Preface

CEB published its pioneer edition of California Civil Procedure During Trial in 1960. The 1960 book was replaced by two volumes in 1982 and 1984. These two volumes were supplemented regularly through June 1994, and will no longer be updated. This three-volume looseleaf set entirely replaces the 1982 and 1984 casebound volumes of California Civil Procedure During Trial.

Several new chapters have been added to this edition, and all chapters have been rewritten to include topics that are now important to current law and practice. Similarly, to reflect its broader scope, the title of this book was expanded to California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial. This book has two purposes: The first is to describe the legal rules governing procedure during trial; the second is to offer sound, practical guidance about how to practice the trial lawyer's art skillfully and successfully within the framework of those rules.

The new opening chapter on handling trials efficiently should be a useful resource in an era of continually rising litigation costs. A separate chapter on the procedures and strategies involved in making and opposing motions in limine reflects the growing significance of these proceedings in trial practice compared to a decade ago. There are also new chapters on jury management and jury deliberations, including potential remedies for the misconduct that can occur during trial and deliberations. A new evidence overview chapter is intended to help trial lawyers focus on key issues and to trigger problem areas that may need attention before their cases can be proved at trial.

Many talented authors and consultants throughout California contributed to this book, identifying changes in trial practice and suggesting how material could be presented in new, original ways. Their names appear in the "Acknowledgments," "About the 2010 Update Authors," "About the Third Edition Authors," "Consultants" and "Authors of Previous Editions" sections.

Not only have these authors and consultants assisted CEB in fulfilling its educational mission, they have also benefited individual members of the California bar. We expect that their legal points and practice tips will help make trial practice more effective and more satisfying for the lawyers who use these volumes.

Checklists and other format features ensure that this book will be practical and useful, and will make material easier to find and understand. A computer disk containing the forms and many of the checklists found in the book accompanies these volumes.

Legal editing of each chapter was performed by CEB attorneys. Linda Compton was the project supervisor, and edited chaps 1, 4, 9, 14, 18, 19, 22, 23, 24, and 25. Linda Russell assisted in the planning of the new edition, and edited chaps 8, 13, and 20. Kay Tindel edited chaps 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 10, 11, and 15. Deborah Magers-Rankin edited chaps 12, 16, 17, 21, 26, and 27.

Cinda Ely was responsible for copyediting and production of these volumes, assisted by Maryann Aberg. Legal citation checking was provided by Elliot Cohen, Enrique DeAnda, Lane Parker, Brenda Ray, Phillip Robertson, Ken Scudder, Mindy Spatt, Mujahidun Sumchai, Crin Valley, and Tova Zeff. The index was prepared by Robert W. Burke, Jr. Composition was performed by CEB's Electronic Publishing Staff. The book was designed by Cheryl Ventimiglia.

APRIL 2010 UPDATE

CEB wishes to acknowledge and thank Dan Woods, a trial lawyer with White & Case LLP in Los Angeles, for his work as the author of this update. Mr. Woods reviewed the year's legal developments and contributed update material to the book's chapters.

CEB also wishes to acknowledge Judge Jacqueline A. Connor of the Los Angeles Superior Court for her generous contributions to chapters 8 and 17, and Judge Patricia M. Lucas of the Santa Clara Superior Court for her generous contributions to chapters 11 and 16.

CEB Attorney Editor David Saunders and Legal Editors Elizabeth Allen, Enrique DeAnda, Kenneth Marr and Karen Nutter contributed to this update. Kenya Denman and Nila Kanzaria provided administrative support. Richard Dempewolf handled copyediting and production. Kathryn Te Selle updated the index. Composition was performed by CEB's Electronic Publishing staff.

Acknowledgments

CEB is grateful to the almost 40 members of the bench and bar who served as authors of this book. Their biographies can be found in the "About the Third Edition Authors" section.

Many practicing lawyers and judges throughout California reviewed chapter manuscripts. Others advised us in planning the scope and content of this book. To them, we give our special thanks. Their names are listed on the "Consultants" pages that follow.

In addition, CEB wishes to express appreciation and to acknowledge the following contributions made by practicing attorneys to particular chapters:

James P. Watson of Stanton, Kay & Watson, in San Francisco, contributed to the first chapter of this book, particularly to the sections on handling multiple party cases.

The checklist on trial preparation at the end of chap 2 was adapted from Preparing for Trial (Cal CEB Action Guide Summer 1992) by Maureen McClain and Jeffrey Polsky.

Portions of the voir dire sections of chap 8 relied on an article in the CEB Civil Litigation Reporter (June 1991), titled "Voir Dire Revisited: The Bull's Viewpoint," by William A. Brockett of The Litigation Strategies Group in Emeryville.

The leading questions checklist at the end of chap 11 was written for a CEB evidence skills workshop by Professor Edward Imwinkelried, of the University of California, Davis, School of Law.

The computer simulations section of chap 13 was prepared by Sidney K. Kanazawa, a partner with McGuire & Woods in Los Angeles.

The samples and checklists at the end of chap 16 were adapted from Laying a Foundation To Introduce Evidence (Preparing and Using Evidence at Trial) (Cal CEB Action Guide Winter 1994) by Donald F. Miles and Deborah Kemp.

The checklist in chap 20 on how to draft jury instructions was contributed by Jan T. Chilton of Severson & Werson in San Francisco.

The statements of decision discussion in chap 24 was based on the CEB Civil Litigation Reporter (Aug. 1990) article, "Statements of Decision," by James C. Martin of Reed & Smith in Los Angeles.

The sections on motions for judgment in bench trials in chap 24 was provided by Randall B. Christison of the Christison Law Firm in La Jolla.

CEB wishes to thank the judges who provided judicial perspectives for various chapters of this trial book:

Judge Victor E. Chavez, Los Angeles Superior Court, contributed judicial perspectives to chapters 15, 19, and 20; the Hon. Ellen S. James (Ret.), JAMS Mediator/Arbitrator, San Francisco, contributed judicial perspectives to chapters 6 and 7; and the Hon. Laurence D. Kay (Ret.), ADR Services, San Francisco, contributed judicial perspectives to chapters 21 and 24.

Judge Jacqueline A. Connor, Los Angeles Superior Court, provided judicial perspectives for chapters 1, 9, and 21; and Judge Patricia M. Lucas, Santa Clara Superior Court, provided judicial perspectives for chapters 1, 7, and 15.

About the 2010 Update Authors

HON. JACQUELINE A. CONNOR received her B.A. degree in 1973 and her J.D. degree in 1976 from the University of Southern California. Formerly a litigator with the office of the Los Angeles County District Attorney, she was appointed to the Los Angeles Municipal Court in 1986 and elevated to the Superior Court in 1988. Judge Connor has presided over complex criminal and high publicity trials and currently manages a civil calendar. She was chair of the Los Angeles Superior Court Trial Jury through 2006 and teaches frequently to various audiences in the legal community. Judge Connor is a nationally recognized expert on jury reform and trial management, and provided judicial perspectives for chapters 8 and 17.

HON. PATRICIA M. LUCAS received her B.A. degree in 1976 from Rice University and her J.D. degree in 1979 from the University of California, Berkeley, School of Law. Judge Lucas serves on the Santa Clara Superior Court. Before she took office in 2003, Judge Lucas practiced complex civil litigation for over 20 years, most recently with Fenwick & West in Mountain View, where she chaired the litigation group. She teaches at California law schools and frequently serves on speaker panels for continuing legal education programs for the bench and the bar. Judge Lucas provided judicial perspectives for chapter 11 and 16.

DAN WOODS received his B.A. degree in 1974 and his J.D. degree in 1977 from the University of Southern California. Mr. Woods, of White & Case LLP in Los Angeles, specializes in civil litigation and trial practice. Mr. Woods has served for many years as the book's update author.

Selected Developments

April 2010 Update

Expert witnesses. For a recent case discussing how a plaintiff was entitled to present new expert witness testimony in a new trial on a claim that he had abandoned before the first trial, see Gordon v Nissan Motor Co. (2009) 170 CA4th 1103, 88 CR3d 778, in §2.18.

Attorney preparation for trial. For a recent case discussing how to expand the designated scope of an expert's testimony, see Easterby v Clark (2009) 171 CA4th 772, 778, 90 CR3d 81, discussed in §5.13.

Disqualification of judge. For a recent case discussing the timeliness of challenging a judge, see Swift v Superior Court (2009) 172 CA4th 878, 883, 91 CR3d 504, in §6.71.

Motion in limine. For a recent case discussing the use of motions in limine to decide dispositive issues, see K.C. Multimedia Inc. v Bank of America Technol. & Operations, Inc. (2009) 171 CA4th 939, 950, 90 CR3d 247, in §7.5.

Selection of jurors. The party challenging the jury selection method must show that the method actually prejudiced the ability to select a jury from a representative cross-section. See People v Mayfield (1997) 14 C4th 668, 728, 60 CR2d 1, discussed in §8.20.

Admissibility of official records. For two recent cases discussing the introduction of official records as evidence, see Jazayeri v Mao (2009) 174 CA4th 301, 94 CR3d 198, and Molenda v DMV (2009) 172 CA4th 974, 91 CR3d 792, in §10.26.

Requests for admission at trial. The trial court may impose conditions when granting the motion to withdraw or amend an admission. See New Albertsons, Inc. v Superior Court (2009) 168 CA4th 1403, 86 CR3d 457, discussed in §12.124.

Misconduct of counsel. A more stringent test for disqualification of an attorney applies when there is an actual, present, simultaneous representation of clients. See In re Charlisse C. (2008) 45 C4th 145, 84 CR3d 597, discussed in §§16.41, 16.42.

In People v Ward (2009) 173 CA4th 1518, 1528, 93 CR3d 871, trial counsel was held in contempt for accusing a prosecutor of misconduct in the presence of the jury, after the court ordered him not to do so. See §16.102.

Punitive damages. For a recent case discussing the reasonable relationship between punitive and compensatory damages, see Roby v McKesson Corp. (2009) 47 C4th 686, 101 CR3d 773, in §19.20.

Verdicts. The California Supreme Court held that the silence of a juror whom the trial court inadvertently neglected to poll did not constitute disagreement with the verdict. See Keener v Jeld-Wen, Inc. (2009) 46 C4th 247, 257, 92 CR3d 862, discussed in §§22.22, 22.31.

Judgments. An order nunc pro tunc corrects a clerical error by placing on the record what was actually decided by the court but was incorrectly recorded. See Marriage of Padgett (2009) 172 CA4th 830, 91 CR3d 475, discussed in §23.30.

Attorney fees. Under the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt C §§12900-12996), prevailing defendants are entitled to attorney fees only if the plaintiff's action is "unreasonable, frivolous, or meritless." See Mangano v Verity, Inc. (2008) 167 CA4th 944, 84 CR3d 526, discussed in §26.5.

For a recent case discussing "prevailing party" under CCP §527.6, see Krug v Maschmeier (2009) 172 CA4th 796, 91 CR3d 452, in §26.5.

An order denying sanctions under CCP §128.7 and former CCP §2023 is appealable as a collateral order. See Muller v Fresno Community Hosp. & Med. Ctr. (2009) 172 CA4th 887, 91 CR3d 617, discussed in §26.53.

Under CCP §1021.5, attorney fees may be awarded to plaintiff's counsel for opposing defendant county's amicus brief in a related matter, when the county was advocating the same interpretation of the statute in both suits. See Ramon v County of Santa Clara (2009) 173 CA4th 915, 93 CR3d 278, discussed in §26.62.

For a recent case discussing the granting of attorney fees after the successful defense of a suit to stay arbitration under a contract, see Turner v Schultz (2009) 175 CA4th 974, 96 CR3d 659, in §26.94.

In arriving at a reasonable amount, an award of fees as costs must bear a "reasonable relationship" to the substantive recovery. See Garcia v Santana (2009) 174 CA4th 464, 473, 94 CR3d 299, discussed in §26.132.

A court may award attorney fees even if the client incurred no actual expense. See Young v Exxon Mobile Corp. (2008) 168 CA4th 1467, 1477, 86 CR3d 507, discussed in §26.136.

Costs. In Linthicum v Butterfield (2009) 175 CA4th 259, 270, 95 CR3d 538, the court of appeal upheld an award of costs despite a claims release in a CCP §998 offer, because the release did not apply to claims outside the scope of action. See §27.65.

For a recent case finding that there was no constitutional limitation on the amount of compounding interest authorized by renewal statutes, see OCM Principal Opportunities Fund, L.P. v CIBC World Markets Corp. (2008) 168 CA4th 185, 85 CR3d 350, discussed in §27.120.

When a judgment is modified on appeal, whether upward or downward, interest accrues from the date of entry of the original order, not from that of the new judgment. See Munoz v City of Union City (2009) 173 CA4th 199, 92 CR3d 527, discussed in §27.115.

For two recent cases discussing the recovery of prejudgment interest under CC §3287, see Roodenburg v Pavestone Co., L.P. (2009) 171 CA4th 185, 89 CR3d 558, and Doppes v Bentley Motors, Inc. (2009) 174 CA4th 1004, 94 CR3d 797, in §27.122.

§1.1 I. SCOPE OF CHAPTER

This chapter offers trial lawyers ideas and practical advice for planning a more streamlined, cost-efficient trial while still obtaining a favorable outcome for the client. The authors identify various procedures and analyze their potential impact on trial efficiency. Chapter sections provide cross-references to sources that discuss these procedures more fully.

Trial judges are responsible for managing the proceedings, eliminating unnecessary delays, and enabling the just and efficient resolution of cases. See Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.1. In most trials today, both counsel and the court are aware of many efficiency techniques that can be adopted during trial. Sections 1.2-1.4 describe judicial case management and consider the impact these techniques may have on the trial outcome, and suggest ways in which counsel can evaluate that impact. The traditional trial is compared to alternative dispute resolution (ADR) models in §§1.5-1.7. Sections 1.8-1.14 focus on the structure of the trial (e.g., jury versus bench trial, severance, consolidation), including changes in the order of proof (e.g., bifurcation, organization by issue instead of by party). Using jury questionnaires and other techniques to streamline voir dire and assist the jury's fact-finding process are discussed in §§1.15-1.23. On organizing the conduct of the trial and the presentation of evidence, see §§1.24-1.45. Finally, multiple party and complex cases are highlighted in §§1.46-1.48. References that offer further information on the topics discussed in this chapter appear in §1.49.

II. GENERAL ISSUES

§1.2 A. Judicial case management

The management of filed cases is governed by the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act of 1990 (Govt C §§68600-68620), the California Rules of Court (see Cal Rules of Ct 3.700-3.735), and local rules. The Trial Court Delay Reduction Act applies to all actions and proceedings in superior court in each county (Govt C §68605.5), except juvenile, probate, and domestic relations cases (Govt C §68608(a)).

Each court may have its own delay reduction case management rules (Govt C §68612), and many counties have promulgated local rules governing case management. See, e.g., San Francisco Ct R 3.0-3.8 (civil case management); Los Angeles Ct R 7.0-7.20 (superior court delay reduction); San Diego Ct R 2.1.1-2.1.19 (case management); Santa Clara Ct R 1A-1F (differential civil case management system). Cases may also be exempted by local rule. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 7.2(b).

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel should contact the clerk of the particular court where an action is pending to learn that court's delay-reduction rules. The rules are also available on the court's website. A list of superior court websites appears at http://www.courtinfo.ca.gov/courts/trial/courtlist.htm.

Each trial court classifies filed cases on the basis of their relative complexity and sets goals for their timely disposition. Except those exempt under Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.2(g), 75 percent of unlimited civil cases must be disposed of within 12 months, 85 percent within 18 months, and 100 percent within 24 months of filing. Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.2(f); see Cal Rules of Ct 3.713(b). The court is responsible for applying the rules in a fair, practical, and flexible manner so as to achieve the ends of justice. Cal Rules of Ct 3.700. For more information on judicial case management at the pretrial stage, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 40 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

The trial judge has the responsibility to manage the trial proceedings to ensure that all parties are prepared and have a fair opportunity to present evidence, and that the trial begins on schedule and proceeds to the end without unnecessary interruption. See Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.1. Standard 2.20 specifies techniques of trial management that judges should use in communicating with counsel, maintaining the momentum and continuity of trial, and, in longer trials, respecting jurors' needs for personal time.

NOTE: Methods for making the trial more efficient can involve almost any part of a trial, starting with motions in limine or jury selection before trial. They may affect the order of proof and presentation of evidence during trial, or the structure of the trial itself. See, e.g., §§1.9-1.10 on severance and consolidation. Counsel should consider suggesting ways in which the court might handle the particular trial more efficiently. See Judicial Perspective in §1.4.

§1.2A B. Efficiency and other trial goals

Three competing values govern the choice among available trial procedures. These values are justice, efficiency, and advocacy. Making a trial more "just" means improving accuracy in adjudicating the facts and understanding the law, and in applying the law to the facts. Making a trial more "efficient" means reducing the amount of time required to try a case. Making room for all counsel to "advocate" on behalf of their clients means increasing the likelihood that each side will present its case fully and achieve the best possible results. Participants in the trial process view these competing goals very differently. Judges and jurors value justice and efficiency more than advocacy. Although justice is the most worthy goal, efficiency must not be ignored because a society cannot commit unlimited resources to resolving disputes. The goal of efficiency is to reduce trial time without sacrificing the more important objective of having cases decided "justly," in accordance with the facts and the law.

Lawyers and clients value advocacy the most, are interested in efficiency when it will result in cost savings, and attach little or no value to an adverse (but presumably just) outcome. From a trial advocate's point of view, winning the case means that the lawyer has persuaded the trier of fact that the client's position is in accord with the law (i.e., a decision for your side is right and just). Although a lawyer may initiate or support efforts to improve the accuracy and efficiency of the trial, the primary goal is to achieve the best possible win or, if a win is not feasible, to achieve the best possible loss, within the constraints of professional ethics.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.3 1. Evaluate effect of efficiency technique

Trial counsel should evaluate every trial procedure from the standpoint of whether it will help or hurt the client's chances of prevailing. Before requesting or opposing an efficiency measure, it is important to assess the advantages and disadvantages to each side. Many trial procedures contain biases (e.g., rules on which side may present evidence first or who may argue last) and do influence the outcome. Counsel should consider the manner in which the trial will be conducted and its impact on 12 untrained lay jurors from the community.

EXAMPLE: Techniques that structure jury decisionmaking, or that separate the adjudication of facts from the application of law to facts, may encourage the decisionmaker to focus on the elements of a claim or defense and diminish the role played by sympathy or passion, to one side's detriment and the other's advantage. A defendant who has a strong technical defense, unrelated to the merits, may benefit from a highly structured trial in which the defense is decided before the fact finder is exposed to the full circumstances surrounding the plaintiff's claim.

Some techniques may overemphasize efficiency. For example, unreasonably strict time limits on opening statements, witness examinations, and closing arguments might shorten trials, but the cost of this increased efficiency may be too high if it impairs jury comprehension.

Similarly, other techniques may lose sight of efficiency. For example, endless voir dire might result in the selection of the fairest possible jury, but the cost and effort may not produce a different outcome. The loss of confidence by the jurors, both those selected and those in the venire, in what is perceived as game-playing and a disrespect of their time, creates a larger long-term and serious problem in loss of support for the judicial system and the legal profession generally.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Consider whether a particular technique will have an unfavorable consequence. Remember that you are attempting to persuade the judge and jurors to see the merits of your side. The importance of your credibility before your jury cannot be overemphasized. Causing jurors to become bored, irritated, or angry at you or your client will hurt your case. Showing courtesy and due regard for their time is an important element of success at trial. Consider, too, that you may appear before the judge on other occasions and that these jurors will serve on other juries and will talk to their friends and acquaintances about their experience and about you. Although you owe your client a duty of zealous advocacy, unlike your client, you are a repeat player in the courthouse and an officer of the court. Do not lose sight of the fact that the manner in which you conduct your trial will have a lasting impact on your reputation and on the public's perception of the justice system.

When counsel believes that an efficiency technique will adversely affect a client's interests, or even result in a trial that is truly unfair, it is vital to say so, and to make reasonable arguments to the court supporting that view. A trial lawyer should resist pressures to conduct the trial in a way that has a negative bearing on the outcome of the case. Most judges respect the trial lawyer's advocacy role and are inclined to allow counsel considerable latitude in deciding how to present the case.

If a particular technique is adopted over an objection, counsel should be sure to make a record that preserves the objection for a possible appeal. On objecting and protecting the record, see §§15.19-15.44.

PRACTICE TIP: Because choices concerning the manner in which the trial is conducted can be important, let your client know the options and explain the reasons for your choices among those options. Discuss the benefits, and any costs or risks, associated with a particular efficiency technique. Your client may value efficiency and cost savings more than you do. Full and frank communication about the advantages and disadvantages of various trial techniques rarely hurts the attorney-client relationship, but lack of communication often does.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.4 2. Assess costs of efficiency technique

Counsel who decides that an efficiency technique advances a client's chances of prevailing should consider requesting, as early in the process as possible, that it be used in the case. At this point, cost should be considered. Some techniques, while reducing trial cost by making trial faster and more efficient, do not reduce the overall costs of litigation. Often, the work that makes a fast and smooth trial possible may actually make the trial more expensive. Trial counsel should question whether the expense and effort of implementing a particular efficiency technique will be worthwhile in a given case.

Whenever an efficiency technique advances the client's interest, reduces overall litigation costs as well as the cost of trial, and assists the jurors, counsel should try to use it. To the extent that a technique improves trial efficiency but does not change the total costs, it probably should be used. To the extent that a technique advances a client's interests but increases either the cost of the trial itself or the overall costs of litigation, counsel and client need to weigh the benefits against the expense and decide whether to request it or, if another party requests it, whether to oppose its use.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Request as early as possible (with follow-up as appropriate) that the trial judge specify the manner of conducting the trial and what will and will not be permitted. Most judges assume that an issue brought up at the last minute, particularly when a panel of jurors is waiting, is not as important as one that is addressed professionally and fully in advance. Eleventh hour objections simply do not have the force and effect of a thoughtful, prepared position about the value or lack of value of a technique or approach.

§1.5 C. Alternative dispute resolution (ADR) models

Interest in alternative dispute resolution ("ADR") reflects an interest in improving the efficiency of litigation. In arbitration and mediation, the parties have greater flexibility in designing procedures to suit themselves. The litigants—as long as they can agree—can fashion a more streamlined and less expensive proceeding than would be possible if their cases were tried in court.

EXAMPLE: In a complex contract arbitration, the parties agreed that, after the first of several damages claims was litigated in the traditional fashion (with opening statements, direct examination, cross-examination, and detailed written summations), the remaining claims would be decided through detailed written presentations, with each party having the option to cross-examine a subset of the other party's witnesses for a few hours each. The dispute was resolved quickly and with surprisingly little cross-examination after the initial phase.

There has been a tremendous growth in court-connected ADR programs. See §1.6A. Local court programs under the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act of 1990 (Govt C §§68600-68620), such as the Civil Referee Assistant Hearings (CRASH) in Los Angeles County, provide an opportunity for cases to be mediated in conjunction with the American Board of Trial Lawyers (ABOTA), whose defense and plaintiffs' attorneys assist the litigants to engage in settlement discussions in fairly simple cases. Early Neutral Evaluation (ENE) is available as a pilot program in the Central and West districts of Los Angeles County. Well-established in the federal courts, ENE encourages the parties to assess their positions realistically at the start of the case. See, e.g., ND Cal ADR Local R 2-5(b)(2). Court settlement conferences and case management orders that specify the use of ADR have been adopted in an attempt to make the litigation process more efficient.

PRACTICE TIP: Check local rules early and often for the availability and, in some cases, mandatory use of court-connected ADR programs.

Certain cases are not appropriate for ADR, such as cases in which:

- The parties are seeking to establish legal precedent;
- The public has an overriding interest in the outcome;
- Public sanctioning of certain conduct is needed to deter it in the future; or
- Repetitive violations of law are involved and need to be addressed collectively and uniformly.

Private and court-connected ADR methods include negotiation, mediation, contractual arbitration, judicial arbitration, settlement conferences, mini-trials, private judging, and summary jury trials. For discussion of these methods, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California (Cal CEB 2005). See also California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 45 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004). For brief discussion of arbitration, see §1.6; for private judging, see §1.7.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/1 Handling Trials Efficiently/§1.6 1. Arbitration

§1.6 1. Arbitration

Arbitration is used to resolve a wide variety of disputes, including those governed by contractual agreements in certain industries, e.g., construction, labor, and banking. On contractual arbitration (CCP §§1280-1294.2), see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California, chap 9 (Cal CEB 2005). Parties can also stipulate to arbitration and to whether it will be binding. On mandatory judicial arbitration (CCP §§1141.10-1141.31), see Effective Use of ADR, chap 11, and California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 33, §§45.47-45.48 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

Debate is growing over whether arbitration is always less expensive and thus more efficient. Arbitration is suited to cases that can be tried in a relatively brief period, e.g., within 1 week or at least in one hearing on consecutive days without recesses. Arbitration offers the significant advantage and cost savings of proceeding on a date certain chosen by the parties and the arbitrator, without being subjected to the risk of a continuance by a busy court as well as having the undivided attention of a neutral. Complex arbitrations, like bench trials, often involve lengthy breaks and require repeated preparation—which, in turn, increases the overall cost. Hiring arbitrators has also become a major expense.

Arbitration has the same advantages as a bench trial (e.g., no jury-related events and delays, informality, fewer evidentiary issues) and disadvantages (e.g., only one trier of fact whose biases are not reined in by deliberation with 11 others). Unlike a bench trial, however, there are few grounds on which to appeal an arbitration award. On bench trials, see §1.8. Many attorneys believe that arbitrators, rather than ruling for one party or another, are more prone to seek a compromise resolution than judges.

PRACTICE TIP: When stipulating to an arbitrator, always ask opposing counsel to disclose any connection to or prior experiences with any arbitrator being considered. The arbitrator (or a proposed arbitrator) is bound to make similar disclosures about the parties, counsel, and other matters. See Cal Rules of Ct, Ethics Standards for Neutral Arbitration in Contractual Arbitration 1-17.

Consider the following questions when deciding whether to arbitrate:

- Will you be involved in choosing the arbitrator?
- What is the likely effect of not being able to appeal error or the amount of the award? The lack of posttrial remedies for appealing or reversing the outcome is a disadvantage if you lose.
- If you represent a defendant, are the damages likely to be better contained in arbitration?
- If you are plaintiff's counsel, does presumably quicker resolution outweigh the conventional wisdom that arbitration awards are lower than jury awards?
- Is arbitration likely to provide your client with a lower-cost alternative to a full-blown trial without substantially compromising other trial goals (see §1.2)?
- Will arbitration help to improve the relationship between the parties? This aspect can be important in business litigation in which the parties may have an ongoing relationship or want to continue doing business.
- Will arbitration help to improve communication between the parties and their attorneys? Sometimes, a case is not resolved before a formal trial because counsel has not elicited the client's objectives or integrated those objectives into the litigation strategy.
- Is there a chance that arbitration will encourage earlier and better case analysis and preparation?
- Will arbitration enhance your client's ability to protect its privacy interests? A formal trial could seriously disrupt the personal and business lives of your client or of nonparties involved with your client.
- If arbitration is a faster track than trial, is the advantage of shortening the time to disposition important to your client?
- Are you subject to a binding arbitration contract? If so, does it meet all the statutory requirements? If it does not, is it worthwhile to challenge it?
- Will arbitration provide greater flexibility in designing trial procedures to suit the parties (e.g., will arbitrators be more willing to view the site of the event)?
- Will the parties' interests be better served by a judgment that can be tailored to their individual needs? To be enforced, a jury verdict or a court decision may require the court's continuing involvement.

§1.6A 2. Mediation

Mediation has become a widely accepted way of resolving disputes. In the past, mediation was distinguishable from other forms of dispute resolution because it was a voluntary process. In important ways, it still is, because the mediator has no power to impose a resolution on the parties, who are free to end the process without reaching agreement.

In many situations, litigating parties do not have a choice in participating in mediation, but must participate in court-ordered mediation. See CCP §§1775-1775.15. After a complaint is filed, the trial courts may now assign the parties to mediation in court-connected ADR programs before setting a case for trial. See, e.g., Cal Rules of Ct 3.722(a). With increasing frequency, commercial contracts mandate mediation of a dispute before arbitration or court action can be commenced.

Mediation styles and approaches vary widely. In some mediations, the attorneys may negotiate a resolution on behalf of their clients and focus on legal arguments in much the same way arbitrations are conducted. Many courts have pro bono panels for mediation, which can be perfectly appropriate for most cases, but private mediators with expertise in the particular subject matter of the dispute are sometimes indispensable. In an evaluative type of mediation, the neutral may be called on to assess the probable trial outcome if the case does not settle. In other mediation models, the clients may participate actively in discussions in joint sessions with opposing parties and other counsel, and in separate caucuses with only their own attorney and the mediator present. In a facilitative mediation, the mediator may encourage the parties to explore options for resolving the case that meet their needs but would not necessarily resemble a trial result. In the more collaborative types of mediations, the attorneys who are able to fashion excellent results for their clients have developed the communication proficiencies necessary for sophisticated deal-making. For a thorough discussion of the problem-solving skills useful to an advocate negotiating in less adversarial settings, see A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California (Cal CEB 2005).

§1.7 3. Private judging

Unlike civil trials, "private trials" can be conducted at times more convenient to the parties, in surroundings less intimidating to witnesses, with a private judge not distracted by other matters, and in facilities better equipped for effective communication. Hiring a private judge who will hear the case on an arbitration or other ADR model (see §§1.5-1.6A) can result in cost savings.

The parties may also be able to find a private judge who has specific experience in the subject matter of the dispute. Agreeing to resolve the dispute by private judging raises issues similar to those in choosing a bench trial or arbitration as opposed to a jury trial. See §§1.6, 1.8.

When stipulating to a private judge, the parties need to draft the scope of their agreement carefully. The stipulation will govern the authority of the private judge and appeal rights. The delegation of judicial power is constitutionally limited and can only be effected by a "stipulation of the parties litigant." Cal Const art VI, §2.1. For example, when the parties stipulated to a certain private judge who later recused himself, the court did not have the power to appoint another private judge. Kim v Superior Court (1998) 64 CA4th 256, 75 CR2d 468.

III. STRUCTURING THE TRIAL

§1.8 A. Jury trial versus bench trial

Bench trials can result in a better, more cost-effective resolution of the case. When a case is decided entirely by a judge, court and counsel do not need to deal with voir dire, jury instructions or verdict forms, the jury's coming and going, or conferences at sidebar or in chambers. Counsel spend less time on motions in limine and other evidentiary disputes before trial, and they need not be as alert for hearsay problems and other objectionable matters during trial that could adversely influence the jury. For discussion of law, procedures, and strategies in bench trials, see chap 24.

Regardless of trial efficiency considerations, however, California litigants have a right to have their cases decided by a jury if they properly and timely request one. Cal Const art I, §16. On right to jury trial, see §§8.2-8.14.

Some attorneys believe that as fact finders, juries tend to be less harsh than judges in applying the law and more sympathetic in reaching a verdict, often awarding higher general or punitive damages. The view favoring juries also holds that 12 people have better recall and more cumulative experience than does one person, and that any biases are held in check because people do not want to admit them in front of the other jurors. Particular arguments or defenses are more likely new to a jury, whereas a judge may have heard the same positions proposed numerous times in the past. A judge may have hidden and undisclosed biases that may control the result, or historical connections to parties or others associated with the case of which counsel is not aware.

Other attorneys believe that a bench trial is better because the matter will be decided on the law rather than on emotions, and that there is greater certainty and predictability. See Kalven & Zeisel, The American Jury §9.42 (1986) (study showing that judges and juries disagree in about 20-25 percent of jury trials, with roughly two-thirds of disagreements over values rather than facts; juries recognize values that judges exclude based on law). Bench trials tend to reduce the risk of retrial from reversible error, and there is no risk of a hung jury. Litigants who are eager to resolve their disputes may also opt for an earlier bench trial date.

One advantage of jury trials is that the judge can act as an evidence "gatekeeper," preventing the jury from being exposed to inadmissible prejudicial evidence. In a bench trial, the judge is unavoidably exposed to inadmissible evidence that he or she may be unable to ignore. See Wistrich, Guthrie, & Rachlinski, Can Judges Ignore Inadmissible Information? The Difficulty of Deliberately Disregarding, 153 U Pa L Rev 1251 (Mar. 2005).

Although bench trials reduce time spent in court, they do not always result in remarkably less overall attorney time. Instead of forcing the case to a conclusion in the shortest amount of time because the jury is waiting for the evidence, courts frequently take lengthy breaks during bench trials (e.g., to hear a criminal case or to attend to other matters). Time savings can be lost because counsel must keep preparing themselves and their witnesses before trial resumes. Most courts require detailed pretrial and posttrial briefs in bench trials (see §24.8), which further erodes the time savings gained from a trial without a jury. Counsel must also take time to draft a proposed statement of decision and proposed judgment (or file written objections to these documents) after the court reaches a tentative decision. See §§24.34-24.50.

When a choice is available and the parties have waived a jury or are willing to stipulate to a bench trial, whether to try the case before a jury or a judge is a complex decision that depends on the interaction of the facts, law, and issues. Some factors counsel and client might consider in making this decision are:

- The amount at issue and the projected attorney fees;
- The complexity or novelty of the facts;
- The complexity of the relevant law;
- The judge's qualities and attitudes, if known;
- A lawyer's experience and success in handling jury trials relative to opposing counsel's;
- The nature of the claims and the defenses and their emotional appeal to a jury;
- If representing the defendant, the financial resources of the client (e.g., whether a deep-pocket corporation or a corner drug store);

- Whether the witnesses will be more liked or disliked by a jury than a judge;
- The precision of the damages case if representing the plaintiff (a jury might be preferable for imprecise or general damages and for punitive damages);
- Whether an earlier trial date would be available if a jury is not required; and
- Appellate considerations (e.g., in a bench trial, there will be no errors in jury instructions, which is usually a fruitful area for reversal for a party who expects to lose).

For further discussion of which type of trial is preferable in a particular case, see §24.3. On waiving jury trial and relief from that waiver, see §§8.15-8.16.

§1.9 B. Severance or separate trial

Severance or a separate trial is a procedural device enabling the court to divide a lawsuit into two or more parts, to establish the order in which they will be resolved, and to resolve them separately. Severance can improve efficiency because it allows the court to avoid adjudicating every issue in a case when deciding a subset of the issues may be dispositive. A motion to sever can be made with respect to parties, issues, or evidentiary matters. Bifurcation usually refers to a special type of severance—namely, holding separate trials on the issues of liability and damages. On bifurcation, see §1.12.

PRACTICE TIP: Consider severance whenever the efficiency of a trial will be enhanced by eliminating any parties who have claims or causes of action that are necessarily appended, but unrelated, to the main case. Not only can this step have a major effect on trial efficiency, it can have tremendous strategic importance in presenting the case clearly, simply, and without confusing the jury.

Severance is particularly attractive when:

- Resolution of one issue may resolve the entire case (e.g., the defendant is likely to prevail on a res judicata defense);
- Evidence admissible on one issue might unfairly prejudice the jury on another issue;
- One of several coplaintiffs or codefendants is situated differently or has adopted a different strategy from that of the others; or
- A case is too complex to be digested in one sitting.

See Foreman & Clark Corp. v Fallon (1971) 3 C3d 875, 888 n8, 92 CR 162.

Severance is usually permissive. See CCP §1048(b) (the general severance statute); CCP §598 (court may try any issue or portion of it before any other issue); CCP §597 (permits trial of affirmative defenses such as limitations, release, or res judicata before trial of plaintiff's claim).

In a few circumstances, however, severance is mandatory. See CCP §597.5 (limitations defense in medical negligence case must be tried first on motion of any party); CC §3295 (if defendant requests, plaintiff's right to recover punitive damages must be established by clear and convincing evidence before evidence of defendant's finances may be presented to jury); CCP §1260.020 (in eminent domain proceedings, compatibility of public issues must be resolved first); CC §1670.5 (issue of unconscionability must be tried to court before other issues are tried to jury); Fam C §3023 (child custody issues must be tried first).

For further discussion of severance and separate trial, see §§6.99-6.104. See also California Civil Procedure Before Trial §§43.63-43.102 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/1 Handling Trials Efficiently/§1.10 C. Consolidation

§1.10 C. Consolidation

The consolidation procedure can be a useful efficiency technique because it allows the court to combine two or more separately filed lawsuits for simultaneous disposition. The principal requirements for consolidation are that the suits involve a common question of law or fact and that their combination will not unfairly prejudice any party (e.g., by allowing introduction of evidence against a party that would have been admissible in only one of the cases against that party had they not been consolidated). See Todd-Stenberg v Dalkon Shield Claimants Trust (1996) 48 CA4th 976, 56 CR2d 16 (affirming judgments for three plaintiffs in consolidated personal injury cases involving use of intrauterine device made by same manufacturer; court found cases had common issues and undue confusion or prejudice was unlikely to result).

Generally, consolidation is permissive. See CCP §1048(a) (the general consolidation statute). Other statutes permit consolidation in specific instances, most of which are probably redundant of §1048(a). See, e.g., CCP §1281.3 (permits consolidation of separate contract arbitration proceedings); CCP §376 (permits consolidation of action by parents to recover for injuries to their child with action for wrongful death of the child); CCP §377.62 (permits consolidation on motion of any interested party of a wrongful death action under CCP §377.60 with a survival action under CCP §§377.20-377.43).

In a few instances, consolidation is mandatory. See, e.g., Lab C §3853 (requires consolidation of employee's action to recover personal injury damages against third party tortfeasor with employer's action against the same tortfeasor to recover reimbursement for workers' compensation benefits provided by employer to employee).

The main purpose of consolidation is to promote efficiency by avoiding inconsistent rulings or verdicts and parallel or serial litigation of the same or similar issues. Mueller v J.C. Penney Co. (1985) 173 CA3d 713, 722, 219 CR 272. Reasons to deny consolidation include the danger that it may produce an incomprehensible case that cannot be handled fairly or understood by a jury.

In evaluating the wisdom of moving for consolidation, plaintiff's counsel should consider the following:

- The probability that a single case can be tried more quickly than a consolidated action.
- The possibility that the individual cases may, contrary to the usual assumption, affect each other adversely.
- The danger of being forced to share a prorata amount of a limited fund with plaintiffs in other actions.
- The likelihood that counsel will lose at least some measure of control that could otherwise be exerted over the proceedings.
- The risk that consolidating plaintiff's action with a weaker claim will reduce the prospects for a successful verdict or a large judgment; or, conversely, the hope that a strong liability claim, while not producing substantial damages, will help weaker claims to receive larger damages.
- The risk that counsel will receive a lower fee if not selected to serve as lead counsel (if this interest conflicts with your client's best interests, the client's interests must, of course, prevail; you are a fiduciary).
- The possibility that counsel will be forced to take part in hearings or depositions unrelated to the client's claims.
- The likelihood that combined multiple claims will prejudice the jury against the defendant.
- The overall savings in time and expense to counsel and clients.
- Whether a statute expressly provides for consolidation of the case (e.g., CCP §1250.240, permitting consolidation of condemnation actions relating to separate real property parcels located in the same county; CC §§3175, 3214, allowing consolidation of actions to enforce payment of construction claim after issuance of stop notices).

Some of these considerations will not apply if the consolidation is limited to cases filed by the same plaintiffs' attorney. Generally, plaintiffs' attorneys will move for consolidation only when they believe that the cases will be benefited, substantial time and expense will be saved, or the cases will come to trial sooner (e.g., if a case is entitled to preference, it can also advance the other consolidated cases to an earlier trial date). Although consolidation can save time and expense, the risk of prejudicial error is increased, and any reversal on appeal will probably apply to all the cases.

A defense attorney who may wish to oppose consolidation should consider the following:

- The possibility that plaintiffs' actions may be tried more quickly and less expensively if they are consolidated.
- The likelihood that if consolidation is defeated, some plaintiffs may be discouraged from independently pursuing their claims.
- The danger that harmful evidence will be admitted during a consolidated trial that might not have been revealed if the actions had been tried separately.
- The possibility that counsel will be forced to take part in hearings or depositions unrelated to the client's case.
- The risk that the sheer number of claims may cause the jury to infer that the defendant did something wrong.
- The risk that the jury might become inflamed by the defendant's causing harm to so many and award punitive damages.
- The risk that many weak cases against the defendant may be enhanced by a few strong cases.
- The possibility that, with the cases consolidated, defense counsel may be able to settle them more easily and for less money by making a lump-sum settlement. (Often, very strong or very weak cases are easier to settle as part of a large group, although plaintiffs' counsel must be alert to conflicts here.)

Pleadings opposing consolidation should explain in detail the divergences of fact and law among the cases. Spreadsheet comparisons can be effective. Consolidation may cause so much confusion that it will not serve as an efficiency technique, because the case will become too large to present comprehensibly. Defense counsel should argue the unfairness of requiring unrelated plaintiffs to present individual claims in a combined proceeding against a single defendant.

EXAMPLE: In a case involving workplace exposure to a toxic substance, the opposition brief should show that the plaintiffs worked at different job sites; that they worked at different jobs at the different sites; that each plaintiff worked at many different jobs over a long period of time; that the plaintiffs were exposed to many different potential toxic or harmful agents at each job and at each site; that each plaintiff has a different history of exposure to potential toxins outside the workplace; that the plaintiffs have different and varying wages and losses; that they all have different diseases, conditions, and symptoms; and that they all have different health histories, including age, smoking history, family history, weight, complicating conditions such as heart conditions, diabetes, or asthma. To the extent that differing legal theories and defenses apply to each plaintiff (e.g., Proposition 51, employer negligence, statute of limitations, lien issues, supervening cause, comparative negligence, state of the art), these should also be set forth in detail.

For further discussion of consolidation procedures, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial §§43.2-43.62 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

§1.11 D. Changing order of proof

The normal order of trial proceedings is that each party, starting with the plaintiff, presents its entire case at once, except for cross-examination and rebuttal, unless the court "for special reasons" directs otherwise. See CCP §607. If the defendant bears the predominant burden of proof, the order may be reversed or modified. See Coogan Fin. Corp. v Beatcher (1932) 120 CA 278, 7 P2d 695. Merely bearing the burden of proof on an affirmative defense does not constitute bearing the "overall" burden of proof. Ferguson v Dam (1934) 140 CA 701, 35 P2d 1072.

EXAMPLE: The defendant would bear the "overall" or "preponderant" burden of proof if the defendant admitted all essential elements of the plaintiff's prima facie case, so that only the defendant's limitation of actions defense was left to be tried.

Under Evid C §320, the court has discretion to "regulate the order of proof." See also CCP §598 (court may require that a certain issue be tried before other issues). On severance, see §1.9.

Trial courts have wide latitude in setting the order of proof, and such rulings are usually upheld on appeal. See, e.g., County of San Luis Obispo v Bailey (1971) 4 C3d 518, 527, 93 CR 859 (recognizing that order of proof rests largely within trial court's discretion). In particular, the court may vary the normal sequence to save time for both the court and the litigants. Silver v Shemanski (1949) 89 CA2d 520, 529, 201 P2d 418 (affirming order that potentially dispositive issues be tried first). For further discussion, see §§1.12 (bifurcation), 1.13 (trying case by issue).

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel should consider one other form of modifying the order of witnesses when a jury faces the challenge of evaluating competing expert testimony on technical or complex issues. Some practitioners, jurors, and judges have found it extremely helpful to have the experts testify "back to back," while the issues are still fresh in jurors' minds and the conflicts can be addressed at essentially the same time.

§1.12 1. Bifurcation: Trying dispositive issue first

Proof may be reordered so that a discrete and potentially dispositive issue—such as a limitation of actions defense—may be resolved as early as possible, out of the normal sequence. If the single dispositive issue can be tried separately, a tremendous amount of time can be saved if it resolves the case. It is also common to reverse the order in a bifurcated or trifurcated case so that causation or damages may be tried first in an effort to resolve the case. See CCP §598 ("[t]he court may, when … the ends of justice, or the economy and efficiency of handling the litigation would be promoted thereby," order bifurcation).

Bifurcation contemplates that all evidence and argument on the first issue will be presented, and a decision reached on that issue, before any evidence or argument relating to other issues is presented. Depending on the outcome, the trial either ends with the decision on the first issue or proceeds to other issues. See, e.g., CCP §597.5 (limitations defense in medical negligence case must be tried first on motion of any party); CCP §598 (court may try any issue or portion of it before any other issue).

It is often difficult to obtain agreement on bifurcation or trifurcation because one side or the other may perceive that it will be disadvantaged or advantaged by the manner in which proof may be reordered. These perceptions are often correct, and it will be up to the court to decide the issue. Consider moving for bifurcation, particularly in complex cases, in which the case is tried in stages, with separate opening statements, closing arguments, jury instructions, and verdict forms for each stage. On motions for bifurcation, see §§6.100-6.102.

NOTE: Bifurcation overlaps with severance or separate trials, and it is in fact a limited form of severance. See discussion of severance in §1.9 and also §§6.99-6.104.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.13 2. Organizing trial around issues instead of parties

Another way to reorder proof is to call witnesses out of the normal sequence throughout the trial, not just for the first dispositive issue. That is, all witnesses whose testimony relates to a single issue would testify. For example, a crucial issue in a contract could be tried in 1 day with witnesses testifying for both sides. See also Practice Tip in §1.11.

This method often creates a more efficient trial, and it assists the trier of fact when two or more witnesses each have only partial knowledge of an event. Having these witnesses testify back to back may also help the jury to better assess the relative credibility of the witnesses and the relative merits of their testimony.

A concern in reordering proof in this manner is that a party cannot present its evidence in the sequence that may be most persuasive. The flow of one party's case might also disrupted by the challenging testimony of the other party's witnesses.

As long as it does not result in a miscarriage of justice, the court has discretion to reorder proof (e.g., to enhance juror comprehension) even if that reordering deprives a party of a perceived tactical advantage. Diamond Springs Lime Co. v American River Constructors (1971) 16 CA3d 581, 602, 94 CR 200 (verdict unsuccessfully attacked on ground that sequence in which multiple defendants were ordered to present cases put one defendant at tactical disadvantage). See also Jaffe v Albertson Co. (1966) 243 CA2d 592, 609, 53 CR 25 (potentially dispositive equitable issues may be tried before legal issues).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/1 Handling Trials Efficiently/§1.14 E. Using special masters or referees

§1.14 E. Using special masters or referees

Unlike a private judge that the parties agree will hear the case, a special master or referee may be appointed by the court even when the parties do not agree, on the court's own motion or a party's motion, to decide particular issues while the rest of the case goes to trial. The courts have the power to appoint special masters or referees to assist in fact finding. CCP §639.

EXAMPLE 1: A special master can be helpful when there are accounting issues that would be time-consuming for jurors and judge to resolve in a courtroom but that could readily be resolved by an accountant.

EXAMPLE 2: A special master may possess engineering expertise that would otherwise require lengthy expert testimony before a jury could understand the issues involved.

There are some restrictions on the appointment of special masters, e.g., dispositive motions cannot be resolved under the reference procedures prescribed by §639, because the California Constitution prohibits a delegation of judicial power, except for the performance of subordinate judicial duties. Cal Const art VI, §22. See De Guere v Universal City Studios, Inc. (1997) 56 CA4th 482, 65 CR2d 438 (reversing trial court's holding that adopted referee's findings and entered judgment for defendant on grounds referee should not have decided issues of law). See also Aetna Ins. Co. v Superior Court (1986) 182 CA3d 431, 435, 227 CR 460.

When the parties agree, a referee may ascertain a fact necessary to enable the court to determine the action; any or all issues of fact or law may be tried by reference. CCP §638.

The parties usually share the cost of the special master or referee equally. In cases with multiple plaintiffs or defendants, however, the court may allocate the costs in a manner that it believes is fairer than equal apportionment. In a case with one plaintiff and two defendants, the court may order the plaintiff to pay 50 percent of the cost of the special master or referee and the defendants (or whichever defendant is involved in a particular issue) to pay the other 50 percent.

NOTE: If one party is indigent, however, the court may not order the other party to bear the entire cost of a special master or referee. Taggares v Superior Court (1998) 62 CA4th 94, 72 CR2d 387.

IV. IMPROVING JURY PROCEDURES

A. Selecting the jury

§1.15 1. Conducting voir dire

Voir dire can be, but need not be, one of the most time-consuming aspects of a trial. All trial lawyers should be mindful that it is generally the most distasteful part of jury service for jurors. Using jury questionnaires, having the judge ask foundational and follow-up questions, reducing the number of jurors or alternative jurors, and using creative methods of selecting the jury are all techniques aimed at reducing voir dire time. See §§1.16-1.18.

In civil cases, counsel have the right to personally conduct voir dire after the court has completed its questioning of prospective jurors. The court has the power to limit each side to a fixed number of minutes or hours for attorney-conducted voir dire, as long as those limits are reasonable. See CCP §222.5; Cal Rules of Ct 3.1540, Standards of J Admin 3.25.

What limits may the court appropriately place on attorney voir dire? A touchstone for answering this question lies in the statutory requirement that counsel have an opportunity to develop enough information to enable an intelligent exercise of challenges. To this end, the court should permit liberal and probing examination to discover bias or prejudice with regard to the circumstances of the case, and "should not preclude additional nonrepetitive or nonduplicative questioning" on topics the court has already covered. CCP §222.5. Voir dire procedures are discussed in detail in §§8.30-8.53. Ultimately, the scope of attorney voir dire is within the judge's discretion and "shall be within reasonable limits." CCP §222.5. Counsel should address this issue in advance, either at an early status conference or at (but no later than) the final status conference. To the extent the judge imposes time limits, trial lawyers can shift much of what they seek to ask onto the trial court. The trial judge does not have any "time limits," and trial counsel should take advantage of this by having basic information addressed by the court's questioning of jurors.

PRACTICE TIP: Filing a list of judicial questions for voir dire in advance will increase the likelihood that the judge will cover the bulk of the questioning. However, filing pages of questions that are essentially boilerplate will cause a loss of credibility and defeat the purpose of the request. Well-constructed and focused voir dire questions will be the most successful, both in terms of acquiring the information and convincing the court to pose the questions, thereby saving the limited time accorded to the lawyers for their voir dire. This approach allows trial counsel to assess, as early as possible, which jurors are worth follow-up and which require no additional time, because they already appear to be favorable or unfavorable. As most experienced trial lawyers generally agree, the purpose of voir dire is more of a "deselection" exercise than a selection exercise.

§1.16 2. Using jury questionnaires

A written questionnaire, to be answered by prospective jurors under penalty of perjury, may shorten the selection process. See CCP §§205, 222.5. Jury questionnaires have the advantage of allowing counsel to ask questions that could not easily be asked aloud, particularly if the case covers a sensitive subject that could make jurors feel awkward or embarrassed if they are questioned personally.

PRACTICE TIP: Trial lawyers should always be attentive to areas of sensitivity and, at the first hint of discomfort, should ask the court if the inquiry could be continued at sidebar or in chambers. Matters that might not seem controversial may be very sensitive topics for some jurors; ignoring this possibility can prove extremely detrimental to trial counsel. At the same time, matters that a reasonable person would expect to generate feelings of sensitivity may be of no consequence to some jurors. Jurors should be given the privilege of deciding for themselves whether they require the privacy of a sidebar or in chambers conference. Trial lawyers who sense and protect that sensitivity and concern for privacy will gain many points with the jury.

Jurors often reveal prejudices in the pages of a written questionnaire that they would be embarrassed to voice before the court and other jurors. When a case contains issues that may trigger serious biases and prejudices, which people might be unwilling to admit openly, a questionnaire can be invaluable. Statements of clear bias or prejudice on the questionnaire should form the basis for a successful challenge for cause without further need to question the juror. This will also prevent poisonous statements from being made in front of the other jurors.

It is a good idea for counsel to have a short brief on challenges for cause available for trial judges. On challenges for cause, see §§8.54-8.64.

Although much time may be spent arguing beforehand about the questionnaires' content, jurors usually fill them out in an hour or less on the first day. For the questionnaires to be useful, the trial attorneys must spend some time reviewing the responses. Counsel often review the responses with jury consultants. With the completed questionnaires in hand, counsel can prepare for voir dire and conduct it more expeditiously than would be possible without such detailed written information. The questionnaire process should be used selectively, and the questionnaire itself should be finely tailored to the specific areas that are required. Jurors often see these questionnaires as "tests," and many are put off by them. The less additional time needed for the procedure, the more likely the court will consider it. Some courts permit jurors to respond in writing to questionnaires in the morning, with counsel given time over the noon break to review them, and with voir dire recommencing after the lunch break. On procedures for requesting and using jury questionnaires, see §§8.43-8.45.

An alternative to written questionnaires is a preprinted set of questions that the jurors can be individually provided either just before they come into the courtroom or as they enter. Questions can be broad or focused, providing jurors with a preview of the scope of the inquiry. This provides a comfort factor that often elicits more thoughtful responses and permits jurors a "heads up" to request some privacy in responding. Many courts have prepared questionnaires that are used in every trial, while others customize them depending on the nature of the causes of action at issue. These are generally well received by jurors.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.17 3. Reducing number of jurors

Under California law, a jury in a civil case presumptively consists of 12 persons, although the parties may agree to a jury of fewer members. Cal Const art I, §16; CCP §220.

Many courts and commentators advocate smaller juries as a way to improve trial efficiency. Some trial lawyers, however, believe that smaller juries have poorer collective memories, display different patterns of juror interaction from a larger jury, and reach verdicts different from those of larger juries. Some courts have noted the concern that smaller juries tend to have fewer minority representatives. While reducing the number of jurors is more efficient in a pure sense, some lawyers and judges believe it causes a sacrifice of justice.

PRACTICE TIP: It is not usually a good idea to stipulate to a reduced number of jurors. If you do agree to a reduced number, be sure to also agree on how many will be required to reach a verdict. On polling the jury (in a 12-member jury, 9 of 12 required for a verdict), see §22.22.

Reducing the number of alternate jurors who will take the place of any jurors who cannot complete the trial can also streamline the voir dire process. But it is important to have enough alternate jurors to avoid a mistrial. The number of alternates should be higher for longer trials. If a mistrial and retrying the case can be avoided, having a sufficient number of alternates available is itself an efficiency technique.

PRACTICE TIP: Local rules may provide guidelines on the number of alternate jurors, depending on the expected length of the trial. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.22 (four alternates if trial more than 20 days, three alternates if 7-20 days, two alternates if 4-6 days, no alternates if 1-3 days).

The manner of handling alternate jurors can affect their willingness to pay attention to the evidence. Accordingly, some courts do not tell jurors which of them will serve as alternates until the trial is over. Some judges do not select the alternates until the end of trial, but most trial lawyers prefer knowing which jurors are going to decide the case because this knowledge may affect how they conduct the trial.

EXAMPLE: Counsel should be cautious about proceeding without designation of alternates at the beginning of trial. Statutorily, alternates are not even selected until the jury is impaneled and sworn. CCP §234. In People v Glenn (1990) 225 CA3d 618, 621, 275 CR 276, the court noted that the random selection of alternates at the end of trial by the court's clerk was a technical violation of Pen C §1089 (and presumably CCP §234). The court added that there was no prejudice from the failure to designate the alternates in advance. 225 CA3d at 622. There may be other problems with late designations of alternates. In one trial, the juror subsequently chosen as the alternate had been informally designated by the other jurors, unbeknownst to the attorneys, as their "official notetaker" because of that juror's superior note-taking skills and the other jurors objected when this juror was excluded from deliberations. For further discussion of alternate jurors, see §§8.74-8.77.

§1.18 4. Methods of jury selection

Traditionally, jury selection involves drawing 12 names, seating the 12 people in the jury box, and then questioning them one at a time, first by the judge and then by counsel. Many trial lawyers favor this method because it allows time to relate to individual jurors, take notes on their responses to questions, and make more considered decisions about exercising peremptory challenges.

A variation of this method has all 12 jurors questioned first by plaintiff's counsel and then by defense counsel. With either method, each juror dismissed for cause (or for any reason other than a peremptory challenge) is replaced by another juror until there are 12 people in the box for which there are no challenges for cause or reasons for recusal.

Peremptory challenges then begin in alternating fashion by counsel from each side until 12 jurors remain in the box and both sides have either exhausted their challenges or accepted the jury. The process proceeds with the alternates in the same fashion.

Another method, called the "struck jury" or "six pack," is becoming the standard because it takes less time, provides for a larger pool from which to elicit answers, and allows more interaction among the jurors. With this method, a sufficient number of jurors is drawn to fill the box, plus several alternates, plus a number equal to all peremptory challenges available to all parties. As some jurors are examined for cause and excused, they are replaced and the new jurors are questioned. The questioning and challenges for cause are completed before the exercise of peremptory challenges begins. Peremptory challenges for each side may be exercised all at once or the parties may alternate. The jurors may be excused for a few minutes so that challenges can be handled in the courtroom without the jurors present. The first 12 jurors who remain, and any alternates, are seated and the remainder are excused.

Some counsel prefer this method because they believe they can view the entire universe of possible jurors and eliminate some of the guesswork involved in the traditional method. They can see which jurors are coming up as replacements, and those jurors are privy to the same questioning at the same time as the first 12. For further discussion on methods and additional variations in selecting juries, see chap 8.

§1.18A 5. Mini-opening statements

Mini-opening statements are increasingly used in many courts and are currently encouraged in the California Rules of Court. See Cal Rules of Ct 2.1034. Their purpose is not to substitute for opening statements at trial, but "to place voir dire questions in context and to generate interest in the case so that prospective jurors will be less inclined to claim marginal hardships." Comment to Cal Rules of Ct 2.1034.

Mini-opening statements are short (usually 3 to 5 minutes), nonargumentative statements made by each party to the panel before voir dire commences. These statements provide the background information and underlying dispute to jurors so that voir dire questions from the judge and from counsel are presented in context.

The advantages to mini-opening statements at the start of voir dire are many:

- Attorneys and judges who have served on jury duty consistently observe that the joint statements of the case traditionally read to jurors by the court tend to be dry, uninteresting, and sanitized to the point that the real dispute often cannot be discerned.
- Providing the opportunity to each side to articulate a focused thumbnail sketch of the dispute results in better, more thoughtful and relevant answers by jurors and the exposure of biases at a stage that facilitates either a challenge for cause or a peremptory challenge.
- Jurors become more engaged after they hear the "story" and are more likely to abandon efforts to find a way to avoid jury duty.
- Presenting the advocate's perspective, rather than the judge's perspective, can be powerful at this initial stage.

Mini-opening statements eliminate the perceived need by attorneys to ask problematic "hypothetical" voir dire questions to assess jurors' reactions to the specifics of their case, thus reducing attorney voir dire time.

Disadvantages are generally the same as with regular opening statements, i.e., they can become argumentative. Counsel who anticipates that the other side will abuse this procedure should address the issue in advance, e.g., by inquiring of the court before the mini-opening statements begin how it would like counsel to proceed. The opportunity for a "free spin," however, is an advantage that counsel should not easily relinquish.

PRACTICE TIP: If mini-opening statements will be used, be sure to clarify with the judge when the statements will be made. For example, many practitioners and judges have found that they are most effective when delivered as one of the first presentations to the panel, after introductions by the judge. They are best given before jurors are told the time estimate for the trial. Experience has shown that after time estimates are given, most jurors focus on reviewing their personal calendars and are often too distracted to take in information imparted while they are worrying about accommodating the time commitment of a trial.

B. Techniques for assisting fact-finding process

§1.19 1. Juror note-taking

Many judges and trial attorneys feel that jurors who take notes tend to be more attentive than jurors who do not. Since people in everyday life take notes to facilitate recall of information, juror note-taking may be especially useful in longer and more complex trials. Often, jurors can answer evidentiary questions during deliberations by referring to notes instead of asking for testimony to be reread.

Jurors must be permitted to take written notes in all civil and criminal trials. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1031. The trial judge, at the start of a trial, must so inform the jurors, and the court must provide the jurors with suitable materials for their note-taking. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1031. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.38 (jurors and alternates must be furnished with notepads and pencils). Several cautionary Judicial Council Approved Jury Instructions (CACI) address jurors' note-taking during trial and the use of notes in deliberations. See, e.g., CACI 102, 5010.

The practice in some courts is for the notes to be left in the jury room at night and collected by the bailiff, and destroyed after the trial. If the notes will be handled in this way, the court should inform the jury. Some jurors like to keep their notes and copies of jury instructions, if they were individually provided, as souvenirs of their jury duty. Trial counsel often forget that the experience of being a juror on a trial is a unique and rare experience and one that often very favorably shapes jurors' perceptions of our democracy and the justice system. Whether jurors should be allowed to keep their own materials after a trial is concluded is a matter of trial court discretion.

The practice of jurors taking notes on laptops, however, is still in its infancy and raises issues that call for careful consideration. Many young people are accustomed to taking notes exclusively on their laptops and have never taken notes in any other way. The problems arise when laptops are taken home at the end of each trial day, with the possibility that the information might be shared with others. Laptops may also tempt some jurors to undertake illicit Internet investigations or searches. If a juror asks to use a laptop for note-taking, counsel should ask the court to strongly admonish the juror to guard access to any stored notes during trial and to refrain from using the laptop for any purpose other than note-taking.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.19A 2. Juror notebooks

California Rules of Court 2.1032 states that the "trial judge should encourage counsel in complex civil cases to include key documents, exhibits, and other appropriate materials in notebooks" to assist jurors in performing their duties. Jurors in all types of civil cases may also benefit from the use of notebooks during trial. Comment to Cal Rules of Ct 2.1032.

Juror efficiency can be improved by the attorneys' compiling notebooks made for the trial. These notebooks may contain a glossary of legal and technical terms, a list of witnesses with a summary of who they are (with photographs, if possible), key documents and evidence, and individual copies of the jury instructions. With a corporate party, it can be especially helpful to include an organizational chart so that the jury can more readily follow the testimony. In construction defect and medical malpractice cases in particular, timelines are extremely useful in helping jurors keep track of the chronology of events at issue.

To avoid overwhelming the jury, any exhibits included in the notebooks should be limited to no more than a total of 10 pages of exhibits (five pieces of paper per party). It may be helpful for the court to specifically advise the jurors that key exhibits are included in their notebooks and that they will be cued whenever one of the documents is referenced by a witness or attorney. This will discourage them from reviewing the documents randomly and distracting themselves from testimony or other exhibits that are being presented.

PRACTICE TIP: Some jurors prefer taking notes on steno pads rather than in notebooks. Counsel should be open to the alternatives and should work out such issues with the court in advance. The steno pads tend to be easier for jurors to use in trial when taking notes, while the notebooks make the notes easier to retrieve during deliberations.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.20 3. Juror questions

California Rules of Court 2.1033 states: "A trial judge should allow jurors to submit written questions directed to witnesses." If a question is submitted, the court must give counsel an opportunity to object to the questions outside the jury's presence. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1033.

Many courts permit wide-ranging juror questions, not only those directed to witnesses. Cases over the past two decades have uniformly supported the ability of jurors to ask questions, provided that they are not posed orally but are submitted in writing in the course of a trial. People v Ochoa (1998) 19 C4th 353, 79 CR2d 408; People v Cummings (1993) 4 C4th 1233, 18 CR2d 796; People v Gates (1979) 97 CA3d Supp 10, 14, 158 CR 759.

Trial lawyers who have experience in receiving and responding to juror questions value this technique and note that the process enhances their ability to short-circuit juror speculation. They argue that if jurors are not allowed to pose their questions, they have no access to answers other than their private guesswork. Attorneys uncomfortable with the procedure argue that jurors might become overzealous advocates and could ask inappropriate questions that might prejudice a party.

The experience of courts permitting questions is generally consistent: The questions are usually few and appropriate; the process takes very little extra time and does not disrupt the normal flow of the trial; the tool enhances the ability of trial lawyers to shape the conclusions of the jurors by responding to specific concerns; and jurors report that they remain more engaged because they know they can ask questions, even if they do not actually submit any. Experts in adult education also tend to support the ability of jurors to submit questions as a normal means by which information is gathered and decisions are made.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: After a written question is submitted, the court should permit both attorneys to examine it, make necessary objections, and obtain a ruling, all out of the jury's presence. People v Majors (1998) 18 C4th 385, 407, 75 CR2d 684. The court should advise the jurors that the Evidence Code controls whether any such questions will be answered. This protects both sides from any inference that the information is being kept from them because it might damage one side or the other.

Some courts provide that a juror with a question should submit it to the judge in writing through the bailiff. The judge and counsel can then decide how to answer it or whether to answer it at all (e.g., by a court instruction clarifying any misunderstanding, recalling a witness, or alerting counsel to the need to explain the significance of particular evidence in closing argument). Sometimes, the question is one that only the court can answer or that calls for an admonition by the court (e.g., a question about the availability of insurance, an issue that is otherwise not addressed by the court until final instructions). Such questions, if posed, can eliminate confusion or distractions early in the trial. On managing the jury, see chap 17.

© The Regents of the University of California

4. Jury's access to instructions

§1.21 a. Preinstructions

As laypersons, jurors do not always know what is important or what they should focus on while listening to the evidence. Preinstructions, which include the basic elements of each cause of action, provide a structure that encourages a more intelligent assessment of the evidence at the time it is being presented. Trial counsel can address evidence to specific elements without losing jurors' attention, and jurors become more efficient and effective fact finders.

Ideally, the court should read or make available individual copies of basic instructions, which include the elements of the causes of action, before any testimony is given. Providing individual copies of preinstructions is extremely helpful to jurors, who may refer to them as needed throughout the trial. Preinstructions can be included in juror notebooks. The goal of preinstruction is to help the jury understand its role in the trial, focus on the issues, and listen to the evidence in a more effective manner. California Rules of Court 2.1035 and the Judicial Council California Civil Jury Instructions (CACI) support the procedure of preinstructing the jury. On preinstructing the jury, see §§20.47-20.49.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.21A b. Final instructions

Even the most conscientious juror can find it challenging or frustrating to try to follow the oral presentation of final instructions. The court must advise the jurors that a written copy of the instructions is available and must provide them with a copy if they request it. CCP §612.5.

Because most adults learn more effectively by simultaneous reading and listening, it makes sense that juror comprehension will be greatly enhanced if jurors can see the instructions while they are being read. Some judges provide individual copies of the final instructions to jurors to allow them to follow along. Other judges prefer to use PowerPoint software, which ensures that the jurors will focus on each instruction as it is read and will not miss an instruction because they are reading ahead or behind on their own copies.

If the court uses either of these approaches and instructs the jury before argument, the consequent increase in juror comprehension of the instructions provides a powerful tool for the advocates during final argument. Counsel can direct each juror's attention to specific instructions and use helpful legal language to support the client's argument in conjunction with the evidence.

Courts allowing jurors to have individual copies of instructions in the jury room have found that jurors have fewer questions about the instructions during deliberations. Juror feedback has regularly revealed that jurors are very conscientious in reviewing the instructions and redirecting the deliberation process when it improperly deviates from the evidence presented and veers into speculation. For further discussion of jury instructions and jury deliberations, see chaps 20-21.

§1.22 5. Verdict forms

A "general verdict" is one in which the jury makes a general pronouncement on all the issues in favor of one party or the other. CCP §624.

A "general verdict with special interrogatories" requires a jury to render a general verdict as well as to answer specified questions or make separate factual findings that test that general verdict. A "special verdict" is defined as one in which jurors make specific factual findings, leaving the judgment, or the application of the law to the facts, for the court. See CCP §§624-625.

A general verdict is the most "efficient" method because it generally takes the jury less time and is less vulnerable to reversible error. Many complex cases, however, lend themselves to special verdicts (or to a general verdict with special interrogatories) because such verdicts provide a structure for deliberations and thus enhance the prospect that that the jury has understood and applied the law correctly. Studies show that jurors find understanding and applying the law to be the most difficult part of their decisionmaking. Special verdicts and, to a lesser extent, general verdicts accompanied by special interrogatories guide jurors through this difficult task. See Casper, Restructuring a Traditional Civil Jury: The Effects of Changes in Composition and Procedures, in Verdict: Assessing the Civil Jury System 436 (Robert E. Litan, ed., 1993).

Attorneys who must rely on technical defenses, and who assess the opposing party's position, on balance, to be a sympathetic one, often favor the special verdict form or request the jury to return special findings with its general verdict. For detailed discussion of verdicts, see chap 22.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Many judges now require both sides to provide a proposed verdict form at the final status conference. Even if not required, this practice is advisable as a matter of professionalism and effective advocacy. When the format of the verdict form has been resolved at an early stage, trial counsel can better explain to jurors the decisions that they will be called on to make. Trial counsel who overestimate the ability of lay jurors to follow procedures do so at their peril. Giving jurors the verdict forms at the beginning of trial, even if later modifications are necessary, will provide jurors with the framework they need to assess the import and value of the evidence being presented, as well as enhance their understanding of the quality of the decisions they will ultimately be required to make. Counsel should strongly consider including individual copies of these verdict forms in the jury notebook, if one is provided to each juror. See §1.19A. Such copies in the hands of jurors during final argument are an inexpensive and effective tool for counsel and, if the jury will make special findings, help to clarify the jury's decisionmaking process.

A mistake trial lawyers often make is to assume that jurors know how to fill out a special verdict form in support of one side or the other. This is particularly dangerous when the issues are complex or there are multiple findings at stake. In a lengthy special verdict form, one technique successfully used by trial attorneys in a complex case was to "fill out" the form for the jurors, using a unique color for each party. For example, a verdict in favor of Plaintiff A was filled out throughout the form in the color yellow. A verdict in favor of another party might be in blue. These filled-out forms were then provided to the jurors and used very effectively as a tool by counsel during closing argument.

§1.23 C. Specially selected juries

There has been considerable controversy over jurors' ability to understand complex cases and decide them in accordance with applicable law. Some trial lawyers fear that knowledgeable jurors will share information during deliberations from their own expertise, apart from the evidence presented at trial. If all counsel stipulate to a specially selected jury and approach the court in advance about such a procedure, their clients may benefit from a shorter trial because the jury readily understands the facts at issue in the case. See Abramson, Presenting Technologically Complex Cases to Lay Judges and Juries, 14 Hastings Comm & Ent LJ 259 (1992); Friedland, The Competency and Responsibility of Jurors in Deciding Cases, 85 Northwestern U L Rev 190 (1990).

© The Regents of the University of California

V. CONDUCTING THE TRIAL

§1.24 A. Streamlining evidence

Juries usually base their verdicts on a small number of crucial points. Too often, lawyers tend to offer as much evidence as possible, either in the belief that this will make their case more convincing or for fear of leaving something out. See Schwarzer, Reforming Jury Trials, 132 FRD 575, 578 (1991) (posttrial interviews with jurors "invariably disclose complaints about the lawyers' prolixity and tendency to present too much evidence"). Jurors often claim that they feel insulted by the repetition trial lawyers seem to believe is necessary. Finding the fine line between making sure the point is not lost and losing the point by insulting jurors is a skill that requires thought and preparation.

It is better to focus clearly on the issues of the case, select what is truly relevant, and present only the facts needed to prove the claims or defenses. Putting on a shorter case is usually more persuasive. Knowing when to quit is a critical skill. See Vinson, Jury Trials: The Psychology of Winning Strategy 173 (3d ed 1996).

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel should focus on eliciting the evidence needed to support closing argument. After that evidence is elicited, counsel should move on. Jurors appreciate counsel treating them as intelligent observers and tend to have greater confidence in the side that provides them with the information they need to make a decision while not wasting their time.

Sections 1.25-1.32 suggest different methods for streamlining evidence during trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.25 1. Narrowing the issues

The best way to shorten a trial is to reduce the number of issues to be tried. Partial summary judgment motions and the various discovery methods can result in narrowing the issues to be tried. Almost any measure that encourages pretrial preparation (e.g., mandatory exchanges of exhibits, stipulations to the admission of exhibits, witness lists, jury instructions, and verdict forms) will help narrow the issues and reduce the areas of disagreement and argument among counsel.

PRACTICE TIP: In important cases, to help narrow the issues, consider using a "focus group" before trial that would be representative of jurors in the area of the trial. Focus group members can be asked to deliberate to a verdict or respond to questionnaires based on videotaped opening statements—including an opening statement presenting the opposing position in the strongest possible way. These "jurors" can also listen to a truncated presentation of the evidence through one or two witnesses and can help you decide the theme of your case, what evidence to stress during the trial, and the most effective tactics for dealing with the opponent's strong points. Although focus groups can make the trial itself more efficient, they usually add to the overall litigation costs and are justified only in cases with a great deal at stake. A less expensive alternative, which trial lawyers have relied on for ages, is to discuss the case with colleagues, friends, and relatives and assess their reactions to proposed evidence and arguments.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/1 Handling Trials Efficiently/§1.25A 2. Summarizing depositions

§1.25A 2. Summarizing depositions

Even the most conscientious juror finds it difficult to extract information from the reading of a deposition transcript. Counsel should not resort to reading transcripts to a jury unless there is no other alternative. If a deposition has been video recorded, counsel should present the video (appropriately edited) rather than read from the transcript. If transcript reading is necessary because there is no video recording and no live witness, excerpts should be kept to an absolute minimum.

PRACTICE TIP: Consider summarizing the deposition testimony and inviting a stipulation from opposing counsel to use of the summary in lieu of reading the transcript. Redacted transcripts that are both read aloud and shown simultaneously on courtroom monitors, with only the key sentences or paragraphs, suitable to the relevant evidence being presented, can be very effective.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/1 Handling Trials Efficiently/§1.26 3. In limine motions and chambers conferences

§1.26 3. In limine motions and chambers conferences

In limine motions and pretrial chambers conferences are invaluable trial management tools that help to focus the issues and expedite the trial. However, boilerplate motions on issues that are undisputed are a waste of the court's time and impair counsel's credibility. For example, a motion to exclude insurance information or settlement offers should never be made. For detailed discussion on the procedures and strategies of motions in limine, see chap 7. On pretrial chambers conferences, see §§6.2-6.5.

Motions in limine may resolve issues about the propriety of questionable evidence and minimize the risk of delay during trial. Counsel can obtain pretrial rulings on evidentiary problems, particularly any that may be highly prejudicial. This step reduces the danger that the jury may be exposed to improper material and avoids keeping the jury waiting while lengthy arguments are conducted to decide whether important evidence will be admitted.

Counsel should be attentive throughout trial preparation to any evidence that will likely elicit an objection. To the extent reasonably possible, ask the court to rule on that objection in advance, preferably at the final pretrial conference. While advocates always have an obligation to make objections when appropriate and when necessary to preserve an issue for appeal, jurors often assume that the objecting attorney is trying to hide damaging evidence. If the objection is sustained, then counsel has successfully hidden something damaging. If the objection is overruled, trial counsel "loses" and the jurors will be especially attentive to the damaging evidence that then is heard. Either way, objections are a "lose-lose" scenario with jurors. The most experienced and effective trial lawyers try not to object in front of jurors and do so only when absolutely necessary. If objections are made and ruled on in advance, counsel should be sure to obtain a stipulation that all objections will be deemed made at trial so that the issue is preserved for appeal.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Motions in limine must be carefully analyzed because they sometimes suggest issues your opponent may not have considered. If so, you may prefer not to make the motion or choose to wait and raise the issue later. See §7.11. However, the risk in waiting to object to an issue is that the court may infer that the issue is not of great consequence. Even the most thoughtful trial judge is not likely to be able to give the objection as much weight if it is presented for the first time in the midst of a witness examination. There is also the inherent risk that jurors may hear enough snippets of the objectionable testimony and figure out what is being presented, even if the objection is sustained.

Pretrial chambers conferences allow the court to inform counsel of courtroom etiquette, available courthouse storage space for files, conference rooms for witnesses and counsel, blackboards and audio-visual equipment, location of electrical outlets, and other "housekeeping" arrangements that may be useful during trial. The chambers conferences also provide an opportunity to confirm that premarked exhibits, witness lists, deposition testimony, and proposed jury instructions have been exchanged. Any disputes about graphics or other visual aids, particularly any that may be used during opening statements, can also be resolved during a pretrial conference.

PRACTICE TIP: If you plan to use any kind of graphic or other visual aid, call the judge's clerk a few weeks before your trial date or use a case management conference to arrange for you or someone else working with you on the trial to visit the courtroom. Always test your equipment to ensure that everything will be where the judge wants it and in working order during the trial. It may also be a good idea to ask the clerk about the judge's preferences concerning the types of graphic or visual aids that will be presented to the jury and where they should be located in the courtroom. To the extent that any technology is going to be used, make sure that "Plan B" is in effect in the often likely event that there are technical glitches.

Many courts go a step further at the final case management or chambers conference by requiring that both sides offer all the exhibits and discovery responses they propose to use at trial, and assert all objections to the other side's proposed exhibits and discovery responses. If the objections are overruled, the exhibits are immediately admitted into evidence. This step enables counsel to refer to the exhibits during opening statement and eliminates wasting time during the trial by arguing evidentiary objections and marking exhibits. It also makes it easier for counsel and the court to keep track of which exhibits have been admitted and which have been refused. Finally, it obviates the need to call witnesses whose testimony would be necessary only to lay foundation for admission of exhibits.

PRACTICE TIP: Consider working with opposing counsel and the court by stipulating to the admission of all or nearly all proposed exhibits. Start with the premise that once an exhibit is marked in front of the jury, it is deemed admitted. If this assumption causes problems with any exhibits, those should be presented to the court in advance for a ruling. All exhibits can be premarked. This advance preparation also makes it possible to select key exhibits that are appropriate to be provided to each juror individually in the jury book. See §§1.20, 1.30.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.27 4. Court's exclusions

Reducing the number of witnesses, eliminating cumulative witnesses and cumulative testimony, and reducing the length of witness testimony as well as the number of exhibits can materially shorten a trial and retain the attention and focus of jurors. At least in lengthy trials, courts often encourage counsel to reduce the number of witnesses, particularly cumulative witnesses. The court may, for example, limit the number of experts called. Evid C §723. See Horn v General Motors Corp. (1976) 17 C3d 359, 371, 131 CR 78; Ramsey v Marutamaya Ogatsu Fireworks Co. (1977) 72 CA3d 516, 532, 140 CR 247.

The court must exclude irrelevant evidence. Evid C §350. Even relevant evidence may be excluded under Evid C §352 if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the likelihood that its admission will consume undue time or create a substantial danger of undue prejudice or confusion, or will mislead the jury. See §10.16. In some counties, prejudicial or time-consuming evidence is customarily excluded on the court's own motion. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.89.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/1 Handling Trials Efficiently/§1.28 5. Stipulations

§1.28 5. Stipulations

An effective way to shorten a trial and to focus the jurors' attention on the real issues of the case is for the parties to enter into stipulations that reduce the number of factual or legal issues requiring resolution. For example, to simplify the issues of fact to be tried, the local rules for the United States District Court for the Central District of California require the parties to stipulate to facts on which the parties know or have reason to know there can be no dispute. See CD Cal Local Civ R 16-2.2. Counsel should also consider evidentiary stipulations for records, exhibits, and testimony about which there is no real controversy. On stipulated facts and testimony, see §§14.47-14.52. On foundational stipulations, see §13.86.

Stipulations of fact, however, do not have the impact that live testimony has, but if the court is willing to recite that the parties have reached agreement on certain facts to save the jury's time, the stipulation can enhance the parties' credibility with the jurors. The court may read the stipulations to the jury before, during, or after the presentation of evidence, or the court may allow the parties to read them to the jury at designated times. Counsel should also be permitted to read the stipulations during opening statements and closing arguments.

PRACTICE TIP: One method to ensure that factual stipulations are not overlooked or discounted by the jury is to prepare the stipulated information on a piece of paper, attach a blueback to the document to highlight it, and mark it as a court exhibit. It then becomes available for counsel to use during the trial or final argument, and is also a physical exhibit for the jurors to review during deliberations.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.29 6. Judicial notice

An often overlooked efficiency measure is judicial notice. See Evid C §§451-456. If the court takes judicial notice of a matter, counsel does not need to take the time to present evidence proving it. The court will instruct the jurors that they must accept the judicially noticed matter as indisputably true. See Evid C §457.

EXAMPLE: The court may take judicial notice of construction costs on the basis of a published estimator's guide—books that are widely accepted in the industry—thus obviating the need for lengthy expert testimony.

For detailed discussion of the procedures and strategies involved in requesting the court to take judicial notice of particular matters, see chap 14.

© The Regents of the University of California

7. Presenting trial exhibits

§1.30 a. Premarking exhibits

Judges and juries quickly sense when counsel is attempting to simplify or expedite proceedings, and such efforts are always appreciated. Premarking exhibits is an easy step counsel can take to make sure the trial proceeds efficiently. It wastes time during trial if counsel, the clerk, and the court reporter are fumbling with marking exhibits. See generally Cal Rules of Court, Standards of J Admin 3.10: "Litigants in complex litigation cases should be required to minimize evidentiary disputes and to organize efficiently their exhibits and other evidence prior to trial."

PRACTICE TIP: Check local rules for any requirements on handling and premarking exhibits. Premarking documents is usually accomplished without the court's involvement, using an identifying letter or number, listed on court-prescribed forms to record evidence, and exchanged before trial. See Los Angeles Ct R 8.60, 7.9(h). Some courts prefer that one party use letters to identify its exhibits and that the other party use numbers. Other courts prefer that all parties use numbers, and assign blocks, e.g., 1-199 to plaintiff, 200-399 to defendant A, 400-599 to defendant B, and so on. If there are voluminous exhibits, blocks of numbers are preferable to doubled and tripled alphabetic designations, i.e., exhibits AA or ddd, and similar designations, should be avoided. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.62: "The most efficient method of marking exhibits is by the use of arabic numerals." If local rules do not address how exhibits should be marked, you should contact the judge's clerk to inquire about the court's preference. Handling and premarking exhibits is a time-consuming task you do not want to have to do a second time.

For further ideas on handling trial exhibits and premarking them in limine and at pretrial conferences, see §1.26. On organizing trial materials, including premarking exhibits, see chap 3.

§1.31 b. Copies of exhibits

To try a case efficiently, some litigators prepare at least four copies of all documents well before trial (one each for plaintiff, defendant, the judge, and the witness). Because copying can be a tremendous expense, other litigators try cases with only one or two copies of all documents. While opposing counsel will have their own copies of depositions, it is important to keep in mind that the document that has been marked will be the one shown to the witness. Thus, the court will not have a copy unless counsel provides it. Opposing counsel may appear obstructive or ill-prepared if they do not have copies of depositions and exhibits at hand or if they are floundering around to find them.

PRACTICE TIP: Learn the judge's preferences for furnishing copies to the court or other counsel. You can often communicate effectively with the court clerk on these subjects, or they can be ascertained at the chambers conference. See §§1.26, 6.2. Selecting key exhibits to be provided (or included in juror notebooks) to jurors individually can enhance the value and impact of the exhibit. Although blow-ups are sometimes an appropriate way of presenting certain exhibits, providing jurors with their own copies is often preferable. Jurors can refer to them as needed and can focus on the most critical details. Keep in mind, however, that when jurors have their own copies of exhibits, it is possible that they will be reading them when key testimony is being given. Remain attentive to encouraging the jurors to focus on the information that you are currently presenting.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/1 Handling Trials Efficiently/§1.32 c. Creating visual aids

§1.32 c. Creating visual aids

Using visual aids, models, and simulations can be an important tool in making trials more efficient and in simplifying the witnesses' duty to explain and describe events. Viewing graphic displays assists the jury to understand witnesses' explanations more quickly and more accurately. Visual aids also provide an opportunity to reinforce messages delivered orally or through documents. The Standards of Judicial Administration also provide that trial judges should be "receptive to using technology in managing the trial and the presentation of evidence." Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.20(b)(5).

PRACTICE TIP: To avoid interruptions, disclose in advance any visual aid you intend to use in opening statement, argument, or during trial. Check local rules because they sometimes require disclosure before trial. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.74. For further ideas on handling graphics in limine and at pretrial conferences, see §1.26.

The only limit is that visual aids must be likely to assist the jury to understand issues in the case. See §13.8. Consider the following items as possible visual aids in any given trial:

- Charts, diagrams, and graphs
- Enlargements of crucial documents
- Timelines
- Maps
- A mannequin or skeleton
- Film, videotapes, or photographs
- Models
- Posed photographs replicating an event
- Someone doing a demonstration
- Other types of demonstration (e.g., a machine in operation)
- Computer animation
- On-site jury views.

Before deciding whether to use visual aids during trial, consider the following questions:

- What message are you trying to deliver?
- What is the best way to communicate that message?
- How much more will it cost to deliver that message with a visual aid?
- Will the visual aid be admissible?
- If it is not admissible in trial, can it nevertheless be used in argument?
- If the court rules it inadmissible, what other approach will you have as a backup strategy?

In large, complex cases, it is worth hiring a consultant to design and help produce visual aids. For example, using computer animation to rotate an object in three-dimensional space to show different perspectives or to recreate nonexistent or destroyed items or to present a complex process, while expensive, may help the judge or jury visualize what could not otherwise be seen. Even a tutorial on the technology or business involved, given by an expert witness early in the trial, can sometimes assist the judge and jury to understand the case.

With so many options, and so much new technology, counsel should avoid the danger that the message will get lost in the medium. Graphics that are too flashy may detract from a key theme, be disallowed by the court, or help the opponent's case. The more elaborate the visual aid, the greater the risk something will go wrong or backfire. The worst thing that can happen with a blackboard is a broken piece of chalk, but with computer animation, a system failure can mean hours of delay.

Visual aids that are too small, or otherwise too difficult for the jury to see, can hurt the effectiveness of counsel's presentation. A small Polaroid photograph that the jurors cannot see, or a sloppily drawn diagram on a slip of paper, can be more detrimental to a presentation than no exhibit at all. On developing visual aids, graphic exhibits, and computer simulations, see chap 13.

PRACTICE TIP: Do not confuse and overwhelm the jury with too many visual aids and exhibits. Keep in mind the technology being used by opposing counsel. Bigger and flashier are not always better; it may simply remind the jury that your client's pocket is deeper than the other side's. However, professionally presented technology can be extremely effective regardless of who presents it. Trial counsel's exhibits should be designed with the opposition in mind as well as the court and jurors. Reduce the volume of exhibits by eliminating those of marginal importance and by summarizing voluminous transactional records whenever possible. Consider how best to present important exhibits to the judge and jury. Enlargements of documents or overhead projections are simple, easy to prepare and use, and often as effective as expensive graphics illustrating the same points. Enlargements can be better than giving individual copies to the jurors because you can control the focus of their attention, but if the document or exhibit is important enough, consider preparing both enlargements and individual copies. If you want the jurors to shift their focus from an exhibit to a witness, the enlargement can be turned aside or the projector turned off. Give the judge a tabbed and indexed notebook of proposed exhibits and demonstrative aids before trial. The court will then have the exhibit list handy for reference during testimony, as well as for ruling on any unresolved objections.

A jury view is also a visual aid. Some trial lawyers argue that a trip to the site of the event can help jurors to place the events in context. But because jury views require time and expense, this step is clearly not an efficiency measure. Other trial lawyers worry that a completely unexpected prejudicial event might occur during a visit to the site. For these reasons, neither the courts nor lawyers favor jury views, and they are seldom requested. For discussion of fact finder views in bench trials, see §24.6; in jury trials, see §17.9.

PRACTICE TIP: If exhibits have been numbered but not otherwise referred to in trial, consider not offering them into evidence. It is often dangerous to provide voluminous exhibits to jurors with no direction or structure supplied by witnesses during the trial. Generally, the greater the volume of exhibits presented, the decreased likelihood that jurors will even look at them. In addition, admitting voluminous documents, such as medical records, presents the problem of jurors seeing notations or reading handwritten entries in unpredictable ways that were never anticipated by trial counsel. If a visual aid is not admitted, consider using it during argument. However, if any exhibit is used strictly for argument, counsel should always advise the jury that the particular exhibit will not go into the deliberating room. It is not unheard-of for jurors to assume they will have access to exhibits used during argument and fail to take notes. This situation can be avoided by ensuring that all exhibits are as neutrally prepared as possible without losing the point of the exhibit so that admissibility is not compromised. If, despite such efforts, admission is denied, jurors should be advised on their limited use in argument.

§1.33 B. Disclosing order of witnesses

Requiring disclosure of the general order of witnesses from the beginning to the end of trial, and specific disclosure of witnesses 48 hours before they are called, usually improves trial efficiency. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.81. Counsel are better prepared to examine witnesses, are less likely to ramble, and are better able to deal with objections and other issues that may arise with particular witnesses.

In contrast, when opposing counsel is surprised by the identity of the next witness, a typical reaction is to seek a recess or postponement at the conclusion of the witness's testimony, or undertake meaningless cross-examination designed to occupy the rest of the trial day to preserve the opportunity to complete the cross-examination the next day. The interests of justice are seldom served by forcing counsel to spontaneously cross-examine when a well-prepared cross-examination would reveal flaws in the evidence offered.

Disclosing witness order also reduces cost because preparation can be more orderly (avoiding unfruitful cross-examination or crash preparation for witnesses that are being called unexpectedly). Some counsel resist mutual disclosure of witnesses because they see an advantage in not doing so, but most courts will require it if opposing counsel requests. For further discussion, see §6.3.

§1.34 C. Interim summaries

Many courts permit interim summaries during the course of a trial. This technique allows attorneys to summarize their client's side of the case during the presentation of evidence. Generally, a prearranged number of minutes is allocated to each side, to be banked and used at the discretion of trial counsel. Some attorneys believe interim summaries to be useful in facilitating juror comprehension, particularly when jurors are presented with complex or technical information or when there has been a break in the trial, such as a long holiday weekend (e.g., the attorney can immediately explain the relevance of the evidence). Otherwise, because opening statements are limited to a presentation of the facts (see §9.2), the jurors may be genuinely confused about what is important in the evidence being offered. Usually, not until closing argument will the jurors for the first time receive a systematic, detailed overview of the case. Besides aiding juror understanding and retention, interim summaries usually have the effect of making the closing arguments tighter, thereby reducing total trial time.

EXAMPLE: Counsel for both parties are allowed to begin the first day of each week of a lengthy trial with a 20-minute summary of the preceding week's evidence and how it relates to the issues the jury will be required to decide in the case. This method has the advantage of refreshing the jurors' memory of the previous week's testimony before a new week of testimony begins and avoids the need to repeat what was previously presented. Some attorneys are opposed to interim summaries, particularly if the court allows them to be given at any time, because they might invite abuse and interrupt the normal flow of both parties' cases. In these circumstances, interim summaries can deteriorate into emotional comments that keep both sides off balance and make it impossible to predict when responsive arguments may be necessary. It is important that the judge permit only summaries and not argument. Some attorneys also believe that it is unfair to the defense to have the case summarized and "argued" midtrial, during the plaintiff's presentation of evidence and before any defense evidence has been offered. The technique ultimately works best if not abused, and any concern about abuse by opposing counsel can and should be addressed in advance of trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.34A 1. Witness introductions

An effective variation of interim summaries is the introduction of each new witness by a short statement explaining what he or she will be contributing. Such an introduction, usually a single sentence explaining what the witness will testify to, puts that witness into context and allows the jury to maintain focus. This can be particularly helpful when witnesses are not called in a logical chronological order, as is frequently the case despite best efforts.

PRACTICE TIP: This technique should be proposed in advance. It will assist the jurors, take virtually no extra time, and maintain the flow and momentum by keeping the witness in context. Most judges will permit this technique, provided that it remains a neutral introduction and not a disguised argument.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.35 2. Summaries of testimony

Occasionally, courts have required that direct testimony of some witnesses, particularly expert witnesses, be submitted before trial in narrative written form. Instead of conducting direct examination in oral question and answer format, the written narrative is reviewed by the court (in a bench trial) or read to the jury. The attorney then asks whether the witness wants to add or change anything in the written statement. Taking into account events that have occurred during the trial, the attorney may ask a few additional questions. Finally, the witness is presented for cross-examination and rebuttal. See Solomon, Techniques for Shortening Trials, 65 FRD 485, 490 (1974) ("These statements by expert witnesses are popular with attorneys. It gives counsel … the opportunity to have the testimony of the witness presented to the court or jury in a clear, concise, and orderly manner, and it gives the opposing counsel an opportunity to adequately prepare for cross-examination").

Opponents of this approach to direct examination feel that although reading narrative summaries in lieu of live testimony clearly saves time, it risks boring the judge and jury and provides fewer opportunities for the fact finder to evaluate the witnesses' credibility. For truly unimportant witnesses, however, it may be an effective efficiency measure. On the examination of witnesses generally, see chap 11.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.36 D. Court-imposed time limits

The court's setting of time limits in trial has been upheld on appeal when the limits were deemed to have been reasonable. See, e.g., Ryan v Commission on Judicial Performance (1988) 45 C3d 518, 530, 247 CR 378 (time limits permitted for argument); People v Visciotti (1992) 2 C4th 1, 48, 5 CR2d 495; People v Wright (1990) 52 C3d 367, 419, 276 CR 731; People v Morales (1988) 203 CA3d 970, 972, 250 CR 240 (time limits on voir dire); Wilson v Kopp (1952) 114 CA2d 198, 208, 250 P2d 166 (not reversible error to set 40-minute time limit on closing argument, at least in absence of objection by counsel). But see People v Green (1893) 99 C 564, 569, 34 P 231 (limiting closing argument or opening statement to 1 hour each per side in complicated case held too restrictive).

The rationale for setting time limits is that they stimulate the litigants to narrow the areas of inquiry and advocacy to those that are relevant and material. Some judges believe that overall time limits also encourage trial lawyers to pare away redundant witnesses and documents, while still providing latitude in putting on their cases. See Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.20(b)(2) (trial judge should "set reasonable time limits" after consultation with counsel) and 3.10(d) ("[t]ime limits should be regularly used to expedite major phases of complex litigation"). On multiple party litigation, see §§1.46-1.48.

§1.37 1. Limiting parties' total trial time

Many judges prefer to set time limits for the entire trial, with the clock ticking at each point that counsel takes the floor asking questions, whether direct or cross, opening statement, or closing argument, thereby allowing trial counsel to set their own priorities for what is important and what to devote time to consistent with their clients' interests. Another method of imposing time limits is to limit certain parts of the trial, such as direct examination, cross-examination, opening statements, and closing arguments. See §1.38.

EXAMPLE: In a federal case, the court's placement of a 56-hour time limit on the trial, which resulted in one party running out of time and being left with only 5 minutes per witness for cross-examination, was valid and not a due process violation. General Signal Corp. v MCI Telecommunications Corp. (9th Cir 1995) 66 F3d 1500, 1508.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.38 2. Abbreviating trial segments

Most experienced trial lawyers are prepared to conduct a swift, hard-hitting trial. If the court is inclined to set time limits, counsel generally prefer limits on the total trial time rather than on individual segments, so that they have more leeway as needed. See §1.37.

EXAMPLE: In a jury trial, the court has the discretion to fix the duration of closing arguments consistent with the magnitude and complexity of the case. See Bates v Newman (1953) 121 CA2d 800, 809, 264 P2d 197 (affirmed ruling that limited each side to 30 minutes for opening statement and to about 50 minutes for closing argument in jury trial). In a bench trial, the judge may proceed without either opening statements or closing arguments, choosing instead to rely on trial briefs and written summations. See §§19.8, 24.12.

Setting time limits on trial segments may shorten a trial but has the disadvantage of requiring the court to intrude into counsel's choices about what aspects of the case warrant emphasis. If time limits on discrete trial segments are nevertheless imposed, counsel should try to work with the court to make them realistic and subject to reconsideration as the trial unfolds.

PRACTICE TIP: If the court sets time limits, it is advisable to request that the court inform the jury. The jurors are invariably grateful for the respect for their time implicit in such limitations, and will be less inclined to speculate as to why more witnesses were not called or other evidence not presented.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.39 3. Mandatory resting when evidence not ready

In some trials in which counsel is ill-prepared, the court may insist that counsel proceed to present evidence on pain of being deemed to have rested (absent extraordinary circumstances). This rule ensures that, if a witness is late or finishes early, counsel will have another witness ready or will fill the gap productively by reading deposition testimony, presenting exhibits, or otherwise moving the trial forward. Without such a rule, a party may run out of evidence to present, thus forcing a premature end to the day's trial schedule and an unappreciated waste of juror and court time.

As a practical matter, however, most courts recognize that it is difficult to manage the presentation of a case so perfectly that counsel can predict how long every witness or event is going to take. For this reason, they rarely impose this sanction, although the threat of it probably has a positive effect on trial efficiency. To avoid seeming both unprepared and cavalier about jurors' time, counsel should make every effort to have witnesses ready and waiting. Taking witnesses out of order, if there is a gap and another witness is available, or having other evidence at hand to present, is preferable to wasting jury time.

© The Regents of the University of California

E. Courtroom hours and activities

§1.40 1. Scheduling half days

Several scheduling options are available that will make the trial itself proceed more quickly and efficiently. For example, trials conducted on a half-day basis (8 a.m. to 1 p.m.) avoid the disruption of a lunch break and are often more productive than trials conducted on a full schedule. Generally, full trial days yield no more than 5-1/2 or 6 hours of testimony. A truncated schedule can achieve the same yield while permitting other work to go forward.

Although trial attorneys generally work full-time on a case regardless of how it is tried, a half-day schedule often results in a more organized, better-presented trial because counsel will be less fatigued and better able to prepare for each day's events. For other scheduling ideas, see §1.41.

§1.41 2. Avoiding recesses

It is always more efficient to let the trial gather momentum and keep it going until the case is submitted to the trier of fact. Doing so means avoiding recesses whenever possible. Some attorneys believe that relatively long and uninterrupted trial days that run consecutively tend to shorten the duration of trial by eliminating the need to remind the judge or jury what occurred earlier.

It is particularly important not to lose the impact of evidence after both sides have rested by having to retreat for a discussion completing final instructions. Such interruptions can be harmful distractions to jurors and at such a key point in the trial can cause them to lose focus and engagement in the outcome. It also sets up a delay between the final presentation of witnesses and trial counsel's final arguments. If jury instructions are presented and completed as fully as possible during pretrial preparations, delays can be virtually eliminated and the jury can move from listening to the evidence to hearing instructions that prepare them immediately for argument and deliberations.

PRACTICE TIP: Many judges are interested in resolving all final instructions as early as possible. If proposed instructions are prepared and discussed at the final status conference, it becomes a relatively simple exercise to eliminate those that become obsolete and to add those that become relevant, so that the transition from the presentation of evidence to instructions to argument is seamless. As noted in §1.21, the optimal format is to have the instructions completed with individual copies available to jurors before the recitation by the court, thereby allowing jurors to better understand the instructions by being able to read along with the recitation. Experts in adult education uniformly confirm that the presentation of information in multiple formats (e.g., oral and visual) exponentially increases the comprehension of the listener. It also provides an additional tool during argument, when counsel can specifically direct jurors to those instructions that assist their case.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/1 Handling Trials Efficiently/§1.42 3. Starting on time

§1.42 3. Starting on time

Courts and counsel can improve trial efficiency and command the respect of jurors by strictly enforcing and cooperating with starting times, holding recesses to a fixed, brief period, and avoiding frequent or prolonged recesses. See Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.20(b)(3), (6). Doing so ensures that the momentum of the trial is carried through to the time a verdict or a decision is reached. Whatever the designated time to commence, whether in the morning or after recesses, trial counsel should always be at counsel table ready to go.

EXAMPLE 1: Simply starting on time each morning, rather than having counsel, witnesses, the judge, and jurors drift in 10 to 20 minutes late each day or after every break, can save considerable time over the course of a lengthy trial.

EXAMPLE 2: Completing the testimony of a witness before ending a trial day minimizes repetition and has a favorable impact on the next day's start. The next witness can then be in court ready to be sworn when the trial reconvenes.

For other examples, see Solomon, Techniques for Shortening Trials, 65 FRD 485 (1974).

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.43 4. Eliminating unnecessary bench and chambers conferences

A significant source of delay in jury trials is the frequent sidebar or chambers conferences during trial to resolve evidentiary and other issues out of the jury's hearing or presence. California Rules of Court, Standards of J Admin 2.20 provides that the trial judge should permit sidebar conferences only when necessary and keep them as short as possible. Sidebar conferences create interruptions that are distracting and generally extremely frustrating for jurors because they interrupt the flow of the testimony and make them feel that relevant matters are being hidden from them. They also require the court to decide important and complex issues under time pressure and often without the benefit of a thorough briefing, thus increasing the risk of error as well as inconsistent rulings. See Practice Tip in §1.26.

Although reducing the number and length of bench conferences increases trial efficiency, they cannot always be prevented or eliminated. They are often necessary and highly useful in averting serious prejudice, reversible error, or other undesirable events. Except when a problem arises that could not reasonably have been anticipated earlier, trial counsel should request such conferences sparingly. If they are necessary, they can and should take place on counsel's time, not the jurors' time, either at the end of the trial day or before the trial normally resumes in the morning. Many local rules require evidentiary motions to be heard before the trial begins. See §1.26; see chap 7 on in limine motions.

§1.44 5. Eliminating argumentative behavior of counsel

Courts and counsel can improve trial efficiency by enforcing and honoring rules with regard to objections. An objection and the grounds for it should be stated briefly on the record, without unnecessary speeches or commentary. On procedures for making trial objections, see chap 15.

Argumentative behavior among counsel, which can consume much court time and is seldom desirable or productive, should be kept to a minimum. For discussion of argumentative conduct that can amount to misconduct, see §§16.21, 16.31. Experienced trial counsel are keenly aware of the value of their credibility with both the judge and the jury. This capital can be lost by surly or unprofessional conduct before or during the trial.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Jurors quickly notice if a trial lawyer is being reasonable and accommodating while still remaining an advocate. Refusing to stipulate or otherwise behaving in less than civil and professional fashion, or making objections when there is little to gain, even if technically valid, tend to erode the credibility of the trial lawyer making the objections in the eyes of both judge and jurors.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.45 G. Court-appointed experts

In highly technical cases in which both sides' experts may have given conflicting testimony leaving the jurors confused, the court may decide to appoint a neutral expert. See generally Evid C §730. An expert can provide a basic tutorial on the subject that has remained obscure to the jury, identify the issues that the parties' experts disagree on, and explain the basis for their disagreement. As a practical matter, the court should consider appointing a neutral expert witness when there is a wide disparity between the opinions of the experts called by the parties, or when an impartial opinion would aid the fact finder to resolve the conflicting points of view.

Many trial lawyers oppose the use of court-appointed experts, even when they are neutral, because it removes control of the litigation from counsel, who rarely know for certain which side the expert will support. The objectivity that a jury may impute to a court-appointed expert may also harm a party's case. If the case can be helped by a neutral expert, however, counsel might advocate such a court-appointed expert.

The court's use of experts can also be expensive. The parties pay for the experts to review the case without being able to control how much time they will spend. The cost of a neutral expert appointed by the court is initially shared by the parties, and after trial taxed as costs to the losing party. Evid C §731(c). On recovering costs, see chap 27. For discussion of expert witnesses, see §§11.130-11.151.

VI. MULTIPLE PARTY CASES

A. Relationship among counsel

§1.46 1. Similarly aligned parties

Multiple party cases present many opportunities to increase trial efficiency. When the parties are aligned, counsel should attempt to establish good working relationships, agree to avoid duplicative discovery and gathering of evidence, and divide the work of preparing for trial. It is to the clients' benefit to refrain from any infighting or confusion at trial that would benefit a common adversary. Sometimes, the court appoints "lead counsel" to coordinate these activities. Multiple party cases often require exceptional judicial management and may be designated as "complex" for purposes of pretrial discovery under Cal Rules of Ct 3.400-3.403. See California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 40 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

The lawyers' loyalty is first to their own clients over the alliance that has been temporarily established for trial management purposes, and codefendants' commitment to their alliance generally varies inversely with the approach of trial, i.e., codefendants have a greater tendency to settle on their own with the plaintiff on the eve of trial.

Defendants, in particular, should consider implementing the following strategies in multiparty cases:

- It may be advantageous to resolve claims for indemnity, contribution, or cross-claims in a separate proceeding if it has been conclusively determined that one or more defendants are liable to the plaintiff. In fact, it may be a better strategy to stipulate not to file cross-complaints but to file indemnity actions after the plaintiff's case is resolved.
- Arbitration or another ADR method (see §§1.5-1.7) may work to resolve two or more codefendants' disputes so that a united front at trial can be presented to the plaintiff.
- With the judge's approval, counsel may stipulate that an objection by one party is an objection by all.
- It may be advisable to enter into a joint defense agreement to protect the attorney-client and work-product privileges to the extent that co-counsel are working together on a case.

NOTE: Arguably, disclosure in this context is reasonably necessary to accomplish the purpose for which counsel was consulted, and therefore the privilege is not waived. See, e.g., Insurance Co. of N. Am. v Superior Court (1980) 108 CA3d 758, 765 n1, 166 CR 880; Cooke v Superior Court (1978) 83 CA3d 582, 588, 147 CR 915. See Comment to Evid C §952.

© The Regents of the University of California

§1.47 2. Problems of control

From an efficiency standpoint, it is better for multiple parties on each side of a case to come to an agreement on the use of peremptory challenges, on the order of opening statements, and on the presentation of their cases rather than compelling the judge to make these decisions. Counsel may not like the judge's decisions as well as the agreements they can hammer out on their own.

§1.48 B. Special designation of counsel

Many efficiency issues involved in multiparty litigation have to do with the division of work among co-counsel. For example, the court has the authority to appoint a liaison counsel, to designate lead counsel and a steering committee of counsel, and to deal with issues relating to compensation of liaison, lead, and other counsel. These arrangements may also raise issues of privilege. See §1.46. On complex cases and coordination of complex actions, see Cal Rules of Ct 3.400-3.403, 3.501-3.506.

§2.1 I. SCOPE OF CHAPTER

The procedures described in this chapter begin immediately after counsel receives a trial date. The chapter covers the steps required to complete pretrial procedures, e.g., final discovery (see §§2.2-2.18), including the effect of judicial arbitration on those procedures. See §§2.19-2.24. The chapter assumes that you have already followed the applicable procedures to obtain a trial date (see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chaps 40-42 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004)), although a trial department or courtroom may not yet be assigned.

This chapter also discusses the procedures that must be followed to obtain a trial by jury, i.e., to demand the jury and pay the jury fees. See §§2.25-2.35. On determining right to jury trial and relief from waiver if that right has been waived, see chap 8.

Before trial in some cases, counsel should evaluate the effects of adverse publicity on the client's case and consider motions for a continuance or change of venue. These issues are discussed in §§2.36-2.60.

II. COMPLETE FINAL DISCOVERY

A. Deadlines for completing discovery before arbitration or trial

1. If case sent to arbitration

§2.2 a. Usually no discovery after hearing except by court order

If the case has been sent to judicial arbitration (see §§2.19-2.24), complete discovery at least 15 days before arbitration begins. Cal Rules of Ct 3.822. When a party requests a trial de novo after the arbitration, no discovery, except expert witness depositions (see §2.3), may be conducted after the arbitration hearing unless the parties stipulate otherwise or a court order allows discovery on a showing of good cause. CCP §§1141.24, 2024.040(a).

For further discussion of judicial arbitration and discovery, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 37 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

PRACTICE TIP: If the court orders an early nonbinding arbitration, consider entering into a stipulation with all parties to allow discovery after the arbitration. In a judicial district in which the courts are congested and there is likely to be a lengthy period of time between the arbitration and the trial, the court may allow at least limited postarbitration discovery.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/2 Completing Pretrial Procedures/§2.3 b. Exception: Expert witness discovery permitted

§2.3 b. Exception: Expert witness discovery permitted

If one party requests a trial de novo after the arbitration, expert witness discovery under CCP §§2034.010-2034.730 can be completed on or before the 15th day before the initial trial date. CCP §2024.030. See §2.7.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/2 Completing Pretrial Procedures/§2.4 2. If case not sent to arbitration

§2.4 2. If case not sent to arbitration

If the case is not sent to judicial arbitration, a party must complete nonexpert discovery proceedings on or before the 30th day before the initial trial date, subject to certain exceptions (see §§2.5-2.8 for exceptions). CCP §§2024.010-2024.020.

A continuance or postponement of the trial date does not reopen discovery. CCP §2024.020(b). However, if the court grants a new trial, declares a mistrial, or orders a reversal on appeal, discovery reopens as a matter of right and the last date for completing discovery is calculated from the date initially set for the new trial of the action. See Fairmont Ins. Co. v Superior Court (2000) 22 C4th 245, 92 CR2d 70.

Discovery is considered complete on the day responses are due or the day a deposition begins. CCP §2024.010. For example, depositions begun 31 or more days before the initial trial date may be completed within 30 days before trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.5 a. Effect of local rules

The Judicial Council preempts local rules on discovery, ex parte applications, motions, pleadings, and form and format of court papers. Cal Rules of Ct 3.20(a). Local rules adopted under the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act of 1990 (Govt C §§68600-68620) are not preempted, nor are local rules on motions in limine and trial or posttrial proceedings. Cal Rules of Ct 3.20(b).

NOTE: Although the trial court may adopt local case management rules, the court does not have authority to shorten statutory time periods. Govt C §68616. The California Civil Discovery Act (CCP §§2016.010-2036.050) governs deadlines for individual discovery methods. Govt C §§68616(f), 68620(c).

§2.6 b. If court allows later discovery

Discovery proceedings less than 30 days before the initial trial date may be conducted only by court order or on noticed motion, ex parte application, or joint application signed by all parties, or by the parties' agreement confirmed in writing. CCP §§2024.050(a)-(b), 2024.060. See §2.11 on moving for additional discovery after the discovery deadline.

§2.7 c. Expert witness discovery

Discovery proceedings involving expert witnesses identified under CCP §§2034.010-2034.730 can, and must, be completed on or before the 15th day before the trial date. CCP §2024.030.

§2.8 d. Unlawful detainer and eminent domain discovery

In unlawful detainer actions, parties must complete discovery on or before the fifth day before the date set for trial. CCP §2024.040(b). In eminent domain proceedings, conduct discovery according to CCP §§1258.010-1258.300, not under CCP §§2024.010-2024.060. See CCP §2024.040(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.9 3. Determine when to initiate final discovery requests

If you have not completed discovery, serve the discovery request (e.g., send interrogatories) early enough so that the statutory time for response will not fall within the 30 days before the initial trial date. See generally CCP §§2024.010-2024.020.

PRACTICE TIP: Even if you have propounded extensive written discovery, consider a final round of written discovery near the cutoff date to make sure no new facts have emerged. See CCP §2030.070 (supplemental interrogatory).

Remember to add 5 calendar days to the statutory response period when serving a discovery request by mail if the address is in California, 10 days if the address is outside California but in the United States, and 20 days if the address is outside the United States. CCP §§1013, 2016.050. See, e.g., Brochtrup v Intep (1987) 190 CA3d 323, 332, 235 CR 390 (30-day period to respond extended for 5 days, under §1013, when service is by mail); Citicorp N. Am., Inc. v Superior Court (1989) 213 CA3d 563, 567, 261 CR 668 (§1013 is procedural statute of general application that extends any period to act following service by mail). If the discovery request is served by Express Mail or other authorized method of delivery providing for overnight delivery, the statutory response period is extended by 2 court days. CCP §1013(b).

Allow sufficient time to serve a notice for a discovery motion, if necessary. The court must hear the motion on or before the 15th day before the initial trial date. CCP §2024.020(a). The motions and supporting papers must be served and filed at least 16 court days before the hearing (add 5 calendar days if served by mail within the State of California, 2 court days if served by Express Mail or other overnight delivery service). CCP §§1005(b), 1013; Cal Rules of Ct 3.1300. All papers opposing a discovery motion or reply papers shall be served by personal delivery, facsimile transmission, express mail, or other statutory means reasonably calculated to ensure delivery to the other party not later than the close of the next business day after the time the opposing papers or reply papers are filed. CCP §1005(c). Code of Civil Procedure §1013, which extends the time within which a right may be exercised, does not apply to a notice of intention to move for new trial, notice of intention to vacate judgment under CCP §663a, or notice of appeal. CCP §1013.

On discovery motions in general, see California Civil Discovery Practice, chap 15 (4th ed Cal CEB 2006).

B. Making discovery motions before trial

§2.10 1. Deadline for court to hear motions

The court must hear motions concerning discovery on or before the 15th day before the date initially set for trial. CCP §2024.020(a). Discovery motions concerning expert witnesses must be heard on or before the 10th day before the date first set for trial. CCP §2024.030. For discussion of discovery motions, see California Civil Discovery Practice (4th ed Cal CEB 2006); Handling Motions to Compel and Other Discovery Motions (Cal CEB Action Guide December 2009).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.11 2. Moving for additional discovery after deadline dates

Any party may move to have the court delay the deadlines for discovery completion, or to reopen discovery if trial is continued or after a judicial arbitration award. The motion must be accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented by the motion. CCP §2024.050(a).

To support the motion, provide the court with the facts it must consider while exercising its discretion to grant or deny the motion (CCP §2024.050(b)), e.g.:

- The necessity and reasons for the discovery;
- The diligence or lack of diligence of the party seeking discovery and the reasons it was not completed earlier;
- Whether the discovery will prevent the trial from going forward on the date set or will otherwise interfere with the court's trial calendar; and
- The length of time between the time previously set, and currently set, for trial.

The court must also impose sanctions against a party or counsel who unsuccessfully makes, or opposes, a motion to reopen discovery, unless the court finds that the motion, or opposition, was made in good faith. CCP §2024.050(c).

§2.12 C. Object to discovery that falls within 30 days before trial

If there is no agreement confirmed in writing or court order permitting late discovery, a party served with a discovery request, whose statutory period for completion falls after the discovery deadline (under statute or set by the court), may object as explained in §§2.13-2.17.

§2.13 1. Deposition of client

If opposing counsel notices a deposition of the client within 30 days before trial, first serve a formal written objection based on an error or irregularity in the deposition notice. This objection should be personally served at least 3 calendar days before the scheduled deposition (additional time is required if the objection is served by mail; see CCP §1013). CCP §2025.410(a). Objecting preserves the right to raise the objection at trial when opposing counsel tries to use the deposition.

This objection to the form of the notice does not stay the deposition. To prevent the deposition from proceeding, either:

- Include in the objection that the deponent, who is a party or witness under your control, will not appear at the deposition because CCP §§2024.010-2024.020 provide that discovery must be completed on or before the 30th day before the date initially set for trial; or
- Move for an order staying the deposition and quashing the deposition notice under CCP §2025.410(c).

In either event, make a reasonable and good faith attempt to resolve the problem informally before objecting or moving to stay the deposition. CCP §2025.410(c).

Arguably, the deponent should be able to refuse to attend an untimely noticed deposition and not have to bear the expense or burden of having to move for an order. This argument is based on CCP §2024.050, which places the burden of justifying late discovery on the party seeking it. If the deponent does not appear, the party noticing the deposition can move to compel the deposition under CCP §2025.450 and to extend time to complete discovery under CCP §2024.050(a). See §2.11. The risk of not appearing at the deposition is that if the party seeking discovery brings a motion to compel the deposition, the court must impose sanctions against the deponent for not attending unless the court finds that the deponent acted with substantial justification. CCP §2025.450(c).

PRACTICE TIP: If you make a timely objection because you believe that the late deposition is unjustified, e.g., no newly discovered evidence has made the deposition important, you may be safe in placing the burden on the deposing party to move to compel. However, the better strategy is to contact opposing counsel and resolve your objections before instructing your client not to attend the deposition, e.g., you and opposing counsel might agree that interrogatories or some other type of discovery would better serve opposing counsel's purpose, or may agree to a more convenient location, time, or time limit for the deposition.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.14 2. Deposition of nonparty witness

If the deposition of someone other than the client is noticed after the discovery deadline, counsel can object and not attend under CCP §2025.410(b), which provides that if counsel does not attend, opposing counsel cannot use the deposition at trial if the court later determines that the objection was valid. CCP §2025.410(b).

PRACTICE TIP: The better strategy is to move for an order staying the deposition and quashing the deposition subpoena (CCP §2025.410(c)) instead of letting the deposition proceed in your absence.

Object and seek a protective order under CCP §2034.250. A party who has served an untimely demand may move to be relieved of the consequences of that error under CCP §473 (relief from mistake). Relief is not limited to that specified in the discovery statutes. Zellerino v Brown (1991) 235 CA3d 1097, 1 CR2d 222.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.18 D. If trial date continued or new trial ordered

If the initial trial date is continued, neither discovery nor the right to designate experts reopens. Beverly Hosp. v Superior Court (1993) 19 CA4th 1289, 1294, 24 CR2d 238. A limited exception to this rule is that the death or serious illness of a trial attorney or party may constitute good cause to reopen discovery after a trial date has been continued. Hernandez v Superior Court (2004) 115 CA4th 1242, 1247, 9 CR3d 821.

New experts may be designated before a new trial, after a motion for new trial has been granted, after a case has been reversed on appeal, or after a mistrial is declared. Fairmont Ins. Co. v Superior Court (2000) 22 C4th 245, 92 CR2d 70. A party is entitled to present new expert witness testimony in a new trial on a claim abandoned in the prior trial. Gordon v Nissan Motor Co. (2009) 170 CA4th 1103, 1112, 88 CR3d 778. An order for a new trial reopens demands for exchange of expert witness information. Hirano v Hirano (2007) 158 CA4th 1, 6, 69 CR3d 646. See §2.4.

EXAMPLE 1: The trial court ordered a new trial on the issue of damages. Plaintiff in the new trial had the right to introduce new and additional evidence and therefore had the right to designate new experts. Guzman v Superior Court (1993) 19 CA4th 705, 23 CR2d 585.

EXAMPLE 2: A mistrial was declared after a hung jury. More than 70 days before the new trial date, plaintiff served defendants with a new demand to exchange of expert witness information. The court found that allowing new discovery after a mistrial might promote rather than defeat a more expeditious resolution of the case. Beverly Hosp. v Superior Court, supra.

III. EFFECT OF JUDICIAL ARBITRATION ON PRETRIAL PROCEDURES

§2.19 A. Requesting trial de novo after arbitration

If the case was sent to arbitration under CCP §§1141.10-1141.31, and the arbitrator has made an award, within 30 days after the award is filed, either party may file a request for a trial de novo. CCP §1141.20; Cal Rules of Ct 3.826(a). The court then restores the case to the same position on the civil active list that it occupied before it was sent to arbitration, or sets a new trial date at a post-arbitration case management conference. CCP §1141.20(b), Cal Rules of Ct 3.826(b).

If neither party requests a trial de novo within the 30-day period, the arbitration award is entered as the final judgment in the action. CCP §1141.20; Cal Rules of Ct 3.827(a). Such a judgment has the same force and effect as any other judgment in a civil action or proceeding, except that it may not be appealed. CCP §1141.23; Cal Rules of Ct 3.827(c). On attacking or setting aside judgment, see CCP §1141.23; Cal Rules of Ct 3.828(a).

For complete discussion of judicial arbitration, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 37 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004); A Litigator's Guide to Effective Use of ADR in California (Cal CEB 2005).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/2 Completing Pretrial Procedures/ B. Effect of judicial arbitration/§2.20 1. On CCP §583.310 dismissal period

B. Effect of judicial arbitration

§2.20 1. On CCP §583.310 dismissal period

If the action is submitted to or remains in judicial arbitration in the last 6 months of the 5-year period to bring the case to trial (CCP §583.310), the period from 4 years and 6 months after the action was filed until the date a CCP §1141.20 trial de novo request is filed is not included in the CCP §583.310 5-year dismissal period. CCP §1141.17.

EXAMPLE: Plaintiff filed a complaint on February 14, 2004, and the case was submitted to arbitration after August 14, 2008, 4 years and 6 months after the complaint was filed. Plaintiff filed a request for trial de novo on November 15, 2008, 93 days after the 4-year/6-month anniversary. If the case had not been sent to arbitration, the 5 years would have expired on February 14, 2009. However, because the case was sent to arbitration, the 5-year period expired on May 18, 2009.

PRACTICE TIP: You will get the same result if you calculate the expiration date in different ways. Using the dates in the example above, you may (1) add 6 months to the date the trial de novo request is filed (6 months after November 18, 2003); (2) stop counting the 5-year period, starting on the date 4 years and 6 months after the complaint was filed, and resume counting when the request for trial de novo is filed (on November 19, 2003, you begin counting the 4-year/6-month period plus 1 day); or (3) add the period of time the 5-year period is tolled (time between 4 years and 6 months after the filing of the complaint and the filing of the request for trial de novo) to the date the 5-year period would have expired, as the court did in Drummond v Murata (1991) 227 CA3d 44, 49, 277 CR 727 (court added days to date 5-year period would have expired to come up with new expiration date).

