (Westcott et al., edits., 2002) pp. 244-260; Lyon, Child Witnesses and the Oath: Empirical Evidence, 73 S. Cal. L. Rev. 1017 (2000); Lyon & Saywitz, Young Maltreated Children's Competence to Take the Oath, 3(1) Applied Developmental Science 16 (1999)

[d] Hearsay

[i] Child's Conduct or Statements

Child dependency hearsay exception upheld based on finding of reliability, but if child is unavailable to testify corroboration is required. In re Cindy L. (1997) 17 Cal. 4th 15, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 803, 947 P.2d 1340

Court is allowed to receive out-of-court statements of a child after finding of reliability under child dependency hearsay exception. In re Carmen O. (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 908, 921, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 848

Two-year-old child's statement regarding sexual assault made more than 10 minutes after assault as spontaneous declaration admissible under Evid. Code § 1240 in juvenile wardship proceeding and as not violating confrontation right. In re Damon H. (1985) 165 Cal. App. 3d 471, 475-476, 478, 211 Cal. Rptr. 623

In juvenile dependency proceeding in which father's sexual molestation of three-year-old daughter was alleged, child's act of recoiling at mention of father viewed by child psychiatrist as nonassertive conduct and not hearsay, and as admissible as some evidence that father was molester, and as circumstantial evidence that child was afraid of father. In re Cheryl H. (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d 1098, 1128, 200 Cal. Rptr. 789

In juvenile dependency proceeding in which father's sexual molestation of three-year-old daughter was alleged, child's out-of-court statement that father was abuser as inadmissible hearsay on issue of whether father actually committed acts but as admissible hearsay on issue of daughter's state of mind and desirability of permitting father continued access to child. In re Cheryl H. (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d 1098, 1128, 200 Cal. Rptr. 789

In juvenile dependency proceeding in which father's sexual molestation of three-year-old daughter was alleged, child's conduct with anatomically correct dolls during play therapy viewed by child psychiatrist as nonassertive conduct and not hearsay, and as relevant circumstantial evidence tending to prove allegation of molestation and as supplying partial basis for psychiatrist's expert opinion that molestation had occurred. In re Cheryl H. (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d 1098, 1126-1127, 200 Cal. Rptr. 789

Testimony that child complained to witness of parent's sexual conduct with child as admissible under "complaint doctrine" exception to hearsay rule. In re Marianne R. (1980) 113 Cal. App. 3d 423, 427, 169 Cal. Rptr. 848

[ii] Third Party's Statements

In juvenile dependency proceeding in which child eventually removed from mother's custody, tape-recorded admission by mother's boyfriend at time of his arrest on child molestation charges as admissible as declaration against penal interest (see Evid. Code § 1230) and as relevant to show mother's knowledge of molestation, as well as duration and extent thereof. In re Courtney S. (1982) 130 Cal. App. 3d 567, 574, 181 Cal. Rptr. 843

[e] Criminal Proceedings and Related Issues

Immunity provided a parent by Welf. & Inst. Code § 355.1(f) is not full use and derivative use immunity, and thus parent cannot be compelled to testify if he or she invokes Fifth Amendment privilege to remain silent. In re Brenda M. (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 772, 773-774, 72 Cal. Rptr. 3d 686 ; In re Mark A. (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 1124, 1128-1129, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 106

Collateral estoppel as not applying to bar criminal prosecution for child abuse when juvenile court has already determined in dependency proceedings that child abuse had not been proven; general collateral estoppel policy considerations in Lucido v. Superior Court (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 335, 272 Cal. Rptr. 767, 795 P.2d 1223 require result different than that reached in earlier case of Lockwood v. Superior Court (1984) 160 Cal. App. 3d 667, 206 Cal. Rptr. 785 . People v. Percifull (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1457, 1461-1464, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 331

Evidence of nonfinal criminal conviction may not be used as evidence in dependency proceeding. In re L. S. (1987) 189 Cal. App. 3d 407, 412-415, 234 Cal. Rptr. 508 , overruled by Principal Life Ins. Co. v. Peterson (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 676

Parent's testimony at dependency proceedings and statements made during court-ordered therapy are afforded use immunity when the parent is involved simultaneously in criminal child abuse proceedings and dependency proceedings. In re Jessica B. (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 504, 520-521, 254 Cal. Rptr. 883

Court has authority to order parent to testify in dependency proceedings despite assertion of privilege against self-incrimination due to the use immunity given parents by statute. In re Amos L. (1981) 124 Cal. App. 3d 1031, 1039, 177 Cal. Rptr 783 , citing Welf. & Inst. Code former § 355.7, now see Welf. & Inst. Code § 355.1(f)

Exclusionary rule of criminal law as not applicable to dependency proceedings. In re Christopher B. (1978) 82 Cal. App. 3d 608, 615, 147 Cal. Rptr. 390

Exclusionary rules of criminal law as not applicable to dependency cases. In re Robert P. (1976) 61 Cal. App. 3d 310, 321, 132 Cal. Rptr. 5

Holding of Crawford v. Washington (2004) 541 U.S. 36, 124 S. Ct. 1354, 158 L. Ed. 2d 177 , regarding "testimonial" hearsay evidence not being allowed in criminal proceedings as not applicable to dependency proceedings. In re April C. (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 599, 610-612, 31 Cal. Rptr. 3d 804

[f] Expert Testimony

Expert testimony on child's interaction with anatomically correct dolls as inadmissible when foundation not laid for interpretation as accepted scientific method of detecting sexual abuse. In re Christie D. (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 469, 477-480, 253 Cal. Rptr. 619

Expert testimony describing "child molest syndrome" as inadmissible under Kelly-Frye criteria to prove that child was sexually abused because syndrome is not generally accepted in psychological community or recognized by American Psychological Association; Kelly-Frye criteria for admissibility of expert testimony based on new scientific technique as requiring that (1) reliability of method be established, and (2) witness be properly qualified to give opinion on subject. In re Sara M. (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 585, 592-594, 239 Cal. Rptr. 605

Evidence based on psychological tests, for example, to determine if child has been abused, may be subject to Kelly-Frye rule under which evidence based on new scientific method of proof is admissible only on showing that method has been generally accepted as reliable in scientific community in which it was developed. In re Amber B. (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 682, 687-692, 236 Cal. Rptr. 623 ; In re Christine C. (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 676, 679-680, 236 Cal. Rptr. 630

In juvenile dependency proceeding in which father's sexual molestation of three-year-old daughter was alleged, psychiatrist's opinion testimony that child had suffered sexual abuse as admissible, but opinion testimony that father had committed abuse as inadmissible; conclusion about identity of abuser as not proper subject for expert opinion testimony. In re Cheryl H. (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d 1098, 1116, 1121, 200 Cal. Rptr. 789

[g] Siblings, Evidence Concerning

Child whose sibling was slain by father as properly judged dependent child under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(j). In re Steve W. (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 10, 24-28, 265 Cal. Rptr. 650

When child slain by father, removal of sibling from mother's custody as not justified by mother's potential for future reliance on abusive individuals. In re Steve W. (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 10, 21-23, 265 Cal. Rptr. 650

Evidence of parent's prior sexual abuse of child's sibling as admissible in Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 disposition proceeding to remove child from home. In re Dorothy I. (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 1154, 1158, 209 Cal. Rptr. 5

Expert opinion testimony to show present danger to child based on abusive parent's past conduct toward child's sibling as admissible in juvenile dependency hearing. In re Dorothy I. (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 1154, 1158, 209 Cal. Rptr. 5

Proof of father's sexual abuse of other child as admissible under former Welf. & Inst. Code § 355.5 in supplemental proceeding on Welf. & Inst. Code § 387 petition involving his daughter. In re Marianne R. (1980) 113 Cal. App. 3d 423, 426, 169 Cal. Rptr. 848

[h] Social Study of Child

A timely objection under Welf. & Inst. Code § 355 to hearsay statements in the social study does not mean the statements are not received in evidence; it only means the hearsay statements cannot be used as the sole evidence on which a jurisdiction finding is made unless the statements fall within one of the statutory exceptions to hearsay statements in the report, or there is corroborating evidence. In re B.D. (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 975, 984, 67 Cal. Rptr. 3d 810

Hearsay statements of child who is the subject of the dependency petition and under 12 years of age are admissible as part of social study under Welf. & Inst. Code § 355 regardless of whether child is competent to testify or not, so long as statements are not the product of fraud, deceit, or undue influence. If hearsay statements of child are the only evidence supporting a finding of jurisdiction, court must make finding statements are reliable. In re Lucero L. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1227, 1244-1248, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 56, 998 P.2d 1019 (plur. opn. of Mosk, J.)

Juvenile court as properly relying on social study prepared by social worker to determine whether child is within court's dependency jurisdiction, even if study contains hearsay or multiple hearsay; social studies as both admissible and competent evidence to support finding of dependency jurisdiction and, in fact, may form basis of jurisdictional determination itself. In re Malinda S. (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 368, 381-385, 272 Cal. Rptr. 787, 795 P. 2d 1244 (disapproving In re Donald R. (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 703, 714-716, 240 Cal. Rptr. 821 , to the extent inconsistent)

At disposition hearing, hearsay evidence contained in social study as required to be considered by trial court in reaching its decision. In re Tasman B. (1989) 210 Cal. App. 3d 927, 934, 258 Cal. Rptr. 716

Complete social study report as admissible in making dependency determination, without regard to hearsay exceptions under Evidence Code. In re Jose M. (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 1098, 1104-1105, 254 Cal. Rptr. 364

Unlike proceedings in which court is asked to determine whether juvenile should be made ward of court on finding that he or she has committed crime, social worker's report as properly reviewed by court during jurisdictional phase of proceedings to determine whether juvenile should be made dependent child of court. In re Biggs (1971) 17 Cal. App. 3d 337, 344, 94 Cal. Rptr. 519

Although in proceeding under Welf. & Inst. Code § 602 review of social report before or during jurisdictional proceedings constitutes error, no similar defect as existing in use of social study report in jurisdictional phase of hearing under former Welf. & Inst. Code § 600 (now Welf. & Inst. Code § 300) because that proceeding is civil in nature and presents no problem of confrontation. In re Biggs (1971) 17 Cal. App. 3d 337, 344, 94 Cal. Rptr. 519

[6] Statement of Decision

Code Civ. Proc. § 632, requiring statement of decision on request, as inapplicable to juvenile court proceedings. In re Ammanda G. (1986) 186 Cal. App. 3d 1075, 1080-1082, 231 Cal. Rptr. 372

[7] Jurisdictional Findings

Dependency jurisdiction does not require finding that both parents have abused or neglected child, so long as the actions of one parent bring the child within one of the statutory descriptions of Welf. & Inst. Code § 300. In re Alysha S. (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 393, 397, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 494 , citing In re Jeffrey P. (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 1548, 1553-1554, 267 Cal. Rptr. 764

Diagnosis of child born under influence of dangerous drugs as creating Welf. & Inst. Code § 355.1 presumption justifying Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(a) dependency jurisdiction. In re Troy D. (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 889, 897, 263 Cal. Rptr. 869

Allegations of parental substance abuse coupled with allegation of actual injury to minor (minor's withdrawal symptoms at birth) as sufficient to assume dependency jurisdiction under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(a). In re Stephen W. (1990) 221 Cal. App. 3d 629, 639, 271 Cal. Rptr. 319

Dependency jurisdiction over child as properly terminated when dependent child acquired delinquency status. In re Donald S. (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 134, 138, 253 Cal. Rptr. 274

Adjudication of dependency as not contingent on showing that child will suffer imminent harm without state intervention; state may intervene on child's behalf if there is substantial likelihood that harm may occur, and if reasonable apprehension is accepted basis for exercise of state power. In re Eric B. (1987) 189 Cal. App. 3d 996, 1003, 235 Cal. Rptr. 22

Court as permitted to take jurisdiction over child under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(a) and (d) even though child was not yet born when jurisdictional allegations on sibling children were made. In re Michael S. (1981) 127 Cal. App. 3d 348, 357, 359, 179 Cal. Rptr. 546

"Person" within meaning of Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 as not including unborn fetus, and court's finding of jurisdiction in dependency proceeding involving pregnant woman and unborn fetus as without statutory authority. In re Steven S. (1981) 126 Cal. App. 3d 23, 29-30, 178 Cal. Rptr. 525

[8] Grounds for Jurisdiction

[a] Inadequate Parental Care and Control

Parents failure to recognize danger friend posed to children, but appropriate protective action thereafter, as not sufficient to support finding of jurisdiction. In re Savannah M. (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 1387, 1395-1396, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 526

Parents' "wait and see" attitude toward ineffective herbal treatment of child's burns as indicative of parental incapacity or unwillingness to exercise proper medical care that justified intervention under former Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(a). In re Petra B. (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 1163, 1169-1170, 265 Cal. Rptr. 342

Proof that mother supported father's behavior of regularly beating children and allowing them to watch regular, severe beatings of sibling, while admonishing them that beatings were commanded by God, as substantial evidence that parents unwilling or unable to exercise proper care or control within meaning of former Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(a) (now see Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(b), (g)). In re Edward C. (1981) 126 Cal. App. 3d 193, 200, 202-203, 178 Cal. Rptr. 694

Capability of parent to exercise proper parental control as largely determined by external standards and likely effect continued misconduct ultimately will have on welfare of child as he or she grows up and realizes significance of such misbehavior rather than immediate effect on child, particularly when child is very young; conduct of parent as determining whether he or she is capable of exercising proper parental control. In re J. T. (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 633, 637, 115 Cal. Rptr. 553

[b] Malnutrition

Evidence of malnutrition as providing sufficient grounds for juvenile court to declare children dependent children of court. In re Jeannie Q. (1973) 32 Cal. App. 3d 288, 299, 107 Cal. Rptr. 646

Actual nutritional deprivation to brothers and sisters as sufficient grounds to declare other children of same family dependent children of court on grounds that such children had no parent capable of exercising proper parental control. In re Jeannie Q. (1973) 32 Cal. App. 3d 288, 299, 107 Cal. Rptr. 646

[c] Physical Abuse

Substantial evidence supporting dispositional finding of dependency under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 as existing when preponderance of evidence supported finding that child was sexually molested by father. In re Cheryl H. (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d 1098, 1132-1133, 200 Cal. Rptr. 789

Dispositional order removing child from mother's custody as proper when sufficient evidence supported finding that child had been molested by mother's boyfriend and that mother was unlikely to protect child from similar molestation in future, thus establishing that mother's home unfit by reason of neglect, cruelty, depravity, or physical abuse pursuant to former Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(d) (now see Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(a), (d), (i)). In re Courtney S. (1982) 130 Cal. App. 3d 567, 576, 181 Cal. Rptr. 843

[d] Refusal to Provide Medical Care

When risk of death is substantial, state as clearly justified in intervening and ordering conventional medical treatment, even though contrary to religious beliefs of parents. In re Eric B. (1987) 189 Cal. App. 3d 996, 1003-1008, 235 Cal. Rptr. 22

[9] Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act (UCCJEA)

Although California properly invoked temporary emergency jurisdiction, notice was not given in accordance with the Hague Convention, and hence reversal was necessary. In re Jorge G. (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 125, 132, 78 Cal. Rptr. 3d 552

Where temporary emergency jurisdiction was clearly warranted and the reasons for that emergency jurisdiction had not been remedied, California had jurisdiction. In re Angel L. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 1127, 1138, 72 Cal. Rptr. 3d 88

Where mother and the children were residing in California, not visiting, at the time the children came into the system, California was the "home state." In re S.W. (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 1501, 1509-1510, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 665

UCCJA (now UCCJEA) as allowing California juvenile court to exercise emergency jurisdiction over Mexican national who entered U.S. illegally with her mother and to retain that jurisdiction after removing child from parental custody. In re Stephanie M. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 295, 324-325, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 595, 867 P.2d 706 (reversing appellate court decision removing child from foster care in California and placing her with maternal grandmother in Mexico)

Cases decided under UCCJA are "instructive" in deciding cases under the UCCJEA except where the two vary. In re A. C. (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 854, 860, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 431

Mere fact child is in state because of need for medical care not sufficient to invoke emergency jurisdiction provision of the UCCJEA. In re A. C. (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 854, 863-864, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 431

UCCJEA as authorizing emergency jurisdiction, but requiring communication with other state or country prior to jurisdiction hearing. In re C.T. (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 101, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 897

[10] Indian Child Welfare Act (ICWA)

Despite information the "great-great-great-grandmother was a Comanche princess," a thorough inquiry was done and ICWA notice was not required because there was no reason to know the child was an Indian child. In re Shane G. (2008) 166 Cal. App. 4th 1532, 1538-1539, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 513

The parent will normally have superior access to information regarding Indian ancestry, and the parent's counsel has a duty to help protect the parent's interest, if any, in his or her rights under the ICWA. In re Miracle M. (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 834, 847, 73 Cal. Rptr. 3d 24 ; In re S.B. (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 1148, 1160, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 726

ICWA notice error is not jurisdictional. Tina L. v. Superior Court (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 262, 268, 77 Cal. Rptr. 3d 628 ; In re Veronica G. (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 179, 187, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 465

Limited remands for ICWA notice errors continue to be appropriate after the legislature revised and recast the state's ICWA statutes and rules. Tina L. v. Superior Court (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 262, 267-269, 77 Cal. Rptr. 3d 628

Requiring notice under the Indian Child Welfare Act based on mere hint of Indian ancestry. Dwayne P. v. Superior Court (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 247, 258, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 639

Requiring copies of the actual forms sent to the tribes and BIA, the mailing receipt, and any responses be submitted to the court to establish proper notice under the ICWA. See, e.g., In re Asia L. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 498, 507-508, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 733 ; In re H.A. (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 1206, 1214-1215, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 12 . But see, In re L.B. (2003) 110 Cal. App. 4th 1420, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 16 (noting procedure is best practice but not actually required)

ICWA noticing error does not deprive the juvenile court of jurisdiction. In re Jonathon S. (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 334, 340-342, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 495 ; In re Brooke C. (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 377, 384-385, 25 Cal. Rptr. 3d 590

Rejecting the "existing Indian family doctrine" as inconsistent with the provisions of the Indian Child Welfare Act. In re Alicia S. (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 79, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 121

Upholding the standard of proof for "active efforts" under 25 U.S.C. § 1912(d) as being clear and convincing evidence. In re Michael G. (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 700, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 642

Applying the "existing Indian family doctrine." Crystal R. v. Superior Court (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 703, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 414

Applying the "existing Indian family doctrine" based on the unique facts of each case. In re Alexandria Y. (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1483, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 679

Parent has right to veto transfer of an ICWA dependency case to the tribe. In re Larissa G. (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 505, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16

Applying the "existing Indian family doctrine" where neither the child nor either parent has a significant social, cultural, or political relationship with Indian life. In re Bridget R. (1996) 41 Cal. App. 4th 1483, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 507

Application of ICWA not permitted when it violates the child's constitutional rights. In re Santos Y. (2001) 92 Cal. App. 4th 1274, 1312-1323, 112 Cal. Rptr. 2d 692

Application of ICWA to wide variety of issues in dependency proceedings. In re Krystle D. (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 1778, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 132

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
5. Jurisdiction Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.253

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.253 Attorney General Opinions

Duty to report child abuse under Child Abuse Reporting Law (former Penal Code §§ 11165-11174; now see Penal Code §§ 11164-11174.1) as superseding confidentiality provisions of Lanterman-Petris-Short Act (Welf. & Inst. Code § 5328). 65 Ops. Cal. Atty. Gen. 345, 359 (1982)

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
5. Jurisdiction Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated §§ 328.254-328.259

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

[Reserved]

§§ 328.254[Reserved]

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
6. Disposition Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.260

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.260 State Statutes

Juvenile's right to address court when foster care disposition is under consideration. Welf. & Inst. Code § 399

Purpose of court-appointed child advocate. Welf. & Inst. Code § 356.5

Temporary placement of juvenile in psychopathic ward of county hospital. Welf. & Inst. Code § 357

Court as required to hear testimony as to disposition of case; continuance after finding to consider social study of social worker and any study or evaluation of court-appointed child advocate. Welf. & Inst. Code § 358

Required contents of social study. Welf. & Inst. Code § 358.1

Continuance of proceedings for observation and treatment of drug problem. Welf. & Inst. Code § 359

Order adjudging child a dependent child of the court. Welf. & Inst. Code § 360

Limitations on parental control over children declared dependent children of the court. Welf. & Inst. Code § 361

Dispositional alternatives on removal of child from parental custody. Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2

Preferential consideration of child's relative for placement during period of removal from parents. Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.3

Reunification services for parents after removal of child from parental custody. Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5

Alternative orders for the care, supervision, custody, conduct, maintenance, and support of dependent children. Welf. & Inst. Code § 362

Reduction in public assistance awarded parents in amount attributable to the child after child is declared a dependent child of the court. Welf. & Inst. Code § 363

Temporary detention of dependent child pending execution of the order of commitment or other disposition. Welf. & Inst. Code § 367

Transportation of child as necessary to parents, relatives, guardian, or person charged with custody living out of state or in a foreign country. Welf. & Inst. Code § 368

Provision of medical, surgical, dental, or other remedial care. Welf. & Inst. Code § 369

Provision of psychiatric or psychological services. Welf. & Inst. Code § 370

Transfer of juvenile cases between counties. Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 375-380

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
6. Disposition Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.261

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.261 California Rules of Court

Interstate Compact on the Placement of Children. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.616

Petition by social worker when family is unable or unwilling to cooperate with services provided by social worker. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.688(a)

Order at hearing on petition. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.688(b)

Social study report. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.690(a)

Evidence considered. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.690(b)

Alternative disposition orders. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.695(a)

Appointment of legal guardian. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.695(b)

Limitations on parental control. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.695(c)

Required findings for removal of custody. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.695(d)

Findings relating to reasonable efforts to prevent or eliminate need for removal from custody. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.695(e)

Provision of reunification services. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.695(f)

Information regarding termination of parent-child relationship. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.695(g)

Setting for six-month review. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.695(h)

Fifteen-day reviews. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.695(i)

Limitation on setting hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.695(j)

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
6. Disposition Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.262

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.262 Decisions

[1] Standard of Proof

Proof by clear and convincing evidence as proper standard at disposition hearing for detriment finding justifying non-placement with previously non-custodial parent under Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(a). In re Marquis D. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 1813, 1827-1829, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 198

Proof by preponderance of evidence as proper standard of proof at jurisdictional phase of dependency hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300; proof by preponderance of evidence as sufficient standard of proof at dispositional phase of dependency hearing, unless court awards custody to nonparent, in which case proof by clear and convincing evidence required. In re Cheryl H. (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d 1098, 1113-1114, 200 Cal. Rptr. 789

When parent may be deprived of custody of child in favor of nonparent, standard of proof at jurisdictional phase of hearing as preponderance of evidence to determine if child subject to juvenile court jurisdiction under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300; more stringent standard of clear and convincing evidence as required at dispositional phase of hearing when child may be ordered removed from parental custody. In re Bernadette C. (1982) 127 Cal. App. 3d 618, 623-625, 179 Cal. Rptr. 688

If only action of court would be to declare child to be dependent child and to retain custody of child in parents, proper standard of proof for jurisdictional and dispositional purposes under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 as preponderance of evidence. In re Nicole B. (1979) 93 Cal. App. 3d 874, 882, 155 Cal. Rptr. 916 ; In re Christopher B. (1978) 82 Cal. App. 3d 608, 618, 147 Cal. Rptr. 390 ; In re D. (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 192, 196, 146 Cal. Rptr. 178

[2] Alternative Dispositions

Juvenile court has the authority to place child in another country in an appropriate case. In re Sabrina H. (2007) 149 Cal. App. 4th 1403, 1410-1413, 57 Cal. Rptr. 3d 863

Practice of removing children from parents and then immediately "detaining" with parents as lacking statutory authority and being beyond juvenile court's jurisdiction. In re Andres G. (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 476, 75 Cal. Rptr. 2d 285

Practice of removing children from parents and then immediately putting child with parents as a temporary placement as lacking statutory authority. In re Damonte A. (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th 894, 899-900, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 369

Father's lack of employment and separate residence as insufficient detriment to support denial of child custody request under Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(a). In re Danielle M. (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 1267, 1271, 266 Cal. Rptr. 352

Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.3(a) as envisioning compliance with Interstate Compact on the Placement of Children regarding juvenile court's knowledge of child's placement outside California. In re Eli F. (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 228, 239, 260 Cal. Rptr. 453

Because object at dispositional hearing is to find temporary placement that will meet child's needs during reunification efforts, any error that may occur by failing to recommend initial placement with relative pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 281.5 as insignificant if, at subsequent permanency planning hearing, court determines that reunification has failed. In re Baby Girl D. (1989) 208 Cal. App. 3d 1489, 1493-1494, 257 Cal. Rptr. 1

Award of custody to social worker for home placement as nonremoval from parental custody not requiring finding of detriment. In re Nathan W. (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 1496, 1500, 253 Cal. Rptr. 312

Court as not permitted to circumvent statutory scheme for reunification efforts by failing to order reunification plan at disposition hearing or by referring child to permanency planning despite appearance that effort will fail; early planning for alternative permanent placement may only begin if timely return to parental custody proves improbable by time of review of foster placement disposition and of initial permanency planning hearing. In re John B. (1984) 159 Cal. App. 3d 268, 273-274, 205 Cal. Rptr. 321

[3] Reunification Plan and Services

The court cannot order other relatives or significant others, such as stepparents or de facto parents, to participate in such services if the child is not placed in their care. In re Silvia R. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 337, 341-342, 345-351, 71 Cal. Rptr. 3d 496

Despite the children loving the parent and the court's desire to give the parent one more chance, providing services to a parent who had an extensive history of substance abuse and has resisted or failed prior court-ordered treatment was a clear abuse of discretion. In re William B. (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 1220, 1223, 78 Cal. Rptr. 3d 91

Reunification services as a benefit, not a constitutional entitlement. In re Baby Boy H. (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 470, 475, 73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 793

Statutory provisions limiting reunification services to six months in cases in which the child was under the age of 3 years at the time of initial removal as being constitutional. Daria D. v. Superior Court (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 606, 71

Cal. Rptr. 2d 668

Incarcerated parent must be provided with reasonable reunification services absent clear and convincing evidence the provision of services would be detrimental to the child under Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(e)(1). Mark N. v. Superior Court (1998) 60 Cal. App. 4th 996, 1011-1015, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 603

Child welfare services as required in Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(a) include both reunification and maintenance services. Carolyn R. v. Superior Court (1995) 41 Cal. App. 4th 159, 165-166, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 669 , citing Welf. & Inst. Code § 16500 et seq.

Fact that parent suffers from emotional problems does not excuse parent from statutory requirement of participating in reunification plan, as some capacity to achieve reunification goals is presumed. Angela S. v. Superior Court (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 758, 762, 42 Cal. Rptr. 2d 755

Placement of child in foster home 50-60 miles from home of parent does not constitute denial of reunification services under facts of case. James B. v. Superior Court (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 1014, 1020-1021, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 762

Court as not required by statutory scheme to order reunification services to biological father who is not presumed father. In re Zacharia D. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 435, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 751, 862 P.2d 751

Stepparent as not entitled to reunification plan under Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(a), because stepparent is not "parent" for dependency purposes. In re Jodi B. (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 1322, 1324, 278 Cal. Rptr. 242

Parent's remaining out of prison as fundamental first step toward fulfilling reunification plan. In re Christopher A. (1991) 226 Cal. App. 3d 1154, 1162, 277 Cal. Rptr. 302

Frequency and length of parental visitation as necessarily determined by court, but time, place, and manner of visitation as permissibly determined by social agency. In re Jennifer G. (1990) 221 Cal. App. 3d 752, 757, 270 Cal. Rptr. 326

Juvenile court as permitted by Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361.2, 361.5, 362 to order only parents, guardians, relatives, or foster parents of dependent children to participate in reunification or child welfare services. In re Jody R. (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 1615, 1625-1626, 1628, 267 Cal. Rptr. 746

Juvenile court as without authority to join live-in companion to dependency proceeding in order to compel compliance with reunification plan. In re Jody R. (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 1615, 1625-1628, 267 Cal. Rptr. 746

Court as not required by statutory scheme to order reunification services for grandparents. In re Albert B. (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 361, 381, 263 Cal. Rptr. 694

Failure to make express finding on probability of returning children to parents within six months as not requiring reversal of permanency planning order when finding implied from record and omission not prejudicial to parents. In re Corienna G. (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d 73, 83-85, 261 Cal. Rptr. 462

Reunification services specially designed to assist developmentally disabled parent as needed to be reasonable services. In re Victoria M. (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 1317, 1329-1331, 255 Cal. Rptr. 498

[4] Visitation

Evidence must show by clear and convincing evidence that visitation would be detrimental to the child before a parent can be denied visitation. [In re Dylan T. (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 765, 773-774, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 684

Standard of proof for denial of visitation to parent is only preponderance of the evidence that visitation would be detrimental to the child. In re Manolito L. (2001) 90 Cal. App. 4th 753, 760-761, 109 Cal. Rptr. 2d 282

Young age of child as insufficient grounds to deny visitation to incarcerated parent absent supporting evidence demonstrating how the age of the child makes visitation detrimental under facts of the case. In re Dylan T. (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 765, 773-774, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 684

Parental visitation determined by discretion of social worker and wishes of children as no abuse of judicial discretion. In re Danielle W. (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 1227, 1237, 1238-1239, 255 Cal. Rptr. 344

Ministerial tasks related to visitation may be delegated to social worker. In re Moriah T. (1994) 23 Cal. App. 4th 1367, 1373-1377, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 705

Delegating too much authority to social worker is not permitted. In re Jennifer G. (1990) 221 Cal. App. 3d 752, 755-757, 270 Cal. Rptr. 326

[5] Denial of Reunification Services

The provisions of Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b), (e)(1), for the denial of services apply to both the custodial parent from whom the child was removed under Welf. & Inst. Code § 361(c), and the previously noncustodial parent who has asked for and been denied placement under Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(a). In re Adrianna P. (2008) 166 Cal. App. 4th 44, 53-59, 81 Cal. Rptr. 3d 918

Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(10) for the denial of reunification services as comporting with requirements of due process and being constitutional. In re Baby Boy H. (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 470, 73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 793 , considering previous version of statute, now see Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(10)-(11)

Parent's "failure to maintain any kind of long-term sobriety must be considered resistance to treatment" under Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(12) for denial of services. Randi R. v. Superior Court (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 67, 73, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 770 , considering previous version of statute, now see Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(13)

Once condition described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b) is proven to apply, general rule favoring reunification services is replaced by legislative assumption that providing such services would be an unwise use of resources. Raymond C. v. Superior Court (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 159, 164, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 33

Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(2) as not denying equal protection, because reasonable for state to distinguish between persons who will or will not benefit from reunification services. In re Christina A. (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d 1073, 1079-1080, 261 Cal. Rptr. 903

[6] Liability in Foster Care

Welf. & Inst. Code § 202 as not imposing affirmative or fiduciary duty on county to prevent parental neglect by foster families with whom wards of the court are placed. Jordy v. County of Humboldt (1992) 11 Cal. App. 4th 735, 744, 14 Cal. Rptr. 2d 553

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
6. Disposition Hearing

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated §§ 328.263-328.269

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

[Reserved]

§§ 328.263[Reserved]

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
7. Supplemental, Subsequent and Modification Petitions

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.270

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.270 State Statutes

Institution of subsequent proceedings by social worker against parents of dependent children who are allowed to remain in the custody of the parents. Welf. & Inst. Code § 364

Criteria for modification, change, or setting aside of order. Welf. & Inst. Code § 385

Restrictions on modification without prior notice. Welf. & Inst. Code § 386

Use of supplemental petition to change or modify previous order by removing child from physical custody of parent, guardian, relative, or friend and directing placement in a more restrictive level of care. Welf. & Inst. Code § 387

Application for modification by any parent or other person having an interest in a dependent child on grounds of change of circumstances or new evidence. Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(a)

Application by sibling for court order regarding sibling placement, visitation or permanency planning. Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(b)

Application for termination of reunification services prior to prescribed period. Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(c)

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
7. Supplemental, Subsequent and Modification Petitions

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.271

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.271 California Rules of Court

[1] In General

General authority of court. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.560(a)

Subsequent petitions. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.560(b)

Supplemental petitions. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.560(c)

Petition for modification hearing. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.560(d)

Persons who may file petition for modification. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.560(e)

Correction of clerical errors. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.560(f)

[2] Subsequent and Supplemental Petitions

Contents. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.565(a)

Setting the hearing and notice. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.565(b)

Notice of hearing. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.565(c)

Initial hearing. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.565(d)

Requirement for bifurcated hearing. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.565(e)

Permanency planning. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.565(f)

[3] Petitions for Modification of Orders

Contents. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.570(a)

Petition form. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.570(b)

Confidentiality. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.570(c)

Denial of hearing. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.570(d)

Grounds for grant of petition. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.570(e)

Hearing. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.570(f)

Notice. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.570(g)

Conduct of hearing. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.570(h)

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
7. Supplemental, Subsequent and Modification Petitions

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.272

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.272 Decisions

A true finding on a supplemental petition removing a dependent child from a relative placement does not necessarily constitute a finding of unsuitability for purposes of consideration for future placement. In re Antonio G. (2007) 159 Cal. App. 4th 369, 377-378, 71 Cal. Rptr. 3d 79

When a child has been placed under the agency's care, custody and control with a general placement order pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.2(e), no supplemental petition pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 387 is required to move the child from a relative to a foster home placement. In re Cynthia C. (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 1479, 1489-1490, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1

When a child is returned to a parent and then subsequently removed through a supplemental petition, the matter does not return to "square one" with regard to services, but the court does have discretion to order additional reunification services under limited circumstances. Carolyn R. v. Superior Court (1995) 41 Cal. App. 4th 159, 166-167, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 669

When a child is returned to a parent and then subsequently removed through a supplemental petition, the matter does not return to "square one" with regard to the ordering of reunification services. In re Steven A. (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 754, 765, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 576

Hearing on petition for modification of orders under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 to be liberally granted. In re Heather P. (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 886, 891, 257 Cal. Rptr. 545

Supplemental petition and detention hearing as not required when previously declared dependent child of court is removed from foster home and placed in county receiving home to await further placement. In re Timothy N. (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d 862, 870, 121 Cal. Rptr. 880

A parent, who claims lack of due process notice of dependency petition, as permitted to challenge resulting dependency judgment by filing petition pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 in same dependency proceedings. Ansley v. Superior Court (1986) 185 Cal. App. 3d 477, 483-488, 229 Cal. Rptr. 771

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
7. Supplemental, Subsequent and Modification Petitions

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated §§ 328.273-328.279

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

[Reserved]

§§ 328.273[Reserved]

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
8. Periodic Review Procedures

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.280

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.280 State Statutes

Notice for review hearings. Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 292, 293

Periodic reports of social worker concerning dependent children. Welf. & Inst. Code § 365

Six-month review of child adjudged a dependent child of the court. Welf. & Inst. Code § 366

Supplemental reports in Los Angeles County. Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.05

Required contents of supplemental report. Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.1

Procedure for status review hearings, including the six month review hearing and the 12-month permanency hearing. Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21

Eighteen-month permanency review hearing. Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.22

Twenty-four-month subsequent permanency review hearing. Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.25

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
8. Periodic Review Procedures

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.281

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.281 California Rules of Court

[1] Six-Month Review Hearing

Hearing requirement. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.710

Notice. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.710(b)

Petitioner's report. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.710(c)

Consideration of reports. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.710(d)

Court's determinations; burden of proof. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.710(e)

Conduct of hearing. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.710(f)

Siblings. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.710(g)

Court determinations if child previously placed with noncustodial parents. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.710(h)

Limitation on setting a hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.710(i)

[2] Twelve-Month Permanency Hearing

Setting and conduct of hearing. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.715

Limitation on setting hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.715(e)

[3] Eighteen-Month Permanency Review Hearing

Setting and conduct of hearing. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.720

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
8. Periodic Review Procedures

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.282

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.282 Decisions

At the six-month review hearing, the court may terminate services for one parent and continue them for the other. In re Jesse W. (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 49, 64-65, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 435

At six-month review hearing the court only considers the likelihood of reunification within the period until the 12-month permanency hearing, not whether there is a substantial probability of return within the next full six months. Tonya M. v. Superior Court (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 836, 840, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 96, 172 P. 3d 402

At 18-month permanency review hearing juvenile court has the option of return to parent with family maintenance services and continued dependency jurisdiction. Bridget A. v. Superior Court (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 285, 295-296, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 647

At six-month review hearing the court has discretion to terminate services to one parent while continuing services to another parent. In re Jesse W. (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 49, 55-56, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 435

The admissibility of social worker's review reports is not conditioned on the availability of the social worker for cross-examination. Andrea L. v. Superior Court (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 1377, 1387 fn. 3, 75 Cal. Rptr. 2d 851

Juvenile court's refusal to grant a contested review hearing as error, but harmless under facts of the case. Andrea L. v. Superior Court (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 1377, 1387 fn. 3, 75 Cal. Rptr. 2d 851

Mere participation in services required by reunification plan does not mean that the child should be returned; question is whether the parent or guardian has made sufficient progress to allow the child to be returned safely. In re Joseph B. (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 890, 899-900, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 900

Juvenile court may consider factors unrelated to the original jurisdictional allegations or reasons for removal in determining detriment to return at an out-of-home review hearing. In re Joseph B. (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 890, 900, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 900

Juvenile court may not consider factors unrelated to the original jurisdictional allegations or reasons for removal in determining detriment to return at an out-of-home review hearing. In re Dustin R. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1131, 1140, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 269

Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(f), providing that failure of parent or guardian to participate regularly in court-ordered treatment program constitutes prima facie evidence that return would be detrimental, as not constituting conclusive presumption and therefore not unconstitutional. In re Heather B. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 535, 562, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 891

Trial court as not abusing discretion in continuing dependency jurisdiction over children at six-month review hearing, based on evidence of continued family instability and vulnerability of custodial mother to renewed living arrangement with person who abused children. In re V. M. (1987) 190 Cal. App. 3d 753, 757, 235 Cal. Rptr. 506

Court can terminate services at six-month review if parent has failed to contact or visit the child. In re Monique S. (1993) 21 Cal. App. 4th 677, 682, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 863

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
8. Periodic Review Procedures

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated §§ 328.283-328.289

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

[Reserved]

§§ 328.283[Reserved]

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
9. Permanency Planning Procedures

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.290

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.290 State Statutes

Notice of Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing. Welf. & Inst. Code § 294

Hearing to select and implement alternative permanency plan of adoption, guardianship, or another planned permanent living arrangement, such as permanent placement with a foster or relative caregiver committed to caring for the child on a permanent basis. Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26

Relative guardianship cutout. Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(A)

Exceptions to termination of parental rights for adoptable child. Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(c)(1)(B)(i)-(vi)

Guardianship for dependent child shall be in juvenile court. Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(d)

Adoption for dependent children may be in juvenile court. Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(e)

Limited jurisdiction to reinstate parental rights if child petitions the court showing the child has not been adopted for at least three years and reinstatement of parental rights is in the child's best interest. Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(i)(2)

Rights of prisoners with respect to proceedings to have their children declared free from parental control and custody. Penal Code § 2625

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
9. Permanency Planning Procedures

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.291

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.291 California Rules of Court

Selection and implementation hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26; application of rule. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.725(a)

Notice. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.725(b)

Assessment report. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.725(c)

Presence of Child. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.725(d)

Conduct of selection and implementation hearing. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.725(e)

Procedures on termination of parental rights. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.725(f)

Procedures for appointment of legal guardianship. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.725(g)

Purpose of termination of parental rights. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.725(h)

Advice of appeal rights. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.725(i)

Adoption may be in juvenile court. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.730(a)

Notice for adoption in juvenile court. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.730(b)

Adoption hearing in juvenile court. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.730(c)

Evidence for adoption in juvenile court. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.730(d)

Examination of preparer of adoption assessment. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.730(e)

Consent of adoptive parents and child. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.730(f)

Termination of dependency jurisdiction following adoption. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.730(g)

Juvenile court jurisdiction regarding guardianship. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.735(a)

Guardianship notice and hearing. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.735(b)

Conduct of guardianship hearing. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.735(c)

Required findings and orders in guardianship hearing. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.735(d)

Advice of appeal rights following guardianship hearing. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.735(e)

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
9. Permanency Planning Procedures

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.292

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.292 Decisions

[1] Standard of Proof

Application of preponderance of the evidence standard in some of the hearings held prior to the selection and implementation hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 at which parental rights are terminated as constitutional in context of totality of dependency statutory scheme and when applied following finding of adoptability based on standard of clear and convincing evidence. Cynthia D. v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 242, 256, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 698, 851 P.2d 1307

[2] Assessment Report

Parent's due process rights as not violated by errors or omissions in assessment report (Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.21(i)) that was prepared, made available to parent in advance of notice hearing, and addressed principal questions at issue in proceeding; deficiencies in report as affecting only weight of evidence. In re Crystal J. (1993) 12 Cal. App. 4th 407, 413, 15 Cal. Rptr. 2d 613

[3] Scope of Hearing

Requiring parent to proceed under Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 to obtain court consideration of renewed reunification services, because services are not dispositional option at permanency planning hearing, as not depriving parent of due process. In re Marilyn H. (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 295, 309-310, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 544, 851 P.2d 826

[4] Lack of Jurisdiction to Change Order

Court as having no jurisdiction to modify Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 termination order pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 for change of circumstances, because former Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(h) (see now Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(i)) removes jurisdiction from court to set aside, change, or modify the order. In re Ronald V. (1993) 13 Cal. App. 4th 1803, 1806, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 334

[5] Guardianship

Probate court as lacking jurisdiction to hear petition for guardianship of dependent minor. In re Walter P. (1991) 228 Cal. App. 3d 113, 120-121, 126, 278 Cal. Rptr. 602

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
9. Permanency Planning Procedures

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated §§ 328.293-328.299

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

[Reserved]

§§ 328.293[Reserved]

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
10. Post-Permanency Planning Procedures

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.300

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.300 State Statutes

Status of juvenile court orders after termination of jurisdiction. Welf. & Inst. Code § 362.4

Court designated "prospective adoptive parents" and process for changing placement. Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(n)

Post-permanency planning review hearings and changing of permanent plans. Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.3

Petition for modification of orders. Welf. & Inst. Code § 388

Sealing of juvenile court records. Welf. & Inst. Code § 389

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
10. Post-Permanency Planning Procedures

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.301

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.301 California Rules of Court

Review hearings relating to adoption and guardianship. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.740(a)

Review hearings relating to long-term foster care. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.740(b)

Procedures in hearings on petition to modify or terminate guardianship. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.740(c)

Procedure for termination of jurisdiction due to child reaching majority. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.740(d)

Court designated prospective adoptive parent designation. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.726

Proposed removal from court designated prospective adoptive parent. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.727

Emergency removal from court designated prospective adoptive parent. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.728

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
10. Post-Permanency Planning Procedures

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.302

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.302 Decisions

Social services agency as having authority to determine placement of child pending adoption, subject to review by juvenile court for abuse of discretion. Los Angeles County Dep't of Children etc. Services v. Superior Court (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 1, 9-10, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 369

Social services agency as having authority to determine placement of child pending adoption, subject to review by juvenile court for abuse of discretion. Department of Social Services v. Superior Court (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 721, 724-725, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 239

At a regularly scheduled post-permanency planning review hearing, the juvenile court can consider a request for a change in the child's permanent plan without the necessity for a Welf. & Inst. Code § 388 petition. San Diego County Dep't of Social Servs. v. Superior Court (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 882, 887-892, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 396, 919 P.2d 1329 , disapproving to the extent inconsistent In re Nina P. (1994) 26 Cal. App. 4th 615, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 687

Changing of permanent plan can be considered by juvenile court at any post-permanency planning review hearing or upon application for modification pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 388. In re John F. (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 1365, 1375, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 225

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
10. Post-Permanency Planning Procedures

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated §§ 328.303-328.309

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

[Reserved]

§§ 328.303[Reserved]

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
11. Appeals and Extraordinary Writs

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.310

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.310 State Statutes

Challenging orders setting a selection and implementation hearing. Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(l)

Appeals. Welf. & Inst. Code § 395

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
11. Appeals and Extraordinary Writs

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.311

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.311 Rules of Court

Juvenile appeals in general. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.400

Limited "prison delivery" version of "constructive filing doctrine" applicable in dependency cases. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.400(e)

Record on appeal. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.404

Augmenting and correcting record on appeal. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.408

Briefs. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.412

Appeals in termination of parental rights cases and in all dependency cases in Orange, Imperial, and San Diego Counties. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.416

Special Rule for writ petition challenging orders setting a hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.452

Special rule for writ petition challenging juvenile court's orders designating specific placement of dependent child after termination of parental rights. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.454, 8.456

Hearing and decision in the Court of Appeal. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.470

Hearing and decision in the Supreme Court. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.472

Procedures and data. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.474

Orders and judgments appealable. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.585(b)

When order or judgment may be stayed pending appeal. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.585(c)

Advice of appeal rights. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 5.585(d), 5.590

Advice of need for extraordinary writ to preserve right to appeal orders setting a Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.585(e)

Writ petition after orders setting hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.600

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
11. Appeals and Extraordinary Writs

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.312

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.312 Decisions

[1] Appealable Orders

First hearing from which an appeal can be taken in a dependency case is the disposition hearing. In re Meranda P. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 1143, 1150, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 913 , citing In re Eli F. (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 228, 233, 260 Cal. Rptr. 453

An disposition or postdisposition order that is not timely appealed is final and binding and cannot be challenged in an appeal from a later appealable order. In re Meranda P. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 1143, 1150, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 913

First hearing from which an appeal can be taken in a dependency case is the disposition hearing. In re Sheila B. (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 187, 196, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 482 , citing In re Candida S. (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 1240, 1249, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 521 , and In re Megan B. (1991) 235 Cal. App. 3d 942, 950, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 177

Although order of dismissal is not appealable if juvenile court does not enter judgment of dismissal, promotion of judicial economy and substantial justice as requiring court to deem orders of dismissal to include judgment of dismissal. In re Elaine E. (1990) 221 Cal. App. 3d 809, 813, 270 Cal. Rptr. 489

Voluntary dismissal of dependency petition without prejudice as nonappealable order absent request for affirmative relief by aggrieved defendant. In re Tomi C. (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 694, 697-698, 267 Cal. Rptr. 210

Defective appeal from nonappealable permanency planning order as considered petition for writ of mandate to avoid injustice from retroactivity of former Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.25(j). In re Albert B. (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 361,

372-373, 263 Cal. Rptr. 694

Order transferring juvenile court dependency proceeding from one county to another as appealable by parent of dependent child, as well as by either county. In re Jon N. (1986) 179 Cal. App. 3d 156, 159-160, 224 Cal. Rptr. 319

Judgment or decree adjudicating child ward or dependent child of juvenile court as appealable as final judgment and any subsequent order as appealable as from order after judgment. In re Timothy N. (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d 862, 867, 121 Cal. Rptr. 880

[2] Filing

Application of criminal "constructive filing" doctrine to appeals of Civ. Code § 232 judgments terminating parental rights as "clearly impracticable or inappropriate" under former Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 39(a). In re A. M. (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 319, 321-322, 264 Cal. Rptr. 666 [now see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.400(e), for limited application]

[3] Consent of the Client

Unlike with writ petitions, either the client or the attorney may file a notice of appeal in a dependency case. Absent evidence to the contrary, it is presumed the attorney is acting with the client's approval and authority. In re Helen W. (2007) 150 Cal. App. 4th 71, 78-79, 57 Cal. Rptr. 3d 914

Failure of mother to sign notice of intent to file writ under Cal. Rules of Ct., former Rule 39.1B as grounds for dismissal of the writ absent good cause for the failure to sign the notice. Lisa S. v. Superior Court (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 604, 606-607, 73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 240

The lack of a client's consent is a "procedural defect fatal to appellate review" of an extraordinary writ petition in a dependency case. Janice J. v. Superior Court (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 690, 691, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 227 , citing Guillermo G. v. Superior Court (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 1168, 1174, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 748 , and Suzanne J. v. Superior Court (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 785, 788, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 25

An attorney has no professional duty to file an extraordinary writ petition without the client's authorization. Janice J. v. Superior Court (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 690, 692, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 227

A client's actual consent is required before an attorney can file a notice of appeal in a dependency case. In re Sean S. (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 350, 352, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 766 , citing In re Alma B. (1994) 21 Cal. App. 4th 1037, 1043, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 592

An attorney has no ethical or legal duty to file an appeal when the parent has not consented to its filing. In re Sean S. (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 350, 352, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 766

[4] Mootness and Harmless Error

Appellate court may accept evidence of subsequent events to show any error at the trial court level was harmless. In re B.D. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 1218, 1240, 72 Cal. Rptr. 3d 153

Former Civ. Code § 232(a)(6) order terminating parental rights as mooting dependency appeal when termination proceeding could have been independently initiated and result would have been the same. In re Jesse C. (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 1384, 1388, 263 Cal. Rptr. 811

Errors in dependency proceedings as mooted by independent findings of sufficiency of evidence at termination hearing. In re Angela R. (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 257, 266-267, 260 Cal. Rptr. 612

Parent's appeal from dependency orders as not mooted by subsequent order terminating parental rights when dependency appeal raised issue of adequacy of notice to parent, which, if proven, would have rendered termination proceeding infirm. In re Larry P. (1988) 201 Cal. App. 3d 888, 893, 247 Cal. Rptr. 472

Appeal arising from dependency proceedings as not mooted by appeal of order terminating parental rights if error in dependency stage "infected" termination outcome or undermined juvenile court's jurisdictional finding. In re Kristin B. (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 596, 605, 232 Cal. Rptr. 36

[5] Review by Writ of Habeas Corpus

For guidance regarding the procedures used in filing and deciding a petition for writ of habeas corpus in a dependency case, see the concurring opinion of Associate Justice Bamattre-Manoukian. In re Paul W. (2007) 151 Cal. App. 4th 37, 60 Cal. Rptr. 3d 329

When child is being unlawfully detained, habeas corpus as proper method by which to secure prompt release. In re Timothy N. (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d 862, 871, 121 Cal. Rptr. 880

[6] Waiver and Forfeiture

While most courts use the term "waiver," the correct term is "forfeiture." In re S.B. (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 1287, 1293, fn. 2, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 786, 90 P. 3d 746

Failure of aunt to raise forum non conveniens objection in trial court constitutes waiver of right to raise the issue on appeal since forum non conveniens is a nonjurisdictional issue. In re Christopher B. (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 551, 557-559, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 43

Failure of mother to object to the setting of a Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 hearing despite finding by juvenile court that no reasonable efforts had been provided constitutes waiver of right to raise the issue on appeal. In re Kevin S. (1996) 41 Cal. App. 4th 882, 885-886, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 763

Excuse of waiver or forfeiture should only be done rarely. In re S.B. (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 1287, 1293, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 786, 90 P. 3d 746

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART III. RESEARCH GUIDE
B. Statutes, Decisions, and Other Primary Authority
11. Appeals and Extraordinary Writs

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated §§ 328.313-328.349

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

[Reserved]

§§ 328.313[Reserved]

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329

CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART IV. FORMS
A. Commencement of Dependency Proceedings

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.350

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.350 Juvenile Dependency Petition (Version Two) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 et seq.] With Attachment Alleging Serious Physical Harm [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(a)]--Judicial Council Forms JV-110 and JV-120

[1] FORM Juvenile Dependency Petition (Version Two) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 et seq.] With Attachment Alleging Serious Physical Harm [Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(a)]--Judicial Council Forms JV-110 and JV-120

Click here to view image.

[2] Use of Form

This form is the Judicial Council version two form for use as a petition to declare a child a dependent of the juvenile court [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 5.524(c)]. Use of this form is mandatory [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.524(c)].

There are two Judicial Council forms of petitions, Form JV-100 (Version One) and this form, Form JV-110 (Version Two). [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.524(c)].

The form includes an attachment for use if jurisdiction is sought under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300(a) because of a risk of serious physical harm to the minor (Judicial Council Form JV-120). There are 10 such Judicial Council forms of attachment pages for use in alleging each statutory ground that brings the child within the jurisdiction of the juvenile court [see Forms JV-120-JV-129]. Any of these attachments may be combined if the headings and language in the body of the forms are included as they appear.

A copy of Judicial Council Form JV-140 (Notification of Mailing Address) must be provided to each parent or guardian along with a petition [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.534(l); see Welf. & Inst. Code § 316.1 (requiring parents and guardians to provide permanent mailing address to court); see form set out in § 328.352[1]].

This form is available in an interactive, electronic format in LexisNexis(R) Automated California Judicial Council Forms, which may be accessed at www.lexisone.com for an individual or monthly charge. A noninteractive version in PDF format also is available at www.lexisone.com at no charge.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART IV. FORMS
A. Commencement of Dependency Proceedings

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.351

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.351 Proof of Service of Dependency Petition [Code Civ. Proc. § 1013a; Welf. & Inst. Code § 311]--Judicial Council Form JV-510

[1] FORM Proof of Service of Dependency Petition [Code Civ. Proc. § 1013a; Welf. & Inst. Code § 311]--Judicial Council Form JV-510

Click here to view image.

[2] Use of Form

This is the Judicial Council form used for proof of service of copies of a dependency petition and notice of detention hearing [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1013a; Welf. & Inst. Code § 311(a); for an illustrative example of a dependency petition, see § 328.350[1]]. Use of the form is optional [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 1.35, 5.504(a)].

This form is available in an interactive, electronic format in LexisNexis(R) Automated California Judicial Council Forms, which may be accessed at www.lexisone.com for an individual or monthly charge. A noninteractive version in PDF format also is available at www.lexisone.com at no charge.

Paragraph 1d should be checked if the petition includes other documents, such as a form of Notification of Mailing Address [see form set out in § 328.352[1]], the preferred method of notifying the court and the social services agency of the address of the parent or guardian [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 316.1; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.534(l)(3)].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART IV. FORMS
A. Commencement of Dependency Proceedings

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.352

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.352 Notification of Mailing Address [Welf. & Inst. Code § 316.1]--Judicial Council Form JV-140

[1] FORM Notification of Mailing Address [Welf. & Inst. Code § 316.1]--Judicial Council Form JV-140

Click here to view image.

[2] Use of Form

This is the Judicial Council form of Notification of Mailing Address. At the first appearance of a parent or guardian at a dependency proceeding, the court will order the parent or guardian, or both, to provide a mailing address for notice purposes [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 316.1(a); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.534(l)].

Although use of this form is optional [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 1.35, 5.504(a)], it is the preferred method of providing the mailing address [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.534(m)(3)]. The Spanish language version of this form is Judicial Council form JV-140S.

This form is available in an interactive, electronic format in LexisNexis(R) Automated California Judicial Council Forms, which may be accessed at www.lexisone.com for an individual or monthly charge. A noninteractive version in PDF format also is available at www.lexisone.com at no charge.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART IV. FORMS
A. Commencement of Dependency Proceedings

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated §§ 328.353-328.359

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

[Reserved]

§§ 328.353[Reserved]

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART IV. FORMS
B. Custody and Protective Orders

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.360

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.360 Restraining Orders--Juvenile (CLETS) (Dependency) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 213.5]--Judicial Council Form JV-250

[1] FORM Restraining Orders--Juvenile (CLETS) (Dependency) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 213.5]--Judicial Council Form JV-250

Click here to view image.

[2] Use of Form

This is the Judicial Council form of a restraining order issued in a dependency case [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 213.5; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.630]. It is the mandatory Judicial Council form of Restraining Order--Juvenile (JV-250).

This form is available in an interactive, electronic format in LexisNexis(R) Automated California Judicial Council Forms, which may be accessed at www.lexisone.com for an individual or monthly charge. A noninteractive version in PDF format also is available at www.lexisone.com at no charge.

[3] Restraining Orders

[a] Ex Parte Orders

After a dependency petition has been filed and until such time as the petition is dismissed or dependency terminated, the court may issue ex parte the following restraining orders regardless of whether the child lives with the parent, legal guardian, or caregiver [Welf. & Inst. Code § 213.5(a); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.630(a); see Code Civ. Proc. § 527 (procedure to obtain restraining orders)]:

- Enjoining any person from molesting, attacking, striking, sexually assaulting, stalking, or battering the child or any other child in the household.

- Excluding any person from the dwelling of the person who has care, custody, and control of the child.

- Enjoining any person from specified behavior, including contacting, threatening, or disturbing the peace of the child, that the court determines is necessary to effectuate either of the foregoing orders.

The court shall also order that any party enjoined pursuant to these provisions be prohibited from taking any action to obtain the address or location of the protected person or that person's family members, caregivers, or guardian, unless the court finds good cause not to make that order [Welf. & Inst. Code § 213.7(a)].

If a temporary restraining order is granted without notice, the matter must be made returnable on an order to show cause on the earliest day that the business of the court will permit, but not later than 15 days (or if good causes appears to the court, 20 days) from the date on which the temporary restraining order was granted. The court may, on the motion of the person seeking the restraining order or on its own motion, shorten the time for service of the order to show cause on the person to be restrained. The court may also, on its own motion or the filing of an affidavit by the person seeking the restraining order, find the person to be restrained could not be served within the required time and reissue the order. The reissued order must state on its face the expiration date of the order. Any hearing on a restraining order may be held simultaneously with another regularly scheduled hearing in the dependency proceeding [Welf. & Inst. Code § 213.5(c)].

[b] Orders After Notice and Hearing

The juvenile court may issue, on notice and a hearing, any of the orders in Welf. & Inst. Code § 213.5(a) [see discussion in [a], above]. If it does so, it shall also order that any party enjoined pursuant to these provisions be prohibited from taking any action to obtain the address or location of the protected person or that person's family members, caregivers, or guardian, unless the court finds good cause not to make that order [Welf. & Inst. Code § 213.7(a)]. A restraining order granted after notice and a hearing remains in effect, at the discretion of the court, for a period not to exceed three years, unless otherwise terminated by the court, extended by mutual consent of all parties to the order, or extended by further order of the court on the motion of any party to the restraining order [Welf. & Inst. Code § 213.5(d)].