Except as specified in CCP §1141.17, submission of an action to arbitration does not suspend or toll the running of any time periods found in CCP §§583.110-583.430. CCP §1147.17(a). Drummond v Murata, supra. However, courts have held that tolling can end in ways not specified in CCP §1141.17. See Winston v Woodward (1992) 3 CA4th 361, 367, 4 CR2d 126 (arbitrator decided that matter was not amenable to arbitration); Niesner v Kusch (1986) 186 CA3d 291, 297, 230 CR 613 (scheduled arbitration hearing never occurred). The statute does not specify what event would end the tolling if arbitration is not completed.

The tolling provisions of CCP §1141.17 do not apply to arbitration by contract. Dodd v Ford (1984) 153 CA3d 426, 200 CR 256 (because parties stipulated to binding arbitration, request for trial de novo not allowed). In such cases, the rules on dismissal for delay in prosecution are the same as in other civil cases (Dodd v Ford, supra), although, once a case is submitted to binding arbitration, it is the arbitrator who decides whether there has been an unreasonable delay in prosecution that would justify dismissal. See Burgess v Kaiser Found. Hosp. (1993) 16 CA4th 1077, 1081, 20 CR2d 488; Nanfito v Superior Court (1991) 2 CA4th 315, 318, 2 CR2d 876.

See California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 39 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004) on dismissal of case for failure to prosecute.

§2.21 2. On trial-setting procedures when trial de novo requested

When a party files a request for a trial de novo, the court on a master calendar system restores the case to the same position on the civil active list that it occupied before it was sent to arbitration. CCP §1141.20(b). In a single assignment court, if the court did not set a trial date at the pre-arbitration case management conference, it will set a trial date post-arbitration at a continued case management conference. Cal Rules of Ct 3.828(a).

PRACTICE TIP: Check local rules and call the court clerk to learn the local court's procedure in restoring the case to the civil active list and setting a trial date.

Be prepared to immediately take whatever action is necessary to expedite setting a trial de novo if the 5-year deadline is near, e.g., move to advance the trial date and request an order shortening time for the motion to advance the trial date. At a minimum, you have the duty to notify the court of its duty to calendar a case within the 5-year limitation period and to follow up with the court to make sure the trial date is set. Messih v Levine (1991) 228 CA3d 454, 278 CR 825. Failure to do so has been found to be a lack of diligence sufficient to allow the court to dismiss the case. Santa Monica Hosp. Med. Ctr. v Superior Court (1988) 203 CA3d 1026, 250 CR 384; Berry v Weitzman (1988) 203 CA3d 351, 249 CR 816.

PRACTICE TIP: Always confirm any telephone follow-up in writing and keep copies of all, e.g., correspondence, notes, and notices. Ask the person you speak with for his or her full name and direct a confirming letter to this person's attention. If you face a motion to dismiss, you can file these documents to show that you were diligent.

For further discussion of the effect of judicial arbitration on the CCP §583.310 dismissal period for failure to prosecute, see §2.20.

§2.22 3. On conduct of trial

If a party requests a trial de novo, the case must be tried as if no arbitration proceedings had occurred. Cal Rules of Ct 3.826(c). During the trial de novo, no reference may be made to:

- The arbitration award;
- The fact that arbitration occurred;
- Any evidence presented at the arbitration hearing; or
- Any other aspect of the arbitration proceedings.

None of the above may be used as affirmative evidence, for impeachment, or for any other purpose at the trial. Cal Rules of Ct 3.826(c). Any reference to the arbitration proceedings or award during the subsequent trial is deemed an irregularity in the trial proceedings and is a ground for moving for new trial under CCP §657. CCP §1141.25. On misconduct of counsel and court generally, see chap 16.

© The Regents of the University of California

4. On discovery

§2.23 a. Complete most discovery before arbitration hearing

When a case is submitted to judicial arbitration, CCP §2024.020(a) is superseded by Cal Rules of Ct 3.822, and parties can conduct discovery until the 15th day before arbitration (i.e., although discovery would have been barred by CCP §2024.020(a), Rule 3.822 controls). Zinn v Superior Court (1980) 108 CA3d 583, 589, 166 CR 640 (parties agreed to submit case to judicial arbitration at mandatory pretrial conference 11 days before date set for trial).

If additional time is needed to complete discovery before the arbitration, make a motion showing good cause and asking the court to extend the time to complete discovery. Cal Rules of Ct 3.822. On requesting discovery after arbitration and before trial de novo, including discovery of expert witnesses, see §§2.2-2.3, 2.24.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.24 b. Conduct permissible discovery after arbitration award

In cases ordered to arbitration under CCP §1141.16(a), no discovery is permissible after the arbitration award (CCP §1141.24), except:

- Expert witness discovery;
- Any discovery if the parties stipulate; or
- Any discovery allowed by the court on a showing of good cause.

If unable to obtain an agreement to conduct postarbitration discovery, file a motion requesting additional discovery, and be prepared to show in the motion:

- Why the discovery is necessary;
- Diligence in seeking discovery;
- The reasons for not obtaining it sooner; and
- Whether trial would be delayed or the other party prejudiced.

See Regan v Lanet (1987) 197 CA3d 353, 243 CR 20 (court upheld denial of further discovery to losing party in arbitration). The courts disfavor discovery after arbitration, especially to the losing party, who might be fishing for information to improve the chances of winning on a second round. For further discussion, see §§2.2-2.3.

IV. OBTAIN TRIAL BY JURY

A. Demand for jury trial

§2.25 1. Timing

The statutory deadline to demand a jury trial is (CCP §631(d)(4)):

- At the time the case is first set for trial, if the setting is on notice or stipulation (e.g., at the case management conference), counsel must announce that a jury is required; or
- Within 5 days after notice of setting, if the court set the trial date without prior notice or if there was no stipulation of counsel.

If there has been a waiver of a trial by jury, the court has the discretion on just terms to allow a jury trial. CCP §631(e). See §§8.15-8.17.

NOTE: Under Govt C §68106(b)(1), effective July 28, 2009, and operative through June 30, 2010, if a court is closed as the result of a budget reduction measure in response to the state fiscal crisis, the day is considered a holiday and not a court day.

© The Regents of the University of California

2. How to make demand

§2.26 a. Case management statement

The Judicial Council has adopted a form Case Management Statement (Form CM-110) for mandatory use. The statement must be filed with the court and served on all parties no later than 15 days before the case management conference. Cal Rules of Ct 3.725. Check the box at item 5 for a party requesting a jury trial. The case management conference to review each case must be scheduled no later than 180 days after the initial complaint was filed. Cal Rules of Ct 3.721. On cases exempt from civil trial court management rules, see Cal Rules of Ct 3.712, 3.714. On court management rules, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chaps 40-44 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

Traditionally, the demand for a jury trial was included in the at-issue memorandum. Most courts, however, do not require an at-issue memorandum, as evidenced by the repeal of former Cal Rules of Ct 209. Cases before July 1, 2002, the date the Judicial Council adopted former Cal Rules of Ct 212 and Judicial Council Form CM-110, often address issues of demanding and waiving jury trial in the context of at-issue memorandums. See, e.g., Mutual Bldg. Loan Ass'n v Corum (1934) 220 C 282, 287, 30 P2d 509 (failure to demand jury trial in at-issue memorandum is not in itself waiver of right to jury); March v Pettis (1977) 66 CA3d 473, 136 CR 3 (party that explicitly answers "no" in at-issue memorandum to question of whether jury trial is demanded has expressly waived right to jury). For further discussion on waiving right to jury trial and relief from that waiver, see §§8.15-8.17.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/2 Completing Pretrial Procedures/§2.27 b. Check local rules

§2.27 b. Check local rules

Consult local court rules for any additional procedures for demanding a jury trial. Some trial courts may require their own case cover sheet with an option for requesting a jury trial when first appearing in the case. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.220(a) (Judicial Council's Civil Case Cover Sheet (Judicial Council Form CM-010) must be filed in addition to any cover sheet required by local rule).

PRACTICE TIP: Even if local rules do not require it, in an abundance of caution counsel might consider demanding a jury in the complaint or responsive pleading in addition to demanding a jury in the case management statement.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.28 c. Announcement on the record

Counsel's announcement on the record at the time the case is first set for trial that a jury trial is demanded has been held sufficient. Union Oil Co. v Hane (1938) 27 CA2d 106, 80 P2d 516. For example, a party may demand a jury by appearing at a pretrial conference and stating that a jury is required. See De Castro v Rowe (1963) 223 CA2d 547, 558, 36 CR 53. Similarly, when the party that originally demanded a jury orally waives the jury in front of the trial judge, opposing party can promptly make an oral demand in front of that judge. See CCP §631(c); McIntosh v Bowman (1984) 151 CA3d 357, 361, 198 CR 533.

Under Cal Rules of Ct 3.727, topics that the parties must address at the case management conference include whether a jury trial is demanded. The case management order may include a provision for a jury or a nonjury trial. Cal Rules of Ct 3.727.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.29 d. Motion for jury trial

If the right to a jury trial is not guaranteed by law, counsel may move for jury trial. Whether a jury trial is appropriate depends on the gist of the action, which ordinarily is determined by the mode of relief sought and the issues raised. Walton v Walton (1995) 31 CA4th 277, 291, 36 CR2d 901. On when a party is entitled to a jury trial, see §§8.3-8.8.

Alternatively, counsel may request an advisory jury. Although former Cal Rules of Ct 377 was repealed because its procedures were thought to be burdensome, the Advisory Committee Comment (2003) states that repeal of the rule is not intended to prevent the court, in its discretion, to approve the use of an advisory jury. For further discussion, see §8.13.

§2.30 3. Requesting jury after waiver

The court may, in its discretion and on just terms, allow a trial by jury although there may have been a waiver of a trial by jury. Cal Rules of Ct 3.727. However, even if abuse of discretion is found, reversal of the judgment is not required unless there is a showing of actual prejudice. See McIntosh v Bowman (1984) 151 CA3d 357, 363, 198 CR 533. For further discussion on waiver, see §§8.15-8.17.

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Deposit jury fees

§2.31 1. Who pays and how to pay

To avoid waiving the jury, each party demanding a jury trial must deposit advance jury fees with the court, and additional fees at the beginning of the second and each succeeding day of trial. CCP §631(d)(5)-(6). In eminent domain proceedings, the party seeking condemnation must deposit the jury fees regardless of who demanded the jury. CCP §631.5.

Each party demanding a jury makes the deposit with the "clerk or judge." CCP §631(b)-(c). Most clerks' offices will accept the deposit in the form of a check (showing the name of the case and case number) from the attorney or the attorney's firm.

PRACTICE TIP: It is a good idea to ask the clerk's office whether there are any special requirements for the form of the jury fees deposit (e.g., money order) and where to make it (e.g., directly with the clerk, cashier, or other person).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.32 2. Time limit for deposits of jury fees

Each party demanding a jury trial (see §§2.25-2.30) must deposit advance jury fees at least 25 calendar days before the date initially set for trial. CCP §631(b). In unlawful detainer actions, the fees must be deposited at least 5 days before the date set for trial. CCP §631(b).

Additional fees are due at the beginning of the second day and each succeeding day's trial session. CCP §631(c). If more than one party has demanded a jury, counsel must stipulate (or the court must order) the amount to be paid daily by each party. CCP §631(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.33 3. Amount of jury fee deposit

The total amount of the advance jury fee deposited 25 days before the trial date (5 days in unlawful detainer actions; see §2.32) may not exceed a total of $150 for each party demanding a jury trial. CCP §631(b). Counsel should check local rules and the court's fee schedule for the amount to deposit for jury fees before trial.

The amount of the jury fees due at the beginning of the second and each succeeding day of trial must be a sum equal to that day's fees and mileage of the jury, including fees and mileage for the jury panel if the trial jury has not yet been selected and sworn. CCP §631(c).

After the first day of trial, the statutory daily fee for each juror is $15. CCP §215(a). Under some circumstances, government and public employees may not be paid a jury fee. CCP §215(b). Jurors must be reimbursed at the rate of $.34 per mile for each mile actually traveled in attending court, "in going only"; i.e., jurors are reimbursed for mileage only one way. CCP §215(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.34 4. Effect of failing to deposit fees: Jury trial waived

A party waives the right to a jury trial by failing to make a timely deposit of the jury fees (CCP §631(d)(5)-(6)), but the court has discretion to grant relief from that waiver. CCP §631(e). Johnson-Stovall v Superior Court (1993) 17 CA4th 808, 21 CR2d 494 (court abused its discretion by denying relief when no showing was made of prejudice to court or other parties). See also Byram v Superior Court (1977) 74 CA3d 648, 141 CR 604. On discretion of court to relieve waiver, see §8.16.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.35 5. Jury fees refunded if case is settled or continued

When a party deposits jury fees and that party waives a jury or obtains a continuance of the trial, or the case is settled, the amount of the deposit is not refundable if the court finds there has been insufficient time to notify the jurors that the trial will not proceed at the time set. CCP §631.3. The depositing party must request a refund within 20 business days after the date the jury was waived or the action was settled, dismissed, or continued; otherwise, the fees will be transferred to the Controller for deposit into the Trial Court Trust Fund. CCP §631.3.

PRACTICE TIP: Consult local rules because they may state how to avoid forfeiture. See, e.g., San Mateo Ct R 2.7.6 (notify court in writing at least 2 court days before trial). The local rules might also state when fees are considered refundable.

V. PUBLICITY, PREJUDICE, AND FAIR TRIAL

A. Client's right to fair trial may conflict with other rights

§2.36 1. Constitutional and statutory provisions on how trials are conducted

The right to a fair trial and an individual's right to privacy (Cal Const art I, §1) may conflict with the guarantee of a public trial (Cal Const art I, §15; CCP §124) ("sittings of every court shall be public"). When a case attracts extensive media coverage, conflicts may arise between two constitutional rights: free speech and freedom of the press on one hand (see US Const amend I; Cal Const art I, §2(a)) and the due process right to a fair trial on the other (see US Const amend XIV; Cal Const art I, §7). In fact, the conflict may be even greater under the California Constitution because the courts have held that the free speech and free press rights under Cal Const art I, §2(a) are broader than similar rights in the First Amendment of the United States Constitution. San Jose Mercury-News v Municipal Court (1982) 30 C3d 498, 508, 179 CR 772. See NBC Subsidiary (KNBC-TV) Inc. v Superior Court (1999) 20 C4th 1178, 1191, 86 CR2d 778 (civil litigant's right to fair trial may override media interests and warrant closure of proceedings).

§2.37 2. Who can assert right to public trial

Not only the parties to an action, but also members of the public or the press, may assert the right to a public trial. See CCP §124; Wrather-Alvarez Broad., Inc. v Hewicker (1957) 147 CA2d 509, 305 P2d 236; Kirstowsky v Superior Court (1956) 143 CA2d 745, 300 P2d 163. Members of the press have no greater rights to be present at court hearings than do members of the public. See 143 CA2d at 754. See also Houchins v KQED, Inc. (1978) 438 US 1, 57 L Ed 2d 553, 98 S Ct 2588. In fact, the Judicial Council has adopted rules limiting radio, television, and other media coverage of state court proceedings. See Cal Rules of Ct 1.150 and discussion of this rule in §2.38.

NOTE: For a rule of professional conduct governing trial publicity and extrajudicial statements made by attorneys about adjudicative proceedings, see Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-120.

© The Regents of the University of California

3. Limitations on public rights

§2.38 a. Controlling courtroom

A trial judge, in the interest of the fair administration of justice, can impose reasonable limitations on public access to a trial. Richmond Newspapers, Inc. v Virginia (1980) 448 US 555, 65 L Ed 2d 973, 100 S Ct 2814. For example, because courtrooms have limited capacity, there may sometimes not be enough room for everyone who wants to get in. When this occurs, the court can impose reasonable restrictions on general access, including preferential seating for media representatives.

A court order is necessary before film and electronic media may record or broadcast trial proceedings. Cal Rules of Ct 1.150(c), (e). The court can regulate or refuse recording or broadcasting by film or electronic media to protect the rights of the parties and the dignity of the court, or to assure the orderly conduct of the proceedings. For factors to be considered by the judge in ruling on a request to record or broadcast proceedings, see Cal Rules of Ct 1.150(e).

In federal court, when local rules prohibit television coverage of a trial, television cameras are not permitted in the courtroom even if the judge and the parties in a particular case are willing to waive the rule. Westmoreland v CBS, Inc. (2d Cir 1984) 752 F2d 16.

The court has the inherent power to exclude or expel disorderly spectators from the courtroom. People v Tugwell (1917) 32 CA 520, 163 P 508. On locking doors for the convenience of the court and all others present while the jury is being instructed, see People v Buck (1941) 46 CA2d 558, 116 P2d 160.

NOTE: In no event may the media photograph, record, or broadcast proceedings in chambers, proceedings otherwise closed to the public, jury selection proceedings, bench conferences, conferences between attorneys, or conferences between an attorney and a client or a witness. Cal Rules of Ct 1.150(e).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.39 b. Allowing party to present case

The court may restrict courtroom access to ensure that a defendant receives a fair trial and has a fair opportunity to present a defense. Kirstowsky v Superior Court (1956) 143 CA2d 745, 300 P2d 163. In Kirstowsky, the court held that the trial court had inherent power to order the public and press excluded during the testimony of defendant, who was emotionally disturbed and could not testify freely with the public present. But the court of appeal also held that it would be improper to exclude the public during the entire trial or for any part of the trial other than when defendant testified. 143 CA2d at 754.

§2.40 c. Protecting juror's privacy

Although the United States Supreme Court has held that the press has a right to be present during jury selection proceedings in criminal cases, a juror during voir dire may request an opportunity to present information about a deeply personal matter to the judge in chambers, on the record. Press-Enterprise Co. v Superior Court (1984) 464 US 501, 78 L Ed 2d 629, 104 S Ct 819. Following this precedent, the California courts have ruled that juror questionnaires are part of the public record and the press has a right to have access to the questionnaires (except for questionnaires on juror qualification; see §8.45), just as they have a right to be present during voir dire. See Copley Press, Inc. v Superior Court (1991) 228 CA3d 77, 278 CR 443; Lesher Communications, Inc. v Superior Court (1990) 224 CA3d 774, 274 CR 154.

Although the press may be present, film and electronic media may not photograph, record, or broadcast jury selection proceedings. In addition, photographing a juror is prohibited. Cal Rules of Ct 1.150(e).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.41 4. Who can waive right to public trial

Some early California cases held that a party could waive the right to a public trial. See People v Swafford (1884) 65 C 223, 3 P 809. See also People v Tugwell (1917) 32 CA 520, 163 P 508. The present view is that a party's waiver of the right to a public trial is not sufficient to exclude the public. See Kirstowsky v Superior Court (1956) 143 CA2d 745, 300 P2d 163. See also Richmond Newspapers, Inc. v Virginia (1980) 448 US 555, 65 L Ed 2d 973, 100 S Ct 2814; In re Shortridge (1893) 99 C 526, 34 P 227.

If a party waives the right to a public trial either expressly or by failure to timely object to an exclusion order, that party can not later raise the lack of a public trial on appeal. See People v Blanco (1959) 170 CA2d 758, 339 P2d 906.

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Protective orders to prevent publicity and prejudice

§2.42 1. Court has authority to issue protective orders

To ensure a fair trial in a pending action, the court can issue a protective order (sometimes called a "gag order"). See Younger v Smith (1973) 30 CA3d 138, 106 CR 225; Hamilton v Municipal Court (1969) 270 CA2d 797, 76 CR 168. Such an order might, for example, prohibit the parties, counsel, witnesses, law enforcement agents, and court personnel from disseminating information about a pending criminal trial to the news media. See Hamilton v Municipal Court, supra. However, the court rarely uses prior restraint on publication in the name of a fair trial. Sun Co. v Superior Court (1973) 29 CA3d 815, 830, 105 CR 873.

Protective orders are used in civil cases, e.g., to prevent a newspaper from publishing materials obtained through discovery like pretrial depositions and interrogatories (Seattle Times Co. v Rhinehart (1984) 467 US 20, 32, 81 L Ed 2d 17, 26, 104 S Ct 2199) or to protect a nonlitigant's right to privacy (see Colonial Life & Acc. Ins. Co. v Superior Court (1982) 31 C3d 785, 183 CR 810; Olympic Club v Superior Court (1991) 229 CA3d 358, 282 CR 1). However, there are no California cases authorizing the use of protective "gag" orders for pretrial publicity in civil actions. For a case in which the court vacated a protective order issued in a civil action because the order infringed on the First Amendment, see CBS, Inc. v Young (6th Cir 1975) 522 F2d 234.

NOTE: Although disciplinary rules are not precisely analogous to protective orders, in some jurisdictions attorneys may be prohibited from commenting on a civil case by American Bar Association Model Rules of Prof Cond 3.6, which prohibits comments that present a "substantial likelihood of materially prejudicing an adjudicative proceeding." In California, a violation of the ABA Model Rules is not a ground to discipline attorneys. See Bus & P C §§6077, 6100. For a California rule of professional conduct that governs trial publicity and extrajudicial statements made by attorneys about adjudicative proceedings, see Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-120.

§2.43 2. Requirements to justify gag order

In criminal cases, the showing required to justify a protective order varies, depending on the party against whom the protective order is sought. If the order prohibits the news media from printing information about witnesses, the moving party would need to show that the speech or publicity constitutes a clear and present danger to the administration of justice. Sun Co. v Superior Court (1973) 29 CA3d 815, 829, 105 CR 873 (release of names and photographs of state prison inmates to be called by prosecution as witnesses in murder trial). See also Nebraska Press Ass'n v Stuart (1976) 427 US 539, 49 L Ed 2d 683, 96 S Ct 2791.

If the protective order is directed against prosecutors in a pending criminal action, the moving party must show that there is a "reasonable likelihood" of prejudicial news that would make it difficult to impanel an impartial jury and would tend to prevent a fair trial. Younger v Smith (1973) 30 CA3d 138, 106 CR 225, citing U.S. v Tijerina (10th Cir 1969) 412 F2d 661, 666. The court noted that a different standard might apply to a protective order directed to a defendant, citing Hamilton v Municipal Court (1969) 270 CA2d 797, 76 CR 168.

To obtain a pretrial temporary restraining order preventing television news from broadcasting tapes related to a trial, the moving party must show more than that the publicity would have a "devastating effect" on the parties' opportunity for a fair trial. See KCST-TV Channel 39 v Municipal Court (1988) 201 CA3d 143, 146, 246 CR 869; CBS, Inc. v U.S. Dist. Court (9th Cir 1984) 729 F2d 1174. The Ninth Circuit required that the publicity must threaten to prejudice the entire community so that "twelve unbiased jurors cannot be found." 729 F2d at 1180. Before such an order would be proper, the trial court must also consider whether any mitigating measures would be effective as alternatives to the order. See §§2.51-2.57 for mitigating measures of jury voir dire and see §§2.45-2.49 for motion to change venue.

NOTE: While an attorney's statements made in court filings or on the record in court are privileged, an attorney's statements about a case to the press or to others outside court are not privileged. An attorney who is speaking publicly about a case needs to be careful because out-of-court statements may serve as the basis of a legal action. See CC §47.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.44 C. Remedies to dissipate effect of publicity and prejudice

Less restrictive means than closing trials and issuing protective orders (discussed in §§2.45-2.60) are available to combat adverse publicity. Often, the court can lessen the impact of adverse publicity by using one or more of a "panoply" of measures available to protect the defendant and ensure the constitutionality and fairness of proceedings. Such measures include granting a change of venue, postponing trial until the effect of pretrial publicity subsides, conducting a searching voir dire, giving clear and emphatic instructions to the jury, and sequestering its members. Brian W. v Superior Court (1978) 20 C3d 618, 625, 143 CR 717. See also Nebraska Press Ass'n v Stuart (1976) 427 US 539, 563, 49 L Ed 2d 683, 700, 96 S Ct 2791. Some of these means are discussed in §§2.45-2.60.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.45 1. Motions for continuance and change of venue

In any case in which adverse publicity threatens to subvert the client's ability to receive a fair trial, consider moving for a continuance (see §2.46) and for change of venue (see §2.47). Although both motions have the effect of removing the trial to a less prejudicial atmosphere, one through delay and the other through change of location, neither motion should be considered as a substitute for the other. File the motions together in the alternative to protect the record on any appeal.

PRACTICE TIP: Save time and expense by making the motions together; only one appearance is necessary and you can use the same affidavits or declarations for both motions. On information that must be included in supporting affidavits and declarations, see §2.48.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.46 a. Motion for continuance

Even if the court is likely to deny the motion, be sure, as soon as unfair pretrial publicity arises, to move to continue the trial to a later date. See Allstate Ins. Co. v King (1967) 252 CA2d 698, 60 CR 892; Delaney v U.S. (1st Cir 1952) 199 F2d 107. If the motion is not made, the opposing party may argue that the right to appeal on the ground of an unfair trial due to prejudicial publicity has been waived. See Kauffman v De Mutiis (1948) 31 C2d 429, 189 P2d 271 (party who failed to request continuance when subpoenaed witness did not appear was not entitled to new trial under CCP §657 on ground of accident or surprise).

Denial of a motion for a continuance before trial does not preclude its later revival at the trial date when it may be possible to show additional or continuing prejudice. For example, a party may make or revive a motion for continuance when and if impaneling an unbiased jury becomes difficult. U.S. v Malinsky (SD NY 1957) 20 FRD 300, 303.

PRACTICE TIP: If you decide to revive the motion at the time of trial, file additional and updated affidavits or declarations whenever possible. On information to include in supporting affidavits and declarations, see §2.48.

For discussion of trial continuances generally, see §§6.6-6.25.

§2.47 b. Motion for change of venue

When the client is faced with adverse publicity, consider moving for change of venue to preserve the record on this point in the event of an appeal. In Maine v Superior Court (1968) 68 C2d 375, 386, 66 CR 724, the court stated that "failure to seek a change of venue may suggest to a reviewing court on appeal that no prejudice was suffered by the defendant." See also Stroble v California (1952) 343 US 181, 193, 96 L Ed 872, 882, 72 S Ct 599. But see Delaney v U.S. (1st Cir 1952) 199 F2d 107, 116 (when defendant moved for continuance, defendant's appeal did not suffer from failure to apply for change of venue). On moving to change venue, see CCP §397(b). For detailed discussions on challenging venue, procedure, and review of orders, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 20 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

NOTE: Read change-of-venue cases carefully because the language of the criminal change-of-venue statute is slightly different from that in the civil statute. Compare Pen C §1033(a) ("reasonable likelihood that a fair and impartial trial cannot be had in the county") with CCP §397(b) ("reason to believe that an impartial trial cannot be had"). Although there is little difference between these statutes, most change-of-venue cases are criminal cases and rely on Pen C §1033.

It is important to make this motion promptly to avoid any possible argument of waiver. See Willingham v Pecora (1941) 44 CA2d 289, 112 P2d 328 (court denied motion for change of venue under former CCP §397(3) (now §397(c)) because motion was not made within reasonable time). See also Newman v County of Sonoma (1961) 56 C2d 625, 628, 15 CR 914 ("general rule is that a party seeking a change of venue must act within a reasonable time"); Adams v Superior Court (1964) 226 CA2d 365, 38 CR 164 (motion for change of venue must be made within reasonable time in circumstances of particular case).

The trial court may hold the motion in abeyance or deny it with leave to renew it during voir dire. See Cook v Pendergast (1882) 61 C 72; People v Spring Valley Co. (1952) 109 CA2d 656, 241 P2d 1069 (motion denied subject to being renewed on proceedings for empanelment of jury if it appeared that fair and impartial jury could not be obtained); J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. v Copren Bros. (1917) 35 CA 70, 169 P 443. Although postponing the decision on such a motion until voir dire examination is not required (see People v Ocean Shore R.R. (1938) 24 CA2d 420, 75 P2d 560), the California Supreme Court has increasingly approved of such postponements. See People v Harris (1981) 28 C3d 935, 949, 171 CR 679. The court's rationale is that the trial court cannot assess the impact of pretrial publicity on the jury until voir dire. See Odle v Superior Court (1982) 32 C3d 932, 187 CR 455.

For detailed discussion on challenging venue, procedure, and review of orders, see Civ Proc Before Trial, chap 15.

§2.48 c. Supporting affidavits or declarations; Oral argument

When moving for a change of venue, for a continuance owing to adverse publicity, or for both, draft the supporting affidavits or declarations to include evidentiary facts, not conclusions. See People v Bennett (1955) 132 CA2d 569, 282 P2d 590. Describe in detail the extent and nature of the adverse publicity and its continuing impact on the party's ability to receive a fair trial.

Attach all available prejudicial newspaper and magazine clippings as exhibits and include the circulation figures for the appropriate publications in the community and elsewhere. If the newspaper or newspapers are the only daily newspapers in the community, show this fact as well. Whenever possible, obtain direct quotations from radio and television newscasts. Describe or otherwise reproduce any pertinent portions of the telecast. It may be necessary to subpoena taped transcripts of past programs that are kept by many radio and television stations.

PRACTICE TIP: Descriptions of statewide or nationwide prejudice against the class of party litigants are not sufficient. See U.S. v Dennis (2d Cir 1950) 183 F2d 201, 226, aff'd (1951) 341 US 494; U.S. v Dioguardi (SD NY 1956) 20 FRD 33. You must demonstrate that the adverse publicity and prejudice exist throughout the local area, particularly if you are trying the case in a large metropolitan district. Otherwise, the court may conclude that it is still possible to impanel an unbiased jury. See Press-Enterprise v Superior Court (1994) 22 CA4th 498, 504, 27 CR2d 708; CBS, Inc. v U.S. Dist. Court (9th Cir 1984) 729 F2d 1174.

When the expense is justified, consider conducting surveys to ascertain public opinion on the case. Services are available that telephone representative members of the community to learn how many have heard about a case, where they heard about the case, and whether they had formed an opinion. See, e.g., People v Proctor (1992) 4 C4th 499, 524, 15 CR2d 340.

Direct the court's attention to specific details of highly prejudicial statements or material evidence revealed in the publicity. Theoretically, it is irrelevant whether the published material is admissible as evidence at trial, because in its published form it is still not subject to cross-examination. However, the case will be stronger if any evidentiary material revealed in the publicity is clearly inadmissible.

The following factors may lead a court to change venue or to grant a continuance and, if present, must be included in the affidavits or declarations:

- False or inadmissible facts in the publicity that, if true or admissible, would be crucial to the action;
- Hostile or prejudiced statements, news stories, and publicity about the party (not just about a general class or group of persons to which the party belongs);
- Participation by counsel or the opposing party in disseminating the adverse publicity;
- Public statements against the party made by many citizens, particularly prominent persons;
- Hostile acts against the party or the party's associates;
- Public demonstrations during any phase of the legal proceedings;
- Newspaper approval of hostile acts or hostile statements;
- Civic meetings on the case;
- The need for special court rules to deal with crowds at the proceedings;
- Publicized statements that tend to impugn a party's character; and
- Long-continued and presently existing hostile and prejudicial acts and statements.

In some cases, the appropriate remedy might be a change of venue, e.g., when the adverse publicity occurs in a small community. See Maine v Superior Court (1968) 68 C2d 375, 66 CR 724 (disclosure of confession without its admissibility having been tested in judicial hearing). When appropriate, point out this fact in the supporting affidavits or declarations.

File supplementary affidavits or declarations showing continuing publicity and prejudice right up to the time of arguing the motion. For example, the court denied a motion for change of venue because the moving party's affidavits were silent on the continuing effect of adverse publicity on the right to a fair trial, and counteraffidavits tended to show that excitement aroused by the crime had stopped 3 weeks before the motion was filed. See People v Goldenson (1888) 76 C 328, 19 P 161.

§2.49 d. Counteraffidavits or declarations

Although the moving party has the burden of proof, the opposing party may file affidavits or declarations opposing the motion. In addition to attempting to refute any material facts set forth in the moving party's affidavit or declaration, consider including the following in the counteraffidavit or declaration:

- The adverse publicity or hostility, although once present, has abated;
- The hostility or prejudice was toward a class of persons and not the moving party specifically;
- The specific facts of the case before the court were not the subject matter of the publicity;
- Continuing or transferring the action will involve extra expense, inconvenience to witnesses, or the possibility that a witness will be unable to appear; and
- Case law favors less drastic remedies to cure any unfair pretrial publicity (see §§2.50-2.60).

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.50 2. Bench trial

If a case has aroused public passion or if publicity about prejudicial facts has been extensive, consider a bench trial without a jury. This solution will work only if both parties agree to forgo the right to a jury trial. It would be unfair to force a party to forgo the constitutional right of trial by jury because of community prejudice. See Maryland v Baltimore Radio Show, Inc. (1950) 338 US 912, 915, 94 L Ed 562, 564, 70 S Ct 252 (separate opinion of Frankfurter, J.).

Counsel should evaluate whether the trial judge would, in fact, be less partial. Local judges, who must run for reelection, are not necessarily free from conscious or subconscious bias. See Craig v Harney (1947) 331 US 367, 395, 91 L Ed 1546, 1561, 67 S Ct 1249 (dissenting opinion of Jackson, J.).

On right to jury trial generally, see §§8.2-8.8. For discussion of bench trials generally, see chap 24.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.51 3. Voir dire examination

In People v Harris (1981) 28 C3d 935, 949, 171 CR 679, the California Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's denial of defendants' motion for change of venue based on prejudicial pretrial publicity because "voir dire may demonstrate that pretrial publicity had no prejudicial effect." Similarly, the Ninth Circuit stated that a trial court should consider the use of voir dire to control the effect of pretrial publicity before restraining media broadcasting of trial information. See CBS, Inc. v U.S. Dist. Court (9th Cir 1984) 729 F2d 1174.

In civil cases, CCP §222.5 provides for the examination of prospective jurors, first by the court and then by each party, to discover any bias or prejudice concerning the circumstances of the particular case. If bias or prejudice is discovered, the juror can be dismissed by a challenge for cause under CCP §225. On jury selection, see chap 8.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.52 a. The dilemma: Asking questions about pretrial publicity may increase prejudice

When a case involves prejudicial pretrial publicity, the trial attorney faces an obvious dilemma on the voir dire examination—does the trial lawyer question the jurors at length about pretrial publicity and thereby alert the jury to the existence of the publicity? If the attorney appears to have no unusual difficulty in selecting a jury, challenging only a few prospective jurors for cause or failing to exhaust all peremptory challenges, an appellate court might feel that an impartial jury has or could have been impaneled. People v Bennett (1955) 132 CA2d 569, 282 P2d 590; U.S. v Moran (2d Cir 1952) 194 F2d 623. But questioning jurors at length about the extent and scope of their knowledge of pretrial publicity will fix those facts firmly in their minds. Moreover, once the jury leaves the courtroom, a juror who is ignorant of the publicity may be tempted to satisfy the curiosity that such questions would naturally arouse. See Maryland v Baltimore Radio Show, Inc. (1950) 338 US 912, 916, 94 L Ed 562, 565, 70 S Ct 252 (separate opinion of Frankfurter, J., quoting trial judge's statement that voir dire on pretrial publicity would be useless).

Nonetheless, the courts increasingly rely on voir dire, and on the assurance of the individual juror that he or she can be fair and impartial, as a "cure" for any possible prejudice from pretrial publicity. See, e.g., People v Webb (1993) 6 C4th 494, 515, 24 CR2d 779; People v Proctor (1992) 4 C4th 499, 527, 15 CR2d 340; Odle v Superior Court (1982) 32 C3d 932, 956, 187 CR 455 (dissenting opinion of Bird, C.J.).

© The Regents of the University of California

b. The solution

§2.53 (1) Have judge conduct questioning

It may be preferable to have the judge conduct the examination of individual jurors about whether they have seen or heard the pretrial publicity. If the judge carefully and individually questions the jurors about their opinions and knowledge of pretrial publicity, a juror is less likely to infer that the lawyers are trying to hide something.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.54 (2) Conduct individual voir dire

Courts also use this individual voir dire to ask about the nature and extent of the juror's knowledge of pretrial publicity and how, if at all, the publicity may affect the juror. Odle v Superior Court (1982) 32 C3d 932, 187 CR 455. Consider asking the court to voir dire the jurors individually on the issue of pretrial publicity.

§2.55 (3) Juror questionnaires

Juror questionnaires are increasingly used to gather information about the jurors before oral voir dire begins. See §§1.16, 8.43-8.45. Consider using questionnaires to gather information about each juror's exposure to and attitude about pretrial publicity. This process will help avoid having one juror's answers influence the others and tainting jurors who have not been exposed to the publicity by the responses of those who have.

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel should work out timing and use of questionnaires with the judge so that counsel has sufficient time to review the questionnaires before voir dire begins.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.56 (4) Challenge for cause

A challenge for cause because of knowledge of publicity, even if the court denies the challenge, can form the basis to renew motions to change venue or to continue the trial. The challenge can also be the basis for a future motion for mistrial, a motion for new trial, and appeal.

Grounds for challenging prospective jurors for cause include implied or actual bias. CCP §225(b)(1)(B)-(C). Implied bias, as defined in CCP §229, includes:

- Having an unqualified opinion or belief about the merits of the action founded on knowledge of its material facts or of some of them. CCP §229(e).
- The existence of a state of mind in the juror evincing enmity against or bias to either party. CCP §229(f).

A prospective juror can be challenged for cause under CCP §§225 and 229(e)-(f), even when the juror's bias is based on incorrect "material facts" about the case. But see Riley v Davis (1922) 57 CA 477, 483, 207 P 699.

EXAMPLE: A juror may believe the defendant to be guilty because he heard that the defendant's fingerprints were found at the scene. This juror may be challenged for cause even if the juror was incorrect and the defendant's fingerprints were not found at the scene.

§2.57 (5) Peremptory challenge

Exhaust all peremptory challenges. No reversible error occurs by the erroneous denial of a challenge for cause unless all peremptory challenges are exhausted and it appears that a party wanted to exercise an additional peremptory challenge. See Leibman v Curtis (1955) 138 CA2d 222, 291 P2d 542; Scragg v Sallee (1914) 24 CA 133, 139, 140 P 706. If all peremptory challenges are not exercised, the appellate court may assume that counsel was satisfied that the jury was fair and impartial. See People v Cummings (1993) 4 C4th 1233, 1277, 18 CR2d 796.

PRACTICE TIP: As a practical matter, when the publicity is extremely widespread and well known throughout the community, a prospective juror's answer on voir dire of never having heard of the case is suspect. It may be preferable to have an honest juror who says that he or she will try to disregard pretrial publicity. Recognize, however, that it is human nature for a juror to be influenced to some degree by preexisting knowledge of certain events, even if the juror promises to be fair and impartial.

See also §2.52. For discussion of jury selection generally, see chap 8.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.58 4. Instructions to disregard publicity

Courts frequently have the view that their instructions to disregard statements heard outside the trial will cleanse the jurors' minds of any prejudice or predilections created by those statements. See, e.g., U.S. v Malinsky (SD NY 1957) 20 FRD 300. See also Nebraska Press Ass'n v Stuart (1976) 427 US 539, 564, 49 L Ed 2d 683, 700, 96 S Ct 2791. In the "DeLorean tapes" case, the Ninth Circuit held that the trial court had not adequately considered the use of "emphatic and clear instructions" to dissipate any prejudice before enjoining CBS from broadcasting the tapes. CBS, Inc. v U.S. Dist. Court (9th Cir 1984) 729 F2d 1174, 1183.

The effectiveness of such instructions has been seriously questioned. See, e.g., Delaney v U.S. (1st Cir 1952) 199 F2d 107, 112, quoting from Krulewitch v U.S. (1949) 336 US 440, 453, 93 L Ed 790, 799, 69 S Ct 716 ("[t]he naive assumption that prejudicial effects can be overcome by instructions to the jury … all practicing lawyers know to be unmitigated fiction").

It may be useful, however, to request the court to instruct the jurors at the outset of the trial to refrain from reading or listening to media accounts of the pending action during trial. Evidence that a juror ignored this instruction could provide the basis for a mistrial.

§2.59 5. Sequestration of jurors

Although sequestration insulates jurors only after they are sworn, it enhances the likelihood of dissipating the impact of pretrial publicity and emphasizes the importance of the jurors' oaths. Nebraska Press Ass'n v Stuart (1976) 427 US 539, 564, 49 L Ed 2d 683, 700, 96 S Ct 2791.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.60 6. Juror misconduct

If during trial a juror receives evidence out of court through newspapers or other sources of publicity, seek remedies for juror misconduct. See chap 17.

VI. OBTAIN TRIAL ASSIGNMENT

§2.61 A. Ascertain procedures under court's case management rules

The Judicial Council has the responsibility of implementing the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act of 1990 (TCDRA) (Govt C §§68600-68620) to reduce delays in litigation and to establish a differential classification system for managing cases based on their relative complexity. Govt C §68603(c). The TCDRA was enacted to shorten the time for final disposition of cases consistent with just and effective resolution by giving the trial court control of the pace of litigation. See Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.1; Cal Rules of Ct 3.713. To that end, the Judicial Council has adopted the court management rules in Cal Rules of Ct 3.700-3.735. Of particular concern to litigators is the rule that requires the court to schedule an initial case management conference to review every general civil case, except complex and exempted cases, no later than 180 days (or only about 6 months) after the initial complaint was filed. On the issues that counsel must be prepared to set forth in a party's case management statement and to discuss with other counsel and with the court at this conference, see Cal Rules of Ct 3.721-3.730.

The TCDRA applies to general civil cases. Govt C §68605.5. Cases exempt from TCDRA include probate, guardianship, conservatorship, family law, parentage, custody, adoption, juvenile, small claims, and unlawful detainer proceedings. Cal Rules of Ct 1.6(4).

PRACTICE TIP: There is variation among the local case management programs established by the different counties—and even among individual judges within the same court. Be sure to check local rules and confer with the clerk of the judge who is assigned to the case. On final case management conference before trial, see §6.3.

§2.62 B. Difference between master calendar and one-judge system

Some counties assign the case to one judge for all purposes at an early stage, and that judge controls the litigation. In Los Angeles County, for example, all cases are assigned to a judge for all purposes (with some minor exceptions). In counties that assign the case to one judge for all purposes, the judge, not the master calendar department, sets the trial date. In counties using the master calendar system, the master calendar department assigns trial dates for all cases.

Counsel should check local rules because procedures for assigning trial dates vary. See Cal Rules of Ct 10.900 (each court must adopt calendaring system that will advance delay reduction goals) and Cal Rules of Ct 10.901 (each court must maintain calendar and case flow management system that ensure a sufficient number of cases are set for trial).

§2.63 1. Procedures under one-judge system

In a county where one judge handles a case for all purposes, that judge will review the case management conference, which is scheduled no later than 180 days after the initial complaint was filed. Cal Rules of Ct 3.720-3.730. Subjects that the parties must address at the conference include, if the case has not previously been set for trial, the date by which the case will be ready for trial and the available trial dates. Cal Rules of Ct 3.727.

© The Regents of the University of California

§2.64 2. Procedures under master calendar

In some trial courts, even after passage of the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act of 1990 (Govt C §§68600-68620), the master calendar department assigns trial dates for the cases. Even in these courts, on the noticed motion of a party, the presiding judge may order the case assigned to one judge for all or such limited purposes as will promote the efficient administration of justice. Cal Rules of Ct 3.734.

PRACTICE TIP: You may exercise your peremptory challenge under CCP §170.6, challenging the judge when your case is assigned.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/2 Completing Pretrial Procedures/§2.65 C. Consider pretrial motions

§2.65 C. Consider pretrial motions

Counsel should make certain motions in the department of the presiding judge or in the master calendar department, e.g.:

- Motions to continue the trial. See §§6.6-6.25.
- Motions under CCP §170.6 to disqualify the trial judge assigned by a master calendar department. CCP §170.6(a)(2). See §§6.26-6.28.

Frequently, all motions in cases assigned to one judge for all purposes under the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act of 1990 (Govt C §§68600-68620) are heard before the assigned judge. Check local rules, however, because some motions may be assigned to specific departments. For other pretrial motions that may be made shortly before trial, or on the first day of trial, see chap 6.

§3.1 I. SCOPE OF CHAPTER

This chapter identifies a general method of organizing trial materials that can be adapted for different types and sizes of cases. For additional literature on organizing trial materials, including alternative approaches, see the bibliography in §3.70.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/3 Organizing Trial Materials/§3.2 A. Key to conducting effective trial: Organization

§3.2 A. Key to conducting effective trial: Organization

Being effective at trial requires the highest level of organization and preparation. Any disorganization or unpreparedness will show, and it can undermine a case. For example, direct examination of a witness may become muddled if counsel has to stop and search the file for exhibits that the witness must identify and explain. Cross-examination will be ineffective, and perhaps even misfire, if materials that contradict the witness's testimony cannot be located smoothly and quickly.

The best time to start organizing trial materials is when setting up the files at the inception of the case. The files may need to be reorganized as part of the trial preparation, however, both to make the trial easier to prepare for as well as easier to conduct.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/3 Organizing Trial Materials/§3.3 B. Choosing appropriate organizational system

§3.3 B. Choosing appropriate organizational system

The attorney responsible for organizing the case and preparing it for trial must choose an organizational method that is appropriate for the case. For a complex case (such as a class action or large antitrust case), a method that can handle large volumes and many different types of material is essential. Smaller and simpler cases will need a less elaborate organizational plan.

The lead trial attorney should be intimately involved in preparing and organizing the trial materials, even in complicated cases, and should not count on paralegals, assistants, or even less experienced attorneys to make crucial judgment calls. No attorney is too senior or experienced not to review all the documents in a small case and the key documents early in a large case. There is no substitute for being familiar with and being able to quickly find items during trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.4 II. ORGANIZING FILES AND TRIAL MATERIALS

The lead trial attorney should review all files in the case in order to prepare the issue outline and to identify the evidence to be presented at trial (see §§3.18-3.23). Presumably, a method of setting up and organizing files that will expedite review is already in place. On case management systems, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial §§1.32-1.47 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004). During this review, the trial attorney should feel free to reorganize the system as appropriate to more easily find the materials needed at trial.

As relevant materials are identified, they can be sorted by issue, e.g., material relevant to formation of contract in one file, material relevant to breach of contract in another. If material is relevant to more than one issue, a document index can be created to indicate all issues to which the material relates. See §3.9. See §§3.5-3.48 as a source of ideas for the tools that will be needed in pretrial organization.

§3.5 A. Basic client and case information sheet

Counsel should make sure the file contains a sheet showing basic information such as the names, addresses, and telephone numbers of the client, opposing counsel, and co-counsel (if any), the court and case number, and any internal billing numbers or references. Having this information in one place will save time, and the sheet will serve as a handy portable reference at trial.

B. File categories

§3.6 1. File index

It is vital to prepare and keep current a file index for quick reference to the location of specific materials in the files. An accurate, detailed index is essential in complex cases that may have voluminous files.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/3 Organizing Trial Materials/§3.8 C. Using computers and other technology

§3.8 C. Using computers and other technology

Computers and other forms of technology have revolutionized trial presentations. Where posterboards, overhead projectors with transparencies, and other tools were once common, today's trial presentations include real-time court reporting; computer software programs that can display exhibits, depositions, or both simultaneously; large flat screen television-style monitors; and PowerPoint presentations.

The use of modern technology can help retain the interest of jurors and make complex information more readily understandable. At the same time, fundamental rules of effectiveness still apply—the use of technology should be organized, smooth, and not overwhelming.

Technology enables counsel to handle documents in several ways, including the use of an Elmo (a more advanced version of the overhead projector). Software programs allow exhibits to be loaded into a computer and projected onto a screen or television monitor. Early decisions on how to organize and manage documents can pay big dividends at trial. For further information on computer-generated evidence, see §§13.107-13.108.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.9 1. File management and indexing

For large and complex litigation matters, an index of documents, pleadings, correspondence, and other materials should be put into the computer database. The database allows the index to be easily updated and helps in locating specific information quickly.

A computerized document index is probably neither necessary nor cost effective for one small case. However, a computerized indexing system for all case files at a law firm spreads the cost over all cases and, where useful, makes document indexes affordable for any case. This type of centralized indexing system that keeps track of all documents in all the cases can also be used to help organize documents for trial.

§3.10 2. Calendaring dates and deadlines

Even at the trial preparation stage, many dates and deadlines must be tracked, and the consequences of missing a deadline can be catastrophic. See chap 2 on pretrial deadlines. Computer calendaring programs keep track of key dates and issue reminders.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.11 3. Document databases and issue coding

In complex cases with a large number of documents, it may be advantageous to create a database containing information on each document or group of documents. Doing so can greatly reduce the time required to find particular documents and to identify groups of relevant documents in preparing first for depositions and then for trial.

In witness preparation, for example, the trial attorney must often sift through large quantities of documents to locate the few that will actually be used as exhibits. Although this process may be undertaken manually, it is very time-consuming. If all documents have been scanned into a computerized database (see §§3.12-3.13), word searches help to identify potentially relevant documents in a fraction of the time.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.12 a. Coding

To expedite a computer search for specific documents, certain basic document information should be entered into the database, e.g.:

- Author;
- Recipient;
- Date;
- Subject; and
- A code for each issue to which the material relates.

It then becomes a simple matter to locate documents and receive reports on the documents, using the coded information. For example, it is possible to ask for and obtain a list of all documents written by the defendant in May 2007.

The main drawbacks of coding each document are the time and cost of entering the data into the database. For the end product to be useful, every document must be reviewed and analyzed with care and intelligence. The significant front-end time and expense must be balanced against the savings that will result when the task is complete and the database can be used. This calculation is not an easy one to make, especially because it should be made as early as possible to maximize the savings realized from the database after its creation. Typically, the largest document-intensive cases are appropriate for this kind of database because of the efficiencies involved. The smaller the case, the less likely it is that this approach will be cost-effective.

§3.13 b. Optical character readers

Another option is to have the full text of documents scanned into the computer database with an optical character reader (OCR), a tool that performs word searches based on any word in the document. But because one of the biggest drawbacks for OCRs has been inaccuracy—if the document is of poor quality and difficult to read, the scanner may be unable to decipher and accurately convert it to text in the computer—word searches may be unsatisfactory, and the additional cost of proofreading the computer text may be required.

Finally, the documents may need to be coded (see §3.12) in order to be able to locate specific information about a document or part of a document. Otherwise, searching the text of the document may not reveal the information needed, e.g., the relevant issue, the date, the author, or the recipient.

See §3.15 for OCR use in transcripts.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/3 Organizing Trial Materials/§3.14 c. Imaging

§3.14 c. Imaging

Pictures or copies of documents can be stored on the computer for about the same price as making a photocopy, providing an exact replica of the document that the computer can print out, complete with, for example, handwritten notes. With this method, the document does not become text or data in the computer.

Although this method does not allow searching through and sorting by the contents of the document, it does allow viewing and handling multiple documents without having to physically go through file cabinets or boxes. When a copy of a document is needed in a hurry, the document may be found in the computer and printed in far less time than it takes to sort through files.

§3.15 4. Deposition databases

Most, if not all, court reporters now provide an electronic file of a deposition or a hearing that they provide along with the written transcript, at no or at a nominal cost. With appropriate software, the text of depositions can be searched for key words and annotated with the attorney's notes. When preparing for trial, a computerized search of deposition testimony saves enormous amounts of time that otherwise used to be spent scouring deposition transcripts. During trial itself, word searches may provide instantaneous location of the desired deposition passage on a screen or computer monitor.

§3.16 D. Reorganizing files to eliminate nontrial materials

The files must be reorganized for use during trial by eliminating material that will not be used at the trial itself. This reorganization should begin after counsel has:

- Completed discovery;
- Assembled, collated, and properly filed all case documents;
- Interviewed witnesses;
- Researched legal issues; and
- Formulated the issue outline.

Material that is not relevant to the trial itself should be segregated from relevant material. Either nonrelevant materials may be removed from each file, or all relevant materials may be transferred into the trial notebook and the files that will actually be used in the courtroom.

© The Regents of the University of California

III. PREPARING MATERIALS FOR USE AT TRIAL

A. Trial and issue outline

§3.17 1. Why to prepare

An issue outline lists the factual and legal issues that the client must prove or disprove to prevail at trial and then lists the evidence that will be presented to prove or disprove that issue. An issue outline will help to organize the trial notebook and to formulate a theory of the case that best complements the evidence. The outline may also be used as a tool to determine the evidence to use to prove or disprove an issue, and the order of proof to best persuade the fact finder. Finally, the outline should be used as a master checklist for introducing evidence during trial to eliminate the possibility of overlooking evidence and failing to prove an issue or defense. See sample issue outline in §3.67.

The issue outline is different from outlines that attorneys commonly prepare for discovery. A discovery outline focuses on the likely sources of information to prove the client's case, whereas the issue outline focuses on the method of proving facts at trial, e.g., which witness will testify to what fact. Of course, the discovery outline may evolve into an issue outline as the case progresses. For discussion of a discovery plan, see Creating Your Discovery Plan (Cal CEB Action Guide February 2007); California Civil Discovery Practice, chap 2 (4th ed Cal CEB 2006).

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.18 2. How to prepare

To prepare the issue outline, the trial attorney should review legal authorities to be clear on what must be proved at trial, e.g., 6 Witkin, Summary of California Law, Torts, §§767-817 (10th ed 2005) lists the elements of a cause of action for fraud, and the legal and factual issues that arise in connection with those elements. These elements and the legal and factual issues become the main issues and subissues of the issue outline. A review of the key jury instructions that will be submitted in the case provides an essential reminder of what needs to be proved at trial. See sample issue outline in §3.67 and list of what to include in the outline in §3.20. Once the issues have been identified, review every file in the case to learn which facts can already be proved and which areas require further discovery.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.19 3. When to prepare

It is best to create the issue outline well before the trial date, e.g., before the discovery cutoff (see §2.10). Trial counsel should allow sufficient time for additional discovery if evidence is needed to prove or disprove an issue. The issue outline should be revised as additional discovery is completed and reviewed carefully as the discovery cutoff approaches in order to fill in any gaps.

Many experienced litigators begin to rough in the issue outline at the outset of the case, even before the pleadings have been filed. When preparing the initial issue outline, counsel should consider it a work in progress, to be continually updated as the case progresses.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/3 Organizing Trial Materials/§3.20 4. What to include

§3.20 4. What to include

For the plaintiff, the issue outline necessarily encompasses every element of each cause of action, and for the defendant, it encompasses every element of each defense. These main issues in the issue outline are framed by the controlling pleadings, i.e., the causes of action in the complaint or the affirmative defenses in the answer.

The subissues in the issue outline are the evidentiary and legal issues that support the main issues.

The issue outline should contain the following information:

- Main issues and subissues.
- Facts supporting each issue or subissue.
- Evidence proving those facts, e.g.:
- Percipient witnesses;
- Documentary and demonstrative evidence;
- Foundational witnesses (to authenticate documents, when these witnesses are different from percipient witnesses); and
- Whether expert testimony is necessary.
- Damages report(s).

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.21 B. Preparing trial notebook; format and contents

A trial notebook provides a practical and concise method of organizing material for trial. The main purpose of the trial notebook is to allow quick access to key material during trial. It is typically a looseleaf ring binder, divided by tabs into sections. Some attorneys use a file-folder system or one of the numerous trial organization/notebook products with, e.g., preprinted tabs, table of contents, forms.

The size of the trial notebook and the type of information in it depend on the complexity of the case. In general, however, the notebook should have a section for each major element of the trial in the order in which they will be used at trial. For example, each of the topics covered in §§3.22-3.37 will probably need its own section.

Extra paper should be placed in each section for note taking during trial. A "To Do" section can be useful for writing down tasks and issues that must be pursued during trial.

PRACTICE TIP: Despite the need to include all important information, remember that the primary purpose of the trial notebook is to allow quick access to this material during the trial. Keep the size of the trial notebook manageable.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.22 1. Issue outline

The issue outline that was prepared before trial (see §§3.17-3.20 and sample in §3.67) should be one of the first components of the trial notebook so that it can be referred to when preparing other trial materials, e.g., opening and closing statements. Counsel should refer to the outline during trial to ensure that all issues are proved and all evidence is presented.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/3 Organizing Trial Materials/§3.23 2. Trial brief

§3.23 2. Trial brief

A copy of the trial brief should compose one of the sections in the trial notebook. See §§3.49-3.53.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.24 3. Motions in limine

One section in the trial notebook should hold copies of motions in limine and copies of authorities supporting those motions. See §3.57, chap 7.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.25 4. Materials for voir dire

Another section in the trial notebook should contain voir dire materials and methods to keep track of the selection and seating of the jurors. See §3.58, chap 8.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.26 5. Opening statement

An important component of the trial notebook is the opening statement, setting forth the facts counsel expects to prove at trial. The notebook should also list the demonstrative aids (such as charts or enlargements) that will be used during the opening statement. On opening statement generally, see chap 9.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.27 6. Witness list or information sheets

The trial notebook should contain a list of names, addresses, and home and office telephone numbers of the client and witnesses so that they may be contacted during trial. Alternatively, witness information sheets (see §5.18) with this information could be incorporated directly into the notebook. It is also helpful to list this information on anyone who may be needed in an emergency, such as co-counsel or legal assistants. All this information should be on the basic client and case information sheet. See §3.5.

To help plan and prepare for trial, it is a good idea to prepare a witness list with the name of each witness, the points counsel plans to cover with that witness, and the exhibits that will be introduced with that witness. This list should be organized in the order in which the witnesses will be presented. See §5.20.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.28 7. Witness examination plan

The trial notebook should have a section for each witness, containing the witness examination plan (see §5.19 for how to create the plan). This plan should list the questions to be asked, the testimony expected from the witness to prove or disprove an issue in the case, and any anticipated objections that must be overcome to make that testimony admissible. The plan should also list the exhibits that will be offered through the witness's testimony. When the witness examination plan has been properly prepared, counsel can examine each witness, armed only with the appropriate section of the trial notebook, the witness's deposition (if any), and the exhibits pertaining to that witness. Each witness section should also contain the subpoena or notice to appear for that witness. See chap 4 on compelling attendance and documents at trial.

When the documents pertaining to each witness are bulky, a separate file may have to be set up for each witness (see §§3.40-3.43). That file should include copies of the exhibits that will be offered during the witness's testimony, notes on admissibility of the exhibits, and the witness's deposition.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/3 Organizing Trial Materials/§3.29 a. Anticipated objections to admissibility of documents

§3.29 a. Anticipated objections to admissibility of documents

Because a witness will be used to provide the foundation for admitting certain exhibits, if it is anticipated that opposing counsel will dispute the admissibility of an important document, this possibility should be noted in the witness plan and a short memo prepared on the information that will be needed if the objection is raised. See §§15.45-15.64. This memo might be used as the basis for more extensive memorandums if the court needs or requests them during trial. See §§3.44, 3.54.

Counsel should carefully review the opponent's key documents and consider whether it is strategically desirable to object to them. If so, it will be necessary to research the grounds on which the objection would be based. A note of the grounds for the objections should be put in the witness plan for each of the opposing party's witnesses, and a memo should be prepared and attached to a copy of the document. See §3.42. This process will help counsel to state the objection and the grounds properly and effectively, maximize the chances of success, and protect the record in the event of an appeal.

NOTE: Use in limine motions to deal with many of these evidentiary issues and objections, and be sure to check local rules that may require in limine motions to be filed and heard in advance of the trial. See chap 7.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/3 Organizing Trial Materials/§3.30 b. Impeachment evidence

§3.30 b. Impeachment evidence

Quick and effective impeachment depends on careful organization of impeachment material; it should be segregated by witness in the trial notebook and incorporated into the witness examination plan. On using deposition testimony, interrogatories, and requests for admission to impeach witness, see chap 12.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.31 8. Table of exhibits

Counsel should create a table listing the exhibits in the order in which they will be introduced at trial. A place in the table should be reserved for inserting the clerk's identifying number or letter and indicating whether the court admitted the exhibit into evidence and, if so, the date of admission. This table can serve as a handy reference to the status of all documents marked for identification and offered in evidence. See sample exhibit log in §13.140.

During trial, the exhibit list will need to be updated as documents are introduced. It is a good idea to occasionally compare the information on the table of exhibits with the clerk's record, to ensure that they correspond in every detail. If a discrepancy is found, the transcript should be checked to learn which version is correct.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.32 9. Legal issues and research

A legal issues and research section of the trial notebook should include any important memorandums that counsel anticipates submitting at trial. See §3.54. It should also contain copies of any legal authorities that are likely to be relied on when arguing orally before the court. See, e.g., §3.29.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.33 10. Stipulations, requests for judicial notice, and key discovery responses

The trial notebook should contain a section for undisputed matters. If, for example, the parties have agreed to certain background material, a copy of the stipulation should be kept in the trial notebook. On judicial notice, admissions, and stipulations, see chap 14. In addition, key discovery responses (such as responses to requests for admission) should be included so that they will be readily available. See §§14.47-14.52. Any requests for judicial notice should also be placed here. See §§14.6-14.42.

§3.34 11. Local rules and standing orders

A current copy of local court rules and any standing court orders (i.e., orders concerning all cases issued by the court or individual judges) should be included in the trial notebook (and reviewed well in advance of trial). Having this information handy may minimize the risk of procedural errors.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/3 Organizing Trial Materials/§3.35 12. Jury instructions

§3.35 12. Jury instructions

A section in the trial notebook should be reserved for a copy of the jury instructions requested by all parties. See §§3.59-3.60, chap 20.

§3.36 13. Closing argument

A separate section should be included for closing argument. Here, counsel may add notes made during the trial that are relevant to the closing argument. Depending on the nature and complexity of the case, it may be useful to include an outline of the closing argument that was prepared before and during trial. See chap 19.

§3.37 14. Verdict forms

Another section in the trial notebook should contain a copy of the verdict form that will be submitted to the court. See §3.61, chap 22.

§3.38 C. Other trial files

Although the trial notebook places the most important materials close at hand, other materials must also be brought to trial that may be needed in responding to the opposition's evidence. These materials, even if voluminous, can be conveniently organized in hanging files in boxes. Typical files are pleadings, witness files or binders, documentary evidence, deposition transcripts and videotapes, and legal authorities. See §§3.39-3.45. These files should be labeled and indexed so that the relevant materials can be found quickly.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.39 1. Pleadings and court orders

The controlling pleadings (i.e., complaint, answer, cross-complaint, and answer to cross-complaint) should be put in a separate pleadings file. This file should not include superseded pleadings (although they may be sufficiently relevant to be placed in the trial notebook for impeachment purposes). See §3.30. Counsel should obtain a copy of the court docket sheet that lists all documents filed with the court to confirm before trial that the pleadings file is complete.

A separate file should contain all prior substantive court orders in the case, e.g., rulings on evidentiary matters and summary judgment rulings. Then, if a dispute arises as to whether a party failed to comply with a court order (e.g., a party improperly mentions prejudicial matters in front of the jury) or exceeds the scope of the issues for trial (e.g., when the scope has been limited by a partial adjudication of issues), counsel will be prepared with a copy of the order. Copies of the orders provide a basis for asking the court to admonish opposing attorneys who violate those orders during trial. See §§16.66-16.90 on misconduct of counsel.

§3.40 2. Witness files or binders

All information on witnesses who may testify at trial together should be gathered either into a separate section of the trial notebook or placed in a separate file or binder for each witness. It may be useful to include the following material:

- A copy of the witness examination plan (see §3.28);
- All statements and declarations by or about the witness, deposition transcripts, and records of the witness (see §3.43);
- Reports from and notes concerning the witness;
- Subpoenas of nonparty witnesses, if they do not appear and contempt proceedings become necessary (see §3.55); and
- Documents and demonstrative evidence that will be introduced via that witness and a list of anticipated objections to the admissibility of that evidence (see §§3.41-3.42).

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.41 a. Documentary and demonstrative evidence

Documentary and demonstrative evidence should be organized by witness, i.e., exhibits that will be offered or referred to in examining that witness should be inserted in that witness's file or in a separate file attached to the appropriate witness file. Counsel should arrange the exhibits in the order in which they will be introduced at trial. If a particular witness will testify on many exhibits, a master list of those exhibits should be put in that witness's file.

It may be useful to keep important original and other documents that will be offered into evidence in a separate document file, with a note on the source of the documents and the dates they were obtained on document index sheets. See §3.9 and sample in §3.69. On trial exhibits, see chap 13.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/3 Organizing Trial Materials/§3.42 b. Anticipated objections to admissibility of documents

§3.42 b. Anticipated objections to admissibility of documents

Because witnesses will provide the foundation for admitting certain exhibits, when opposing counsel is expected to dispute the admissibility of an important document, the trial attorney should prepare a memo stating the information needed if that objection is raised. The memo should be clipped to the document or placed in the witness file or the legal research file for easy reference when arguing the point. See §3.42.

NOTE: In limine motions may be used to deal with many of these evidentiary issues and objections. See chap 7.

The memo should state the anticipated objection, the grounds for admitting the evidence, and pertinent authorities. This memo might form the basis of more extensive memorandums, which can be submitted to the judge, if necessary. See §3.55.

When an exhibit is long or complex, a summary should be made for a quick review at trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.43 c. Deposition transcripts, videotapes, and recordings

Deposition transcripts, as well as any deposition summaries, should be organized by witness. If the witness has made any corrections to the transcript, a copy of the corrections should be included. It is important to mark the corrections in the working copy of the deposition so that the witness can be impeached without having to refer to a separate list of corrections. If the witness's deposition was video recorded, a copy of the deposition may be placed in the file. The original video recording should have been kept by the operator who made it. See CCP §2025.560(a). On using the deposition transcript or video recording at trial, see §12.32.

Alternatively, if numerous depositions were taken, it is often more practical to file the transcripts alphabetically by the deponents' last names in boxes. Note that some courts require counsel to lodge the original deposition transcript with the court before trial. Los Angeles Ct R 8.71. See §12.14.

NOTE: If offering a electronic audio or audio-video recording into evidence, remember to supply the court and parties with a typed transcript. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1040.

See §§12.78-12.88 on additional requirements for use of recorded depositions at trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.44 3. Legal research

Unlike the legal issues section of the trial notebook, which contains only the most important legal issues (see §3.32), this file should contain all legal research and authorities accumulated from the beginning of the case. This file should also include a copy of the trial brief and any other legal memorandums in support of anticipated trial motions. On trial motions, see chap 18. If the file contains extensive legal research, it is helpful to create an index to that material.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/3 Organizing Trial Materials/§3.45 4. Optional documentary and demonstrative evidence

§3.45 4. Optional documentary and demonstrative evidence

Other documents and evidence that might be needed for unanticipated developments, such as the appearance of a surprise witness, should also be organized and brought to trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

D. Copies of documents

§3.46 1. Court may require copies of documents

Some courts require that, before the trial begins, copies of the documents on the exhibit list be exchanged between the attorneys and another copy of each document supplied to the court. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(h). Some courts also require that copies of exhibits and other demonstrative evidence be made available to jurors and alternates. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.66.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.47 2. Facilitate witness examination by providing copies

Even when it is not required, it is good practice to make enough copies of the documents to give to opposing counsel and the witnesses before offering them into evidence. Failure to have sufficient copies on hand may require counsel to repeatedly show the document to the witness. Opposing counsel may also interrupt to ask to see the document, thereby disrupting the flow of the examination.

Supplying copies of documents to the opposing attorney, the witness, and the court expedites both the examination and the rulings on the documents' admissibility. On admissibility of documents and demonstrative evidence, see chap 13.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.48 3. Keep track of costs

If a case involves a large number of exhibits, a record of the costs of copying them should be retained because the prevailing party may recover such costs. See CCP §1033.5(b)(3). On recovering costs, see chap 27.

© The Regents of the University of California

IV. PREPARING TRIAL-RELATED DOCUMENTS TO FILE WITH COURT

A. Trial brief

1. Why to prepare

§3.49 a. Educate judge about the case

Virtually every case of any significance warrants the preparation of a trial brief. A trial brief is, in essence, a memorandum of facts and law that educates the judge about the client's factual and legal claims. It provides in one document a perspective of the case that cannot be readily gained from merely reviewing the court file, because the brief spells out the arguments after the parties have had the benefit of discovery.

PRACTICE TIP: Consult local court management rules and, if applicable, check with the trial judge (see §§6.2-6.5) about the purpose, timing, and content of the trial brief. For example, some courts require a detailed issue conference statement, containing a statement of facts and legal issues, to be filed before trial. See, e.g., Contra Costa Ct R 5(K)(2) (statement must be served and filed 5 court days before issue conference). This statement in effect replaces the trial brief because you have already provided the court with a summary of the facts and legal issues and many of the legal issues will have been resolved before the date of trial at the issue conference.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/3 Organizing Trial Materials/§3.50 b. Briefly develop theory of case

§3.50 b. Briefly develop theory of case

A good trial brief does much more than summarize the claims and set forth the applicable law. One of its most important functions is to lay out a theory of the case (assuming, of course, that counsel is willing to give up the element of surprise). The goal is to enable the judge to view the evidence with counsel's theory of the case in mind.

EXAMPLE: In defending a fraud case, you see that your client made statements that the opposition claims were misrepresentations. To show at trial that the statements were true, set the stage for that theory in the trial brief by summarizing the facts and showing how your client's statements were consistent with those facts.

Although it should give a complete overview of the case, the trial brief should, in fact, be brief. The point is not to argue every marginally relevant fact but to focus on the facts and arguments that will win the case.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.51 2. How to prepare

In preparing the trial brief, counsel should analyze:

- The facts and the law; and
- The client's and opponent's claims.

Relying on a detailed issue outline (see §§3.17-3.20) and the trial notebook (see §§3.21-3.37) will facilitate preparation of the brief.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.52 3. Submit as early as possible

A trial brief's effectiveness may be influenced by when it is submitted. Ordinarily, it is best to submit it at the earliest possible time so that the judge's first impression of the case will be based on the view of the issues in the brief. Many courts routinely hold an informal chambers conference when the case is first assigned to the trial judge, providing an opportunity for counsel to personally submit the brief. See §§6.2-6.5. The trial brief sets the stage for subsequent dispositive motions during or after trial, such as a motion for nonsuit or for a directed verdict. See §§18.7-18.34 (nonsuit), 18.35-18.56 (directed verdict). If the judge has had the opportunity to read the brief before trial, counsel may have a greater chance of obtaining a favorable ruling.

PRACTICE TIP: Check local case management rules (see §§2.61-2.64) on the timing for submitting the trial brief.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.53 4. What to include

A good trial brief should include:

- A summary of the case, describing in concise easy-to-read terms the parties' claims and defenses as asserted in the pleadings;
- A statement of the facts that counsel expects the evidence to show (the brief may also describe the opponent's factual contentions and a rebuttal to those contentions); and
- A detailed discussion of all legal arguments, with citations to and excerpts from pertinent authorities.

Legal arguments should be interwoven with and applied to the facts of the case, but avoid string cites and excessive case quotations. Emphasize the central issues that establish liability and damages or defenses to those issues. Minor points of law and anticipated evidentiary issues are normally not included in the brief but may be the subject of supplemental memorandums. See §3.54.

Experienced trial attorneys usually observe (or otherwise investigate) what the judge's chambers library contains and provide complete copies of any cited materials not readily at hand. Other legal memorandums already filed in the case should not be incorporated into the brief. If the case is important enough to go to trial, it deserves a fresh reworking in the brief of any legal points to be highlighted for the judge.

Finally, the trial brief should contain anything that the court requests or orders be included. See Generale Bank Nederland v Eyes of the Beholder Ltd. (1998) 61 CA4th 1384, 1389, 72 CR2d 188.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/3 Organizing Trial Materials/§3.54 B. Supplemental memorandums

§3.54 B. Supplemental memorandums

An effective device during the trial is to submit, as the need arises, supplemental memorandums prepared in advance on particular legal questions, e.g., admissibility of certain types of evidence. The point at which counsel expects to submit these memorandums should be noted in the witness examination plan (see §§3.28, 3.42, 5.19). Moreover, the court may require that additional memorandums on specific points be filed as they arise during the trial.

NOTE: Make sure that the judge will accept supplemental memorandums during trial. Some judges want all potential legal points to be included in the initial trial brief and dislike a piecemeal approach.

When a complex evidentiary issue is involved, counsel should prepare a motion in limine to be sure that the matter is given the time and thought it deserves. See chap 7.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.55 C. Trial subpoenas

Trial counsel should prepare and serve trial subpoenas on all nonparty witnesses that will be called at trial. CCP §1985(a). Subpoenas may be issued by counsel of record. CCP §1985(c). See chap 4 on compelling witnesses to testify and the production of documents at trial.

In addition to the witness's attendance, a subpoena duces tecum requires the witness to bring any desired books, documents, or other items to the trial. CCP §1985(a). An affidavit must accompany a subpoena duces tecum, showing good cause for the production of the matters and things requested in the subpoena. The affidavit must also specify the exact matters or things desired, set forth in detail their materiality to the issues, and state that the witness has the desired matters or things in his or her possession or control. CCP §1985(b). If punitive damages have been requested, counsel may subpoena information from the defendant about its profits or financial condition. CC §3295(c).

PRACTICE TIP: If a nonparty witness is friendly, you can avoid serving the witness by asking him or her to accept service of the subpoena and confirm acceptance in writing.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.56 D. Lists of exhibits

Some courts require each party to prepare a list of exhibits that they intend to offer in evidence. Exhibits that will be used for impeachment need not appear on the list. Copies of the lists can be exchanged with opposing counsel before answering "ready" in the master trial calendar department. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(h).

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.57 E. Pretrial and trial motions

In addition to motions designed to narrow the issues before trial (e.g., a motion for partial adjudication of issues), counsel should consider whether any other pretrial motions are warranted. See chaps 6-7.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.58 F. Voir dire and jury questionnaires

Under Cal Rules of Ct 3.1540, prospective jurors are first examined for impartiality by the trial judge. A party may submit additional questions for the judge to ask the jurors. At the attorney's request and within reasonable limits, the court must permit the attorney to supplement the court's examination by direct oral examination.

To the extent possible, counsel should prepare and submit to the court, with copies to the adverse party, proposed questions for the court to ask during its examination. See Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 3.25. See also Los Angeles Ct R 8.20(h), 8.31. For questions the trial judge normally asks the entire jury panel as well as improper areas of inquiry, see Standard 3.25.

Counsel may also want to prepare a questionnaire that would elicit certain information from prospective jurors before they undergo voir dire. See §§8.43-8.45 on jury questionnaires.

A method for keeping track of the relevant information about prospective jurors should be prepared. One method is to draw a grid with 12 boxes and, as each prospective juror is seated for voir dire, his or her name is recorded on a post-it in the corresponding box along with relevant information about the juror and follow-up questions for that juror. When a juror is excused and a replacement is selected, the post-it can be removed and a new one put in its place on the appropriate box to record information on the new juror.

On selecting and seating jury generally, see chap 8.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/3 Organizing Trial Materials/ G. Jury instructions/§3.59 1. When to submit

G. Jury instructions

§3.59 1. When to submit

All proposed jury instructions covering the law as disclosed by the pleadings must be delivered to the trial judge and served on opposing counsel before the first witness is sworn. CCP §607a. Additional proposed instructions on questions of law developed by the evidence and not disclosed by the pleadings may be submitted to the court and served on opposing counsel before the commencement of argument. CCP §607a.

PRACTICE TIP: Because local practice varies on when instructions must be submitted, determine whether there is a local rule or whether the trial judge has a preference. See, e.g., San Francisco Ct R 6.4 (jury instructions to be delivered to the trial judge on the day of assignment to the trial department; within 2 days thereafter, all counsel must meet and confer, and notify the judge in writing which of the proposed instructions are acceptable to all parties). See also Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(h) (jury instructions to be served on opposing counsel 5 days before final case management conference).

For full discussion of jury instructions, see chap 20.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.60 2. Required format

The California Civil Jury Instructions (CACI) "approved by the Judicial Council are the official instructions for use in the state of California," and their use "is strongly encouraged." Cal Rules of Ct 2.1050(e).

California Rules of Court 2.1055 contains specific instructions for the form and format of proposed jury instructions. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1055(b)-(d). These revisions prohibit local court forms or rules from requiring that jury instructions be submitted in any manner other than that set out in Rule 2.1055. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1055(e).

Counsel must submit all jury instructions, whether previously approved by the court (e.g., CACI instructions) or specially prepared by counsel, to the court in the format required in Cal Rules of Ct 2.1055(b)-(d).

For instructions based on forms not previously approved by the court, counsel must include at the bottom of each proposed instruction a citation of authorities, if any, supporting the statement of law in the instruction (Cal Rules of Ct 2.1055(d)). The instructions must be numbered consecutively, but not be bound firmly together. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1055(b). The court may refuse to give proposed instructions, except those required by law, and may indicate on the record the reason for any refusal. See Judicial Council, Jury Instructions: Format for Proposed Instructions (Nov. 17, 2003). Although the judge is not required to endorse on the proposed instruction the reason for refusing the instruction (see Cal Rules of Ct 2.1055; §20.29), to ensure that the appellate record is accurate and complete, counsel should monitor the disposition of proposed instructions and ask the court to indicate on the record or in writing the reason for refusing any jury instruction.

PRACTICE TIP: Have copies of the instructions that do not include title, citations to authorities, or the identity of the party requesting the instruction because the court is required to give the jury copies if the jury requests them. CCP §612.5.

For detailed discussion of jury instructions and samples, see chap 20.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.61 H. Verdict, special interrogatories, and statement of decision

Trial counsel should prepare the form of verdict before trial. If the jury will make special findings, written questions of fact should also be submitted on those issues. These "special interrogatories" must be delivered to the trial judge and served on opposing counsel in proper form for submission to the jury before the commencement of argument. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1580. On verdicts generally, see chap 22.

In bench trials, it is good practice to draft a proposed statement of decision before trial. See CCP §632; Cal Rules of Ct 2.1590. If it is prepared in conjunction with the issue outline, the statement will help to establish the facts to be proved under each legal theory. On statement of decision generally, see §§24.43-24.50.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/3 Organizing Trial Materials/ V. FINAL PREPARATION/§3.62 A. Documents and demonstrative evidence

V. FINAL PREPARATION

§3.62 A. Documents and demonstrative evidence

Counsel should check all exhibits to ensure that the documents to be offered at trial will be available in their proper order. It is particularly important that necessary original documents will be available. On admissibility requirements of documents, see §§13.64-13.84.

Demonstrative evidence, such as charts, diagrams, maps, photographs, and enlargements, should be reviewed for accuracy, and if an expert witness is involved, shown to him or her before the trial. Counsel should make sure that necessary equipment, such as overhead projectors, video monitors, easels with paper and pens, and chalk boards with chalk are readily available. If the courtroom is unfamiliar, counsel should visit it before trial and plan the location of demonstrative aids where they will be visible to the witness, opposing counsel, the judge, and the jury. For detailed discussion of exhibits, see chap 13.

PRACTICE TIP: If any unusual demonstrative aids will be used, check with the court about any restrictions. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.59 (restricting inherently dangerous or cumbersome items as exhibits). If an enlargement of a document will be used, the court may prefer that it be marked for display and a standard size offered into evidence.

§3.63 B. Computers and audio-visual equipment

Arrangements must be made for the presentation of any evidence requiring computers or audio-visual equipment, as in a video recorded deposition. The equipment, which may include several monitors, should be placed so that everyone can see it. Before trial, arrangements should also be made to ascertain whether any special electrical requirements or accessories are needed to run the equipment in question. See §§13.107-13.108.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/3 Organizing Trial Materials/§3.64 C. Prepare witnesses and schedule confirmation

§3.64 C. Prepare witnesses and schedule confirmation

Counsel should confirm that all witnesses have been served with subpoenas and, if applicable, subpoenas duces tecum. See §3.55. If any witness has a scheduling conflict, the court should be so informed on the first day of trial. That witness may then be placed "on call" in accordance with CCP §1985.1. See §§4.20, 4.58.

Counsel should schedule pretrial meetings with friendly witnesses to prepare them to testify. See §5.22. Counsel should also meet with the client or the client's representative to discuss courtroom demeanor and, if the client will testify, the client's testimony. See §§5.32-5.43.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/3 Organizing Trial Materials/§3.65 D. Codes, texts, and authorities to bring to court

§3.65 D. Codes, texts, and authorities to bring to court

On the day of trial, it will be helpful to have arranged to have access in court to the Evidence Code, Code of Civil Procedure, relevant forms of California Civil Jury Instructions approved by the Judicial Council (CACI), and other codes, texts, or authorities that may be used at trial. If an expert witness will rely on or could be impeached with a treatise, that treatise should be at hand in the courtroom.

© The Regents of the University of California

§3.66 E. Ask clerk to mark and number documents

When a substantial number of documents are involved, trial counsel should ask the court clerk to mark them for identification before using them at trial. Premarking the exhibits ensures that the jury will not be bored or annoyed while voluminous exhibits are being marked, and it enhances the flow of the examination by eliminating the cumbersome process of marking the exhibits and recording the information on counsel's exhibit record.

Some courts request that all documents be marked for identification before trial. See Los Angeles Ct R 8.60. It is good practice for counsel to present all exhibits, except those anticipated in good faith for use for impeachment or tactical surprise, to the clerk for marking before the first witness is sworn.

PRACTICE TIP: Ascertain whether the trial court uses a uniform numbering system. Some courts have a system for marking exhibits. See Los Angeles Ct R 8.62. In a case with only two parties and no more than 25 exhibits, some courts allow the plaintiff's exhibits to be marked numerically and defendant's exhibits marked alphabetically.

VI. SAMPLE FORMS

§3.67 A. Issue outline

A portion of a plaintiff's issue outline illustrates one cause of action based on fraud. To find the elements for that cause of action, see, e.g., 5 Witkin, Summary of California Law, Torts, §§676-718 (10th ed 2005). The cause of action (I) and the elements (A-E) are the main issues, and the other issues to be proved at trial become the subissues of the issue outline. Each element or issue should be followed by the facts and the evidence proving those facts.

§4.1 I. SCOPE OF CHAPTER

This chapter discusses the procedures that can be used for producing testimony and evidence at trial, including:

- Compelling the attendance of witnesses at trial by subpoena and using a subpoena duces tecum commanding witnesses to produce documents and other evidence at their court appearance (CCP §1985; see §§4.6-4.20);
- Subpoenaing documents governed by additional procedures because they are defined as "the personal records of a consumer" (CCP §1985.3; see §§4.21-4.23);
- Subpoenaing the production of business documents by a custodian of records with or without a person also appearing to testify (CCP §1987.3; see §§4.24-4.28);
- Serving a notice to attend, or a notice to attend and produce evidence, on parties or party-related witnesses (e.g., officers, agents) or persons for whose immediate benefit the action or proceeding is prosecuted or defended (CCP §1987(b); see §§4.36-4.39).

The procedures for objecting to a subpoena or notice, including motions to quash, are discussed in §§4.45-4.51.

Counsel's enforcement options, including civil penalties and contempt proceedings after a witness disobeys a subpoena or notice to attend, are covered in §§4.52-4.54.

On costs and witness fees, see §§4.40-4.44.

Forms are in §§4.55-4.73.

II. SUMMARY OF PROCEDURES

§4.2 A. Subpoena of nonparty witnesses

The main process used to compel attendance of a nonparty witness at trial is a civil subpoena. A subpoena is an order directing a person to attend at a particular time and place to testify. CCP §1985. The Judicial Council form of subpoena that must be used appears in §4.55.

A subpoena duces tecum requires a person to appear and bring specified evidence. CCP §1985. A subpoena duces tecum is the appropriate method for obtaining the production at trial of any books, documents, or other things under the control of a nonparty witness who is not a party of record. See mandatory Judicial Council form in §4.55A. An affidavit or declaration describing the documents and things to be produced must accompany a subpoena duces tecum. See CCP §1985(b). The declaration that appears on the back of the Judicial Council form of subpoena duces tecum may be filled out, or a separate affidavit or declaration may be attached to the subpoena duces tecum form. See §§4.7-4.13.

A subpoena is not necessary to compel a party's attendance (or a party's attendance and production of documents). Written notice is sufficient for a party, a person for whose immediate benefit the action is prosecuted or defended, or an officer, a director, or a managing agent of any such party or person. See §4.36.

NOTE: Evidence may be produced in response to a subpoena duces tecum without the need for a witness to appear when the requirements of Evid C §§1560-1561 are satisfied. CCP §1987.3. See §§4.24-4.28.

For additional requirements that must be met when the materials to be produced are "the personal records of a consumer" maintained by the witness, see §§4.21-4.23. On notice procedures for compelling a party to produce evidence, see §§4.36-4.38.

§4.3 1. Advantages of subpoenaing friendly witnesses

Most experienced trial lawyers subpoena all witnesses, even friendly witnesses whom they intend to call at trial, including their own experts and other "friendly" nonparty witnesses. To do otherwise is too risky, both in terms of obtaining a continuance from the court if a key witness fails to appear and of subjecting themselves to malpractice exposure if forced to trial without testimony essential to the prosecution or defense of the case.

When subpoenaing witnesses for trial, some attorneys subpoena all witnesses for the same time and place (e.g., to Department 1 at 9 a.m. on the first day of trial) and include a letter confirming the subpoena's instructions that, under CCP §1985.1, different arrangements may be made if requested. The letter explains that the only alternative is for the witnesses to appear at the stated time and then have the court order them back the next day, a procedure that could continue until each witness actually testifies. Attorneys who use this method find that witnesses understand the subpoena process better and are much more willing to agree to a schedule of notification and appearance. For sample letter, see §4.20.

Advantages of using the subpoena process include:

- A subpoena can impress a witness with the importance of the proceeding. If a subpoenaed witness nonetheless fails to appear due to illness, emergency, inadvertence, or mistake, a ground may exist for obtaining a trial continuance. See §6.9.
- Without a subpoena, the court will be less inclined to grant a continuance or even a brief recess when an important witness does not appear at the agreed time and place. Counsel should be cautious about reaching an agreement with a witness to testify, or relying on a stipulation with counsel for a witness to appear, without first serving a subpoena. For form of agreement for witness to appear "on call" after subpoena is served, see §4.58.
- A subpoena makes it more difficult for the opposing party to suggest bias by eliciting an admission that the witness appeared voluntarily and without a subpoena. This consideration may be particularly important with regard to expert and nonparty witnesses.
- Service of the subpoena entitles the witness to reimbursement for witness fees and mileage. See §4.41. It can also be shown to an employer to justify paid time off when the witness appears at the trial, thus helping to mitigate the inconvenience and expense associated with giving testimony.
- Without a formal subpoena, counsel cannot enforce contempt proceedings against a witness who has failed to appear at the agreed time and place. Such an agreement, however, is enforceable after a subpoena has been served. See §4.20. On contempt proceedings, see §4.52.

CAUTION: Be sure that the subpoena process does not antagonize an otherwise friendly witness. Telephone the witness ahead of time (or have someone in your office coordinate these calls) to explain that a subpoena will be issued and ask where and when the subpoena can be conveniently served. This initial telephone call is also a good opportunity to offer, after the subpoena is served, to follow up with an on-call agreement for the witness to appear at the trial when needed. See §4.20.

§4.4 2. When to use subpoena for parties: Time periods for notice expired

Although it is not necessary to subpoena parties, they may be subpoenaed. In a situation in which the time periods for noticing a party's attendance or production of evidence at trial have already expired, a subpoena (or subpoena duces tecum) may be the best and only method for compelling such testimony or production unless a court order shortening the time for notice can be obtained. See CCP §1987(b)-(c) (notice must be served at least 10 days before required appearance; at least 20 days if books, documents, or other things are requested). See §4.37.

No specific time periods govern when a subpoena should be served. Service of a subpoena must simply allow the person "a reasonable time" for preparation and travel to the place of attendance. CCP §1987(a). If surprise developments occur on the eve of trial or during the trial itself, use a subpoena to compel attendance or production of evidence.

When the opposing party refuses to stipulate or otherwise cooperate, and time is short, counsel should use the subpoena process to compel attendance of, or production of evidence from, a party, a person benefiting from the action, or an officer, a director, or a managing agent of any such party or person. See §4.6.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/4 Compelling Attendance and Production of Evidence/§4.5 B. Notice to parties, persons 'benefiting' from action, or other 'related' witnesses

§4.5 B. Notice to parties, persons "benefiting" from action, or other "related" witnesses

Although the subpoena power may be invoked to require the attendance of any witness, it need not be used for (CCP §1987(b)):

- A party to the action or proceeding;
- A person for whose immediate benefit the action or proceeding is being prosecuted or defended; or
- An officer, a director, or a managing agent of any such party or person.

A written notice is sufficient to compel the appearance of a party, a person "benefiting" from the action, or an officer, a director, or a managing agent of any such party or person. CCP §1987(b). Such notice gives the noticing party the same rights concerning compliance and sanctions as if a subpoena had been served. CCP §1987(b).

Procedures and tactical considerations on use of the notice to attend, and the notice to attend and produce, are discussed in §§4.36-4.39.

III. SUBPOENA PROCEDURES

§4.6 A. Issuing subpoena or subpoena duces tecum

The Judicial Council has adopted mandatory forms for civil subpoenas. See Cal Rules of Ct 1.30-1.44 and 2.131-2.134. The form of subpoena compelling a witness's attendance only is reproduced in §4.55. If the witness's attendance as well as the production of books, documents, or things in the possession or control of a witness is needed, the subpoena duces tecum form reproduced in §4.55A must be used. For step-by-step directions on completing the subpoena forms, see Handling Subpoenas (Cal CEB Action Guide May 2009).

Blank civil subpoena forms may be obtained from the court clerk for a small fee, or counsel may photocopy or print out the form from p 1-21 of the current California Judicial Council Forms Manual (Cal CEB 1981), which provides the forms both in print and electronic formats.

After the form is filled in, the usual practice is for an attorney of record in the pending action to sign and issue a subpoena or a subpoena duces tecum requiring attendance and/or production of evidence at the trial. CCP §1985(c). Like all process, a subpoena is issued in the name of "The People of the State of California." Govt C §100. The subpoena must be served on the witness personally. See §4.15.

NOTE: A less convenient statutory procedure, which is rarely used for a represented party but which a person appearing in propria persona can follow, is to obtain a civil subpoena form from the court and have the clerk or a judge issue it. The clerk or judge must issue a subpoena or a subpoena duces tecum signed and sealed, but otherwise blank, to a party requesting it. CCP §1985(c). See McLeod v Board of Pension Comm'rs (1970) 14 CA3d 23, 28, 94 CR 58 (issuance of ordinary subpoena is statutory right; clerk or judge has no discretion to refuse to issue it, even if subpoena is then subject to motion to quash).

When a county recorder is using a microfilm system for recording and a witness is subpoenaed to present a record, the witness is deemed to have complied with the subpoena if the witness produces a certified copy. CCP §1985(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/4 Compelling Attendance and Production of Evidence/§4.7 B. Preparing affidavit or declaration in support of subpoena duces tecum

§4.7 B. Preparing affidavit or declaration in support of subpoena duces tecum

An affidavit must accompany a subpoena duces tecum requesting that the witness appear and produce evidence. CCP §1985(b). The declaration that appears on the back of the Judicial Council form of subpoena duces tecum may be filled out (see §4.55A), or a separate affidavit or declaration may be attached (see §4.56).

If preparing an attachment to the subpoena duces tecum form, a declaration is usually more convenient and commonly used in place of the affidavit mentioned in CCP §1985. See CCP §2015.5 (declaration under penalty of perjury may substitute for affidavit before officer authorized to administer oaths). For form of declaration supporting civil subpoena duces tecum (trial), see §4.56.

An attorney rather than the party usually prepares and signs the supporting declaration because of the legal requirements involved, e.g., showing the requested items' "materiality" to the issues and "good cause" for their production. See CCP §1985(b).

PRACTICE TIP: If the discovery cutoff has not passed (see §2.4), counsel who lacks the necessary information to prepare a sufficient declaration or affidavit to accompany the trial subpoena should seek that information through the use of written interrogatories and depositions. See Flora Crane Serv. v Superior Court (1965) 234 CA2d 767, 790, 45 CR 79.

A subpoena duces tecum may be served on any person (and must be served to compel production of evidence from a nonparty). See discussion in §§4.2-4.4. If the witness is a party, however, the notice procedure for requesting production of evidence is much simpler and does not require a supporting affidavit or declaration. See §4.38.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.8 1. Legal requirements

The declaration printed on the back of the Judicial Council form of subpoena duces tecum includes space for filling out the information required by the statute (see CCP §1985(b)), and specifies that additional material may be continued on numbered attachments. See form in §4.55A. A separate affidavit or declaration, if drafted to accompany the subpoena duces tecum form, must contain this same information. See form in §4.56.

Either the declaration on the back of the form or an attached document prepared in support of the subpoena duces tecum must (CCP §1985(b)):

- Show good cause for the production of the matters or things described (see §4.9);
- Specify the exact matters or things to be produced (see §4.10);
- Set forth in full detail the materiality of those matters or things to the issues in the case (see §4.11);
- State that the matters or things are in the witness's possession or control (see §4.12); and
- Meet admissible evidence standard (e.g., state personally known facts, avoid conclusions or hearsay; see §4.13).

Failure to meet all the elements required by CCP §1985(b) makes an affidavit or declaration in support of a subpoena duces tecum fatally defective. CCP §1985; Johnson v Superior Court (1968) 258 CA2d 829, 835, 66 CR 134.

Rationale: The purpose of these requirements is to protect constitutional guaranties, e.g., the United States Constitution's guaranty against unreasonable search and seizure under the Fourth Amendment. See McClatchy Newspapers v Superior Court (1945) 26 C2d 386, 396, 159 P2d 944; Pacific Lighting Leasing Co. v Superior Court (1976) 60 CA3d 552, 564, 131 CR 559; People ex rel Dep't of Pub. Works v Younger (1970) 5 CA3d 575, 580, 86 CR 237.

§4.9 a. Show good cause

Good cause must be shown for the production of the subpoenaed items. CCP §1985(b). This means that the affidavit or declaration in support of the subpoena duces tecum must set forth facts showing that production from the witness is justified. See Beesley v Superior Court (1962) 58 C2d 205, 23 CR 390.

Unlike matters subject to discovery (see CCP §2017.010), the proof needed to support a civil trial subpoena requires more than mere relevance to the subject matter of the case. A party may not be able to show good cause if the documents to be produced can be obtained elsewhere. See People ex rel Dep't of Pub. Works v Younger (1970) 5 CA3d 575, 580, 86 CR 237 (in eminent domain trial, defendant requested state appraiser's report of condemned property, declaring information unavailable from any other source; good cause not shown, because property could have been inspected by another appraiser who could give written report).

Compare: An affidavit or a declaration showing good cause for production of documents need not accompany discovery subpoenas under CCP §2020.410(c). See CCP §§2020.410(c), 2020.510(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.10 b. Specify exact matters to be produced

The affidavit or declaration in support of a subpoena duces tecum must describe the exact matters or things that the witness is directed to produce at trial. CCP §1985(b). The specificity requirement of CCP §1985(b) cannot be met when documents are only generally described.

EXAMPLE 1: An affidavit requesting "all correspondence, records and documents" is too broad to support a trial subpoena. Pacific Auto. Ins. Co. v Superior Court (1969) 273 CA2d 61, 70, 77 CR 836 (all documents concerned an accident investigation).

EXAMPLE 2: Court quashed doctor's subpoena requesting burdensome blanket search of Board of Medical Examiners records on ground that declaration was defective because description did not comply with specificity requirement statute. Grannis v Board of Med. Exam'rs (1971) 19 CA3d 551, 564, 96 CR 863.

The contents of documents need not be specifically stated, however, when some method of identifying the requested items is used. Pacific Solvents Co. v Superior Court (1948) 88 CA2d 953, 954, 199 P2d 740 (not necessary to list contents of several requested government orders identified by numbers and effective dates).

In certain situations, the courts have validated affidavits and declarations containing general descriptions, e.g., when a designation of documents is as specific as the circumstances permit, reasonably accurate, and understandable to the adverse party. See McClatchy Newspapers v Superior Court (1945) 26 C2d 386, 397, 159 P2d 944; Pelton Motors, Inc. v Superior Court (1953) 120 CA2d 565, 569, 261 P2d 275. The requirement of specificity may be relaxed when the parties (e.g., partners, joint venturers, spouses, trustees) have a common or special interest in the documents to be produced. Strauss v Superior Court (1950) 36 C2d 396, 403, 224 P2d 726 (court upheld trust beneficiary's subpoena duces tecum directed to trustee seeking production of all books, documents, and records relating to trust).

Compare: Discovery subpoenas under CCP §2020.410(a) may designate records to be produced either by specifically describing each individual item or by merely "reasonably particularizing" each category of item. A discovery subpoena does not require an accompanying affidavit or declaration. See §4.9.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.11 c. Describe materiality of requested items to case issues

The supporting declaration or affidavit must set forth "in full detail" the materiality of the requested documents to the issues in the case. CCP §1985(b). The materiality requirement justifying a subpoena duces tecum cannot be met when the affidavit merely relies on the legal conclusion, stated in general terms, that the desired documents are relevant and material. People ex rel Dep't of Pub. Works v Younger (1970) 5 CA3d 575, 580, 86 CR 237. On stating facts and avoiding legal conclusions in affidavit or declaration, see §4.13.

Typically, the subpoenaing party establishes materiality by relating the requested documents to the issues raised by the pleadings or the issues that will be tried in the case.

EXAMPLE: Counsel can refer in the declaration to portions of the pleadings to which the documents requested pertain. See American Fed'n of Musicians v Superior Court (1957) 150 CA2d 165, 170, 309 P2d 874 (proper for court to consider allegations of complaint as well as affidavit in determining materiality of records sought).

A mere statement on information and belief that the defendant possessed certain documents that the plaintiff believed were necessary to prove the allegations in the complaint, however, was held to be insufficient. See Johnson v Superior Court (1968) 258 CA2d 829, 837, 66 CR 134. Similarly, mere suspicion that books and papers contain material evidence does not warrant an order for production. Austin v Turrentine (1939) 30 CA2d 750, 761, 87 P2d 72.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/4 Compelling Attendance and Production of Evidence/§4.12 d. State that witness has possession or control of requested items

§4.12 d. State that witness has possession or control of requested items

An affidavit or a declaration in support of a subpoena duces tecum must state that the witness has possession or control of the desired matters or things. CCP §1985(b).

An affidavit alleging that the witness had custody of the named documents and objects on information and belief is insufficient. See Lewis v Superior Court (1953) 118 CA2d 770, 773, 258 P2d 1084. On requirement of personal knowledge, see §4.13.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.13 e. Admissible evidence standard: State personally known facts

Like all declarations, a declaration in support of a subpoena duces tecum should set out admissible evidence. The declarant should state probative facts on which the ultimate fact depends, rather than conclusions, opinions, or ultimate facts. Johnson v Superior Court (1968) 258 CA2d 829, 66 CR 134. See Pacific Auto. Ins. Co. v Superior Court (1969) 273 CA2d 61, 67, 77 CR 836 (legal conclusions not adequate to show materiality or good cause); Shell Oil Co. v Superior Court (1930) 109 CA 75, 292 P 531 (mandamus granted to restrain enforcement of order permitting inspection when no facts set forth).

The existence of conclusions in a declaration or an affidavit does not invalidate it, however, when the conclusions are supported by sufficient allegations of evidentiary fact. See Vartanian v Croll (1953) 117 CA2d 639, 648, 256 P2d 1022 (motion concerning CCP §473).

The declaration should be made on personal knowledge rather than on information and belief, i.e., the declarant would be able to testify to the truth of the matters declared if called as a witness. A supporting declaration or affidavit based on information or belief, or hearsay, is insufficient. Procter & Gamble Mfg. Co. v Superior Court (1954) 124 CA2d 157, 162, 268 P2d 199. See Lantz v State Bar (1931) 212 C 213, 221, 298 P 497 (unless it is affirmatively stated or can fairly be inferred to the contrary, statements in declarations are presumed to be based on personal knowledge).

If the ultimate fact to be proved cannot be directly averred, however, the court may allow statements on information and belief. City of Santa Cruz v Municipal Court (1989) 49 C3d 74, 88, 260 CR 520. See Pacific Air Lines, Inc. v Superior Court (1965) 231 CA2d 591, 42 CR 70 (court upheld affidavit alleging party's lack of residence for a change of venue on information and belief absent controverting facts).

Facts may be alleged on information and belief if the affidavit also specifies facts in support of that information and belief. Grannis v Board of Med. Exam'rs (1971) 19 CA3d 551, 564, 96 CR 863 (declaration that sets forth facts in support of said information and belief is sufficient). Allegations on information and belief may also be upheld when adverse parties (e.g., partners, joint venturers, spouses, trustees) have a common interest in the documents to be produced. See Union Trust Co. v Superior Court (1938) 11 C2d 449, 460, 81 P2d 150 (order for inspection of books and records).

§4.14 2. Retain original affidavit or declaration until final judgment

The party who caused a subpoena duces tecum to be served must retain the original affidavit or declaration until final judgment in the action. CCP §1987.5.

The affidavit or declaration should not be filed with the court unless a party or witness affected by the subpoena makes a reasonable request that the original be filed (e.g., the affidavit or declaration becomes the subject of a dispute by a party challenging its legal sufficiency). See CCP §1987.5. On legal requirements, see §§4.7-4.13.

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Serving subpoena or subpoena duces tecum

§4.15 1. Personal service required

Service of a subpoena that compels a witness to testify at trial is normally made by delivering "a copy, or a ticket containing its substance, to the witness personally." CCP §1987(a). See In re Abrams (1980) 108 CA3d 685, 166 CR 749 (improper to serve subpoena on attorney for nonparty witness). The original subpoena need not be shown to the witness. CCP §1987(a). On cost of serving subpoena, see §4.40.

A subpoena duces tecum that requires the witness to bring specified documents when appearing at the trial is served in the same manner as a subpoena. The affidavit or declaration must be served at the same time as the subpoena duces tecum is served. CCP §1985(b).

Exceptions: Personal service is not necessary when a custodian of records is subpoenaed, if the subpoenaing party is interested in the production of documents only and does not desire the personal appearance of the organization's custodian of records or other qualified witness. See §§4.24-4.28. For requirements when the desired documents are "records of a consumer," see §§4.21-4.23.

On alternative procedures that make it unnecessary to serve subpoenas on certain government employees personally (e.g., firefighters, probation officers), copies of which may be left with an immediate superior at the public entity's office, see Govt C §68097.1. For discussion, see §4.29.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.16 2. Who may serve subpoena

Although service of a subpoena may be made by any person (CCP §1987(a)), someone who is credible and not connected with the litigation (e.g., the attorney's investigator or a hired process server) should serve the subpoena to discourage a claim that service was not duly made.

Counsel may ask a sheriff, marshal, or constable to effect service. See Govt C §§26608, 26660, 71265. On cost of service of subpoena by sheriff or other peace officer, see §4.40.

Using a registered process server has one advantage over other methods. A registered process server's "return" (i.e., proof of service) establishes a presumption of the facts stated in the return. Evid C §647. A professional process server is also governed by certain statutes concerning business conduct. See Bus & P C §§22350-22360.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.17 3. Time requirements

Unlike notices to attend or notices to attend and produce, which are directed to parties, subpoenas and subpoenas duces tecum have no service deadlines. Service must be made to allow the witness "a reasonable time for preparation and travel to the place of attendance." CCP §1987(a).

As long as the "reasonable time" standard of CCP §1987(a) can be met, a subpoena or subpoena duces tecum may be served shortly before or even during trial. In contrast, the time requirement for a party who has been served a notice to attend is 10 days. CCP §1987(b). For a notice to attend and produce, the time requirement is 20 days. CCP §1987(c). If circumstances allow for these time periods to be observed, the subpoena should not be vulnerable to a challenge based on insufficient time to prepare and travel. Cooperative nonparty witnesses may be willing to produce documents much more quickly. When appropriate, counsel should argue that much shorter time periods are "reasonable" under the circumstances. On serving a subpoena on parties after time for notice has expired, see §4.4.

Exception: When a subpoena duces tecum requests the "personal records of a consumer" but not the testimony of the witness producing them, time periods designed to ensure the consumer an opportunity to challenge the subpoena must be observed. See §4.22. Strict time requirements also exist when serving a subpoena on some public officers. See, e.g., Govt C §68097.3 (subpoena for appearance of highway patrol member must be served at least 5 days before date of required attendance). See §4.29.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.18 4. Subpoena power limited to California "residents"

A person served with a trial subpoena must attend as a witness before any court, judge, justice, or other officer, if the witness is a resident within the state at the time of service. CCP §1989. A "resident" need only live in the state when served, not claim it as his or her permanent home. See In re Morelli (1970) 11 CA3d 819, 831, 91 CR 72, overruled on other grounds in Cedars-Sinai Imaging Med. Group v Superior Court (2000) 83 CA4th 1281, 1287 n6, 100 CR2d 320 ("[t]he subpoena section envisages nothing more than an abode … which gives the 'resident' a sojourning connection with the area").

The statute does not envision the subpoena of "nonresidents" who happen to be physically present in California at the time of service. See CCP §1989. There is no known case on point, and enforcement of a subpoena after a nonresident left California would of course be problematic. By analogy to cases upholding service of summons, however, counsel can argue that there are no constitutional prohibitions against asserting personal jurisdiction over nonresidents served with a subpoena when they are present in the state. See Burnham v Superior Court (1990) 495 US 604, 109 L Ed 2d 631, 110 S Ct 2105 (service of summons on nonresident who was in state at time of service held valid).

The territorial reach of a trial subpoena does not extend beyond the borders of California. If an important witness resides outside California, that person's deposition should be taken well before trial. Although attendance at a trial in California cannot be compelled, witnesses may be subpoenaed to out-of-state depositions under the laws of other states and the deposition testimony later introduced at trial. See CCP §§2025.620, 2026.010.

PRACTICE TIP: Because deposition transcripts read to the jury are a poor substitute for the testimony of a "live witness," consider videotaping the out-of-state deposition. Also consider obtaining the deponent's agreement to testify voluntarily at the trial, even though there is no statutory means for compelling that testimony. If the witness refuses to appear, or agrees to do so but does not show up, the videotaped deposition can be used. On taking videotaped depositions and compelling depositions in other states, see California Civil Discovery Practice, chaps 5, 12 (4th ed Cal CEB 2006).

Exception: If personal attendance is not requested, a nonresident custodian of records may be required to produce documents under a subpoena duces tecum. See CCP §1987.3. To enforce compliance, however, the custodian would probably have to be an employee of a business subject to California jurisdiction. On subpoenaing documents from a custodian of records, see §4.24.

Compare: A party can be compelled by notice to produce records or other items in its possession or control even if that evidence is located outside California, as long as it is in the party's possession or control. On notice procedures, see §§4.36-4.38.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.19 D. Proof of service; filing optional

After service, the person serving the subpoena or subpoena duces tecum completes and signs the proof of service form on the reverse side of the official form of subpoena. See §4.55. The form includes the date and time of service, whether fees were demanded, and what fees, if any, were paid.

Counsel may file the original subpoena and proof of service with the court clerk before the date of the witness's appearance, but there is no requirement to do so.

§4.20 E. Agreement to appear after subpoena served

A person who has been subpoenaed may enter into an agreement with the party who served the subpoena to appear at a time other than that specified in the subpoena or on any agreed-on notice. CCP §1985.1. See also Govt C §68097.9 (applying to a peace officer of the Department of the California Highway Patrol, sheriff, deputy sheriff, marshal, deputy marshal, fireman, or city policeman).

Failure to appear after such an agreement has been made may be punished as contempt by the court issuing the subpoena. CCP §1985.1. See §4.52.

PRACTICE TIP: Any person having personal knowledge of the facts establishing or disproving such an agreement after a subpoena has been served (and after the witness's failure to appear) may prove them by an affidavit. CCP §1985.1. To avoid having to go to this effort, obtain the agreement in writing signed by the person subpoenaed. See sample form in §4.58.

IV. SUBPOENAING PARTICULAR WITNESSES OR DOCUMENTS

§4.21 A. Personal records of consumer

Certain procedures must be followed when serving a subpoena duces tecum that requires a witness to produce personal records of a consumer. See CCP §1985.3. These procedures are meant to protect a consumer's privacy by giving notice that specified personal records have been subpoenaed so that the consumer has an opportunity to object or move to quash the proposed subpoena. Sasson v Katash (1983) 146 CA3d 119, 194 CR 46.

NOTE: Code of Civil Procedure §1985.3 does not apply to proceedings conducted under specified provisions of the Labor Code. See CCP §1985.3(j). State and local agencies and certain public entities involved in adjudicative proceedings are also exempt from the requirements of CCP §1985.3. If the consumer is the subpoenaing party and is the only subject of the subpoenaed records, notice and delivery of the other documents specified in CCP §1985.6(b) to the consumer are not required. CCP §1985.6(k). If not, see §4.22 for what must be served on the consumer and when service is required.

Under CCP §1985.3(a), "consumer," "personal records," "witness," "subpoenaing party," and "deposition officer" are specifically defined:

- A "consumer" is any individual, partnership of five or fewer persons, association, or trust that has transacted business with a witness who maintains the consumer's personal records that have been subpoenaed for a civil action or proceeding.
- "Personal records" means the original or any copy of any books, documents, other writings, or electronic data that are maintained by a witness.
- A "witness" is any of the persons or institutions listed in CCP §1985.3(a)(1) (e.g., physician, dentist, state or national bank, insurance company, attorney, psychotherapist, school).
- A "subpoenaing party" is the person who caused the subpoena duces tecum to be issued or served in a civil action. This term does not include state and local agencies under Govt C §7465 or any entity provided for under Cal Const art VI in any proceeding of that entity under Bus & P C §6000.
- A "deposition officer" is a person who meets the qualifications specified in CCP §2020.420.

For more information on these terms, see CCP §1985.3(a).

The procedures of CCP §1985.3 must be followed with regard to requests for "personal records" maintained by state and local agencies that file personnel, medical, and other information. In this situation, "witness" means a government agency, and "consumer" means an employee of the agency or any other natural person. CCP §1985.4.

The procedures of CCP §1985.3 do not apply to requests for records that do not identify any particular consumer and that require a custodian of records to delete all information that would in any way identify a consumer whose records are to be produced. CCP §1985.3(i).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/4 Compelling Attendance and Production of Evidence/§4.22 1. Timing and service; consumer notice

§4.22 1. Timing and service; consumer notice

Many special rules govern notice to the consumer of the subpoena of personal records and under what circumstances the witness can and cannot produce those records to the subpoenaing party, as follows:

Earlier production date by court order. A subpoenaing party is entitled on a showing of good cause (provided the rights of witnesses and consumers are preserved) to obtain an order (a) shortening time for service of a subpoena duces tecum or (b) waiving other requirements of CCP §1985.3(b) if the subpoenaing party shows due diligence. CCP §1985.3(h).

What must be served on consumer [witness]; timing. The statute requires that at least 10 days before the date of production, and at least 5 days before the subpoena duces tecum is served on the witness (plus extra days if service is by mail; see CCP §1013), copies of the following items must be served on the consumer (CCP §1985.3(b)):

- The subpoena duces tecum to the witness for the production of the consumer's records (see §4.6);
- The supporting affidavit or declaration, which may be filled out on the back of the subpoena form, or attached to the form as a separate document (see §4.7);
- The notice to the consumer (see form in §4.59 and discussion below); and
- Proof of service (attesting that the above items were served on the consumer), which will be served on the witness in accordance with CCP §1985.3(c)(1). See discussion below.

NOTE: Because the witness must be served at least 15 days before the date of production, as long as this is at least 20 days after issuance of the subpoena (see CCP §§1985.3(d), CCP §2020.410(c)), and the consumer must be served with the above items at least 5 days before the witness, serve the consumer at least 20 days before the production date (plus extra days if service is by mail).

How to serve consumer. Under CCP §1985.3(b)(1), the subpoena duces tecum with supporting declaration, notice to consumer, and proof of service to be served on the witness must be served on the consumer personally, at the consumer's last-known address, or in accordance with CCP §§1010-1020 (service by mail, facsimile, or express or other overnight delivery). If the consumer is a party, the items must be served on the consumer's attorney of record. CCP §1985.3(b)(1).

Notice to consumer. The Judicial Council has approved for mandatory use a notice to consumer (or employee) and objection. See §4.59. This form, printed in a typeface designed to call attention to the notice, is in compliance with the requirements of CCP §1985.3(e), and indicates that

- Records about the consumer are being sought from the witness named on the attached subpoena;
- If the consumer objects to the witness's furnishing the records to the party seeking the records, the consumer must file papers with the court within 10 days after receiving the subpoena; and
- If the party who is seeking the records will not agree in writing to cancel or limit the subpoena, an attorney should be consulted about the consumer's interest in protecting the right of privacy.

When and what must be served on witness. Before the production of the records, the subpoenaing party must (CCP §1985.3(c)):

- Serve or cause to be served on the witness proof that the consumer was served, personally or by mail, with copies of the subpoena duces tecum, supporting affidavit, and notice of privacy rights (see form in §4.60); or
- Furnish the witness a written authorization, signed by the consumer or the consumer's attorney of record, to release the records.

The witness may assume that any attorney signing the authorization acted with the consumer's consent, and that any objection to the release of records is waived. CCP §1985.3(c)(2). The subpoenaing party's failure to comply with the procedures of CCP §1985.3 is sufficient basis for the witness to refuse to produce the personal records requested. CCP §1985.3(k).

The subpoena must command compliance on a date that is no earlier than 20 days after the issuance, or 15 days after the service, of the subpoena, whichever is later. CCP §1985.3(d).

A subpoena duces tecum for personal records maintained by a telephone corporation that is a public utility is not valid or effective unless it includes a consent to release signed by the consumer whose records are requested. CCP §1985.3(f).

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.23 2. Consumer's objections

The rules regarding objecting to a subpoena duces tecum vary depending on whether the consumer is a party of the civil action in which the subpoena duces tecum is served. If the consumer is a party to the action, the consumer may make a motion under CCP §1987.1(b)(3) to quash or modify the subpoena duces tecum or direct compliance with it, on such terms and conditions as the court declares, including protective orders. Notice of the motion to quash or modify must be given to the witness or deposition officer at least 5 days before the production date. CCP §1985.3(g).

A failure to provide notice to the deposition officer does not invalidate the motion to quash or modify the subpoena duces tecum, but may be raised by the deposition officer as an affirmative defense in any action for liability for improper release of records. CCP §1985.3(g). On motions to quash or modify, see §§4.45-4.48.

If the consumer is not a party to the civil action and his or her personal records are being sought by a subpoena duces tecum, that consumer may, at any time before the date of production, serve on the subpoenaing party, the witness, and the deposition officer a written objection that cites the grounds on which production of the personal records should be prohibited. CCP §1985.3(g).

No witness or deposition officer is required to produce personal records after receipt of notice that the motion has been made, or of a written objection from a nonparty consumer, except (a) on order of the court in which the action is pending or (b) by agreement of the parties, witnesses, and consumers affected. CCP §1985.3(g).

The party requesting a consumer's personal records may bring a motion under CCP §1987.1 to enforce the subpoena within 20 days of service of the written objection. The motion must be accompanied by a declaration showing a reasonable and good faith attempt at informal resolution of the dispute between the party requesting the personal records and the consumer or the consumer's attorney. CCP §1985.3(g).

§4.23A B. Employment records

Code of Civil Procedure §1985.6 requires that certain procedures be followed when serving a subpoena duces tecum that commands a witness to produce employment records. These procedures are meant to protect an employee's privacy by giving notice that specified employment records maintained by a current or former employer have been subpoenaed so that the employee has an opportunity to object or move to quash the proposed subpoena. The mandatory Judicial Council form for giving notice to a consumer or employee that his or her personal or employment records will be subpoenaed is reproduced in §4.59.

If the employee is the subpoenaing party and is the only subject of the subpoenaed records, however, notice and delivery of the other documents specified in CCP §1985.6(b) to the employee are not required. CCP §1985.6(k). If not, see §4.22 for what must be served and when service is required (discussing parallel situation of service on the consumer).

NOTE: The procedures in CCP §1985.6 for subpoenaing employment records are virtually identical to those in CCP §1985.3 for subpoenaing consumer records. See CCP §1985.6 and parallel discussion in §§4.21-4.27.

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Custodian of records

§4.24 1. Generally

Special rules apply when a subpoena duces tecum is served on a custodian of records or other qualified witness of a business that is neither a party to the action nor the place where any cause of action is alleged to have arisen. See CCP §1987.3; Evid C §§1560-1567.

PRACTICE TIP: When serving a subpoena duces tecum on a custodian of records of corporations or government agencies, allow plenty of time for documents to be retrieved and copied. Give at least 20 days (the time specified for a notice to a party to produce records). Of course, essential documents should already have been produced during discovery, with counsel stipulating to their authenticity. For further discussion of notice to produce, see §§4.36-4.38. For form of foundational stipulation, see §13.141.

If the custodian of records is required to appear personally, service is effective if the custodian, like any other witness, is personally served and is a resident within the state at the time of service. See CCP §§1987.3, 1989. See also §4.27.

If personal attendance is not requested, the residency requirement under CCP §1989 does not apply and a nonresident custodian of records may be required to produce documents under a subpoena duces tecum. See CCP §1987.3. To enforce compliance on a nonresident custodian, however, the business employing the custodian would have to be subject to California jurisdiction through its activity in the state.

NOTE: Because CCP §1987.3 offers no alternative provisions for service by mail, service on a custodian of records who is not requested to appear must still be made personally. On using process servers to effect service of a subpoena duces tecum, see §4.16.

A subpoena duces tecum served under CCP §1987.3 and Evid C §§1560-1567 on a custodian of records residing in California can also require production of records in the custodian's control that are kept outside of California as long as the custodian's business is subject to California jurisdiction. See Coopman v Superior Court (1965) 237 CA2d 656, 47 CR 131.

Service of a subpoena duces tecum on a custodian of records residing in California of a nonparty foreign corporation, that does not transact business in California or otherwise subject itself to California's jurisdiction, does not give the court power to compel production of its business records located out of state. Volkswagenwerk Aktiengesellschaft v Superior Court (1973) 33 CA3d 503, 507, 109 CR 219 (foreign corporation's amenability to local suit does not signal automatic subjection of its internal affairs to courts of forum, because latter have no jurisdiction over persons or property outside their territory).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/4 Compelling Attendance and Production of Evidence/§4.25 2. When custodian's attendance not required

§4.25 2. When custodian's attendance not required

Records may be subpoenaed without requiring a custodian's personal appearance if certain instructions are followed. Counsel should check the correct box at 3b on the face of the Judicial Council form of subpoena duces tecum when records only are desired. See form in §4.55A.

The subpoenaed records are admissible at trial (and the exception to the hearsay rule for business records is met) if the custodian includes in an affidavit or a declaration accompanying the records that the writings are true and correct copies made in the regular course of business at or near the time of the act, condition, or event. See Evid C §§1271, 1561(a).

PRACTICE TIP: Some attorneys send a letter to the custodian of records with the subpoena duces tecum, explaining the procedures that the custodian of records must follow. They may also attach copies of Evid C §§1560-1567, which contain more detailed instructions than those that appear on the Judicial Council subpoena duces tecum form. For sample letter, see §4.57. It is also good practice to draft the affidavit or declaration that the custodian will sign to accompany the records produced. See form of declaration in §4.61.

When service is made on a custodian of records or other qualified witness of a business in an action in which the business is neither a party nor the place where any cause of action is alleged to have arisen, compliance with the subpoena duces tecum is deemed to be satisfied (provided personal appearance is not required; when required, see §4.27) if the custodian or other qualified witness:

- Within 15 days after receipt, or within the time agreed on by the subpoenaing party and the custodian or other qualified witness, delivers by mail or otherwise a true legible, and durable copy of the business records to the clerk or, to another person described in CCP §2026.010. Evid C §§1560(b)(1) and 1560(b)(3).
- Delivers with the business records an affidavit in the form prescribed by Evid C §1561. Evid C §1560. A declaration may be used in lieu of an affidavit. CCP §2015.5. See form of declaration in §4.61.
- States in the declaration that:
- The affiant is the duly authorized custodian or another qualified witness has authority to certify the records;
- The copy is a true copy of all the records described in the subpoena;
- The records were prepared by the personnel of the business in the ordinary course of business at or near the time of the act, condition, or event;
- The identity of the records; and
- A description of the mode of preparation of the records. Evid C §1561(a)(1)-(5).
- States in the declaration, when necessary, that the business does not have the requested records or has only a portion of them and delivers the declaration with the records that the business does have in one of the manners provided in Evid C §1560. Evid C §1561.
- Places "true, legible, and durable copies" of the subpoenaed records in a sealed inner envelope, with the following information clearly written on the outside: The title and number of the action, the custodian's name, and the date of the subpoena. Evid C §1560(b).
- Puts the inner envelope into a sealed outer envelope addressed and mailed to the clerk of the court, to the deposition officer, or to the officer, body, or tribunal conducting the hearing. Evid C §1560(c).