[c] Expiration Date Must Be Stated on Restraining Order

Any order issued pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 213.5(a) (ex parte) or (b) (after notice and hearing) must state on its face the date of expiration of the order [Welf. & Inst. Code § 213.5(f)].

[d] Residence Exclusion Order

A residence-exclusion order may be issued "regardless of which party holds legal or equitable title or is the lessee of the residence or dwelling" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 213.5(e)]. The court may make a residence-exclusion order only on a showing of all of the following [Welf. & Inst. Code § 213.5(e)(2)]:

- Facts sufficient for the juvenile court to determine the person who will remain in the dwelling has a right to possession of the premises under color of law.

- That the excluded person has assaulted or threatens to assault the other person, any person under the care, custody and control of the other person, or any minor child of the parties or of the other person.

- That the other person, any person under the care, custody or control of the other person, or any minor child of the parties or of the other person, would suffer physical or emotional harm if the order were not issued.

[e] Execution of Restraining Order

The court shall order any designated person or attorney to mail a copy of any restraining order and proof of service, including an extension, modification, or termination of the order, to each local law enforcement agency having jurisdiction over the residence of the person who has the care, custody, and control of the minor and over other locations where the court determines that acts of domestic violence or abuse against the minor are likely to occur. The order must be mailed by the close of the business day on which it was granted. Each appropriate law enforcement agency must make available, through a system for verification, information as to the existence, terms, and current status of any order to any law enforcement officer responding to the scene of reported domestic violence or abuse [Welf. & Inst. Code § 213.5(g)].

[4] Restraining Orders in Conjunction With Custody Order

If the juvenile court orders custody to a noncustodial parent and terminates dependency, as discussed in § 328.127[1], the court may issue orders to either parent as set forth in Welf. & Inst. Code § 213.5 or enjoining any action specified in Fam. Code §§ 6320 (enjoining specific acts of abuse), 6321 (excluding a person from a dwelling), and 6322 (enjoining other specified behavior) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 362.4; see Fam. Code § 6218]. The order must be prepared on Judicial Council form Custody Order--Juvenile (JV-200) [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.630(h)(3); see form set out in § 328.361].

[5] Cross References

For discussion and forms relating to ex parte protective orders restraining family violence generally, see Ch. 293, Harassment and Domestic Violence .

For discussion, procedural guide, and forms relating to restraining orders generally, see Ch. 303, Injunctions .

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART IV. FORMS
B. Custody and Protective Orders

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.361

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.361 Custody--Juvenile (Dependency) [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 304, 361.2, 362.4]--Judicial Council Form JV-200

[1] FORM Custody--Juvenile (Dependency) [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 304, 361.2, 362.4]--Judicial Council Form JV-200

Click here to view image.

[2] Use of Form

This is the mandatory Judicial Council form of Custody Order. The Spanish language version of the form is Judicial Council form JV-200S. It is used when the juvenile court issues a custody order for a dependent child and terminates its jurisdiction. When the court orders custody to one parent and visitation rights to the other parent [see Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361.2, 362.4; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.700(a)], use also the mandatory Judicial Council form of Visitation Order--Juvenile (JV-205); see § 328.361A. If the court orders custody to a parent subject to jurisdiction of the court with services to one or both parents, the court may direct the order be prepared and filed in the same manner as described in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.700(a) [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.700(b)].

This form must also be used if the court terminates its jurisdiction and there is a pending nullity, dissolution, legal guardianship, or paternity proceeding or a custody order has been entered relating to the family, particularly if custody has been awarded to the noncustodial parent, and the juvenile court on its own motion wishes to enjoin either parent from any action specified in Fam. Code § 6320 (contacting, molesting, attacking, striking, threatening, sexually assaulting, battering, or disturbing peace) or Fam. Code § 6321 (excluding party from dwelling on showing of assault or threat of assault) or as set forth in Welf. & Inst. Code § 213.5 [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 362.4; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.700(a)].

This form is available in an interactive, electronic format in LexisNexis(R) Automated California Judicial Council Forms, which may be accessed at www.lexisone.com for an individual or monthly charge. A noninteractive version in PDF format also is available at www.lexisone.com at no charge.

[3] Filing Order in Existing Proceeding

This custody order must be filed in an existing nullity, dissolution, legal guardianship, or paternity proceeding. If no custody proceeding is filed or pending, the order may be used as the sole basis to open a file [Welf. & Inst. Code § 362.4; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.700(a)(1)].

[4] Preparation and Transmittal of Order

The juvenile court may direct the parent, parent's attorney, county counsel, or clerk to [Welf. & Inst. Code § 362.4; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.700(a)(2)]:

- Prepare the order for the court's signature.

- Transmit the order within 10 calendar days after the order is signed to the superior court of the county in which a custody proceeding has already been commenced or, if none, to the superior court of the county in which the parent who has been given custody resides.

[5] Filing of Order

On receipt of the juvenile court custody order, the superior court clerk of the receiving county must immediately file the order in the existing proceeding or must immediately open a file, without a filing fee, and assign a case number [Welf. & Inst. Code § 362.4; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.700].

[6] Certificate of Mailing

Within 15 court days after receiving the order, the clerk of the receiving court must send by first-class mail an endorsed filed copy of the order showing the case number of the receiving court to (1) the persons whose names and addresses are listed on the order; and (2) the originating juvenile court, with a completed clerk's certificate of mailing, for inclusion in the minor's file [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.700(a)(3)].

[7] Cross References

For discussion and forms relating to ex parte protective orders restraining family violence generally, see Ch. 293, Harassment and Domestic Violence .

For discussion, procedural guide, and forms relating to restraining orders generally, see Ch. 303, Injunctions .

For additional discussion and forms relating to parental rights and duties and coverage of child custody issues arising outside the context of dissolution of marriage proceedings, see Ch. 394, Parent and Child .

For discussion and forms relating to establishment of a parent-child relationship, see Ch. 412, Paternity .

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART IV. FORMS
B. Custody and Protective Orders

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.361A

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.361A Visitation--Juvenile (Dependency) Attachment [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 304, 361.2, 362.4]--Judicial Council Form JV-205

[1] FORM Visitation--Juvenile (Dependency) Attachment [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 304, 361.2, 362.4]--Judicial Council Form JV-205

Click here to view image.

[2] Use of Form

This is the mandatory Judicial Council form for a Visitation Order on the termination of dependency jurisdiction. The Spanish language version of the form is Judicial Council form JV-205S. It is attached to the juvenile court's custody order, Judicial Council form of Custody Order--Juvenile (JV-200) for a dependent minor when the court terminates its jurisdiction, ordering custody to one parent and visitation rights to the other parent [see Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361.2, 362.4; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.700(a)]; see § 328.361 for Judicial Council form of Custody Order--Juvenile (JV-200). If the court orders custody to a parent subject to jurisdiction of the court with services to one or both parents, the court may direct the order be prepared and filed in the same manner as described in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.700(a) [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.700(b)].

This form is available in an interactive, electronic format in LexisNexis(R) Automated California Judicial Council Forms, which may be accessed at www.lexisone.com for an individual or monthly charge. A noninteractive version in PDF format also is available at www.lexisone.com at no charge.

[3] Cross References

For discussion and forms relating to ex parte protective orders restraining family violence generally, see Ch. 293, Harassment and Domestic Violence .

For discussion, procedural guide, and forms relating to restraining orders generally, see Ch. 303, Injunctions .

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART IV. FORMS
B. Custody and Protective Orders

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.362

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.362 Waiver of Reunification Services [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5]--Judicial Council Form JV-195

[1] FORM Waiver of Reunification Services [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5]--Judicial Council Form JV-195

Click here to view image.

[2] Use of Form

This is the Judicial Council form of a waiver of reunification services [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5]. The Spanish language version of the form is Judicial Council form JV-195S. In most cases, when a child is removed from the custody of a parent the juvenile court is required to order the social worker to provide child welfare services to the child and the child's mother, statutorily presumed father, or guardians for the purpose of facilitating reunification of the family [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(a); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.695(f)(1)]. The court may order reunification services for a biological father of the child if the provision of such services are in the child's best interest [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(a)].

Reunification services are not to be provided, however, if the court finds by clear and convincing evidence that the parent or guardian has been advised of his or her right to reunification services and of the consequences of waiving such services, including the possibility of termination of parental rights and adoption, and the parent or guardian waives such services. The parent or guardian must be represented by counsel before making such a waiver and must execute the waiver of services form which the Judicial Council has adopted. The court must not accept the waiver unless it finds that the parent or guardian has knowingly and intelligently waived the right to services. This finding by the court must be stated on the record [Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.5(b)(14)].

Use of the Judicial Council form is required. This form is available in an interactive, electronic format in LexisNexis(R) Automated California Judicial Council Forms, which may be accessed at www.lexisone.com for an individual or monthly charge. A noninteractive version in PDF format also is available at www.lexisone.com at no charge.

[3] Cross References

For general discussion of services on removal, see § 328.129[1]-[9].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART IV. FORMS
B. Custody and Protective Orders

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.363

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.363 ICPC Priority--Findings and Orders [Fam. Code § 7900 et seq.; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 1428]--Judicial Council Form JV-567

[1] FORM ICPC Priority--Findings and Orders [Fam. Code § 7900 et seq.; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 1428]--Judicial Council Form JV-567

Click here to view image.

[2] Use of Form

This is the Judicial Council form for use as the court's findings and orders regarding a priority placement under Regulation 7 of the Interstate Compact on the Placement of Children (ICPC) [see Fam. Code § 7900 et seq.; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.616].

This form is available in an interactive, electronic format in LexisNexis(R) Automated California Judicial Council Forms, which may be accessed at www.lexisone.com for an individual or monthly charge. A noninteractive version in PDF format also is available at www.lexisone.com at no charge.

[3] Cross References

For discussion of the Interstate Compact on the Placement of Children, see § 328.128.

Additional discussions related to the Interstate Compact on the Placement of Children include the following:

- Ch. 12, Adoptions (discussion of interstate adoptions includes the application of the Interstate Compact on the Placement of Children).

- Treatment of interstate adoptions. Kirkland, Lurvey & Richmond, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 172, §§ 180-182 (Matthew Bender).

- Full coverage of adoptions, including interstate adoptions. Hollinger et al., Adoption Law and Practice, Ch. 3, Placing Children for Adoption and App. 3-A (Matthew Bender).

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART IV. FORMS
B. Custody and Protective Orders

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.364

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.364 Findings and Request for Assistance Under Interstate Compact on the Placement of Children (ICPC) [Fam. Code § 7900 et seq.; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.616]--Judicial Council Form JV-565

[1] FORM Findings and Request for Assistance Under Interstate Compact on the Placement of Children (ICPC) [Fam. Code § 7900 et seq.; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 1428]--Judicial Council Form JV-565

Click here to view image.

[2] Use of Form

This is the Judicial Council form of findings and request for assistance under the Interstate Compact on the Placement of Children (ICPC) [see Fam. Code § 7900 et seq.; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.616].

This form is available in an interactive, electronic format in LexisNexis(R) Automated California Judicial Council Forms, which may be accessed at www.lexisone.com for an individual or monthly charge. A noninteractive version in PDF format also is available at www.lexisone.com at no charge.

[3] Cross References

For discussion of the Interstate Compact on the Placement of Children, see § 328.128.

Additional discussions related to the Interstate Compact on the Placement of Children include the following:

- Ch. 12, Adoptions (discussion of interstate adoptions includes the application of the Interstate Compact on the Placement of Children).

- Complete coverage of adoptions. Hollinger et al., Adoption Law and Practice, and especially Ch. 3, Placing Children for Adoption and App. 3-A (Matthew Bender).

- Detailed treatment of interstate adoptions. Kirkland, Lurvey & Richmond, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2nd ed., Ch. 172, §§ 180-182 (Matthew Bender).

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART IV. FORMS
B. Custody and Protective Orders

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated §§ 328.365-328.369

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

[Reserved]

§§ 328.365[Reserved]

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART IV. FORMS
C. Subsequent and Supplemental Petitions

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.370

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.370 Petition to Modify Juvenile Court Order [Welf. & Inst. Code § 388; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 5.560, 5.570]--Judicial Council Form JV-180

[1] FORM Petition to Modify Juvenile Court Order [Welf. & Inst. Code § 388; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 1430, 1432]--Judicial Council Form JV-180

Click here to view image.

[2] Use of Form

This is the Judicial Council form for use as a petition to modify a previous juvenile court dependency order [Welf. & Inst. Code § 388; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules, 5.560, 5.570]. It is also used by a sibling to establish a relationship with the dependent child through the juvenile court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(b)].

Use of the form is mandatory [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 1.31, 5.504(a), 5.570(b)]. This form is available in an interactive, electronic format in LexisNexis(R) Automated California Judicial Council Forms, which may be accessed at www.lexisone.com for an individual or monthly charge. A noninteractive version in PDF format also is available at www.lexisone.com at no charge.

A petition for modification hearing must be used whenever there is a change of circumstances or new evidence that may require the court to change, modify, or set aside any order previously made or to terminate the jurisdiction of the court over the minor [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 388; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.560(d)].

A petition for modification hearing may be filed by any of the following [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.560(e); see Welf. & Inst. Code § 388]:

- The social worker, regarding a child who is a dependent, if the requested modification is not for a more restrictive level of custody.
- The parent or guardian.
- The child or the attorney for the child.
- Any other person having a legally recognizable interest in a child who is a dependent.

It may also be filed by a sibling to assert a sibling relationship [Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(b)].

Further, it must be used if a party is seeking to terminate court ordered reunification services before the normal prescribed time [Welf. & Inst. Code § 388(c)].

[3] Contents of Petition

A petition for modification must be liberally construed in favor of its sufficiency. The petition must be verified and contain the following information [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.570(a)]:

- The name of the court to which the petition is addressed.
- The title and action number of the original proceeding.
- The name, age, and address of the child, unless confidential.
- The name and residence address, if known, of the parent or guardian or of an adult relative of the child, if appropriate under the circumstances described in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.524 (contents of juvenile court petition).
- The date and general nature of the order sought to be modified.
- A concise statement of any change of circumstance or new evidence that requires changing of the order.
- A concise statement of the proposed change of the order.
- A statement as to the petitioner's relationship to or interest in the minor, if the petition is made by a person other than the minor; and
- A statement whether or not all parties agree to the proposed change.

[4] Authority of Court to Modify Order

Any order made by the court may at any time be changed, modified, or set aside, as the court in its discretion considers proper [Welf. & Inst. Code § 385; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.560(a)].

[5] Notice of Petition and Hearing

The clerk must cause notice of the petition hearing to be given to the minor, the parent or guardian, the prosecuting attorney, the probation officer or social worker, counsel of record, present custodian of a dependent minor, the tribe of a dependent Indian child, and any court-appointed child advocate, as prescribed by Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.524 (contents of notice of hearing) [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 386, 388; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.570(g)].

[6] Hearing and Disposition on Petition

If all parties stipulate to the requested modification, the court may order modification without a hearing. If it appears to the court that the requested modification will be contested or if the court desires to receive further evidence on the issue, the court must order that a hearing on the petition for modification be held within 30 calendar days after the petition is filed [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.570(f)].

If the petition fails to set forth any change of circumstance or new evidence that might require a change of order or termination of jurisdiction, the court may deny the petition ex parte [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.570(d)].

If the petition sets forth a change of circumstance or new evidence and it appears that the best interest of the minor may be promoted by the proposed change of order or termination of jurisdiction, the court may grant the petition after following the procedures set forth in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.570(f)-(g) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 388; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.570(e)].

[7] Cross References

For discussion of petitions to modify an order of the juvenile court, see § 328.140.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART IV. FORMS
C. Subsequent and Supplemental Petitions

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.371

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.371 Supplemental Petition for More Restrictive Court-Ordered Placement [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 387, 727.3; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.565]--Judicial Council Form JV-150

[1] FORM Supplemental Petition for More Restrictive Placement [Welf. & Inst. Code § 387; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 1430(c)]--Judicial Council Form JV-150

Click here to view image.

[2] Use of Form

This is the Judicial Council form for use as a supplemental petition for more restrictive court-ordered placement in a dependency matter under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 (Form JV-150) [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.560(c)].

Use of this form is mandatory [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.504]. This form is available in an interactive, electronic format in LexisNexis(R) Automated California Judicial Council Forms, which may be accessed at www.lexisone.com for an individual or monthly charge. A noninteractive version in PDF format also is available at www.lexisone.com at no charge.

A supplemental petition is used to request an order changing or modifying a previous order by removing a minor from the physical custody of a parent, guardian, relative, or friend, and directing placement in a higher level of care such as a foster home [Welf. & Inst. Code § 387]. In general, a supplemental petition must be used whenever the social worker for a dependent child of the court seeks a more restrictive level of court-ordered placement [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.560(c)].

[3] Levels of Restrictive Custody

For purposes of the use of supplemental petitions, a more restrictive level of court ordered placement is determined by reference to the following ascending order [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.560(c); see Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 387, 777]:

1. Placement in the home of the person entitled to legal custody.

2. Placement in the home of a noncustodial parent.

3. Placement in the home of a relative or friend (i.e., nonrelative extended family member).

4. Placement in a foster home.

5. Commitment to a private institution.

[4] Contents of Petition

The supplemental petition must be verified and contain the information required to be in an original petition by Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.524. It must contain a concise statement of facts sufficient to support the conclusion that the previous disposition has not been effective in the protection of the minor or, where removal from placement with a relative is sought, that placement with the relative is no longer appropriate in light of the criteria in Welf. & Inst. Code § 361.3 [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.565(a); see Welf. & Inst. Code § 387(a)].

[5] Filing of Petition

The supplemental petition must be filed in the original action by the social worker when the minor has been declared a dependent child [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 387(a); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.565(a)].

[6] Setting and Notice of Hearing on Petition

Immediately on the filing of a supplemental petition, the clerk must set it to be heard, and the hearing must be commenced, within the time limits prescribed for jurisdiction hearings on original petitions. Notice must be served on the persons and in the manner prescribed by Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.667 (notice of hearing on original petition) [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 386, 387(b); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.565].

[7] Detention Hearing

No child may be ordered detained pending a hearing on a supplemental petition unless a detention hearing is held [Welf. & Inst. Code § 387(c); see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.565(d)].

[8] Hearing on Supplemental Petition

The procedures relating to jurisdiction hearings apply to the determination of the allegations of the supplemental petition [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.565(e)(1); see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 5.682-5.688]. The procedures relating to disposition hearings apply to the determination of disposition [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.565(e)(2); see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 5.690-5.705]. At the conclusion of the hearing on the supplemental petition, the court must make findings that:

- The factual allegations of the supplemental petition are, or are not, true [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.565(e)(1)(A)].

- The allegation that the previous disposition has not been effective in the protection or rehabilitation of the child or that placement with the relative is no longer appropriate is, or is not, true [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.565(e)(1)(B)].

[9] Cross References

For discussion of supplemental petitions, see § 328.141.

For discussion of detention hearings, see § 328.80 et seq.

For discussion of applicable procedures in jurisdiction and disposition hearings, respectively, see § 328.100 et seq. and § 328.120 et seq.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART IV. FORMS
C. Subsequent and Supplemental Petitions

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated §§ 328.372-328.379

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

[Reserved]

§§ 328.372[Reserved]

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART IV. FORMS
D. Periodic Hearings for Review of Disposition

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.380

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.380 Notice of Review Hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 366.2, 366.21, 366.22; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 5.710-5.720]--Judicial Council Form JV-280

[1] FORM Notice of Review Hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 366.2, 366.21, 366.22; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 1460-1462]--Judicial Council Form JV-280

Click here to view image.

[2] Use of Form

This is the Judicial Council form of notice of periodic status review hearing [see Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 366.2, 366.21, 366.22; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 5.710-5.720]. The Spanish language version of this form is Judicial Council form JV-280S. These hearings are generally held every six months until dependency jurisdiction is terminated [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 366(a); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 5.710-5.720, 5.740; see also Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 366.26 (selection and implementation of an alternative permanent plan for children), 366.3 (post-permanency planning review)].

Use of the form is mandatory [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 1.31]. This form is available in an interactive, electronic format in LexisNexis(R) Automated California Judicial Council Forms, which may be accessed at www.lexisone.com for an individual or monthly charge. A noninteractive version in PDF format also is available at www.lexisone.com at no charge.

[3] Cross References

For general discussion of periodic review hearings, see § 328.17 and § 328.150 et seq.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART IV. FORMS
D. Periodic Hearings for Review of Disposition

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated §§ 328.381-328.389

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

[Reserved]

§§ 328.381[Reserved]

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART IV. FORMS
E. Permanent and Post-Permanent Disposition Proceedings

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.390

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.390 Notice of Hearing on Selection and Implementation of Permanent Plan [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 294, 366.26; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.725]--Judicial Council Form JV-300

[1] FORM Notice of Hearing on Selection and Implementation of Permanent Plan [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 294, 366.26; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 1463]--Judicial Council Form JV-300

Click here to view image.

[2] Use of Form

This is the Judicial Council form of notice of hearing on the selection and implementation of a permanent plan [Welf. & Inst. Code § 294; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.725(b)]. The Spanish language version of this form is Judicial Council form JV-300S. At the hearing, the juvenile court may terminate parental rights and place the minor for adoption or may order legal guardianship or another planned permanent living arrangement [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(b); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.725(e)].

Use of the Judicial Council form is mandatory [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 1.31]. This form is available in an interactive, electronic format in LexisNexis(R) Automated California Judicial Council Forms, which may be accessed at www.lexisone.com for an individual or monthly charge. A noninteractive version in PDF format also is available at www.lexisone.com at no charge.

[3] Cross References

For discussion of proceedings to select and implement a permanent plan, see § 328.170 et seq.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART IV. FORMS
E. Permanent and Post-Permanent Disposition Proceedings

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.391

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.391 Proof of Service of Notice of Hearing Regarding Permanent Plan [Code Civ. Proc. § 1013a; Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 294, 366.26; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.725]--Judicial Council Form JV-310

[1] FORM Proof of Service of Notice of Hearing Regarding Permanent Plan [Code Civ. Proc. § 1013a; Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 294, 366.26; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 1463]--Judicial Council Form JV-310

Click here to view image.

[2] Use of Form

This is the Judicial Council form of proof of service of notice of a hearing to select and implement a permanent plan [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1013a; see also Welf. & Inst. Code § 294; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.725(b)]. The Spanish language version of this form is Judicial Council form JV-310S.

Use of the form is optional [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 1.35]. This form is available in an interactive, electronic format in LexisNexis(R) Automated California Judicial Council Forms, which may be accessed at www.lexisone.com for an individual or monthly charge. A noninteractive version in PDF format also is available at www.lexisone.com at no charge.

[3] Cross References

For discussion of proceedings to select and implement a permanent plan, see § 328.170 et seq.

For the form of notice of hearing to which this form applies, see § 328.390[1].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART IV. FORMS
E. Permanent and Post-Permanent Disposition Proceedings

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.392

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.392 Orders Under Sections 366.24, 366.26, 727.3, 727.31 of the Welfare and Institutions Code [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 366.24, 366.26, 727.3, 727.31; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.725]--Judicial Council Form JV-320

[1] FORM Orders Under Sections 366.24, 366.26, 727.3, 727.31 of the Welfare and Institutions Code [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 366.24, 366.26, 727.3, 727.31; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.725]--Judicial Council Form JV-320

Click here to view image.

[2] Use of Form

This is the Judicial Council form for use as the court's order after a selection and implementation hearing in a dependency matter under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26 (Form JV-320). The Spanish language version of this form is Judicial Council form JV-320S.

Use of this form is mandatory [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 1.31]. This form is available in an interactive, electronic format in LexisNexis(R) Automated California Judicial Council Forms, which may be accessed at www.lexisone.com for an individual or monthly charge. A noninteractive version in PDF format also is available at www.lexisone.com at no charge.

[3] Cross References

For discussion of proceedings to select and implement a permanent plan, see § 328.170 et seq.

For the form of notice of hearing to which this form applies, see § 328.390[1].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART IV. FORMS
E. Permanent and Post-Permanent Disposition Proceedings

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.393

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.393 Letters of Guardianship (Juvenile) [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 360, 366.26, 366.4, 728]-Judicial Council Form JV-330

[1] FORM Letters of Guardianship (Juvenile) [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 360, 366.26, 366.4, 728]-Judicial Council Form JV-330

Click here to view image.

[2] Use of Form

This form is the Judicial Council form of letters of guardianship of the person for use in a guardianship established by the juvenile court, e.g., in a dependency proceeding. The Spanish language version of this form is Judicial Council form JV-325S.

Use of this form is mandatory [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 1.31]. This form is available in an interactive, electronic format in LexisNexis(R) Automated California Judicial Council Forms, which may be accessed at www.lexisone.com for an individual or monthly charge. A noninteractive version in PDF format also is available at www.lexisone.com at no charge.

Neither the Welfare and Institutions Code nor the Rules of Court distinguish between a guardianship of the person and a guardianship of the estate with regard to a guardianship established in juvenile court for a dependent child. Nevertheless, this Judicial Council form is only for use as letters of guardianship of the person. Presumably, if the child has property and a guardianship of the estate is required, the Judicial Council form of letters of guardianship of the estate for use in probate guardianships must also be completed and issued. For an example of the latter form, see Ch. 280, Guardianship and Conservatorship .

[3] Cross References

For discussion regarding establishment of a guardianship of the person in dependency proceedings, see §§ 328.171[6], 328.172[5], [7], and 328.181.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART IV. FORMS
E. Permanent and Post-Permanent Disposition Proceedings

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated §§ 328.394-328.399

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

[Reserved]

§§ 328.394[Reserved]

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART IV. FORMS
F. Appeals and Extraordinary Writs

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.400

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.400 Notice of Intent to File Writ Petition and Request for Record [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.450]--Judicial Council Form JV-820

[1] FORM Notice of Intent to File Writ Petition and Request for Record [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 38]--Judicial Council Form JV-820

Click here to view image.

[2] Use of Form

This is the Judicial Council form of Notice of Intent to File Writ Petition and Request for Record. It is for use when a party seeks review of an order setting a hearing to select and implement a permanent plan [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(l); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.450].

This form has been approved for optional use [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.600(c)]. It may be produced by a word-processor printer or similar process, including computer generated forms by the Child Welfare Services Case Management System [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.504(b)]. This form is available in an interactive, electronic format in LexisNexis(R) Automated California Judicial Council Forms, which may be accessed at www.lexisone.com for an individual or monthly charge. A noninteractive version in PDF format also is available at www.lexisone.com at no charge.

[3] Cross References

For discussion regarding proceedings to obtain review by extraordinary writ and appeal, see § 328.190 et seq.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART IV. FORMS
F. Appeals and Extraordinary Writs

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.401

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.401 Petition for Extraordinary Writ (Dependency) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(l); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.600]--Judicial Council Form JV-825

[1] FORM Petition for Extraordinary Writ (Dependency) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(l); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 1436]--Judicial Council Form JV-825

Click here to view image.

[2] Use of Form

This is the Judicial Council form of Petition for Extraordinary Writ. The Spanish language version of the form is Judicial Council form JV-825S. It is for use when a party seeks review of a nonappealable order, such as an order setting a hearing to select and implement a permanent plan, or when a party seeks review by extraordinary writ of a decision of the juvenile court for which an appeal is an inadequate remedy [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(l); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 5.595, 5.600].

This form has been approved for optional use [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 1.35]. It may be produced by a word-processor printer or similar process, including computer generated forms by the Child Welfare Systems Case Management System [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.504(b)]. This form is available in an interactive, electronic format in LexisNexis(R) Automated California Judicial Council Forms, which may be accessed at www.lexisone.com for an individual or monthly charge. A noninteractive version in PDF format also is available at www.lexisone.com at no charge.

Practitioners should not be misled by the brevity of the Judicial Council form. A petition for extraordinary writ still requires an adequate record and points and authorities [Rayna R. v. Superior Court (1993) 20 Cal. App. 4th 1398, 1406-1407, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 259] . Moreover, the rules of court specifically mandate that references to specific portions of the record and their significance must be noted in the writ, and applicable points and authorities must be attached [

Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 5.600(j), 8.452(b)].

[3] Cross References

For discussion regarding proceedings to obtain review by extraordinary writ and appeal, see § 328.190 et seq.

For discussion and forms relating to proceedings for review by extraordinary writ generally, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition .

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
CHAPTER 328 JUVENILE COURTS: DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART IV. FORMS
F. Appeals and Extraordinary Writs

28-328 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 328.402

AUTHOR: Gary C. Seiser Editorial Consultant John P. Passalacqua Contributing Author Jennifer Kaye Williams Contributing Author

§ 328.402 Notice of Appeal [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 395, 800(a); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.400(c)]--Judicial Council Form JV-800

[1] FORM Notice of Appeal [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 395, 800(a); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 37]--Judicial Council Form JV-800

Click here to view image.

[2] Use of Form

This is the Judicial Council form of Notice of Appeal for use when a party desires to appeal a decision of the juvenile court in either a dependency or wardship proceeding [see Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 395, 800(a); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.400(c)]. The Spanish language version of the form is Judicial Council form JV-800S.

This form has been approved for optional use [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 1.35]. It may be produced by a word-processor printer or similar process, including computer generated forms by the Child Welfare Systems Case Management System [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.504(b)]. This form is available in an interactive, electronic format in LexisNexis(R) Automated California Judicial Council Forms, which may be accessed at www.lexisone.com for an individual or monthly charge. A noninteractive version in PDF format also is available at www.lexisone.com at no charge.

[3] Cross References

For discussion of appeal in dependency and delinquency (wardship) proceedings, respectively, see § 328.190 et seq. and Ch. 329, Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings, § 329.119.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated 329.syn

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.syn Synopsis to Chapter 329: JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS

§ 329.01 Scope of Chapter

§ 329.02 Cross References

§§ 329.03-329.09 [Reserved]

§ 329.10 Governing Law

§ 329.11 Nature of Delinquency Proceeding

[1] Generally Noncriminal Under Welf. & Inst. Code § 203

[2] Exception When Juvenile Adjudication Is Based on Serious Offense

§ 329.12 Detention, Jurisdiction, and Disposition Phases

§ 329.13 Exclusion of Public at Delinquency Proceedings

[1] Public Generally Excluded

[2] Exception When Serious Offense Charged

[a] General Rule

[b] Effect of Proposition 21

[c] Limitations on Exception

[i] Motion by Juvenile Based on Substantial Prejudice

[ii] Motion by Victim

[iii] Motion to Keep Name Confidential When Proceeding Is Open to Public

[3] When Support Persons May Attend Proceedings

§ 329.14 Interpreters and Accommodations

[1] Interpreters

[2] Accommodations

§ 329.15 Access to Delinquency Proceeding Records

[1] In General

[2] Parties Entitled to Copies of Case File

[3] When Charging Petition Is Sustained

[4] When Harm Outweighs Benefit

[5] Brady Obligations in Juvenile and Criminal Cases

[6] Disclosure by Law Enforcement

[7] Record Sealing

[8] Database Information

§ 329.16 Rights of Victim

[1] "Victim" Defined

[2] General Rule

[3] Additional Access

[4] Exclusion

§ 329.17 Parents and Guardians

§ 329.18 Court Security

[1] Use of Physical Restraints

§ 329.19 [Reserved]

§ 329.20 Jurisdiction in Delinquency Proceedings

[1] General Scope

[2] Status Offenses Under Welf. & Inst. Code § 601(a)

[a] In General

[b] Curfew Ordinances

[3] Status Offenses Under Welf. & Inst. Code § 601(b)

[a] Truancy or School Behavior

[b] Failure of Parent or Guardian to Obey Directives of School Attendance Review Board

[4] Criminal Offenses Under Welf. & Inst. Code § 602

[5] Vehicle Code Infractions Under Welf. & Inst. Code § 603.5

[6] Juvenile Fugitives

[7] Multiple Petitions

§ 329.21 Retention of Jurisdiction

§ 329.22 Certification of Minor to Juvenile Court From Adult Court

[1] Original Exclusive Jurisdiction of Juvenile Court

[2] Certification to Juvenile Court

[3] Transmittal of Pleading to Juvenile Court and Petition to Commence Delinquency Proceeding

[4] Suspension of Criminal Proceedings

[5] Suspension of Statute of Limitations

[6] Effect of Adult Court Findings

[a] Conviction by Jury

[b] Plea Agreement

§ 329.23 Expanded Jurisdiction of Juvenile Court

§ 329.24 Federal Jurisdiction

[1] In General

[2] Practice and Procedure

[3] Transfer to Adult Court

[4] Effects of Juvenile Adjudication on Later Sentencing Under Federal Sentencing Guidelines

[a] DJF Parole--Detention or Revocation: As Used in Adult Federal Sentencing

[b] Juvenile Custody Calculated in Defendant's Criminal History

§ 329.25 Native American Youth

[1] In General

[2] Application of ICWA to Delinquency

§ 329.26 Immigration Issues

[1] In General

[2] Special Immigrant Juvenile Status

§ 329.27 Dual Status

[1] In General

[2] Procedure for Recommending Single Status

[3] Procedure When Two Counties Are Involved

[4] Procedure When Dual Status Is Available

[5] Notice and Decision Making

[6] Jurisdiction Over Matters Incidental to Proceedings

§§ 329.28-329.29 [Reserved]

§ 329.30 Establishment, Purpose, and Policies of Intake Program

§ 329.31 Commencement of Delinquency Proceedings

[1] Under Welf. & Inst. Code § 601

[2] Under Welf. & Inst. Code § 602

§ 329.32 Temporary Custody or Detention by Peace Officer

[1] Grounds for Detention Without Warrant

[2] Notice to Parent, Responsible Relative, or Guardian

[3] Minor's Right to Telephone Calls

[4] When Miranda Statement Is Required by Officer

[5] Constitutional Scope of Permissible Detention

[6] Chemical Testing, Fingerprinting, and Photographing

[7] Transmittal of Information Relating to Arrest and Detention of Minor

[8] Alternatives Available to Detaining Officer

[9] Mandatory Detention

[10] Restrictions on Detaining Minor in Jail or Lockup

[11] Arrest Warrants

§ 329.33 Investigation by Probation Officer on Application of Citizen or Arrest of Minor

[1] Duty to Investigate

[2] Notice Required on Arrest by Peace Officer

[3] Admissibility of Statements to Probation Officer

§ 329.34 Continued Detention

[1] General Rule

[2] Time Limits on Temporary Custody

[a] Release Required Unless Petition or Criminal Complaint Filed

[b] Supplemental Petitions

[c] Exception When Minor Misrepresents Age

[d] Exception When Adult Misrepresents Age

[e] Release Requirement After Certification to Juvenile Court

[f] Explanation Required for Release After Custody Over 24 Hours Without Petition

[3] Home Supervision Alternative

[a] Availability

[b] Written Promise to Appear as Condition of Release

[c] When Home Supervision Is Required

[d] Conditions for Mandatory Home Supervision

[e] Rights of Minor on Home Supervision

[f] Violation of Condition of Home Supervision

§ 329.35 Application to Commence Wardship Proceedings

[1] Contents and Form of Application

[2] Duty to Investigate Application

[3] Alternatives Following Investigation

[a] In General

[b] Settle at Intake

[c] Informal Supervision

[i] When Available

[ii] By Probation Officer in Lieu of Filing a Petition

[iii] By Prosecuting Attorney

[iv] By the Court Once a Petition Has Been Filed

[v] Supervision of Youthful Intoxicated Driver in Lieu of Petition

[d] Submission to Prosecuting Attorney in Welf. & Inst. Code § 602 Cases

[4] Informal Juvenile and Traffic Court

§ 329.36 Decision Not to Commence Proceedings

[1] In General

[2] Review of Decision Not to Commence Proceedings

§ 329.37 Initiation of Juvenile Court Wardship Proceedings

[1] Filing Petition

[2] Refiling Petition After Dismissal for Failure to File Within Time Limitations

[3] Form and Contents of Petition

[4] Verification of Petition

[5] Amendment of Petition

[6] Setting Petition for Hearing

[7] Notice Requirements

[a] Persons Entitled to Notice by Clerk of Court

[b] Contents of Notice Issued by Clerk

[c] Time Requirements for Service of Notice

[i] When Minor Is Detained

[ii] When Minor Is Not Detained

[d] Failure to Respond to Notice

[e] Service on Minor's Attorney

[f] Waiver of Notice

§ 329.38 Interim Orders

§§ 329.39-329.49 [Reserved]

§ 329.50 Detention Hearing

[1] Nature and Purpose of Hearing

[2] Maximum Detention Period

[a] Prior to Filing Petition

[b] Before Detention Hearing Based on Petition

[i] General Rule

[ii] Certain Misdemeanors

[3] Service and Notice of Filing Prior to Hearing

[4] Grounds for Continuance

[5] Explanation by Court of Proceedings at Commencement of Hearing

[6] Examination by Court

[7] Rights of Minor During Hearing

[8] Admission of Allegation

§ 329.51 Representation by Counsel at Hearing

[1] Advisement of Right by Court

[2] Appointment of Counsel

[a] In General

[b] When Conflict of Interest Exists Between Minor and Parent or Guardian

[c] Right to Counsel Offense Specific

§ 329.52 Time Limits for Hearing Upon Detention

[1] Detention for Violation of Home Supervision

[2] Detention Following Transfer or Pending Change of Placement

§ 329.53 Grounds for Detention

[1] General Rule

[a] Court Finding Required

[b] Violation of Court Order

[c] Escape From Commitment

[d] Likelihood of Flight

[e] Protection of Minor

[f] Protection of Person or Property of Another

[2] Probation Officer Requirements

[3] Required Findings

[4] Specialized Mental Health Treatment

§ 329.54 Order to Detain

[1] In General

[2] Order to Reappear

[3] Home Supervision in Lieu of Detention by Court

[4] Request for Prima Facie Hearing

[5] Rehearing

[a] Prohibited When All Report Preparers Available

[b] After Absence of Parent or Guardian

§ 329.55 Detention Facilities

[1] General Restrictions

[2] Minors Detained Pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 601

[3] Minors Detained Pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 602

[4] Minors Detained on Transfer to Adult Court

[5] Segregation of Minors Detained Under Welf. & Inst. Code § 601 From Minors Detained Under Welf. & Inst. Code § 602

[6] Restrictions on Contact With Adult Prisoners

[7] Restriction on Commitment to State Prison

[8] Juvenile Hall

[a] Mandate for Establishment

[b] Standards for Juvenile Halls

[c] Inspection of Jail, Juvenile Hall or Lockup

[d] Availability of Abortion

[e] Availability of Material for Personal Hygiene, Information Regarding Family Planning, and Birth Control Measures

§§ 329.56-329.59 [Reserved]

§ 329.60 Process for Transfer

[1] Historical Background

[2] Proposition 21

§ 329.61 Statutory Waiver: Cases That Require Filing in Adult Court

§ 329.62 Prosecutorial Waiver: Cases That May Be Filed in Adult Court

§ 329.63 Judicial Waiver

[1] Fitness Hearings

[2] Request for Hearing

[a] By Prosecuting Attorney

[b] By Minor's Attorney

[3] Time and Notice of Fitness Hearing

[4] Representation by Counsel

[5] Probation Officer's Report

[a] Requirement

[b] Contents

[c] Distribution of Report

[6] Admissibility of Statements Made to Probation Officer

[7] Recommendation by Probation Officer

[8] Relevant Evidence

[9] Request for a Prima Facie Hearing

[10] Determination of Fitness

[a] Basic Criteria

[b] Applicable Standard and Burden of Proof

[i] When Prosecution Has Burden of Showing Unfitness

[ii] When Burden Shifts to Defense to Show Fitness

[c] Plea to Petition When Fitness Hearing Is Pending

[11] Required Findings

[a] For Fitness

[b] For Unfitness

[i] In General

[ii] Subsequent Use of Finding of Unfitness

[iii] Procedure After Finding

[iv] Order of Custody of Minor

[v] Release on Bail or Recognizance

§ 329.64 Proceeding in Criminal Court

[1] Grand Jury Indictment Permitted

[2] Report to Juvenile Court When No Conviction Results

[3] Conviction on Nonpredicate Offenses

[4] Commitment to California Youth Authority

[5] Maximum Penalties

[6] Review of Fitness Hearing Determination

[a] Availability

[b] Continuance of Jurisdiction Hearing When Prosecuting Attorney Seeks Review of Fitness Finding

§ 329.65 Role of Judge or Referee in Subsequent Contested Jurisdiction Hearing

§ 329.66 Reverse Remand

[1] In General

[2] Adult Sentence

[3] Juvenile Disposition

[4] No Direct Refile

§§ 329.67-329.69 [Reserved]

§ 329.70 Jurisdiction Hearing

[1] Purpose of Hearing

[2] Waiver of Jurisdiction Hearing

[3] Time for Hearing

[a] General Rule

[b] Effect of Delay Caused by Minor's Failure to Appear

[c] Dismissal for Untimely Commencement of Jurisdiction Hearing

[4] Continuance of Hearing

[a] Basis and Procedure

[b] To Prepare for Hearing

[c] After Unexpected Contest of Petition

[d] New Evidence

[e] Pending Completion of Informal Probation

[f] Implied Consent to Continuance

[g] Co-Minor Cases

[5] Commencement of Hearing

[a] Explanation of Petition

[b] Explanation of Trial Rights

[c] Explanation of Right to Representation by Attorney

[d] Appointment of Counsel in Cases of Conflict of Interest

§ 329.71 Prehearing Discovery

[1] In General

[2] Petitioner's Duty to Disclose Certain Information

[a] When Petition Is Filed

[b] On Timely Request

[3] Duty of Parent or Guardian to Disclose Relevant Information on Timely Request

[4] Continuing Duty to Disclose

[5] Prehearing Discovery Orders

[a] Orders Compelling Disclosure

[b] Protective Orders

[c] Conditions of Discovery

[d] Reciprocal Discovery Orders

[6] Sanctions on Failure to Comply With Discovery Order

§ 329.72 Motions to Suppress Evidence

§ 329.73 Entering Plea to Allegation

[1] Court Inquiry

[2] Admission of Allegations

[a] Requirement That Minor Admit Personally

[b] Requirement That Counsel Consent

[c] Prerequisites to Acceptance

[d] Warning When Minor Is on Probation

[e] Acceptance of Admission

[f] Pleading No Contest

[g] Effect of Failure to Establish Knowledgeable Waiver of Rights

[3] Presumption That Minor Under 14 Is Incapable of Committing Crime

[a] Application to Delinquency Proceedings

[b] Standard of Proof

[c] Evidence of Prior Conduct

[4] Pleading Not Guilty by Reason of Insanity

[5] Minors Mentally Incompetent To Stand Trial

[a] In General

[b] Mental Incompetence v. Developmental Incompetence

§ 329.74 Evidentiary Standards in Jurisdiction Proceeding

[1] Admission of Evidence and Standard of Proof

[2] Objections to Evidence When Minor Is Unrepresented

[3] Use of Probation Officer's Report Prohibited

[4] Proscription Against Multiple Prosecutions

§ 329.75 Immunity for Witnesses in Delinquency Proceedings

[1] Privilege Against Self-Incrimination

[2] Request for Immunity in Proceedings Pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 602

[3] No Immunity From Perjury or Contempt

§ 329.76 Dismissal of Petition After Presentation by Prosecution

§ 329.77 Determination That Allegations Are True

[1] Required Findings

[2] Finding Regarding Degree of Offense

[3] Finding When Offense Could Be Treated as Either Misdemeanor or Felony in Criminal Court

§ 329.78 Determination That Allegations Are Not True

§ 329.79 Review of Jurisdiction Order

§ 329.80 Juvenile Informants

§ 329.81 Determination of Factual Innocence

§§ 329.82-329.89 [Reserved]

§ 329.90 Disposition Hearing

[1] Purpose

[2] Transfer Out

[3] Continuance Prior to Disposition Hearing

[4] Preparation of Social Study Report

§ 329.91 Temporary Placement

[1] CYA Placement for Diagnosis

[2] Holding in Psychopathic Ward

§ 329.92 Disposition Hearing Procedures

[1] Right to Judge Who Took Admission

[2] Explanation of Proceedings by Court

[3] Evidence Relevant to Disposition

[a] In General

[b] References to Police Contacts

[c] Reference to Illegally Obtained Evidence

[d] Reference to Dismissed Allegations

§ 329.93 Judgment of Court

[1] Dispositions Available

[2] Deferred Entry of Judgment

[a] In General

[i] Eligibility

[ii] Suitability

[b] Written Notification to Minor by Prosecutor

[c] Grant of Deferred Entry of Judgment

[d] Citation to Custodial Parent, Guardian, or Foster Parent

[e] Program Requirements

[f] Program Failure

[g] Successful Completion

[h] Appeals

[3] Probation Without Wardship

[4] Minor Adjudged Insane

[5] Adjudged Wardship Under Welf. & Inst. Code § 601

[6] Adjudged Wardship Under Welf. & Inst. Code § 602

[7] Mandatory Dispositions

§ 329.94 Conditions of Probation

[1] Scope of Court's Discretion

[2] Timely Objection to Conditions

[3] Conditions Directed at Parents or Guardian of Minor

[4] Conditions When Minor Is Nonresident

[5] Conditions Related to Psychological and Medical Treatment

[6] Conditions Related to Drug Use

[7] Condition Permitting Warrantless Search

[8] Conditions on Continued Custody

[9] Conditions Related to Home Supervision

[10] Community Service Including Graffiti Cleanup

[11] Impact on Driving Privilege

[12] Employment Restrictions

[13] Firearm Prohibition

[14] Gang and Weapons Orders

[15] Victim Considerations

§ 329.95 Restitution and Fines

[1] Restitution to Victim

[a] General Rule

[b] Restitution Hearings

[c] "Victim" Defined

[d] Restitution in Relation to Other Penalties

[e] Amount of Restitution

[f] Restitution and Rehabilitation

[2] Restitution Fine

[a] Who Must Pay Additional Fine

[b] Amount of Fine

[c] Ability to Pay and Other Factors Considered by Court

[d] No Waiver of Fine Except for Compelling and Extraordinary Reasons

[e] Administrative Costs of Collecting Fine

[f] Fine Is Deposited in Restitution Fund

[3] Imposition as Condition of Probation

[a] General Rule

[b] Community Service as Alternative

[c] Revocation of Probation for Failure to Pay Restitution

[4] Priority When Committed to Division of Juvenile Facilities

[5] Fine for Criminal Offense

[a] In General

[b] Fees Not Authorized

[6] Joint and Several Liability

[a] Rebuttable Presumption of Parent's or Guardian's Liability Subject to Ability to Pay

[b] Factors Considered in Determining Ability to Pay

[c] Joint and Several Liability of Codefendants

[7] Parental Liability

[a] In General

[b] Injury Caused by Discharge of Firearm

[c] Graffiti-Related Offenses

[d] Appealability

§ 329.96 Orders Limiting Control of Minor by Parent or Guardian

[1] In General

[2] Removal From the Family Home

[3] Placement in Nonsecure Facility

[a] Placement and Group Homes

[i] In General

[ii] Visitation

[b] Foster Care

[i] In General

[ii] Psychotropic Medication

[iii] Termination of Parental Rights

[4] Placement in Secure Facility

[a] Time Limits

[b] Required Review Hearing

[5] Commitment to Juvenile Home, Ranch, Camp, Forestry Camp, or Juvenile Hall

[6] Division of Juvenile Facilities (Formerly the Department of the Youth Authority)

[a] Background

[b] Promised Reform

[i] In General

[ii] Gap Analysis

[iii] Remedial Plan

[iv] Facilities Master Plan

[v] Parole Reform

[c] Realignment

[d] Terminology and Purpose

[e] In General

[i] Commitments

[ii] Time of Confinement

[iii] Mandatory Parole Release

[iv] Recall of Commitment

[f] Authority to Stay or Suspend Youth Authority State Commitment

[g] Civil Commitment Under Welf. & Inst. Code § 1800

[h] Remand by Adult Court for Diagnostic Evaluation

[i] Transfer to the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation

[7] Commitment to Facility for Emotionally Disturbed

[8] County Jail

§ 329.97 Calculating Maximum Term of Confinement

[1] In General

[2] Distinguishing Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 726(c) and § 731(b)

[3] No Oral Pronouncement Required

§ 329.98 Detention Prior to Disposition

§ 329.99 Determination Regarding Degree of Offense

§ 329.100 Effect of Adjudication

[1] In General

[2] Subsequent Use and Disclosure

§§ 329.101-329.109 [Reserved]

§ 329.110 Proceedings to Modify or Set Aside Order

[1] Availability

[2] Application for Modification of Order Under Welf. & Inst. Code § 778

[a] In General

[b] Modification of Prior Placement Orders

[3] Notice of Hearing

[4] Motion to Modify or Terminate Jurisdiction of Court Upon Finding of Unfitness

§ 329.111 Probation Violations

[1] Historical Background

[2] Probation Violations

§§ 329.112-329.113 [Reserved]

§ 329.114 Changing Order of Commitment to Division of Juvenile Facilities (DJF)

§ 329.115 Gang Registration

§ 329.116 Registration of Sex Offenders

§ 329.117 Notification to Schools

§ 329.118 Notification of Law Enforcement

§ 329.119 Notification to Victims

§ 329.120 Sealing Juvenile Court Records

[1] In General

[2] Prohibited for Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(b) Offenses

§ 329.121 Dismissal of Petition

§ 329.122 Appeals

[1] In General

[2] Waiver of Appellate Rights

[3] Right to Appointed Counsel

§ 329.123 Sentencing in Subsequent Adult Felony Conviction

[1] Application of the "Three Strikes" Law

[a] In General

[b] Right to Jury Trial

[2] Effects of Proposition 21

[3] Use to Impose Aggravated Term

§ 329.124 Interstate Compact on Juveniles

§§ 329.125-329.129 [Reserved]

§ 329.130 Right to an Education

[1] In General

[2] Special Education

[a] In General

[c] State Law

§ 329.131 School Security

[1] Search and Seizure

[a] In General

[b] Two-Fold Inquiry Determining Reasonableness

[c] T.L.O. Searches

[i] Searches by Teachers and School Officials

[d] Detention

§ 329.132 School Discipline

§§ 329.133-329.139 [Reserved]

§ 329.140 Proposition 63: Mental Health Services Act

[1] Background

[2] Funding

[3] Programs

[4] Administration

[5] Effect on Delinquency

[6] Subsequent Legislation

§ 329.141 Proposition 69: DNA Samples, Collection, and Database

[1] In General

[2] Collection and Use

[3] Retroactive Application

§§ 329.142-329.199 [Reserved]

§ 329.200 Matthew Bender Publications

§ 329.201 Other Text References

§ 329.202 Law Reviews

§ 329.203 Web Sites

§§ 329.204-329.209 [Reserved]

§ 329.210 State Statutes

§ 329.211 California Rules of Court

§ 329.212 Decisions

§§ 329.213-329.219 [Reserved]

§ 329.220 State Statutes

§ 329.221 Decisions

[1] Capacity to Commit Crime

[2] Jurisdiction of Juvenile Court

§§ 329.222-329.229 [Reserved]

§ 329.230 State Statutes

§ 329.231 California Rules of Court

§ 329.232 Attorney General Opinions

§ 329.233 Decisions

§§ 329.234-329.239 [Reserved]

§ 329.240 State Statutes

[1] Detention Facilities

[2] Conditions of Detention

[3] Detention Hearing

[4] Temporary Custody

§ 329.241 California Rules of Court

§ 329.242 Decisions

[1] Detention Hearing

[2] Preadjudication Procedures

[3] Temporary Custody & Arrest

§§ 329.243-329.249 [Reserved]

§ 329.250 State Statutes

§ 329.251 California Rules of Court

§ 329.252 Decisions

[1] Challenging Certification Order

[2] Constitutional Considerations

[3] Considerations for Unfitness Finding

[4] Direct File (Prosecutorial Waiver)

[5] Sentencing Considerations

[6] Statement of Reasons in Support of Findings

[7] Subsequent Use of Fitness Finding

§§ 329.253-329.259 [Reserved]

§ 329.260 State Statutes

§ 329.261 California Rules of Court

[1] Admission of Allegations and No Contest Plea

[2] Contested Hearings

[3] Continuances

[4] Discovery

[5] Procedure

[6] Time Limitations

[7] Witnesses

§ 329.262 Decisions

[1] Admissions of Allegations

[2] Amendment to Petition

[3] Codefendants and Accomplices

[4] Continuances

[5] Discovery

[6] Dismissal of Petition

[7] Incompetency and Insanity

[8] Interpreter, Right to

[9] Jury Trial and Advisory Jury

[10] Procedural Format of Juvenile Court Proceedings

[11] Proceedings Under Welf. & Inst. Code § 601

[12] Proceedings Under Welf. & Inst. Code § 602

[13] Public Trial, Right to

[14] Refiling of Petition

[15] Deferred Entry of Judgment

§§ 329.263-329.269 [Reserved]

§ 329.270 State Statutes

§ 329.271 California Rules of Court

§ 329.272 Decisions

[1] Calculation of Term

[2] Division of Juvenile Facilities

[3] Continued Detention of Dangerous Persons

[4] Effect of Diagnostic Study

[5] Juveniles Inappropriate for Commitment

[6] Modification of Order of Commitment

[7] Necessary Findings for Commitment

[8] Return of Minor by Youth Authority

[9] Rights on Honorable Discharge

[10] Commitments to Mental Health Facilities

[11] Disposition Hearing

[12] Dispositional Alternatives

[13] Parent's Liability for Support of Minor

§ 329.273 Attorney General Opinions

§§ 329.274-329.279 [Reserved]

§ 329.280 State Statutes

§ 329.281 California Rules of Court

[1] Appeals

[2] Subsequent Petitions and Modifications

§ 329.282 Decisions

[1] Appeal

[2] Review by Writ of Habeas Corpus

[3] Modification of Orders

[4] Supplemental Petitions

[5] Subsequent Use in Criminal Court Sentencing

§§ 329.283-329.289 [Reserved]

§ 329.290 State Statutes

§ 329.291 California Rules of Court

§ 329.292 Decisions

[1] Sealing Records

[2] Media Access

§§ 329.293-329.299 [Reserved]

§ 329.300 State Statutes

§ 329.301 Decisions

[1] Counsel, Right to

[2] Double Jeopardy

[3] Due Process

[4] Equal Protection

[5] Motion to Suppress

[6] Searches and Seizures

[7] Self-Incrimination

§§ 329.302-329.349 [Reserved]

§ 329.350 Juvenile Wardship Petition [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 601, 602] With Attachment Alleging Child Habitually Disobedient [Welf. & Inst. Code § 601(a)]--Judicial Council Forms JV-600 and JV-610

[1] FORM

[2] Use of Form

[3] Form of Petition

[4] Service of Notice and Petition

[5] Cross References

§ 329.351 Notice of Hearing (Wardship) [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 658, 659; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 1406(d)]--Judicial Council Form JV-625

[1] FORM

[2] Use of Form

[3] Form of Notice

[4] Cross References

§§ 329.352-329.359 [Reserved]

§ 329.360 Notice of Motion and Motion Before Trial to Suppress Illegally Obtained Evidence, Statement, or Admission

[1] FORM

[2] Use of Form

[3] Content of Prehearing Motion and Accompanying Papers

[4] Constitutional Protections

§ 329.361 Order for Prisoner's Appearance at Hearing Affecting Parental Rights, and Waiver of Appearance [Welf. & Inst. Code § 349; Penal Code § 2625]--Judicial Council Form JV-450

[1] FORM

[2] Use of Form

[3] Right to Appearance or to Waive Appearance

[4] Cross References

§ 329.362 Notice of Motion and Motion to Dismiss Juvenile Court Delinquency Petition

[1] FORM

[2] Use of Form

[3] Authority for Motion

[a] Court's General Power to Control Its Proceedings

[b] Dismissals After Presentation of Evidence

[c] Dismissals in the Interests of Justice

[4] Notice Requirement

[5] Points and Authorities

[6] Cross References

§§ 329.363-329.369 [Reserved]

§ 329.370 Request for Prima Facie Hearing

[1] FORM

[2] Use of Form

[3] Cross References

§ 329.371 Notice of Motion and Motion for Jury Trial

[1] FORM

[2] Use of Form

[3] Cross References

§ 329.372 Fitness Hearing Order (Wardship) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 1480-1483]--Judicial Council Form JV-710

[1] FORM

[2] Use of Form

[3] Findings Required in Order

[4] Cross References

§§ 329.373-329.379 [Reserved]

§ 329.380 Petition Attachment to Modify Previous Orders (Wardship) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 778; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 1432]--Judicial Council Form JV-740

[1] FORM

[2] Use of Form

[3] Form of Petition

[4] Cross References

§§ 329.381-329.389 [Reserved]

§ 329.390 Affidavit and Petition for Sealing of Juvenile Court Records [Welf. & Inst. Code § 781]

[1] FORM

[2] Use of Form

[3] Cross References

§ 329.391 Order to Seal Juvenile Court Records [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 389, 781]--Judicial Council Form JV-590

[1] FORM

[2] Use of Form

[3] Cross References

§ 329.392 Petition to Obtain Report of Law Enforcement Agency/Juvenile [Welf. & Inst. Code § 828; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.552(g)]--Judicial Council Form JV-575

[1] FORM

[2] Use of Form

[3] Cross References

Hon. Kurt Kumli n*
Editorial Consultant

LaRon Hogg Haught n
Contributing Author

FOOTNOTES:

(n72)Footnote *. Hon. Kurt Kumli is a California Superior Court Judge for the County of Santa Clara and a former Commissioner on the State Commission on Juvenile Justice. He was instrumental in creating specialized delinquency courts in Santa Clara County for drug offenders, family violence, and restorative justice. He was the co-creator of the country's first juvenile mental health court and implemented Santa Clara's juvenile deferred entry of judgment (DEJ) process, which now accounts for nearly 30 percent of all first-time court referrals in that county. A nationally recognized expert on juvenile law and policy, Judge Kumli serves on the faculty at the Santa Clara University School of Law and teaches delinquency law and policy classes throughout the United States. The National Institute of Justice chose Judge Kumli as a recipient of a John B. Pickett Fellowship at Harvard's Kennedy School of Government for Senior Executives in State and Local Government Program. Judge Kumli has been a member of the California Judicial Council's Family and Juvenile Law Advisory Committee, and a faculty member and technical advisor for the California District Attorneys Association, where he chaired its Juvenile Justice Committee. He has published numerous articles on gang prosecution, juvenile justice reform, juvenile mental health court and California's adult court certification (Fitness) process.

(n73)Footnote . LaRon Hogg Haught is an attorney with the Administrative Office of the Courts, Center for Families, Children and the Courts. She previously worked as a Senior Program Associate at the Berkeley Center for Criminal Justice at the University of California, Berkeley Law School (Boalt Hall) and as a deputy legislative counsel for the Office of Legislative Counsel in Sacramento. Ms. Hogg Haught spent 12 years as a juvenile probation officer in Santa Clara County prior to attending law school. She also authored the first published academic article on California's Juvenile Deferred Entry of Judgment practices.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART I. SCOPE

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.01

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter has discussion and forms relating to juvenile court delinquency proceedings; that is, proceedings to adjudge a minor a ward of the court under Welf. & Inst. Code § 601 or 602.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329

Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART I. SCOPE

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.02

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.02 Cross References

The analysis and forms relating to general juvenile court jurisdiction and procedures is in Ch. 327, Juvenile Courts: Jurisdiction and General Procedures.

A discussion and forms relating specifically to juvenile court dependency proceedings is in Ch. 328, Juvenile Courts: Dependency Proceedings.

Coverage of additional topics related to civil actions arising out of children's issues may be found in the following chapters:

- Ch. 367A, Minors: Tort Actions (discussion and forms relating to tort actions by and against minors).

- Ch. 394, Parent and Child (additional discussion and forms relating to parental rights and duties, together with coverage of child custody issues arising outside the context of dissolution of marriage proceedings).

Family law issues affecting children, such as termination of parental rights, enforcement of child support orders, protective orders against domestic violence (including child abuse) parental rights and duties, custody, the establishment of the parent-child relationship, and paternity, are analyzed in Kirkland, Lurvey, Richmond and Wagner, California Family Law Practice and Procedure, 2d ed. Chs. 30- 35, 96, 141, and 171 (Matthew Bender).

For a review of the legal and strategic considerations involved in a wide variety of child-related issues, see Dale, et al., Representing the Child Client (Matthew Bender).

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART I. SCOPE

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated §§ 329.03-329.09

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

[Reserved]

§§ 329.03[Reserved]

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
A. Overview of Delinquency Proceedings

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.10

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.10 Governing Law

The statutes governing delinquency proceedings under Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 601 and 602 are contained in Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 601-800. The California Rules of Court governing delinquency proceedings are set forth in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 5.500-5.585, 5.590, 5.605-5.616, 5.625-5.652, 5.663, 5.752, 5.830. Provisions for detaining minors taken into custody under Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 601 and 602 are set forth in Welf. & Inst. Code § 206 et seq.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329

Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
A. Overview of Delinquency Proceedings

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.11

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.11 Nature of Delinquency Proceeding

[1] Generally Noncriminal Under Welf. & Inst. Code § 203

Historically, a proceeding in the juvenile court has not been deemed a criminal proceeding [Welf. & Inst. Code § 203]. Rather than seeking to place the stigma of criminality on the minor, the juvenile court law is said to be liberally construed to secure for each minor such care and guidance as will serve the welfare of the minor and the best interests of the state [In re Aline D. (1975) 14 Cal. 3d 557, 562].

[2] Exception When Juvenile Adjudication Is Based on Serious Offense

Despite the language of Welf. & Inst. Code § 203 that a juvenile court adjudication is not a criminal conviction, a juvenile adjudication, when based on a serious offense, may be treated as the equivalent of a felony conviction in subsequent adult criminal proceedings for purposes of sentence enhancement under the "Three Strikes Law," which was passed by the voters in November, 1994 [Penal Code § 1170.12(b)(3) (juvenile adjudication of minor who was 16 years or older at time he or she committed specified felony offenses may constitute prior serious or violent felony conviction for enhanced sentencing in subsequent felony conviction; see discussion in § 329.60[10][d])].

PRACTICE TIP:

Effect of Juvenile Adjudication. The benevolent purpose and construction attributed to juvenile law has been questioned by some courts as affording an opportunity for a procedural lack of due process. Other courts have suggested that such a characterization is a legal fiction inasmuch as it is common knowledge that such an adjudication, when based on a charge of committing an act that amounts to a felony, is a blight on the character of and is a serious impediment to the future of the minor [In re Mikkelsen (1964) 226 Cal. App. 2d 467, 471, 38 Cal. Rptr. 106] .

This discussion has recently been limited to an examination of whether the due process safeguards inherent in a delinquency court trial proceeding are sufficient to impose the same consequences of a criminal conviction once the adjudicated minor becomes an adult. In this context, courts have frequently undertaken an exhaustive retrospective analysis, weighing the original purposes behind delinquency proceedings against theperception that the consequences of those proceedings are increasingly criminal in nature.

In reality, this approach, that often precipitates down to a question of whether minors should be entitled to jury trials when it is alleged that they have committed certain offenses, may be myopic. Since it is the use of the adjudication in an adult proceeding, and not the adjudication itself, that is at the root of the problem, another option is to require proving the offense was a strike--beyond a reasonable doubt to a jury--once it is alleged in an adult proceeding.

For practical purposes, many of these adjudications in juvenile court never become adult "strikes." These offenses also have other consequences relating to their disposition in juvenile court that have nothing to do with the criminal court system, and are entirely within the rehabilitative purposes for which the system was originally created. Consequently, at the time the offenses are adjudicated in juvenile court, the original safeguards and procedures constructed for that process are as appropriate as ever.

The difficulties arise with the subsequent uses, not originally envisioned at the time of the court's creation, in the adult criminal arena. It is further complicated by the fact that countless matters have already been adjudicated in juvenile court, both before and after the current application of the "Three Strikes Law," without the threat or benefit of a jury trial. Those adjudications, for the purposes of the juvenile court are sound in terms of process and constitutional protection. However, when compared with convictions in the criminal justice system, they are significantly different from both constitutional and practical perspectives.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
A. Overview of Delinquency Proceedings

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.12

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.12 Detention, Jurisdiction, and Disposition Phases

Juvenile delinquency proceedings are divided into three phases: detention, jurisdiction and disposition.

The detention phase occurs only when a probation officer detains a minor. When that happens, a "detention hearing" is held to determine whether or not the juvenile should continue to be detained pending an adjudication on the petition filed on his or her behalf.

If the minor is not detained, the initial phase of the delinquency proceeding is jurisdictional, that is, a "jurisdictional hearing." This hearing addresses the merits of a petition requesting the court to exercise jurisdiction over the minor child as a ward of the court.

In those instances in which the court agrees to exercise jurisdiction over the minor, the final phase is disposition, or the "disposition hearing." At this hearing the juvenile court considers the proper action to be taken in the case.

The split between jurisdiction and disposition is a consequence of the statutory requirement that the court first determine whether the facts of the case would support jurisdiction in declaring wardship and thereafter determine the appropriate disposition [see In re J. L. P. (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 86, 89, 100 Cal. Rptr. 601] . This bifurcation recognizes that, once the minor has been declared a fit subject for juvenile treatment, the court's task is not punishment but assistance for the juvenile. Thus, the considerations relative to the proper disposition of the minor are different from those that bear upon a determination that a crime has been committed [In re J. L. P. (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 86, 89, 100 Cal. Rptr. 601] .

Because, however, juvenile court proceedings are designed to produce an informal, nonadversary atmosphere, it is permissible for the court to dispose of the jurisdictional and dispositional phases in a single hearing so long as it complies with the basic requirements of each of those phases [In re Mikkelsen (1964) 226 Cal. App. 2d 467, 470, 38

Cal. Rptr. 106] .

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
A. Overview of Delinquency Proceedings

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.13

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.13 Exclusion of Public at Delinquency Proceedings

[1] Public Generally Excluded

In delinquency proceedings, the public is generally excluded from juvenile court hearings unless the minor or any parent or guardian present at a proceeding requests otherwise. However, the court may admit persons that have a direct and legitimate interest in a particular case or the work of the court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 676(a)]. Furthermore, members of the public must be admitted on the same basis as they are allowed in criminal proceedings, when certain offenses are charged [Welf. & Inst. Code § 676(a); see discussion in [2], below].

Notwithstanding the general rule excluding the public from juvenile proceedings, a prosecuting witness may have up to two family members present for support [Welf. & Inst. Code § 676(a) (delinquency proceedings); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.530; see discussion in [3], below].

[2] Exception When Serious Offense Charged

[a] General Rule

The exception to the rule of excluding the public applies generally to situations in which the juvenile is charged with commission of a serious offense. In other words, the public must be admitted as it would be to trials in criminal court if the wardship petition alleges that the juvenile committed any of the following [Welf. & Inst. Code § 676(a)]:

- Murder.
- Arson of an inhabited building.
- Robbery while armed with a dangerous or deadly weapon.

- Rape with force or violence or threat of great bodily harm.
- Sodomy by force, violence, duress, menace, or threat of great bodily harm.
- Oral copulation by force, violence, duress, menace, or threat of great bodily harm.
- Any offense specified in Penal Code § 289(a) (penetration by foreign object).
- Kidnapping for ransom.
- Kidnapping in violation of Penal Code § 209(b).
- Kidnapping with bodily harm.
- Assault with intent to murder or attempted murder.
- Assault with a firearm or destructive device.
- Assault by any means of force likely to produce great bodily injury.
- Discharge of a firearm into an inhabited or occupied building.
- Any offense described in Penal Code § 1203.09 (crimes against aged or handicapped).
- Certain weapons offenses committed by a minor 16 years of age or older, as described in Penal Code §§ 12020 and 12022.5.
- Residential burglary if the minor is already a ward of the court.
- Any felony offense described in Penal Code § 136.1 (intimidation of witnesses and victims) or 137 (influencing testimony or information given to law enforcement official).
- Certain controlled-substance offenses as specified in Health & Safety Code §§ 11351, 11351.5, 11352, 11378, 11378.5, 11379, and 11379.5.
- Criminal street gang activity that constitutes a felony pursuant to Penal Code § 186.22.
- Manslaughter as specified in Penal Code § 192, drive-by shooting or discharge of a weapon from or at a motor vehicle as specified in Penal Code §§ 246, 247, and 12034.
- Any crime committed with an assault weapon, as defined in Penal Code § 12276, including possession of an assault weapon as specified in Penal Code § 12280(b).
- Carjacking, while armed with a dangerous or deadly weapon.
- Kidnapping, in violation of Penal Code § 209.5.
- Torture, as described in Penal Code §§ 206, 206.1.

- Aggravated mayhem, in violation of Penal Code § 205.

[b] Effect of Proposition 21

Effective March 8, 2000, the "Gang Violence and Juvenile Crime Prevention Act of 1998," commonly referred to as Proposition 21, became law. As a result, the law governing access to juvenile hearings has been significantly altered.

Specifically, Welf. & Inst. Code § 676 has been amended to expand public access to many juvenile court proceedings. The court must now post in a conspicuous place, which is accessible to the public, a written list of each day's hearings that are open to the public. This posting must include the time and location of those hearings [Welf. & Inst. Code § 676(g)]. The list of offenses now open to the public includes any offense described in Penal Code § 12022.53 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 676(a)(16)].

The name of a minor found to have committed an offense described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 676 is not confidential unless the court so orders for good cause. The good cause order is limited to protecting the personal safety of the minor, victim, or member of the public, and must be made in writing of the record [Welf. & Inst. Code § 676(c)].

Public disclosure of any record or file concerning a minor who has committed an offense listed in Welf. & Inst. Code § 676(a) shall not be prohibited for the benefit of the minor unless the court makes a written finding that the reason for the prohibition is to protect the safety of the minor [Welf. & Inst. Code § 676(c)].

[c] Limitations on Exception

[i] Motion by Juvenile Based on Substantial Prejudice

Even when the court has statutory authority to admit the public to a juvenile proceeding, a minor has the right to exclude the public or press from a proceeding, including a competency proceeding, if he or she establishes a reasonable likelihood of substantial prejudice to his or her right to receive a fair and impartial trial [Cheyenne K. v. Superior Court (1989) 208 Cal. App. 3d 331, 336, 256 Cal. Rptr. 68 ; Tribune Newspapers West, Inc. v. Superior Court (1985) 172 Cal. App. 3d 443, 451, 218 Cal. Rptr. 505] .

[ii] Motion by Victim

In some cases, the victim may request that the district attorney move for a closed hearing when the petition alleges offenses that fall under the exception to public exclusion from proceedings [see discussion in [a], above].

If the petition alleges that the minor is subject to juvenile court wardship jurisdiction under Welf. & Inst. Code § 602 (criminal behavior) on the grounds that the minor committed (1) rape with force or violence or great bodily harm, (2) sodomy by force, violence, duress, menace, or threat of great bodily harm, (3) oral copulation by force, violence, duress, menace, or threat of great bodily harm, or (4) any offense specified in Penal Code § 289 (penetration by foreign object), members of the public must be excluded from the hearing either [Welf. & Inst. Code § 676(b)]:

- When the district attorney moves to close the hearing at the victim's request (which the district attorney must do if the victim so requests).

- When, at the time of the offense, the victim was under 16 years of age (in this instance the public is excluded during the victim's testimony).

[iii] Motion to Keep Name Confidential When Proceeding Is Open to Public

The name of a minor found to have committed one of the offenses set out in [a], above, will not be confidential unless the court so orders for good cause [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 676(c), 1764.1; see also Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 1764.2 (release ofinformation to victim or next of kin of victim), 1764.3 (release of information pursuant to Penal Code §§ 3058.6 and 3058.8 regarding person committed to Youth Authority or committed to Department of Corrections and transferred to Youth Authority, who has been convicted of violent felony listed under Penal Code § 667.5(c))].

The name of the minor found to have committed one of the offenses listed in Welf. & Inst. Code § 676(a) shall not be confidential, unless the court, for good cause, so orders. The court shall make a written finding, on the record, explaining why good cause exists to make the name of the minor confidential [Welf. & Inst. Code § 676(e)].

[3] When Support Persons May Attend Proceedings

At any juvenile court proceeding for certain specified offenses, a prosecuting witness is entitled, for support, to the attendance at the hearing of up to two family members or support persons of his or her own choosing. The specified offenses include the following [Penal Code § 868.5(a); Welf. & Inst. Code § 676(a)]:

- Murder [Penal Code § 187].
- Mayhem [Penal Code § 203].
- Aggravated mayhem [Penal Code § 205].
- Kidnapping [Penal Code § 207].
- Robbery [Penal Code § 211].
- Carjacking [Penal Code § 215].
- Assault with intent to commit mayhem, rape, rape in concert, sodomy, oral copulation, lewd or lascivious act on child, or penetration by foreign object [Penal Code § 220].
- Assault [Penal Code § 240].
- Battery [Penal Code § 242].
- Sexual battery [Penal Code § 243.4].
- Assault with a deadly weapon [Penal Code § 245].
- Rape [Penal Code § 261].
- Spousal rape [Penal Code § 262].
- Willful cruelty or unjustifiable punishment on a child rape [Penal Code § 273a].
- Corporal punishment or injury [Penal Code § 273d].
- Corporal punishment or injury on spouse or cohabitant [Penal Code § 273.5].
- Violation of court order relating to child abandonment or neglect [Penal Code § 273.6].

- Taking minor from person or public agency [Penal Code § 277].
- Incest [Penal Code § 285].
- Sodomy [Penal Code § 286].
- Lewd or lascivious act on child or dependent adult [Penal Code § 288].
- Oral copulation [Penal Code § 288a].
- "Resident child molester" [Penal Code § 288.5].
- Penetration by foreign object [Penal Code § 289].
- Indecent exposure [Penal Code § 314(1)].
- Child molestation [Penal Code § 647.6 (former Penal Code § 647a)].

The judge must inform the support person or persons, however, that juvenile court proceedings are confidential and may not be discussed with anyone not in attendance at the proceedings. The judge must also admonish the support person or persons not to prompt, sway, or influence the witness in any way. The court may remove any support person who is prompting, swaying, or influencing the witness [Penal Code § 868.5(b)].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
A. Overview of Delinquency Proceedings

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.14

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.14 Interpreters and Accommodations

[1] Interpreters

Interpreters for a non-English-speaking minor, or a hearing-impaired minor, may be appointed as necessary [see Evid. Code §§ 750, 751, 754(b)]. In certain instances, a noncertified interpreter may be appointed if provisionally qualified, and on request by the minor and on a showing of good cause, one who is not provisionally qualified may be appointed to interpret a brief, routine matter [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2.893].

[2] Accommodations

The minor, as well as any lawyer, party, witness, juror, or other individual with an interest in attending the proceeding, and who has a disability, may file an application to request courtroom accommodations for that disability [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 1.100].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
A. Overview of Delinquency Proceedings

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.15

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.15 Access to Delinquency Proceeding Records

[1] In General

The general rule is that a juvenile records case file is confidential and may be inspected only by the following [Welf. & Inst. Code § 827]:

- Court personnel.
- The district attorney, a city attorney, or city prosecutor authorized to prosecute criminal or juvenile cases under state law.
- The minor who is the subject of the proceeding.
- The minor's parents or guardians.
- Attorneys for the parties, and judges, referees, other hearing officers, probation officers and law enforcement officers who are actively participating in criminal or juvenile proceedings involving the minor.
- The county counsel, city attorney, or any other attorney representing the petitioning agency in a dependency action.
- The superintendent or designee of the school district where the minor is enrolled or attending school.
- Members of the child protective agencies.

- The State Department of Social Services to carry out its duties to monitor child welfare agencies, children in foster care, and out-of-state placements.

- Authorized representatives of the State Department of Social Services who inspect, license, and investigate community care facilities.

- Members of children's multidisciplinary teams, persons or agencies providing treatment or supervision of the minor.

- A judge assigned to a family law case with custody or visitation issues involving a minor, a family court mediator assigned to the case, and a child custody evaluator appointed by the court.

- Juvenile justice commission members who are conducting a review of a group home pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 229.5.

- Persons conducting a court-connected evaluation, investigation, or assessment involving a child custody or visitation matter.

- Any other person who may be designated by court order of the judge of the juvenile court upon filing a petition.

A "juvenile case file" afforded statutory protection from disclosure to the public includes: the petition filed in the juvenile court proceeding, reports of the probation officer and all other documents either filed in the case or made available to, and retained by, the probation officer or judicial officer [Welf. & Inst. Code Section 827(e)]. Prior case law has held that records subject to this general protection include: documents contained in the juvenile court file, probation and social service records, investigative reports made available to probation and social services in connection with a juvenile case, and testimony concerning the contents of confidential records [Lorenza P. v. Superior Court (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 607, 610-611, 242 Cal. Rptr. 877 ; City of San Diego v. Superior Court (1981) 136 Cal. App. 3d 236, 239, 186 Cal. Rptr. 112] . The protection of juvenile records applies even if proceedings are never initiated in juvenile court [see Lorenza P. v. Superior Court (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 607, 610-611, 242 Cal. Rptr. 877 , citing T.N.G. v. Superior Court (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 767, 780-781, 94 Cal. Rptr. 813] .

The guidelines related to the dissemination of juvenile court records are found in Cal. Rules of Court, Rule 5.552. With the exception of those persons permitted to inspect juvenile court records without court authorization under Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 827 and 828, every person or agency seeking to inspect or obtain juvenile court records must petition the court for authorization using form JV-570 (Petition for Disclosure of Juvenile Court Records). Rule 5.552(d) and (e) describe the notice requirements and procedures that must be followed [see also R.S. v. Superior Court of Orange County (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 1049, 1054, 91 Cal. Rptr. 3d 546] .

A juvenile court has broad and exclusive authority to determine whether, and to what extent, to grant access to confidential juvenile records [In re R.G. (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 1408, 1413, 94 Cal. Rptr. 2d 818] . In determining whether to authorize inspection or release of juvenile case files, in whole or in part, the court must balance the interests of the child and the other parties to the juvenile court proceedings, the interests of the petitioner, and the interests of the public [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.552(e)(4)]. If the court grants the petition, the court must find that the need for discovery outweighs the policy considerations favoring confidentiality of juvenile case files. The confidentiality of juvenile case files is intended to protect the privacy rights of the child [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.552(e)(5)]. The court may permit disclosure of juvenile case files only insofar as is necessary, and only if the petitioner shows by a preponderance of the evidence that the records requested are necessary and have substantial relevance to the legitimate need of the petitioner [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.552(e)(6)]. If, after an in-camera review and review of any objections, the court determines that all or a portion of the juvenile case file may be disclosed, the court must make appropriate orders, specifying the information to be disclosed and the procedure for providing access to it [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.552(e)(7)].

While it is the intent of the Legislature that juvenile court records remain confidential, the policy of confidentiality is not absolute [In re R.G. (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 1408, 1414, 94 Cal. Rptr. 2d 818] . In fact, it has been noted that the rules related to juvenile case files recognize competing interests, including public interest, may tip the balance in favor of disclosure [In re Keisha T. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 220, 235, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 822] .

For a detailed discussion regarding juvenile records and disclosure procedures, see Ch. 327, Juvenile Courts: Jurisdiction and General Procedures, § 327.34, et seq.

[2] Parties Entitled to Copies of Case File

Welfare and Institutions Code § 827(a)(1) lists the individuals and entities authorized to inspect a juvenile case file. Welf. & Inst. Code § 827(a)(5) lists the individuals and entities who may also receive copies of the case file; they include:

- Court personnel.
- The district attorney, a city attorney, or city prosecutor authorized to prosecute criminal or juvenile cases under state law.
- The minor who is the subject of the proceeding.
- The minor's parents or guardians.
- The attorneys for the parties, judges, referees, or other hearing officers, probation officers, and law enforcement officers who are actively participating in criminal or juvenile proceedings involving the minor.
- The county counsel, city attorney, or any other attorney representing the petitioning agency in a dependency action.
- Members of the child protective agencies as defined in Section 11165.9 of the Penal Code.
- The State Department of Social Services pursuant to § 827(a)(1)(I).

[3] When Charging Petition Is Sustained

Notwithstanding Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 827 and 828 (restrictions on inspection of juvenile court documents and disclosure of information relating to taking minors into custody), if a petition is sustained for any offense listed in Welf. & Inst. Code § 676(a) (discussed in § 329.13[2]), the charging petition, the minutes of the proceeding, and the orders of adjudication and disposition of the court that are contained in the court file will be available for public inspection [Welf. & Inst. Code § 676(d)]. Welf. & Inst. Code § 676(d) does not authorize public access to any other documents in the court file [Welf. & Inst. Code § 676(d)].

[4] When Harm Outweighs Benefit

The probation officer or any party may petition the juvenile court to prohibit public disclosure of any file or record. The juvenile court will prohibit the disclosure if it appears that the harm to the minor, victims, witnesses, or public from the public disclosure outweighs the benefit of public knowledge [Welf. & Inst. Code § 676(e)]. Welf. & Inst. Code § 676 may not, however, be applied to limit disclosure of information as otherwise provided for by law [Welf. & Inst. Code § 676(f)].

[5] Brady Obligations in Juvenile and Criminal Cases

Brady v. Maryland imposes a duty on prosecutors to disclose exculpatory evidence to the defense [Brady v. Maryland (1963) 373 U.S. 83, 87, 83 S. Ct. 1194, 10 L. Ed. 2d 215] . Exculpatory evidence has been described as evidence that is, favorable to the defendant (harmful to the prosecution's case, or impeaches or intends to impeach the credibility of a prosecution witness), material and in the possession of the prosecution team [Kyles v. Whitley (1995) 514 U.S. 419, 437-438, 115 S. Ct. 1555, 131 L. Ed. 2d 490] . Thus described, prosecutors have a duty to learn of evidence favorable to the accused that is within their possession [In re Brown (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 873, 882, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 698] including criminal history information that is "reasonably accessible" to the prosecution team [People v. Little (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 426, 433-434, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 907] .

Although under the control of the juvenile court, delinquency records are reasonablyaccessible to the prosecution through their own case files and the access granted through Welf. & Inst. Code § 827 [see also T.N.G. v. Superior Court (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 767, 780-81, 94 Cal. Rptr. 813] . Common Brady material in juvenile case files may include moral turpitude conduct to impeach the credibility of a witness, or evidence that a witness is on juvenile probation, which could indicate a bias toward the prosecution [Davis v. Alaska (1974) 415 U.S. 308, 311, 94 S. Ct. 1105, 39 L. Ed. 2d 347] . While sustained juvenile petitions are not criminal convictions pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 203, the underlying juvenile moral turpitude conduct is discoverable [People v. Santos (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 169, 178, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 719] and potentially admissible [People v. Wheeler (1992) 4 Cal. 4th 284 ; People v. Lee (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 1724, 1739, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 723] .

On the other hand, prosecutors are prohibited from disclosing information in juvenile case files to defense counsel in separate proceedings [Welf. & Inst. Code § 827(a)(4)]. More specifically, one who receives access to juvenile court records is prohibited from independently making a decision to disclose such records to others not authorized by statute or court order [In re Keisha T. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 220, 234, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 822] .

Consequently, a conflict often precipitates when the prosecution's federal Brady obligation to disclose information is met by the Welf. & Inst. Code § 827 prohibition on disclosure. This conflict has not been addressed by the California courts.

The matter has been addressed in a slightly different context, with the result favoring disclosure. The U.S. Supreme Court has held that a state's policy interest in protecting the confidentiality of a juvenile court record cannot require yielding of so vital a constitutional right as the effective cross-examination for bias of an adverse witness [Davis v. Alaska (1974) 415 U.S. 308, 320, 94 S. Ct. 1105, 39 L. Ed. 2d 347] . In Davis, a crucial identification witness for the prosecution in a burglary case was on juvenile probation at the time of trial. The prosecution moved for a protective order to prevent the defense from making any reference to the witness's juvenile record during cross-examination [Davis v. Alaska (1974) 415 U.S. 308, 310, 94 S. Ct. 1105, 39 L. Ed. 2d 347] . The defense wanted to use the fact of the witness's juvenile probation status to show that he "might have been subject to undue pressure from the police and made his identifications under fear of possible probation revocation" [Davis v. Alaska (1974) 415 U.S. 308, 311, 94 S. Ct. 1105, 39 L. Ed. 2d 347] . The trial court granted the motion for protective order, relying on an Alaska statute that limited the admissibility of juvenile case information in non-juvenile proceedings. The Alaska Supreme Court affirmed the conviction, but the U.S. Supreme Court reversed, holding that the defendant's right of confrontation is paramount to the State's policy of protecting a juvenile offender" [Davis v. Alaska (1974) 415 U.S. 308, 319, 94 S. Ct. 1105, 39 L. Ed. 2d 347] . "Whatever temporary embarrassment might result to [the witness] or his family by disclosure of his juvenile record is outweighed by petitioner's right to probe into the influence of possible bias in the testimony of a crucial identification witness" [Davis v. Alaska (1974) 415 U.S. 308, 319, 94 S. Ct. 1105, 39 L. Ed. 2d 347] .

In California, Davis has been applied to Welf. & Inst. Code § 827 with a similar result. In Foster v. Superior Court (1980) 107 Cal. App. 3d 218, 165 Cal. Rptr. 701 , the defendant filed a Section 827 petition to examine the minors' juvenile court records, in part to "impeach their credibility as accusing witnesses at the time of trial" [Foster v. Superior Court (1980) 107 Cal. App. 3d 218, 165 Cal. Rptr. 701]. The juvenile court reviewed the minors' juvenile case files in camera and denied the defendant's motion. The defendant then brought a discovery motion seeking the same records, which the court also denied. Defendant filed a petition for writ of mandate challenging the court's discovery rulings. The Court of Appeal noted that although California has a strong public policy "protective of the confidentiality of juvenile court records and proceedings," this policy must give way when it "conflicts with a defendant's constitutional rights of confrontation and cross-examination" [Foster v. Superior Court (1980) 107 Cal. App. 3d 215, 228-229-107 Cal. App. 3d 218, 228-229, 165 Cal. Rptr. 701] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Petitions for Disclosure Pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 827. California Rule of Court 5.552 provides a mechanism for the court to authorize disclosure of juvenile case information to parties who are not otherwise entitled to obtain such information under section 827. Under Rule 5.552, "authorization for any other person to inspect, obtain, or copy juvenile court records must be ordered by the juvenile court presiding judge or a judicial officer designated by the juvenile court presiding judge" [Cal. Rules of Court, Rule 5.552(b)]. To obtain such authorization, such "other person" must file a petition for disclosure on Judicial Council form JV-570 [see form set out in Ch. 327, Juvenile Courts: Jurisdiction and General Procedures, § 327.352].

The specific records sought shall be identified based on knowledge, information, and belief that such records exist and are relevant to the purpose for which they are being sought. Petitioner shall describe in detail the reasons the records are being sought and their relevancy to the proceeding or purpose for which petitioner wishes to inspect or obtain the records [Cal. Rules of Court, Rule 5.552(c)].

At least five days before the petition is filed, the petitioner must serve the petition on the child, County Counsel, the District Attorney, the child's attorney of record if the child is still a ward or dependent of the court, the child's parent or guardian if the child is under 18, and the probation department or child welfare services program [Cal. Rules of Court, Rule 5.552(d)]. Once a petition is filed, the court reviews it and may grant or deny it summarily, or set a hearing. If at the hearing the court determines that there may be information or documents in the records sought to which petitioner may be entitled, review of records shall be in camera and the juvenile court judicial officer shall assume that all legal claims of privilege are asserted. [Cal. Rules of Court, Rule 5.552(e); see Pennsylvania v. Ritchie (1987) 480 U.S. 39, 107 S. Ct. 989, 94 L.Ed.2d 40] . Upon a showing which specifies the material sought and furnishes a plausible justification for inspection petitioner appears to be entitled to information contained in juvenile court files including, but not necessarily limited to, prior delinquent referral information records and proceedings, this policy must give way when it "conflicts with a defendant's constitutional rights of confrontation and cross-examination" [Foster v. Superior Court (1980) 107 Cal. App. 3d 218, 230, 165 Cal. Rptr. 701 ; People v. Santos (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 169, 178, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 719 ; In re Ricky B. (1978) 82 Cal. App. 3d 106, 113-114, 146 Cal. Rptr. 828.] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Complying With Brady and Avoiding Reversible Error. The petition procedure outlined in Cal. Rules of Court, Rule 5.552 provides a means for the prosecution to comply with its Brady disclosure obligations. A prosecutor with juvenile Brady material has two basic options: to encourage the defense to file a Section 827 petition or to file one on the prosecution's own behalf. The former practice will satisfy Brady disclosure obligations if the defense counsel files a petition, and if the juvenile court releases the Brady material. Neither outcome is guaranteed. If defense counsel fails to file a petition, trial results may be vulnerable on three grounds: ineffective assistance of counsel, a Fourteenth Amendment Brady violation of due process, and a denial of defendant's constitutional right to confront and cross-examine witnesses under Davis v. Alaska. If the defense files a petition and the juvenile court denies it, the ultimate outcome is still vulnerable on the latter two grounds. Therefore, in order to fulfill their ethical duty to disclose exculpatory evidence and avoid reversible error, prosecutors should consider taking the following steps:

1. Determine whether any Brady material exists in their juvenile case files.

2. If any juvenile Brady material exists, they should inform counsel in writing as soon as possible, suggesting that they file a Section 827 petition with the juvenile court.

3. If the defense files a Section 827 petition, the prosecutor should appear at the hearing to support the defense's request for disclosure of the Brady material.

4. If the defense fails to file a Section 827 petition, the prosecutor should file a petition requesting authorization to copy and disseminate the juvenile Brady material to the defense.

5. If the juvenile court denies the petition, consider appealing the order (or joining in a defense appeal) [In re Keisha T. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 220, 229 (order denying Section 827 petition is appealable as a final judgment in a special proceeding on a collateral matter)].

[6] Disclosure by Law Enforcement

Law enforcement may disclose the offense and name of any minor, 14 or older, taken into custody for the commission of a serious felony, as defined by Penal Code § 1192.7, upon the request of interested parties following the minor's arrest for that offense [Welf. & Inst. Code § 827.5(a)]. Law enforcement may also release information regarding any minor, 14 or older, who was found to have committed a felony enumerated in Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(b), absent a written statement of reasons by the court finding good cause prohibiting release [Welf. & Inst. Code § 827.2(c)]. The name, description, and alleged offense of any minor alleged to have committed a violent offense, as defined in Penal Code § 667.5(c), may be released by law enforcement if a warrant for the minor's arrest is outstanding and the release would assist in the apprehension of the minor or the protection of public safety [Welf. & Inst. Code § 827.6(a)].

[7] Record Sealing

The court is prohibited from destroying the record of any minor found to have committed an offense enumerated in Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(b) when they were 14 or older [Welf. & Inst. Code § 781(d)].

[8] Database Information

Any minor found to be a ward as the result of any felony offense must have their complete criminal history reported by the court to the Department of Justice [Welf. & Inst. Code § 602.5].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
A. Overview of Delinquency Proceedings

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.16

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.16 Rights of Victim

[1] "Victim" Defined

"Victim," for these purposes and as discussed below, means [Welf. & Inst. Code § 676.5(c)]:

- The alleged victim of the offense and one person of his or her choosing or however many more the court may allow under the particular circumstances surrounding the proceeding;

- In the event that the victim is unable to attend the proceeding, two personsdesignated by the victim or however many more the court may allow under the particular circumstances surrounding the proceeding; or

- If the victim is no longer living, two members of the victim's immediate family or however many more the court may allow under the particular circumstances surrounding the proceeding.

[2] General Rule

Notwithstanding any other law, a victim is entitled to be admitted, on the same basis as he or she may be admitted to trials in an adult criminal court, to juvenile court hearings involving any criminal offense. They may also be accompanied by up to two support persons of the victims choosing. The probation officer is required to notify the victim of these rights either in person or by registered mail, return receipt requested, together with a notice explaining all other rights and services available to the victim with respect to the case [Welf. & Inst. Code § 676.5].

[3] Additional Access

In cases involving offenses which are subject to a fitness hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 707, victims have the right to attend the fitness hearing and to obtain copies of the charging petition along with the minutes and orders of all proceedings contained in the court file [Welf. & Inst. Code § 656.2]. It should be noted that, under this section, a victim who obtains the above mentioned information may not disclose or disseminate it beyond their immediate family unless authorized to do so by a juvenile court judge. The judge may suspend or terminate the victim's rights to the information if it is improperly disclosed. If the information is intentionally disseminated in violation of the section, the victim may be subject to a $500 fine.

In addition, victims have the right to submit victim impact statements in all juvenile cases involving any criminal offense and to be advised by the probation officer of all judicial proceedings concerning the case [Welf. & Inst. Code § 656.2].

[4] Exclusion

The court may exclude a victim from the proceeding pursuant to Evid. Code § 777, when the victim is subpoenaed as a witness, although the order of exclusion must be consistent with the objectives of allowing the victim to be present, whenever possible, at all proceedings, as discussed below [Welf. & Inst. Code § 676.5(d)].

Otherwise, the victim may be excluded from a juvenile court hearing only if each of the following criteria is met [Welf. & Inst. Code § 676.5(b)]:

- The movant, including the minor defendant, who seeks to exclude the victim from the hearing, demonstrates that there is a substantial probability that overriding interests will be prejudiced by the presence of the victim (unlike Penal Code § 1102.6, governing victim presence at adult proceedings, "overriding interests" is not further defined in Welf. & Inst. Code § 676.5);

- The court considers reasonable alternatives to exclusion of the victim from the hearing;

- The exclusion of the victim from the hearing, or any limitation on his or her presence at the hearing, is narrowly tailored to serve the overriding interests identified by the movant; and

- Following a hearing at which the victim who is to be excluded from the juvenile hearing is afforded an opportunity to be heard, the court makes specific factual findings that support the exclusion of the victim from, or any limitation on his or her presence at, the juvenile hearing.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
A. Overview of Delinquency Proceedings

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.17

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.17 Parents and Guardians

While there is no authority to support the position that parents or guardians are parties to a delinquency proceeding, as that designation is limited to the petitioner and the child, their presence is certainly integral to a successful intervention by the juvenile court. Much like victims, parents and guardians have statutory rights, and an expanding list of statutory obligations, relative to the juvenile delinquency court process.

To this end, the juvenile court shall use whatever means are appropriate, including issuance of a subpoena, to require the presence of the parent, parents, or guardian of a child at detention, jurisdictional, and dispositional hearings. If the court determines that it would be in the best interests of the child for the parent to not attend the hearings, or it would impose a hardship upon the parent or guardian, attendance is not required [Welf. & Inst. Code § 664].

Parents and guardians are responsible for costs incurred when a minor is placed in, detained in, or committed to any institution pursuant to a juvenile court order or as a result of being taken into temporary custody by a peace officer [Welf. & Inst. Code § 903]; costs incurred as the result of legal services rendered to a minor by an attorney pursuant to an order of the juvenile court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 903.1]; and probation costs [Welf. & Inst. Code § 903.2].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
A. Overview of Delinquency Proceedings

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.18

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.18 Court Security

[1] Use of Physical Restraints

In adult criminal proceedings, the use of physical restraints on a defendant is prohibited absent a showing of manifest need for their use. This rule applies to both jury trials and preliminary hearings, although a lesser showing is required for the latter [People v. Fierro (1991) 1 Cal. 4th 173, 218-220, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 426]. Recent decisions considering the prohibition on unwarranted shackling of juveniles at jurisdictional hearings apply the same standard used for adult defendants in preliminary hearings, specifically that some showing of necessity is required and finding stated on the record [In re DeShaun M. (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 1384, 1387, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 627].

Any decision to shackle a minor who appears in Juvenile Delinquency Court for a court proceeding must be based on the non-conforming conduct and behavior of that individual minor, made on a case-by-case basis, and depends upon the type of proceeding. The court may not adopt a general policy requiring the use of physical restrains based solely on the inadequacy of courtroom facilities or lack of available security personnel [Tiffany A. v. Superior Court (2007) 150 Cal. App. 4th 1344, 1359, 59 Cal.Rptr. 3d 363].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
A. Overview of Delinquency Proceedings

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.19

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

[Reserved]

§ 329.19[Reserved]

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
B. Jurisdiction

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.20

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.20 Jurisdiction in Delinquency Proceedings

[1] General Scope

In delinquency proceedings, the juvenile court has jurisdiction over those minors who come within the provisions of either Welf. & Inst. Code § 601 or 602. Those minors commonly referred to as "status offenders" come within the jurisdiction of the juvenile court under Welf. & Inst. Code § 601 for noncriminal conduct, such as running away, truancy and curfew violations. Minors who have committed criminalviolations come within the jurisdiction of the juvenile court under Welf. & Inst. Code § 602.

[2] Status Offenses Under Welf. & Inst. Code § 601(a)

[a] In General

Any person under the age of 18 years who persistently or habitually refuses to obey the reasonable and proper orders or directions of his or her parents, guardian, or custodian, or who is beyond the control of such person, or who is under the age of 18 years when he or she violates any ordinance of any city or county of the state establishing a curfew based solely on age is within the jurisdiction of the juvenile court, which may adjudge such person to be a ward of the court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 601(a)].

[b] Curfew Ordinances

As a general rule, a peace officer is entitled to take a minor who is in violation of a local curfew ordinance into "temporary" custody [In re S. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 727, 734, fn. 6, 139 Cal. Rptr. 708, 566 P.2d 610] , but the officer must then either: release the minor; deliver or refer the minor to the proper agency for shelter care, counseling, or diversion; release the minor following the preparation of a notice to appear before a probation officer; or take the minor without unnecessary delay before the county probation officer. In any event, the officer is required to prefer the alternative which least restricts the minor's freedom of movement, provided that alternative is compatible with the best interest of the minor and the community [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 601, 625, 626, 626.5].

If it is determined that the minor should be brought before the juvenile court, the officer must either release the child after delivery of written notice to appear or take them without unnecessary delay before a county probation officer within 24 hours after taking the minor into custody [Welf. & Inst. Code § 626.5].

Where a city or county adopts a curfew resolution pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 625.5, the options for law enforcement are more limited. For a first violation, an officer is authorized only to issue a warning citation, a copy of which is forwarded to the minor's parent or guardian. Subsequent violations allow officers to temporarily detain minors before transporting them to their parent or temporary place of residence within the state [Welf. & Inst. Code § 625.5(c)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Unreasonable Search and Seizure. In light of the statutory restrictions on law enforcement handling of curfew violations, it should be noted that transporting a minor to a police station and conducting a custodial interrogation solely on the basis of a curfew matter is not authorized and violates the child's constitutional rights [In re Justin B. (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 879, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 852] . However, subsequent cases have held that searches conducted pursuant to placing curfew violators in a secure facility to arrange a parental pickup are constitutional. [In re Charles C. (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 420, 427 ; In re Ian C. (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 856, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 854] .

[3] Status Offenses Under Welf. & Inst. Code § 601(b)

[a] Truancy or School Behavior

A minor comes within the jurisdiction of the juvenile court based on Welf. & Inst. Code § 601(b) in any of the following situations:

- He or she has four or more truancies within one school year.

- A school attendance review board or a probation officer determines that the available public and private services are insufficient or inappropriate to correct the habitual truancy of the minor, or to correct the minor's persistent or habitual refusal to obey the reasonable and proper orders or directions of school authorities.

- The minor fails to respond to directives of a school attendance review board or the probation officer or to services provided.

A minor who comes within the jurisdiction of the juvenile court under Welf. & Inst. Code § 601(b) may be adjudged a ward of the court. However, no minor adjudged a ward of the court under Welf. & Inst. Code § 601(b) may be removed from the custody of the parent or guardian except during school hours [Welf. & Inst. Code § 601(b)]. On the other hand, if a minor's parent or guardian fails to obey directives of the school attendance review board, dependency proceedings may be initiated, which may result in removal of the child from the parent or guardian [see discussion in [b], below].

Suspension or expulsion of a student is based on findings made by the schools, school districts and their governing boards. In making these determinations, the schools are generally not dependent on or bound by a particular finding in a juvenile court proceeding. However, certain enumerated acts may result in suspension, expulsion, or a recommendation for expulsion [Education Code §§ 48900, 48915, 48915.6, 48918 and 48918.5].

For a detailed discussion of school discipline, see § 329.131.

PRACTICE TIP:

School Searches. School officials have broad supervisory and disciplinary powers over students in the interests of school safety and the sanctity of the learning environment. A degree of supervision and control that could not be exercised over adults may be exercised over children in a school setting. Consequently, minors may be detained by school officials, even in the absence of reasonable suspicion, so long as the detention is not arbitrary, capricious, or for the purposes of harassment [In re Randy G. (2001) 26 Cal. 4th 556, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 516, 28 P.3d 239] . Even school resource officers, police officers assigned to a particular school to perform law enforcement duties, are subject to a diminished standard when conducting school searches. Both school administrators and school resource officers need only have reasonable suspicion, as opposed to probable cause, before conducting school searches [In re William V. (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 1464, 4 Cal. Rptr. 3d 695] .

[b] Failure of Parent or Guardian to Obey Directives of School Attendance Review Board

In the event that a parent, guardian, or person in charge of the minor fails to respond to directives of the school attendance board or to services offered on behalf of the minor, the school attendance review board must direct that the minor be referred to the probation department or the county welfare department under statutory provisions governing proceedings to declare a minor a dependent child of the court (see generally discussion in Ch. 328, Juvenile Courts: Dependency Proceedings). Further, the school attendance review board may require the school district to file a complaint against the parent, guardian, or other person in charge of the minor [Welf. & Inst. Code § 601.2; see Educ. Code §§ 48291, 48454].

[4] Criminal Offenses Under Welf. & Inst. Code § 602

Any person who is under the age of 18 years when he or she violates any law of the state or of the United States or any ordinance of any city or county of the state defining crime, other than an ordinance establishing a curfew based solely on age, is within the jurisdiction of the juvenile court, which may adjudge such person to be a ward of the court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 602]. Welf. & Inst. Code § 602 applies only to minors found to have violated a law [In re M. (1978) 22 Cal. 3d 419, 422 n.2, 149 Cal. Rptr. 387, 584 P.2d 524] .

Notwithstanding the fact that a minor's wardship can be established exclusively as the result of a violation of federal law, Welf. & Inst. Code § 602 is not preempted by the United States Constitution's Supremacy Clause, 18 U.S.C. § 3231 (which gives federal courts exclusive jurisdiction over federal criminal offenses), or any other provision of federal law [In re Jose C. (2009) 45 Cal. 4th 534, 541-555, 87 Cal. Rptr. 3d 674] .

[5] Vehicle Code Infractions Under Welf. & Inst. Code § 603.5

In counties that have adopted the provisions of Welf. & Inst. Code § 603.5, jurisdiction over a minor alleged to have committed only an infraction under the Vehicle Code or a violation of a local ordinance involving driving, parking, or operating a motor vehicle, lies with the municipal court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 603.5(a)]. The municipal court may refer to the juvenile court any case involving a minor who has been adjudicated a ward of the juvenile court, or who has other matters pending in the juvenile court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 603.5(a)]. An alleged violation of Veh. Code § 40508(a) or (b) (written promise to appear or promise to pay fine) may be referred to the juvenile court for adjudication [Welf. & Inst. Code § 603.5(a)].

Juvenile court law and procedures do not apply to proceedings arising from Vehicle Code infractions in counties that have adopted this section [Welf. & Inst. Code § 603.5(b)]. Provisions controlling the confidentiality of hearings and access to records are expressly inapplicable when the juvenile's case is being handled in municipal court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 603.5(c)]. As with similarly situated adult traffic matters, minors may now resolve most traffic infractions by a bail forfeiture in lieu of a court appearance [Welf. & Inst. Code § 603.5(c)].

[6] Juvenile Fugitives

California juvenile court law does not apply to any person who violates any California law defined as a crime, who is at the time of the violation under the age of 18 years, and who subsequently flees from the state. Such a person may be proceeded against in the manner provided by law relating to the commission of crimes. On the return of the person to the state, however, either by extradition or otherwise, proceedings are commenced in the manner provided for under juvenile court law [Welf. & Inst. Code § 216(a)].

California juvenile court law also does not apply to any person who violates a law of another state defined as a crime and is at the time of the violation under 18 years of age, or who subsequently flees into the State of California. That individual may be proceeded against as an adult in the manner provided in Penal Code §§ 1547-1558 (extradition and rewards for fugitives).

The magistrate must, however, for purposes of detention, place the person in juvenile hall if space is available. If no space is available in juvenile hall, the magistrate may detain such a person in the county jail [Welf. & Inst. Code § 216(b)].

For discussion and forms relating to extradition proceedings, see Erwin, Millman, Monroe, Sevilla, Tarlow, California Criminal Defense Practice, Ch. 13 (Matthew Bender).

[7] Multiple Petitions

In larger jurisdictions, with multiple courtrooms designated to handle delinquency matters, it is not unusual to have two or more 602 petitions charging a minor with criminal misconduct filed under the same superior court case number heard in different departments. Filing multiple petitions against a juvenile under a single case number has important practical considerations. It allows the court to keep track of the minor's progress (or lack thereof), to determine whether ordered rehabilitative programs are succeeding or failing and whether new ones should be tried, and to aggregate offenses in order to extend the maximum term of confinement for new offenses. [In re Michael B. (1980) 28 Cal. 3d 548, 554, 169 Cal. Rptr. 723 ; In re Ernest R. (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 443, 449, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 453] .

Many of these same considerations support the position that minors with multiple petitions should be handled by one department, and preferably one judge. The statutes and cases which compare a juvenile court's responsibility to that of a parent suggest that minors benefit from the consistency and familiarity of a constant parental presence as opposed to a varied and dysfunctional familial hierarchy [In re Kasaundra D. (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 533, 540-541, 16 Cal. Rptr. 3d 920 ; In re Magnuson (1952) 110 Cal. App. 2d 73, 75 ; Welf & Inst. Code § 202]. At a minimum, allowing a second judicial officer to look at the same facts underlying jurisdiction and reach opposite conclusions, and then proceed to disposition on the ground that the first judicial officer "should have more closely considered what it was doing," undermines the integrity of judicial rulings. [In re Alberto (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 421, 428] . If a party is unhappy with rulings affecting jurisdiction, they should follow the appropriate procedures for appellate review rather than seek a different ruling from another judicial officer [In re Kasaundra D. (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 533, 16 Cal. Rptr. 3d 920] .

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
B. Jurisdiction

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.21

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.21 Retention of Jurisdiction

The juvenile court may retain jurisdiction over any person who is found to be a ward of the court under Welf. & Inst. Code § 601 or 602 until that child attains the age of 21. Such jurisdiction may be extended to the age of 25 when the minor has beenadjudicated a ward of the court under Welf. & Inst. Code § 602 by reason of any of the offenses listed in Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(b), (d)(2), or (e) and was committed to the Department of the Youth Authority or has been confined in a state hospital or other appropriate public or private mental health facility pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 702.3 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 607(a), (b), and (d)]. The court may also retain jurisdiction over any person while that person is the subject of an arrest warrant issued pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 663 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 607(e)].

In addition, the court must not discharge any person from its jurisdiction who has been committed to the Department of the Youth Authority so long as the person remains under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Youth Authority, including periods of extended control ordered pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 1800 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 607(c)]. See discussion in § 329.95[7][c].

While Welf. & Inst. Code § 607(c) bars the juvenile court from discharging from its jurisdiction a ward committed to CYA so long as the ward remains under CYA jurisdiction, a modification of that commitment made pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 778 or § 779 does not cause the court to lose jurisdiction over a minor. Welf. & Inst. Code § 607(b) extends jurisdiction over wards until age 25 when they have been committed to CYA for an offense listed in Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(b), notwithstanding subsequent orders modifying or vacating their CYA commitment [In re Antoine D. (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 1314, 1320-1324, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 885] .

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
B. Jurisdiction

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.22

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.22 Certification of Minor to Juvenile Court From Adult Court

[1] Original Exclusive Jurisdiction of Juvenile Court

No court has jurisdiction to conduct a preliminary examination or to try the case of any person on an accusatory pleading charging such person with the commission of a public offense or crime if the person was under the age of 18 years at the time of the alleged offense, unless either:

- The matter has been submitted to the juvenile court by petition and the juvenile court has made an order directing that such person be prosecuted under the general law [Welf. & Inst. Code § 603].

- The matter was filed directly in adult court under Welf. & Inst. Code § 707.01.

[2] Certification to Juvenile Court

Whenever a case is brought before any court on an accusatory pleading and it is suggested or it appears to the judge before whom such person is brought that the person charged was, at the date the offense is alleged to have been committed, under the age of 18 years, the judge must immediately suspend all proceedings against that person, examine into his or her age, and if it appears to the satisfaction of the judge that the person was under the age of 18 years, he or she must then certify to the juvenile court of the county all of the following [Welf. & Inst. Code § 604(a)]:

- That the person (naming the minor) is charged with a crime, giving a brief description of its nature.

- That the person appears to have been under the age of 18 years at the date the offense is alleged to have been committed, giving date of birth if known.

- That proceedings have been suspended against the person on such charge by reason of his or her age, with the date of suspension.

The judge then attaches a copy of the accusatory pleading to the certification [Welf. & Inst. Code § 604(a); see also Welf. & Inst. Code § 608 (test to be used to determine age of individual alleged to be person described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 601, 602, or 604(a); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 4.116 (contents of certification order)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Continuing Conduct and Conspiracies Committed Before and After the Age of 18. A hearing pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 604(a) is not required when criminal conduct is committed before an individual reaches the age of 18, and continues after they become an adult. When a jury can find that a defendant continues to participate in a criminal conspiracy or criminal conduct after his or her 18th birthday, the trial court may deny a motion to suspend the proceedings and conduct an examination for the purpose of certification to Juvenile Court [People v. Quiroz (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 1420, 1427-143, 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 767].

[3] Transmittal of Pleading to Juvenile Court and Petition to Commence Delinquency Proceeding

The certification and accusatory pleading are transmitted to the clerk of the juvenile court, who must then immediately notify the probation officer. The probation officer then files a petition in that court to commence a delinquency proceeding [Welf. & Inst. Code § 604(c)].

Unlike most petitions, a petition filed due to a certification discussed in [2], above, need not be verified [Welf. & Inst. Code § 604(c)].

[4] Suspension of Criminal Proceedings

When a court certifies a case to the juvenile court, jeopardy has not attached by reason of the proceedings prior to certification, but the court may not resume proceedings in the case, nor may a new proceeding under the general law be commenced in any court with respect to the same matter unless the juvenile court has found that the minor is not a fit subject for consideration under the juvenile court law and has ordered that proceedings under the general law resume or be commenced [Welf. & Inst. Code § 604(b)].

Once the petition discussed in [3], above, has been filed in the juvenile court, the minor who is the subject of that petition thereafter may not be subjected to criminal prosecution based on the facts giving rise to the petition, unless the juvenile court has made this determination and order [Welf. & Inst. Code § 606; for discussion of the fitness hearing, see § 329.60 et seq.].

[5] Suspension of Statute of Limitations

Whenever a petition is filed in a juvenile court alleging that a minor has violated a law or ordinance, and while the case is pending before the juvenile court, the statuteof limitations applicable under the general law to the offense alleged is suspended [Welf. & Inst. Code § 605].

[6] Effect of Adult Court Findings

[a] Conviction by Jury

When a minor who claims to have been an adult at the time of an offense is tried by a jury and is found guilty, he or she is not entitled to a new adjudicatory hearing in juvenile court upon certification [In re Harris (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 813, 835, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 373] . However, an individual convicted in adult court is still entitled to a juvenile court disposition [Jose D. v. Superior Court (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 1098, 1101, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 664] .

[b] Plea Agreement

When a minor who claims to have been an adult at the time of an offense enters into a plea bargain in adult court, he or she waives the right to enforce the terms of the agreement upon certification. Conversely, he or she does not waive the right to withdraw their plea and begin anew if disposition cannot be imposed in accordance with the terms of the prior agreement [In re Jermaine B. (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 634, 642, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 734] .

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
B. Jurisdiction

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.23

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.23 Expanded Jurisdiction of Juvenile Court

Delinquency courts now have the ability to affect the lives of minors that come within their jurisdiction by crossing over into areas previously reserved for dependency and family courts. This authority includes the ability to terminate or modify the guardianship of a child or to appoint a coguardian or successor guardian of a child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 728]. When a minor has been adjudged a ward of the court, or the court terminates wardship while the minor is under age 18, the juvenile court may issue protective orders pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 213.5 or Fam. Code § 6218, and may issue orders determining parentage of, custody of, or visitation with, the minor [Welf. & Inst. Code § 726.5].

After a petition pursuant to Welfare and Institutions Code Section 601 or Section 602 has been filed, the court may issue ex parte orders enjoining certain conduct. Included in this section are orders enjoining any person from threatening, assaulting, stalking, or battering the minor; excluding any person from the dwelling of the person having custody of the minor; and enjoining the minor from contacting, threatening, stalking, or disturbing the peace of any person [Welf. & Inst. Code § 213.5(b)].

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
B. Jurisdiction

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.24

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.24 Federal Jurisdiction

[1] In General

Federal jurisdiction over minors is generally governed by the Federal Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 1974 [18 U.S.C. §§ 5031-5042]. It applies to minors who come before the federal court for offenses which, if committed by an adult, violate a federal criminal statute. Basic procedural rights of minors who come within federal court jurisdiction are also covered by the Act [see generally Dale, et al., Representing the Child Client, P 5.07 Children Under Federal Jurisdiction (Matthew Bender).]

Before 1974, juvenile delinquency matters arising under federal law were subject to unlimited federal court jurisdiction, with prosecuting agencies retaining the discretion to surrender jurisdiction of certain juvenile cases to the states. The JJDPA substantially limited federal jurisdiction over juvenile delinquency matters and created a "statutory framework for determining whether accused juveniles should face federal or state prosecution." [In re Jose C. (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 1115, 1122 (cites)].

Generally speaking, prosecution of juveniles in federal court is rare. To prosecute a juvenile in federal court, the government must follow the certification procedures required by statute [United States v. Doe (1999) 170 F.3d 1162, 1165] . Specifically, a child alleged to have committed an act of juvenile delinquency, other than a violation of law committed within the special maritime and territorial jurisdiction of the United States for which the maximum authorized term of imprisonment does not exceed six months, shall not be proceeded against in any court of the United States unless the Attorney General, after investigation, certifies to the appropriate district court of the United States the following [18 U.S.C. § 5032]:

- The juvenile court or other appropriate court of a State does not have jurisdiction or refuses to assume jurisdiction over a juvenile with respect to alleged acts of delinquency.

- The State does not have available programs and services adequate for the needs of the juvenile.

- The offense charged is a specifically enumerated offense pursuant to this section and that there is a substantial Federal interest in the case or the offense to warrant the exercise of Federal jurisdiction.

All these findings must be established by an investigation by the United States Attorney's Office and certification decisions; once made, they may be subject to review on their merits by federal courts [United States v. C.G. (1984) 736 F.2d 1474 ; United States v. Male Juvenile (1994) 844 F. Supp. 280] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Lack of Rehabilitative Facilities. While Federal law provides for transfer from juvenile to adult court where a minor is not amendable to treatment, the federal system does not have appropriate facilities for children who are not subject to transfer. The lack of rehabilitative facilities appropriate for delinquent offenders should be given consideration both for the purpose of jurisdictional and dispositional representation.