For costs of reproducing records to be paid by the subpoenaing party and procedures for resolving any disputes concerning the amount charged, see §4.28. On subpoenaing records that are also the personal records of a consumer, see §4.21.

§4.26 3. Alternative procedure when custodian's attendance not required [Deleted]

This section has been deleted because an alternative procedure for producing records without a custodian's attendance does not exist.

§4.27 4. Requesting custodian's personal attendance

When a custodian of records is a resident of the state at the time of service, personal attendance may be compelled by checking box 3a on the Judicial Council form. CCP §§1987.3, 1989; Evid C §1564. See form in §4.55A.

The mailing procedure described in §4.25 for delivering the documents may not then be used. Evid C §1560. The custodian of records, like any other witness served with a subpoena duces tecum and its supporting affidavit or declaration, must be allowed time for gathering the original documents described in the declaration and traveling to the place of the trial. For witness fees for travel and mileage, and any costs incurred in retrieving the documents, see §4.28.

Although there are no specific time requirements for service of a subpoena on a custodian of records whose personal appearance is required, counsel should allow at least 20 days. See §4.24.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.28 4. Payment of reasonable costs

The subpoenaing party may be charged with all reasonable costs incurred by the custodian of records for the production of all or any part of business records requested under the subpoena duces tecum. Evid C §1563(b).

When custodian copies records. "Reasonable costs" for producing documents include, but are not limited to (Evid C §1563(b)(1)), the following:

- Ten cents ($.10) per page for standard reproduction of documents with a page size of up to 8-1/2 by 14 inches;
- Twenty cents ($.20) per page for copying documents from microfilm;
- The actual cost of reproducing oversize documents or documents requiring special processing;
- Reasonable clerical costs for locating and making the records available to be computed in quarter-hour increments at a maximum rate of $24 per hour per person;
- Actual postage charges; and
- The cost, if any, charged to the witness by a third person for retrieving and returning records held offsite by that person.

When custodian's attendance is also required. If the personal attendance of the custodian of records or other qualified witness is required, the witness fee and mileage allowances are the same as for any other witness (presently $35 per day, plus mileage actually traveled, both ways, at 20 cents per mile). The witness fees for traveling and appearing in court must be paid in addition to the costs of the custodian's retrieval and reproduction of the documents. Evid C §1563(c); Govt C §68093. See §4.41.

Payment due on delivery of records. Until the records are available for delivery as directed by the subpoena, the subpoenaing party, or the subpoenaing party's deposition officer, need not pay the costs or any estimate of them. Evid C §1563(b)(2). The custodian of records may demand payment of the costs when actually delivering the subpoenaed records, however, and is under no obligation to deliver the records until payment is made. Evid C §1563(b)(2).

Itemized statement required. The custodian of records must submit an itemized statement of costs to the subpoenaing party, or the subpoenaing party's deposition officer, setting forth the reproduction and clerical costs incurred. Evid C §1563(b)(3). If the costs exceed those noted above, or the custodian of records refuses to produce the required itemized statement of costs, then on the subpoenaing party's or deposition officer's demand, the custodian must furnish a statement justifying the costs, setting forth his or her actions taken. Evid C §1563(b)(3).

Petition to reduce amount of costs. The subpoenaing party may petition the court in which the action is pending to recover or reduce the costs paid to or charged by the custodian of records on the grounds that such costs were excessive or charged in bad faith. See Evid C §1563(b)(4). On procedure for hearing the subpoenaing party's petition to reduce the costs of reproducing the records, and for awarding the subpoenaing party reasonable expenses (including attorney fees), see Evid C §1563(b)(4).

Payment to custodian required, even if subpoena later quashed. If a subpoena that has been served to compel production of business records is subsequently withdrawn or is quashed, modified, or limited on a motion made other than by the custodian of records, the custodian is entitled to reimbursement under Evid C §1563(b)(1) for all costs incurred in complying with the subpoena to the time that the subpoenaing party notified the custodian that the subpoena has been withdrawn, quashed, modified, or limited. Evid C §1563(b)(5).

Custodian's procedure to enforce payment of costs. If the subpoena is withdrawn or quashed and those costs are not paid within 30 days after demand, the custodian may file in the court where the action is pending a motion for an order requiring payment, and the court must award the payment of expenses and attorney fees in the manner set forth in Evid C §1563(b)(4). Evid C §1563(b)(5).

§4.29 D. Public employees

A peace officer may be subpoenaed to appear in a civil trial about an event or a transaction "perceived or investigated in the course of his or her duties" by (1) delivering a copy of the subpoena to the officer personally or (2) delivering two copies to the officer's immediate superior at the public entity that employs the officer or to the agent that the immediate superior has designated to receive service. Govt C §68097.1(a).

A witness under Govt C §68097.1 is defined as an employee of the Department of Justice, including a peace officer or an analyst in a technical field, a California Highway Patrol member or state police officer, a member of the state fire marshal's officer, sheriff, district attorney inspector, probation officer, building inspector, firefighter, or city police officer. Persons employed as "vehicle inspection specialists" are included among California Highway Patrol members, and volunteer firefighters are included in the term "firefighter" and considered to be employed by the public entity for which they volunteer as firefighters. Govt C §68097.

Similarly, other state employees may be subpoenaed to testify at trial concerning matters in which an employee "has expertise gained in the course of his or her duties," either by (1) personal service on the employee or (2) delivery of two copies of the subpoena to the employee's immediate superior or to an agent designated by that immediate superior to receive service. Govt C §68097.1(b).

Subpoenaing public employees described in Govt C §68097.1 must be in accordance with CCP §1989 (i.e., the public employee, to be obliged to be a witness before the court, must reside within the state at the time of service). Govt C §68097.1(c). On procedures for payment by the subpoenaing party of witness fees, salary, and expenses of public employees who testify at trial, see §4.42.

§4.30 E. Minors

Service on a minor is accomplished by serving the minor's parent, guardian, conservator, or similar fiduciary. CCP §1987(a).

If these people cannot be located with reasonable diligence, service may be made on anyone having the care or control of the minor, a person with whom the minor resides, or a person employing the minor. If the minor is 12 years of age or older, the subpoena must also be served on the minor. CCP §1987(a).

If a minor is not in the custody of a parent or guardian and is under the jurisdiction of the county child welfare department or probation department, regardless of the minor's age, service may be made on the designated agent for service of process for that department. CCP §1987(a).

§4.31 F. Concealed witness

If a witness is concealed in a building or vessel to avoid service, any court, judge, or officer issuing the subpoena may, on proof by affidavit of the concealment and the materiality of the witness, order a sheriff of the county to serve the subpoena. CCP §1988. See CCP §2015.5 (declaration may be used in lieu of affidavit).

A sheriff may break into a building or vessel where the witness is concealed for the purpose of serving a subpoena. CCP §1988. For an ex parte application to the court to order the sheriff to serve the subpoena on a concealed witness, see forms in §§4.63-4.66.

NOTE: Although CCP §1988 provides that "any officer issuing the subpoena" may order the sheriff to serve it, and it is arguable that an attorney, as an "officer of the court," could issue such an order, there are no cases supporting this interpretation. An ex parte application should be used. If an ex parte application is used, it must comply with Cal Rules of Ct 3.1203(a), which sets forth requirements as to notice (no later than 10:00 a.m. on the court day before the ex parte appearance), content of notice, required documents, affirmative factual showing required, service of papers, and personal appearance requirements. See forms in §§4.63-4.64.

§4.32 G. Jailed witness

The court in which an action or other proceeding is pending may order a prisoner's examination in jail by deposition or order the prisoner to appear in court. CCP §1995. If a witness is incarcerated in the county in which the action is pending, production of that witness at the trial may be required. If jailed elsewhere in the state, the witness must be examined when allowed by deposition. CCP §1997. See Pen C §2623 (procedure for depositions of prisoners). The court in which the action is pending has the power to order the temporary removal of the prisoner to appear at the trial, unless it is the small claims court. If the matter is before a judge or other person out of court, or pending in small claims court, a supreme court justice or a superior court judge in the county where the action is pending has the authority to make such an order for the prisoner's production at the trial or proceeding. CCP §1995.

Only a party may make a motion for the temporary removal and production of the prisoner at trial. CCP §1996. An affidavit showing (1) the nature of the action, (2) the testimony expected from the jailed witness, and (3) its materiality to the issues of the case must accompany the motion. See CCP §1996. See also CCP §2015.5 (declaration may be used in place of an affidavit). See forms in §§4.67-4.68.

§4.33 H. Testimony from person present in courtroom

A person who is already present in court (or before a judicial officer) may be required to testify as if he or she were in attendance under a subpoena issued by the court (or the officer). CCP §1990. To accomplish this, the attorney should ask the trial judge's permission to call the person present to testify.

CAUTION: Counsel rarely obtain testimony by this method. Be cautious, however, when relatives or employees of a client or consultants with special knowledge or expertise accompany you to trial. Although much of a consultant's potential testimony is likely to be protected by the attorney work-product privilege, consider asking opposing counsel for a stipulation that an advising consultant or other persons accompanying you to trial will not be called to the stand.

§4.34 I. Production of evidence from witness on stand

The court has inherent power to compel a witness on the stand to produce documentary evidence, if admissible, that is in the witness's possession or control and not privileged. See Oskner v Superior Court (1964) 229 CA2d 672, 682, 40 CR 621.

CAUTION: Avoid asking a witness on the stand for documents that are not immediately at hand. The court may refuse a request for a continuance for the witness to obtain the documents on the ground that a subpoena duces tecum should have been prepared and served beforehand or that the documents should have been obtained during discovery. Request documents from a witness on the stand only when a witness's testimony reveals that important admissible evidence has not yet come to light. Consider asking the judge for a brief recess. Emphasize that this is the first time you became aware of the document.

You may need to lay a foundation (e.g., by interrogating the witness outside the presence of the jury) so that the court can rule on the materiality and admissibility of the requested items and whether they are in the witness's possession or control. See Barrington v Pacific Elec. Ry. (1927) 83 CA 100, 104, 256 P 567 (substantial showing required before court could order production of books or papers by one party to be used as evidence for other party).

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/4 Compelling Attendance and Production of Evidence/ V. NOTICE PROCEDURES FOR PARTIES AND RELATED WITNESSES/ A. Notice to attend or notice to attend and produce/§4.36 1. Who may be served; fees and mileage

V. NOTICE PROCEDURES FOR PARTIES AND RELATED WITNESSES

A. Notice to attend or notice to attend and produce

§4.36 1. Who may be served; fees and mileage

Although a subpoena is permissible, it is not necessary to serve a subpoena when the witness is one of the following:

- A party;
- A person for whose immediate benefit an action or a proceeding is prosecuted or defended; or
- An officer, a director, or a managing agent of any such party or person.

Written notice is sufficient and has the same effect as a subpoena. CCP §1987(b)-(c). The notice may include a request that the witness also bring evidence to the place of attendance. See forms in §§4.69-4.70.

If the witness demands witness fees and mileage and is entitled to them, they must be paid before the witness is required to testify. CCP §1987(b). See §4.41.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.37 2. Time requirements; service

A notice to appear and testify must be served on the party's or person's attorney at least 10 calendar days before the date of attendance. CCP §1987(b). When the notice also requests the witness to produce books, documents, or other things, it must be served at least 20 calendar days before that date. CCP §1987(c).

The witness must be a resident of the state at the time the notice is served. See CCP §1989. A notice has the same territorial reach as a subpoena. See §4.18. Unlike a person being served with a subpoena duces tecum, however, a party can be compelled by notice to produce records or other items even if that evidence is located outside California, as long as it is in the party's possession or control. See §4.15.

In contrast to a subpoena, the notice need not be served personally. The notice is served on the party's or person's attorney. CCP §1987(b).

NOTE: The statute provides for service only on a party's or person's attorney and is silent on whether the notice may be served directly on an unrepresented party, a person benefiting from the action, or an officer or agent of the party. See CCP §1987(b). When a party has appeared in propria persona and has no attorney to explain the effect of a notice, it is a good idea to follow the more clearly understood subpoena procedures and arrange for a process server to serve the papers personally. For other situations in which serving a subpoena on a party is advisable, see §4.4.

The usual practice is to serve notice by mail. Although a notice can be served by mail more conveniently and less expensively than a process server hired to serve the notice in person, the notice must be mailed well before the appearance date. See CCP §1013(a) (duty to make any response on a date certain after service by mail must be extended 5 calendar days if address is within California). Thus, the notice for testimony only must be served 15 calendar days before the date of the appearance; if production of documents is also requested, the notice must be served 25 calendar days before the appearance. On service by express mail or other overnight delivery, or by facsimile transmission, see CCP §1013(c), (e) (2 court days added when service by express mail, other overnight delivery carrier, or fax).

NOTE: Under Govt C §68106(b)(1), effective July 28, 2009, and operative through June 30, 2010, if a court is closed as the result of a budget reduction measure in response to the state fiscal crisis, the day is considered a holiday and not a court day.

The notice should be mailed to the party's or person's attorney rather than served on the witness directly, unless the witness is not represented by an attorney. See Note above. Counsel should ensure that service by mail is proper in all respects. See, e.g., CCP §1013a(3) (service presumed to be invalid if the method used is deposit in office mail for pickup by the post office in the ordinary course of business, and postal cancellation date or postage meter date is more than 1 day after date of deposit for mailing stated on proof of service). A party to a civil matter has no obligation to appear personally at trial absent properly served notice. See Doe v Superior Court (1990) 222 CA3d 1406, 272 CR 474.

The noticing party may apply for a court order permitting a shorter period of service than specified in the statute. See CCP §1987(b)-(c). As an alternative to a court order shortening time, a subpoena or subpoena duces tecum can be served on a party when the notice periods have already expired as long as there is still a "reasonable time" for the witness to prepare and travel to the trial. See §4.17.

§4.38 3. Contents; no affidavit required to accompany notice to produce

The notice must state the time and place for the witness to attend the trial. CCP §1987(b). Unlike a subpoena, a form for notice to attend and testify at trial is not provided by the Judicial Council. See sample form of notice in §4.69.

When the requesting party seeks production at trial of books, documents, or other things in the possession or control of a party or other person specified in §4.70, the written notice used in lieu of a subpoena duces tecum must also state (CCP §1987(c)):

- The exact materials or things desired; and
- The fact that they are in the possession or control of the witness.

The notice to attend and produce need not be accompanied by a supporting declaration or affidavit, as is required with a subpoena duces tecum under CCP §1985.5. See CCP §1987(c). Unlike a subpoena, the notice to produce evidence is not a court order as such. It is only when the party giving the notice seeks to enforce it by motion (see §4.51), after written objections to it have been filed, that good cause and materiality must be established. CCP §1987(c). On procedures for objecting to a notice to appear and produce, see §4.50.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.39 B. Tactical considerations

The opposing party is usually present at the trial and willing to take the stand and testify during trial. Because a party is not required to attend trial, however, and a particular officer of a corporate party may not attend at the time needed, a notice to attend should be served on all parties or related witnesses whose testimony is vital. Counsel can call the opposing party to testify as an adverse witness under Evid C §776 in counsel's case-in-chief.

Alternatively, if the opposing party does not attend the trial, counsel can read that party's deposition testimony into evidence. See CCP §2025.620(b) (adverse party may use party's deposition for any purpose; showing of deponent's unavailability not required). Rather than subject the jury to the less interesting task of listening to the deposition being read into evidence, a videotape of the opposing party's deposition should be used if available. Live testimony, however, is more effective than deposition testimony, even by videotape.

Documents and other evidence are normally obtained during discovery with the parties stipulating to their admissibility before trial. On pretrial procedures for inspecting and obtaining documents, and establishing their genuineness through requests for admission, see California Civil Discovery Practice, chaps 8-9 (4th ed Cal CEB 2006). However, when evidence is still needed for trial that has not been supplied by discovery or through counsels' stipulation, the trial attorney must obtain it by subpoena duces tecum or notice.

NOTE: Unlike the discovery method used to compel production of documents, electronically stored information, and things, which permits materials to be requested by category if reasonably described under CCP §2031.030(c) (e.g., all executed contracts relating to the housing development signed by the defendant contractor), the notice to attend and produce evidence at trial under CCP §1987(c) requires that the exact materials or things desired be stated.

VI. COSTS AND WITNESS FEES

§4.40 A. Cost of serving subpoena

The sheriff's fee for serving a witness with a subpoena and any attached affidavit is the amount described in Govt C §26720.9 (currently $30). Govt C §26743. Marshals and constables receive the same fee the sheriff receives for serving a subpoena. Govt C §71266. See Govt C §26721, which also sets the fee for serving or executing any process or notice required by law or the litigants in the amount described in Govt C §26720.9.

All costs of service incurred by a registered process server may be recovered as costs by the successful party unless a motion to strike has been granted. CCP §1033.5(a)(4). On items of cost recoverable by successful party, see §4.44.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.41 B. Ordinary witness fees and mileage

If the witness demands it, 1 day's witness fee and mileage for travel to and from the court must be tendered to the witness at the same time that the subpoena is served. CCP §1987(a). A party or other person entitled to witness fees who is served with a notice to attend may demand, and must be paid, witness fees and mileage before being required to testify. CCP §1987(b). On procedures for paying the salary and other expenses of public employees who are subpoenaed to testify, see §4.29.

Ordinary witness fees are $35 per day for each day of actual attendance when attendance is legally required. Govt C §68093. Mileage fees are 20 cents per mile for actual mileage traveled, both to and from the place of attendance. Govt C §68093. On ordinary witness fees as an item of recoverable costs, see §27.75.

Any agreement to pay a contingent witness fee based on the content of the witness's testimony or the outcome of the case is against public policy and void. Pelkey v Hodge (1931) 112 CA 424, 296 P 908. See Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-310(B). See also Van Norden v Metson (1946) 75 CA2d 595, 599, 171 P2d 485; Von Kesler v Baker (1933) 131 CA 654, 21 P2d 1017.

NOTE: The California Supreme Court has granted review in In re Red Light Photo Enforcement Cases (review granted Sept. 24, 2008, S165425; superseded opinion at 163 CA4th 1314, 78 CR3d 413). The court of appeal held that a private automated traffic enforcement system's procurement of evidence on a contingency fee basis did not prevent or impede the due course of justice.

A party may compensate ordinary witnesses for their loss of time, however, in an amount in excess of the statutory per diem allowance. See Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-310(b). See also Crutchfield v Davidson Brick Co. (1942) 55 CA2d 34, 38, 130 P2d 183 (although practice not commended because of tendency to favor a party paying fees, witness may be compensated for out-of-pocket expenses in amount in excess of statutory per diem allowance).

NOTE: Although the statute does not expressly provide this option, the official subpoena form reproduced in §4.55 states at No. 4 that, in addition to demanding witness fees and mileage at the time of service, the witness may also request them from the person listed in No. 3, before the scheduled appearance.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/4 Compelling Attendance and Production of Evidence/§4.42 C. Public employees

§4.42 C. Public employees

When serving a trial subpoena on peace officers and other state employees (see §4.29), the server must tender $150 to the person accepting the subpoena for each day of attendance required under the subpoena. Govt C §68097.2. This amount is only a deposit toward the actual expenses incurred by the public entity employing the witness, and any difference is either refunded or billed to the subpoenaing party. See Govt C §68097.2(c)-(d). The subpoenaing party must reimburse the public entity for the full cost of paying the public employee's salary or other compensation and traveling expenses while attending the trial. Govt C §68097.2.

The court will not order the peace officer or other public employee to return to court beyond the date specified in the subpoena unless the party who requests the witness's return first tenders the same sum ($150) to the public entity employing the witness. See Govt C §68097.5.

If the court orders a continuance on its own motion, however, no additional deposit is required before issuing a subpoena ordering an appearance on the continued date. Govt C §68097.2(e).

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.43 D. Expert witness fees

A subpoenaing party must compensate an expert witness for the reasonable and customary hourly fee for the actual time consumed in examination of the expert witness by any party at trial. Govt C §68092.5(a). This section usually applies to an expert designated by another party. The party who designated the expert is responsible for any fee charged for the expert in preparing the testimony and traveling to the site. Govt C §68902.5(a).

The subpoenaing party must tender the expert's fee to the attorney for the party designating the expert, either when the subpoena is served or at the time of appearance. The amount of the fee is based on the anticipated length of time that the expert is required to remain at the trial. If the expert's appearance takes longer than anticipated, the subpoenaing party must pay the balance of the expert's fee within 5 days after receiving an itemized statement from the expert. Govt C §68092.5(a).

Experts under this section include those designated to testify at trial under CCP §2034.210. No expert fees need be tendered for any subpoenaed expert who is a party or an employee of a party. Govt C §68092.5(a). Although treating physicians are not experts "retained" to form opinions for the purpose of testifying at trial (see Schreiber v Estate of Kiser (1999) 22 C4th 31, 91 CR2d 293), it is customary and appropriate for subpoenaing parties to pay their regular and customary fees. An expert must be notified by the quickest and most reliable means if the trial is continued or the expert's appearance is canceled before the required attendance. An expert witness who has not been notified is entitled to receive reasonable compensation from the party requiring attendance, even though no testimony was given. Govt C §68092.5(d).

A party who has subpoenaed the appearance of an expert whose hourly or daily fee is thought to be unreasonable may notice a motion for the court to fix a reasonable compensation. The expert must also be given notice of the motion. A declaration showing that a reasonable, good faith attempt was made to achieve informal resolution of each issue to be determined by the court must accompany the motion. The expert or the party who designated the expert must provide certain information to the subpoenaing party and the court, including proof of the fees actually charged and received by the expert for similar services. Govt C §68092.5(c).

The court may fix reasonable compensation for court-appointed experts. Evid C §730. Compensation for all court-appointed experts, with the exception of some court-appointed medical experts, must be apportioned among the parties in a proportion determined by the court. Evid C §731(c). In counties where the board of supervisors so provides, court-appointed medical experts must be compensated from the county treasury. Evid C §731(b).

An express contract entered into between an expert and a party to the action concerning compensation is enforceable and prevails over the requirements set out in Govt C §68092.5(a)-(d). Govt C §68092.5(e).

Expert witness fee agreements contingent on the content of the witness's testimony or the outcome of the case are against public policy and void. See Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-310(B). On when expert witness fees are recoverable as costs to successful party, see §4.44.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.44 E. Witness costs recoverable by successful party

Ordinary per diem statutory witness fees and the costs for service of process are allowable costs that can be recovered by the prevailing party against the losing party. CCP §1033.5; Fay v Fay (1913) 165 C 469, 475, 132 P 1040.

If a witness who could have been subpoenaed to testify voluntarily attends the trial at a party's request, that party, if successful, is entitled to recover statutory witness fees and mileage as an item of costs. City of Downey v Gonzales (1968) 262 CA2d 563, 569, 69 CR 34; Linforth v San Francisco Gas & Elec. Co. (1908) 9 CA 434, 437, 99 P 716.

With certain exceptions, compensation for an expert witness is paid by the party requiring the attendance of the expert and is not recoverable by the successful party as an item of costs. Govt C §68092.5(a); Evid C §733. The prevailing party may recover only ordinary statutory witness fees for the witness. Evid C §733.

Exceptions in which expert witness fees are recoverable as costs, in whole or in part, include:

- Compensation apportioned among the parties for court-ordered experts is allowed as an item of costs like any other recoverable costs. Evid C §731(c). See CCP §1033.5(a)(8).
- A party who rejects an offer of compromise in an action other than one in eminent domain—and then fails to obtain a more favorable judgment—may be required to pay a reasonable sum to cover the postoffer costs of the services of the opponent's expert in preparation for or during trial or arbitration. CCP §998(c)(1), (d). In this situation, police officers are deemed experts. CCP §998(f).

Similarly, if a party elects a trial de novo after a judicial arbitration award and the judgment on the trial de novo is not more favorable than the arbitration award, the court must award the other party the reasonable costs of the services of expert witnesses necessary to the preparation or trial of the case, unless those costs would create such substantial economic hardship as not to be in the interest of justice. CCP §1141.21(a)(1)(A). On procedures for recovering costs and obtaining interest after trial, see chap 27.

VII. PROCEDURES FOR OBJECTING TO SUBPOENA OR NOTICE

§4.45 A. Motion to quash or modify subpoena

The procedure for challenging a subpoena or a subpoena duces tecum is a motion to quash the subpoena entirely or to modify it. See form in §4.71. The court may direct compliance with the subpoena on any terms and conditions ordered by the court, including protective orders. CCP §1987.1(a).

A person or the court on its own motion may attack the issuance of the subpoena. CCP §1987.1(a). See Southern Pac. Co. v Superior Court (1940) 15 C2d 206, 100 P2d 302.

Under CCP §1987.1(b), a person is:

- A party;
- A witness;
- A consumer under CCP §1985.3;
- An employee under CCP §1985.6; or
- A person whose personal information is sought in connection with an action arising from the person's exercise of free speech.

On a consumer's right to challenge a subpoena seeking personal records, see §4.23.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.46 1. Grounds

Valid grounds for challenging a subpoena include privilege (e.g., attorney-client privilege, physician-patient privilege, or privilege against self-incrimination). See Roberts v Superior Court (1973) 9 C3d 330, 342, 107 CR 309 (psychotherapist-patient privilege). However, officers and agents of corporations, and those holding records of an association in a representative rather than a personal capacity, may not raise the constitutional privilege against self-incrimination as justification for a refusal to produce subpoenaed company or association documents, because the privilege is personal, extending only to natural individuals acting in their private capacity. Barnes v Molino (1980) 103 CA3d 46, 51, 162 CR 786.

The courts have also quashed subpoenas on the ground that the subpoenaed testimony or items are inadmissible. See People v Rhone (1968) 267 CA2d 652, 73 CR 463 (witness cannot offer relevant testimony); Spencer v Hibernia Bank (1960) 186 CA2d 702, 9 CR 867 (matters sought must be competent evidence and admissible at trial); Pelton Motors, Inc. v Superior Court (1953) 120 CA2d 565, 261 P2d 275 (subpoena may be quashed for being too broad).

§4.47 2. Procedures; timing

A motion to quash or modify a subpoena, as with any other motion, should be made on at least 16 court days' written notice unless an order shortening time is obtained. CCP §1005(b). The motion must be accompanied by a supporting memorandum as well as appropriate declarations and, if served by mail, allow for a more extended notice time. See CCP §§1003-1020; Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113. All papers opposing a motion or reply papers shall be served by statutory means reasonably calculated to ensure delivery to the other party not later than the close of the next business day after the time the opposing papers or reply papers are filed. CCP §1005(c). Code of Civil Procedure §1013, which extends the time within which a right may be exercised, does not apply to a notice of motion, papers opposing a motion, or reply papers.

NOTE: Under Govt C §68106(b)(1), effective July 28, 2009, and operative through June 30, 2010, if a court is closed as the result of a budget reduction measure in response to the state fiscal crisis, the day is considered a holiday and not a court day.

After a motion to quash has been made, the burden of proving that the requirements of CCP §1985 have been properly met is on the party seeking to compel production. See Flora Crane Serv. v Superior Court (1965) 234 CA2d 767, 45 CR 79.

Counsel opposing the subpoena should also consider requesting a protective order. See CCP §1987.1(a) ("the court may make any other order as may be appropriate to protect the person from unreasonable or oppressive demands, including unreasonable violations of the right of privacy of the witness, consumer, or employee").

EXAMPLE: A subpoena duces tecum compelling production of microfilm, computer printouts, and other materials developed by modern technology can create unreasonable and oppressive demands on the witness and violate rights of privacy. Questions may be raised regarding who should bear the expense of extracting and limiting the requested information. To resolve these matters, the person moving to quash or modify the subpoena may include a request for a protective order or for the court to direct compliance only on terms or conditions specifically imposed on the subpoena duces tecum. See CCP §1987.1(a).

If the court finds that a motion was made or opposed in bad faith or without substantial justification, or that one or more of the requirements of the subpoena was oppressive, reasonable expenses including attorney fees may be awarded. CCP §1987.2(a). In actions arising from the exercise of free speech rights on the Internet, the court may award reasonable expenses and attorney fees, if the party prevails in quashing the subpoena served on an Internet service provider and the respondent fails to state a prima facie cause of action. CCP §1987.2(b). On payment to a nonparty witness of reasonable costs incurred for production of business records, see §4.28.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.48 3. Mandamus when motion denied

If a motion to quash is denied, the appropriate remedy is to file a petition for a writ of mandate with the district court of appeal, seeking an order compelling the trial judge to grant the motion and quash the subpoena. People ex rel Dep't of Pub. Works v Younger (1970) 5 CA3d 575, 579, 86 CR 237; Pelton Motors, Inc. v Superior Court (1953) 120 CA2d 565, 261 P2d 275.

In Pitchess v Superior Court (1974) 11 C3d 531, 535, 113 CR 897, the California Supreme Court held in a criminal case that the burden lay on the party seeking the writ of mandate (the sheriff) to demonstrate that the trial court abused its discretion. This reasoning would seem to apply equally to a civil case in light of the broad discretion given the trial judge in determining such matters. See Greyhound Corp. v Superior Court (1961) 56 C2d 355, 15 CR 90; Flora Crane Serv. v Superior Court (1965) 234 CA2d 767, 792, 45 CR 79; O'Brien v Superior Court (1965) 233 CA2d 388, 391, 43 CR 815.

On drafting petition and other procedures for writ of mandate, see California Civil Writ Practice (4th ed Cal CEB 2008).

§4.49 B. Refusal to produce subpoenaed items at trial; objections to admissibility

A witness may appear at trial as directed by the subpoena duces tecum and refuse to produce the requested material and object to its admissibility. See Spencer v Hibernia Bank (1960) 186 CA2d 702, 717, 9 CR 867. If the court rules, e.g., that the documents must be produced, the witness may refuse to obey the order and risk contempt. See Paddon v Superior Court (1923) 65 CA 34, 40, 223 P 91.

If the witness is found in contempt, the court's order may be tested by writ of prohibition in the appellate court. The witness has no right to appeal the contempt order. La Bella v Kaiser Found. Health Plan (1977) 72 CA3d 499, 138 CR 212.

Alternatively, the witness served with a subpoena duces tecum may decide to produce the books, documents, or other things and then object to their admission into evidence in order to preserve the point for arguing reversal on appeal. On grounds for objection, see §4.46.

C. Written objections to notice to attend and produce; requesting party's motion to compel production

§4.50 1. Procedures for producing party; timing

If the notice to attend included a request to produce books, documents, or other things, the party or person on whom the notice to attend and produce was made may challenge the notice, or any part of it, with written objections served and filed within 5 days after service of the request to produce or within any other period allowed by the court. CCP §1987(c).

The written objections must include a statement of the grounds for the objections. CCP §1987(c). Such grounds could include, e.g., the attorney-client privilege. See §4.46. See form of objections in §4.73.

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.51 2. Requesting party's procedures; noticed motion

After written objections to a notice to attend and produce evidence are served, the burden shifts to the party seeking production to proceed on a noticed motion. The motion must be accompanied by a declaration showing good cause and materiality of the items to the issues. See CCP §1987(c). On the interpretation of good cause and materiality for a subpoena duces tecum, see §§4.9, 4.11.

PRACTICE TIP: To obtain a ruling before trial if time is short, the party seeking production of the documents may have to apply to the court for an order shortening time to hear the motion. See CCP §1005. At the hearing, the court may order production of the items objected to, unless the party or person who has objected establishes good cause for nonproduction, or production under limitations or conditions. CCP §1987(c).

The court may also award attorney fees and other reasonable expenses incurred in making or opposing the motion if it finds that the motion was made or opposed in bad faith or without substantial justification or that one or more of the requirements of the notice to produce was oppressive. See CCP §1987.2(a).

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/4 Compelling Attendance and Production of Evidence/ VIII. COUNSEL'S OPTIONS WHEN WITNESS DISOBEYS SUBPOENA OR NOTICE/§4.52 A. Contempt proceedings to enforce subpoena

VIII. COUNSEL'S OPTIONS WHEN WITNESS DISOBEYS SUBPOENA OR NOTICE

§4.52 A. Contempt proceedings to enforce subpoena

A trial court has inherent power to punish acts or omissions that are contempts of the court's authority. See In re Shortridge (1893) 99 C 526, 532, 34 P 227. The legislature has codified, as well as limited, the court's power to use contempt to enforce its lawful orders. CCP §§1209-1222; Pen C §166. See Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. v Superior Court (1968) 265 CA2d 370, 371, 72 CR 177.

Procedural safeguards limit the court's inherent contempt power, e.g., a maximum $1000 fine and 5-day jail sentence can be imposed for civil punitive contempt. See CCP §1218. Because contempt may result in incarceration, the witness in a civil contempt proceeding is entitled to all the rights and protection afforded criminal defendants, except that there is no right to a jury trial. 265 CA2d at 373.

A court may punish as contempt the disobedience of a subpoena or the refusal to be sworn or to testify as a witness. CCP §§1209(a)(9), 1991; In re Keller (1975) 49 CA3d 663, 666, 123 CR 223. See also CCP §1985.1 (failure to appear under agreement modifying the terms of a subpoena punishable as contempt).

Indirect contempt. When contempt is committed outside the presence of the court (constructive or indirect contempt), an affidavit or a declaration showing the facts constituting the contempt must be presented to the court. CCP §§1211, 1993. See In re Passalacqua (1954) 128 CA2d 230, 231, 275 P2d 160; Hall v Superior Court (1932) 124 CA 603, 12 P2d 1057. On substituting a declaration for an affidavit, see CCP §2015.5. The declaration or affidavit must show that the subpoenaed witness was personally and properly served. Chapman v Superior Court (1968) 261 CA2d 194, 67 CR 842. On procedures concerning indirect contempt, including the court's issuance of an order to show cause or a bench warrant to arrest and bring the witness before the court, see §§16.114-16.122.

Direct contempt. In contrast, when the acts constituting the contempt are committed in the immediate view and presence of the court (direct contempt), no affidavit or declaration is required. CCP §1211. See In re Hallinan (1969) 71 C2d 1179, 81 CR 1. The contempt order, however, must recite the facts constituting the contempt, and expressly or impliedly indicate that they occurred in the court's immediate view and presence. CCP §1211; Boysaw v Superior Court (2000) 23 C4th 215, 221, 96 CR2d 531.

Hybrid contempt. A hybrid form of contempt occurs when elements of both indirect and direct forms of contempt are present. See In re Martin (1977) 71 CA3d 472, 479 n4, 139 CR 451. Hybrid contempt usually occurs in the court's presence, but it may be excused by matters occurring outside the courtroom (e.g., witness who fails to appear must be given an opportunity to establish an excuse). See Arthur v Superior Court (1965) 62 C2d 404, 409, 42 CR 441. For discussion of procedures concerning direct and hybrid forms of contempt, see §§16.99-16.129.

PRACTICE TIP: When seeking to have a reluctant witness attend and produce evidence at trial, consider a motion to continue the trial until the missing or uncooperative witness can be encouraged or compelled to attend. On motion for continuance, see §§6.6-6.25 (before trial), 18.57-18.64 (during trial). Contempt proceedings should be used sparingly to coerce testimony, and only as a last resort. A witness is not likely to have a cooperative attitude toward the attorney who urged the judge, e.g., to issue a warrant for the witness's arrest. See CCP §1993.

The basis for contempt may also be a criminal offense (e.g., deceiving a witness with intent to affect the witness's testimony, preparing false documents with intent to use them in trial, willfully preventing or dissuading a person from attending a trial, offering or giving a witness a bribe not to attend a trial, inducing a witness to give false testimony or to withhold true testimony). Criminal contempt is charged and prosecuted like any other misdemeanor offense. People v Saffell (1946) 74 CA2d Supp 967, 983, 168 P2d 497.

Further research: On distinctions between civil punitive and civil coercive contempt, and misdemeanor criminal contempt, see §§16.103-16.106. For detailed discussion of procedures with respect to criminal and civil contempt, and the penalties that can be imposed, see California Criminal Law Procedure and Practice, chap 58 (Cal CEB Annual).

§4.53 B. Civil action for damages

An aggrieved party may bring a civil action to recover $500 and "all damages that he or she may sustain" due to the witness's failure to obey a subpoena or court order to appear at trial. CCP §1992. If the subpoena was not properly served, this remedy is not available. In re Abrams (1980) 108 CA3d 685, 689, 166 CR 749.

Presumably, a civil action for damages could also be brought against a party or party-affiliated witness for failure to respond to a notice to attend the trial. CCP §1987(b) (notice gives parties same rights to impose sanctions as if subpoena had been served). See §4.5.

PRACTICE TIP: In most cases, a civil action for damages is not a realistic alternative, because the action must be brought separately and is likely to take a long time before it is resolved. As with any litigation, the cost of suing a witness who has not appeared at trial is expensive. It is usually wiser to ask the court for a continuance and pursue contempt sanctions if the witness is extremely important to the party's proof or causation. See New York Times Co. v Superior Court (1990) 51 C3d 453, 273 CR 98 (court questioned effectiveness of this remedy given the high cost of litigation).

© The Regents of the University of California

§4.54 C. Sanctions for failure to comply with notice to attend and produce

A notice to attend or a notice to attend and produce has the same effect as a subpoena or a subpoena duces tecum served on a witness. The parties have the same rights, and the court may make the same orders, including sanctions, as in the case of a subpoena before the court. CCP §1987(b)-(c).

Nevertheless, a court is unlikely to impose contempt for failure to respond to a notice to attend. No reported California case has held parties in contempt for failure to attend trial, or attend and produce evidence, in response to a notice. It would be unusual for a witness subject to notice (i.e., a party or other person closely affiliated with a party; see §4.36) not to appear at the trial of the case. In any event, other sanctions would be equally or more effective against a party or person who has an interest in the outcome of the trial.

EXAMPLE: Examples of sanctions that the noticing party's counsel could request the court to impose include issue sanctions (that an issue be considered established and the sanctioned party prohibited from further litigating that issue), evidence sanctions (that the sanctioned party be prohibited from introducing designated evidence), or terminating sanctions (that the court strike all or parts of the sanctioned party's pleadings, stay the trial until the sanctioned party obeys the notice, dismiss the action, or enter a default judgment against the sanctioned party).

Acknowledgment of service and on-call agreement
Return envelope

Comment: It is often a good idea to attach a cover letter such as this one to the subpoena or subpoena duces tecum, explaining its purpose and requesting that the witness sign and return the enclosed acknowledgment of service and agreement to appear on call so that a court appearance can be more conveniently made. Include a stamped, self-addressed envelope to expedite return. For discussion, see §§4.7-4.13.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF SERVICE OF CIVIL SUBPOENA AND AGREEMENT OF WITNESS TO APPEAR ON CALL CCP §1985.1

Title of case: _ _[Title and number of case]_ _

Date and place: _ _[Date witness subpoenaed to appear; name of court, department, address]_ _

I acknowledge that I have been served with a subpoena issued in the case of _ _[title and number of case]_ _.

I understand that, unless I agree to appear on call, it may be necessary for me to wait for extensive periods in court. I wish to avoid this inconvenience. I also understand that cases often are postponed or settled before the trial date, and I do not wish to appear in court unnecessarily.

I therefore agree to appear at such time as may be designated by further oral or written notice from the office of _ _[name of attorneys issuing subpoena]_ _, notwithstanding the date specified in the subpoena.

I understand that _ _[name of attorney]_ _, as attorney, has control over my appearance, will try to give me as much notice as possible, and will notify me at least _ _[number]_ _ hours before the assigned time for my testimony.

My business telephone number is _ _ _ _ _ _. My home telephone number is _ _ _ _ _ _.

I have special plans or engagements on the following dates and hours, which I wish to be considered as inconvenient times for me to appear in court: _____.

I agree to notify _ _[name of attorney]_ _ promptly of any changes in my address or the telephone numbers listed above.

Date: _ _ _ _ _ _ __[S*ignature of witness*]__
_ _[Typed name]_ _

Copies: It is a good idea to provide both a copy for signature and return to the subpoenaing attorney and a copy for the witness to keep for reference if needed before an appearance is made at the trial.

Comment: A cover letter can be useful in explaining the purpose of the above agreement to the witness. See form in §4.57. For discussion of witness's agreement to appear "on call" to testify in court, see §4.20.

1. PLEASE TAKE NOTICE THAT REQUESTING PARTY (name):
   SEEKS YOUR RECORDS FOR EXAMINATION by the parties to this action on (specify date):
   The records are described in the subpoena directed to witness (specify name and address of person or entity from whom records are sought):
   A copy of the subpoena is attached.
2. IF YOU OBJECT to the production of these records, YOU MUST DO ONE OF THE FOLLOWING BEFORE THE DATE SPECIFIED IN ITEM a. OR b. BELOW:
   a. If you are a party to the above-entitled action, you must file a motion pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure section 1987.1 to quash or modify the subpoena and give notice of that motion to the witness and the deposition officer named in the subpoena at least five days before the date set for production of the records.
   b. If you are not a party to this action, you must serve on the requesting party and on the witness, before the date set for production of the records, a written objection that states the specific grounds on which production of such records should be prohibited. You may use the form below to object and state the grounds for your objection. You must complete the Proof of Service on the reverse side indicating whether you personally served or mailed the objection. The objection should not be filed with the court. WARNING: IF YOUR OBJECTION IS NOT RECEIVED BEFORE THE DATE SPECIFIED IN ITEM 1, YOUR RECORDS MAY BE PRODUCED AND MAY BE AVAILABLE TO ALL PARTIES.
3. YOU OR YOUR ATTORNEY MAY CONTACT THE UNDERSIGNED to determine whether an agreement can be reached in writing to cancel or limit the scope of the subpoena. If no such agreement is reached, and if you are not otherwise represented by an attorney in this action, YOU SHOULD CONSULT AN ATTORNEY TO ADVISE YOU OF YOUR RIGHTS OF PRIVACY.

§5.1 I. SCOPE OF CHAPTER; DEFINITIONS

Witness preparation varies from case to case and from witness to witness, depending on the nature of the case, the issues, and the type of witness. There is no one correct method or simple formula. This chapter provides general guidelines for preparing witnesses as well as what the attorney needs to do before meeting with and preparing the witnesses. See §§5.2-5.21.

The following areas are discussed:

- Issues common to preparing lay witnesses are covered in §§5.22-5.47.
- Preparing "parties" (i.e., your client and "party-related witness," including officers, directors, managing agents, or employees of a party) is covered in §§5.48-5.64.
- Preparing lay witnesses who are not parties and are not related to a party is covered in §§5.65-5.69.
- Preparing expert witnesses is covered in §§5.70-5.90.
- Finally, ethical issues you should keep in mind when preparing witnesses (e.g., coaching and potential perjury) are covered in §§5.91-5.96.

On examining witnesses during trial, see chap 11.

II. ATTORNEY PREPARATION

A. Review case

§5.2 1. Testimonial, documentary, and demonstrative evidence

To effectively prepare each witness, determine:

- The relevancy of each witness's expected testimony and the specific objective you want to achieve for each witness you will call;
- What physical or documentary evidence will be introduced through each witness; and
- Whether there is any law that may render the testimony or other evidence inadmissible.

Therefore, before preparing witnesses to testify, you should have a thorough grasp of all aspects of the case. Review the pleadings, discovery, documentary evidence, witness statements, legal research, and all other relevant material. Pay special attention to each witness's deposition, other discovery responses (e.g., answers to interrogatories), and statements. On preparing and organizing trial material generally, see chap 3.

Be familiar with any tangible items, i.e., property or a product, that may be involved in the litigation to help you form accurate mental images when preparing direct and cross-examination. For example, in an accident case, visit the scene of the accident. If this is not possible, become familiar with the scene through accurate photographs.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.3 2. Depositions; answers to interrogatories

Review and summarize all depositions before preparing a witness. In particular, the attorney and the witness must become thoroughly familiar with that witness's deposition. This is an excellent method to refresh knowledge of the facts and will help the attorney to recall the demeanor of each witness. Review answers to interrogatories (especially those that make a reference to the witness as a person with knowledge of the facts), and prepare summaries, if needed.

In more complex cases, prepare indexes for quickly locating any impeaching material that contradicts the witness's testimony during the trial. Be certain to review any declarations or affidavits the witness has given, and any declarations or affidavits other witnesses have given about the witness. On summarizing and indexing discovery generally, see §§12.90-12.96.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.4 3. Complete legal research and pretrial organization

Complete all legal research on the admissibility of evidence before preparing the witnesses. Consider the court's probable rulings on admissibility before deciding (a) the order of witnesses (see §5.20), (b) the sequence for introducing documents into evidence, and (c) the witness examination plans (see §5.19). Be prepared with alternative plans if the court holds certain evidence inadmissible.

In addition, the opening statement, jury instructions, trial brief, elements of the causes of action, and some of the closing argument should be prepared, or at least outlined, before preparing the witnesses, because they will bear on which witnesses you will call and the order in which they will appear.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.5 4. Consider what writings to use to refresh recollection

When a writing is used to refresh recollection either before or during trial, about any matter on which a witness testifies, the writing must be produced at trial at the request of an adverse party. See International Ins. Co. v Montrose Chem. Corp. (1991) 231 CA3d 1367, 282 CR 783; Mize v Atchison, T. & S.F. Ry. (1975) 46 CA3d 436, 449, 120 CR 787. The adverse party may "inspect the writing, cross-examine the witness concerning it, and introduce in evidence such portion of it as may be pertinent to the testimony of the witness." Evid C §771(b).

§5.6 a. Attorney-client privilege

If the writing used to refresh recollection is subject to the attorney-client privilege and that privilege is properly asserted at the first opportunity, the adverse party may be prevented from inspecting it. In Sullivan v Superior Court (1972) 29 CA3d 64, 105 CR 241, the court held that no waiver of the privilege occurred when a transcript of a tape-recorded initial conference between the attorney and the client was used to refresh the client's recollection for a deposition and when the privilege was claimed during the deposition.

In Mize v Atchison, T. & S.F. Ry. (1975) 46 CA3d 436, 449, 120 CR 787, however, the court held that there was a waiver of the attorney-client privilege when the attorney failed to object at the first opportunity to questions directed to an independent investigator witness who used documents in his file to refresh his recollection before testifying at trial. Counsel's broad objection to allowing inspection of the file, not directed to a specific document claimed to be subject to the privilege, was held insufficient to protect the privilege. The court stated that "the mere fact of allowing a witness to refresh his recollection from a communication by him to his attorney and then calling him as a witness does not necessarily waive the lawyer-client privilege." See also Kerns Constr. Co. v Superior Court (1968) 266 CA2d 405, 413, 72 CR 74.

For further discussion of Evid C §771 and privileged communications, see Comment, Evidence Code Section 771: Conflict with Privileged Communications, 6 Pac LJ 612 (1975). On attorney-client privilege generally, see Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 42 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.7 b. Work-product protection

Material prepared by an attorney for the case is subject to qualified protection from disclosure to the adverse party as "work-product." CCP §§2018.010-2018.080. See BP Alaska Exploration, Inc. v Superior Court (1988) 199 CA3d 1240, 1254, 245 CR 682. Also, CCP §2018.030(a) provides that a writing reflecting an attorney's impressions, conclusions, opinions, or legal research or theories is not discoverable under any circumstance. See Rico v Mitsubishi Motors Corp. (2007) 42 C4th 807, 815, 68 CR3d 758 (paralegal's case summary and counsel's thoughts and impressions were absolutely privileged).

An opposing party may be able to obtain material subject to the work-product doctrine if that material is used to refresh a witness's recollection and if the witness is called to testify. See Mize v Atchison, T. & S.F. Ry. (1975) 46 CA3d 436, 449, 120 CR 787 (work-product protection ceases when report is used to refresh witness's recollection and witness is then called to testify); Kadelbach v Amaral (1973) 31 CA3d 814, 821, 107 CR 720 (waiver of work-product protection when statement or recording is used to refresh recollection or is used offensively to cross-examine); Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 43 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009). See also Fed R Civ P 26(a)(2).

PRACTICE TIP: In spite of the risk, witnesses are often seen in the public areas of courthouses reviewing documents, including prepared questions and answers, in plain view of opposing counsel and parties. Avoid this practice to prevent the opposing side from demanding production of these documents.

On production of written questions prepared by party or party-related witness while reviewing material before attorney conference, see §5.6.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.8 B. Select witnesses

If several witnesses have perceived an event or a transaction, select the best one or two to testify. Factors to consider in making this selection include:

- Who best perceived the event;
- Who has the best recollection of the facts surrounding the event;
- Who has the best ability to communicate those facts;
- How sincere or credible the witness is likely to appear to the judge or jury;
- Whether effective impeachment material exists as to a particular witness;
- Whether a particular witness was deposed;
- How well the witness will stand up under cross-examination; and
- Who will be available to testify.

Plan the facts that must be established through each witness. Whenever possible, introduce evidence that will be disputed, as to either foundation or substance, through a witness other than the client. Using the alternative witness avoids the risks of exposing the client to vigorous cross-examination. A nonparty witness is also more likely to be credible because of a lack of motive and interest in the outcome of the case.

PRACTICE TIP: For each witness ask yourself: "Is this witness important? Why?" If the witness's testimony is not important or is merely cumulative of that of other witnesses, consider not calling this witness. A short and punchy presentation is usually more effective than a long, repetitive one.

See §5.19 for a witness examination plan.

© The Regents of the University of California

1. Competency of witness

§5.9 a. Ability of witness

Some potential witnesses may not be competent to testify. If a witness cannot communicate in an intelligible fashion, either directly or through an interpreter, or is incapable of understanding the duty to tell the truth, the witness is not competent to testify. Evid C §701; People v Willard (1983) 155 CA3d 237, 240, 202 CR 100. In Willard, the court noted that a motion to voir dire a witness on competency should be denied when the motion is based on counsel's characterization of the witness's prior statements or "when made to inquire into other matters [that] are the proper subjects of cross-examination." 155 CA3d at 240. Temporary confusion or disorientation is not equivalent to incompetency. See e.g., Sanders Constr. Co. v San Joaquin First Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1982) 136 CA3d 387, 395, 186 CR 218 (diabetic witness was found competent even though momentary diabetic confusion and disorientation occurred while testifying).

NOTE: A child's competence to testify is challenged and established in the same manner as for any other witness. See People v Harlan (1990) 222 CA3d 439, 452, 271 CR 653; In re Crystal J. (1990) 218 CA3d 596, 601, 267 CR 105. See §5.11 for discussion of challenging and establishing competency generally. There is no minimum age for a child to testify. Evid C §700; People v Jones (1990) 51 C3d 294, 315, 270 CR 611. See §§5.45-5.47 for preparing young witnesses.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/5 Preparing Witnesses for Trial/§5.10 b. When witness is judge or juror, or other trier of fact

§5.10 b. When witness is judge or juror, or other trier of fact

Other witnesses may be considered not competent to testify because of their position, e.g.:

- A presiding judge, or a juror who is sworn and impaneled, may not testify in that trial. Evid C §§703-704.
- A person presiding at any judicial or quasi-judicial proceeding, or an arbitrator, cannot testify in any subsequent civil proceeding as to any statement, conduct, decision, or ruling occurring at or in conjunction with the prior proceeding (Evid C §703.5) unless the statement or conduct could:
- Give rise to civil or criminal contempt;
- Constitute a crime;
- Be the subject of investigation by the State Bar or the Commission on Judicial Performance; or
- Give rise to disqualification proceedings under CCP §170.1(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.11 c. Show competence if challenged

A witness's competency is a preliminary fact to be determined under Evid C §405. See discussion of §405 hearings in §7.29; see discussion of burden of proving competency in §11.20.

PRACTICE TIP: If you anticipate a challenge to a witness's competency, call that issue to the judge's attention (e.g., through a motion in limine; see chap 7) at the earliest possible time, so that the judge can make arrangements for a hearing.

§5.12 2. Personal knowledge of witness

With the exception of expert testimony, make sure the witness is testifying about a matter based on the witness's personal knowledge. Evid C §702(a). "'Personal knowledge' means a present recollection of an impression derived from the exercise of the witness's own senses." Comment to Evid C §702. If a party objects on the ground that a sufficient foundation as to personal knowledge has not been laid, "personal knowledge must be shown before the witness may testify" on the matter. Evid C §702(a).

A witness's personal knowledge is a preliminary fact to be determined under Evid C §403. See discussion of Evid C §403 hearings in §7.27; see discussion of burden of proving personal knowledge in §11.24. The ultimate determination of personal knowledge, however, is left for the jury. Evid C §403(c)(1); Comment to Evid C §403; see People v Blagg (1970) 10 CA3d 1035, 89 CR 446. See also 2 Witkin, California Evidence, Witnesses §46 (4th ed 2000).

PRACTICE TIP: It is usually not enough for the witness to answer yes to the question "Do you know this of your own personal knowledge?" You should ask questions that show how the witness gained the personal knowledge and you should be prepared to establish the personal knowledge of the witness through your examination:

Q: Did you see the defendant enter the intersection?

A: Yes.

Q: Where were you when you saw the defendant?

A: I was in a car directly behind him.

Q: What were you doing?

A: I was stopped at the red light at the intersection, waiting for it to turn green.

Q: What color was it?

If you ask the witness what color the light was first, make sure you then ask, "How do you know the light was red?"

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/5 Preparing Witnesses for Trial/§5.13 C. Decide whether to use expert

§5.13 C. Decide whether to use expert

A witness testifying as an expert may offer an opinion when (Evid C §801(a)):

- The opinion is "[r]elated to a subject that is sufficiently beyond common experience"; and
- The expert's opinion would "assist the trier of fact."

PRACTICE TIP: When designating an expert under CCP §§2034.010-2034.730, be sure to provide sufficient notice of the potential subject areas of the expert's testimony. Failure to do so may result in the expert's testimony on a particular subject being excluded. If you need to expand the designated scope of an expert's testimony, move for leave to amend your expert witness declaration as soon as you realize you did not give sufficient notice of all subject areas on which the expert may testify. See Bonds v Roy (1999) 20 C4th 140, 83 CR2d 289 (expert witness testimony may be excluded if expert witness declaration did not provide sufficient notice of subject matter); Easterby v Clark (2009) 171 CA4th 772, 778, 90 CR3d 81 (evidence's proponent gave notice to opposing counsel 3 months before trial that expert would testify beyond deposition's scope).

§5.14 1. When useful to assist trier of fact

Expert opinion may be admitted even when the jurors have some knowledge of the matter if the opinion would assist them. Evidence Code §801 does not limit expert opinion testimony to subjects completely beyond common experience; rather, it limits expert testimony to such subjects "sufficiently beyond common experience" that expert opinion would assist the trier of fact. Smith v Lockheed Propulsion Co. (1967) 247 CA2d 774, 783, 56 CR 128. Thus, admissibility of expert opinion is a question of degree.

For detailed discussion of expert witnesses, see California Expert Witness Guide (2d ed Cal CEB 1991); Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 30 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009). For step-by-step instructions, see Effective Introduction of Evidence in California, chap 24 (2d ed Cal CEB 2000); Handling Expert Witnesses in California Courts (Cal CEB Action Guide May 2008).

§5.15 2. When expert opinion is necessary

"If the matter in issue is one within the knowledge of experts only and not within the common knowledge of laymen, it is necessary for the plaintiff to introduce expert opinion evidence in order to establish a prima facie case." Carson v Facilities Dev. Co. (1984) 36 C3d 830, 844, 206 CR 136, quoting Miller v Los Angeles County Flood Control Dist. (1973) 8 C3d 689, 702, 106 CR 1. Failure to do so may result in a nonsuit or a directed verdict.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.16 3. When expert opinion is unnecessary

A court may exclude expert testimony on an issue that it believes can be resolved by reference to the common experience of the trier of fact.

EXAMPLE 1: Knowledge about child molestation, particularly sensitivities of victims and when they report the crime, is sufficiently beyond common experience that an expert's opinion would assist the trier of fact. People v Dunnahoo (1984) 152 CA3d 561, 577, 199 CR 796. However, veracity of those who report crimes to police, e.g., a child/victim, is not a matter sufficiently beyond common experience to require expert testimony. People v Sergill (1982) 138 CA3d 34, 39, 187 CR 497.

EXAMPLE 2: The possibility that a prison inmate would lie is not beyond common experience to require expert testimony. People v Johnson (1993) 19 CA4th 778, 785, 23 CR2d 703.

EXAMPLE 3: No special expertise is required to show that a driver looking east down the road would have difficulty seeing oncoming westbound traffic when a sign creates an obstruction constituting a dangerous condition. Carson v Facilities Dev. Co. (1984) 36 C3d 830, 845, 206 CR 136.

EXAMPLE 4: The possibility that there might be a causal relationship between the presence of termites in plaintiff's home and her emotional distress would not require expert testimony. Godfrey v Steinpress (1982) 128 CA3d 154, 186, 180 CR 95.

EXAMPLE 5: Whether a defendant understood a discussion about protective custody would not require an expert's opinion. People v Medina (1990) 51 C3d 870, 886, 274 CR 849.

EXAMPLE 6: In the absence of extreme or unusual circumstances, such as a case in which the authenticity of a person's handwriting is the primary issue, jurors can compare handwriting and draw conclusions, with or without expert testimony. U.S. v Alvarez-Farfan (9th Cir 2003) 338 F3d 1043, 1045.

EXAMPLE 7: Whether a psychotherapist actually believed or predicted that a patient posed a serious risk of inflicting grave physical injury on a readily identifiable victim does not require expert testimony. Ewing v Northridge Hosp. Med. Ctr. (2004) 120 CA4th 1289, 1301, 16 CR3d 591.

EXAMPLE 8: The jurors in a wrongful termination case do not need expert testimony from a human resources management expert to determine whether the evidence includes "indicators" that the employer retaliated against the employee. Kotla v Regents of Univ. of Cal. (2004) 115 CA4th 283, 294, 8 CR3d 898.

EXAMPLE 9: Whether the size or shape of a crack in the sidewalk made it dangerous would not require an expert opinion. Caloroso v Hathaway (2004) 122 CA4th 922, 928, 19 CR3d 254.

EXAMPLE 10: Whether plaintiff's injuries would have been less severe had he been wearing a seat belt while using truck's sleeper berth does not require expert opinion. Lara v Nevitt (2004) 123 CA4th 454, 459, 19 CR3d 865.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.17 D. Consider attorney as witness

Under Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-210, an attorney who knows or should know that he or she ought to be called as a witness in an action to be heard before a jury is prohibited from acting as an advocate in that matter unless:

- The testimony relates to an uncontested matter;
- The testimony relates to the nature and value of legal services rendered in the case; or
- The attorney has the client's informed, written consent.

Rule 5-210 applies only to testimony in jury trials and does not apply (Discussion to Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-210):

- In hearings before a judge;
- In nonadversarial proceedings, such as testimony before a legislative body; or
- In "circumstances in which a partner or associate in an advocate's firm will be a witness."

Note that Rule 5-210 does not prohibit counsel from acting as an advocate when another lawyer in the advocate's firm will be a witness. See Discussion to Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-210.

When an attorney is called by the client to testify to matters that the attorney could have learned only because of the existence of the attorney-client relationship, the attorney-client privilege is waived. People v Dubrin (1965) 232 CA2d 674, 43 CR 60. The attorney may thereafter be cross-examined on any matter within the scope of his or her testimony elicited during direct examination. See also People v Mickle (1991) 54 C3d 140, 184, 284 CR 511.

If the client is the State of California or a governmental entity, counsel should obtain consent from the head of the office or a designee of the head of the office employing the attorney. Although Rule 5-210 does not require that the consent be filed with the court, trial counsel who may be called to testify in a jury trial should be prepared to produce the client's written consent to do so. See §6.113 for consent form.

ABA Model Rules of Prof Cond 3.7 is similar to Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-210 except that it allows an attorney to act as a trial advocate when the attorney's disqualification would create a substantial hardship on the client.

E. Prepare witness trial materials

§5.18 1. Witness files and information sheets

After deciding which witnesses to call, create and maintain a summary sheet listing certain basic information about each witness. The information should include the witnesses' business and home addresses, their phone and fax numbers, e-mail addresses, and information on their schedule and availability for deposition and trial. It may also include a brief description of their connection to the case, and the gist of their testimony. Place all information on each witness in a separate file or section of the trial notebook. See §3.28.

§5.19 2. Witness examination plans

Before preparing each witness, know precisely what is expected to be accomplished through that witness. Use the issue outline (see §3.17) to identify each witness likely to testify on the client's behalf and which documents and demonstrative evidence will be introduced through each witness. Choose the best witness to establish each important fact. See §5.8 on choosing witnesses.

Based on the issue outline and the exhibit files, develop a detailed examination plan for each witness, covering direct and cross-examination and anticipated rebuttal. To prepare the examination plans:

- Note each question either in substance, by key words, or verbatim, together with the expected response.

PRACTICE TIP: If you write out questions verbatim you will not have to extemporize during the heat of trial, but you will have to resist the temptation to simply read the questions at trial. See §11.15 on style of questioning.

- Anticipate objections to questions and note the applicable statutes and case law on potential evidentiary problems so that they will be accessible in making any necessary arguments to the court. If a more detailed legal memorandum is required to support your position, keep it in the legal research file (see §3.32) or in a section of the trial notebook. Note the memorandum's location in the plan's margin.
- Note the point in the examination at which an exhibit should be introduced.
- For anticipated rebuttal, make notes from the deposition and other documents that may help rehabilitate the witness or refute evidence that the opposing parties may offer.

Some attorneys write out questions, or outline areas of inquiry, before conferring with the witness. The use of written questions at trial is open to debate. Some attorneys believe their use inhibits spontaneity and may distract counsel's attention from the witness's answers. If you choose not to use written questions, then at a minimum prepare an outline or a checklist of important points to cover, and make sure you are thoroughly familiar with the expected testimony. Never "wing it." Careful preparation is essential.

When required, prepare questions necessary to lay a proper foundation for the introduction of evidence, e.g., demonstrative or documentary evidence. See Effective Introduction of Evidence in California, chaps 11, 13 (2d ed Cal CEB 2000); Laying a Foundation To Introduce Evidence (Preparing and Using Evidence at Trial) (Cal CEB Action Guide April 2008) for when a foundation is required. Review specific questions with the witness to avoid the embarrassment of having a witness answer a foundational question incorrectly.

When possible, make the questions short and direct, and use simple language (e.g., "before" instead of "prior to"). Choose words for their impact on the trier of fact (e.g., "collision" instead of "accident" in personal injury plaintiff cases). On framing questions generally, see §§11.50-11.62. See also Effective Direct & Cross-Examination §§2.2-2.4, 2.6-2.7 (Cal CEB 1986).

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.20 F. Decide on order of witnesses and timing

In presenting the case, strategically place witnesses who make a good impression to maximize their impact on the trier of fact. It is generally preferable to:

- Open the case with a strong witness;
- Close each day's presentation with a strong witness; and
- Close the case with a strong witness.

Witnesses who do not make a favorable impression may be placed between two strong witnesses or used at a time when the trier of fact is less alert. Trial attorneys generally agree that at certain times of the day jurors are more alert than at other times, but they disagree on what these times are. The less than unanimous consensus appears to be that jurors are more attentive early in the morning, and less so in the middle afternoon. Try to take advantage of this factor in arranging the order of witnesses.

The most effective way to present a case is usually in chronological order. In addition, it is often better to call witnesses that establish liability first, followed by the damage witnesses, so as not to confuse the trier of fact. Nevertheless, structure the order of witnesses to create the greatest impact on the trier of fact.

NOTE: Occasionally, a friendly witness, whom you do not want to alienate, may be able to testify only at a particular date or time, and you will need to accommodate the witness's schedule. This problem may complicate your strategic ordering of witnesses, but you will have to balance the witness's needs with your presentation of the case.

Factors to be considered in deciding the sequence of witnesses include:

- Opening with a strong witness, because first impressions are important, and a good lead-off witness can put the case on a firm footing;
- Telling the story chronologically, so that the jury can follow it easily;
- Presenting an important witness at the end of the day or week, in order to leave the jury with a lasting impression (although a countervailing consideration is that the jury may be tired and have difficulty remembering the witness's testimony);
- Placing weaker witnesses in the middle of the proceedings where they will do the least damage, or where any damage can be rehabilitated later by other witnesses;
- Ending the presentation of evidence with a strong witness in order to create an impression that will stay in the jurors' minds as they begin deliberations;
- Presenting a witness whom the opponent is not prepared to cross-examine, thereby catching opposing counsel off guard;
- Presenting witnesses early who can lay the foundation for documents and other important evidence, about which later witnesses will testify;
- Presenting evidence of liability first, followed by expert testimony, and then evidence of damages;
- Calling adverse witnesses, if at all, after friendly witnesses have created a favorable impression (although a countervailing consideration exists if an adverse witness has given favorable deposition testimony; presenting that witness early may demonstrate at an early stage the weakness of the opponent's case); and
- Concluding with a strong witness.

If the client testifies last, he or she will have been able to observe the other witnesses and become more accustomed to the trial atmosphere. The client's recollection about a particular point may be refreshed by the latter stages of testimony. In addition, by testifying about damages in a direct, personal way, the client may leave a strong impression with the trier of fact. On the other hand, when other key witnesses testify first, the opposing attorney may conceive of additional pointed questions to ask the client during cross-examination.

On use of discovery, including presenting testimony by deposition or videotaped deposition, see chap 12. See also Effective Direct & Cross-Examination §2.5 (Cal CEB 1986).

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.21 G. Assure attendance of witnesses at trial

Verify that each witness knows the location, date, and time to appear at trial to give his or her testimony. Make certain that all necessary subpoenas and subpoenas duces tecum, or notices in lieu of them when permitted (see CCP §1987), have been served. On compelling attendance of witnesses and production of evidence generally, see chap 4; on whether to subpoena friendly witnesses, see §4.3.

© The Regents of the University of California

III. PREPARING LAY WITNESSES FOR TRIAL

A. Witness conference with attorney

§5.22 1. Timing and location

Meet with each witness you intend to call to testify at trial, and any other witnesses who are willing to meet with you, e.g., witnesses whom you know will be called by the other side. The timing and location of the conferences may depend on the type of witness. However, insist that all witnesses, even busy professionals or executives, give adequate time to preparation. Schedule an initial conference with each witness early enough to allow additional meetings, if required.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.23 2. Single versus group conference; waiver of privileges

Typically, you will meet individually with each witness, but sometimes a group conference will be unavoidable, i.e., you need to meet with a large number of witnesses in a short period of time. Different issues arise concerning the waiver of privileges in group meetings with parties and party-related witnesses as opposed to meetings with nonparty witnesses. See §§5.53, 5.65.

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Conducting the conference

§5.24 1. Witness gives initial narrative

As a first step, some attorneys find it helpful to encourage the witness to tell what he or she knows in narrative fashion, particularly if the attorney has not met face to face with the party or witness for many months or perhaps years. This is the time to objectively view the client or get to know the witness. By studying the witness's demeanor and style of delivery, you may gain insight for additional areas of preparation of the witness. In addition, the witness may relate something that was overlooked that could help or harm the case.

§5.25 2. Attorney directs remainder of conference

When the witness has finished talking, take over and direct the remainder of the conference. The witness should be instructed that his or her attention must now be directed toward actual trial preparation and that paying close attention will make testifying easier. Then begin preparing the witness for trial as explained in §§5.26-5.47.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.26 C. Preliminary matters

Generally, the more information a witness has about what it will be like in court, the better prepared and less nervous he or she will be. Advise each witness about courtroom procedures, attendance and conduct at trial, and issues covered in §§5.26-5.30. Explain that witnesses may not be allowed in the courtroom before they testify. See §§6.105-6.108.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.27 1. Goal: Put witness at ease

All witnesses are nervous to some degree. A few may even "freeze" on the stand. Excessive nervousness or freezing will distract a jury from the witness's testimony and may adversely affect credibility. To put them at ease, tell witnesses that it is perfectly normal to be nervous and that they should not be worried about it. Remind the witness that if he or she does not recall something important, you will ask a question designed to elicit the important fact. If the witness is still apprehensive after being prepared, consider encouraging the witness to attend a trial as an observer, which will often help allay fear.

NOTE: If the court excludes witnesses from the courtroom before they testify in your case, arrange for the witness to attend a different trial.

When an important witness is well prepared but is still apprehensive, consider conducting and videotaping a mock examination if time and resources permit. You can review the tape with the witness to give positive reinforcement and allow the witness to feel more confident about the process. Be aware, however, that this process might backfire and increase the witness's apprehension, especially if the videotape seems to highlight the witness's weaknesses.

§5.28 2. Courtroom basics

Be sure the witness knows the location of the courthouse and how to find the proper courtroom. If possible, explain how the courtroom is physically set up, e.g., where the judge, jury, attorneys, and witness will sit. If desirable, meet the witness at the courtroom sometime before the witness is scheduled to appear in order to make sure the witness is familiar with the layout. Explain where to sit, when to stand, and how to step forward to be sworn.

Tell the witness who will be present during the trial, the roles they play (e.g., the clerk, bailiff, court reporter, spectators), and who will give the oath. Witnesses and clients may want to know who will be present when they testify (i.e., whether the opposing party will be there).

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.29 3. Advise witness what to wear

Discuss with each witness what to wear to court. Usually, conservative attire is appropriate, such as a dark suit and tie for men and a tailored dress for women. Loud clothes and jewelry should be avoided.

A person's usual manner of dress can be altered, but only within limits. It is important for the witness to feel comfortable and natural in what he or she is wearing. A man wearing a suit for the first time may not be a good witness. A witness who feels "out of character" may communicate that to the trier of fact. In addition, it may be preferable for a witness to come to court in work clothes that emphasize the witness's daily activities. Whatever the witness wears, it should be neat and clean to convey proper respect for the court.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.30 4. Witness demeanor

Witnesses are subject to careful scrutiny by the jurors, both in the courtroom as well as surrounding areas. For example, a witness driving a flashy car while entering the courthouse parking lot may honk at a slow driver who turns out to be a juror. Jurors are especially sensitive to all behavior, on and off the witness stand. Instruct each witness on how to behave while in or near the courthouse. The following instructions might be given:

- Get a good night's rest, have a good meal before coming to court, and do not drink or take tranquilizers or medication unless required to by a doctor. Otherwise, your ability to communicate may be impaired.
- Report to the courtroom and be seated in the spectator section or, if witnesses are excluded, wait outside the courtroom until you are called.
- Do not read, chew gum, sleep, or talk during court proceedings.
- Do not wave or talk to the client or the attorney in the courtroom, hallways, or restrooms. You may appear partial to the client in the jurors' eyes, causing them to discredit your testimony.
- Do not discuss the case in the courtroom, hallways, or bathrooms, because jurors and others may overhear the discussion.
- Do not say anything at any time to a juror in or out of the courtroom. Unauthorized communications with jurors, directly or indirectly, may lead to a mistrial, a new trial, or reversal of a judgment. See, e.g., People v Honeycutt (1977) 20 C3d 150, 141 CR 698; Walter v Ayvazian (1933) 134 CA 360, 25 P2d 526. See also CCP §§611, 613.
- When seated in court, do not react to favorable or unfavorable testimony. The jury might notice grimaces and smirks.
- Do not pass notes to counsel while in court (although a client at the counsel table may make notes for counsel to read).
- When called to testify during direct examination, do not take any notes or papers to the stand unless the attorney has first reviewed them. See §§5.5-5.7.
- Always be courteous, especially if the opposing attorney is obviously hostile. The trier of fact is likely to be impressed if you stay cool under pressure.
- Do not argue or attempt to advocate a particular position. Be factual, direct, and straightforward. Leave advocacy to the attorney.
- Do not attempt any jokes while testifying; avoid even the mildest obscenity; avoid absolutely any ethnic, gender, or other slurs.
- On completion of your testimony, leave the courtroom. Do not wait for or attempt to talk to the client or the attorney. By leaving the courtroom immediately, you will appear to the trier of fact to be impartial. The jurors may interpret talking to the client or the attorney as bias and discount your testimony.

NOTE: This instruction may not always be appropriate. For example, in business litigation, especially when an individual is suing a corporation, it may be essential to have someone from the corporation sitting at the counsel table throughout the trial, preferably a key witness who projects well, to act as a liaison and a human embodiment of the corporate entity. In like manner, in automobile accident cases, many attorneys prefer plaintiff or defendant to remain in the courtroom during trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.31 5. Bringing family and friends to court

In certain cases (e.g., wrongful death actions), it may be appropriate for family members to come to court for all or part of a trial. But as a general rule, instruct a party or party-related witness not to bring family or friends to court to see the witness testify. Any hushed conversations, waves, or winks will be noticed by the trier of fact.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/5 Preparing Witnesses for Trial/§5.32 D. General rules for testifying

§5.32 D. General rules for testifying

Before reviewing the witness's proposed testimony, give the witness the general rules set forth in §§5.33-5.43. These rules are generally applicable to the preparation of any witness, not just a party or a party-related witness.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.33 1. Tell the truth

The first and most fundamental rule is to tell the truth. In addition to the obvious reasons, it is difficult to trick or trap a witness who tells the truth about everything. Tell the witness, for example, that it is customary, proper, and ethical for a witness to meet with the attorney before testifying. If asked during cross-examination whether such a meeting has occurred, the witness should answer yes. Take the same approach for every issue in the case.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.34 2. Listen carefully to question and think before answering

Advise the witness to listen to each question carefully and to think and take time before answering. For a witness to think before answering, the witness must first understand the question. Accordingly, the witness should be instructed that it is not a sign of ignorance, weakness, or lack of cooperation to require reasonable clarifications of questions. The witness should be particularly aware of certain types of confusing questions, i.e., questions with double negatives, compound questions, and questions that summarize or characterize the witness's previous testimony.

Additionally, instruct the witness to focus on answering every question accurately.

These admonitions serve four purposes:

- It gives you time to object, if necessary;
- Events at trial may require you to ask questions not previously discussed; only if the witness listens and thinks will the witness answer correctly;
- It avoids the appearance that the testimony was rehearsed; and
- If the witness thinks before answering, slips of the tongue are less likely.

Of course, pausing too long may give the trier of fact the impression that the witness is being too deliberate and is fabricating the testimony on the spot. One purpose of the conference is to establish a question and answer rhythm that flows, appears unrehearsed, and has a logical sequence.

PRACTICE TIP: Check local court rules for any rules or policies on instructions to give to witnesses. For example, in Los Angeles Ct R 8.78, attorneys are instructed to tell the witness to wait until the question is complete before answering and then to be responsive to the question.

Occasionally, a witness feels annoyed at having to spend valuable time in court testifying. As a result, the witness may try to hurry the proceedings along, often by trying to outguess counsel and the line of questioning. Such a witness, like other witnesses, must be warned not to anticipate questions and to let the examiner finish each question. Otherwise, the presentation of the case will suffer and the witness will not make a good impression on the trier of fact.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.35 3. Give complete, responsive answers but do not volunteer information

Advise the witness to answer only the question asked and not to volunteer information. Otherwise, the jurors may be diverted from the essential facts that you want to establish through the witness. Parties and party-related witnesses may especially seek to be helpful by volunteering information. Be sure to advise the witness that unsolicited testimony may be more helpful to the other side.

PRACTICE TIP: Again, check local court rules for any rules or policies on instructions to give to witnesses. For example, in Los Angeles Ct R 8.78 attorneys are instructed to tell the witness to be responsive to the question.

In rare situations you may want a witness to talk as much as possible. For example, if the witness has an extraordinarily winning personality, the use of questions permitting maximum self-expression may allow the witness to establish a rapport with the trier of fact. But for most witnesses, short direct questions seeking to elicit short responsive answers are preferable because they give counsel greater control over the presentation of the witnesses' testimony, making it easier for jurors to follow. Moreover, counsel has a greater likelihood of getting a desired response.

NOTE: The witness should be instructed not to argue with the opposing attorney when answering questions, because it will divert both the witness and the jury from focusing on the question and the truth in the answer. See §5.30 on witness demeanor.

If the witness is interrupted while answering a question, tell the witness to let the cross-examiner finish what he or she is saying, then courteously indicate that the witness had not finished answering and then calmly complete the answer. When the witness has finished answering, and the answer is accurate and complete, instruct the witness to stop speaking and wait for the next question.

If the cross-examiner appears confused or ignorant about the witness's occupation, or any technical terms used by the witness, it is up to the cross-examiner to ask a question. Instruct the witness not to attempt to educate the cross-examiner.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.36 4. Admit mistakes

Carefully explain to the witness that correcting one's testimony is not perjury and that a judge or jury will often be impressed by a witness who admits a mistake, even on a crucial point. It is far worse to espouse a point that can be disproved.

To catch any inconsistent statements the witness may have made, review the pleadings, depositions, witness statements, answers to interrogatories and requests for admission, and other documentation. Bring any inconsistencies to the witness's attention so that he or she will be properly prepared to deal with them on direct and cross-examination. For example, in an automobile accident case, a mistake might be corrected on direct examination as follows:

Q: How far from the intersection were you when you first saw the defendant?

A: More than 50 feet.

Q: Have you ever given anyone a statement on how the collision occurred?

A: Yes.

Q: When?

A: On the same day, right after the accident.

Q: To whom did you give the statement?

A: To a police officer.

Q: How far from the intersection did you tell the police officer you were when you first saw the defendant?

A: Five feet.

Q: Why did you say five feet?

A: Because the accident occurred so fast I thought it must have been a very short distance.

Q: Was that wrong?

A: Yes.

Q: Why?

A: It must be because I hit my brakes before the crash and slowed down, and I know it takes time to react, so it must have been more than five feet.

On preparing a witness to testify on direct examination concerning corrections to interrogatory or deposition answers, see §12.10.

NOTE: If the witness makes a mistake during direct examination, bring the mistake to his or her attention and correct it before cross-examination, if possible. On examining witnesses generally, see chap 11.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.37 5. Speak loudly

Tell the witness to speak loudly enough to be heard by the judge and the jury. To confirm that the jury can hear a soft-spoken witness, it may be wise to stand at the far end of the jury box while questioning the witness.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.38 6. Look at trier of fact, if possible

Instruct the witness to look at, and address his or her testimony to, the trier of fact, if possible. A witness who feels uncomfortable or unnatural doing this may be instructed to look at the examining attorney. Caution the witness never to look at the attorney who has called him or her when being cross-examined, because it may create the impression that the witness is being coached.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.39 7. Answer from personal knowledge; do not guess

Some witnesses are afraid to say "I don't know" or "I don't remember," thinking that each question must have an answer. A skilled cross-examiner can be extremely effective with such a witness by asking and obtaining answers to increasingly ridiculous questions. Inform the witness that there may not be an answer to every question and that if the witness does not in fact know or remember the answer, he or she should say so. For a jury instruction on failure to remember, see CACI 107 (witnesses). On jury instructions generally, see chap 20.

Explain that the witness should testify only about what he or she personally saw or heard. Warn the witness about the dangers of testifying to matters known only by hearsay, i.e., that such matters may be inaccurate and inadmissible. If testifying about a conversation, the witness should make clear whether he or she is paraphrasing or quoting directly. It is rare that a witness will remember a conversation verbatim.

NOTE: Remember to instruct the witness that if he or she does not understand the question or has any doubt about it, he or she should ask to have it restated.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.40 8. Testify "on the record"

Occasionally, during cross-examination, a witness who has been asked seemingly innocuous questions will then be asked a question for which there is no satisfactory answer. The witness then asks "Can we go off the record?" This response is worse than a harmful answer in that it highlights for the trier of fact a troublesome area in the case. Caution the witness against doing this. A witness should give the impression of being a neutral observer, not an advocate. Therefore, each question should be answered to the best of his or her recollection.

NOTE: This is more common during a deposition. Be sure to give this instruction to the witness before depositions and trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.41 9. Do not answer over objection

Instruct the witness that, if any attorney objects, the witness should stop talking until:

- The judge rules; and
- The witness is either asked a new question or instructed to answer the original question.

Occasionally, a witness who is impatient, short-tempered, or wants the trial to move more quickly will offer to answer a question over the objection of counsel. Caution the witness against doing this. Moreover, instruct the witness to answer more slowly and deliberately during cross-examination in order to give you time to interpose an objection, if necessary.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.42 10. Do not become hostile, especially during cross-examination

Warn the witness not to show anger or hostility at any time, and especially not during cross-examination. To help accomplish this, tell the witness that:

- You will object if opposing counsel is harassing him or her;
- The witness should ignore the tone of voice and attitude of the questioner and concentrate on the question;
- The jury will empathize with a witness and think ill of an attorney who badgers or argues with a witness; and
- The jury is interested in what the witness has to say.

Obviously, not showing anger or hostility is easier for some witnesses than others, but if you subject the witness to a skilled, penetrating practice cross-examination before the trial, the actual cross-examination may proceed more easily. See §5.64.

PRACTICE TIP: Emphasize that the witness should treat the attorney conducting the cross-examination politely. The witness should answer the questions responsively and not try to match wits with the cross-examiner. Nor should the witness appear to be an advocate for one side.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.43 11. Comply with court orders or rules

Review with the witness any ruling the judge has made on motions in limine. For example, if the court has ruled that no reference is to be made to certain matters, be sure the witness understands and neither deliberately nor inadvertently violates the court's order.

§5.44 E. Assess witness's personality

Evaluate the witness's personality to try to ascertain how his or her testimony will be received by the trier of fact, taking into account whether a bench trial or a jury trial is contemplated. Although it is impossible to change a witness's basic personality for purpose of trial, rough edges can be smoothed and offensive characteristics muted so that the case can be tried on the merits and not on the witness's personality. For example, it may be difficult for the trier of fact to empathize with a plaintiff who appears apathetic, remote, and unable to project. Instruct this type of witness to answer questions firmly and distinctly and not allow his or her voice to trail off at the end of an answer.

Similarly, a judge or jury may be rubbed the wrong way by an extrovert who is loud or cocky—in short, a "know-it-all." The attorney should initially flatter this type of witness by acknowledging his or her intelligence. Thereafter, instruct the witness to talk softly and modestly and not answer questions in a patronizing or condescending manner. Of course, certain witnesses have attractive qualities that the attorney may desire to work with. For example, an extrovert who is likable, pleasant, cheerful, and full of life may be asked questions that permit maximum self-expression.

© The Regents of the University of California

F. Preparing young children as witnesses

§5.45 1. Putting child at ease

A young child may be very frightened at the prospect of having to testify. Some attorneys, to help alleviate this fear, take the child and parents on a tour of the courtroom in which the trial will take place.

Analyze each child individually to determine how best to prepare that child. Some attorneys prefer merely talking with the child to learn what he or she remembers, while others prefer asking the child questions in a nonleading manner. It is hoped that by asking the child these questions, the child will be put at ease with answering questions. Counsel who use these methods believe that the child will naturally testify as to what he or she knows and that the testimony will not appear rehearsed.

§5.46 2. Types of questions

In appropriate circumstances, the court may allow an attorney to ask a child leading questions during direct examination to elicit accurate testimony. See, e.g., People v Tober (1966) 241 CA2d 66, 69, 50 CR 228; People v Goff (1950) 100 CA2d 166, 223 P2d 27. Similarly, leading questions may be permitted to refresh recollection. See Comment to Evid C §767. However, carefully prepare a young witness to testify and do not rely on the court's permitting you to lead the witness simply because the witness is young. Under Evid C §765(b), the court is required to take special care to protect witnesses under age 14 from undue harassment or embarrassment and to restrict unnecessary repetition of questions.

§5.47 3. Attorney-client privilege

The attorney-client privilege has been applied to statements made by a minor in response to questions asked by a guardian ad litem at the request of the minor's attorney, either to prepare the minor's answers to interrogatories or to help the attorney prepare for trial. See De Los Santos v Superior Court (1980) 27 C3d 677, 166 CR 172 (matters that minor communicates to attorney for purpose of prosecuting or defending action are subject to attorney-client privilege whether guardian obtains knowledge by presence at consultation between attorney and minor or secures information from minor for transmission to attorney). The rationale of De Los Santos appears to apply generally when preparing a minor to testify at trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

IV. PREPARING PARTIES AND PARTY-RELATED WITNESSES

A. Witness preparation before attorney conference

§5.48 1. Have witness review materials

Parties to the action or party-related witnesses (see definition in §5.1) should review their depositions, any declarations or affidavits they have given, answers to interrogatories, documentary or physical evidence affecting their testimony, and all other discovery material that might be referred to during direct or cross-examination. Many of these witnesses may not have given concentrated thought to the case for some time. A review enables them to refresh their recollection of the facts, thus saving time during the actual conference. Bear in mind, however, that an adverse party may request production of any writing used to refresh memory with respect to matters on which a witness testifies. See Evid C §771. For further discussion, see §§5.5-5.7.

Some attorneys encourage party or party-related witnesses to write down questions that occur to them while reviewing the material to bring to the conference, rather than telephoning when questions arise. This raises the issue of whether these written questions must be produced when requested by an adverse party under Evid C §771. One position is that the questions are nondiscoverable because the questions themselves do not refresh memory and are part of the attorney-client privilege. On attorney-client privilege, see Evid C §§950-962. However, if the questions themselves do refresh the witness's recollection, the court may find them discoverable. See Evid C §771. See also §§5.5-5.7.

§5.49 2. When witness should review material

The nature of the case will dictate when the witness should review the materials. In complex cases, it may be desirable to have each key witness complete such a review several weeks before the trial, to allow sufficient time for proper preparation of all witnesses. In less complex cases, the witness may review the material closer to the time of trial. In simpler cases, some attorneys make an appointment about a week before trial for each witness to come to the attorney's office separately, at which time the witness reviews the material in a separate room. Then the attorney meets with the witness to prepare him or her for trial. On attorney conferences generally, see §§5.22-5.25.

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Witness conference with attorney

§5.50 1. Timing and location

As trial approaches, schedule conferences with each witness you intend to call to testify at trial. The conferences usually take place at the attorney's office. The timing and number of conferences depends on the nature of the case, the number of witnesses, the time required to prepare each witness, and the anticipated length of the trial. In a complex business litigation case, for example, one or more days may have to be devoted to the preparation of each key witness. Insist that all witnesses, even busy professionals or executives, give adequate time to preparation. Schedule an initial conference with each witness early enough to allow additional meetings, if needed.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.51 2. Individual versus group conference

Typically, you will schedule individual conferences with each person you intend to call as a witness at trial. See §5.52 for advantages of individual conferences. You may consider holding group conferences to save time, particularly with a large number of parties or party-related witnesses, but see §5.53 for disadvantages of group conferences.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/5 Preparing Witnesses for Trial/§5.52 a. Advantages of separate conference

§5.52 a. Advantages of separate conference

Generally, preparing each witness individually has the following advantages:

- It allows the attorney to evaluate the relative strengths and weaknesses of each witness;
- It prevents each witness from using such similar language in his or her testimony that they appear to have been coached;
- It avoids clouding a witness's recollection about facts known personally compared to facts heard second-hand;
- It encourages each witness to disclose all he or she knows, when such disclosure might be inhibited by the presence of other witnesses; and
- It ensures that each witness receives sufficient individual preparation.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.53 b. Group conference: Waiver of privileges

Consider using a group conference to answer questions and review courtroom procedure either before or after all party-related witnesses have been separately prepared. Use great care in conducting this conference so as not to cause a waiver of the attorney-client or work-product privilege.

The attorney-client privilege extends only to communications made in confidence between client and attorney. Evid C §952. Anything you say to the client in preparation for testifying at trial is privileged, but the privilege is waived if the communication is revealed to a third person, unless that third person is:

- Someone who is present to further the client's interest;
- Someone to whom disclosure is reasonably necessary for the transmission of the information to the client; or
- Someone to whom disclosure is reasonably necessary to accomplish the purpose for which the attorney was consulted.

Evid C §952. See also Cooke v Superior Court (1978) 83 CA3d 582, 147 CR 915. In addition, the client waives the privilege if he or she discloses a significant part of the confidential communication to third persons, or consents to its disclosure. Evid C §912. See also Lohman v Superior Court (1978) 81 CA3d 90, 146 CR 171. On waiver generally, see Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 37 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

On special problems when the client is an entity, e.g., a corporation, see D. I. Chadbourne, Inc. v Superior Court (1964) 60 C2d 723, 36 CR 468; Evidence Benchbook, chap 37. On single versus group conferences for nonparty or nonparty-related lay witnesses, see §5.67.

§5.54 C. General preparation

Conduct general preparation for a party or party-related witness as with any lay witness as set forth in §§5.22-5.47, e.g., give the party or party-related witness the general instructions on preliminary matters (see §§5.26-5.31) and the general rules on testifying (see §§5.32-5.43).

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/5 Preparing Witnesses for Trial/ D. Prepare party or party-related witness for direct examination/ 1. Review witness examination plan/§5.55 a. Choice of witness

D. Prepare party or party-related witness for direct examination

1. Review witness examination plan

§5.55 a. Choice of witness

You should already know what facts must be established through each witness. See §5.19. However, after talking with the witness (see §5.24), you may choose to prove certain facts through one witness rather than another. For example, you may choose to introduce items of evidence that will be disputed, as to either foundation or substance, through a witness other than your client in order to avoid the risks of exposing the client to vigorous cross-examination.

EXAMPLE: In a domestic relations case, an accountant or a business partner, rather than a spouse, might be used to testify on the value of assets. In personal injury litigation, the plaintiff's attorney might use an employer to document lost wages.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.56 b. Review questions

At this point you may decide whether to write out questions or stick with your outline of areas of inquiry. The questions or outline may need to be revised, based on your initial discussion with the witness (see §5.24), your decision on which witness to use (see §§5.8-5.12), and your evaluation of the witness's personality (see §5.44).

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.57 2. Review law with witness

Consider discussing with the witness aspects of the law that are applicable to the case or to the witness's testimony. Review the legal positions of all parties, not just your client's legal position. The witness's understanding of how his or her testimony fits into the rest of the case may provide a better perspective and make the witness feel more comfortable when testifying at trial.

EXAMPLE: In a contract suit involving a dispute about the formation of the contract, you may wish to explain the law on offer and acceptance. Similarly, in domestic relations proceedings, when property is in dispute, you may wish to explain the concept of separate and community property.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.58 3. Review facts with witness

Review with the witness all aspects of the case that are relevant to his or her testimony (e.g., in a business case, review all important documents sent or received by the witness). Make sure that the facts are clear to both attorney and witness, and that both have the same understanding of the facts. Reviewing both favorable and potentially unfavorable aspects of the witness's testimony helps the witness's recollection and may prevent the witness from inconsistencies and errors that could be brought out on cross-examination.

In personal injury litigation, this review may include:

- A visit to the scene of the accident;
- Review of the facts giving rise to the injury;
- Complete review of past medical history;
- Review of the injuries arising from the accident; and
- Review of lost earnings.

PRACTICE TIP: A common tactic is to elicit potentially damaging testimony from a friendly witness on direct examination in order to blunt any adverse effect it may have if brought out during cross-examination. A witness's credibility is suspect when the witness can remember only the helpful facts.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.59 4. Review discovery with witness: Depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions

A review with the witness of his or her deposition, answers to interrogatories, and requests for admission will help the witness remember the facts and keep the witness from being trapped on cross-examination, e.g., by inconsistencies, errors, or other misstatements. For the same reasons, review with the witness any verified pleadings and declarations or affidavits the witness has signed.

If deposition testimony has been previously corrected under CCP §2025.520(a)-(f) (see §12.8), many attorneys prepare the witness to testify about the corrections and the reasons for them during direct examination to try to diminish the effect of the corrections on the trier of fact when mentioned during cross-examination of the witness. A corrected deposition transcript, or a deposition transcript that has not been corrected within the time allotted in CCP §2025.520(a)-(f), may be used at trial. See §12.9. Note that when a deposition is recorded both stenographically and by audio or videotape, the stenographic transcript is the official record for the trial and any subsequent hearing or appeal. CCP §2025.510(g).

Similarly, if it is discovered during the witness's preparation that answers given at a deposition or answers to interrogatories are incorrect, many attorneys believe that the witness should be prepared to testify on direct examination about the corrections and the reasons for them. On effective use of discovery during trial generally, see chap 12.

§5.60 5. Review documentary and demonstrative evidence with witness

Show all documentary and demonstrative evidence relevant to the witness's testimony, including documents that may be the subject of cross-examination, to the witness and review it in detail. On an adverse party's right to inspect writings used to refresh recollection, see §§5.5-5.7. Having the witness review the evidence before trial may save valuable court time at trial. For example, when laying a proper foundation to introduce documentary evidence, the witness may need to read a 10-page document before being able to say whether it is the document in question. Instead, after having the document marked for identification, laying a foundation might be handled in the following manner:

Q: Have you reviewed this document before?

A: Yes.

Q: Where?

A: With you in your office.

Q: Does your signature appear on this document?

A: Yes.

Q: Where?

A: On the last page.

Q: Is this the contract between you and the defendant?

NOTE: Familiarize each witness with the court's exhibit-marking procedures. The witness will then either be prepared to testify on the authenticity of documents to be introduced into evidence or will understand that the exhibit has already been marked.

On examination of witnesses during trial, see chap 11.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.61 6. Decide whether witness should use notes

It is preferable that witnesses not take notes to the witness stand because the use of notes may distract the jurors and make the testimony less credible. In complex cases, referring to notes or summaries may be unavoidable. Instruct each witness not to take any notes to the stand without your knowledge. Review with the witness any such notes before the witness takes the stand. On production of writings used to refresh recollection, see §§5.5-5.7.

PRACTICE TIP: Remind the witness that it is not his or her job to remember all important points, or everything he or she has said in response to a question or in preparation to testify. Rather, it is your job to ask the proper question to cover all important points, and the witness need only answer the questions.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.62 7. Practice direct examination

After discussing every aspect of the case relevant to the testimony (see §§5.54-5.61), take the witness through a practice direct examination. Some attorneys conduct a practice examination at least twice. The initial examination is done slowly with time for interruptions, comments, questions, and suggestions. Even the most basic preliminary questions, such as address, age, and employment, are asked. Then the examination is redone without the interruptions, as though in court. If a witness will not testify until late in a long trial, it may be necessary to run through the witness's testimony again just before the witness testifies.

NOTE: Do not use leading questions. On leading questions generally, see §11.54.

During practice examinations, tell the witness that you might vary the order of the questions or phrase them in slightly different language at trial. Conduct the practice examinations in this fashion to avoid flat, dull testimony, and the appearance of having rehearsed the testimony. The goal of preparation is to help the witness testify in a natural and spontaneous manner.

© The Regents of the University of California

E. Prepare party or party-related witness for cross-examination

§5.63 1. Attorney preparation

In addition to what has been previously stated about attorney preparation (see §§5.2-5.21), prepare for cross-examination by trying to imagine all the ways in which the witness or the witness's testimony could be attacked. The attorney should try to imagine the methods that opposing counsel may use in mounting such attacks. For example, is the cross-examiner a shouter or soft-spoken? Will he or she try to intimidate the witness or quietly prepare a trap?

A strategy may then be devised to meet, blunt, or avoid the attacks. For example, you may decide to elicit potentially damaging testimony on direct examination to reduce its impact if it is brought out during cross-examination.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/5 Preparing Witnesses for Trial/§5.64 2. Witness preparation

§5.64 2. Witness preparation

In preparing the witness to withstand cross-examination:

- Review all adverse evidence relevant to the witness's testimony and the manner and context in which it is likely to be raised;
- Instruct the witness that, before answering adverse counsel's questions about a document, the witness should ask to see it;
- Subject the witness to a practice cross-examination;
- Conduct the examination in a similar manner to that anticipated at trial;
- Ask questions that force the witness to discuss subject matter out of context;
- Push the witness and attempt to make the witness angry during the examination to simulate what the witness may face during trial; and
- Advise the witness not to be lulled into a false sense of security by a seemingly friendly or soft-spoken cross-examiner.

Anticipate all possible areas of inquiry and prepare the witness for any contingency. For example, although you intend to move in limine to prevent the opposing party from mentioning the witness's felony conviction during trial, prepare the witness to deal with questions about the conviction if the motion is denied. On motions in limine generally, see chap 7.

PRACTICE TIP: Some attorneys, not wanting to upset a witness or fearing a loss of confidence, have another attorney in the firm conduct the mock cross-examination.

© The Regents of the University of California

V. PREPARING NONPARTY LAY WITNESSES

§5.65 A. General preparation; no attorney-client privilege

The basic considerations of preparing parties and party-related witnesses apply to preparing other lay witnesses who are not parties or party-related. Conduct general preparation as with any lay witness as set forth in §§5.22-5.47, e.g., give the general preliminary instructions (see §§5.26-5.31) and the general rules on testifying (see §§5.32-5.43). Review with the witness the relevant law and portions of the case so that he or she grasps the importance of his or her testimony. See §5.57.

Bear in mind, however, that the attorney-client privilege does not apply to communications made between a nonparty lay witness and the attorney during the witness's preparation. See Evid C §952. All discussions between counsel and the lay witness may be brought out at trial.

Contact nonparty lay witnesses well before the trial date to find out their availability. Because neither the attorney nor the client can exert control over such a witness, it may be necessary to prepare the witness at his or her home, in the evening, or on weekends, so as not to antagonize the witness or interfere with the witness's workday.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/5 Preparing Witnesses for Trial/§5.66 B. Witness preparation before attorney conference

§5.66 B. Witness preparation before attorney conference

Send the witness a copy of:

- Witness's deposition, if one was taken; and
- Any statement the witness has given, including verified pleadings, declarations, and affidavits, if the opposition has a copy.

If the opposition does not have a copy of the witness's statement, it may be preferable not to send a copy of it to the witness to preclude opposing counsel from obtaining it under Evid C §771 as a writing the witness used to refresh his or her recollection. If the witness does use the statement to refresh his or her recollection, any work-product privilege that may have attached will have been waived. See §§5.5-5.7.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.67 C. Individual versus group conference

Generally, prepare the witnesses individually as you would with party and party-related witnesses. See §§5.51-5.52. However, as noted in §5.65, conversations between counsel and a nonparty or non-party-related lay witness are not subject to the attorney-client privilege. See Evid C §952. On attorney-client privilege and other issues arising from single versus group conferences, see §§5.51-5.52.

§5.68 D. Witness compensation

Occasionally, a witness's employer will refuse to pay the witness wages for time lost while testifying, or sometimes a witness will insist that he or she cannot afford to lose a day's wages or incur any other expenses to testify. In this situation, a party may, under Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-310(B), agree to pay the witness:

- Expenses reasonably incurred by the witness in attending or testifying;
- Reasonable compensation for the witness's time lost in attending or testifying; and
- For an expert witness, a reasonable fee (see §5.83).

See Los Angeles County Bar Ass'n Informal Ethical Opinion 1954-6. See also §4.43. Doing so, however, may open the door for broad cross-examination on compensation, i.e., whether the witness is being paid to testify, and possible bias. See Crutchfield v Davidson Brick Co. (1942) 55 CA2d 34, 130 P2d 183.

An attorney cannot condition the payment of a witness's fee on the content of the witness's testimony or on the outcome of the case. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-310(B). It is important to establish that reimbursement for expenses has already been paid, to avoid giving the impression that the attorney could withhold payment if the witness's testimony were unfavorable. "[A] contract to pay a witness for testifying where the payment is made contingent upon the success of the litigation is against public policy, since such a contract offers an inducement to perjury." Pelkey v Hodge (1931) 112 CA 424, 425, 296 P 908.

NOTE: For discussion of the prohibition against compensating an expert/consultant with a contingent fee arrangement, see Ojeda v Sharp Cabrillo Hosp. (1992) 8 CA4th 1, 10 CR2d 230.

If the witness is to be reimbursed, the subject might be approached on direct examination as follows:

Q: Have we met to discuss your testimony?

A: Yes.

Q: Are you being paid anything to come to court to testify?

A: Yes.

Q: How much?

A: I was paid _ _ _ _ _ _ dollars.

Q: What does that sum cover?

A: It covers _ _ _ _ _ dollars for overnight lodging, _ _ _ _ _ dollars for transportation, and _ _ _ _ _ dollars for lost wages.

Q: Has that sum been paid?

A: Yes.

NOTE: Some attorneys choose not to cover the subject on direct examination and simply leave it for cross-examination, believing that the trier of fact will give little weight to the fact that the witness was paid only out-of-pocket expenses.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.69 E. Direct and cross-examination

The same considerations for preparing party or party-related witnesses apply to preparing nonparty or non-party-related lay witnesses for direct and cross-examination. See §§5.55-5.64. On occasion, counsel may decide not to subject a friendly lay witness to a tough mock cross-examination, so as not to alienate the witness.

It is important to emphasize that the witness not try to be an advocate, but to testify truthfully and in a dispassionate manner. When finished testifying, the witness should leave the courtroom without talking to any party, any witness, or the attorneys. See §5.30.

© The Regents of the University of California

VI. PREPARING EXPERT WITNESSES

§5.70 A. Expert witness defined

A person is qualified to testify as an expert if he or she has enough special knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education to qualify as an expert on the subject to which the testimony relates. Evid C §720. An expert may testify in the form of an opinion. See Evid C §§721, 801-805. An expert may be a person with an academic background or may be a "lay expert," i.e., someone who qualifies as such by reason of experience, with or without having earned a university degree in a particular area. See, e.g., People v Smith (1956) 142 CA2d 287, 298 P2d 540 (laboratory technician with 16 years' experience was qualified to give opinion involving learning and experience in chemistry although he held no university degree in that science).

NOTE: The court has power to limit the number of experts called by any party. See Evid C §723. See also Horn v General Motors Corp. (1976) 17 C3d 359, 371, 131 CR 78 (fifth expert witness's testimony in product liability action held cumulative and was appropriately excluded).

Sections 5.71-5.90 contain an overview of expert witness preparation for trial. For further discussion, see California Expert Witness Guide, chap 12 (2d ed Cal CEB 1991).

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Attorney preparation

§5.71 1. Ascertain matters on which opinion is based

Identify all documentation on which the expert bases his or her opinion. When possible, obtain copies of the documentation well before preparing the expert for trial. The documents may include interrogatories, depositions, medical reports, reports of opposing experts, financial data, wage history, blueprints, diagrams, and literature in the field. For matters on which expert testimony may be based, see Comment to Evid C §801; Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 30 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009); 1 Witkin, California Evidence, Opinion Evidence §30 (4th ed 2000).

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.72 2. Understand terminology and subject matter

To properly prepare the expert, especially for cross-examination, become conversant in the expert's field. To do so, before preparing the expert, talk to other experts, read depositions and court testimony given by the expert in other cases, read the available literature, and actually experiment with any instrumentalities involved. An attorney who lacks a thorough understanding of the terminology and subject matter may be unable to phrase questions precisely enough to elicit the desired opinions. If necessary, before or during preparation, ask the expert for help in learning the terminology and the subject matter of the expert's field.

© The Regents of the University of California

3. Consider discoverability of expert's file

§5.73 a. Attorney work-product protection terminated when expert becomes a witness

Under CCP §2018.030(a), any writing that reflects the attorney's impressions, conclusions, opinions, legal research, or theories is absolutely privileged from discovery. Attorney work-product not in these categories is discoverable if the court determines that denial of discovery would unfairly prejudice the party seeking discovery in preparation for trial or would result in an injustice. CCP §2018.030(b). The work-product doctrine in CCP §§2018.010-2018.080 has been held to protect the work product not only during discovery, but also during testimony at trial. Kizer v Sulnick (1988) 202 CA3d 431, 440, 248 CR 712.

Bearing the above in mind, communications between the attorney and an expert hired as a consultant to assist the attorney in preparing the case constitute work product and are subject to the discovery limitations of CCP §§2018.010-2018.080. See Sanders v Superior Court (1973) 34 CA3d 270, 109 CR 770 (decided under former CCP §2016); Scotsman Mfg. Co. v Superior Court (1966) 242 CA2d 527, 51 CR 511 (same). Under CCP §§2034.010-2034.730, a party is not entitled to discovery of any information about an expert before the expert is actually named as a trial witness. See California Expert Witness Guide §8.18 (2d ed Cal CEB 1991).

NOTE: No work-product protection exists under CCP §§2018.010-2018.080 in an action between an attorney and client or former client if the work product is relevant to the issue of the attorney's breach of duty to the client arising from the attorney-client relationship. CCP §2018.080.

After it is reasonably certain that the consultant/expert will be a witness, however, the attorney work-product protection ceases to some extent. Generally, any product of the expert's services that qualifies him or her as an expert witness (i.e., information and opinions, including reports from the expert respecting the subject matter about which the expert will be a prospective witness) is discoverable. See CCP §2034.270; National Steel Prod. Co. v Superior Court (1985) 164 CA3d 476, 489, 210 CR 535 (decided under former CCP §2016) discussed in §5.74. However, it is not clear whether the product of the expert's services rendered exclusively in an advisory capacity continues to be subject to the work-product doctrine. See National Steel Prod. Co. v Superior Court, supra. But see Brokopp v Ford Motor Co. (1977) 71 CA3d 841, 857, 139 CR 888, in which the court, without distinguishing between the product of an expert's services rendered in an advisory or witness capacity, broadly stated that, once it becomes reasonably certain that the expert/consultant will testify, the attorney work-product protection ceases and the expert's knowledge and opinions are discoverable. It is generally accepted, however, that to the extent the reports embrace counsel's impressions and conclusions, the work-product doctrine gives absolute protection to that information. Kizer v Sulnick, supra. See Shadow Traffic Network v Superior Court (1994) 24 CA4th 1067, 1079, 29 CR2d 693. See also Rodriguez v McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1978) 87 CA3d 626, 649, 151 CR 399, criticizing Brokopp v Ford Motor Co., supra.

The initial designation of a party as an expert trial witness is not in itself an implied waiver of the party's attorney-client privilege. As long as the expert designation is withdrawn before the party discloses a significant part of a privileged communication, or before it is known to be reasonably certain that the party will actually testify as an expert, the privilege is not waived. However, if the party provides privileged documents or testifies as an expert, i.e., by stating his or her opinion in a declaration or at a deposition, the privilege is waived. Shooker v Superior Court (2003) 111 CA4th 923, 930, 4 CR3d 334.

NOTE: Under Evid C §721(a), an expert may be cross-examined about matters on which the expert's opinion is based and the reasons for his or her opinion. Once an expert is called to the stand to testify, neither the attorney-client privilege nor the attorney work-product doctrine applies to matters relied on or considered by the expert in forming his or her opinion. People v Milner (1988) 45 C3d 227, 241, 246 CR 713.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.74 b. Expert who serves as both adviser and witness

When an expert's report contains information and opinions given to the attorney both in the expert's capacity as a prospective witness and as an adviser to the attorney in preparation of the case, the report is subject to the work product limitations on discovery of CCP §§2018.010-2018.080. See National Steel Prod. Co. v Superior Court (1985) 164 CA3d 476, 489, 210 CR 535 (decided under former CCP §2016). But see Brokopp v Ford Motor Co. (1977) 71 CA3d 841, 857, 139 CR 888 (case discussed in §5.73).

An expert's report is considered to be advisory when it is designed to assist counsel in such matters as preparation of pleadings, the manner of presentation of proof, and cross-examination of opposing party's experts because these matters "are often reflective of the mental processes of the attorney." National Steel Prod. Co. v Superior Court, supra. A report that would qualify the author as an expert witness is one that contains the expert's findings and opinions that go to the establishment or denial of a principal fact in issue. National Steel Prod. Co. v Superior Court, supra. In National Steel, the court set forth the following three-step in camera inspection procedure for the judge to follow when deciding a claim of attorney work-product protection:

- The judge must decide whether the report in whole or in part reflects the attorney's impressions, conclusions, opinions, or legal research. If it does, it is absolutely privileged and cannot be discovered. If the report, or easily severable portions of it, does not reflect such attorney thoughts, the judge goes to the next step. 164 CA3d at 489.
- This and the next step apply only to the portions of the report that are not absolutely privileged. The judge decides which portions of the report are advisory and thus protected by the conditional work-product protection. The portions that are not advisory, if easily severable, are discoverable. 164 CA3d at 490.
- For the advisory portions of the report not subject to the absolute privilege, the judge decides whether good cause for its discovery exists that outweighs its conditional work-product protection. 164 CA3d at 490.

For further discussion of work-product doctrine for an expert hired as a consultant and later designated as a witness, see California Expert Witness Guide §8.16 (2d ed Cal CEB 1991).

On waiver of the attorney's work-product protection when material subject to it is used to refresh an expert's recollection, see §5.75. On procedure for disclosure of expert trial witnesses, demand for simultaneous exchange of information on each party's expert trial witnesses, and production of discoverable reports and writings made by an expert in the course of preparing that expert's opinion, see CCP §§2034.010-2034.730; California Expert Witness Guide, chap 10 (2d ed Cal CEB 1991).

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.75 c. Waiver of attorney work-product protection based on refreshing recollection

If material subject to the work-product doctrine is used to refresh a witness's recollection and if the witness is called to testify, the attorney work-product protection is waived. See Mize v Atchison, T. & S.F. Ry. (1975) 46 CA3d 436, 449, 120 CR 787 (work-product protection ceases when report is used to refresh witness's recollection and witness is then called to testify). See California Expert Witness Guide §8.14 (2d ed Cal CEB 1991); Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 42 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009). But see CCP §2018.030(a), which provides that a writing reflecting an attorney's impressions, conclusions, opinions, or legal research or theories is not discoverable in any circumstance.

On production of writings used to refresh a witness's recollection generally, see §§5.5-5.7.

§5.76 4. Review expert's file

Bearing in mind the discussion in §§5.73-5.75, carefully review all material in the expert's file before preparing the expert. Discuss with the expert in detail any material that is unclear or that appears to be detrimental to the case, to enable you to properly prepare the expert for direct and cross-examination.

§5.77 5. Review experiments, models, and demonstrations

Well before trial, verify with the expert the accuracy of any model or diagram the expert intends to use. Perform any planned experiments or demonstrations before trial to ensure that they will work at trial. On admissibility of experiments to support expert's opinion, see California Expert Witness Guide §§9.13-9.14 (2d ed Cal CEB 1991); Effective Introduction of Evidence in California, chap 23 (2d ed Cal CEB 2000); Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 30 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009). If a movie or slide projector or like machinery will be used during trial, it should be tested in the courtroom before trial begins. For discussion of documentary and demonstrative evidence generally, see chap 13.

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Prepare expert for direct and cross-examination

§5.78 1. Review with expert: Qualifications, publications, and other testimony

Review with the expert his or her qualifications to make sure that the expert will qualify as such at trial. For this purpose, the following checklist may be used for an expert with academic credentials:

- Formal education and courses taken, degrees received, and educational honors;
- Continuing education;
- Teaching positions held;
- Professional licenses held (e.g., member of the State Bar, licensed to practice medicine);
- Professional societies;
- Publications;
- Practical experience;
- Employment history; and
- Testimony given in other cases.

On general qualifications to testify as an expert, see Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 30 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009). On qualifying expert during trial, see §11.130.

Review every relevant article or book written by the expert and, when feasible, all relevant testimony given by the expert in other cases or proceedings. If anything is discovered that conflicts with the expert's anticipated testimony, discuss it with the expert, and be prepared, if possible, to distinguish it at trial. See §5.90.

In many cases, it is advisable to have the expert witness prepare an up-to-date resume or curriculum vitae for trial. Generally, the summary need not be submitted to the court before the expert testifies. Consult local court rules. Requesting an updated curriculum vitae may reveal new publications that should be reviewed for consistency with the expert's testimony.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.79 2. Explain applicable law

Explain to the expert all legal theories and defenses relevant to the issues on which the expert will testify. Doing so will help the expert to formulate a learned opinion, to understand the relevancy of his or her testimony, and to avoid being trapped on cross-examination. In addition, explain the relevant legal definitions so that the expert's opinions are not based on an incorrect view of their legal effect.

© The Regents of the University of California

3. Review opinion

§5.80 a. Phrasing opinion

Many experts deal in areas that have no absolutes, and are reluctant to express opinions without scientific certainty. When asked an opinion on a critical issue, an expert may say: "Medicine is an inexact science," or "I cannot be sure." Advise the expert that scientific certainty is not required in a court of law before an expert may express an opinion. People v Jackson (1971) 18 CA3d 504, 507, 95 CR 919.

The expert's testimony must, however, rise above an expression of mere possibilities. Jones v Ortho Pharmaceutical Corp. (1985) 163 CA3d 396, 209 CR 456 (reasonable medical possibility was not enough). See also Cottle v Superior Court (1992) 3 CA4th 1367, 5 CR2d 882 (reasonable medical probability was sufficient); Abuan v General Elec. Co. (9th Cir 1993) 3 F3d 329 (reasonable degree of medical certainty required). For further discussion see California Expert Witness Guide §§5.1-5.10 (2d ed Cal CEB 1991).

The expert should be encouraged to express his or her opinion in positive terms, if possible, and avoid opinions phrased in terms of "could," "possibly," or "might be reasonable." See, e.g., Jennings v Palomar Pomerado Health Sys., Inc. (2003) 114 CA4th 1108, 1115, 8 CR3d 363 ("[I]t just sort of makes sense" that retractor caused infection not admissible expert opinion as to causation). An expert's opinion phrased in probabilities rather than possibilities, however, may be sufficient to meet the burden of proof. See, e.g., Estate of Rowley (1967) 257 CA2d 324, 65 CR 139 (medical expert's opinion on probabilities sufficient to support finding of survivorship).

The burden of proof in a civil case is usually by a preponderance of the evidence, unless otherwise provided by law. Evid C §§115, 502; Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 47 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009). On the preponderance-of-evidence standard, see §10.6; 1 Witkin, California Evidence, Burden of Proof and Presumptions §§35-37 (4th ed 2000).

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.81 b. Expert opinion on ultimate issue or legal conclusions

Evidence Code §805 provides that "testimony in the form of an opinion that is otherwise admissible is not objectionable because it embraces the ultimate issue to be decided by the trier of the fact."

EXAMPLE 1: In a breach of contract action, an expert could testify to the "custom and usage" in the business even if that testimony embraced the ultimate issue. Ecco-Phoenix Elec. Corp. v Howard J. White, Inc. (1969) 1 C3d 266, 271, 81 CR 849.

EXAMPLE 2: In a negligence action, an expert could state whether a given operation was a safe practice; if the subject is beyond jurors' common knowledge, the expert may express an opinion on the ultimate fact in issue if the expert has such opinion. State Compensation Ins. Fund v Operated Equip. Co. (1968) 265 CA2d 759, 765, 71 CR 531.

EXAMPLE 3: In an insurance "bad faith" case, it was not error for plaintiff's experts to give an opinion on whether defendant insurance carrier's conduct constituted bad faith. Neal v Farmers Ins. Exch. (1978) 21 C3d 910, 924, 148 CR 389.

On the other hand, a court may preclude an expert witness from testifying on the ultimate issue of fact when the jurors are fully capable of deciding the issue based on their own common experience.

EXAMPLE 1: The court excluded expert testimony on whether a road constituted a dangerous condition because the jurors, using their own experience, could decide that issue; thus, expert opinion was not needed on that ultimate question. Kennemur v State (1982) 133 CA3d 907, 926, 184 CR 393.

EXAMPLE 2: An expert was permitted to testify on general principles of social psychology but was not allowed to give an opinion on a confession's reliability; having educated the jurors, they were as qualified as an expert to make the decision. People v Page (1991) 2 CA4th 161, 2 CR2d 898.

EXAMPLE 3: Permitting a human resources management expert to testify that certain facts in evidence in a wrongful termination case were "indicators" of employer retaliation was an abuse of discretion; the expert was in no better position than the jurors to evaluate the evidence and, absent unusual facts, jurors in employment discrimination cases can decide a party's motivation for themselves. Kotla v Regents of Univ. of Cal. (2004) 115 CA4th 283, 291, 8 CR3d 898.

A court may exclude expert testimony when it relates to legal conclusions. Applying the law to particular facts is a legal question that is not subject to expert opinion. To allow expert opinion in such circumstances would usurp the trial court's duty to instruct jurors on the application of the law to particular facts. Summers v A.L. Gilbert Co. (1999) 69 CA4th 1155, 82 CR2d 162 (attorney testifying as expert witness on issues of law usurped judge's responsibility to instruct jury on applicable law); Downer v Bramet (1984) 152 CA3d 837, 841, 199 CR 830 (court excluded expert testimony from two attorneys on whether ranch conveyed to husband by his employer constituted deferred compensation or gift). See Sheldon Appel Co. v Albert & Oliker (1989) 47 C3d 863, 884, 254 CR 336 (error for attorneys to be called as expert witnesses to give opinions on probable cause element of malicious prosecution tort).

For further discussion on what may properly be the subject of expert testimony, see California Expert Witness Guide §§2.1-2.5, 2.8, 2.10 (2d ed Cal CEB 1991).

§5.82 4. Demeanor

Experts are subject to the same personality quirks as other witnesses. An expert who is arrogant and refuses to admit the possibility of reasonable differing opinions may be discredited in the eyes of the trier of fact. The converse is also true. An expert who concedes points that should be defended may not be effective. A balance must be struck between appearing too authoritative and too unsure.

To help achieve this balance, assist the expert in marshaling as many facts as possible to buttress the expert's opinion. However, the expert should not be made to feel that his or her professional reputation depends on the outcome of the lawsuit. The expert witness should appear to the trier of fact to be impartial. Counsel should instruct the expert:

- Not to render opinions outside his or her field of expertise;
- To answer all questions on direct and cross-examination politely and succinctly without being humorous, evasive, or combative; and
- To avoid technical language whenever possible, so that the trier of fact can better understand the testimony. If technical language is necessary, the expert should be asked to define it or to discuss its meaning. For further discussion of witness demeanor, see §5.30.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.83 5. Compensation

Compensation to be paid an expert for his or her time is usually agreed on before preparing the expert for trial. It is against public policy to condition payment of the expert's compensation on the success of the litigation. Pelkey v Hodge (1931) 112 CA 424, 296 P 908. See Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-310(B). On court-appointed experts and their compensation, see Evid C §§730-733. On the requirement that the party requiring the appearance of another party's expert compensate that expert, and for exceptions, see Govt C §68092.5 (trial or hearing fees) and CCP §§2034.440-2034.460 (deposition fees). See also §4.43.

Instruct the expert to be candid about compensation. Attorneys often attempt to bring out the fact and the amount of compensation during direct examination to avoid the expert's testimony being discredited by its disclosure during cross-examination. On direct examination of expert about compensation, see §11.145.

§5.84 6. Review facts and bases for expert's testimony

Evidence Code §§801-804 set forth the permissible bases for an expert's opinion. Under Evid C §801(b), an expert may testify in the form of an opinion based on matters that are:

- Perceived by or personally known to the witness or made known to him or her at or before the hearing, whether or not admissible (including the witness's special knowledge, skill, experience, training, and education);
- Of a type that may reasonably be relied on by an expert in forming an opinion; and
- Not precluded by law from being used as a basis for his or her opinion.

If a portion of the matter relied on by the expert is improper, his or her opinion may nevertheless be admissible if a proper basis remains for the opinion, excluding from consideration the improper portion. Evid C §803. For further discussion of the bases for an expert's opinion, see §§11.134-11.139; California Expert Witness Guide, chap 4 (2d ed Cal CEB 1991); Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 30 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

Discuss the principles expressed in Evid C §§801-804 with the expert and then critically review all material on which the expert's opinion will be based. (This process helps to prevent objections to the expert's testimony at trial on the ground that the expert's opinion is based on improper matter.) Then review with the expert all facts and assumptions relevant to the expert's testimony, depositions taken of the expert in the present case, the expert's opinion, and all the reasons for the opinion. At trial, during direct examination, the expert may testify as to the reasons for his or her opinion and the matter on which the opinion is based. Evid C §802.

Review with the expert all publications referred to, considered, or relied on by the expert in forming his or her opinion. If they are at all inconsistent with the expert's testimony, discuss the inconsistencies with the expert, and, if possible, distinguish them at trial. See §5.90. During trial, the expert may be cross-examined on the contents of those publications. Evid C §721(b)(1)-(3). See §11.151.

Learn whether the expert has given prior testimony or depositions that may be inconsistent with his or her testimony in your case. If so, prepare the expert to explain the discrepancy.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.85 7. Using hypothetical questions to elicit opinion

Decide whether it is necessary to use a hypothetical question to elicit the expert's opinion. If it is not necessary, many attorneys prefer not to use such a format. See §11.144.