[2] Practice and Procedure

In the event that Federal jurisdiction is exercised, the court procedures are similar to those governing state delinquency proceedings. Specific procedures and rights set forth by the Act include:

- Custody prior to appearance before a magistrate [18 U.S.C. § 5033].

- Duties of the juvenile magistrate [18 U.S.C. § 5034].

- Detention prior to disposition [18 U.S.C. § 5035].

- Speedy trial [18 U.S.C. § 5036].

- Dispositional hearing [18 U.S.C. § 5037].

- Use of juvenile records [18 U.S.C. § 5038].

- Commitment [18 U.S.C. § 5039].

- Support [18 U.S.C. § 5040].

- Revocation of probation [18 U.S.C. § 5042].

Cases are initiated by the filing of an information. Once filed, the minor may waive treatment as a juvenile and accept adjudication as an adult [18 U.S.C. § 5032]. The minor is then taken before a magistrate and may not be detained for an unreasonable period of time prior to their appearance [18 U.S.C. § 5033].

The juvenile may be detained in a juvenile facility or other suitable place designated by the attorney general but wherever possible, it shall be in a foster home or community based facility located near the juvenile's home community. As with minors who fall under the jurisdiction of the state, juveniles under federal jurisdiction may not be detained in a facility where they have regular contact with incarcerated adults. Further, alleged delinquents must be kept separate from adjudicated delinquents to whatever extent possible. All facilities used to detain minors must have adequate food, sanitation, recreation, education and medical services [18 U.S.C. § 5035]. As defined by federal law, juveniles have a right to a speedy trial [18 U.S.C. § 5036; United States v. Doe (1998) 149 F.3d 945 ; United States v. Juvenile Male (1996) 74 F.3d 526] . For purposes of determining when a juvenile's speedy trial rights begin running, the Ninth Circuit has joined the Second, Fifth, and Tenth Circuits in holding that speedy trial time begins running at the commencement of federal detention on the federal delinquency charge, not when the U.S. Attorney certified, or could have certified the case to federal court [United States v. Doe (9th Cir. 2004) 366 F.3d 1069, 1071-1074] .

It is well established that juveniles in federal delinquency proceedings do not have the right to a jury trial [McKeiver v. Pennsylvania (1971) 403 U.S. 528 ; United States v. Juvenile Male C.L.O. (1996) 77 F.3d 1075] . Confidentiality of records relating to proceedings, while appearing to be an essential element of the Act, are not subject to mandatory closure but may be closed (sealed) at the discretion of the court [United States v. Three Juveniles (1995) 61 F.3d 86] .

Dispositional hearings are separate proceedings preceded by the preparation of a presentence report which is provided to counsel for the minor and the government prior to the hearing [18 U.S.C. § 5037(a)]. Dispositional hearings must be held no later than twenty court days after the juvenile delinquency hearing unless the court has ordered further study. Alternatives available to the court include entering an order of restitution, custodial commitments, imposition of probation and suspension of adjudication. The court's sentencing discretion is limited by the purposes of the Federal Juvenile Delinquency Act, which is rehabilitative in nature. [U.S. v. Juvenile (9th Cir. 2003) 347 F.3d 778, 785-786] . Further, the disposition imposed should be based upon an assessment of the minor's individual circumstances, rehabilitative needs, and be the least restrictive means to accomplish the minor's rehabilitation, given those needs and the needs of the community. [U.S. v. Juvenile (9th Cir. 2003) 347 F.3d 778, 787].

18 U.S.C. § 5037 provides for sentencing options when the minor is under 18, as well as when the minor is between the ages of 18 and 21. However, on its face the statute is not clear whether the sentence should be based upon the juvenile's age at the time of the offense, the time the information was filed, or at the time of disposition. Federal courts have determined that the juvenile's age at the time of sentencing is the operative age, regardless of whether the minor was only 17 at thetime the offense was committed. The two categories ensure a 17-year-old offender is not able to "slip through the cracks" between the juvenile and adult systems by providing a sentence of appropriate length for a minor whose crime was committed just prior to his 18th birthday [U.S. v. Leon H. (9th Cir. 2004) 365 F.3d 750, 753-754] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Parental Notification and Involvement. When federal law enforcement officers take a minor into custody for a matter which may be subject to a federal prosecution, they must notify the child's parents of the custody and the child's constitutional rights. This notification must occur prior to the interrogation of the child and an opportunity for the parent to advise and counsel their child cannot unreasonably be refused [U.S. v. Female Juvenile (Wendy G.) (2001) 255 F.3d 761] .

[3] Transfer to Adult Court

Federal law provides for a transfer process to adult court which is similar to California's certification system [18 U.S.C. § 5032; see also §§ 329.60 -329.63]. A motion seeking transfer is filed by the attorney general in district court. The minor must be at least 15 years of age and alleged to have committed an act after their 15th birthday. The alleged act must be a felony involving violence or a specific crime involving controlled substances. A minor alleged to have committed an act that would be a felony involving the use of physical force against another, a substantial risk of physical force against another, or specified offenses involving controlled substances, and who has previously been found guilty of the same kind of qualifying offense, shall be mandatorily transferred to adult court when the offense occurred after the minor's 16th birthday. In U.S. v. Phillip A.B.L. (9th Cir. 2004) 100 Fed. Appx. 687, 688-689 , the court reaffirmed that the term "found guilty" was intended to include past juvenile delinquency adjudications [see also U.S. v. David H. (9th Cir 1994) 29 F.3d 489, 493] .

The Federal Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 1974 sets forth the factors to be considered in a determination of the transfer decision. These factors include:

- The age and social background of the minor;
- The nature of the alleged offense;
- The extent and nature of the juvenile's prior delinquency records;
- The juvenile's present intellectual development and psychological maturity;
- The nature of past treatment efforts and the juvenile's response to such efforts; and
- The availability of programs that are designed to treat the juvenile's behavioral problems.

The statute clearly intends a presumption of juvenile treatment, and the government bears the burden of establishing that transfer is warranted [United States v. A.R. (3rd Cir. 1994) 38 F.3d 699, 706] . In considering whether transfer is in the interest of justice, the district court is required to make findings with respect to the six factors enumerated in § 5032. The weight to be given each factor is a matter within the discretion of the district court, and the court is not required to specify whether it regards each factor as weighing for or against transfer [U.S. v. Brandon P. (9th Cir. 2004) 387 F.3d 969, 977] . Transfer is proper when the risk of harm posed by affording the defendant more lenient treatment within the juvenile justice system outweighs the defendant's chance for rehabilitation [United States v. Doe (9th Cir. 1996) 94 F.3d 532, 536] .

Transfer proceedings are not designed to determine whether a juvenile defendant is guilty, but rather are designed to predict the possibility of rehabilitation if the juvenile is found guilty of the crime alleged [United States v. Alexander (9th Cir. 19820 695 F.2d 398, 401] . To this end, the district court may assume the juvenile defendant committed the crime with which they are charged, but is not required to do so. If the court does decide to assume guilt, for the purpose of the hearing, it must confine the assumption to the elements of the offense charged [U.S. v. Juvenile (9th Cir. 2006) 451 F.3d 571, 576-577] .

[4] Effects of Juvenile Adjudication on Later Sentencing Under Federal Sentencing Guidelines

[a] DJF Parole--Detention or Revocation: As Used in Adult Federal Sentencing

A juvenile ward's commitment to the Division of Juvenile Facilities can have consequences on a future adult sentence in federal court, as can the revocation of a term of DJF parole by the Youthful Offender Parole Board. Under the United States Sentencing Guidelines Manual (U.S.S.G.) parole revocations can add points to a defendant's criminal history for purposes of increasing future sentences (U.S.S.G. 4A1.2(k)) and preclude a court from using a "safety valve" departure from the federal mandatory minimum sentence (U.S.S.G. 5C1.2). If detention is imposed upon a ward/defendant currently serving a term of parole, at future sentencing proceedings for additional offenses the court must determine if that detention was the result of an adjudication of guilt and thus a prior sentence and imprisonment, a revocation of parole, or merely a detention, i.e., a "modification" of the terms of parole. An adjudication requires proof of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt [U.S. v. Sanders (9th Cir. 1994) 41 F.3d 480, 486] . For a revocation, the federal court must consider whether the due process requirements were followed, i.e. formal finding of a violation, chance to present evidence, etc. [Morrissey v. Brewer (1972) 408 U.S. 471, 479-480] . When the court determines that a temporary detention was ordered by the parole authority as an alternative consequence for a violation, and the defendant remained under parole supervision, the detention does not constitute either imprisonment or a revocation for purposes of a criminal history point under federal sentencing rules [U.S. v. Ramirez (9th Cir. 2003) 347 F.3d 792, 805-806] .

[b] Juvenile Custody Calculated in Defendant's Criminal History

The U.S.S.G provide that a disposition of confinement imposed for an offense committed while the defendant was a juvenile is confinement for purposes of calculating the defendant's criminal history points if the confinement resulting fromthe juvenile disposition extended into the 5-year period preceding the defendant's commission of the instant offense (U.S.S.G. § 4A1.1(b)). The term "resulting from" applies to a later revocation of probation and sentence to a State juvenile facility. Therefore, when a minor's confinement results from a DJF commitment following a violation of probation, and that period of confinement runs into the 5-year period immediately preceding commencement of the instant adult offense, the juvenile delinquency adjudication is calculated in the criminal history score [U.S. v. Mitchell (9th Cir. 2004) 354 F.3d 1013, 1014] . This includes credit for time spent in presence custody (i.e. detention) [Jonah R. V. Gilbert Carmona (9th Cir. 2006) 446 F.3d 1000, 1004] .

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
B. Jurisdiction

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.25

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.25 Native American Youth

[1] In General

Jurisdiction over Native American youth involved in delinquent conduct is determined by a number of factors including geographic area, whether all parties are Native Americans, whether parties are tribe members, and the nature of the incident involving contact with the court. Regarding the geographical issues, a determination must be made if the incident occurred on reservation land, as jurisdiction is predicated on the location of the events [State v. Elmer J.K., III. (Wis. Ct. App. 1999) 591 N.W.2d 176] .

While states and reservations often have agreements regarding joint use of facilities and police officers, state courts have no jurisdiction over events occurring on reservations [Morgan v. Colorado River Indian Tribe (1968) 443 P.2d 421] .

Whether a minor is a Native American is actually a two-tier inquiry relative to a child's status. If the child is a Native American, a determination of his or her tribe must be made. Through the assistance of tribal administrators a child's status can be determined and, ultimately, a determination of the applicability of the Indian Child Welfare Act can be made.

Finally, as is often the case in jurisdictional analysis, consideration is given to the nature and seriousness of the alleged conduct. Tribal courts have limited jurisdiction and the nature of the alleged conduct may determine whether a case proceeds under federal, state or tribal law.

Practitioners representing Native American children should be familiar with several key federal statutes including:

- The Indian Civil Rights Act [25 U.S.C. §§ 1301-1303].

- The Indian Child Welfare Act [25 U.S.C. §§ 1901-1963].
- The Indian Education Act [20 U.S.C. § 240].
- State Jurisdiction over Offenses Committed by or Against Indians in the Indian Country [18 U.S.C. § 1162].
- The General Crimes Act [18 U.S.C. § 1153].
- The Major Crimes Act [18 U.S.C. § 1153].
- The Assimilative Crimes Act [18 U.S.C. § 13].
- The Federal Juvenile Delinquency Act [18 U.S.C. §§ 5031-5042].

[2] Application of ICWA to Delinquency

Historically, the federal Indian Child Welfare Act (ICWA) applies only in child custody proceedings involving Indian children. For the purposes of ICWA, child custody proceedings include foster care placements (family or institutional), termination of parental rights actions, preadoptive placements, and adoptive placements [25 U.S.C. § 1903(l)]. Delinquency-related placements, defined as placements and proceedings based upon an act which would be a crime if committed by an adult, are specifically excluded from ICWA.

Nevertheless, a California Rule of Court requires ICWA notices in all section 601 and 602 hearings "in which the child is at risk of entering foster care or is in foster care" [Cal. Rules of Court, former Rule 1439(b), now see Cal. Rules of Court, Rule 5.480 et seq.].

The apparent conflict between this California requirement and the plain language of ICWA was addressed by the court in In re Enrique O. (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 728, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 570 . In that case, the court determined that former Rule 1439(b), which has since been reenacted as Rules 5.480-5.487, does not expressly contradict the federal statute by requiring ICWA notices and procedures occur in all out of home placements arising out of acts that would be crimes if committed by an adult. On the other hand, the court expressed no opinion as to when, if ever, a delinquency proceeding could fall within the ambit of ICWA [In re Enrique O. (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 728, 734-735] .

The reasoning in Enrique O., however, left little doubt that if ICWA could ever apply to a 602 proceeding, it would be under very limited circumstances. Such circumstances might include a delinquency proceeding where the "criminal act" is punishable only by a fine and community service, but the child's circumstances put them at risk of a foster care placement [In re Enrique O. (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 728, 734 fn.3].

Subsequent to the Enrique O. decision, the California Legislature entered the fray with the passage of Senate Bill 678 (Stats. 2006, Ch. 838), an extensive effort to revise, recast, and expand various provisions of state law that determine applicability of ICWA within the state. Although only referenced once in the bill's 92 pages of text, and not at all in the Legislative Counsel's Digest, SB 678 specifically added Welf. & Inst. Code § 602 matters to the list of proceedings in which ICWA applies [Welf. & Inst. Code § 224.3(a), Stats 2006, Ch. 838]. This single reference, made in a state law that appears to provide a higher standard of protection to the rights of a parent or Indian custodian than federal law and is thus applicable under federal law, pursuant to 25 U.S.C. § 1921, puts the result reached in Enrique O. in question.

At a minimum, it would appear that the focus of the inquiry regarding the applicability of ICWA to 602 proceedings is now based upon a determination of when a child is at risk of entering foster care. This determination is complicated by a similardetermination, made for the purposes of acquiring federal funding pursuant to Title IVE (of the Social Security Act), that has resulted in a liberal interpretation of the phrase "at risk of entering foster care."

Arguably, the determination of when a child who is the subject of a 602 proceeding is "at risk of entering foster care" should be made in a more conservative manner, federal funding concerns notwithstanding. As noted by the court in Enrique O., the burden and delay caused by the application of ICWA notice requirements to every 602 proceeding where the child is "at risk" of entering foster care cannot be ignored. The resulting uncertainty, and bureaucratic and financial burden, as well as the serious risk of delaying resolution of delinquency matters would rarely, if ever, be of benefit to a child. The consequence of a widespread application of the practice would be labor intensive and low yield, to both the child and the intent of ICWA "to promote the stability and security of Indian tribes and families" (25 U.S.C. § 1902) [In re Enrique O. (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 728, 735, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 570] .

It should be noted that ICWA clearly defines foster care as "any action removing an Indian child from its parent or Indian custodian ... or conservator where the parent or Indian custodian cannot have the child returned upon demand, but where parental rights have not been terminated" [25 U.S.C. § 1903(1)(i)]. This definition contemplates at a minimum a temporary restriction on parental rights based on parental abuse or neglect, while the parent or parents participate in reunification [In re S.B. (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 1148, 1162-1164, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 726] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Parents' Rights or Children's Rights? Title 25 United States Code section 1921 expressly provides: "In any case where State or Federal law applicable to a child custody proceeding under State or Federal law provides a higher standard of protection to the rights of the parent or Indian custodian of an Indian child than the rights provided under this subchapter, the State or Federal court shall apply the State or Federal standard." Thus it provides states may pass more stringent laws affecting the rights of Indian children with respect to protecting the rights of a parent or Indian custodian. While Welf. & Inst. Code § 224.3 expands its reach to delinquency proceedings, it does so only where those proceedings relate to parents of Indian custodians [In re Alejandro A. (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 1343, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 44] .

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
B. Jurisdiction

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.26

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.26 Immigration Issues

[1] In General

Any person who is not a United States citizen may be subject to deportation because of criminal convictions or charges. This definition includes lawful permanent and temporary residents as well as persons illegally in the country [Immigration and Nationality Act of 1952, Section 241; 8 U.S.C. § 1251]. Notwithstanding this principle, implementation of uniform standards for dealing with undocumented youth in the delinquency system do not seem to exist in California.

While it is illegal for a noncitizen to be in the United States without permission, all individuals are entitled to Due Process protections once they are within the country's borders [Mathews v. Diaz (1975) 426 U.S. 67, 77] Applying these protections to juveniles through the landmark decision of In re Gault [In re Gault (1967) 387 U.S. 1, 13, 18 L. Ed. 2d 527] alien juveniles are entitled to the same treatment as any other youth involved in the delinquency system, whether or not they are legally in this country [see Dale, et al., Representing the Child Client, Ch. 5, Representing Children in Juvenile Justice Proceedings (Matthew Bender)]. Additionally, a minor's immigration status cannot be used as a legal basis to impose a more restrictive dispositional placement simply because of a nonspecific fear of escape or flight [In re Jose P. (1980) 101 Cal. App. 3d 52, 161 Cal. Rptr. 400] . Nonetheless, practitioners should be vigilant of custodial and dispositional bias against undocumented children in the juvenile justice system as their care, custody and treatment often presents difficult problems within the context of traditional systemic solutions and resources.

[2] Special Immigrant Juvenile Status

Special Immigrant Juvenile Status (SIJS) was created by Section 153 of the Immigration Act of 1990. It provides immediate employment authorization and ability to remain in the United States, as well as eventual lawful permanent resident status, for qualified applicants. The statute specifically makes SIJS available to children in all types of juvenile court proceedings, not excluding delinquency [8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(27)(J)(i)].

For a child to qualify for SIJS, the delinquency court must issue an order finding the minor is "eligible for long-term foster care" due to abuse, neglect or abandonment, and that it is in the child's best interest not to be returned to the home country. Federal regulation defines "eligible for long-term care" to mean that family reunification is no longer a viable option, and that the child normally will go on to foster care, adoption or guardianship [8 C.F.R. § 204.11(a)].

Certain offenses may cause a child to be inadmissible for SIJS, including sale or possession for sale of controlled substances, prostitution, and specified sex offenses. However, most delinquent conduct, including offenses involving violence and theft, do not cause immigration problems relative to an SIJS application [see Immigrant Legal Resource Center, Immigration Benchbook for Juvenile and Family Courts, Chs. 2, 5, and 7].

PRACTICE TIP:

Representation of Minors with Immigration Issues. Given the complexity of Immigration Law, as well as the broad range of consequences for and lack of a uniform approach to delinquency matters involving undocumented children, an attorney specializing in these matters should be consulted whenever representation of a child with immigration concerns is undertaken.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
B. Jurisdiction

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.27

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.27 Dual Status

[1] In General

It is an unfortunate reality that many children who have been abused or neglected later become involved in the juvenile delinquency and adult criminal justice systems. While it is a gross overstatement to suggest that all delinquent children have dependency issues, for those who do appear to fall within the provisions of Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 and § 602, the fact that a dependent child has committed a delinquent act, or a delinquent ward has been subject to abuse and neglect, should not preclude an appropriate response from either system--or both.

Historically, both decisional law [In re Donald S. (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 134, 138-139, 253 Cal. Rptr. 274] and statutory authority [Welf. & Inst. Code § 241.1] made it clear that a child could not simultaneously be both a dependent and a ward of the juvenile court [In re Marcus G. (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 1008, 1012, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 84] . This prohibition against concurrent jurisdiction, also known as dual status, ended on January 1, 2005, with the creation of Welf. & Inst. Code § 241.1(e), which allows counties to designate a minor as both a delinquent and a dependent. Notwithstanding this significant change in the law, it appears that the majority of counties in the state have chosen to continue to abide by policies and practices of the original single status mandate.

The purpose of Welf. & Inst. Code § 241.1 is to resolve a scenario where dual jurisdiction may arise from petitions that already have been filed, not to create a dual jurisdiction issue by inviting subsequent petitions. It rests in the discretion of the executive branch employees--social workers, probation officers, and the district attorney--whether to file such petitions, not the juvenile court [D.M. v. Superior Court of Orange County (2009) 173 Cal. App. 4th 1117, 1127, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 418] .

[2] Procedure for Recommending Single Status

The procedures for addressing the situation where a minor appears to come within the jurisdiction of the dependency and delinquency courts mandate a "single status" protocol [Welf. & Inst. Code § 241.1(a)-(d)] and allow for counties to develop a "dual status" protocol if they choose to do so [Welf. & Inst. Code § 241.1(e)]. Under the single status mandate, each county's probation and child protective services departments must jointly develop a written protocol to ensure local coordination in the assessment of any such minor and for presenting a recommendation to the juvenile court as to which status is appropriate for the minor [Welf. & Inst. Code § 241.1(a)].

Using the protocol, the probation department and the child protective services department must initially determine which status will serve the best interests of the minor and the protection of society. If possible, a determination should be made before a petition is filed concerning the minor [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.512(a)(2)]. In most instances, though, the minor will already be a dependent or a ward and the assessment under Welf. & Inst. Code § 241.1 will be done after the second petition is filed. The recommendations of both departments will then be presented to the juvenile court with the petition that is filed on behalf of the minor, and the court will determine which status is appropriate for the minor. The juvenile court is to provide notice of the recommendations within five calendar days to any other juvenile court that has jurisdiction over the minor. The notice must include "the name of the judge to whom, or courtroom to which, the recommendations were made" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 241.1(a)]. One appellate court has determined the assessment and recommendation of the probation and social services departments must accompany the "later petition, i.e., the petition that creates the potential for dual jurisdiction" [In re Marcus G. (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 1008, 1013, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 84 (emphasis in original)]. Thus, if the child is already a dependent of the court and a petition is filed to declare the child to be a delinquent, the assessment and recommendation under Welf. & Inst. Code § 241.1(a) must be presented to the juvenile court hearing the delinquency petition. Under this interpretation, the dependency court in such a case would receive notice of the second proceeding, but it would be the delinquency court that would determine whether the child should be treated as a dependent child or a delinquent minor [In re Marcus G. (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 1008, 1013, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 84 ; see also Los Angeles County Dept. of Children & Fam. Services v. Superior Court (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 320, 325, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 425] . The reverse would naturally be true if the minor was already a ward of the court and the second petition was being filed to make the child a dependent.

In developing a protocol and in applying it to determine their recommendations to the juvenile court, the departments are required to consider, but are not limited to, the following factors [Welf. & Inst. Code § 241.1(b); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.512(d)]:

- The nature of the minor's referral.
- The age of the minor.
- The history of any physical, sexual, or emotional abuse of the minor.
- The prior record of the minor's parents for child abuse with this or any other minor.
- The prior record of the minor for out-of-control or delinquent behavior.
- The parents' cooperation with the minor's school.
- The minor's functioning at school.
- The nature of the minor's home environment.
- The history of involvement by any agencies or professionals with the minor and his or her family.
- The services or community agencies available to assist the minor and his or her family.

- The statement of any counsel currently representing the minor.
- The statement of any Court Appointed Special Advocate currently appointed for the minor.

The protocol is also required to contain provisions for resolving disagreements between the probation and child protective services departments over the need for dependency or wardship status, and for determining the circumstances under which a new petition should be filed to change a minor's status [Welf. & Inst. Code § 241.1(b)].

The rule of court indicates the hearing on the joint assessment report under Welf. & Inst. Code § 241.1 must be heard prior to the jurisdictional hearing [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.512(e)]. This is not required by the statute, however, and may not be in the best interests of the minor or the protection of the public in all cases. Some practitioners have argued that use of the protocol and assessment process should not be undertaken until after delinquency jurisdictional allegations have been adjudicated. In this way a decision would not be made as to whether a dependent child should be adjudged a delinquent with dependency status being terminated until after it was determined by the court that the jurisdictional allegations under Welf. & Inst. Code § 602 are true. Since the full nature of the delinquency allegations may not become clear until after they have been litigated and the juvenile court may or may not find those allegations true, there is substantial merit to following such a procedure in an appropriate case. This also ensures that the district attorney is involved in the decision-making process, since it is that public official who is responsible for the bringing of delinquency actions [Welf. & Inst. Code § 650(c)]. Nevertheless, the statutory provisions do not mandate such a procedure and whether it is utilized should be determined by the court itself on a case-by-case basis. If the court finds this procedure is best in an individual case, the requirement of Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.512(e) for an earlier determination may be considered inconsistent with the intent of the statute to serve the minor's best interest and the protection of the public, and thus void [cf. California Court Reporters Assn. v. Judicial Council (1995) 39 Cal. App. 4th 15, 2426, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 44] . Timely decisions are, however, important [Los Angeles County Dept. of Children & Fam. Services v. Superior Court (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 320, 326, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 425 (after 18 months, decision on single status under Welf. & Inst. Code, § 241.1 still had not been made)].

[3] Procedure When Two Counties Are Involved

If the minor has already been adjudicated a dependent or ward of a juvenile court pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 300, 601, or 602, and it is alleged in another county that the minor comes within Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 300, 601, or 602, a similar procedure is to be followed [Welf. & Inst. Code § 241.1(c); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.512(c)]. The county probation or child protective services department in the county that already has jurisdiction and the county probation or child protective services department in the county that is alleging jurisdiction are to initially determine which status will best serve the best interests of the minor and the protection of society. The assessment process is to be done consistent with the requirements of Welf. & Inst. Code § 241.1(b) that apply when it is alleged the minor comes within a different status in the same county in which the minor is already a dependent or ward [Welf. & Inst. Code § 241.1(c); see also discussion in § 1.11[3][b], Single Status Required in Most Counties].

[4] Procedure When Dual Status Is Available

Effective January 1, 2005, counties are authorized to develop protocols that would allow a minor to be designated as a "dual status child, allowing the child to be simultaneously a dependent child and a ward of the court" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 241.1(e)]. Some see this as a step forward in policy. Others view it as a step backwards to the time when dual status was allowed prior to the enactment of Welf. & Inst. Code § 241.1. The need for dual jurisdiction is questionable if delinquency courts and probation departments fulfill their responsibility to provide services for minors who are not in locked facilities and their families in much the same way as social services agencies provide services for dependent children and their families. Both dependency and delinquency laws require the court to determine whether services could prevent the need for detention and require the court to make a finding that continuance in the home is contrary to the minor's welfare before the child is detained [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 319, 636]. Both require inquiries regarding paternity [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 316.2, 726.4]. Both require case plans to outline services for children likely to enter foster care that includes consideration of family strengths, the needs of both the child and the family, and the identification of services needed to work toward reunification [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 636.1, 706.6, 16501.1]. Both provide for placement with parents, relatives, nonrelative extended family members, and in foster homes [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 361.2, 361.3, 362.7, 727]. At status review hearings, both require the court to review the efforts made by the probation department or social services agency to work towards either reunification or an alternative permanent plan, and the progress made by the parents and the child toward alleviating or mitigating the need for foster care placement [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 366.21, 366.22, 706.5]. And both require permanent plans that may include return to parent, adoption, legal guardianship, or another planned permanent living arrangement [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 366.21, 366.22, 366.26, 727.3]. Thus, probation departments can and should be doing everything for wards that are not in locked facilities and their families that social service agencies are doing for dependent children and their families. Further, although children may qualify for both dependency and delinquency, frequently the "firmer control and closer supervision of a probation officer" may be more appropriate than "the social services that could be provided by the welfare department" [In re Marcus G. (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 1008, 1015, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 84] . Thus, if the delinquency system is fulfilling its responsibility to children and families, the need for dual status is open to question. Nevertheless, some counties may choose to develop such protocols [Welf. & Inst. Code § 241.1(e)].

The decision to develop a protocol for dual status children is made by the county probation department and children's services agency in consultation with the presiding judge of the juvenile court. It is a discretionary action that must be voluntarily entered into by the probation department and social services agency. The statute does not give the juvenile court the authority to mandate such a protocol if either probation or social services does not desire to create such a protocol [Welf. & Inst. Code § 241.1(e)]. The protocol must be signed by the chief probation officer, the director of the county children's services agency, and the presiding judge of the juvenile court prior to implementation of the protocol, and no juvenile court can order a child be simultaneously both a ward and a dependent unless the required protocol has been created and signed by the necessary parties [Welf. & Inst. Code § 241.1(e)].

A county dual jurisdiction protocol must include:

- A description of the process to be used in determining whether the child is eligible to receive dual status designation [Welf. & Inst. Code § 241.1(e)(1)].

- A description of the procedure to be used by probation and social services in assessing the necessity for dual status and the process for making joint recommendations for the court's consideration, which recommendations shall ensure a seamless transition from one status to another so that services are not disrupted [Welf. & Inst. Code § 241.1(e)(2)].

- A provision for ensuring communication between judicial officers when dependency jurisdiction has been suspended, which may be by providing the dependency court with copies of reports filed pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 727.2 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 241.1(e)(3)].

- A plan for the collection of data so the implementation of the protocol can be evaluated pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 241.2 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 241.1(e)(4)].

- Identification of whether the county has chosen to utilize an "on-hold" system of dual jurisdiction in which dependency jurisdiction is suspended while the child is supervised as a ward of the court or a "lead court/lead agency" system in which one court and one agency is designated as responsible for case management, conducting statutorily mandated court hearings, and submitting court reports. In either event, it is the intent of the Legislature that judges will not issue conflicting orders and that case management and services shall not be duplicative or simultaneously provided by both agencies [Welf. & Inst. Code § 241.1(e)(5)].

When a child is designated as a dual status child and the county has adopted an "on hold" system, dependency jurisdiction shall be suspended while the child is a ward of the court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.5]. The Judicial Council will be responsible for collecting data and preparing an evaluation of the results of the implementation of dual jurisdiction protocols and must submit a report to the Legislature with its findings and recommendations within two years of the counties first deeming a child to be a dual status child [Welf. & Inst. Code § 241.2].

[5] Notice and Decision Making

Notice of the hearing on the joint assessment report and a copy of the report must be provided to the minor, the minor's parent or guardian, all attorneys of record, any Court Appointed Special Advocate, and any other juvenile court having jurisdiction over the minor. In the case of notice to a juvenile court, the notice must be directed to the judicial officer or department that conducts hearings regarding the minor. The notice must be provided at least five calendar days before the hearing on the joint assessment report [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.512(f)]. All parties and their attorneys must be given an opportunity to be heard at the hearing on the joint assessment report [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.512(g)].

A specific decision as to which status is appropriate must be made by the juvenile court. It is not enough that a minor be adjudicated under the second status; the court must make an actual decision as to which status, delinquency or dependency, is appropriate [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.512(e); Los Angeles County Dept. of Children & Fam. Services v. Superior Court (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 320, 326, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 425] . The court must also state its reasons for making its decision. The statement of reasons must be made on the record or in a written order [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.512(g)].

It is important that decisions as to which status a minor should be supervised under needs to be made in a timely fashion. Although the statute does not provide a specific time in which the decision must be made, the applicable rule of court indicates the hearing on the joint assessment report must occur "as soon as possible after or concurrent with the detention hearing, but no later than 15 court days after the order of detention and prior to the jurisdictional hearing" [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.512(e)]. In some cases determining which status is best prior to determining if the jurisdictional allegations in the second petition are true will not serve the best interest of the child or the protection of society, since those allegations may not subsequently be found true. If the court finds it appropriate in an individual case to delay the decision on which status is appropriate until it is determined if the allegations in the second petition are true, the requirement of Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.512(e) for an earlier determination may be considered inconsistent with the intent of the statute to serve the minor's best interest and the protection of the public, and thus void [cf. California Court Reporters Assn. v. Judicial Council (1995) 39 Cal. App. 4th 15, 2426, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 44] . Minors who are caught in between the two systems can suffer by not receiving full services or stability of placement from either. Thus, as with all matters involving minors, timely resolution is important [Los Angeles County Dept. of Children & Fam. Services v. Superior Court (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 320, 326, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 425 (after 18 months, decision on single status under Welf. & Inst. Code, § 241.1 still had not been made)].

[6] Jurisdiction Over Matters Incidental to Proceedings

A superior court convened as, and exercising the special powers of, a juvenile court is vested with jurisdiction to make only those limited determinations authorized by the legislative grant of those special powers. Notwithstanding the absence of specific authorization to make particular determinations, the juvenile court is vested with the authority to make determinations incidentally necessary to the performance of functions demanded of it by the Legislature pursuant to the juvenile court law or necessary to any ultimate determination with which it is charged [In re Ashley M. (2003) 114 Cal. App. 4th 1, 6, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 237] . For example, although the juvenile court was not specifically authorized to make determinations relative to the parentage of a minor at the time the Supreme Court considered the issue, the Court determined the juvenile court is vested with jurisdiction to determine parentage issues when that finding is necessary to reach its conclusion as to the imposition of dependency status for a child who needs care and has no parent [In re R.

(1975) 13 Cal. 3d 636, 643-644, 119 Cal. Rptr. 475, 532 P.2d 123 ; now see Welf. & Inst. Code § 316.2; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.635]. Other decisions have also recognized the juvenile court's inherent authority to address certain issues necessary to carrying out its mandate [see, e.g., In re Claudia E. (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 627, 637, 77 Cal. Rptr. 3d 722 ("the juvenile court has the inherent power to issue declaratory relief in such proceedings"); In re Fred J. (1979) 89 Cal. App. 3d 168, 176, 152 Cal. Rptr. 327 ("the juvenile court has inherent power to entertain a prehearing challenge to the petition's sufficiency by a motion akin to a demurrer")].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
B. Jurisdiction

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated §§ 329.28-329.29

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

[Reserved]

§§ 329.28[Reserved]

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
C. Intake and Investigation

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.30

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.30 Establishment, Purpose, and Policies of Intake Program

The presiding judge of the juvenile court must initiate meetings and cooperate with the probation department, welfare department, prosecuting attorney, law enforcement, and other persons and agencies performing an intake function. Thereby the judge must establish and maintain a fair and efficient intake program, designed to promote both a swift and objective evaluation of the circumstances of any referral and the pursuit of an appropriate course of action [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.514(a)].

A juvenile court intake program must be designed to provide for settlement of the following matters [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.514(b)]:

- Whether the juvenile court has jurisdiction.
- Whether there is sufficient evidence to support the petition.
- Whether a disposition of referral, to a nonjudicial agency or program available in the community, is suitable.

Further, the intake program must be designed to provide the following [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.514(b)]:

- A program of informal supervision of the minor under Welf. & Inst. Code § 654 (informal supervision for minors in delinquency proceedings).
- Commencement of proceedings in the juvenile court when necessary for the welfare of the minor or the safety and protection of the public.

PRACTICE TIP:

"At-Risk Youth Early Intervention Programs." Such programs are available in some counties, pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 601.5, to assess and serve families with children who have behavioral problems that place the child at risk of becoming a ward of the court under Welf. & Inst. Code § 601 or 602. Enrollment in such a program, available to minors over ten years of age, may prevent court or probation intervention in favor of this neighborhood-based alternative.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
C. Intake and Investigation

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.31

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.31 Commencement of Delinquency Proceedings

[1] Under Welf. & Inst. Code § 601

Juvenile court proceedings to declare a minor a ward of the court under Welf. and Inst. § 601 are generally commenced by the filing of a petition by the probation officer [Welf. & Inst. Code § 650(a)]. However, the probation officer or the district attorney, after consultation with the probation officer, may file a petition to declare a minor to be a ward of the court under Welf. & Inst. Code § 601.3(e) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 650(b); see discussion in § 329.35].

The parties in § 601 proceedings are the minor and the probation officer [People v. Superior Court (Tony S.) (1975) 44 Cal. App. 3d 904, 908, 119 Cal. Rptr. 125] . The probation officer must determine upon investigation whether the minor's best interest would be served if he is declared a ward of the court and must furnish such assistance and information as the court may require in the disposition of the case [In re Steven C. (1970) 9 Cal. App. 3d 255, 265, 88 Cal. Rptr. 97] . This includes appearing and participating in the jurisdictional hearing to assist in the ascertaining and presentation of evidence, with the consent or at the request of the juvenile court judge. [In re Jesse G. (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 724, 731, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 331] .

[2] Under Welf. & Inst. Code § 602

Juvenile court proceedings to declare a minor a ward of the court under Welf. & Inst. Code § 602 are commenced by the filing of a petition by the prosecuting attorney [Welf. & Inst. Code § 650(c)].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
C. Intake and Investigation

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.32

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.32 Temporary Custody or Detention by Peace Officer

[1] Grounds for Detention Without Warrant

A peace officer may, without a warrant, take into temporary custody a minor who is any one of the following [Welf. & Inst. Code § 625]:

- A person under 18 years of age who the officer has reasonable cause to believe is a person described in those statutes giving the juvenile court jurisdiction to declare a minor a ward of the court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 625(a); see Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 601, 602, and discussion of grounds for delinquency proceedings in § 329.20].

- A person who is currently a ward of the court, or who is subject to an order of detention pending either a jurisdictional or dispositional hearing,who the officer has reasonable cause to believe has violated that order or escaped from any commitment ordered by the court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 625(b); see Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 636, 702; see also discussion in [4], below].

- A person under 18 years of age who, when found in any street or public place, is suffering from any sickness or injury that requires care, medical treatment, hospitalization, or other remedial care [Welf. & Inst. Code § 625(c)].

- A person under 18 years of age who has committed a misdemeanor.

[2] Notice to Parent, Responsible Relative, or Guardian

When an officer takes a minor before a probation officer at a juvenile hall or to any other place of confinement, the officer must take immediate steps to notify the minor's parent, guardian, or a responsible relative that the minor is in custody and the place where he or she is being held [Welf. & Inst. Code § 627(a)].

[3] Minor's Right to Telephone Calls

Immediately after being taken to a place of confinement and, except where physically impossible, no later than one hour after he or she has been taken into custody, the minor must be advised and has the right to make at least two telephone calls from the place where he or she is being held, one call completed to a parent or guardian, a responsible relative, or his or her employer, and another call completed to an attorney [Welf. & Inst. Code § 627(b)].

The calls are at public expense, if completed to telephone numbers within the local calling area, and must be made in the presence of a public officer or employee. Any public officer or employee who willfully deprives a minor taken into custody of his or her right to make the telephone calls is guilty of a misdemeanor [Welf. & Inst. Code § 627(b)].

[4] When Miranda Statement Is Required by Officer

In any case in which a minor is taken into temporary custody on the ground that there is reasonable cause for believing that such minor is a person properly declared a ward of the court or has violated an order of the juvenile court or has escaped from any commitment ordered by the juvenile court, the officer must advise the minor that anything he or she says can be used against him or her and must advise the minor of applicable constitutional rights, including the right to remain silent, the right to have counsel present during any interrogation, and the right to have counsel appointed if the minor is unable to afford counsel [Welf. & Inst. Code § 625].

Whether the minor has been released from custody, the duration and degree of restraint, and the objective circumstances of the interrogation are the dispositive issues surrounding the necessity of providing a Miranda advisement [In re Joseph R. (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 954, 956-960] .

[5] Constitutional Scope of Permissible Detention

A detention does not violate U.S. Const., amend. IV, if the detaining officer has a reasonable suspicion that the person to be detained has been, is, or is about to be engaged in criminal activity [In re Frederick B. (1987) 192 Cal. App. 3d 79, 84-85, 237 Cal. Rptr. 338 , overruled in part on other grounds, In re Randy G. 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 516, 28 P.3d 239 (2001) (on school grounds, reasonable suspicion need not be shown)].

A police officer may also detain a person who appears to be between the ages of six and eighteen to investigate whether he or she is a truant from full-time compulsory education, when there are specific and articulable facts causing the officer to reasonably suspect that a truancy violation is occurring and that the person to be detained is a truant. This type of detention is permissible only during school hours.

Furthermore, although youthful appearance is a highly relevant and objectively verifiable factor in determining the propriety of a truancy detention, the detention cannot be based on youthful appearance alone [In re James D. (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 903, 915-917, 239 Cal. Rptr. 663, 741 P.2d 161 ; see Educ. Code § 48264].

[6] Chemical Testing, Fingerprinting, and Photographing

A peace officer may request that a minor who has been detained voluntarily submit to chemical testing of the minor's urine, to determine the presence of alcohol or illegal drugs in any of the following circumstances [Welf. & Inst. Code § 625.1]:

- When a minor is taken into temporary custody pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 625(a) [see discussion in [1], above].

- When the peace officer has reasonable cause for believing the minor is a person described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 602 [see discussion in [1], above].

- When the minor is taken into temporary custody pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 625(b) or (c) [see discussion in [1], above].

The peace officer must inform the minor that the testing is voluntary, and must give a specified admonition unless the test is administered in a drunk driving context [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 625.1, 625.2; see Veh. Code § 23157].

PRACTICE TIP:

Use of Test Results. The results of the test may be considered by the court in determining its disposition of the minor. However, unless otherwise provided by law, the results may not be the basis of a petition to declare the minor a ward under Welf. & Inst. Code § 602, or the basis for such a finding by the court under Welf. & Inst. Code § 702 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 625.1].

Fingerprinting and photographing minors who are taken into temporary custody for the commission of a felony offense is expressly authorized pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 626.

[7] Transmittal of Information Relating to Arrest and Detention of Minor

Any information gathered by a law enforcement agency, including the Department of Justice, relating to the taking of a minor into custody may be disclosed to another law enforcement agency, including a school district police or security department, or to any person or agency which has a legitimate need for the information for the purposes of official disposition of a case. When the disposition of a taking into custody is available, it shall be included with any information disclosed [Welf. & Inst. Code § 828(a)]. This change in the law, effective January 1, 2004, is a significant departure from the prior statute that had prohibited the Department of Justice from transmitting arrest information to other agencies unless the information included the disposition of the arrest [Welf. & Inst. Code § 204, repealed by statute].

[8] Alternatives Available to Detaining Officer

When an officer takes a minor into temporary custody, he or she may proceed according to one of several available alternatives. However, in determining which alternative to choose, the officer must prefer the alternative that least restricts the minor's freedom of movement, provided such alternative is compatible with the best interests of the minor and the community [Welf. & Inst. Code § 626]. The detaining officer may choose any one of the following alternatives:

- Release the minor [Welf. & Inst. Code § 626(a)].

- Deliver the minor to a community program for abused and neglected children [Welf. & Inst. Code § 307.5] or an agency providing shelter, counseling, or diversion services [Welf. & Inst. Code § 626(b)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Agency Must Investigate. The agency to which a minor is referred or delivered pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 626(b) must immediately make an investigation as that agency deems necessary to determine what disposition of the minor that agency will make, and initiate a service program for the minor when appropriate [Welf. & Inst. Code § 625.5].

- Prepare in duplicate a written notice to appear before the probation officer of the county at a time and place specified in the notice [Welf. & Inst. Code § 626(c)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Notice Requirements: Contents, Delivery, and Release on Execution of Promise to Appear. The notice issued must contain a concise statement of the reasons such minor was taken into custody. The officer must deliver one copy of the notice to the minor or to a parent, guardian, or responsible relative of such minor and may require the minor or parent, guardian, or relative, or both, to sign a written promise that either or both will appear at the time and place designated in the notice. On the execution of the promise to appear, the officer must immediately release the minor and, as soon as practicable, file one copy of the notice with the probation officer [Welf. & Inst. Code § 626(c)].

- Take the minor, without unnecessary delay, before the probation officer of the county in which the person was taken into custody, or in the county in which the minor resides, or in which the acts took place or the circumstances exist that are alleged to bring the minor within the jurisdiction of the court, and deliver the custody of the minor to the probation officer [Welf. & Inst. Code § 626(d)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Delivery Requirements: Statement of Probable Cause; Delivery Within 24 Hours in Some Cases. The peace officer must prepare a concise written statement of the probable cause for taking the minor into temporary custody and the reasons the minor was taken into custody, and must provide the statement to the probation officer at the time the minor is delivered to the probation officer. The minor must be delivered to the probation officer within 24 hours if the minor was taken into custody without a warrant on the belief that he or she has committed a misdemeanor [Welf. & Inst. Code § 626(d)].

For further discussion on the limitations on temporary custody of a minor, see discussion in § 329.34[2].

[9] Mandatory Detention

Statutory procedures dictate the manner in which police and probation officers must handle a minor, over the age of 14, who is taken into custody for any offense listed in Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(b) or the commission or attempted commissionof a felony involving personal use of a firearm: They are to deliver the minor to the probation officer without unnecessary delay [Welf. & Inst. Code § 626.6]. The probation officer shall then retain the minor in custody until the minor is brought before a judicial officer for a detention hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 629.1]. In such cases there is no discretion to release a minor prior to a detention hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 625.3].

Further, a minor 14 years of age or older who is taken into custody for the commission or attempted commission of any felony shall not be released from custody until they and/or their parent, guardian or relative have signed a written promise to appear or have been given an order to appear in juvenile court on a date [Welf. & Inst. Code § 629(b)].

[10] Restrictions on Detaining Minor in Jail or Lockup

Generally, no court, judge, referee, peace officer, or employee of a detention facility may knowingly detain any minor in a jail or lockup [Welf. & Inst. Code § 207.1(a)]. However, there are statutory exceptions to that rule [see, e.g., Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 207(b), 207.1(d); see discussion in § 329.55].

[11] Arrest Warrants

Whenever a petition has been filed in juvenile court alleging that a minor comes within the provisions of Welf. & Inst. Code § 601 or 602 and a hearing is sought, or whenever a subsequent petition has been filed seeking a hearing, a warrant for the minor's arrest may be issued immediately if one of the following conditions are satisfied:

- It appears to the court that the conduct and behavior of the minor may endanger the health, person, welfare or property of the minor, or others; or that the circumstances of the minor's home environment may endanger their health, person, welfare, or property [Welf. & Inst. Code § 663(a)(1)].

- It appears to the court that either personal service upon the minor has been unsuccessful, or the minor's whereabouts are unknown [Welf. & Inst. Code § 663(a)(2)].

- It appears to the court that the minor has willfully evaded service of process [Welf. & Inst. Code § 663(a)(3)].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
C. Intake and Investigation

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.33

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.33 Investigation by Probation Officer on Application of Citizen or Arrest of Minor

[1] Duty to Investigate

A minor may be referred to a probation officer by application of a citizen or on arrest by a police officer [see, e.g., Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 628, 653, 653.1, 653.5].

Whenever the probation officer has cause to believe that there was or is within the county, or residing therein, a person within the provisions of Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 601 and 602, the probation officer must immediately make such investigation as is necessary to determine whether proceedings in the juvenile court should be commenced [Welf. & Inst. Code § 652].

When an officer delivers a minor to a probation officer after detaining the minor, the probation officer must immediately investigate the circumstances of the minor and the facts surrounding his or her being taken into custody [Welf. & Inst. Code § 628(a)].

There is no duty to investigate when a minor is referred to a shelter, to counseling, or to diversion services pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 626(b) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 652; see discussion in § 329.32[8]].

[2] Notice Required on Arrest by Peace Officer

In any case in which a minor is taken before a probation officer by a peace officer and it is alleged that the minor should be declared a ward of the court, the probation officer must immediately advise the minor and the parent or guardian that anything the minor says can be used against him or her and must advise the parent or guardian of the minor's constitutional rights, including the right to remain silent, the right to have counsel present during any interrogation, and the right to have counsel appointed if he or she is unable to afford counsel. If the minor or parent or guardian requests counsel, the probation officer must notify the judge of the juvenile court of the request, and counsel for the minor will be appointed [Welf. & Inst. Code § 627.5].

The United States Supreme Court has noted that it has not yet held Miranda applicable to juvenile proceedings [Fare v. Michael C. (1979) 442 U.S. 707, 717 n.4, 99 S. Ct. 2560, 61 L. Ed. 2d 197 ; see Miranda v. Arizona (1966) 384 U.S. 436, 444, 86 S. Ct. 1602, 16 L. Ed. 2d 694] . California case law, however, has applied Miranda to juveniles so that statements obtained from juveniles in violation of Miranda are inadmissible in juvenile court proceedings [In re P. (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 801, 810, 103 Cal. Rptr. 425, 500 P.2d 1] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Applicability of Roderick P. in Light of Proposition 8. Whether the holding in Roderick P. remains good law is questionable since the passage of Proposition 8, Cal. Const., art. I, § 28(d) [see People v. May (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 309, 243 Cal. Rptr. 369, 748 P.2d 307 (Proposition 8 abrogated judicial decisions that required the exclusion of evidence obtained in violation of the state, but not federal, privilege against self-incrimination)]. It is arguable, however, that the application of Miranda to juvenile proceedings will remain valid because theprivilege against self-incrimination, on which Miranda is based, is an aspect of federal due process that the United States Supreme Court has held must not be denied in juvenile proceedings [see In re Gault (1967) 387 U.S. 1, 55, 87 S. Ct. 1428, 18 L. Ed. 2d 527] . This issue is yet to be resolved.

Under the now-questionable California case law, the police do not have a duty to advise a minor of his or her right to see his or her parent before being interrogated [In re John S. (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 441, 446, 245 Cal. Rptr. 17 ; People v. Maestas (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 1499, 1509-1510, 240 Cal. Rptr. 360 ; but see In re Patrick W. (1980) 104 Cal. App. 3d 615, 617-618, 163 Cal. Rptr. 848 , cert. denied, 449 U.S. 1096 (1981)] .

However, when a minor requests contact of any sort with a parent, it will be presumed the minor intended thereby to invoke the privilege against self-incrimination [People v. Burton (1971) 6 Cal. 3d 375, 381-384, 99 Cal. Rptr. 1, 491 P.2d 793 ; In re Louis F. (1978) 85 Cal. App. 3d 611, 619, 149 Cal. Rptr. 642] . It is clear, however, as a matter of federal case law, that the minor's request for his or her probation officer does not invoke the privilege [Fare v. Michael C. (1979) 442 U.S. 707, 718-723, 99 S. Ct. 2560, 61 L. Ed. 2d 197] .

[3] Admissibility of Statements to Probation Officer

Statements made by a juvenile to a probation officer in a Welf. & Inst. Code § 628 interview are not admissible as substantive evidence, or in any subsequent proceeding to determine criminal guilt, whether juvenile or adult. Such use would frustrate the purposes of the statute, the primary purpose of which is not to elicit evidence of guilt but to assist the probation officer in deciding at the outset of the case whether the minor need be further detained pending a court hearing. Such statements may, however, be admitted and considered in hearings on the issues of detention and fitness for juvenile treatment [In re H. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 595, 601-602, 156 Cal. Rptr. 344, 596 P.2d 1] .

A minor's immunity from use at trial of any statements made to a probation officer was not nullified by Cal. Const., art. I, § 28(d), adopted as part of Proposition 8 at the June 1982 election [Ramona R. v. Superior Court (1985) 37 Cal. 3d 802, 804, 210 Cal. Rptr. 204, 693 P.2d 789 , reaffirmed in People v. May (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 309, 315-320, 243 Cal. Rptr. 369, 748 P.2d 307] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Statements to Probation Officer. If the attorney is involved in the case prior to the probation officer interviewing the minor, he or she should keep in mind that the statements given to the probation officer, although not admissible to prove the case-in-chief at the jurisdictional hearing, could possibly be used for impeachment, an issue that has not been addressed by the courts. This should not necessarily prohibit a minor from giving a statement to the probation officer, but it does mean that the attorney should be familiar with the police reports, and first confer with the minor prior to the probation interview. The attorney's presence during the interview could possibly make the statement admissible at the jurisdictional hearing [see People v. Alesi (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 856, 861, 64 Cal. Rptr. 104, 434 P.2d 360]

.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
C. Intake and Investigation

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.34

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.34 Continued Detention

[1] General Rule

The probation officer must immediately release the minor to the custody of his or her parents, guardian, or a responsible relative unless any one or more of the following conditions exist [Welf. & Inst. Code § 628(a)]:

- The minor is in need of proper and effective parental care or control and has no parent, guardian, or responsible relative; or has no parent, guardian, or responsible relative willing to exercise or capable of exercising such care or control; or has no parent, guardian, or responsible relative actually exercising such care or control.

- The minor is destitute or is not provided with the necessities of life or with a home or suitable place of abode.

- The minor is provided with a home that is an unfit place for him or her by reason of neglect, cruelty, depravity, or physical abuse by either of his or her parents, guardian, or other person in whose custody or care he or she is.

- Continued detention of the minor is a matter of immediate and urgent necessity for the protection of the minor or reasonable necessity for the protection of the person or property of another.

- The minor is likely to flee the jurisdiction of the court.

- The minor has violated an order of the juvenile court.

- The minor is physically dangerous to the public because of a mental or physical deficiency, disorder, or abnormality.

For further discussion on limitations on temporary custody, see discussion in [2], below.

[2] Time Limits on Temporary Custody

[a] Release Required Unless Petition or Criminal Complaint Filed

A minor taken into custody must be released from custody within 48 hours, excluding nonjudicial days, after first being taken into custody by a peace officeror probation officer, unless within that time either a petition is filed with the clerk of the juvenile court to declare the minor a ward of the court or a criminal complaint is filed against the minor in a court of competent jurisdiction [Welf. & Inst. Code § 631(a); see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.752(b) (child must be released from custody within 48 hours unless petition or notice of probation violation is filed within that time or prior to time child first taken into custody)].

When a minor is taken into custody by a peace officer or probation officer without a warrant on the belief that the minor has committed a misdemeanor that does not involve violence, the threat of violence, or possession or use of a weapon, and if the minor is not currently on probation or parole, except when the minor misrepresents himself or herself as 18 years of age or older, the minor must be released within 48 hours after having been taken into custody, excluding nonjudicial days, unless a petition has been filed to declare the minor to be a ward of the court and the minor has been ordered detained by a judge or referee of the juvenile court pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 635. However, if the minor is to be detained for more than 24 hours, the decision to do so must be reviewed in writing and approved by a probation officer who is a supervisor as soon as possible after it is known that the minor will be so detained, unless the person making the initial decision to so detain the minor is a probation officer who is a supervisor [Welf. & Inst. Code § 631(b)].

When an emergency condition exists, as described in Gov. Code § 68115, the presiding judge may request, and the Chair of the Judicial Council may authorize an extension of time for filing a case by deeming that the date or dates upon which the condition existed are holidays for the purpose of computing time. Included in that list of emergency conditions described is a large influx of criminal cases resulting from a large number of arrests within a short period of time, threatening the orderly operation of a superior court location [Welf. & Inst. Code § 828(a)].

[b] Supplemental Petitions

The 48-hour time limit for filing a petition is also applicable to the filing of a notice of probation violation pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 777 [Cal. Rules of Court, Rule 5.752(b)]. Consequently, if a minor is released upon the expiration of the 48-hour deadline, the minor may not be redetained on the filing of a supplemental petition absent a finding of new or previously undiscovered facts that warrant detention [In re Daniel M. (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 1151, 1154-1157, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 17] .

[c] Exception When Minor Misrepresents Age

Notwithstanding the general time limitations for custody, if the minor taken into custody willfully misrepresents his or her age to be 18 years or more and this misrepresentation effects a material delay in investigation that prevents the filing of a petition or of a criminal complaint within 48 hours after having been taken into custody, a petition or complaint must be filed within 48 hours, excluding nonjudicial days, from the time the minor's true age is determined. Whenever a petition or complaint is not filed within that time, the minor must be immediately released from custody [Welf. & Inst. Code § 631.1; see also Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.752(c)].

[d] Exception When Adult Misrepresents Age

If an adult willfully misrepresents himself or herself to be a minor when taken into custody and this misrepresentation effects a material delay in investigation that prevents the filing of a criminal complaint against him or her in a court of competent jurisdiction within two days, the complaint must be filed within two days of the time the true age of the person is determined, excluding nonjudicial days [Penal Code § 824].

[e] Release Requirement After Certification to Juvenile Court

A minor must be released from custody within 48 hours, excluding nonjudicial days, after certification to juvenile court under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 4.116 and 5.516(d), unless a petition has been filed [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.752(a)]. For discussion of certification procedure, see the discussion in § 329.22.

In a recent decision interpreting Welf. & Inst. Code § 654.2(a), the 12-month time limit in which a minor may be declared a ward was determined to be directory, not mandatory, and thus did not result in the trial court losing fundamental jurisdiction over a case. Consequently, where a minor was given an extended period of time to pay restitution and complete public service work, at her request, wardship was properly established even though the 12-month period had expired [In re C.W. (2007) 153 Cal. App. 4th 468].

[f] Explanation Required for Release After Custody Over 24 Hours Without Petition

Whenever a minor who has been held in custody for more than 24 hours by the probation officer is subsequently released and no petition is filed, the probation officer must prepare a written explanation of why the minor was held in custody for more than 24 hours. The written explanation must be prepared within 72 hours after the minor is released from custody and filed in the record of the case. A copy of the written explanation must be sent to the parents, guardians, or another person having the care or custody of the minor [Welf. & Inst. Code § 631(c)].

[3] Home Supervision Alternative

[a] Availability

When the minor meets one or more of the criteria for continued detention under Welf. & Inst. Code § 628(a) [see discussion in [1], above], but the probation officer believes that 24-hour secure detention is not necessary in order to protect the person or property of another or to ensure that the minor does not flee the jurisdiction of the court, the probation officer may release the minor to home supervision under Welf. & Inst. Code § 628.1.

If released on home supervision, under this section, the minor and their parent, guardian or responsible relative are required to sign a written promise that they understand the specific conditions of the release [Welf. & Inst. Code § 628.1].

[b] Written Promise to Appear as Condition of Release

As a condition for the release of a minor, the probation officer may require suchminor or his or her parent, guardian, or relative, or both, to sign a written promise that either or both of them will appear before the probation officer at the juvenile hall or other suitable place designated by the probation officer at a specified time [Welf. & Inst. Code § 629].

[c] When Home Supervision Is Required

Unless the minor is in need of proper and effective parental control, is destitute and is not provided with a suitable home, or is provided with a home which is an unfit place by reason of neglect, cruelty, depravity, or physical abuse, the probation officer must release the minor to the parent, guardian, or responsible relative on home supervision [Welf. & Inst. Code § 628.1].

[d] Conditions for Mandatory Home Supervision

When release is mandated under Welf. & Inst. Code § 628.1, the probation officer must require the minor to sign a written promise that he or she understands and will observe the specific conditions of home supervision release. Specific conditions for home supervision release may include curfew and school attendance, requirements related to the protection of the minor or the person or property of another, or to the minor's appearances at court hearings. The home supervision program may also include a condition granting the probation officer access to the minor at all times [see In re Curtis T. (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 1391, 1397, 263 Cal. Rptr. 296] .

[e] Rights of Minor on Home Supervision

A minor on home supervision must be entitled to the same legal protection as a minor in secure detention, including a detention hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 628.1].

[f] Violation of Condition of Home Supervision

A minor who violates a specific condition of home supervision release that he or she has promised in writing to obey may be taken into custody and placed in secure detention, subject to court review at a detention hearing. If the supervision program included a condition granting the probation officer access to the minor at all times, the minor is deemed to have consented to permitting the officer entry into the minor's home and the minor's bedroom, and any evidence seized by the officer during such an entry is admissible as evidence at the hearing [In re Curtis T. (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 1391, 1396-1397, 263 Cal. Rptr. 296] .

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
C. Intake and Investigation

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.35

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.35 Application to Commence Wardship Proceedings

[1] Contents and Form of Application

An application to the probation officer or the district attorney to commence proceedings in the juvenile court must be in the form of an affidavit alleging that there was or is within the county, or residing therein, a minor falling within the jurisdiction of the court to declare wardship and setting forth facts in support of the allegation [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 653, 653.5; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.520(c); see Welf. & Inst. Code § 601.3(e) (initiation of delinquency proceedings by probate officer or district attorney for truancy); see also Ch. 328, Juvenile Courts: Dependency Proceedings, § 328.350].

[2] Duty to Investigate Application

When an application to commence juvenile court proceedings is filed, the probation officer, or the district attorney in consultation with the probation officer, must immediately initiate any investigation that is necessary to determine whether proceedings in the juvenile court should be commenced [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 653, 653.5(a), (b)].

[3] Alternatives Following Investigation

[a] In General

After investigating a case, the probation officer has three options, except as discussed in [c], below. Those options are [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.514(c)]:

- Settle the matter at intake.
- Informal supervision.

- Referral to the prosecuting attorney.

PRACTICE TIP:

Avoiding Referral to Prosecuting Attorney. It is at this initial point in the proceedings that the attorney for the minor may have his or her greatest impact on the case. Efforts should be made to avoid a referral to the prosecuting attorney. This may require conferring with the probation officer, and providing him or her with any favorable information about the minor, or his or her parents, as well as any mitigating facts about the case. It will also require counseling the minor and his or her parent or guardian about the appropriate attitude to present to the probation officer, and encouraging them to seek counseling when appropriate.

[b] Settle at Intake

Except for those cases requiring a mandatory referral to the prosecuting attorney [see Welf. & Inst. § 653.5, and the discussion under [d], below], a probation officer can settle at intake by doing any of the following [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.514(c)]:

- Taking no action.
- Counseling the child and any others involved in the matter.
- Referring the child and any others involved to other agencies and programs in the community.

In determining whether to settle at intake, the probation officer shall consider the following factors [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.516(a)]:

- Whether there is sufficient evidence of a condition or conduct to bring the child within the jurisdiction of the court.
- If the alleged condition or conduct is not considered serious, whether the child has previously presented no significant problems in the home, school, or community.
- Whether the matter appears to have arisen from a temporary problem withinthe family which has been or can be resolved.
- Whether any agency or other resource in the community is better suited to serve the needs of the child, the parent or guardian.
- Whether settling the matter at intake would be consistent with the welfare of the child and the protection of the public based on:
  - The attitudes of the child and the parent or guardian.
  - The age, maturity, and capabilities of the child.
  - The dependency or delinquency history, if any, of the child.
  - The recommendations, if any, of the referring party.

- The attitudes of affected persons.

- Any other relevant circumstances.

[c] Informal Supervision

[i] When Available

The probation officer, the prosecuting attorney, or the court may determine that the minor is a suitable candidate for informal probation [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 654, 654.2, and 654.3; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.514(c)(2); see Mark F. v. Superior Court (1987) 189 Cal. App. 3d 206, 209-210, 234 Cal. Rptr. 388 and Marvin F. v. Superior Court (1977) 75 Cal. App. 3d 281, 289-290, 142 Cal. Rptr. 78 (both cases applying former Cal. Rules. of Ct., Rule 1307 mandating investigation by probation officer); cf. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 1404(c) before 1993 amendments operative Jan. 1, 1994) (investigation by probation officer as mandatory); now see Cal. Rules of Court, Rule 5.514].

However, not all minors are eligible for informal probation. Except in an unusual case in which the interests of justice would best be served, no minor is eligible for informal supervision if any of the following exist [Welf. & Inst. Code § 654.3]:

- A petition alleges that the minor has violated an offense listed in Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(b) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 654.3(a)].

- A petition alleges that the minor has sold or possessed for sale a controlled substance as defined in Chapter 2 (commencing with Section 11053) of Division 10 of the Health and Safety Code [Welf. & Inst. Code § 654.3(b)].

- A petition alleges that the minor has violated Section 11350 or 11377 of the Health and Safety Code where the violation takes place at a public or private elementary, vocational, junior high school or high school, or a violation of Section 245.5, 626.9 or 626.10 of the Penal Code [Welf. & Inst. Code § 654.3(c)].

- A petition alleges that the minor has violated Section 186.22 of the Penal Code [Welf. & Inst. Code § 654.3(d)].

- The minor has previously participated in a program of supervision pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 654 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 654.3(e)].

- The minor has previously been adjudged a ward of the court pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 602 (commission of crime) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 654.3(f)].

- A petition alleges that the minor has committed an offense in which the restitution owed to the victim exceeds $1,000 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 654.3(g) ("victim" as defined in former Welf. & Inst. Code § 729.6(a)(1)) (now see Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6(j)) and "restitution" as defined in former Welf. & Inst. Code § 729.6(d) (now see Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6))].

- The minor is alleged to have committed a felony offense when they were at least 14 years of age [Welf. & Inst. Code § 654.3(h)].

[ii] By Probation Officer in Lieu of Filing a Petition

If the probation officer, after investigating an application for a petition, concludes that a minor is or soon will be within the jurisdiction of the juvenile court, the probation officer may, in lieu of filing a wardship petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 601 (refusal to obey parents, violation of curfew, truancy) or requesting a prosecuting attorney to file a wardship petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 601.3(e) (initiation of delinquency proceedings by district attorney for truancy) or under Welf. & Inst. Code § 602 (criminal offenses), and with the consent of the minor's parent or guardian, delineate specific programs of supervision for the minor and attempt to adjust the situation that brings the minor within, or creates the probability that the minor will soon be within, the court's jurisdiction [Welf. & Inst. Code § 654].

This program may not exceed six months, and institution of a program does not prevent the probation officer from filing or requesting the prosecuting attorney to file a petition at any time within the six-month period, or for a 90-day period thereafter [Welf. & Inst. Code § 654; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.514(e)(2); see In re Michael D. (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 1280, 1283-1284, 260 Cal. Rptr. 30 (construing six-month limitation period); see also People ex rel. Kottmeier v. Superior Court (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 1536, 1540-1542, 239 Cal. Rptr. 920 (pre-1989 amendment case; petition must be filed within six-month period (now extended by additional 90 days), because period is jurisdictional)].

If the probation officer determines that a minor on informal supervision has not become involved in a specific program within 60 days, the probation officer must immediately file, or request that the prosecuting attorney file, a petition. However, if in the judgment of the probation officer, the interest of the minor and the community can be protected, the probation officer must make a diligent effort to proceed under the program of informal supervision [Welf. & Inst. Code § 654; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.514(e)(2)].

The California Rules of Court set forth explicit factors to be considered by the probation officer when considering whether to institute a program of informal supervision and are similar to the factors considered in determining whether to settle at intake as discussed in [b], above [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 5.514, 5.516(b)].

A probation officer's decision not to place a minor on or to recommend that a minor be placed on informal supervision is reviewable by the juvenile court. If the probationofficer has abused his or her discretion in making the decision, such as by refusing to consider informal supervision unless the minor admits guilt, or on the basis of an inability to make restitution, the juvenile court may order the probation department to nevertheless consider informal supervision [see Paul D. v. Superior Court (1984) 158 Cal. App. 3d 838, 842-843, 205 Cal. Rptr. 77 ; Charles S. v. Superior Court (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 741, 749-751, 187 Cal. Rptr. 144, 653 P.2d 648] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Admission to Offense Not Required. Many probation departments require that a minor admit the offenses alleged against them as a prerequisite for inclusion into a program of informal supervision pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 654. This practice or policy is improper and subject to a preemptory writ of mandate ordering a trial court to dismiss a petition against a minor and ordering a probation department to admit the minor to a program of informal supervision, under certain circumstances. The factors to be considered in determining a minor's eligibility for informal supervision are contained within Cal. Rules of Court, Rule 5.516(b). Although consideration of the minor's attitude is included in the list of factors [Rule 5.516(b)(4)], each minor who is otherwise eligible for informal supervision is entitled to an individualized assessment of their suitability for the program, in light of all of the relevant factors [see Kody P. v. Superior Court (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 1030, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 763] .

[iii] By Prosecuting Attorney

In the affidavit discussed in [1], above, requesting a prosecuting attorney to file a wardship petition, the probation officer may recommend that the minor be placed on informal supervision if the probation officer believes that the minor will benefit from the program [Welf. & Inst. Code § 654.2(b)]. Furthermore, the prosecuting attorney may refer a matter back to the probation officer for whatever action the probation officer deems appropriate if it appears to the prosecuting attorney that the minor may benefit from a program of informal supervision [Welf. & Inst. Code § 653.5(c)].

[iv] By the Court Once a Petition Has Been Filed

If the prosecuting attorney files a petition in a Welf. & Inst. Code § 602 case, the court may, without adjudging the minor a ward of the court and with the consent of the minor and the minor's parents or guardian, continue any hearing on the petition for six months, so that the minor may participate in a program of informal supervision [Welf. & Inst. Code § 654.2(a)]. The program of supervision will require the minor's parents or guardian to participate with the minor in counseling or education programs [Welf. & Inst. Code § 654]. Fifteen days before the program's conclusion, the probation officer will be required to submit to the court a follow up report of the minor's participation in the program. The minor and the minor's parents or guardian will be required to appear at the conclusion of the six-month period. If the minor successfully completes the program, the petition will be dismissed; if not, proceedings on the petition will proceed. However, if at the end of the six months the probation officer recommends additional time to enable the minor to complete the program, the court may order and additional six months of informal supervision. In this case, the minor and the minor's parents will be ordered to appear at three-month intervals [Welf. & Inst. Code § 654.2(a)]. In any event, the court's jurisdiction to resume adjudicatory proceedings in informal cases, pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 654.2, terminates no later than the anniversary date of the filing of the petition [In re Anthony B. (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 677, 682-683, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 349] .

Except in an unusual case in which the interests of justice would best be served and the court specifies on the record the reasons for its decision, no minor is eligible for informal supervision in any of the following situations specified in [i], above [Welf. & Inst. Code § 654.3].

The court may grant informal supervision over the objection of the prosecuting attorney and the probation officer [Charles S. v. Superior Court (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 741, 749-751, 187 Cal. Rptr. 144, 653 P.2d 648] .

The court may not make a true finding on the allegations in the petition and subsequently order informal supervision [In re Omar R. (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 1434, 1437-1438, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 912] . The purpose of informal supervision is to avoid the consequences of a sustained petition. To this end, if a minor successfully completes informal supervision, the petition is dismissed. If informal supervision is not satisfactorily completed the remedy is to proceed with a jurisdictional hearing [In re Adam R. (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th 348, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 76] . Similarly, no procedure exists to convert a formal probation disposition into an informal supervision agreement after jurisdiction has been established. A motion pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 654.2 must be made prior to the jurisdictional hearing [In re Adam D. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 100, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 15] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Formal Recommendation for Informal Supervision. In those cases where the prosecuting attorney has filed a wardship petition on a minor who is generally ineligible for informal supervision [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 654.3], there is nothing prohibiting the probation officer or minor's counsel from recommending supervision pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 654 to the court. Factors that are often considered in granting informal supervision in this context include: the age of the minor, the passage of a significant period of time since the minor was previously place on informal supervision, and the relationship of the minor to the victim to whom restitution is owed (e.g., parent).

It can be argued that by granting informal supervision in this manner, which would involve a court appearance by the minor on the petition filed, the court would impress upon the minor the importance of the term of informal supervision. The court can further emphasize this by setting an ex parte review date with the minor to check on their progress prior to the termination of the informal supervision period.

[v] Supervision of Youthful Intoxicated Driver in Lieu of Petition

If a minor is charged with driving while under the influence of alcohol or drugs, under either Veh. Code § 23140 or 23152, the probation officer may, in lieu ofrequesting that the prosecuting attorney file a wardship under Welf. & Inst. Code § 602 (criminal offenses), delineate a program of supervision for the minor. However, the probation officer must cause the citation for the violation of Veh. Code § 23140 or 23152 to be heard and disposed of by the judge, referee, or traffic hearing officer pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 257 (conduct of hearing for traffic offenses) and 258 (disposition alternatives after minor found guilty of traffic offense) as a condition of the program of supervision. The probation officer is not prevented from requesting that the prosecuting attorney file a wardship petition against the minor pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 602, but should employ the informal supervision procedure if, in the probation officer's judgment, the interest of the minor and the community can be protected by proceeding under informal supervision [Welf. & Inst. Code § 654.1].

Any minor who is placed in a program of informal supervision for an offense involving the possession, use, sale, or other furnishing of a controlled substance listed in Health & Safety Code §§ 11053-11058, public intoxication [Penal Code § 647(f)], or driving while intoxicated [Veh. Code §§ 23140, 23152] will be required to participate in and successfully complete an alcohol or drug education program [Welf. & Inst. Code § 654.4].

[d] Submission to Prosecuting Attorney in Welf. & Inst. Code § 602 Cases

If the probation officer determines that proceedings should be commenced to declare a person a ward of the juvenile court under Welf. & Inst. Code § 602 (criminal offense), the probation officer may send the affidavit, discussed in [1], above, to the prosecuting attorney. The affidavit must be submitted to the prosecuting attorney within 48 hours if it appears to the probation officer that [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 653.5(c); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.514]:

- A felony referral is being made for a minor who was 14 years of age or older at the date of the offense [Welf. & Inst. Code § 653.5(c)(3)].

- A second felony referral is being made for a minor who was under 14 years of age at the date of the offense [Welf. & Inst. Code § 653.5(c)(2)].

- The minor has previously been placed in a program of informal probation pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 654 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 653.5(c)(7); see discussion in [ii], above].

- The minor has committed an offense in which the restitution owed to the victim exceeds $1,000 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 653.5(c)(8) ("victim" as defined in former Welf. & Inst. Code § 729.6(a)(1) (now see Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6(j)) and "restitution" as defined in former Welf. & Inst. Code § 729.6(d) (now see Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6))].

- The minor is of any age and is being referred to the probation officer for any of certain specified serious criminal offenses [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 653.5(c)(1), (4), (5), (6); see also Health & Safety Code §§ 11350, 11377; Penal Code §§ 136.1, 137, 186.22, 245.5, 288(b), 289, 626.9, 626.10, 1203.09, 12022.5].

In addition the probation officer must refer any matter to the prosecutor in which it appears that the minor has been referred for any violation of an offense listed in Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(b), (d)(2), or (e), allegedly committed when the minor was 14 years or older [Welf. & Inst. Code § 653.5(c)(1)]. Cal. Rules of Court, Rule 5.516(c) lists fifteen factors to be considered by the probation officer in determining whether to refer the matter to the prosecuting attorney. These factors include whether the alleged conduct involved physical harm or threat of harm to person or property, whether the child has serious problems in school, at home or in the community, and the attitudes of the child and parent or guardian. If it appears to the prosecuting attorney that (1) the affidavit was not properly referred, (2) the offense for which the minor was referred should be charged as a misdemeanor, or (3) the minor may benefit from a program of informal supervision, the prosecuting attorney must refer the matter back to the probation officer for whatever action the probation officer may deem appropriate [Welf. & Inst. Code § 653.5(c)].

[4] Informal Juvenile and Traffic Court

Offenses specified in Welf. & Inst. Code § 256 may be heard by juvenile hearing officers (formerly known as traffic hearing officers) in the "Informal Juvenile and Traffic Court." While these hearings may result in the imposition of various orders similar to probation supervision, wardship is not established and the terms and conditions imposed are generally less severe than if the minor is made a ward of the court under Welf. & Inst. Code § 602 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 258].

Violations of Vehicle Code §§ 23136, 23140, 23152, and 23153, which involve driving a vehicle with a blood alcohol level of 0.01 or higher, or driving under the influence of alcohol and/or a drug, are specifically excluded from the jurisdiction of the "Informal Juvenile and Traffic Court."

All other Vehicle Code violations that are not felonies, as well as various other offenses, remain within the informal court's jurisdiction [Welf. & Inst. Code § 256].

Decisions on citations for violations not brought on a Section 601 or 602 petition, or heard before a referee pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 247-254, do not provide a right to appeal. The remedy for hearings in the Informal Juvenile and Traffic Court is a request for rehearing, via a motion to set aside the decision, before a juvenile court judge [In re K.S. (2003) 112 Cal. App. 4th 118, 121-122, 5 Cal. Rptr. 3d 39] .

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
C. Intake and Investigation

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.36

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.36 Decision Not to Commence Proceedings

[1] In General

If the probation officer does not forward an application to the prosecuting attorney within 21 court days the application was filed, the probation officer must endorse on the applicant's affidavit the decision not to proceed further, indicate the reasons for his or her decision, and immediately notify the applicant of the action taken or the decision rendered. The probation officer must retain the affidavit and endorsement for a period of 30 days after such notice to the applicant [Welf. & Inst. Code § 653.7].

[2] Review of Decision Not to Commence Proceedings

The probation officer or, in the case of an application based on Welf. & Inst. Code § 601 (habitual truancy or disobedience), the probation officer or the district attorney, has effectively denied an application to commence juvenile court proceedings when he or she fails to forward the application to the prosecuting attorney within 21 court days after the application is filed [Welf. & Inst. Code § 655(a), (b)]. An applicant may, within 10 court days after receiving notice of the probation officer's (or district attorney's) decision not to file a petition [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 653.7], apply to the prosecuting attorney to review that decision. The prosecuting attorney may either affirm the decision of the probation officer (or district attorney) or commence juvenile court proceedings [Welf. & Inst. Code § 655(a), (b); see Welf. & Inst. Code § 601.3(e) (initiation of delinquency proceedings by district attorney for truancy); but see Welf. & Inst. Code § 655(c) (Welf. & Inst. Code § 655(b) may not be construed to allow district attorneys to file wardship petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 601, except as specifically allowed by Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 601.3(e), 653)].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
C. Intake and Investigation

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.37

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.37 Initiation of Juvenile Court Wardship Proceedings

[1] Filing Petition

If the case is not settled at the intake stage or if a program of informal supervision is not instituted, the probation officer will then initiate formal juvenile court proceedings. A proceeding in the juvenile court to declare a minor a ward of the court under Welf. & Inst. Code § 601 (minor alleged to be habitually disobedient, truant, or beyond the control of the parent or guardian) is commenced by the filing with the court, by the probation officer, of a petition [Welf. & Inst. Code § 650(a); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.520(b)(2)].

A proceeding in the juvenile court to declare a minor a ward of the court under*Welf. & Inst. Code § 602* (minor alleged to have violated a law or ordinance) is commenced by the filing with the court, by the prosecuting attorney as petitioner, of a petition [Welf. & Inst. Code § 650(c); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.520(b)(3)]. The applicable statute of limitations is that which would apply in an adult case [see In re Gustavo M. (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 1485, 1493, 1495, 263 Cal. Rptr. 328 (Penal Code § 801's three-year statute of limitation applies to juvenile felony cases); see also Penal Code §§ 799-805.5 (statutes of limitation in adult cases)].

[2] Refiling Petition After Dismissal for Failure to File Within Time Limitations

Despite applicable time limitations, the characterization of juvenile court proceedings as not criminal in nature and conducted for the protection and benefit of the youth in question has led some courts to find that petitions dismissed without a hearing because of a time problem may be properly refiled and new proceedings commenced [Neil G. v. Superior Court (1973) 30 Cal. App. 3d 572, 576, 106 Cal. Rptr. 505] .

[3] Form and Contents of Petition

A petition to commence proceedings in the juvenile court to declare a minor a ward of the court must be verified and contain the following [Welf. & Inst. Code § 656; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.524(b)]:

- The name of the court to which the petition is addressed.

- The title of the proceeding.

- The code section or sections, with subdivision or subdivisions, under which the proceedings are instituted and, if the petition is filed under Welf. & Inst. Code § 602 (criminal violation), the specific code sections alleged to have been violated and, regarding each count, whether it is a misdemeanor or felony [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 656.1; see also form set out in Ch. 328, Juvenile Courts: Dependency Proceedings, § 328.352].

- The name, age, address, if any, of the minor on whose behalf the petition is brought.

- The names and resident addresses, if known to petitioner, of all parents and guardians of such minor. If there is no parent or guardian residing within the state, or if the place of residence is not known to petitioner, the petition must also contain the name and residence address, if known, of any adult relative residing within the county or, if there is none, the adult relative residing nearest to the location of the court.

- A concise statement of facts, separately stated, to support the conclusion that the minor on whose behalf the petition is being brought is the person within the definition of each of the sections and subdivisions under which the proceedings are being instituted.

- The fact that the minor on whose behalf the petition is brought is detained in custody or is not detained in custody, and if he or she is detained in custody, the date and precise time the minor was taken into custody.

- A notice to the father, mother, spouse, or other person liable for support of the minor of the following:

  - Welf. & Inst. Code § 903 may make that person, the estate of that person, and the estate of the minor liable for the cost of the care, support, and maintenance of the minor in any county institution or any other place in which the minor is placed, detained, or committed pursuant to an order of the juvenile court.

  - Welf. & Inst. Code § 903.1 may make that person, the estate of that person, and the estate of the minor liable for the cost to the county of legal services rendered to the minor by a private attorney or a public defender appointed pursuant to the order of the juvenile court.

  - Welf. & Inst. Code § 903.2 may make that person, the estate of that person, and the estate of the minor liable for the cost to the county of the probation supervision of the minor by the probation officer pursuant to the order of the juvenile court.

- The liabilities established by these sections are joint and several.

- In a proceeding alleging that the minor comes within the provisions of Welf. & Inst. Code § 601, notice to the parent, guardian, or other person having control or charge of the minor that failure to comply with the compulsory school attendance laws is an infraction, which may be charged and prosecuted before the juvenile court judge sitting as a municipal court judge. In these cases, the petition must also include:

- Notice that the parent, guardian, or other person having control or charge of the minor has the right to a hearing on the infraction before a judge other than the judge who has heard or is to hear the proceeding pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 601.

- The notice must explain the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 170.6 (concerning peremptory challenges of judges).

- If a proceeding is pending against a minor child for a violation of Penal Code §§ 594.2, 640.5, 640.6, or 640.7 (graffiti), a notice to the minor's parent or legal guardian that, if the minor is found tohave violated either or both of these provisions, any community service that may be required of the minor may be performed in the presence, and under the direct supervision, of the parent or legal guardian pursuant to these provisions, and that, if the minor is personally unable to pay any fine levied for the violation of these provisions, the parent or legal guardian is liable for payment of the fine.

- If applicable, the intent to aggregate other offenses under Welf. & Inst. Code § 726.

- A notice to the parent or guardian that if the minor is ordered to make restitution to the victim, or to pay fines or penalty assessments, the parent or guardian may be liable for the payment.

[4] Verification of Petition

Any petition filed in juvenile court to commence proceedings that is not verified may be dismissed without prejudice by the court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 656.5; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.524(b)].

[5] Amendment of Petition

The provisions of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 469-475, relating to variance and amendment of pleadings in civil actions, apply to petitions and proceedings in the juvenile court to the same extent and with the same effect as if proceedings under juvenile court rules were civil actions [Welf. & Inst. Code § 678; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.524(d)]. Specifically, the juvenile court has discretion to permit amendment of a wardship petition to correct or make more specific the factual allegations in support of the offense when the nature of the charge remains unchanged [In re Man J. (1983) 149 Cal. App. 3d 475, 197 Cal. Rptr. 20] . This principle has also been applied to the deletion of allegations not supported by evidence adduced at trial [In re Marcus T. (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 468, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 451] .

[6] Setting Petition for Hearing

On the filing of the petition, the clerk of the juvenile court must set the petition for a jurisdiction hearing within 30 days, except that, in the case of a minor detained in custody at the time of the filing of the petition, the petition must be set for hearing within 15 judicial days from the date of the order of the court directing such detention [Welf. & Inst. Code § 657(a); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.774(a), (b); see also the discussion in § 329.35].

[7] Notice Requirements

[a] Persons Entitled to Notice by Clerk of Court

When the petition is filed, the clerk of the juvenile court issues a notice with a copy of the petition attached to it. The clerk must serve the notice on the minor, if the minor is eight or more years of age, and on each parent, guardian, or adult relative whose residence addresses are set forth in the petition. In addition, the clerk must thereafter, but before the hearing, serve notice on all such persons whose residence addresses become known to the clerk. The clerk must also issue a copy of the petition to the minor's attorney and to the district attorney, if notified that the district attorney wishes to receive such petition, containing the time, date, and place of the hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 658; see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.524(f)].

[b] Contents of Notice Issued by Clerk

The notice issued by the clerk of the court must contain the following information [Welf. & Inst. Code § 659; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.524(b)]:

- The name and address of the person to whom the notice is directed.
- The date, time, and place of the hearing on the petition.
- The name of the minor on whose behalf the petition has been brought.
- Each section and subdivision under which the proceeding has been instituted.
- A statement that:
  - The minor and his or her parent, guardian, or adult relative to whom the notice is required to be given are entitled to have an attorney present at the hearing on the petition.
  - If the parent, guardian, or adult relative is indigent and cannot afford an attorney, and if the minor or the parent, guardian, or adult relative desires to be represented by an attorney, the parent, guardian, or adult relative should promptly notify the clerk of the juvenile court.
  - In the event counsel or legal assistance is furnished by the court, the parent or guardian or adult relative will be liable to the county, to the extent of his, her, or their financial ability, for all or a portion of the cost of the assistance.
- A statement that the parent or parents or responsible relative or guardian may be liable for the costs of support of the minor in a county institution.
- A statement that the parent or guardian of the minor may be liable for the payment of restitution, fines, or penalty assessments that the minor is ordered to pay to the victim.

[c] Time Requirements for Service of Notice

[i] When Minor Is Detained

If the minor is detained, the clerk of the juvenile court must serve the notice anda copy of the petition on all persons required to receive the notice and copy, either personally or by certified mail with return receipt (by first-class mail if all persons entitled to notice were present at detention hearing), as soon as possible after the petition is filed, and at least five calendar days prior to the hearing, unless the hearing is set less than five days from the filing of the petition, in which case the notice and copy must be served at least 24 hours prior to the hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 660(a)].

[ii] When Minor Is Not Detained

If the minor is not detained, the clerk must serve the notice and a copy of the petition on all persons required to receive them, either personally or by first-class mail, at least 10 days prior to the time set for hearing. If the person resides outside the county, the clerk of the juvenile court must mail the notice and a copy of the petition to the person as soon as possible after the petition is filed, and at least 10 days before the time set for hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 660(c)].

[d] Failure to Respond to Notice

A nondetained minor who has failed to appear in court in response to a mailed notice of petition may have a warrant issued for their arrest if (1) it appears to the court that personal service has been unsuccessful or the whereabouts of the minor are unknown, and all reasonable efforts to locate and personally serve the minor have failed; or (2) it appears to the court that the minor has willfully evaded service of process [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 660, 663].

[e] Service on Minor's Attorney

Service on the minor's attorney constitutes service on the minor's parent or guardian [Welf. & Inst. Code § 660(d)].

[f] Waiver of Notice

Service may be waived by any person by voluntary appearance entered in the minutes of the court or by written waiver of service filed with the clerk of the court at or prior to the hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 660(c); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.524(g)].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
C. Intake and Investigation

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.38

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.38 Interim Orders

Once a petition has been filed, the court may issue certain ex parte orders primarily designed to protect the child pending adjudication of the petitioned matter [Welf. & Inst. Code § 213.5(a), (b)]. These orders include:

- Enjoining any person from molesting, attacking, threatening, sexually assaulting, stalking, or battering the child who is the subject of the wardship petition, or any other child in the household.

- Excluding any person from the dwelling of the person of the person who has care and custody of the child.

- Enjoining the child from contacting, threatening, stalking or disturbing the peace of any person the court finds to be at risk from the conduct of the child, or with whom association would be detrimental to the child.

When an emergency condition exists, as described in Gov. Code § 68115, the presiding judge may request, and the Chair of the Judicial Council may authorize, an extension of time for filing a case by deeming that the date or dates upon which the condition existed are holidays for the purpose of computing time. Included in the list of emergency conditions described is a large influx of criminal cases resulting from a large number of arrests within a short period of time, threatening the orderly operation of a superior court location [Gov. Code § 68115].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
C. Intake and Investigation

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated §§ 329.39-329.49

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

[Reserved]

§§ 329.39[Reserved]

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
D. Detention

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.50

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.50 Detention Hearing

[1] Nature and Purpose of Hearing

When a petition is filed to commence delinquency proceedings in the case of a minor who is already temporarily detained, the court must hold a detention hearing to determine whether the minor should continue to be detained pending the jurisdiction hearing on the petition [Welf. & Inst. Code § 632].

PRACTICE TIP:

Report by Probation Officer. In most counties, the probation officer will present a report at the detention hearing with information about the minor and the offense, as well as a recommendation regarding detention. Since this report will carry a great deal of weight with the court, and may be the only evidence presented, the attorney should attempt to confer with the probation officer before the report is written, and suggest a plan that would allow the minor to remain out of custody, while protecting the public and the minor. The attorney should also give the probation officer any favorable information regarding the minor of the facts of the offense.

A juvenile detention hearing is not the equivalent of an adult preliminary hearing [In re Korry K. (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 967, 970-971, 175 Cal. Rptr. 91] .

The minor is entitled to contest the reasons for detention at the hearing, even if the superior court has already found jurisdiction [In re Talbott (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 1290, 1295, 254 Cal. Rptr. 421] .

[2] Maximum Detention Period

[a] Prior to Filing Petition

Generally, a minor taken into custody by a peace officer or probation officer must be released within 48 hours unless a petition is filed to declare the minor a ward of the court or criminal complaint has been filed [Welf. & Inst. Code § 631(a)]. For certain misdemeanors, a minor taken into custody without a warrant must be released within 48 hours unless a petition is filed to declare the minor a ward of the court and a detention hearing held [Welf. & Inst. Code § 631(b)]. This time limit includes noncourt hours but excludes nonjudicial days [In re Tan T. (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 1398, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 758] .

[b] Before Detention Hearing Based on Petition

[i] General Rule

If a petition has been filed in juvenile court against the minor in custody alleging that the minor has committed a felony or a misdemeanor involving violence, the threat of violence, or the possession or use of a weapon, or any other offense if the minor is currently on probation or parole, a detention hearing is required to be commenced as soon as possible, but no later than the expiration of the next judicial day after the petition is filed [Welf. & Inst. Code § 632(a); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.752(f); see Alfredo A. v. Superior Court (1994) 6 Cal. 4th 1212, 1232, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 623, 865 P.2d 56 (upholding Welf. & Inst. Code § 632(a) when detention hearing is held within 72 hours of arrest; otherwise, requiring separate, timely judicial determination of probable cause)].

If the minor is not brought before a judge or referee of the juvenile court within the period prescribed, he or she must be released from custody [Welf. & Inst. Code § 632(c)]. When an emergency condition exists, as described in Gov't Code section 68115, the presiding judge may request, and the Chair of the Judicial Council may authorize, an extension of time by deeming that the date or dates upon which the condition existed are holidays for the purpose of computing time. This section specifically applies to detention hearings [Gov. Code § 68115(d)] and includes in the list of emergency conditions described a large influx of criminal cases resulting from a large number of arrests within a short period of time, threatening the orderly operation of a superior court location [Gov. Code § 68115].

[ii] Certain Misdemeanors

If the minor is taken into custody without a warrant on the belief that he or she has committed a misdemeanor not involving violence, a threat of violence, or possession or use of weapons, and if the minor is not currently on probation or parole, the minor must be brought before the court for a detention hearing as soon as possible, but in no event beyond 48 hours after being taken into custody or the expiration of the next judicial day, whichever is later [Welf. & Inst. Code § 632(b); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.752(e)(2)]. Additionally, if the child has been taken into custody on a warrant or by the authority of the probation officer, the detention hearing must be commenced as soon as possible, but no later than 48 hours, excluding nonjudicial days, after the minor has been taken into custody [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.752(e)(1)].

If the minor will not be brought before the judge or referee of the juvenile court within 24 hours, the decision not to do so is subject to written review and approval by a probation officer who is a supervisor as soon as possible after it is known that the minor will not be brought before the judge or referee within 24 hours, unless the person making the decision is a probation officer who is a supervisor [Welf. & Inst. Code § 632(b)].

If the minor is not brought before a judge or referee of the juvenile court within the period prescribed, he or she must be released from custody [Welf. & Inst. Code § 632(c)].

[3] Service and Notice of Filing Prior to Hearing

Immediately on filing the petition, the minor must be served with a copy of the petition and be notified of the time and place of the detention hearing. Counsel of record and each parent or guardian of the minor must also be notified, either orally or in writing, of the time and place of the detention hearing, if the whereabouts of each parent or guardian can be ascertained by due diligence [Welf. & Inst. Code § 630(a); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.524(f)].

[4] Grounds for Continuance

On motion of the minor, parent, or guardian, the court must continue a detention hearing for one judicial day [Welf. & Inst. Code § 638; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.550(c)(1)]. On motion of the minor, parent, or guardian, the court may also grant a reasonable continuance to prepare any relevant evidence the moving party desires to present on the issue of detention [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.550(c)(1)]. Unless otherwise ordered by the court, the minor must remain in custody pending completion of the detention hearing [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.550(c)(1)].

[5] Explanation by Court of Proceedings at Commencement of Hearing

At the beginning of the initial hearing, the court must inform the minor and the parent or guardian, if present, of the contents of the petition, the reasons why the minor was taken into custody, the nature and possible consequences of juvenile court proceedings. They must also be informed of the right of the minor and his or her parent or guardian to be represented by counsel at every stage of the proceedings [Welf. & Inst. Code § 633; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 5.754(a) and*5.534(g)*; see further discussion in § 329.51].

After explaining the nature of the proceedings and the right to counsel, the court must next inform those present of each of the minor's following rights:

- The right to remain silent, and that anything the minor says may be used against him or her in the pending or any other proceeding.

- The right to confront and to cross-examine the persons who prepared any police reports, probation reports, or other documents submitted by the petition, as well as any witness examined by the court during the detention proceedings.

- The right to use the process of the court to compel the attendance of witnesses on the minor's behalf.

- The right to present to the court whatever relevant evidence the minor, parent, or guardian, or their counsel, desires to present [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.534(j)].

[6] Examination by Court

Subject to the minor's privilege against self-incrimination, the court must examine the minor, parents, guardian, or other person having knowledge relevant to the grounds for detention and must hear any relevant evidence the minor, parents, guardian, or their counsel desires to present [Welf. & Inst. Code § 635; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.756(b)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Examination of Minor. Counsel should object to any questions addressed to the minor regarding the facts of the case, since the answers could be used against the minor at a later time.

[7] Rights of Minor During Hearing

At any detention proceeding, the minor has a privilege against self-incrimination. The minor, parent, or guardian and the attorney for those persons must be permitted to inspect any police report, probation reports, and all other documents that are filed with the court or that were made available to the probation officer in preparing the probation report [Welf. & Inst. Code § 630(b); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 5.534(j), 5.756(a)].

[8] Admission of Allegation

At the detention hearing, or at any time thereafter, a minor who is alleged to come within the jurisdiction of the juvenile court to declare wardship may, with the consent of counsel, admit in court the allegations of the petition and waive the jurisdictional hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 657(b)].

If the minor wishes to admit the allegations of the petition or enter a plea of no contest at the detention hearing, the court may accept the admission or plea and proceed according to Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 7.754(b), 5.778(c). However, before accepting an admission or a no contest plea, the court must establish a knowledgeable waiver of rights in the record of the proceedings [In re Ronald E. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 315, 137 Cal. Rptr. 781, 562 P.2d 684] . For further discussion of admitting allegations and pleading no contest in delinquency proceedings, see § 329.73[2].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
D. Detention

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.51

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.51 Representation by Counsel at Hearing

[1] Advisement of Right by Court

If either the minor or the parent or guardian is unrepresented by counsel, the court must advise them of the right of the minor and the parent or guardian to be represented by counsel at the detention hearing and at every other stage of the proceedings and, when applicable, of the right to appointed counsel, subject to a claim by the county for reimbursement [Welf. & Inst. Code § 633; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.534(g); see In re Ryan B. (1990) 216 Cal. App. 3d 1519, 1527, 265 Cal. Rptr. 629 (out-of-custody minor must be given notice and be advised of right to counsel before judicial authority may order detention; no statute authorizes detention hearings when juvenile appears out of custody without notice of possibility of detention)].

[2] Appointment of Counsel

[a] In General

If the minor appears at the detention hearing without counsel, the court must appoint counsel to represent the minor whether or not the minor is able to afford counsel, unless there is an intelligent and knowing waiver of the minor's right to counsel by the minor. If the parent or guardian does not furnish counsel, the court must appoint counsel, subject to a claim by the county for reimbursement by the parent or guardian [Welf. & Inst. Code § 634; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.534(h)(2)(A)].

The minor will not be permitted to represent himself or herself, however, unless he or she can demonstrate a rational and factual understanding of the proceedings against him or her. In making this determination, the juvenile court may factor in the age of the minor [In re Shawnn F. (1995) 34 Cal. App. 4th 184, 195-196, 40 Cal. Rptr. 2d 263] .

[b] When Conflict of Interest Exists Between Minor and Parent or Guardian

In any case in which it appears to the court that there is such a conflict of interest between a parent or guardian and the minor that one attorney could not properly represent both, the court must take appropriate action to eliminate the conflict of interest by appointing counsel in addition to that already employed [Welf. & Inst. Code § 634; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.534(h)(2)(C)].

[c] Right to Counsel Offense Specific

Any counsel, on entering an appearance on behalf of a minor, must continue to represent that minor unless relieved by the court on the substitution of other counsel or for cause [Welf. & Inst. Code § 634.6]. However, the minor's Sixth Amendment right to counsel is "offense specific" and only applies to the offense to which the right has attached. The exception to this rule exists when a charge or offense is "inextricably intertwined" or "closely related" to the matter in which right to counsel has attached [In re Robert E. (2000) 77 Cal. App. 4th 557, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 774] .

PRACTICE TIP:

In re Robert E*. and Welf. & Inst. Code § 634.6. Simply because a minor's right to counsel is offense specific, advocacy efforts on behalf of a child should not terminate at the end of a jurisdictional or dispositional hearing. Too often the minor's real need for zealous advocacy begins once the dispositional orders are made but have yet to be implemented. To this end, ensuring that probation order and a dispositional case plan are being implemented in a manner favorable to the interests of the minor reflects the essence of juvenile law and is not inconsistent with the mandates of Robert E. Accordingly, counsel should aggressively monitor the minor's past disposition progress and bring to the court's attention any failings inherent in the implementation of the rehabilitative plan.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
D. Detention

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.52

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.52 Time Limits for Hearing Upon Detention

[1] Detention for Violation of Home Supervision

If the minor has been released on home supervision by the probation officer under Welf. & Inst. Code § 628.1 or by the court under Welf. & Inst. Code § 636, and thereafter the minor violates a written condition of home supervision that he or she has promised in writing to obey and is taken into custody, the minor must be brought before the court for a detention hearing as soon as possible, but no later then 48 hours, excluding nonjudicial days, after he or she was taken into custody. If the hearing is not commenced within that time, the minor must be released immediately [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 7.752(h)].

[2] Detention Following Transfer or Pending Change of Placement

A detention hearing is required to be commenced as soon as possible, but no later than 48 hours, excluding nonjudicial days, after the minor first arrives at a detention facility within the county if any of the following occur [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.752(g)]:

- The minor was taken into custody in one county and transported to another.
- The minor was ordered transferred in custody by the juvenile court of another county under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.610.
- The minor is a ward temporarily placed in a secure facility pending a change of placement.

If the hearing is not timely commenced, the minor must be released immediately, except that, if the minor is a ward under Welf. & Inst. Code § 602 and is awaiting a change of placement, he or she will be placed in a suitable, nonsecure facility [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.752(i)].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
D. Detention

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.53

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.53 Grounds for Detention

[1] General Rule

[a] Court Finding Required

No minor may be ordered detained by the court unless certain grounds are found to exist, in which event the court may order that the minor be detained in custody in a suitable place designated by the court, not limited to the juvenile hall, or be placed on home supervision release under Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 628.1 and 636 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 635; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.760(c); see also discussion in §§ 329.32[8], 329.34[3]].

The necessary grounds for detention are discussed in [b] through [f], below [Welf. & Inst. Code § 635; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.760(g)-(k)].

[b] Violation of Court Order

In determining whether to release or detain the minor on the grounds that the minor has violated an order of the court, the court must consider the following factors [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.760(g)]:

- The specificity of the court order allegedly violated.
- The nature and circumstances of the alleged violation of the court order.
- The severity and gravity of the alleged violation of the court order.
- Whether the violation endangers the minor or others.

- The prior history of the minor insofar as it relates to the failure to obey orders or directives of the court or probation officer.

- Whether there are means to assure the minor's presence at any scheduled court appearance without detaining the minor.

- The nature of the underlying conduct or offense being alleged which brings the minor before the juvenile court.

- The likelihood, that if the petition is sustained the minor will be ordered removed from the physical custody of the parent or guardian on completion of the proceedings.

[c] Escape From Commitment

No minor may be detained on the grounds that he or she has escaped from a previous commitment unless the court first finds that [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.760(h)]:

- The minor has been ordered committed by the juvenile court to the Youth Authority or to a county juvenile home, ranch, camp, forestry camp, or juvenile hall; and

- The minor escaped from commitment, including any escape from the custody of any officer or person in whose lawful custody the minor was placed during the commitment.

[d] Likelihood of Flight

In determining whether to release or detain the minor on the grounds that the minor is likely to flee, the court must consider the following factors [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.760(i)]:

- Whether the minor has previously fled the jurisdiction or failed to appear in court.

- Whether there are means to assure the minor's presence at any scheduled court appearance without detaining the minor.

- Whether the minor promises to appear at any scheduled court appearance.

- Whether the minor has a prior history relating to the failure to obey orders or directives of the court or probation officer.

- Whether the minor is a resident within the county.

- Whether the nature and circumstances of the conduct or offense alleged make it appear likely that the minor would flee to avoid the jurisdiction of the court.

- Whether there exists an unstable home or school situation which makes it appear likely that the minor would flee to avoid the jurisdiction of the court.

- Whether the minor, absent a danger to the minor, would probably be released in an adult court on modest bail.

[e] Protection of Minor

In determining whether to release or detain the minor on the grounds that such detention is for the protection of the minor, the court must consider the following factors [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.760(j)]:

- Whether there are means to ensure the minor's care and protection pending any scheduled court appearance.

- Whether the minor is addicted to or is in imminent danger from the use of a controlled substance or intoxicant.

- Whether there exist any other compelling circumstances that make detention reasonably necessary.

[f] Protection of Person or Property of Another

In determining whether to release or detain the minor on the grounds that such detention is of reasonable necessity for the protection of the person or property of another, the court must consider the following factors [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.760(k)]:

- Whether the offense alleged involved physical harm to the person or property of another.

- Whether the minor's prior history involves physical harm or the substantial threat of physical harm to the person or property of another.

- Whether there exist any other compelling circumstances that make detention reasonably necessary.

[2] Probation Officer Requirements

A probation officer who is recommending that a minor be detained must submit documentation to the court that continued placement in the home is contrary to the minor's welfare, that reasonable efforts were made to prevent or eliminate the need for the removal of the minor from the home, and the nature and results of services provided to the minor [Welf. & Inst. Code § 636]. In the event that the minor is detained, if the probation officer believes that reasonable efforts by the minor or their parents will enable the minor to return safely to the home, a case plan must focus on efforts for the return of the minor to their home [Welf. & Inst. Code § 636.1].

[3] Required Findings

Whenever the court orders the minor detained, on any of the grounds listed in [1][a], above, as further discussed in [1][b]-[f], above, the court, if appropriate, will make all of the following findings on the record and in the written orders [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.760(e)]:

- Continuance in the home of the parent or legal guardian is contrary to the minor's welfare.

- Temporary placement and care is vested with the probation officer pending disposition or further order of the court.

- Reasonable efforts have been made to prevent removal or the lack of effort was reasonable because of the emergency nature of the removal.

[4] Specialized Mental Health Treatment

When the court finds a minor to be a person described by Welf. & Inst. Code § 602 and believes that the minor may need specialized mental health treatment while the minor is unable to reside in his or her natural home, the court must notify the director of the county mental health department in the county where the minor resides. The county mental health department must perform, for all such minors, the duties required under Welf. & Inst. Code § 5697.5 (procedures to evaluate minor's condition and determine appropriate treatment) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 635.1].

Welf. & Inst. Code § 635.1 does not restrict the provisions of emergency psychiatric services to those minors who have not yet reached the point of adjudication or disposition, nor operate to restrict evaluations at an earlier stage of the proceedings or to restrict the use of Penal Code §§ 4011.6 (commitment of prisoner to mental facility) and 4011.8 (voluntary application for mental health services) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 635.1].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
D. Detention

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.54

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.54 Order to Detain

[1] In General

If after hearing the evidence presented in the detention hearing, the court finds that any of the criteria for detention exist, it may order the juvenile detained in the juvenile hall or other suitable place designated by the juvenile court. Such an order and the findings of fact in support of such an order must be entered in the records of the court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 636; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.760(e)].

[2] Order to Reappear

On any hearing or rehearing on the issue of detention, the court may order the minor or any parent or guardian of the minor who is present in court to again appear before the court, the probation officer, or the county financial evaluation officer at a time and place specified in the order [Welf. & Inst. Code § 639].

[3] Home Supervision in Lieu of Detention by Court

If after the detention hearing, the court finds that the criteria of Welf. & Inst. Code § 628.1 (release of minor to home supervision by probation officer) [see discussion in § 329.34[3]] are applicable, the court may place the minor on home supervision for a period not to exceed 15 judicial days. The court must enter such an order together with its findings of fact in support of the order in the records of the court. If the court releases the minor on home supervision, the court may continue, modify, or may impose new conditions on a minor released for the first time. If there are new or modified conditions, the minor must be required to sign a written promise to obey the conditions [Welf. & Inst. Code § 636].

[4] Request for Prima Facie Hearing

After a decision of detention has been made, the minor or the minor's attorney may request further evidence regarding the prima facie case or the grounds of detention by invoking the right to confront and to cross examine the preparers of reports or documents relied upon by the court in support of its initial decision. If that request is made, a detention rehearing must be held within three judicial days to consider testimony by those persons. If the detention rehearing cannot be held within three judicial days due to the unavailability of a witness, the court may continue the rehearing for a period not to exceed five judicial days from commencement of the detention hearing. If the preparer of any report or document is not made available for purposes of confrontation and cross-examination by the minor, the report or document must not be considered by the court in making its detention decision. If the prima facie case is not established, the minor must be released from detention [Welf. & Inst. Code § 637; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.764].

[5] Rehearing

[a] Prohibited When All Report Preparers Available

If the preparers of all reports or documents relied upon by the court in making its detention decision are present in court or are otherwise available to the minor for purposes of confrontation and cross examination at the detention hearing, there is no right to a detention rehearing [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.762(c)].

[b] After Absence of Parent or Guardian

When a detention hearing is held and no parent or guardian of the minor is present and no parent or guardian has had actual notice of the hearing, a parent or guardian of the minor may file an affidavit setting forth such facts with the clerk of the juvenile court. The clerk will immediately set the matter for rehearing at a time within 24 hours, excluding Sundays and nonjudicial days, from the filing ofthe affidavit. On the rehearing, the court proceeds in the same manner as on the original hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 637; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.762(a)].

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
D. Detention

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.55

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.55 Detention Facilities

[1] General Restrictions

Except as discussed in [2] and [3], below (minors detained under Welf. & Inst. Code § 601 or 602), no court, judge, referee, peace officer, or employee of a detention facility may knowingly detain any minor in a jail or lockup [Welf. & Inst. Code § 207.1(a)].

A "jail" is any building that contains a locked facility administered by a law enforcement or governmental agency to detain adults charged with violations of criminal law pending trial or to hold convicted adult criminal offenders sentenced for less than one year. A "lockup" is any locked room or secure enclosure under the control of a sheriff or other peace officer that is primarily for the temporary confinement of arrested adults [Welf. & Inst. Code § 207.1(i)(1), (2)].

[2] Minors Detained Pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 601

Except as discussed below, no minor who is taken into custody solely on the ground that he or she is a person described by Welf. & Inst. Code § 601 (habitually disobedient or truant) or adjudged to be such or made a ward of the juvenile court solely on that ground, can be detained in any jail, lockup, juvenile hall, or other secure facility [see discussion in § 329.20[2], [3]].

Generally, a Welf. & Inst. Code § 601 minor must be detained in a sheltered-care or crisis resolution home as provided for in Welf. & Inst. Code § 654 (informal supervision), or in a nonsecure facility [Welf. & Inst. Code § 207(a); see Welf. & Inst. Code § 636.2 (operation and maintenance of nonsecure detention facilities); see discussion in Ch. 327, Juvenile Courts: Jurisdiction and General Procedures, § 327.40 et seq. and in Ch. 328, Juvenile Courts: Dependency Proceedings, § 328.45].

For a discussion relating to what constitutes a "nonsecure facility," see Ch. 328, Juvenile Courts: Dependency Proceedings, § 328.127. However, a Welf. & Inst. Code § 601 minor may be held in a secure facility, other than a facility in which adults are held in secure custody, in any of the following circumstances [Welf. & Inst. Code § 207(b)]:

- For up to 12 hours after having been taken into custody for the purpose of determining if there are any outstanding wants, warrants, or holds against the minor in cases in which the arresting officer or probation officer has cause to believe that such wants, warrants, or holds exist.

- For up to 24 hours after having been taken into custody, in order to locate the minor's parent or guardian as soon as possible and to arrange the return of the minor to his or her parent or guardian.

- For up to 24 hours after having been taken into custody, in order to locate the minor's parent or guardian as soon as possible and to arrange the return of the minor to his or her parent or guardian, when the parent or guardian is a resident outside the state wherein the minor was taken into custody, except that the period may be extended to no more than 72 hours when the return of the minor cannot reasonably be accomplished within 24 hours due to the distance of the parents or guardian from the county of custody, the difficulty in locating the parents or guardian, or the difficulty in locating resources necessary to provide for the return of the minor.

A "secure facility" is one designed and operated to insure that all entrances and exits are under the exclusive control of the facility's staff, whether or not the person detained has freedom of movement within the perimeters of the facility. It may also be a facility that relies on locked rooms and buildings, fences, or physical restraint in order to control the behavior of its residents [Welf. & Inst. Code § 206].

Every county must keep a record of each Welf. & Inst. Code § 601 minor detained in a secure facility, the place and length of time of such detention, and the reasons why such detention was necessary. Every county must report, on a monthly basis, this information to the Department of the Youth Authority, on forms to be provided by that agency. The Youth Authority must not disclose the name of the detainee, or any personally identifying information contained in reports sent to the Youth Authority under Welf. & Inst. Code § 207(e) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 207(e)].

[3] Minors Detained Pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 602

A minor 14 years of age or older who is taken into temporary custody by a peace officer on the basis of being a person described by Welf. & Inst. Code § 602 (minor committing criminal offenses) and who, in the reasonable belief of the peace officer, presents a serious security risk of harm to self or others, may be securely detained in a law enforcement facility that contains a lockup for adults if all of the following conditions are met [Welf. & Inst. Code § 207.1(d); see discussion in § 329.20[4]]:

- The minor is held in temporary custody for the purpose of investigating the case, facilitating release of the minor to a parent or guardian, or arranging transfer of the minor to an appropriate juvenile facility.

- The minor is detained in the law enforcement facility for a period that does not exceed six hours, subject to limited extension in the case of inclement weather, acts of God, or natural disasters that result in thetemporary unavailability of transportation [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 207.1(g)].

- The minor is informed at the time he or she is securely detained of the purpose of the secure detention, of the length of time the secure detention is expected to last, and of the maximum time of six hours that the secure detention is authorized to last.

- Contact between the minor and adults confined in the facility is restricted in accordance with Welf. &

Inst. Code § 208.

- The minor is adequately supervised.

- A log or other written record is maintained by the law enforcement agency showing the offense that is the basis for the secure detention of the minor in the facility, the reasons and circumstances forming the basis for the decision to place the minor in secure detention, and the length of time the minor was securely detained.

Any other Welf. & Inst. Code § 602 minor taken into temporary custody by a peace officer may be taken to a law enforcement facility that contains a lockup for adults and may be held in temporary custody in the facility for the purposes of investigating the case, facilitating the release of the minor to a parent or guardian, or arranging for the transfer of the minor to an appropriate juvenile facility. However, while in the law enforcement facility, the minor may not be securely detained and must be supervised in a manner that ensures there will be no contact with adults in custody in the facility [Welf. & Inst. Code § 207.1(d)].

If the minor is held in temporary, nonsecure custody within the facility, the peace officer must exercise one of the dispositional options authorized by Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 626 and 626.5 (alternative procedures regarding disposition of minor) without unnecessary delay and, in every case, within six hours [Welf. & Inst. Code § 207.1(d); see Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 207.1(e) (requirements for Youth Authority to assist with enforcement), 207.1(f), (h) (conditional exemption from compliance for county that does not have juvenile hall)].

A peace officer or employee of an adult detention facility or jail may escort a minor into the detention facility or jail for the purpose of administering an evaluation, test, or chemical test pursuant to Veh. Code § 23157 if all of the following conditions are met [Welf. & Inst. Code § 207.1(j)]:

- The minor is taken into custody by a peace officer on the basis of being a person described by Welf. & Inst. Code § 602 and there is no equipment for the administration of the evaluation, test, or chemical test located at a juvenile facility within a reasonable distance of the point where the minor is taken into custody.

- The minor is:

  - Not locked in a cell or room within the adult detention facility or jail.

  - Under the continuous, personal supervision of a peace officer or employee of the detention facility or jail.

  - Not permitted to come in contact or remain in contact with in-custody adults.

- The evaluation, test, or chemical test pursuant to Veh. Code § 23157 is performed as expeditiously as possible, so that the minor is not unnecessarily delayed within the adult detention facility or jail. On completion of the evaluation, test, or chemical test, the minor is removed from the detention facility or jail as soon as reasonably possible, and is not held in custody in the detention facility or jail for a period in excess of two hours.

[4] Minors Detained on Transfer to Adult Court

Different rules apply to a minor who is alleged to have committed a specified serious criminal offense when he or she is 14 years of age or older, whose case is transferred to a criminal court because he or she is not a fit and proper subject to be dealt with under the juvenile court law, or who has been charged directly in or transferred to a criminal court [see Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 707(b), (d)(2), (e), 707.01, 707.1]. In that case, the minor may be detained in a jail or other secure facility for the confinement of adults if certain specified conditions are met [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 207.1(b); see also discussion in § 329.63[11][b][iv]].

[5] Segregation of Minors Detained Under Welf. & Inst. Code § 601 From Minors Detained Under Welf. & Inst. Code § 602

A Welf. & Inst. Code § 601 (habitually disobedient or truant) minor detained in juvenile hall may not be permitted to come in contact or remain in contact with any person detained on the basis that he or she had been taken into custody on the ground that he or she is a person described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 602 (criminal offenses) or adjudged to be such or made a ward of the juvenile court on that ground [Welf. & Inst. Code § 207(c)]. Minors detained in juvenile hall pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 601 and 602 may be held in the same facility provided they are not permitted to come in contact or remain in contact within that facility [Welf. & Inst. Code § 207(d)].

[6] Restrictions on Contact With Adult Prisoners

When any person under 18 years of age is detained in or sentenced to any institution in which adults are confined, it is unlawful to permit such person to come in contact or remain in contact with such adults [Welf. & Inst. Code§ 208(a); but see Welf. & Inst. Code § 208.5 (minor who turns 18 in custody may remain in contact with other incarcerated minors until age 19)].

Furthermore, no person who is a ward or dependent child of the juvenile court who is detained in or committed to any state hospital or other state facility may be permitted to come in contact or remain in contact with any adult person who has been committed to any state hospital or other state facility as a mentally disordered sex offender under the provisions of Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 6300-6330 or with any adult person who has been charged in an accusatory pleading with the commission of any sex offense for which registration of the convicted offender is required under Penal Code § 290 and who has been committed to any state hospital or other state facility pursuant to Penal Code § 1026 or 1370 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 208(b); see discussion in § 329.91[2]].

"Contact" does not include participation in supervised group therapy or other supervised treatment activities, participation in work furlough program, or participation in hospital recreational activities that are directly supervised by employees of the hospital so long as living arrangements are strictly segregated and all precautions are taken to prevent unauthorized associations [Welf. & Inst. Code § 208(c)].

[7] Restriction on Commitment to State Prison

No person under the age of 14 may be committed to a state prison or be transferred there from any other institution [Welf. & Inst. Code § 211(a)]. While a minor under the age of 16 years who has been convicted in adult court may be sentenced to state prison, he or she may not be housed in any facility under the jurisdiction of the Department of Corrections until he or she attains the age of 16 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 211(b)].