§5.86 a. What facts to use

A hypothetical question may be used to make facts known to an expert who does not possess personal knowledge, to enable the expert to testify in the form of an opinion. See Evid C §801(b). To avoid having opposing counsel object to the hypothetical question, the facts assumed in it must be shown by the evidence. People v Denman (1918) 179 C 497, 177 P 461. The question may be framed to accord with your theory of what the material facts are as shown by that evidence, and it need not include all the evidence. People v Hill (1897) 116 C 562, 566, 48 P 711. See also Treadwell v Nickel (1924) 194 C 243, 228 P 25.

For further discussion, see Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 30 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

§5.87 b. Prepare in advance

Hypothetical questions should be prepared before trial. It is helpful to write them out. The expert may assist in preparing the question to be sure that the question is technically accurate and complete. Review with the expert in detail:

- The hypothetical question;
- Each assumed fact in it;
- The theory on which the question is based;
- The expert's opinion; and
- The expert's reasons for the opinion.

PRACTICE TIP: Local court rules or policies may have some requirements concerning hypothetical questions, e.g., that counsel who proposes to ask an expert a hypothetical question first submit the question in writing unless the court directs otherwise. Ascertain before trial whether any local rules or policies cover hypothetical questions and whether the trial judge has any requirements in this regard. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.85 (hypothetical questions need not be submitted in writing unless requested by judge).

PRACTICE TIP: During the chambers conference, ask whether the trial judge has any requirements on hypothetical questions, e.g., that they be prepared and submitted in advance in written form.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.88 c. Anticipate questions about expert's prior review of hypothetical question

At trial, the credibility of the expert's testimony may be questioned by the trier of fact if it is not brought out on direct examination that the expert has reviewed the hypothetical question beforehand. Consider bringing this issue out on direct examination in the following manner:

Q: In our discussion last week, did I ask you to assume that certain facts are true?

A: Yes.

Q: What did I ask you to assume as true?

A: [Expert relates assumed facts.]

Q: Based on these assumed facts, do you have an opinion on whether the defendant's conduct fell below the standard of care of physicians practicing neurology in this area?

A: Yes.

Q: What is your opinion?

A: [Expert gives opinion.]

Q: Would you please explain the reasons for your opinions?

A: [Expert discusses reasons.]

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.89 d. Anticipate cross-examination on hypothetical question

Opposing counsel may attempt on cross-examination to discredit the expert's opinion by changing the assumed facts embraced within the hypothetical question so as to conform to the cross-examiner's theory of the case, or to ask the expert whether his or her opinion would be different if one of the assumed facts were lacking. Anticipate the thrust of cross-examination and prepare the expert accordingly. See §5.90.

Hypothetical questions asked on cross-examination containing facts not shown by the evidence are objectionable. See McCann v Children's Home Soc'y (1917) 176 C 359, 168 P 355; MacCoy v Gage (1918) 38 CA 672, 177 P 296. Wide latitude is permitted in testing an expert's credibility, however, and an exception to the rule (cannot use facts not in evidence) appears to apply when the purpose of the hypothetical is to test the expert's accuracy or competency, as long as the hypothesis in the question is supported by some evidence. People v Busch (1961) 56 C2d 868, 874, 16 CR 898 (evidence, although meager, supported hypothesis). For further discussion on use of hypothetical questions on direct and cross-examinations, see §§11.141, 11.147. See also California Expert Witness Guide §§13.9-13.12, 15.29-15.31 (2d ed Cal CEB 1991).

§5.90 8. Practice direct and cross-examination

Practice direct and cross-examination with the expert. Arrange questions in a sequence that maximizes the expert's impact on the trier of fact. Verify with the expert that the wording in each question is technically accurate and that you both agree on its meaning. When technical language cannot be avoided, have the expert define it for the trier of fact. See §§11.130-11.145 for the content of direct examination of an expert.

Be sure to anticipate cross-examination of the expert by opposing counsel. An expert may be cross-examined to the same extent as any other witness. Evid C §721(a). In addition, under §721(a), an expert may be fully cross-examined as to:

- The expert's qualifications;
- The subject to which his or her expert testimony relates; and
- The matter on which the expert's opinion is based and the reasons for his or her opinion.

The cross-examiner may also ask about the expert's compensation. Evid C §722(b). See §11.148 for the content of cross-examination of an expert witness.

Carefully review all facts and bases of the expert's opinion (see §5.71), and all assumed facts within any hypothetical question (see §5.86), with a view toward anticipating cross-examination. If the expert is not properly prepared for cross-examination, the expert's testimony may be discredited. The following sample cross-examination in a personal injury case by plaintiff's attorney of defendant's medical expert illustrates this point:

> Q: You testified in answer to a hypothetical question that in your opinion, Mr. _ _ _ _ _ _'s injuries were not caused by the accident but rather by the natural progression of preexisting arthritis.
> A: Yes.
> Q: It was assumed that he had a flare-up of symptoms without associated trauma a year and a half after the accident.
> A: Yes.
> Q: I would like to change that assumption. Assume no flare-up of symptoms occurred a year and a half after the accident. Would your opinion change?
> A: Yes.
> Q: Would it be your opinion that, if there were no sudden flare-ups without trauma, all of Mr. _ _ _ _ _ _'s symptoms would be due to this accident?
> A: Yes, that would be a fair way to state it.
> Q: Please show me in the medical records where plaintiff complained of a sudden flare-up of symptoms without associated trauma.
> A: [After many minutes of review in silence, with much page flipping] There are no such entries.

The cross-examiner might then continue to emphasize the point. On cross-examining expert generally, see §§11.146-11.151.

VII. ETHICAL CONSIDERATIONS

A. Potential perjury by client

§5.91 1. Understand professional rules

An attorney may not knowingly allow a witness to testify falsely. See Bus & P C §6068(d); Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-200; In re Branch (1969) 70 C2d 200, 74 CR 238; People v Pike (1962) 58 C2d 70, 22 CR 664. To do so may subject the attorney to criminal prosecution and disciplinary proceedings. See Pen C §127 (subornation of perjury); Bus & P C §§6077, 6106, 6128(a); In re Branch, supra; In re Jones (1929) 208 C 240, 280 P 964. See also In re Allen (1959) 52 C2d 762, 344 P2d 609. "[A]n attorney owes no duty to offer on his client's behalf testimony which is untrue." In re Branch (1969) 70 C2d 200, 210, 74 CR 238. See People v Davis (1957) 48 C2d 241, 309 P2d 1.

Under Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-200, an attorney, when presenting a matter to a tribunal:

> (B) Shall not seek to mislead the judge, judicial officer, or jury by an artifice or false statement of fact or law.

See also Bus & P C §6068(d), which uses similar language.

© The Regents of the University of California

2. What to do if perjury threatened

§5.92 a. Explain ramifications of perjury

An attorney who discovers that a client intends to commit perjury should try to persuade the client not to, explaining the possible ramifications (e.g., adverse impact if perjury is learned on cross-examination, prosecution for perjury). In People v Brown (1988) 203 CA3d 1335, 1339 n1, 250 CR 762, the court noted that an attorney must first try to persuade the client to testify truthfully and if unsuccessful the client must be advised of the consequences of perjury and that the attorney will be forced to move to withdraw if the client still intends to testify falsely. See §5.93. However, in People v Johnson (1998) 62 CA4th 608, 623, 624, 72 CR2d 805, the court declined to follow People v Brown and offered the narrative approach, in which the attorney allows the defendant to take the stand but does not participate. The defendant testifies in a free narrative manner and in the closing argument the attorney does not include any of the defendant's false testimony. In People v Jennings (1999) 70 CA4th 899, 83 CR2d 33, the court allowed the defendant's attorney to limit the scope of his direct examination based on the understanding that further questions might result in the defendant testifying falsely. See also People v Guzman (1988) 45 C3d 915, 944 n8, 248 CR 467, overruled on other grounds in Price v Superior Court (2001) 25 C4th 1046, 1069 n13, 108 CR2d 409. On ethical considerations after client has already committed perjury during trial, see §§11.155-11.161.

§5.93 b. Withdraw from representation

Under Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-700(B)(2), the attorney's withdrawal is mandatory if the attorney knows or should know that his or her continued employment will result in violating the Rules of Professional Conduct or the State Bar Act (Bus & P C §§6000-6228).

Even if it is unclear whether continued employment will result in a violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct, Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-700(C) provides in part that the attorney may withdraw if the client "seeks to pursue an illegal course of conduct … insists that the member [of the State Bar] pursue a course of conduct that is illegal or that is prohibited under these rules or the State Bar Act," or if continued employment may "result in a violation of these rules or of the State Bar Act."

If, after you explain the ramifications of perjury to the client (see §5.92), the client still insists on testifying falsely, it appears that the attorney must attempt to withdraw except as discussed in §5.94. Business and Professions Code §6068(e) provides that it is the attorney's duty to "maintain inviolate the confidence, and at every peril to himself or herself to preserve the secrets, of his or her client." (For definition of "confidence" and "secret," see §11.153.) Therefore, withdrawal from further representation must be done in such a manner as to avoid foreseeable prejudice to the client's rights. See Bus & P C §6068(d)-(e); Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-700(A)(2), (B)(2), 5-200. See also Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-700(C)(1)(b)-(c), (2).

If the client will not consent to your withdrawing from representation, be sure that your motion to withdraw does not disclose that the client intends to commit perjury, because the intention to commit perjury would probably be construed under Bus & P C §6068(e) to constitute at least a "secret" if not a "confidence." See Bus & P C §6068(e); Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-700(A)(2); Los Angeles County Bar Ass'n Ethical Opinion Nos. 436 (Apr. 15, 1985), 417 (June 15, 1983), 353 (Feb. 12, 1976), 305 (July 25, 1968), 274 (Oct. 25, 1962), 267 (Jan. 26, 1960), 264 (July 30, 1959); §11.153. See also Evid C §§952, 954; People v Singh (1932) 123 CA 365, 11 P2d 73; State Bar of Cal, Standing Comm on Prof Resp & Cond, Formal Opinion No. 86-87. But see People v Brown (1988) 203 CA3d 1335, 250 CR 762 (defense counsel, during in camera hearing on his motion to withdraw, said he had told defendant that, if defendant testified as proposed, counsel would be suborning perjury; court noted that counsel acted according to ethical obligations of member of legal profession).

NOTE: An attorney has no duty under California rules to disclose prospective perjury. Although an attorney may have a duty to disclose future crimes, disclosure of future crimes is only permitted when the crime is likely to result in imminent death or substantial bodily harm. See Los Angeles County Bar Ass'n Ethical Opinion Nos. 436 (Apr. 15, 1985) (departure from standard expressed in earlier opinions), 353 (Feb. 12, 1976)).

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.94 c. Refuse to call client as witness

Instead of attempting to withdraw as indicated in §5.93, if the client cannot be dissuaded from committing perjury, consider explaining that you will not call him or her to testify or will only call him or her to testify on matters that he or she will testify to truthfully.

This approach will force the client to choose whether to continue with or terminate your employment. If the client decides to continue your employment, consider not calling the client to testify at trial or only calling him or her to testify on matters that could be testified to truthfully, although the client might argue that you do not have the authority to make a tactical decision as to whether to call a particular witness. However, there is some case law authority to support the position that when the attorney considers it to be detrimental to the client's best interests to call that witness, the attorney can refuse to call him or her even if the client voices opposition in court. See Blanton v Womancare, Inc. (1985) 38 C3d 396, 404, 212 CR 151; Nahhas v Pacific Greyhound Lines (1961) 192 CA2d 145, 13 CR 299. See also Linsk v Linsk (1969) 70 C2d 272, 277, 74 CR 544.

On the other hand, an attorney, unless specifically authorized to do so, cannot impair the client's substantive rights or causes of action. See Blanton v Womancare, Inc., supra; Linsk v Linsk, supra. Although it is unlikely when dealing with the issue of potential perjury that a court would construe an attorney's refusal to call a witness as an impairment of the client's substantive rights or cause of action, there is no California case on point. However, the safest practice is for counsel to attempt to withdraw (see §5.93) if the client cannot be persuaded not to commit perjury.

Before deciding to call a client to testify only on matters that the client will testify to truthfully, be aware that the client may commit perjury on cross-examination. Consequently, also advise the client against such perjury and discuss with the client beforehand the procedure that you will have to follow if perjured testimony is brought out during cross-examination, i.e., withdraw. See §§5.92-5.93.

NOTE: ABA Formal Opinion No. 87-353 (Apr. 20, 1987) is silent on whether disclosure of potential perjury in a withdrawal motion would violate the confidentiality protection of ABA Model Rules of Prof Cond 1.6. However, the opinion notes that, if the attorney is unable to effectively withdraw, he or she can refrain from calling the client to testify if all the testimony will be false. If only some of the testimony will be false, the attorney can call the client to testify and elicit testimony on only the subject matter that will not produce the false testimony. See Nix v Whiteside (1986) 475 US 157, 89 L Ed 2d 123, 106 S Ct 988 (attorney dissuaded client from giving false testimony by threatening to disclose intended perjury to court and by stating that he would withdraw if client so testified). Note that neither the ABA Model Rules of Professional Conduct nor Nix v Whiteside is binding on California attorneys in state court actions. People v Guzman (1988) 45 C3d 915, 944, 248 CR 467, overruled on other grounds in Price v Superior Court (2001) 25 C4th 1046, 1069 n13, 108 CR2d 409; State Bar of Cal, Standing Comm on Prof Resp & Cond, Formal Opinion No. 83-71.

On attorney's obligations on discovering that perjury has already been committed, see §§11.155-11.161. For further discussion of the problem of perjury in civil cases, see Martin, Perjury in Civil Cases, 4 Cal Law 65 (Dec. 1984). On withdrawal with client's consent, mandatory withdrawal, and permissive withdrawal generally, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 4 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/5 Preparing Witnesses for Trial/§5.95 B. Potential perjury by party-related or other witness

§5.95 B. Potential perjury by party-related or other witness

An attorney who fails to persuade a party-related (see §5.1 for definition) or other witness not to commit perjury should usually tell the client:

- That the attorney will not call that witness to testify or will question the witness only on matters that the witness will testify to truthfully;
- The consequences of such a witness testifying falsely; and
- That the attorney will be forced to withdraw if the client insists that the witness testify.

If the client still insists that the witness be called, you will have the same options as for a client/witness. See §§5.92-5.93.

© The Regents of the University of California

§5.96 C. Avoid improper coaching

The line between preparing a witness and coaching is often hard to draw. Avoid improperly coaching a witness, i.e., encouraging the witness to tell his or her story in such a way that it may comport more with what you want to prove than with what the witness may actually know from his or her own observations. Similarly, providing the witness with a script for testimony is improper and should be avoided. Although you may help the witness better articulate his or her story, keep in mind that the substance of the witness's testimony must at all times be based on facts known personally by the witness. Any language you suggest to the witness to clarify and accurately reflect what the witness is truthfully trying to say should be language that is natural for that witness.

Coaching a witness may border on subornation of perjury. See Pen C §127. When presenting a matter to a tribunal, an attorney "shall not seek to mislead the judge, judicial officer, or jury by an artifice or false statement of fact or law." Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-200(B). A finding of such an intention is punishable as a misdemeanor under Bus & P C §6068(d). An attorney who engages in such conduct may be subject to disciplinary proceedings or criminal prosecution. See Pen C §127; Bus & P C §§6077, 6106, 6128(a). See also §5.91.

EXAMPLE: An attorney who instructed clients to deny that they had children in order to obtain an annulment, and who filed an annulment action alleging that there were no children, was disciplined. Paonessa v State Bar (1954) 43 C2d 222, 272 P2d 510.

Even if your conduct does not violate any ethical standard, coaching witnesses may not produce the best results tactically. A coached witness risks losing credibility with the jury if the testimony given appears to be carefully rehearsed. In addition, a good cross-examiner can reveal that the witness's testimony is largely the product of his or her attorney, thus harming the credibility of both the witness and the attorney. For an excellent article on how far counsel can properly go in preparing a witness, see Piorkowski, Professional Conduct and the Preparation of Witness for Trial: Defining the Acceptable Limitations of "Coaching," 1 Geo J Legal Ethics 389 (1987).

VII. CHECKLISTS

§5.97 A. Checklist: Preparing witnesses for trial

___ 1. Explain the attorney-client privilege to the witness. See §§5.23, 5.51-5.52. If the witness is not a party or party-related witness, the attorney-client privilege will not apply. See §5.65.

___ 2. Have the witness give an initial recitation of the facts in narration form. See §5.24.

___ 3. Review with the witness the nature and purpose of the proceedings. This review should include courtroom procedure and what to expect in court. See §§5.27-5.31.

___ 4. Discuss applicable law. See §5.57.

___ 5. Have the witness review all applicable facts with the attorney. See §5.58.

___ 6. Review with the witness past depositions, answers to interrogatories, all documentary or demonstrative evidence, and all other material that may be referred to in deposition or trial. See §5.59.

___ 7. Practice direct examination. See §5.62.

___ 8. Practice cross-examination. See §5.64.

___ 9. Consider a full dress rehearsal. You may want to have another attorney play the part of the opposition (including objections) so that the witness will get a feel for the purpose.

CAUTION: Do not over-prepare the witness. Over-preparation can make the testimony seem prefabricated, too slick, or otherwise artificial. The testimony should be the best possible, but ultimately, it is the witness who testifies, and the witness should be perceived as a real person.

___ 1. Tell the truth. This should always be the first and fundamental rule of testimony.

___ 2. Pay attention at all times.

___ 3. Listen to the question and think before answering. Ask for clarification of any question that you do not fully understand.

___ 4. Give responsive answers. Do not volunteer information, but it is important to answer the questions asked. A nonresponsive witness can appear to a jury as shifty, untrustworthy, or trying to cover up.

___ 5. Ask to see any documents asked about and review them carefully before answering.

___ 6. Do not guess. It is all right to answer "I don't know" or "I don't remember" if that is the case.

___ 7. Admit mistakes, because anyone can make a mistake. Correcting mistakes is not perjury.

___ 8. Speak loudly, slowly, and clearly.

___ 9. Look at the trier of fact, i.e., the jury in a jury trial, or the judge in a bench trial. Although it is natural to look at the examining attorney since that attorney is asking the questions, testimony is given for the benefit of the trier of fact.

___ 10. Do not answer over an objection. If there is an objection, stop answering and wait until instructed to proceed with the answer.

___ 11. Testimony is always "on the record."

___ 12. Do not play lawyer. Do not try to figure out why a question is asked. This will distract from your answering the question fully and accurately.

___ 13. Keep calm. Do not argue.

___ 14. If the attorney appears to be asking harassing questions, remain calm and do not allow yourself to be baited.

___ 15. Be cooperative.

___ 16. Trial motions are strictly procedural and should not be taken personally. Do not view a motion to strike or an objection as an attack on your credibility.

___ 17. Do not take medications before depositions or trial testimony if possible, and, if unavoidable, tell the attorney the effect such medications may have.

___ 1. Critically review the facts of the case. Make sure that the expert's opinion has a judicially sound basis.

___ 2. Review the expert's qualifications.

___ 3. Review any relevant works (books, articles, presentations) written or produced by the expert.

___ 4. Review all materials consulted or relied on; every document expert should review before testifying.

___ 5. Review general information to acquire a working knowledge of the subject matter and terminology in the field.

___ 6. Have the expert prepare resume or curriculum vitae.

___ 7. Review with the expert all relevant facts and evidence.

___ 8. Explain the applicable law, including relevant legal theories and defenses.

___ 9. Practice direct examination.

___ 10. Practice cross-examination, anticipating the scope of opposing counsel's examination or cross-examination of expert.

___ 11. Review with the expert all publications or scholarly works that will be referred to.

___ 12. Review with the expert an attorney-client, work product, or other problems or privileges.

___ 13. Review with the expert the location of deposition or trial as well as general decorum, such as what to wear.

___ 14. Review deposition or trial procedures, e.g., where to sit, questions by judge or jurors.

___ 15. Inform the expert as to which parties and attorneys will be present, along with their interest in the litigation.

___ 16. Inform the expert of any habits or idiosyncrasies of other attorneys who will be present at deposition or trial.

___ 17. Review with the expert the contents of the expert's file; review what to bring to deposition or trial and what not to bring.

___ 18. Explain that an expert may express an opinion and the grounds on which such an opinion is permissible.

___ 19. Explain the rules on hypothetical questions.

___ 20. Instruct the expert to answer all questions politely and succinctly without being humorous, evasive, or combative.

___ 21. Instruct the expert not to attempt to render opinions on areas outside his or expertise.

___ 22. Instruct the expert to avoid technical language if possible or to thoroughly explain the meaning of the language if unavoidable.

___ 23. Instruct the expert to be candid about compensation.

___ 24. Instruct the expert on objection procedures and how to respond to objections.

___ 25. Instruct the expert to avoid arguments with other counsel.

I. SCOPE OF CHAPTER §6.1

II. CONFERENCES WITH TRIAL JUDGE
- A. Types of conferences: Final status/issue conferences and chambers conferences §6.2
  - 1. Final case management conference §6.3
  - 2. Chambers conference: Taking care of details for trial §6.4
- B. Checklist: Questions considered in final conferences §6.5

III. MOTION TO CONTINUE THE TRIAL
- A. Authority: Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332 §6.6
- B. Court has discretion to grant or deny motion §6.7
- C. Moving party must establish good cause for continuance §6.8
  - 1. Unavailability §6.9
  - 2. Other grounds for continuance §6.10
- D. Factors court must consider §6.10A
- E. Statutory grounds for continuance §6.10B
- F. Consider alternatives to motion §6.11
  - 1. Stipulation to continue §6.12
  - 2. Suggested alternatives to motion §6.13
- G. Seek continuance by filing a noticed motion or ex parte application §6.14
  - 1. Where to make motion or ex parte application §6.15
  - 2. When to make motion or ex parte application §6.16
- H. What to include in motion or application seeking continuance §6.17
  - 1. Show good cause §6.18
  - 2. Show due diligence §6.19
  - 3. Refute prejudice to opposing party §6.20
- I. What to include when opposing motion §6.21
  - 1. Lack of diligence or good cause §6.22
  - 2. Prejudice if trial continued §6.23
  - 3. Suggest alternatives or conditions §6.24
  - 4. Request expenses if motion granted §6.25

IV. DISQUALIFYING THE JUDGE
- A. Authority: CCP §§170.1-170.8 §6.26
- B. Seek to disqualify at earliest opportunity §6.27
- C. Obtain information about judges before the actual assignment §6.28
- D. Considerations when deciding whether to challenge judge
  - 1. Disadvantages of challenge §6.29
  - 2. Effect of disqualification §6.30
  - 3. Relationship between CCP §§170.3 and 170.6 §6.31
- E. Disqualification for cause (CCP §170.3)
  - 1. Grounds: CCP §170.1 §6.32
    - a. Has personal knowledge of disputed facts §6.33
    - b. Acted as attorney in matter related to proceeding §6.34
    - c. Has financial interest in matter related to proceeding §6.35
    - d. Is a party or is related to a party §6.36
    - e. Is related to an attorney §6.37
    - f. Appears to lack impartiality §6.38
    - g. Has physical impairment that prevents proper conduct of proceeding §6.39
    - h. Has arranged for, or participated in discussions concerning prospective employment as a dispute resolution neutral §6.39A

2. Judge may disqualify self §6.40
3. Parties may waive disqualification
a. Judge may ask for an express waiver §6.41
b. Delay in asserting grounds results in waiver §6.42
4. Challenge by filing a verified written statement §6.43
a. What to include in statement §6.44
b. Verify statement §6.45
c. When to file §6.46
d. Whom to serve §6.47
e. Only one request unless additional facts discovered §6.48
5. Judge's authority after statement filed §6.49
a. Strike statement for no legal grounds §6.50
b. Strike statement as untimely §6.51
c. Proceed if statement was filed after trial or hearing begins §6.52
d. Proceed if statement filed after trial or hearing begins in single-assignment cases §6.53
e. Judge's additional specific powers §6.54
6. Judge's response §6.55
7. Determining judge's disqualification §6.56
F. Peremptory challenge under CCP §170.6
1. Grounds: Prejudice against party or attorney §6.57
2. Challenge judge by written or oral motion §6.58
a. Where to file §6.59
b. Limitations: One-challenge rule §6.60
c. Withdrawing or waiving challenge §6.61
d. Challenging in a second case §6.62
e. Challenge does not require continuance §6.63
3. When to make motion §6.64
a. General rule: Before trial or hearing §6.65
b. If only one judge §6.66
c. If judge known 10 days before hearing: 10-day/5-day rule §6.67
d. If judge assigned by master calendar §6.68
e. If judge assigned for all purposes §6.69
f. Law and motion judge §6.70
g. If already appeared before judge in case §6.71
h. After appeal §6.72
i. New trial after writ §6.73
j. In coordinated proceeding §6.74
4. What to include in motion: Affidavit or declaration to establish prejudice §6.75
5. Opposing the motion §6.76
6. Judge disqualified and case transferred §6.77
G. Availability of extraordinary relief §6.78

V. DISMISSING CASE
A. Voluntary dismissal
1. Authority: CCP §581(c) §6.79
2. Right to voluntary dismissal not absolute §6.79A
3. Using dismissal as a trial tactic §6.80
4. Filing request to voluntarily dismiss §6.81
5. When to request dismissal: Before trial §6.82
6. Effect of dismissal
a. If dismissed without prejudice §6.83
b. If dismissed with prejudice §6.84
c. Defendant can recover costs §6.85
B. Involuntary dismissal §6.86

VI. AMENDING PLEADINGS
A. Authority (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1324); grounds (CCP §§473, 576) §6.87
B. When to move to amend §6.88
C. Making noticed motion to amend
1. Using written motion §6.89
2. Using amended pleadings that supersede original pleadings §6.90
D. What to include in supporting papers
1. Notice of motion §6.91
2. Declaration; supporting memorandum and copy of proposed pleading §6.92
E. What to include in papers opposing motion §6.93

VII. JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS
- A. Authority (CCP §438); grounds for motion §6.94
- B. When to make motion §6.95
- C. Using written noticed motion or oral motion §6.96
- D. If opposing motion §6.97
- E. Court may allow a curative amendment and continue trial §6.98

VIII. MOTIONS TO BIFURCATE, SEVER, AND CHANGE THE ORDER OF TRIAL §6.99
- A. Motion to separately try certain defenses first
  - 1. Special defenses not involving merits §6.100
  - 2. Statute of limitations defense §6.101
- B. Motion to try certain issues first §6.102
- C. Motion for separate trial §6.103
- D. Motion to change order of proof §6.104

IX. EXCLUDING WITNESSES AT TRIAL
- A. Authority: Evid C §777 §6.105
- B. Purpose: Prevent witnesses from hearing, and being influenced by, other witnesses §6.106
  - 1. Advantages §6.107
  - 2. Disadvantages §6.108

X. MOVING TO DISQUALIFY ATTORNEY §6.109

XI. FORMS
- A. Form: Notice of motion to continue trial §6.110
- B. Form: Written statement challenging judge for cause (CCP §170.3(c)(1)) §6.111
- C. Form: Peremptory challenge and declaration in support of challenge (CCP §170.6) §6.112
- D. Form: Consent of client to continued representation by attorney who will testify at trial (Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-210) §6.113

§6.1 I. SCOPE OF CHAPTER

The chapter covers trial-related court conferences that take place after the initial case management conference under Cal Rules of Ct 3.720-3.730. See §2.61. These trial-related conferences may occur any time from weeks before trial to the day of trial. The initial case management order may set the date, time, or place of any further case management conferences as well as the final case management conference before trial. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.728. Depending on the trial judge's preference, trial-related conferences may be held in the judge's chambers.

Also discussed in this chapter are nonevidentiary motions or procedures most commonly encountered shortly before or on the day scheduled for trial, e.g.:

- Continuing trial (see §§6.6-6.25);
- Challenging the judge (see §§6.26-6.78);
- Dismissing the case (see §§6.79-6.86);
- Amending the pleadings (see §§6.87-6.93);
- Obtaining a judgment on the pleadings (see §§6.94-6.98);
- Bifurcating, severing or changing the order of trial (see §§6.99-6.104); and
- Excluding witnesses at trial (see §§6.105-6.108).

For evidentiary motions in limine, see chap 7. See California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chaps 12-13 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004) for discussion of motions generally.

II. CONFERENCES WITH TRIAL JUDGE

§6.2 A. Types of trial-related conferences

As trial approaches, the trial judge typically holds several conferences with counsel. See §1.26. One or more of these conferences may be devoted to evidentiary motions in limine. See chap 7.

Just before trial, the judge will probably meet with counsel to discuss how matters will be handled at trial. In single assignment courts, some of these matters may be considered at the final case management conference, which some courts refer to as a final issue conference or final status conference. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(h) (final status conference must be held no more than 10 days before trial date); San Diego Ct R 2.1.15 (trial readiness conference generally held 4 weeks before trial date); Contra Costa Ct R 5(K) (issue conference must be held within 14 days before trial date). In master calendar courts, some of these matters may be considered on the first day of trial.

PRACTICE TIP: Because trial-related conferences may be different in each county, it is important to check the local rules for conference requirements. In addition, consult with the particular judge's clerk, because some judges may have their own customary approach to trial-related conferences not reflected in local rules.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.3 1. Final case management conference

Many courts require a final case management conference shortly before trial. One purpose of this conference may include compelling the parties to complete many tasks that would otherwise take up time at trial. See checklist in §6.5.

Local rules establish the date of the final conference before trial and the requirements that the parties must fulfill either before or at the conference, e.g., that counsel

- Meet and confer to stipulate to as many facts as possible and to stipulate to the admissibility of exhibits to which no objection is to be made;
- File trial briefs at the conference; and
- Submit at the time of the conference a joint set of agreed-on jury instructions, as well as sets of additional instructions to which one party objects.

NOTE: To produce a set of agreed-on instructions requires counsel to exchange proposed instructions and to meet and confer before the conference.

In Los Angeles Superior Court, the parties must file and exchange at the final conference before trial (Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(h)):

- Lists of premarked exhibits;
- Trial witness lists; and
- A short statement of the case to be read to the jury before voir dire examination.

Many procedures that formerly took place on the day of trial are now handled at the final case management conference, allowing the trial to begin more expeditiously on the trial date.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: At the final case management conference, the judge may require counsel to present at least two sets of finalized jury instructions for the court: one for the judge's file and one for the jurors' deliberations. The court may also require counsel to meet and confer on all of the in limine motions so the judge will know which motions are agreed-on and which will require a ruling.

§6.4 2. Chambers conference: Taking care of details for trial

After a scheduled final case management conference, the judge and counsel may find that not all trial-related matters may have been addressed, e.g., the scheduling of witnesses or the judge's daily trial calendar. In this situation, the trial judge may invite all counsel to a chambers conference before trial to take care of the remaining housekeeping details about the conduct of the trial.

Chambers conferences are usually informal and are not reported unless a party requests a reporter. If a portion of the chambers conference will focus on arguments and rulings on motions and stipulations, counsel should request a reporter's presence at this stage of the chambers conference if the judge has not already done so.

NOTE: Some judges or attorneys may prefer to have all conferences take place in open court rather than in chambers.

___ 1. Does the trial judge have any knowledge about any party or witness? Should the judge be disqualified under CCP §170 or the California Code of Judicial Conduct? See §§6.26-6.77 for discussion of disqualifying the judge generally.

___ 2. Should the parties explore settlement possibilities? Generally, the trial judge will not participate in settlement discussions unless the parties agree and waive any disqualification that might arise because of such participation (see Los Angeles Ct R 8.21).

___ 3. Can the issues be narrowed or modified by stipulations or motions?

___ 4. Are there any potential time constraints for a party, counsel, or the judge, e.g., because of other commitments of counsel, a witness, or the court?

___ 5. If not addressed at earlier case management conferences, have issues raised by the pleadings been resolved? E.g.:

- ___ a. Have named or fictitious parties been served, dismissed, or answered, or are they in default?
- ___ b. Have any defaults been entered?
- ___ c. Have any causes of action been dismissed?
- ___ d. Have any law and motion, discovery, or summary judgment proceedings resulted in the dismissal or striking of any pleading or portion of a pleading or the adjudication of any factual or legal positions?
- ___ e. Are cross-complaints, setoffs, credits against judgment, liens, or pleadings-in-intervention pending?

___ 6. Is there any indication that the trial should be bifurcated? See §§6.99-6.104 for discussion of bifurcation and other trial ordering motions. E.g.:

- ___ a. Should liability be tried separately before damages?
- ___ b. Are there any special defenses (e.g., statute of limitations, prior judgment, another action pending, or other grounds for abatement) that should be tried first?
- ___ c. Are there any equitable defenses (e.g., laches, "unclean hands," waiver, or equitable estoppel) that need to be tried separately?

___ 7. What method for marking exhibits should be used? E.g., use that specified in Los Angeles Ct R 8.60-8.62, or another method if numerous exhibits.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Check with the clerk of the trial department as well as the judge to determine the judge's preference on marking exhibits.

___ 8. Are there motions in limine that have not been decided? Will judge decide motions before trial or on first day of trial? On motions in limine generally, see chap 7.

___ 9. In jury trials:

- ___ a. What are the proposed areas for voir dire interrogation?

___ b. What should be included in the brief statement outlining the case given by the trial judge to the jurors?

___ c. Are the parties willing to stipulate to fewer than 12 jurors?

___ d. How many alternate jurors, and will they deliberate?

___ e. Should jurors who express a desire to not sit for a long trial be excused?

___ f. How will multiple parties share the jury selection process? How many challenges will each side be permitted?

NOTE: See chap 8 for detailed discussion of jury selection issues.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Be familiar with the particular judge's approach to jury selection. For example, does the judge take charge of jury selection, leave it to the lawyers, or have some variation on these two approaches? Does the judge use a six- or 12-pack system of jury selection or a variation of it? See §8.33 for discussion of different methods of jury selection.

___ 10. What jury instructions does each party propose? See CCP §607a (proposed jury instructions covering the law as disclosed by the pleadings should be submitted before the time the first witness is sworn).

NOTE: Practices vary from judge to judge, but many courts prefer to begin discussion of jury instructions in pretrial conferences well before the trial date. See §20.34.

___ 11. Will any party request dismissal of one or more causes of action or parties?

___ 12. Are the parties willing to stipulate to those facts that lack substantial controversy?

___ 13. Will the parties stipulate to waive foundation and other objections regarding exhibits, tests, or experiments?

___ 14. Does any party intend to file motions in limine to exclude specified evidence or references to it? See chap 7 on motions in limine.

___ 15. Are any unusual or critical legal or evidentiary issues anticipated by parties?

___ 16. Does any party plan to move under Evid C §777 to exclude witnesses from the courtroom when they are not testifying? See generally §§6.105-6.108.

___ 17. Does the court intend to order preparation of a daily transcript of the trial proceedings? See Govt C §69953; Walton v Bank of Cal. (1963) 218 CA2d 527, 547, 32 CR 856; Corona Foothill Lemon Co. v Lillibridge (1936) 12 CA2d 549, 551, 55 P2d 1210. Will parties have "real time" transcription of the proceedings?

PRACTICE TIP: If the court does not order a daily transcript, a party can make arrangements with the court reporter to pay for a transcript to be prepared for the party's own use. See Walton v Bank of Cal., supra.

___ 18. Does the court intend to limit the length of opening statements, closing arguments, or any other portion of the trial proceedings?

___ 19. Will the court allow reference to exhibits or demonstrative evidence during opening statements?

___ 20. What technology will be used in the courtroom? How will parties share equipment, such as computers and monitors used to show evidence to jurors? On pretrial planning for demonstrations, experiments, photographs, and video recordings to be used at trial, see §13.39.

§6.6 A. Authority: Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332

Motions concerning trial dates, including continuances, are governed by Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332, which states: "[T]he dates assigned for a trial are firm. All parties and their counsel must regard the date set for trial as certain." Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(a). In ruling on a motion to continue the trial, the court will look at the factors set forth in Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(c)-(d). See §6.8.

Given the policy of the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act of 1990 (Govt C §§68600-68620), continuances are unlikely to be granted absent strong showings of good cause. On what is good cause, see §§6.7-6.10.

NOTE: Although acknowledging that continuances are disfavored, Rule 3.1332 states that "[e]ach request for a continuance must be considered on its own merits" (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(c)) and that in ruling on the request, "the court must consider all the facts and circumstances that are relevant to the determination" (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(d)). The change resulted from concern that courts were managing cases inflexibly and refusing to grant continuances "even when the circumstances warranted giving the parties more time." Judicial Council, Recommendations to Improve the Fair and Efficient Administration of Civil Cases (Oct. 8, 2003). In light of the changes to the Rule, counsel should evaluate carefully cases that predate the 2004 amendments.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.7 B. Court has discretion to grant or deny motion

The trial court has wide discretion in deciding whether to grant or deny a continuance, and its decision will be reversed only when an abuse of discretion is clear. Lynch v Superior Court (1906) 150 C 123, 88 P 708. Although some older appellate decisions contain language to the effect that courts should be liberal in granting continuances (see, e.g., Capital Nat'l Bank v Smith (1944) 62 CA2d 328, 339, 144 P2d 665), Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332 (former Cal Rules of Ct 375) dispels any notion that this policy of liberality is still valid. In County of San Bernardino v Doria Mining & Eng'g Corp. (1977) 72 CA3d 776, 780, 140 CR 383, the court noted that the philosophy of liberality, "if it even existed, is now obsolete."

Nevertheless, judges deciding whether to grant or deny a continuance must balance the need for judicial efficiency against the guiding principle that cases should be decided on their merits; the strong public policy favoring disposition on the merits outweighs judicial efficiency when the two principles collide. Oliveros v County of Los Angeles (2004) 120 CA4th 1389, 1394, 16 CR3d 638 (abuse of discretion to deny continuance solely because of its impact on trial court's calendar and without considering all facts, circumstances, and former Cal Rules of Ct 375 (now Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332) factors). See also Hernandez v Superior Court (2004) 115 CA4th 1242, 9 CR3d 821 (after plaintiff's counsel died of pancreatic cancer, abuse of discretion not to continue trial and reopen discovery to designate expert witness).

The denial of a continuance is reversible error when the trial court does not show due regard for all the interests involved and when denying the continuance has the practical effect of denying the applicant a fair hearing. Oliveros, 120 CA4th at 1394 (continuance requested due to attorney's unexpected scheduling conflict). On the factors the court is to consider, see Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(c)-(d).

PRACTICE TIP: If you must either proceed to trial or face dismissal for failure to prosecute, consider making a motion to sever under CCP §1048(b) in the alternative to the motion to continue (or consider arguing for severance when the motion to continue is heard).

Do not rely on getting the continuance. Be prepared to go to trial if the court denies the motion to continue.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/6 Court Conferences and Selected Pretrial Motions/§6.8 C. Moving party must establish good cause for a continuance

§6.8 C. Moving party must establish good cause for a continuance

Under Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(c), a party seeking a continuance must make an affirmative showing of good cause. Circumstances that may indicate good cause include:

- If counsel, parties, or essential lay or expert witnesses are unavailable due to:
- Illness;
- Death; or
- Other excusable circumstances;
- The substitution of trial counsel, but only if there is an affirmative showing that the interests of justice require the substitution;
- The addition of a new party if:
- The new party has not had a reasonable opportunity to conduct discovery and prepare for trial; or
- The other parties have not had a reasonable opportunity to conduct discovery and prepare for trial with regard to the new party's involvement in the case;
- A party's excused inability to obtain essential testimony, documents, or other material evidence despite diligent efforts; and
- A significant, unanticipated change in the status of the case as a result of which the case is not ready for trial.

A trial court abuses its discretion if it rules on a motion for continuance without considering these factors. Oliveros v County of Los Angeles (2004) 120 CA4th 1389, 1394, 16 CR3d 638. See Note in §6.6.

NOTE: The Rule 3.1332(c) list of factors that may constitute good cause for continuance is "simpler and broader" than that in former Cal Rules of Ct App Div I, §9. Judicial Council*, Recommendations to Improve the Fair and Efficient Administration of Civil Cases* (Oct. 8, 2003).

On motion for continuance or recess made during trial, see §§18.57-18.64. For more detailed discussion, including these statutory grounds, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial §§42.9-42.28 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.9 1. Unavailability

The unavailability of an essential lay or expert witness, a party, or trial counsel may be good cause for a continuance if the unavailability is because of death, illness, or other excusable circumstances. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(c).

CAUTION: In Carl v Superior Court (2007) 157 CA4th 73, 68 CR3d 566, the court held that the common attorney practice of filing notices of unavailability is an "impermissible infringement of the court's inherent powers" if the practice puts counsel in control of the court's calendar.

The court will decide whether the illness, even of a party, requires the trial to be continued. For example, a party's illness does not mandate a continuance if the trial court concludes that the party is able to attend the trial. Lewis v Neptune Soc'y Corp. (1987) 195 CA3d 427, 240 CR 656. If a continuance is requested because a witness is ill, but the testimony to be given by that witness is cumulative, denial of a continuance is not an abuse of discretion. 195 CA3d at 429.

Under normal circumstances, the death or serious illness of a party's trial attorney is good cause for granting continuance of a trial date. Hernandez v Superior Court (2004) 115 CA4th 1242, 1247, 9 CR3d 821 (citing former Cal Rules of Ct App Div I, §9; see Note, §6.6).

NOTE: A continuance that is too brief may be an abuse of discretion, as may the court's refusal to reopen discovery on granting the continuance. See Hernandez, 115 CA4th at 1247 (trial court abused discretion; grant of continuance conflicted with plaintiff's need for spinal surgery and new attorney's trial schedule; refusal to reopen discovery ignored fact that deceased attorney had been too ill with pancreatic cancer to prepare case properly).

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.10 2. Other grounds for continuance

Although the goal of prompt disposition of civil cases weighs against finding that a trial attorney's conflicting trial dates is sufficient reason to continue a trial, the trial court should not automatically deny a motion to continue the trial date made on such a ground. See Oliveros v County of Los Angeles (2004) 120 CA4th 1389, 16 CR3d 638 (counsel requested continuance in good faith due to unexpected conflict that arose on eve of trial). The court should weigh all the relevant factors before ruling. 120 CA4th at 1398. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(d), discussed in §6.10A.

The need for further discovery would not ordinarily be considered good cause for a continuance. However, if a new party has been added and, because of this addition, a party has not had a reasonable opportunity to conduct discovery and prepare for trial, then there might be grounds for a continuance under Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(c)(5). Similarly, a party's "excused inability" to obtain essential evidence despite "diligent efforts" may be good cause necessitating a continuance. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(c)(6).

On continuance because of adverse pretrial publicity, see §§2.45-2.49.

§6.10A D. Factors court must consider

The court must consider all the facts and circumstances relevant to its determination of whether to grant a motion for continuance. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(d). These factors may include:

- The trial date's proximity;
- Any previous continuance, extension of time, or delay of trial;
- The length of the requested continuance;
- Availability of alternate means to address the problem;
- Prejudice to parties or witnesses;
- Whether, if the case is entitled to preferential trial setting, the need for continuance outweighs the need for preference;
- Impact of continuance on the court's own calendar;
- Whether counsel is engaged in another trial;
- Whether all parties have stipulated to a continuance;
- The interests of justice; and
- Any other relevant fact or circumstance.

Judges deciding whether to grant continuances must balance these factors and not focus on just one, such as the impact on the court's own calendar. Oliveros v County of Los Angeles (2004) 120 CA4th 1389, 16 CR3d 638 (trial court should also have considered that continuance was requested in good faith due to unexpected conflict and that this was complicated case with many witnesses including experts).

§6.10B E. Statutory grounds for continuance

Statutory grounds for continuance are found in:

- CCP §473(a)(2) (amendment of pleadings);
- CCP §594a (postponement on court's own motion);
- CCP §595 (party, attorney, or principal witness is a member of state legislature);
- CCP §595.2 (written stipulation; see, however, §6.12);
- CCP §595.3 (mining claim);
- CCP §595.4 (absence of evidence; see §§6.14, 6.24); and
- 50 USC App §521 (party in military service).

On motion for continuance or recess made during trial, see §§18.57-18.64. For more detailed discussion, including these statutory grounds, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial §§42.9-42.28 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/6 Court Conferences and Selected Pretrial Motions/§6.11 F. Consider alternatives to motion

§6.11 F. Consider alternatives to motion

The trial-day continuance motion is a disruptive motion, because it upsets the schedules of parties, witnesses, and the courts. Because continuances are disfavored (see Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(c)), after determining that the trial should be continued, explore all alternatives to the motion.

PRACTICE TIP: Once it is clear that a continuance is necessary, make the motion as soon as possible.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.12 1. Stipulation to continue

Obtain opposing counsel's written stipulation to continue, if possible. Code of Civil Procedure §595.2 provides in part that in "all cases, the court shall postpone a trial … for a period not to exceed thirty (30) days, when all attorneys of record of parties who have appeared in the action agree in writing to such postponement."

NOTE: Despite its mandatory language, CCP §595.2 is directory, not mandatory, and the court may disregard the parties' stipulation. See Pham v Nguyen (1997) 54 CA4th 11, 62 CR2d 422 (court did not abuse discretion by denying parties' stipulated request for continuance); County of San Bernardino v Doria Mining & Eng'g Corp. (1977) 72 CA3d 776, 140 CR 383. Especially in cases subject to the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act of 1990 (TCDRA) (Govt C §§68600-68620), judges will probably disregard stipulations for continuances. The better practice is to present the stipulation to the court in the form of an ex parte application to continue the trial. See §6.14.

In cases subject to the TCDRA, the parties may make one stipulation for a continuance of up to 30 days, if made within 30 days after the service of the responsive pleadings and filed with the court. Govt C §68616(d).

See California Civil Procedure Before Trial §42.16 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004) on the policy against continuances.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Be sure to differentiate between the grounds for a continuance and the guidelines the court uses to determine if a case should be designated a 1-year, 18-month, or 2-year case under the differential case management rules of Cal Rules of Ct 10.900-10.901 and 3.710-3.735.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.13 2. Suggested alternatives to motion

One of the factors the court will consider in ruling on a motion for continuance is the availability of alternate means to address the problem that gave rise to the request for a continuance. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(d)(4). Therefore, before moving to continue, consider substituting other attorneys or witnesses and using depositions for missing witnesses.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/6 Court Conferences and Selected Pretrial Motions/§6.14 G. Seek continuance by filing a noticed motion or ex parte application

§6.14 G. Seek continuance by filing a noticed motion or ex parte application

A party seeking a continuance of a trial date must make a noticed motion or an ex parte application under Cal Rules of Ct 3.1200-3.1207, whether or not the continuance is contested or stipulated to by the parties. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(b).

Supporting declarations must accompany the motion or ex parte application. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(b).

NOTE: Even when not mandatory, declarations have been said to reflect the policy of encouraging prompt trial of lawsuits. See Cade v Mid-City Hosp. Corp. (1975) 45 CA3d 589, 600, 119 CR 571. Moreover, CCP §595.4 specifically requires that a motion for continuance on the ground of absence of evidence must be supported by an affidavit (or declaration under CCP §2015.5) "showing the materiality of the evidence expected to be obtained and that due diligence has been used to procure it." If the motion is based on the absence of a material witness, the court may require the moving party to state what evidence is expected to be obtained from the witness; if the adverse party stipulates that the evidence be considered as offered at trial, the motion for continuance must be denied. CCP §595.4.

Because most trial-day continuance motions will be based on last-minute developments, you will probably lack time to make a noticed motion and will need to use the ex parte application procedures in Cal Rules of Ct 3.1200-3.1207. See California Civil Procedure Before Trial §§13.1-13.14 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004). If by necessity you must make an oral motion (e.g., a witness is involved in a traffic accident on the way to court), make sure that a court reporter transcribes the proceedings in the event the motion is denied and the case is later appealed.

For discussion on procedure generally, see Civ Proc Before Trial §§42.25-42.27. For sample forms of notice of motion and declaration, see Civ Proc Before Trial §§42.31-42.32.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/6 Court Conferences and Selected Pretrial Motions/§6.15 1. Where to make motion or ex parte application

§6.15 1. Where to make motion or ex parte application

Normally, a trial continuance motion is made in the master calendar department. When cases are assigned to one judge for all purposes under the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act of 1990 (Govt C §§68600-68620), all motions are heard before the assigned judge.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.16 2. When to make motion or ex parte application

After discovering the need for a continuance, you must give notice and make the motion or ex parte application "as soon as reasonably practical." Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(b). See also, e.g., County of San Bernardino v Doria Mining & Eng'g Corp. (1977) 72 CA3d 776, 140 CR 383.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/6 Court Conferences and Selected Pretrial Motions/§6.17 H. What to include in motion or application seeking continuance

§6.17 H. What to include in motion or application seeking continuance

Include in the moving papers:

- A notice of motion;
- Declarations setting forth facts showing due diligence and good cause for the motion (see Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(b); see §§6.8-6.10B);
- A supporting memorandum; and
- A proposed order that includes the reasons for the continuance.

Set forth in the motion papers a specific time to which the court should continue the trial. The time must be reasonably related to the ground that is the basis for the requested continuance.

In propria persona litigants are not entitled to greater consideration than attorneys. In Nelson v Gaunt (1981) 125 CA3d 623, 638, 178 CR 167, disapproved on other grounds in Douglas v Ostermeier (1991) 1 CA4th 729, 745 n1, 2 CR2d 594, the court applied former Cal Rules of Ct 224 against an in propria persona litigant: Continuance motions must be in writing, be made promptly on ascertaining the need for the continuance, and make an affirmative showing of good cause.

On preparing motion papers in general, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chaps 11-13 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004). For the specific requirements when making an ex parte application, see Cal Rules of Ct 3.1200-3.1207.

§6.18 1. Show good cause

Put primary emphasis in the motion papers on the good cause for the continuance, preferably a ground listed in Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(c). See §§6.8-6.10B. Be specific and detailed in arguing good cause. For example, if a witness is suddenly not available, show why the witness is unavailable, why the witness's testimony is crucial for a fair trial, and when the witness will be available. See CCP §595.4; Ross v Thirlwall (1929) 101 CA 411, 415, 281 P 714.

Support the party's position with the best evidence available. For example, when illness is the good cause, obtain a physician's declaration; do not rely on a hearsay declaration by an attorney, or even the ill person, that the person is ill. On insufficient content of a physician's declaration, see Forney v Brodie (1934) 3 CA2d 245, 39 P2d 516.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: When arguing witness unavailability, be prepared to tell the court that you gave prompt notice of the trial date to the witness who is now unavailable, and to show that you served a trial subpoena on the witness.

§6.19 2. Show due diligence

In considering the motion (or ex parte application) to continue, the court will examine whether the moving party diligently gave notice and made the motion for continuance (or made the ex parte application) as soon as reasonably practical after discovering the need for the continuance as required by Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(b). If the ground for continuance has unforeseeably arisen at the last minute, a continuance can probably be obtained. See, e.g., Broadwell v Ryerson (1948) 85 CA2d 352, 357, 192 P2d 797. If an attorney could have acted sooner but waited, the court is more likely to deny the motion. See, e.g., County of San Bernardino v Doria Mining & Eng'g Corp. (1977) 72 CA3d 776, 140 CR 383.

Be specific and detailed in showing due diligence. Show both why you could not anticipate the ground of continuance and how you were diligent in bringing the matter to court when you discovered the need for the motion. See Tiffin v Cummings (1904) 144 C 612, 614, 78 P 23.

If seeking postponement on the ground of absence of evidence, show in the affidavit, among other things, that you used due diligence to procure the evidence. CCP §595.4. On trial court's discretion to excuse requirement of affidavit under CCP §595.4, see Taylor v Bell (1971) 21 CA3d 1002, 98 CR 855.

§6.20 3. Refute prejudice to opposing party

Anticipate the opposing party's argument that it will be prejudiced; either anticipatorily refute such claims when possible or consider alternatives to alleviate the prejudice. See City of San Diego v Walton (1947) 80 CA2d 206, 214, 181 P2d 424.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/6 Court Conferences and Selected Pretrial Motions/§6.21 I. What to include when opposing motion

§6.21 I. What to include when opposing motion

Opposition papers should include a supporting memorandum and declarations setting forth facts showing, e.g.:

- Lack of due diligence or good cause;
- Prejudice if the motion is granted; and
- Evidence of a dilatory motive or lack of good faith.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/6 Court Conferences and Selected Pretrial Motions/§6.22 1. Lack of diligence or good cause

§6.22 1. Lack of diligence or good cause

Show any facts indicating that the motion for continuance could have been made earlier; in eve-of-trial motions especially, the moving party often will not have exercised due diligence.

Argue against the validity or significance of the good cause proposed by the movant.

© The Regents of the University of California

Set forth with detail and specificity any prejudice the opposing party will suffer; quantify costs whenever possible. Likely sources of prejudice would be:

- The cost of delay (e.g., the cost of again preparing for trial);
- When plaintiff is opposing the motion, the variance between the legal interest rate and the value of the use of the money plaintiff expects to recover;
- Problems in the availability of counsel, parties, or witnesses if the trial is continued; or
- The immediacy of the need for the relief sought, e.g., party is aged or ill.

NOTE: If the case was preferentially set for trial under CCP §36, there are limits on continuances that can be granted: The trial must be set to take place within 120 days, and no continuances are permitted except for the disability of a party or attorney or on a showing of good cause; a continuance must be no longer than 15 days; and only one continuance for disability may be granted to any party. For discussion of CCP §36 motions for trial preference, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial §§42.4-42.6 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.24 3. Suggest alternatives or conditions

Suggest alternatives to resolve the problem causing the continuance request. For example, if the lead trial attorney is ill, suggest that another attorney can conduct the trial (when more than one attorney is handling the case) or, if a witness is unavailable, suggest using the witness's deposition (if it was taken).

If the continuance is sought because a material witness is absent, consider exercising the right under CCP §595.4 to ask the court to require the moving party "to state upon affidavit the evidence which he expects to obtain"; then evaluate whether to stipulate "that such evidence would be given and that it be considered as actually given on the trial" (see CCP §595.4) and thereby defeat the motion for the continuance.

If you have any witnesses already in attendance when the opposing party requests a postponement, consider demanding that the party obtaining the postponement take the deposition of your witnesses in attendance under CCP §596. Any testimony taken under §596 may be read at the trial with the same effect, and subject to the same objections, as if the witness testified at trial. Testimony taken under §596 must comply with deposition requirements in order to be properly admitted at trial. See Thomas v Black (1890) 84 C 221, 225, 23 P 1037.

§6.25 4. Request expenses if motion granted

If the continuance is granted, ask for expenses. Under CCP §1024, the court may grant expenses caused by a continuance. (See also CCP §473, which permits the court, when an amendment to a pleading or proceeding requires a continuance, to condition the amendment on the payment of the adverse party's costs.) Case law has interpreted costs to include travel and lodging expenses. See Wilkin v Tadlock (1952) 110 CA2d 156, 241 P2d 1066; Fraser v Fraser (1919) 39 CA 467, 179 P 427. Costs under CCP §1024 do not include attorney fees, however. Levine v Pollack (1995) 37 CA4th 129, 43 CR2d 491.

§6.26 A. Authority: CCP §§170.1-170.8

Code of Civil Procedure §§170.1-170.8 provide a detailed statutory framework to disqualify a judge if a party questions the judge's impartiality in the matter the judge is hearing. Under CCP §§170.1-170.3, the party who wishes to disqualify a judge must file a written verified statement setting forth the facts that constitute the grounds for the disqualification. See §§6.32-6.39 for grounds. Under CCP §170.6(a)(2), any party or attorney may move to disqualify the judge, based on the party's or attorney's belief that the judge cannot be fair and impartial. See §6.57.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/6 Court Conferences and Selected Pretrial Motions/§6.27 B. Seek to disqualify at earliest opportunity

§6.27 B. Seek to disqualify at earliest opportunity

Address the issue of disqualification at the earliest possible opportunity, e.g., immediately after discovering facts constituting grounds for disqualification (see §§6.32-6.39 for grounds) under CCP §170.3(c). For peremptory challenges, request disqualification as soon as you know the identity of the judge, and in any event within the statutory limits for your type of case. See §§6.64-6.74. However, a late-named defendant may move to disqualify the judge despite the fact that other parties' time to make a disqualification motion has expired and despite the complex nature of the case. School Dist. v Superior Court (1997) 58 CA4th 1126, 68 CR2d 612.

§6.28 C. Obtain information about judges before the actual assignment

To ensure meeting the statutory deadlines to request disqualification of a judge, obtain information about the judges who may be assigned to the case before the actual assignment, i.e., before the master calendar department assigns the case to the trial judge or before the matter is assigned to a judge for all purposes.

One practical difficulty may be the lack of information about the judges' backgrounds. The best source of information is often the experiences of counsel who have appeared before the judges. Although no formal repository exists for this type of information, some published sources provide information on the backgrounds of judges. See, e.g., Smith & Thompson, California Courts and Judges (2006 ed).

Computerized research services are potential sources of information about judges' philosophy and past decisions. Counsel may perform a search of all published appellate cases in which a trial judge has been reversed or affirmed on appeal. Reports of bar association committees on judicial evaluation may provide additional information. For example, through the Los Angeles County Bar Association's online Civil Register (http://www.lacba.org/showpage.cfm?pageid=1589), users can find out, e.g., how many motions for summary judgment a particular judge has granted or denied and how many CCP §170.6 challenges have been filed against a particular judge. Some courts also provide information on-line about judges.

These resources seldom provide enough information about a judge's background to discover any conflicts of interest before the trial or hearing. Thus, you may not learn enough information about a judge in time to bring a peremptory challenge under CCP §170.6, but facts that come to light in the chambers conference may lead you to conclude that the judge should be disqualified under CCP §170.3 because of a conflict of interest (CCP §170.1). A judge is required to reveal to the parties any facts that may be grounds for disqualification. CCP §170.3(b).

A judge who learns of facts that may be grounds for disqualification must so inform the presiding judge or the person having authority to assign another judge. CCP §170.3(a). If any conflicts come to light during the chambers conference, the assigned judge should ask the presiding judge to appoint another judge. The judge may also ask that the parties stipulate to waive the disqualification. See §6.41. If the judge does not act, the parties may file a statement of disqualification. See §§6.43-6.48.

© The Regents of the University of California

D. Considerations when deciding whether to challenge judge

§6.29 1. Disadvantages of challenge

Do not make a decision to seek the disqualification of an assigned judge lightly. Under CCP §§170.1-170.6, the request may be denied and the judge may remain the trier of fact; similarly, although the peremptory disqualification under CCP §170.6 is automatic, a presiding judge may conclude that the peremptory challenge was improperly made or untimely, and the challenged judge may remain. See §6.77. Even if the peremptory challenge is successful, you have no assurance who the next judge will be and you are limited to one peremptory challenge. See generally Solberg v Superior Court (1977) 19 C3d 182, 196, 137 CR 460. See §6.60 for the one-challenge rule.

PRACTICE TIP: If you become aware of facts indicating that the judge should disqualify himself or herself, and you are not facing an immediate trial, consider writing to the judge (with a copy to opposing counsel) requesting that the judge disqualify himself or herself without your having to file a formal request that becomes part of the public record. The judge may do so, and be appreciative of your not forcing a public record of the matter

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.30 2. Effect of disqualification

A disqualified judge has no power to act in any proceedings in that case after the disqualification, except as provided in CCP §170.4. See §6.54. The challenged judge has limited powers to act after the statement of disqualification under CCP §170.3(c) is filed and until the disqualification is decided. See §§6.49-6.53.

After determining disqualification under CCP §170.1, a judge may ask the parties to agree on another judge who will take over the action or proceeding. CCP §170.3(c)(2). Otherwise, when a judge is disqualified, the presiding judge or other person having authority to assign a new judge will appoint a new judge. CCP §170.3(a), (c)(6).

If the grounds for disqualification are discovered after the judge has made one or more rulings in the proceeding, the judge who replaces the disqualified judge cannot set aside the rulings made up to that time, unless the new judge believes that there is good cause to do so. CCP §170.3(b)(4). But see Hartford Cas. Ins. Co. v Superior Court (2004) 125 CA4th 250, 258, 22 CR3d 507 (holding that orders made by judge after grounds for disqualification arose, but before disqualification, must be vacated because judge knew or should have known that disqualification was necessary).

A judge who is disqualified under CCP §170.6 is disqualified for all subsequent proceedings in that action. Brown v Superior Court (1981) 124 CA3d 1059, 177 CR 756.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Brown and subsequent cases raise the question of the parties' right to withdraw a CCP §170.6 challenge—which, under some circumstances, counsel might want to discuss with the challenged judge. See Note in §6.61.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.31 3. Relationship between CCP §§170.3 and 170.6

Code of Civil Procedure §170.3 provides the methods to disqualify a judge for cause. See §§6.32-6.56. Code of Civil Procedure §170.6 provides a peremptory procedure to disqualify a judge. Generally, §§170.3 and 170.6 are considered cumulative remedies. See CCP §170.6(b); Pacific & Southwest Annual Conf. of United Methodist Church v Superior Court (1978) 82 CA3d 72, 147 CR 44 (no requirement to challenge under CCP §170.6 before challenge under former CCP §170, or vice versa). A party may thus file both a statement under CCP §170.3(c) and one peremptory challenge under CCP §170.6. See §6.60 for the one-challenge rule.

Although the remedies are cumulative, in practice you may not be able to make both challenges within the statutory deadlines of CCP §170.6. See §§6.64-6.74 for these deadlines. For example, you must make a peremptory challenge to the assignment of a trial judge from a master calendar at the time of assignment before the master calendar judge (CCP §170.6(a)(2)), but normally you will want to make a challenge for cause under CCP §170.3 before using your only peremptory challenge. If you make the §170.3 challenge first, the time period to make a §170.6 challenge would expire before the determination of the §170.3 challenge.

§6.32 1. Grounds: CCP §170.1

A judge should be disqualified from sitting or acting as a judge in any action or proceeding if any one of the grounds listed in CCP §170.1 (see §§6.33-6.39) is true.

For a more comprehensive discussion of grounds for judicial disqualification, see generally 2 Witkin, California Procedure, Courts §§101-128 (5th ed 2008).

§6.33 a. Has personal knowledge of disputed facts

A judge who has personal knowledge of disputed evidentiary facts about the proceeding should be disqualified. Personal knowledge is imputed when a judge knows that one material witness in the proceeding is likely to be (CCP §170.1(a)(1)(A)-(B)):

- The judge;
- The judge's spouse; or
- A person, or spouse of a person, within the third degree of relationship to either the judge or judge's spouse.

§6.34 b. Acted as attorney in matter related to proceeding

The judge should be disqualified if the judge (CCP §170.1(a)(2)(A)):

- Has served as an attorney in the proceeding. Service as an attorney in the proceeding will be imputed to the judge if, within the past 2 years, the judge was:
- In private practice and the judge or an attorney with whom the judge was associated had as a client a party to the proceedings or a party's officer, director, or trustee (CCP §170.1(a)(2)(B)(i)); or
- Associated in private practice with an attorney in the proceeding (CCP §170.1(a)(2)(B)(ii)).
- Acted as the attorney for any party in the present case in any other proceeding involving the same issues. CCP §170.1(a)(2)(A).
- Gave advice to any party in the present proceeding on a matter involved in the proceeding. CCP §170.1(a)(2)(A).
- Served as an attorney for or as an officer of a public agency that is a party to the proceeding, if the judge personally advised or represented the public agency on the factual or legal issues in the proceeding. CCP §170.1(a)(2)(C).

§6.35 c. Has financial interest in matter related to proceeding

Grounds to disqualify the judge exist if:

- The judge has a financial interest in the subject matter of the proceeding or in a party to the proceeding. CCP §170.1(a)(3)(A).
- A spouse or minor child living with the judge has a financial interest in the subject matter or in a party to the proceeding, i.e., the spouse's or minor child's interests are considered to be the judge's interests for purposes of disqualification. CCP §170.1(a)(3)(B)(i).

The judge should be disqualified if any of the following persons is a party to the proceedings (CCP §170.1(a)(4)):

- The judge;
- The judge's spouse; or
- A person, or spouse of a person, within the third degree of relationship to the judge or the judge's spouse.

An officer, director, or trustee of a party is considered a party to the proceedings. CCP §170.1(a)(4).

§6.37 e. Is related to an attorney in proceeding

The judge should be disqualified if one of the attorneys in the proceeding is the judge's spouse, or is the judge's or the judge's spouse's:

- Former spouse;
- Child;
- Sibling; or
- Parent.

The judge is also disqualified if one of the above is married to an attorney in the proceeding or is in private practice with an attorney in the proceeding. CCP §170.1(a)(5).

The judge should be disqualified if:

- The judge believes his or her disqualification would further the interests of justice (CCP §170.1(a)(6)(A)(i));
- The judge believes there is a substantial doubt about his or her capacity to be impartial (CCP §170.1(a)(6)(A)(ii)); or
- A person aware of the facts might reasonably doubt that the judge would be able to be impartial (CCP §170.1(a)(6)(A)(iii)).

Bias or prejudice against an attorney in the proceedings may be grounds for disqualification for cause. CCP §170.1(a)(6)(B).

§6.39 g. Has physical impairment that prevents proper conduct of proceeding

The judge should be disqualified if, by reason of permanent or temporary physical impairment, the judge cannot properly perceive the evidence or conduct the proceeding. CCP §170.1(a)(7).

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.39A h. Has arranged for, or participated in discussions concerning, prospective employment as a dispute resolution neutral

The judge should be disqualified if the matter before the judge includes issues relating to the enforcement of an agreement to submit a dispute to alternative dispute resolution or the appointment of a dispute resolution neutral and the judge has a current arrangement concerning prospective employment as a dispute resolution neutral or is participating in, or within the last 2 years has participated in, discussions regarding prospective employment as a dispute resolution neutral. CCP §170.1(a)(8). See Rossco Holdings, Inc. v Bank of America (2007) 149 CA4th 1353, 58 CR3d 141 (judge disqualified for engaging in conversations with dispute resolution providers regarding possible employment).

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/6 Court Conferences and Selected Pretrial Motions/§6.40 2. Judge may disqualify self

§6.40 2. Judge may disqualify self

After determining a disqualification based on one of the grounds in CCP §170.1, a judge has two choices:

- Notify the presiding judge or, if the judge is the presiding judge or the only judge, notify the person having the power to assign another judge and stop participating in the proceeding (CCP §170.3(a)); or
- Make a full disclosure on the record and ask the parties to waive the disqualification. CCP §170.3(b). See §6.41.

On a judge's voluntary declaration of disqualification, see 2 Witkin, California Procedure, Courts §122 (5th ed 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

3. Parties may waive disqualification

§6.41 a. Judge may ask for an express waiver

The judge may ask the parties to expressly waive many of the grounds for disqualification described in CCP §170.1 by signing and filing a waiver. The judge must first disclose the basis for the disqualification on the record. If the parties agree to waive the disqualification, the express waiver, to be effective, must recite the basis for the disqualification and be signed by all parties and their attorneys of record and filed. CCP §170.3(b)(1).

The parties may not waive disqualification if the grounds for disqualification are that the judge (CCP §170.3(b)(2)):

- Has a personal bias or prejudice concerning a party;
- Served as an attorney in the matter in controversy; or
- Has been a material witness on the matter at issue.

The judge cannot try to induce the parties to waive the disqualification, and if the parties do not waive, the judge cannot try to find out which attorneys or parties favored or opposed the waiver. CCP §170.3(b)(3).

For further discussion, see 2 Witkin, California Procedure, Courts §128 (5th ed 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.42 b. Delay in asserting grounds results in waiver

The parties must assert the judge's disqualification on most of the grounds stated in CCP §170.1 at the earliest practicable opportunity (CCP §170.3(c)(1); see §6.46 for when to file); otherwise, the parties waive the grounds for disqualification by failing to assert them. See Sacramento & San Joaquin Drainage Dist. v Jarvis (1959) 51 C2d 799, 336 P2d 530 (former CCP §170(6)); Caminetti v Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. (1943) 22 C2d 386, 139 P2d 930 (former CCP §170(3)). See also Develop-Amatic Eng'g v Republic Mortgage Co. (1970) 12 CA3d 143, 150, 91 CR 193.

Even when judges should recuse themselves, the parties have waived their rights to a challenge if they fail to proceed under CCP §170.3(c). People v Bryant (1987) 190 CA3d 1569, 236 CR 96.

NOTE: A waiver of the disqualification is prohibited if the judge has a personal bias or prejudice toward a party or if the judge served as an attorney or has been a material witness in the matter at issue. CCP §170.3(b)(2).

The crucial issue in determining the timeliness of a challenge under CCP §170.3(c)(1) appears to be whether the moving party held back the challenge, with knowledge of the disqualifying facts, until the unfavorable ruling was received. See Woolley v Superior Court (1937) 19 CA2d 611, 619, 66 P2d 680. Be prepared to demonstrate that you acted expeditiously in raising the issue of disqualification after learning of the disqualifying facts. For further discussion, see 2 Witkin, California Procedure, Courts §128 (5th ed 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.43 4. Challenge by filing a verified written statement

If a judge who should be disqualified fails to proceed as required by CCP §170.3(a) (disqualify self) or §170.3(b) (make full disclosure and ask for waiver), any party who has appeared in the action may file with the clerk a verified written statement objecting to the hearing or trial. CCP §170.3(c).

The statement may be titled "Statement of Objection to Trial Before Judge _____," "Statement of Disqualification," or "Objection to Trial Before Judge _____." Alternatively, the statement may be in the form of a motion to disqualify. See Hollingsworth v Superior Court (1987) 191 CA3d 22, 25, 236 CR 193.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.44 a. What to include in statement

The statement should contain facts, not conclusions. Allegations on information and belief and conclusions are insufficient. See Urias v Harris Farms, Inc. (1991) 234 CA3d 415, 426, 285 CR 659. On a party's statement of disqualification, see 2 Witkin, California Procedure, Courts §123 (5th ed 2008).

Be sure to present specific evidence to establish that one of the circumstances found in CCP §170.1(a) exists. For example, show judicial statements or conduct demonstrating that the judge is predisposed to rule against the party no matter what the evidence reveals. See, e.g., Calhoun v Superior Court (1958) 51 C2d 257, 331 P2d 648 (trial judge gratuitously filed affidavit opposing defendants' petition for bail pending appeal).

When referring to copious transcripts, cite specific excerpts. Avoid alleging facts that are irrelevant to the issues to be determined at the hearing, including material that is not legally indicative of bias or prejudice (e.g., judicial opinions expressed in the context of legal rulings made in the pending proceedings), or referring to inconsequential circumstances that are not probative of bias or prejudice. See Marriage of Lemen (1980) 113 CA3d 769, 790, 170 CR 642; In re Morelli (1970) 11 CA3d 819, 843, 91 CR 72, overruled on other grounds in Cedars-Sinai Imaging Med. Group v Superior Court (2000) 83 CA4th 1281, 1287 n6, 100 CR2d 320.

Include in the statement of disqualification sufficient facts to show that you are filing the statement at the earliest practicable opportunity in order to minimize the possibility that the court will strike the statement as untimely and find that you have waived the objection. See §§6.42, 6.46.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.45 b. Verify statement

The statement should be verified. See §6.111 for sample statement. A statement in the form of a declaration under penalty of perjury will be considered sufficient. Urias v Harris Farms, Inc. (1991) 234 CA3d 415, 426, 285 CR 659; Hollingsworth v Superior Court (1987) 191 CA3d 22, 25, 236 CR 193.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.46 c. When to file

Under CCP §170.3(c)(1), the attorney must present the written verified statement objecting to a hearing or trial before the judge "at the earliest practicable opportunity" after discovering the facts establishing grounds for disqualification. In re Steven O. (1991) 229 CA3d 46, 55, 279 CR 868. A statement of disqualification that is not filed at the earliest practicable opportunity is untimely, and the judge who is the subject of the statement of disqualification may strike it. CCP §170.4(b). See §6.42 on possible waiver if statement not filed in a timely manner. See 2 Witkin, California Procedure, Courts §128 (5th ed 2008).

The judge has 10 days to respond to the statement of disqualification. CCP §170.3(c)(3); see discussion in §6.55. If the judge does not strike the statement as untimely within the 10 days, and does not answer or respond, the judge will be deemed to have consented to disqualification even if the statement of disqualification was untimely. Urias v Harris Farms, Inc. (1991) 234 CA3d 415, 422, 285 CR 659. But see North Beverly Homeowners Ass'n v Bisno (2007) 147 CA4th 762, 772, 54 CR3d 644 (statutory procedure for disqualification of judges for cause does not apply to statements of disqualification filed after final judgment; therefore, trial judge's failure to answer or strike statement could not be deemed consent to disqualification and did not require that allegations be deemed true).

A party may file only one statement of disqualification unless subsequent statements clearly state that the facts supporting them occurred or were discovered after the original statement of disqualification was filed. CCP §170.4(c)(3). The challenged judge must dismiss subsequent statements that do not comply with this rule.

If a statement of disqualification on its face discloses no legal grounds for disqualification, the challenged judge may strike the statement and proceed with the case. CCP §170.4(b). See §6.78 on obtaining extraordinary relief.

§6.51 b. Strike statement as untimely

If the statement is not filed at the earliest practicable opportunity, the challenged judge may strike the statement from the record as untimely and proceed with the case. CCP §170.4(b). See §§6.42, 6.46 on timeliness.

If the judge does not strike the statement within 10 days after the statement is filed or served, the judge is deemed to have consented to disqualification under CCP §170.3(c)(4) unless the judge has otherwise filed an answer. Lewis v Superior Court (1988) 198 CA3d 1101, 244 CR 328; Urias v Harris Farms, Inc. (1991) 234 CA3d 415, 422, 285 CR 659. But see North Beverly Homeowners Ass'n v Bisno (2007) 147 CA4th 762, 772, 54 CR3d 644 (statutory procedure for disqualification of judges for cause does not apply to statements of disqualification filed after final judgment; therefore, trial judge's failure to answer or strike statement could not be deemed consent to disqualification and did not require that allegations be deemed true). See §6.55 for judge's deadline to act.

§6.52 c. Proceed if statement was filed after trial or hearing begins

If the statement of disqualification is filed after the trial or hearing has begun, the challenged judge may order that the proceeding continue until another judge finds the challenged judge disqualified. CCP §170.4(c)(1). See §6.56 on determining the disqualification. For purposes of CCP §170.4(c)(1), a trial or hearing begins by the start of voir dire, the swearing of the first witness, or the submission of a motion for decision. If the challenged judge is eventually disqualified, all orders and rulings made after filing of the statement of disqualification will be vacated. CCP §170.4(c)(1).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/6 Court Conferences and Selected Pretrial Motions/§6.53 d. Proceed if statement filed after trial or hearing begins in single-assignment cases

§6.53 d. Proceed if statement filed after trial or hearing begins in single-assignment cases

If the proceeding is in a single-judge court or has been assigned to a single judge for comprehensive disposition and the proceeding is set for a trial or hearing date 30 or more days in advance, before a judge whose name is known, the trial is considered to have begun 10 days before the date scheduled. If the statement of disqualification is based on any grounds for disqualification known more than 10 days before the scheduled trial date, and the statement is filed 10 days or less before the scheduled trial date, the judge has the choice of continuing with the trial as if it had already begun as provided in CCP §170.4(c)(1) (see §6.52). CCP §170.4(c)(2).

EXAMPLE 1: You are in a single-assignment case and you are given a trial date more than 30 days in advance. On the 20th day before trial, you learn that the judge assigned to the case for trial owns stock in the defendant corporation, which is grounds for disqualification under CCP §170.1(a)(3)(A). If you wait until the 9th day before trial to file the statement of disqualification, the trial judge will have the power to order the trial to continue under CCP §170.4(c)(1).

EXAMPLE 2: In the same situation as in Example 1, you learn that the judge owns stock in the defendant corporation on the 8th day before trial. Be sure to state this fact in your statement of disqualification, i.e., that you did not have knowledge of the basis for disqualification before the start of the 10-day period. If you file the statement before the trial begins, the judge may proceed only as provided in CCP §170.4(a). See §6.54.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.54 e. Judge's additional specific powers

Under CCP §170.4(a), when challenged, the judge may:

- Take any action necessary to maintain the jurisdiction of the court until a new judge is assigned;
- Request a judge on whom the parties have agreed to take his or her place;
- Hear and determine purely default matters;
- Issue an order for possession before judgment in eminent domain proceedings;
- Set proceedings for trial or hearing; and
- Conduct settlement conferences.

These powers are in addition to the judge's powers to strike an untimely or legally unfounded statement (CCP §170.4(b); see §6.51) or to continue with a trial or hearing that has already begun (CCP §170.4(c)(1); see §§6.52-6.53).

Because a party may file only one statement of disqualification, unless new facts arise or are learned after the original statement was filed, the challenged judge retains the power to dismiss subsequent statements. Dismissal is mandatory if the new statement is not based on new facts. CCP §170.4(c)(3).

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.55 6. Judge's response

The judge has a choice of responses to the statement of disqualification:

- Get the parties to agree that another judge will take over the action or proceeding, and then ask that judge to replace the challenged judge. CCP §170.3(c)(2).
- File a consent to disqualification within 10 days after the filing or service of the verified statement, whichever is later, and notify the presiding judge or other appropriate person to appoint a replacement judge. CCP §170.3(c)(3).
- File an answer admitting or denying the allegations of the statement and describing additional facts that are material or relevant to the disqualification proceedings; in this event, the clerk must transmit a copy of the answer to each party who has appeared or to their respective attorneys. CCP §170.3(c)(3).
- Do nothing within the 10 days, in effect consenting to the reassignment of the proceeding, in which event the clerk must notify the presiding judge or other appropriate person. CCP §170.3(c)(4). See Urias v Harris Farms, Inc. (1991) 234 CA3d 415, 285 CR 659 (judge disqualified because of inaction).

§6.56 7. Determining judge's disqualification

If the challenged judge does not voluntarily excuse himself or herself, a second judge determines whether the challenged judge is disqualified. CCP §170.3(c)(5). The parties have 5 days after the challenged judge files an answer to agree on a judge to hear the disqualification challenge; if they agree within that time, the judge they agree on will hear the matter. CCP §170.3(c)(5).

If the parties cannot agree on a judge to hear the disqualification matter, the clerk will notify the executive officer of the Judicial Council, who will appoint, as quickly as possible, a judge to hear the matter. The judge deciding the disqualification cannot be challenged by a party under CCP §170.3 (cause) or CCP §170.6 (no cause), but that judge may disqualify himself or herself. CCP §170.3(c)(5).

The judge deciding the disqualification matter may base the decision on the statement of disqualification and the challenged judge's answer. CCP §170.3(c)(6). The judge may also request additional written arguments or set the matter for hearing as soon as is practicable, but is not required to do so. See Urias v Harris Farms, Inc. (1991) 234 CA3d 415, 285 CR 659 (party has no right to be heard before judge disqualified). The parties and the challenged judge may argue the matter at any hearing and, for good cause, may introduce evidence on any disputed fact. If the judge decides that the challenged judge should be disqualified, the deciding judge will notify the presiding judge or other appropriate person to appoint a replacement judge. CCP §170.3(c)(6).

The judge deciding the disqualification may also impose sanctions against the party seeking to disqualify the judge if the attempt to disqualify was frivolous or intended solely to cause delay. Estate of Di Grazia (1993) 13 CA4th 681, 16 CR2d 621, disapproved on other grounds in Curle v Superior Court (2001) 24 C4th 1057, 1069 n6, 103 CR2d 751 (decided under CCP §128.5).

The decision on a judge's disqualification is not appealable, but it may be reviewed by a writ of mandate sought by the parties to the action. CCP §170.3(d). See §6.78.

See 2 Witkin, California Procedure, Courts §§126-127 (5th ed 2008) on the effect of a challenge.

F. Peremptory challenge under CCP §170.6

§6.57 1. Grounds: Prejudice against party or attorney

Disqualification under CCP §170.6 is mandated if it is established that a judge, court commissioner, or referee "is prejudiced against any party or attorney or the interest of any party or attorney appearing in the action or proceeding" based on the attorney or client's good faith belief in such prejudice. CCP §170.6(a)(1).

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.58 2. Challenge judge by written or oral motion

A judge's prejudice is conclusively established under CCP §170.6(a)(2) by an oral or written motion supported by an affidavit or declaration or an oral statement under oath. See §6.75 on content of the motion. Only judges, court commissioners, or referees of superior courts may be challenged under CCP §170.6; appellate justices may not. People v Gonzalez (1990) 51 C3d 1179, 1247 n44, 275 CR 729.

Section 170.6 requires only that the declarant have a good faith belief that the judge is prejudiced. See Solberg v Superior Court (1977) 19 C3d 182, 200, 137 CR 460. Good faith is sufficiently established by the act of verification itself; proof of facts showing actual prejudice is not required. If the affidavit or declaration is timely (see §§6.64-6.74) and in proper form, immediate disqualification is mandatory. People v Superior Court (Williams) (1992) 8 CA4th 688, 698, 10 CR2d 873. See Journey v Superior Court (1975) 47 CA3d 408, 411, 120 CR 897.

In People v Whitfield (1986) 183 CA3d 299, 228 CR 82, the court stated that the procedural requirements of CCP §170.6 should be construed liberally, especially when pro per litigants were involved. The court held that it was error to deny an oral motion to disqualify under §170.6 on merely formal grounds without explaining to the litigants the need to file formal papers.

§6.59 a. Where to file

If the motion concerns a judge assigned to a case under a master calendar system, direct the motion to the judge supervising the master calendar. If the motion concerns a case assigned to an all-purpose judge, make the motion to either the assigned judge or the supervising judge. CCP §170.6(a)(2). The code does not address where to make a motion challenging a law and motion judge, but logic dictates that it be made to the assigned law and motion judge or to the supervising judge.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.60 b. Limitations: One-challenge rule

No party or attorney may make more than one peremptory challenge to disqualify a judge under CCP §170.6 (CCP §170.6(a)(3)), except a party that filed an appeal resulting in the reversal of a final judgment of a trial court. CCP §170.6(a)(2). The right to peremptorily challenge a judge is exhausted not when the motion is filed, but when the change of judge occurs. Truck Ins. Exch. v Superior Court (1998) 67 CA4th 142, 78 CR2d 721 (when assigned judge retired, party whose peremptory challenge against that judge had been denied as untimely retained its right to exercise its one peremptory challenge per proceeding and properly challenged next judge assigned to case). In addition, each side is restricted to one challenge in any action or proceeding. CCP §170.6(a)(3). In Pappa v Superior Court (1960) 54 C2d 350, 5 CR 703, the court recognized that, when a substantially adverse interest exists between codefendants in a criminal case, each defendant may be treated as a separate side for the purposes of CCP §170.6. See also People v Escobedo (1973) 35 CA3d 32, 110 CR 550. The burden of establishing a substantially adverse interest is on the party seeking to be considered as a separate side. See Welch v Superior Court (1974) 41 CA3d 50, 53, 115 CR 729.

In Industrial Indem. Co. v Superior Court (1989) 214 CA3d 259, 262 CR 544, the court held that parties to "add on" cases in coordination proceedings had no right to challenge a coordination trial judge if their side had already exercised its challenge.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: For purposes of exercising a CCP §170.6 challenge, multiple parties and their counsel should discuss and decide whether they are on the same side or whether they represent adverse interests. Failure of parties to make this decision may result in filed challenges that are binding on parties who do not agree to the particular challenges.

On CCP §170.6 peremptory challenges in coordinated proceedings, see §6.74.

On time limit for seeking extraordinary relief if the CCP §170.6 challenge is denied, see §6.78.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.61 c. Withdrawing or waiving challenge

After a party properly makes a challenge under CCP §170.6, the party cannot withdraw the challenge. There are various reasons for this rule. See Stebbins v White (1987) 190 CA3d 769, 781, 235 CR 656. For example, all parties are entitled to benefit from the challenge, despite any attempt by the challenging party to retract it. Brown v Superior Court (1981) 124 CA3d 1059, 1062, 177 CR 756. In addition, when a party exercises a §170.6 challenge, the court's authority to act is immediately terminated, and the statute does not provide for reinstatement of the court's authority merely because one party withdraws the challenge. Louisiana-Pacific Corp. v Philo Lumber (1985) 163 CA3d 1212, 1219, 210 CR 368. Furthermore, §170.6 does not allow the party to withdraw or waive the challenge and thereby recover the right to challenge the judge again. See §6.60 for discussion of the one-challenge rule.

NOTE: Some courts have allowed a party to abandon the challenge and proceed with the hearing or trial. Andrisani v Saugus Colony Ltd. (1992) 8 CA4th 517, 525, 10 CR2d 444, citing Louisiana-Pacific Corp. v Philo Lumber, supra. For example, if no other party objects after a party asks to withdraw the challenge, the court may proceed to hear the case. See, e.g., Stebbins v White, supra; Louisiana-Pacific Corp. v Philo Lumber, supra.

A party may also inadvertently waive the right to enforce a §170.6 challenge by acquiescing to the disqualified judge's hearing of the matter. For example, in Andrisani v Saugus Colony Ltd., supra, after a §170.6 challenge, no one objected when the case was inadvertently reassigned to the same challenged judge. The court held that the parties' acquiescence resulted in a waiver of the right to assert the disqualification. 8 CA4th at 526. If a waiver occurs, the party cannot challenge the judgment on appeal based on the disqualification of the judge, and the judgment is not void as being beyond the court's jurisdiction. Stebbins v White (1987) 190 CA3d 769, 784, 235 CR 656.

Finally, the challenge is not rescinded or withdrawn by later events. For example, the dismissal from the case of the party that made the challenge does not nullify that challenge, and each remaining party may continue to have it enforced. Louisiana-Pacific Corp. v Philo Lumber, supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.62 d. Challenging in a second case

A party is not barred from exercising a challenge to the judge in the second of two related actions, even if that party exercised a CCP §170.6 challenge in the first action, if the claims asserted in the related actions were not identical. When the second action is a continuation of the first, however, a party who exercises a challenge in the first case may be barred from exercising another challenge in the second; and if the same judge is assigned to the second case, the failure to challenge that judge in the first case constitutes a waiver. City of Hanford v Superior Court (1989) 208 CA3d 580, 256 CR 274. See Bravo v Superior Court (2007) 149 CA4th 1489, 57 CR3d 910.

Generally, however, a party who fails to challenge the judge in the first action does not waive the right to make a timely challenge of the same judge in a subsequent action. Nissan Motor Corp. v Superior Court (1992) 6 CA4th 150, 7 CR2d 801.

In Nissan, three products liability cases were consolidated before the same judge because they involved allegations of a similar defect. The court held that the three cases were distinct and Nissan could challenge the consolidated judge in the two cases that had not previously been before him. 6 CA4th at 155.

§6.63 e. Challenge does not require continuance

Unless good cause is shown or it is required for the convenience of the court, a trial date continuance will not be granted merely because a motion to disqualify is brought. CCP §170.6(a)(4). If a continuance is granted, "the cause or matter shall be continued from day to day or for other limited periods … and shall be reassigned or transferred for trial or hearing as promptly as possible." CCP §170.6(a)(4).

The exercise of a CCP §170.6 disqualification tolls the running of the 5-year period of CCP §583.360 (mandatory dismissal for failure to bring an action to trial) while disqualification is pending. Hartman v Santamarina (1982) 30 C3d 762, 768, 180 CR 337.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/6 Court Conferences and Selected Pretrial Motions/§6.64 3. When to make motion

§6.64 3. When to make motion

When to make the motion challenging the judge depends in part on how the case is assigned to the judge for trial or hearing. Generally, the motion must be made before the trial or hearing begins. See §6.65. Exceptions to this rule occur if, e.g., the parties know which judge will hear the trial before the trial date (see §6.67) or if the case is assigned to one judge for all purposes (see §6.69).

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.65 a. General rule: Before trial or hearing

The general rule is that a CCP §170.6 motion to disqualify must be made before any of the following events occur (CCP §170.6(a)(2)):

- Drawing of the first juror's name;
- Opening statement by plaintiff's counsel, if there is no jury;
- Swearing of the first witness or giving of any evidence, if there is no opening statement; or
- Initiation of trial in any other fashion.

PRACTICE TIP: If the motion is directed to a hearing instead of a trial, make the motion no later than the beginning of the hearing. CCP §170.6(a)(2).

One case has held that a §170.6(a)(2) motion is not permitted unless a trial or hearing is pending or unless there is an all-purpose assignment. Grant v Superior Court (2001) 90 CA4th 518, 108 CR2d 825.

§6.66 b. If only one judge

Code of Civil Procedure §170.6(a)(2) also provides that if the court is authorized to have, and has, only one judge, a motion to disqualify must be made before the expiration of 30 days after the date the moving party first appears in the action.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.67 c. If judge known 10 days before hearing: 10-day/5-day rule

If the judge is known at least 10 days before the date set for trial, the motion must be made at least 5 days before trial (the 10-day/5-day rule). CCP §170.6(a)(2). If the case is assigned by the master calendar department for a trial on a future date, the 10-day/5-day rule applies, because the parties knew the judge's identity. See People v Escobedo (1973) 35 CA3d 32, 38, 110 CR 550. See also People v Superior Court (Lavi) (1993) 4 C4th 1164, 17 CR2d 815, discussed in §6.68.

The court in Lavi recognized that there is some confusion concerning the degree of certainty with which a judge must be known for the 10-day/5-day rule to apply. For example, if the trial is assigned to a trial department (rather than to a trial judge), would the trial judge be "known"? The court held that in most cases, the parties will be charged with knowing which judge sits in which courtroom, and that there is always a risk that a particular judge will not be able to hear the case because of, e.g., illness. This type of assignment, however, is sufficiently certain to invoke the 10-day/5-day rule if the case is assigned at least 10 days before trial. 4 C4th at 1183. See also discussion in §§6.68-6.69.

There is some debate about the effect of a continuance on the 10-day/5-day rule. Most courts hold that when a case is set for future trial before a particular department, a CCP §170.6 challenge filed at least 5 days before the continued trial date is timely. See People v Hall (1978) 86 CA3d 753, 150 CR 412; In re Jose S. (1978) 78 CA3d 619, 144 CR 309. Other courts appear to suggest that a continuance does not extend the time for a party to file a challenge under §170.6. See Hospital Council v Superior Court (1973) 30 CA3d 331, 106 CR 247; People v Kennedy (1967) 256 CA2d 755, 64 CR 345. Hospital Council and Kennedy were grounded, however, on the moving parties' failure to comply with the 10-day/5-day rule and the master calendar rule under CCP §170.6(a)(2). See §6.68 for master calendar rule.

§6.68 d. If judge assigned by master calendar

If the case is assigned to a trial department from a master calendar, the motion must be made to the judge supervising the master calendar (i.e., in the master calendar department) "not later than the time the cause is assigned for trial." CCP §170.6(a)(2); People v Escobedo (1973) 35 CA3d 32, 38, 110 CR 550. The requirements of CCP §170.6 cannot be modified by local court rules. Wells Fargo Bank v Superior Court (1988) 206 CA3d 918, 923, 254 CR 68; Estate of Brown (1987) 193 CA3d 1612, 1619, 239 CR 147.

Generally, the master calendar rule applies only when "a trial-ready case is assigned to a trial-ready courtroom" for immediate trial. People v Superior Court (Lavi) (1993) 4 C4th 1164, 1173 n5, 17 CR2d 815. The rule does not apply when the case is assigned from a master calendar department to a trial department for trial setting at a later date (the 10-day/5-day rule would apply). The court in Lavi reasoned that the purpose of requiring an immediate challenge when a master calendar judge assigns a trial-ready case to a trial-ready courtroom is to allow the master calendar court to reassign the case immediately to another judge and to assign another case to the challenged judge. When a master calendar court assigns a case to a courtroom substantially before the trial date, the rationale of the master calendar rule does not apply. In Lavi, the master calendar assigned the case to another department for that judge to set a trial date and complete the procedures necessary to ready the case for trial, an assignment for all purposes. 4 C4th at 1181. When the master calendar department assigns a case to a particular department for trial "forthwith," the master calendar rule applies. See People v Wilks (1978) 21 C3d 460, 146 CR 364.

There will undoubtedly be further litigation as to when "a trial-ready case is assigned to a trial-ready courtroom." In Lavi, the supreme court stated that the courtroom need not actually be idle at the time of the assignment to be trial-ready, but rather that the courtroom be available, or be reasonably expected to become available within a short time, so that the trial may begin. The court suggested that an assignment in the morning for a trial beginning in the afternoon or in the afternoon for a trial beginning the next morning would constitute an assignment to a trial-ready court. 4 C4th at 1177 n8.

§6.69 e. If judge assigned for all purposes

A motion to challenge a judge appointed for all purposes must be made within 10 days after notice of the all-purpose assignment or, if the challenging party had not appeared in the action when the assignment was made, within 10 days after the party's appearance. CCP §170.6(a)(2). Under the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act of 1990 (Govt C §§68600-68620), local courts must adopt rules that allow a party that is assigned to one judge in a direct calendar system 15 days after the party's first appearance to make a CCP §170.6 challenge. Govt C §68616(i). A challenge to a judge in a master calendar court must be made in accordance with CCP §170.6, i.e., at the time the assignment is made. Govt C §68616(i). See §6.68.

NOTE: The effect of Govt C §68616(i) is that litigants in a one-judge direct calendar system have 5 more days to file a peremptory challenge than CCP §170.6 authorizes. See discussion of this difference in La Seigneurie U.S. Holdings, Inc. v Superior Court (1994) 29 CA4th 1500, 1504, 35 CR2d 175.

First appearance. The word "appearance" as used in CCP §170.6 has consistently been interpreted to mean a general appearance. See La Seigneurie U.S. Holdings, Inc. v Superior Court, supra, and cases it cites. A special appearance for purposes of challenging service or jurisdiction does not trigger the time to challenge the judge under §170.6. 29 CA4th at 1506. See §6.71.

Assignment for all purposes. Code of Civil Procedure §170.6(a)(2) does not explain when an assignment to a judge may be deemed one for "all purposes." In People v Superior Court (Lavi) (1993) 4 C4th 1164, 17 CR2d 815, the supreme court adopted a two-prong test to decide whether the assignment is for all purposes (4 C4th at 1180):

- The assignment "must 'instantly pinpoint' the judge whom the parties can expect to ultimately preside at trial"; and
- That judge must be expected to process the entire case, acquiring an expertise in the issues of the case.

Lavi further instructs that an all-purpose assignment does not mean that a single judge must handle every matter in a given case, particularly in criminal cases; it is sufficient that, at the time of the all-purpose assignment, "substantial matters remain to be processed … and the assigned judge is expected to process all of those matters from that point on." People v Superior Court (Lavi) (1993) 4 C4th 1164, 1180 n13, 17 CR2d 815.

Whether the 10-day limit of CCP §170.6(a)(2) is triggered depends on the mechanism giving notice of the all-purpose assignment. The 10-day time limit does not apply unless the assignment of a case to a single judge for all purposes was made by local court rule or court order. See Shipp v Superior Court (1992) 5 CA4th 147, 6 CR2d 685. In Shipp, a local policy set forth in writing in the Manual of Procedures for the Family Law Department of the Los Angeles County Superior Court provided for all purpose assignments of dissolution. This formal policy, of which petitioner was aware, was enforceable as a local rule and effected an assignment for all-purposes sufficient to invoke the time for peremptory challenges. 5 CA4th at 151. In contrast, an informal arrangement for calendaring and assigning of cases for all purposes does not invoke the time for challenges. See Daniel V. v Superior Court (2006) 139 CA4th 28, 44, 42 CR3d 471 (assignment of juvenile cases under Welf & I C §602 through notices of petition issued by court clerk did not trigger time demands of CCP §170.6(a)(2); court order or written local rule required so that "counsel will not be left guessing when a section 170.6 challenge must be filed"). See also Jonathon M. v Superior Court (2006) 141 CA4th 1093, 46 CR3d 798 (in juvenile case, peremptory challenge was timely under Daniel V.).

The civil assignment situation is different from the criminal arena, where cases are assigned to a department, rather than a particular judge, to facilitate speedy trial requirements. See Reygoza v Superior Court (1991) 230 CA3d 514, 281 CR 390 (local court policy pertaining to civil cases did not override system of assignments in criminal case).

If an action is subject to the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act of 1990 (TCDRA) (Govt C §68600), judicial challenges under CCP §170.6 shall be exercised "within 15 days of the party's first appearance." Govt C §68616(i); see Fight for the Rams v Superior Court (1996) 41 CA4th 953, 48 CR2d 851. In reaching this decision, the court in Fight for the Rams held that "first appearance" does not mean that the plaintiff must file such a challenge within 15 days of filing the complaint. Rather, when a direct calendar assignment is made more than 15 days after a complaint is filed, the "first appearance" by plaintiff or defendant who has already responded to the complaint in a direct calendar court coincides with the direct calendar assignment. The court also held that the failure to challenge the assigned judge before hearing and rulings on a demurrer does not eliminate the right to make the challenge. If the judge presides at a hearing "not involving a determination of contested fact issues relating to the merits," a posthearing or postruling challenge is not precluded. CCP §170.6. The ruling on the demurrer was not a determination of contested fact issues relating to the merits.

The same rule applies when a case is assigned to a new all-purpose judge. See Motion Picture & Television Fund Hosp. v Superior Court (2001) 88 CA4th 488, 105 CR2d 872. Opinions in the lower courts are in conflict over application of the all-purpose-assignment rule when a case is assigned to a specific department rather than a specific judge. The court in Lavi held that this was a question of fact, but that generally the rule would apply if the parties could reasonably ascertain which judge, if any, is regularly assigned to the relevant department and the two prongs of the all-purpose test are met. 4 C4th at 1180 n12. Because the nature of this test is uncertain, it is good practice to assume that the all-purpose-assignment rule will apply to a case assigned to a specific department, rather than a specific judge, unless no particular judge is regularly assigned to that department.

It was not clear previously whether, when mailing a notice of the assignment of an all-purpose or direct-calendar judge under the TCDRA, counsel could count on the 5-day extension of time for mailing under CCP §1013. It is now clear that the 5-day extension of time does apply. California Bus. Council v Superior Court (1997) 52 CA4th 1100, 1106, 62 CR2d 7. Older authority had construed former Los Angeles Super Ct R 1104.1 (now Los Angeles Ct R 7.5) to preclude an extension of time for mailing under CCP §1013. See Swenson v Superior Court (1988) 202 CA3d 348, 248 CR 340.

PRACTICE TIP: Check all appropriate local rules. Procedures for challenging a judge under CCP §170.6 vary among counties, depending on the local rules adopted to implement the TCDRA.

§6.70 f. Law and motion judge

Code of Civil Procedure §170.6 has no specific rule for law and motion judges. Language in the section states that "if the motion is directed to a hearing (other than the trial of a cause), the motion shall be made not later than the commencement of the hearing." This language seems to allow peremptory challenges to a law and motion judge to be made up to the time of the hearing. However, other language, in CCP §170.6(a)(2), seems to require a motion under the 10-day/5-day rule (see §6.67) when "the judge … court commissioner or referee assigned to or who is scheduled to try the cause or hear the matter is known at least 10 days before the date set for trial or hearing."

The parties usually know in advance which judge will hear a law and motion matter because, e.g., all law and motion matters are heard in a particular law and motion department, or by the all-purpose individual calendaring (I/C) judge. The courts have held that when a motion is set for hearing in a particular department, and the judge regularly scheduled to sit in that department is known or can be ascertained, the 10-day/5-day rule applies. People v Superior Court (Lavi) (1993) 4 C4th 1164, 17 CR2d 815. See §6.68.

When the court issues a tentative ruling, the issuance may be considered the commencement of the hearing for purposes of §170.6 unless the identity of the judge who will hear the motion is not known until after the tentative ruling is issued. See Kaiser Found. Hosps. v Superior Court (1987) 190 CA3d 721, 235 CR 630.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.71 g. If already appeared before judge in case

Generally, when a party seeks to disqualify a judge from presiding over subsequent proceedings in the same case, that challenge will be found untimely. For example, a party cannot challenge the trial judge in postjudgment proceedings if those proceedings constitute a continuation of the original case and involve substantially the same issues. Astourian v Superior Court (1990) 226 CA3d 720, 276 CR 657. In Astourian, the court found that an order to show cause for contempt for failure to obey a preliminary injunction was a continuation of the original proceedings, and that a CCP §170.6 challenge to the judge who had issued the injunction was untimely.

Not a determination of contested fact. If a judge has already presided at a hearing in the matter, but that hearing did not involve a determination of contested facts relating to the merits, a party may still challenge that judge under CCP §170.6. CCP §170.6(a)(2). For example, a §170.6 motion is not precluded when a judge has presided over a demurrer or a motion for judgment on the pleadings, because such a proceeding requires the judge to decide only issues of law, not fact. See generally Los Angeles County Dep't of Pub. Soc. Servs. v Superior Court (1977) 69 CA3d 407, 417, 138 CR 43. See also Swift v Superior Court (2009) 172 CA4th 878, 883, 91 CR3d 504 (judge's routine discovery rulings, unrelated to merits of action, insufficient to make §170.6 motion untimely); People v Whitfield (1986) 183 CA3d 299, 228 CR 82 (hearing on counsel's competency does not constitute determination of contested facts relating to merits for purposes of §170.6).

Nor does ruling on a motion for summary judgment constitute a determination of a contested fact issue for purposes of CCP §170.6, because, in ruling on a summary judgment motion, the judge does not pass on or determine issues of fact, but merely decides whether a triable issue of fact exists. Bambula v Superior Court (1985) 174 CA3d 653, 220 CR 223. The court in California Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v Superior Court (1987) 189 CA3d 267, 234 CR 413, however, refused to apply Bambula to a motion for summary adjudication of issues, at least on the facts of that case. The court characterized the Bambula decision as a simple decision on whether a triable issue of fact existed. In California Fed. Sav. & Loan, the court decided several complex questions of law. Other courts have declined to follow California Fed. Sav. & Loan. See Zilog, Inc. v Superior Court (2001) 86 CA4th 1309, 1322, 104 CR2d 173.

A ruling on an ex parte application for a temporary restraining order (TRO) does not constitute a determination of a contested fact issue. A TRO is purely transitory and terminates when a preliminary injunction is issued. Landmark Holding Group, Inc. v Superior Court (1987) 193 CA3d 525, 238 CR 475. See also International Union of Operating Eng'rs v Superior Court (1989) 207 CA3d 340, 254 CR 782.

Not a general appearance. A special appearance by a party to quash service or challenge jurisdiction does not qualify as an appearance for purposes of §170.6. La Seigneurie U.S. Holdings, Inc. v Superior Court (1994) 29 CA4th 1500, 1504, 35 CR2d 175. Even if the judge who decides the motion to quash is a judge assigned for all purposes under the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act of 1990, the deadline to challenge the judge does not begin until the party makes its first general appearance. 29 CA4th at 1506.

§6.72 h. After appeal

A motion under CCP §170.6 may be made after a reversal on appeal if the judge who heard the earlier proceeding is assigned to the new trial. The motion must be made within 60 days after the party has been notified of the assignment. CCP §170.6(a)(2). See Stubblefield Constr. Co. v Superior Court (2000) 81 CA4th 762, 97 CR2d 121. Even if the party has already used a peremptory challenge on another judge before the case was decided at the trial level, an appeal and remand resurrects the right to a peremptory challenge. CCP §170.6(a)(2) (final paragraph); Pfeiffer Venice Props. v Superior Court (2003) 107 CA4th 761, 766, 132 CR2d 400.

When the remand does not require the reopening or reconsideration of factual or legal issues already decided by the trial judge, there is no "new trial" for purposes of CCP §170.6(a)(2) and a peremptory challenge will be properly denied. Paterno v Superior Court (2004) 123 CA4th 548, 20 CR3d 282 (remand for determination of damages only was not "new trial" and peremptory challenge properly dismissed). But see First Fed. Bank of Cal. v Superior Court (2006) 143 CA4th 310, 49 CR3d 296 (remand for determination of amount of attorney fees considered "new trial" because trial judge had previously determined that party was not entitled to fees).

In a coordinated action, a party that successfully challenges a summary judgment ruling on appeal may thereafter exercise a peremptory challenge of the judge notwithstanding Cal Rules of Ct 3.516, which ordinarily allows a party 20 days to challenge a judge assigned to a coordination proceeding. Jane Doe 8015 v Superior Court (2007) 148 CA4th 489, 55 CR3d 708.

On CCP §170.6 challenges in coordinated proceedings, see §6.74.

§6.73 i. New trial after writ

In Overton v Superior Court (1994) 22 CA4th 112, 27 CR2d 274, the court held that the provision of CCP §170.6(a)(2) allowing a challenge if the case is assigned to the same judge after reversal on appeal also applies when a new trial is ordered as part of the relief granted in a writ proceeding. The court construed "appeal" in the statute to include writ proceedings in order to give litigants who obtain a new trial as a result of a writ proceeding the same protections successful appellants have. It reasoned that a judge's potential bias against a party who obtains a new trial in a writ proceeding is just as substantial as it is in an appeal. The court stated that construing "appeal" to include writ proceedings would not result in an abuse of the CCP §170.6 challenge or a dramatic expansion of the right, because new trials resulting from writ proceedings are exceedingly rare.

When a writ proceeding does not result in a new trial, however, a peremptory challenge may not be made under CCP §170.6(a)(2). State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v Superior Court (2004) 121 CA4th 490, 493, 17 CR3d 146 (peremptory challenge was properly denied because trial judge did not "try" case and earlier writ proceeding on conflict of laws issue will not result in "new trial").

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.74 j. In coordinated proceeding

The parties have 20 days after service of the order assigning a judge in a coordinated proceeding to submit a motion or affidavit challenging the judge under CCP §170.6. Cal Rules of Ct 3.516. All plaintiffs in all the coordinated actions constitute one side for purposes of the one-challenge rule, and all defendants constitute the other side. Cal Rules of Ct 3.516. See Philip Morris Inc. v Superior Court (1999) 71 CA4th 116, 122, 83 CR2d 671 (each side in coordination proceeding is entitled to one §170.6 peremptory challenge to disqualify assigned coordination trial judge within 20 days after assignment order).

Even if the judge assigned as the coordination judge has ruled in one or more of the coordinated cases before the coordination, the parties still have 20 days under Cal Rules of Ct 3.516 to file a CCP §170.6 challenge. Farmers Ins. Exch. v Superior Court (1992) 10 CA4th 1509, 13 CR2d 449 (former Cal Rules of Ct 1515 took precedence over §170.6). Similarly, even though one judge is assigned as the coordination motion judge, the parties have 20 days under former Rule 1515 when they are served with a subsequent notice appointing the same judge as coordination trial judge. Stone v Superior Court (1994) 25 CA4th 1144, 31 CR2d 56.

In Citicorp N. Am., Inc. v Superior Court (1989) 213 CA3d 563, 261 CR 668, the court held that the 20-day period to challenge the judge assigned in a coordination proceeding is extended for 5 days under CCP §1013 if the notice of assignment is mailed. The court held that §1013 will extend a time period if service of a document triggers the prescribed time period, but the statute will not extend the time period if some event other than service of a document is the trigger. Because each side in a coordinated proceeding has only one challenge, the parties on each side must consult with one another to decide whether to exercise that challenge. Extending the 20-day period under §1013 when the notice of the assignment was served by mail furthered the purpose of giving the parties the full 20 days to consult and then to act.

On CCP §170.6 challenge after successful appeal of summary judgment in coordinated proceeding, see §6.72.

§6.75 4. What to include in motion: Affidavit or declaration to establish prejudice

Any affidavit filed under CCP §170.6 must be in substantially the same form as the affidavit in CCP §170.6(a)(5). Any oral statement under oath, or declaration under penalty of perjury made under §170.6, must also include substantially the same contents as the affidavit in §170.6(a)(5). CCP §170.6(a)(6). See §6.112 for a sample declaration form. Printed forms for making challenges under §170.6 are available in some courts.

The affidavit simply states that the judge is so prejudiced against the party or attorney that the party cannot, or believes that the party cannot, have a fair and impartial trial before that judge. CCP §170.6(a)(2), (5). Good faith is sufficiently established if the affidavit is in proper form and timely filed; proof of facts showing actual prejudice is not required. People v Superior Court (Williams) (1992) 8 CA4th 688, 698, 10 CR2d 873.

PRACTICE TIP: When using an oral statement instead of a written declaration, e.g., when the case is assigned to a trial department from a master calendar and there is no time for a written declaration (or affidavit), state to the judge supervising the master calendar (i.e., in the master calendar department): "There will be a challenge under CCP §170.6, Your Honor. May I please be sworn?"

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.76 5. Opposing the motion

As explained in §6.58, because disqualification of the judge under CCP §170.6 is automatic after the proper affidavit is filed, opposing the challenge is pointless. Parties may oppose the challenge, however, if they can prove that the party challenging the judge is using §170.6 to exclude persons on racial grounds through invidious discrimination. See discussion and test for this opposition to a §170.6 challenge in People v Superior Court (Williams) (1992) 8 CA4th 688, 10 CR2d 873. Similarly, the opposing party may point out to the judge that the challenge is untimely or incomplete.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.77 6. Judge disqualified and case transferred

If the motion is timely and properly made, the disqualification is automatic, i.e., no further act or proof is required. CCP §170.6(a)(3). See Journey v Superior Court (1975) 47 CA3d 408, 411, 120 CR 897. The judge supervising the master calendar assigns another trial judge of the same court, or, if there is no other judge, the chairman of the Judicial Council assigns another judge to try or hear the matter. CCP §170.6(a)(3).

If another party, or the court, objects to the timeliness or propriety of the motion, the master calendar judge or the challenged judge must conduct a hearing to determine, for example, whether the motion is timely. See, e.g., Shipp v Superior Court (1992) 5 CA4th 147, 6 CR2d 685; Andrews v Joint Clerks Port Labor Relations Comm. (1966) 239 CA2d 285, 294, 48 CR 646.

When a party files a timely CCP §170.6 challenge to the trial judge, the trial judge must disqualify himself or herself from the entire case and transfer it for reassignment. The judge cannot sever, for example, a cross-complaint and reassign only a part of the case to another judge. Sunkyong Trading (H.K.), Ltd. v Superior Court (1992) 9 CA4th 282, 11 CR2d 504.

See §6.78 on the time within which extraordinary relief must be sought if the §170.6 challenge is denied.

§6.78 G. Availability of extraordinary relief

A judge's decision on whether to disqualify a challenged judge for cause under CCP §170.1 is not reviewable by appeal. CCP §170.3(d). See People v Barrera (1999) 70 CA4th 541, 82 CR2d 755 (although judge may not ask parties and attorneys whether they wish to waive disqualification based on judge's having served as attorney in matter, parties aware of basis for disqualification and who choose to waive it are bound by writ requirement of CCP §170.3(d)). Rather, the judge's decision may be reviewed by seeking a writ of mandate from an appropriate appellate court within 10 days after notice to the parties of the decision. Only parties may seek review of the decision, but presumably a party could ask for a writ following a decision to disqualify or not to disqualify. Under former law, the review process apparently was available only to review the denial of a motion to disqualify. Review is available only to a party litigant, not to a disqualified judge. Curle v Superior Court (2001) 24 C4th 1057, 103 CR2d 751.

In People v Brown (1993) 6 C4th 322, 24 CR2d 710, the supreme court held that a decision denying disqualification is reviewable by appeal from the final judgment when the basis of the appeal is the denial of constitutional due process because of the judge's bias (as opposed to a statutory basis for disqualification). The court suggested, however, that a party who fails to seek writ review of the denial of the disqualification motion may forfeit the right to raise the due process claim on appeal from the final judgment. The court also suggested that when the writ is heard and denied on its merits, the matter may be precluded on appeal by the "law of the case" doctrine. 6 C4th at 336 n11.

Although CCP §170.6 (peremptory challenges) does not provide a deadline to seek a writ contesting a peremptory challenge ruling, the 10-day time limit for a writ in CCP §170.3(d) is generally held to apply to all challenges, not just those for cause. See People v Hull (1991) 1 C4th 266, 2 CR2d 526 (CCP §170.3(d) provided exclusive means to review denial of §170.6 challenge); In re Sheila B. (1993) 19 CA4th 187, 194, 23 CR2d 482 (§170.3(d) provided sole means to review grant of §170.6 challenge). The court in Hull adopted essentially the same reasoning as the Fourth District Court of Appeal used in Guedalia v Superior Court (1989) 211 CA3d 1156, 260 CR 99.

The Guedalia court also held that the 10-day period for contesting the ruling that denied the challenge began to run when the judge informed the party in open court that the peremptory challenge was untimely. Written notice of the ruling was not required. See California Civil Writ Practice §§16.3, 16.5, 18.73, 18.78 (4th ed Cal CEB 2008) for additional case information.

V. DISMISSING CASE

§6.79 1. Authority: CCP §581(c)

Under CCP §581(c), a plaintiff may dismiss the entire complaint or any cause of action asserted in it regarding any defendant or defendants with or without prejudice before the start of trial. Unless specifically stated to be with prejudice, a voluntary dismissal under §581(c) before trial begins is without prejudice. See Neil G. v Superior Court (1973) 30 CA3d 572, 576, 106 CR 505. A dismissal of an action without prejudice is available at any time under CCP §581(b)(2) by written consent of all parties.

After the trial has begun, dismissal at the plaintiff's request is with prejudice unless all parties consent to a dismissal without prejudice, or, for good cause shown, the court orders a dismissal without prejudice. CCP §581(e); Davis v Pine Mountain Lumber Co. (1969) 273 CA2d 218, 227, 77 CR 825.

Under CCP §581(d), the court can dismiss an action with prejudice when, during trial, the plaintiff abandons the action before final submission of the case. Dismissal under §581(d) might be characterized as involuntary.

The rules under the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act of 1990 (TCDRA) do not affect a plaintiff's right to dismiss an action without prejudice before trial. In Harris v Billings (1993) 16 CA4th 1396, 20 CR2d 718, the parties entered into an agreement to continue settlement negotiations and allow plaintiff to dismiss the complaint without prejudice to the plaintiff's later right to refile it. The trial court vacated the agreed-on dismissal without prejudice and entered a dismissal with prejudice, finding that the parties did not have the power to agree to dismiss without prejudice, because the agreement subverted the goals of TCDRA. The Second District reversed, finding that TCDRA did not allow the court to deprive a plaintiff of the statutory right to dismiss an action without prejudice before trial, and holding that the right to voluntarily dismiss was consistent with TCDRA goals (removing cases currently in the court system).

See California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 39 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004) on voluntary dismissal. On dismissals when either or both parties fail to appear for trial, see CCP §581(b)(3). On dismissals under CCP §581, see 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Proceedings Without Trial §§283-314 (5th ed 2008).

§6.79A 2. Right to voluntary dismissal not absolute

Although CCP §581(c) provides that the plaintiff may dismiss without prejudice any time before the "actual commencement of trial," cases have held that other procedures short of trial that "effectually dispose of the case" may cut off plaintiff's right to dismiss without prejudice. Wells v Marina City Prop. (1981) 29 C3d 781, 785, 176 CR 104. See, e.g., Gray v Superior Court (1997) 52 CA4th 165, 60 CR2d 428 (plaintiff's right to voluntarily dismiss cutoff by commencement of evidentiary proceedings before referee in partition action).

NOTE: In such a case, even if the dismissal is allowed, the refiled case may be deemed "related" and assigned to the same judge. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 7.3(d). By extension, this could mean that a peremptory challenge in the second case may be deemed untimely. Stephens v Superior Court (2002) 96 CA4th 54, 62, 116 CR2d 616.

Other exceptions to the right to voluntarily dismiss include cases in which the action has proceeded to a determinative adjudication or a decision that is tantamount to an adjudication. See, e.g., Groth Bros. Oldsmobile, Inc. v Gallagher (2002) 97 CA4th 60, 70, 118 CR2d 405 (plaintiff failed to file opposition to defendant's demurrer and attempted to dismiss voluntarily after court issued tentative ruling sustaining demurrer; voluntary dismissal invalid); Cravens v State Bd. of Equalization (1997) 52 CA4th 253, 60 CR2d 436 (plaintiff failed to file opposition to defendant's summary judgment motion and sought to dismiss voluntarily on day before hearing; voluntary dismissal invalid). But see Zapanta v Universal Care, Inc. (2003) 107 CA4th 1167, 132 CR2d 842 (trial court erred in granting defense summary judgment motion after plaintiff had filed voluntary dismissal one day before opposition was due).

In Franklin Capital Corp. v Wilson (2007) 148 CA4th 187, 55 CR3d 424, the Fourth District Court of Appeal reviewed the disparate voluntary dismissal cases and proposed a "mere formality" test to harmonize the cases. Under this test, the right to voluntarily dismiss without prejudice is cut off, if (1) the trial court has made a public and formal indication of an intention to dismiss, or (2) the case has fallen into an unwinnable posture and dismissal with prejudice is a "mere formality," regardless of whether the judge has formally indicated such an intention. See also Gogri v Jack in the Box Inc. (2008) 166 CA4th 255, 269 n11, 82 CR3d 629 (dismissal with prejudice not mere formality when voluntary dismissal was filed after opposition to summary judgment motion but before tentative ruling).

§6.80 3. Using dismissal as a trial tactic

Always analyze the best means of presenting the client's case in the most efficient and persuasive manner possible, and determine the way in which you want the evidence to unfold before the trier of fact. When representing a plaintiff or cross-complainant, it may be best to dismiss certain parties or causes of action in order to eliminate discordant evidence or parties who will engender sympathy and to achieve greater control over the trial presentation. For example, a particular defendant, if not dismissed, may evoke the sympathy of the court or jury and adversely affect the outcome of the claim against the other defendants.

The dismissal of a party or a cause of action may have a deleterious effect on plaintiff's case, either legally or tactically. Carefully analyze the risks of such a course of action along with the benefits. Some typical questions include:

- Do the remaining defendants have sufficient assets to satisfy a judgment?
- Will dismissal of a cause of action or party limit the introduction of evidence helpful to plaintiff's case or will dismissal limit the introduction of damaging evidence by defendants?
- Will dismissal of a party operate as a bar to recovery against other defendants (e.g., dismissal of a primary obligor in a suit against a guarantor)?
- Will dismissal of an out-of-state defendant render that defendant unavailable as a witness at trial or affect the admissibility of the defendant's deposition testimony (e.g., admissions made by a defendant who is no longer a party to the suit may not be admissible)?
- Is the party to be dismissed indispensable?
- Will dismissal of a defendant leave an empty chair for other defendants to blame?
- Will a defendant waive costs in exchange for dismissal on the eve of trial?

In short, conduct a comprehensive review of the tactical and legal considerations pertinent to the pretrial dismissal of parties or causes of action before voluntarily dismissing parties or causes of action under CCP §581.

§6.81 4. Filing request to voluntarily dismiss

The plaintiff may file a written request with the clerk, or make an oral or written request to the judge, to dismiss the action before the trial begins. CCP §581(b)(1).

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.82 5. When to request dismissal: Before trial

Before a trial begins, the plaintiff may ask the court to dismiss the action. CCP §581(b)(1). A dismissal of an action by written consent of all the parties is available at any time under CCP §581(b)(2). See California Civil Procedure Before Trial §§39.95-39.125 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

PRACTICE TIP: Make voluntary dismissals before the trial date, if possible. In some situations, however, you may need to voluntarily dismiss one or more causes of action or defendants as late as the time of trial, e.g., when pretrial settlements have just been reached with some defendants. On settlements generally, see Civ Proc Before Trial, chaps 46-50.

Under CCP §581(a)(6), the trial is considered to have started:

- At the beginning of the opening statement or argument of any party or counsel; or
- When the oath or affirmation is administered to the first witness or when any evidence is introduced.

Section 581(a)(6) has been construed to bar a plaintiff from voluntarily dismissing an action when a general demurrer has been sustained and plaintiff fails to amend within the time authorized. Wells v Marina City Prop. (1981) 29 C3d 781, 176 CR 104.

© The Regents of the University of California

6. Effect of dismissal

§6.83 a. If dismissed without prejudice

A voluntary dismissal without prejudice under CCP §581(c) before the trial begins does not bar another action by the plaintiff in the same cause. See Neil G. v Superior Court (1973) 30 CA3d 572, 576, 106 CR 505; 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Proceedings Without Trial §§307-310 (5th ed 2008). See also Crosswhite v American Ins. Co. (1964) 61 C2d 300, 38 CR 412. Although a dismissal without prejudice does not prevent the plaintiff from filing a new action (see Crosswhite v American Ins. Co., supra; Neil G. v Superior Court, supra), such a dismissal is considered a termination in defendant's favor and will support an action for malicious prosecution. MacDonald v Joslyn (1969) 275 CA2d 282, 79 CR 707.