[8] Juvenile Hall

[a] Mandate for Establishment

The board of supervisors in every county must provide and maintain, at the expense of the county, in a location approved by the judge of the juvenile court, a suitable house or place for the detention of wards and dependent children of the juvenile court and of persons alleged to come within the jurisdiction of the juvenile court. Such house or place is known as the "juvenile hall" of the county [Welf. & Inst. Code § 850].

The juvenile hall must not be in, or connected with, any jail or prison and must not be deemed to be or treated as a penal institution. It must be conducted in all respects as nearly like a home as possible [Welf. & Inst. Code § 851].

[b] Standards for Juvenile Halls

The California Youth Authority must adopt minimum standards for the operation and maintenance of juvenile halls for the confinement of minors. Any violation of such standards renders a juvenile hall unsuitable for the confinement of minors [Welf. & Inst. Code § 210].

For further discussion relating to the California Youth Authority, see § 329.95[6].

[c] Inspection of Jail, Juvenile Hall or Lockup

The judge of the juvenile court of a county, or, if there is more than one such judge, any of the judges of the juvenile court, must, at least annually, inspect any jail, juvenile hall, or lockup that, in the preceding calendar year, was used for confinement of any minor for more than 24 hours. The judge must note in the minutes of the court whether the jail, juvenile hall, or lockup is a suitable place for confinement of minors [Welf. & Inst. Code § 209(a)]. Pursuant to legislation effective on July 1, 1995, the Board of Corrections must likewise conduct an annual inspection of each jail, juvenile hall, lockup, or special purpose juvenile hall situated in the state that, during the preceding calendar year, was used for confinement of any minor for more than 24 hours pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 207.1(b) or (d) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 209(a)].

If either the judge of the juvenile court or the board, after inspection of a jail, juvenile hall, or lockup, finds that it is not being operated and maintained as a suitable place for the confinement of minors, the juvenile court or the board must give notice of its findings to all persons having authority to confine minors and, commencing 60 days thereafter, the jail, juvenile hall, or lockup may not be used for confinement of minors until such time as the judge or board finds, after reinspection of the institution, that the conditions that rendered the facility unsuitable have been remedied, and such facility is a suitable place for confinement of minors [Welf. & Inst. Code § 209(a)].

The Board of Corrections may inspect any law enforcement facility that contains a lockup for adults and that it has reason to believe may not be in compliance with the requirements of Welf. & Inst. Code § 207.1(d) or with the certification requirements or standards adopted under Welf. & Inst. Code § 210.2. A judge of the juvenile court must conduct an annual inspection, either in person or through a delegated member of the appropriate county or regional juvenile justice commission, of any law enforcement facility that contains a lockup for adults that, in the preceding year, was used for the secure detention of any minor [Welf. & Inst. Code § 209(b)].

If either the judge or the board finds after inspection that the facility is not being operated and maintained in conformity with the requirements of Welf. & Inst. Code § 207.1(d) or with the certification requirements or standards under Welf. & Inst. Code § 210.2, the juvenile court or the board must give notice of its finding to all persons having authority to securely detain minors in the facility. In addition,commencing 60 days after notice of the finding, the facility must not be used for the secure detention of a minor until the judge or the board finds, after reinspection, that the conditions that rendered the facility unsuitable have been remedied, and the facility is a suitable place for the confinement of minors in conformity with all requirements of law. The custodian of each facility that contains a lockup for adults may make any report as may be required by the board or juvenile court to effectuate the above-mentioned purposes [Welf. & Inst. Code § 209(b)].

The board must collect annual data on the number, place, and duration of confinements of minors in jails and lockups, as defined in Welf. & Inst. Code § 207.1(i), and must annually publish the information in the form it deems appropriate for the purpose of providing public information on continuing compliance with the requirements of Welf. & Inst. Code § 207.1 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 209(c)].

[d] Availability of Abortion

No condition or restriction on obtaining an abortion by a female detained in any local juvenile facility, pursuant to the Therapeutic Abortion Act [Health & Safety Code § 123400 et seq.], other than those contained in that act, may be imposed. Females found to be pregnant and desiring abortions must be permitted to determine their eligibility for an abortion pursuant to law and, if determined to be eligible, must be permitted to obtain an abortion [Welf. & Inst. Code § 220].

Any female in the custody of a local juvenile facility must have the right to summon and receive the services of any physician and surgeon of her choice to determine whether she is pregnant. If she is found to be pregnant, she is entitled to a determination of the extent of the medical services needed by her and to the receipt of such services from the physician and surgeon of her choice. Any expenses occasioned by the services of a physician and surgeon whose services are not provided by the facility must be met by the female [Welf. & Inst. Code § 222].

[e] Availability of Material for Personal Hygiene, Information Regarding Family Planning, and Birth Control Measures

Any female confined in a state or local juvenile facility must, on her request, be allowed to continue to use materials necessary for personal hygiene with regard to her menstrual cycle, reproductive system, and birth control measures as prescribed by her physician [Welf. & Inst. Code § 221(a)].

Any female confined in a state or local juvenile facility must, on her request, be furnished by the confining state or local agency with information and education regarding prescription birth control measures [Welf. & Inst. Code § 221(b)].

Family planning services must be offered to each and every woman inmate at least 60 days prior to a scheduled release date. On request, any woman inmate must be furnished by the confining state or local agency with the services of a licensed physician or with services necessary to meet her family planning needs at the time of her release [Welf. & Inst. Code § 221(c)].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
D. Detention

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated §§ 329.56-329.59

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

[Reserved]

§§ 329.56[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
E. Transfer to Adult Court

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.60

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.60 Process for Transfer

[1] Historical Background

Until January 1, 2000, California had a singular process for transferring juveniles to adult court. This process, often referred to as "judicial waiver," allowed transfer of certain minors after a hearing, by a judge pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 707 et. seq. After that date, the "No More Victims' Violence Prevention & School Safety Strategy" (Senate Bill 334) created an automatic transfer mechanism for certain minors charged with specified offenses.

On March 7, 2000, California voters approved Proposition 21, the "Gang Violence and Juvenile Crime Prevention Act of 1998." This initiative significantly broadened the circumstances in which prosecutors are authorized to file charges against minors 14 years of age and older in adult court. While it did not lower the minimum age that children could be tried as adults, that was last done by legislation in 1994, Proposition 21 did confer upon prosecutors the discretion to bring specified charges against certain minors directly in criminal court, without a prior adjudication by the juvenile court that the minor is unfit for a disposition under juvenile court law. These newly conferred powers have since been held to be constitutional with respect to the separation of powers doctrine [Cal. Const., art. III, section 3; Manduley v. Superior (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 537, 117 Cal. Rptr. 2d 168] .

[2] Proposition 21

There are now three procedures by which a minor may be transferred to adult court. The first procedure appears to require that minors, age 14 and over, be charged in adult court when it is alleged that they have committed certain offenses [Welf. & Inst. Code § 602(b)].

The second mechanism authorizes the prosecutor to file directly in adult court when certain offenses and circumstances are alleged [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(d)].

Finally, the traditional "judicial waiver" process has been expanded but remains a viable certification option [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(a)-(c)].

These procedures are commonly referred to as statutory waiver, prosecutorial waiver, and judicial waiver, respectively.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
E. Transfer to Adult Court

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.61

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.61 Statutory Waiver: Cases That Require Filing in Adult Court

Any minor, age 14 or older, must be filed in a court of criminal jurisdiction when charged with the following offenses:

- First degree murder with special circumstances, when it is alleged that the minor personally killed the victim [Welf. & Inst. Code § 602(b)(1)].

- Certain sex offenses where it is alleged that the minor personally committed the offense and One Strike circumstances as enumerated in Penal Code § 667.61(d) or (e) apply [Welf. & Inst. Code § 602(b)(2)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Filing Discretion. While the language of Welf. & Inst. Code § 602(b) appears to require filing certain matters in adult court, there is an enormous amount of discretion retained by the prosecutor under this section.

Unless the required circumstances and personal commission/killing allegations are affirmatively pled, this section will not apply.

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
E. Transfer to Adult Court

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.62

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.62 Prosecutorial Waiver: Cases That May Be Filed in Adult Court

There are several different circumstances in which the prosecutor may file a case in either juvenile or adult court. The first includes individuals, age 16 or older, who are charged with an offense listed in Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(b) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(d)(1)]. This offense list now includes all robbery [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(b)(3)] and voluntary manslaughter [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(b)(30)].

The second group of prosecutorial waiver cases is applicable to minors, age 14 or older [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(d)(2)]. Children in this class may be filed directly in adult court if they are charged with one of the following: an offense punishable by death or imprisonment for life if committed by an adult [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(d)(2)(A)]; an offense in which the minor personally used a firearm in the commission or attempted commission of a felony, as described in Section 12022.5 of the Penal Code [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(d)(2)(B)]; or an offense listed in Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(b) with one or more of the following circumstances:

- The minor has previously been found to be a person described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 602(b) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(d)(2)(e)(i)].

- The offense was "gang related" as defined in Penal Code § 186.22(f) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(d)(2)(c)(ii)].

- The offense was a "hate crime" as described in Penal Code § 426.6 et seq. [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(d)(2)(c)(iii)].

- The victim of the offense was 65 years of age or older, or disabled, and that disability was known or reasonably should have been known to the minor at the time of the offense [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(d)(2)(c)(iv)].

A third category of prosecutorial waiver cases applies to minors, age 16 or older, who have been previously adjudged a ward of the court for a felony offense committed when they were age 14 or older, if the current offense:

- Involves a victim 65 years or older, or disabled, and that disability was known or reasonably should have been known to the minor at the time of the offense [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(d)(3)(A)];

- Is a "hate crime" as described in Penal Code § 422.6 et seq. [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(d)(3)(B)]; or

- Is committed for the benefit of, at the direction of, or in association with any criminal street gang as prohibited by Penal Code § 186.22 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(d)(3)(C)].

In any case where the prosecutor has filed an accusatory pleading against a minor in a court of criminal jurisdiction, the case proceeds according to the laws applicable to a criminal case. In conjunction with the preliminary hearing, pursuant to Penal Code § 738, the magistrate shall make a finding that reasonable cause exists to believe that the minor comes within the appropriate provisions of Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(d). If reasonable cause is not established, the criminal court shall transfer the case to the juvenile court having jurisdiction over the matter offense [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(d)(4)].

When a minor is certified to adult court by prosecutorial waiver, tried by a court of criminal jurisdiction and found guilty by the trier of fact, the judge may commit the minor to the Youth Authority in lieu of a state prison term, subject to the limitations of offense: Welf. & Inst. Code § 1732.6 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(d)(6)]. These limitations include prohibitions on CYA commitments when the minor has been convicted of any of the following:

- An offense described in Penal Code § 667.5(c) or 1192.7 where the sentence is life, an indeterminate term to life, or a determinate term which when added to the minor's age would exceed 25 years [Welf. & Inst. Code § 1732.6(a)].

- An offense described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 602(b) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 1732.6(b)(1)].

- An offense described by Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(d)(1)-(3), if the enumerated circumstances are found true by the trier of fact [Welf. & Inst. Code § 1732.6(b)(2)].

- An offense described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 1732.6(b)(3).

If a minor, directly filed upon in criminal court pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(d), is not convicted of the 707(b) offense(s) that were the basis of the prosecutorial waiver, there is no subsequent binding effect keeping the child in adult court on the basis of future delinquency. To the extent that the "once unfit always unfit" application of Welf. & Inst. Code § 707.01 is relevant to cases directly filed in adult court, it is negated where the offense authorizing the direct filing is not sustained [People v. Superior Court (Marcelina M.) (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 651, 656-657, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 940] .

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
E. Transfer to Adult Court

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.63

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.63 Judicial Waiver

[1] Fitness Hearings

The process of certification via a motion made by the petitioner causing a hearing before the court to occur continues to exist, albeit in a somewhat altered state. The provisions which place the burden of proof on the prosecution to show that a minor, 16 or 17 years of age, is not amenable to the care, treatment and training programs available through the juvenile court remain for children not otherwise described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(a)(1).

The presumption that a minor is not amenable to juvenile court programs is applicable to individuals, 14 or older, who are alleged to have committed an offense specified in the expanded list of offenses found in Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(b) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(c)]. In addition, a minor 16 years of age or older is presumed unfit if he or she has committed any felony and has been found to have committed two or more prior felony offenses after he or she had attained the age of 14 years [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(a)(2)].

[2] Request for Hearing

[a] By Prosecuting Attorney

The prosecuting attorney may, prior to the attachment of jeopardy, request a hearing to determine whether the minor is a fit and proper subject to be dealt with under the juvenile court law [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.766(a); see In re Anna S. (1979) 99 Cal. App. 3d 869, 871-873, 160 Cal. Rptr. 495 (prosecuting attorney as petitioner entitled to request hearing under Welf. & Inst. Code § 707)].

[b] By Minor's Attorney

Generally, a minor does not have a right to initiate a fitness proceeding in order to demand treatment as an adult [In re

Anna S. (1979) 99 Cal. App. 3d 869, 872, 160 Cal. Rptr. 495] . However, if a minor reaches the age of 18 after the juvenile court petition is filed, he or she has the right to demand treatment as an adult and receive a trial by jury, and is entitled to waive the benefits of the juvenile court process [Rucker v. Superior Court (1977) 75 Cal. App. 3d 197, 200-203, 141 Cal. Rptr. 900] . He or she may do so only by moving for a finding of unfitness for disposition as a juvenile pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 707, 707.01, or 707.1, and not by a demand to be tried as an adult [see In re Rodney F. (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 177, 182, 249 Cal. Rptr. 424] .

A minor who can move for a finding of unfitness because he or she has attained majority age does not have an absolute right to be found unfit. The juvenile court still retains discretion to determine fitness to be tried as a juvenile, under the statutory criteria [Joey W. v. Superior Court (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 1167, 1171-1175, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 486] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Determining When to Move for Finding of Unfitness. There are a limited number of situations where the attorney should consider moving for treatment in adult court for a minor who has turned 18. Those situations include:

- When the evidence against the minor is sufficiently weak that it is unlikely that a jury would convict, whereas a juvenile court might.

- When the sentence in adult court may result in a significantly shorter period of time in custody. This situation may arise when the subject has an extensive juvenile history that would lead to a juvenile court commitment to California Youth Authority, whereas the present offense in adult court would result in a jail commitment, probation or diversion.

[3] Time and Notice of Fitness Hearing

The fitness hearing is required to be held and the court is required to rule on the issue of fitness, before the jurisdiction hearing begins. Absent a continuance, the jurisdiction hearing is required to begin within 30 calendar days from the date the petition is filed if the minor is not detained, and within 15 judicial days from the date of the detention order if the minor is detained, unless the minor is released from detention before the jurisdiction hearing, in which case the jurisdiction hearing may be reset to within 30 calendar days from the date the petition is filed [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 5.766(c), 5.774(a), (b)].

For discussion of the grounds for and procedure relating to continuances, see the discussion in § 329.70[4].

Notice of the fitness hearing must be given at least five judicial days before the fitness hearing [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.766(b)].

[4] Representation by Counsel

Unless the court finds the minor has intelligently waived counsel, the minor must be represented by counsel at the fitness hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 700; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.534(g)].

[5] Probation Officer's Report

[a] Requirement

The probation officer must investigate, and provide a report to the court a report on, the behavioral patterns and social history of the minor that will be considered for unfitness [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(a); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.768(a)]. A juvenile court has no jurisdiction to find a minor unfit for treatment as a juvenile without first having received and considered the probation department's social study report [Raul P. v. Superior Court (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d 294, 298-299, 200 Cal. Rptr. 360] .

[b] Contents

The probation officer's report must include information relevant to the determination whether or not the minor would be amenable to the care, treatment, and training program available through the facilities of the juvenile court, including information regarding the criteria for such amenability as listed in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 5.770 and 5.772 [see discussion in [10], [11], below].

The report may also include information concerning the following [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(a); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.768(a)]:

- The social, family, and legal history of the minor.
- Any statement the minor chooses to make regarding the alleged offense.
- Any statement by the parent or guardian.
- A "victim impact statement," as described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 656.2.
- A written or oral statement by the victim, the victim's parent or guardian if the victim is a minor, or the victim's next of kin if the victim is deceased [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(e)].
- If the minor is or has been under the jurisdiction of the juvenile court, a statement by the probation officer, social worker, or Youth Authority parole agent who has supervised the minor regarding the relative success or failure of any program of rehabilitation.
- Any other information relevant to the determination of fitness.

[c] Distribution of Report

The probation officer's report on the behavioral patterns and social history of the minor must be furnished to the minor, the parent or guardian, and all counsel at least 24 hours prior to commencement of the fitness hearing. A continuance of 24 hours must be granted on request of any party who has not been furnished the probation officer's report in accordance with this time limitation [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.768(c)].

[6] Admissibility of Statements Made to Probation Officer

Statements made by a minor to a probation office in a prefitness hearing investigation are not admissible in subsequent proceedings, at least for the purpose of proving guilt. [see Sheila O. v. Superior Court (1981) 125 Cal. App. 3d 812, 178 Cal. Rptr. 418 ; In re H. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 595, 156 Cal. Rptr. 344, 596 P.2d 1] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Possible Use of Minor's Statements for Impeachment. Whether a minor's statement to the probation officer can be used for impeachment at a later trial has not been decided. Therefore, counsel must make the difficult decision of whether to allow the probation officer to interview the minor regarding the facts of the offense. Factors such as the likelihood of prevailing at the fitness hearing, the extent of mitigation the minor's statement offers, and the extent to which the case has been fully investigated and the minor fully prepared, should all be considered. If the attorney decides against having the minor give a statement regarding the offense, he or she should inform the probation officer that this is the attorney's decision, so that it will not be held against the minor. The attorney might still allow an interview regarding subjects other than the offense, such as the minor's personal history.

[7] Recommendation by Probation Officer

The probation officer must make a recommendation to the court as to whether the minor is a fit and proper subject to be dealt with under the juvenile court law [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.768(b)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Role of Attorney. Since the probation officer's recommendation will carry a great deal of weight with the court, the attorney for the minor should make every effort to influence the probation officer. The probation officer should be contacted before the report is written, and offered any mitigating evidence, or character references that would benefit the minor.

[8] Relevant Evidence

At the fitness hearing, the court must admit into evidence and consider theprobation officer's report on the behavioral patterns and social history of the minor and any other relevant evidence that the prosecuting attorney or minor may submit as to whether or not the minor is a fit and proper subject to be dealt with under the juvenile court law [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(a); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.772(c), (d)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Evidence on Behalf of Minor. Any evidence tending to show the minor's suitability for treatment as a juvenile should be introduced at the hearing. Such evidence might include favorable letters from former teachers, neighbors, relatives, ministers or priests, employers, or any other concerned parties.

If the minor's participation in the alleged crime was minimal or was the result of some mitigating circumstances such as intoxication or duress, counsel should consider presenting evidence of these mitigating circumstances during the hearing unless a premature disclosure of the ultimate defense of the case might be unwise. Evidence tending to prove prior attempts to rehabilitate the minor may come from old probation files and reports, testimony of prior probation officers, juvenile hall or camp counselors. Psychologists or other behavioral experts could testify regarding the minor's amenability to treatment and programs offered by the juvenile court.

[9] Request for a Prima Facie Hearing

In those cases where a minor is presumed or not presumed unfit, the minor can require the prosecution to establish a prima facie case that the acts constitute the offense alleged [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 7.772(b), 5.772; Edsel P. v. Superior Court (1985) 165 Cal. App. 3d 763, 211 Cal. Rptr. 869 ; People v. Superior Court (Zaharias M.) (1993) 21 Cal. App. 4th 302, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 838] . If a prima facie hearing is requested, the prosecution must produce the preparer of any report submitted to the court to establish that there is a prima facie case that the minor committed the act that gives rise to the presumption of unfitness [People v. Superior Court (Ronald H.) (1990) 219 Cal. App. 3d 1475].

The minor is not entitled to present an affirmative defense at a fitness hearing for purposes of showing that he or she did not commit the crime [In re Shannon B. (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 1235, 1246-1248, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 800] The defense can, however, subpoena and call percipient witnesses to defeat the presumption on any of the five criteria of unfitness [see discussion in [10][a], below].

PRACTICE TIP:

When to Request Prima Facie Hearing. In determining whether to request a prima facie hearing counsel must decide how likely it is that the prosecution will fail to meet it's burden, and must balance any possible advantages he or she may gain from discovery of evidence against the harm that may result when the court hears more details of the crime and the minor's involvement.

At least one appellate court has interpreted the evidentiary requirements for Prima Facie hearings, also known as Edsel P. hearings, in a slightly broader context. In Marcus W. v. Superior Court (2002) 98 Cal. App. 4th 36, 118 Cal. Rptr. 2d 919 , the court held that when incriminating statements were offered to establish a prima facie case that a minor committed an offense triggering the presumption of unfitness, the minor may move to suppress such statements. Thereafter, the juvenile court must hold a hearing on the suppression motion, including the opportunity of counsel for the minor to confront and cross-examine witnesses on the issue.

[10] Determination of Fitness

[a] Basic Criteria

The basis on which the court must make its determination whether or not the minor is a fit and proper subject to be dealt with under the juvenile court law is whether the minor would be amenable to the care, treatment, and training program available through the juvenile court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(a)-(e)]. The court must base this determination on an evaluation of the following five basic criteria [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(a)-(c); see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 5.770(b)(2), 5.772(c)(5)]:

- The degree of criminal sophistication exhibited by the minor.
- Whether the minor can be rehabilitated prior to the expiration of the juvenile court's jurisdiction.
- The minor's previous delinquent history.
- Results of previous attempts by the juvenile court to rehabilitate the minor.
- The circumstances and gravity of the offense alleged to have been committed by the minor.

[b] Applicable Standard and Burden of Proof

[i] When Prosecution Has Burden of Showing Unfitness

When the prosecution has the burden of proof to show that a minor is not amenable to the care, treatment and training programs available through the juvenile court (see § 329.63[1]), the presumption that the minor is "fit" for the court's jurisdiction may be rebutted based on an evaluation of any one ora combination of the criteria set out in [a], above [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.770(b)(2)].

For these purposes, if the court determines that one or more of the five criteria, set out in [a], above, apply to the minor, the court may nevertheless find that the minor is amenable to the care, treatment, and training program available through the juvenile court, and may find the child to be a fit and proper subject to be dealt with under juvenile court law [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.770(d)]. In evaluating each criterion, the court may consider extenuating or mitigating circumstances [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.770(e)].

[ii] When Burden Shifts to Defense to Show Fitness

A different standard will be applied, however, and the burden will shift to the defense, if the minor is 14 years of age or older and is charged with the commission of certain serious offenses. Such minors will be presumed unfit for juvenile court treatment when charged with one of the following felony offenses [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(b); see In re Sim J. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 94, 96-99, 45 Cal. Rptr. 2d 30 (listed offenses are restricted to felony offenses, and do not include misdemeanors)]:

- Murder.
- Attempted murder.
- Arson of an inhabited building or causing great bodily injury.
- Robbery.
- Rape with force or violence or threat of great bodily harm.
- Sodomy by force, violence, duress, menace, or threat of great bodily harm.
- Lewd or lascivious act as provided in Penal Code § 288(b).
- Oral copulation by force, violence, duress, menace, or threat of great bodily harm.
- Any offense specified in Penal Code § 289(a).
- Kidnapping for ransom, for purpose of robbery or with bodily harm.
- Assault with a firearm or destructive device, or by any means of force likely to produce great bodily injury.
- Discharge of a firearm into an inhabited or occupied building.
- Any offenses described in Penal Code § 1203.09.
- Any of the offenses listed in Penal Code § 12022.5 and § 12022.53.
- Any felony offense in which the minor personally used a weapon as listed in Penal Code § 12020(a).
- Any offense listed in Penal Code § 136.1 or 137.
- Manufacturing, compounding, or selling one-half ounce or more of any salt or solution of a controlled substance specified in Health & Safety Code § 11055(e).
- Any violent felony, as defined in Penal Code § 667.5(c) which would also constitute a felony violation of Penal Code § 186.22(b).
- Escape, by the use of force or violence, from any county juvenile hall, home, ranch, camp, or forestry camp in violation of Welf. & Inst. Code § 871(b), if great bodily injury is intentionally inflicted on an employee of the juvenile facility during commission of the escape.
- Torture as described in Penal Code §§ 206 and 206.1.
- Aggravated mayhem as described in Penal Code § 205.
- Carjacking, as described in Penal Code § 215, while armed with a dangerous or deadly weapon. (Applies to principals not personally armed [In re Travis W. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 368, 377] .)

- Kidnapping, as punishable in Penal Code § 208(d) or 209.5.

- Any offense described in Penal Code § 12034(c) or 12308 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(b); see Penal Code §§ 136.1, 137, 186.22(b), 288(b), 289, 667.5, 1203.09, 12022.5, 12308].

- Voluntary manslaughter.

In addition, a minor 16 years of age or older is presumed unfit if they are alleged to have committed any felony offense and have previously been found to have committed two or more felony offenses after the age of 14 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(a)(2)].

If a minor is presumed not to be a fit and proper subject to be dealt with under the juvenile court law, the presumption will be overcome if the court concludes, based on evidence, which may be of extenuating or mitigating circumstances, that the minor would be amenable to the care, treatment, and training program available through the facilities of the juvenile court based on an evaluation of the enumerated criteria discussed in [a], above [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.772(d)(3), (e)].

To determine that the minor is a fit and proper subject to be dealt with under the juvenile court law, the court must find amenability after considering each of thecriteria, and reciting findings in its order for each criterion, that the minor is fit and proper under each of the criteria [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.772(f)(3); see also People v. Superior Court (Zaharias M.) (1993) 21 Cal. App. 4th 302, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 838 ; People v. Superior Court (Robert L.) (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d 54, 63, 261 Cal. Rptr. 303 (before statutory presumption of unfitness may be overcome, court must sufficiently detail its reasons for its findings under each enumerated criteria)].

The minor has the burden of rebutting the presumption of unfitness, under each of the five criteria, by a preponderance of the evidence [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.772(a)].

The stricter standard for persons presumed to be unfit for juvenile court treatment does not apply if the minor is alleged only to have attempted to commit one of the offenses listed above [David P. v. Superior Court (1982) 127 Cal. App. 3d 417, 418-422, 179 Cal. Rptr. 673] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Rebutting Gravity. Since most, if not all, of the offenses that trigger the presumption of unfitness are extremely serious, a question frequently arises as to how the fifth criterion may be rebutted. To answer this question, Rene C. v. Superior Court (2006) 138 Cal. App. 4th 1, 41 Cal. Rptr. 3d 71 may be instructive. In this case, a 14-year-old charged with murder, attempted murder, and assault with a firearm was determined to be a fit and proper subject for juvenile court, despite the fact that the charges arose from a gang-related altercation. To reach this conclusion, the court examined evidence, which demonstrated that the minor's participation was less grave or less serious than the crime would lead a court to believe. Such evidence may come from the fact that the individual's culpability arises from his role as an aider and abettor. It may also come from the existence of a developmental disability, mental retardation, or organic brain dysfunction.

[c] Plea to Petition When Fitness Hearing Is Pending

In any case in which a hearing has been noticed to determine the fitness of the minor, the court must postpone the taking of a plea to the petition until the conclusion of the fitness hearing. No plea that may already have been entered may constitute evidence at the hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(a), (c)].

[11] Required Findings

[a] For Fitness

If at the conclusion of a fitness hearing where the minor was presumed "unfit," the court determines that the minor is a fit and proper subject to be dealt with under the juvenile court law, the court must make a finding to that effect, noted in the minutes of the court, and proceed to the jurisdiction hearing in the usual manner [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.772(f)(3), (g)(2)].

If, at the conclusion of a fitness hearing held under Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(c) or (a)(2) where the minor was presumed "unfit," the court determines that the minor is a fit and proper subject to be dealt with under juvenile court law, it must make specific findings that, based on the consideration and evaluation of all the criteria discussed in [10][a], above, (1) the minor would be amenable to the care, treatment, and training program of the juvenile court for reasons that must be recited in the order, and (2) the minor is a fit and proper subject to be dealt with under the juvenile court law. The recitation of findings must be for each criterion, and find that the minor is fit and proper under each and every one of those criteria. The court must then proceed to the jurisdiction hearing in the usual manner [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.772(d)(3), (f)(3), (g)(2); People v. Superior Court (Zaharias M.) (1993) 21 Cal. App. 4th 302, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 838] .

For a discussion of the relationship between a finding of fitness in a juvenile adjudication and the use of that adjudication as a "prior conviction" under the "Three Strikes You're Out" law, see discussion in § 329.99.

[b] For Unfitness

[i] In General

If, at the conclusion of a fitness hearing held where the minor was presumed "fit," the court determines that the minor is unfit, it must make findings, recited in the order (1) as to the minor's age at the time of the alleged offense and (2) that the minor would not be amenable to the care, treatment, and training program of the juvenile court, based on an evaluation of the criteria discussed in [10][a], above, which criteria must be specifically recited in the order [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.770(b), (c)(2)].

If the minor is charged with having committed a crime enumerated in Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(b), the court must find and recite in its order that either (1) the minor was 14 years or older at the time of the commission of the offense, and the offense is listed in Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(b) or (2) the minor was 16 years of age at the time of the commission of the alleged felony offense and that they had committed two or more felony offenses after the age of 14; and, in both cases, that (3) the minor would not be amenable to the care, treatment, and training program available through the juvenile court because of one or a combination of more than one of the criteria discussed in [10][a], above [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.772(f)(1), (2)].

[ii] Subsequent Use of Finding of Unfitness

If a minor is found to be unfit for juvenile court treatment but is already a ward of the juvenile court based on a previous adjudication, which did not result in aYouth Authority commitment, the juvenile court jurisdiction may be terminated within the discretion of the juvenile court judge upon a notice hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707.01(a)(1), (2)].

If the minor has petitions pending at the time he or she is found unfit for juvenile court treatment they will be transferred to adult court as long as jeopardy has not attached, and the minor was at least 16 years of age at the time of the alleged offense or the alleged offense is one for which the minor could be found unfit [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707.01(a)(3), (4)].

If the minor is convicted in criminal court of the violation that resulted in the finding of unfitness, all subsequent petitions alleging violations of the criminal laws prior to or after the finding of unfitness may be filed in adult court, if the minor was 16 years of age or older at the time of the alleged offense or if the alleged offense is one for which the minor could be found unfit [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707.01(a)(5)]. Subsequent criminal charges can be filed directly in adult court even if there was not a conviction of the violation that resulted in the finding of unfitness if the unfitness finding was based solely on either or both the minor's previous delinquent history or a lack of success of previous attempts by the juvenile court to rehabilitate the minor, and the minor was 16 years of age or older at the time of the alleged new violation or the alleged offense is one for which the minor could be found unfit [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707.01(a)(6)].

However, when the finding of unfitness assumes the truth of charges that later result in acquittal or dismissal, juvenile court jurisdiction over a subsequent petition or pending cases exists to the same extent that it existed before the finding of unfitness in the preceding case [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707.01(a)(6)]. The probation officer is not required to investigate or submit a behavioral study report for any subsequent charges that need not be filed in juvenile court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707.01(b)].

[iii] Procedure After Finding

If the minor is declared not a fit and proper subject under juvenile court law, or is a minor for whom charges in a petition or petitions in juvenile court have been transferred to a court of criminal jurisdiction pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 707.01, the district attorney, or other appropriate prosecuting officer, may file an accusatory pleading against the minor in a court of criminal jurisdiction [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707.1(a)]. The juvenile court petition shall then be dismissed without prejudice [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 5.770(f)(2), 5.772(g)(1)]. The case must proceed from that point according to the laws applicable to a criminal case.

If a prosecution has been commenced in another court but has been suspended while juvenile court proceedings are being held, the proceedings on that prosecution must be ordered to resume [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707.1(a)]. Due process does not prevent the judge who presided over the fitness hearing from presiding over the adult criminal proceedings, even if the minor divulged information to the judge at the fitness hearing that would not have been admissible at trial [People v. Bryant (1987) 190 Cal. App. 3d 1569, 1573-1574, 236 Cal. Rptr. 96] .

[iv] Order of Custody of Minor

The court must make an appropriate order under Welf. & Inst. Code § 707.1 relating to the custody of the minor pending prosecution. The juvenile court may order that a minor alleged to have committed an offense under Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(b) and who has been declared not a fit and proper subject under the juvenile court law be delivered to the custody of the sheriff on a finding that the presence of the minor in the juvenile hall would endanger the safety of the public or be detrimental to the other inmates detained in the juvenile hall.

Other minors declared not fit and proper subjects under juvenile court law, if detained, must remain in the juvenile hall pending final disposition by the criminal court or until they attain the age of 18, whichever occurs first. On attaining the age of 18, such a person who is detained in juvenile hall must be delivered to the custody of the sheriff unless the court finds that it is in the best interests of the person and the public that he or she be retained in juvenile hall. If the person requests a hearing, the transfer will not take place until after the court has made its findings [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707.1(b)].

A minor who is under the age of 18 years whose case has been transferred to adult court after a finding of unfitness or who is charged directly in a court of criminal jurisdiction pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 707.01 may be detained in a jail or other secure facility for the confinement of adults if all of the following conditions are met [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 207.1(b), 707.1(b)]:

- The juvenile court judge or the court of criminal jurisdiction makes its findings on the record and, in addition, finds that the minor poses a danger to the staff, other minors in the juvenile facility, or to the public because of the minor's failure to respond to the disciplinary control of the juvenile facility, or because the nature of the danger posed by the minor cannot safely be managed by the disciplinary procedures of the juvenile facility [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 207.6].

- Contact between the minor and adults in the facility is restricted in accordance with Welf. & Inst. Code § 208 [see discussion in § 329.55[6]].

- The minor is adequately supervised.

[v] Release on Bail or Recognizance

A minor found not a fit and proper subject to be dealt with under the juvenilecourt law must, on the conclusion of the fitness hearing, be entitled to bail consideration on the same circumstances, terms, and conditions as an adult alleged to have committed the same offense [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 207.1(c), 707.1(b)(4)].

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
E. Transfer to Adult Court

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.64

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.64 Proceeding in Criminal Court

[1] Grand Jury Indictment Permitted

In cases where the prosecutor is required to file a matter directly in adult court pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 602(b), recent case law has permitted the prosecution to be initiated by grand jury indictment or by way of information following a preliminary hearing. The same appears to be true in cases governed by the prosecutorial waiver provisions of Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(c). The appellate case which previously prohibited the use of indictment in both instances [People v. Superior Court (Gevorgyan) (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 602, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 668] has been disapproved in a recent Supreme Court decision which specifically discussed grand jury indictment in the context of Welf. & Inst. Code § 602(b) filings [Guillory v. Superior Court (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 168, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 879] .

[2] Report to Juvenile Court When No Conviction Results

In any case in which there is no subsequent conviction in the criminal court, the clerk of the criminal court will report that disposition to the juvenile court, to the probation department, to the law enforcement agency that arrested the minor, and to the Department of Justice. Unless the minor has a prior conviction in a criminal court, the clerk of the criminal court delivers to the clerk of the juvenile court all copies of the minor's record and obliterates the minor's name from any index or minute book maintained in the criminal court. The clerk of the juvenile court maintains the minor's criminal court record until such time as the juvenile court may issue an order that it be sealed [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707.4; see discussion in § 329.117].

[3] Conviction on Nonpredicate Offenses

When a minor has been found not to be a fit and proper subject for juvenile court after a fitness hearing in which he was presumed unfit, he is still subject to the criminal court's jurisdiction even when not convicted of the crime which triggered the statutory presumption [People v. Self (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 58, 61-63, 73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 501] . This is specifically applicable to minors' declared unfit after a judicial hearing and is in contrast to minor's against whom charges have been filed directly in adult court.

[4] Commitment to California Youth Authority

If the juvenile is found guilty in an adult court, he or she may be eligible for a California Youth Authority Commitment. However, the court may not commit to the Youth Authority any minor who has been convicted of certain serious or violent felonies and is sentenced to a determinate or indeterminate period of life such that the maximum number of years of potential confinement when added to the minor's age would exceed 25 years [Welf. & Inst. Code § 1732.6].

In order to determine eligibility under Welf. & Inst. Code § 1732.6, the trial court need not consider only the greatest term that can be imposed rather than the actual term the court intends to impose [People v. Rangel (1999) 70 Cal. App. 4th 350, 353-356, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 589] .

If the juvenile is eligible for a Youth Authority commitment, the court may, prior to sentence, remand the minor to the custody of the Youth Authority for a period not to exceed 90 days for the purpose of evaluation and report concerning the youth's amenability to training and treatment. A remand to the Youth Authority for an evaluation and report regarding amenability is mandatory prior to imposing a prison sentence for any minor who was under the age of 16 when he or she committed the offense. In all other cases, if after considering the recommendation of the probation department, the adult court decides not to remand for a report and evaluation of the minor's amenability, specific findings must be made [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707.2].

Consideration of the Youth Authority amenability report is only one factor that the court is required to consider in making its disposition determination. Although the court is not free to ignore the report, and must give it serious consideration, the court is nevertheless free to reject the recommendation [People v. Jones (1988) 46 Cal. 3d 585, 601-602, 250 Cal. Rptr. 635, 758 P.2d 1165 (1982 amendment to Welf. & Inst. Code § 707.2 retained requirement for report, but abrogated rule of People v. Carl B. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 212, 217-219, 155 Cal. Rptr. 189, 594 P.2d 14 , that court must give great weight to YA recommendation absent substantial countervailing considerations); see also People v. Martinez (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 1372, 1386-1388, 237 Cal. Rptr. 219 (1982 revision to Welf. & Inst. Code § 707.2 enlarged trial court's sentencing discretion, as specific reaction to Carl B.); see also People v. Prothro (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 166, 171-172, 263 Cal. Rptr. 433 (Jones requires only that record reflect that judge is aware of discretion and has rejected disposition on legitimate factors, and does not require judge to state reasons for exercising discretion to decline Youth Authority commitment)].

The other considerations in determining the appropriate disposition are the need to protect society, the interests of justice, the nature and seriousness of the offense, and the minor's needs [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707.2]. For example, if the minor entered into a plea bargain contemplating a term that would extend well beyond the time the minor would turn age 25, that factor may outweigh a favorable amenability report and justify a rejection of a Youth Authority recommendation [People v. Armendariz (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 906, 911-912, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d311] . If the Youth Authority finds the minor amenable to treatment, the trial court may nevertheless re-refer the minor to the Youth Authority for a second diagnostic report [People v. Gonzales (1986) 186 Cal. App. 3d 591, 596, 230 Cal. Rptr. 732] .

[5] Maximum Penalties

A minor who is prosecuted in criminal court is subject to different maximum penalties, depending upon the age at which they committed their offenses. For juveniles under the age of 16 who were 14 or 15 when the crime was committed, a life term without the possibility of parole is not permitted, leaving the maximum possible term as 25 years to life with the possibility of parole. For offenders 16 years of age or older, punishment may be a life term without the possibility of parole. In no case can a minor prosecuted in adult court be sentence to death [People v. Demirdjian (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 10, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3rd 184] .

[6] Review of Fitness Hearing Determination

[a] Availability

An order that a minor is or is not a fit and proper subject to be dealt with under the juvenile court law is not an appealable order. Appellate review of the order is by extraordinary writ. Any petition for review of a judge's order determining the minor unfit, or denying an application for rehearing of the referee's determination of unfitness, must be filed no later than 20 days after the minor's first arraignment on an accusatory pleading based on the allegations that led to the unfitness determination [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 5.770(i), 5.772(j)]. When the court must presume that a minor is not fit for treatment as a juvenile and the court, reaching a contrary conclusion, fails to make specific findings that each one of five statutory criteria have been considered, the People may challenge the court's order by a writ of mandate [People v. Superior Court (James B.) (1981) 122 Cal. App. 3d 263, 265-269, 175 Cal. Rptr. 733] .

The juvenile court's ultimate finding that a minor is a fit or unfit subject for treatment under juvenile court law is subject to review for error under an abuse of discretion standard [People v. Superior Court (Jones) (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 667, 680-681] .

[b] Continuance of Jurisdiction Hearing When Prosecuting Attorney Seeks Review of Fitness Finding

If the prosecuting attorney indicates an intention to seek review of a finding of fitness, the court, on the request of the petitioner, must grant a continuance of the jurisdiction hearing for not less than two judicial days to allow time within which to obtain a stay of further proceedings from the reviewing judge or appellate court [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 5.770(g), 5.772(h)].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
E. Transfer to Adult Court

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.65

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.65 Role of Judge or Referee in Subsequent Contested Jurisdiction Hearing

Unless the minor objects, a judge or referee who has conducted a fitness hearing may participate in any subsequent contested jurisdiction hearing relating to the same offense [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 5.770(h), 5.772(i)].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
E. Transfer to Adult Court

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.66

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.66 Reverse Remand

[1] In General

Minors convicted in adult court after having their cases directly filed there without a fitness hearing are subject to a range of consequences depending upon the crime for which they are convicted. If a minor is convicted of an offense that triggered the direct filing authority of the prosecutor, he or she is subject to the same sentence as an adult convicted of the identical offense [Penal Code § 1170.17(a)]. In the event that a minor is not convicted of at least one offense that triggered the direct filing, the possibility of remanding the matter back to juvenile court exists.

If the minor is only convicted of an offense that could not have been initiated in adult court without a fitness hearing, he or she shall receive a disposition pursuant to Penal Code § 1170.19(b), unless the prosecutor brings a motion for a fitness hearing. At that hearing, the minor is presumed fit and the prosecutor has the burden of proof under a standard similar to that set forth under Welf. Inst. Code § 707(a). If the minor is declared unfit, he or she shall be sentenced as an adult pursuant to Penal Code § 1170.19(a) [Penal Code § 1170.17(c)].

In matters where an issue exists as to whether a minor should be sentenced as a juvenile or adult after a conviction in adult court, the court must receive in evidence, read, and consider a social study pursuant to Penal Code § 1170.19(a)(4) only if a juvenile disposition is ordered. If the sentencing court has determined that an adult sentence is appropriate, no such report is required prior to the imposition of that sentence [People v. Garcia (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 987] .

Where the conviction is for the type of offense which, in combination with the person's age, does not make the minor eligible for transfer to adult court, he or she shall be subject to a disposition in accordance with Penal Code § 1170.19(b) [Penal Code § 1170.17(d)].

The California Supreme Court has recently held that the requirement of Welf. & Inst. Code § 1170.19(a)(4), that the criminal court must secure the prosecutor's consent before it can order a DJF [CYA] commitment violates the State Constitution's separation of powers doctrine (Cal. Const., Art. III, § 3) [People v. Thomas (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 635, 642, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 2] . This doesnot mean that a postconviction "fitness hearing," pursuant to the reverse remand provisions, is available in every case where a minor has been placed in adult court as a result of Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(d). The authority of the court to commit a minor, convicted in criminal court, to the DJF is still subject to the restrictions of Welf. & Inst. Code § 1732.6 [People v. Thomas (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 635, 643, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 2; see [2], below] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Prosecutor's Consent Questioned. The requirement of [Penal Code section 1170.19(a)(4), that a trial court secure a prosecutor's consent to order a juvenile disposition after a criminal trial may violate the state constitution's separation of powers doctrine. As opposed to the authority to directly file cases in adult court, as discussed in Manduley, Section 1170.19 deals with post-charging sentencing decisions. Consequently, an apparent distinction exists between prosecutorial involvement in the reverse remand process and constitutionally sanctioned venue decisions made prior to filing charges. While the separation of powers question relating to Section 1170.19 remains unanswered, a finding that prosecutorial consent is not required would pave the way for post conviction "fitness hearings" in virtually every case where a minor has been placed in adult court as result of Welf. Inst. Code § 707(d).

[2] Adult Sentence

When sentenced as an adult, eligibility for commitment to the California Youth Authority is limited by Welf. & Inst. Code § 1732.6. However, if the minor and the prosecutor consent, the court may order a juvenile disposition if it is determined that such an order would serve the best interests of justice, protection of the community, and the person being sentenced [Penal Code § 1170.19(a)].

Welf. & Inst. Code § 1732.6(a) restricts the criminal court's discretion to order a DJF commitment for minors convicted of any offense described in Penal Code § 667.5(c). Minors convicted of such offenses cannot be committed to the DJF if they have been "sentenced to incarceration for life, an indeterminate period to life, or a determinate period of years such that the maximum number of years of potential confinement when added to the minor's age would exceed 25 years" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 1732.6(a); People v. Thomas (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 635, 643] .

[3] Juvenile Disposition

When a dispositional hearing is mandated the procedures set forth under Welf. & Inst. Code § 706 are applicable. The conviction results in wardship pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 602. Confidentiality, with respect to court records, is afforded the minor as if the matter had been initiated as a delinquency petition. However, if the minor and prosecutor consent, the court may impose an adult sentence if it is determined that such a sentence would serve the best interests of justice, protection of the community, and the person being sentenced [Penal Code § 1170.19(b)].

[4] No Direct Refile

Once a petition is filed in juvenile court, a minor shall not thereafter be subject to criminal prosecution based on facts giving rise to the petition unless the juvenile court finds the minor not to be a fit and proper subject, and subsequently orders that criminal proceedings be resumed or instituted against him or her, or orders the petition transferred to adult court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 606].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
E. Transfer to Adult Court

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated §§ 329.67-329.69

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

[Reserved]

§§ 329.67[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
F. Procedures for Establishing Wardship

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.70

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.70 Jurisdiction Hearing

[1] Purpose of Hearing

The purpose of the jurisdiction hearing is to determine whether sufficient evidence exists to declare the minor a ward of the juvenile court [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 702].

[2] Waiver of Jurisdiction Hearing

At the detention hearing, or at any time thereafter, a minor may admit in court the allegations of the petition or plead no contest, and thereby waive any further jurisdiction hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 657; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.774(e); see also discussion in § 329.50[8]].

[3] Time for Hearing

[a] General Rule

If the minor is not detained, the clerk must, on filing of the petition, set the petition to be heard, and the hearing must be commenced, within 30 calendar days from the date the petition was filed. If the minor is detained at the time the petition is filed, the clerk must set the petition to be heard, and the hearing must be commenced, within 15 judicial days from the date of the detention order. If the minor is released from detention prior to the jurisdiction hearing, the court may reset the petition for hearing within the more lax time limitations of nondetention cases. If the minor is not before the court at the time the petition is filed and a warrant has been issued for his or her arrest, the 30-day period is tolled until the minor is brought before the court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 657; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.774(a), (b)].

In either case, it is well established that the right to a speedy trial exists injuvenile delinquency proceedings [In re Chuong D. (2006) 135 Cal. App. 4th 1303, 1309, 38 Cal. Rptr. 3d 351 ; In re Robert B. (1995) 39 Cal. App. 4th 1816, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 691 ; Richard N. v. Superior Court (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 579, 172 Cal. Rptr. 512] . For this purpose, a contested jurisdictional hearing is commenced when both the court and the prosecutor are objectively ready to process the case to conclusion and not merely when the first witness is sworn. [In re Chuong D. (2006) 135 Cal. App. 4th 1303, 1310-1311, 38 Cal. Rptr. 3d 351] .

When an emergency condition exists, as described in Gov. Code § 68115, the presiding judge may request, and the Chair of the Judicial Council may authorize, an extension of time by deeming that the date or dates upon which the condition existed are holidays for the purpose of computing time. This section specifically applies to jurisdiction hearings. [Gov. Code § 68115]. Included in the list of emergency conditions described is a large influx of criminal cases resulting from a large number of arrests within a short period of time, threatening the orderly operation of a superior court location [Gov. Code § 68115].

PRACTICE TIP:

"Expedited Youth Accountability Programs." Some counties have local programs which will establish expedited time deadlines for law enforcement, probation, the district attorney, and court functions in order to ensure that a case is heard within 60 days after a minor is cited to court. This will not apply to detained minors or those cited to "Informal Juvenile and Traffic Court" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 660.5]. Attorneys should be familiar with those counties that have such programs and the applicable time deadlines adopted by each.

[b] Effect of Delay Caused by Minor's Failure to Appear

Any period of delay resulting from the minor's unavailability or failure to appear must be excluded in computing the applicable time limitations [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.774(c)].

[c] Dismissal for Untimely Commencement of Jurisdiction Hearing

If a jurisdiction hearing is not commenced within the applicable time limitations, the court must order the petition dismissed [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.774(d)].

An order dismissing the petition prior to the jurisdiction hearing does not in itself bar the filing of a subsequent petition based on the same allegations as in the original petition. If, however, the petition was dismissed for failure to comply with the time limits discussed in [a], above, the minor may not be detained under the subsequent petition [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.774(d)].

[4] Continuance of Hearing

[a] Basis and Procedure

To continue any hearing relating to proceedings pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 601 or 602 beyond the time limit within that the hearing is otherwise required to be heard, a written notice must be filed and served on all parties to the proceeding at least two court days before the hearing sought to be continued, together with affidavits or declarations detailing specific facts showing good cause for the continuance [Welf. & Inst. Code § 682(a); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.776(a)(1)]. A party may make a motion for a continuance without complying with the requirements of Welf. & Inst. Code § 682(a), but, unless the moving party shows good cause for failure to comply with those requirements, the court will deny the motion [Welf. & Inst. Code § 682(c)].

A continuance will be granted only on a showing of good cause and only for that period of time shown to be necessary by the moving party at the hearing on the motion. Neither stipulation nor convenience of the parties is, in and of itself, good cause. [In re Ernesto H. (2004) 125 Cal. App. 4th 298, 315 n.6, 24 Cal. Rptr. 3d 561, 575] .

To establish good cause based upon the unavailability of a witness, the party seeking the continuance has the burden of showing that they exercised due diligence to secure the witness's attendance, that the expected testimony is material and not cumulative, that the testimony will be obtained within a reasonable time, and that the facts to which the witness will testify could not otherwise be proven [In re Chuong D. (2006) 135 Cal. App. 4th 1303, 1312-1313, 38 Cal. Rptr. 3d 351] .

If a jurisdictional hearing is continued for good cause, over a minor's objection, the statutory time limits specified in Welf. & Inst. Code § 682(e) require that the hearing must commence within seven days. Failure to commence the hearing within seven days shall cause the court to release the minor from custody on the offense which is the subject of the jurisdictional hearing [In re Kerry K. (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 1, 5-6, 42 Cal. Rptr. 3d 467] .

Whenever a continuance is granted, the facts that require the continuance will be entered into the minutes [Welf. & Inst. Code § 682(b); see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.776(a)(2)]. Absent a waiver of time, a minor may not be detained beyond the statutory time limits [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.776(a)(1)]. The court may not order counsel to pay any consequential witness fees or expenses that result from granting the continuance [In re Sean R. (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 662, 666, 262 Cal. Rptr. 884 (Welf. & Inst. Code § 664 mandates that all witness fees and expenses be borne by county)].

[b] To Prepare for Hearing

At the beginning of the jurisdiction hearing, the court must continue the hearingfor a period not to exceed seven calendar days as necessary (1) to make an appointment of counsel, (2) to enable counsel to become acquainted with the case, or (3) to determine whether the parent or guardian or adult relative is unable to afford counsel [Welf. & Inst. Code § 700; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.776(b)(2)].

The court must continue the jurisdiction hearing as necessary to provide reasonable opportunity for the minor and the parent, guardian, or adult relative to prepare for the hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 700; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.776(b)(1)].

[c] After Unexpected Contest of Petition

If the minor denies the allegations of the petition after having made a statement admitting the allegations of the petition, or after indicating an intention to admit the allegations at the time of the jurisdiction hearing, the court may continue the hearing for a period not to exceed seven calendar days to enable the petitioner to subpoena witnesses to attend the hearing to prove the allegations [Welf. & Inst. Code § 701; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.776(c)].

[d] New Evidence

If a continuance is sought in order to file a motion to set aside the jurisdictional finding based upon newly discovered evidence, pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 778, the motion may be denied when the allegedly new evidence is not dispositive of the outcome [People v. Beeler (1995) 9 Cal. 4th 953, 1003, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 607] . This is true even when the evidence would otherwise be admissible in the jurisdictional hearing [In re Ernesto H. (2004) 125 Cal. App. 4th 298, 316-317, 24 Cal. Rptr. 3d 561] . The issue of whether allegedly new evidence warrants a continuance is subject to the broad discretion of the court and will only be reversed on appeal when an abuse of that discretion is established [Id. at p. 316 , citing People v. Beeler].

[e] Pending Completion of Informal Probation

In a case petitioned under Welf. & Inst. Code § 602, the court may, with the consent of the child and his or her parent or guardian, continue the jurisdiction hearing for six months and order the child and parent or guardian to participate in a program of supervision and counseling or education under Welf. & Inst. Code § 654 [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.776(d)]. If the probation officer recommends additional time to enable the minor to complete the program, the court at its discretion may order an extension, not to exceed twelve months from the date the petition was filed [Welf. & Inst. Code § 654.2(a)].

In a 2007 decision interpreting Welf. & Inst. Code § 654.2(a), the 12-month time limit in which a minor may be declared a ward was determined to be directory, not mandatory, and thus did not result in the trial court losing fundamental jurisdiction over a case. Consequently, where a minor was given an extended period of time to pay restitution and complete public service work, at her request, wardship was properly established even though the 12-month period had expired [In re C.W. (2007) 153 Cal. App. 4th 468, 472, 62 Cal. Rptr. 3d 851].

[f] Implied Consent to Continuance

If the minor is represented by counsel and no objection is made to an order continuing the jurisdiction hearing beyond the time limit within which the hearing is otherwise required to be commenced, the absence of an objection must be deemed a consent to the continuance [Welf. & Inst. Code § 682(d); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.776(a)(3)].

[g] Co-Minor Cases

The presence of other minors charged with offenses arising out of the same alleged conduct does not have the same impact on a juvenile pending a jurisdictional hearing as an adult facing trial with codefendants. Specifically, the continuance statute applicable to adult matters, Penal Code § 1050.1, does not apply to juvenile cases [A.A. v. Superior Court (2003) 115 Cal. App. 4th 1, 6, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1] . Even in the event that minors are jointly charged in the same petition, a continuance where "good cause" exists as to one co-minor cannot justify an extension of the statutory right to a jurisdictional hearing as to other minors, beyond seven days [Welf. & Inst. Code § 700; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.776(b)(2); A.A. v. Superior Court (2003) 115 Cal. App. 4th 1, 6, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1] .

[5] Commencement of Hearing

[a] Explanation of Petition

At the beginning of the jurisdiction hearing, the petition must be read to those present. The court must then explain the meaning and contents of the petition, the nature of the hearing, and its procedures and possible consequences. The judge must also advise those present that the parent or guardian may be liable for the payment of restitution, fines, or penalty assessment, if the minor is ordered to pay restitution [Welf. & Inst. Code § 700].

[b] Explanation of Trial Rights

At the beginning of the jurisdiction hearing, the court must have the petition read to all those present and, on request of the child, parent, guardian, or adult relative, must explain the meaning and contents of the petition and the nature, procedures, and consequences of the hearing [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.778(a)]. After giving the advice required by Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.534 (right to counsel, hearing rights), the court must inform those present of each of the following minor's rights [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 664, 679, 702.5; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.778(b)]:

- The right to a hearing by the court on the issues raised by the petition.
- The right to remain silent, and that anything the minor says may be used against the minor in the juvenile court proceedings.
- The right to confront and to cross-examine any witness who may be called to testify against the minor.
- The right to use the process of the court to compel the attendance of witnesses on the minor's behalf.

[c] Explanation of Right to Representation by Attorney

After explaining the petition and the nature of the hearing, the court must then ascertain whether the minor and the parent, guardian, or adult relative are represented by counsel. If not, the court must advise the minor and those persons, if present, of their right to have counsel present and, if applicable, of the right to appointed counsel, subject to a claim of reimbursement to the county [Welf. & Inst. Code § 700; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.534(g)].

[d] Appointment of Counsel in Cases of Conflict of Interest

In any case in which it appears to the court that there is such a conflict of interest between a parent or guardian and the minor that one attorney could not properly represent both, the court must take appropriate action to eliminate the conflict of interest by appointing additional counsel [Welf. & Inst. Code § 634; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.534(h)(2)(C)].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
F. Procedures for Establishing Wardship

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.71

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.71 Prehearing Discovery

[1] In General

Prehearing discovery in juvenile proceedings is governed by Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.546. These provisions must be liberally construed in favor of maximizing informal disclosures, subject to the right of a party to show privilege or other good cause not to disclose specific material or information [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.546(a)]. All material and information to which a party is entitled must be disclosed in time to permit counsel to make beneficial use of them [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.546(g)].

Some aspects of discovery practice in adult criminal cases may be applied to juvenile wardship cases, as the two are often parallel. For example, a minor in a juvenile delinquency proceeding who is seeking discovery of peace officers records is subject to the same rules that apply in an adult criminal proceeding [San Jose v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 47, 53-54, 850 P. 2d 621]. For discussion of discovery in adult criminal cases, see Erwin, Millman, Monroe, Sevilla, Tarlow, California Criminal Defense Practice, Ch. 70 (Matthew Bender).

[2] Petitioner's Duty to Disclose Certain Information

[a] When Petition Is Filed

On filing the petition, the petitioner must promptly deliver to, or make accessible for inspection and copying by, the minor and the parent or guardian, or their counsel, copies of the police, arrest, and crime reports relating to the pending matter. Privileged information may be omitted if notice of the omission is given simultaneously [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.546(b)].

The petitioner must disclose any evidence or information within the petitioner's possession or control favorable to the minor, parent, or guardian [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.546(c)].

[b] On Timely Request

Except as to matters subject to protective orders (see discussion in [5][b], below), the petitioner must, on timely request, disclose to the minor and parent or guardian, or to their counsel, the following material and information within the petitioner's possession or control [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.546(d)]:

- Probation reports prepared in connection with the pending matter relating to the minor, parent, or guardian.
- Records of statements, admissions, or conversations by the minor, parent, or guardian.
- Records of statements, admissions, or conversations by any alleged coparticipant.
- Names and addresses of any witnesses interviewed by an investigating authority in connection with the pending matter.
- Records of statements or conversations of witnesses or other persons interviewed by an investigating authority in connection with the pending matter.
- Reports or statements of experts made regarding the pending matter, including results of physical or mental examinations and results of scientific tests, experiments, or comparisons.
- Photographs or physical evidence relating to the pending matter.
- Records of prior felony convictions of witnesses that each party intends to call.

[3] Duty of Parent or Guardian to Disclose Relevant Information on Timely Request

Except as to matters subject to protective orders (see generally discussion in [5][b], below), the parent or guardian must, on timely request, disclose to the petitioner relevant material and information within the parent or guardian's possession or control. If the parent or guardian is represented by counsel, a disclosure request must be made through counsel [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.546(e)].

[4] Continuing Duty to Disclose

If, subsequent to compliance with the rules of discovery or with court orders, a party discovers additional material or information that is subject to disclosure, that party must promptly notify the requesting minor and parent or guardian, or their counsel, of the existence of the additional material [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.546(k)].

[5] Prehearing Discovery Orders

[a] Orders Compelling Disclosure

On refusal of a party to permit disclosure of information or inspection of materials, the requesting party or counsel may move the court for an order requiring timely disclosure of the information or materials. The motion must specifically and clearly designate the items sought, state the relevancy of the items, and state that a timely request has been made for the items and that the other party has refused to provide them. Each court may by local rule establish the manner and time within which a motion must be made [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.546(f)].

The juvenile court has discretion to order discovery prior to a fitness hearing. The burden of justifying discovery, by showing reasonable necessity and that the discovery will not unduly delay or prolong the proceeding, is on the party seeking disclosure. If the discovery request includes only those items listed in the parallel adult reciprocal discovery statute (see Penal Code §§ 1054.1 (discovery by the defendant), 1054.3 (discovery by the prosecution)), no additional showing will be required [Clinton K. v. Superior Court (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 1244, 1249-1250, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 140] .

Compelled prehearing disclosure of the minor's witnesses and their statements does not violate either the federal constitutional privilege against self-incrimination [see U.S. Const., amend. V] or the federal constitutional right to counsel and concomitant protection of attorney work product [see U.S. Const., amend. VI; Robert S. v. Superior Court (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1417, 1425-1426, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 489] .

[b] Protective Orders

On a showing of privilege or other good cause, the court may make orders restricting disclosures [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.546(g)]. When some parts of materials are discoverable and other parts are not discoverable, the nondiscoverable material may be excised and need not be disclosed if the requesting party or counsel has been notified that the privileged material has been excised. Material ordered excised must be sealed and preserved in the records of the court for review on appeal [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.546(h)].

[c] Conditions of Discovery

An order of the court granting discovery under the rules may specify the time, place, and manner of making the discovery and inspection, and may prescribe terms and conditions. Discovery must be completed in a timely manner so as to avoid the delay or continuance of a scheduled hearing [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.546(i)].

[d] Reciprocal Discovery Orders

Although the reciprocal discovery provisions of Penal Code § 1054 do not apply to delinquency proceedings under Welf. & Inst. Code § 602, the juvenile court has the inherent discretionary authority to make reciprocal discovery orders [Robert S. v. Superior Court (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1417, 1421-1422, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 489 ; see Joe Z. v. Superior Court (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 797, 801-802, 91 Cal. Rptr. 594, 478 P.2d 26 ; see also Cal. Const., art. I, § 30(c); Penal Code § 1054 et seq.].

The state constitutional privilege against self-incrimination [see Cal. Const., art. I, § 15] does not limit the court's authority to make such an order [Robert S. v. Superior Court (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1417, 1422-1424, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 489] . Additionally, the federal constitutional guarantee of substantive due process [see U.S. Const., amend. XIV, § 1] does not prevent the making of such an order, as long as the minor is not required to provide discovery to the prosecutor absent reciprocal disclosures [Robert S. v. Superior Court (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1417, 1425, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 489] .

Issuance of an order consistent with the reciprocal discovery provisions does not conflict with Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.546, which sets forth the procedure for discovery in juvenile court proceedings but makes no provision for reciprocal discovery [Robert S. v. Superior Court (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1417, 1426, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 489] . However, the court must exercise its discretion and make a discovery order as to a minor if sanctions for a failure to comply are to be imposed. [In re Thomas F. (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 1249, 1255, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 19] .

[6] Sanctions on Failure to Comply With Discovery Order

If at any time during the course of the proceedings it is brought to the attention of the court that a person has failed to comply with the rules of discovery or with an order issued under those rules, the court may order the person to permit the discovery or inspection of materials not previously disclosed, grant a continuance, prohibit a party from introducing in evidence the material not disclosed, dismiss the proceedings, or enter any other order the court deems just under the circumstances [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.546(j)]. However, the sanction of dismissal should be employed only when the prosecutor has engaged in discoverymisconduct that is depriving the minor defendant of a fair trial [In re Jesus J. (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 1057, 1060, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 429 (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.546, to extent it allows juvenile court to dismiss solely because of discovery abuses, is inconsistent with legislative intent and is disapproved)].

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
F. Procedures for Establishing Wardship

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.72

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.72 Motions to Suppress Evidence

The constitutional protection against unreasonable search and seizure applies to juveniles as well as adults [In re Scott K. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 395, 155 Cal. Rptr. 671, 595 P.2d 105] . It also extends to the entire residence in which a minor lives, regardless of household or internal familial rules dividing the space. [In re Rudy F. (2004) 117 Cal. App. 4th 1124, 1131, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 483] . Any motion to suppress as evidence any tangible or intangible thing obtained as a result of an unlawful search or seizure must be heard prior to the attachment of jeopardy and at least five judicial days after receipt of notice by the people, unless the people are willing to waive a portion of this time. In juvenile court, a motion to suppress is referred to as a "Welf. & Inst. Code § 700.1 motion."

If the court grants a motion to suppress prior to the attachment of jeopardy over the objection of the people, the court must enter a judgment of dismissal as to all counts of the petition except those counts on which the prosecuting attorney elects to proceed pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 701 [see In re Mitchell G. (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 66, 72, 276 Cal. Rptr. 245 (jeopardy attached when suppression motion was heard simultaneously with wardship petition, precluding People from appealing dismissal that resulted from grant of motion)]. If, prior to the attachment of jeopardy, opportunity for the motion did not exist or the person alleged to come within the provisions of the juvenile court law was not aware of the grounds for the motion, that person has the right to make the motion during the course of the proceeding under Welf. & Inst. Code § 701 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 700.1].

Prehearing motions must be specific and note the grounds for the motion. They must also be supported by points and authorities [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.544]. Unless otherwise ordered or specifically provided by law, and absent a waiver, a prehearing motion to suppress evidence obtained as a result of an unlawful search or seizure and accompanying points and authorities must be served on the child and opposing counsel and filed with the court at least five judicial days before the date the jurisdiction hearing is set to begin if the minor is detained, and at least 10 judicial days before the jurisdiction hearing date if the minor is not detained [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.544].

PRACTICE TIP:

Suppressing Evidence by Motion. As with all pretrial motions, the attorney for the minor has an obligation to raise a suppression motion when warranted by the facts and the law. If the juvenile court judge asks the attorneys to stipulate to having the suppression motion heard simultaneously with the jurisdictional hearing, it is, in most cases, to the minor's advantage to do so, since double jeopardy will attach preventing the district attorney from appealing should the motion be granted.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
F. Procedures for Establishing Wardship

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.73

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.73 Entering Plea to Allegation

[1] Court Inquiry

After explaining the minor's trial rights and hearing any motions to suppress (see discussion in §§ 329.70[5][b] and 329.72), the court must determine whether the minor intends to admit or deny the truth of the allegations of the petition. If the minor neither admits nor denies the truth of the allegations, the court must indicate for the record that the minor does not admit the truth of the allegations [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.778(c)].

[2] Admission of Allegations

[a] Requirement That Minor Admit Personally

An admission by the minor must be made personally by the minor [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.778(d)].

[b] Requirement That Counsel Consent

If the minor is represented by counsel, no admission may be accepted unless counsel consents to the minor's admission of the truth of the allegations of the petition [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.778(d); see In re Regina N. (1981) 117 Cal. App. 3d 577, 584-585, 172 Cal. Rptr. 810].

Although the use of written waiver forms is increasing in delinquency proceedings, it is unclear if such forms, purporting to constitute personal admission of truth to the alleged charge and a waiver of rights, meet the necessary requirements.

[c] Prerequisites to Acceptance

Before accepting an admission by the minor that the allegations of the petition are true, the court must find, and the minutes must reflect, that the minor has made an intelligent and voluntary waiver of his or her Boykin-Tahl trial rights based on the minor's understanding of the nature of the allegations, and the direct consequences of a finding that the allegations are true, and that, by admitting the truth of the allegations in the petition, the minor will be waiving those rights [see Boykin v. Alabama (1969) 395 U.S. 238, 89 S. Ct. 1709, 23 L. Ed. 2d 274 ; In re Tahl (1969) 1 Cal. 3d 122, 81 Cal. Rptr. 577, 460 P.2d 449] .

Express advisements and waivers of the Boykin-Tahl rights are not necessary todemonstrate a voluntary and intelligent admission [People v. Howard (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1132, 1178-80, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 268, 824 P.2d 1315] . See discussion in [g], below.

[d] Warning When Minor Is on Probation

If the minor is on probation, and a possible consequence of an admission is that probation will be revoked at the dispositional hearing and the minor will be confined for a relatively longer period as a result, the minor must be informed that this is a possible consequence of admission [In re Gary O. (1978) 84 Cal. App. 3d 38, 41-42, 148 Cal. Rptr. 276] .

[e] Acceptance of Admission

If the court is satisfied that the admission should be received, the court must then ask whether the minor admits or denies the truth of the allegations in the petition. On admission, the court must make findings as to each of the following, noted in the minutes of the court [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 5.778(f)]:

- That notice has been given as required by law.
- The birth date and county of residence of the minor.
- That the minor has knowingly and intelligently waived the right to a hearing on the issues by the court, the right to remain silent, and the right to confront and to cross examine adverse witnesses and to use the process of the court to compel the attendance of witnesses on the minor's behalf.
- That the minor understands the nature of the conduct alleged in the petition and the possible consequences of an admission.
- That the admission by the minor is freely and voluntarily made.
- That there is a factual basis for the minor's admission.
- That the allegations of the petition as admitted are true as alleged.
- That the minor is a person described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 601 (habitually disobedient or truant) or 602 (criminal violations).
- If the petition was filed pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 602 (criminal violations), the degree of the offense and whether it would be a misdemeanor or felony had it been committed by an adult, although these determinations may be deferred until the disposition hearing.

[f] Pleading No Contest

In lieu of admitting the allegations of the petition, the minor may enter a plea of no contest concerning the truth of the allegations, subject to the approval of the court. For purposes of juvenile court proceedings, the procedure for and legal effect of an entry of no contest is the same as that of an admission [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.778(e), (f)]. See discussion in [g], below.

[g] Effect of Failure to Establish Knowledgeable Waiver of Rights

Failure to establish a knowledgeable waiver of rights before accepting a guilty plea or an admission in a juvenile case in the record of the proceedings will constitute grounds for habeas corpus relief [In re Ronald E. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 315, 321, 137 Cal. Rptr. 781, 562 P.2d 684] . Inasmuch as the Boykin-Tahl advisement of rights is applicable to juvenile proceedings in which the juvenile admits an offense involving delinquency and potential detention, failure of the record to reflect that the juvenile understood the nature and elements of the crime charged or the consequence of an admission will constitute error [In re Ronald E. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 315, 321, 137 Cal. Rptr. 781, 562 P.2d 684 ; see Boykin v. Alabama (1969) 395 U.S. 238, 89 S. Ct. 1709, 23 L. Ed. 2d 274 ; In re Tahl (1969) 1 Cal. 3d 122, 81 Cal. Rptr. 577, 460 P.2d 449] .

[3] Presumption That Minor Under 14 Is Incapable of Committing Crime

[a] Application to Delinquency Proceedings

The presumption that a minor under the age of 14 is incapable of committing a crime, set forth in Pen. Code § 26, applies to delinquency proceedings under Welf. & Inst. § 602 [In re Manuel L. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 229, 239, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 865 P.2d 718 ; In re R. (1970) 1 Cal. 3d 855, 862, 83 Cal. Rptr. 671, 464 P.2d 127] .

This presumption may be defeated by clear and convincing evidence that, at the time the minor committed the charged act, he or she knew of its wrongfulness [In re Manuel L. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 229, 239, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 865 P.2d 718 ; In re R. (1970) 1 Cal. 3d 855, 862, 83 Cal. Rptr. 671, 464 P.2d 127 ; see discussion in [b], below].

[b] Standard of Proof

Although a finding that a minor knew the wrongfulness of the charged act at the time he or she committed it is a prerequisite to a wardship adjudication under Welf. & Inst. Code § 602, it is not an element of the charged offense and therefore does not require proof beyond a reasonable doubt under Welf. & Inst. Code § 701 or In re Winship (1970) 397 U.S. 358, 90 S. Ct. 1068, 25 L. Ed. 2d 368 (holding that due process requires proof beyond a reasonable doubt in juvenile proceedings) [In re Manuel L. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 229, 239 n.5, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 865 P.2d 718 (disapproving, to the extent inconsistent with this decision, In re Billie Y. (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 127, 130-131, 269 Cal. Rptr. 212 , In re Francisco N. (1986) 186 Cal. App. 3d 175, 179-180, 230 Cal. Rptr. 475 , In reRichard T. (1985) 175 Cal. App. 3d 248, 252-253, 220 Cal. Rptr. 573 , and Shortridge v. Municipal Court (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 611, 618, 198 Cal. Rptr. 749 ; see also In re Clyde H. (1979) 92 Cal. App. 3d 338, 343, 154 Cal. Rptr. 727)]. Rather, the evidence need only be clear. In making the determination, the juvenile court must consider the minor defendant's age, experience, and understanding [In re Marven C. (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 482, 486-487, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 354] .

A minor's age is a basic and important consideration in making a determination that they had the required capacity necessary to commit a crime [People v. Lewis (2001) 26 Cal. 4th 334, 378, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 272] . Generally, the older a child gets and the closer they are to the age of 14, the more likely it is that they appreciate the wrongfulness of their acts [In re James B. (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 862, 872-873, 135 Cal. Rptr. 2d 457 ; In re Paul C. (1990) 221 Cal. App. 3d 43, 52, 270 Cal. Rptr. 369] .

The more convoluted the mens rea for a particular delinquent act, the more likely the minor did not have the requisite criminal capacity necessary to meet the standard of proof [In re Michael B. (1983) 149 Cal. App. 3d 1073, 1088, 197

Cal. Rptr. 379] . However, this does not mean that the child has to understand the intricacies of law involved with a particular offense (e.g., conspiracy) in order to establish knowledge of wrongfulness pursuant to Pen. Code § 26 [In re Harold M. (1978) 78 Cal. App. 3d 380, 388, 144 Cal. Rptr. 744] .

[c] Evidence of Prior Conduct

Knowledge of the wrongfulness of one offense does not necessarily mean that a minor has the requisite knowledge of wrongfulness in regard to the commission of other offenses [In re C. (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 888, 900, 148 Cal. Rptr 366, 582 P.2d 957] . Nonetheless, evidence of prior conduct where the knowledge of wrongfulness has been shown may be determinative in proving knowledge in similar subsequent acts [In re Clyde H. (1979) 92 Cal. App. 3d 338, 344, 154 Cal. Rptr. 727] . To this end, the court may take judicial notice of previously sustained petitions for similar offenses for the purpose of establishing that a minor knew of the wrongfulness of the acts in presently petitioned matters [In re Nirran (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 1157, 1160, 255 Cal. Rptr. 327 ; In re Martin L. (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 534, 539, 232 Cal. Rptr. 43] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Testimony of Minor's Parent. The district attorney will often call the minor's parent as a witness to establish that the minor knew the wrongfulness of the charged act, by asking the parents if they taught the minor that it was wrong to commit such an act. Attorney for the minor should warn the parent of this possibility.

[4] Pleading Not Guilty by Reason of Insanity

When a minor denies, by a plea of not guilty by reason of insanity, the allegations of a petition filed pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 602 (criminal violations), and also joins with that denial a general denial of the conduct alleged in the petition, he or she will be subject to a hearing as if he or she had made no allegation of insanity. If the petition is sustained or if the minor denies the allegations only by reason of insanity, then a hearing must be held on the question of whether the minor was insane at the time the offense was committed [Welf. & Inst. Code § 702.3(a)].

[5] Minors Mentally Incompetent To Stand Trial

[a] In General

Counsel cannot effectively represent a defendant who is unable to understand the proceedings or to rationally assist him [James H. v. Superior Court (1978) 77 Cal. App. 3d 169, 174, 143 Cal. Rptr. 398] . Due process requires that a competency hearing cannot be deferred and must be held prior to a fitness hearing or jurisdiction hearing [Tyrone B. v. Superior Court (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 227, 78 Cal. Rptr. 3d 569] . California Rule of Court 5.645 requires the juvenile court to stay proceedings and conduct a hearing regarding a minor's competency to stand trial if the court finds a reason to doubt that the minor "is capable of understanding the proceedings or of cooperating with the [his] attorney... ." It directs that if the court finds that the child is not capable of understanding the proceedings or of cooperating with the attorney, they may receive a civil commitment under the Lanterman-Petris-Short Act (LPS) by way of either Welf. & Inst. Code § 6550 or Penal Code § 4011.6.

Welf. & Inst. Code § 6550 and Rule 5.645 provide procedures upon a finding that a child is mentally ill, mentally disabled, mentally disordered, or mentally retarded.

A commitment made under Welf. & Inst. Code § 6551 suspends the jurisdiction of the juvenile court during the time the minor is subject to the jurisdiction of the court in which the LPS petition is filed. Under Penal Code § 4011.6, the juvenile court may retain concurrent jurisdiction over the minor during the LPS proceedings [In re Patrick H. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1346, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 455] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Penal Code § 26* v. Competence. The standard for determining competency is whether the minor has the present ability to consult with his lawyer with a reasonable degree of rational understanding as well as factually understanding the proceedings against him. It is not whether the minor knows right from wrong or knows the wrongfulness of the act charged in the petition [In re Ricky S. (2008) 166 Cal. App. 4th 232, 82 Cal. Rptr. 3d 432] .

[b] Mental Incompetence v. Developmental Incompetence

Dusky v. United States (1960) 362 U.S. 402, 80 S. Ct. 788 set the standard for determining competency to stand trial. Under that standard, the inquiry is whether the defendant "has sufficient present ability to consult with his lawyer with a reasonable degree of rational understanding and whether he has a rational as well as factual understanding of the proceedings against him." [Id. at p. 403]. Those standards were applied to California delinquency proceedings in James H. v. Superior Court (1978) 77 Cal. App. 3d 169 ; 143 Cal. Rptr. 398 . Specifically, the court in James H. advised that the juvenile court "may borrow from Penal Code § 1367 and use as a yardstick the definition of incompetency set forth in that section ... [o]r the court may be guidedby the statement of the United States Supreme Court in Dusky, supra ..." [James H., supra, 77 Cal. App. 3d at pp. 176-177].

Under Penal Code § 1367, an adult's incompetence to stand trial arises from a mental disorder or developmental disability that limits his or her ability to understand the nature of the proceedings and to assist counsel [Penal Code § 1367(a)]. Recent case law suggests that this is not the sole standard to be applied in delinquency cases and, in fact, Dusky requires that the court make an inquiry to determine developmental disability, including a minor's age, to assess cognitive, psychological, social, and moral development [Timothy J. v. Superior Court and Dante H. v. Superior Court (2007) 150 Cal. App. 4th 847, 58 Cal. Rptr. 3d 746].

As the court points out in Timothy J./Dante H., this inquiry is distinguishable from proof required pursuant to Penal Code § 26, which provides that children under the age of 14 are presumed to be incapable of committing a crime [see § 329.73[3]]. The inquiry in rule 5.645 is made prior to trial, as opposed to within the context of a jurisdictional hearing. Further, while some of the same factors may be relevant to both, the purpose and focus of the two inquiries is different as are the time and procedures for determining them [Timothy J. v. Superior Court (2007) 150 Cal. App. 4th 847, 862, 58 Cal. Rptr. 3d 746].

What is left unsaid in Timothy J. is that the remedies for minors determined to be incapable of committing crime under Penal Code § 26 and children found to be incompetent under a "traditional" mental disorder/developmental disability analysis are well established and incorporated into most delinquency systems. It is less clear, if the developmental incompetence analysis of Timothy J. is widely accepted, what the remedial course of action should be, both at the time the finding is made and when the child becomes "competent" solely as a function of growing older.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
F. Procedures for Establishing Wardship

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.74

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.74 Evidentiary Standards in Jurisdiction Proceeding

[1] Admission of Evidence and Standard of Proof

The admission and exclusion of evidence at the jurisdiction hearing is determined according to the rules of evidence established by the Evidence Code and by judicial decision. Proof beyond a reasonable doubt supported by evidence legally admissible in the trial of criminal cases must be adduced to support a finding that the minor has violated a law or ordinance. A preponderance of the evidence, legally admissible in the trial of civil cases, must be adduced to support a finding that the minor is within the juvenile court's jurisdiction under Welf. & Inst. Code § 601 (habitually disobedient or truant) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 701; see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.780(b); In re Bettye K. (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 143, 148, 285 Cal. Rptr. 633] .

PRACTICE TIP:

The Inapplicability of Penal Code § 1111. Penal Code § 1111, prohibiting a conviction upon the testimony of an accomplice unless the testimony is corroborated by other evidence tending to connect a defendant with the commission of the offense, does not apply to juvenile court proceedings [In re P. (1978) 22 Cal. 3d 946, 949, 151 Cal. Rptr. 330]. However, recent case law has called for this rule to be reassessed in light of changes in juvenile law over the last 30 years that make sustained petitions increasingly similar to criminal convictions [In re Christopher B. (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 1557, 1561, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 253]. Moreover, the very basis for the rule, that uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice is inherently untrustworthy for a myriad of reasons, is arguably more applicable to children. Consequently, with the notable exception of having such evidence weighed by a judge and not a jury, the distinctions cited by the court in Mitchell P. seem to be evaporating and the exception to Penal Code § 1111 may soon be abolished.

[2] Objections to Evidence When Minor Is Unrepresented

If the minor is not represented by counsel at the hearing, objections that could have been made to the evidence are deemed to have been made [Welf. & Inst. Code § 701; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.780(d)].

[3] Use of Probation Officer's Report Prohibited

The court must not read or consider any portion of the probation officer's reportprior to or during a contested jurisdiction hearing [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.780(c); In re R. (1970) 1 Cal. 3d 855, 860, 83 Cal. Rptr. 671, 464 P.2d 127] . However, the error is waived unless the minor timely objects in the juvenile court [In re Christopher S. (1992) 10 Cal. App. 4th 1337, 1344-1345] .

[4] Proscription Against Multiple Prosecutions

Penal Code § 654 provides, in relevant part: "An acquittal or conviction and sentence under any one [provision of law] bars a prosecution for the same act or omission under any other." While expressly applicable to juvenile proceedings, it should be noted that amended petitions may be filed after jurisdiction, by admission or contested hearing, if the matter has not yet gone to disposition [In re R.L. (2009) 170 Cal. App. 4th 1339, 88 Cal. Rptr. 3d 854] .

Similarly, the Kellett rule applies in delinquency proceedings. In Kellett, the California Supreme Court held that when "the prosecution is or should be aware of more than one offense in which the same act or course of conduct plays a significant part, all such offenses must be prosecuted in a single proceeding unless joinder is prohibited or severance permitted for good cause. Failure to unite all such offenses will result in a bar to subsequent prosecution of any offense omitted if the initial proceedings culminate in either acquittal or conviction and sentence" [Kellett v. Superior Court (1966) 63 Cal. 2d 822, 827, 48 Cal. Rptr. 366] . However, Kellett does not apply when the prosecutor cannot proceed on additional charges earlier because additional facts and police reports have not been discovered at the time of the original jurisdiction and disposition hearing [In re R.L. (2009) 170 Cal. App. 4th 1339, 1343-1345, 88 Cal. Rptr. 3d 854] .

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
F. Procedures for Establishing Wardship

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.75

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.75 Immunity for Witnesses in Delinquency Proceedings

[1] Privilege Against Self-Incrimination

If a person is called as a witness and it appears to the court that the testimony or other evidence being sought may tend to incriminate the witness, the court must advise the witness of the privilege against self-incrimination and of the possible consequences of testifying [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.548(a)].

[2] Request for Immunity in Proceedings Pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 602

In proceedings under Welf. & Inst. Code § 602 (wardship for criminal offenses), the prosecuting attorney may make a written request or an oral request on the record that a judge order a witness to answer a question or produce evidence. The judge must then proceed under either Penal Code § 1324 or 1324.1, both of which govern the procedures for compelling privileged testimony. After complying with an order to answer a question or produce evidence and if, but for Penal Code §§ 1324 and 1324.1 or Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.548, the witness would have been privileged to withhold the answer given or the evidence produced, the witness may not be subject to proceedings under the juvenile court law, to criminal prosecution, or to a penalty or forfeiture for, or on account of, any fact or act concerning which, in accordance with the order, the witness was required to answer or produce evidence [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.548(c)(1)].

[3] No Immunity From Perjury or Contempt

A witness may nevertheless be subject to proceedings under the juvenile court law or to criminal prosecution for perjury, false swearing, or contempt committed in answering, or failing to answer, or in producing or failing to produce evidence in accordance with an order [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.548(e)].

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
F. Procedures for Establishing Wardship

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.76

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.76 Dismissal of Petition After Presentation by Prosecution

After the presentation of evidence on behalf of the petitioner has been closed, the court, on motion of the minor or on its own motion, is required to order the petition dismissed and the minor discharged from any detention or restriction therefore ordered if, on weighing the evidence then before it, it finds that the minor is not a person described by Welf. & Inst. Code § 601 (habitually disobedient or truant) or 602 (criminal violations) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 701.1; see also Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.534(d)(1)(B)]. The standard of proof is whether the prosecution has proven each element beyond a reasonable doubt [In re Andre G. (1989) 210 Cal. App. 3d 62, 65-66, 258 Cal. Rptr. 127] . If the motion is not granted, the minor may offer evidence without first having reserved the right to do so [Welf. & Inst. Code § 701.1]. In fact, even if a minor submits evidence that cures any deficiency in the petitioner's case following an erroneous denial of a motion to dismiss, the right to contest that denial is not waived [In re Anthony J. (2004) 117 Cal. App. 4th 718, 725, 11 Cal. Rptr. 3d 865] .

The federal rule that a defendant who by testifying cures a deficiency in the prosecutor's case waives the right to complain about an earlier erroneous denial of a motion to dismiss was recently determined to be inapplicable in California in a delinquency case [In re Anthony J. (2004) 117 Cal. App. 4th 718, 729-732, 11 Cal. Rptr. 3d 865] . Noting that the federal rule offended the most basic premises of the criminal justice system, the court found that the rule presented "a Hobson choice: resting and sacrificing the right to present a defense out of fear that his or her testimony may cure defects in the prosecution's case, or putting on such evidence and thereby possibly assisting the prosecution in proving its case." [Id. at p. 732].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
F. Procedures for Establishing Wardship

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.77

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.77 Determination That Allegations Are True

[1] Required Findings

If, after hearing the evidence, the court determines that the allegations of the petition are true, it must make findings as to each of the following, noted in the minutes of the court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 702; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.780(e)]:

- That notice has been given as required by law.
- The birth date and county of the residence of the minor.
- That the allegations of the petition are true as alleged.
- That the minor is a person described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 601 (habitually disobedient or truant) or 602 (criminal violations).
- If the minor is found to be a person described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 602, the degree of the offense and whether the offense would be a misdemeanor or felony had the offense been committed by an adult. The determinations required for this particular item may be deferred until the disposition hearing.

[2] Finding Regarding Degree of Offense

The language of Welf. & Inst. Code § 702 is mandatory rather than discretionary. The most recent decision of the California Supreme Court on this pointrequires an express finding as to the degree of the offense on the record [In re Manzy W. (1997) 14 Cal. 4th 1199, 1204, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 889, 930 P.2d 1255] .

The juvenile court lacks authority to reduce the degree of the offense if the evidence establishes that the minor could only have committed the higher-degree offense [In re Andrew I. (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 572, 582, 281 Cal. Rptr. 570] . Furthermore, when the court accepts an admission to the petition as a felony and determines maximum length of confinement as a felony, the appellate court need not automatically remand for a finding on the level of the offense if the record as a whole establishes that the juvenile court was aware of its discretion to treat the offense as a misdemeanor [In re Manzy W. (1997) 14 Cal. 4th 1199, 1209, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 889, 930 P.2d 1255] .

The juvenile court may not find that the minor committed an uncharged lesser-related offense, over the minor's objection [In re Johnny R. (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 1579, 1583-1585, 40 Cal. Rptr. 2d 43] .

[3] Finding When Offense Could Be Treated as Either Misdemeanor or Felony in Criminal Court

The juvenile court must make an express finding of whether the offense committed by a minor was a felony or a misdemeanor if the offense, when committed by an adult, could be treated as either a misdemeanor or a felony [In re Kenneth H. (1983) 33 Cal. 3d 616, 618-620, 189 Cal. Rptr. 867, 659 P.2d 1156 ; see Welf. & Inst. Code § 702; see also In re Andrew I. (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 572, 582, 281 Cal. Rptr. 570 (express finding not required when offense could only be treated as felony)]. However, the trial court need not state its reasons for designating the offense as a felony or as a misdemeanor [In re Jacob M. (1989) 210 Cal. App. 3d 1178, 1181-1182, 258 Cal. Rptr. 754] .

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
F. Procedures for Establishing Wardship

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.78

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.78 Determination That Allegations Are Not True

If, after hearing the evidence, the court determines that the allegations of the petition are not true, it must make findings as to each of the following, noted in the minutes of the court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 702; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.780(g)]:

- That notice has been given as required by law;
- The birth date and county of residence of the minor; and
- That the allegations of the petition have not been proved.

The court must then order that the petition be dismissed and that the minor be discharged from any detention or restriction, if applicable.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
F. Procedures for Establishing Wardship

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.79

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.79 Review of Jurisdiction Order

A juvenile court order issued at the close of a jurisdictional hearing is an intermediate order and therefore is not appealable. The dispositional order is the final step in the proceedings, and thus the jurisdictional order is not reviewable until after disposition [In re James J. (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 1339, 1342-1343, 232 Cal. Rptr. 456 ; In re Melvin S. (1976) 59 Cal. App. 3d 898, 900-901, 130 Cal. Rptr. 844 ; but see In re Kelvin M. (1978) 77 Cal. App. 3d 396, 399, 143 Cal. Rptr. 561 ; In re Wiiliam C. (1977) 70 Cal. App. 3d 570, 574, 138 Cal. Rptr. 843] .

For discussion of review of delinquency proceedings, see § 329.110 et seq.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
F. Procedures for Establishing Wardship

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.80

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.80 Juvenile Informants

With the exception of purchasing tobacco products as authorized by Bus. & Prof. Code § 2950, peace officers are prohibited from using a person under the age of 18 as an informant without court authorization. A "minor informant" is defined as an individual, under 18 years of age, who participates on behalf of a law enforcement agency in a prearranged transaction with direct face-to-face contact with any party, when the minor's participation in the transaction is for the purpose of obtaining or attempting to obtain evidence of illegal activity of a third party and where the minor is participating in the transaction for the purpose of reducing or dismissing a pending juvenile petition against the minor. Before a court can authorize a minor's cooperation it must:

- Find probable cause that the minor committed the offense alleged in the pending petition;
- Advise the minor of the mandatory minimum and maximum sentence for the alleged offense;
- Disclose the benefit the minor may obtain be cooperating; and
- Obtain consent of the minor's parent or guardian, unless they are suspects in the investigation.

The court must also consider the age and maturity of the minor, the gravity of the minor's alleged offense, the safety of the public, and the interests of justice before authorizing the minor's cooperation. Under no circumstances may a peace officer use any person 12 years of age or younger as an informant [Penal Code § 701.5].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
F. Procedures for Establishing Wardship

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.81

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.81 Determination of Factual Innocence

A minor is entitled, where appropriate, to obtain a determination of factual innocence in specified cases, excluding infractions. In cases where no accusatory pleading or petition to adjudge the minor a ward of the court has been filed, but the matter has been taken before a probation officer pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 626, the minor may request in writing that the law enforcement agency andprobation officer having jurisdiction over the matter destroy their records of the arrest or citation [Welf. & Inst. Code § 781.5].

A determination of factual innocence shall not be made unless the law enforcement agency and the probation officer, with the concurrence of the district attorney, determine that no reasonable cause exists to believe that the minor committed the offense, which was the basis for the arrest or citation. Upon a finding of factual innocence, law enforcement and probation records must be sealed for three years and then destroyed. If the request is denied, the minor may petition the juvenile court for such a determination. Notice requirements and evidentiary considerations for these hearings are set forth by statute [Welf. & Inst. Code § 781.5].

If an accusatory pleading or petition seeking wardship has been filed but not sustained, the minor may, at any time after dismissal, request in writing that the court make a finding of factual innocence. The court may also make a finding of factual innocence upon the written or oral motion of any party, or on its own motion. The district attorney may request a hearing on the matter if they object to the finding [Welf. & Inst. Code § 781.5].

Destruction of records pursuant to this section is prohibited during the pendency of a civil action if:

- the minor, or another person arrested or cited for the same offense, has filed the civil action against the peace officer, law enforcement agency, or probation officer that made the arrest, issued the citation, or commenced the proceedings, and

- the agency or officer that is the custodian of records has received a certified copy of the complaint in the civil action [Welf. & Inst. Code § 781.5].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
F. Procedures for Establishing Wardship

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated §§ 329.82-329.89

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

[Reserved]

§§ 329.82[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
G. Disposition of Ward

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.90

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.90 Disposition Hearing

[1] Purpose

When the jurisdictional phase of the delinquency proceeding is concluded by a finding and order that the minor is found to be a person described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 601 (habitually disobedient or truant) or § 602 (criminal violations), a disposition hearing must be held to hear evidence on the question of the proper disposition to be made of the minor [Welf. & Inst. Code § 706].

[2] Transfer Out

Whenever a petition is filed in the juvenile court of a county other than the residence of the minor, the entire case may be transferred to the juvenile court of the county where the minor or his custodian resides. This also applies to situations where the residence of the person entitled to his custody changes to another county after the petition is filed [Welf. & Inst. Code § 750; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.610(a), (c)]. The court shall not transfer the case unless it determines that the transfer will protect or further the child's best interests [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.610(e)]. The transfer may be made only after the original court has made findings of facts upon which it has exercised jurisdiction over the minor. On the receipt and filing of the findings and order of transfer, the receiving juvenile court must take jurisdiction of the case [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.610(h)]. Once a court takes jurisdiction of a transferred matter, it retains jurisdiction for all purposes. There is no statutory provision for a transfer back to the original court or for any kind of joint jurisdiction [In re Brandon H. (2002) 99 Cal. App. 4th 1153, 1156 ; 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 530] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Transfer Out Recommendations. In order to determine whether transferring a minor's case to another county will protect or further the child's best interests, it is imperative that counsel contact the probation officer in the county that is the subject of the recommendation. Without knowing the proposed case plans of the counties in question, or at least becoming familiar with their comparative resources and philosophy relating to the minor's future supervision, it is virtually impossible to competently advocate for or against a transfer out recommendation. This is especially true if the petitioned offense is particularly serious or the minor is currently a ward in a particular county.

[3] Continuance Prior to Disposition Hearing

Prior to hearing evidence on the proper disposition of the case, the court may continue the proceeding to receive the social study of the probation officer, to refer the minor to a juvenile justice community resource program as defined in Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 1784-1784.4, or, on its own motion or on the motion of a parent or guardian, to receive other evidence [Welf. & Inst. Code § 702; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.785(b)].

If the minor is detained during the continuance, the continuance may not exceed 10 judicial days. If the minor is not detained, the court may continue the hearing to a date not later than 30 days after the date of filing the petition. In the latter case, the court may, for good cause shown, continue the hearing for an additional 15 days. The court may make an order for detention of the minor or for his or her release from detention, during the period of continuance, as appropriate [Welf. &Inst. Code § 702; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.782(a), (b)].

[4] Preparation of Social Study Report

Prior to every disposition hearing, the probation officer must prepare a social study concerning the minor, which must contain those matters relevant to disposition, including any parole status information, and a recommendation for disposition [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.785(a)]. If foster care placement is being considered or has been made, the social study must include appropriate a case plan as described in Welf. Inst. Code § 706.6 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 706.5; see Welf. & Inst. Code § 358.1(a)].

The study must also indicate what plan, if any, for the return of the minor is recommended to the court by the county welfare department or probation officer [Welf. & Inst. Code § 706.5; see Welf. & Inst. Code § 358.1(a), (b)].

Furthermore, in cases in which the minor committed an offense that would have been a felony if committed by an adult, the probation officer must include a statement from the victim of the crime or, if the victim is a minor, a statement from the parent or guardian or, if the victim has died, a statement from the next of kin. All persons from whom a statement is required to be taken have the right to attend the disposition hearing and to express their views concerning the offense and disposition of the case [Welf. & Inst. Code § 656.2].

Neither a prior probation report nor a oral report will satisfy the statutory requirement of a new social study report [In re L.S. (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 1100, 269 Cal. Rptr. 700] . A social study prepared for use in a fitness hearing pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 707 fails to comply with the requirements of a social study for a dispositional hearing [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 280]. A disposition study must include an informed recommendation from among a wide range of possible placement and counseling programs. A fitness study explores only two options, adult criminal prosecution or juvenile court treatment [In re Devin J. (1984) 155 Cal. App. 3d 1096, 1098-1101, 202 Cal. Rptr. 543] .

The social study must be furnished to all parties at least 48 hours prior to the commencement of the disposition hearing by depositing copies with the clerk. A continuance of 48 hours must be granted on request of any party who has not been furnished the probation officer's report in accordance with this time limitation [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.785(a)(2)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Shaping the Social Study Report. The attorney for the minor should provide any favorable information regarding the minor to the probation officer to be included in the disposition report. This could include letters of character reference, school records, information regarding counseling, etc. Objections should be made to any improper entries in the probation report, or they will be considered waived.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
G. Disposition of Ward

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.91

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.91 Temporary Placement

[1] CYA Placement for Diagnosis

If the court has determined that a minor has violated a law or ordinance, the court, if it concludes that a disposition of the case in the best interest of the minor, requires such observation and diagnosis as can be made at a diagnostic and treatment center of the Youth Authority, may continue the hearing and order that the minor be placed temporarily in the center for a period not to exceed 90 days.

The director of the Youth Authority then reports the diagnosis and recommendations at the close of that period. However, the Youth Authority is only required to conduct a diagnostic evaluation if the referring county is under contract with them for this purpose and if staff and institutions are available [Welf. & Inst. Code § 704(c)].

CYA placement for diagnosis and treatment may also be ordered for a juvenile who has been declared a ward of the court as habitually truant or disobedient if a supplemental petition for commitment of the minor to the Youth Authority is filed and the minor is otherwise eligible for commitment to the Youth Authority [Welf. & Inst. Code § 704(a)].

When the minor is returned from the center, the minor must be brought before the court within two judicial days. The matter must then be set for a disposition hearing to be commenced within 10 judicial days [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.782(c)].

[2] Holding in Psychopathic Ward

Whenever the court, before or during the hearing on the petition, is of the opinion that the minor is mentally ill or if the court is in doubt concerning the mental health of any such person, the court may order that person held temporarily in the psychopathic ward of the county hospital or any hospital the services of which have been approved and/or contracted for by the department of health of the county, for observation and recommendation concerning future care, supervision, and treatment [Welf. & Inst. Code § 705].

For further discussion relating to detaining minors in hospitals, see § 329.55[6].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
G. Disposition of Ward

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.92

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.92 Disposition Hearing Procedures

[1] Right to Judge Who Took Admission

A minor will have a right to have the same judge who took his or her admissionconduct the disposition hearing [People v. Arbuckle (1978) 22 Cal. 3d 749, 753-754, 150 Cal. Rptr 778, 587 P.2d 220] only if the record affirmatively demonstrates a basis for the defendant's reasonable expectation that the same judge will retain sentencing discretion [People v. Horn (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d 701, 261 Cal. Rptr. 814] . However, the failure to object to a different judge at disposition will be considered a waiver of the right [In re James H. (1985) 165 Cal. App. 3d 911, 918-919, 212 Cal. Rptr. 61] .

[2] Explanation of Proceedings by Court

At the beginning of the disposition hearing, the court must inform the minor and the parent or guardian, if present, of the right to be represented by counsel at the hearing and, if applicable, of the right to appointed counsel. The court must also advise the child, parent, and guardian of their hearing rights [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.534(g), (h)].

[3] Evidence Relevant to Disposition

[a] In General

After finding that the minor is properly adjudged a ward of the court, the court must hear evidence on the question of the proper disposition to be made of the minor. The court receives in evidence the social study of the minor made by the probation officer and other relevant and material evidence as may be offered. This includes hearsay evidence, which would otherwise be inadmissible in a jurisdiction hearing [In re Vincent G. (2008) 162 Cal. App. 4th 238, 75 Cal. Rptr. 3d 526] . The court may receive other relevant and material evidence that may be offered, including a "victim impact statement" submitted pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 656.2. Any judgment and order of disposition must state that the social study made by the probation officer has been read and that the social study and any statement considered by the court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 706; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.785(b)]. For further discussion of the social study report, see § 329.90[3].

Welf. & Inst. Code § 725.5 and other relevant policies of Juvenile Court Law require that the court consider "the broadest range of information" in determining how best to rehabilitate a minor and afford them adequate care [In re Robert H. (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 1317, 1329 ; 117 Cal. Rptr. 2d 899 ; In re Jimmy P. (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 1679, 1684 ; In re Raymond B. (1981) 121 Cal. App. 3d 785 ; see also [d], below].

As is the case with all juvenile court proceedings, the court must consider the safety and protection of the public, the importance of redressing injuries to victims, and the best interests of the minor [Welf. & Inst. Code § 202(d)].

[b] References to Police Contacts

Unless they are sealed under Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 389, 781 or Penal Code § 1203.45, the court must consider any law enforcement agency reports regarding the taking of the minor into custody on another matter, including disposition of that matter, if available, for the purpose of determining whether adjudication of the commission of crimes as a juvenile warrants a finding that there are circumstances in aggravation under Penal Code § 1170 or to deny probation [Welf. & Inst. Code § 828(a); see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.552(g) (law enforcement agency may disclose these records to any person or agency with legitimate need for information for purpose of official disposition of a case)]. However, reference to police contacts or arrests that are not supported by factual information has been disapproved [People v. Chi Ko Wong (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 698, 720-721, 135 Cal. Rptr. 392, 557 P.2d 976 , People v. Calloway (1994) 37 Cal. App. 3d 905, 908-909, 112 Cal. Rptr. 745] .

[c] Reference to Illegally Obtained Evidence

Illegally obtained evidence may be considered at a disposition hearing, even if it was suppressed for use at the jurisdictional hearing [In re Michael V. (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 159, 169-170, 223 Cal. Rptr. 503] .

[d] Reference to Dismissed Allegations

A court may consider the conduct underlying dismissed allegations as a factor in determining an appropriate disposition. This is true even when the allegations were dismissed as part of a plea bargain [In re Jimmy P. (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 1679, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 632] .

Welf. & Inst. Code § 725.5 requires that the court consider in addition to any other relevant and material evidence at disposition "the circumstances and gravity of the offense committed by the minor." This has been interpreted as allowing the court to consider facts and details of all evidence submitted, even if it does not support charges that were actually sustained [In re Robert H. (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 1317, 1329 ; 117 Cal. Rptr. 2d 899 ; In re Jimmy P. (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 1679, 1684] .

In fact, it is well established that the adult court mandates of People v. Harvey (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 754, 159 Cal. Rptr. 696 , are not applicable to juvenile court proceedings. This would appear to include the common juvenile court practice of entering into "Harvey stipulations" for dismissed counts in order to allow the court to consider the conduct underlying those counts, most often for the purpose of obtaining restitution. Most recently, the court in Robert H. noted that People v. Harvey has no application in juvenile court proceedings since it would limit the court's consideration of relevant evidence and may result in something less than the full truth regarding conduct relevant to the imposition of an appropriate disposition [In re Robert H. (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 1317, 1329 ; 117 Cal. Rptr. 2d 899] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Stipulations In Light of the Inapplicability of Harvey. Counsel should be aware of the possibility of the court considering conduct surrounding dismissed charges and protect their clients accordingly. Possible means by which this can be accomplished include entering into factual stipulations with the prosecutor for the purpose of disposition and redacting police and probation reports prior to disposition as part of the plea negotiation process. Failure to do so may result in the minor being "punished" for conduct which may not be true but was not adequately deleted from the record as part of the plea process.

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
G. Disposition of Ward

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.93

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.93 Judgment of Court

[1] Dispositions Available

Following receipt and consideration of the evidence concerning the proper disposition of the case, the court may make any of the following orders:

- The court may set aside the jurisdictional findings and dismiss the petition if it finds that the interests of justice and the welfare of the minor require a dismissal, or if it finds that the minor is not in need of treatment or rehabilitation. The specific reasons for dismissal must be set forth in an order entered on the minutes [Welf. & Inst. Code § 702].

- Without adjudging the minor to be a ward of the court, the court may place the minor on probation, under the supervision of the probation officer, for a period not to exceed six months [Welf. & Inst. Code § 725(a)].

- The court may order and adjudge the minor to be a ward of the court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 725(b)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Wardship for Offenses Without Confinement Time. Attorneys for all parties should be cognizant of the potential futility that may be encountered by imposing any juvenile court disposition for petitions sustained exclusively for offenses that have a maximum punishment without confinement time. Although these offenses may have an impact on certain privileges and afford an opportunity to impose restrictions on a minor's conduct and behavior, these rules may ultimately be unenforceable. Where a ward cannot be confined at all because the offense which is the exclusive basis for the wardship permits no confinement, there is absolute prohibition against confining the minor for a violation of their probation conditions or for contempt based on such violations [In re Francisco S. (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 946, 102 Cal. Rptr.

2d 514] .

[2] Deferred Entry of Judgment

[a] In General

[i] Eligibility

Effective March 8, 2000, Article 20.5 (commencing with Section 790) was added to Chapter 1 of Part 1 of Division 2 of the Welfare and Institutions Code. This article creates a Deferred Entry of Judgment (DEJ) program whose primary purpose is to 1) identify nonviolent juvenile offenders who are at risk of escalating their antisocial behavior, yet remain candidates for rehabilitation, and 2) targeting scarce resources toward treating and rehabilitating theses individuals. It also implicitly acknowledges that minors over the age of 14 who have felony petitions sustained against them face severe consequences under the law [In re Spencer S. (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 1315, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 477] . DEJ is applicable to minors appearing before the juvenile court because of the commission of a felony offense when all of the following circumstances apply [Welf. & Inst. Code § 790(a)]:

- The minor has not previously been declared to be a ward of the court for the commission of a felony offense.
- The offense charged is not one of the offenses enumerated in Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(b).
- The minor has not previously been committed to the custody of the Youth Authority.
- The minor's record does not indicate that probation has ever been revoked without being completed.
- The minor is at least 14 years of age at the time of the hearing.
- The minor is eligible for probation pursuant to Penal Code § 1203.06.

The prosecutor reviews the file to determine whether or not the minor's case is eligible for the program. If the minor is found eligible for DEJ, the prosecutor files a declaration in writing or states for the record the grounds upon which the determination is based. This information is to be made available to the minor and their attorney.

PRACTICE TIP:

Probation Revocation v. Violation. Welf. & Inst. Code § 790(a)(4) makes a minor ineligible for DEJ if "probation has ever been revoked without being completed." Recent case law suggests that in order for this section to take effect, the court must expressly revoke probation. This is true notwithstanding the fact that a minor may have sustained a new delinquency petition, or that said petition was based upon facts that clearly violate the terms and conditions of probation, while on probation [In re T.P. (2009) 178 Cal. App. 4th 1, 4-5, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 893] . In support of the position, the court in T.P. relies upon the distinction between probation violation and probation revocation as discussed in People v. Coleman (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 867, 895 n 22 . Unfortunately, no such distinction exists in juvenile law since Welf.& Inst. Code § 777(e), allowing for probation to be violated without revocation, was deleted with the passage of Proposition 21 on March 8, 2000. Consequently, a minor is not ineligible for DEJ simply because they have committed offenses while on probation, assuming that neither the original nor subsequent offenses would otherwise render them ineligible. Still, it should be noted that facts and circumstances that may not render a minor ineligible may still render them unsuitable for DEJ [see In re Sergio R. (2003) 106 Cal. App. 4th 597, 607, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 160] .

Upon a finding that the minor is also suitable for deferred entry of judgment and would benefit from education, treatment, and rehabilitation efforts, the court may grant DEJ. Under this procedure, the court may set the hearing for DEJ at the initial appearance under Welf. & Inst. Code § 657. The court shall make findings on the record that a minor is appropriate for DEJ in any case where it is granted [Welf. & Inst. Code § 790(b)].

The Deferred Entry of Judgment process does not preclude the imposition of informal probation as set forth in Welf. & Inst. Code § 654 or § 654.2. To the contrary, informal probation is specifically authorized in "unusual cases where the court determines the interest of justice would best be served" even when the minor appears to be eligible for DEJ [Welf. & Inst. Code § 654.3(h)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Legal Mandates Related to DEJ. Recent case law has clearly set forth the importance of adhering to the legal requirements related to DEJ, that it is a mandated process and not an informal program. If a minor is DEJ eligible pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 790(a), the prosecuting attorney must file Judicial Council Form JV-750, Determination of Eligibility, with the petition as well as the declaration required pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 790(b). If a minor is determined to be ineligible for DEJ, the prosecuting attorney must complete Form JV-750 and provide it to the court, the child, and the child's attorney. The trial court then has the ultimate discretion to rule on the suitability of the minor for DEJ. This may be done by either summarily granting DEJ or examining the record, conducting a hearing, and making a final determination regarding education, treatment, and rehabilitation. Failure by the prosecutor or the court to satisfy these statutory requirements constitutes reversible error, even where the offense has been adjudicated through a contested jurisdictional hearing [In re Luis B. (2006) 142 Cal. App. 4th 1117, 48 Cal. Rptr. 3d 581] .

[ii] Suitability

If the eligibility standards of Welf. & Inst. Code § 790(a) are met, the juvenile court may grant DEJ to an eligible minor, although they are not compelled to do so [In re Sergio R. (2003) 106 Cal. App. 4th 597, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 160] . Ultimately, a two-pronged analysis of a minor's situation is required in order to find that a DEJ disposition is warranted. First, an inquiry must be made with respect to statutoryeligibility pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 790(a). Secondly, an inquiry must be made with respect to suitability, which requires a finding by the court that the minor will benefit from the "education treatment, and rehabilitation" offered by the program. This suitability analysis should be based upon the factors specified in Cal. Rules of Court, Rule 5.800(d)(3) and Welf. & Inst. Code § 791(b) [In re Sergio R. (2003) 106 Cal. App. 4th 597, 607, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 160] . The court is only permitted to deny DEJ for statutorily eligible minors based upon this suitability analysis and is prohibited from doing so for any other reason [In re Martha C. (2003) 108 Cal. App. 4th 556, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 544 ; see generally LaRon Hogg-Haught, Deferred Entry of Judgment: An Overlooked and Undervalued Benefit of Proposition 21, 38 U.S.F. L. Rev. 339 (2004)]. Where a minor declines to admit each allegation in the petition, no duty on behalf of the juvenile court arises to refer the case to the probation department or to summarily grant DEJ [In re Usef S. (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 276, 285, 72 Cal. Rptr. 3d 612] .

[b] Written Notification to Minor by Prosecutor

The prosecutor must provide written notification to the minor regarding the DEJ program that includes each of the following [Welf. & Inst. Code § 791(a)]:

- A description of the procedures for deferred entry of judgment.

- A general explanation of the roles and authorities of the probation department, the prosecutor, the program, and the court in that process.

- A clear statement that, in lieu of jurisdictional and dispositional hearings, the court may grant deferred entry of judgment with respect to any offense charged in the petition, provided that the minor admits each allegation contained in the petition and waives time for the pronouncement of judgment. Upon successful completion of the terms of probation, as defined in Welf. & Inst. Code § 794, the positive recommendation of the probation department, and the motion of the prosecuting attorney, the court shall dismiss the charge or charges against the minor, but no sooner than 12 months and no later than 36 months from the date of the referral to the program.

- A clear statement that upon any failure of the minor to comply with the terms of probation, including the rules of any program the minor is directed to attend, or any circumstances specified in Welf. & Inst. Code § 793, the prosecutor or the probation department, or the court on its own, may make a motion to the court for entry of judgment and the court shall render a finding that the minor is a ward of the court pursuant to Section 602 for the offenses specified in the original petition and shall schedule a dispositional hearing.

- An explanation of record retention and disposition resulting from participation in the deferred entry of judgment program and the minor's rights relative to answering questions about their arrest and deferred entry of judgment following successful completion of the program.

- A statement that if the minor fails to comply with the terms of the program and judgment is entered, the offense may serve as a basis for a finding of unfitness pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(d) if the minor commits two subsequent felony offenses.

[c] Grant of Deferred Entry of Judgment

If the minor is eligible for DEJ, the procedures with respect to agreement between the parties and notice requirements are satisfied, the court may refer the case to the probation department or the court may summarily grant deferred entry of judgment if the minor admits the charges in the petition and waives time for the pronouncement of judgment [Welf. & Inst. Code § 791(b)].

When directed by the court, the probation department shall make an investigation into the minor's background for the purpose of determining whether the minor is a person who would benefit by education, treatment or rehabilitation. The probation department must also determine which programs would accept the minor. The department's findings and recommendations are then reported to the court. The final determination regarding education, treatment and rehabilitation of the minor is made by the court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 791(b)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Minor Must Admit Allegations "As Charged." A review of recent case law and practices throughout the state reveals a disregard for the requirements outlined in Welf. & Inst. Code § 791(a)(3). Specifically, DEJ requires that the minor admit each allegation in the petition. This provision was included to prevent "plea bargaining" in the DEJ process, which usually represents a child's first contact with the juvenile justice system. Arguably, prosecutors can complicate the process by "overcharging" the 602 petition--a practice often cited for the widespread presence of "plea bargaining" in juvenile delinquency courts. Nonetheless, the requirements of § 791(a)(3) are clear. Therefore, an effective DEJ practice involves a petition, devoid of alternative charges, which accurately reflects the conduct allegedly committed by the minor and acceptance of full responsibility for the behavior, as reflected in an admission to the petition as alleged.

At its essence, DEJ is intended to provide an expedited mechanism for channeling certain first-time offenders away from the full panoply of a contested delinquency proceeding. That goal could not coexist with a minor who insists on exercising every procedural protection offered, and who then on appeal faults the juvenile court for not intervening and short-circuiting those protections, placing the court in an impossible "heads he wins, tails I lose" situation [In re Kenneth J. (2008) 158 Cal. App. 4th 973, 980, 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 352] .

While this analysis is sound, it underscores an implicit tension between procedural fairness and desirable outcomes that exists with some DEJ cases and in many "collaborative courts" where an admission of culpability is a prerequisite to participation. While admission of culpability, free from the plea bargaining process, is developmentally and systemically appropriate, undue pressure to admit wrongdoing, or unconditionally waive constitutional rights, in order to obtain a favorable disposition that would not be available otherwise, can lead to practices that are unsound both in terms of jurisdiction and disposition.

2009 case law suggests that compromise between procedural fairness and desirable outcomes may be achieved by distinguishing between a minor's right to make a motion to suppress evidence prior to a jurisdictional hearing and the jurisdictional hearing itself. Under this analysis, a minor may file and argue such motions prior to the jurisdictional hearing while reserving the right to admit the petition as alleged and request DEJ if they do not prevail [In re A.I. (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 1426, 1433-1437, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 501] .

[d] Citation to Custodial Parent, Guardian, or Foster Parent

The judge must issue a citation to the custodial parent, guardian, or foster parent ofthe minor to appear at the time and place set for the hearing and directing any person having custody or control of the minor to bring the minor to court as well. The notice must state that the custodian may be required to participate in a counseling or education program with the minor. The provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 170.6 must be explained in the citation. Personal service of the citation must be made at least 24 hours before the time stated for the appearance [Welf. & Inst. Code § 792].

[e] Program Requirements

When a minor is allowed to participate in a deferred entry of judgment procedure, the court shall impose a requirement subjecting the minor to warrantless searches. The court shall also consider whether to impose random chemical testing and require minors to periodically establish compliance with curfew and school attendance, when appropriate. Orders for restitution and any other authorized term of probation that the court believes would assist in the education, treatment, and rehabilitation of the minor may also be imposed [Welf. & Inst. Code § 794].

[f] Program Failure

If it appears to the prosecutor, the court or the probation department that the minor is not performing satisfactory in the assigned program or is not complying with the terms of probation, or that the minor is not benefiting from education, treatment, or rehabilitation, the court shall lift the deferred entry of judgment and schedule a dispositional hearing. The same result is reached if the minor is convicted of or adjudicated for the commission of one felony, or two misdemeanors committed on separate occasions. If, after the grant of deferred entry, the minor is convicted of or adjudicated for commission of one misdemeanor, or multiple misdemeanors committed in a single incident, the court may lift the deferred entry and schedule a dispositional hearing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 793(a)].