NOTE: Following a dismissal without prejudice, the dismissed party can file a motion to tax costs, unless the parties agree to a waiver of costs. The dismissed party cannot, however, recover attorney fees because there is no prevailing party when a case has been voluntarily dismissed. CC §1717(b)(2).

§6.84 b. If dismissed with prejudice

A dismissal with prejudice is res judicata and bars a subsequent action between the same parties on the same claim or same primary right. See Goddard v Sec. Title Ins. & Guar. Co. (1939) 14 C2d 47, 92 P2d 804; Weikel v TCW Realty Fund II Holding Co. (1997) 55 CA4th 1234, 65 CR2d 25. A dismissal with prejudice is a termination in defendant's favor and will support an action for malicious prosecution. MacDonald v Joslyn (1969) 275 CA2d 282, 79 CR 707.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.85 c. Defendant can recover costs

When a plaintiff dismisses an action under CCP §581(b)(1), whether with or without prejudice, the defendant is the prevailing party under CCP §1032(a)(4) and the plaintiff must pay costs. Santisas v Goodin (1998) 17 C4th 599, 606, 71 CR2d 830 (dismissal with prejudice); International Indus. v Olen (1978) 21 C3d 218, 221, 145 CR 691 (dismissal without prejudice). See Adler v Vaicius (1993) 21 CA4th 1770, 1777, 27 CR2d 32 (defendant was prevailing party even though plaintiff prevailed on TRO before voluntarily dismissing). See also Santos v Civil Serv. Bd. (1987) 193 CA3d 1442, 239 CR 14 (court found that party in whose favor voluntary dismissal was entered in administrative mandamus action was prevailing party and, therefore, entitled to costs under CCP §1094.5). See 7 Witkin, California Procedure, Judgment §§83-95 (5th ed 2008).

In Santisas v Goodin, supra, the California Supreme Court addressed the issue of whether the costs that the defendant may recover in voluntary dismissal cases include the amounts incurred as attorney fees in defending the litigation. The court concluded that in voluntary pretrial dismissal cases, recovery of attorney fees incurred in defending contract claims is barred by CC §1717(b)(2), but that whether attorney fees incurred in defending tort or other noncontract claims are recoverable depends on the terms of the contractual attorney fee provision (17 C4th at 622):

> [A] court may determine whether there is a prevailing party, and if so which party meets that definition, by examining the terms of the contract at issue, including any contractual definition of the term "prevailing party" and any contractual provision governing payment of attorney fees in the event of dismissal.

On defendant's recovery of costs, see chap 26; 7 Witkin, California Procedure, Judgment §92 (5th ed 2008).

§6.86 B. Involuntary dismissal

Code of Civil Procedure §§583.110-583.430 set forth grounds for dismissing an action for failure to prosecute. The procedure to follow for a party seeking a dismissal for delay in prosecution under CCP §§583.410-583.430 is in Cal Rules of Ct 3.1342. For detailed discussion of involuntary dismissals and procedure generally, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 39 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

PRACTICE TIP: Dismissal motions under CCP §§583.110-583.430 should be made before the trial date, if possible.

VI. AMENDING PLEADINGS

§6.87 A. Authority (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1324); grounds (CCP §§473, 576)

The procedure for making amendments to pleadings and amended pleadings are governed by Cal Rules of Ct 3.1324. Motions to amend pleadings may be made on the grounds stated in CCP §§473 and 576. See California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 16 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004) on amending and supplementing complaints. On moving to amend pleadings to conform to proof during or after trial, see §§18.103-18.123; see forms in §§18.132-18.134.

A party may need to amend pleadings shortly before trial so that the pleading conforms to evidence gathered during trial preparation or in response to a motion for judgment on the pleadings. The court should grant leave to amend before granting a motion for judgment on the pleadings in the following circumstances:

- "[W]hen the facts stated indicate that the party probably has a good cause of action or defense, but that it has been pleaded imperfectly or defectively, and the defects have not been called to his attention by demurrer or by a notice of motion for judgment on the pleadings." MacIsaac v Pozzo (1945) 26 C2d 809, 815, 161 P2d 449; Tiffany v Sierra Sands Unified Sch. Dist. (1980) 103 CA3d 218, 225, 162 CR 669.
- When the defective pleading was previously upheld against a general demurrer. Dobbins v Hardister (1966) 242 CA2d 787, 796, 51 CR 866. For further discussion, see Civ Proc Before Trial §§34.18-34.19.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.88 B. When to move to amend

Move to amend pleadings under CCP §§473 and 576 as far before trial as possible to avoid the risk of denial. An attempt to amend a pleading on the day of trial may disrupt the trial and prejudice the other party. "[S]uch an amendment [can] cause a radical switch in trial plans." Deetz v Carter (1965) 232 CA2d 851, 857, 43 CR 321. The court may deny the motion to amend if it finds that the attorney lacked diligence in moving to amend a pleading after knowing the facts or that the opposing party will be adversely affected. See Marvin v Marvin (1976) 18 C3d 660, 667 n2, 134 CR 815; Bank of America v Goldstein (1938) 25 CA2d 37, 47, 76 P2d 545; 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §§1201-1208 (5th ed 2008). See also Roemer v Retail Credit Co. (1975) 44 CA3d 926, 939, 119 CR 82.

Permission to file an amended pleading on the day of trial is within the court's discretion. Moss Estate Co. v Adler (1953) 41 C2d 581, 585, 261 P2d 732. Amendments to the pleadings on the day of trial have also been permitted. See, e.g., Deetz v Carter, supra; Posz v Burchell (1962) 209 CA2d 324, 25 CR 896. See also Weingarten v Block (1980) 102 CA3d 129, 162 CR 701.

Presumably, an oral application to amend pleadings could be granted when the parties appear before the court on the trial date. See McKee v Mires (1952) 110 CA2d 517, 242 P2d 954 (no error in permitting amendment to conform to proof when no notice of hearing given); Karlik v Peters (1930) 106 CA 126, 288 P 863 (when parties were in court in response to notice of motion for judgment on pleadings, it was not error to grant oral application for leave to file amended complaint even though no notice had been originally given). But see Hall v Department of Adoptions (1975) 47 CA3d 898, 121 CR 223.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: With the intensive case management that is the signature of the civil delay reduction program, there must be good cause to amend on a matter of substance before a judge will grant this motion.

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Making noticed motion to amend

§6.89 1. Using written motion

Make a trial-day motion to amend the pleadings in writing. It is advisable to make it on noticed motion rather than handing it to opposing counsel and filing it with the court immediately before going into the chambers conference. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1324. The motion may be denied for lack of notice if you proceed without noticed motion. See CCP §473; Hall v Department of Adoptions (1975) 47 CA3d 898, 121 CR 223 (at beginning of trial after motion for judgment on pleadings but before ruling on it, court erred by allowing amendment of pleadings without notice as required by §473); Bank of America v Goldstein (1938) 25 CA2d 37, 76 P2d 545 (denial of motion to amend answer on morning of trial was not abuse of court's discretion when no notice of hearing on motion had previously been served on plaintiff).

Although CCP §473 authorizes minor amendments without requiring notice to the adverse party, notice is necessary when an amendment concerns a matter of substance. Estate of Hunter (1961) 194 CA2d 859, 864, 15 CR 556. In Hunter, the court allowed an amended petition for confirmation of sale (a matter of substance), even though no notice under §473 was given, because the adverse party suffered no prejudice. 194 CA2d at 865. On notice of motion procedure generally, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 12 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/6 Court Conferences and Selected Pretrial Motions/§6.90 2. Using amended pleadings that supersede original pleadings

§6.90 2. Using amended pleadings that supersede original pleadings

Although amendments to a pleading are permissible if certain conditions are met (see Cal Rules of Ct 3.1324(a)-(b)), the court may require counsel to prepare an amended pleading that wholly supersedes the original pleading (see Cal Rules of Ct 3.1324(c)). Courts disfavor amendments to a pleading that preserve the original pleading, because the amendments inconveniently require referring to multiple documents. The court's permission is required before making any alterations to the face of a pleading, and any alternation must be initialed by the judge or the clerk. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1324(d).

NOTE: Counsel must comply with Cal Rules of Ct 3.1110 and 3.1302 on the format, and place and manner, of filing motions.

© The Regents of the University of California

D. What to include in supporting papers

§6.91 1. Notice of motion

The notice of motion to amend a pleading before trial must (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1324(a)):

- Include a copy of the proposed amendment or amended pleading, which must be serially numbered to differentiate it from previous pleadings or amendments;
- Identify any allegations that the moving party proposes to delete from the previous pleading, and specify the location of those deletions by page, paragraph, and line number; and
- State any allegations that the moving party proposes to add to the previous pleading, and specify the location of those additions by page, paragraph, and line number.

In the notice of motion, ask the court to issue an order that both grants leave to amend and deems that the proposed amended pleading included with the motion is filed. This method avoids the problem of having to file the amendment or amended pleading after the court grants your motion to amend. See Campagna v Market St. Ry. (1944) 24 C2d 304, 149 P2d 281.

To avoid a continuance based on the opposing party's need to answer a complaint or cross-complaint, ask in the motion (when practicable) that new allegations be deemed denied and that the existing answer be deemed the answer to the new pleading.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.92 2. Declaration; supporting memorandum and copy of proposed pleading

A separate declaration must accompany the motion to amend a pleading that specifies (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1324(b)):

- The effect of the amendment;
- Why the amendment is necessary and proper;
- When the facts giving rise to the amended allegations were discovered; and
- The reasons why the request for amendment was not made earlier.

A supporting memorandum must be filed with the notice of motion. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113. It may also be appropriate to include the following points in the papers supporting the motion:

- Good cause. Show that there is a good reason for the amendment; for example, it is good practice to argue that the claim or defense is one on which the client is likely to succeed (see, e.g., Richter v Adams (1941) 43 CA2d 184, 188, 110 P2d 486), and therefore the claim is necessary for a just adjudication.
- Absence of prejudice. Show that the opposing party will not be prejudiced by the amendment; for example, the proposed change was revealed to the adverse party during the pretrial phase, no new discovery will be required, or the trial need not be delayed. If you believe that the adverse party will be able to show prejudice through delay or additional discovery burdens, offer ameliorative measures such as voluntarily submitting to discovery, stipulating to a continuance, or even, when the amendment is important enough, paying the adverse party's costs. Under CCP §473, a court may grant leave to amend but condition its order on the trial's continuance and the payment of just costs to the adverse party.

Attach a copy of the proposed amended pleading to the motion papers.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.93 E. What to include in papers opposing motion

In preparing papers opposing the motion, focus on the converse of the issues discussed in §6.92, e.g.:

- No good cause. Argue that the amendment is not likely to present a successful issue, and the court should deny the motion. Point out, for example, that the proposed amendment is barred by the statute of limitations (see, e.g., Huber, Hunt & Nichols, Inc. v Moore (1977) 67 CA3d 278, 293, 136 CR 603), is demurrable (see, e.g., Robertson v City of Long Beach (1937) 19 CA2d 676, 66 P2d 167), is otherwise not legally sustainable, or is a claim or defense on which the proponent is unlikely to succeed. If the moving party contends that the amendment does not substantially alter the pleaded claims and defenses, argue that there is no justification for a last-minute amendment (see Huber, Hunt & Nichols, Inc. v Moore, supra).
- Unjustified delay. Set forth any evidence showing that the motion could have been brought earlier (see, e.g., Hayutin v Weintraub (1962) 207 CA2d 497, 506, 24 CR 761).
- Prejudice. Show how the amendment will cause your client prejudice; for example, trial delay (see, e.g., Huber, Hunt & Nichols, Inc. v Moore, supra), loss of or difficulty in finding documentary or testimonial evidence (see, e.g., Hayutin v Weintraub, supra), or unnecessary duplication of effort. When possible, quantify the prejudice in dollars or set forth the amendment's qualitative effect on the issues, or the need to reopen discovery on new issues raised in the amended pleading.
- Ameliorating conditions. Ask that, if the court grants the motion to amend, the court also award you costs, a continuance, or discovery, as appropriate.

© The Regents of the University of California

VII. JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS

§6.94 A. Authority (CCP §438); grounds for motion

Code of Civil Procedure §438 provides express statutory authority for a motion for judgment on the pleadings, but the procedure was well established by case law and common practice long before the statute was enacted. See, e.g., Colberg, Inc. v State ex rel Dep't of Pub. Works (1967) 67 C2d 408, 62 CR 401; Sofias v Bank of America (1985) 172 CA3d 583, 586, 218 CR 388. See generally 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Proceedings Without Trial §186 (5th ed 2008).

The motion for judgment on the pleadings asks the court to rule that:

- The complaint (or cross-complaint or alleged cause of action) does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. CCP §438(c)(1)(B)(ii). See Mathews v State ex rel Dep't of Transp. (1978) 82 CA3d 116, 119, 145 CR 443.
- An answer or alleged defense does not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense. CCP §438(c)(1)(A). See MacIsaac v Pozzo (1945) 26 C2d 809, 812, 161 P2d 449.
- The court does not have subject matter jurisdiction of the cause of action alleged in the complaint. CCP §438(c)(1)(B)(i).

The motion is subject to the same rules and serves the same function as a general demurrer. See Colberg, Inc. v State ex rel Dep't of Pub. Works, supra; Mack v State Bar (2001) 92 CA4th 957, 961, 112 CR2d 341. The main difference between a motion for a judgment on the pleadings and a general demurrer is that the motion is made after the time to file a demurrer has expired. CCP §438(f). See §6.95 for discussion of when to make the motion.

Before enactment of CCP §438, a motion for judgment on the pleadings could be made, even when the trial judge, or a different judge, had formerly overruled a general demurrer or denied a prior motion for judgment on the pleadings. Donohue v State (1986) 178 CA3d 795, 224 CR 57; Shabrick v Moore (1961) 195 CA2d 56, 58, 15 CR 310. Code of Civil Procedure §438(g), however, adds the requirement that a material change in the applicable case or statutory law must have occurred since the demurrer if the moving party has already unsuccessfully demurred.

Motions for judgment on the pleadings are discussed in detail in California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 27 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

§6.95 B. When to make motion

A motion under CCP §438 must be made before a pretrial conference order has been entered under CCP §575, or 30 days before the initial trial date, whichever is later. A motion can be made later with court permission. CCP §438(e).

PRACTICE TIP: Check local rules on filing dispositive pretrial motions. Check Cal Rules of Ct 3.1110 and 3.1302 on the format, place, and manner of filing motions.

Before the enactment of CCP §438, a motion for judgment on the pleadings could be made at any time before trial, at the start of trial, or even during trial before final judgment is rendered. See Shabrick v Moore (1961) 195 CA2d 56, 59, 15 CR 310. Questions remain about whether the former nonstatutory motion for judgment on the pleadings may be made after the time for making the statutory motion has expired. See 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Proceedings Without Trial §186 (5th ed 2008).

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Courts usually prefer to have a motion for judgment on the pleadings heard on the law and motion calendar rather than shortly before trial, assuming that option is still viable in light of CCP §438.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.96 C. Using written noticed motion or oral motion

Motions for judgment on the pleadings before trial are usually made on noticed motion. CCP §438(i)(2). For procedure, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial §§27.8-27.23 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004). Similarly, when contemplating a trial-day motion for judgment on the pleadings, consider making it on noticed motion. In cases assigned to an individual calendaring (I/C) judge, these motions may be heard at the final case management conference or at some other date set by the judge. See §§6.2-6.5.

A trial-day motion for judgment on the pleadings based on the case authority that predates the statute was also allowed to be made orally. See Morel v Morel (1928) 203 C 417, 264 P 760; Budrow v Wheatcraft (1953) 115 CA2d 517, 518, 252 P2d 637, disapproved on other grounds in Carney v Simmonds (1957) 49 C2d 84, 315 P2d 305. No previous notice needed to be given. See Morel v Morel, supra. See also Wagner v Benson (1980) 101 CA3d 27, 32, 161 CR 516 (parties need not make formal motion; court may dismiss claims on its own motion or on objection to proffered evidence).

On counsel's right to be heard if court sua sponte moves for judgment on the pleadings, see Moore v California Minerals Prods. Corp. (1953) 115 CA2d 834, 836, 252 P2d 1005. Code of Civil Procedure §438(b)(2) specifically allows the court, on its own motion, to grant a motion for judgment on the pleadings.

In some cases, a party makes the equivalent of a motion for judgment on the pleadings by objecting to the introduction of all evidence on the attacked pleading at the start of trial. See, e.g., Miller v McLaglen (1947) 82 CA2d 219, 222, 186 P2d 48. For discussion of this procedure and whether to make a motion for judgment on the pleadings after such an objection is sustained, see 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Proceedings Without Trial §§199-200 (5th ed 2008). The direct approach of moving for judgment on the pleadings is more typical.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.97 D. If opposing motion

When opposing an unnoticed motion for judgment on the pleadings, consider requesting a continuance to prepare opposition and curative amendments. The court will usually not grant a surprise motion without first giving the opposing party the opportunity to decide whether to stand on that party's pleading or to amend it. See MacIsaac v Pozzo (1945) 26 C2d 809, 815, 161 P2d 449. If notice of the motion is given, prepare and offer any curative amendments at the time of the hearing. See Tiffany v Sierra Sands Unified Sch. Dist. (1980) 103 CA3d 218, 226, 162 CR 669. For further discussion of opposing the motion, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial §27.14 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004). For remedies if the motion is granted, see Civ Proc Before Trial §27.23.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.98 E. Court may allow a curative amendment and continue trial

The court has discretion to grant the opposing party leave to amend the pleading if the court finds the pleading insufficient. CCP §438(h)(1); Hejmadi v AMFAC, Inc. (1988) 202 CA3d 525, 536, 249 CR 5. In fact, it may be an abuse of discretion not to allow leave to amend (MacIsaac v Pozzo (1945) 26 C2d 809, 816, 161 P2d 449 (denial of leave to amend would often be "an absolute denial of justice")). In some circumstances, however, the court may properly grant the motion for judgment on the pleadings without leave to amend. See, e.g., Shabrick v Moore (1961) 195 CA2d 56, 60, 15 CR 310.

Anticipate that the court may grant a continuance to allow the amendment of pleadings. Under CCP §438(h)(2), the party against whom the motion was granted has 30 days to file an amended complaint or answer. Note, however, that local case management rules may shorten the time to amend.

When moving for judgment on the pleadings, take the following steps to reduce the risk of continuance:

- Provide prior notice to opposing counsel of the intention to move for judgment on the pleadings.
- Be prepared to demonstrate that the failure in the pleading is anchored in the inability to state a claim or defense rather than a mere defect in the manner of pleading it. See, e.g., Shabrick v Moore, supra.
- Consider waiting until the opposing party has put on evidence of the claim or defense and then move to strike the evidence in tandem with a motion for judgment on the pleadings. See, e.g., Davis v City of Santa Ana (1952) 108 CA2d 669, 674, 239 P2d 656. The court may be less likely to grant a continuance after the trial has begun and less likely to allow the opposing party to amend after the party is locked into a story.

§6.99 VIII. MOTIONS TO BIFURCATE, SEVER, AND CHANGE THE ORDER OF TRIAL

Bifurcation, i.e., the trial of an issue or part of an issue before the trial of another issue or part of an issue, and other trial-ordering techniques are trial tools that can shorten trial, simplify issues, meet the convenience of witnesses, or avoid prejudice. They may also serve various tactical objectives related to the overall strategy, such as putting your best foot forward or, conversely, first presenting your adversary's Achilles' heel.

PRACTICE TIP: Although counsel may make a motion to bifurcate earlier, subjects that must be addressed by the parties at the initial case management conference include whether the case should be bifurcated. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.727(10).

© The Regents of the University of California

A. Motion to separately try certain defenses first

§6.100 1. Special defenses not involving merits

Code of Civil Procedure §597 permits trial first of special defenses not involving the merits of a claim, such as statute of limitations, res judicata, another pending action, settlement and compromise, and capacity to sue. It also permits a bifurcation order on a party's or the court's motion. The section does not specify a time limitation on when the motion can be made.

§6.101 2. Statute of limitations defense

Code of Civil Procedure §597.5 requires that a statute of limitations defense be tried first in medical malpractice cases if a party or the court makes a motion to that effect. It does not specify a time limitation on when the motion can be made.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/6 Court Conferences and Selected Pretrial Motions/§6.102 B. Motion to try certain issues first

§6.102 B. Motion to try certain issues first

Code of Civil Procedure §598 permits an order "that the trial of any issue or any part thereof shall precede the trial of any other issue or any part thereof … except for special defenses which may be tried first pursuant to Sections 597 and 597.5." This is commonly known as the bifurcated trial rule. Horton v Jones (1972) 26 CA3d 952, 954, 103 CR 399. The court can order bifurcation on a party's motion, after notice and hearing, no later than the close of the pretrial conference or, when there is no conference, no later than 30 days before the trial date. A sua sponte motion by the court can be made at any time.

PRACTICE TIP: If the court is inclined to deny a motion to bifurcate that is made 30 days prior to trial, then counsel should ask the court to deny the motion without prejudice to be renewed at the time of trial. A law and motion judge might not bifurcate a trial that will be heard by another judge, but may be persuaded to defer the issue to the trial judge.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.103 C. Motion for separate trial

Under CCP §1048(b), the court may "order a separate trial of any cause of action, including a cause of action asserted in a cross-complaint, or of any separate issue or of any number of causes of action or issues." See Downey Sav. & Loan Ass'n v Ohio Cas. Ins. Co. (1987) 189 CA3d 1072, 1086, 234 CR 835 ("whether there shall be a severance and separate trials on issues in a single action is a matter within the discretion of the trial court"). The statute does not specify a deadline for obtaining the severance, but the time limits of CCP §598 probably apply to any motion that could have been made under that statute. See the legislative committee comments to CCP §1048 (§§597-598 were retained because they contain useful procedural details that continue to apply to motions under §1048). Thus, §1048 apparently does not permit a party to make a motion covered by §598 after the pretrial conference, if applicable, or within 30 days of trial. See §6.102. The attorney may argue, however, that, because §1048 is silent on a time limitation, this motion is permitted at any time despite the pretrial conference or 30-day limitation period of §598.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.104 D. Motion to change order of proof

Evidence Code §320 gives the trial judge discretion to regulate the order of proof "except as otherwise provided by law." Thus, the court, on its own or a party's motion, may grant bifurcation orders and make other trial-ordering decisions in the chambers conference on the day of trial. See §1.11.

PRACTICE TIP: If you want an order issued under CCP §598 but have not complied with its time limitations, consider asking the judge in the chambers conference to order bifurcation on the judge's own motion (permissible under §598 at any time), and possibly moving for the same relief under CCP §1048.

For further discussion of CCP §§597-598 and procedure, see generally §§6.99-6.103. On consolidation and severance generally, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 43 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

© The Regents of the University of California

IX. EXCLUDING WITNESSES AT TRIAL

§6.105 A. Authority: Evid C §777

The trial judge can exclude witnesses from the courtroom while other witnesses are testifying. Evid C §777; Fed R Evid 615. Some local court policies also specifically address this issue. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.84; Contra Costa Ct R 5(K)(1)(b) (all witnesses will be excluded from courtroom, unless there is exception under law).

Individual parties to an action and an officer or employee who is the designated trial representative of a corporate party are excepted from any order of exclusion. Evid C §777(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/6 Court Conferences and Selected Pretrial Motions/§6.106 B. Purpose: Prevent witnesses from hearing, and being influenced by, other witnesses

§6.106 B. Purpose: Prevent witnesses from hearing, and being influenced by, other witnesses

An exclusionary motion is made to prevent a subsequent witness from hearing an earlier witness's testimony on the same event or transaction. Later witnesses may, either consciously or subconsciously, be influenced to conform their testimony to the earlier testimony.

§6.107 1. Advantages

Excluding the witnesses will prevent the witness from being influenced by listening to other witnesses. In addition, the cross-examination of a witness may be more effective if that witness has not become familiar with counsel's questions and style while listening to that attorney conduct cross-examination on a similarly situated witness.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.108 2. Disadvantages

Some reasons not to make an exclusionary motion are that:

- Testimony may proceed more rapidly if witnesses have heard the testimony of prior witnesses. For example, an expert who has heard all the testimony from prior witnesses that will be used as a foundation for the expert's opinion will not need a long hypothetical question to elicit the opinion. For expert opinion testimony, see §§11.130-11.151.
- Experts who remain in the courtroom will be available to consult with the attorney about the proper questioning of other witnesses.
- Novice witnesses who observe the procedure of examining earlier witnesses may become more at ease.

© The Regents of the University of California

§6.109 X. MOVING TO DISQUALIFY ATTORNEY

Motions to disqualify trial counsel are usually made long before the first day of trial. See California Civil Procedure Before Trial §§4.52-4.54 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004). Bringing a motion to disqualify counsel on the day of trial may be appropriate if the opposing party substitutes or associates trial counsel on the eve of trial. On conflict of interests generally, see Civ Proc Before Trial, chap 2.

NOTE: If trial counsel is to be called to testify on behalf of the client at a jury trial, the testimony will be limited to uncontested matters or the nature and value of legal services rendered, unless counsel has the client's informed written consent permitting counsel's testimony. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-210; see §6.113 for form of consent. This rule does not apply to court trials or to the testimony of another member of the trial attorney's firm.

§7.1 I. SCOPE OF CHAPTER

This chapter discusses motions in limine used to obtain rulings on evidentiary issues before or during trial, including motions to establish preliminary facts under Evid C §§400-405. Other pretrial motions may sometimes be called "motions in limine," but those motions (e.g., for continuance, challenging the judge) are discussed in chap 6. Motions made during trial are covered in chap 18.

A motion in limine is a motion made either before any evidence is received, or before the evidence that is the subject of the motion is admitted. The term "in limine" is Latin, meaning "at the very start." Although not expressly authorized by statute, the motion is well recognized in the case law. See, e.g., Akins v County of Sonora (1967) 67 C2d 185, 197, 60 CR 499; Clemens v American Warranty Co. (1987) 193 CA3d 444, 451, 238 CR 339. See 3 Witkin, California Evidence §§368-369 (4th ed 2000). The court's inherent authority to provide for the orderly conduct of its proceedings (CCP §128(a)(3)) and to exclude evidence under Evid C §352 also implies authority for motions in limine.

Motions in limine can be used to:

- Prevent a party from using or mentioning evidence before the jury (see §7.3);
- Compel a party to present a foundation and offer evidence outside the presence of the jury (see §7.4);
- Attack all evidence on a certain point and possibly eliminate that cause of action or issue (see §7.5); and
- Obtain a ruling on the admissibility of evidence (see §7.6).

II. WHY TO MAKE A MOTION IN LIMINE

§7.2 A. Purpose of motion

Motions in limine are commonly used to seek exclusion or admission of particular items of evidence on the grounds that the evidence is legally inadmissible or admissible. In contrast, a motion to eliminate a cause of action or entire case at the time of trial is usually raised by motion for judgment on the pleadings (see §§6.94-6.98; see also California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 27 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004)), but motions in limine are sometimes used to achieve these broader purposes. See §7.5. For a discussion of the purposes of motions in limine (and their overuse), see Kelly v New W. Fed. Sav. (1996) 49 CA4th 659, 669, 56 CR2d 803.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.3 1. To exclude particular evidence

The greatest value of in limine motions lies in a party's ability to confront prejudicial evidence before it is presented at trial and comes to a jury's attention. Thus, the most common use of the motion is to obtain a ruling excluding particular evidence at trial. In connection with this motion, counsel may request a ruling prohibiting the opposing party from making any mention of the excluded evidence, including reference to the evidence in voir dire, opening statement or in the course of testimony at trial. See Charbonneau v Superior Court (1974) 42 CA3d 505, 507, 116 CR 153. If the motion is successful, the jury will remain unaware of potentially prejudicial or inflammatory evidence. This type of motion in limine tries to "avoid the obviously futile attempt to 'unring the bell' in the event a motion to strike is granted in the proceedings before the jury." Hyatt v Sierra Boat Co. (1978) 79 CA3d 325, 337, 145 CR 47. See §§7.7-7.11 for the advantages and disadvantages of the motion.

If the court grants a motion in limine to exclude evidence, the court's order may be total—that is, the order may bar counsel, the parties, and witnesses from making any mention of or reference to the excluded evidence, or from otherwise using such evidence (e.g., during jury selection). See Los Angeles Ct R 8.92(d); Grimshaw v Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 CA3d 757, 793, 174 CR 348. Alternatively, the court may issue a preliminary order that is temporary or conditional, thus precluding use of the evidence and any reference to it until some future event, for example, until a party introduces foundational evidence, or until the court modifies the order based on circumstances at a later stage.

PRACTICE TIP: If you are the proponent of the evidence and the court indicates it will exclude your evidence, request that the court reserve its ruling or entertain a motion to reconsider its ruling at trial, when you can make a more complete foundational showing. See Charbonneau v Superior Court (1974) 42 CA3d 505, 514, 116 CR 153. Ask the court to enter a temporary or conditional order, excluding mention of the evidence pending reconsideration at trial. See Los Angeles Ct R 8.92(d). If the court grants your request, be sure to ask the court to reconsider the temporary exclusion order after the foundational facts are produced at trial.

If you are the party moving to exclude the evidence, resist allowing a judge to take everything under submission or reserve ruling on any of the issues raised by the motion in limine. Usually, you need the finality of a decision to chart your course through trial.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Judges are reluctant to make definitive rulings on motions in limine that appear to be dependent on trial evidence for their resolution.

It is a misuse of a motion in limine to attempt to compel a witness or a party to conform his or her trial testimony to a preconceived factual scenario based on testimony given during pretrial discovery. See Kelly v New W. Fed. Sav. (1996) 49 CA4th 659, 672, 56 CR2d 803 (court of appeal reversed and held trial court erred in granting defendants' motion in limine to exclude plaintiffs from producing evidence that they were injured in larger of two elevators or any evidence related to functioning of that elevator). The Kelly opinion also suggests that some of the issues raised in motions in limine (e.g., a motion requesting an order that all counsel inform other counsel the day before which witnesses will be called the next day, or a motion requesting that no exhibits be shown to the jury before all counsel and the court see them) would be better resolved by counsel informally at a pretrial conference and not as formal motions in limine. 49 CA4th at 671.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/7 Motions in Limine/§7.4 2. To require proponent to establish foundational facts

§7.4 2. To require proponent to establish foundational facts

Motions in limine to exclude evidence may also be used to require the proponent of evidence to establish the existence of foundational facts necessary for admission.

EXAMPLE: Use the motion to require the proponent of expert testimony to show a proper foundation for expert opinion (such as qualification of a proposed expert), or the admissibility of a particular type of test. See, e.g., People v Kelly (1976) 17 C3d 24, 130 CR 144 (voiceprint identification excluded); Cramer v Morrison (1979) 88 CA3d 873, 886, 153 CR 865 (evidence of paternity test erroneously excluded based on finding that test was unreliable); Hyatt v Sierra Boat Co. (1978) 79 CA3d 325, 337, 145 CR 47 (evidence excluded when no proper foundation for expert testimony).

Filing the motion will sometimes require a preliminary fact-finding hearing as contemplated in Evid C §§402-405. See discussion in §§7.25-7.36. See §§7.7-7.11 for advantages and disadvantages of the motion.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.5 3. To exclude all evidence and thereby eliminate a cause of action or entire case

Motions in limine are sometimes used to achieve broader purposes, e.g., dismissal of the case through the exclusion of evidence. For example, a party might object to the admission of all evidence on the ground that the complaint fails to state a cause of action and, therefore, no evidence relating to that cause of action should be admitted. Clemens v American Warranty Co. (1987) 193 CA3d 444, 451, 238 CR 339 (no prejudice from granting motion in limine termed "objection to all evidence").

An objection to all evidence is essentially the same as a general demurrer, motion for judgment on the pleadings, or nonsuit. Mechanical Contractors Ass'n v Greater Bay Area Ass'n (1998) 66 CA4th 672, 677, 78 CR2d 225; Edwards v Centex Real Estate Corp. (1997) 53 CA4th 15, 26, 61 CR2d 518. Motions to dismiss, for nonsuit, or for judgment on the pleadings, and demurrers are based on the failure to state a cause of action or to present evidence to prove a cause of action, not to exclude the evidence. See chap 18 for motions during trial; see §§6.94-6.98 and California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 27 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004) for discussion of judgment on the pleadings. On demurrers, see Civ Proc Before Trial, chap 23. On summary adjudication and summary judgment motions to eliminate a cause of action or the entire case, see Civ Proc Before Trial, chap 36.

Nonetheless, the courts have granted in limine motions to exclude all evidence in connection with a motion to dismiss the action or enter judgment for one party. See, e.g., Newman v Emerson Radio Corp. (1989) 48 C3d 973, 977, 258 CR 592 (on eve of trial, court granted defendant's motion in limine to exclude plaintiff's evidence on ground that plaintiff's actions based on oral contracts of employment were barred by statute of frauds); Ladas v California State Auto. Ass'n (1993) 19 CA4th 761, 769, 23 CR2d 810 (court granted defendant's in limine motion to exclude, on basis of parol evidence rule, all evidence offered by plaintiffs to prove their claims and entered judgment in defendant's favor).

NOTE: The trend seems to be moving away from using motions in limine to exclude all evidence of a cause of action or entire case. See Amtower v Photon Dynamics, Inc. (2008) 158 CA4th 1582, 1593, 71 CR3d 361 (summary adjudication preferred for addressing statute of limitations issue); Los Angeles Ct R 8.92(b) (motion in limine may not be used in place of motion for summary adjudication or summary judgment); San Diego Ct, Div II, R 2.1.18 (motions in limine must be limited in scope to evidentiary issues when attempts to "unring the bell" would be unduly prejudicial or futile). But see K.C. Multimedia Inc. v Bank of America Technol. & Operations, Inc. (2009) 171 CA4th 939, 950, 90 CR3d 247 (noting that Amtower "cannot be read as a blanket prohibition" on using in limine motions to decide dispositive issues).

§7.6 4. To admit evidence

Although motions in limine are frequently used to exclude evidence, consider making a motion in limine to obtain rulings in advance of trial that particular evidence is admissible. See, e.g., People v Jennings (1988) 46 C3d 963, 975, 251 CR 278; Pugh v See's Candies, Inc. (1988) 203 CA3d 743, 757, 250 CR 195. Remember, however, that the proponent of evidence is not required to establish admissibility of evidence before trial. The burden remains on the objecting party to request exclusion of evidence, even if it is sensitive and arguably inadmissible. See Abbett Elec. Corp. v Sullwold (1987) 193 CA3d 708, 715, 238 CR 496. See §§7.7-7.11 for advantages and disadvantages of the motion.

Consider bringing a motion to admit evidence if you anticipate that opposing counsel will object to the admission of an important exhibit at trial. Also, consider a motion in limine to admit videotaped deposition testimony taken under CCP §2025.220. See CCP §2025.340(m) for the procedures to follow. If particular evidence is likely to be controversial or inflammatory, it is better to know whether you can safely refer to it during opening statement.

If the court grants the motion to admit the evidence, counsel knows before trial that the court will receive the evidence during the trial. If the court denies the motion, counsel may have time to overcome the objection or make arrangements to have other evidence available to prove the point.

EXAMPLE: Plaintiff's attorney makes a motion in limine to admit invoices sent to defendant. Defendant's attorney objects to the admissibility of the invoices based on the grounds that additional foundational testimony is required, i.e., the authenticating witness is not the person who prepared the invoices or otherwise has sufficient personal knowledge to authenticate them. If the court denies the motion to admit the evidence, plaintiff's attorney may have time to arrange to have another witness available to authenticate the invoices.

PRACTICE TIP: The court's denial of a motion in limine to admit evidence does not necessarily mean that the evidence will be excluded. Renew the motion at an appropriate time during trial. Also, when the court has refused to rule on a motion to admit evidence because it believes that additional evidence should be heard before a ruling can be made, try to have the evidence admitted in the usual way at the appropriate point during trial.

§7.7 B. Strategies regarding use

Ultimately, you must make a cost-benefit analysis of the use of motions in limine. Making a motion in limine can be expensive, requiring the client to incur the cost of research and briefing. Accordingly, weigh the cost of making the motion against the potential prejudice that the motion seeks to avoid. If moving to exclude evidence, you may wait and object to its introduction at trial; similarly, if you want to admit evidence, simply offer the evidence at trial and face the opposing party's objections then.

It is also important to avoid making a negative impression on the judge as a result of numerous in limine motions. See, e.g., O'Mary v Mitsubishi Elect. Am., Inc. (1997) 59 CA4th 563, 578, 69 CR2d 389 (expressing sympathy for claim that deluge of last-minute motions hampered party's trial preparation).

Remember that in limine motions are not as potent a tool in bench trials. Motions in limine typically are most useful when the case is tried before a jury; in a bench trial, the benefit of the motion in limine is less, because the court is less concerned about the effect of erroneously admitting evidence and more confident of its ability to disregard prejudicial or marginally relevant evidence.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.8 1. Advantages

The principal tactical advantage of the motion in limine is that it reduces the need to raise objections in front of the jury. In addition, a successful motion in limine, or a successful opposition to the motion, will give the winning party a psychological boost and may put the losing party in an even weaker position.

Other advantages of a motion in limine are that it:

- Allows the court an opportunity to reflect on the issues before making a ruling.
- Avoids disturbing the flow of the trial because there will be fewer objections to interrupt the examination of witnesses. If you wait to resolve an issue and object at trial, you may need to approach the side bar to state the basis for your motion or request a hearing outside the jury's presence, giving the jury the impression that you have something to hide.
- Provides the parties an opportunity to brief their positions.
- Familiarizes the trial judge with the issues and highlights critical evidence. For example:
- The motion is particularly useful in counties that follow the master calendar system (see §§2.61-2.65), when the trial judge may be unfamiliar with the case until shortly before trial.
- When a case involves a complex series of facts or law, the motion can educate the court about potential evidentiary problems, so that the court will have an increased awareness and sensitivity to the evidence when it is actually offered.
- Aids in planning for jury selection, opening statements, and the order of presenting witnesses.
- Resolves evidentiary issues before trial begins and thus helps the parties accept or revise the settlement value of their case; e.g., if the court rules to exclude a key piece of evidence, proving an essential element of the case may be more difficult and the party may be more amenable to settlement.
- As a practical matter, a written motion in limine may better preserve your record on appeal because it can be a more thoughtful and complete presentation of your position than a brief oral presentation.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.9 a. When moving to exclude evidence

An added benefit of a successful motion in limine to exclude evidence is to avoid any chance that the jury will hear any mention of the evidence. For example, if a witness has previously testified to important facts that are hearsay during a pretrial proceeding or deposition, it is much better to make a motion ahead of time. Particularly if the evidence is sensitive, confidential, or privileged, move in limine to exclude it.

Another tactical advantage of a successful motion to exclude evidence is that it places the attorney who opposed the motion unsuccessfully at a severe disadvantage. The court has now ruled to exclude the opponent's evidence and the opponent must continually be on guard to ensure that the ruling is not violated by a remark in the opening statement, by questions put to witnesses, or by answers volunteered by witnesses.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/7 Motions in Limine/§7.10 b. When moving to admit evidence

§7.10 b. When moving to admit evidence

The advantages of bringing a motion in limine to admit evidence are that it:

- Allows the court greater opportunity to consider the issues.
- Avoids surprise at trial by requiring opposing counsel to assert objections to the admissibility of evidence in response to the motion.

If particular evidence is likely to be controversial or inflammatory, learn before trial whether you can safely refer to it during opening statement. If you refer to the evidence during opening statement, or present part of the evidence before opposing counsel objects, you risk the possibility of a mistrial if the court agrees that the proffered evidence should be excluded and the objecting party can establish that the jury has been prejudiced by exposure to the excluded evidence. Although as the proponent of the evidence you need not establish its admissibility before trial, you may prefer making a motion in limine to determine its admissibility in advance of trial to lessen the risk of a mistrial. See §7.6.

§7.11 2. Disadvantages

On the negative side, consider the possibility that a motion in limine to admit evidence will educate the opposing party—either by providing an advance look at evidence that the opponent may have been ignorant of, or by providing opposing counsel with a basis for objection not previously considered.

The main disadvantage to using the motion in limine is that it sacrifices surprise. If you are successful in blocking your opponent's evidence, the opponent will have time to devise alternative sources of proof or develop a better foundation for the evidence. If you are successful in a motion to admit evidence, your opponent will similarly have time to discover other ways to exclude that evidence when it is presented at trial.

Certainly, cost is a major disadvantage to bringing a motion in limine compared with orally objecting to the admissibility of evidence at trial. If the judge rules to allow evidence based on the motion in limine, you will probably still want to object to the evidence at trial to preserve the issue for appeal (see §§7.46-7.47), and at that time the judge may be less inclined to a change of mind.

The court's exclusion of important evidence before trial may also negatively impact the settlement value of the case. In fact, if the evidence goes to the heart of the case, denial of the motion to admit evidence may result in an immediate motion to dismiss.

A motion in limine at the outset of the trial, before all the evidence bearing on an issue has a chance to crystallize, may be too early and may impair chances to successfully admit or exclude the evidence. Because a premature motion may result in an adverse ruling, be sure to develop the factual basis and legal theories supporting the claims or defenses, so that the court can have the proper perspective for it to rule.

There are as many potential grounds for in limine motions as there are possible objections to the introduction of evidence at trial. Motions in limine are commonly brought in an attempt to exclude particular evidence on the grounds that it is legally irrelevant (Evid C §350), or that its probative value is outweighed by the potential for prejudice and undue consumption of time at trial (Evid C §352). Examples of motions in limine include:

___ 1. To exclude unduly prejudicial or confusing evidence under Evid C §352. O'Gan v King City Joint Union High Sch. Dist. (1970) 3 CA3d 641, 644, 83 CR 795 (letter containing prior inconsistent statement); People v Vaiza (1966) 244 CA2d 121, 127, 52 CR 733 (photographs taken at 7:30 p.m. when crime occurred at 2:00 a.m.).

___ a. Improper reference to opposing counsel as "corporation lawyer." Seimon v Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1977) 67 CA3d 600, 605, 136 CR 787.

___ b. Evidence of the probability or fact of a widow's remarriage as a basis for mitigation of damages in wrongful death action is irrelevant. Benwell v Dean (1967) 249 CA2d 345, 348, 57 CR 394.

___ c. A party or a witness's past criminal record (see Evid C §787).

___ d. A party's alien status.

___ e. A settlement offer by a defendant (when offered to establish liability; see Evid C §1152).

___ f. A party's poor health or financial condition, when irrelevant to a fact in issue.

___ 2. To control the order of proof:

___ a. To require proof of foundational facts before reference to particular evidence, such as expert testimony. Hyatt v Sierra Boat Co. (1978) 79 CA3d 325, 337, 145 CR 47.

___ b. To prevent reference to demonstrative evidence before admission at trial (e.g., during opening statement). People v Green (1956) 47 C2d 209, 215, 302 P2d 307, disapproved on other grounds in People v Morse (1964) 60 C2d 631, 36 CR 201.

___ c. To prevent the plaintiff from rebutting affirmative defenses in advance of the defendant's evidence. Butler v Stratton (1949) 95 CA2d 23, 26, 212 P2d 43.

___ 3. To exclude evidence barred by discovery rules or pretrial discovery sanctions:

___ a. To exclude evidence improperly withheld during discovery. See Thoren v Johnston & Washer (1972) 29 CA3d 270, 105 CR 276 (excluding testimony from witness whose identity was improperly withheld from answers to interrogatories).

___ b. To exclude testimony from expert witness not disclosed as required by CCP §§2034.260, 2034.280. See Zellerino v Brown (1991) 235 CA3d 1097, 1117, 1 CR2d 222. Other grounds to exclude expert witnesses include failing to (CCP §2034.300):

___ (1) Submit an expert witness declaration;

___ (2) Produce discoverable reports and writings; and

___ (3) Make the witness available for pretrial deposition.

___ 4. To preclude evidence of a party's financial condition:

___ a. Evidence of a defendant's financial condition when punitive damages are sought, until presentation of a prima facie case of liability for punitive damages. See CC §3295.

PRACTICE TIP: The defendant should ordinarily move to exclude financial evidence before trial to avoid possibly waiving the right to object to the evidence. See CC §3295; Las Palmas Assocs. v Las Palmas Ctr. Assocs. (1991) 235 CA3d 1220, 1241, 1 CR2d 301.

___ b. Evidence of tax consequences. See Rodriguez v McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1978) 87 CA3d 626, 667, 151 CR 399 (tax consequences of damage award in personal injury action); DePalma v Westland Software House (1990) 225 CA3d 1534, 1541, 276 CR 214 (tax consequences mitigating factor in breach of contract action).

___ c. Evidence that the plaintiff in a personal injury case has received collateral source payments, when the collateral source rule applies. See Morse v Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1976) 63 CA3d 128, 138, 133 CR 577 (precluding evidence of disability pension in FELA (Federal Employees Liability Act) action).

___ d. Evidence that a plaintiff is ineligible for collateral source payments, such as workers' compensation. See Lund v San Joaquin Valley R.R. (2003) 31 C4th 1, 11, 1 CR3d 412.

___ e. Reference to the fact that the defendant is insured as evidence of liability. Evid C §1155.

___ 5. Evidence of prior accidents, when such evidence is not otherwise admissible. Ault v International Harvester Co. (1974) 13 C3d 113, 121, 117 CR 812 (evidence of prior accident admissible to show defective condition, knowledge, or causation); Simmons v Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1976) 62 CA3d 341, 364, 133 CR 42 (evidence of prior accident excluded when not similar to accident in suit).

___ 6. Excluding expert opinions. See, e.g., Sheldon Appel Co. v Albert & Oliker (1989) 47 C3d 863, 884, 254 CR 336 (expert improperly asked for opinion on legal question); County Sanitation Dist. No. 8 v Watson Land Co. (1993) 17 CA4th 1268, 1280, 22 CR2d 117 (expert used improper methodology). See §11.135 on proper basis for expert opinion.

III. MAKING A MOTION IN LIMINE

§7.13 A. When to make motion

A motion in limine can be made before trial or at any point during a trial before the admission of the evidence that is the subject of the motion. See, e.g., Godfrey v Steinpress (1982) 128 CA3d 154, 168, 180 CR 95 (after the pretrial conference); Hyatt v Sierra Boat Co. (1978) 79 CA3d 325, 337, 145 CR 47 (after plaintiff rested case in chief). See §7.24 for opposition to the motion.

§7.14 1. To avoid prejudice

Consider making the motion before trial to prevent the proponent of evidence from referring to the disputed evidence during voir dire or opening statement. The trial court may be more reluctant to grant a motion in limine during trial because granting the motion at that time may have a harsh effect on the proponent of the evidence. See Sacramento & San Joaquin Drainage Dist. v Reed (1963) 215 CA2d 60, 66, 29 CR 847. For example, the proponent may assert unfair surprise, or argue that foundational or alternative evidence could have been arranged if advance notice of the motion had been given.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.15 2. As required by local rule

Always consult the local rules of the court in which an action is pending on the procedure to bring a motion in limine. The local rules may dictate the form and content of such motions. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.92(a)-(d) (motions must be accompanied by a declaration identifying the matter alleged to be inadmissible and describing the prejudice that will result if the motion is not granted).

If the court requires a written motion, it may require that the motion be served before trial. See, e.g., San Francisco Ct R 6.1 (all motions in limine must be in writing, copies mailed to all parties at least 10 days before date set for trial or hand delivered at least 5 days before trial).

NOTE: Historically, most trial judges allowed in-trial motions in limine to be made in chambers as the trial progressed. Most experienced judges still allow this when the issues are not complex. These motions are often less expensive, more efficient, and easier to decide on the spot because the judge has already heard much of the evidence.

The timing of motions in limine may also be affected by whether the court has adopted a single-assignment system (when a case is assigned at the outset to one judge for all purposes) or a master calendar system. See §6.2. In a single assignment system, the judge or local rules may require that the motions in limine be heard at the status conference or another date before trial. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(h) (for individual calendaring (I/C) cases, motions must be served so that they can be heard at the final status conference).

In a master calendar system, because the motion is directed to the trial judge, the motion in limine is typically not heard until the day set for trial, but even then local rules may set the timing of motions in limine. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(h) (for master calendar cases, file and serve motions in limine 5 days before the final status conference).

NOTE: Under Govt C §68106(b)(1), effective July 28, 2009, and operative through June 30, 2010, if a court is closed as the result of a budget reduction measure in response to the state fiscal crisis, the day is considered a holiday and not a court day.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: In a complex case in which there are numerous potentially determinative motions in limine, counsel and the court may want to set a schedule for receipt of the motions, oppositions, and replies (if allowed) as well as a time for hearing and decision in advance of the trial date, if this is not provided for by local rule.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/7 Motions in Limine/§7.16 3. As soon as need for motion is discovered

§7.16 3. As soon as need for motion is discovered

Although motions in limine should ordinarily be made before or at the outset of trial, counsel may have good reasons to make the motion later:

- The prejudicial effect of evidence may not become apparent until trial;
- The law on admissibility of particular evidence may have recently changed; or
- Your opponent may want to introduce newly discovered evidence or previously unavailable evidence that you move to exclude through a motion in limine.

As soon as the need for such a motion becomes apparent, request a sidebar conference, or request a hearing in chambers. Always make motions in limine outside the presence of a jury. See Evid C §402(b). As with the preliminary chambers conference (see §6.4), make all such motions on the record, whether at sidebar or in chambers, in the presence of a court reporter, to avoid possible misunderstanding and to preserve the record for appeal.

© The Regents of the University of California

B. How to make motion: Oral or written

§7.17 1. Written motions preferred

As noted, applicable local rules may require that motions in limine be made in writing. If at all possible, whether or not required by local rule, it is good practice to make a written motion, even if the need for the motion does not appear until the trial is underway. A written motion requires greater precision on the point involved and ensures that the legal issues are thoroughly covered. A written motion also provides a written record of each party's position and is likely to result in more serious consideration. In some circumstances, however, time and the expense involved may not permit a written motion.

§7.18 2. Oral motions allowed

Even in counties in which the local rules require a writing, most courts will permit oral motions in limine to be made during the course of trial, especially when the need for such a motion was not apparent before trial. The court may prefer a motion in limine out of the presence of the jury. See Evid C §402(b).

When making an oral motion in limine at sidebar or in chambers, ensure that a reporter is present to make a record. If the court prefers off-the-record conferences in chambers, be sure to get objections on the record as soon as possible. Make sure the record allows the appellate court to see a timely and proper request to exclude or admit evidence, the erroneous failure to grant the motion, and resulting prejudice. For further discussion on protecting the record, see chap 15.

C. What to include in motion

§7.19 1. State purpose of motion

The motion should clearly and concisely set forth the purpose of the motion: For example, to exclude specified evidence, to establish that specific evidence should be admitted, or to establish the order of presentation of evidence.

§7.20 2. Identify evidence

Identify in the motion the precise testimony or evidence to be admitted or excluded. If you are the proponent of the evidence, set forth the basis for the belief that the evidence exists and that it will be presented at trial. Make sure to explain what relevant issue the evidence will help prove or disprove.

If moving to exclude evidence, clearly identify a particular, identifiable body of evidence to preserve the record for appeal under Evid C §353 in the event the court denies your motion. Follow the requirements of §353 carefully. Also, put the evidence you want excluded in the proper context so that the judge can decide whether to exclude; that is, give the judge enough background information to make an informed decision. See People v Morris (1991) 53 C3d 152, 190, 279 CR 720, overruled on other grounds in People v Stansbury (1995) 9 C4th 824, 830 n1, 38 CR2d 394; see discussion in §§7.46-7.47.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/7 Motions in Limine/§7.21 3. Discuss legal authority

§7.21 3. Discuss legal authority

Set forth the specific legal ground and the authorities supporting the exclusion or admission of the evidence. Discuss how this legal authority supports your position. In a motion to exclude evidence this statement of a specific legal ground is important to preserve the record for appeal in the event the motion is denied. See Evid C §353; People v Morris (1991) 53 C3d 152, 190, 279 CR 720, overruled on other grounds in People v Stansbury (1995) 9 C4th 824, 830 n1, 38 CR2d 394; see discussion in §§7.46-7.47.

EXAMPLE: When attempting to exclude evidence of a privileged communication with a consultant, set forth the legal authorities establishing that these communications are covered by the attorney-client privilege.

For more detailed discussion of the legal authority for evidentiary motions, see chap 10; Effective Introduction of Evidence in California (2d ed Cal CEB 2000); California Trial Objections (Cal CEB Annual).

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.22 4. Explain why court should rule pretrial

Explain why the court should not wait until trial to decide whether to admit or exclude the evidence. For example, that the jury would be unduly prejudiced if the inadmissible evidence is referred to in voir dire.

Try to put the evidentiary question in its appropriate context, even though all the other evidence has not yet been presented. The judge will be more comfortable ruling before trial if you include factual background for the evidence. If the judge denies the motion to exclude the evidence, you will have met the requirements of Evid C §353 for creating the record. See People v Morris (1991) 53 C3d 152, 190, 279 CR 720, overruled on other grounds in People v Stansbury (1995) 9 C4th 824, 830 n1, 38 CR2d 394. See also §§7.43-7.47 for discussion of what to do when motion is denied.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/7 Motions in Limine/§7.23 D. Format and service of written motion

§7.23 D. Format and service of written motion

A written motion must comply in format with the California Rules of Court. See Cal Rules of Ct 2.100-2.119, 3.1110-3.1116. A motion in limine filed before or during trial does not need to be accompanied by a notice of hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1112(f). Include a supporting memorandum and a proposed order that specifically references the evidence to be excluded or admitted. To increase chances of winning the motion in limine, keep it short and limit it to a few important issues.

For a motion to exclude evidence, the proposed order should also prohibit the parties and their counsel from mentioning or referring to the excluded evidence at any time during the trial, including during voir dire, opening statement, while testifying, and during closing argument.

Counsel can prepare a separate motion for each item of evidence to be excluded or admitted, and request a separate ruling for each motion. This practice ensures a clear record of the court's ruling for each item of evidence in dispute. For convenience and economy, however, some counsel prefer to combine in a single notice of motion and memorandum several evidentiary issues. If that format is followed, request (and so indicate in the form of the proposed order) that the court rule separately on each item of evidence. It is a good idea in this instance to consecutively number each item you want the court to rule on. For samples of representative motions see §§7.49-7.50.

The timing and place of the filing and service of the motion are at the discretion of the trial judge. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1112(f). Counsel should refer to the local rules for guidance on the form, timing, and manner of service. Local rules may also specify the requirements on the timing of the opposition. Otherwise, follow the rules for service of motions in general (see California Civil Procedure Before Trial §§12.69-12.77 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004)), or consult with the trial judge on form and service requirements.

§7.24 E. Opposition to motion

If the motion in limine is made in writing, the court ordinarily gives opposing party an opportunity to respond in writing. Check the local rules or the trial judge's practice, to determine how the judge will handle this. For suggestions on finding out the judge's preferences, see §6.4. If the motion is made orally, the opposing party may ask the court for additional time to brief the issue either orally or in writing.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.25 IV. PRELIMINARY FACT-FINDING PROCESS DURING MOTION IN LIMINE

Motions in limine may require the court to make a finding of the existence of a preliminary fact to determine the admissibility of the evidence. This raises a "mixed" question of fact and law. The court has the responsibility of deciding all questions of law, including questions on the admissibility of proffered evidence (Evid C §310(a)), whether demonstrative, documentary, or real evidence.

Proffered evidence is evidence that the proponent wishes to have admitted; its admissibility or inadmissibility depends on the existence or nonexistence of a preliminary fact. Evid C §§400-401. See §13.7.

Admissibility questions that require a determination of a preliminary fact can also be raised by objection during trial. See §§15.50-15.60 on objections.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.26 A. When preliminary fact finding is required

Preliminary facts must be established as a foundation for the admission of certain types of evidence. For example, for a photographic reenactment of an automobile accident (the proffered evidence) to be considered relevant and admissible, the proponent of the evidence must show the preliminary fact—that the reenactment was conducted under the same or substantially similar conditions as those existing when the accident took place. See Culpepper v Volkswagen of Am., Inc. (1973) 33 CA3d 510, 521, 109 CR 110.

When the existence of a preliminary fact is disputed, the court must determine its existence or nonexistence. Evid C §§310(a), 402(a). When determining the existence of a preliminary fact, the court must follow one of three different procedures, depending on the type of evidence, as set forth in Evid C §403 (see §§7.27, 7.35), §404 (see §7.28), and §405 (see §§7.29, 7.36). The most important difference between §§403 and 405 is:

- Under Evid C §403(b)-(c), the court has the discretion to admit the evidence conditionally, leaving the jury to decide whether the preliminary fact exists; the court instructs the jury to disregard the evidence if it does not.
- Under Evid C §405, the court has exclusive power to decide the issue.

See Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chaps 25, 26 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

Under either Evid C §403 or §405, the pivotal step will be allocating the burden of proof to the party that must establish the existence or nonexistence of the preliminary fact. See §7.31.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/7 Motions in Limine/§7.27 1. Evidence Code §403

§7.27 1. Evidence Code §403

In some situations, the court determines whether there is a prima facie showing of the preliminary fact. If evidence of the fact is sufficient to establish a prima facie showing, the court allows the jury to decide if the preliminary fact existed. Evid C §403(c). See §7.35 for discussion of effect of finding fact under Evid C §403. Evidence Code §403(a) applies:

- When "the relevance of the proffered evidence depends on the existence of the preliminary fact";
- When "the preliminary fact is the personal knowledge of a witness concerning the subject matter of his testimony" (Evid C §702 requires witnesses other than expert witnesses to have personal knowledge of the facts that they testify to);
- When "the preliminary fact is the authenticity of a writing;" and
- When "the proffered evidence is of a statement or other conduct of a particular person and the preliminary fact is whether that person made the statement or so conducted himself."

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/7 Motions in Limine/§7.28 2. Evidence Code §404

§7.28 2. Evidence Code §404

Another type of preliminary fact is whether evidence is subject to the privilege against self-incrimination. Evid C §§404, 940. This type of preliminary fact question does not occur often in civil cases. See California Criminal Law Procedure and Practice §§49.4, 49.9 (Cal CEB Annual) for detailed discussion.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.29 3. Evidence Code §405

Evidence Code §405 governs all other types of preliminary facts not governed by Evid C §403 or §404. See §7.36 for discussion of the effect of finding a preliminary fact under Evid C §405. These types of proffered evidence include:

- Claims of privilege (see Evid C §§900-1070);
- Hearsay evidence (see Evid C §§1200-1370) (except for declarant's identity, a §403 issue);
- Secondary evidence to prove the contents of a writing (see Evid C §§1520-1523, 1552-1553);
- Admissions and confessions (see Evid C §§1220-1228.1), e.g., whether a party's confession is inadmissible because it was made during compromise negotiations.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.30 B. Court conducts hearing when preliminary fact is disputed

When a party disputes the existence of a preliminary fact, the court must determine whether evidence is sufficient to sustain a finding that the fact exists. Evid C §402(b).

The court has discretion under Evid C §402(b) to conduct a hearing on the preliminary fact in the jurors' presence. If opposing the admission of the evidence, counsel should request that the hearing be conducted out of the jurors' presence, to avoid the jury's being prejudiced by hearing the proffered evidence or the court's ruling on the preliminary fact. See generally Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 24 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

Some courts have local rules or policies requiring that motions to exclude evidence be made and argued outside the jurors' hearing. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.41-8.42. If the hearing takes place outside the jury's presence, request that the court reporter be present to ensure an adequate record on appeal.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.31 C. Burden of proving preliminary fact

To prevail in a preliminary fact hearing, counsel must distinguish between the situations governed by Evid C §§403 and 405. Under §405, the court must be persuaded of the existence of the preliminary fact that admissibility depends on. Under Evid C §403, the court must admit the proffered evidence merely on the introduction of enough evidence to sustain a finding of the preliminary fact. See Comment to Evid C §402(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/7 Motions in Limine/§7.32 1. Who has burden in Evid C §403 hearing

§7.32 1. Who has burden in Evid C §403 hearing

For preliminary facts under Evid C §403, the burden of producing evidence of a preliminary fact's existence rests with the proponent of the proffered evidence. Evid C §403(a). During the hearing on the preliminary fact, counsel opposing the admissibility of evidence should actively try to establish that the evidence is insufficient to sustain a finding that the proffering party has met its burden of proof.

EXAMPLE: In the case of a photographic reenactment of an accident scene, as a preliminary fact, the proffering party must establish that the photographic reenactment was conducted under the same or substantially similar conditions as those existing when the accident took place. Although the burden of showing substantial similarity between a reenactment and the underlying occurrence rests on the proponent of the photographic evidence, the proponent will often do little more than point out to the court the conditions depicted in the reenactment that resemble the underlying occurrence.

PRACTICE TIP: Opposing counsel should request a preliminary fact hearing and in the course of that hearing demonstrate how the reenactment fails to accurately portray the underlying event (e.g., the time of day is incorrect, the weather was different, the condition of the street has changed). Unless opposing counsel points out the dissimilarities, the court may not focus on important discrepancies.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.33 2. Who has burden in Evid C §405 hearing

For preliminary facts under Evid C §405, the court will indicate which party has the burden of producing evidence and the burden of proof on the issue as implied by the rule of law. For example, a person asserting a privilege has the burden of proving that the requisites of the privilege exist, and the opponent of the privilege (the person offering the evidence) has the burden of proving that the privilege is eliminated by an exception or waiver.

See Comment to Evid C §405; California Trial Objections, chap 21 (Cal CEB Annual).

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.34 D. Challenging existence of preliminary fact

When opposing the proffered evidence, be prepared to show that the preliminary fact does not exist. On an appropriate request, counsel opposing the admission of the evidence may be allowed to conduct a voir dire examination of witnesses testifying as to the proffered evidence and to call witnesses to testify against the admission of the evidence. If permission to call the witnesses is denied, make an appropriate offer of proof, i.e., explain to the court what the potential witness would say and how that testimony would show that the preliminary fact does not exist. For further discussion, see §§15.50-15.60.

PRACTICE TIP: When a party objects to the preliminary fact foundation and requests a hearing under Evid C §402(b), the party offering the evidence should be vigilant to ensure that the hearing is not used as a device to conduct last-minute discovery, e.g., by exploring collateral issues or inquiring into matters that are not directly relevant to the disposition of the evidentiary issue at hand. Counsel should object to questioning that exceeds the scope of matters that are essential to a ruling on the admissibility of the evidence based on the existence of the preliminary fact.

© The Regents of the University of California

E. Effect of court's finding preliminary fact

§7.35 1. Evidence Code §403

Under Evid C §403, when the court determines that the evidence is sufficient to sustain a finding of the preliminary fact and the proffered evidence is admitted, the jury ultimately may decide whether the preliminary fact exists. If the court admits the proffered evidence, the court may, and on request must, "instruct the jury to determine whether the preliminary fact exists and to disregard the proffered evidence unless the jury finds that the preliminary fact does exist." Evid C §403(c)(1). See Comment to Evid C §403. If the proffered evidence is admitted and the court later determines that a jury could not reasonably find that the preliminary fact exists, the court must instruct the jury to disregard the evidence. Evid C §403(c)(2).

The court may admit proffered evidence, subject to the proponent's later providing evidence of the preliminary fact. Evid C §403(b). The court cannot, however, conditionally admit testimony from a witness when the preliminary fact required for admissibility is the witness's personal knowledge of the subject matter of the testimony. Evid C §§403(b), 702 (witnesses other than experts must have personal knowledge of facts they testify to).

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.36 2. Evidence Code §405

The judge alone decides the preliminary fact questions governed by Evid C §405. The jury cannot redetermine the issue, as it can under Evid C §403. See Comment to Evid C §405.

If a preliminary fact determined under Evid C §405 is also a fact at issue in the case, the jury must decide the ultimate issue and the judge is prohibited from telling the jury the court's decision on the existence or nonexistence of the preliminary fact. Evid C §405(b)(1). If the court admits the proffered evidence, the judge cannot instruct the jury to disregard the evidence if the jury decides that the preliminary fact did not exist. Evid C §405(b)(2).

EXAMPLE: When hearsay evidence is offered, two preliminary fact questions may be involved:

(1) Whether the declarant actually made the alleged statement. This question is determined under Evid C §403, with the jury ultimately determining whether to admit the evidence.

(2) Whether a proper foundation has been laid so that an exception to the hearsay rule applies. This question is decided by the judge alone under Evid C §405. See Comment to Evid C §405 for examples of matters determined under this section. On hearsay rule and exceptions generally, see Evid C §§1200-1370. See also §§10.18-10.27.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.37 V. ACTIONS AFTER COURT RULES ON MOTION

The ruling on a motion in limine is interlocutory, i.e., it is not appealable, and the trial judge is free to reconsider, revise, and reverse the ruling during trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

A. Court grants motion

§7.38 1. To exclude evidence

If the court grants a motion excluding evidence, make sure the order excludes both the evidence and any reference to it. See §7.23. The court should also order counsel for all parties to caution their witnesses to avoid mentioning the excluded evidence. See §7.40 for discussion of effect of violating the order.

If losing the motion in limine precludes presentation of evidence on a critical issue, then a party may stipulate to judgment for purposes of appeal. Tudor Ranches, Inc. v State Compensation Ins. Fund (1998) 65 CA4th 1422, 1428, 77 CR2d 574. To be effective, the stipulation must dispose of all claims with prejudice. 65 CA4th at 1429. The court of appeal will review the in limine ruling on an abuse of discretion standard. 65 CA4th at 1431.

PRACTICE TIP: Because the court has discretion to reconsider, revise, and reverse its ruling on motions in limine, stipulation to judgment merely to appeal them seems extreme and inadvisable in most cases.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.39 a. Preserving right to appeal if opposing the motion

When offering evidence that the court excludes, in order to preserve the right to appeal from the order and the record on appeal, make sure you include in your written response to the motion or in an oral offer of proof on the record:

- The substance of the offered evidence, i.e., the general nature of the testimony to be given, or nature of the documentary or other evidence sought to be admitted;
- The purpose of the evidence, i.e., why you are offering the evidence; and
- The relevance to the case.

See Evid C §354(a). See generally §§15.50-15.60.

Include the substance, purpose, and relevance of the excluded evidence in both a written opposition to the motion to exclude, and in the oral offer of proof. During oral argument you can reiterate and expand on the offer of proof on the record and refer to the offer of proof in your written papers. Consider making an offer of proof outside the presence of the jury when the evidence ordinarily would have been introduced at trial.

PRACTICE TIP: If the court excludes documentary evidence, ask that the documents be marked for identification as an exhibit or attach copies to the opposition, to ensure that the evidence is included in the record in some fashion. On appeal it will be difficult to demonstrate that the client was prejudiced by the exclusion of evidence without a record to demonstrate what the excluded evidence would have shown.

Consider asking the court to reconsider the ruling, especially if, during trial, facts are developed that support admission of the evidence. See Charbonneau v Superior Court (1974) 42 CA3d 505, 507, 116 CR 153 (modification of motion in limine during trial permitted). Evidence excluded in limine may become admissible if a witness or opposing counsel opens the door. Be sure to seize such opportunities and make your record.

EXAMPLE: In Smalley v Batey (2005) 128 CA4th 977, 984, 27 CR3d 575, the trial court was held to have abused its discretion under Evid C §352 by granting defendants' motion in limine to exclude evidence that the plaintiff in a personal injury action had paid his own medical expenses (evidence was "manifestly relevant" to prove plaintiff's damages and to rebut defendants' insinuation that plaintiff was malingering; collateral source rule irrelevant because insurer did not pay those expenses).

§7.40 b. Effect of violating order to exclude

Violation of an order excluding evidence under a motion in limine, whether temporary or permanent, may subject counsel to contempt sanctions. See CCP §1209(a)(5); Charbonneau v Superior Court (1974) 42 CA3d 505, 507, 116 CR 153. Violations of orders may also serve as a basis for a mistrial if sufficiently prejudicial. See Clark v Optical Coating Lab. Inc. (2008) 165 CA4th 150, 159, 80 CR3d 812 (mistrial granted after repeated violations caused cumulative prejudice). On contempt sanctions, see §§16.99-16.129.

Violation of an order prohibiting reference to excluded evidence may also subject counsel to sanctions or discipline. It is unprofessional conduct, knowingly and for the purpose of bringing inadmissible matter to the attention of the judge or jury, to "offer inadmissible evidence, ask legally objectionable questions, or make other impermissible comments." Hawk v Superior Court (1974) 42 CA3d 108, 118, 116 CR 713; see Simmons v Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1976) 62 CA3d 341, 355, 133 CR 42.

PRACTICE TIP: After prevailing on a motion in limine to exclude evidence, promptly object to any violation of the order and request that the court instruct the jury to disregard the reference. If the reference to excluded evidence is extremely prejudicial to your case, consider moving for a mistrial (and ask the court to impose the cost of the mistrial on the opposing party). See Warner Constr. Corp. v City of Los Angeles (1970) 2 C3d 285, 302, 85 CR 444. Failure to object, to cite opposing counsel for misconduct, or to request a mistrial can result in a waiver of the issue on appeal.

For further discussion on misconduct of counsel, see §§16.66-16.90.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.41 2. To admit evidence

Similarly, if the court has granted a motion in limine to admit evidence, the party opposing the motion should seriously consider asking the court to reconsider if developments during trial indicate that the evidence should not, in fact, be admitted. On the need to renew an objection to admitting the evidence when opposing counsel tries to introduce it, see §7.46.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/7 Motions in Limine/§7.42 B. Court takes motion under submission or makes conditional ruling

§7.42 B. Court takes motion under submission or makes conditional ruling

The trial judge often takes a motion in limine under submission pending developments at trial. This practice provides the court an opportunity to view the evidence (and its relevance) in the context of the facts as developed at trial and to weigh the effect of a ruling excluding or admitting the evidence.

If the court takes your motion to exclude evidence under submission, request that the court enter an order temporarily excluding the evidence and prohibiting reference to it, so that potentially inadmissible evidence is not referred to (for example, during opening statement) before the court has an opportunity to rule. Then ask the court to rule on the motion at the appropriate point during the trial, when the evidence in question is about to become the subject of testimony.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.43 C. Court denies motion to exclude evidence

If the court denies your motion in limine to exclude evidence at trial, consider these factors when deciding how to proceed:

- Do you want to renew your objection when the evidence is presented at trial? See §§7.45-7.46.
- Do you want to ask the court and opposing counsel for a stipulation or statement on the record that the objection has been preserved and you need not object at trial? See §7.47.
- Have you already adequately preserved your objection on the record through your motion in limine so that renewing the objection or asking for a stipulation is unnecessary? See People v Morris (1991) 53 C3d 152, 190, 279 CR 720, overruled on other grounds in People v Stansbury (1995) 9 C4th 824, 830 n1, 38 CR2d 394, discussed in §§7.46-7.47.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.44 1. Renewing objection

When deciding whether to renew the objection at the time of trial, reasons to renew the objection may be:

- To persuade the court to change its mind. See §7.45.
- To ensure that the objection is preserved on the record for appeal. See §7.46.

Reasons not to renew the objection, especially while the jury is present, may be:

- You are reasonably certain the court will not change its ruling;
- Not to appear an obstructionist;
- Not to draw the jury's attention to the evidence; or
- Not to interrupt the flow of the trial.

If deciding to renew the objection, ensure that the record is preserved for appeal, either by an adequate motion in limine, or by a stipulation with the court and parties, or both. See §7.47.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.45 a. Ask court for different ruling by objecting to evidence at trial

You may be able to persuade the court to make a different ruling when the evidence is offered at trial. At that time, the court can consider the relevance of the evidence in context, its probative value, and its potential for prejudice when the objection is made. See People v Jennings (1988) 46 C3d 963, 975 n3, 251 CR 278.

If it is apparent that the court will not change its mind, an objection may unnecessarily draw the jury's attention to the evidence and interrupt the flow of the trial. Be careful, however, to avoid a waiver. Definitely renew the objection if new facts are developed at trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

§7.46 b. Object to preserve record for appeal

If the court denies your motion to exclude evidence, you must decide whether to renew the objection when the evidence is presented at trial, to preserve the objection for appeal. To preserve the objection for appeal, the record must show that a timely objection or motion to exclude or to strike the evidence was made and that the court was aware of the specific ground of the objection or motion. Evid C §353.

Initially, the courts held that when a party unsuccessfully sought exclusion of evidence by a specific motion in limine, the motion served as an objection at trial and renewing the objection to the evidence at trial was not necessary to preserve the issue for appeal. See Sacramento & San Joaquin Drainage Dist. v Reed (1963) 215 CA2d 60, 66, 29 CR 847. Later, the California Supreme Court held that objections to the admissibility of evidence generally should be restated at trial, when the evidence is introduced. People v Jennings (1988) 46 C3d 963, 975 n3, 251 CR 278. Subsequently, however, in People v Morris (1991) 53 C3d 152, 189, 279 CR 720, overruled on other grounds in People v Stansbury (1995) 9 C4th 824, 830 n1, 38 CR2d 394, the Supreme Court held that a motion in limine serves the function of a timely objection or motion to exclude under Evid C §353 when the motion satisfies the basic requirements of §353, i.e.:

- The motion states a specific legal ground for exclusion and that ground is subsequently raised on appeal;
- The motion is directed to a particular, identifiable body of evidence; and
- The motion is made at a time before or during trial when the trial judge can determine the evidentiary question in its appropriate context.

If a motion in limine does not satisfy each of these requirements, other action must be taken to preserve the evidentiary issue for appeal. 53 C3d at 190.

If you cannot determine whether each requirement set forth in Morris was satisfied in your motion, it is safest to renew the objection at trial. See 53 C3d at 191. See §7.44 for discussion of determining whether to object at trial. If you do not want to renew the objection to preserve the record for appeal, consider requesting a stipulation or statement from the court on the record when the motion to exclude evidence is denied. For language of stipulation or statement, see §7.47.

§7.47 2. Stipulation or statement to preserve record

If you determine that you do not want to renew your objection to the evidence at trial, the safest method of ensuring that the objection is preserved for appeal is to request a stipulation of counsel or statement by the court on the record. See People v Morris (1991) 53 C3d 152, 191, 279 CR 720, overruled on other grounds in People v Stansbury (1995) 9 C4th 824, 830 n1, 38 CR2d 394. The supreme court in Morris suggests obtaining a "clear understanding on the record that counsel need not object when the evidence is sought to be introduced during trial so as to preserve the right to argue the point on appeal." 53 C3d at 191 (quoting an earlier edition of this book, California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial §6.48 (Cal CEB 1982)).

§7.48 D. Court denies motion to admit evidence

If the court denies your motion to admit evidence, to preserve the right to appeal from the order, make sure that the court knows the substance and relevance of the excluded evidence. See Evid C §354(a). Thus, to protect the record on appeal, include this information in your motion, or make an offer of proof on the record indicating the general nature of the testimony that would be given, or nature of the documentary or other evidence sought to be admitted, and indicating its relevance to the case. See generally §§15.50-15.60.

In addition, consider asking the court to reconsider the ruling, if during trial facts are developed that support admission of the evidence. See Charbonneau v Superior Court (1974) 42 CA3d 505, 507, 116 CR 153 (modification of motion in limine during trial permitted).

INTRODUCTION

On November 14, 2005, 18-month-old Felix Jones walked through a wide gap in a deteriorated fence and fell into a swimming pool at a Fremont apartment complex owned by the defendant. He died after being in a coma for over 3 months. Felix was the only child of Mr. and Mrs. Jones, who lived at the apartment complex. He was discovered floating in the pool by his grandmother, Grandmother Jones, who had been caring for him when he wandered away.

The parents are suing for general damages for wrongful death, plus over $147,000 in medical bills incurred in the 3 months' hospitalization before Felix's death. Grandmother Jones is suing under a Dillon v Legg cause of action.

Plaintiffs' First Motion in Limine

Plaintiffs move to exclude all references to any spousal abuse or battery incidents involving Robert Jones.

Points and Authorities

This evidence is irrelevant to either the liability or the damages issues and is therefore inadmissible under Evidence Code §350. Defendants do not contend that domestic violence played a role in the accidental drowning. Also, a parent's love for a child and corresponding grief at the loss of a child has no logical relation to that parent's marital difficulties. Recovery for wrongful death is not restricted to survivors whose life is otherwise without difficulty.

This court's order of September 1, 2007, quashed defendant's subpoena for police records, and limited to interrogatories any discovery about domestic violence. Plaintiffs' answers revealed that their deceased child was never the subject of any domestic disputes, was never subjected to physical violence, and was never present during any domestic dispute.

Defendants' only purpose in attempting to introduce evidence of domestic violence would be to confuse the issues and create undue prejudice against Robert Jones. Even if there were any probative value in the plaintiffs' history of domestic disputes, exclusion is warranted under the balancing required by Evidence Code §352.

Plaintiffs' Second Motion in Limine

Plaintiffs move to exclude all references to any criminal proceedings involving any of the plaintiffs or their spouses.

Points and Authorities

The arguments made in the preceding section apply here as well. Evidence of any criminal proceedings involving plaintiffs or their spouses is inadmissible under Evidence Code §350. It will not help the jury determine responsibility for Felix Jones's death or assess the magnitude of plaintiffs' loss. As Plaintiffs' Answers to Defendants' Interrogatories dated October 11, 2007, revealed, plaintiff Robert Jones's only arrest for domestic disputes occurred in February 2006, after Felix's death.

Plaintiffs' Third Motion in Limine

Plaintiffs move to exclude all references to the immigration status of any of the plaintiffs or their spouses.

Points and Authorities

Plaintiffs' immigration status is irrelevant to the issues of liability and damages and therefore inadmissible under §350. Plaintiffs are not seeking to recover any lost financial support the child could have provided. Defendants' only purpose in attempting to inject plaintiffs' status as an issue would be to incite animosity. Again, any conceivable probative value would be far outweighed by the undue prejudice and confusion of issues that would result.

Plaintiffs' Fourth Motion in Limine

Plaintiffs move to exclude all references to any alleged criminal conduct of any of the plaintiffs or their spouses.

Points and Authorities

Plaintiffs incorporate by reference the arguments made in support of the second motion in limine. Defendants may call as witnesses persons who have made defamatory and untrue allegations about nonparty members of plaintiffs' family. This evidence is irrelevant, and any possible probative value is far out-weighed by the risk of undue prejudice.

Plaintiffs' Fifth Motion in Limine

Plaintiffs move to exclude all testimony by witness Mary Smith regarding any statement made by non-accident-witness plaintiff Robert Jones about how the accident happened.

Points and Authorities

Neither Robert Jones nor Mary Smith was a percipient witness to the death of Felix Jones and neither has any personal knowledge of how the accident happened. Any potential testimony by Mary Smith purporting to repeat statements allegedly made by Robert Jones about how the accident happened therefore have at best limited probative value. Under the balancing required by Evidence Code §352, these statements must be excluded. Introduction of Ms. Smith's testimony can only result in undue consumption of time, because plaintiffs will be required and are prepared to bring in additional witnesses who can testify both to Grandmother Jones's prior consistent statements about how the accident occurred and to Robert Jones's prior consistent statements.

Admission of Ms. Smith's testimony would complicate and prolong the trial without adding anything of substance. Even if the alleged statements are deemed admissible against Robert Jones, they would not be admissible against Grandmother Jones. An admission by one litigant is not binding on other litigants. Nishi v Inoguchi (1931) 116 CA 398, 2 P2d 864.

Plaintiffs' Sixth Motion in Limine

Plaintiffs move that defendants be precluded from referring to any comparative negligence on the part of plaintiff Robert Jones or Emma Jones, or both, because defendants have conceded that they have no factual basis to support that affirmative defense.

Points and Authorities

On January 10, 2009, plaintiffs deposed defendants' designated expert witness, Roger Best. Mr. Best conceded that he had been presented with no facts showing that either plaintiff Robert Jones or plaintiff Emma Jones had been negligent and that he believed they had not been negligent. Without any evidence to support a theory of comparative negligence against these two parties, defendants have no good-faith basis for asserting such an affirmative defense. Fairness requires that they be precluded from clouding the issues by arguing a position for which they cannot present evidence.

Plaintiffs' Seventh Motion in Limine

Plaintiffs move to exclude any testimony by defendants' expert witness, Roger Best, repeating statements allegedly made by an anonymous municipal employee about the applicability of the Fremont Municipal Code provisions to the defendants' pool.

Points and Authorities

At his deposition on January 10, 2009, defendants' expert witness Roger Best stated that he had spoken to an employee of the City of Fremont, whose name he could not recall, regarding the applicability of the Municipal Codes governing swimming pools. Mr. Best stated he was told that the apartment swimming pool was governed by the provisions for a "private pool" rather than those for a "two-family or multiple-family development" pool. Plaintiffs anticipate that defendants will attempt to elicit the substance of that alleged conversation in the course of Mr. Best's testimony.

There is no basis for allowing this statement to be introduced, because the conversation does not form the basis for any part of Mr. Best's expert opinions. Mr. Best's expert opinions have to do with time and speed estimates relating to the actions of Grandmother Jones and Felix Jones on the day of the accident. Defendants' only purpose in attempting to reiterate the substance of Mr. Best's conversation with the anonymous City of Fremont employee would be to attempt to unfairly create confusion on an otherwise clear and uncontroversial issue, which in turn would complicate and prolong the trial if plaintiffs are forced to bring in rebuttal evidence.

Plaintiffs' Eighth Motion in Limine

Plaintiffs move to exclude the medical records regarding Grandmother Jones's eyesight as of February 2006.

Points and Authorities

Defendants disclosed no expert witness on the issue of Grandmother Jones's eyesight. Without an expert, defendants may not attempt to simply introduce medical records concerning her eyesight 3 months after the incident. Understanding these records is not within a lay person's ability; therefore, the records can only create confusion and potential prejudice against Grandmother Jones.

The testimony thus far is that Grandmother Jones began experiencing visual difficulties after the accident. Defendants have alluded to problems with Grandmother Jones's vision but have never requested that she submit to an examination of any kind. There is no evidence that Grandmother Jones had any eyesight problems in November 2005.

Furthermore, that portion of the records regarding Grandmother Jones's eyesight as of February 2006 would be inadmissible hearsay under Evidence Code §1271, because it represents the opinion of a physician rather than a record of an act, condition, or event of the sort allowed under the business records exception to the hearsay rule. Plaintiffs would be unable to cross-examine the doctor to find out what factors or tests led to the evaluation of Grandmother Jones's vision, the date of onset of any vision difficulties, and whether that doctor was qualified to make the evaluation. People v Reyes (1974) 12 C3d 486, 501, 116 CR 217 (psychiatric diagnosis in medical records is not a record of act, condition, or event admissible as business record); Godfrey v Steinpress (1982) 128 CA3d 154, 184, 180 CR 95 (doctor's opinion in medical records on cause of headaches is inadmissible hearsay).

§7.50 B. Example: Oral argument on motion in limine

D: Before we impanel the jury, Your Honor, I have a few motions in limine. I filed supporting memorandums with the court last week and gave counsel a copy at that time.

My first motion is to exclude any mention by counsel or her witnesses of the fact that one of my clients, Carlos Ramos, is a homosexual, on the ground that to do so would be far more prejudicial than probative. Mr. Ramos's sexual orientation has nothing to do with the merits of this action and mentioning it can only mislead the jury from the material issues of the case. On that basis, I ask that Ms. Morrison be admonished not to bring up that fact and further that she admonish her witnesses not to mention it in court.

P: Your Honor, I gave both the court and counsel my written opposition to this motion to exclude a vital and extremely relevant fact in this case. My client believes that, but for Mr. Ramos's sexual orientation, which caused Mr. Ramos to feel extreme jealousy, his assault on my client and the personal injuries my client suffered would never have occurred.

Comment: Obtain a ruling before jury selection so that counsel will know whether to avoid mentioning the information during voir dire or in opening statement. Note that both counsel drew the court's attention to their supporting memorandums and that counsel seeking to exclude the evidence asked the court to have opposing counsel admonish her witnesses not to volunteer the objectionable material.

§8.1 I. SCOPE OF CHAPTER

This chapter discusses the right to a jury trial (see §§8.3-8.13), how this right can be waived (see §8.15), and what to do if waiver occurs (see §§8.16-8.17). Waiver can occur early in the case when counsel fails to demand a jury in the case management conference statement or at the conference itself. See §2.26. It can also occur later in the case if the demanding party fails to deposit jury fees. CCP §631(d)(5)-(6). On jury trial demand and waiver, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 41 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

This chapter also discusses jury selection, including:

- How to become a juror (see §§8.19-8.23);
- Excuses from jury service (see §§8.24-8.25);
- Summoning a juror (see §§8.26-8.29);
- Methods of jury selection (traditional and "six- or 12-pack" methods; see §§8.32-8.33);
- Voir dire examination by the judge and counsel (see §§8.35-8.42);
- Juror questionnaires (see §§8.43-8.45);
- Hiring a jury consultant (see §8.53);
- Challenging the entire jury for cause (see §8.56);
- Grounds for challenging individual jurors for cause (see §§8.57-8.60);
- Peremptory challenges (see §§8.64-8.72);
- Selection of alternate jurors (see §§8.74-8.77); and
- Illness or disqualification of juror (see §8.78).

Sample forms used in the selection of a jury are included in §§8.81-8.83. For a chapter bibliography, see §8.84. On procedures for demanding a jury trial, and how and when to deposit jury fees, see §§2.25-2.35.

PRACTICE TIP: Whether to try your case before a judge or a jury must be decided on a case-by-case basis. More parties are opting for other forms of dispute resolution (e.g., binding arbitration, mediation, and summary trials) because of the costs of a jury trial, the length of time it takes to get a case to a jury despite the trial delay reduction rules, and the uncertain outcome. Discuss the options with your client. See Civ Proc Before Trial §50.4.

II. RIGHT TO JURY TRIAL AND WAIVER

§8.2 A. "Trial jury" defined; number of jurors

A trial jury is "a body of persons selected from the citizens of the area served by the court and sworn to try and determine by verdict a question of fact." CCP §194(p). A jury in a civil case consists of 12 persons or a lesser number agreed on by the parties in open court. Cal Const art I, §16; CCP §220. In limited civil cases, however, the legislature may provide that the jury consist of eight persons or a lesser number agreed on by the parties in open court. See Cal Const art I, §16.

If during trial all the alternate jurors have been excused and another juror drops out, the parties have the option of starting the trial over or stipulating to a decision from the remaining jurors. A party may be precluded from complaining on appeal about a jury of less than 12 jurors if the party (1) stipulated to a lesser number, whether or not in open court, or (2) failed to enter a timely objection to a jury of less than 12 jurors. See Salton Bay Marina, Inc. v Imperial Irrig. Dist. (1985) 172 CA3d 914, 944, 218 CR 839 (adverse party's silence alone does not waive right to 12-person jury; however, party cannot complain on appeal of lesser number of jurors if party stipulated to lesser number or failed to enter timely objection to jury of less than 12).

PRACTICE TIP: If the parties stipulate to a jury of less than 12 members, this stipulation should be formally entered on the minutes in open court. Obtain your client's consent on this issue.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.3 B. Determining right to jury trial; gist of action test

The right to a jury trial is guaranteed by Cal Const art I, §16 (former Cal Const art I, §7) and is provided for by statute in CCP §592.

A "jury trial is a matter of right in a civil action at law, but not in equity." Southern Pac. Transp. Co. v Superior Court (1976) 58 CA3d 433, 436, 129 CR 912. "[T]he right so guaranteed … is the right as it existed at common law in 1850, first adopted." C & K Eng'g Contractors v Amber Steel Co. (1978) 23 C3d 1, 8, 151 CR 323; People v One 1941 Chevrolet Coupe (1951) 37 C2d 283, 231 P2d 832. "[W]hat that right is, is a purely historical question, a fact which is to be ascertained like any other social, political or legal fact." 37 C2d at 287.

EXAMPLE 2: Jogani v Superior Court (2008) 165 CA4th 901, 905, 81 CR3d 503 (right to jury trial because quantum meruit was form of common law writ of assumpsit before 1850).

EXAMPLE 3: Wisden v Superior Court (2004) 124 CA4th 750, 756, 21 CR3d 523 (right to jury trial exists for fraudulent conveyance action).

EXAMPLE 4: County of El Dorado v Schneider (1987) 191 CA3d 1263, 1280, 237 CR 51 (no right to jury trial existed as of 1850 in paternity action; therefore, no right exists today).

EXAMPLE 5: Maldonado v Superior Court (1984) 162 CA3d 1259, 1262, 209 CR 199 (right to a jury trial on appeal from small claims action for unlawful detainer).

In determining whether an action was triable by a jury at common law, the court is not bound by the form of the action and will inquire into the "gist of the action." The "gist of the action" means the nature of the rights involved as determined from the pleadings as a whole and the facts of the case. See C & K Eng'g Contractors v Amber Steel Co., supra; Bank of America v Greenbach (1950) 98 CA2d 220, 219 P2d 814; Estate of Cazaurang (1946) 75 CA2d 217, 170 P2d 694.

If the gist of the action is legal, a right to a trial by jury exists. People v One 1941 Chevrolet Coupe, supra. See also Martin v County of Los Angeles (1996) 51 CA4th 688, 698, 59 CR2d 303 (right to jury trial exists in equitable indemnity action); Beasley v Wells Fargo Bank (1991) 235 CA3d 1383, 1391, 1 CR2d 446.

The type of relief sought usually determines whether the action is legal or equitable. Raedeke v Gibraltar Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1974) 10 C3d 665, 672, 111 CR 693. For example, a claim for damages generally establishes that the action is one at law. However, neither the caption of the pleading nor the prayer for relief can conclusively determine whether an action is legal or equitable. C & K Eng'g Contractors v Amber Steel Co., supra; Hutchason v Marks (1942) 54 CA2d 113, 128 P2d 573. See Interactive Multimedia Artists, Inc. v Superior Court (1998) 62 CA4th 1546, 1554, 73 CR2d 462; Interinsurance Exch. v Savior (1975) 51 CA3d 691, 694, 124 CR 239; Paularena v Superior Court (1965) 231 CA2d 906, 911, 42 CR 366.

The fact that equitable principles may be involved in the case will not bar a jury trial if the case is one in which the common-law courts could and would have granted relief. Mortimer v Loynes (1946) 74 CA2d 160, 168, 168 P2d 481 (equitable principles used to establish liability). See also Bank of America v Lamb Fin. Co. (1956) 145 CA2d 702, 706, 303 P2d 86.

The constitutional guaranty to the right to a jury trial is not limited strictly to cases in which such a right would have existed at common law in 1850. It extends to cases of a like nature that did not exist then. People v One 1941 Chevrolet Coupe, supra (statutory automobile forfeiture proceeding required jury trial when similar type of cause of action existed at common law that was triable by jury). The legislature cannot convert a legal right into an equitable one if it will infringe on the right of trial by jury. 37 C2d at 299.

§8.4 1. Actions at law entitled to jury trial

A right to a jury trial exists only as to issues of fact. See CCP §§590, 592; Evid C §§310(a), 312. The court decides issues of law. A jury trial is a matter of right for issues of fact in actions for (CCP §592):

- The recovery of specific real or personal property, with or without damages;
- Money claimed due on a contract;
- Damages for breach of contract; and
- Damages for injuries.

For example, a party is entitled to a jury trial in actions:

- In ejectment. Thomson v Thomson (1936) 7 C2d 671, 682, 62 P2d 358.
- To recover damages based on legal malpractice, breach of contract, negligence, and emotional distress. Ceriale v Superior Court (1996) 48 CA4th 1629, 1634, 56 CR2d 353 (damages recoverable even though equitable issues from underlying dissolution proceeding could arise during trial).
- To recover damages for fraud. Peterson v Peterson (1946) 74 CA2d 312, 320, 168 P2d 474. See also Hutchason v Marks (1942) 54 CA2d 113, 118, 128 P2d 573.
- To recover damages for nuisance. Farrell v City of Ontario (1919) 39 CA 351, 357, 178 P 740.
- To recover damages for quantum meruit. Jogani v Superior Court (2008) 165 CA4th 901, 905, 81 CR3d 503.
- To recover damages for trespass. Hughes v Dunlap (1891) 91 C 385, 390, 27 P 642.
- To recover statutory penalties. Feltner v Columbia Pictures Television, Inc. (1998) 523 US 340, 140 L Ed 2d 438, 118 S Ct 1279, 1284 (copyright owner elects to recover statutory damages under Copyright Act; Seventh Amendment provides right to jury trial on issues pertinent to damage award); Grossblatt v Wright (1951) 108 CA2d 475, 239 P2d 19 (Housing and Rent Act of 1947; treble damages recoverable under Act similar to common-law action of debt).

For further discussion, see 7 Witkin, California Procedure, Trial §§84-85 (5th ed 2008).

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/8 Jury Selection/§8.5 2. Actions in equity not entitled to jury trial

§8.5 2. Actions in equity not entitled to jury trial

There is no right to a jury trial if the gist of an action is for the enforcement of a right that is only recognized in equity. Ford v Palisades Corp. (1950) 101 CA2d 491, 499, 225 P2d 545. See C & K Eng'g Contractors v Amber Steel Co. (1978) 23 C3d 1, 8, 151 CR 323.

There was no right to a jury trial in the following actions because they were held to be equitable actions:

- Cancellation of instrument. Porter v Superior Court (1977) 73 CA3d 793, 800, 141 CR 59 (deed).
- Injunctive relief only. City of Turlock v Bristow (1930) 103 CA 750, 756, 284 P 962 (to abate nuisance); Wolford v Thomas (1987) 190 CA3d 347, 353, 235 CR 422.
- Reformation of contract. Loftus v Fischer (1896) 113 C 286, 288, 45 P 328.
- Specific performance of contract. Connell v Bowes (1942) 19 C2d 870, 871, 123 P2d 456; Walton v Walton (1995) 31 CA4th 277, 288, 36 CR2d 901.
- To establish constructive trust. Getty v Getty (1986) 187 CA3d 1159, 1175, 232 CR 603; Tibbitts v Fife (1958) 162 CA2d 568, 573, 328 P2d 212.
- Rescission. Bank of America v Greenbach (1950) 98 CA2d 220, 230, 219 P2d 814. But see Ford v Superior Court (1959) 176 CA2d 754, 759, 1 CR 559. See also NMSBPCSLDHB v County of Fresno (2007) 152 CA4th 954, 61 CR3d 425 (rescission action is action in equity and not action at law when recovery sought by plaintiff consists entirely of something other than consideration given by plaintiff; thus, plaintiff not entitled to jury trial).
- Quiet title. Peterson v Peterson (1946) 74 CA2d 312, 322, 168 P2d 474 (no right to jury trial exists in quiet title actions, unless action takes on character of ejectment action to recover possession of property). See Thomson v Thomson (1936) 7 C2d 671, 62 P2d 358; Estate of Phelps (1990) 223 CA3d 332, 340, 273 CR 2. But see Arciero Ranches v Meza (1993) 17 CA4th 114, 125, 21 CR2d 127 (when quiet title action seeks declaration that party is owner of prescriptive easement, party has right to have jury determine whether prescriptive easement exists). See also Baugh v Garl (2006) 137 CA4th 737, 40 CR3d 539 (in water rights action, it was undisputed that plaintiffs had right to easement; thus, action at law was not necessary prerequisite for injunctive relief).
- Promissory estoppel. C & K Eng'g Contractors v Amber Steel Co., supra. See also A-C Co. v Security Pac. Nat'l Bank (1985) 173 CA3d 462, 473, 219 CR 62.
- Shareholders' derivative action. Rankin v Frebank Co. (1975) 47 CA3d 75, 90, 121 CR 348. On right to a jury trial when action includes a prayer for equitable relief to protect a common-law right, see §8.2.

NOTE: A trial judge has discretion to submit to a jury an equitable affirmative defense to a legal claim. See Unilogic, Inc. v Burroughs Corp. (1992) 10 CA4th 612, 623, 12 CR2d 741 (affirmative defense to claim for conversion was unclean hands).

§8.6 3. Legal and equitable issues in same case

When legal and equitable issues have been joined in the same case, the parties have a right to a jury trial on the legal issues as long as the legal issues are severable. Connell v Bowes (1942) 19 C2d 870, 123 P2d 456 (right to jury trial of legal issues raised by cross-complaint when complaint stated equitable cause of action and cross-complaint stated legal cause of action); Selby Constructors v McCarthy (1979) 91 CA3d 517, 154 CR 164. See Beasley v Wells Fargo Bank (1991) 235 CA3d 1383, 1393, 1 CR2d 446 (jury trial properly permitted when defendant bank's cross-complaint and plaintiff's answer created defensive claim for relief on which there was right to jury trial; bank's abandonment of cross-complaint was insufficient reason for bank to claim that plaintiff had no right to jury trial; abandonment did not become evident until close of trial).

EXAMPLE: A general contractor brought suit joining two causes of action, one to recover a money judgment for breach of a construction contract and one to enforce a mechanic's lien on the subject property. The defendants answered, alleging affirmative defenses of nonperformance and negligent performance, and also cross-complained on those grounds. The court held that the issues relating to performance of the contract were legal and that a right to a jury trial existed on those issues. The only equitable issues triable by the court alone were those relating to the manner of perfecting the lien. See Selby Constructors v McCarthy, supra.

On right to jury trial when action could be brought both at law and in equity, see §8.8. See §§6.99-6.104 on motions to bifurcate and sever. When issues are severed, the court has discretion to order separate juries for separate trials. Shade Foods, Inc. v Innovative Prods. Sales & Mktg. Inc. (2000) 78 CA4th 847, 911, 93 CR2d 364.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.7 a. Order of proof

The order of proof at trial is within the discretion of the trial judge. Evid C §320. When a case involves both legal and equitable issues, the equitable issues are generally tried first by the court without a jury (or with an advisory jury). Raedeke v Gibraltar Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1974) 10 C3d 665, 671, 111 CR 693. See §8.8. If the determination by the court on the equitable issues is dispositive of the legal issues, the need for a jury trial on the legal issues is obviated. 10 C3d at 671 (in action seeking legal and equitable relief, plaintiffs waived equitable issues, when court stated its intention to proceed with equitable issues, to avoid risk of forfeiting their right to jury trial if equitable issues were tried first). See also Nwosu v Uba (2004) 122 CA4th 1229, 19 CR3d 416 (defendant not deprived of right to jury trial when trial of equitable issues resolved all claims). See §8.13 on advisory jury.

In addition, there is no right to a jury trial on affirmative defenses, including res judicata, that can be tried separately and first. Windsor Square Homeowners Ass'n v Citation Homes (1997) 54 CA4th 547, 557, 62 CR2d 818 (trial court properly bifurcated res judicata defense from plaintiff's suit for negligence and ordered that it proceed first as a court trial; court determined that facts underlying the applicability of the res judicata defense are properly tried to the court, and not to a jury, although it is a legal and not an equitable defense).

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.8 b. Concurrent jurisdiction at law and in equity

The right to a jury trial is not defeated when there may be concurrent jurisdiction at law and in equity over an action. Ripling v Superior Court (1952) 112 CA2d 399, 452, 247 P2d 117 (right to jury trial upheld when guardian of estate of incompetent brought action against trustee to recover money immediately and unconditionally owed by trustee). Only if the issues to be tried are exclusively equitable in nature will the right to a jury trial be denied. 112 CA2d at 408. See also Interactive Multimedia Artists, Inc. v Superior Court (1998) 62 CA4th 1546, 1554, 73 CR2d 462.

© The Regents of the University of California

4. Jury trial right in specific types of actions

§8.9 a. Declaratory relief

The fact that an action seeks declaratory relief will not in itself negate the right to a jury trial. Interinsurance Exch. v Savior (1975) 51 CA3d 691, 124 CR 239. Rather, the right to a jury trial hinges on whether the issues are legal or equitable in nature. Interinsurance Exch. v Savior, supra (insurer's right to jury trial upheld in declaratory relief action seeking declaration of no coverage against its putative insureds). See State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v Superior Court (1956) 47 C2d 428, 432, 304 P2d 13 (declaratory action cannot be used to circumvent right to jury trial). See also Escamilla v California Ins. Guar. Ass'n (1983) 150 CA3d 53, 197 CR 463 (right to jury trial available in declaratory relief, but it was waived in this case).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/8 Jury Selection/§8.10 b. Probate proceedings

§8.10 b. Probate proceedings

No right to a jury trial exists in probate proceedings in the absence of statutory provision. Estate of Beach (1975) 15 C3d 623, 642, 125 CR 570. This rule has been codified as Prob C §825. Probate Code sections authorizing jury trial on demand include Prob C §§1860.5 (termination of limited conservatorship) and 1863 (termination of conservatorship). See also Prob C §1000 (applicability of rules of civil procedure).

A jury trial is not available in will contests (Prob C §8252(b)) or actions to revoke the probate of a will (Prob C §8271(b)). See Estate of Gardner (1991) 1 CA4th 995, 2 CR2d 664.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.11 c. Eminent domain

In eminent domain cases, the right to a jury trial is limited to the amount of the defendant's damages, and all other issues must be decided by the trial judge. Cal Const art I, §19. See also PG&E v Peterson (1969) 270 CA2d 434, 75 CR 673.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.12 d. Inverse condemnation

There is no right to jury trial on the issue of liability in an inverse condemnation action, but a jury may be permitted on the issue of just compensation. Marshall v Department of Water & Power (1990) 219 CA3d 1124, 268 CR 559 (action involving fire that property owners and insurers contended was proximately caused by downed power lines; jury permitted only on issue of "just compensation"). See Cal Const art I, §19.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.12A e. Equitable Indemnity

Although a cause of action for equitable indemnity involves equitable principles, it is a legal action seeking legal relief, namely, monetary damages. Therefore, there is a right to a jury trial in such an action. See Martin v County of Los Angeles (1996) 51 CA4th 688, 698, 59 CR2d 303 (underlying wrongful death action; trial court severed cross-complaint and at a bench trial on cross-complaint found county 50 percent at fault; county appealed, claiming its right to jury trial had been violated; court of appeal reversed and held county had right to jury trial).

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.13 5. Advisory jury in equitable actions

When a right to a jury trial does not exist because the issues of fact are equitable in nature, the court may order any such issue to be tried by an advisory jury. CCP §592; Cutter Labs. v R. W. Ogle & Co. (1957) 151 CA2d 410, 311 P2d 627. If that occurs, the jury's verdict is advisory only and is not binding on the court. 151 CA2d at 418; Woolsey v Woolsey (1932) 121 CA 576, 9 P2d 605 (special and general verdicts rejected by court). In the Advisory Committee Comment (2003) explaining why former Cal Rules of Ct 377 was repealed, the committee stated that the rule contained unduly burdensome procedures, but that:

> The repeal of this rule is not intended to prevent a party from requesting an advisory jury. In an appropriate case, a party may request, and the court in its discretion may approve, the use of an advisory jury.

On specially selected juries, see §1.23.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/8 Jury Selection/§8.14 C. Making demand for jury trial; jury fee deposit

§8.14 C. Making demand for jury trial; jury fee deposit

There are detailed procedures for how to demand a jury trial and how and when to deposit jury fees. These procedures are discussed in §§2.25-2.35. Failure to comply with these procedures may result in waiver of the right to a jury trial. See §8.15.

© The Regents of the University of California

D. Waiver of jury trial

§8.15 1. Manner of waiver

The right to a jury trial "may not be waived by implication, but only affirmatively and in the manner designated by CCP §631." Byram v Superior Court (1977) 74 CA3d 648, 654, 141 CR 604. The right to a jury trial is waived by:

- Failure to appear at trial (CCP §631(d)(1));
- Written consent (CCP §631(d)(2));
- Failure to announce that a jury is required at the time the cause is first set for trial, if set by stipulation, or within 5 days after notice of setting, if set without notice or stipulation (CCP §631(d)(4));
- Failure to deposit the advance jury fees 25 calendar days before the date set for trial (CCP §631(d)(5); see §§2.31-2.35);
- Oral consent in open court entered in the minutes or docket (CCP §631(d)(3)) (see Cadle Co. v World Wide Hospitality Furniture, Inc. (2006) 144 CA4th 504, 50 CR3d 480 (guarantor, through attorney, orally waived jury trial in open court); or
- Failure to deposit the second and subsequent days' jury or jury panel fees and mileage costs (CCP §631(a)(6)).

NOTE: In Grafton Partners v Superior Court (2005) 36 C4th 944, 32 CR3d 5, the California Supreme Court held that predispute waivers of the right to jury trial are invalid because they are not authorized by CCP §631, which applies only to pending actions. The Grafton court found that a waiver in a letter engaging an accounting firm was unenforceable, and that only jury waiver methods prescribed by statute are constitutional under Cal Const art I, §16. 36 C4th at 956 (disapproving Trizec Props., Inc. v Superior Court (1991) 229 CA3d 1616, 280 CR 885, to the extent it held "that the right to jury trial may be waived in a manner that is without statutory authorization"). In the absence of the California Legislature's enacting a change in the law, the Grafton rule has far-reaching implications because it applies to every type of contractual predispute jury waiver outside the arbitration context. The issue of predispute jury waiver should not be confused, however, with predispute agreement by the parties to transfer a dispute to a referee under CCP §638. See Woodside Homes of Cal., Inc. v Superior Court (2006) 142 CA4th 99, 103, 47 CR3d 683 (consensual judicial reference is permitted under CCP §638 and does not run afoul of Grafton).

CAUTION: Do not waive your client's right to a jury trial without first obtaining your client's informed consent. See concurring opinion in Blanton v Womancare, Inc. (1985) 38 C3d 396, 411, 212 CR 151.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/8 Jury Selection/§8.16 2. Relief from waiver within court's discretion

§8.16 2. Relief from waiver within court's discretion

Although a party may have waived the right to a jury trial, the waiver is not necessarily "for all time" or "forever." See CCP §631(e). See also Byram v Superior Court (1977) 74 CA3d 648, 141 CR 604 (inadvertent waiver). The court may, in its discretion and on just terms, allow a trial by jury although there may have been a waiver. CCP §631(e).

To obtain relief from waiver of a jury trial, the moving party must specifically ask the court to grant such relief either by written or oral motion. Taylor v Union Pac. R.R. (1976) 16 C3d 893, 899, 130 CR 23 (jury trial right not reinstated; plaintiffs waived jury after trial commenced by failing to deposit fees and failing to ask court for relief from waiver); March v Pettis (1977) 66 CA3d 473, 480, 136 CR 3. See also §8.17. The request for relief should be made promptly because delay will be a factor considered by the court in deciding whether to grant relief. Still v Plaza Marina Commercial Corp. (1971) 21 CA3d 378, 387, 98 CR 414 (defense counsel waited until morning of trial to seek relief from waiver of jury trial due to failure to deposit fees when defense counsel knew 8 days before trial that fees had not been posted; court found no abuse of discretion in denying relief from waiver).

The court may consider the following factors when determining whether to exercise its discretion and grant relief from waiver:

- Whether any prejudice will be suffered by any party or the court;
- The timeliness of the request for relief from waiver;
- The likely inconvenience to witnesses;
- The risk of an angry and prejudiced jury;
- The possibility of delay in rescheduling the trial for a jury; or
- The lack of funds.

See Gonzales v Nork (1978) 20 C3d 500, 143 CR 240. See also March v Pettis (1977) 66 CA3d 473, 479, 136 CR 3.

The most crucial of these factors is whether any prejudice will be suffered by any party or the court. Wharton v Superior Court (1991) 231 CA3d 100, 282 CR 349. A trial court abuses its discretion as a matter of law when relief from an inadvertent waiver has been denied and there has been no prejudice to the other party as a result of the waiver. Winston v Superior Court (1987) 196 CA3d 600, 242 CR 113.

EXAMPLE 1: The trial court abused its discretion by denying relief from waiver when counsel inadvertently failed to post jury fees in a timely manner and there was no showing of prejudice to the court or opposing counsel. Johnson-Stovall v Superior Court (1993) 17 CA4th 808, 21 CR2d 494 (constitutional guaranties to a jury trial take precedence over housekeeping rules); Massie v AAR W. Skyways, Inc. (1992) 4 CA4th 405, 5 CR2d 654; Wharton v Superior Court, supra; Simmons v Prudential Ins. Co. (1981) 123 CA3d 833, 838, 177 CR 37.

EXAMPLE 2: The court abused its discretion by denying relief from default after counsel failed to submit jury instructions in a timely manner and there is no prejudice to the other party. Cooks v Superior Court (1990) 224 CA3d 723, 274 CR 113.

Going forward with the jury trial, after waiver, does not by itself amount to prejudice to the opposing party; the opposing party must have suffered prejudice to justify denying relief from waiver. See Gann v Williams Bros. Realty (1991) 231 CA3d 1698, 283 CR 128 (relief from waiver was properly denied when plaintiff, who failed to timely post jury fees, did not seek relief until 5 days before trial; opposing party was prejudiced because he had not prepared jury instructions); Johnson-Stovall v Superior Court (1993) 17 CA4th 808, 21 CR2d 494 (court of appeal reversed trial court's denial of relief from waiver (also for failure to post fees), holding that defendant had not suffered prejudice; there was sufficient time for preparation of jury instructions, motions in limine, and exhibits; trial date had been continued). Absent prejudice in the waiver context, the constitutional right to a jury trial is paramount. See Estate of Meeker (1993) 13 CA4th 1099, 1106, 16 CR2d 825 (court strongly reminded trial courts that adherence to goals of Trial Court Delay Reduction Act of 1990 (Govt C §§68600-68620) cannot justify denial of litigant's constitutional rights).

A court's doubt about whether relief from waiver should be granted will generally be resolved in favor of permitting a litigant the right to a trial by jury. Day v Rosenthal (1985) 170 CA3d 1125, 1177, 217 CR 89. Relief will be denied, however, if (a) the only reason for the demand appears to be the party's change of mind or (b) the demand for a jury is being used as a "pretext to obtain continuances and thus trifle with justice." March v Pettis (1977) 66 CA3d 473, 480, 136 CR 3.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.17 3. Effect of waiver after reversal of judgment

When a judgment is reversed for a trial de novo, the party who has waived the right to a jury in the first trial is not bound by the waiver and may demand a jury for the retrial because the case stands as if it had never gone to trial. See Frankel v Four Star Int'l (1980) 104 CA3d 897, 904, 163 CR 902. However, if the cause is remanded on appeal for further proceedings with instructions that evidence already introduced in the first trial be considered by the trial judge in the second trial, a party's original waiver of the right to a jury is binding. Spaulding v Cameron (1954) 127 CA2d 698, 702, 274 P2d 177. See Fidelity & Deposit Co. v Whitson (1962) 205 CA2d 713, 23 CR 491 (after waiver of jury in original action, no right to demand jury trial for trial of supplemental issue concerning amount of attorney fees to be awarded for services on appeal).

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.18 E. Denial of right to jury trial reviewable by writ or appeal

Denial of the right to a jury trial to a party constitutionally entitled to it constitutes reversible error. People v One 1941 Chevrolet Coupe (1951) 37 C2d 283, 231 P2d 832 (denial of jury trial required reversal in forfeiture proceedings); Selby Constructors v McCarthy (1979) 91 CA3d 517, 527, 154 CR 164 (denial of right reversible error per se); Olivia N. v National Broad. Co. (1977) 74 CA3d 383, 141 CR 511. But see Pacific W. Oil Co. v Bern Oil Co. (1939) 13 C2d 60, 87 P2d 1045 (denial of right to jury trial held nonprejudicial error). Denial of this right is also an act in excess of jurisdiction, restrainable by prohibition. Olivia N. v National Broad. Co., supra; Paularena v Superior Court (1965) 231 CA2d 906, 911, 42 CR 366.

An order denying a party's demand for a jury trial is reviewable in two ways:

- On appeal from the judgment. See C & K Eng'g Contractors v Amber Steel Co. (1978) 23 C3d 1, 151 CR 323.
- Before judgment by extraordinary writ (prohibition or mandamus).

See Selby Constructors v McCarthy (1979) 91 CA3d 517, 154 CR 164 (prejudgment review preferred because it saves time that would be wasted if jury trial was erroneously granted). See also Southern Pac. Transp. Co. v Superior Court (1976) 58 CA3d 433, 129 CR 912 (prohibition proper to determine whether trial court's ruling permitting jury trial was erroneous).

A party must object to the court's ruling either denying or granting a jury trial at the time of the court's ruling or must make a timely attack thereafter by motion. CCP §647; De Castro v Rowe (1963) 223 CA2d 547, 36 CR 53 (court's order denying jury trial was deemed excepted to and reviewable on appeal because plaintiffs made proper objection). See also Medeiros v Medeiros (1960) 177 CA2d 69, 1 CR 696 (court's order denying jury trial to plaintiff was deemed excepted to because plaintiffs demonstrated that they wanted jury trial (e.g., deposited fees and filed motion to determine legal and equitable issues raised by pleadings). See also 9 Witkin, California Procedure, Appeal §454 (5th ed 2008).

When no objection is raised, however, or the party claiming error has not otherwise made that party's position on the issue of the right to a jury trial fully known to the court, appellate review of a ruling either granting or denying a jury trial will be denied. See Taylor v Union Pac. R.R. (1976) 16 C3d 893, 900, 130 CR 23. See also Pink v Slater (1955) 131 CA2d 816, 281 P2d 272.

PRACTICE TIP: If the court makes a ruling either granting or denying a request for a jury trial before trial, consider renewing the request for a jury trial before the trial judge to avoid any possibility of being deemed to have acquiesced in the court's action—thus barring appellate review of the claimed error. See Glogau v Hagan (1951) 107 CA2d 313, 316, 237 P2d 329. See also Tyler v Norton (1973) 34 CA3d 717, 110 CR 307.

A party's right to a jury trial is not waived by proceeding with a bench trial as long as the party has properly objected to the court's erroneous denial of a jury trial. Cohill v Nationwide Auto Serv. (1993) 16 CA4th 696, 19 CR2d 924.

III. SELECTING PROSPECTIVE JURORS

§8.19 A. Jury service is obligation for all persons; statutory authority

Trial by jury is "a cherished constitutional right." CCP §191. All qualified persons must have an equal opportunity to be considered for jury service and have an obligation to serve as jurors when summoned. The jury commissioner has the responsibility to manage all jury systems in an efficient, equitable, and cost-effective manner. CCP §191. The rules governing jury selection and jury management are set forth in the Trial Jury Selection and Management Act (CCP §§190-237).

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.20 B. Random selection required

Everyone selected for jury service must be "selected at random from the population of the area served by the court." CCP §191. See definition of "random" in CCP §194(l). The jury commissioner can use a mechanical, electric, or electronic device to make this random selection of jurors. CCP §202. Once the initial random selection of prospective jurors has been made, these jurors are referred to as the "juror pool." CCP §194(e). From this pool, a "trial jury panel" is selected at random by the clerk (or the judge if there is no clerk) and assigned to a particular courtroom. CCP §194(q).

If the jury commissioner provides the court with a trial jury panel list in random order, the court is required to seat the prospective jurors in the same order as is listed. CCP §222. See People v Bell (1989) 49 C3d 502, 262 CR 1 (when neutral selection procedures are used to create jury pools, the fact that a particular group may be underrepresented is not a violation of the representative cross-section requirement). See §8.21. Failure of the court or clerk to randomly draw names from the panel to be seated in the jury box may constitute harmless error if no prejudice is shown. The party challenging the jury selection method must show that the method actually prejudiced the ability to select a jury from a representative cross-section. See People v Mayfield (1997) 14 C4th 668, 728, 60 CR2d 1 (exclusion of prospective jurors whose last names began with letter in second half of alphabet did not constitute prejudice); People v Wright (1990) 52 C3d 367, 276 CR 731 (court failed to use random selection process, but no reversible error resulted because there was no prejudice). See also People v Visciotti (1992) 2 C4th 1, 5 CR2d 495 (party may not claim error if procedure utilized did not depart materially from statutory procedures).

§8.21 C. Jury pool must be composed of representative cross-section of community

The right to a jury trial drawn from a representative cross-section of the community is guaranteed equally and independently by the Sixth Amendment to the United States Constitution and by Cal Const art I, §16. Williams v Superior Court (1989) 49 C3d 736, 740, 263 CR 503. This demographic requirement guarantees that a jury will be drawn from a pool that does not systematically or intentionally exclude members of a racial, religious, ethnic, geographic, or other identifiable group. Holley v J & S Sweeping Co. (1983) 143 CA3d 588, 192 CR 74. See §8.67 on challenging unrepresentative jury.

The juror pool need not mirror the community's racial, ethnic, or religious makeup because a jury that is selected at random and in compliance with the representative cross-section requirement is assumed to be capable of representing the entire community. Williams v Superior Court, supra. See U.S. v Jackman (2d Cir 1995) 46 F3d 1240 (use of computer list that omitted two communities in district having highest minority populations violated Sixth Amendment).

To challenge a jury for failure to satisfy the representative cross-section requirement, you must show that:

- The group excluded was a distinctive group in the community (see §§8.67-8.68);
- The group was not fairly represented in the jury pool as compared with the number of such persons in the community; and
- The underrepresentation was due to systematic exclusion.

Williams v Superior Court (1989) 49 C3d 736, 741, 263 CR 503, citing Duren v Missouri (1979) 439 US 357, 364, 58 L Ed 2d 579, 99 S Ct 664. But see U.S. v Ortiz (ED Penn 1995) 897 F Supp 199 (no systematic exclusion found when underrepresentation was attributable to factors outside court's control, such as failure of certain groups to register to vote or to return jury questionnaires).

In determining whether the cross-section requirement has been satisfied, the court will examine whether the jury panel was drawn solely from within the bounds of the particular judicial district where the case was being tried and not from the entire county. Williams v Superior Court, supra. This is of concern in larger counties that divide their superior courts into two or more judicial districts. Williams v Superior Court, supra.

NOTE: The exclusion of ex-felons and resident aliens from juries violates neither the cross-section rule (i.e., the right to a jury drawn from a representative cross-section of the community) nor the equal protection clause of the state and federal constitutions. Rubio v Superior Court (1979) 24 C3d 93, 154 CR 734.

See California Criminal Law Procedure and Practice, chap 29 (Cal CEB Annual). See also Druff, The Cross-Section Requirement and Jury Impartiality, 73 Cal L Rev 1555 (1985).

§8.22 D. Juror qualifications

All persons are eligible and qualified to be prospective trial jurors, except the following persons:

- Aliens. Persons who are not citizens of the United States. CCP §203(a)(1).
- Minors. Persons under age 18. CCP §203(a)(2).
- Nonresidents. Persons who are not domiciled in California or who are not residents of the jurisdiction where they were summoned to serve. CCP §203(a)(3)-(4).
- Convicts. Persons convicted of malfeasance in office or a felony or whose civil rights have not been restored. CCP §203(a)(5).
- Persons lacking English skills. Persons with insufficient knowledge of the English language. CCP §203(a)(6); People v Jones (1972) 25 CA3d 776, 102 CR 277.
- Current jurors. Persons who are currently serving as grand or trial jurors in another California court. CCP §203(a)(7).
- Conservatees. Persons who are the subject of a conservatorship. CCP §203(a)(8).

A person who is not competent to serve as a juror can be challenged for cause. CCP §§228-229. See §§8.54-8.63 on challenges for cause.

A person cannot be automatically excluded from eligibility for jury service solely because of (CCP §203(a)(6)):

- Loss of sight;
- Loss of hearing;
- A disability that impedes a person's ability to communicate; or
- A disability that impairs or interferes with the person's mobility.

A person with one of these disabilities may be challenged, however, for cause in certain cases in which a juror's senses are needed to determine the case. CCP §228(b). See also §8.58.

A party who does not remove by challenge a juror who has impaired hearing, sight, or power of speech must stipulate to the presence of a sign language interpreter, reader, or speech interpreter, if one is necessary, and prepare proposed jury instructions to that person providing the aid. A person providing these services is not permitted to participate in the deliberations except to facilitate the communication between the juror with a disability and the other jurors. CCP §224. See §21.4.

NOTE: Names of qualified jurors drawn from the qualified juror list for the superior court shall be made available in a civil case to the public upon request unless the court determines otherwise. CCP §237(a)(1). However, in a criminal case, personal juror identifying information shall be sealed on the recording of the jury's verdict. CCP §237(a)(2).

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.23 E. Exemption from jury service

No category of persons is exempt from jury service by virtue of their occupation. CCP §204. For example, attorneys are not exempt from jury service simply because they are attorneys. Under CCP §219(b)(1), however, peace officers (as defined in Pen C §§830.1 and 830.2(a)) may not be selected for voir dire in either civil or criminal cases. Also, under CCP §219(b)(2), peace officers (as defined in Pen C §830.2(a)) may not be selected as jurors in criminal matters. Because CCP §§204 and 219 are contradictory, it is unclear whether the legislature intended peace officers to serve as jurors.

PRACTICE TIP: If you are faced with the possibility of having a peace officer on a civil jury, point out to the judge the conflict between these two statutes to avoid a possible mistrial or appeal.

F. Excuses from jury service

§8.24 1. "Undue hardship" defined

An eligible person may be excused from jury service only for undue hardship on themselves or the public, as defined by the Judicial Council. CCP §204(b). "Undue hardship" is defined by the Judicial Council as:

- No transportation. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1008(d)(1).
- Excessive distance to court. An excessive distance is one where reasonable travel time from the juror's home to court exceeds one-and-one-half hours one-way. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1008(d)(2).
- Extreme financial burden. The court will consider the sources of household income, the availability and extent of income reimbursement, the expected length of jury service, and whether jury service might compromise the person's ability to support his or her family or might disrupt the economic stability of the individual. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1008(d)(3).
- Undue risk of material injury to property. The court will consider the nature of the property, as well as the source, duration, and seriousness of the risk, and whether other arrangements can be made. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1008(d)(4).
- Risk of mental or physical harm. A juror may be required to provide verification of a mental or physical disability or impairment, its duration, and the reasons for the inability to serve. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1008(d)(5).
- Juror's services needed. The prospective juror's services are immediately needed for the protection of public health and safety, and no arrangements can be made to release him or her. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1008(d)(6).
- Care of others. The prospective juror is needed to care for a family or nonfamily member, and no comparable substitute care is available without financial burden. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1008(d)(7).
- Prior jury service. The prospective juror served on a jury or was summoned and appeared for jury service during the previous 12 months in any federal or state court. The jury commissioner has discretion to establish a period longer than 12 months. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1008(e).

IV. ISSUING JURY SUMMONS

§8.26 A. Service and content of summons

A jury summons is served on all persons who are on the randomly selected list of qualified jurors. It either tells the prospective juror the date, time, and place of appearance or provides instructions for how to call the jury commissioner for instructions by telephone.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/8 Jury Selection/§8.27 B. Issuance of immediate summons in emergency situations

§8.27 B. Issuance of immediate summons in emergency situations

In emergency situations, a jury panel can be completed by immediate summons. CCP §211. An emergency situation is defined as one in which the court has no prospective jurors remaining available for voir dire and the jury commissioner believes that not proceeding with voir dire will put a party's right to trial by jury in jeopardy. In this situation, the court can direct a sheriff, marshal, or constable to summon, serve, and immediately attach a sufficient number of citizens, having the qualifications of jurors, to complete the panel. CCP §211.

V. VOIR DIRE EXAMINATION

§8.30 A. Pre-voir dire conference

Before the jury panel is called into the courtroom, a conference should be held so that the trial judge and counsel can confer about the scope of voir dire questions, which questions the judge will ask, and how the judge would like voir dire to proceed. This conference is generally held in the judge's chambers. The judge will also generally ask each side for a list of witnesses and sometimes a short statement of what the case is about so that the judge can tell the jury. The judge may also have the attorneys prepare mini-opening statements to describe to the panel the basic facts of the case and the dispute. On mini-opening statements, see next section and §1.18A.

During the pre-voir dire conference, ask the judge about (1) the method of jury selection that the judge uses, (2) the use of questionnaires, (3) how challenges should be exercised (e.g., does the judge prefer that the challenges be exercised when the cause becomes apparent or when counsel has finished questioning the juror), and (4) any other things counsel would like to know. Also remind the judge that any motions in limine that affect questions that may be asked at voir dire should be ruled on before voir dire. Some judges will postpone ruling on in limine motions pending presentation of evidence at trial. At a minimum, however, most judges will prevent opposing counsel from referring during voir dire to the sensitive issues addressed in these motions during voir dire. On motions in limine, see chap 7.

PRACTICE TIP: Check local rules for a list of subjects that will be discussed at the chambers conference. Rules relating to voir dire and other jury matters are often included. See Los Angeles Ct R 8.20.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.31 B. Seating prospective jurors; mini-opening statements

After the prospective jurors are randomly selected, they become part of the "trial jury panel." CCP §194(q). These prospective jurors are generally seated after the pre-voir dire conference in which issues relating to jury voir dire (e.g., number of jurors, how voir dire will be conducted, when to select alternates) are discussed. See §8.30.

The prospective jurors then undergo voir dire examination, which begins with the judge's asking the trial jury panel to stand, listen to his or her admonishment about answering the questions truthfully, and respond "I do" to the admonition. The admonishment is set forth in CCP §232(a).

NOTE: Before voir dire examination of the prospective jurors begins, the judge may permit or require counsel to make brief opening statements. See Cal Rules of Ct 2.1034. These mini-opening statements are becoming more common because some courts and counsel believe that a 2- or 3-minute oral presentation is a better way to educate prospective jurors about the case than a short sanitized statement the court might read to the panel. Mini-opening statements are also considered an effective method to place voir dire questions in context for jurors and thus elicit better responses from jurors during voir dire examinations. See Comment to Cal Rules of Ct 2.1034. For further discussion, see §1.18A.

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Methods of jury selection

§8.32 1. Traditional method

After the prospective jurors respond to the admonition (see §8.31), the clerk (or judge, if there is no clerk) calls the names of 12 randomly selected prospective jurors from the trial jury panel in the courtroom. Each person takes a seat in the jury box as the clerk calls his or her name and sits in seats designated 1 through 12, starting with seat number 1. The judge questions all 12 prospective jurors. Then plaintiff's counsel begins questioning, followed by defense counsel. The order of questioning may vary, depending on the judge and local rules. See §8.36. This is the traditional method of jury selection; however, some courts follow the "six-pack" method. See §8.33.

PRACTICE TIP: Fill in the names of prospective jurors on your jury box form as the jurors' names are called. See §§8.47 (discussion of use of jury box chart), 8.83 (sample jury box chart).

When one of the prospective jurors seated in seats 1 through 12 is excused for cause or by peremptory challenge, that juror is replaced from the remaining jurors in the trial jury panel who have been assigned to the courtroom. As each new prospective juror is seated, voir dire examination of that juror is conducted. If there are any challenges to the trial jury panel as a whole for cause, they should be made before the jury is sworn. See §8.56.

NOTE: If a case will take a long time to try, the courts in some counties preliminarily screen prospective jurors before assigning a trial jury panel.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Although a preliminary screening has benefits, it may reduce the number of jurors who might otherwise be available. Use of mini-opening statements to inform jurors of the dispute's true context and nature reduces the number of hardship requests. Jurors become interested and engaged in the "story" and often find ways to stay on the jury despite prior hardship claims.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/8 Jury Selection/§8.33 2. 'Six-pack' method

§8.33 2. "Six-pack" method

Some courts use the "six pack" selection method. Under this method, 18 or 24 jurors are seated initially and numbered 1 through 18 or 1 through 24. Under this method, all prospective jurors in the jury panel are randomly given a number. Unlike the traditional method, this is the order in which they will be called into the jury box. Voir dire is conducted on all 18 or 24 jurors. The "jury" consists of numbers 1 through 12. However, once challenges are addressed to any of the jurors numbered 1 through 12, jurors 13 through 18 or 24 may be moved in the order of their numbers into one of the 1 through 12 jury box seats that have been vacated. See Alarcon, Judicial Opinion: The Thirty Pack, 22 Cal Litig 3, 45 (State Bar Litigation Section 2009).

Many judges prefer this system. Some counsel also prefer this system because it allows counsel to be certain who the replacement juror will be. This system also allows counsel to exercise peremptory challenges more intelligently.

EXAMPLE: Eighteen randomly selected jurors are called by the clerk to sit in the jury box for voir dire. Juror no. 6 is challenged for cause and excused. Juror no. 13 is moved into juror no. 6's seat, and voir dire is conducted on juror no. 13.

The judge has discretion to decide the method that will be used and how seats will be filled if vacated. Ask the trial judge which method will be used and how the "six pack" selection method is managed if it is used.

CAUTION: Once voir dire of the 18 or 24 prospective jurors has been completed and challenges for cause have been exercised, be ready to exercise your peremptory challenges quickly because under the "six pack" method there will be very little time between challenges.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/8 Jury Selection/§8.34 D. Purpose and importance of examination

§8.34 D. Purpose and importance of examination

The primary purpose of the voir dire examination is the "selection" of a fair and impartial jury. Kelly v Trans Globe Travel Bureau, Inc. (1976) 60 CA3d 195, 203, 131 CR 488. Selection, however, is not actually the proper word, because counsel has no ability to select favorable jurors—only the ability to strike unfavorable jurors. The only "selection" that goes on is the process of elimination.

The voir dire examination consists of asking the prospective jurors questions:

- To ascertain whether grounds exist for the exercise of a challenge for cause (see §§8.54-8.63). Kelly v Trans Globe Travel Bureau, Inc., supra; Rousseau v West Coast House Movers (1967) 256 CA2d 878, 64 CR 655, limited on other grounds in People v Williams (1981) 29 C3d 392, 174 CR 317.
- To assist counsel in the intelligent exercise of peremptory challenges (see §§8.64-8.72). People v Williams, supra.

For discussion of the scope of voir dire, see §§8.39-8.40.

Voir dire examination provides counsel and the court with an opportunity to ascertain possible bias or prejudice in prospective jurors concerning the circumstances of the case. Data and impressions derived from the examination are needed by counsel to intelligently exercise challenges for cause or peremptory challenges. This examination also provides counsel with an opportunity to establish rapport with the jurors. Project an image of fairness and trustworthiness during voir dire because impressions formed during voir dire can be lasting. On techniques to establish rapport with the jurors, see §8.46.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Jurors are often uncomfortable during voir dire, because they fear being examined on personal matters in a public setting and losing their privacy. Counsel should be sensitive to these concerns in approaching voir dire.

NOTE: The Judicial Council of California has approved Standards of Judicial Administration concerning jury selection that can be found in the Appendix to the California Rules of Court. See Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.25, which provides that, when practical, the trial judge should schedule court business to allow for jury selection uninterrupted by other court business.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/8 Jury Selection/§8.35 E. Questioning by judge and counsel

§8.35 E. Questioning by judge and counsel

The voir dire examination of prospective jurors may be oral, by written questionnaire, or by both methods and should include all questions necessary to ensure the selection of a fair and impartial jury. Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 3.25(a)(1). Voir dire generally takes place in the courtroom with other prospective jurors present. However, voir dire examination can also take place in chambers, if so ordered by the judge. See People v Rutkowsky (1975) 53 CA3d 1069, 126 CR 104.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/8 Jury Selection/§8.36 1. Order of questioning

§8.36 1. Order of questioning

Prospective jurors are generally examined by both the trial judge and counsel. The order of voir dire examination generally proceeds as follows:

- The trial judge examines prospective jurors. CCP §222.5; Cal Rules of Ct 3.1540(b). See §8.37.
- Plaintiff's counsel examines all prospective jurors who have been seated (whether 12, 18, or 24) before similar examination is conducted by other counsel. See §8.38. On the "six pack" selection system, see §8.33.
- The prospective jurors are examined by defense counsel and other counsel. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1540(c).

NOTE: The order in which prospective jurors will be examined and other rules for conducting the examination should be worked out with the trial judge before the examination, preferably during the pre-voir dire chambers conference before commencement of the trial (see §8.30).

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.37 2. Examination by trial judge

Judges are authorized by statute to perform the initial juror examination. CCP §222.5. Judges may follow the list of specific questions and areas of inquiry set forth in Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 3.25(c)-(d). Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 3.25(b). If you want the judge to ask questions that are not substantially similar to those in Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 3.25(c) or 3.25(d), submit a list of such questions to the judge at the case management conference before trial. CCP §222.5; Cal Rules of Ct 3.1540(b). At the same time, give copies of the questions to all adverse parties. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.20(h).

A judge can excuse a prospective juror sua sponte (on the judge's own motion) and replace the juror. People v Jimenez (1992) 11 CA4th 1611, 15 CR2d 268, disapproved on other grounds in People v Kobrin (1995) 11 C4th 416, 419, 45 CR2d 895. The judge will generally only excuse a juror sua sponte if good cause appears obvious (e.g., hardship, illness). Typically, the judge will wait for a party to ask that the juror be removed for cause or, if counsel does not say anything, the judge will ask whether there is any objection to excusing the juror and request a stipulation that the juror be excused. To avoid offending the judge and the other potential jurors, do not object to such a stipulation except in rare situations.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/8 Jury Selection/§8.38 3. Examination by counsel

§8.38 3. Examination by counsel

Wide latitude is given to counsel in asking questions of prospective jurors in a civil case. CCP §222.5. In civil cases, counsel has the right to examine prospective jurors to be able to intelligently exercise both peremptory challenges and challenges for cause. CCP §222.5. See §§8.39-8.40 on permissible scope of voir dire. Section 222.5 also allows for:

- Liberal and probing examination by counsel that is calculated to discover bias or prejudice with regard to the circumstances of a particular case.
- Additional questioning on a topic, even though the topic was included in the judge's examination, as long as the questions are not repetitive or duplicative. See CCP §222.5; Cal Rules of Ct 3.1540(c).

NOTE: Questions by counsel need not be submitted to the trial judge before questioning, unless counsel engages in "improper questioning." See CCP §222.5. See also §8.40.

- The use of written questionnaires, which the court is encouraged not to arbitrarily or unreasonably refuse.
- Examination of prospective jurors outside the judge's presence if all counsel stipulate to this step and the court permits it. CCP §222.5; Cal Rules of Ct 3.1540(d).

NOTE: When setting limits on the judge's powers, CCP §222.5 uses the word "should" rather than "shall."

© The Regents of the University of California

4. Scope of voir dire questions

§8.39 a. Permissible questions

Counsel has the right to examine prospective jurors to ascertain whether grounds exist either for the exercise of a challenge for cause or for peremptory challenges. CCP §222.5.

The constitution guarantees the right to unbiased and unprejudiced jurors. Lombardi v California St. Ry. (1899) 124 C 311, 317, 57 P 66. Therefore, counsel can ask questions that may be required to ascertain whether the prospective jurors are free from bias or interest that may affect the verdict. Rousseau v West Coast House Movers (1967) 256 CA2d 878, 884, 64 CR 655, limited on other grounds in People v Williams (1981) 29 C3d 392, 174 CR 317. See also Kelly v Trans Globe Travel Bureau, Inc. (1976) 60 CA3d 195, 131 CR 488 (improper examination by judge). On grounds for the exercise of a challenge for cause, see CCP §229. See also §§8.58-8.60.

Reasonable inquiry of a prospective juror to assist counsel in the intelligent exercise of a peremptory challenge is also proper "whether or not such questions are also likely to uncover grounds sufficient to sustain a challenge for cause." People v Williams (1981) 29 C3d 392, 407, 174 CR 317. The trial court, however, has discretion to contain the questioning within reasonable limits. People v Williams, supra. To guide the trial courts, the court in People v Williams (1981) 29 C3d 392, 408, 174 CR 317 (citing in part from U.S. v Robinson (DC Cir 1973) 475 F2d 376), stated that counsel should be allowed to ask questions relating to strong feelings held by the community at large even if these feelings do not create a presumptive bias but could affect deliberations. See also Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 3.25(a) (trial judge should permit liberal and probing examination).

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Because many judges routinely set time limits for attorney voir dire, counsel should request the court to ask the jurors a number of submitted questions. Counsel should provide these questions to the court well before selection commences.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/8 Jury Selection/§8.40 b. Improper questioning

§8.40 b. Improper questioning

There are limitations on the scope of voir dire examination. Certain questions or areas of inquiry are improper. People v Williams (1981) 29 C3d 392, 408, 174 CR 317, citing Rousseau v West Coast House Movers (1967) 256 CA2d 878, 882, 64 CR 655.

The trial judge generally permits counsel to conduct voir dire examination without requiring prior submission of the questions. CCP §222.5; Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 3.25(a)(2). If a particular attorney has engaged in "improper questioning," however, the court will not allow questions without review by the judge. An improper question is any question that, as its dominant purpose, attempts to precondition the prospective jurors to a particular result, indoctrinate the jury, or question the prospective jurors concerning the pleadings or applicable law. CCP §222.5.

Certain types of questions and areas of inquiry are improper and should not be permitted by the court except in unusual circumstances. Cal Rules of Ct App Div I, §8(f). These include questions that:

- Precondition the prospective jurors to a particular result;
- Comment on the personal lives and families of the parties or their attorneys;
- Concern the pleadings, the applicable law, the meaning of particular words and phrases; or
- Focus on the comfort of the jurors.

Voir dire questions also may be excluded if they appear to be intended solely to accomplish one of the following improper purposes:

- To educate the jury panel to particular facts of the case;
- To compel jurors to commit themselves to vote in a particular way;
- To prejudice the jury for or against a particular party; or
- To argue the case.

See People v Williams, supra, citing Rousseau v West Coast House Movers, supra. Such questions may be asked, however, if unusual circumstances arise that lead the trial judge to believe that these questions are necessary to ensure the selection of a fair and impartial jury. Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 3.25(f).

A prospective juror is not required to answer voir dire questions that infringe on the right to equal protection. Bobb v Municipal Court (1983) 143 CA3d 860, 192 CR 270 (court reversed contempt ruling based on prospective juror's refusal to answer questions put only to female prospective jurors regarding their spouses' occupations).

The court can require that counsel phrase the questions in a neutral, nonargumentative form. A question that is fairly phrased and legitimately directed at obtaining knowledge for the intelligent exercise of peremptory challenges may not be excluded merely because it may indoctrinate or educate the jury. People v Williams, supra, citing Rousseau v West Coast House Movers, supra.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: If counsel thinks that certain questions are important, but there is danger of an objection either by opposing counsel or the court, the prudent course is to explore the issue with the court at the final status conference or final pretrial conference.

NOTE: If a question is reasonable and falls within the permissible scope of voir dire examination, it is error for the trial court to prohibit counsel from asking that question. People v Williams, supra; People v Crowe (1973) 8 C3d 815, 824, 106 CR 369.

© The Regents of the University of California

5. Objecting to improper examination

§8.41 a. Objection to examination by judge

Counsel must object in a timely fashion to any improper voir dire examination by the court. Failure to make a timely objection will preclude subsequent attack on appeal on this issue. Rousseau v West Coast House Movers (1967) 256 CA2d 878, 64 CR 655.

EXAMPLE 1: The judge improperly attempted to indoctrinate the jury and precondition its determination of facts. See Kelly v Trans Globe Travel Bureau, Inc. (1976) 60 CA3d 195, 131 CR 488.

EXAMPLE 2: The judge improperly selected the jury foreperson. See Dorshkind v Harry N. Koff Agency, Inc. (1976) 64 CA3d 302, 134 CR 344 (trial jury must select its own foreperson).

Reversible error will only be found, however, if there is a showing of prejudice. See, e.g., People v Hernandez (1979) 94 CA3d 715, 156 CR 572 (judge erred in not allowing counsel sufficient time for voir dire; however, error was not prejudicial).

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.42 b. Objection to examination by counsel

If counsel asks an improper question during voir dire examination, opposing counsel must satisfy the following two requirements to preserve the right to argue error on appeal.

First, opposing counsel must make a timely and proper objection to the question. See Neumann v Bishop (1976) 59 CA3d 451, 468 n3, 130 CR 786; Hart v Wielt (1970) 4 CA3d 224, 84 CR 220. See also Leibman v Curtis (1955) 138 CA2d 222, 291 P2d 542 (counsel who makes position clear in timely manner reserves automatic exception and need not repeat objection to court's ruling or seek to have it reversed). On making trial objections and protecting the record, see chap 15.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Trial counsel should remember that when an objection is made during pretrial proceedings, the record on appeal is not protected, unless the same objection is made at trial. Repeated objections and disruption of the trial can be avoided if counsel simply stipulate that objections made and ruled on before trial are deemed made at trial.

EXAMPLE 1: "Objection, Your Honor. This area was addressed in our in limine motion."

EXAMPLE 2: "Objection, Your Honor. Counsel is making his opening statement and attempting to precondition the jury to his theory of the case."

Second, counsel must request that a curative admonition be given to the jury. Sabella v Southern Pac. Co. (1969) 70 C2d 311, 320, 74 CR 534.

EXAMPLE: "I also ask that the court instruct the jury to disregard the question and any inferences that may be drawn from the question and that counsel be admonished not to continue with this line of questioning."

If you need to object, do not argue the objection in front of the jury. Ask the court whether you can approach the bench. Also request that a court reporter record the sidebar conference regarding the objection.

EXAMPLE: "Objection, Your Honor. Plaintiff's counsel's question … constitutes improper voir dire."

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Trial counsel should anticipate all areas in which objections may be necessary and resolve them before trial, either through formal motions in limine or by raising them with the court. Experienced attorneys rarely object in front of jurors. If the objection is sustained, it may appear to jurors that the attorney is trying to keep information from them; if it is overruled, the attorney is a "loser." In either case, it is a distraction for the jurors. Further, when objections are raised before trial, the court has more time to carefully consider and weigh the issues, a luxury that is often not available in the heat of trial.

Object to any type of question that attempts to inject improper considerations into the case (e.g., settlement negotiations, hatred of lawyers, possibility of insurance coverage, racial bias, biblical quotations). Even if voir dire examination has been erroneously limited or permitted over objection, the appellate court will not find reversible error without a showing of prejudice. See, e.g., People v Hernandez (1979) 94 CA3d 715, 156 CR 572.

In appropriate circumstances, counsel may also wish to move for a mistrial. The need for a mistrial occurs only rarely, however, and only when the questions are particularly outrageous and the prejudice cannot be cured by an admonition. See Sabella v Southern Pac. Co., supra; Neumann v Bishop, supra. For further discussion of objections to jury voir dire and assigning misconduct, see California Trial Objections, chaps 6, 29 (Cal CEB Annual).

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/8 Jury Selection/ F. Juror questionnaires/ §8.43 1. Deciding whether to use juror questionnaire

F. Juror questionnaires

§8.43 1. Deciding whether to use juror questionnaire

Juror questionnaires are most often used in long, complex cases or those with unusually sensitive issues, in which screening is best done outside the presence of other potential jurors. Some trial judges may be reluctant to approve the use of a questionnaire unless counsel demonstrates a specific need for efficiency. Juror questionnaires are prepared by counsel and approved by the court for use during voir dire. The questionnaire offers the following benefits:

- Shortens voir dire.
- Protects juror privacy (although not confidentiality) for responding to embarrassing questions that he or she may not wish to discuss in open court (e.g., drug or alcohol treatment, crimes, personal finances, political views).
- Elicits more candid responses on issues that a juror might be reluctant to discuss in front of other jurors.

EXAMPLE: If race is an issue, you may want to ask the following question: "You may be asked to serve on a criminal case in which the defendant is black. Do you think you can fairly serve on such a jury?" Many jurors will answer honestly about their bias.

- Prevents the juror from being influenced by the responses of other jurors (e.g., if one juror vividly retells an experience, expresses an opinion, or states a prejudicial fact that may taint the entire panel).

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Many judges find that questionnaires do not shorten voir dire but in fact lengthen it, because of the time it takes for jurors to complete them and attorneys to then make copies, review them, and reassemble everyone. Jurors may resent questionnaires and feel that they are being required to take a test. If there is any question about the value of a questionnaire, it should be posed to the court far in advance of trial. A request made a few days before voir dire will almost certainly result in a denial.

If counsel requests a questionnaire, it is within the court's discretion whether prospective jurors will be required to fill it out. The use of questionnaires is allowed by CCP §205(c)-(d) but is not required.

NOTE: In some counties, the jury commissioner sends a questionnaire to prospective jurors by mail before jury service to ensure that the prospective juror is qualified to serve. This questionnaire is limited by statute to questions related to juror identification, qualification, and ability to serve as a prospective juror. It can be used only for qualifying prospective jurors and for managing the jury system. CCP §205(a). The answers to this questionnaire are not seen by counsel and cannot be used to assist in courtroom voir dire examination unless otherwise ordered by the court. CCP §205(b). The court cannot hold the prospective juror in contempt for failure to respond, because the questionnaire is not a court order. Lister v Superior Court (1979) 98 CA3d 64, 159 CR 280.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/8 Jury Selection/§8.44 2. Preparing juror questionnaire

§8.44 2. Preparing juror questionnaire

At the final case management conference, ask the court to approve the use of a questionnaire. It is too late to raise this issue at the beginning of voir dire. Also consider asking opposing counsel to stipulate to the use of a juror questionnaire. Often the use of a questionnaire is in the best interests of all parties and it will probably be easier to obtain the court's approval if all parties agree that a questionnaire should be administered and that its content is acceptable.

PRACTICE TIP: Check local rules for any requirements about the use of juror questionnaires and when the questionnaires should be submitted. See CCP §205(c). See also Sacramento Ct R 7.00; San Diego Ct, Div II, R 2.1.17.

Before deciding whether to use a jury consultant to help prepare the questionnaire (see §8.53), review the questionnaire prepared by the Judicial Council, titled "Juror Questionnaire for Civil Cases" (CCP §205(c)-(d)). For a copy of this form, see §8.81. This form is intended for use in appropriate civil cases. It may be altered or augmented by the court or counsel as needed.

This Judicial Council form includes instructions on how to use the questionnaire and suggests that the court confer with counsel about voir dire before a jury panel is called to discuss how to use the questionnaire, whether any supplemental questions should be prepared, and the extent of the court's and counsel's oral questioning of the jury panel.

The Judicial Council form questionnaire also recommends that:

- Counsel file and serve proposed supplemental questions at least 3 court days before the pre-voir dire conference.
- Counsel arrange for the duplication of completed questionnaires and have the parties share the cost of such duplication.
- The juror questionnaire be given to prospective jurors after they have heard the judge's introductory remarks in the trial court.

After the questionnaire has been prepared, counsel should:

- Give the questionnaire to opposing counsel for review and approval before it is submitted to the judge.
- Obtain court approval.
- Have the questionnaire ready for prospective jurors to fill out when they arrive in the courtroom for jury service.
- Ensure that there is enough time to review the questionnaire answers before beginning voir dire (e.g., have the jurors fill out the questionnaire near the end of a day so that copies can be made for the court and each party and the results can be analyzed overnight).
- Put all completed questionnaires in alphabetical order for quick reference during jury selection.
- Review all completed questionnaires and prepare a short summary of each if possible before beginning oral voir dire. If you do not have time to summarize the questionnaires, highlight critical information so you can easily find such information while examining individual jurors.

CAUTION: Juror questionnaires should not replace oral voir dire conducted by the attorneys and the judge. Some prospective jurors who are not comfortable expressing themselves in writing might be excellent jurors.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: If counsel does decide to use a questionnaire, it should be as short and specific as absolutely necessary. Shorter questionnaires are more likely to be permitted by the court, more meaningful, and less time-consuming for all involved.

For further discussion of jury questionnaires, see Berry, Choices: Selecting Jurors, 24 Litigation 8 (ABA Fall 1997); Silver, Mind Reading, Clairvoyance and Jury Questionnaires, 31 Litigation 3 (ABA Fall 2004).

§8.45 3. Jury questionnaires used for voir dire are matters of public record

The information provided in pretrial juror questionnaires completed by jurors for the jury commissioner is not available for public inspection. Pantos v City & County of San Francisco (1984) 151 CA3d 258, 264, 198 CR 489.

In contrast, however, juror questionnaires prepared by counsel for use during voir dire are public records and become part of the court's permanent record. Copley Press, Inc. v Superior Court (1991) 228 CA3d 77, 89, 278 CR 443. In Copley, the court of appeal held that the blanket denial to the press of access to voir dire questionnaires in a death penalty case was unconstitutional but found that, because the trial court had assured prospective jurors that their answers would be treated as confidential, the principles of estoppel barred the release of the questionnaires to the press in this case. In future cases involving juror questionnaires, the court of appeal recommended that superior courts use the following guidelines (228 CA3d at 90):

- Segregate information regarding juror qualifications that is subject to public disclosure from other questions that may not be subject to disclosure;
- Tell potential jurors in the body of the questionnaire that their written responses are not confidential if the juror is called to the jury box but are confidential if they are not called to the jury box for voir dire; and
- Tell potential jurors that they have a right to request an in chambers hearing to discuss their responses to any questions they do not wish to answer in writing.

Access should be provided to the questionnaires in accordance with these guidelines.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Jurors should be told that if they wish to have any information remain confidential, they should indicate this. They may ask to speak to counsel and the court at side bar, or fill out the portion of the questionnaire that they want to keep confidential on a separate sheet.

§8.46 G. Practice tips: How to conduct effective voir dire

The attorney's goals in conducting effective voir dire include:

- Selecting jurors who are predisposed to rule in your client's favor (or at least are not antagonistic toward your client);
- Presenting yourself and your client in a light favorable to the jury;
- Learning about the backgrounds and attitudes of the jurors; and
- Familiarizing the jury with certain legal and factual concepts, to the extent permitted.

With these goals in mind, consider the following practical suggestions:

- Preparing for voir dire examination before trial:
- Determine the types of jurors that you do and do not want. Rather than selecting jurors through stereotypes (e.g., young, female, black, single), decide which attitudes and experiences you want jurors to either have or not have.
- Plan the questions with care and prepare a written outline of these questions. Aimless and repetitive use of stock questions may cause resentment or boredom in prospective jurors. Because two cases are rarely alike, counsel's questions should reflect the facts, theories, and approaches of the particular case.
- Find out the judge's attitude toward voir dire, if you know the judge's identity before trial. Is the judge likely to permit the types of questions you want to ask? Ask the court clerk and attorneys who have tried cases before the judge for such information. Local court rules may also be helpful in this regard.
- Gather information on prospective jurors, if possible. Use jury commissioner's lists, jury books, and other services. On use of jury books to assist in the exercise of peremptory challenges, see §8.72.
- Consider moving in limine to limit areas that the adverse party may inquire about during voir dire examination and trial. See chap 7.

EXAMPLE 1: In an automobile accident case, exclude other accidents that the defendant has been involved in.

EXAMPLE 2: If you believe that a client's felony conviction will not be admissible, consider moving in limine during the pre-voir dire conference to preclude the adverse parties from mentioning or referring to the client's conviction during voir dire examination and trial. On exclusion of a witness's prior felony conviction, see People v Castro (1985) 38 C3d 301, 211 CR 719. On motions in limine, see chap 7.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: If damaging evidence (e.g., a felony conviction) cannot be kept out, consider disclosing it at the very beginning in your mini-opening statement. Once the information is before the jury, its reactions will be easier to assess through direct questions without the need to use hypothetical questions.

- Prepare your client for juror examination. The client should be neatly groomed in clothing that is not unusual or offensive. The client should be as well dressed as possible for a person of his or her occupation and background. Although the client should be attentive during voir dire, he or she should not visibly react or gesture in response to an attorney's questions or a prospective juror's answers. If other persons are attending the trial with the client or on the client's behalf, they should be similarly advised.
- Advise your client that every person in the courthouse (including in the hallways, elevators, and restrooms) may be a potential juror. Thus, the client should be courteous to everyone and refrain from discussing the case anywhere near the courthouse. On preparing witnesses for trial generally, see chap 5.
- Presenting yourself to the jury:
- Stand when prospective jurors enter the jury room and when conducting the examination. Standing shows respect for prospective jurors, helps establish good communication with them, and affords a better vantage point from which to judge their reactions.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Experienced counsel always stand when the jury enters or leaves the court. Jurors notice this and assume it is a sign of respect. Even if the judicial introduction was perfect, repeating your name and identifying your client is always very helpful. Jurors are subjected to overwhelming amounts of information from the time they first get their summons form.

- Immediately introduce yourself and your client, even if the court has previously done so. The court's introduction may not have been sufficient for jurors to connect the attorney with his or her name and client.
- Speak loudly enough that all the jurors, including those not yet called to the box, can hear distinctly.
- Be courteous, fair, and sincere at all times. Do not be patronizing, and do not cross-examine or embarrass prospective jurors.
- Be a good conversationalist. Ask open-ended questions to explore the juror's personality, attitudes, and predilections. For example, in an action involving a large corporate defendant, ask whether prospective jurors have ever had any unpleasant experiences with large corporations. If one has, ask the juror to discuss these experiences and any conclusions drawn from them.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: A common mistake is to repeat questions that have already been posed by the court during judicial voir dire. Repeating questions that have already been answered can be perceived by jurors as insulting and indicative of a lack of respect for them and their time.

- Manner of questioning prospective jurors:
- Consider collective questioning. The court often questions all prospective jurors on the jury panel at one time regarding the nature of prior jury experience and acquaintance with the parties or attorneys. See Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 3.25(c)-(d). When appropriate, some attorneys also use this technique to begin their examination. Although collective questioning does not afford counsel an opportunity to observe each juror's reaction, it saves time and may minimize juror boredom. By revealing whether a juror is eager or hesitant to speak in front of others, collective questioning may provide some insight into the prospective jurors' personalities. When a collective question is asked, counsel can introduce it by stating that the whole group is being asked the question to save time, with a request that anyone who wishes to answer in the affirmative (or negative) should raise their hand. If a prospective juror raises a hand, counsel should state for the record the name of that prospective juror and note that fact. Counsel can then ask that prospective juror more specific questions.
- Question each prospective juror separately. Often, the first jurors are questioned most extensively. Each prospective juror, however, should be asked some questions to allow counsel to form an impression of that juror, to establish rapport, and to make each juror feel important.
- Question several prospective jurors completely. Then begin questioning of other prospective jurors. Ask them whether their answers to the questions asked of other jurors are any different. This technique is sometimes used to expedite the voir dire process. Use it with caution, however, because jurors may remain silent when needed information would be learned by individual questions and answers. Also, jurors may not precisely recall all the earlier questions.
- Avoid asking questions that elicit one-word answers. Questions ending with "Do you agree with that?" or "Under these circumstances, could you serve fairly and impartially in this case?" rarely produce much information for the attorney, because prospective jurors will probably supply one-word answers or vigorously assert that they can be fair. Instead, ask open-ended questions that will give prospective jurors an opportunity to express themselves. Note, however, that the court has discretion to permit leading questions to be asked during voir dire examination. People v Ah Lee Doon (1893) 97 C 171, 31 P 933.
- Types of questions to ask:
- Consider having the judge ask sensitive questions of the prospective jurors in private. Some voir dire questions are sensitive but essential for the client's protection. Counsel may prefer to have the judge ask such questions outside the presence of other jurors (in camera). This step will ensure that the client is not hurt by any adverse reaction that the prospective jurors may have to these questions. An in camera examination will also make jurors feel more comfortable about answering such questions and may preserve juror privacy. See §§8.35, 8.45.
- Consider disclosing significant weaknesses in the case. If the client was drinking alcohol during the events giving rise to the case, for example, determine the attitude of prospective jurors toward persons who drink alcohol. Disclosing this weakness during voir dire may help you detect juror prejudice toward alcohol drinkers and blunt adverse juror reaction when the weakness is brought out during trial. Some trial attorneys disagree with this approach, however. See Klonoff & Colby, Sponsorship Strategy: Evidentiary Tactics for Winning Jury Trials (1990).

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Weaknesses should be disclosed in the mini-opening statement before voir dire questions begin. Counsel can present the weaknesses in the best possible light and eliminate the need to describe them through hypotheticals that may elicit objections from opposing counsel.

- Discover juror bias or prejudice without letting a biased or prejudiced prospective juror influence the other jurors.

EXAMPLE: In a medical malpractice case, it is dangerous for an attorney to ask a question such as "Why do you tend to favor doctors in these cases?" or "Why don't you like doctors?" because the attorney runs the risk that the prospective juror, in the presence of other prospective jurors, will relate personal experiences or anecdotes that may score a point for one side or the other before the trial even begins. If you believe possible bias or prejudice in this area should be explored, consider requesting that further examination of the juror be conducted outside the presence of the remaining prospective jurors. The court may also require that this take place in private. On in camera voir dire, see People v Rutkowsky (1975) 53 CA3d 1069, 1074, 126 CR 104 (in camera voir dire is appropriate to isolate suspected areas of prejudice from other jurors). See also People v Fimbres (1980) 104 CA3d 780, 163 CR 876 (no in camera voir dire required after initial expression of potential bias).

- Carefully examine prospective jurors on points of possible bias, prejudice, or interest. Answers on these issues might affect their ability to be fair and impartial. If the interrogation discloses a juror's familiarity with any of the parties, counsel, or intended witnesses, or with the subject matter at issue, explore whether the juror favors one side and whether additional evidence would change his or her mind. See Fitts v Southern Pac. Co. (1906) 149 C 310, 86 P 710; Lombardi v California St. Ry. (1899) 124 C 311, 57 P 66; Leibman v Curtis (1955) 138 CA2d 222, 226, 291 P2d 542.

EXAMPLE: A prospective juror admitted in a personal injury action that he had preconceived ideas about back disability, which he would use in his decision as a juror; that he could not be a fair and impartial juror; and that, before the plaintiff could have a fair trial, plaintiff's counsel would have to introduce evidence to overcome the prospective juror's notions. The trial court denied the challenge for cause and the appellate court reversed. Leibam v Curtis, supra. See also Fitts v Southern Pac. Co., supra.

- Obtain promises from the jury during voir dire, which you can remind them of during closing argument.

EXAMPLE: Ask the jurors for a commitment that their verdict will not be influenced by sympathy for the injured plaintiff.

§8.47 H. Using jury box chart to organize information

Most attorneys find it difficult to remember all the names and facts that are elicited during voir dire examination. Taking notes during the court's or other counsel's questioning will help you remember the jurors' answers. Even sketchy notes can be helpful reminders to eliminate the repetition of previously asked questions.

Decide the method of note-taking before voir dire begins. A jury box chart is often used to help counsel keep track of the prospective jurors' names and challenges exercised. Most courts give counsel a printed form on a single sheet of paper, showing empty boxes corresponding to the court's seating plan. As each prospective juror is called, counsel can enter the name of the prospective juror in the appropriate box. If a prospective juror is excused, the name can be stricken and the new prospective juror's name entered. The form usually contains another space to record challenges for cause and peremptory challenges.

Such a chart can be prepared by counsel if it is not available from the court. The problem with this type of chart is that it quickly becomes messy as jurors are excused and information must either be erased or crossed out. To avoid this problem, some counsel use a looseleaf notebook with one or more pages premarked for each jury seat.

Another alternative is for counsel to prepare a personalized jury box chart. Such a chart can be prepared by writing numbers 1 through 12 in two lines on a large piece of heavy paper (e.g., an 8-1/2 by 13" manila folder) or cardboard. Large post-its may be attached under each number to correspond to the jury box that the potential juror is sitting in. Counsel can write on these post-its impressions about the juror, answers to key questions, and other information about the juror. If a juror is dismissed, the post-it can be removed and replaced with a new one. See §8.83 for sample jury box chart.

PRACTICE TIP: Do not attempt to write down everything the prospective jurors say. You can often learn a lot about each juror from watching his or her expressions.

I. Particular areas of inquiry

§8.48 1. Insurance

To avoid the possibility of prejudicial misconduct, attorneys should avoid asking questions related to insurance during the voir dire examination. For example, it is improper and constitutes misconduct for counsel to ask prospective jurors questions that unnecessarily convey the impression that a defendant is insured against liability. Swift v Winkler (1957) 148 CA2d 927, 307 P2d 666; Stevenson v Link (1954) 128 CA2d 564, 275 P2d 782. See Sweet v Stutch (1966) 240 CA2d 891, 50 CR 9 (improper to implant in prospective jurors' minds fact that defendants are insured). See also Evid C §1155 (evidence that a party is insured wholly or partially against liability for the harm suffered is inadmissible to prove negligence). Presumably, it is likewise misconduct for defense counsel to imply that the defendant is not insured. Knowledge that a defendant has liability insurance may make the jurors careless about the amount of any verdict. Arnold v California Portland Cement Co. (1919) 41 CA 420, 183 P 171. Such misconduct may be so prejudicial as to constitute reversible error. See Swift v Winkler, supra; Stevenson v Link, supra. On attorney misconduct generally, see §§16.66-16.90.

Some courts, however, have held that counsel may, in good faith, ask whether the prospective jurors have a financial interest in a particular insurance company as long as the question does not unnecessarily convey the impression that the defendant is insured. Hart v Wielt (1970) 4 CA3d 224, 230, 84 CR 220. See Sweet v Stutch, supra. See also Swift v Winkler, supra; Stevenson v Link, supra. This rule has been said to be a rule of necessity to enable the plaintiff to have a fair and impartial jury free from bias. See Swift v Winkler, supra.

Other courts have indicated that any reference to insurance on voir dire is impermissible. Folk v Kilk (1975) 53 CA3d 176, 190, 126 CR 172 (trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing voir dire questions relating to insurance); Scally v PG&E (1972) 23 CA3d 806, 814, 100 CR 501 (court stated in dictum that when an insurance company is not a party, it is improper to ask prospective jurors any questions about ownership of stock or other financial interest in insurance companies).

The California Civil Jury Instructions (CACI) "approved by the Judicial Council are the official instructions for use in the state of California," and their use "is strongly encouraged." Cal Rules of Ct 2.1050(e). If plaintiff's counsel asks questions to determine possible interest by a prospective juror in an insurance company, defense counsel can ask the judge to read CACI 105 or 5001, or some variant of them, to the jury. See Gluckstein v Lipsett (1949) 93 CA2d 391, 209 P2d 98. The reading may help nullify the effect on prospective jurors of any notice that the defendant is insured. On jury instructions, see chap 20.

PRACTICE TIP: If you decide that voir dire questions relating to insurance are necessary, draft the questions, serve them on opposing counsel, and present them to the judge at the chambers conference so that you can obtain a ruling before the beginning of voir dire.

§8.49 2. Racial or religious background

If a case is such that the prospective jurors' racial or religious background might reasonably have an effect on jury deliberations (whether because of the parties, the intended witnesses, or the subject matter of the suit), consider asking the judge during a chambers conference to question the prospective jurors about these areas to avoid any adverse reaction they may have to such questions being asked by counsel. Interrogation into such subjects, when relevant to the selection of a fair and impartial jury, should be permitted. See Smith v Smith (1935) 7 CA2d 271, 46 P2d 232 (religious belief concerning divorce and remarriage could prejudice juror when woman sued her former husband for breach of divorce settlement agreement).

Careful examination of prospective jurors may include exploration for racial, religious, or similar bias or prejudice. People v Wells (1983) 149 CA3d 721, 197 CR 163 (appellate court overturned trial court and held that certain questions designed to elicit racial bias were not improper and substantially likely to uncover racial bias or prejudice; counsel for black defendant was permitted to ask prospective jurors why there were so few blacks in professional golf and tennis and as presidents of large corporations and why there has never been black governor of California). See §§8.67-8.70 on discriminatory use of peremptory challenges based on race, gender, and religion.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.50 3. Type of injury

Voir dire examination should inquire into the juror's knowledge and beliefs relating to the type of injuries involved in the litigation. A prospective juror may have had experience with such injuries and possibly has preconceived ideas about their cause, nature, severity, and duration. Ascertain whether additional evidence would be needed to overcome these ideas, in which case a challenge for cause might be used. See Leibman v Curtis (1955) 138 CA2d 222, 291 P2d 542. See also §8.46.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.51 4. Damages

When a plaintiff is seeking a large award, it is proper to ask whether a prospective juror would be able to award large damages or damages for nonmonetary losses if the evidence warranted. This line of questioning should be permitted because some prospective jurors may be reluctant to award large damages or damages for emotional distress or pain and suffering.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.52 5. Law

Generally, inquiry during voir dire regarding a prospective juror's knowledge or ignorance of questions of law is improper. People v Love (1960) 53 C2d 843, 3 CR 665. Code of Civil Procedure §222.5 provides that an improper question is "one which its dominant purpose is to question the prospective jurors concerning the pleadings or applicable law." See Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 3.25(f). It is presumed that the court's instructions will adequately inform the jurors about the applicable law. People v Love, supra.

It is proper, however, for counsel to ask a general question about whether a prospective juror will follow the court's instructions. See People v Williams (1981) 29 C3d 392, 410, 174 CR 317 (court permitted general question about prospective juror's willingness to apply particular doctrine of law); People v Tolbert (1969) 70 C2d 790, 812, 76 CR 445 (questions asked for purpose of ascertaining whether juror would follow instruction to view uncorroborated evidence with caution rather than disbelief held entirely proper); People v Modell (1956) 143 CA2d 724, 732, 300 P2d 204 (trial court properly refused to allow opposing counsel to state substance of each instruction and then, for each instruction, to ask prospective jurors whether they would follow that instruction; instead, trial judge allowed counsel to ask jurors whether they would follow instructions of court as a whole, even if they did not agree with them and could put aside their own thoughts regarding law).

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Asking a juror if he or she can follow the judge's instructions is generally not a good practice, because it is unlikely to elicit any useful information and may use up precious goodwill.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/8 Jury Selection/§8.53 J. Using advice of jury consultant

§8.53 J. Using advice of jury consultant

Trial attorneys differ over whether to employ a behavioral science consultant (also known as a "jury consultant") to assist in jury selection. Some counsel employ psychologists, sociologists, or similar experts to evaluate prospective jurors in a "scientific" and "analytical" approach to jury selection, believing that their insight into human behavior may help obtain a favorable jury verdict.

Jury consultants generally provide the following services:

- A community attitude survey to assist in determining the extent of pretrial publicity, probable attitudes toward the client, and profiles of favorable jurors.
- Trial simulations ("mock" jury trials).
- Voir dire preparation (e.g., formulating oral questions and juror questionnaires).
- Advice on whether to exercise challenges to certain jurors and on formulating voir dire questions.
- Witness evaluation and preparation, including the videotaping and critiquing of witnesses during mock jury trials.
- Selection and use of shadow jurors, who attend the trial every day and report their observations on the impact of witnesses and the evidence.
- Advice on determining dominant themes and issues.
- Posttrial juror interviews.

Because jury consultants are quite expensive, they are generally used only in large civil trials and high profile, well-financed criminal trials. Jury consultants may be found by asking colleagues for recommendations and by consulting the membership directory of the American Society of Trial Consultants.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVES: If a jury consultant is too expensive, an alternative is to simply have an associate sit in the audience to observe and note juror reactions, such as facial expressions, body language, and other forms of communication that counsel may miss while conducting voir dire.

Although juror attitudes on specific issues may provide a guide to juror behavior, jury decisions may be driven more by evidence than individual characteristics or attitudes. Consequently, the behavioral consultant may be most helpful to an attorney in developing a clear and convincing way to present the evidence to the jury.

CAUTION: To protect against discovery of the work performed by trial jury consultants, ask each consultant to sign an engagement letter when they are retained. The engagement letter should expressly state that the consultant is being retained to assist counsel in preparing for trial.

VI. CHALLENGES

A. Challenges for cause

§8.54 1. Exercised by both counsel and court

A challenge for cause is generally made by a party as authorized by CCP §§225 and 227. However, the trial court also has the power to excuse a juror for cause (sua sponte) absent a challenge by a party. People v Jimenez (1992) 11 CA4th 1611, 15 CR2d 268, disapproved on other grounds in People v Kobrin (1995) 11 C4th 416, 45 CR2d 895 (juror admitted she would be lenient in criminal case and was properly excused sua sponte by judge). This right is based on the court's duty to ensure selection of a fair and impartial jury. This power should be used sparingly because an excuse for cause absent a challenge by a party is not the usual practice. 11 CA4th at 1621 n3.

After all sides have questioned a group of prospective jurors, the court will generally ask each side if it wants to exercise any challenges for cause or will pass. A challenge should be exercised before the prospective juror is "passed for cause." If a party has no challenges for cause, counsel should state, e.g., "Defendant passes the panel for cause."

Challenges for cause must be exercised before any peremptory challenges and should be exercised as soon as the ground for the challenge is discovered. CCP §226(c). Some judges, however, prefer that challenges for cause be exercised after the entire panel of prospective jurors has been examined.

PRACTICE TIP: During the case management conference before trial, ask the judge how challenges for cause will be handled.

The challenges for cause are generally heard orally, although they can be in writing (CCP §226(b)). They are tried by the court. CCP §230. If the judge needs more information from the prospective juror before ruling on the challenge, the court can question the juror and any other person to determine potential bias. CCP §230. The judge decides whether the challenge for cause will be heard outside the hearing of the other jurors (e.g., in chambers or in a side bar conference) or in open court. A court reporter should be present during such questioning.

PRACTICE TIP: If you are challenging a prospective juror in open court, do not disparage the juror you are challenging. Simply state the ground supporting the challenge, preferably by citing the Code of Civil Procedure section of the ground. For example, if you think a juror is biased against your client, you might want to state: "Your honor, defendants challenge juror no. 4 for cause, under CCP §229(f)."

PRACTICE TIP: Check whether any local rules govern challenges for cause. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.32 (challenge should be made outside hearing of prospective jurors).

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Challenges for cause should be conducted outside the jury's hearing. It is potentially disastrous if the challenge for cause is made in front of the juror and it is denied without any additional peremptory challenges available.

The judge can excuse the challenged juror or reject the challenge. If the challenge is rejected, counsel will have the opportunity of using a peremptory challenge to remove the juror later. See §§8.64-8.72. If a juror is excused for cause, a replacement juror will be selected at random by the clerk from the jury trial panel.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/8 Jury Selection/§8.55 2. Number of challenges

§8.55 2. Number of challenges

There is no limit to the number of challenges for cause that may be exercised under CCP §230. However, peremptory challenges are generally limited to six per side if there are only two sides. For further discussion of number of peremptory challenges, see §8.65.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/8 Jury Selection/§8.56 3. Challenging entire panel for cause

§8.56 3. Challenging entire panel for cause

In civil actions, a challenge can be made to the entire jury panel for cause. CCP §225(a)(1)-(3). This challenge must:

- Be made before the trial jury is sworn;
- Be in writing; and
- State plainly and distinctly the facts constituting the grounds for the challenge.

CCP §225(a)(1).

Reasonable notice of the challenge must be given by the counsel making the challenge to all parties and to the jury commissioner by service of a copy of the written challenge.

Although this challenge is raised infrequently, it sometimes arises in connection with a challenge for systematic exclusion of a cognizable group (see §§8.67-8.68) or a challenge that the entire jury panel should be dismissed because they were tainted by remarks of other jurors. See People v Nguyen (1994) 23 CA4th 32, 28 CR2d 140 (court has discretion to determine whether prospective juror's statement was prejudicial and to deny defendant's motion to dismiss jury panel because of comments during voir dire by one prospective juror who was later peremptorily challenged). See also People v Martinez (1991) 228 CA3d 1456, 279 CR 858 (prospective jurors made hostile and derogatory remarks about defendant; trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to dismiss entire jury panel as tainted by these remarks, because there was no evidence that persons actually selected for jury were biased by these comments).

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.57 4. Grounds

An individual juror may be challenged for cause. CCP §225. "Cause" means a disqualifying status such as age, residence, citizenship, criminal record, or prior jury service, or a relationship or viewpoint that will prevent the juror from deciding the case impartially and solely on the basis of the evidence admitted at trial and the law presented in the judge's instructions.

A challenge for cause can be made for one of the following reasons (CCP §225):

- General disqualification (see §8.58);
- Implied bias (see §8.59); or
- Actual bias (see §8.60).

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.58 a. General disqualification

A prospective juror may be disqualified for cause under the general disqualification category if the prospective juror falls into one of the following categories:

- The juror is one of those persons who do not qualify for jury service under CCP §203(a) (e.g., is a minor, is not a United States citizen). CCP §228(a). On juror eligibility to serve, see §8.22.
- The juror has a hearing disability or other incapacity that the court believes would preclude the prospective juror from performing the duties of a juror without prejudice to the rights of the challenging party. CCP §228(b). For example, a juror who indicates an inability or unwillingness to follow the law (with respect to the death penalty) may be removed from the jury on the grounds that the ability to follow the law was, at a minimum, substantially impaired. People v Memrow (1995) 11 C4th 786, 47 CR2d 219.

CAUTION: A prospective juror may be disqualified by impairment only if the disability makes it impossible for the prospective juror to perform the duties of a juror without prejudice to the rights of the challenging party. CCP §228(b). There is no statutory basis for a challenge for cause to a person with a disability who can perform the duties of a juror with the aid of an attendant.

When an individual juror requires a sign language interpreter, reader, or speech interpreter to facilitate communication because of a handicap due to loss of hearing, sight, or power of speech, in any degree, and a party does not cause the juror's removal by challenge, the party is required to stipulate to the presence of that attendant in the jury room during jury deliberations and to prepare and deliver to the court proposed jury instructions to the interpreter. CCP §224.

When the services of a sign language interpreter, reader, or speech interpreter are required during the course of jury deliberations, the court is required to instruct the jury and the attendant that the attendant cannot participate in the jury's deliberations in any manner except to facilitate communication between the deaf juror and other jurors. CCP §224. See §21.4.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.59 b. Implied bias

A prospective juror can also be challenged for cause if there is a showing of implied bias by the juror. Implied bias arises when facts demonstrate that a prospective juror is presumed to be biased as a matter of law. CCP §225(b)(1)(B). The grounds for a challenge for implied bias are set forth in CCP §229(a)-(h) as follows:

- The juror is related by blood or marriage to a party or witness;
- The juror is related to any party or officer of a corporate party or is a business partner with either party;
- The juror (1) served as a trial or grand juror on a jury of inquest, (2) was a witness on a previous or pending trial between the same parties or involving the same specific offense or the same cause of action, or (3) served as a trial or grand juror on a jury within the previous year in any criminal or civil action or proceeding in which either party was the plaintiff or the defendant or in a criminal action in which either party was the defendant;
- The juror has an interest in the litigation, with the exception of the juror's interest as a resident, citizen, or taxpayer;
- The juror has an unqualified opinion or belief regarding the merits of the action based on knowledge of material facts;
- The existence of a state of mind in the juror evinces enmity against or bias toward either party;
- The juror is a party to the action set for trial before the panel of which he is a member; or
- The juror entertains "such conscientious opinions as would preclude the juror [from] finding the defendant guilty" (this ground applies only when the offense is punishable by death).

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.60 c. Actual bias

A challenge for cause can be exercised if there is a showing of actual bias by the prospective juror. "Actual bias" is defined as a state of mind of the juror that will prevent the juror "from acting with impartiality and without prejudice to the substantial rights of any party." CCP §225(b)(1)(C). It generally occurs if a prospective juror indicates that he or she cannot be fair and impartial. See People v Hecker (1990) 219 CA3d 1238, 1243, 268 CR 884 (juror admitted that he could not decide case strictly on law and evidence); People v Williams (1988) 199 CA3d 469, 245 CR 61 (prospective juror made conflicting statements about his ability to remain impartial). See also California Criminal Law Procedure and Practice, chap 29 (Cal CEB Annual) for list of other criminal cases.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.61 5. Waiver of challenge

When grounds for a challenge for cause exist at the time of the voir dire examination, but the prospective juror is not asked any questions during voir dire related to those grounds, the right to challenge for cause on those grounds has been waived. See Estate of Jones (1913) 166 C 108, 135 P 288 (during trial, party discovered that two trial jurors were also members of grand jury, which is grounds for challenge; court denied challenge for cause, however, on ground that objection was made too late); Davilla v Liberty Life Ins. Co. (1931) 114 CA 308, 299 P 831 (failure of counsel to fully interrogate juror waived any disqualification); Ex parte Bracklis (1921) 52 CA 274, 277, 198 P 659 ("a party cannot sit idly by and take the chances of a favorable verdict and then after verdict raise a point which he should have raised before the juror was sworn").

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.62 6. Concealed bias: Effect on motion for new trial

A party can seek to impeach an adverse jury verdict on the basis of concealment of juror bias during the voir dire examination by filing a motion for new trial. In this motion, the party must show the following:

- Neither the party nor the party's attorney was aware of the juror misconduct until after the verdict was returned; and
- The juror concealed bias or other disqualification by giving a false answer to a voir dire question directed to that point.

See Weathers v Kaiser Found. Hosps. (1971) 5 C3d 98, 95 CR 516. See also §7.44.

A motion for new trial was granted on the basis of concealment of juror bias and prejudice in the following cases: Weathers v Kaiser Found. Hosps., supra (case decided on basis of concealment of juror bias on voir dire although court recognized that additional overt acts of jurors may constitute jury irregularity and misconduct under Evid C §1150); Smith v Covell (1980) 100 CA3d 947, 161 CR 377 (juror bias concealed by silence); Clemens v Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1971) 20 CA3d 356, 97 CR 589 (undisclosed juror bias and prejudice).

When a party or a party's attorney discovers facts during trial constituting misconduct or irregularity in the proceedings of the jury, this must be promptly brought to the attention of the court or it is waived as a ground for motion for a new trial. Weathers v Kaiser Found. Hosps., supra. See §§17.10-17.32 on juror misconduct.

On motions after trial, see chap 25.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.63 7. Right to appeal ruling on challenge for cause

When a prospective juror is challenged for cause and the challenge is granted, no ground for appeal exists. A party is not entitled to have a particular juror serve; a party is entitled only to a fair and impartial jury. Dragovich v Slosson (1952) 110 CA2d 370, 242 P2d 945; National Sanitary Rag Co. v Lawrence (1939) 33 CA2d 198, 91 P2d 120.

A right to appeal does exist, however, if a challenge for cause was denied, but only if there was a manifest abuse of discretion. To appeal a decision denying a challenge for cause, the appellant must show that (People v Morris (1991) 53 C3d 152, 184, 279 CR 720, overruled on other grounds in People v Stansbury (1995) 9 C4th 824, 830 n1, 38 CR2d 394):

- A peremptory challenge was used to remove the juror;
- The appellant exhausted all available peremptory challenges or can justify the failure to do so;
- The appellant was dissatisfied with the jury as seated; and
- The appellant's right to an impartial jury was affected.

See also People v Bittaker (1989) 48 C3d 1046, 259 CR 630 (court noted that improper denial of a challenge to juror for cause does not necessarily constitute reversible error if party used available peremptory challenges to exclude proposed juror); Burns v 20th Century Ins. Co. (1992) 9 CA4th 1666, 1672, 12 CR2d 462 (counsel failed to exhaust peremptory challenges and therefore was precluded from arguing on appeal about composition of jury); People v Gordon (1990) 50 C3d 1223, 270 CR 451 (court rejected argument that forcing party to use peremptory challenges to exclude jurors who should have been excluded for cause unconstitutionally deprives party of full complement of peremptory challenges because peremptory challenges are creation of state law and are not constitutionally required).

It has been held reversible error for the court not to grant a challenge for cause when the evidence was clear that a juror favored one side to the extent that it would take additional evidence to overcome his or her feeling of bias, even though, in response to some general questions, the juror may have indicated that he or she would decide according to the evidence. See, e.g., Fitts v Southern Pac. Co. (1906) 149 C 310, 86 P 710 (juror admitted being prejudiced against suits for injuries against railroad companies and that it would take some evidence to remove such feelings); Lombardi v California St. Ry. (1899) 124 C 311, 317, 57 P 66 (juror stated that he knew plaintiff and plaintiff's family and supposed that he would give plaintiff benefit of any doubt; juror also stated that if plaintiff was entitled to damages, he would give plaintiff benefit of doubt and "would go to the biggest verdict"); Leibman v Curtis (1955) 138 CA2d 222, 291 P2d 542 (juror who had administered workmen's compensation insurance program had formed opinions on back injuries that would require introduction of some evidence to overcome).

If voir dire questioning discloses that a juror's impartiality is not affected by prior belief, feeling, or acquaintanceship, the court's ruling denying a challenge for cause will not ordinarily be reversed on appeal. See, e.g., Scott v McPheeters (1942) 52 CA2d 61, 125 P2d 868 (denial of challenge for cause sustained when prospective juror who had stated that she had previously known defendant as her family physician indicated that she would be fair and just and would obey court's instructions). See also People v Duncan (1960) 53 C2d 803, 3 CR 351 (denial of challenges for cause to four prospective jurors sustained when jurors stated that they had formed opinion of defendants' guilt that would require evidence to overcome, but later in response to questioning by district attorney and judge stated that they would act impartially in spite of their opinions and base verdict solely on evidence and court instructions).

Whether a prospective juror can be fair and impartial must be determined by the trial judge. Graybill v De Young (1905) 146 C 421, 80 P 618. See also Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 3.25(a)(1). It is within the sound discretion of the trial judge to accept or reject a prospective juror. Scott v McPheeters, supra. Denial of a challenge for cause is reversible only when it can be said as a matter of law that the juror was biased. Graybill v De Young, supra; Scott v McPheeters, supra.

B. Peremptory challenges

§8.64 1. When and how exercised

Peremptory challenges are exercised only after the jury panel is full, the appropriate number of prospective jurors have been seated in the jury box, voir dire examination of them has been completed, and the prospective jurors have been passed by the parties for cause. See CCP §226. See also §§8.54-8.63 for cause challenges. A peremptory challenge is available to strike jurors who were not disqualified by cause. Counsel need not give any reason for exercising a peremptory challenge. People v Jones (1998) 17 C4th 279, 70 CR2d 793; Austin v Lambert (1938) 11 C2d 73, 79, 77 P2d 849. Counsel may simply state, e.g., "We would like to thank and excuse Ms. Menninger."

The right to exercise peremptory challenges begins with plaintiff's counsel and then alternates between plaintiff and defense counsel until all peremptory challenges have been exhausted or until both sides pass. See CCP §231(d). For the number of peremptory challenges allowed, see §8.65.

As prospective jurors are excused, they are replaced by other prospective jurors who in turn go through the process of voir dire examination (unless they were already questioned under the "six pack" or "twelve pack" method), challenge for cause, and peremptory challenge. When each side passes consecutively (or when the number of peremptory challenges has been exhausted), the jury is sworn unless the court, for good cause, orders otherwise. See CCP §231(e). The selection of alternate jurors to replace discharged jurors is governed by CCP §§233-234. See also §§8.74-8.77.

For further discussion of the issue of peremptory challenges and objections to them, see California Trial Objections, chap 6 (Cal CEB Annual).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/8 Jury Selection/§8.65 2. Number of challenges depends on number of sides

§8.65 2. Number of challenges depends on number of sides

When there are only two parties, each party is entitled to six peremptory challenges. CCP §231(c). When there are more than two parties, for the purpose of allotting peremptory challenges, the court is required to "divide the parties into two or more sides according to their respective interests in the issues." CCP §231(c). Each side is then entitled to eight peremptory challenges. CCP §231(c).

When there are several parties on one side, the court is required to "divide the challenges among them as nearly equally as possible." CCP §231. Furthermore, when there are more than two sides, the court is required under CCP §231(c) to > grant such additional peremptory challenges to a side as the interests of justice may require; provided that the peremptory challenges of one side shall not exceed the aggregate number of peremptory challenges of all other sides.

If a party on a side does not use that party's full share of peremptory challenges, any other party or parties on the same side may use the unused challenges. CCP §231(c).

What constitutes a "side" within the meaning of CCP §231(c) can be difficult to ascertain. The alignment of sides rests in the discretion of the trial judge. The number of sides and the number of peremptory challenges to be exercised by each party and the sequence for exercising them should be determined during the chambers conference with the trial judge before commencement of the voir dire examination. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.20(f), 8.33. In some counties, this subject may be addressed at the case management conference. See §§6.2-6.4.

Sometimes parties on the same side will agree that all challenges for that side should be exercised jointly, and the court will permit this. The advantages of using this method include:

- Parties who are looking for the same type of jurors can "compare notes."
- A party may be able to prevent a coparty from exercising a peremptory challenge against a prospective juror that the party wishes to retain.

The disadvantages of using this method include:

- In the eyes of the jury, the conferring parties may give the impression that they will succeed or fail together, and they may be viewed as belonging in the same camp.
- The conferring and whispering that precedes the exercise of a challenge may be distracting and sometimes annoying. Ordinarily, no one likes to be the subject of a whispered conversation carried on by others in the same room.
- The attorneys for the parties may be unable to agree on the exercise of a peremptory challenge.

Because of the disadvantages, some attorneys believe that it is preferable for parties on the same side to exercise their peremptory challenges separately.

PRACTICE TIP: Local court policies may address the order of exercising peremptory challenges when there are more than two sides and one side is allotted substantially more peremptory challenges. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.33 (ordinarily, the side having a greater number of peremptory challenges should be required to exercise every second challenge (i.e., alternate with each of the other sides rather than rotate the challenge from one side to a second side to a third side)).

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.66 3. Court may not reopen jury selection and permit further peremptory challenges

Historically, trial courts had the discretion to reopen jury selection to permit the exercise of unused peremptory challenges before all alternates were sworn. See former Pen C §1068; People v Armendariz (1984) 37 C3d 573, 209 CR 664. The court's discretion was eliminated by the repeal of former Pen C §1068 in 1988 and the legislature's addition of CCP §§226 and 231. The provisions of CCP §226(a) state that "a challenge to an individual juror may only be made before the jury is sworn." The California Supreme Court in People v Cottle (2006) 39 C4th 246, 255, 46 CR3d 86, interpreted the phrase "the jury is sworn" in §226 as "refer[ring] to the trial jury and not the alternates." Thus, once the jury is sworn, trial courts are barred under CCP §226(a) from reopening jury selection and permitting further peremptory challenges, regardless of whether alternates have been or will be selected and sworn. 39 C4th at 255.

NOTE: In federal court, if the court erroneously denies a peremptory challenge to an alternate who becomes the member of a panel, the appellate court will automatically reverse the judgment. See Medrano v City of Los Angeles (9th Cir 1992) 973 F2d 1499 (prosecution not permitted to exercise remaining peremptory challenge to remove new alternate juror because it had previously accepted panel; Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals reversed defense verdict and remanded case).

4. Discriminatory use of peremptory challenges prohibited

§8.67 a. Excluding members of cognizable group

Peremptory challenges may not be used to exclude a racial, ethnic, or other "cognizable group" systematically from jury service in criminal cases. People v Wheeler (1978) 22 C3d 258, 148 CR 890, disapproved on other grounds in Johnson v California (2005) 545 US 162, 162 L Ed 2d 129, 125 S Ct 2410.

Courts have extended the Wheeler rule to civil cases:

- In Di Donato v Santini (1991) 232 CA3d 721, 283 CR 751, the court of appeal relied on Edmonson v Leesville Concrete Co. (1991) 500 US 614, 114 L Ed 2d 660, 111 S Ct 2077, and Holley v J & S Sweeping Co. (1983) 143 CA3d 588, 192 CR 74, in holding that the discriminatory exclusion of female potential jurors in a civil case violated both the Fourteenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution and the right to a jury drawn from a representative cross-section of the community under Cal Const art I, §§7, 16 as implemented by CCP §§191, 197(a), 204. See Vansickel v Whike (9th Cir 1999) 166 F3d 953 (peremptory challenge is state-created right protected by Fourteenth Amendment).
- In Holley v J & S Sweeping Co. (1983) 143 CA3d 588, 192 CR 74, the trial court committed reversible error when it failed to require a satisfactory explanation from the civil defendant who peremptorily challenged several members of the plaintiff's racial group.

§8.67A b. Establishing a prima facie case of discriminatory purpose

Prior to the United States Supreme Court's decision in Johnson v California (2005) 545 US 162, 162 L Ed 2d 129, 125 S Ct 2410, California courts required an objector to demonstrate a "strong likelihood" that the other party's challenges were based on impermissible group bias in order to establish a prima facie case of discriminatory purpose. See People v Wheeler (1978) 22 C3d 258, 280, 148 CR 890. Johnson rejected Wheeler's "more likely than not" standard as being at odds with Batson v Kentucky (1986) 476 US 79, 90 L Ed 2d 69, 106 S Ct 1712, which instructs that a defendant must merely produce evidence sufficient to permit the trial judge to draw an inference that discrimination has occurred. 545 US at 168, 162 L Ed 2d at 138. After Johnson, the Wheeler rule (prohibiting discriminatory use of peremptory challenges) remained intact but Batson's "inference" standard became California's new yardstick for determining discriminatory purpose. See Rice v Collins (2006) 546 US 333, 163 L Ed 2d 824, 833, 126 S Ct 969 (applying Batson's standard, Court reversed Ninth Circuit, holding that prosecutor had race-neutral reasons for striking African-American juror from jury panel).

Johnson requires California courts to undertake the three-step process described in Batson for establishing unlawful discrimination:

- Step one: To establish a prima facie case of discriminatory purpose, the objector must demonstrate "that the totality of the relevant facts gives rise to any inference of discriminatory purpose." Johnson v California (2005) 545 US 162, 168, 162 L Ed 2d 129, 138, 125 S Ct 2410, quoting Batson v Kentucky (1986) 476 US 79, 93, 90 L Ed 2d 69, 85, 106 S Ct 1712.
- Step two: Once the prima facie case has been established, the burden shifts to the party seeking to strike the juror "to explain adequately" the identified exclusion. Johnson v California, 545 US at 168, 162 L Ed 2d at 138, quoting Batson v Kentucky (1986) 476 US at 94, 90 L Ed 2d at 69.
- Step three: The court decides (assuming a neutral explanation has been tendered) "whether the opponent of the strike has proved purposeful discrimination." Johnson v California, 545 US at 168, 162 L Ed 2d at 138, quoting Purkett v Elem (1995) 514 US 765, 767, 131 L Ed 2d 834, 838, 115 S Ct 1769. The opponent of a peremptory challenge must prove purposeful discrimination by a preponderance of evidence. People v Hutchins (2007) 147 CA4th 992, 55 CR3d 105.

PRACTICE TIP: If the opposing party appears to be striking proposed jurors on the basis of race or some other inappropriate reason, counsel may ask the court to require the opposing party to explain the reasons for the exercise of the challenge. Similarly, when striking a member of a cognizable group from a jury by exercising a peremptory challenge, counsel should be prepared to give the reasons for the challenge and to make a record of reasons for striking the juror other than the juror's membership in the group. See Yee v Duncan (9th Cir 2006) 441 F3d 851, 854 (prosecutor failed to articulate clear and reasonably specific neutral explanation for striking juror, and thus failed to meet burden of production under step two of Batson's three-step analysis).

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: When asking counsel to explain the reason for a peremptory challenge, the court should be careful to indicate whether or not it is finding a prima facie case of a Wheeler/Batson violation. Although the court may find that a prima facie case has not been made, it may nevertheless ask that the reasons for the challenge be stated in order to preserve the record.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/8 Jury Selection/§8.68 c. Cognizable versus noncognizable groups

§8.68 c. Cognizable versus noncognizable groups

A cognizable group exists if its members share a common perspective arising from their life experience in the group and no other members of the community are capable of adequately representing the perspective of the group allegedly excluded. People v Cervantes (1991) 233 CA3d 323, 284 CR 410.

California courts have held that certain groups are "cognizable," i.e., entitled to protection from discrimination based on:

- Gender. See, e.g., Di Donato v Santini (1991) 232 CA3d 721, 283 CR 751 (discriminatory exclusion of female potential jurors in civil case violated both Fourteenth Amendment and right to have jury drawn from representative cross-section of community under Cal Const art I, §§7, 16 as implemented by CCP §§191, 197(a), 204); People v Cervantes (1991) 233 CA3d 323, 284 CR 410 (both men and women are cognizable groups in criminal cases; use of peremptory challenges to exclude all men was improper); U.S. v De Gross (9th Cir 1992) 960 F2d 1433 (equal protection principles prohibit exclusion of women jurors in criminal cases solely because of their gender).
- Race. See, e.g., People v Silva (2001) 25 C4th 345, 106 CR2d 93 (prosecutor's stated reasons for excluding Hispanic jurors showed discriminatory purpose); Williams v Runnels (9th Cir 2006) 432 F3d 1102, 1108 (defendant made prima facie showing of discrimination based on statistical disparity of exclusion of potential African-American jurors even though prosecutor had provided race-neutral explanations for other challenges); Montiel v City of Los Angeles (9th Cir 1993) 2 F3d 335 (defendants used their peremptory challenges to dismiss all jurors with Spanish surnames; Ninth Circuit reversed verdict for defendants and remanded for new trial). See also People v Tapia (1994) 25 CA4th 984, 30 CR2d 851 (Hispanics and Filipino).
- Sexual Preference. See People v Garcia (2000) 77 CA4th 1269, 92 CR2d 339 (homosexuals have common perspective based on their membership in that community and therefore constitute cognizable class).

The following are case examples in which courts found a group not "cognizable" and thus unprotected. The exclusion of these groups from a jury is constitutionally permissible:

- People v Marbley (1986) 181 CA3d 45, 225 CR 918 (use of peremptory challenges to exclude from jury panel all persons between ages 18 and 28 was constitutionally valid).
- People v Fauber (1992) 2 C4th 792, 9 CR2d 24 (challenge based on systematic exclusion of hearing-impaired jurors denied; not held to be "distinctive" group).
- People v McCoy (1995) 40 CA4th 778, 47 CR2d 599 (persons over age of 70 are not distinctive cognizable group because distinctions between these age groups were too arbitrary and proposed characteristics were too amorphous and ill-defined to satisfy applicable standards for establishing cognizable group).
- People v Harris (1989) 47 C3d 1047, 1076, 255 CR 352 (although number of jurors were excused for financial hardship, they were not cognizable class and fact that they were excused did not establish underrepresentation).
- U.S. v Santiago-Martinez (9th Cir 1995) 58 F3d 422 (defendant's conviction would not be overturned on grounds that "obese" persons had been excluded from jury; obesity not protected classification).

NOTE: The exclusion of ex-felons and resident aliens from juries violates neither the right to have a jury drawn from a representative cross-section of the community nor the equal protection clause of the state or federal constitution. Rubio v Superior Court (1979) 24 C3d 93, 154 CR 734.

The fact that a jury contains a sufficient number of members of the cognizable class to provide a representative cross-section of the community does not cure unlawful discrimination in the use of peremptory challenges. People v Snow (1987) 44 C3d 216, 242 CR 477. A constitutional violation may exist even when only one of several members of a cognizable group is improperly excluded. People v Montiel (1993) 5 C4th 877, 21 CR2d 705. The right to a jury drawn from a representative cross-section of a community does not, however, include the right to have the jury as seated reflect the racial makeup of the community as long as discriminatory practices are not used to exclude prospective jurors. See People v Garceau (1993) 6 C4th 140, 173, 24 CR2d 664.

Exclusion of jurors on grounds of religion may sometimes be justified. In People v Martin (1998) 64 CA4th 378, 382, 75 CR2d 147, the court held that a peremptory challenge based on the juror's "relevant personal values" was not improper even though those values may have directly resulted from a specific set of religious beliefs (the juror was a Jehovah's Witness).

§8.69 d. Making a Wheeler/Batson objection

A Wheeler/Batson objection to a party's discriminatory use of peremptory challenges must be timely. Wheeler requires that the party making a challenge object before the completion of jury selection. See People v Morrison (2004) 34 C4th 698, 709, 21 CR3d 682; Di Donato v Santini (1991) 232 CA3d 721, 740, 283 CR 751. Generally, the entire jury panel must be challenged under Wheeler. Compare People v Smith (1993) 21 CA4th 342, 25 CR2d 850 (jury's finding reversed because trial court only reseated juror after granting Wheeler motion), with People v Williams (1994) 26 CA4th Supp 1, 9, 31 CR2d 769 (juror reinstatement proper when prosecution made successful Wheeler challenge and waived right to have new panel).

Courts have discretion, however, to continue with the trial when counsel has engaged in deliberate misconduct in order to manipulate the jury selection. See People v Willis (2002) 27 C4th 811, 118 CR2d 301. In Willis, defendant excluded white jurors based on group bias. The prosecution objected to a mistrial on grounds that dismissing the jury would benefit the defendant lawyer's misconduct. The supreme court agreed, holding that a trial judge may use alternative remedies, such as disallowing the challenge or imposing monetary sanctions.

For further discussion of Wheeler motions and issues surrounding discriminatory use of peremptory challenges, see California Trial Objections, chap 6 (Cal CEB Annual).

§8.70 e. Review on appeal

The trial judge's findings on whether purposeful discrimination has been established should be given great deference. People v King (1987) 195 CA3d 923, 241 CR 189. If, however, the trial judge was not sensitive to the manner in which peremptory challenges were used and made no effort to determine whether a prima facie case of discriminatory use of peremptory challenges exists, the trial court's determination is not entitled to deference. Di Donato v Santini (1991) 232 CA3d 721, 740, 283 CR 751. The trial judge's ruling will be reviewed under a substantial evidence standard rather than an abuse of discretion standard, because there is no discretion once the trial judge makes a finding on whether purposeful discrimination existed. If discrimination is found, the motion must be denied; if not, it must be granted. See also People v Jackson (1992) 10 CA4th 13, 12 CR2d 541. The lack of a transcript of jury selection may lead to a new trial. Simmons v Beyer (3d Cir 1995) 44 F3d 1160.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.71 5. Effect of passing

A party may pass the exercise of a peremptory challenge and, assuming that all other parties do not likewise pass, then exercise that challenge against any prospective juror seated in the jury box (including those seated when the challenge was passed). See Buckley v Chadwick (1955) 45 C2d 183, 289 P2d 242. Under CCP §231(d), the passing of a peremptory challenge does not diminish the number of peremptory challenges remaining with a side. When each side passes consecutively, however, the jury will be sworn unless the court for good cause orders otherwise. CCP §231(e).

PRACTICE TIP: Deciding whether (and when) to exercise a peremptory challenge is a critical strategic decision. If you pass, the other side has the option of passing and keeping the 12 jurors on the panel. Thus, if your client does not feel comfortable with a particular juror, you should exercise a challenge. If you believe that the opposing party will not want certain jurors on the jury, you may want to pass and let the opposing party exercise the first (or the first two) challenges. This gives you the ability to "control" the jury by exercising the final challenges. Consider who the replacement juror will be. With the "six-pack" or "12-pack" method, you know who the next juror will be. See §8.33.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/8 Jury Selection/§8.72 6. Practice tips: How to exercise peremptory challenges

§8.72 6. Practice tips: How to exercise peremptory challenges

Experienced trial counsel carefully watch the use of peremptories by both sides. They keep apprised on the apparent caliber of the remaining prospective jurors not yet in the jury box. They try to avoid an adversary's having more unused peremptories, to guard against the adversary's being in a position to excuse jurors thought to be favorable to counsel's own side.

No strategy can ensure selection of the best possible jury for a client. Because so many uncertainties exist, counsel may be tempted to accept the first 12 jurors without exercising a single peremptory challenge. Other attorneys will admit that they often exercise peremptory challenges on the basis of nothing more than intuition or a "hunch." The following suggestions may assist counsel in exercising peremptory challenges:

- Listen carefully to what the prospective jurors say, and watch what they do. Discover clues to a prospective juror's personality and attitudes by observing his or her clothing, manner of walking to the jury box, reading material, and speaking style. Counsel may sense an attitude of sympathy or hostility toward the case, one of the parties, or attorneys.
- Be cautious before accepting an aggressive, opinionated juror. Such a person may dominate the others so that a verdict of 12 (or fewer; see §8.2) is not actually obtained, antagonize fellow jurors, or distract attention from proper deliberation.
- View the juror with leadership personality or quality with caution. His or her views may unduly influence the other jurors.
- Be cautious of a juror who has some expertise by virtue of his or her particular knowledge, training, or background in a matter that may be of some importance in the trial (e.g., a chemical engineer in an explosion case, a nurse in a malpractice case, an attorney in any type of case). If that person's background is shallow, he or she may readily accept a theory or proposition advanced by one side or the other.
- Consider whether the juror has interests in common with any party to the litigation, key witnesses, or counsel. If so, it may be advisable to exercise a peremptory challenge against that juror.
- Decide whether to use a jury book. In some cities, such books are available to both sides for a fee. Usually the book consists of a separate piece of paper for each prospective juror, which contains information such as the juror's name, date of birth, address, marital status, a list of all petitions he or she has signed, and a succinct summary of each case the prospective juror has deliberated and how he or she voted. By checking the data, you may conclude that, as compared with the other prospective jurors, a prospective juror is pro-plaintiff or pro-defendant or is inclined to unusually low or high awards. Evaluate this information in light of the facts and issues presented by the particular case. See Baugh v Beatty (1949) 91 CA2d 786, 205 P2d 671 (jury book used by counsel).
- When one side exercises few or no challenges, the other side may be strongly tempted to do likewise, even if it is not altogether happy with the panel. Some attorneys believe that a side exercising few or no peremptory challenges may be perceived as having a strong case, whereas the other side, if it continues to exercise peremptory challenges, may be perceived as having to select carefully the right jurors because it is worried about its case. Despite this risk, warranted challenges should be exercised even if the other side passes.
- If the opportunity exists, consider conferring with the client, out of the presence of the jury (e.g., during a recess), to determine whether the client has any strong feelings for or against any of the prospective jurors seated in the jury box. Clients' reactions are often of paramount value in deciding whether to exercise a peremptory challenge.
- Consider the use of a behavioral consultant in advising on peremptory challenges. On use of behavioral consultants in jury selection, see §8.53.
- If opposing counsel objects to your challenge of a juror, state your reasons for the challenge regardless of whether the objection is overruled or sustained. Otherwise, the appellate court has no record of why you challenged a certain juror.

§8.73 VII. ADMINISTERING OATH TO JURORS

After a jury has been selected, the jurors are required to take an oath, in substance, that they and each of them will well and truly try the matter at issue and render a true verdict according to the evidence. CCP §232(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

VIII. ALTERNATE JURORS

§8.74 A. Grounds for having alternate jurors

When the trial judge believes that the trial is likely to be protracted, or on stipulation of the parties, the judge may direct the calling of one or more additional jurors, to be known as "alternate jurors." CCP §234. Alternate jurors are drawn from the same source, in the same manner, and have the same qualifications as the jurors already sworn. CCP §234. See §8.22. Alternates are necessary in case a member of the jury becomes ill or for some other reason is unable to continue serving.

The number of alternate jurors to be selected should be worked out in the chambers conference with the judge before voir dire examination of the prospective jurors begins.

PRACTICE TIP: Check local rules on the selection of alternate jurors. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.36.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/8 Jury Selection/§8.75 B. Voir dire examination

§8.75 B. Voir dire examination

Prospective alternate jurors are subject to the same voir dire examination as the jurors already sworn. CCP §234. Counsel should use the same care and deliberation to select alternate jurors as was used in selecting the other jurors.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.76 C. Challenges

Prospective alternate jurors are subject to the same challenges as the jurors already sworn. CCP §234. Each side, as provided in CCP §231 (see §8.65), is "entitled to as many peremptory challenges to such alternate jurors as there are alternate jurors called." CCP §234. For example, if the court seats one alternate juror, each side (not party) is entitled to one peremptory challenge.

§8.77 D. Oath

After the alternate jurors have been selected, they are required to take the same oath as the jurors already selected. CCP §234. For the nature of the oath, see CCP §232, discussed in §8.73.

IX. JURY ISSUES ARISING DURING TRIAL

§8.78 A. Illness or disqualification of juror

The court can discharge a juror at any time, before or after the case is finally submitted to the jury, if a juror becomes ill, is found on a showing of good cause to be unable to perform his or her duties, or requests a discharge for good cause. CCP §234.

If alternate jurors have been selected, the court draws the name of an alternate, who is required to take the discharged juror's place in the jury box. The alternate juror is subject to the same rules and regulations as if he or she were one of the originally selected jurors. CCP §234.

If, at any time before a verdict, a juror becomes unable to perform his or her duty because of sickness, and no alternate juror is available, the court may order the juror discharged, in which event, under CCP §233.

- The trial may proceed before the other jurors with the parties' consent;
- Another juror may be sworn, and trial begins anew; or
- The jury may be discharged, and a new jury either then or afterward impaneled.

See also chap 17 on jury management.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.79 B. Admonition to jury

Any ex parte communication between the jurors and the judge, counsel, the parties, or the witnesses may constitute serious misconduct. CCP §611. Whenever the jurors are permitted to separate, either during the trial or after the case is submitted to them, the court will admonish the jurors that, among other things, it is their duty not to talk about this case or the people involved in it with anyone, including their families, friends, coworkers, spiritual leaders, advisors, therapists, and persons living in their households. Jurors "must not even talk about the case with the other jurors until after" the trial judge states that the jury's deliberations may begin. CACI 100. In addition, the jury should deliberate only when all jurors are present in the jury room. See CACI 100.

See 7 Witkin, California Procedure, Trial §207 (5th ed 2008) on ex parte communication between the court, counsel, the parties, or the witnesses and the jurors. On misconduct of counsel and court, see chap 16. On juror misconduct, see chaps 17, 21.

© The Regents of the University of California

§8.80 C. Substitution of juror during deliberations

The jury must begin deliberations anew when an alternate is substituted for a seated juror after deliberations have begun, even if the alternate was in the jury room during the earlier deliberations. The judge must instruct the jury of this requirement. People v Proctor (1992) 4 C4th 499, 536, 15 CR2d 340 (judge's statement that jury should "start from scratch" after substitution of alternate juror satisfied requirement; error was harmless because jury had deliberated only 1 hour before substitution and 2-1/2 days after the substitution); Vaughn v Noor (1991) 233 CA3d 14, 284 CR 222 (reversible error not to explicitly instruct jury to "start deliberations anew").

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Some courts permit the attorneys to privately agree on the order of replacement of alternate jurors. This allows for quicker selection of alternates, and provides more information for counsel should a substitution become necessary. In addition, some courts have found that alternates resent being dropped from the trial once deliberations start, having sat through the entire trial. Alternates can be invited by stipulation to remain with the deliberating jurors with the strict admonition that they are not to participate in the deliberations in any fashion.

On an alternate juror's being permitted to sit in the jury room during jury deliberations under stipulation, see People v Valles (1979) 24 C3d 121, 154 CR 543. On alternate jurors chosen during deliberations, see §§21.20-21.23.

X. JURY ISSUES ARISING DURING TRIAL

A. Juror questionnaires

§8.81 1. Form: Juror questionnaire for civil cases (Judicial Council form MC-001)

JUROR QUESTIONNAIRE FOR CIVIL CASES

Code of Civil Procedure Section 205(c)-(d)

Sec. 1. Statutory Authority

This Juror Questionnaire has been drafted under the authority of Code of Civil Procedure section 205(c)-(d) and is intended to expedite jury selection. It is not intended to alter statutes or rules governing the authority of the court or the role of counsel during voir dire.

Sec. 2. Use Notes for Courts

A. General

This Juror Questionnaire is intended for use in the court's discretion in appropriate civil cases. Its use in cases of brief duration may not be appropriate. Particular kinds of cases may require that this questionnaire be altered or augmented. The Personal Injury Supplement is intended to be used along with the General Questions in personal injury actions. Judges, in their own discretion, must determine what additional kinds of inquiry are appropriate in any given case.

B. Pre–Voir Dire Conference

The court should confer with counsel about voir dire before a jury panel is called. At this conference, the court may establish (1) guidelines for the use of the Juror Questionnaire, (2) any supplemental questions to be propounded to the panel by questionnaire, (3) the extent of the court's oral inquiry of the panel, and (4) the extent of oral questioning by counsel. Proposed supplemental questions drafted by counsel should be filed and served at least three court days before the pre–voir dire conference. Arrangements for duplication of completed questionnaires should be confirmed. The parties should share the cost of duplication.

C. Introduction of Questionnaire to Prospective Jurors

It is suggested that the Juror Questionnaire be used after the court has given its customary introductory remarks and any additional instructions that the court deems appropriate. The court also may wish to tell the panel members that a questionnaire will be used, to encourage complete answers, and to remind them that their answers will be given under penalty of perjury. In introducing the questionnaire, the court should instruct prospective jurors how to proceed if they have difficulty reading or filling out the form.

The court could direct that the Juror Questionnaire be given to prospective jurors by the jury commissioner in the jury assembly room. However, this procedure ordinarily will mean that jurors are not given complete instructions about the type of case they will hear or the identity of participants and witnesses. In addition, jurors who fill out the form before appearing in the trial court may not clearly understand that their answers are given under penalty of perjury. For these reasons, and to avoid the need to have jurors fill out supplemental questionnaires once they have been sent to the trial court, it is strongly recommended that the Juror Questionnaire be used in the trial court setting.

JUROR QUESTIONNAIRE FOR CIVIL CASES

Introduction and Instructions

Thank you for coming to court as a potential juror. Before the case can start, a jury must be selected. The judge and the people involved in the case need to know something about you in order to select jurors who can be fair to both sides.

Everyone has attitudes and opinions that are shaped by their life experiences. Sometimes these experiences can make it difficult to look at a certain issue in an unbiased and unemotional way. As a juror, you must return a verdict based on the law and on the facts proved in court, not on emotion or on other views not supported by the evidence. The judge will give you instructions on the law and on how you should go about deciding the case. You must listen to and follow the judge's instructions.

The questions on this form are designed to help the court and the lawyers learn something about your background and your views on issues that may be related to this case. The questions are asked not to invade your privacy, but to make sure that you can be a fair and impartial juror. If there is any reason why you might not be able to give both sides a fair trial in this case, it is important that you say so.

The judge has decided to use this form to save time and to give you a chance to tell the court and the lawyers about yourself.

In portions of this form, you will see the term "significant personal relationship." That term means a former spouse, domestic partner, life partner, or anyone with whom you have an influential or intimate relationship that you would characterize as important.

If there is anything you do not want to talk about in open court, please circle the question number. After you have finished the questionnaire, let the clerk know that you have circled one or more question numbers.

Do not write on the back of any page. Use an additional sheet of paper.

If you are called to the jury box, your answers to this questionnaire become a matter of public record, just as if you had answered the questions aloud in the courtroom.

If you have trouble reading, understanding, or filling out this form, please let the court clerk know.

PLEASE REMEMBER THAT YOU ARE ANSWERING THESE QUESTIONS UNDER PENALTY OF PERJURY. YOUR ANSWERS MUST BE TRUE AND COMPLETE. THANK YOU FOR YOUR HELP IN SELECTING A FAIR JURY.

§9.1 I. SCOPE OF CHAPTER

This chapter covers a key event in almost every trial: the opening statement. Like a trial itself, the opening statement is a focused exercise requiring a carefully selected theme. It is presented on limited issues so that the trier of fact can understand the case.

The function and importance of the opening statement in a trial, including procedures for cases with multiple parties, are discussed in §§9.2-9.7. Planning the opening statement, developing visual aids, and considering motions in limine and other matters beforehand are discussed in §§9.8-9.15. On delivering the opening statement in a jury trial, see §§9.16-9.34. On delivering the opening statement in a bench trial, see §9.35.

NOTE: Before the examination of prospective jurors, the court may permit counsel a mini-opening statement to the jurors. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1034. On mini-opening statements, see §1.18A.

Handling objectionable aspects of the opposing party's opening statement and moving for nonsuit or directed verdict following an opening statement are discussed in §§9.36-9.41. A selected bibliography containing sources of additional reading appears in §9.42.

II. DESCRIPTION OF OPENING STATEMENT

§9.2 A. Purpose and limitations

The opening statement is counsel's opportunity at the beginning of the trial to tell the client's side of the story and outline what will be proved when the evidence is presented during trial. It requires a marshaling of facts in an organized and meaningful way so that the jury understands the dispute giving rise to the trial and its role in resolving that dispute. See Williams v Goodman (1963) 214 CA2d 856, 869, 29 CR 877.

Even though the opening statement is not evidence, it prepares the jurors "to follow the evidence and to more readily discern its materiality, force and effect." See People v Arnold (1926) 199 C 471, 486, 250 P 168. Counsel should not refer to testimony that will not be received in evidence or inadmissible matters that will prejudice the jury. It is unprofessional conduct to refer to evidence unless there is a good faith and reasonable basis for believing that it will be offered and admitted in evidence. Hawk v Superior Court (1974) 42 CA3d 108, 121, 116 CR 713. See Smith v Covell (1980) 100 CA3d 947, 958, 161 CR 377. On improper mention of evidence, see §9.22.

Counsel delivering an opening statement should not discuss questions of law. Williams v Goodman, supra. In some cases, however, a brief explanation of the law may be needed for the jury to understand the dispute, e.g., if the case is based on violation of a statute. See De Armas v Dickerman (1952) 108 CA2d 548, 553, 239 P2d 65 (court had discretion to permit plaintiff's counsel in action for rental overcharges under Housing and Rent Act of 1947 to read excerpts from Act to jury in opening statement). For further discussion, see §9.25.

Argument is not permissible during opening statement. An opening statement has been called an exercise in advocacy that must be accomplished without argument. See Lafrenz v Stoddard (1942) 50 CA2d 1, 9, 122 P2d 374. For further discussion, see §9.23.

PRACTICE TIP: Although argument is not permitted, experienced counsel use the opening statement to describe the case in a sympathetic light, helping the jurors to understand why they should decide it in the client's favor. The good story teller has an edge. Present the facts in such a manner that there is only one logical conclusion: the one you are advancing. In other words, let the facts argue themselves.

See generally Persuasive Opening Statements & Closing Arguments (Cal CEB 1988). See also 3 Witkin, California Evidence §§23-24 (4th ed 2000).

§9.3 B. Importance to trial

The opening statement represents one of the advocate's finest challenges: explaining the facts that constitute the case, without arguing them, in a manner leading to a logical result that the trier of fact can willingly accept. The opening statement is one part of the trial that can be developed and presented virtually any way counsel desires. It should be an interesting and informative story with a trial victory as its objective.

For many experienced trial attorneys, starting to plan the opening statement begins with the client interview. The "story" that makes sense of the facts of the case should not be finally constructed, however, until close to the time of trial. By then most of the evidence is available, the legal theories are current, and counsel has a general sense of what will appeal to the jury. This story should inform, convince, and persuade the jurors. It must be in tune with the times and the audience. For example, if the defendant is a hospital, the national concerns and interests about health care providers should influence counsel's approach during the opening statement.

The opening statement comes at a point in the trial when the judge and jury are receptive and their attention is fresh. They want to know what the case is about, how it fits together, and what will be proved. Because the judge and jury begin to accept or reject the client's cause at this time, the opening statement presents counsel with a unique opportunity to shape their initial impressions of the case. Following the theory of "primacy," some observers believe that jurors form their opinions of the case from what they first hear during the opening statements. The evidence presented at trial merely confirms their original impressions, which is memorialized in their verdict.

Although argument is prohibited, counsel should present the facts in the light most favorable to the client's case. The opening statement can be used to develop a complete picture of the case in the minds of the judge and jury, explain difficult terms that will come up during trial, describe how witness testimony will prove the client's case, and outline what will occur throughout the trial.

In developing your opening statement, take into account known characteristics of citizens in the location where the trial will take place. Include examples from the jurors' daily lives to make the opening statement more understandable, expressive, and interesting. Because of every juror's exposure to mass media, consider discouraging them from basing their expectations of the opening statement and the trial on television dramas.

In addition to creating a favorable atmosphere for the reception of the client's evidence, a clear and concise statement of facts and issues in the opening statement can aid the court in the evidentiary rulings it will be asked to make as the trial proceeds. For example, a full explanation of certain facts can protect against later objections for lack of relevancy because the judge understands how these facts fit into the big picture.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: At the beginning of trial, jurors are overloaded with information (e.g., the basic description of the trial, the names of the attorneys and parties), and their attention span is limited. Every word in an opening statement should thus be carefully considered.

The opening statement also provides counsel with an opportunity to establish credibility with the jurors. If counsel does not appear trustworthy in their eyes, they may doubt the evidence counsel presents at trial.

PRACTICE TIP: Be candid with the jury by telling them some of the factual problems in your case. Explain that there will be testimony that could lead to more than one conclusion. Be careful not to make admissions but indicate that there is a logical solution: the one most favorable to your client. Discuss substantial concessions such as liability with your client before trial. Although such concessions may help counsel establish credibility with the jury, they must be carefully weighed to determine their likely effect on minimizing damages.

To maintain the trust established during the opening statement, present evidence during trial that confirms what was outlined to the jury in the opening statement. During closing argument shortly before the jurors retire to deliberate, remind them that the evidence supported all assertions made in the opening statement. On closing argument, see chap 19.

III. ORDER OF PRESENTATION

§9.4 A. Standard procedures

Unless the court for "special reasons" directs otherwise, the plaintiff makes the first opening statement. CCP §§607, 631.7.

A defendant may elect either to make an opening statement immediately after the plaintiff's opening statement or to reserve the right to make an opening statement until after the presentation of the plaintiff's case in chief. See CCP §607. A defendant may also waive the right to make an opening statement altogether, but this step should almost never be taken. See §9.7.

On when a court may find a "special reason" within the meaning of CCP §607 to allow the defendant to open first, see §9.6.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.5 1. Multiple party litigation

Several considerations must be weighed in determining the sequence of opening statements when there are a number of parties, each represented by separate counsel. If the parties' interests do not conflict, the order may depend on which trial attorney can give the best presentation. When counsel have no preference, statements may be made in the order in which the parties' names appear in the pleadings. The order of opening should be agreed on by counsel; if it is not, the order will be established by the court.

For multiple plaintiffs represented by separate counsel, tactical considerations come into play when one plaintiff's case is stronger than that of the other plaintiffs. Experienced trial counsel usually choose to open with the plaintiff who has the strongest case. Similar tactics apply for multiple defendants with separate counsel. Counsel must determine whether it would be wiser to open with the defendant who has primary liability or with the defendant who has the best defense. Defense counsel must also decide whether some opening statements should be reserved until after presentation of the plaintiff's evidence. See §9.7.

To ensure that the weaker cases of multiple party plaintiffs or defendants do not dilute the stronger ones, counsel with the stronger cases could include something along the following lines in their opening statements:

> I would prefer that you hear my client's case alone, but that is not possible. I want you to consider my client's case in its own right, however, thinking of it as a separate trial entirely different from that of the other parties. As I make my opening statement and closing argument, I will review the evidence that concerns only my client's case. The reason for this is that the evidence presented in the other cases should not influence your judgment of my client's case. I want you to focus on my client's case alone.

If possible, address this problem during the voir dire examination of prospective jurors. During the opening statement, you then need only reaffirm the separate nature of your client's case. On voir dire procedures, see chap 8.

To help jurors understand litigation involving multiple parties or lawsuits with complex issues, some judges permit litigants to deliver ongoing opening statements on what is about to happen at different stages of the trial. For example, in addition to an opening statement at the beginning of trial, a judge may permit a continuation of the opening statement before the parties call their expert witnesses and again before the damages portion of the trial. If ongoing opening statements are permitted, counsel should link the evidence to come with the client's position.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Judges recognize these continuations of the opening statement as "interim summaries" of the case. Many judges permit these interim summaries and specify an amount of time that counsel may use. A useful technique is to use an interim summary before the presentation of complex matters. Interim summaries are also useful after a break in the trial (e.g., a long weekend).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/9 Opening Statement/§9.6 2. Special situations

§9.6 2. Special situations

The defense may be allowed to proceed with its opening statement before the plaintiff in certain special situations:

- Under CCP §607, defense counsel may be allowed to open first when the defendant has the burden of proof from the outset, e.g., when all the allegations of a complaint are admitted and the defendant proceeds on its affirmative defenses and cross-complaint. See Coogan Fin. Corp. v Beatcher (1932) 120 CA 278, 283, 7 P2d 695.
- Defense counsel normally opens first in an eminent domain proceeding, in which the defendant must present evidence on the issue of compensation first and commence and conclude the argument. See CCP §1260.210(a). Note, however, that under CCP §1260.210(b) neither plaintiff nor defendant has the burden of proof on the issue of compensation except as otherwise provided by statute. On eminent domain generally, see CCP §§1230.010-1273.050. See also Condemnation Practice in California (3d ed Cal CEB 2005).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/9 Opening Statement/§9.7 B. Defendant should not reserve opening statement

§9.7 B. Defendant should not reserve opening statement

Although defense counsel can reserve the opening statement, deferring it until after the plaintiff's case in chief, it is almost always a poor idea to delay. It is defense counsel's responsibility to ensure that the jurors keep an open mind, and that task is usually best begun at the start of trial.

By making an opening statement directly after the plaintiff's opening statement, defense counsel has a chance to diminish its effect on the jurors. Otherwise, first impressions formed during the plaintiff's opening statement may become reinforced during presentation of the plaintiff's evidence. Jurors are more likely to closely scrutinize the plaintiff's evidence after being warned that the defense will present contradictory evidence. See Walker, Thibaut & Andreoli, Order of Presentation at Trial, 82 Yale LJ 216 (1972).

PRACTICE TIP: Reserving an opening statement might be appropriate when defense counsel does not want to reveal surprise evidence until after the plaintiff's witnesses have testified. Although modern discovery procedures make such an approach unlikely, they do not rule out the use of surprise evidence that the defense lawyer wishes to conceal at the beginning of trial. Weigh the relative benefits of mentioning such evidence to the jurors or withholding it from them.

Reserved openings might be appropriate in two other situations:

- When by agreement one or more of the defendants in a multiple-party case reserve the opportunity to make an opening statement (see §9.5); or
- When the defense believes that the opening statement may be forgotten in a long, complex trial and that a later presentation will aid the jurors in following the proof.

Most attorneys would agree, however, that counsel should outline the defense position fully and completely at the earliest opportunity. In the interest of surprise, information can still be withheld that counsel does not want to divulge at this early stage.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Counsel should be cautious about reserving opening statement for a later surprise because this runs the risk of objections to the reserved statement. Counsel should not give up one of the few opportunities to directly address the jurors.

For additional insights on this issue, see Lee, Opening Statement, 27 Air Force L Rev 67, 74 (1987).

© The Regents of the University of California

IV. PLANNING OPENING STATEMENT

§9.8 A. Preparation generally

Counsel should have a thorough grasp of the case before preparing the opening statement. In preparing the opening statement, consider:

- The length of time for the opening statement (see §9.10);
- Whether demonstrative evidence will be used (see §9.11);
- Whether visual aids will be used (see §9.12);
- Whether witnesses should be excluded from the courtroom while the opening statements are made (see §9.13);
- Whether in limine motions concerning the other party's opening statement should be made (see §9.14);
- Whether the opening statement should be transcribed for later use during the trial (see §9.15); and
- How the case can best be presented, bearing in mind that the opening statement must be sufficient to avoid a nonsuit or directed verdict (see §§9.40-9.41).

Learn the judge's ground rules for the opening statement before the trial begins. The opening statement can then be tailored to the time allowed and to any court rulings made about its content. On matters that can be taken up with the judge in chambers conferences before trial, see §§6.2-6.5.

Although an outline or a "key-word list" can help counsel develop an opening statement, both devices should be relied on as little as possible during delivery of the statement. Not everyone can deliver an opening statement without notes, but counsel should try to do so as much as possible. To avoid a mechanical presentation, experienced trial attorneys do not compose a complete opening statement that they might be tempted to memorize before trial or read at trial.

PRACTICE TIP: Memorize the first 3 or 4 minutes of the opening statement and refer to an outline for the rest, if necessary. If you feel you need aids, annotate your outline with the significant points you want to cover and place it on the rostrum where you can easily refer to it. Before concluding your opening statement, walk over to the rostrum to review the outline and advise the jury that "there is one more thing to talk about before I sit down" or, if nothing has been omitted, "I think I have covered it all." Then sit down.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.9 1. Rehearsal techniques

To evaluate the effectiveness of your opening statement, present it to colleagues or acquaintances. Their questions or puzzlement may reveal areas that are insufficient, unclear, or lacking in force. The ability to explain a case simply to a lay person will help counsel to write the opening statement. Videotaping the delivery of the opening statement more than once can also help you evaluate your performance and monitor improvement.

For trials with complex issues, outside experts, focus groups, and mock juries can be used to study all aspects of the opening statement, e.g., language, substance, delivery, style, and dress. With focus groups and mock juries, the effectiveness of different themes for the trial can be tested.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.10 2. Time limitations

To ensure that you will have sufficient time for the opening statement, advise the court of its approximate length during a chambers conference before trial. Courts usually allocate time for opening statements consistent with the magnitude and complexity of the case. On the court's discretion to fix the length of time for the opening statement, see Bates v Newman (1953) 121 CA2d 800, 810, 264 P2d 197.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: However much time is allotted, the opening statement should be as short as possible and contain only what is necessary. Jurors do not like having their time wasted with repetitive or extraneous details. After the jurors have the story of a case, they are adept at filling in the blanks.

PRACTICE TIP: Even in complex cases, many experienced trial attorneys limit their opening statements to well under 1 hour because they believe the jury may become bored or unable to absorb information beyond that point. Make the statement long enough to tell your client's story thoroughly but short enough to maintain the jury's attention.

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Developing visual aids

§9.11 1. Demonstrative or documentary evidence

Presentation of demonstrative or documentary evidence may be an effective tool during the opening statement. Demonstrative evidence includes graphic devices (e.g., charts, graphs, maps, pictures, blow-ups of documents, and models).

As long as it is brief, documentary evidence may be read during the opening statement.

The court has discretion to permit demonstrative or documentary evidence to be presented during an opening statement. See, e.g., People v Wash (1993) 6 C4th 215, 24 CR2d 421 (electrophoretic evidence, crime scene photographs, autopsy slides); People v Fauber (1992) 2 C4th 792, 826, 9 CR2d 24 (prosecution poster consisting of enlargement of transcript of preliminary hearing testimony of party granted immunity). A court is unlikely to permit the use of such evidence during the opening statement, however, if there is any question of its ultimate admissibility.

PRACTICE TIP: Some courts prohibit the use of graphic displays during the opening statement except under certain circumstances. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.40 (no chart, graph, map, picture, model, video, or other graphic device may be used unless by stipulation of counsel or by prior leave of court, or unless marked as an exhibit and received in evidence).

To avoid an objection interrupting presentation of demonstrative or documentary exhibits during the opening statement, counsel should try to obtain the opposing party's stipulation beforehand. If there is a dispute, request preliminary rulings from the judge. On motions in limine generally, see chap 7.

To ensure that the court has no objection, it is courteous to advise the judge of the demonstrative or documentary evidence that you want to present. Counsel need not seek the judge's permission, however, to allude to demonstrative or documentary evidence that will be offered later in the trial. See §§9.2, 9.19.

PRACTICE TIP: Do not use demonstrative and documentary exhibits during the opening statement unless the case cannot be described without them. Ask yourself whether showing an exhibit during the opening statement could destroy a dramatic moment when it is later revealed during trial. It may be better to arouse the jurors' curiosity about an exhibit by alluding to it rather than showing it during the opening statement.

For detailed discussion of documentary and demonstrative evidence, see chap 13.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Studies show that visual aids improve the jury's comprehension of the case. If visual aids are available, they should be used in opening statements. All exhibits should be cleared before the trial starts to prevent objections and disruptions in front of the jury. If counsel uses an exhibit only for the opening statement, counsel should inform the jurors that the exhibit is being used only for demonstrative purposes.

§9.12 2. Blackboard or pad

Some counsel use a blackboard or a pad with large flip sheets during the opening statement to help outline critical issues, list witnesses, and explain terminology.

PRACTICE TIP: Be sure local court rules or policies permit use of blackboards or pads during opening statement. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.40 (counsel's use of blackboard or paper for illustrative purposes during opening statement must receive prior court approval).

Some attorneys try to avoid writing on a blackboard or pad during the opening statement, believing that it will detract from what is being said. If a list or other visual aid will be necessary during opening statement, counsel may prepare one before trial presenting various aspects of the case, e.g., names of parties and witnesses, issues, and technical terms. Counsel should clear its use with other counsel and the judge at a pretrial chambers conference to avoid the raising of objections during the opening statement. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.40.

EXAMPLE: A plaintiff's attorney in a personal injury case can divide a blackboard, pad, flip chart, or computer graphics chart into three sections. The first section outlines the names of lay witnesses and the important facts involved in their anticipated testimony. The second lists the names of medical witnesses and the salient aspects of their testimony. The third is reserved for special and general damages, including economic damages (i.e., out-of-pocket expenses; see CC §1431.2(b)(1)), the elements of noneconomic damages (e.g., pain and suffering, mental anguish; see CC §1431.2(b)(2)), and the plaintiff's life expectancy. The injuries suffered by the plaintiff may also be included in the third section, along with the amount of the verdict that the jury will be asked to return. Alternatively, counsel may wish to explain that the noneconomic damages will be discussed later in the trial and that these sums have already been computed and are reasonable given the plaintiff's injuries and life expectancy. On discussing damages in the opening statement, see §9.33.

Writing on a paper pad may be more practicable than using a blackboard. If opposing counsel erases what was written on a blackboard, counsel may have to re-create it. In addition, an illustration on paper can be easily reexamined if an issue is raised about it. Consider, too, how a computer-assisted graphics outline can be used in an opening statement. On developing computer-assisted exhibits, see §§13.107-13.108.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Counsel should bring his or her own supplies. Relying on court supplies is both bad form and bad planning because the court may not have the materials. In addition, counsel should consider isolating key exhibits in juror notebooks. Providing jurors with their own copies of key exhibits is a powerful tool. Such exhibits should be restricted to no more than five pieces of paper per side. Anything larger risks having jurors disregard them.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.13 C. Moving to exclude witnesses

Counsel should decide whether the presence of adverse witnesses in the courtroom during the opening statements could affect their testimony. Even witnesses who are not particularly astute may modify their testimony in response to something heard during the opening statements. They will also be better prepared for cross-examination.

The court may exclude from the courtroom any witness not under examination at that time to prevent the witness from hearing the testimony of other witnesses. Evid C §777. A party, however, cannot be excluded from the courtroom under this section. While a party normally has the right to be present in the courtroom during trial, that right is not absolute. See, e.g., Province v Center for Women's Health & Family Birth (1993) 20 CA4th 1673, 1685, 25 CR2d 667 (disfigured plaintiff excluded during liability phase of trial). When a party is not a natural person, an officer or employee designated by the party's attorney is entitled to be present. Evid C §777(b)-(c).

A motion to exclude witnesses from the courtroom during the opening statements should be made during the chambers conference before trial so that delivery of the statements is not interrupted. As a practical matter, if several witnesses will be excluded, it may be necessary to post a "witnesses excluded" sign on the courtroom door. For further discussion of excluding witnesses, see §11.27.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/9 Opening Statement/§9.14 D. Using motions in limine

§9.14 D. Using motions in limine

In limine motions made before trial can be used to limit matters that opposing counsel may explore during the opening statement.

EXAMPLE: If opposing counsel is likely to mention evidence vulnerable to an Evid C §352 objection (i.e., probative value of evidence is outweighed by being unduly time-consuming, prejudicial, confusing, or misleading; see §10.16), a motion in limine can be made to bar opposing counsel from introducing the evidence and referring to it at any time during the trial.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Motions in limine assist the uninterrupted presentation of a case and avoid objections to opening statements. Objections in the middle of an opening statement suggest to jurors that either the issue is not very critical or counsel lacks preparation and experience. In addition, objections presented in advance will warrant more thoughtful consideration and greater credibility from the judge.

Similarly, such a motion can be made to limit what might be said during the opening statement when punitive damages are involved. See CC §3295(a). See §9.33.

A motion in limine may also be used to educate the judge on difficult legal or factual issues. In these circumstances, counsel's goal may be to obtain a "nonruling" in which the court agrees to rule during trial but in the interim will prohibit reference to the questioned evidence during the opening statement.

CAUTION: Check local rules on motions in limine. They may have to be filed in writing a set number of days before trial. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(h). If the judge will not give a written ruling to a written motion in limine, or if the motion can be made orally, a court reporter should be present to record the motion and ruling to protect the record in the event of an appeal.

On motions in limine generally, see chap 7.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/9 Opening Statement/§9.15 E. Recording opening statement

§9.15 E. Recording opening statement

Counsel should make certain that the opening statement will be recorded by the court reporter. To ensure that a transcript is available for use at trial, special arrangements must usually be made with the court reporter.

In some limited civil cases (see §23.1), no reporter is furnished, and counsel may be required to make arrangements for one well before trial and pay a daily rate. On requesting a court reporter, see §24.9.

V. DELIVERING OPENING STATEMENT TO JURY

A. Introductory remarks

§9.16 1. Explaining role of opening statement

Counsel may wish to begin the opening statement by defining it as an outline of the case that the jury can follow to understand the evidence to be presented during trial. Depending on what the trial judge has told the jury about the opening statement, counsel might state:

> Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, this is my first opportunity to talk directly to you about my client's case. You have been selected through the voir dire process, and the judge and the lawyers are satisfied that you can consider this case with an open mind. In this opening statement, I am going to tell you what the case is about from my client's point of view. What I say here will not be evidence, but I will outline what the witnesses will say and what the evidence will be from other sources so that you can understand and follow everything that is presented during the trial.

Most experienced attorneys keep this portion of the opening statement brief and avoid lengthy or involved introductions. The judge can discuss issues about courtroom procedures. Counsel may also wish to explain the jury's civic role in resolving disputes and in deciding this case in particular.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.17 2. Outlining order of trial

Because a trial is often a new experience for jurors, some attorneys briefly outline the order of trial if the judge or opposing counsel has not already done this. A brief explanation may help the jurors understand the trial process and build credibility with them. Counsel might state:

> After the attorneys present their opening statements, evidence will be presented that you will consider, weigh, and evaluate. Following this, the attorneys will present their closing arguments, during which I will discuss the conclusions that follow from the evidence and how the law relates to the facts of this case. Then the judge will explain to you the law that applies to the facts in this case, and it will be time for you to deliberate among yourselves. Your responsibility as jurors is to determine the facts of the case and which party's conclusions make the most sense. With this explanation of how a trial progresses, let me now tell you what this case is about.

To prevent the jury from attributing objectivity to the attorney who makes this explanation, counsel for either side may request that the judge outline the order of trial before the opening statements.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Spending too much time explaining the purpose of the opening statement and the trial process can be patronizing to the jury. The judge should outline the stages of trial so counsel does not have to do this. The judge can use an introductory instruction to outline the progress of the trial and the housekeeping details. See CACI 100-101. If the judge does not want to read the entire instruction, the points can be addressed less formally. Counsel should also be aware of the information already provided to jurors during the summons and orientation procedures. See §9.19.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.18 B. Form of presentation

It is usually advisable to present the opening statement in narrative form by telling the story of the case from the client's point of view. On establishing a case theme, see §9.26. Decide whether a chronological or some other logical manner of presenting of the facts will be meaningful to the jurors. It is often better to avoid presenting the facts in the order in which the evidence will be introduced during trial because the testimony of witnesses, particularly experts, may not occur in an ideal order, and several witnesses may give testimony on different aspects of the same issue. What is critical is that the opening explanation of the case to come be made in a manner that makes it intelligible to the jurors. On planning the opening statement, see §§9.8-9.15.

State the facts in a clear and positive fashion. For example, it is better to say "The evidence will show...." than "I believe the evidence will show...." Tell what the facts will be rather than simply referring to them in a conclusory way. Use short sentences containing easily understood language. Avoid technical language, if possible, or explain it so that its meaning can be easily understood by the jurors. A visual aid may help. See §§9.11-9.12.

Avoid repetition. Repeated use of a phrase such as "What I say is not evidence, it only describes the evidence" interrupts the narrative flow of the opening statement and weakens it. As an alternative, ask the judge to explain the attorney's role in describing (but not presenting) the evidence during the opening statement. If the judge does this, the attorneys can dispense with such remarks. On introductory remarks, see §§9.16-9.17.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.19 1. Demeanor and style

A personable, natural style of talking to the jury will make your opening statement more credible. Counsel's manner, dress, voice intonation, gesture, and stance should be appropriate to the nature of the case, the party being represented, and the county in which the case is being heard. These aspects of delivery should not appear to be contrived, but they must be planned before trial.

Keep in mind that times change, as do attorneys. A young attorney is likely to present a different opening statement than an older attorney who has tried many cases. The objective for each should be the same, however: persuading the jury, without arguing, that the client's side of the case is believable and fair.

Because jurors are more apt to trust attorneys who are natural and at ease, counsel should not appear to be patronizing, self-centered, or arrogant. Avoid such phrases as "It will be difficult for you to understand the technical aspects," "Mark my words, my evidence will establish," or "I am going to make certain representations it will be difficult for you to doubt." Do not jeopardize your credibility by immodestly "promising" or "guaranteeing" that the evidence will prove certain facts.

Rather than lecture to the jury, deliver the opening statement in a confident, relaxed, friendly, conversational, and interesting manner. Emphasize important points by varying your tone of delivery, making subtle gestures, and moving slightly closer to the jury box.

PRACTICE TIP: Investigate local practice and what the trial judge requires or permits. Some judges expect counsel to obtain the court's permission to speak away from a lectern or counsel table or to speak while seated. Although most courts permit some latitude of movement, many attorneys stay some distance from the jury throughout the opening statement, moving closer to them only as the trial progresses. By closing argument, the jurors' turf will be less sacrosanct, and counsel may move toward them with less caution.

On techniques for rehearsing the opening statement beforehand, see §9.9.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Different judges prefer different levels of formality. The best source for finding out what level of formality a judge prefers, apart from colleagues, are the bailiff or court attendant. In addition, counsel should ensure that the opening statement is in his or her own style. Counsel should avoid legalese.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/9 Opening Statement/§9.20 2. Personalizing attorney and client

§9.20 2. Personalizing attorney and client

Reintroduce yourself and your client to the jury. If the client is an entity, an individual associated with the entity (preferably an important witness in the case) should be in court during presentation of the opening statement and stand up while being introduced to the jury.

PRACTICE TIP: Consider the best way to identify the client during the opening statement and later during trial. A young child may be described as an infant as well as by name. An individual adult may be referred to by name. A corporate or an institutional client may be alluded to as "we" or "us." Counsel may wish to describe an adverse party less personally, e.g., as "the plaintiff," "the defendant," or "Defendant XYZ Corporation."

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Counsel should stand when jurors enter and exit the courtroom. Jurors notice this sign of respect. Counsel should not use first names or nicknames for parties or witnesses because it appears disrespectful and diminishes the formal nature of the proceedings. Avoid mispronouncing names, because jurors may assume that it is deliberate.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.21 C. What to avoid

An attorney trying to appear sincere and trustworthy does not want to be admonished by the court for improper argument or other improper matters in the opening statement. Even mild judicial commentary can adversely affect the jury's impression of counsel.

For detailed discussion of what constitutes attorney misconduct (including remedies such as contempt sanctions and moving for mistrial), see chap 16. On procedures for objecting to opposing counsel's improprieties during opening statement, see §§9.36-9.41.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.22 1. Improper mention of evidence

Confine your remarks during the opening statement to the evidence that you believe "in good faith will be available and admissible." Hawk v Superior Court (1974) 42 CA3d 108, 121, 116 CR 713. The opening statement itself is not evidence. See §9.2.

It is misconduct to allude to evidence in the opening statement unless there is "a good faith and reasonable basis for believing such evidence will be tendered and admitted in evidence." 42 CA3d at 121. Never mention testimony that you know will not be received in evidence and that will prejudice the jury. See Smith v Covell (1980) 100 CA3d 947, 957, 161 CR 377.

An unintentional misstatement of fact may be the basis for the granting of a mistrial or the reversal of a decision. People v Bolton (1979) 23 C3d 208, 213, 152 CR 141 (closing argument case). Although the misconduct need not be intentional, the conduct must at least be negligent in light of some legal duty of care. Matthew Zaheri Corp. v New Motor Vehicle Bd. (1997) 55 CA4th 1305, 1318 n10, 64 CR2d 705. See also People v Faught (1981) 124 CA3d 848, 859, 177 CR 637 (restrained summary of what prosecutor thought evidence would show held not to constitute misconduct, even though detailed evidence was not introduced at trial, because court and counsel agreed to omit detail and limit evidence).

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: It is improper for an attorney to state what the other side will say. If counsel is concerned that opposing counsel might do this, he or she should bring it up with the court in advance.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.23 2. Argument

It is impermissible to argue in the opening statement. See §9.2. A simple rule of thumb is that a statement is proper and not argument if a witness can testify to what is being said. It is important to state facts in a persuasive manner, however.

Counsel should not include inflammatory statements "calculated to blind the jury to the succeeding lack of proof." See Lafrenz v Stoddard (1942) 50 CA2d 1, 9, 122 P2d 374. See §9.22. Similarly, appeals to sympathy or prejudice (e.g., comments about the litigants' wealth or poverty if wealth or poverty is not relevant to an issue in the case) are improper. On impropriety of appeals to sympathy or prejudice during trial generally, see §16.73.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.24 3. Overstatement

To establish and maintain your credibility, avoid overstating or misstating the facts that will be proved or making promises you cannot keep. Convincing a jury that counsel's version of the case is correct becomes significantly more difficult for an attorney without credibility.