When the previously deferred judgment is imposed and a dispositional hearing scheduled, the court must report the complete criminal history of the minor to the Department of Justice, pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 602.5 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 793(b)]. Conversely, a minor's admission of the charges contained in the petition does not constitute a finding that a petition has been sustained for any purpose unless judgment is entered [Welf. & Inst. Code § 791(c)].

[g] Successful Completion

If the minor performs satisfactorily during the period in which deferred entry of judgment is granted the charges in the petition are dismissed, the arrest upon which the judgment was deferred shall be deemed to have never occurred and the records in the possession of the juvenile court are sealed. The only purpose for which access to the records is granted is for future determination of eligibility for the DEJ program entered [Welf. & Inst. Code § 793(c)].

[h] Appeals

An order granting deferred entry of judgment is not subject to appeal. There is no statute which expressly provides for an order granting DEJ and such orders are not "judgments" in either a general or specific sense. Consequently, courts of appeals lack the jurisdiction to entertain appeals based upon issues underlying DEJ orders [In re Mario C. (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 1303, 1307-1309, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 891] .

On the other hand, review by extraordinary writ may be available as an avenue for appellate review when conditions for such relief are present [Id. at pp. 1311-1312].

[3] Probation Without Wardship

The juvenile court may place the minor on probation without wardship. If the minor fails to comply with the conditions of probation imposed, the court may order and adjudge the minor to be a ward of the court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 725(a)]. Reinstitution of the original wardship proceeding, as opposed to an order changing or modifying a previous order pursuant to [Welf. & Inst. Code § 777(a), is the proper disposition of a case where a minor has failed to comply with orders made under Welf. & Inst. Code § 725 [In re Deon W. (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 143, 146-147] . However, if the minor is not eligible for informal supervision under Welf. & Inst. Code § 654, the court may not place the minor on probation without wardship [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 725(a); see also Welf. & Inst. Code § 654.3 and discussion in § 329.33].

When a minor is placed on probation without wardship pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 725(a), he or she cannot be removed from the custody of his or her parent and may not be placed in physical confinement, including juvenile hall. Such actions are limited to minors who are adjudged wards of the court pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 725(b) [In re Trevor W. (2001) 88 Cal. App. 4th 833, 106 Cal. Rptr. 2d 169 ; see Welf. & Inst. Code § 726; see also Welf. & Inst. Code § 730].

This does not mean that significant consequences cannot be imposed pursuant to § 725(a). The conditions required by Welf. & Inst. Code § 729.2 must be imposed and other conditions, not related to removal from parental custody or placement in "secure confinement" as defined in Welf. & Inst. Code § 726(c), may be imposed as well. Among these conditions, a period of time on home supervision or "house arrest" and participation in a juvenile work program are permitted [In re Walter P. (2009) 170 Cal. App. 4th 95, 101-103, 87 Cal. Rptr. 3d 668] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Request for Probation Without Wardship. Attorney for the minor should remember to ask for informal supervision, supervision without wardship, in appropriate cases at disposition. Such a case may be where the evidence at trial showed the minor to be less culpable than it appeared from earlier reports.

[4] Minor Adjudged Insane

If the court finds that the minor was insane at the time the offense was committed, the court, unless it appears that the minor has fully recovered his or her sanity, must direct that the minor be confined in a state hospital for the care and treatment of the mentally disordered or any other appropriate public or private mental health facility approved by the community program director, or the court may order the minor to undergo outpatient treatment. The court must transmit a copy of its order to the community program director or to his or her designee [Welf. & Inst. Code § 702.3(b); see Penal Code §§ 1600-1614 (outpatient treatment)].

If the allegations of the petition specifying any felony offense are found to be true, the court must direct that the minor be confined in a state hospital or other public or private mental health facility approved by the community program director for a minimum of 180 days, before such minor may be released on outpatient treatment. Prior to making such order directing that the minor be confined in a state hospital or other facility or ordered to undergo outpatient treatment, the court must order thecommunity program director or his or her designee to evaluate the minor and to submit to the court within 15 judicial days of such order his or her written recommendation as to whether the minor should be required to undergo outpatient treatment or committed to a state hospital or another mental health facility. If, however, it appears to the court that the minor has fully recovered his or her sanity, the minor must be remanded to the custody of the probation department until his or her sanity has been finally determined in the manner prescribed by law. A minor committed to a state hospital or other facility or ordered to undergo outpatient treatment cannot be released from confinement or the required outpatient treatment unless and until the court that committed him or her has found and determined, after notice and hearing, that his or her sanity has been restored [Welf. & Inst. Code § 702.3(b)].

When the court, after considering the placement recommendation for the community program director, orders that the minor be confined in a state hospital or other public or private mental health facility, the court is required to provide copies of various documents to the state hospital or other treatment facility where the minor is to be confined. These copies include the commitment order, a computation or statement of the maximum commitment time, a computation or statement of the credit time to be deducted, a state summary criminal history information, any arrest or detention reports, any court ordered psychiatric examination or evaluation reports, and the community program director's placement recommendation report [Welf. & Inst. Code § 702.3(c)].

No minor may be committed pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 702.3 for a period longer than the jurisdictional limits of the juvenile court, unless at the conclusion of the commitment, by reason of a mental disease, defect, or disorder, the minor represents a substantial danger of physical harm to others, in which case the commitment for care and treatment beyond the jurisdictional age may be extended by proceedings in superior court in accordance with and under the circumstances specified in Penal Code § 1026.5(b) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 702.3(e)].

A commitment pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 702.3 is based on the wardship petition under Welf. & Inst. Code § 602 rather than a dependency finding under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 [People v. Superior Court (John D.) (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 380, 391, 157 Cal. Rptr. 157 (granting writ of mandate as appropriate remedy)].

[5] Adjudged Wardship Under Welf. & Inst. Code § 601

If a minor is adjudged a ward of the court on a finding of habitual disobedience or truancy as set forth in Welf. & Inst. Code § 601, the court may make any and all reasonable orders for the care, supervision, custody, conduct, maintenance, and support of the minor, including medical treatment, and including orders to the parents and guardians of the minor to appear before a county financial evaluation officer, subject to the further order of the court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 727(a), (b); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.790(f)(1)].

Pursuant to 1992 legislation, the court's authority has been slightly limited in ordering a government agency to provide services. The court may do so only if it has determined through the administrative process of the agency which has been joined as a party in the juvenile proceeding, that the minor is eligible for the services. The court must not impose duties on the agency beyond those mandated by law [Welf. & Inst. Code § 727(a)].

The trial court may place a minor adjudged a ward of the court under Welf. & Inst. Code § 601 on probation with or without supervision of a probation officer. The court may impose any and all reasonable conditions of behavior that may be appropriate for probation [Welf. & Inst. Code & 727(a); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.790(f)(1); see also discussion in § 329.94].

In all other cases, the court must order the care, custody, control, and conduct of the minor to be under the supervision of the probation officer, who may place the minor in one of the following [Welf. & Inst. Code § 727(a), (b)]:

- The home of a relative;
- A suitable licensed community care facility; or
- With a foster family agency to be placed in a suitable licensed foster family home or in a family home that has been certified by the agency as meeting licensing standards.

There is no denial of equal protection in the different treatment of minors under Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 601, 602, and 300 (dependent children) [In re Harm R. (1979) 88 Cal. App. 3d 438, 442-444, 152 Cal. Rptr. 167] .

If a status offender adjudged a ward of the court under Welf. & Inst. Code § 601 has violated a court order, the juvenile court may exercise its contempt power to incarcerate the minor, so long as the following conditions are met: (1) the juvenile is given sufficient notice to comply with the order and to understand its provisions; (2) the violation of court order is egregious; (3) the record indicates that less restrictive alternatives were considered and found to be ineffective; and (4) special confinement conditions are made to ensure that the minor does not come in contact with those minors who are confined because of their commission of a crime [In re Michael G. (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 283, 297, 243 Cal. Rptr. 224, 747 P.2d 1152] .

[6] Adjudged Wardship Under Welf. & Inst. Code § 602

If the juvenile court adjudges the minor a ward of the court under Welf. & Inst. Code § 602 (criminal offense), it may:

- Place the minor on probation without supervision of the probation officer [Welf. & Inst. Code § 727(a)].
- Place the minor on probation with supervision in the family home [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730].
- Place the minor with a relative or in a suitable licensed group or foster home [Welf. & Inst. Code § 727(a)].
- Commit the minor to juvenile hall, or a county camp or ranch [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730(a)].
- Commit the minor to the California Youth Authority [Welf. & Inst. Code § 731].

The court has the discretion to place a minor adjudged a ward under Welf. & Inst. Code § 602 (criminal offenses) on probation without supervision of a probation officer. However, the minor may not be placed on this type of supervision if the minor has committed any of certain specified serious offenses [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 727(a) (those offenses specified in Penal Code §§ 459, 707(b), (d)(2), (e) or in Health and Safety Code § 11350(a))].

If the minor has been adjudged a ward of the court for the sale or possession for sale of a controlled substance other than marijuana, for the sale, possession, or knowing transportation of a machine gun, for intentionally converting a firearm into a machine gun, or for knowingly manufacturing a machine gun, the minor may be placed on probation without supervision of the probation officer only if the court has determined that the interests of justice would best be served, and has stated reasons on the record for that determination [Welf. & Inst. Code § 727(a); see Health & Safety Code §§ 11053-11058 (controlled substances); Penal Code § 12220 (machine gun)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Specialty or Problem-Solving Courts. Recognizing the limitations of the traditional responses available in delinquency courts, many jurisdictions are exploring the use of specialty or problem-solving courts to address specific needs of children who fall within the jurisdiction of Welf. & Inst. Code § 602. While these courts arguably improve the systemic response to particular issues, and the competence of the practitioners involved in their administration, they are most effective when a nexus between the specified problem and the delinquent behavior exists. Additionally, since these courts frequently function with limited resources, they should only be utilized when there is a likelihood that the minor's delinquent behavior will be corrected or reduced through involvement with the court.

While many of these courts, especially those dealing with mental health and substance abuse, focus on non-custodial resources, practitioners should be cautioned against involving their clients in specialty courts only as a way to get them out of custody. Frequently these courts involve requirements and expectations that minors may not be able to fulfill and, in turn, may set them up for failure and greater consequences in the future. Finally, it is important to note that because juveniles and adults are not similarly situated with respect to the purposes of the law, specialty courts available to the two groups will not be identical. Not only does this mean that juvenile specialty courts and programs are often not available in adult forums, it also means that adult programs and opportunities such as those provided by Proposition 36, are not applicable to juvenile proceedings [In re Jose Z. (2004) 116 Cal. App. 4th 953, 961-963, 10 Cal. Rptr. 3d 842]
.

[7] Mandatory Dispositions

The court must commit any minor adjudicated to be a ward as the result of personal use of a firearm in the commission of a violent felony, as defined in Penal Code § 667.5(1), to placement in a juvenile hall, ranch, camp, or with the Youth Authority [Welf. & Inst. Code § 602.3(a)]. A treatment-based alternative placement order on any minor subject to this section may be imposed if the court finds the minor has a mental disorder requiring intensive treatment. Any alternative placement so ordered must be made on the record, in writing, and in accordance with existing statutory authority [Welf. & Inst. Code § 602.3(b)].

In addition, for any offense that the prosecutor could have filed directly in adult court, pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(d) but elects instead to file a petition in juvenile court, if the minor is found to be a person described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 602(a) they must receive a dispositional commitment to a secured facility [Welf. & Inst. Code § 707(d)(5)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Secure Commitments. While both Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 707(d)(5) and 602.3(a) require placement in juvenile hall, ranch camp, forestry camp, boot camp, secure juvenile homes, or any institution operated by the Youth Authority, neither section specifies a duration. Consequently, minimal terms "credit for time served" or electronic monitoring commitments may fulfill the requirements dictated by these sections.

LexisNexis®

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
G. Disposition of Ward

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.94

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.94 Conditions of Probation

[1] Scope of Court's Discretion

Whether or not the minor is adjudged a ward of the court, the court may set reasonable terms and conditions of probation for the minor [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 725, 782; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.790(b)]. The juvenile court has broad discretion in formulating conditions of probation, and may impose a condition that is reasonable for a juvenile although not reasonable for an adult. The court may impose any reasonable condition that is "fitting and proper to the end that justice may be done and the reformation and rehabilitation of the ward enhanced" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730(b); see In re Antonio C. (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 1029, 1033, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 218] . The court may also impose a condition that infringes on constitutional rights, so long as that condition is tailored specifically to meet the needs of the juvenile [In re Antonio R. (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 937, 941, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 212 ; In re Michael D. (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 1610, 1616, 264 Cal. Rptr. 476 (approving condition requiring minor to stay out of known gang-gathering areas); see In re Laylah K. (1991) 229 Cal. App. 3d 1496, 1501-1502, 281 Cal. Rptr. 6 (gang prohibition, curfew, search-and-seizure waiver, and chemical-testing conditions were reasonably tailored to minor's needs)]. The third prong of this analysis has also been defined as requiring or forbidding conduct reasonably related to a minor's rehabilitation [In re Daniel R. (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 1, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3rd 179] .

PRACTICE TIP:

School Performance. Occasionally, the court may attempt to hold a minor to certain performance standards relating to educational achievement (e.g. maintaining a "B" average). While such conditions may be imposed, they must be supported by reliable evidence that the minor has the intellectual capacity to meet the standard set by the court. Absent such evidence, the appropriate order is to have theminor maintain "satisfactory grades, attendance and citizenship" [In re Juan G. (2003) 2003 Cal. App. LEXIS 1458] .

If placed on probation, the court will require, unless inappropriate, that the minor attend school without absence, that the minor and his or her parents or guardian participate in a counseling or education program, and that the minor be at his or her legal residence between 10:00 p.m. and 6:00 a.m. unless accompanied by his or her parents or legal guardian [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 725(a), 729.2; see In re Jason J. (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 710, 717-718, 284 Cal. Rptr. 673 (court may require joint counseling, but may not order parent to attend AA meetings)]. The court also may impose, if appropriate, requirements for alcohol and drug testing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 729.3; In re Jason J. (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 710, 718-719, 284 Cal. Rptr. 673 (overruled on other grounds in People v. Welch (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 228, 237, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 520, 851 P.2d 802)], limitations on persons with whom the minor may associate [In re Byron B. (2004) 119 Cal. App. 4th 1013, 1015-1018, 14 Cal. Rptr. 3d 805 ; In re Frank V. (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 1232, 1241-1243, 285 Cal. Rptr. 16] , and curfews on activities after dark [In re Jason J. (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 710, 719, 284 Cal. Rptr. 673] . Upon review, a condition of probation will not be found invalid unless it (1) has no relationship to the crime of which the offender was convicted, (2) relates to conduct that is not in itself criminal, and (3) requires or forbids conduct that is not reasonably related to future criminality [People v. Lent (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 481, 124 Cal. Rptr. 905 ; In re Kacy S. (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 704, 709] .

PRACTICE TIP:

Mandatory Counseling. Effective January 2, 2002, the court is required to order a minor to attend counseling, at the expense of their parents, when they have been found to have committed a violation of Penal Code § 241.2 (assault on school or park property) or Penal Code § 243.2 (battery on school, park or hospital property). While the parents' ability to pay must be taken into consideration by the court, an inability to pay does not relieve the minor of their obligation to attend counseling [Welf. & Inst. Code § 729.6].

[2] Timely Objection to Conditions

As a general rule, in order to preserve a challenge against an unreasonable or invalid probation condition, the minor must object to the condition at the time it is imposed or the issue is waived [In re Josue S. (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 168, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 796] . Nonetheless, under peculiar circumstances waiver principles do not preclude appellate review [In re Khonsavanh S. (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 532, 537, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 80] . This is the case in situations where, like involuntary AIDS or HIV testing, imposition of the order is strictly limited by statute [People v. Guardado (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 757, 763, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 81] .

An exception also exists where the issues raised on appeal present "pure questions of law that can be resolved without reference to the particular sentencing record developed in juvenile court" [People v. Welch (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 228, 235, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 520 ; In re Justin S. (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 811, 815 ; 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 466] . The California Supreme Court has recently resolved any conflict in this area by declining to apply the doctrine of forfeiture to probation conditions that are vague or overbroad and thus facially unconstitutional [In re Sheena K. (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 875, 889, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 716]. Nonetheless, the court cautioned that this exception does not apply in every case in which a probation condition is challenged on a constitutional ground.

[3] Conditions Directed at Parents or Guardian of Minor

When a minor has been adjudged a ward of the court, the court finds that notice has been given in accordance with Welf. & Inst. Code § 661, and the minor is allowed to remain in the custody of a parent or guardian subject to the supervision of the probation officer, the parent or guardian may be required to participate with the minor in a counseling or education program, including, without limitation, parent education and parenting programs operated by community colleges, school districts, or other appropriate agencies designated by the court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 727(b); see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.790(b)(1)(B)]. The court must consider the educational needs of the child. Any limitations on the right of a parent or guardian to make education decisions for the child must be specified in the court order [Cal. Rules of Ct. Rule 5.790(f)(5)]. In any event, the court may order a parent or guardian to ensure that the minor attends school regularly and make reasonable efforts to obtain appropriate educational services for the minor [Welf. & Inst. Code § 727

].

[4] Conditions When Minor Is Nonresident

If a nonresident minor is placed on supervised probation or made a ward of the court, the court may send the minor to out-of-state parents, relatives, guardians, or custodians, or may order a foreign minor turned over to authorities in his or her country of origin [Welf. & Inst. Code § 738; see In re Adolfo M. (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1225, 1230-1231, 275 Cal. Rptr. 619 (proper transfer of minor to Mexican authorities); In re Manuel P. (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 48, 61-63, 263 Cal. Rptr. 447 , cert. denied, 498 U.S. 832, 111 S. Ct. 97, 112 L. Ed. 2d 68 (1990) (Welf. & Inst. Code § 738 not preempted by federal law)]. The court may not, however, impose as a condition of probation that the minor must live in another country with his parents and not return to this country without the permission of his or her probation officer [In re Babak S. (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 1077, 1084-1085, 22 Cal. Rptr. 2d 893] . This obviously applies to minors who are United States citizens as well. Probation conditions that require that a minor be banished from his or her country violate the constitutional rights of freedom of travel, assembly, and association [In re James C. (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 1198, 1204, 81 Cal. Rptr. 3d 846] . However, an order placed upon a minor living with his mother in Mexico that prohibited him from entering the United States except to attend school, work, or visit his father and family, and required notification to his probation officer before entering the country, was determined to be lawful for the child whose sustained petition involved marijuana smuggling [Alex O. v. Superior Court (2009) 174 Cal. App. 4th 1176, 95 Cal. Rptr. 438] .

[5] Conditions Related to Psychological and Medical Treatment

Pursuant to an order that a minor participate in psychological counseling or undergo psychiatric treatment, the court may also order that all records relating to that treatment be made available to the court or probation department upon request. As with all juvenile probation orders, these orders must be reasonable and tailored to fit the reformative and rehabilitative needs of the child but they do not necessarily violate either the right to privacy or the psychotherapist-patient privilege [In re Christopher M. (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 684, 693-696, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 61] . Similarly, specific orders that a minor take medications prescribed for conditions related to his or her rehabilitation may be lawful but must be narrowly tailored. While they need not specify particular medication by name, they must refer to a specific diagnosis and prescription related to rehabilitation [In re Luis F. (2009) 177 Cal. App. 4th 176, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 174] .

As the orders relate to the minor's privacy interest, that interest may be outweighed by the countervailing interests in protecting the public against future conduct and determining whether probation is being complied with and treatment is succeeding [Ibid]. As they relate to the psychotherapist-patient privilege, Evidence Code § 1012 codifies an express exception to the privilege that permits disclosure of otherwise privileged communications to third parties to whom disclosure is reasonably necessary to accomplish the purpose for which the psychotherapist was consulted [In re Pedro M. (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 550, 554, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 839] .

[6] Conditions Related to Drug Use

When a minor who has unlawfully possessed, used, sold, or otherwise furnished any controlled substance is placed on probation, the probation officer may recommend that the minor be ordered to not use or be under the influence of any controlled substance as a condition of probation, and that the minor submit to drug and substance abuse testing as directed by the probation officer or peace officer [Welf. & Inst. Code § 729.3; see In re Laylah K. (1991) 229 Cal. App. 3d 1496, 1502, 281 Cal. Rptr. 6] . If the probation officer recommends drug-related conditions on probation, the court is required to impose them, unless the court makes a finding that these conditions would not serve the interests of justice. The minor is required to pay for all or part of the costs of the testing, if he or she has the financial ability to do so [Welf. & Inst. Code § 729.9].

If the minor's offense involved the possession, use, or furnishing of a controlled substance, public intoxication, or possession of an alcoholic beverage, the minor must also participate in and successfully complete an alcohol or drug rehabilitation program [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 725(a), 729.10; see Bus. & Prof. Code § 25662 (possession of alcoholic beverage); Health & Safety Code §§ 11053-11058 (controlled substances); Penal Code § 647(f) (public intoxication)]. If the minor unlawfully possessed, used, sold, or otherwise furnished a controlled substance [see Health & Safety Code § 11053 et seq.], imitation controlled substance [see Health & Safety Code § 109550], or toluene or a toxic [see Penal Code § 381], on school grounds or the grounds of any church, synagogue, playground, public or private youth center, child care facility, or public swimming pool, the court must also order the minor to perform not more than 100 hours of community service as a condition of probation, unless that condition would be inappropriate [Welf. & Inst. Code § 729.8(a); see also Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 729.8(b), 11351.1(e) (definitions of "playground" and "youth center")]. The term "community service" means picking up litter along public streets or highways, cleaning up graffiti on school grounds or public property, or performing services in a drug rehabilitation center [Welf. & Inst. Code § 729.8(c)].

[7] Condition Permitting Warrantless Search

The court may impose a condition that the minor be searched without a warrant by a police or probation officer. Under prior case law an officer need not have been aware of the probationary search condition in order to later justify a warrantless search [In re Tyrell J. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 68, 81, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 33, 876 P.2d 519 , overruled by In re Jaime P. (2006) 40 Cal. 4th 128, 139, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 430, 146 P.3d 965] . Tyrell J. has since been overruled [In re Jaime P. (2006) 40 Cal. 4th 128, 139, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 430, 146 P.3d 965] . A probation condition does not justify a warrantless search when the officer is unaware of the search condition and the search is otherwise unlawful [In re Jaime P. (2006) 40 Cal. 4th 128, 130].

A police officer's reliance on a minor's statement that he was searchable for weapons entitles the officer to conduct a warrantless search where nothing would suggest that reliance of the statement was unreasonable, even if it is inaccurate [In re Jeremy G. (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 553, 555-556] .

[8] Conditions on Continued Custody

The court may also order the ward to participate in uncompensated work programs or it may commit the ward to a sheltered care facility or order that the ward and his or her family or guardian participate in a program of professional counseling as arranged and directed by the probation officer as a condition of continued custody [Welf. & Inst. Code § 731].

[9] Conditions Related to Home Supervision

As the need for expanded use of non-custodial alternatives increases, discussion of probation conditions related to those alternatives has increased as well. Home supervision, or house arrest, is a permissible sanction [In re Walter P. (2009) 170 Cal. App. 4th 95, 87 Cal. Rptr. 3d 668] as is use of electronic monitoring devices, including global positioning system (GPS) devices [In re R.V. (2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 239, 89 Cal. Rptr. 3d 702] . It should be noted that because such conditions do not fall within the definition of "secure confinement" pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 726(c), they neither require wardship nor count as custody credits against a minor's maximum time of confinement [In re Walter P. (2009) 170 Cal. App. 4th 95, 101-102, 87 Cal. Rptr. 3d 668] .

[10] Community Service Including Graffiti Cleanup

The juvenile court may order the minor to perform community service, including but not limited to graffiti cleanup, during a time other than the minor's school attendance or employment. In lieu of community service, the court may order the minor to keep a specified property in the community free of graffiti for a period of time. Time requirements for both sanctions increase based on prior sustained petitions for vandalism offenses, and may reach 600 hours of community service or 240 days of property maintenance [Penal Code §§ 594, 594.1, 594.6, 594.8, 640.5, 640.6; Welf.

& Inst. Code § 729.1]. In addition, when a ward placed under the supervision of the probation officer is required as a condition of probation to participate in community service or graffiti cleanup, the court may impose a condition that if the minor unreasonably fails to attend or unreasonably leaves before completing the assigned daily hour of community service or graffiti cleanup, a law enforcement officer may take the minor into custody in order to return the minor to the site of the community service or graffiti cleanup [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730(c)].

If a minor is found to be a person described in Section 602 by reason of the commission of an act prohibited by Section 594, 594.3, 594.4, 640.5, 640.6, or 640.7 of the Penal Code, and the court does not remove the minor from the physical custody of the parent or guardian, the court as a condition of probation shall require the minor to wash, paint, repair, or replace the property defaced, damaged, or destroyed by the minor or otherwise pay restitution to the probation officer of the county for disbursement to the owner or possessor of the property or both. If the court fails to do so, it must make a finding and state on the record its reasons why that condition would be inappropriate [Penal Code § 742.16(a)].

Nothing in Penal Code § 742.16 limits a juvenile court's authority to add terms and conditions for graffiti-related offenses to those specified in that statute. Consequently, a minor may be ordered to pay restitution, which is also mandated by Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6, and perform community service work as conditions of probation for minors who have committed the offenses described above in Penal Code § 742.16 [Inre G.V. (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 1244] . See also discussion in § 329.95.

[11] Impact on Driving Privilege

Individuals found to have committed certain offenses may have their driving privilege suspended, delayed or restricted by the court. The duration and nature of the impact on the minor's driving status depends upon the offense committed. Offenses relating to certain Vehicle Code violations may result in a restriction, suspension or delay of no more than six months [Veh. Code § 13201]. For each finding that an individual, between the ages of 13 and 21, has committed a specified drug or alcohol related offense, the court must suspend or delay the driving privilege for one year [Veh. Code § 13202.5]. Upon a showing of a critical need to drive, the court may modify this suspension or delay to a license restriction [Veh. Code § 13202.5(c)(1)]. A similar mandatory suspension or delay of one year applies to individuals found to have operated a motor vehicle in specified drug related offenses, where the vehicle was involved in, or incidental to the commission of the offense [Veh. Code § 13202].

Minors over the age of 13 found to be habitual truants may have a license suspension, delay or restriction of one year [Veh. Code § 13202.7].

For each finding of a graffiti offense pursuant to Penal Code § 594, 594.3 or 594.4, committed by an individual over 13 years of age, the court must suspend, delay or restrict the driving privilege for one year as well [Veh. Code § 13202.6]. A minor participating in a graffiti abatement program may reduce the license suspension period, as discussed in § 329.94[10][g][iii].

The court may also suspend the driving privilege, for five years, when a minor has committed an offense involving a firearm [Veh. Code § 13202.4].

Mandatory revocation by the Department of Motor Vehicles for certain offenses, applicable to minor's and adults, is set forth in Veh. Code §§ 13350, 13351, 13351.5 and 13352. A department mandated revocation, specific to minors, is applicable to offenses involving driving under the influence of drugs or alcohol [Veh. Code § 13352.3].

A sustained allegation of assault with a deadly weapon [Penal Code § 245(a)(1)] will result in the immediate and permanent revocation of the driving privilege when a motor vehicle was found to be the deadly weapon or instrument used to commit the offense. The fact that this consequence extends beyond the jurisdiction of the court does not effect the duration of the sanction [In re Grayden N. (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 598, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 277] .

A court's statutory authority to suspend a minor's driving privilege may be distinguishable from its ability to suspend the privilege as a condition of probation. While a recent appellate decision has held that Vehicle Code § 13203 explicitly prohibits the suspension of the driving privilege as a condition of probation for a period of time longer than that specified by statute [In re Colleen S. (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 471, 472-475, 10 Cal. Rptr. 3d 9] there is disagreement on the issue. Other courts have held that the authority to suspend the driving privilege as a condition of probation may extend to the duration of the court's jurisdiction over a minor. This reasoning, notwithstanding statutory authority to the contrary, could support the suspension of a minor's driving privilege until the age of 21 or 25, if the order is specifically tailored to meet the needs of the child. [In re Tanya B. (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 1, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 576 questioned on other grounds, In re Justin S. (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 811, 814, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 466] .

[12] Employment Restrictions

No ward of the juvenile court or Department of the Youth Authority shall perform any function that provides access to certain personal information of private individuals if the ward has been adjudicated for the following offenses:

- An offense involving forgery or fraud.
- An offense involving misuse of a computer.
- An offense for which the person is required to register as a sex offender pursuant to Section 290 of the Penal Code.
- An offense involving any misuse of the personal or financial information of another person. [Welf. & Inst. Code § 219.5].

[13] Firearm Prohibition

Any person who is alleged to have committed any offense enumerated in Penal Code § 12021(c)(1), and is subsequently adjudged a ward of the juvenile court because they committed such an offense, shall not own, or have in his or her possession or under his or her custody or control, any firearm until the age of 30 years [Penal Code § 12021(e)]. Notably, the offenses listed in § 12021 include misdemeanor assaults and batteries. Recent case law has determined that all battery offenses, including those committed against specific victims not listed in § 12021(c)(1), trigger operation of this mandatory prohibition [In re David S. (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 1160, 1165-1167, 35 Cal. Rptr. 3d 309] .

[14] Gang and Weapons Orders

It is well established that the court can make reasonable orders related to associates and implements held by minors. These orders must be narrowly tailored and must be sufficiently precise for the probationer to know what is required of them [People v. Lopez (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 615, 630, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 66] . With respect to associations, the preferred language is to prohibit association "with any person known to you to be on probation, on parole or a member of a criminal street gang" [In re H.C. (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 1067, 1072, 96 Cal. Rptr. 3d 793] . With respect to orders related to "dangerous or deadly weapon" possession, it has been held to apply to items specifically delineated by statutes and items that can be used to cause injury or death [In re R.P. (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 562, 566-570, 97 Cal. Rptr. 3d 822] .

[15] Victim Considerations

The court may direct a juvenile offender to complete a victim impact class, participate in victim-offender conferencing subject to the victim's consent, pay restitution to the victim, and make a contribution to the victim restitution fund after all victim restitution orders and fines have been satisfies [Welf. & Inst. Code § 202(f)]. The probation officer shall inform the victim of any victim-offender conferencing program or victim impact class available in the county, and of the victim's right to be informed of the final disposition of the case and their right to restitution [Welf. & Inst. Code § 742(b)].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
G. Disposition of Ward

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.95

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.95 Restitution and Fines

[1] Restitution to Victim

[a] General Rule

A victim of conduct for which a minor is declared a ward under Welf. & Inst. Code § 602, who incurs any economic loss as a result of the minor's conduct must receive restitution directly from that minor [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6(a)(1)]. Judges havebroad discretion in fixing the amount of restitution and may use any rational method for determining the amount, provided that it is reasonably calculated to make the victim whole and is consistent with the purpose of rehabilitation [In re Dina V. (2007) 151 Cal. App. 4th 486, 489, 59 Cal. Rptr. 3d 862 ; In re Brittany L. (2002) 99 Cal. App. 4th 1381, 1391-1392, 122 Cal. Rptr. 2d 376].

The economic loss must be "as a result of the minor's conduct" [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6(a)], but that conduct need not be the sole cause of the victim's loss [In re Johnny M. (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 1128, 1132, 123 Cal. Rptr. 2d 316] . Since restitution laws are to be broadly and liberally construed, and are authorized by a dispositional statute passed by the Legislature, there is no right to have the obligation to pay restitution, or its amount determined by a civil jury trial [In re A.M. (2009) 173 Cal. App. 4th 668, 673-674, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 168] .

The nexus between sustained offense and loss to the victim need not be direct or apparent. Recent case law suggests that an offense as benign as driving without a license, in violation of Veh. Code § 12500(a), may support a restitution order for burial and cremation expenses for a victim struck and killed by a car driven by a minor. In that instance, the police reports indicated that both the driver and pedestrian were responsible for the accident. Still, in making the restitution order, the court determined restitution to be appropriate as the minor's conduct was a substantial factor in causing the accident, notwithstanding the nature of the sustained offense [In re A.M. (2009) 173 Cal. App. 4th 668, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 168] .

The court may determine the amount of the restitution order at any time during the term of probation if the amount of loss cannot be ascertained at the time of disposition. Restitution orders must identify each victim and the amount of each victim's loss. Such loss must include, where applicable, lost wages consisting of base wages and commission income, as defined in Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6(h)]. In the event that an order for a specific amount of restitution is not made at the time of disposition, the court has the authority to direct the probation officer to determine the amount of restitution [In re Karen A. (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 504, 510-511, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 369] .

Whether the victim has insurance or has made a claim on an insurance policy as the result of a loss sustained from an act described in a petition is irrelevant to the issues of determining loss and imposing restitution. Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6 makes it clear that the only person or entity entitled to lieu or subrogation rights pursuant to a restitution order is the State's Restitution Fund [see § 329.94[14][a][v]]. The restitution order does not affect the right of the victim to recovery from the Restitution Fund, except to the extent that restitution is actually collected pursuant to the order. Restitution collected is to be credited to any other judgments for the same losses obtained against the minor arising out of the offense for which the wardship petition was sustained [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6(i)]. The purpose in requiring a minor to pay victim restitution is both its deterrent as well as its rehabilitative effect [In re Brittany L. (2002) 99 Cal. App. 4th 1381, 1387 ; 122 Cal. Rptr. 2d 376 ; People v. Crow (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 952, 957 ; 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1] .

A minor shall have the right to a hearing before a judge to dispute the determination of the amount of restitution. The court may modify the amount on its own motion or on the motion of the district attorney, the victim or victims, or the minor. If a motion is made for modification of a restitution order, the victim must be notified of that motion at least 10 days prior to the hearing on the motion [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6(h)(4)].

When restitution is ordered to the victim, the Court shall require the minor who is subject to the order to report to the court on his or her compliance at least once a year until the order is fulfilled [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.8(a)]. In the event that the minor is committed to the Youth Authority, that department must monitor the minor's compliance with the victim restitution order [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.8(b)].

PRACTICE TIP:

No Harvey Waiver Required. People v. Harvey (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 754, 159 Cal. Rptr. 696 held that in the context of adult criminal proceedings a defendant will suffer no adverse sentencing consequence by reason of facts underlying, and solely pertaining to, dismissed counts unless they are transactionally related to admitted charges or there is an agreement to the contrary. These agreements, commonly referred to as "Harvey Stipulations" or "Harvey Waivers," do not apply to juvenile court proceedings. In juvenile court proceedings, dismissed charges or conduct that is not charged may be considered for the purpose of disposition, including restitution orders [In re T.C. (2009) 173 Cal. App. 4th 837, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 447] . This well-established principle should be taken into consideration before a minor admits a petition pursuant to a jurisdictional hearing. Minor's counsel should address the scope of the child's conduct, and appropriate consequences flowing from that conduct, with the prosecutor and the court before entering any admission in juvenile court. This is an essential practice to avoid orders related to dismissed charges or uncharged conduct for which the minor is not responsible [see also discussion in § 329.92[3][d]].

[b] Restitution Hearings

Judges are given virtually unlimited discretion as to the kind of information that can be considered at a restitution hearing. The hearing does not require the formalities of other phases of a criminal prosecution [People v. Foster (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 939, 947 ; 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1] . The court may use any rational method of fixing the amount of restitution, provided it is reasonably calculated to make the victim whole, and is consistent with the purpose of rehabilitation [In re Brian S. (1982) 130 Cal. App. 3d 523, 531 ; 181 Cal. Rptr. 778] . There is no requirement that the court explore all aspects of the claimed losses and defenses to them [People v. Ortiz (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 791, 800 ; 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 66] . On the other hand, failure to consider evidence relevant to the extent of loss, or a defense thereto, may be grounds for reversible error on appeal [In re Brittany L. (2002) 99 Cal. App. 4th 1381 ; 122 Cal. Rptr. 2d 376] .

[c] "Victim" Defined

"Victim" for restitution purposes includes the immediate surviving family of the actual victim [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6(j)], and may be made to a corporation, business trust, estate, trust, partnership, association, joint venture, government, governmental subdivision, agency, or instrumentality, or any other legal or commercial entity when that entity is a "direct victim" of the offense [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6(k)].

[d] Restitution in Relation to Other Penalties

Restitution to the victim or victims, if any, is to be imposed in addition to any other penalty provided or imposed under the law, including the restitution fine, discussed in [b], below, and any fine imposed, discussed in [e], below [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6(a)(2)].

[e] Amount of Restitution

Restitution to the victim or victims will be imposed in the amount of the losses, as determined. The court will order full restitution, unless it finds compelling and extraordinary reasons for not doing so, and states them on the record [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6(a)(2)(B), (h)]. To the extent possible, the restitution will be of a dollar amount sufficient to fully reimburse the victim or victims for all determined economic losses incurred as the result of the minor's conduct for which the wardship petition was sustained, including all of the following [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6(a)(2)(B), (h)]:

- Full or partial payment for the value of stolen or damaged property, which is the replacement cost of like property, or the actual cost of repairing the property when repair is possible;

- Medical expenses;

- Wages or profits lost due to injury incurred by the victim, and if the victim is a minor, wages or profits lost by the minor's parent, parents, guardian, or guardians, while caring for the injured minor; and

- Wages or profits lost by the victim, and if the victim is a minor, wages or profits lost by the minor's parent, parents, guardian, or guardians, due to time spent as a witness or in assisting the police or prosecution.

PRACTICE TIP:

Restitution and Medical Expenses. Recent cases have provided instruction as to how courts should determine restitution based upon a victim's medicalexpenses. Specifically, the amount billed by a victim's health care provider may not be an appropriate amount, especially when the provider accepts payment from Medi-Cal for medical services rendered. By law, if such payment is accepted, the medical provider is barred from seeking any unpaid balance from the patient. Consequently, the amount of restitution ordered should reflect the amount of the Medi-Cal payment, not the amount billed by the provider [In re Anthony M. (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 1010, 1018, 67 Cal. Rptr. 3d 734].

The definition of "economic losses" recoverable in a restitution order has recently been stated to include the value of employee work product lost as a result of the criminal conduct. This includes a calculation of the number of hours worked by salaried employees, and a pro rata share of the benefits to which they are entitled, to remedy the harm caused [In re Johnny M. (2003) 100 Cal. App. 4th 1128, 1134, 123 Cal. Rptr. 2d 316] .

Economic losses, pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6, is broadly defined and has been interpreted to parallel the adult restitution statute, Penal Code § 1202.4. Consequently, the court may order payment for costs incurred to collect restitution for economic losses, including legal fees. This does not extend to legal fees incurred to collect general damages. However, the minor has the burden of proof, to be proved by a preponderance of the evidence, to distinguish between attorney fees to recoup economic losses and those for general damages. If this burden cannot be met, the victim may recover attorney fees and costs expended in collecting restitution even if some portion of those fees and costs were spent in recovering general damages [In re Imran Q. (2008) 158 Cal. App. 4th 1316, 1321-1322, 71 Cal. Rptr. 3d 121] .

The restitution order must identify the losses to which it pertains, and is enforceable as a civil judgment [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6(i)]. The liability of a juvenile offender, pursuant to a restitution order, may continue well into adulthood as civil judgments may be enforced for 10 years [Code Civ. Proc. § 683.020] and renewed any time in those 10 years [Code Civ. Proc. § 683.120]. The fact that restitution orders may extend well beyond the period of wardship has been acknowledged by the courts and is consistent with Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6(i) [In re Michael S. (2007) 147 Cal. App. 4th 1443, 1456, 54 Cal. Rptr. 3d 920].

[f] Restitution and Rehabilitation

The restitution order does not affect the right of the victim to recovery from the Restitution Fund, except to the extent that restitution is actually collected pursuant to the order. Restitution collected is to be credited to any other judgments for the same losses obtained against the minor arising out of the offense for which the wardship petition was sustained [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6(i)].

Under Welf. & Inst. Code § 730(b), the juvenile court has broad discretionary power to impose terms and conditions of probation to achieve justice and enhance the reformation and rehabilitation of a ward. This includes the ability to order restitution in a manner that will further the legislative objectives of making the victim whole, rehabilitating the offender, and deterring future delinquent behavior [In re Tommy A. (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 1580, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 103]. Thus considered, a restitution order made in a delinquency matter is more than a device through which a victim is compensated for losses sustained as a direct result of a minor's conduct.

That a minor is not personally or immediately responsible for a victim's loss does not render an order of restitution improper. To the contrary, courts have the discretion to order restitution as a condition of probation even when the loss was not necessarily caused by the conduct underlying the sustained charge. Ultimately, the question simply is whether the restitution order is reasonably related to the minor's conduct or to future criminality [In re I.M. (2005) 125 Cal. App. 4th 1195, 1209, 23 Cal. Rptr. 3d 375] .

While it is true that requiring a child to pay restitution for losses due to some other person's conduct has questionable rehabilitative value, especially when there are no shared motives or criminal tendencies, a restitution order may be made for an act committed without the same state of mind as that required for the crime that proximately caused the loss [People v. Carbajal (1995) 10 Cal. 4th 1114, 1126 ; In re I.M. (2005) 125 Cal. App. 4th 1195, 1210] . It is enough that a restitution order "would make amends 'to society for the breach of the law, for any injury done to any person resulting from that breach, and generally and specifically for the reformation and rehabilitation of the probationer.' [citation]" [Ibid].

[2] Restitution Fine

[a] Who Must Pay Additional Fine

In addition to other penalty provided or imposed under the law, including restitution to a victim, discussed in [a], above, and any fine imposed, discussed in [e], below, or any other disposition, when a wardship petition (see Welf. & Inst. Code § 602) is sustained against a minor, the minor will be ordered to pay a separate and additional restitution fine [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6(a)(2), (b), (c)].

[b] Amount of Fine

The restitution fine is set at the discretion of the court, and is commensurate with the seriousness of the offense, as follows [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6(b)]:

- If the wardship petition is sustained for the commission of one or more felony offenses, the restitution fine is to be between $100-$1000 for each dispositional proceeding; and

- If the wardship petition is sustained for the commission of one or more misdemeanor offenses, the restitution fine is not to exceed $100.

PRACTICE TIP:

Offset for Restitution Paid by Minor to Victim. A legislative change to the restitution statutes for minors has yet to be addressed by the courts. Under existing case law, the court must reduce the restitution fine in the amount of the restitution paid to the victim by the minor [In re Paul R. (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 1582, 1590-1591, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 421] . Another court has denied a similar offset in an adult case based on the legislative deletion in the statute for adults of the provision allowing victim restitution "in lieu of" the restitution fine [People v. Blackburn (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 1520, 1534-1535, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 134] . Although the legislature also deletedthe identical language in the statute for minors, no court has addressed the impact on restitution fines for minors.

[c] Ability to Pay and Other Factors Considered by Court

The restitution fine is imposed regardless of the minor's inability to pay [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6(c)]. However, the court, in setting the amount of the fine, is required to consider any relevant factors, including but not limited to 74 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6(d)]:

- The minor's ability to pay, including his or her future earning capacity. In this regard, the minor will bear the burden of demonstrating a lack of his or her ability to pay;

- The seriousness and gravity of the offense and the circumstances of its commission;

- Any economic gain derived by the minor as a result of the offense; and

- The extent to which others suffered losses as a result of the offense, including pecuniary losses to the victim or his or her dependents, as well as intangible losses such as psychological harm caused by the offense.

Express findings of the court as to the above factors, however, are not required [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6(e)].

[d] No Waiver of Fine Except for Compelling and Extraordinary Reasons

Under no circumstances may the court fail to impose the restitution fine, except in a felony case in which the court finds compelling and extraordinary reasons to waive imposition of the fine [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6(f), (g)]. When a waiver is granted, the court is required to state on the record all reasons supporting the waiver [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6(g)].

[e] Administrative Costs of Collecting Fine

The fine is not subject to the penalty assessments of Penal Code § 1464 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6(f)]. However, the board of supervisors of any county may impose a fee, not to exceed ten percent of the amount ordered to be paid, to cover the actual administrative costs of collecting the restitution fine. The fee will be included in the orders of the court [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6(q)].

[f] Fine Is Deposited in Restitution Fund

The restitution fine is to be deposited in the Restitution Fund [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6(c)].

[3] Imposition as Condition of Probation

[a] General Rule

When a wardship petition [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 602] is sustained against a minor, the court is required to order payment of restitution fines and orders, discussed in [a] and [b], above, as a condition of probation [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6(l)].

When a petition pursuant to Welf & Inst. Code § 602 is sustained, the court may issue a citation to the minor's parents or guardians ordering them to appear at a hearing to impose a restitution fine [Welf. & Inst. Code § 729.5(a)]. The citation shall notify the parents or guardians of their liability for restitution payments if the minor is ordered to pay restitution, and further that their failure to appear at the hearing may result in a holding that the parent or guardian is jointly and severally liable with the minor for restitution within the limits provided for in Civil Code §§ 1714.1 and 1714.3 [Welf. & Inst. Code § 729.5(b), (d)].

Execution of the restitution order, including any balance unpaid at the termination of the court's jurisdiction over a minor, may be issued in the same manner as a judgment in a civil action [Welf. & Inst. Code § 729.5(e)]. However, a person held liable under this section may petition the court to modify or vacate the order based upon a showing of change of circumstances [Welf. & Inst. Code § 729.5(f)].

Foster parents are specifically excluded from these restitution orders and liability [Welf. & Inst. Code § 729.5(k)]. This section does not make an insurer liable for loss caused by the willful acts of an insured or their dependents pursuant to Section 533 of the Insurance Code [Welf. & Inst. Code § 729.5(j)].

[b] Community Service as Alternative

If the court finds and states on the record extraordinary and compelling reasons why restitution should not be required, the court must order, as a condition of probation, that the minor perform specified community service [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6(n)]. However, the court may avoid ordering community service as a condition of probation, if it finds and states on the record compelling and extraordinary reasons not to order either the restitution or the community service [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6(o)].

When a minor is ordered to perform community service as a condition of probation, the court shall require that the minor report to the court on his or her compliance no less than annually until the order is fulfilled [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.7(a)].

[c] Revocation of Probation for Failure to Pay Restitution

Probation may not be revoked for failure of a person to make restitution as discussed in [a] and [b], above, as a condition of probation, unless the court determines that the person has willfully failed to pay or failed to make sufficient bona fide efforts to legally acquire the resources to pay [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6(m)].

[4] Priority When Committed to Division of Juvenile Facilities

When a minor is committed to DJF, the court is required to order restitution to be paid to the victim or victims, if any, as discussed in [a], above [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6(p)].

Payment of the restitution to the victim or victims will take priority in time over payment of any other restitution fine, discussed in [b], above [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6(p)].

The Chief Deputy Secretary may deduct up to 50 percent from the wages of theminor, for deposit to be paid directly to the victim or in the Restitution Fund [Welf. & Inst. Code § 1752.82]. When the minor is released pursuant to Welf. & Inst. Code § 1766(a), the liberty will be conditioned on the payment in full of the restitution or restitution fine; payment is to be set in installments consistent with the minor's ability to pay [Welf. & Inst. Code § 1766.1].

[5] Fine for Criminal Offense

[a] In General

When a wardship petition [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 602] is sustained against a minor, the court is required to consider levying a fine against the minor, up to the amount that could be imposed on an adult for the same offense, if the court finds that the minor has the financial ability to pay the fine. Penal Code § 1464, requiring penalty assessments, applies to this type of fine [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 730.5, 730.6(a)(2)].

The fine, if imposed, is in addition to any restitution ordered paid by the minor, as discussed in [a]-[d], above [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.6(a)(2)].

[b] Fees Not Authorized

Penal Code § 1465.8 provides for the imposition of a court security fee for "every conviction for a criminal offense, including a traffic offense." However, since juvenile court adjudications of wardship are not convictions, the statute is inapplicable to minors. Consequently imposition of the court security fee upon minors is not authorized [Egar v. Superior Court (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 1306, 1307-1309] .

Health & Safety Code § 11372.5, which requires imposition of a $50 fee for any individual convicted of specified drug offenses, is inapplicable to minors for the same reason [In re T.P. (2006) 136 Cal. App. 4th 1461, 39 Cal. Rptr. 3d 729] .

[6] Joint and Several Liability

[a] Rebuttable Presumption of Parent's or Guardian's Liability Subject to Ability to Pay

When a minor is ordered to make restitution to the victim or victims, or to pay fines and penalty assessments, as discussed in [a]-[e], above, a parent or guardian who has joint or sole legal and physical custody and control of the minor is rebuttably presumed to be jointly and severally liable with the minor, in accordance with Civil Code §§ 1714.1 and 1714.3, for the amount of restitution, fines, and penalty assessments so ordered, up to the limits provided in those sections, subject to the court's consideration of the parent's or guardian's ability to pay [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.7(a)].

Parental liability is based upon the age of the minor at the time of the alleged offense, not on the age at the time of the dispositional hearing or imposition of the restitution order [In re Jeffrey M. (2006) 141 Cal. App. 4th 1017, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 533] .

[b] Factors Considered in Determining Ability to Pay

In considering the parent's or guardian's ability to pay, the court may consider future earning capacity [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.7(a)].

The parent or guardian has the burden of showing [Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.7(a)]:

- The inability to pay; and

- By a preponderance of the evidence, that the parent or guardian was either not given notice of potential liability for payment of restitution, fines, and penalty assessments prior to the petition being sustained by an admission or adjudication, or that he or she was not present during the proceedings in which the petition was sustain either by admission or adjudication and any hearing thereafter related to restitution, fines, or penalty assessments.

[c] Joint and Several Liability of Codefendants

One court has held that if the minor has a codefendant, the juvenile court may order that the two be jointly and severally liable for paying restitution [In re S.S. (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 543, 550-551, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 768 ; cf. People v. Campbell (1994) 21 Cal. App. 4th 825, 832-834, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 433 (same holding in adult context under former version of Penal Code § 1203.1); People v. Zito (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 736, 744, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 491 (same holding under former Gov. Code § 13967)]. Another court, however, has held that the order may be made only in conjunction with a prison commitment, and not as a condition of probation [People v. Arnold (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 1096, 1098-1100, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 35] .

[7] Parental Liability

[a] In General

Any act of willful misconduct of a minor that results in injury or death to another person or in injury to the property of another must be imputed to the parent or guardian having custody and control of the minor. The joint and several liability may not exceed $25,000 for each tort of the minor [Civ. Code § 1714.1(a)]. Unlike restitution orders imposed upon their children, payments accepted by victims from the insurer of a parent or guardian will release the parent of guardian from liability for restitution. This is because the state's interest in the rehabilitation of juvenile offenders is not implicated by a release of vicarious liability against an otherwise innocent parent [In re Michael S. (2007) 147 Cal. App. 4th 1443, 1451-1453, 54 Cal. Rptr. 3d 920].

[b] Injury Caused by Discharge of Firearm

Civil liability for death or injury to a person or injury to property caused by the discharge of a firearm by a minor must be imputed to the parent or guardian of the minor in an amount not exceeding $30,000 for one victim or $60,000 for all person's injured as a result of one occurrence [Civ. Code § 1714.3].

[c] Graffiti-Related Offenses

In addition to restitution costs, parents and guardians may be ordered by the court to keep damaged property or other specified property free of graffiti for various periods of time when their child has been found to have committed certain graffiti-related offenses [Penal Code §§ 594, 594.1, 594.6, 594.8, 640.5, and 640.6]. Participation in this graffiti abatement program is not required if the court deems such involvement to be detrimental to the minor, or if the parent or guardian is a single parent who mustcare for young children [Penal Code §§ 594(c), 544.1(f), 594.6(b), 594.8(b), 640.5(a)(2), 640.5(b)(2), 640.5(c)(2), 640.6(a)(2), 640.6(b)(2), 640.6(c)(2); Veh. Code §§ 13202.6(a)(2); Welf. & Inst.

Code § 729.1(a)(2)].

For graffiti offenses that result in a court-imposed suspension or delay in a minor's driving privilege, the period of suspension or delay is to be reduced at a rate of one day for each day of community service performed by the minor and their parent or guardian under this graffiti abatement program [Veh. Code § 13202.6(a)(2); see also discussion in § 329.94[9]]. The suspension is to be reduced only when the specified period of participation has been completed [Veh. Code § 13202.6(a)(2)].

[d] Appealability

A parent or guardian who is ordered to pay an amount pursuant to a restitution order resulting from a delinquent act committed by their child has a right of appeal from the order making them liable [In re Michael S. (2007) 147 Cal. App. 4th 1443, 1448-1451, 54 Cal. Rptr. 3d 920]. This is because judgments made pursuant to Civil Code § 1714.1, which is specifically incorporated by Welf. & Inst. Code § 730.7, are appealable [In re Michael S. (2007) 147 Cal. App. 4th 1443, 54 Cal. Rptr. 3d 920].

California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 28: Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances thru Juvenile Courts: Delinquency Proceedings-Chs. 323-329
Chapter 329 JUVENILE COURTS: DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS
PART II. LEGAL BACKGROUND
G. Disposition of Ward

28-329 California Forms of Pleading and Practice--Annotated § 329.96

AUTHOR: Hon. Kurt Kumli Editorial ConsultantLaRon Hogg Haught Contributing Author

§ 329.96 Orders Limiting Control of Minor by Parent or Guardian

[1] In General

In all cases in which the minor is adjudged a ward of the court, the court may limit the control to be exercised over the ward by any parent or guardian, including ordering removal of the minor from the family home. The order must clearly and specifically set forth all these limitations [Welf. & Inst. Code § 726; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.790(b)(2)].

Specific findings are required for an order removing a minor from the family home [Welf. & Inst. Code § 726; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.790(d)]. See discussion in [2], below.

[2] Removal From the Family Home

No ward will be taken from the physical custody of a parent or guardian unless, at the hearing, the court finds one of the following [Welf. & Inst. Code § 726; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 5.790(d)]:

- That the parent or guardian is incapable of providing or has failed or neglected to provide proper maintenance, training, and education for the minor.
- That the minor has been tried on probation in such custody and has failed to reform.
- That the welfare of the minor requires that physical custody be taken from the parent or guardian.

The court may adjudge the minor to be a ward of the court, then place the minor in the care, custody, and control of the probation officer for placement in the home with the minor's parents [see In re Nathan W. (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 1496, 1500, 253 Cal. Rptr. 312 (in making placement, juvenile court need not find that continued parental custody would be detrimental to minor)].

[3] Placement in Nonsecure Facility

[a] Placement and Group Homes

[i] In General

A ward under Welf. & Inst. Code § 602 may be placed in a nonsecure institution of the kind described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 727 [see Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 207, commonly referred to as a placement in a family or group home (institutions described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 727 as required to be nonsecure), 730(a)]. Nonsecure placements include relatives' homes, licensed community care facilities, foster family homes and the homes of nonrelative extended family members, as described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 727]. Because these institutions are not places of "physical confinement" described in Welf. & Inst. Code § 726, time spent in a nonsecure institution under Welf. & Inst. Code § 727 is not to be counted in determining, for the purpose of the limitation in Welf. & Inst. Code § 726, how long a minor has been or may be held in physical confinement [In re Randy J. (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 1497, 1506, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 152 ; In re Harm R. (1979) 88 Cal. App. 3d 438, 441-442, 152 Cal. Rptr. 167] . See discussion in § 329.96.

Any minor adjudged to be a ward of the court on the basis of a delinquency petition who is placed in a "community care facility" shall be placed within their count of residence unless 1) they have identifiable needs requiring specialized care that cannot be provided in a local facility or have needs that dictate physical separation from their family, and 2) the county of residence agrees to pay the placement county the costs of providing services to the minor [Welf. & Inst. Code § 740(a)]. Before placement in an out-of-county facility may be made, the placing county must notify the receiving county in writing of any gang affiliations or dangerous behavior by the ward along with a plan for his or her supervision and visitation [Welf. & Inst. Code § 740(b)].

PRACTICE TIP:

Out-of-State Placements. In lieu of commitments to the Division of Juvenile Justice, many counties utilize out-of-state facilities that do not have to comply with the restrictions and requirements applicable to group homes in California. While many of these placements may still be available, they must now comply with all of the requirements applicable to group homes licensed in this state [Welf. & Inst. Code § 727.1(a)]. Courts must also review each out-of-state placement every six months in order to determine compliance [Welf. & Inst. Code § 727.1(c)]. Counties may not receive or expend public funds for the placement of a minor in an out-of-state facility which is not in compliance with the California requirements [Welf. & Inst. Code § 727.1(d)]. As a result, fewer of these facilities will be available as Youth Authority alternatives. Additionally, minors previously committed to these facilities may be removed from them if compliance with the state regulations is unsatisfactory. If a minor is removed from the placement, the probation officer must promptly return the minor to the court for a hearing to review the suitability of continued out-of-state placement [Welf. & Inst. Code § 727.1(b)].

[ii] Visitation

A minor placed out of the home has a fundamental constitutional right to family visitation. This right, and more specifically delegation of the discretionary authority to determine the frequency and circumstances relating to it, must be determined by the court. The common practice of allowing placement facility personnel to exercise discretion in making decisions regarding family visits has been held to be both an abuse of discretion and a violation of the constitutional separation of powers [In re James R. (2007) 153 Cal. App. 4th 413, 443, 62 Cal. Rptr. 3d 824].

The James R. decision, which applies standards commonly used in dependency cases to delinquency proceedings, will significantly alter the relationship between thecourt, probation, and out of home placements if adopted across the state. Traditionally, rehabilitative programming, which distinguishes most delinquency placements and dispositions, relies heavily on the discretionary authority exercised by administration and staff. At first blush, it would appear that James R. dictates micromanaging rehabilitative programming for all out of home placements, including juvenile hall, ranch, camp and DJF commitments, on the issue of visitation. Upon closer review, this is not the case. It instead appears that James R. stands for the proposition that visitation issues can neither be delegated to the sole discretion of facilities nor be allowed to go unchecked. Given the importance of visitation and reunification, as emphasized in Welf. & Inst. Code § 202, it must simply be determined on a case-by-case basis, with findings and determinations made by the court, and not a placement facility.