Be alert to overstatement or misstatement by opposing counsel. If facts stated during the opposition's opening statement are not proved during the trial, be sure to point this out to the jury during closing argument. If possible, obtain a transcript of the opposing party's opening statement. See §9.15.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.25 4. References to law

The opening statement should not discuss the law. See Williams v Goodman (1963) 214 CA2d 856, 869, 29 CR 877 (trial court did not err in restricting plaintiff's attempt to discuss the law during opening statement).

A brief reference to the law may be permitted, however, when the jurors will not otherwise understand the significance of the facts counsel intends to prove. Under such circumstances (e.g., a cause of action is founded on a statutory violation), a court might permit counsel to briefly refer to the law in the opening statement. See De Armas v Dickerman (1952) 108 CA2d 548, 553, 239 P2d 65 (court had discretion to permit plaintiff's counsel in action for rental overcharges under Housing and Rent Act of 1947 to read excerpts from Act to jury in opening statement).

PRACTICE TIP: If you intend to refer to the law in the opening statement, be sure to clear the matter with the judge during the chambers conference before trial. Otherwise, an objection to the reference might be sustained.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.26 D. Establishing case theme

To provide jurors with a framework to assimilate the evidence, counsel may want to establish a case theme in the opening statement. If a theme is introduced in the opening statement, it should be maintained throughout the trial.

A case theme may be easy for plaintiff's counsel to create. In a breach of contract case, for instance, counsel might state: "This is a case about a broken promise and the people who were hurt by that broken promise." In a personal injury case, the following theme may be appropriate: "This is a case about a boy who will never walk again and how, through no fault of his own, the gift of a normal life and a bright future was taken from him forever."

Creating a case theme may be more difficult for the defense, but counsel should be ready to respond to expected prosecution themes by explaining that, e.g., "there are always two sides to every story" or "an injured person may be responsible for his injuries if he violates safety rules and common sense."

On creating a vivid case theme to capture the jurors' imagination, see Vinson, Psychological Anchors: Influencing the Jury, 8 Litig 20 (Winter 1982).

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/9 Opening Statement/ E. Stating facts and issues/§9.27 1. Plaintiff's perspective

E. Stating facts and issues

§9.27 1. Plaintiff's perspective

Plaintiff's counsel should use the opening statement to create a favorable climate for introduction of the plaintiff's evidence. Describe the facts in terms of the issues of the case so that the jurors will understand the significance of each piece of evidence to be presented during trial. The facts should logically fit into the plaintiff's theory of recovery and suggest that the plaintiff's position is the correct one.

The facts mentioned in the opening statement must be sufficient to constitute a cause of action; otherwise the court may grant a motion for nonsuit at the conclusion of counsel's opening statement. See, e.g., Addison v Susanville Lumber, Inc. (1975) 47 CA3d 394, 405, 120 CR 737 (nonsuit granted after opening statement; plaintiff's motion to enlarge opening statement denied). On nonsuits and directed verdicts following opening statement, see §§9.40-9.41. Including too much detail in the opening statement, however, may confuse or bore the jurors. Avoid a tedious recitation of the facts.

PRACTICE TIP: Identify witnesses who will be called and briefly summarize their expected testimony. To help jurors quickly understand the significance of exhibits, identify any that will be introduced into evidence later. On trial exhibits generally, see chap 13.

Present the information in a logical manner to prevent the jurors from becoming confused when testimony is received out of order during trial. Witnesses are often not available at ideal times. Even when the appearance of witnesses can be arranged in a logical order, the significance of foundational testimony will not be apparent without explanation during the opening statement. If evidence will be introduced out of order during trial, counsel might say:

> To give you an overall picture of what we will prove, I am going to explain the facts to you as they happened rather than as they will be presented to you. We would like to present our evidence during trial in this same order, but this is not possible because the witnesses have not been able to arrange their schedules to accommodate this.

In referring to foundational statistical information, counsel might state:

> We are going to present accounting testimony and economic proof to establish the damage done to my client through the loss of profits. To reach the economic analysis of loss, thousands of documents had to be reviewed, and we will describe to you how this was done. This background statistical information is the foundation for other important evidence to be presented. Following this statistical information, Dr. Saunders, an economist from the University of California, will tell us what lost profits are and how they should be calculated.

Counsel should draw attention to important evidence and at the same time build credibility with the jury. For example, counsel might state:

> After the first phase of the trial, during which we will develop facts to establish our right to recover, we will prove my client's money losses. To do this, we will first introduce business records that in and of themselves are not very interesting. Dr. Ficht, of Columbia University, will use these records to demonstrate how my client has been damaged to the tune of over two million dollars in lost profits because of the actions of defendant.

By explaining the role that the business records will play in the trial, counsel heightens the jurors' interest in the evidence to come. By admitting that some of the evidence is not very interesting, counsel builds credibility with the jurors.

When one witness's testimony is essential to proving an important issue, counsel might want to whet the jurors' appetite by stating:

> I have discussed the general outline of our case. I have described the testimony of the witnesses who will take the stand. I hope the trial will become more lively as the witnesses begin to testify. I want to tell you about one special witness whose testimony will be of great importance. That witness is Dr. Midgely. Let me tell you about her. She teaches at the University of Southern California. She has written many articles on the subject I will be asking her about during her testimony. She has testified for other juries a number of times. She is a member of many honorary societies, including the American Medical Association and the Society of Osteopathic Physicians. We expect her to be here on Wednesday afternoon to explain to us….

Although it is sometimes a good idea to point out aspects of the plaintiff's case that refute anticipated defenses, confine your remarks to factual aspects of the plaintiff's evidence that defense counsel is likely to address. Referring to defenses that may not be made might confuse the jury and reveal weaknesses to your opponent. On disclosing weaknesses, see §9.30.

An effective way to anticipate defenses is to demonstrate the trustworthiness of the plaintiff's evidence on key disputed points. It almost always helps to describe the impressive credentials of the principal witnesses, as in the following:

As our expert economist, Dr. Brandon will be called to testify. A professor at Stanford University, she has testified many times before. She will testify on the value of my client's business and how it has been diminished in value by the State's condemning the property it was located on and requiring it to relocate. Her approach to valuation is the same as that in the principal texts written on this subject. The State of California uses this approach in its valuations. This approach is taught in virtually all American colleges and universities.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/9 Opening Statement/§9.28 2. Defendant's perspective

§9.28 2. Defendant's perspective

In addition to the concerns shared by plaintiff's counsel (see §9.27), defense counsel must try to neutralize any harmful effects made by the plaintiff's opening statement and halt any momentum achieved on the plaintiff's behalf. This is why most defense counsel choose to present their opening statement immediately following the plaintiff's rather than reserving it. See §9.7.

The defense opening statement should create skepticism about the plaintiff's case and develop an affirmative theme of its own. Defense counsel may want to remind the jurors that the opening statement is not evidence and then emphasize that there are two sides to every story. For example, counsel might say:

> Ladies and gentlemen of the jury: Plaintiff's counsel has told you the purpose of an attorney's opening statement, which is to explain how she will seek to prove her client's case. She has told you what she thinks their evidence will establish. However, you are in court to hear both sides of the matter being contested.
> When you were chosen from the jury panel, you promised to be fair and remain open-minded during the trial and during deliberations in the jury room when you reach your verdict. Let me now ask you to use that open-mindedness while I review with you what happened and how it happened. With all the facts before you, you will be able to see what really occurred. Here is what our facts will show.

As with the plaintiff's opening statement, defense counsel should state the facts that will be proved in the light most favorable to the defendant's case. For example, defense counsel in a personal injury case might state after a few introductory remarks:

> You are fortunate that the accident was observed by several people. We will call one of them, Police Officer Grant, who was in front of his home and will tell us what he observed: that the plaintiff approached the stop sign at the intersection of Main and Pine, slowed down very slightly but did not stop. He then drove directly in front of the truck driven by Frederick Blomberg, the 53-year-old employee of the defendant.

When the defendant's case is based in large part on cross-examination of the plaintiff's witnesses, it is a good idea to indicate this in the opening statement. For example, defense counsel might say:

> There are few defense witnesses in this case. One reason is that the plaintiff's witnesses can testify to the facts that prove our side of the case. I will ask the plaintiff's witnesses many questions so that you will hear all of these facts come into evidence.

This approach is appropriate when discovery has clarified what the defense can establish during trial. Be careful, however, not to give away cross-examination strategy. In fact, defense counsel may want to alert plaintiff's counsel to some areas of cross-examination but not to others.

© The Regents of the University of California

F. Handling particular problems

§9.29 1. Evidence of uncertain admissibility

Counsel who is unsure whether certain evidence will be admissible should consider a motion in limine. To protect the record, a court reporter should be present to record counsel's arguments and the court's ruling. Check local court rules for requirements that apply to motions in limine, e.g., whether written motions are required, when they must be filed. On motions in limine generally, see chap 7.

If the judge rules that the evidence is admissible, it can be incorporated into the opening statement. If the judge reserves ruling on the point and the evidence is not critical to the case, it is better not to mention the evidence during the opening statement, because if the judge ultimately rules that the evidence mentioned by counsel during the opening statement is inadmissible, opposing counsel may point out in closing argument counsel's failure of proof.

The risk of this approach, however, is that requesting a pretrial ruling on admissibility may bar the use of that evidence during trial. A judge who is not fully aware of the facts and tends to be restrictive in pretrial rulings may limit what counsel can go into during the opening statement. In some circumstances, it is better to avoid raising evidentiary issues beforehand and use the opening statement itself to explain the relevance of the evidence to come to the judge and to the jury.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/9 Opening Statement/§9.30 2. Disclosing weaknesses; avoid admissions

§9.30 2. Disclosing weaknesses; avoid admissions

All cases that are tried have some weaknesses. When possible, it is better to be the first person to disclose the weaknesses that the opposing party is likely to dwell on. Jurors are usually impressed when attorneys face up to the weaknesses of their own case before their opponents point them out. Explaining any mitigating factors can also lessen the impact of damaging evidence.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Credibility is built by projecting a sense of character and integrity, which includes conceding undisputed points and presenting the flaws of the case. Counsel can stipulate to any undisputed evidence and get credit for being reasonable and straightforward.

When disclosing weaknesses, however, take care not to make inadvertent admissions. To make an admission in the opening statement is to invite opposing counsel to seize it during closing argument as a point you were forced to concede. Although an opening statement is not evidence, counsel's unequivocal admission of fact can constitute a binding admission. See Miller v Johnston (1969) 270 CA2d 289, 297, 75 CR 699. On judicial admissions made on the record, see §§14.43-14.46.

PRACTICE TIP: Note any admissions made during your opponent's opening statement. It may be worthwhile to obtain an early transcript of the opening statement and review it for any admissions or for the exact wording of the admission made. See §9.15. Emphasize the admission your opponent made during your closing argument to strengthen your client's side of the story.

Although a matter that has been admitted need no longer be proved or disproved, do not rely on an opposing counsel's admission in the opening statement, without more, to dispense with the need for evidence on the point. It may be worthwhile to consider asking the court (outside the jury's presence) to preinstruct the jury that the admitted matter is no longer in dispute and for purposes of the trial must be accepted as true. See §14.45. However, it is less risky to go ahead and present evidence to the trier of fact. The trial court or a reviewing court may hold that no admission occurred, that the admission was not binding, or that the admission did not waive the party's right to appeal the point. See, e.g., Irwin v Pacific Southwest Airlines (1982) 133 CA3d 709, 714, 184 CR 228 (admission lacked "gravity of a complete relinquishment of rights" under circumstances of case). Note that the facts in Irwin involved admission of liability in the opening statement of the damages phase of trial, which the reviewing court held did not preclude the defendant from appealing issues pertaining to liability found earlier on summary judgment.

§9.31 3. Reading from pleadings

Counsel should not read from the pleadings during the opening statement. The language is usually stilted and formal in tone. If the facts alleged in the complaint or answer are important, it is better to simply state what the party said.

Alternatively, an enlargement of the sentence or paragraph could be projected onto a screen for the jury to view as you explain the significance of the facts alleged in the pleading. Check with the court before trial on using visual aids. Keep in mind, however, that your opponent may move to amend the pleadings, even orally, during the trial.

Further research: Amending the pleadings before or during trial is discussed in §§6.87-6.93 and 18.103-18.123. On developing visual aids for the opening statement, see §§9.11-9.12; on trial exhibits generally, see chap 13.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/9 Opening Statement/§9.32 4. Explaining special situations

§9.32 4. Explaining special situations

Inform the jury of any matters that will arise during the trial that may not be familiar to them. For example, if the testimony of a witness will be elicited through an interpreter, explain this to the jury during the opening statement. On interpreters and translators, see §§11.28-11.43.

If testimony will be introduced through depositions and read into the record, explain what depositions are, how the deposition was taken, why deposition testimony is being used (e.g., the witness is unavailable), and how deposition testimony will be introduced during the trial.

When a guardian ad litem has been appointed to represent a minor or an incompetent person under CCP §372, explain the process and the reason for it to the jurors during the opening statement. See California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 9 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Counsel should inquire during voir dire if anyone speaks the language to be interpreted. If any special terminology is used, it should be clearly defined, and if it is important, it should be included in a glossary for each juror. Although counsel or experts might define the uncommon term, the definition will soon be lost to the jurors. In addition, counsel should consider asking the judge to explain to the jurors in advance any anticipated special situations or delays.

§9.33 G. Discussing damages

Trial attorneys differ on whether damages should be discussed during the opening statement. Some attorneys believe that the jury should know how much is at issue from the outset. Others believe that only facts should be included in the opening statement, to set the stage for a detailed discussion of damages during closing argument.

For example, many plaintiffs' personal injury attorneys prefer not to specify a specific amount for damages in the opening statement because:

- The jurors might be alienated by a seemingly large dollar amount stated at the beginning of trial before they have heard the evidence that justifies the size of the reward that plaintiff's counsel is requesting;
- The opening statement may impair counsel's ability to effectively state a different amount later in the trial if warranted by the evidence that comes in;
- The proof may not live up to the jurors' expectations that arose when they heard the damages amount specified in the opening statement; or
- Defense counsel may be able to use the stated amount to portray the plaintiff as overreaching.

Whether or not plaintiff's counsel decides to specify the exact amount of damages at issue in the trial, the opening statement should provide enough information to indicate the level of damages suffered by the plaintiff. On handling damages in closing argument, see §19.33.

When punitive damages are claimed, defense counsel should move for a protective order to bar the plaintiff's attorney from introducing evidence of the defendant's profits or financial condition until the plaintiff establishes a prima facie case of liability for damages under CC §3294. See CC §3295(b). Defense counsel should also consider moving to exclude any evidence of the defendant's profits or financial condition until the trier of fact returns a verdict for the plaintiff awarding actual damages and finds that the defendant is guilty of fraud, malice, or oppression under CC §3294. See CC §3295(d). Defense counsel should request that references to specific amounts sought in punitive damages be excluded. CC §3295(e). On handling the issue of punitive damages as a motion in limine, see §9.14.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: It is common for plaintiff's counsel to not mention the amount of damages, only to have the defense mention a large figure to shock the jury and create a negative tone for the plaintiff. Counsel should carefully consider this in the opening statement.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/9 Opening Statement/§9.34 H. Concluding opening statement

§9.34 H. Concluding opening statement

Trial attorneys usually conclude their opening statements by indicating the verdict they desire for their clients. For example, a plaintiff's attorney could say:

> This concludes the outline of my client's case. I am sure you will keep an open mind until all the evidence is in. When you have heard all the evidence, I will ask that you find for my client. Thank you for the interest with which you have followed my remarks.

Similarly, defense counsel might state:

> I have taken somewhat less time to explain the case than my opponent. Ours is a simple story with a few witnesses who will explain what happened so that we can all understand it, just as it happened. After all the evidence is in, my opponent and I will both review the evidence with you, and I will ask you to return a verdict in favor of the defendant. I have enjoyed the opportunity to explain our case to you. Thank you.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: The best closings are short: "Thank you" is all counsel needs to say.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.35 VI. OPENING STATEMENT IN BENCH TRIAL

It is good practice to give an opening statement in a bench trial if the judge permits it. In spite of legal training and experience, a judge is not immune from forming an impression about a case, and hearing an opening statement may favorably impress the judge with the justness of your client's cause.

An opening statement that raises the issues and outlines the facts that you expect to prove during the trial can assist the judge. A trial judge who has not been assigned the case until immediately before the trial may not be completely familiar with all the issues and the positions of the various parties. A coherent opening statement may clarify certain issues even for a judge who has managed the case from the beginning.

In addition to being presented in a logical and organized manner, the facts should be sufficiently detailed to withstand a motion for nonsuit. See §9.40.

Although many of the same points that apply in a jury trial are also useful in a bench trial, an opening statement for the judge alone should be structured somewhat differently. Counsel need not be concerned with an introduction and other elementary aspects of the opening statement. Mentioning evidence that may not be admitted is also not as much of a concern. For discussion of bench trials generally, see chap 24.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Although counsel should be prepared to provide a brief opening statement, counsel should ask the judge if he or she would like to hear one before proceeding.

© The Regents of the University of California

VII. PROCEDURES FOR OPPOSING PARTY

A. Making objections

§9.36 1. Right to object during opposing party's opening statement

Counsel has an absolute right to interrupt and object to an improper argument made during an opponent's opening statement. Smith v Covell (1980) 100 CA3d 947, 957, 161 CR 377. See Mudrick v Market St. Ry. (1938) 11 C2d 724, 737, 81 P2d 950.

EXAMPLE: It is improper during opening statement for a plaintiff's attorney to comment on the plaintiff's poverty and the defendant's wealth, or to refer to a substance manufactured by the defendant as cancer-producing when cancer is not one of the injuries in question.

Failure to make a timely objection and to request an admonition when opposing counsel has committed misconduct usually precludes counsel from raising the point as error on appeal. See Neumann v Bishop (1976) 59 CA3d 451, 477, 130 CR 786. On waiver, see §15.24. After the court admonishes offending counsel, it gives the jury a cautionary instruction to disregard the improper remarks. If the damage caused by the misconduct is irreversible and would prevent the client from receiving a fair trial, counsel should also move for a mistrial. See §§18.82-18.102. On making trial objections and protecting the record, see chap 15.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: The most prepared and effective attorneys anticipate areas of potential damage and obtain rulings in advance, or at least provide the judge with advance warning that an issue of contention is pending. Courts have the ability to respond more thoughtfully to objections and concerns presented in advance of the commencement of trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.37 2. State specific grounds for objection

The grounds for the objection must be specified. See Evid C §353. When an improper statement made during the opening statement is highly prejudicial, a motion for mistrial may be appropriate. See §§9.36, 16.95.

Some of the possible grounds for objection include an attorney's:

- Engaging in argument. See Lafrenz v Stoddard (1942) 50 CA2d 1, 7, 122 P2d 374; §9.23.
- Referring to irrelevant matter. See Evid C §350; §10.13.
- Insinuating as facts matters that the attorney knows are not facts and that could not be put into evidence. See Smith v Covell (1980) 100 CA3d 947, 957, 161 CR 377; §16.72.
- Referring to inadmissible evidence. See Evid C §352; Hawk v Superior Court (1974) 42 CA3d 108, 116 CR 713; §9.22.
- Discussing the law. See Williams v Goodman (1963) 214 CA2d 856, 869, 29 CR 877; §9.25.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.38 3. Handle objections carefully: When not to object

Because the jury may form a negative impression of an attorney who objects too often or whose objections are overruled by the court, particularly at an early stage of the trial, objections should be made during the opponent's opening statement only for good reason. This stigma can be avoided by asking the court to rule on problem areas in motions in limine. See chap 7. Counsel may also raise an objection during the opponent's opening statement in the following manner:

> Your Honor, does this portion of the opening go beyond some of the early rulings made by the court?

When a particularly forceful opening statement is being made and a valid objection is available, consider making the objection both to preserve the record and to break the opening statement's effect. The decision to object should be made with caution, however, because jurors generally do not welcome interruptions and arguments unless counsel wins the ruling or they agree with counsel.

Experienced attorneys sometimes decide not to object to an exaggeration that they can point out during closing argument as an unkept promise. If the objectionable matter is flagrant (e.g., counsel refers to evidence or facts that are clearly inadmissible and prejudicial), however, counsel should object and request the judge to admonish opposing counsel and instruct the jury to disregard the reference. If the matter is highly prejudicial, consider moving for a mistrial. On misconduct of counsel, see §§16.66-16.90. On avoiding waiver of the objection, see §15.24.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Most experienced trial lawyers rarely object. If an objection concerns a significant matter, it can be better handled in advance through, e.g., an in limine motion. From the perspective of jurors, objections are truly a lose-lose proposition for the objecting lawyer. If the lawyer wins the objection and the evidence is excluded, the jurors wonder what is being kept from them and why. If the objecting lawyer loses, then he or she is considered a loser.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.39 B. Reserving comments for closing argument

During the opening statement, notes should be taken of what is said by opposing counsel. If something is said that is not later substantiated by the evidence, counsel can point out to the jury during closing argument that opposing counsel has failed to prove what was claimed. If the promise is so exaggerated or flagrant that it amounts to misconduct, counsel should make an objection and request the judge to admonish opposing counsel and instruct the jury. See §§9.24, 16.92-16.93.

It may also be a good idea to obtain an early transcript of the opening statement. See §9.15. If opposing counsel's opening statement seems to have overstepped the proof, ask the court reporter to mark that portion of the transcript (out of the jurors' presence) and have it transcribed. The transcript can be helpful during closing argument when what opposing counsel said during the opening statement can be compared to the evidence proved during trial.

Obtaining a transcript of the opening statement can also be helpful in ascertaining whether any admissions made by opposing counsel can be used later during trial or closing argument. See §9.15.

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Moving for nonsuit or directed verdict after opening statement

§9.40 1. Nonsuit

A defendant may move for a judgment of nonsuit after the plaintiff's opening statement. CCP §581c(a). See Palazzi v Air Cargo Terminals, Inc. (1966) 244 CA2d 190, 194, 52 CR 817. If the motion is granted, unless otherwise specified in the order for judgment, a judgment for nonsuit is a judgment on the merits. CCP §581c(c).

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: These motions are usually anticipated and it is advisable for counsel to have a pocket brief ready to give the judge when making the motion.

A nonsuit may be granted only when it is clear that counsel has undertaken to state all the facts that counsel expects to prove and it is plainly evident that they will not constitute a cause of action. Rokos v Peck (1986) 182 CA3d 604, 611, 227 CR 480 (nonsuit affirmed); Addison v Susanville Lumber, Inc. (1975) 47 CA3d 394, 398, 120 CR 737 (same). See Baber v Napa State Hosp. (1989) 209 CA3d 213, 257 CR 55 (nonsuit reversed).

Nonsuits after opening statements are generally disfavored; in First Amendment or defamation actions, however, they may be a "favored remedy." See Jensen v Hewlett Packard Co. (1993) 14 CA4th 958, 965, 18 CR2d 83.

In considering the motion, the court must presume that the plaintiff will prove all of those facts and all favorable inferences reasonably drawn from those facts. Enterprise Leasing Corp. v Shugart Corp. (1991) 231 CA3d 737, 747, 282 CR 620 (nonsuit reversed); Smith v Roach (1975) 53 CA3d 893, 897, 126 CR 29 (nonsuit reversed). See Cole v State (1970) 11 CA3d 671, 90 CR 74 (nonsuit affirmed).

The motion should state the precise grounds on which it is made, with the defects in the plaintiff's case clearly and particularly indicated. John Norton Farms v Todagco (1981) 124 CA3d 149, 161, 177 CR 215. In ruling on the motion, the trial court is restricted to considering only the grounds stated in the motion and the precise contents of the plaintiff's opening statement. A nonsuit is improper if the grounds specified in the motion are insufficient even though other good but unstated grounds exist. Hurn v Woods (1982) 132 CA3d 896, 900, 183 CR 495.

The parties may stipulate that the trial court may also consider evidentiary exhibits that would probably be offered at trial had the motion not been made. See Loral Corp. v Moyes (1985) 174 CA3d 268, 272, 219 CR 836. If the parties stipulate that the trial court may consider such evidence, neither party may argue on appeal that the trial judge improperly relied on the stipulated evidence in ruling on the motion. John Norton Farms v Todagco, supra.

A judgment for nonsuit will be reversed when plaintiff's counsel requests permission to enlarge the opening statement but is not given a reasonable opportunity to add essential facts that were omitted from it. Rodin v American Can Co. (1955) 133 CA2d 524, 534, 284 P2d 530. But see Addison v Susanville Lumber, Inc., supra (trial court's denial of motion to enlarge was upheld and judgment of nonsuit affirmed). The courts generally recognize, however, that a plaintiff should ordinarily be given an opportunity to add to the opening statement after a motion for nonsuit, but that the rule does not apply if plaintiff's counsel never made a request to enlarge the opening statement. See John Norton Farms v Todagco, supra. For further discussion of motions for nonsuit after opening statement, see §§18.7-18.34.

© The Regents of the University of California

§9.41 2. Directed verdict

A plaintiff can move for directed verdict after the defendant's opening statement. The criteria for granting a motion for a directed verdict are the same as for the granting of a motion for nonsuit following the plaintiff's opening statement. See Nuffer v Insurance Co. of N. Am. (1965) 236 CA2d 349, 45 CR 918. See also §9.40.

A judgment on a directed verdict is a judgment on the merits. See 7 Witkin, California Procedure, Trial §420 (5th ed 2008). On procedures for moving for directed verdict, see §§18.35-18.56.

§10.1 I. SCOPE OF CHAPTER

The purpose of this chapter is to provide an overview of evidentiary rules to familiarize trial counsel with common issues that arise when presenting evidence at trial. For more information about each evidentiary rule, see the additional resources listed in each section and in the bibliography in §10.87.

More detailed discussions of using specific types of evidence at trial are found in chaps 11-15. On other problems that should be considered when preparing for trial, see chap 3.

II. PREPARE TO USE EVIDENCE AT TRIAL

§10.2 A. Identify evidence to use at trial

Begin by analyzing the case and issues you must prove or disprove at trial, then identify the evidence needed to meet those goals. See chap 3 for analyzing the case, preparing an issue outline, and identifying the evidence that will prove your side of the case.

Become familiar with the most commonly encountered evidentiary rules by completing the following steps:

___ 1. Read through Evid C §§1-1605.

___ 2. As you read the Evidence Code, identify the code sections that apply to the evidence you will use (see §10.2; see also issue outline in §3.17).

___ 3. Make photocopies of the applicable code sections.

___ 4. Review the annotations of that code section for case law on the evidentiary issues.

___ 5. Review §§10.5-10.86 of this chapter.

___ 6. Skim applicable parts of an evidence benchbook (see §10.87 for bibliography).

___ 7. Review other resources for pretrial preparation and in-court use. (See the bibliography in §10.87. Of particular importance are Effective Introduction of Evidence in California (2d ed Cal CEB 2000) and California Evidentiary Foundations or its federal counterpart, Evidentiary Foundations, which provide model transcripts for introducing specific types of evidence.)

___ 8. Check local rules for any special procedures or evidentiary requirements.

___ 9. Prepare for evidentiary objections at trial by reviewing chap 15 of this book.

___ 10. Prepare a motion in limine (see chap 7), or legal memorandum (see §3.32) containing arguments on the important evidentiary issues.

§10.4 C. Review evidence in light of evidentiary rules

Use the sections in this chapter as a checklist to identify potential evidentiary problem areas. For example, do you have the burden of proof on an issue? See §10.6. Is there a presumption that will aid or hinder your proof of a fact? See §§10.8-10.12. Is there a hearsay problem with the anticipated testimony of a witness? See §§10.17-10.27.

III. BURDENS AND PRESUMPTIONS

§10.5 A. Consider burdens and presumptions when preparing to present evidence at trial

When preparing for trial, keep in mind that there are two types of burdens:

- The burden of proof or persuasion (see §10.6); and
- The burden of producing evidence (see §10.7).

Identify which party has which burden for each issue in the case, and be prepared to satisfy the burden and to object or point out when opposing counsel fails to satisfy the burden. Become familiar with presumptions that place and shift either type of burden onto the parties in the case. See §§10.8-10.12.

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.6 B. Burden of proof

The burden of proof is defined as producing a required degree "of belief concerning a fact in the mind of the trier of fact or the court." Evid C §115; see also Comment to Evid C §500. The amount of evidence necessary to satisfy the burden depends on the type of issue; standards range from raising a reasonable doubt about the existence or nonexistence of a fact to establishing the fact by a preponderance of the evidence or by clear and convincing evidence. Evid C §§115, 502. It is up to the factfinder to decide whether the party has met the burden.

In civil cases, the burden is usually by a preponderance, although the law may require that in certain situations proof must be made by clear and convincing evidence. See Evid C §115; Weiner v Fleischman (1991) 54 C3d 476, 483, 286 CR 40 (courts must look to constitutional, statutory, or decisional law to determine whether burden of proof is higher than preponderance of the evidence; in oral joint venture case, burden of proof was preponderance of evidence, not higher); see, e.g., CC §3294(a) (clear and convincing evidence required to prove claim for punitive damages).

Generally, each party has the burden of proof as to each fact, the existence or nonexistence of which is essential to the party's claim for relief or defense. Evid C §500. There are four additional situations in which the Evidence Code requires a particular party to carry the burden of proof:

- Claims of a crime or wrongdoing (Evid C §520);
- Claims of failure to exercise the requisite degree of care (Evid C §521);
- Claims of insanity (Evid C §522); and
- Historic locations of rivers, streams, and other bodies of water or authority of the state (Evid C §523).

In addition, certain presumptions shift the burden of proof to the party opposing the existence of the presumed fact. See §10.12.

Tactically, it is important to be aware of burdens of proof because you must be sure:

- Not to assume a burden your client does not have;
- To satisfy the burden when required to do so; and
- That the jury instructions are phrased properly.

PRACTICE TIP: Experienced trial counsel usually explain their client's burden of proof to the jury carefully and graphically with analogies to be sure the jurors understand how minimal these standards are. You could say, for example, "Imagine the statue of Justice holding the scales up in her right hand. If the scales are balanced, then each side has an equal amount of evidence supporting their case. If the scales tip ever so slightly to one side, then that side has the preponderance of the evidence, and has met its burden of proof."

§10.7 C. Burden of producing evidence

Generally, a party with a burden of proof as to a fact has the initial burden of producing some evidence as to the particular fact. Evid C §550(b). Also, if the state of the evidence would require the factfinder to make a finding against a party, the burden to produce evidence is shifted to the party opposing that fact (Evid C §550(a)), i.e., if there is a presumption that a fact is true (see §§10.8-10.12 for presumptions), it is up to the party opposing that fact to produce some evidence that it is not true.

These burdens are delegated according to the pleadings or procedures, or by particular presumptions. See §§10.8-10.12 for presumptions. If the parties question or dispute which party carries these burdens, the trial judge decides, with or without briefs or argument by counsel. A party that does not meet the burden of producing evidence may face a directed verdict in certain situations.

§10.8 D. Presumptions

A presumption is an assumption of facts required by law to be made from another fact or groups of facts. Evid C §600(a). A presumption can also place or shift burdens of proof and burdens of producing evidence among the parties. A presumption is either conclusive or rebuttable. Evid C §601. There are about 40 presumptions in Evid C §§600-670 and elsewhere.

Educate yourself on the presumptions relevant to the specific circumstances of your case because presumptions can, for example, form the basis for motions for directed verdict and can resolve which jury instructions should be given.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/10 Evidence Overview/§10.9 1. Conclusive presumptions

§10.9 1. Conclusive presumptions

Conclusive presumptions require the trier of fact to find the existence of the presumed facts if the conditions of the presumption are met, and the opposing party is not permitted to introduce evidence to contradict or rebut the existence of the presumed facts. See Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 48 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009). Conclusive presumptions found in the Evidence Code include:

- Facts recited in a written instrument (Evid C §622);
- Effect of a party's statement or conduct (Evid C §623); and
- Tenant cannot deny landlord's title (Evid C §624).

EXAMPLE: Tenant rented an apartment from landlord. When tenant failed to pay rent, landlord filed an unlawful detainer action. Tenant found out that landlord did not really own the property (it was owned by the landlord's father), but, under Evid C §624, tenant cannot present evidence that would deny landlord's title to the property.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/10 Evidence Overview/§10.10 2. Rebuttable presumptions

§10.10 2. Rebuttable presumptions

Rebuttable presumptions are further divided into two main groups—those that place the burden of proof and those that place the burden of producing evidence. Evid C §601. See §§10.11-10.12 for an explanation and list of each type.

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.11 a. Presumptions concerning burden of producing evidence

When a presumption affects the burden of producing evidence, the trier of fact assumes the existence of the presumed fact unless the opponent of the fact presents evidence to support a finding of its nonexistence. If the opponent presents such evidence, the trier of fact weighs the evidence and decides the existence or nonexistence of the fact, regardless of the presumption. See Evid C §§603-604.

Presumptions on producing evidence found in the Evidence Code are:

- Money delivered by one person to another is presumed to have been due to the latter (Evid C §631);
- Thing delivered by one person to another is presumed to have belonged to the latter (Evid C §632);
- Obligation given back to debtor is presumed to have been paid (Evid C §633);
- Person in possession of order on himself or herself for the payment of money, or delivery of a thing, is presumed to have been paid the money or delivered the thing (Evid C §634);
- Obligation possessed by creditor is presumed not to have been paid (Evid C §635);
- Payment of past-due rent or installments is presumed from a receipt for later rent or installments (Evid C §636);
- Things possessed are assumed to be owned (Evid C §637);
- Person who exercises acts of ownership over property is presumed to be owner (Evid C §638);
- A judgment, when not conclusive, is presumed to have correctly determined parties' rights, but there is no presumption that the facts essential to the judgment have been correctly determined (Evid C §639);
- A writing is presumed to have been dated correctly (Evid C §640);
- A letter correctly addressed and properly mailed is presumed to have been received in ordinary course of mail (Evid C §641);
- Conveyance by someone having duty to convey real property is presumed to have been conveyed (Evid C §642);
- Authenticity of ancient document at least 30 years old is presumed if specified conditions met (Evid C §643);
- Book purporting to be published by public authority is presumed as such (Evid C §644);
- Book purporting to contain reports of cases is presumed to contain correct reports of such cases (Evid C §645);
- Printed materials purporting to be from particular newspaper or periodical are presumed to be from that source (Evid C §645.1);
- Res ipsa loquitur presumption gives rise to jury instructions on burden of producing evidence (Evid C §646); and
- Return of registered process server establishes presumption of facts stated in return (Evid C §647).

§10.12 b. Presumptions concerning burden of proof

A presumption affecting the burden of proof imposes on the party against whom the presumption operates the burden of proving the nonexistence of the presumed fact by meeting the standard of proof required by law for that type of fact. See §10.6 on burden of proof. Evid C §§605-606.

EXAMPLE: Counsel presents a copy of the deed showing that A is the owner of legal title to real property. Under Evid C §662, A is also presumed to own the full beneficial title. The burden then shifts to B to prove by clear and convincing evidence that A does not own full beneficial title.

Burden of proof presumptions, including those found in the Evidence Code, are:

- Owner of legal title to property is presumed to be owner of beneficial title (Evid C §662);
- Ceremonial marriage is presumed to be valid (Evid C §663);
- Official duty is presumed to be regularly performed (Evid C §664);
- A person is presumed to intend the ordinary consequences of voluntary act (Evid C §665);
- Judicial action is presumed to be a lawful exercise of jurisdiction (Evid C §666);
- Death of person is presumed if that person has not been heard from in 5 years (Evid C §667);
- Unlawful intent is presumed from commission of an unlawful act (Evid C §668);
- Failure of a person to exercise due care is presumed if that person violated a statute, ordinance, or regulation of a public entity, and the violation proximately caused death or injury to person or property (Evid C §§669-669.1);
- City or county enacting building restrictions through ordinances bears burden of proof (Evid C §669.5);
- Copy of a check and of a bank statement showing payment of check by bank creates presumption that check has been paid (Evid C §670); and
- Rebuttable presumption of paternity affecting burden of proof is operative under specified conditions (Fam C §7555).

IV. RELEVANCE

§10.13 A. Generally admissible

Evidence must be relevant to be admissible (Evid C §350), and all relevant evidence is admissible unless a statute provides that it is not admissible. Evid C §351. "Relevant" evidence is evidence "having any tendency in reason to prove or disprove any disputed fact that is of consequence to the determination of the action." Evid C §210. The relevance of most evidence is apparent without reference to other evidence. See California Trial Objections, chap 17 (Cal CEB Annual). In some situations, additional facts are necessary to show relevance, and the burden rests on the proponent of the evidence to provide those facts and to establish relevance. Evid C §403. See generally Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 21 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009). (Note: For the remainder of this chapter, the two books referred to above will be cited as California Trial Objections and California Evidence Benchbook, respectively.)

Two types of evidence are relevant in trial: that which is probative of a witness's credibility (see §10.14) and that which is probative of a disputed material fact or issue (see §10.15) as determined by the substantive law governing the case.

PRACTICE TIP: If opposing counsel objects that your evidence is not relevant, you should be able to immediately articulate for the trial judge the precise relevance of each piece of evidence offered. Once a relevant purpose is identified, the burden shifts to the opponent of the evidence to show why it should be excluded.

EXAMPLE 1: In a slip and fall case, defendant disputes that he owns the property where plaintiff fell. Plaintiff asks defendant if he purchased insurance on the property. Defendant objects that evidence concerning insurance is not admissible under Evid C §1155 (see §§10.52-10.54). Plaintiff explains to the court that the evidence is relevant to show that defendant is the owner of the property (not to prove negligence or other wrongdoing). Under this analysis, purchasing insurance is an act of ownership that would presume ownership and the burden then shifts to defendant to show why it should be excluded.

EXAMPLE 2: In an automobile/truck collision case, plaintiff asks defendant-driver about prior accidents. Defendant, ABC Truck Company, objects. Plaintiff's counsel then says:

"Your Honor, evidence of the defendant's involvement in prior accidents while employed for ABC Truck Company is relevant to plaintiff's negligent entrustment claim against ABC Truck Company. ABC denies that they were negligent in entrusting the operation of the truck to defendant, and this evidence proves that ABC knew or should have known of defendant's incompetence based on these previous accidents."

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.14 B. Credibility and understanding the witness

Relevant evidence includes that concerning the credibility of a witness or hearsay declarant (Evid C §210), plus evidence created solely for the trial or to aid the jurors in understanding a witness's testimony. People v McDaniel (1976) 16 C3d 156, 174, 127 CR 467; Culpepper v Volkswagen of Am., Inc. (1973) 33 CA3d 510, 521, 109 CR 110.

A witness's credibility is always at issue. Evidence Code §780 and its corollary in CACI 107 or 5004, which are identical instructions, provide an excellent guide for analyzing credibility issues. See also BAJI 2.20. Evidence probative of the witness's competency or testimonial capacities is generally deemed relevant. See §§10.62-10.65.

Evidence that goes only generally to the witness's credibility, as opposed to the witness's testimonial capacities, is usually strictly limited to brief background information like age, residence, family, job, and outside activities. Trial lawyers like to begin direct examination with this type of general background to warm up the witness and get the jury to like and identify with the witness. When pushed for a specific theory of relevance, the advocate can reply that it provides a standard or base line for testing the witness's demeanor when he gets to important testimony. Another response can be the old standby, "It's just background, Your Honor."

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/10 Evidence Overview/§10.15 C. Material fact or issue

§10.15 C. Material fact or issue

The second type of relevant evidence is that which is probative of a disputed fact or a material issue, also known as "logical" relevance. The keys to ascertaining whether evidence is relevant are the tests of "probative" and "material."

"Probative" means that the evidence tends to make the fact or issue more or less likely to have occurred or be true. The threshold here is very low: "any tendency in reason to prove or disprove." Evid C §210. Common sense is counsel's best tool with this analysis.

"Material" means that the evidence has a relationship to a matter that is provable in the action based on the substantive law governing the case, i.e., the tendency of the evidence to prove or disprove any disputed fact that is of consequence to resolution of this particular action. Evidence that does not relate to a matter at issue is immaterial. See People v Hill (1992) 3 CA4th 16, 29, 4 CR2d 258, disapproved on other grounds in People v Nesler (1997) 16 C4th 561, 582 n5, 66 CR2d 454.

PRACTICE TIP: Consider all the different ways in which an important piece of evidence might be material or logically relevant. Offered for one purpose, it might be inadmissible; offered for another, it might be allowed.

EXAMPLE: In a slip-and-fall case, defendant disputes that he owns the property where plaintiff fell. Plaintiff asks defendant if he purchased insurance on the property. This evidence is material because it makes it more likely that defendant is the owner of the property. The evidence is not material to show that defendant is able to pay a judgment, because ability to pay is not an issue at the trial.

§10.16 D. Court's discretion to exclude relevant evidence

The court has discretion under Evid C §352 to exclude evidence if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the probability that if it is admitted it will:

- Take too much time; or
- Create a substantial danger of:
- Undue prejudice;
- Confusing the issues; or
- Misleading the jury.

The best time to raise §352 issues is in an in limine motion so that the jury will never hear the evidence. With such issues, it is particularly vital that the judge order opposing counsel to admonish witnesses not to volunteer the offending evidence. See §7.3.

V. HEARSAY

§10.17 A. Hearsay generally not admissible

Hearsay evidence is evidence of a statement (Evid C §1200):

- Made other than by the witness while testifying at the hearing; and
- Offered to prove the truth of the matter stated.

Hearsay is inadmissible except as provided by law. Evid C §1200(b); see Evid C §§1220-1370 for exceptions and exclusions to the hearsay rule.

NOTE: Hearsay statements are often characterized as "out of court" statements. This is a shorthand way of saying that the statement was made sometime or somewhere other than by the witness while currently testifying on the stand. Hearsay statements include, of course, statements made in court at another time or in other proceedings, so while the phrase "out of court" is useful, it is not completely accurate.

To decide whether evidence is hearsay, the technical analysis is to ask whether it is:

- A statement (see §10.18);
- Made other than by the witness while testifying on the stand (see Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 1 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009)); and
- Offered to prove the truth of the matter being stated (see §10.19).

As a practical matter, the question counsel should ask is:

- Whom do I want to cross-examine about this statement?

If the answer is someone other than the witness sitting on the stand, then the testimony is probably hearsay. This practical test recognizes that the hearsay objection is ultimately rooted in the right to cross-examine the witness who has personal knowledge of the testimony being offered.

Further research: For a complete discussion of hearsay issues, see Evidence Benchbook, chap 1; California Trial Objections, chap 19 (Cal CEB Annual).

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.18 1. Statement defined

A statement is an "oral or written verbal expression" or nonverbal conduct meant to substitute for oral or written verbal expressions. Evid C §225.

An issue can arise as to whether something someone says or does is a hearsay statement. When someone asks a question, for example, is that a statement? Another example is when someone nods his head up and down. The key to determining whether the statement or conduct is an assertion is to ask whether any information was conveyed. If the person nodding his head intended to convey assent, the conduct is considered hearsay. See Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 1 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.19 2. For truth of matter asserted or stated

The most difficult hearsay analysis is whether the evidence is offered for the truth of the matter stated. If the statement can be offered for any other reason, it is not hearsay.

EXAMPLE: The statement, "the bystander said the light was green," is hearsay only if it is offered to prove that the light was green. It is not hearsay if the statement is offered to prove any other material fact, e.g., that the bystander could see, the bystander was or was not colorblind, the light was operating, the bystander was a liar, the bystander could speak, or the witness could hear.

See Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 1 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.20 B. Nonhearsay statements

If statements do not meet the three criteria in §10.17, they are not hearsay. Generally, nonhearsay statements are offered for purposes other than showing the truth of the matter asserted, including:

Statements offered to show the effect on the hearer. Evidence of statements showing the knowledge or belief of someone who heard the statement are not hearsay. See Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 1 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009); California Trial Objections, chap 19 (Cal CEB Annual).

EXAMPLE 1: Evidence that A said, "The sidewalk is cracked," to a homeowner is hearsay when offered to prove that the sidewalk was cracked at the time of the statement but not hearsay if offered to prove that the homeowner had notice of a dangerous condition.

EXAMPLE 2: B accompanied C into a dangerous place. B offers evidence that C said, "Come with me, I'm from the public utility," to show that B acted reasonably in the circumstances, regardless of the truth of the statement.

Verbal acts. Statements to which the law affixes legal consequences are not hearsay. See Evidence Benchbook, chap 1; Trial Objections, chap 19.

EXAMPLE 1: Statements offered to show the words of an offer and acceptance of a contract or warranty.

EXAMPLE 2: Statements offered to show defamation.

Circumstantial evidence. Statements offered to inferentially prove the declarant's state of mind are not hearsay. See Evidence Benchbook, chap 1; Trial Objections, chap 19.

EXAMPLE 1: Defendant said, "I am Queen Elizabeth," as evidence of insanity.

EXAMPLE 2: Defendant's conflicting statement about his whereabouts at the time of the crime can be shown as evidence of consciousness of guilt.

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.21 C. Exceptions to hearsay rule

If the evidence is hearsay after conducting the three-step analysis explained in §10.17, try to find a hearsay exception or exclusion that would allow the evidence to be admitted. The Evidence Code contains most of the exceptions and exclusions, but other codes and court decisions can also create exceptions to the exclusion of hearsay. See People v Otto (2001) 26 C4th 200, 206, 109 CR2d 327. The more important exceptions for use in civil cases are discussed in §§10.22-10.27.

Further research: For a complete discussion of the hearsay exceptions, see Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chaps 2-18 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009); California Trial Objections, chap 19 (Cal CEB Annual).

§10.22 1. Admissions or statements attributed to a party

Any statement of a party, if relevant, may be offered against that party, but it cannot be offered by that party. Evid C §1220. These statements (Evid C §§1220-1227) are further classified as:

Personal admissions. These statements, made at any time by a party to a lawsuit, are admissible if they are relevant, typically because the truth of the matter in the statement helps to prove some element of the other party's claim or defense, or disprove some element of the declarant's claim or defense. Note that the statement need not have been against the party's interest when it was made. Evid C §1220. See Dincau v Tamayose (1982) 131 CA3d 780, 182 CR 855.

Adoptive admissions. These are admissible if a party with knowledge of the context of a statement manifests an adoption of the statement or a belief in the truth of the statement. Evid C §1221. For example, evidence that a party remained silent when introduced as a partner in a firm was admitted to show that the party was in fact a partner. See J & J Builders Supply v Caffin (1967) 248 CA2d 292, 56 CR 365.

Authorized admission. A party may authorize another to speak for him or her and any statements made by the authorized spokesperson are admissible. The foundational fact of authority to speak about the subject matter must be shown. Evid C §1222. See Dincau v Tamayose, supra.

Statement of declarant whose liability or breach of duty is also in issue. A statement made by someone whose own liability or breach of duty is in issue can be admitted against a party if that party's liability depends on the declarant's liability. Evid C §1224.

Statements of minor children. Children's statements are admissible in actions brought for their own injuries. Evid C §1226.

Statements of decedents. These are admissible against plaintiffs in actions for wrongful death. Evid C §1227.

NOTE: A judicially created "child dependency hearsay exception" now exists in the following circumstances: The child was not competent to testify and was very young; the child's statement was spontaneous; there was independent evidence consistent with the statement; the child had made the same statement several times; and there appeared to be no motive for the child to lie or exaggerate. See In re Cindy L. (1997) 17 C4th 15, 21, 69 CR2d 803; In re Carmen O. (1994) 28 CA4th 908, 915, 33 CR2d 848.

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.23 2. Prior statements

In some situations, a witness's prior statements are exceptions or exclusions to the hearsay rule, e.g.:

Prior consistent and inconsistent statements. Statements that are consistent or inconsistent with a witness's testimony are admissible if offered in compliance with Evid C §§770 and 791. Evid C §§1235-1236; see §§10.74-10.75, 11.111.

Past recollection recorded. Statements containing otherwise admissible information are admissible if the witness has no present memory of the information and the proponent complies with Evid C §1237. See §11.69.

Prior testimony. In certain situations, such as when the witness is unavailable, prior testimony is admissible. Evid C §§1290-1293; see §12.58.

Prior identifications. If the declarant testifies, evidence of a prior identification is admissible if the proponent complies with Evid C §1238.

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.24 3. Exceptions when declarant unavailable

For many hearsay exceptions to apply, the attorney must show that the declarant is unavailable. Unavailability can apply to a witness who is present or even testifying if, e.g., the witness's memory has failed or if the witness asserts a privilege. Evid C §240. See §§10.28-10.44 for privileges.

Dying declaration. The key element in a dying declaration is not that the person died, but that the person thought he or she was dying. The assertion must concern the cause or circumstances of the anticipated demise. Evid C §1242.

Declarations against interest. These are often confused with admissions. The difference is that this exception applies to nonparties who are unavailable and whose statements are so contrary to their pecuniary or penal interest that it is unlikely the statements would have been made if untrue. Evid C §1230. Admissions are statements made by the parties. See §10.22.

Declaration regarding the infliction of physical injury. Under this hearsay exception, evidence of a statement by a declarant is not made inadmissible by the hearsay rule if all of the following conditions are met:

- The statement purports to narrate, describe, or explain the infliction or threat of physical injury on the declarant;
- The declarant is unavailable as a witness under Evid C §240;
- The statement was made at or near the time of the infliction or threat of physical injury (however, evidence of statements made more than 5 years before the filing of the current action shall be inadmissible);
- The statement was made under circumstances that would indicate its trustworthiness (trustworthiness is further defined in Evid C §1370(b)(1)-(3)); and
- The statement was made in writing, was electronically recorded, or was made to a law enforcement official.

NOTE: In addition to the above conditions, the statement is admissible under this section only if the proponent of the statement tells the adverse party of the intention to offer the statement and the particulars of the statement sufficiently in advance of the proceedings to give the adverse party a fair opportunity to prepare and respond to the statement. Evid C §1370(c).

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/10 Evidence Overview/§10.25 4. Business records

§10.25 4. Business records

This exception to the hearsay rule is one of the most useful to civil trial practitioners. The proponent of the evidence must produce a witness (usually the custodian) who can testify to a record's authenticity. The witness must show that the writing was made:

- In the ordinary course of business;
- As a record of an act, condition, or event, to show that the event occurred; and
- At or near the time of the act, condition, or event recorded.

In addition, the source of information and method of preparation must indicate that the writing is trustworthy. Evid C §1271.

NOTE: Business records may be admissible as an admission if offered against a party. See §10.22. For a party's own business records to be admissible, the party must meet the requirements of the business records exception.

By following Evid C §§1560-1567, an affidavit of the custodian or other qualified witness can be substituted for trial testimony when the business with the records is neither a party nor the place where the cause of action is alleged to have arisen.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/10 Evidence Overview/§10.26 5. Official and public records

§10.26 5. Official and public records

Official and public records are even easier to admit than business records. The requirements of Evid C §1280 are similar to those of Evid C §1271 for business records. The official record must be:

- Of an act, condition, or event;
- Offered to prove the occurrence of such an act, condition, or event; and
- Made by a public employee within the scope of his or her duty at or near the time of the act, condition, or event. See MacDonald v Gutierrez (2004) 32 C4th 150, 153, 8 CR3d 48 ("unsworn" statement by arresting officer admissible in administrative proceeding on driver's license suspension); Jazayeri v Mao (2009) 174 CA4th 301, 317, 94 CR3d 198 (poultry condemnation certificates issued by food safety inspectors).

The sources of information and the method and time of preparation must indicate trustworthiness. Evid C §1280(c); Molenda v DMV (2009) 172 CA4th 974, 989, 91 CR3d 792 (no abuse of discretion to hold lab report inadmissible because it was not prepared at or near time of event). See Evid C §§1401, 1451-1454 on authenticating official writings.

Special rules apply to certain types of official and quasi-official records, such as:

- Vital statistics (Evid C §1281);
- Findings of presumed death by authorized federal employees (Evid C §1282);
- Findings that a person is missing, captured, or the like (Evid C §1283);
- Church records of family history (Evid C §1315); and
- Marriage, baptismal, and similar certificates (Evid C §1316).

The Evidence Code provides other hearsay exceptions:

- Spontaneous statements that were made while under the stress of excitement caused by an event (Evid C §1240);
- Contemporaneous statements that were made while the declarant was engaged in an event (Evid C §1241);
- Statements about wills and claims against estates (Evid C §§1260-1261); and
- Judgments (Evid C §§1300-1302).

VI. PRIVILEGES

§10.28 A. Based on statutory or constitutional authority

Privileges exclude otherwise relevant and competent evidence for policy reasons—usually to protect certain relationships. Privileges exist only when they are explicitly provided for by statute or by the United States or California constitutions. Evid C §911; see California Trial Objections, chap 33 (Cal CEB Annual). Privileges are found in Evid C §§900-1070, in the Fifth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, and in Cal Const arts I and VII.

Further research: For a general discussion of privileges, see Trial Objections, chap 33; Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chaps 37-46 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009). For discussion of each privilege, see the chapters in Trial Objections indicated in §§10.30-10.44.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/10 Evidence Overview/§10.29 B. Objecting based on a privilege

§10.29 B. Objecting based on a privilege

To invoke a privilege, counsel should generally object by stating:

> The question calls for disclosure of confidential communication in violation of the [state specific] privilege.

When claiming the privilege on behalf of a client, counsel should further state:

> On behalf of my client, I claim the [state specific] privilege and object to the question on that ground.

If the witness is not represented by counsel, counsel should instead say:

> I request that Your Honor advise the witness of the right to refuse to answer on the ground of [state specific] privilege.

Sometimes the privilege is based on circumstances other than confidential information. For those privileges, counsel should object by stating the basis of the privilege.

EXAMPLE 1: "Examination of this witness by counsel will violate the witness's privilege not to testify against [his wife/her husband]. I request that you advise the witness of the right to refuse to answer counsel's questions."

EXAMPLE 2: "I ask that Your Honor advise the witness that [he/she] need not answer that question, because it calls for disclosure of [name of news source/unpublished information obtained in gathering information for publication]." See §10.44 for newsperson's privilege.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/10 Evidence Overview/§10.30 C. Privilege against self-incrimination

§10.30 C. Privilege against self-incrimination

This privilege entitles a witness in a civil case to refuse to give testimony or evidence, e.g., documents, that may tend to incriminate him or her. Evid C §§940, 404; US Const amends V, XIV; Cal Const art I, §15.

This privilege is different from the privilege of a defendant in a criminal action not to be called as a witness and not to testify at all found in Evid C §930. For the privilege to apply, the witness must show that the evidence might result in criminal penalties. See Evid C §404.

§10.31 D. Lawyer-client privilege

This privilege prevents compulsory disclosure of confidential communications between lawyer and client. Evid C §§950-962. The requisites of the privilege are that there be:

- A lawyer-client relationship (Evid C §951);
- A communication between lawyer and client (Evid C §952); and
- The client's expectation of confidentiality (Evid C §952).

The privilege is claimed by the client or the client's representative, including any representative appointed under Prob C §12252. Evid C §§953-954. The attorney has a duty to claim the privilege on the client's behalf. Evid C §955.

The privilege belongs to the original holder and ceases to exist after the holder dies, and his or her personal representative discharges the estate. HLC Props., Ltd. v Superior Court (2005) 35 C4th 54, 24 CR3d 199, citing Evid C §§953-954.

§10.32 E. Privilege not to testify against spouse

This privilege allows one spouse not to testify against the other. Evid C §§970-973. The requisites for the privilege to apply are:

- A valid marriage at the time of claiming the privilege (see Evid C §970; People v Delph (1979) 94 CA3d 411, 415, 156 CR 422); and
- That the spouse is asked a question calling for an answer "against" his or her spouse in any action (Evid C §970).

NOTE: A spouse also has a privilege against being called as a witness by an adverse party in an action in which the other spouse is a party (Evid C §971). See §10.33.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/10 Evidence Overview/§10.33 F. Privilege not to be called as witness against spouse

§10.33 F. Privilege not to be called as witness against spouse

This privilege allows one spouse to refuse to be called as a witness by an adverse party in an action in which the other spouse is a party. Evid C §§971-973. The requisites for the privilege to apply are:

- A valid marriage at the time of claiming the privilege (see Evid C §971; People v Delph (1979) 94 CA3d 411, 415, 156 CR 422); and
- That the spouse is a party in an action in which the adverse party seeks to call the other spouse as a witness (Evid C §971).

NOTE: Remember that spouses have three privileges: one that prevents one spouse from testifying against the other (see §10.32), another that allows the spouse who is already testifying to refuse to answer a question against the other spouse (this section), and one that allows the spouse to refuse to disclose confidential communications (see §10.34).

§10.34 G. Confidential marital communications privilege

This privilege prevents compulsory disclosure of confidential communication between husband and wife. Evid C §§980-987. The requisites for the privilege to apply are that:

- A valid marriage existed at the time of the communication (Evid C §980);
- The communication was not in aid of a crime or fraud (Evid C §§980-981); and
- There was an expectation of confidentiality (Evid C §980).

Either spouse can claim the privilege (Evid C §980), but it cannot be claimed in an action by one spouse against the other (Evid C §984(a)).

§10.35 H. Physician-patient privilege

This privilege prevents compulsory disclosure of confidential information transmitted between physician and patient. Evid C §§990-1007. The requisites for the privilege to apply are that:

- A physician-patient relationship must have existed (Evid C §991);
- Information was transmitted between the patient and the physician (Evid C §992); and
- There was an expectation of confidentiality (Evid C §992).

The privilege is claimed by the patient or the patient's representative. Evid C §§993-994. In some circumstances, the physician has a duty to claim the privilege on behalf of the patient. Evid C §995.

§10.36 I. Psychotherapist-patient privilege

This privilege prevents compulsory disclosure of confidential information transmitted between psychotherapist and patient. Evid C §§1010-1027. The requisites for the privilege to apply are that:

- The psychotherapist-patient relationship existed (Evid C §1011);
- A communication occurred (Evid C §1012); and
- An expectation of confidentiality existed (Evid C §1012).

The privilege is claimed by the patient or the patient's representative. Evid C §§1013-1014. In some circumstances, the psychotherapist has a duty to claim the privilege on the patient's behalf. Evid C §1015.

NOTE: This privilege applies to many types of professionals who treat mental or emotional problems, not just psychotherapists. See Evid C §1010 (list of professionals to which the privilege applies); Oleszko v State Comp. Ins. Fund (9th Cir 2001) 243 F3d 1154 (privilege applies to employees' assistance program counselors).

§10.37 J. Penitent or clergyman privilege

This privilege entitles penitents and the clergy to refuse to disclose penitential communications. Evid C §§1030-1034. The requisites for the privilege to apply are:

- A religious functionary such as a priest or minister (Evid C §1030);
- A penitent (Evid C §1031); and
- A confidential penitential communication (Evid C §1032).

Either the penitent or clergy can claim the privilege. Evid C §§1033-1034.

§10.38 K. Sexual assault victim-counselor privilege

This privilege prevents compulsory disclosure of confidential information transmitted between victim and counselor. Evid C §§1035-1036.2. The requisites for the privilege to apply are:

- A counselor-victim relationship (Evid C §§1035-1035.2);
- A communication between counselor and victim (Evid C §1035.4); and
- The victim's expectation of confidentiality (Evid C §1035.4).

The privilege can be claimed by the victim or the victim's representative. Evid C §§1035.6-1035.8. In some circumstances, the counselor has a duty to claim the privilege on the patient's behalf. Evid C §1036.

NOTE: Remember that this privilege applies to many types of professionals who counsel sexual assault victims. See Evid C §1035.2 for list of professionals to which the privilege applies.

This privilege prevents compulsory disclosure of confidential information transmitted between a victim of domestic violence and counselor. Evid C §§1037-1037.7. The requisites for the privilege to apply are:

- A counselor-victim relationship (Evid C §§1037-1037.1);
- A communication between victim and counselor (Evid C §1037.2); and
- The victim's expectation of confidentiality (Evid C §1037.2).

The privilege is claimed by the victim or the victim's representative. Evid C §§1037.4-1037.5. In some circumstances, the counselor has a duty to claim the privilege on the victim's behalf. Evid C §1037.6.

NOTE: Remember that this privilege applies to many types of professionals who counsel domestic violence victims. See Evid C §1037.1 for list of professionals to which the privilege applies.

This privilege prevents compulsory disclosure of information that is not open or disclosed to the public and is acquired in confidence by a public employee in the course of duty. Evid C §§1040, 1042-1047. The requisites for the privilege to apply are that:

- Information was acquired by a public employee (Evid C §1040(a));
- The expectation of confidentiality existed (Evid C §1040(a)); and
- Disclosure of the information is forbidden under federal or California statute (Evid C §1040(b)(1)) or for policy reasons (Evid C §1040(b)(2)).

The privilege must be claimed by someone who is authorized by the public entity to do so. Evid C §1040(b).

This privilege prevents compulsory disclosure of the identity of anyone who informs a law enforcement agency of an apparent violation of California or federal law. Evid C §§1041-1042. The requisites for the privilege to apply are:

- Information about a purported violation of law is known (Evid C §1041(a));
- Disclosure is made to a law enforcement officer or person (as defined in Evid C §1041(b));
- Confidentiality is expected by the informer (Evid C §1041(b)); and
- Revealing the informer's identity is forbidden under federal or California statute (Evid C §1041(a)(1)) or for policy reasons (Evid C §1041(a)(2)).

The privilege must be claimed by someone who is authorized by the public entity to do so. Evid C §1041(a).

- The election was public and by secret ballot;
- The vote was legal; and
- The voter has not previously disclosed the nature of his or her vote.

Only the voter can claim the privilege. Evid C §1050.

- A trade secret must exist (Evid C §§1060-1061); and
- The privilege is necessary to avoid injustice (Evid C §1060).

The privilege may be claimed by the owner of the trade secret, or his or her agent. Evid C §1060.

VII. EVIDENCE EXCLUDED FOR POLICY REASONS

§10.45 A. Generally

Based on public policy considerations, many types of potentially relevant evidence are prohibited by statute or case law from being introduced into evidence at trial. For example, to encourage certain conduct by preventing it from having potentially negative subsequent consequences in a lawsuit, the legislature has developed exclusionary rules on evidence of, e.g.:

- Subsequent remedial repairs (Evid C §1151; see §§10.46-10.48);
- Conduct during the consultation for mediation services (before hiring a mediator) and conduct during the mediation proceedings (Evid C §§1115-1128); and
- Offers of compromise (Evid C §1152; see §10.49).

Further research: For a list of the many statutes not in the Evidence Code that limit or prohibit introduction of various types of evidence at trial, see California Trial Objections, chap 32 (Cal CEB Annual). See also Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 36 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

§10.46 B. Subsequent remedial conduct

Subsequent remedial or precautionary measures are taken after occurrence of an event, which, if taken previously, would have tended to make the event less likely to occur. Evid C §1151. Evidence of such measures is inadmissible to prove negligence or culpable conduct in connection with the event. Evid C §1151.

Further research: See generally California Trial Objections, chap 32 (Cal CEB Annual); Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 36 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009); Effective Introduction of Evidence in California, chap 52 (2d ed Cal CEB 2000).

§10.47 1. Public policy to encourage repairs

This exclusion is designed to avoid having defendants postpone making repairs or taking desirable precautionary measures from fear that such acts may be used against them as admissions of fault. See Daggett v Atchison, T. & S.F. Ry. (1957) 48 C2d 655, 660, 313 P2d 557; Westbrook v Gordon H. Ball, Inc. (1967) 248 CA2d 209, 215, 56 CR 422.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/10 Evidence Overview/§10.48 2. When admissible

§10.48 2. When admissible

Evidence Code §1151 does not bar evidence of subsequent remedial conduct if it is admissible for another purpose. Such evidence may be admitted:

- In actions based on strict product liability theories in certain circumstances. See Schelbauer v Butler Mfg. Co. (1984) 35 C3d 442, 450, 198 CR 155 (roofing panels; purpose of §1151 inapplicable in strict liability case); Finn v G. D. Searle & Co. (1984) 35 C3d 691, 703, 200 CR 870 (Diodoquin, a drug used to treat acrodermatitis enteropathica; no error in trial court's exclusion of postaccident warning label on basis that such information was at best cumulative); Ault v International Harvester Co. (1974) 13 C3d 113, 118, 117 CR 812 (defective aluminum gear box in automobile; §1151 held inapplicable to strict liability case, noting that proof of manufacturer's "negligence" or "culpable conduct" is unnecessary, and that public policy reason for rule of encouraging postaccident auto repairs is inapplicable in products liability field, because it is in manufacturer's self-interest to improve and repair defective products); Santilli v Otis Elevator Co. (1989) 215 CA3d 210, 263 CR 496 (evidence excluded); Burke v Almaden Vineyard, Inc. (1978) 86 CA3d 768, 771, 150 CR 419.
- For purposes of impeachment, presumably subject to a limiting instruction. See Daggett v Atchison, T. & S.F. Ry. (1957) 48 C2d 655, 665, 313 P2d 557; Wilson v Gilbert (1972) 25 CA3d 607, 615, 102 CR 31.
- When the subsequent safety measure was taken by someone other than the defendant. Magnante v Pettibone-Wood Mfg. Co. (1986) 183 CA3d 764, 767, 228 CR 420.

§10.49 C. Settlement negotiations

Evidence that someone has already provided or has offered or promised to provide anything (e.g., money or services) to anyone who has sustained or will sustain loss or damages, or who claims to have sustained or will sustain loss or damage, is inadmissible to prove liability for the loss or damage or any part of it. Any conduct or statements made in negotiating or promising to provide is also inadmissible. Evid C §1152. See Hasler v Howard (2004) 120 CA4th 1023, 1026, 16 CR3d 217 (trial court properly excluded plaintiff's statements made in offer to compromise).

As a corollary to this rule, evidence that someone has accepted or offered or promised to accept anything in satisfaction of a claim, as well as any conduct or statements made in negotiation of a claim, cannot be used to prove that the claim, or any part of it, is invalid. Evid C §1154.

Similarly, statements made during a mediation before a neutral person to assist parties in resolving a dispute are not admissible. Evid C §§1115-1128.

Further research: For an extended discussion of these rules, see California Trial Objections, chap 32 (Cal CEB Annual) (offer to plead guilty); Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 36 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009); 1 Witkin, California Evidence, Circumstantial Evidence §144 (4th ed 2000).

Evidence Code §1152 reflects the public policy of encouraging settlement of disputes. See also Evid C §§1115-1128, prohibiting introduction of conduct and statements during mediation.

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.51 2. When admissible

The proscriptions of Evid C §1152 do not bar all evidence of settlement negotiations. For example, evidence of settlement offers can be introduced in an action for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing or for violation of Ins C §790.03(h). Evid C §1152(b).

Settlement offers may be admitted as evidence to show the offeror's good or bad faith. See Lemer v Boise Cascade, Inc. (1980) 107 CA3d 1, 11, 165 CR 555 (good faith); White v Western Title Ins. Co. (1985) 40 C3d 870, 887, 221 CR 509 (bad faith). Statements made in "meet and confer" sessions are privileged litigation communications that may not be used as evidence of bad faith. Amtel Corp. v St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. (ND Cal 2006) 421 F Supp 2d 1265, 1273.

Settlement offers may be admitted to show the invalidity of a different claim between parties involving a different primary right. Zhou v Unisource Worldwide, Inc. (2007) 157 CA4th 1471, 1478, 69 CR3d 273.

Evidence of a party's willingness to compromise may also be received as an admission when not connected with an offer of compromise. Moving Picture Mach. Operators Union v Glasgow Theatres, Inc. (1970) 6 CA3d 395, 402, 86 CR 33.

§10.52 D. Evidence of liability insurance

Evidence that a person was insured against loss arising from liability for harm suffered by another is inadmissible to prove negligence or other wrongdoing. Evid C §1155.

Further research: See generally California Trial Objections, chap 32 (Cal CEB Annual); Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 36 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009); 1 Witkin, California Evidence, Circumstantial Evidence §133 (4th ed 2000).

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.53 1. Public policy favoring insurance and irrelevance of evidence

This exclusion derives from a combination of considerations, including the public policy favoring the purchase of liability insurance, the general irrelevance of such evidence on issues of fault, and the potential prejudicial effect of such evidence on an insured defendant. See Comment to Evid C §1155; Staples v Hoefke (1987) 189 CA3d 1397, 1410, 235 CR 165.

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.54 2. When admissible

The proscription of Evid C §1155 is limited. For example, evidence of insurance may be introduced for purposes other than to prove negligence or wrongdoing, e.g., to impeach (Hart v Wielt (1970) 4 CA3d 224, 231, 84 CR 220), or to show that the plaintiff was a malingerer (Hrnjak v Graymar, Inc. (1971) 4 C3d 725, 732, 94 CR 623).

Character evidence is evidence of an emotional, mental, or personality trait that establishes a person's disposition or propensity to engage in a certain type of conduct. See Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 35 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

Further research: For an extensive discussion of these issues, including sample testimony, see Effective Introduction of Evidence in California, chaps 14-16 (2d ed Cal CEB 2000). See also California Trial Objections, chap 22 (Cal CEB Annual); Evidence Benchbook, chap 35.

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.56 1. Types of character evidence admissible

Unless a statute specifically provides otherwise, counsel may use any admissible evidence to prove a person's character or character trait (Evid C §1100), including:

- Evidence in the form of an opinion;
- Evidence of reputation; and
- Evidence of specific instances of the person's conduct.

Excluded character evidence includes evidence of religion or lack of religion (Evid C §789), evidence of specific prior acts offered only to attack credibility (Evid C §787), and evidence of certain prior felonies (Evid C §788).

Evidence of specific prior acts may not be used to prove the witness's character, nor for the sole purpose of attacking or supporting a witness's credibility. Evid C §787. Evidence of such prior acts may be admissible, however, to prove some fact (such as motive, opportunity, intent, preparation, plan, knowledge, identity, or absence of mistake or accident) other than the witness's disposition to commit such an act. Evid C §1101. Moreover, in a criminal action in which the defendant is accused of an offense involving domestic violence or child abuse, evidence of the defendant's commission of other domestic violence or child abuse is not made inadmissible by Evid C §1101, if the evidence is not inadmissible under Evid C §352. Evid C §1109.

In civil actions involving sexual battery, harassment, or assault, evidence of the plaintiff's prior sexual conduct is admissible only on a limited basis. See Evid C §783.

§10.57 2. When admissible

The courts' willingness to accept evidence of a person's character depends largely on the purpose of the evidence. For example, if the evidence is offered to attack a witness's credibility, it may be admitted, but only to the extent that the evidence involves the witness's character traits of honesty or veracity or their opposites. Evid C §780. When the character or reputation of a party is itself a material issue in the action, as in a defamation action, evidence of that reputation or character will probably be admissible, subject to certain statutory exceptions and the court's discretion under Evid C §352.

If character evidence is offered to show that the person acted in a particular way on a particular date because his or her character traits were consistent with that conduct, the evidence will likely be excluded. Evid C §§1101(a), 1104.

§10.58 3. Using character evidence to impeach

The credibility of any witness may be attacked or supported by any party, including the party calling the witness. Evid C §785.

Evidence of the witness's traits for honesty or veracity is admissible to attack or support the witness's credibility, subject to certain limitations. Evidence of traits of a witness's character other than honesty or veracity or their opposites is inadmissible to attack or support the witness's credibility. Evid C §786. Evidence of a witness's good character may not be admitted in support of character unless evidence of bad character has been admitted to attack the witness's credibility. Evid C §790.

VIII. SUBSTITUTES FOR TESTIMONY

§10.59 A. Judicial notice

"Judicial notice" is the court's acceptance of the existence of something as a matter of law or fact without the necessity of formal proof of that matter. Evid C §§451-453; Post v Prati (1979) 90 CA3d 626, 633, 153 CR 511. When judicial notice is taken of a matter that would otherwise be decided by the jury, the trial court may, and on request must, instruct the jury to accept the matter so noticed. Evid C §457. See §14.33.

The court must take judicial notice of certain matters. Evid C §451 (mandatory judicial notice). See §§14.7-14.14. The court may take judicial notice of other matters. Evid C §452 (discretionary judicial notice). See §§14.15-14.24.

Further research: See Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 49 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009); Effective Introduction of Evidence in California, chap 31 (2d ed Cal CEB 2000).

§10.60 B. Stipulations

A stipulation is an agreement between the parties regarding evidence or legal issues. Stipulations between counsel allow the parties to agree that certain facts or matters are true and, for purposes of the trial, are not in dispute. The effect of counsels' stipulations is that no evidence need be, or can be, offered on the stipulated matter. Harris v Spinali Auto Sales, Inc. (1966) 240 CA2d 447, 452, 49 CR 610. See discussion of stipulations in §§14.47-14.52.

Court pretrial rules increasingly require the parties to attempt to stipulate to undisputed matters, including foundational matters, before trial begins. When such stipulations are made, they should be made a part of the court's record. Also, consider whether, when, and how to advise the jury of the stipulation. See Effective Introduction of Evidence in California, chap 51 (2d ed Cal CEB 2000).

Further research: See Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 21 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009). See also 1 Witkin, California Evidence, Hearsay §§100-101 (4th ed 2000).

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.61 C. Judicial admission

A "judicial" admission is made when a party voluntarily concedes the truth of certain matters during the course of the litigation, usually in the party's pleadings or by counsel's statement on the record at trial. The effect is that the opposing party need not offer proof on the admitted matter, which is deemed to be conclusively established. See §§14.43-14.46.

NOTE: "Evidentiary" admissions (e.g., a party's express or adoptive admissions) are exceptions to the hearsay rule and can be admitted into evidence and weighed by the trier of fact along with conflicting evidence. See Evid C §1220. For detailed discussion of evidentiary admissions, see Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 3 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009). For discussion of the distinction between evidentiary and judicial admissions, see Effective Introduction of Evidence in California, chap 10 (2d ed Cal CEB 2000); 1 Witkin, California Evidence, Hearsay §§100-101 (4th ed 2000). See also §12.75.

Admissions may also be made during discovery, e.g., at a party's deposition, in answers to interrogatories, or in response to requests for admission. Discovery admissions are usually offered during trial to impeach a witness, although requests for admission may result in an admission conclusively established against the admitting party. See CCP §2033.410. See §12.127. On effective use of discovery during trial generally, see chap 12.

IX. WITNESSES

§10.62 A. Competence

Competence is the qualification of a person to serve as a witness at a particular proceeding or to testify to a particular fact. Everyone, regardless of age, is qualified to be a witness, and no one may be disqualified to testify on any matter unless a specific statutory ground for disqualification applies. Evid C §700.

The statutory grounds for disqualification are set forth in Evid C §§701-704. See §§10.63-10.65. For a more detailed discussion, see §§5.9-5.11.

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.63 1. Incapacity to communicate or understand oath

Under Evid C §701(a), a person is disqualified as a witness if he or she cannot:

- Express himself or herself on the matter so as to be understood, either directly or through an interpreter; or
- Understand the duty of a witness to tell the truth.

The trial court determines capacity, using the procedures in Evid C §405. In a nonjury proceeding, the court may postpone ruling on the issue of capacity until after the witness has testified on direct examination. Evid C §701(b). For discussion of the Evid C §405 procedures, see §7.29.

Further research: For an extensive discussion of this subject, see Effective Introduction of Evidence in California, chap 32 (2d ed Cal CEB 2000). See also California Trial Objections, chap 18 (Cal CEB Annual); Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 27 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.64 2. Prior disqualifying status

On objection, the judge presiding at a trial is incompetent to testify at that trial. Evid C §703. If the judge's testimony is required and an objection is made, a mistrial will be declared and the action reassigned. Evid C §703(a). Similar provisions apply to the inability of a juror in a pending action to testify in that action. Evid C §704(b).

Generally, a person presiding at any judicial or quasi-judicial proceeding, an arbitrator, or a mediator, cannot testify in a subsequent civil proceeding about the first proceeding, except as to a statement or conduct in the first proceeding that could (Evid C §703.5):

- Give rise to civil or criminal contempt;
- Constitute a crime;
- Be the subject of investigation by the State Bar or Commission on Judicial Performance; or
- Give rise to disqualification proceedings under CCP §170.1(a)(1) or §170.1(a)(6) (see §§6.32-6.39 on judge's disqualification under CCP §170.1).

Evidence Code §703.5 does not apply to a mediator in any mediation under Fam C §§3160-3186.

Further research: See generally Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 27 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009); Effective Introduction of Evidence in California, chap 32 (2d ed Cal CEB 2000); California Trial Objections, chap 18 (Cal CEB Annual).

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.65 3. Lack of personal knowledge

A witness must have personal knowledge of a matter in order to testify about it, except when offering an opinion as an expert witness. Evid C §702. On objection, such personal knowledge must be shown before the witness testifies on the matter. The showing may be made by the witness's own testimony and demeanor or by other probative evidence. The trial judge decides the sufficiency of this showing for purposes of admissibility. Evid C §403. See §7.27. Even if the evidence is admitted, the court can instruct the jury to disregard the testimony if it finds that the witness did not have personal knowledge. Evid C §403(c). See §7.35.

Further research: For discussion of the strategies and procedures for establishing or challenging personal knowledge, see Effective Introduction of Evidence in California, chap 32 (2d ed Cal CEB 2000). See also Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 30 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009); California Trial Objections, chap 18 (Cal CEB Annual).

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.66 B. Lay opinion

Nonexpert witnesses may offer an opinion at trial, as long as certain foundational requirements are met, i.e., the opinion is (Evid C §800):

- Rationally based on the witness's perception; and
- Helpful to a clear understanding of the witness's testimony.

The trial judge may also admit nonexpert opinion without regard to these two requirements, to the extent other statutory or decisional law permit. Evid C §800. See Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 30 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

On direct examination, a lay witness may state the reasons for and basis of his or her opinion, unless the law precludes the witness from using such reasons or matter as the basis for the opinion. Evid C §802. The court may require that the witness be examined on the reasons and basis for that opinion before being allowed to give it. Evid C §802.

A court may exclude nonexpert opinion entirely if it is based in whole or in large part on a matter that is an improper basis for such an opinion. Evid C §803. In that event, the witness may not offer an opinion unless a proper basis remains for the opinion that has not been excluded by the court as improper. Evid C §803.

Before potentially damaging nonexpert opinion testimony—and the reasons for the opinion—may be admitted into evidence, opposing counsel should be alert to the possibility of a motion in limine, or a voir dire of the witness. See chap 7. Plan ahead to lay the groundwork to exclude such opinion if it would be improper under the circumstances. See Evid C §803.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/10 Evidence Overview/§10.67 C. Scope of direct and cross-examination

§10.67 C. Scope of direct and cross-examination

The Evidence Code describes the method and scope of examination of witnesses. Evid C §§760-776. See chap 11 for a more in-depth discussion of examining witnesses.

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.68 1. Direct examination

Direct examination is the first examination of a witness on a matter that is not within the scope of any previous examination of the witness. Evid C §760. Except in special circumstances, counsel may not ask leading questions—i.e., questions suggesting the answer—on direct examination. Evid C §§764, 767. See §§11.47-11.81.

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.69 2. Cross-examination

Cross-examination is the examination of the witness by a party other than the direct examiner on a matter within the scope of the direct examination of that witness. Evid C §761. The classic cross-examination is studded with leading questions, which Evid C §767(a)(2) specifically permits.

Ordinarily, each phase of a witness's examination must be completed before the next phase begins. Evid C §772(b). It is within the court's discretion to permit counsel to interrupt his or her cross-examination to examine the witness on a matter outside the scope of direct (Evid C §772(c)), but counsel should expect an objection and be prepared with a good reason for the interruption.

If a witness is being cross-examined by a party whose interest is not adverse to that witness, the rules of direct examination, not cross-examination, apply. Evid C §773(b). See §11.83. For further discussion of cross-examination, see §§11.82-11.124.

© The Regents of the University of California

3. Redirect and recross-examinations

§10.70 a. Redirect examination

After cross-examination, the direct examiner may (but need not) question the witness on any new matter on which he or she was examined by opposing counsel. Evid C §§762, 774. Absent leave of court, a witness cannot be reexamined on the same matters on which the witness has already been examined by the party. Evid C §774. The rules restricting leading questions on direct examination apply equally to redirect examinations. Evid C §767(a)(1). See §§11.126-11.127.

PRACTICE TIP: Be careful to elicit all necessary testimony on direct examination, rather than viewing redirect examination as a fallback opportunity. Plan your direct examination to include all the evidence needed to prove your case.

§10.71 b. Recross-examination

Recross-examination is questioning by the cross-examiner after the close of the redirect examination. Evid C §763. Unless the court permits, a witness may not be reexamined on the same matters covered in cross-examination. Evid C §774. See §11.128.

© The Regents of the University of California

D. Form of the question

§10.72 1. Judge has control over types of questions

Evidence Code §765 gives the trial judge control of the trial process in order to guarantee speedy determination of the truth, to avoid misleading or confusing the jury, and to preclude harassment of witnesses. Judges may give wide latitude to counsel in the types of questions they may ask, especially on cross-examination. However, it is important to listen carefully and to object to the question when there is a real danger of the witness or factfinder's being misled.

See California Trial Objections, chaps 7-16 (Cal CEB Annual), which are filled with examples of objections to the form of question.

E. Impeachment

§10.74 1. Consider credibility of witness

A witness's credibility can be called into question by anything that tends to prove or disprove the truthfulness of the witness's testimony. Evid C §780. For example:

- The witness's capacity to perceive, to recollect, or to communicate about the subject of his testimony;
- The extent of the witness's opportunity to perceive;
- The witness's known character for truthfulness;
- Whether the witness has a bias, interest, or other motive;
- The witness's admissions; and
- The witness's statements that are inconsistent with his or her testimony at trial.

Evidence Code §780 includes an extensive list of matters the court or jury may consider in determining credibility. See CACI 107 or 5003, which are identical instructions on witness credibility. See also BAJI 2.20.

See §11.117 for discussion of using character evidence to impeach. See also California Trial Objections, chap 22 (Cal CEB Annual); Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 29 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/10 Evidence Overview/§10.75 2. Prior inconsistent statements--powerful impeachment

§10.75 2. Prior inconsistent statements—powerful impeachment

Impeachment with a prior inconsistent statement is one of the most powerful ways to cast doubt on the credibility of a witness, not simply as to the matter on which the witness is cross-examined, but, if handled properly, as to the witness's entire testimony. One of the most effective and typical ways of impeaching a witness is through the witness's deposition testimony.

If a witness is to be impeached with a prior inconsistent written statement, counsel must proceed carefully and anticipate objections. Ordinarily, extrinsic evidence of a prior inconsistent statement is admissible only if the witness:

- While testifying, is given an opportunity to explain or deny the inconsistent statement; or
- Has not been excused from giving further testimony in the matter. Evid C §770(a)-(b).

The court may allow a prior inconsistent statement in the "interests of justice" if these two requirements cannot be met. Evid C §770; see Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 29 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

All the requirements of authentication (Evid C §1401) and of the secondary evidence rule (Evid C §§1521-1523, 1552-1553) must be met before a prior inconsistent written statement may be used, and counsel must make certain that the statement is truly inconsistent with the witness's testimony. See Effective Introduction of Evidence in California, chap 41 (2d ed Cal CEB 2000) (practical and tactical considerations); California Trial Objections, chap22 (Cal CEB Annual); Evidence Benchbook, chap 29.

A properly authenticated prior inconsistent statement may also be offered for the truth of the matter asserted, not simply to impeach credibility. Evid C §§770, 1235. See §10.23. See also §11.118.

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.76 F. Expert witnesses

Expert witnesses can be used effectively to assist the trier of fact in many different kinds of trials. Before expert testimony may be received, first establish that the person is qualified to so testify (Evid C §720) and then establish that the opinion testimony is itself admissible (Evid C §§801-805). All this is subject to the court's discretionary power, at any time before or during trial, to limit the number of expert witnesses (Evid C §723) or, on its own motion, to appoint its own expert (Evid C §§730-733). See §§11.130-11.151. See also California Expert Witness Guide (2d ed Cal CEB 1991).

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.77 1. Qualifications

The Evidence Code broadly defines what qualifies a person to testify as an expert: "special knowledge, skill, experience, training or education sufficient to qualify him as an expert on the subject to which his testimony relates." Evid C §720. The court decides whether a witness is qualified as an expert, and on what topics. Before that ruling is made, opposing counsel may cross-examine a proposed expert on the expert's qualifications. Evid C §§720-721. See California Expert Witness Guide §13.2-13.6 (2d ed Cal CEB 1991).

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.78 2. Eliciting expert witness's testimony

Once qualified as an expert, a witness can testify in the form of an opinion as long as the opinion is (Evid C §801):

- Related to a subject that is "sufficiently beyond common experience" that the opinion would "assist the trier of fact" (Evid C §801(a)); and
- Based on a matter perceived by or known to the expert witness that is the type of matter that an expert on the subject may reasonably rely on. Evid C §801(b).

The second requirement can be met by the expert's own special knowledge, skill, experience, training, and education. The underlying basis for the opinion can be made known to the expert before or even at the hearing, e.g., in a hypothetical question; and the basis for the opinion need not be admissible. Evid C §801(b). See §§11.141-11.144.

The expert witness may testify about the reason for his or her opinion and the basis for it unless the law specifically requires otherwise. Evid C §802. As with nonexpert opinion witnesses, the court has authority to exclude opinion testimony altogether if it is based entirely or largely on a matter that is not the proper basis for such an opinion. Evid C §803. In that event, the witness may not offer an opinion unless a proper basis remains for his or her opinion that the court has not excluded as improper. Evid C §803.

Opposing counsel should be alert to the appropriateness of a motion in limine or a voir dire of the expert if anything suggests that the expert's opinion testimony would be improper.

§10.79 3. Ultimate issue

As long as the testimony is otherwise admissible, an expert may testify as to an opinion that "embraces the ultimate issue" to be decided by the trier of fact. Evid C §805.

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.80 4. Cross-examination of expert witness

The techniques for cross-examining expert witnesses are addressed in §§11.82-11.124. In addition to being cross-examined to the same extent as any other witness, an expert may be cross-examined as to (Evid C §721):

- His or her qualifications;
- The subject of the testimony; and
- The basis of, and the reasons for, that opinion.

However, an expert witness offering an opinion cannot be cross-examined on the "tenor of any scientific, technical, professional text, treatise, journal or similar publication" unless

- The witness has referred to, considered, or relied on that publication in reaching an opinion;
- The publication has already been admitted in evidence; or
- The publication has been established as a reliable authority by the testimony or admission of the witness, other expert testimony, or judicial notice.

Evid C §721(b)(1)-(3). The reason for restricting cross-examination on publications is clear: to do otherwise might bring before the trier of fact "opinions of absentee authors without the safeguard of cross-examination." Comment to Evid C §721.

X. EXHIBITS

§10.81 A. Substantive and procedural requirements

"Exhibits" are items of physical evidence marked for identification at trial and logged in the court clerk's record. Such evidence is variously referred to as documentary, demonstrative, or real evidence. See §§13.2-13.5.

For an exhibit to be relied on by the trier of fact or argued as evidence by counsel, it must be formally received as evidence by the court. See §§13.45-13.61 for the procedure of introducing exhibits into evidence.

As discussed below, the substantive showing required for exhibits to be introduced includes relevance (see §10.82) and authenticity (see §10.83). Introduction of such evidence may also depend on avoiding the prohibitions of various potential objections, including hearsay rules (see §§10.17-10.27), and Evid C §352 considerations (see §10.86).

For an extensive discussion of handling exhibits at trial, see chap 13.

Further research: For a working outline for such issues, see Laying a Foundation To Introduce Evidence (Preparing and Using Evidence at Trial) (Cal CEB Action Guide April 2008); Effective Introduction of Evidence in California, chaps 11, 12-14, 39 (2d ed Cal CEB 2000).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/10 Evidence Overview/§10.82 B. Relevance

§10.82 B. Relevance

Before an exhibit (whether documentary, demonstrative, or otherwise) can be admitted, it must be found relevant. Evid C §350. See §§10.13-10.16 for definition of "relevance."

For certain types of demonstrative evidence, such as models or accident-reconstruction evidence, relevance will depend on a showing that the conditions reflected in or underlying the evidence are "substantially similar" to those giving rise to the issue to which the evidence relates. See §13.102. Evidence of both the conditions existing at the time of the dispute and the conditions reflected in the proposed exhibit are required.

Further research: See Laying a Foundation To Introduce Evidence (Preparing and Using Evidence at Trial), App B (Cal CEB Action Guide April 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.83 C. Authenticity

An exhibit must be authenticated before it, or before secondary evidence of its contents, may be received in evidence. Evid C §1401. Evidence Code §1400 defines "authentication of a writing" as:

- Introduction of enough evidence to sustain a finding that it is the writing its proponent claims it is; or
- Establishment of such facts by any other means provided by law, e.g., a presumption (see Evid C §§1450-1454 for presumptions on acknowledged writings).

When the exhibit is subsequently altered in a material way, the proponent must account for the alteration. Evid C §1402; see §13.90.

The burden of authenticating an exhibit rests with its proponent. Evid C §403(a). This burden may be satisfied in several different ways, including stipulations, testimony by expert or lay witnesses, admissions by adverse parties, judicial notice, or limited statutory presumptions.

Further research: See generally Effective Introduction of Evidence in California, chaps 2, 11 (2d ed Cal CEB 2000); Laying a Foundation To Introduce Evidence (Preparing and Using Evidence at Trial), step 18, App G (Cal CEB Action Guide April 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.84 D. Proof of content of writing evidence

Evidence Code §§1520-1523 and 1552-1553 govern proof of the content of a writing. The content of a writing may be proved by an otherwise admissible original (Evid C §1520) or by "secondary evidence" (Evid C §1521). The court may exclude secondary evidence if it determines that (1) a genuine dispute exists concerning material terms of the writing and justice requires its exclusion, or (2) admitting the secondary evidence would be unfair. Evid C §1521(a).

The new provisions generally prohibit oral testimony to prove the content of a writing. Evid C §1523. Oral testimony is admissible, however, if the proponent of the evidence does not have possession or control over the original or a copy and (1) the original has been lost or destroyed without fraudulent intent on the part of the proponent; (2) the original was not reasonably procurable; or (3) the document is collateral to the controlling issues, and it would be inexpedient to require production of the original. Evid C §1523(b)-(c).

Oral testimony is also permissible when the writing consists of numerous accounts or other writings that cannot be examined in court without a great loss of time, and the evidence to be presented is "only the general result of the whole." Evid C §1523(d).

Two other Evidence Code provisions address technological advances. Evidence Code §1552 allows a computer printout to represent the computer information or computer program that it purports to represent. If a party introduces evidence that a computer printout is unreliable, the burden shifts to the party introducing the printout to prove, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the printout is an accurate representation. Evid C §1552.

Evidence Code §1553 provides that a "printed representation of images stored on a video or digital medium is presumed to be an accurate representation of the images it purports to convey." If a party introduces evidence that the printed representation is unreliable, the burden shifts to the party introducing the images to prove, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the printed representation is an accurate representation of the images it purports to represent. Evid C §1553.

The secondary evidence rule does not change the provision that, when statutory production procedures are followed, copies of business records may be used in lieu of originals. Evid C §1562.

Further research: For further discussion on the secondary evidence rule, see §§13.122-13.123. On computer-generated evidence, see §13.107. See also California Trial Objections, chap 24 (Cal CEB Annual); Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 32 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009); 2 Witkin, California Evidence, Documentary Evidence §§27-30 (4th ed 2000).

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.85 E. Hearsay evidence

Hearsay evidence is "evidence of a statement that was made other than by a witness while testifying at the hearing and that is offered to prove the truth of the matter stated." Evid C §1200(a). Hearsay evidence is inadmissible unless one of the many statutory exceptions applies. See §§10.17-10.27.

Because an exhibit, especially a writing, contains statements made out of court, the hearsay objection is frequently made to exhibits offered at trial. However, several hearsay exceptions make exhibits containing hearsay admissible. For discussion of the rule and its many exceptions, see §§10.17-10.27. For example, the business records exception to the hearsay rule may apply. See §10.25.

Further research: See also California Trial Objections, chap 19 (Cal CEB Annual); Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 11 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

© The Regents of the University of California

§10.86 F. Evidence Code §352

The trial court has broad discretion under Evid C §352 to exclude otherwise admissible evidence when introduction of the evidence would likely consume undue amounts of time, mislead the trier of fact, or be unduly prejudicial. See §10.16. Proffered exhibits are often subject to objection under this section. See §13.117. For example, a photograph may be excluded under §352, even if it is relevant, if it is so gory that its prejudicial effect outweighs its probative value.

§11.1 I. SCOPE OF CHAPTER

This chapter discusses:

- Preparing to examine witnesses in §§11.2-11.27;
- Use of interpreters and translators in §§11.28-11.43;
- Direct examination in §§11.47-11.81;
- Cross-examination in §§11.82-11.125;
- Redirect and recross-examination and rebuttal and surrebuttal in §§11.126-11.129.
- Examining an expert witness in §§11.130-11.151;
- Ethical concerns when a party or witness commits perjury in §§11.152-11.168.

See chap 5 on preparing witnesses for trial.

II. PREPARING FOR EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES

§11.2 A. Balancing planned examination with flexibility

Most attorneys plan their examination of a witness with some form of a witness outline. The heat of courtroom battle, however, may divert counsel from the planned course of action. Although the examining attorney must be able to capitalize on opportunities created by witnesses' unexpectedly helpful responses, eventually the successful attorney returns to the initial planned strategy.

In short, balance adherence to a planned examination with flexibility during the actual questioning. Although preparation is essential, do not let it undercut the examination's natural spontaneity. To create momentum and an atmosphere of drama, respond to opportunities created by a witness's unanticipated responses. To this end, be prepared to deviate from the planned interrogation and explore contradictions with additional questions before returning to the planned examination. On preparation of witnesses generally, see chap 5.

§11.3 B. Techniques for communicating with trier of fact

Although tactics will vary with each examination, certain techniques for communicating information to the trier of fact are consistent in every situation. Some of these techniques are discussed in §§11.4-11.9.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.4 1. Educating judge or jury

The courtroom examiner's role is to educate the trier of fact in a manner that will put forth the client's position most favorably, consistent with the facts. The issues in a case may be so familiar to the examining attorney that there is an unwanted side effect: The interrogation may not adequately cover the underlying premises and background facts.

Therefore, begin with the basics, to ensure that the jury (or judge) understands the witness's place in the case's factual landscape. The "basics" include defining any unfamiliar phrases or jargon. Gradually move from familiar to lesser known concepts. Begin and end the examination with attention-grabbing points, if possible.

The clarity of the interrogation is usually directly related to the attorney's ability to phrase questions succinctly. Simple questions invite short answers that will be more easily grasped by the trier of fact. Give the judge or jury sufficient facts about the case to enable them to reach a decision—but do not bury them in exhaustive or repetitive detail. On framing questions, see §§11.50-11.62, 11.104-11.113.

NOTE: You may choose to conduct an interrogation differently when the trier of fact is a judge instead of a jury. For example, a judge might be more receptive than a jury to an examination that emphasizes legally significant issues.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Be prepared for the judge to ask questions when he or she is the trier of fact; judges are more likely to do so during a bench trial than during a jury trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/ 2. Reinforcing key points/§11.5 a. Defining events

2. Reinforcing key points

§11.5 a. Defining events

One way to reinforce key points through questioning is by identifying the defining events in the case and then focusing questions on them. A "defining event" is an act or a statement that capsulizes the case or lays bare its essential conflicts.

EXAMPLE: If a key term in a contract was uniformly understood by several witnesses to mean something favorable to your client, you should repeatedly return to the negotiation, usage, and interpretation of that term. You may then legitimately use the interpretation to which the witness has testified in framing your next question.

You can greatly enhance the probability that the trier of fact will understand and remember these defining events through repetition of questions to witnesses throughout the trial. On handling objections to cumulative testimony, see §§11.59-11.60.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.6 b. Themes

Another way to reinforce key points through questioning is to identify one or more themes and focus on facts that demonstrate those themes. Repeat variations on these themes throughout the trial. Certain sets of common facts, elicited from the perspective of different witnesses, can reinforce your main contentions or themes. See §9.26 for further discussion of themes.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.7 c. Visual aids

Visual aids enhance the ability of the trier of fact to understand and retain key information. Many studies show that jurors remember information better when it is seen as well as heard. Accordingly, consider using graphs, charts, time lines, and pictures in addition to oral testimony. On use of documentary and demonstrative evidence generally, see chap 13.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.8 3. Exploring human interest elements

§11.8 3. Exploring human interest elements

Particularly in a jury trial, focus on any relevant "human interest" elements. Jurors are interested in hearing human interest stories that help personalize your client's case.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.9 4. Using examples familiar to jurors

Use illustrations and examples in questions to help clarify abstract concepts, but try to use only familiar illustrations and examples. For example, in framing questions to a witness, consider the jurors' occupations as revealed during voir dire and incorporate them, if possible, into your examination of the witness.

EXAMPLE: One juror works at the check-out counter of a supermarket. You are questioning a real estate appraiser about prices being higher for each individual subdivided lot than it would be for the undivided whole parcel. You might chose an analogy of buying fruit by the piece versus by the crate to make your point with an example more familiar to the juror who works at the supermarket. This example might also be more familiar to other jurors who probably buy more fruit than real property.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.10 C. Different types of witnesses

§11.10 C. Different types of witnesses

Adapt your interrogation style to fit the witness. Witnesses can be grouped into four general categories:

- Friendly witnesses;
- Hostile witnesses;
- Neutral third parties; and
- Expert witnesses.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.11 1. Friendly witnesses

These witnesses are usually the client and individuals affiliated with the client. When examining a friendly witness, focus the jury's attention on the witness. Do not succumb to the temptation to ask questions that encourage the friendly witness to overstate the facts, because exaggeration ultimately undercuts the credibility of the case. On preparing parties and party-related witnesses, see §§5.48-5.64.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.12 2. Hostile witnesses

§11.12 2. Hostile witnesses

These witnesses are usually adverse parties and third persons with a grievance against the client, such as a fired employee. When examining a hostile witness, exercise greater control by asking leading questions, when permitted. Also assert control by projecting your voice and moving about the courtroom during the examination if courtroom rules permit. On leading questions, see §§11.54-11.56, 11.111. On tone of questioning, see §§11.99-11.103.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.13 3. Neutral third parties

§11.13 3. Neutral third parties

Neutral third parties can be particularly credible witnesses. Be especially careful in preparing a third party witness, because your statements to the witness are not protected by the attorney-client privilege. See Evid C §952; §5.65. On preparing nonparty witnesses, see §§5.65-5.69. Courts generally require you to refrain from asking leading questions when examining a neutral third party witness. Nevertheless, exert control with this type of witness by carefully framing your questions to avoid unpredictable and damaging responses.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.14 4. Expert witnesses

§11.14 4. Expert witnesses

Expert witnesses require special preparation and handling, as addressed in §§11.130-11.151. On preparing experts generally, see §§5.70-5.90.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.15 D. Examiner's questioning style

§11.15 D. Examiner's questioning style

Use a natural style while questioning. Therefore, do not mimic another lawyer's flamboyant questioning technique, if that is not your natural demeanor; the jury may see that you are role playing and doubt your sincerity and credibility. Examination is more effective if you develop a personal and authentic style of questioning.

Sometimes examining attorneys believe that their role is to intimidate adverse witnesses. But intimidating questions can make some witnesses defensive and less likely to provide useful information. Many attorneys are better off using a more compatible, less confrontational, style of questioning. On cross-examination generally, see §§11.82-11.125.

Some attorneys are self-conscious about the adequacy of their "performance" when conducting a cross-examination. This feeling may arise from a misconception that the cross-examining attorney is expected to elicit sudden, damaging, admissions. In fact, this rarely happens; it is usually sufficient to simply lay the foundation during the examination for later emphasis during closing argument. A personal, natural style of interrogation is successful if it elicits from the witnesses information that enables the judge or jury to reach a decision favorable to your client's cause.

© The Regents of the University of California

E. Examining witness: Basic rules

§11.16 1. Remember instructions to witness

When preparing the witness to testify, most attorneys give directions or instructions to the witness about testifying. See §§5.32-5.43 [also in appendix at end of this chap] for such instructions. The opposition has also given its witnesses the same, or similar, instructions. For example, a basic witness instruction is to "answer only the question asked, and do not volunteer information."

Be alert to each occasion when an opposing witness violates this or any other basic instruction and use the violation to help your client's case. If a witness volunteers information that reveals something helpful to your case, pursue that information with further questions.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.17 2. Courtroom decorum

To avoid unpleasant encounters with the trial judge during trial, ask the clerk or the bailiff whether the judge has any particular preferences about courtroom decorum. For example, some judges feel strongly that attorneys should not walk about the courtroom while examining witnesses. They require examination of the witnesses from behind the attorneys' table or from a lectern. Similarly, many judges require court permission each time an attorney wishes to approach a witness. Some of these matters can be covered in a court conference. See §§6.2-6.5.

The area of the courtroom between the judge's bench and counsels' table is known as the "well"; many judges do not want attorneys to walk into the well. Similarly, some judges may have strong views against putting briefcases on tables or using computers to take notes during trial.

PRACTICE TIP: Check to see whether there are any local rules or policies on courtroom decorum. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.0-8.14.

If the court permits, consider moving about the courtroom on cross-examination, since this creates a more dynamic visual presence. Some physical movement adds variety to the interrogation process. However, this is rarely permitted in federal court, where attorneys are usually required to speak from a podium.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.18 3. What not to do during examinations

§11.18 3. What not to do during examinations

Certain practices undercut an examiner's credibility and should be avoided. For example, do not:

- Act overly friendly and familiar with witnesses;
- Be rude to the judge;
- Talk down to the jury;
- Attack a sympathetic witness;
- Ask misleading questions;
- Act disappointed at a witness's unfavorable answer;
- Announce that you will be brief, and then go on at length.

© The Regents of the University of California

III. PREEXAMINATION CONSIDERATIONS

§11.19 A. Competency of witness

A witness's competency, i.e., ability to comprehend and relate events, is a preliminary fact to be determined under Evid C §405. If competency may be an issue, plan to ask the witness questions at the beginning of your examination that establish the witness's competency and include these questions in your outline of questions for that witness. For discussion of competency, see §§5.9-5.11. For discussion of preliminary fact hearings, see §§7.25-7.36.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.20 1. Objecting party has burden of showing incompetency

If a witness's competency is not established at the beginning of the examination of that witness, opposing counsel may object. The burden of proving incompetence rests on the party who suggests it, i.e., the party objecting to lack of competence foundation. Comment to Evid C §405.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.21 2. Court decides competency as preliminary fact (Evid C §405)

To determine whether a witness is incompetent, the judge may hold a hearing outside the jury's presence (Evid C §402), and, if the court finds that the witness is competent to testify, the jury is not informed of the court's prior hearing or determination. Evid C §405(b)(1). See also 2 Witkin, California Evidence, Witnesses §41 (4th ed 2000).

PRACTICE TIP: If you anticipate that a witness's competence may be at issue, call that issue to the judge's attention (e.g., through a motion in limine; see §7.29) at the earliest possible time so that the judge can arrange for a hearing.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.22 3. Guidelines for deciding competency

In determining a witness's competency, the court must follow the following guidelines:

First, temporary confusion or disorientation is not equivalent to a finding of incompetency. See, e.g., Sanders Constr. Co. v San Joaquin First Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1982) 136 CA3d 387, 395, 186 CR 218, in which a diabetic witness was found competent even though he suffered momentary diabetic confusion and disorientation while testifying. The court stated: "Questions regarding competency are almost wholly a matter of trial court discretion" and concluded that it could find no error in the trial court's denial of a request for a determination of competency under the facts. 136 CA3d at 396.

Second, a trial judge may not use subjective assumptions in determining a witness's competency. In Manguso v Oceanside Unified Sch. Dist. (1984) 153 CA3d 574, 200 CR 535, the court held that excluding testimony from a teacher's former students was improper because the trial judge had based his ruling on the subjective assumption that students cannot recall childhood events. 153 CA3d at 582.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.23 B. Personal knowledge of witnesses

§11.23 B. Personal knowledge of witnesses

Generally, ask a witness questions at the beginning of the examination that establish his or her personal knowledge of the matters about to be related by the witness. Because opposing counsel may object if you fail to establish the witness's personal knowledge, include this issue in your list of questions to ask the witness. See discussion of personal knowledge in §5.12.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.24 1. Party offering testimony has burden of showing personal knowledge

If personal knowledge is not established and opposing counsel objects, "personal knowledge must be shown before the witness may testify concerning the matter." Evid C §702(a). The burden of proving personal knowledge rests on the party who seeks to introduce the testimony. Evid C §403(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.25 2. Court decides personal knowledge as preliminary fact (Evid C §403)

A witness's personal knowledge is a preliminary fact to be determined under Evid C §403. See discussion of preliminary fact hearings in §§11.21-11.23. To make this determination, the judge may hold a hearing outside the jury's presence. Evid C §402(b). If the evidence is sufficient to sustain a finding of personal knowledge, the judge must admit the testimony. Evid C §403(a). The ultimate decision on personal knowledge, however, is left for the jury. Evid C §403(c)(1); Comment to Evid C §403. See People v Blagg (1970) 10 CA3d 1035, 89 CR 446. See also 2 Witkin, California Evidence, Witnesses §46 (4th ed 2000).

On rules that apply when an expert testifies in the form of an opinion, see Evid C §§801-805, discussed in §§11.135-11.145.

§11.26 C. Preparation of witnesses generally

Preparing witnesses to testify on direct examination differs from preparation for cross-examination. Every witness preparation, however, should include the following:

- A reminder to tell the truth;
- A chronological or other review of the facts of the case;
- A reminder to answer only the question asked; and
- A review of the questions most likely to be asked on both direct and cross-examination.

On witness preparation generally, see chap 5 (see also specific headings in this chapter).

§11.27 D. Excluding witnesses at trial

If you believe that a witness may be influenced by listening to another witness testify, move to have the trial judge exclude that witness, or all witnesses, from the courtroom while the other witnesses are testifying. Evid C §777. See chap 6 on how to make this pretrial motion.

Individual parties to an action and an officer or employee who is the designated trial representative of a corporate party are excepted from any order of exclusion. Evid C §777(b).

PRACTICE TIP: Courts routinely grant motions to exclude witnesses at trial, with only a minimal showing, but courts will also almost automatically make the ruling apply to all witnesses on all sides, so be prepared to have your own witnesses excluded if you make the motion.

IV. INTERPRETERS AND TRANSLATORS

A. Deciding when to use interpreters and translators

§11.28 1. When required

Judicial proceedings must be conducted in English. CCP §185. An interpreter is required when:

- A witness is incapable of understanding English or is incapable of communicating in English so as to be directly understood. Evid C §752(a).
- The written characters in a "writing offered in evidence are incapable of being deciphered or understood directly." Evid C §753(a).
- A witness is deaf or hearing impaired as defined in Evid C §754(a), i.e., a person with a hearing loss that prevents him or her from "understanding language spoken in a normal tone, but does not include an individual who is hearing impaired provided with, and able to fully participate in the proceedings through the use of, an assistive listening system or computer-aided transcription equipment" as provided in CC §54.8. Evid C §754(b).

NOTE: When an otherwise valid privilege exists between a deaf or hearing-impaired person and "another person, that privilege is not waived merely because an interpreter was used to facilitate their communication." Evid C §754.5.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.29 a. Interpreter for party witness

Under Cal Const art I, §14, anyone charged with a crime who cannot understand English "has a right to an interpreter throughout the proceedings." See In re Raymundo B. (1988) 203 CA3d 1447, 1453, 250 CR 812 (Cal Const art I, §14 applies to juvenile charged with crime).

In civil cases, however, the court in Jara v Municipal Court (1978) 21 C3d 181, 145 CR 847, held that the refusal to appoint an interpreter at public expense to assist non-English-speaking litigants does not violate the constitutional guarantee of due process or equal protection of the law. The court also held that there is no statutory basis for such an appointment (21 C3d at 183) and that language assistance to indigent but represented litigants was available so that there is no need for courts to require appointment of interpreters at public expense to assist litigants. 21 C3d at 185. Compare Jara with Gardiana v Small Claims Court (1976) 59 CA3d 412, 130 CR 675, on the small claims court's inherent power to appoint an interpreter for indigent parties, which was distinguished in Jara v Municipal Court, supra. For a witness's right to an interpreter, see §11.28.

On the other hand, Evid C §754(b) provides that, in any civil or criminal action in which a party or witness is deaf or hearing-impaired, the proceeding must be interpreted in a language that the deaf or hearing-impaired party or witness understands by a qualified interpreter appointed by the court, other appointing authority, or as agreed on.

On compensation and costs of interpreters and translators generally, see §§11.42-11.43.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.30 b. Using interpreter for more than one purpose

Criminal cases have distinguished between an interpreter appointed for a criminal defendant and an interpreter for a witness. The cases have held that a court's borrowing a defendant's interpreter to translate another witness's testimony constitutes a denial of the defendant's right to an interpreter "throughout the proceedings" in violation of Cal Const art I, §14 unless the defendant waived that right. People v Aguilar (1984) 35 C3d 785, 200 CR 908; In re Dung T. (1984) 160 CA3d 697, 206 CR 772. On standard of review, see People v Rodriguez (1986) 42 C3d 1005, 232 CR 132.

There are no cases deciding whether a similar situation in a civil case, i.e., a party's interpreter borrowed to act as a witness interpreter, would also be a due process violation.

PRACTICE TIP: Although the same interpreter can be used for several witnesses during depositions, it is critical that you and your client do not share an interpreter with other parties or witnesses during trial. As a practical matter, you will need access to your own interpreter to be sure that you understand what is going on at trial and in the event of a dispute about key aspects of a witness's testimony.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.31 2. When permitted

The trial judge has discretion to appoint an interpreter when justice requires. Gardiana v Small Claims Court (1976) 59 CA3d 412, 130 CR 675; People v Holtzclaw (1926) 76 CA 168, 243 P 894; People v Walker (1924) 69 CA 475, 231 P 572. For example, the court may appoint an interpreter to facilitate matters even when the witness appears to have a relatively firm grasp of English. People v Lacang (1931) 213 C 65, 1 P2d 7. Similarly, the court may appoint an interpreter even though the witness can read, write, and speak some English. See People v Santos (1933) 134 CA 736, 26 P2d 522.

It is an abuse of discretion not to appoint an interpreter if uncontradicted evidence exists that the witness does not speak or understand English. See Gardiana v Small Claims Court, supra. However, the court is not required to appoint an interpreter unless the witness or party makes an affirmative showing that the interpreter is necessary. In re Raymundo B. (1988) 203 CA3d 1447, 1454, 250 CR 812.

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Choosing an interpreter

§11.32 1. Certified interpreter preferred

The judge has discretion as to which interpreter to select. Hsu v Mt. Zion Hosp. (1968) 259 CA2d 562, 66 CR 659 (no abuse of discretion in selecting court interpreter rather than plaintiffs' interpreter). However, under Govt C §68561, anyone who interprets in a court proceeding using a language designated by the Judicial Council under Govt C §68562(a) must be a certified court interpreter as defined in Govt C §68566 unless good cause for appointment of an interpreter not so certified exists. If the court believes good cause exists, the court must follow the qualification procedures and guidelines adopted by the Judicial Council under Govt C §68561(c). Under Govt C §68561(d), for languages not designated by the Judicial Council, an interpreter in a court proceeding must "be qualified by the court under the qualification procedures and guidelines adopted by the Judicial Council." If a qualified interpreter also passes an English fluency examination offered by a testing entity approved by the Judicial Council, that person must be designated a "registered interpreter." Govt C §68561(d).

In addition, Evid C §754 requires that interpreters for deaf or hearing-impaired persons meet the qualifications of being "certified as competent to interpret court proceedings by a testing organization, agency, or educational institution approved by the Judicial Council as qualified to administer tests to court interpreters for individuals who are deaf or hearing impaired." Evid C §754(f).

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.33 2. Finding the right interpreter

If you will arrange for the interpreter (see §§11.34-11.43), be sure to check references, especially with difficult or unusual languages. If at all possible, consult with an attorney who is fluent in the language you want interpreted. Not only is such a person likely to know of several interpreters, but he or she is also in a position from personal experience to know which ones interpret accurately and literally. Do not assume that simply because someone is a court certified interpreter he or she will do an adequate job of contemporaneous, literal translation for the particular witness in your case.

The fact that you have a well-educated and articulate interpreter does not automatically mean that your witness will be able to converse at the same sophisticated level. A problem often arises when witnesses have difficulty expressing themselves in the native language or use slang or colloquial terms that the interpreter may misunderstand. Make sure that your interpreter understands the slang or colloquial terms and that the interpreter will take the initiative to explain these terms.

PRACTICE TIP: You must become familiar with the possible problems of interpreting for your witness, e.g., lack of sophistication or use of slang, colloquial terms, or dialect. In addition to finding a competent interpreter, consider learning terms or phrases in the foreign language to help you examine the witness.

When selecting an interpreter, give specific attention to your client's or witness's nationality and region of origin. For example, a problem may arise if your client is a Mexican national and you retain a Chilean interpreter, because although both speak Spanish, the same word may have entirely different meanings in each country. The same problem can arise when the witness and interpreter are from the same country but from different regions of that country.

Keep in mind that there are basically two types of interpreters:

- Those who interpret literally; and
- Those who paraphrase to interpret the essence and meaning of a witness's statement.

There are advantages and disadvantages to both types, but an interpreter who interprets literally is usually preferable. One who interprets literally will not miss any detail that you (in questioning) and the witness (in responding) may consider crucial. On the other hand, the literally interpreted answer may often sound strange to the judge or jury. This result is unavoidable because sentence structure, common usages, and cultural context are important aspects of spoken languages that vary from one language to another. Similarly, your witness may have difficulty understanding a literally interpreted question. Sometimes literal translations of idiomatic expressions produces unintelligible testimony.

The primary advantage of an interpreter who translates only the essence is that the testimony will probably be presented in terms that the judge and jury will understand. This type of interpreter may also pick up on nuances that a literal interpreter might miss. The greatest disadvantage of an interpreter who translates only the essence of or paraphrases a witness's testimony is that, no matter how good an interpreter, this interpreter might disregard or change a term that is crucial to your case.

The best course is to select a literal interpreter who understands the state of mind of the English-speaking listener and will take the initiative to explain an unusual-sounding translation to the judge, jury, or witness, along with the basis of the interpreter's explanation. This method will allow you to correct the interpreter in the unlikely, but critically important, event that the explanation is wrong.

EXAMPLE: The interpreter might say, "What the witness literally said was 'I have an ache in my stomach,' but I believe that she means that she was hungry, because in the language spoken where the witness comes from, the statement 'I have an ache in my stomach' means that the person is hungry." If you know that the witness was actually testifying that she had a pain in her stomach, then you can correct the interpreter. Remember to ask follow-up questions if you believe it is necessary to clarify the witness's statement.

After you have chosen an interpreter, practice both direct and cross-examination with the interpreter and witness. Feel free to ask for explanations of any problems the translator is having. Make sure that you have chosen the right interpreter for the client or witness.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/ C. Procedure for appointment/§11.34 1. Check local rules and lists

C. Procedure for appointment

§11.34 1. Check local rules and lists

Arrange to provide an interpreter or translator in advance of trial. See Los Angeles Ct R 8.18. Before doing so, ascertain whether the court has a local rule or policy on interpreters. Under Govt C §68562(g), "[e]ach superior court may adopt local rules to impose additional requirements, standards, examinations, and programs as necessary for equity or to recognize local conditions."

If local rules require a certified court interpreter (Govt C §68562(a)), check with the court to see whether the court has a list of certified court interpreters, and make the arrangements with someone on that list. Similarly, for a language for which use of a certified court interpreter is not required, make arrangements with someone qualified by the court as specified in Govt C §68561(d). If the court maintains a list of court-approved interpreters, contact someone on that list.

Each superior court must keep a current roster of qualified interpreters certified under Evid C §754(f) to interpret for deaf or hearing-impaired persons. Evid C §754(o). Make arrangements with an interpreter on the list if such an interpreter is needed.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.35 2. Ask court to appoint interpreter

In the absence of a local rule or policy, there are no formal requirements for asking the court to appoint an interpreter or translator. The request may be presented orally or in writing, preferably at the beginning of trial. If the request is made orally, the court reporter should be present to record the request. "[T]he court should conduct an examination on the record to determine whether a court interpreter is needed. After the examination, the court should state its conclusion on the record." Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.10(b).

If the client is indigent, ask the court to appoint an interpreter or translator at public expense. On compensation and costs of interpreters and translators generally, see §§11.42-11.43.

PRACTICE TIP: If you believe that good cause exists under Govt C §68561(c) for the court to appoint someone who is not a certified court interpreter, you will need to establish for the court why you need a noncertified interpreter.

On procedure for interpreters in federal court, see 28 USC §1827; Fed R Civ P 43. See also local federal district court rules.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.36 3. Objecting to appointment

If you believe that a prospective interpreter or translator lacks the necessary competency or qualifications, object to the appointment (People v Phillips (1910) 12 CA 760, 108 P 731) before the interpreter is permitted to act. People v Aranda (1986) 186 CA3d 230, 237, 230 CR 498. Ask that the court permit a brief supplemental examination before deciding whether to appoint the interpreter. See Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.11(b)(3). The question of an interpreter's competence is a factual one for the trial court. People v Aranda, supra.

If an interpreter's competence becomes an issue after he or she begins interpreting, object at that time. People v Aranda, supra. For court instructions to participants in interpreted proceedings, see Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.11.

§11.37 D. Examination with interpreter or translator

Anyone serving "as an interpreter or translator in any action is subject to all the rules of law relating to witnesses." Evid C §750. "[I]nterpreters are treated as expert witnesses and subject to the same rules of competency and examination as are experts generally." Comment to Evid C §752.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.38 1. Interpreter must take oath

The interpreter or translator must take an oath to make a true interpretation or translation. Evid C §751(a), (c). An interpreter or translator employed by the court and certified or registered in accordance with Govt C §§68560-68566 (see §11.32) may file the oath prescribed by Evid C §751 with the court clerk and that "oath shall serve for all subsequent court proceedings until the appointment is revoked by the court." Evid C §751(d).

When a deaf or hearing-impaired person is testifying under oath, the interpreter certified under Evid C §754(f) (see §11.32) must "advise the court whenever he or she is unable to comply with his or her oath" taken under Evid C §751(a). Evid C §751(b).

Moreover, under Evid C §752(a), the interpreter must be sworn to interpret for the witness when the "witness is incapable of understanding the English language or is incapable of expressing himself or herself in the English language so as to be understood directly by counsel, court and jury."

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.39 2. Ask questions of witness, not interpreter

§11.39 2. Ask questions of witness, not interpreter

"It is the duty of the interpreter to interpret and report to the court every statement made by the witness." People v Wong Ah Bang (1884) 65 C 305, 4 P 19. See People v Shaw (1984) 35 C3d 535, 542, 198 CR 788.

Phrase your questions directly to the witness as if no interpreter were present. Do not begin a question by saying, "Ask him whether...." Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.11(b)(1). See People v Shaw, supra, in which the court stated: "Counsel and courts are ... cautioned to assure accurate interpretation through the use of direct questions to and answers from the witness requiring verbatim translation in order to avoid the pitfalls of paraphrasing leading to distortion or inaccuracies." 35 C3d at 543.

Keep your examination simple, assuming no special education or sophistication on the part of the witness. Use the same rules you would follow if the witness spoke English, e.g., short questions. See §§11.51-11.62. Ask the witness or the interpreter to explain the witness's slang or colloquial language.

Practice both your direct examination and the anticipated cross-examination with the interpreter and witness. Pay particular attention to the terms of art that will be used during the witness's testimony and the nuances of the witness's demeanor and phrases that give a human element to the testimony.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.40 3. Accuracy of translation

§11.40 3. Accuracy of translation

If you anticipate that technical terms will be used during the trial, review them in advance with the interpreter or translator to be certain that at the trial the interpretation or translation will be accurate. If another party is providing the interpreter or translator, and you are not familiar with the foreign language, you may want to engage another interpreter or translator to verify the accuracy of the trial interpreter or translator.

The accuracy of the interpretation or translation may be discredited either through cross-examination or by independent proof. See People v Walker (1924) 69 CA 475, 231 P 572. Objections to accuracy should be directed to the court and not to the interpreter or translator. "Counsel should ask permission to approach the bench to discuss the problem." Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.11(b)(2).

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.41 4. Objecting to interpreter

If no objection is raised at trial to issues of the interpreter's qualifications or competency, those issues may not be raised for the first time on appeal. People v Aranda (1986) 186 CA3d 230, 237, 230 CR 498 (competency); People v Reyes (1976) 62 CA3d 53, 70, 132 CR 848 (qualifications).

When an interpreter has not been sworn to interpret for the witness, failure to make a timely objection on that ground waives the right to assert that error on appeal. See People v Mora (1984) 153 CA3d 18, 22, 199 CR 904 (any impropriety in interpreter's failure to take oath waived by failure to make timely objection).

© The Regents of the University of California

E. Compensation and costs

§11.42 1. Party employs interpreter or translator

In civil cases, the litigants pay the interpreter's or translator's fee. See Govt C §68092(b). The party hiring the interpreter or translator should provide for his or her compensation before trial. See Los Angeles Ct R 8.18.

Fees for persons appointed under Evid C §754 to serve as interpreters for deaf or hearing-impaired persons are charged against the county or other state political subdivision in which the action is pending. In administrative proceedings, the fee is "charged against the appointing board or authority." Evid C §754(i).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.43 2. Court appoints interpreter or translator

§11.43 2. Court appoints interpreter or translator

When a party has not employed an interpreter or translator, or a party's interpreter or translator has been disqualified, the court in an appropriate case may appoint an interpreter or translator as provided in Evid C §§730-733 (court-appointed experts). Evid C §§752(b), 753(b). When this occurs, the court may fix a reasonable fee for compensation. Evid C §§730, 752(b), 753(b). See also Gardiana v Small Claims Court (1976) 59 CA3d 412, 130 CR 675.

Except as otherwise provided in Evid C §731, the compensation fixed by the court under Evid C §730 is in the first instance to "be apportioned and charged to the several parties in such proportion as the court may determine and may thereafter be taxed and allowed in like manner as other costs." Evid C §731(c).

A court's refusal to appoint an interpreter to assist litigants does not violate the constitutional guarantees of due process or equal protection of law, but Evid C §752 provides for the appointment of interpreters to assist witnesses. See Jara v Municipal Court (1978) 21 C3d 181, 145 CR 847. A small claims court has the duty to appoint an interpreter for an indigent litigant if it determines that one is necessary. Gardiana v Small Claims Court (1976) 59 CA3d 412, 421, 130 CR 675. See also discussion in §11.29.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/ V. SEQUENCE OF PRESENTING EVIDENCE/§11.44 A. Order of proof and phases of examination

V. SEQUENCE OF PRESENTING EVIDENCE

§11.44 A. Order of proof and phases of examination

The court has discretion to regulate the order of proof, except as otherwise provided by law. Evid C §320. The usual order of proof in a civil case is:

- Plaintiff produces evidence on plaintiff's part;
- Defendant produces evidence on defendant's part;
- Plaintiff may then offer rebuttal evidence; and
- Defendant may then offer rebuttal (sometimes called surrebuttal) evidence.

See CCP §§607, 631.7; McLellan v McLellan (1972) 23 CA3d 343, 353, 100 CR 258.

The examination of each witness ordinarily proceeds in the following phases (Evid C §772(a)):

- Direct examination,
- Cross-examination,
- Redirect examination,
- Recross-examination, and
- Redirect and recross-examination.

Each phase of the examination must be concluded before the next phase begins unless the court for good cause directs otherwise. Evid C §772(b). On examining adverse party or adverse witness under Evid C §776, see §§11.73-11.75. On making an adverse witness your own during cross-examination, see §11.84.

The judge also has discretion to take witnesses out of order for the convenience of counsel or the witnesses. See Evid C §320. Busy witnesses, such as doctors, are typically allowed to testify out of order. The witnesses' convenience, however, must be balanced by the primary objective of presenting the evidence in a logical, easily understood fashion.

The judge may also conditionally admit certain documentary evidence out of order, subject to any necessary preliminary facts being supplied later in the trial. See Evid C §§320, 403(b); Bates v Tower (1894) 103 C 404, 37 P 385; Crosett v Whelan (1872) 44 C 200. If the preliminary facts are not subsequently established, the opponent may move to strike the evidence. See Evid C §353(a). See also Estate of Wempe (1921) 185 C 557, 197 P 949.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.45 B. Sequence of witnesses; practical considerations

You will probably have already determined the sequence of witnesses. See §5.20. However, be flexible in your plan in order to accommodate witnesses and avoid delaying the trial.

Keep your client available to testify at all times during the trial, because nonparty witnesses may be able to appear only at certain times. To avoid delays, it may sometimes be necessary to put on the nonparty witnesses at specified times and fill in gaps with the client as a witness. However, it assists the jury and the judge to hear a logical progression of the case, and disjointed testimony from the client may hinder the overall presentation.

Although there is no limit on the number of witnesses that may be called, the trial judge will often disallow cumulative testimony, i.e., testimony of witnesses who simply repeat the testimony of prior witnesses. To maintain jury interest, it is usually desirable not to "over-try" the case by belaboring points beyond the jury's attention span. Nonetheless, repetition of certain key facts through different witnesses is an effective means of persuading a jury. They may feel restless on rehearing the same facts, but they will be less likely to overlook them during deliberations.

PRACTICE TIP: In business cases, it is often helpful to have business records admitted before trial or early in the proceedings and out of the jury's presence, i.e., before the witness appears who will testify about them. In this way, the witness may refer directly to the records without the delay of having to introduce each one into evidence. Also, the jury will not have to wait for the judge to rule on any objections that may be raised about their admissibility. This can almost always be done by stipulation; be sure to plan ahead.

On use of discovery, including presenting testimony by deposition or videotaped deposition, see chap 10.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.46 C. Order of evidence with multiple parties

There is no rule concerning the order of presentation of evidence by multiple plaintiffs or defendants in a case. The parties should agree among themselves on the sequence of presenting evidence. If there is a target defendant in the plaintiff's case, it is logical for that defendant's witnesses to go first. On the other hand, if one defendant is particularly sympathetic, it may benefit the entire defense to begin with that defendant's witnesses.

Sometimes one defendant's position conflicts with that of another defendant. For example, peripheral defendants may want to avoid being blamed along with primary defendants, whereas more culpable defendants may want to hide behind the coattails of the relatively innocent defendants. Cooperation is usually possible, however, because most defendants want to avoid disputes among themselves, which would only benefit the plaintiff.

NOTE: If the parties cannot agree among themselves on the sequence of presenting evidence, generally the first named plaintiff will proceed, as will the first named defendant, unless the court orders otherwise.

VI. DIRECT EXAMINATION

§11.47 A. Planning direct examination to elicit facts

Direct examination is a means of obtaining information from your own witnesses in an orderly manner. The purpose is to elicit facts covering all elements of your client's claims or defenses. This purpose is best accomplished if the attorney follows a few guidelines, such as:

- Make an outline of subjects to be covered, paying particular attention to the sequence of questions (see §5.9);
- Prepare complex or hypothetical questions in advance (see §§5.85-5.87, 11.141-11.144);
- Frame most questions in simple language (see §§11.51-11.53);
- Put the witness at ease with the first few questions;
- Let the more articulate witnesses tell their stories without interruption;
- Keep your role unobtrusive (see §11.15);
- Speak naturally, without haste or temper;
- Usually, do not react to the answers to the questions.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.48 B. Benefits of planning direct examination

§11.48 B. Benefits of planning direct examination

Testimony that is spontaneous, candid, and natural is more convincing than a rote recitation of prepared answers on direct examination. The attorney who relies on complete spontaneity, however, risks creating confusion. Although an outline of questions can interfere with spontaneity, it has many advantages, such as:

- A logical presentation of the story;
- Efficient use of time;
- The ability to check off the questions asked against the essential facts of the case to be proved, including, e.g., the elements of claims or defenses;
- Assurance that vital evidence is not overlooked under pressure;
- The ability to anticipate and to overcome objections; and
- Assurance that the testimony will open and close on strong points.

Variations from the outline are acceptable, if the questioning is going well, thus permitting spontaneity to occur. For preparation of witness examination plan, see §§3.28-3.30, 5.19.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.49 C. Attorney's demeanor during examination

Assume a demeanor during direct examination that reflects mastery of the facts. Appear calm and speak distinctly. Do not show reactions of anger, elation, or the like to any answers.

Generally, your primary role will be that of facilitator for the witness, who should have center stage. Stay in the background and permit the witness to testify as fully on his or her own as possible. Use short questions to control the flow of testimony. Ideally, the witness will be sufficiently prepared so as to not require much assistance from the examiner. If the witness forgets a point, however, you may refresh the witness's recollection. See §§11.63-11.68.

Maintain eye contact with the jury. Before testimony begins, some attorneys request their witnesses to occasionally look toward and talk directly to the jury, while testifying. Other attorneys feel that jurors dislike direct eye contact from witnesses, preferring to be observers whose presence is not overtly acknowledged. Stand far enough away from the witness to be sure that the jury can hear everything the witness says.

PRACTICE TIP: Local rules may require counsel to remain at or behind the counsel table. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.9.

While conducting the direct examination, be aware of the jury in order to evaluate their reaction. If the witness uses a technical term, ask a follow-up question to explain the term. Supplemental questions may deviate from the outline in order to clarify the witness's testimony.

PRACTICE TIP: Some attorneys feel it is condescending to ask the witness to "please explain to the jury" a certain term, as if the jury lacked the necessary understanding. A better approach is to ask the witness to "please tell us what that term means."

For discussion of defining technical terms, see §11.53.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.50 D. Avoid problems when framing questions

§11.50 D. Avoid problems when framing questions

Frame direct examination questions in simple language, avoiding complicated terms and extraneous phrases. In addition, avoid the types of questions discussed in §§11.51-11.62.

Make sure your question is in a form that is specific, especially as to time, place, and person, e.g., "What did the police officer say?" not "What did they say?" A vague question may mislead or confuse the witness, the jury, or both. In final argument, your opponent may argue that an answer to a vague question means something the witness never intended.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.51 1. Compound questions

§11.51 1. Compound questions

Questions with two or more parts, particularly when each part may elicit a different answer, are subject to objection as being compound questions. See Godfrey v Miller (1889) 80 C 420, 22 P 290; see generally California Trial Objections, chap 8 (Cal CEB Annual). See also Board of Trustees v Schuyten (1958) 161 CA2d 50, 326 P2d 223.

EXAMPLE: The attorney may ask, "Did the car go through the red light and turn left?" The answer to the first part may be "yes" (i.e., the car went through the light), while the response to the second part may be "no" (i.e., the car did not turn left).

Because of the confusion created by multipart inquiries, break compound questions into single units so that conflicting responses are not required.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.52 2. Questions having double negatives

§11.52 2. Questions having double negatives

Avoid questions containing double negatives.

EXAMPLE: "You did not decide that you would not give him the document, is that true?" The witness might respond "Yes," meaning "I did not make that decision," or "No," meaning "I did not give him the document."

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: This is a common problem. To be sure the record is clear, listen closely to the answer to a question containing a double negative.

This type of question is objectionable on the ground that it is ambiguous or unintelligible. See generally California Trial Objections, chap 7 (Cal CEB Annual).

You may also wish to avoid questions containing simple negatives, e.g., ending a question with "isn't that true?" See appendix in §11.169 for list of leading questions.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.53 3. Questions having long words or technical phrases

§11.53 3. Questions having long words or technical phrases

Avoid using polysyllabic or technical words when ordinary words will do just as well. Even such simple lawyerly words as "prior" or "subsequent" should be avoided in favor of "before" and "after."

Sometimes, however, using lengthy or technical terms is necessary, especially when examining expert witnesses. In that situation, immediately clarify the meaning, e.g., "Dr. Jones, would you please explain what you mean by that term?"

Develop your facility to pronounce scientific terms so that they can be articulated easily and without self-consciousness. Alternatively, use abbreviations—referring, for instance, to "TDI" rather than to "toluene di-isocyanate," after making sure that the witness has explained the abbreviation.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.54 4. Leading questions about material matters

§11.54 4. Leading questions about material matters

A leading question is one that suggests the answer (Evid C §764), such as: "And then you told the defendant that you agreed to his terms, right?" See appendix in §11.169 for list of words and phrases that make a question leading.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.55 a. Not usually allowed on direct examination

§11.55 a. Not usually allowed on direct examination

Leading questions are generally not permitted on direct examination, particularly if the question focuses on a major element of the claim or defense being presented. Evid C §767. A leading question often calls for a yes or no answer. All the facts are contained within the question, leaving the witness only to agree (as usually occurs) or disagree. Not all questions that call for a yes or no answer are leading, however. People v Jones (1911) 160 C 358, 366, 117 P 176.

To convert a leading question into a nonleading question, the suggested answer must be taken out. For example, instead of asking, "Did the automobile then turn to the right?" ask "Which way did the automobile turn?" To avoid objections as "leading" and, equally important, to open up the witness, try to begin each question with "who," "what," "where," "which," "when," "how," "tell us," or "describe for us."

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.56 b. Exceptions: When allowed

Leading questions on direct examination are allowed "under special circumstances where the interests of justice otherwise require." Evid C §767.

Preliminary matters. Most courts and opposing counsel both permit and indeed appreciate the use of leading questions on preliminary matters. See Comment to Evid C §767. For example, in a long recitation of a witness's prior employment, it would probably be appropriate to suggest an occasional answer to the witness, in order to move the testimony along, such as: "After serving four years as vice president, did you then become president of the company in 1999?"

Witness assistance. Leading questions may be used when the witness is an infant, is mentally impaired, is an expert, or is shown to be hostile. See Comment to Evid C §767. Leading questions may also be used to refresh recollection. See §11.63. See also Comment to Evid C §767.

Adverse witness. Leading questions may be used when an adverse party or a person identified with the adverse party is called to testify under Evid C §776. See §§11.73-11.75.

When several parties are on one side, a question often arises whether a party should be allowed to examine a witness called by a co-party under direct examination rules (where leading questions are not allowed) or under cross-examination rules (where they are allowed). Evidence Code §773(a) provides that, when a witness has been called by any party, each other party may cross-examine that witness in the order that the court directs. However, when the interest of the party who seeks to cross-examine the witness is not adverse to the party calling the witness, the cross-examination is subject to direct examination rules, and leading questions are prohibited. Evid C §§773(b), 767. Thus, leading questions that purport to be cross-examination, but are actually friendly questions, are prohibited when two or more parties have similar interests.

On use of leading questions during cross-examination, see §11.111.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.57 5. Questions calling for narrative answer

A question calling for a narrative answer is open-ended and permits the witness to ramble on indefinitely. For example, an attorney might ask: "Mr. Smith, what is your version of the accident?" The problem with this question is that it permits the witness to testify to relevant as well as irrelevant information, to offer opinions as well as factual testimony, and to answer both a pertinent inquiry and a totally immaterial one. Also, the witness may slip over a key fact that you want to emphasize by a pointed question.

The court nevertheless has discretion to permit a witness to testify in narrative form. See Evid C §765; Silva v Dias (1941) 46 CA2d 662, 116 P2d 496. See also People v Davis (1907) 6 CA 229, 91 P 810; California Trial Objections, chap 10 (Cal CEB Annual). This type of question may be appropriate on preliminary or foundational matters. For example, a court would probably permit the question: "Would you please state your educational background?" On material matters, however, questions calling for narrative answers are seldom permitted. For further discussion, see Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 28 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

§11.58 6. Questions assuming facts not in evidence

If, for example, an important issue in a case was whether the plaintiff had orally agreed to buy goods from the defendant, it would be improper to ask: "After you agreed to buy the goods, did you state where you were going?" The introductory part of the question is clearly in dispute and not established by the evidence.

An unwary witness or inattentive counsel may not initially focus on an opening phrase that contains a damaging factual assumption. Thus, a witness may inadvertently answer the main part of the question (about where he was going) without recognizing the tacit admission in the first part of the question. For this reason, such questions are objectionable.

A question that begins: "Isn't it a fact that …" is not only leading but may suggest the existence of an unproven fact. Similarly, a question beginning: "Do you recall that …" or "Did you know that …" based on the attorney's assertion rather than the witness's recollection, may assume facts not in evidence. An attorney may begin a question with the words "Isn't it a fact that …" if the question alludes to facts that are in evidence. Marcus v Palm Harbor Hosp. (1967) 253 CA2d 1008, 61 CR 702.

Accordingly, such questions are not permitted on either direct or cross-examination and, in fact, repeatedly using this technique may result in counsel's being held in contempt or cited for misconduct. See, e.g., Love v Wolf (1964) 226 CA2d 378, 38 CR 183. See also §§16.66-16.90 on attorney misconduct.

To avoid an objection that the question "assumes a fact" while at the same time directing the witness in the proper direction, use the phrase "if anything" occasionally. For example, "What, if anything, was said about royalties?"

Rationale: Even if the witness denies the facts implied or suggested in the questions, the jury is inclined to give those facts some weight. By including the facts in the question, the attorney suggests to the jury another source of information unknown to them that would corroborate the truth of the matters in the question. People v Pitts (1990) 223 CA3d 606, 734, 273 CR 757.

EXAMPLE 1: An attorney used the "Do you know that.…" technique as a means of bringing before the jury the fact that several California counties had enacted legislation prohibiting the use of a chemical that was the basis of the dispute. The prohibition by certain counties was not then in evidence and was never received in evidence. The attorney was found guilty of misconduct. Love v Wolf, supra.

EXAMPLE 2: An attorney engaged in a pattern of misconduct to discredit the defendant, including asking questions beginning "Isn't it true that.…." One question insinuated that 21 citizens had testified in another case that defendant had made adjustments to increase visibility at a crossing. Simmons v Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1976) 62 CA3d 341, 133 CR 42. See also the cases discussed in Simmons.

EXAMPLE 3: Defense counsel asked whether the witness/deputy had spoken to defendant's brother, who was also a deputy. Even though this question alerted the jury to the fact that defendant's brother was a deputy, the question was not improper, because the defense attorney has the absolute right to explore avenues of potential bias with a prosecution witness and the question did not "assume" any facts. People v Fatone (1985) 165 CA3d 1164, 1173, 211 CR 288.

For further discussion, see California Trial Objections, chap 15 (Cal CEB Annual). On such questions constituting attorney misconduct, see §16.89.

© The Regents of the University of California

7. Cumulative or repetitive questions

§11.59 a. Questions asked of same witness

Because repetitive questions may unduly emphasize the testimony or may consume too much time, the court has discretion not to permit the attorney to ask the same witness essentially the same question more than once. See Evid C §§352, 765, 774. An objection to such a question will lie on the ground that it has been asked and answered. See, e.g., People v Hatfield (1933) 129 CA 162, 18 P2d 366; Depaoli v Claus (1930) 110 CA 145, 293 P 881. See generally California Trial Objections, chap 11 (Cal CEB Annual). Repetitive questions might also be considered harassment, and an objection could be made based on Evid C §765.

Similarly, a party's attempt to establish every credential and qualification of an expert witness can be objected to on the ground that the evidence is cumulative. See Canavin v Pacific Southwest Airlines (1983) 148 CA3d 512, 537 n13, 196 CR 82 (court within its discretion in refusing to admit cumulative evidence, including the number of articles written by experts in their field, whether they were editors in their field, and the names of other professional societies to which they belonged). On whether to waive testimony on expert's credentials and qualifications, see §11.132.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.60 b. Questions asked of different witnesses

Counsel may be prohibited from asking other witnesses a question that seeks to elicit testimony that merely repeats that of previous witnesses on a particular matter. To the extent permitted, however, considerable persuasive power lies in emphasizing key facts through repetition. For discussion of cumulative evidence, see generally California Trial Objections, chap 31 (Cal CEB Annual).

To avoid excessive repetition, the court may specifically limit the number of experts who may be called by any party during the trial, on the ground that it would be cumulative. Evid C §723. See also Horn v General Motors Corp. (1976) 17 C3d 359, 131 CR 78; Estate of Wineteer (1917) 176 C 28, 167 P 516. The court may nonetheless allow seemingly repetitive testimony, e.g., when the basis of the expert's opinion is different from that of other experts or when the witness is an independent observer and not an expert for a party. See McGee v Cessna Aircraft Co. (1983) 139 CA3d 179, 192, 188 CR 542. On expert opinion testimony generally, see §§11.130-11.151.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.61 8. Argumentative questions

§11.61 8. Argumentative questions

A purported inquiry that is really not a question, but an argumentative statement, is objectionable. People v Hatfield (1933) 129 CA 162, 18 P2d 366. Similarly, a question that does not call for a fact but elicits a conclusion or an inference, is objectionable. See People v Ramey (1924) 70 CA 92, 232 P 724. See also Schuh v Oil Well Supply Co. (1920) 50 CA 588, 195 P 703. A question that calls for an answer in response to an argument contained within the question is also objectionable. Estate of Loucks (1911) 160 C 551, 558, 117 P 673. See Evid C §765. Questions can be argumentative in tone as well as in phrasing.

EXAMPLE 1: "Was the other witness lying?" or "How can you give such testimony?" (calls for a conclusion or an inference).

EXAMPLE 2: "Well, now, can you reconcile the two statements?" (contains an argument).

EXAMPLE 3: "How can you remember a date as long ago as that, yet you cannot remember the day of the week?" (contains an argument) (People v Harlan (1901) 133 C 16, 21, 65 P 9).

EXAMPLE 4: "Do you mean to tell me (followed by a mischaracterization of the witness's testimony)?"; "You weren't very careful, were you?"; "Mr. Smith disagrees with you—who is right, you or he?" (asked to persuade the jury, not to elicit facts).

Avoid asking such argumentative questions during both direct and cross-examination. See also California Trial Objections, chap 14 (Cal CEB Annual); Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 28 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.62 9. Questions calling for speculative answer

A question that seeks to elicit a speculative answer is objectionable. See, e.g., County of San Mateo v Christen (1937) 22 CA2d 375, 379, 71 P2d 88 (objection on ground that witness's answer would be speculative was sustained in eminent domain proceeding when witness "was asked how much of the top soil on her land had been washed away by reason of the rain being diverted onto it from the road").

Although a witness may give an opinion on a subject, the opinion is inadmissible speculation if it does not meet the requirements of Evid C §§800-801 (e.g., based on personal knowledge of the witness and likely to assist the trier of fact). See generally California Trial Objections, chap 16 (Cal CEB Annual).

© The Regents of the University of California

E. Refreshing witness's recollection

§11.63 1. Ask more specific question

The stress of testifying in the courtroom may cause even a well-prepared witness to forget a key fact. When this occurs, you may (1) show the forgetful or hesitant witness a document to refresh his or her recollection (see §11.64) or (2) ask a more specific question. Although a follow-up or more specific question may be objected to as "leading" by the adverse attorney, it may at least stimulate the witness's memory so that he or she can then respond to a direct, nonleading question. In any event, the court has discretion to allow leading questions to the extent necessary to revive the witness's recollection. See Comment to Evid C §767. See also People v Jones (1963) 221 CA2d 619, 34 CR 618.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.64 2. Show witness a writing

To refresh a witness's recollection, you may show a writing to the witness, who may testify to any fact now recalled. The writing itself is not introduced into evidence, and the jury may not examine it unless opposing counsel chooses to introduce it or the writing has an independent basis of admissibility. See Evid C §771.

NOTE: The need to refresh a witness's recollection may also arise because you wish to "induce" an uncooperative witness to go along with a proposition by showing the witness written corroboration of it.

The following shows how a writing can be used on direct examination to refresh a witness's recollection:

Q. Could you tell us the model of the car?

A. It was an American-made car. I can't remember right now exactly what model it was.

Q. Your Honor, may I approach the witness with a document for the purpose of refreshing his recollection? The document is marked as Exhibit 27 for purposes of identification and has previously been shown to opposing counsel.

Court: Go ahead, counsel.

Q. Let me hand you a document marked as Exhibit 27 for purposes of identification. Please take a moment and read the document to yourself. [Pause while witness reads.] Does the exhibit refresh your recollection as to the model of the car?

A. Yes, it does.

Q. What model was it?

A. It was a 2005 Chevrolet.

At this point, if the document is independently admissible, you may wish to have the witness authenticate it and then offer it in evidence. If the document does not refresh the witness's recollection, consider whether it is possible to have the witness read the document to the jury as past recollection recorded. See §§11.69-11.71.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.65 3. Types of writings to use to refresh recollection

There is no restriction on the type of writing that may be used to refresh a witness's recollection. For example, such a writing shown to a witness need not have been made by the witness. See, e.g., People v Goff (1981) 127 CA3d 1039, 1045, 179 CR 190 (summary of hospital records compiled by doctor and other hospital staff members used to refresh doctor's recollection). It is probable that nonwritings, like an audiotape or a view of evidence, can be used to refresh recollection. See Comment to Evid C §771.

A witness's memory may also be refreshed by a writing that is not admissible into evidence. See People v Wojahn (1959) 169 CA2d 135, 141, 337 P2d 192, cited by In re Berman (1989) 48 C3d 517, 525, 256 CR 802 (FBI agent used inadmissible recordings and transcripts of telephone conversations to refresh his memory). Memory can also be refreshed through a tape-recorded statement. See People v Brock (1985) 38 C3d 180, 197, 211 CR 122.

See also Frio v Superior Court (1988) 203 CA3d 1480, 250 CR 819, in which a witness refreshed his recollection from notes he had made from telephone conversations recorded in violation of Pen C §632. The court held that use of such notes to refresh recollection did not violate Pen C §632(d) and that, to the extent the witness's recollection had been refreshed and the witness had a present recollection of those conversations, the witness was not precluded from testifying about them. 203 CA3d at 1492.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.66 4. When recollection not refreshed

If the witness does not have a present recollection, refreshed or otherwise, the writings and other items used to refresh the witness's recollection might be entered into evidence as a past recollection recorded if they meet the requirements of Evid C §1237. Frio v Superior Court (1988) 203 CA3d 1480, 250 CR 819. On past recollection recorded, see §§11.69-11.71.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.67 5. Production and admissibility of writings used

Whenever writings are used to refresh a witness's recollection, either before or during trial, opposing counsel can require that the writing be produced at trial unless production is excused under Evid C §771(c). Evid C §771(a). If the writing is not produced, the witness's testimony about the matter must be stricken. Evid C §771(a). See International Ins. Co. v Montrose Chem. Corp. (1991) 231 CA3d 1367, 282 CR 783 (party sanctioned for refusing to produce documents used to refresh deponent's recollection); People v Goff (1981) 127 CA3d 1039, 1045, 179 CR 190 (doctor's testimony should have been stricken owing to failure to produce summary of hospital records used to refresh recollection).

If the writing is produced, opposing counsel may cross-examine the witness about it and introduce in evidence only the portion that is pertinent to the witness's testimony. Evid C §771(b). The right to introduce the writing into evidence, however, is not unlimited. Only the parts of the document that are pertinent to the witness's testimony are admissible under §771(b). See Comment to Evid C §771(b).

Similarly, admissibility of such evidence is subject to the court's discretion under Evid C §352, and on occasion the court may exclude the evidence under that section. In addition, certain exclusionary rules may be held to bar admissibility of such documentary evidence. See, e.g., Box v California Date Growers Ass'n (1976) 57 CA3d 266, 270, 129 CR 146 (traffic accident report prepared by California Highway Patrol officer that was used at trial to refresh his recollection held inadmissible because of Veh C §20012).

Be aware that, if a writing is subject to the attorney work-product doctrine, showing it to a witness to refresh his or her recollection waives the work-product protection. See Mize v Atchison, T. & S.F. Ry. (1975) 46 CA3d 436, 449, 120 CR 787. It is unclear whether the attorney-client privilege is waived by using a document subject to that privilege to refresh the witness's memory. See §5.7.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.68 6. Previously hypnotized witness

A witness is incompetent to testify about certain facts when the only memory of those facts occurred after the witness had been hypnotized. Schall v Lockheed Missiles & Space Co. (1995) 37 CA4th 1485, 44 CR2d 191.

Under Schall, a trial court in a civil case when faced with an evidentiary challenge must conduct a hearing (1) to determine whether the witness underwent hypnosis, (2) for the purpose of restoring memory, and (3) if applicable, to determine whether any proposed testimony is about events recalled and related to others before the hypnotic session. 37 CA4th at 1492. Based on the Kelly standard (see People v Kelly (1976) 17 C3d 24, 130 CR 144; §11.139), the Schall court held that the plaintiff in a sexual harassment action was incompetent to testify because her only memory of the employer's conduct occurred after she had been hypnotized by her therapist.

NOTE: Although a similar rule is codified in criminal cases in Evid C §795, that section does not apply in a civil case. Section 795 applies only "in a criminal proceeding," and it is error for a court to apply it in a civil action. Schall v Lockheed Missiles & Space Co., supra.

The same rule and reasoning that have been applied to hypnosis have also been applied in the civil context to the admissibility of testimony about repressed memories recovered after a witness has been given sodium amytal, a drug commonly known as truth serum. Ramona v Superior Court (1997) 57 CA4th 107, 123, 66 CR2d 766.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.69 F. Past recollection recorded

If a witness has insufficient present recollection of a matter to testify about it but has previously made a written statement about it, the writing may be read into evidence as past recollection recorded. Evid C §1237(b). Such evidence differs from the live testimony of a witness whose recollection has been refreshed. See §§11.63-11.68. Past recollection recorded is an exception to the hearsay rule under Evid C §1237.

The proponent may only read the writing into evidence, whereas an adverse party may introduce the actual writing into evidence. Evid C §1237(b). The original proponent of the evidence, however, may be able to have the writing received in evidence at a later stage in the trial if a foundation for another exception to the hearsay rule is established.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.70 1. Establish foundation

Before the writing may be read into evidence, the proponent must establish that:

- The witness's recollection is insufficient to testify fully and accurately (Evid C §1237(a)); and
- The writing containing the statement (Evid C §1237(a)):

(1) Was made at a time when the fact recorded in the writing actually occurred or was fresh in the witness' memory;
(2) Was made (i) by the witness or under the witness's direction or (ii) by some other person for the purpose of recording the witness' statement at the time it was made;
(3) Is offered after the witness testifies that the statement made was a true statement of such fact; and
(4) Is offered after the writing is authenticated as an accurate record of the statement.

To be admissible, §1237(a) also requires that the statement in the writing would have been admissible if the witness had made it while testifying.

With regard to authentication, "[i]f the witness made the writing or read it after it was made, the witness's testimony will authenticate it." Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 31 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009). If the writing was prepared by another person (such as an investigator or insurance adjuster), he or she can be called to testify to help establish this requirement. "Trustworthiness is provided by the witness-declarant testifying that he or she made a true statement of facts he or she knew, and by the person who recorded the statement testifying that he accurately recorded what the witness-declarant said." Evidence Benchbook, chap 31.

For a sample foundation for past recollection recorded, see Laying a Foundation To Introduce Evidence (Preparing and Using Evidence at Trial) (Cal CEB Action Guide April 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.71 2. Types of writings to use as past recollection recorded

Unlike documents used to refresh recollection (see §11.65), the types of writings that may be used as "past recollection recorded" are limited (see Evid C §1237) to either a statement written by the witness or under his or her direction (see Evid C §1237(a)(2)) or a writing prepared by another, recording a witness's statement at the time it was made (see Evid C §1237(a)(2)). Either is appropriate, as long as the other conditions of Evid C §1237(a) are met.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.72 G. Examining custodian of records

§11.72 G. Examining custodian of records

Sometimes you will subpoena the custodian of records of a nonparty for appearance at trial. See §§4.24-4.28. The custodian's only function is to bring business records that you want admitted into evidence.

In examining a custodian, first obtain certain preliminary testimony, such as:

- The name of the custodian's employer;
- The custodian's job title;
- The employer's designation of the witness as the custodian of records; and
- The custodian's receipt of the served subpoena.

Next, lay a foundation to introduce the records into evidence, under the business records exception to the hearsay rule. See Evid C §1271. Such a foundation may be stipulated to by the opposing attorney, or may be established by, e.g., the following questions:

> Did you or someone acting under your direction search for the requested records?
> How was the search conducted?
> Do these records constitute all the requested records that your employer has?
> Are you familiar with your employer's records and recordkeeping procedures?
> Please describe those procedures and the mode of preparation of these records.
> Are the records that you brought prepared and kept in the ordinary course of business?
> Were the entries in these records made at or about the date and time reflected in the records?

Request that the clerk mark the records for identification as exhibits, and then request that the records, or some of them, be introduced into evidence. The opposing attorney may object to the foundation laid for the records' admissibility, which can usually be satisfied by a few supplemental questions to the custodian, verifying the procedures and authenticity of the records. The opposing attorney may then be allowed to cross-examine the custodian.

NOTE: Unless opposing counsel stipulates to the foundation for admissibility of the records, you will want the personal attendance of a third party custodian of records; make sure that the subpoena duces tecum contains the clause as specified in Evid C §1564. Evid C §§1560, 1564. See §4.24.

H. Examining adverse party or adverse witness

§11.73 1. Who is adverse party or witness

An adverse witness is one identified with an adverse party (Evid C §776(d)(1)-(2)) and includes:

- A person for whose immediate benefit the action is being prosecuted or defended;
- An officer, director, superintendent, member, agent, employee, or managing agent of the adverse party, or of a person for whose immediate benefit the action is being prosecuted or defended; and
- Any public employee of a public entity when the public entity is a party.

Parties represented by the same attorney are deemed to be a single party under Evid C §776(c). A witness does not become adverse merely because the opponent calls the witness first. People v Spain (1984) 154 CA3d 845, 852, 201 CR 555 (prosecution called defendant's witness, but defense counsel not allowed to ask leading questions).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.74 2. Why to call adverse party or witness

§11.74 2. Why to call adverse party or witness

An adverse party or adverse witness may be called to testify for the following reasons:

- The testimony may supply missing evidence, possibly avoiding a nonsuit or directed verdict;
- The presentation may lead the jury to form an unfavorable impression about the adverse witness's testimony early in the trial; and
- The opposition may be caught unprepared, particularly if the adverse party was planning to rely on the testimony of other witnesses who were expected to testify first.

Unfavorable testimony of a party or witness called under Evid C §776 may not generally be considered against the party calling him or her on a motion for nonsuit or directed verdict. See, e.g., Estate of Lances (1932) 216 C 397, 14 P2d 768 (directed verdict); Frazier v Yor-Way Mkt., Inc. (1960) 185 CA2d 390, 8 CR 335 (nonsuit). But see Leonard v Watsonville Community Hosp. (1956) 47 C2d 509, 305 P2d 36 (testimony considered to dispel inference of negligence raised under doctrine of res ipsa loquitur in granting nonsuit to one party).

Among the disadvantages to calling an adverse party or adverse witness are that:

- The presentation may break the orderly sequence of evidence;
- The adverse party or witness may favorably impress the jury;
- Examining an adverse party or witness early, before sufficient facts have developed, may preclude an effective cross-examination; and
- The opposition may use the opportunity to present a portion of its case to the jury at an early stage of the trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.75 3. How to conduct examination

§11.75 3. How to conduct examination

Evidence Code §776 provides that a party may call an adverse party or adverse witness to testify and question that witness as though under cross-examination. Leading questions are therefore permitted. On cross-examination generally, see §§11.82-11.125.

Generally, the other parties can then cross-examine the adverse party or witness examined under Evid C §776(a) except that the attorney for the party/witness or for the party with whom the witness is identified or for a nonadverse party is limited to redirect examination of the witness. Evid C §776(b). On when counsel for these parties may examine the witness by other than redirect examination, see Evid C §776(e). For discussion of redirect examination, see §§11.126-11.127.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.76 I. Anticipating cross-examination

One function of direct examination is to blunt the effectiveness of anticipated cross-examination. For example, if you know that the opposition is aware of damaging testimony that can be elicited from a witness, it may be helpful to bring out that testimony first in direct examination. The elements of surprise and embarrassment can be minimized and the matter explained in a friendly interrogation.

Furthermore, cross-examination may go more smoothly for the witness if the areas of anticipated cross-examination have already been broached. Having explained the matter during direct examination, without having been limited to a "yes" or "no" response, the witness may not be tempted later to argue with the cross-examiner about the same subjects.

© The Regents of the University of California

J. Preparing for and handling objections

§11.77 1. Memorandum of law

Before trial, prepare a short memorandum of law on anticipated key objections to testimony or major documents. Then, when an objection arises, you have a ready argument on both the facts and the applicable law, to assist the judge in making a ruling. For further discussion, see §3.32. If the judge concludes that one attorney is better prepared on such important, disputed points of evidence, the judge may be inclined to give that attorney the benefit of the doubt in deciding the point.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: If an issue is worth a memorandum of law, it is worth a motion in limine. This gives the judge more time to read and consider the issue.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.78 2. Preliminary facts

§11.78 2. Preliminary facts

To avoid an objection that a preliminary fact must be proved before further testimony may be taken from the witness, plan the sequence of witnesses so that those witnesses who can establish preliminary facts testify first. On preliminary facts, see §§7.25-7.36.

If proper sequence is not possible, ask for a stipulation from opposing counsel. If this is not achievable, you might also attempt to persuade the court to receive further testimony conditionally, subject to a motion to strike if the preliminary fact is not later established. See Evid C §§320, 353(a), 403(b). Repeated requests of this type, however, try the patience of both court and jury, particularly if the attorney cannot establish the fact. Avoid having to recall earlier witnesses to establish preliminary facts, if possible.

If the opposing party objects that a preliminary fact must be proved before further testimony from the witness, follow the procedure in Evid C §402 for establishing that fact, out of the jury's presence. On preliminary fact-finding process, see §§7.25-7.36.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.79 3. Offer of proof

When the court sustains an objection to a question and the evidence sought from that witness cannot otherwise be introduced (e.g., by rephrasing the question), the attorney must generally make an offer of proof in order to preserve the right to argue on appeal that the trial court erred in excluding the evidence. Evid C §354(a); Marshall v Hancock (1889) 80 C 82, 22 P 61; People v Rodrigues (1969) 274 CA2d 770, 777, 79 CR 240. Make such an offer of proof outside the jury's presence, but request that a court reporter record the request to protect the record on appeal. After the offer of proof, you may argue that the response is relevant, is not hearsay, or otherwise overcomes the basis of the objection.

An offer of proof must indicate that a witness or witnesses are available to testify, and it must disclose the substance, purpose, and relevancy of the evidence sought to be offered. Evid C §354(a); Moore v Rogers (1958) 157 CA2d 192, 320 P2d 524.

Offer of proof is discussed in detail in §§15.50-15.60.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.80 4. Prepare alternative theories of admissibility

Be prepared, if at all possible, with alternative theories for offering your client's evidence into the record. Then, if the primary means of getting evidence into the record is blocked by a successful objection, you may be able to get the evidence admitted under an alternative theory and/or for a limited purpose.

For example, if the evidence is not admissible because it is hearsay (see Evid C §1200), consider showing that:

- The evidence can come in as impeachment.
- The evidence is not being offered as hearsay (i.e., to prove the truth of the matter asserted) but for the limited purpose of proving that the witness had knowledge of some fact, without regard to its truth.

See, e.g., Fletcher v Western Nat'l Life Ins. Co. (1970) 10 CA3d 376, 89 CR 78.

EXAMPLE: In an action by an insured against an insurance company for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, offers to compromise a claim were held inadmissible for the purpose of proving liability for that claim. Evid C §1152; CCP §998(b). But the offers were admissible to prove failure to process an insurance claim fairly and in good faith. White v Western Title Ins. Co. (1985) 40 C3d 870, 221 CR 509. Compare White with Palmer v Ted Stevens Honda, Inc. (1987) 193 CA3d 530, 238 CR 363 (in action for breach of oral contract for sale by consignment, litigation tactics inadmissible to show bad faith for purposes of punitive damage award).

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.81 5. Move forward

If you expect an objection, but none is made promptly, be prepared to proceed immediately with further questions before opposing counsel recovers from such inattentiveness and makes a belated objection.

By the same token, if an objection is made and sustained to both the principal and alternative bases for introducing evidence, it is best to move on smoothly to the next question, or subject. Avoid communicating to the jury that you were frustrated in introducing your evidence by delaying further or reacting negatively. If the evidence is crucial, return to the subject later in the examination and try to introduce the evidence in a different context.

© The Regents of the University of California

VII. CROSS-EXAMINATION

§11.82 A. Planning cross-examination to elicit facts and discredit adverse witnesses

Cross-examination serves two essential purposes: First, it enables you to bring out additional facts favorable to your client that were not established by prior direct testimony (see, e.g., Jackson v Feather River Water Co. (1859) 14 C 18). Second, it enables you to bring out facts tending to discredit the witness by showing that the witness's testimony was untrue, biased, or based on faulty memory or perception (see, e.g., Neal v Neal (1881) 58 C 287; Kelly v Bailey (1961) 189 CA2d 728, 11 CR 448).

EXAMPLE: A witness's bias in favor of a party who is also a family member might be brought out in the following manner:

Q. The plaintiff, Joe Smith, is your younger brother, is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. You love your brother and would never wish to hurt him, right?

A. Yes.

Q. And you would like to see him win this case, is that correct?

A. Yes.

EXAMPLE: A character witness testifies about a party's reputation. Pin the witness down about when the subject of the opposing party's character was discussed with others (e.g.: "When and where did you hear others discuss the defendant's character?"). If you show that there was no outside discussion with others and that the testimony that purports to be based on reputation in the community is really based on the witness's own personal opinion, you will undermine the impact of the character witness's testimony.

On evidence admissible to prove a person's character or trait of character, see Evid C §§786-790, 1100; Effective Introduction of Evidence in California, chap 18 (2d ed Cal CEB 2000); Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 29 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.83 B. Scope of cross-examination

Cross-examination of a witness is limited in scope to the witness's direct examination (see §11.85), unless the cross-examination is directed at impeachment. Evid C §§761, 773. In other words, the witness may be cross-examined on any subject matter elicited during his or her direct examination, as well as on his or her credibility. Evid C §§773, 780, 785. When only part of an act, declaration, conversation, or writing is elicited during direct examination, the remainder may be inquired into during cross-examination. Evid C §356.

A party to the action, who is adverse to the party initially calling a witness, may cross-examine the witness in the sequence that the court directs. Evid C §773(a). If the party's interest is not adverse to the party who initially called the witness, however, the examination is subject to the same rules that apply to direct examination. Evid C §773(b).

EXAMPLE: If plaintiff A calls her accountant as a witness, the accountant would be considered a friendly witness to plaintiff, and defendant could cross-examine the accountant as an adverse witness. But if plaintiff B is on the same side as plaintiff A (not adverse parties), B is limited to conducting a direct examination of the accountant.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.84 1. Making adverse witnesses your own

The attorney for a party whose case has not yet opened (see §§11.44-11.46) is not permitted to open his or her case in chief in the guise of cross-examining a witness for the adverse party beyond the scope of direct examination. See Thornton v Hooks (1868) 36 C 223; People v Melone (1945) 71 CA2d 291, 299, 162 P2d 505. See also Evid C §772. Each phase of the witness's examination (e.g., direct examination, cross-examination, redirect examination, recross-examination) must be concluded before the next phase begins, unless the court, for good cause, directs otherwise. Evid C §772(b).

If an attorney does attempt to cross-examine a witness on matters beyond the proper scope of cross-examination (see §11.85), the court, in its discretion, may require the adverse witness to become the witness for the cross-examining party. In this event, the cross-examination is interrupted, and the attorney may question the witness using only direct examination techniques. Evid C §§760, 772; Comment to Evid C §760.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.85 2. Determining scope of direct examination

The trial court has discretion to decide whether cross-examination is within the scope of the direct examination. Garcia v Hoffman (1963) 212 CA2d 530, 536, 28 CR 98. For example, cross-examination has been permitted on relevant matters necessarily implied in the direct examination. People v Pike (1962) 58 C2d 70, 90, 22 CR 664. See California Trial Objections, chap 26 (Cal CEB Annual); Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 28 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

A skillful cross-examiner will not restrict questions to a categorical review of matters, dates, and times covered in the direct examination. His or her cross-examination may be directed toward eliciting any matter that tends to overcome or diminish the effect of the witness's direct examination. The trial court has discretion during cross-examination to permit inquiry about a collateral fact when it is directly connected with a question in dispute and essential to its proper determination, or when it affects the witness's credibility. See Kelly v Bailey (1961) 189 CA2d 728, 736, 11 CR 448 (decided under former CCP §1868 (which was superseded by Evid C §§210, 350, 352)).

For example, if the expert witness's testimony during direct examination was limited to the discussion of a procedure recommended in book "A," thus ignoring an entirely different procedure recommended in book "B," the cross-examiner might proceed as follows:

Q. The procedure recommended in book "A" is not the only method, is it?

A. No.

Q. Are you familiar with book "B"?

A. Yes.

Q. In fact, an entirely different procedure is recommended in book "B," is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Yet you did not follow the procedure recommended in book "B," correct?

A. Yes.

For further discussion, see Trial Objections, chap 26.

C. Prepare for cross-examination

§11.86 1. Review file to anticipate direct testimony

Preparing for cross-examination should begin well before trial. Typically, immediate pretrial preparation begins by reviewing pertinent trial exhibits, deposition testimony, answers to interrogatories, responses to requests for admission, and other related documents. Use these materials to anticipate the adverse testimony of key opposition witnesses, and prepare to impeach or otherwise cross-examine those witnesses.

EXAMPLE: In discovery, and in related documents, the witnesses may have committed themselves to a certain version of the facts. If any witness deviates from that version during direct examination, you may, during cross-examination, read into the record inconsistent statements from the witness's deposition. Such cross-examination will undermine the witness's credibility and enable you to later argue to the judge or jury the inconsistency of the witness's testimony. For impeachment by prior inconsistent statements, see §§11.118-11.124.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.87 2. Prepare outline

§11.87 2. Prepare outline

It is usually helpful to prepare an outline of specific questions, or at least subject matter areas, to cover on cross-examination. To do this, review your issue outline, which lists what must be established in the case, as well as what the opposing party must prove. Using these key issues, you should know where to concentrate your cross-examination. On preparing an issue outline, see §§3.17-3.30.

From discovery, you should generally know the identity of witnesses the opposing party will likely call, their probable testimony on direct examination, and their anticipated responses on cross-examination. In preparing to cross-examine these witnesses, list the strongest points you hope to make during cross-examination. Depending on the complexity of the case, you may need to focus on only three or four major areas during cross-examination of each adverse witness. With thorough preparation, you can have at the ready before trial perhaps three-fourths of your total anticipated cross-examinations. The balance will depend on the adverse witness's actual testimony during direct examination, from which you will tailor further cross-examination questions.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.88 D. Deciding whether to cross-examine

§11.88 D. Deciding whether to cross-examine

Analyze and evaluate the opposing witness's testimony during direct examination. At the same time, ask yourself the following pertinent questions:

- Has the opposing witness hurt my client?
- Do I have facts at my disposal to rebut the damaging testimony?
- Has this witness related well to the jury, or is he or she vulnerable to attack?
- Is there any hope of persuading the witness to change his or her testimony on cross-examination, or will the witness actually underscore the damaging points?
- Is there a prior written inconsistent statement that might force a concession from the witness?
- Are there certain points that must be raised with this witness, as opposed to other, more friendly witnesses?

The process of asking and answering such questions yourself will help you decide whether to cross-examine the opposing witness. Many inexperienced attorneys believe they must cross-examine every witness in order to fulfill their self-image as an effective trial lawyer. It is the mark of the experienced trial attorney not to cross-examine a witness who has not harmed that attorney's client. Second, if you do decide to cross-examine the witness, discard any parts of the prepared outline of anticipated cross-examination (see §11.87) that now seem irrelevant or marginal in light of the witness's actual testimony on direct examination.

For example, if the witness's testimony merely relates to a collateral matter, carefully consider whether you should attempt any impeachment. If you are considering whether to impeach the witness with an inconsistent statement, do so only if the inconsistency is significant. A common mistake is to try to succeed on every point raised at trial. If your case is strong enough, it is not necessary to impeach a witness on a collateral matter. The effort to do so may increase the importance of the matter in the eyes of the jury, which could weaken your overall case if the impeachment is unsuccessful.

By analyzing and evaluating the witness's testimony on direct examination, you may also detect new and unanticipated areas of weakness that can be exploited on cross-examination.

On the other hand, see the factors discussed in §§11.89-11.92, which weigh against any cross-examination.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/ 1. Disadvantages of cross-examination/§11.89 a. Allows witness to expand testimony

1. Disadvantages of cross-examination

§11.89 a. Allows witness to expand testimony

Permitting a witness to testify during cross-examination may give that witness an opportunity to delve into subjects not fully explored on direct examination. Worse, the witness may repeat and expand on previously given harmful testimony.

If the cross-examiner inadvertently asks a question without knowing the answer, the unexpected response may seriously damage the case.

Sometimes an attorney purposely conducts a very limited direct examination, expecting opposing counsel to embark on an extended cross-examination that brings out damaging testimony. In this situation, if opposing counsel decides to cross-examine the witness and asks a "why" question, or a question opening the door to a whole new line of inquiry, the witness may be permitted to testify about damaging matters that would otherwise have been excluded.

EXAMPLE: Plaintiff, injured in a rear-end collision, is forbidden by the court from mentioning that defendant was arrested immediately after the accident for driving under the influence of a narcotic. Defense counsel should avoid any cross-examination that elicits testimony about the arrest, lest the court find that the cross-examining attorney has "opened the door" to the proscribed subject.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.90 b. Creates sympathy for witness

§11.90 b. Creates sympathy for witness

If the cross-examining attorney adopts a hostile or rude demeanor, the jury may sympathize with the witness. If a witness is rehabilitated on redirect examination (see §§11.126-11.127), an attempt to undermine the witness on recross-examination (see §11.128) may appear to the jury as unfair to the witness.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.91 c. Reinforces "expertise" of witness

If the witness is an expert who clearly knows more about the subject at hand than the interrogator, cross-examination will highlight this fact to the jury and weaken the cross-examiner's case. In addition, rather than being impeached by the cross-examination, a strong witness may be able to show, through additional testimony on redirect examination, that the witness had a particularly good basis for observing or recollecting the previously testified to facts, thereby further emphasizing his or her credibility. For discussion of redirect examination, see §§11.126-11.127.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.92 d. Risks losing jury's attention

A lengthy cross-examination, dwelling on immaterial points, risks losing the jury's attention, which may be worse than no cross-examination at all.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/ 2. If you decide to skip cross-examination/§11.93 a. Forces opposing counsel to rely on direct testimony

2. If you decide to skip cross-examination

§11.93 a. Forces opposing counsel to rely on direct testimony

The cross-examining attorney who simply says "No questions" may be following the best course of conduct, particularly when the opposing attorney has conducted a sketchy direct examination. In that event, the court may not permit opposing counsel to reopen direct examination so as to present the additional testimony that opposing counsel erroneously expected to come out during cross-examination. Moreover, the jury may be left with the impression that the cross-examining attorney felt that the direct examination did not harm the case.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.94 b. Risks making witness look stronger

Some experienced trial attorneys do not agree that it is sometimes advisable to forgo cross-examination. Many jurors expect cross-examination, and not meeting that expectation could make an adverse witness seem stronger than he or she really was. Some attorneys recommend asking at least a few benign questions, even if they are peripheral to the direct testimony. These questions would dispel the risk of any jurors' adverse reaction to no cross-examination at all.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.95 3. Consider limiting extent of cross-examination

If the objective is to discredit the witness's credibility, it may not be necessary to cross-examine on all possible points of dispute. Such an exhaustive examination may cause the jury to lose interest or sympathize with the witness. Rather, you may be able to reach the objective just as effectively by thoroughly undermining only one or a just few key areas of the witness's testimony. From such a focused example of lack of truthfulness, the jury may decide not believe the witness on any point.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/ E. Conducting examination/§11.96 1. Complete in one session

E. Conducting examination

§11.96 1. Complete in one session

Important areas of cross-examination should be either completed before a recess in the trial or reserved until after the recess has occurred. A recess gives an adversary witness an opportunity to collect his or her thoughts, to confer with the opposing attorney, and to become better and more specifically prepared for further cross-examination. The attorney should plan clusters of examination on certain related topics, to avoid interruptions or breaks in the sequence of each topic.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.97 2. Do not restate that witness is under oath

It is usually unnecessary and counter-productive to remind a hostile witness that he or she is under oath, or to indicate that other witnesses have testified differently. This tactic is likely to engender an objection from opposing counsel that you are being argumentative. Moreover, the witness's tendency may be to become even more firmly entrenched in his or her version of the events. The jury may be more firmly persuaded if they "discover" untruthful answers for themselves, rather than having you belabor the point.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.98 3. Know when to stop

§11.98 3. Know when to stop

Do not ask one question too many. The problem is knowing where to draw the line. If the witness has already answered as desired in one area of questioning, it is often best not to succumb to the temptation to ask another question in that area. Any attempt to elicit a further answer may result in the witness's simply explaining away an apparent earlier contradiction or providing a damaging fact to dilute a prior reference to facts favorable to your case.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.99 F. Tone of questioning

§11.99 F. Tone of questioning

Vary your approach during cross-examination, depending on the witness's occupation and personality, the degree of any hostility, whether he or she is an expert or a lay witness, and the goal of the cross-examination. For example, when cross-examining a neutral witness to bring out facts not established by direct testimony, your tone of the questioning may be respectful or even friendly.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.100 1. When to use aggressive tone

If your purpose is to undermine an opposing witness's testimony as not credible, consider adopting a more aggressive tone. The jury will likely understand that you are doing a necessary job, not simply acting from a lack of tact or dislike for the witness.

On the other hand, if the jury has developed sympathy for the witness, an aggressive cross-examination can harm the case. It is possible (and sometimes even easier) to prove that someone has not told the truth by going about it in a relatively nonaggressive, quiet manner.

Keep in mind the jury's sense of fairness and their sympathy for the underdog. It is risky to assume an overbearing manner. Rather, the best tone is one of civility, while making adverse witnesses understand that the rules do not allow volunteering information, evasive answers, or arguing with the questioner. In this way, you communicate to the witness an air of authority, and to the jury a sense of fairness.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.101 2. Avoid sarcasm or rudeness

§11.101 2. Avoid sarcasm or rudeness

Although you may be tempted to control a hostile witness with pointed or abrasive remarks, this tactic may have a negative impact on the jury. Further, a witness who comes to dislike the cross-examiner may become more hostile and thus less responsive. Although cross-examination sometimes involves fencing with the witness in an attempt to score points, make every effort to maintain a professional tone throughout the confrontation.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.102 3. Do not argue

Arguing with the witness only gives him or her a chance either to withdraw prior damaging testimony or to explain it away. Either way, the outcome will be harmful if your goal is to undermine the witness's credibility.

For example, you may be tempted to ask the witness to explain an apparent contradiction: "If you say X, then how can you also say Y?" This type of question is not only argumentative and therefore objectionable, but it will also, if allowed, give the witness a chance to reconcile X with Y and destroy the contradiction you have so carefully established. Also, arguing gives the witness an opportunity to explain the prior answer, thus ceding control of the cross-examination to the witness. See §11.61 for discussion of argumentative questions.

§11.103 4. When cross-examining family members

Because the jury is likely to be sympathetic to a mother, father, or other family member who has been examined on direct, you may decide not to cross-examine that person. Or, if the family member's testimony is not damaging, maintain a moderate tone during cross-examination. The examination should focus on, and perhaps be limited to, questions designed to establish the family member's bias or prejudice. Any direct attack on a family member's testimony should probably be reserved until the closing argument.

§11.104 G. Framing questions and controlling witness

Greater control over the witness is required during cross-examination than on direct examination. For example, you may want to discipline an over-eager, talkative witness by restating the question and requesting more responsive answers. Evasive witnesses can also be controlled by confronting them with their own contradictory testimony.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.105 1. Use short, easy-to-understand questions

Questions on cross-examination should generally be short. If one imagines what the transcript of the trial should look like, each cross-examination question should take up only a line or two of text, followed by a brief response ranging from a simple "yes" or "no" up to perhaps a paragraph of response. Short questions have the advantage of being:

- Less objectionable to opposing counsel;
- Better understood by the jury;
- Less confusing to the witness; and
- More easily corrected, if you make a mistake in forming the short question.

Short questions also help to control the witness. They are analogous to keeping a spirited horse on a tight rein. The shorter the question, the more closely the attorney can control the witness's tendency to run away with his or her answer. Because short questions are narrow in scope, the answers called for are likewise narrow. Such questions give the witness few avenues of escape. If a witness attempts to evade giving a direct answer, the examiner can merely repeat the question, thereby making the evasion clear and forcing the witness to respond. By the same token, avoid unnecessary adjectives and adverbs that could afford the witness or opposing counsel "quibble room."

PRACTICE TIP: You will have more control if you can use as questions short declaratory statements that require the witness, by your inflection, to answer "yes." Examples: You opened the door? You walked outside? You met a man? You spoke? He spoke? You said X? He said Y? You saw a car? Chevrolet? Green? Going west?

Use plain English. Because your ultimate objective is to inform and convince the jury, it is important to use simple words and phrases that the jury will easily understand. Avoid legal words and phrases, Latin terms, or long words whenever possible.

§11.106 2. Identify subject before asking question

Announcing a topic or an event before asking the witness a question sometimes helps to orient the judge and jury and helps to keep a witness on a subject. This approach also enables you to set up topics and then make an easy transition to new topics. If the witness wanders off the point, remind the witness of the subject and suggest that you both stick to that topic before going on to something else. In this fashion, you can better control the scope and direction of the cross-examination.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.107 3. Control pace and sequence of examination

You can control the pace of an adverse witness's testimony. It is sometimes helpful to pose rapid-fire questions, to preclude the witness from using planned or canned responses. Also, you may, unless the trial judge rules otherwise, interrupt a witness who provides nonresponsive answers.

If the witness appears to be giving scripted answers, you may decide to ask seemingly random, rather than sequential, questions. Cross-examination by skipping from subject to subject is a technique that might keep the witness off balance. The inherent danger in using this technique, however, is that in skipping across topics you will also keep the judge and jury off balance. Thus, this technique should not be overused, and if you are inexperienced with basic cross-examination skills, use it sparingly, if at all.

It is probably unwise to instruct the witness to answer a question with only a simple yes or no. The jury may think it is unfair to so narrowly restrict the witness, and a judge will generally permit the witness to explain an answer. But if the witness is truly being evasive, you may move to strike a rambling answer as nonresponsive. In this way, the judge may intervene on your behalf and instruct the witness to answer the question directly without your having to demand, in advance, that the witness answer in a prescribed manner.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Do not ask the judge to intervene until you have taken some steps to address a witness's evasiveness. The judge may decline your request as premature, and your request may strike the jury as whining.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.108 4. Avoid questions that permit narrative answers

As a rule, avoid questions beginning with "why" because they allow the witness to give narrative (i.e., lengthy, rambling) answers. If the witness strays from the question in answering, remind the witness that the question was limited to a specific area. Usually, the court will assist the attorney in controlling the witness by allowing the cross-examiner's motion to strike a wandering, nonresponsive answer. On using leading questions, see §§11.54, 11.111.

A "why" question may give the witness a chance to explain his or her position, reemphasize harmful testimony, reconcile contradictions in his or her testimony, and control the pace and scope of the examination. Just as short leading questions help control the witness, open-ended or "why" questions abandon that control and invite the witness to give an often harmful lecture. And if, after a "why" question, you attempt to interrupt the witness and to regain control, the court is unlikely to be sympathetic because you "opened the door."

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.109 5. Know the answer

§11.109 5. Know the answer

For each question asked, know the answer. Cross-examination is not the time to discover a damaging fact that could hurt the case and embarrass both the interrogator and the client.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.110 6. Choose words that may influence answer

§11.110 6. Choose words that may influence answer

The way the question is phrased may influence the answer. For example, when challenging a witness's ability to perceive an accident from a distance, you are more likely to elicit a favorable response by asking "How far were you from the accident?" rather than "How close were you to the accident?"

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.111 7. Ask leading questions

Advantages of leading questions are that the cross-examiner is in better control of the questioning and the witness is seen as agreeing with the questions, thus enhancing the credibility of the attorney's case in the jurors' eyes.

Leading questions are permitted during cross-examination. Evid C §767(a)(2). A leading question suggests the answer and can often be answered with a simple yes or no. See Evid C §764. Indeed, many cross-examination questions should be leading. Through such questioning, the attorney attempts to get the witness to agree with the client's version of the facts. This type of questioning can go quickly, because the attorney states a fact in question form and the witness is encouraged to assent to that fact. See appendix in §11.169 for list of words and phrases that make a question leading.

Not all questions should be leading, however, because a change of pace is sometimes necessary to keep the attention of the judge or jury. Thus, if you simply elicit an endless series of affirmative answers to leading questions, the trier of fact may simply be waiting for the next yes answer, and not really listening to the content of the question. Moreover, when you are virtually certain that the witness will provide the desired answer, it is often more credible to have the witness respond fully to a nonleading question. Remember that if you do choose to stray from leading questions, you must do so carefully, because you risk losing control of the witness. For further discussion of leading questions, see §§11.54-11.56.

Do not exaggerate any facts in the leading question. An overstatement may not only show the witness where the examination is headed, but it may undermine your credibility if the witness's response exposes your overstatement to the judge or jury.

Occasionally, a witness (especially a lay witness) may refuse to agree with any leading question for fear that it will help the examiner. In this situation, it may be advantageous to use reverse psychology, i.e., to suggest by your question that you are expecting one answer, when, in fact, you desire the opposite. An alternative approach is to ask questions with obvious answers that will damage the witness's credibility if he or she does not readily agree. Finally, you can state the shortest possible declaratory statements, so as to require the witness to answer affirmatively.

EXAMPLE: You opened the door? You walked outside? You met a man? You spoke? He spoke? You said X? He said Y? See §11.105.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.112 8. Summarize to obtain more specific answers

During either direct or cross-examination, a witness's testimony may be vague or unclear on a particular point, especially if it is detrimental to his or her case. The cross-examiner may wish to concentrate on that vague testimony in order to elicit a more specific response without also enabling the witness to emphasize favorable testimony.

One technique is to ask a question that summarizes the testimony. Usually, such questions begin with a phrase like "Is it fair to say that …" or "You have testified that …" followed by a succinct statement of the previous answers. This type of question is less likely to be subject to objection and is more likely to be effective if the attorney limits the summary to three or four questions, rather than a lengthy stretch of testimony.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.113 9. Avoid repeating questions from direct

A trial attorney is supposed to save for summation the conclusions to be drawn from the cross-examination. Thus, there is usually no point in asking the witness to answer questions that have already been asked on direct examination. Once a fact goes into evidence, it remains there and can be referred to in summation. Repeating questions to elicit the same facts that are already part of the trial record seldom adds to the closing argument ammunition.

Repeat a question only when you want to:

- Impeach the witness by contrasting the trial testimony with his or her prior inconsistent statements;
- Emphasize a good answer that advances your case (but note that repeating the question gives the witness an opportunity to improve on the earlier answer); or
- Focus on key testimony that supports other principal witnesses and that bears repeating for its persuasive impact.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/ H. Grounds for attacking credibility/§11.114 1. Witness's perception, memory, or ability to narrate

H. Grounds for attacking credibility

§11.114 1. Witness's perception, memory, or ability to narrate

An attorney may discredit a witness's testimony by asking questions designed to attack:

- The witness's ability to perceive;
- The witness's recollection; and
- The witness's ability to communicate.

See Evid C §780; People v Bell (1955) 138 CA2d 7, 291 P2d 150 (witness may be cross-examined on mental disease or mental derangement affecting powers of perception, memory, or narration).

EXAMPLE 1: Perception. Did the witness see the event in daylight or in the dark? Was the witness close by or far away? Was the witness distracted or concentrating on the event? Did the witness have any condition that interfered with perception at the time of the event? People v Smith (1970) 4 CA3d 403, 84 CR 412 (narcotic addiction); Silvey v Harm (1932) 120 CA 561, 8 P2d 570 (intoxication).

EXAMPLE 2: Recollection. Does the event stand out clearly in the witness's mind, or is he or she uncertain about precisely what happened?

EXAMPLE 3: Ability to communicate. Is the witness's ability to narrate impaired? Has the witness used terms that he or she understands?

PRACTICE TIP: When an adverse witness appears to have been rehearsed, you may attack such scripted testimony by showing that the witness has repeatedly discussed the case with the opposing party and the party's attorney.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.115 2. Witness's bias, interest, or other motive

Counsel may also impeach a witness's credibility during cross-examination by asking questions designed to establish the bias, interest, motive, or prejudice of the witness. Evid C §780(f); see, e.g., Kelly v Bailey (1961) 189 CA2d 728, 11 CR 448 (bias and prejudice); Van Valkenburgh v Oldham (1910) 12 CA 572, 108 P 42 (motive and interest).

It is always proper to show through the witness, if possible, or by other sources, if necessary, that the witness "has an unusual interest in the outcome of the case." People v Fatone (1985) 165 CA3d 1164, 1174, 211 CR 288, citing People v Sacramento Butchers' Ass'n (1910) 12 CA 471, 494, 107 P 712.

Ask the witness questions about:

EXAMPLE 1: Kinship or familial relationships to show favoritism or hostility; or

EXAMPLE 2: Fee arrangements between an opposing party and an expert witness to show a financial interest.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.116 3. Witness's prior felony conviction

In a civil case, the trial court has discretion under Evid C §352 to admit a prior felony conviction to impeach a witness's credibility. Robbins v Wong (1994) 27 CA4th 261, 274, 32 CR2d 337; see Evid C §788. California Constitution article I, §28(f), which provides for impeachment by any felony conviction in criminal cases, does not apply in civil cases. Robbins v Wong, supra.

In criminal cases, the statutory and constitutional provisions have been construed to authorize impeachment of a witness by "any felony conviction which necessarily involves moral turpitude, even if the immoral trait is one other than dishonesty." People v Castro (1985) 38 C3d 301, 306, 211 CR 719. See People v Collins (1986) 42 C3d 378, 228 CR 899. If the felony conviction does not involve moral turpitude, the Fourteenth Amendment's due process clause and Cal Const art I, §28(d) prohibit its use. People v Castro (1985) 38 C3d 301, 313, 211 CR 719.

Although the moral turpitude test is one appropriate standard for admissibility in a civil case, the requirement in People v Castro does not necessarily control in a civil case. Robbins v Wong (1994) 27 CA4th 261, 273, 32 CR2d 337, also citing Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 23 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009). See People v Lang (1989) 49 C3d 991, 1009, 264 CR 386, People v Collins (1986) 42 C3d 378, 228 CR 899, and People v Castro (1985) 38 C3d 301, 314, 211 CR 719, for discussion of the moral turpitude requirement.

On a motion under Evid C §352 to preclude impeachment with a prior felony conviction, the trial court must perform the weighing function in §352 (unless the prior conviction is inadmissible as a matter of law). People v Collins (1986) 42 C3d 378, 389, 228 CR 899. See also Chevalier v Dubin (1980) 104 CA3d 975, 980, 164 CR 118.

NOTE: Under Welf & I C §1772, certain convictions are admissible in subsequent civil or criminal proceedings, e.g., certain convictions under Welf & I C §707 and a conviction of a person who is at least 18 at the time he or she committed the offense. In People v Jackson (1986) 177 CA3d 708, 222 CR 470, the court held that former Welf & I C §1772 precluded using a conviction to impeach anyone honorably discharged from the Youthful Offender Parole Board's control, who has not been placed in state prison during the period of control.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.117 4. Witness's character

§11.117 4. Witness's character

A witness's credibility may be attacked by establishing the witness's bad character for honesty or veracity. Evid C §786. However, this type of interrogation is usually done on direct examination through other witnesses, not during cross-examination of the witness whose credibility is being attacked. On manner of proof, see Evid C §§786-787, 1100.

NOTE: Except for prior felony convictions (see §11.116), evidence of specific wrongdoing is inappropriate for attacking a witness's credibility. Evid C §§787-788; Downey Sav. & Loan Ass'n v Ohio Cas. Ins. Co. (1987) 189 CA3d 1072, 1092, 234 CR 835.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.118 5. Prior inconsistent statements

An effective method of discrediting a witness is to confront the witness with his or her prior inconsistent statements. See Evid C §780(h). These are prior oral or written statements that contradict testimony given on the stand. Contradictions established by cross-examination are most effective if they are major contradictions about material matters.

Alternatively, you may choose not to interrogate the witness about prior inconsistent statements but let the witness be contradicted by subsequent witnesses. If you elect this approach, before the witness steps down from the stand, ask the judge not to excuse the witness but instead to ask the witness to remain available for later recall in the trial. The witness can be confronted during the subsequent examination, and the jury will have the other witnesses' contradictory testimony well in mind.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.119 a. Types of statements to use

It is usually more effective to confront an adverse witness with prior inconsistent written statements, or statements that have been put in writing, e.g., depositions, rather than prior inconsistent oral statements. The reason is that the witness can better explain away any apparent inconsistencies between prior oral statements and the present testimony if there is no written record to impeach the witness.

Typically, inconsistent statements are found in a transcript of the witness's deposition taken before trial. The transcript itself is not offered into evidence; instead, the inconsistent deposition testimony is read into the record. On procedure for offering deposition testimony into evidence generally, see §§12.47-12.53; 3 Witkin, California Evidence, Presentation at Trial §158 (4th ed 2000).

You will create a poor impression, however, if you waste time during the trial by thumbing through a deposition transcript to locate the witness's prior inconsistent statement. Avoid such a delay by preparing an outline or index for every deposition that may be used during trial; additionally, you may want to have the exact deposition cite in your notes next to the question. Then, when the adverse witness answers a question during cross-examination that contradicts his or her deposition testimony, the outline or index, or your notes, will enable you to quickly locate the prior inconsistent testimony. For discussion of indexing depositions, see §§12.90-12.96.

It may also be possible to get a partial transcript of the trial testimony and to confront a witness with prior inconsistent testimony from an earlier time in the trial. Whether to use this tactic depends on the length of the testimony and the trial, as well as whether the client has the resources to obtain expedited transcripts.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.120 b. Extrinsic evidence

Extrinsic evidence of prior inconsistent statements, e.g., a written statement, is admissible when (Evid C §770):

- The witness is given an opportunity to explain or deny the statements while testifying;
- The witness has not been excused from giving further testimony in the action; or
- The interests of justice otherwise require that the inconsistent statements be admitted.

See McGee v Cessna Aircraft Co. (1983) 139 CA3d 179, 193, 188 CR 542 (court allowed reading of prior written statement given by passenger witness to FAA because witness was given opportunity to explain inconsistency).

EXAMPLE: A witness was unavailable to testify at trial and his testimony was admitted in the form of a videotaped deposition taken in the present case. To impeach the witness, the plaintiff offered a prior inconsistent statement that the witness had made in a deposition taken in a different case. At the videotaped deposition in the present action, plaintiff's counsel did not question the witness about the prior inconsistent statement. The court held that the prior inconsistent statement was inadmissible because the witness had no opportunity to explain or deny the statement and had been "excused" from giving further testimony. Bossi v State (1981) 119 CA3d 313, 324, 174 CR 93.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.121 c. Confirm direct testimony first

As the attorney conducting cross-examination, you should attempt to lock the adverse witness into the testimony elicited on direct examination before you attempt to impeach the witness. See, e.g., People v Epps (1981) 122 CA3d 691, 176 CR 332 (defendant denied on direct examination that he kissed victim, a minor female patient; because defendant was asked only about kissing that particular patient, the court ruled that no basis existed to impeach by extrinsic evidence his kissing of other patients).

After the adverse witness is committed to a particular point, you may attempt to impeach the witness by using the inconsistent statement. You may wish to emphasize why the prior statement is more credible, e.g., the witness's attorney was with him or her at the deposition, or there has been ample opportunity to correct the transcript.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.122 d. Read inconsistent statement

§11.122 d. Read inconsistent statement

When using a prior inconsistent statement to impeach a witness, it is not necessary to show the statement to the witness or disclose to the witness any information about the prior inconsistent statements or conduct. Evid C §769. See also Evid C §768. So if, for example, the witness's deposition contains statements inconsistent with his or her trial testimony, one method of using the deposition is to read into the record questions asked at the deposition and the witness's responses that are inconsistent with his or her trial responses, without questioning the witness further on the point.

Similarly, if prior inconsistent statements are in a document (e.g., a letter), you may offer it into evidence if you comply with Evid C §770. Then, after the document has been admitted, read aloud the inconsistent portion without questioning the witness any further on the point. As long as the witness has not been excused, the extrinsic evidence of the inconsistent statement, i.e., the document, may be admitted. See Evid C §770; §11.121.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.123 e. Include inconsistency in question

Another impeaching technique is to ask the witness whether he or she made a particular prior inconsistent statement. The question itself should contain the prior statement and should indicate the time, place, and person to whom it was made. See McLaughlin v Los Angeles Ry. (1919) 180 C 527, 539, 182 P 44.

EXAMPLE: "Did you state to Mr. Jones on Tuesday, December 18, at your office that you 'examined the printing press and it was in good working order'"? If the witness denies having made the statement, or cannot remember making it, prove that the statement was in fact made, by calling other witnesses during your case in chief. See, e.g., Ehat v Scheidt (1911) 17 CA 430, 120 P 49.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.124 f. Follow-up

§11.124 f. Follow-up

When confronted with a contradiction, a witness may become evasive. If the witness's answer is nonresponsive, move to strike it and, if necessary, ask the judge to have the reporter reread the question. After the witness has testified as desired, do not as a rule give the witness any opportunity to close loopholes or explain inconsistencies.

It is not advisable to ask the witness why he or she gave a different statement. Nor should you ask the witness to explain the inconsistency, because the explanation may blunt the stark contradiction between the prior inconsistent statements and the current testimony. Typically, wait until closing argument to emphasize the inconsistency. If on redirect opposing counsel tries to rehabilitate the witness by providing an opportunity to explain the inconsistency, that "defensive" testimony will highlight the existence of the inconsistency and show that it is important to the case.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.125 I. Protecting your witness during cross-examination

When one of your witnesses is being cross-examined, protect the witness by raising timely objections to improper questions. For example, object to any question that the opposing attorney asks in an intimidating manner that subjects the witness to undue harassment or embarrassment. See Evid C §765. Other improper questions, to which you may object, may include compound questions (see §11.51), questions that assume facts not in evidence (see §11.58), and argumentative questions (see §11.61).

If your witness is intelligent, knowledgeable, and doing well on the stand, there is little need for you to object, even to an otherwise objectionable question. The witness's ability to handle everything thrown by the opposing side's cross-examination with little or no help from you only enhances the witness's credibility in the eyes of the judge and jury. Conversely, your objections can help weaker witnesses by indicating what opposing counsel is doing or by slowing the pace of the examination.

Of course, ill-founded objections risk the ire of both judge and jury. Nonetheless, do not let unfavorable rulings to your objections dissuade you from voicing timely objections needed to protect the record. When the court overrules a seemingly proper objection, do not express anger or frustration. Any such reactive "body language" may impress the jury as a greater setback for your side than would a pose of equanimity.

VIII. REDIRECT AND RECROSS-EXAMINATION; REBUTTAL AND SURREBUTTAL

A. Redirect

§11.126 1. Deciding whether to conduct redirect examination

Examination of a witness by the direct examiner, after cross-examination has ended, is known as redirect examination. Evid C §762. This examination may not be necessary unless some inconsistency or confusion was created by the cross-examination. In a sense, extensive redirect examination is an admission that the cross-examiner was successful in shaking the witness's testimony.

Although cross-examination is limited to the scope of direct examination (see §11.83), matters brought out in cross-examination sometimes require amplification. Therefore, during redirect examination, you may elicit additional testimony to correct any erroneous impressions or offset any incorrect inferences from the cross-examination. See, e.g., Myers v Rose (1938) 27 CA2d 87, 80 P2d 527.

You may also elicit additional testimony on redirect to rehabilitate a witness whose credibility may have been damaged. See, e.g., Muller v Hale (1902) 138 C 163, 71 P 81; People v Shaver (1898) 120 C 354, 52 P 651.

Redirect examination is not an opportunity to ask questions about matters already covered on direct examination, unless the court specifically permits you to do so. See Evid C §774.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.127 2. Follow same rules as for direct examination

§11.127 2. Follow same rules as for direct examination

Redirect examination is conducted in the same manner as direct examination, and the same rules apply on the use of leading questions. See Evid C §767(a)(1). See also §11.55. Examination of the witness is generally limited to the scope of the cross-examination. See Evid C §774.

The usual objective of an attorney who has successfully examined a witness on direct examination, and that witness has then survived cross-examination, is to get the witness promptly off the stand. Any prolonged period of redirect examination increases the opposing counsel's time to think of questions for recross-examination that can damage the ultimate impact of the witness.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.128 B. Recross-examination

§11.128 B. Recross-examination

After redirect examination, the opposing attorney may have another opportunity to question the witness. This is known as recross-examination (Evid C §763), and it is conducted in the same manner as cross-examination. Thus the same rules apply on the use of leading questions. Evid C §767(a)(2). See §11.111.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.129 C. Rebuttal and surrebuttal

Rebuttal and surrebuttal are different from redirect and recross-examination because they are presented after the defendant's case has been presented. At that time, the parties may offer only evidence rebutting the other side's evidence, unless the court, for good cause, permits the parties to offer more direct evidence on their original cases. CCP §§607(6), 631.7.

Plaintiff's rebuttal evidence constitutes a reply to matters first brought out during defendant's case. Defendant's reply to plaintiff's rebuttal evidence is sometimes called surrebuttal. See California Wine Ass'n v Commercial Union Fire Ins. Co. (1910) 159 C 49, 112 P 858.

Many trial attorneys want to put on dramatic evidence at the end of their cases before the jury begins deliberation. However, a party has no right to withhold testimony that should have been offered in the case in chief merely for the purpose of offering it more dramatically in rebuttal. Lipman v Ashburn (1951) 106 CA2d 616, 235 P2d 627. You may object to a question on the ground that it does not call for proper rebuttal or surrebuttal evidence but that it calls for evidence that should have been presented during the adversary's case in chief. In this way, you may be able to exclude this late evidence. The court, however, has discretion "to allow, in rebuttal, testimony which should have been offered as a part of the case in chief." Dawson v Pacific Elec. Ry. (1918) 177 C 268, 272, 170 P 603. See also Pontecorvo v Clark (1928) 95 CA 162, 179, 272 P 591. The court also has discretion on the scope of evidence that may be offered in rebuttal. Ray v Jackson (1963) 219 CA2d 445, 33 CR 339; Johnston v Brewer (1940) 40 CA2d 583, 105 P2d 365.

IX. EXPERT OPINION TESTIMONY

§11.130 A. Qualifying expert

To qualify as an expert, a witness must have special knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education on the subject to which his or her testimony relates. Evid C §720(a). See Evid C §801(b) (expert opinion may be based on special knowledge, skill, experience, training, and education). Whether the witness qualifies as an expert is a preliminary fact determined by the trial judge under Evid C §405.

On objection by a party, and before a witness may testify as an expert, the attorney calling the witness must demonstrate that the witness is qualified to be an expert on the subject to which his or her testimony will relate. This qualification may be shown by any otherwise admissible evidence, including the witness's own testimony. Evid C §720(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.131 1. What to ask

§11.131 1. What to ask

To establish the expert's qualifications, ask questions about:

- The expert's past and present occupation (Michael v Gates (1995) 38 CA4th 737, 45 CR2d 163);
- The expert's academic background;
- Any publications containing the expert's views;
- Professional societies to which the expert belongs;
- Any awards or honors that would particularly distinguish this expert among his or her peers;
- Any teaching experience;
- Any particular experience with the subject matter of the lawsuit

NOTE: Watch for statutory requirements relating to expertise that could prevent an expert from testifying, e.g., Health & S C §1799.110(c), which requires 5 years of experience as an emergency room physician to testify on the standard of care. Miranda v National Emergency Serv. (1995) 35 CA4th 894, 41 CR2d 593. But see Petrou v South Coast Emergency Group (2004) 119 CA4th 1090, 15 CR3d 64 (expert with substantial emergency room experience within 5 years of alleged malpractice may testify);

- Whether he or she qualified as an expert in other lawsuits covering the subject matter;
- Any physical evidence examined by the expert; and
- Any other tests performed by the expert.

Opposing counsel may likewise conduct a voir dire examination (i.e., challenge the witness's qualifications) in order to object to the adequacy of the foundation being laid for the expert testimony. See generally Williams v Volkswagenwerk Aktiengesellschaft (1986) 180 CA3d 1244, 1263, 226 CR 306.

The court has discretion on whether to qualify a witness as an expert. Huffman v Lindquist (1951) 37 C2d 465, 234 P2d 34. In making its decision, the court may examine several factors, including:

- The number of experts in the field;
- Whether the testimony offered is generally recognized as the subject of expert testimony (e.g., hypnotically restored testimony, though subject to conflicting rulings, has been deemed not generally accepted in the scientific community; Schall v Lockheed Missiles & Space Co. (1995) 37 CA4th 1485, 44 CR2d 191);
- Whether the expert's scientific or work background is sufficient (see, e.g., Mize v Atchison, T. & S.F. Ry. (1975) 46 CA3d 436, 120 CR 787 (skill, experience, and training gained "on the job" may be as impressive or as important to judge as academic training in qualifying expert)); and
- Whether the specific training received by the expert relates to the type of testimony being offered (see, e.g., Osborn v Irwin Mem. Blood Bank (1992) 5 CA4th 234, 274, 7 CR2d 101 (work in particular field not absolute prerequisite to qualification as expert in that field; qualification may be based on education, special knowledge, and experience)).

§11.132 2. Waiving testimony about qualifications

When the attorney calling an expert witness whose credentials are beyond reproach first attempts to elicit testimony from the witness about those credentials, the opposing attorney may offer to stipulate as to the expert's qualifications. The benefit of this stipulation is that no trial time is consumed by the expert testifying as to his or her qualifications.

Some attorneys believe, however, that the jury will give greater weight to the expert's opinion if the jury hears the expert testify as to his or her impressive credentials. The court often instructs the jury to consider the expert's qualifications in deciding what weight to give the expert's opinion. Moreover, when there is conflicting expert testimony, the court often further instructs the jury to consider the relative qualifications of the expert witnesses in weighing their opinions. See, e.g., CACI 219, 221.

PRACTICE TIP: Consider not entering into a stipulation waiving testimony of qualifications and eliciting testimony about your expert's qualifications, so that if any conflicting expert testimony emerges, you may argue the supposedly superior qualifications of your expert to the jury. Further, declining to accept a stipulation that is offered in the jury's hearing may emphasize to the jury the importance of your expert's qualifications.

For further discussion, see California Personal Injury Proof §§1.20, 1.22-1.23 (Cal CEB 1970); California Expert Witness Guide §§3.1, 13.5-13.6 (2d ed Cal CEB 1991).

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.133 3. If expert testifies to facts

If the expert's testimony is not opinion but facts within the expert's special knowledge, then the admissibility of the testimony is not governed by Evid C §801. People v McDonald (1984) 37 C3d 351, 366, 208 CR 236, overruled on other grounds in People v Mendoza (2000) 23 C4th 896, 914, 98 CR2d 431. Such factual testimony by the expert is admissible if it meets the requirements of Evid C §720 that the witness is qualified by his or her special knowledge (see §11.131) and of Evid C §351 that the evidence is relevant to the issues. People v McDonald, supra.

An expert who also testifies as a percipient witness on matters within the expert's own knowledge is treated as a fact witness during expert witness discovery under CCP §§2034.010-2034.730. Hurtado v Western Med. Ctr. (1990) 222 CA3d 1198, 1203, 272 CR 324 (it would invade absolute work-product privilege concerning attorney's thought processes in preparation for trial to require attorney to analyze such witness's anticipated testimony and submit it to opponent in an expert witness declaration). See discussion of expert witness discovery in California Expert Witness Guide, chaps 10-12 (2d ed Cal CEB 1991).

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.134 B. Establish bases for opinion

During direct examination, the expert may testify as to the reason for his or her opinion and the matter on which it is based. Evid C §802. If the expert does not so testify, the trier of fact will have little to go on in determining what weight, if any, to give to the expert's opinion. In addition, if the opposing party objects that the basis for the expert's opinion is improper, the court may exclude the opinion. Evid C §803. If the expert has a proper basis for the opinion, excluding from consideration the improper matter on which the opinion was formerly based, the expert witness may then state the opinion. Evid C §803.

Expert witnesses often rely not only on the facts and materials in evidence in the particular case but also on the material statements of other experts or source materials that are not in evidence. You and your expert should know well in advance the bases for the expert's opinion. On preparing expert witnesses generally, see §§5.70-5.90. The court may exclude the bases of the expert's opinion if it finds that the bases, though probative, would take too much time or would create the dangers of undue prejudice, of confusing the issues, or of misleading the jury. Evid C §352.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.135 1. Proper bases for opinion

§11.135 1. Proper bases for opinion

Permissible bases for expert opinion evidence are set forth in Evid C §801(b), which provides that an opinion may be based on matters that are:

- Perceived by or personally known to the witness or made known to him or her at or before the hearing, whether or not admissible (including the witness's special knowledge, skill, experience, training, and education);
- Of a type that may reasonably be relied on by an expert in forming an opinion on the subject to which his or her testimony relates (see Buckwalter v Airline Training Ctr. (1982) 134 CA3d 547, 554, 184 CR 659 (expert may have to rely on circumstantial evidence if there is little or no direct evidence on which to base an opinion)); and
- Not precluded by law as a basis for the expert's opinion.

Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 30 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009). See discussion of these factors in Marriage of Hewitson (1983) 142 CA3d 874, 885, 191 CR 392.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.136 2. Improper bases for opinion

The following are examples of matters on which an expert's testimony cannot be based:

- Speculation. See Blau v City of Los Angeles (1973) 32 CA3d 77, 82, 107 CR 727.
- Unproven facts. See Hyatt v Sierra Boat Co. (1978) 79 CA3d 325, 145 CR 47.
- Assumptions of fact contrary to the evidence. See Hyatt v Sierra Boat Co., supra.
- Assumptions of fact based on insufficient data. See Korsak v Atlas Hotels, Inc. (1992) 2 CA4th 1516, 1522, 3 CR2d 833.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.137 3. If basis is another's opinion

An expert may not base his or her opinion solely on another outside expert's opinion. People v Campos (1995) 32 CA4th 304, 308, 38 CR2d 113; People v Piper (1980) 103 CA3d 102, 112, 162 CR 833. See California Expert Witness Guide §4.2 (2d ed Cal CEB 1991).

Although an expert may rely on hearsay in forming an opinion and state on direct examination matters relied on, the expert may not testify to the details of those matters if they are inadmissible (i.e., expert may not bring incompetent hearsay before jury under the guise of his or her reasons for the opinion). Korsak v Atlas Hotels, Inc. (1992) 2 CA4th 1516, 1524, 3 CR2d 833.

An expert may reasonably rely on reports by other experts (as opposed to the opinions of other experts) that are based on their personal observations, tests, or examinations (see, e.g., Christiansen v Hollings (1941) 44 CA2d 332, 347, 112 P2d 723) and may rely on reliable books or treatises (see, e.g., Mann v Cracchiolo (1985) 38 C3d 18, 37, 210 CR 762). But an expert may not use an unauthenticated lab report as substantive evidence of the expert's ultimate opinion. See Turner v Burlington N. Santa Fe R.R. Co. (9th Cir 2003) 338 F3d 1058 (Fed R Evid 703). If the court finds that an outside report on which your expert relied does not provide a reasonable basis for an expert's opinion, the court may rule that your expert's opinion is inadmissible. See Lockheed Litig. Cases (2004) 115 CA4th 558, 10 CR3d 34.

PRACTICE TIP: If your expert properly relies in part on the opinions of outside experts, establish that fact on direct examination, but do not refer during direct examination to the content of the outside expert's opinion or to any details of it. Expect your expert witness to be cross-examined on the content of any outside experts' opinions. Mosesian v Pennwalt Corp. (1987) 191 CA3d 851, 236 CR 778, disapproved on other grounds in People v Ault (2004) 33 C4th 1250, 17 CR3d 302. See §11.138. In addition, opposing counsel may call that outside expert on whose opinion your expert relied to testify. See §11.149.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.138 4. Inadmissible basis subject to cross-examination

If the expert relies on any hearsay in forming his or her opinion (e.g., scientific, technical, or professional books and articles, similar publications, and other out-of-court statements), that information is not admissible on direct examination. Details about the inadmissible matters are admissible on cross-examination, however, if:

- The witness testifies that he or she has "referred to, considered or relied upon such publication in arriving at or forming his opinion";
- Such publication has otherwise been admitted in evidence; or
- The publication has been established as a reliable authority.

Evid C §721(b)(1)-(3). Intoximeters, Inc. v Younger (1975) 53 CA3d 262, 273, 125 CR 864; Gluckstein v Lipsett (1949) 93 CA2d 391, 209 P2d 98. See also §11.151. Note that Fed R Evid 803(18), permits an expert to be cross-examined on a learned treatise if it is established as reliable authority without requiring that the expert referred to, considered, or relied on it in arriving at or forming the opinion.

A court must exercise its discretion under Evid C §352 to limit to its proper use evidence that is otherwise inadmissible but is offered because it was relied on by an opposing party's expert. For example, in People v Coleman (1985) 38 C3d 69, 92, 211 CR 102, it was error to allow the cross-examiner to question the psychiatric expert about the content of letters that the expert partially relied on but that contained highly inflammatory and prejudicial hearsay. See also People v Parnell (1993) 16 CA4th 862, 20 CR2d 302 (expert based opinion on defendant's statements made under hypnosis). Instead of excluding inadmissible hearsay in its entirety, the court may appropriately exclude the portions of the hearsay that are not related to the expert's opinion, exclude unduly prejudicial evidence, or instruct the jury to limit their consideration of the evidence. See People v Coleman, supra.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.139 5. If opinion based on scientific tests

§11.139 5. If opinion based on scientific tests

The California courts have continued to hold that expert opinion is admissible if it is based on a new scientific technique or new procedure that is "sufficiently established to have gained general acceptance in the particular field in which it belongs" (formerly called the "Kelly-Frye rule," based on the cases People v Kelly (1976) 17 C3d 24, 130 CR 144, and Frye v U.S. (DC Cir 1923) 293 F 1013). The United States Supreme Court found that the test created by Frye had been abrogated in the federal courts by the more flexible standards of the Federal Rules of Evidence. Daubert v Merrell Dow Pharms., Inc. (1993) 509 US 579, 125 L Ed 2d 469, 113 S Ct 2786. See Kumho Tire Co. v Carmichael (1999) 526 US 137, 143 L Ed 2d 238, 119 S Ct 1167 (extending Daubert to all expert testimony, i.e., testimony based on technical and other specialized knowledge, not only testimony based on scientific knowledge). See also U.S. v Hankey (9th Cir 2000) 203 F3d 1160, 1167 (court's "gatekeeping" function applies to all expert testimony). The California Supreme Court, however, forcefully reaffirmed the viability of the traditional rule in People v Leahy (1994) 8 C4th 587, 34 CR2d 663 (court noted that Kelly-Frye formulation should now more accurately be termed Kelly rule).

In Leahy, the California Supreme Court explained that "general acceptance" in the scientific community means a "consensus drawn from a typical cross-section of the relevant, qualified scientific community." 8 C4th at 612. The courts have looked for such consensus in scientific journals (People v Shirley (1982) 31 C3d 18, 56, 181 CR 243) or they have relied on expert testimony (People v Brown (1985) 40 C3d 512, 533, 230 CR 834). See Roberti v Andy's Termite & Pest Control, Inc. (2003) 113 CA4th 893, 6 CR3d 827 (trial court erred in applying Kelly admissibility test to expert testimony that pesticide caused plaintiff's autism, because testimony was based on techniques generally accepted in medical community; Kelly test does not apply even if testimony presents new theory of medical causation); People v Stoll (1989) 49 C3d 1136, 265 CR 111 (psychologist's expert opinion on standardized personality tests was admissible because use of standardized tests was generally accepted); In re Amber B. (1987) 191 CA3d 682, 236 CR 623 (psychologist's opinion that victim had been sexually abused was inadmissible because it was based on play with anatomically correct dolls—a procedure not yet generally accepted). See also Wilson v Phillips (1999) 73 CA4th 250, 86 CR2d 204 (psychologist's testimony on repressed memory phenomenon admissible without hearing on whether theory of repressed memory generally accepted in scientific community, because testimony was expert medical opinion based on personal evaluations of plaintiffs and not scientific evidence). But see People v Ayala (2000) 24 C4th 243, 99 CR2d 532 (no need to apply Kelly test when procedure isolated physical evidence whose existence, nature, and meaning would be obvious to layman).

Admissibility of DNA evidence. The California courts have ruled DNA testing to be admissible evidence. People v Taylor (1995) 33 CA4th 262, 40 CR2d 132. In People v Venegas (1998) 18 C4th 47, 74 CR2d 262, for example, the court held that the restriction fragment length polymorphism (RFLP) form of DNA analysis, which uses the "modified ceiling" method to calculate the statistical probabilities of a match between the evidentiary samples and the DNA of an unrelated person chosen at random from the general population, is generally accepted in the relevant scientific community and is admissible under the Kelly test. See also People v Hill (2001) 89 CA4th 48, 107 CR2d 110 (holding DNA kits used by FBI and other agencies survive Kelly test).

NOTE: In Venegas, the court affirmed the reversal of the defendant's conviction because the third prong of the Kelly test, which requires that the proponent of the evidence demonstrate that correct scientific procedures were used in the particular case, was not met.

The "unmodified product rule," as applied to DNA forensic analysis, has been held to be generally accepted in the scientific community of population geneticists. People v Soto (1999) 21 C4th 512, 541, 88 CR2d 34 (statistical calculations made using unmodified product rule meet judicial standard for admissibility of scientific evidence).

Other types of blood evidence. Other aspects of blood evidence have not been as controversial as DNA testing. For example, the California Supreme Court denied review in People v Morganti (1996) 43 CA4th 643, 50 CR2d 837, when the court of appeal found no error in the admission of the results of an agglutination inhibition test—a test relied on to detect specific genetic markers in blood. Notably, the court concluded that the affirmance of a scientific technique in a published appellate opinion could furnish sufficient evidence showing general acceptance of the test or technique in the relevant scientific community. 43 CA4th at 658. The court went on to find, moreover, that the defendant had introduced no credible evidence that there had been a change of the attitude of the scientific community in the acceptability of such evidence since the prior published opinion allowing it. Accordingly, there was no error in the admission of the testimony in this case. See People v Yorba (1989) 209 CA3d 1017, 257 CR 641 (approving the admission of evidence based on agglutination inhibition testing).

Further research: On the federal test under Daubert, and further discussion of the Kelly rule and scientific evidence, see §13.109. See also California Expert Witness Guide §§4.12-4.35, 16.5 (2d ed Cal CEB 1991); Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 21 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

C. Eliciting opinion

§11.140 1. Ask expert to state opinion

It is a matter of strategy whether to first elicit testimony on the work done and matters considered by the expert or first ask the expert whether he or she has formed an opinion on an issue in the case. The court in its discretion may require that the witness be first examined about the bases for the opinion before the witness may testify in the form of an opinion (see §§11.134-11.139). Evid C §802.

Once the witness states that he or she has an opinion, ask what that opinion is and the reasons for it. A witness who testifies in the form of an opinion during direct examination may state the reasons for the opinion and the basis for the opinion, including the expert's special knowledge, skill, experience, training, and education. Evid C §802.

When an expert's opinion is not based on personal observation, before the expert may testify in the form of an opinion, he or she must state the assumed facts on which the opinion is based. In this way, it becomes clear that the expert has a basis for forming an intelligent opinion and that the opinion applies to the action before the court. Comment to Evid C §802. See also §11.142 for including these assumed facts in a hypothetical question.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.141 2. Hypothetical questions

§11.141 2. Hypothetical questions

During direct examination, if the expert lacks personal knowledge of all the facts, use a hypothetical question to give the expert sufficient facts to enable him or her to testify in the form of an opinion. See Evid C §801(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.142 a. What facts to use in hypothetical question

Hypothetical questions need not state all the evidence in the case, and they may be framed to agree with the attorney's theory of what the material facts are. People v Hill (1897) 116 C 562, 48 P 711. The facts assumed need not be undisputed (Guardianship of Jacobsen (1947) 30 C2d 312, 182 P2d 537), but they must be shown by the evidence. People v Denman (1918) 179 C 497, 177 P 461; Sullivan v City & County of San Francisco (1950) 95 CA2d 745, 214 P2d 82. See Marriage of Micalizio (1988) 199 CA3d 662, 673, 245 CR 673 (expert's ultimate conclusion not acceptable if it is based on improper or unwarranted matters).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.143 b. How to ask a hypothetical question

§11.143 b. How to ask a hypothetical question

The procedure for asking a hypothetical question is to:

- Ask the expert to assume that certain facts (as shown by the evidence) exist;
- Ask whether, on the basis of those facts, the expert has an opinion on an issue concerning those facts;
- After the expert has replied in the affirmative, ask what the opinion is; and
- Have the expert explain that opinion to the trier of fact.

PRACTICE TIP: From a tactical point of view, using a hypothetical question has the advantage of offering you the opportunity to summarize for the jury the facts of the case before closing arguments.

When using a hypothetical question, it is helpful to write out the question in advance, with the expert's assistance, so that you and the expert agree on its exact wording. See also Dincau v Tamayose (1982) 131 CA3d 780, 798, 182 CR 855. On the other hand, some attorneys prefer a short, more spontaneous hypothetical question, reasoning that a long, written question, prepared with the input of the expert, may be awkward and appear to be a "script." Be careful with this approach, however; spontaneity is never worth getting the question wrong.

Nonetheless, it is permissible to let the jury know that the expert has already seen the hypothetical question so that the jury understands that the expert is not speaking off the cuff. On using hypothetical questions during cross-examination, see §11.147. For further discussion of hypothetical questions, see §5.52. See also California Personal Injury Proof §§1.28-1.30 (Cal CEB 1970).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.144 c. When not to use hypothetical questions

§11.144 c. When not to use hypothetical questions

When possible, many attorneys avoid using hypothetical questions on direct examination of experts. Instead, these attorneys elicit from the expert the work that he or she has done on the matter before asking the expert's opinion. The reasons for proceeding in this manner are that:

- The expert's credibility may be enhanced in the eyes of the jurors in that they are aware of the extent of the expert's work on the matter;
- The jurors may be less apt to become bored, as they might when listening to a long hypothetical question;
- The jurors may better understand the significance of the expert's opinion; and
- Counsel avoids the common objections to the hypothetical question (e.g., that the facts assumed in the question are not shown by the evidence).

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.145 D. Testimony about compensation and experience as witness

The fact that the expert is being paid for his or her time and the amount of that compensation are often brought out during direct examination. The idea is to blunt any adverse effects that occur if these facts first come out during cross-examination. On cross-examination concerning compensation, see §11.148. In posing a question about the expert's compensation, it is important to make clear that the payment is for the expert's consultation time, not for his or her "testimony." For further discussion, see §5.83.

Similarly, when an expert has testified in other trials, many attorneys attempt to bring out this fact during direct examination. The goal is to suggest that the expert's widespread experience reflects the demand for his or her particular skills. By contrast, if this fact is left for cross-examination, it may be suggested that the expert is a paid witness who makes a large part of his or her living from testifying.

© The Regents of the University of California

E. Cross-examination of expert

§11.146 1. General rules

Experts may be cross-examined in the same manner as any other witness. Evid C §721(a). See generally §§11.82-11.125. In addition, experts may be cross-examined as to qualifications, the subject to which their testimony relates, the bases for their opinions, and the reasons for their opinions. Evid C §721(a). Educate yourself thoroughly about the area of the expert's special expertise relevant to the case, including becoming thoroughly familiar with the language used and the concepts involved so that you can ask the expert intelligent questions.

Counsel has wide latitude in cross-examining experts as to all matters that test the soundness of the expert's opinion and his or her credibility. See Comment to Evid C §721. See also Dincau v Tamayose (1982) 131 CA3d 780, 798, 182 CR 855. You may inquire into privileged communications, if the expert's opinion is based on facts obtained during a privileged communication. People v Whitmore (1967) 251 CA2d 359, 59 CR 411.

You may not cross-examine an expert about the content of a scientific, technical, or professional publication unless:

- The expert has referred to, considered, or relied on it in arriving at or forming his or her opinion;
- The publication has been admitted into evidence irrespective of whether the expert referred to, considered, or relied on it in forming his or her opinion; or
- The publication has been established as a reliable authority by the testimony or admission of the witness or by other expert testimony or by judicial notice.

Evid C §721(b)(1)-(3). Comment to Evid C §721(b). Such publications are not generally admissible during the expert's witness's direct examination. See §11.138. On particular areas of cross-examination, see §§11.150-11.151. For further discussion on cross-examination of opposing experts, see California Expert Witness Guide §§15.1-15.31 (2d ed Cal CEB 1991).

On discovery concerning expert witnesses and exclusion of expert's opinion, see CCP §§2034.010-2034.730; California Civil Discovery Practice, chap 11 (4th ed Cal CEB 2006). See also §§2.3-2.7.

§11.147 a. Hypothetical questions

Hypothetical questions may be asked during cross-examination even if they were not asked during direct examination. See, e.g., People v Sutton (1887) 73 C 243, 15 P 86. If hypothetical questions were used on direct examination, vary the facts in your hypothetical questions to see whether the expert's opinion would change with different facts. See Dincau v Tamayose (1982) 131 CA3d 780, 182 CR 855; Alward v Paola (1947) 79 CA2d 1, 179 P2d 5. Similarly, "different aspects of the subject may be gone into for the purpose of testing the knowledge of the witness and different phases of the subject embraced within the hypothesis may be developed." Reynolds v Struble (1933) 128 CA 716, 18 P2d 690.

Hypothetical questions asked during cross-examination, like those asked during direct examination, must generally assume facts shown by the evidence. McCann v Children's Home Soc'y (1917) 176 C 359, 168 P 355; MacCoy v Gage (1918) 38 CA 672, 177 P 296. See also §§11.141-11.142. The cross-examiner has wide latitude in testing the expert's credibility, and when the purpose of the hypothetical question is to test the expert's accuracy or competency, the question may contain facts not in evidence. People v Busch (1961) 56 C2d 868, 874, 16 CR 898. For further discussion of preparing hypothetical questions on cross-examination, see §§5.85-5.89. See also California Personal Injury Proof §1.30 (Cal CEB 1970).

§11.148 b. Compensation and experience as witness

It is a proper subject on cross-examination to ask the expert witness whether he or she received compensation and the amount of compensation. Evid C §722(b). The rationale is that the subject reflects on the expert's credibility and the weight of the testimony. If the expert's living is earned by testifying in court cases, this fact may be brought out during cross-examination. Moreover, if the expert usually or always testifies for one side (e.g., the plaintiff's side), you may bring out this fact to show the expert's bias. At least one court has held that $250 an hour is a reasonable fee for expert testimony and held that the courts have jurisdiction to decide the reasonableness of expert fees. Marsh v Mountain Zephyr, Inc. (1996) 43 CA4th 289, 50 CR2d 493.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.149 c. Calling rebuttal or other experts

When an expert testifies that his or her opinion is based in part or in whole on the opinion or statement of another person, that other person may be called and examined by an adverse party as if under cross-examination about the opinion or statement. Evid C §804(a). This rule does not apply if the person whose opinion or statement was relied on is a party, a person identified with the party under Evid C §776(d), or "a witness who has testified in the action concerning the subject matter of the opinion or statement upon which the expert has relied." Evid C §804(b).

Code of Civil Procedure §2034(j), (m) provide that a party may, for purposes of impeachment, call an expert who was not listed or disclosed during expert discovery. Although the impeachment contemplated does not allow the unlisted expert to express an opinion contrary to that of another expert, the unlisted expert can testify that facts relied on by the opponent's expert are incorrect or nonexistent. Fish v Guevara (1993) 12 CA4th 142, 15 CR2d 329 (unlisted expert had contrary opinion but no contrary facts on which to base it). See also Kennemur v State (1982) 133 CA3d 907, 921, 184 CR 393 (decided under former CCP §2037.5, now CCP §2034.300, CCP §2034.310).

2. Expert cross-examination subjects

§11.150 a. Checklist: Expert's qualifications and opinion

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

___ 1. Is the witness qualified to testify as an expert on the subject?

___ 2. Is the expert's opinion flawed in logic, factual basis, or common sense? If so, attempt to pick apart the opinion during cross-examination.

EXAMPLE: If an expert has given an opinion on the bursting point of one type of pipe, the cross-examiner may be able to show that the pipe involved in the case differs from the pipe on which the expert's opinion was based.

___ 3. Is there a legally sufficient basis for the opinion?

EXAMPLE: Were material facts omitted from the hypothetical question or were facts not in evidence, so that the opinion was based on a misleading hypothetical question? To establish this point, consider an alternative hypothetical question that assumes other facts more favorable to your client. See §§11.142-11.145.

___ 4. Are there any weak links in the expert's analysis of the problems? If so, expose and exploit those weaknesses during cross-examination.

EXAMPLE: You may be able to show that a doctor, although qualified as an expert, (1) performed only one examination of the patient and (2) did not have all the facts necessary to render a complete opinion.

___ 5. Is the expert's field a precise science? If not, consider asking the expert to concede that the field is not a precise science, and that other well-trained experts might reach a contrary conclusion.

___ 6. Does the expert have direct first-hand knowledge of the facts on which the opinion is based? If you find that the expert does not, do not argue with the expert. The time for argument comes at the end of the trial in summation, when you can refer to your own expert's testimony and to the contradictions inherent in the opposing expert's testimony.

___ 7. Has the expert given prior testimony in other proceedings or published any opinions? You may be able to attack the expert's testimony based on such prior statements or opinions, if they are inconsistent with the current testimony.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.151 b. Questions about publications

§11.151 b. Questions about publications

If you know that there is impeaching material in any scientific, technical, or professional publications, which the expert witness referred to, considered, or relied on in reaching an opinion, have the publications available to show to the expert.

EXAMPLE: A scientific text relied on by the expert states that the strength of a particular type of pipe may be weakened if exposed to substance Y, but the expert ignored this point in rendering an opinion at trial. The cross-examiner could discredit the expert's testimony in the following manner:

Q. You found [substance Y] to be present on the pipe, is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you rely on [scientific text X] in forming your opinion?

A. Yes.

Q. Does [scientific text X] contain authoritative, accurate, and reliable information about the effect of placing [substance Y] on this particular type of pipe?

A. Yes.

Q. [Scientific text X] indicates in footnote 3 that exposure to [substance Y] will have an adverse material effect on the strength of this particular type of pipe, is that correct?

A. I don't recall.

Q. [Showing expert footnote 3.] It states in footnote 3 that exposure to [substance Y] will have an adverse material effect on the strength of this particular type of pipe. Is that correct?

A. [Reading.] Well, yes.

Q. But you did not consider the information in footnote 3 in forming your opinion, did you?

A. No, I did not.

Optional

Q. Do you agree with the statement in the text?

A. Yes.

NOTE: If the expert says "yes," the expert's earlier opinion will have been weakened. Even if the expert responds "no," you may stop the cross-examination and then stress in closing argument that the scientific text purportedly relied on by the opposing party's expert, and admitted to be authoritative, contains an opinion directly contrary to the opposing expert's opinion in court. That later argument will likewise weaken the expert's earlier opinion and undermine the opponent's case.

If the expert acknowledges, as in the example above, that certain information was not considered in forming his or her opinion, decide whether to continue cross-examining on the point. One risk of doing so is that the expert may be able to recover with an explanation, thus diminishing the impeaching effect of the testimony. Factors to consider in making this decision include:

- Whether the expert appears forthright, in which event you may elect to continue the line of questioning;
- Whether the expert appears evasive, in which event you may not choose to proceed; and
- Whether additional facts may be used to impeach the expert, in which event you may wish to continue with the examination.

EXAMPLE: Cross-examiner decides to continue questioning on this point, and asks:

> Q. If you had considered the information in footnote 3 of [scientific text X], your opinion would have been different, correct?
> A. Yes.

In asking this type of a question, there is a risk that the expert may answer "no," which would dilute the impeaching nature of the expert's testimony. This is especially so if opposing counsel later asks: "Why would your opinion not be different?" and the expert is able to explain away the seeming analytic blunder.

X. ETHICAL CONSIDERATIONS: PERJURED TESTIMONY DURING TRIAL

A. Know professional rules

§11.152 1. Duty not to knowingly allow perjury

An attorney who knowingly allows a witness to testify falsely is subject to disciplinary proceedings and criminal prosecution. See In re Branch (1969) 70 C2d 200, 74 CR 238. The attorney is precluded from asking questions if the attorney knows that the response will be perjurious. Bus & P C §6068(d); Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-200; ABA Model Code of Prof Resp DR 7-102(A). See People v Johnson (1998) 62 CA4th 608, 619, 72 CR2d 805; People v Brown (1988) 203 CA3d 1335, 1339, 250 CR 762. See also §§5.91-5.95.

When presenting a case, an attorney must use "such means only as are consistent with truth" and "not seek to mislead the judge, judicial officer or jury by an artifice or false statement of fact or law." Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-200; Bus & P C §6068(d). See also Bus & P C §6128(a), which provides that an attorney is guilty of a misdemeanor if he or she intends to deceive the court or any party by using deceit or collusion, or consenting to any deceit or collusion.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.153 2. Duty to keep client's confidences and secrets

§11.153 2. Duty to keep client's confidences and secrets

If the perjury is committed or threatened by the client, a party-related witness (i.e., officer, director, managing agent, or employee of client), or any other witness called by the attorney during the trial, the attorney who knows the testimony to be false is faced with a dilemma. On the one hand, as an officer of the court, the attorney cannot mislead the judge or jury by false testimony, and on the other hand the attorney must preserve the client's confidence and secrets. The California Rules of Professional Conduct do not provide comprehensive guidance on what course of action the attorney should take when confronted with this situation during trial.

Business and Professions Code §6068(e) states that an attorney must not violate the confidences or secrets of his or her client. Confidences usually means information protected by the attorney-client privilege, and "secrets" refers to other information that the client has asked the attorney not to reveal or the disclosure of which would be embarrassing or would be likely to be detrimental to the client. See definitions in ABA Code Prof Resp DR 4-101(A); the ABA definition of "secret" applied by the State Bar of Cal, Standing Comm on Prof Resp & Cond, Formal Opinion No. 86-87.

The state bar has held that Bus & P C §6068(e) requires counsel not to do anything to breach the trust reposed in him or her by the client. See State Bar of Cal, Standing Comm on Prof Resp & Cond, Formal Opinion Nos. 86-87, 88-96, 83-74.

NOTE: The ABA Code of Professional Responsibility is not binding in California. State Bar of Cal, Standing Comm on Prof Resp & Cond, Formal Opinion No. 83-71. (On its effect, if any, in federal court, check the local rules of the district courts.) However, when no direct authority is found in the California Rules of Professional Conduct, statutes, or state court opinions, the ABA Rules on Professional Conduct may be looked at as a collateral source, their persuasiveness depending on their "underlying logic and historical basis." Formal Opinion No. 83-71.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.154 B. Determine whether perjury was committed

Whether perjury was committed in a particular case may be difficult to ascertain. See State Bar of Cal, Standing Comm on Prof Resp & Cond, Formal Opinion No. 83-74, discussing the difficulty in knowing whether a client has committed perjury.

© The Regents of the University of California

C. What to do if perjury committed

§11.155 1. Request a recess

If the attorney knows that the client, a party-related witness, or any other witness called by the attorney has committed perjury, the attorney, to avoid any appearance of improper conduct (such as giving implied consent to the use of the perjurious testimony), should promptly request a recess in such a manner as not to put the judge, jury, or adverse parties on notice of any wrongdoing. See State Bar of Cal, Standing Comm on Prof Resp & Cond, Formal Opinion No. 83-74.

NOTE: The committee in Formal Opinion No. 83-74 specifically stated that it was not addressing the attorney's obligation in a jury trial, although if a client committed perjury in a jury trial, the attorney could presumably follow the procedures outlined in that opinion and in §§11.156-11.161.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.156 2. Confer privately with client or witness

Immediately hold a private conference with your client or witness. Explain your opinion that he or she has committed perjury and the basis for that opinion. The client may be able to offer an acceptable explanation of the testimony that would change your opinion and cure the problem. See State Bar of Cal, Standing Comm on Prof Resp & Cond, Formal Opinion No. 83-74.

If you still believe the client or witness committed perjury, explain that if the perjured testimony is not corrected or at least removed from the record (see §11.158), you will be duty-bound to make a motion to be allowed to withdraw from the case. See §§11.159-11.161 on withdrawal. See Formal Opinion No. 83-74.

NOTE: In Formal Opinion No. 83-74, the committee stated that it was not addressing the situation in which the perjury was elicited from an officer or agent of a nonhuman client (e.g., a corporation). When perjury is elicited from a party-related witness, or a witness other than the client, the attorney in discussing the matter with the witness and client must consider whether withdrawal or disclosure will be required if the testimony is not rectified. Withdrawal and disclosure are discussed in §§11.159-11.161.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.157 3. Explain ramifications of correcting testimony

Explain to the client the full ramifications of correcting the perjured testimony. If the client wishes and is allowed to retake the stand, he or she will presumably testify contrary to his or her earlier testimony. The client is then potentially subject to criminal prosecution for perjury and will probably be subject to rigorous cross-examination on his or her memory and credibility. The "correction" may result in the client's losing the case.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/11 Examining Witnesses/§11.158 4. Try to remove testimony from record

§11.158 4. Try to remove testimony from record

You may seek, without explanation, a stipulation from opposing counsel that the testimony be stricken. If that stipulation is agreed to, the court may strike the testimony, thus curing the problem.

If this effort is unsuccessful, you will have to move to strike the testimony, stating whatever grounds may exist, without disclosing its perjurious nature without the client's consent. State Bar of Cal, Standing Comm on Prof Resp & Cond, Formal Opinion No. 83-74.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.159 5. Move to withdraw

Consider moving to withdraw if, e.g., the client refuses to rectify the perjurious testimony or is agreeable only to moving to strike the testimony and the motion to strike is denied. See State Bar of Cal, Standing Comm on Prof Resp & Cond, Formal Opinion No. 83-74; Bus & P C §§6068(c)-(d), 6128(a); Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-700(B)(1)-(2), (C) (mandatory and permissive withdrawal), 5-200 (trial conduct). See also Los Angeles County Bar Ass'n Ethical Opinion No. 305.

First, ask the client to consent to withdrawal. You may then move to withdraw based on the client's consent. Second, if the client does not consent, make a motion to withdraw under CCP §284(2). The problem is to find a way to move to withdraw so that in describing the grounds for withdrawal the motion itself does not amount to a disclosure of perjury. See §11.160 on duty not to disclose perjury. A possible ground for withdrawal is that the client has made it unreasonably difficult for you to carry out your duties as an attorney or has asked you to engage in conduct contrary to your judgment and advice. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-700(C)(1)(d).

In a criminal case, one court has held that an attorney should permit the witness to testify in a free narrative manner on the basis that the narrative approach best accommodates the competing interests of a criminal defendant's right to testify and an attorney's obligation not to participate in the presentation of perjured testimony. People v Johnson (1998) 62 CA4th 608, 629, 72 CR2d 805. Whether the reasoning in Johnson applies in a civil action, where a witness's right to testify is not necessarily protected by the Fifth, Sixth, and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution, is unsettled.

The court has discretion to deny an attorney's request to withdraw from a case even if the client intends to commit perjury. See People v Brown (1988) 203 CA3d 1335, 1340, 250 CR 762. On ethical considerations when client threatens perjury before trial, see §§5.91-5.94.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.160 a. California rule: Do not disclose reason for withdrawal

When moving to withdraw, the attorney cannot compromise the confidentiality of the attorney-client relationship by disclosing to the court or the adverse parties, without the client's consent, the reasons for seeking withdrawal. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1362(c); Bus & P C §6068(e); State Bar of Cal, Standing Comm on Prof Resp & Cond, Formal Opinion No. 83-74; Los Angeles County Bar Ass'n Ethical Opinion No. 305. See also State Bar of Cal, Standing Comm on Prof Resp & Cond, Formal Opinion Nos. 88-96, 86-87; Los Angeles County Bar Ass'n Ethical Opinion No. 386.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.161 b. ABA rules: Disclose perjury

Rule 3.3 of the ABA Model Rules of Prof Cond has been interpreted to require an attorney who knows the client's testimony to be false to disclose the perjury to the court when the client cannot be persuaded to rectify the perjury. ABA Formal Opinion No. 87-353. Under Rule 3.3, the United States Supreme Court held that counsel's disclosure of client perjury is not merely authorized but is required (if the client cannot be dissuaded from committing perjury). Nix v Whiteside (1986) 475 US 157, 168, 89 L Ed 2d 123, 135, 106 S Ct 988.

However, neither the ABA Model Rules of Prof Cond nor Nix v Whiteside is binding on California attorneys in state court actions. People v Guzman (1988) 45 C3d 915, 944, 248 CR 467, overruled on other grounds in Price v Superior Court (2001) 25 C4th 1046, 1069 n13, 108 CR2d 409; State Bar of Cal, Standing Comm on Prof Resp & Cond, Formal Opinion No. 83-71. On effect of the ABA Model Rules of Professional Conduct in federal court, check the district courts' local rules.

© The Regents of the University of California

6. When perjury is of nonparty witness

§11.162 a. Disclose nonparty perjury

When a witness whom the attorney has called, other than the client or a party-related witness, refuses to rectify perjured testimony, the attorney may not have grounds to withdraw. In this situation, you may have to disclose the witness's perjury to the court when you can do so without revealing the client's confidences or secrets.

See San Diego Ethics Opinion No. 1983-8, which concluded that, when a nonparty witness committed perjury, any attorney with knowledge of it must "at the appropriate time, attempt to rehabilitate, correct or impeach the witness" and, if the witness persists in the perjury, advise the court of the perjury at the earliest time. See also ABA Model Rules of Prof Resp DR 7-102(B)(2), which requires an attorney to reveal fraud perpetrated on the court by anyone other than his or her client.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.163 b. Do not disclose perjury if confidentiality would be violated

If disclosing the witness's perjury would require revealing a client's confidences or secrets, the attorney may not be obligated to disclose the perjury without the client's consent. Such disclosure may constitute a violation of the attorney's duty under Bus & P C §6068(e). Neither the Business and Professions Code nor the California Rules of Professional Conduct require affirmative disclosure as ABA Model Code of Prof Resp DR 7-102(B) does. See also Los Angeles County Bar Ass'n Ethical Opinion No. 305.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.164 c. Under ABA rules

Under ABA Model Rules of Prof Cond 3.3 and Nix v Whiteside (1986) 475 US 157, 168, 89 L Ed 2d 123, 135, 106 S Ct 988, the attorney would most likely be required to disclose the witness's perjury, even if it did violate the client's confidence. See §11.161.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.165 d. May need to withdraw

If the client refuses to consent to disclosure of the confidence or secret to enable counsel to rectify and if need be to establish the witness's perjury, counsel may be required to seek withdrawal in the same manner as when the client commits perjury. See Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-700(B)(2). See also Bus & P C §§6068(c)-(d), 6128(a); Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-200. See §§11.159-11.161.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.166 e. Move to strike or for mistrial

If the witness refuses to rectify the perjury and the client consents to disclosure of its confidences or secrets (after the attorney has explained the ramifications), or if no client confidences or secrets will be revealed by the disclosure of the perjury, consider moving (out of the jurors' presence) to strike the testimony. Also consider moving for a mistrial at the same time. Weigh the desirability of continuing with the trial against the possibility that striking a favorable witness's testimony may taint the client's credibility in the judge's or jurors' eyes.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.167 7. If witness is party-related

When the witness who has committed perjury is a party-related witness (i.e., officer, director, managing agent, or employee of client), the attorney calling that witness is faced with an additional problem. There is no clear guidance on whether you should proceed as if the client committed perjury or proceed as if a nonclient committed perjury. In the attorney-client privilege area, not all communications from party-related witnesses to the attorney are entitled to the privilege. See D. I. Chadbourne, Inc. v Superior Court (1964) 60 C2d 723, 36 CR 468 (communications made by employee to corporation's attorney may not be entitled to attorney-client privilege). See also Triple A Mach. Shop v State (1989) 213 CA3d 131, 261 CR 493. Whether the same reasoning will apply when a party-related witness commits perjury is unsettled.

© The Regents of the University of California

§11.168 8. Do not rely on perjured testimony in argument

If the attorney's motion to withdraw when the client has committed perjury is denied, or if the attorney continues to represent the client when a nonclient witness has committed perjury and withdrawal is not available, the attorney may not argue the perjured testimony to the trier of fact in closing argument. Bus & P C §6068(d); Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-200; ABA Model Rules of Prof Resp DR 7-102(A). See also In re Allen (1959) 52 C2d 762, 344 P2d 609; In re Jones (1929) 208 C 240, 280 P 964.

For further discussion, see Martin, Perjury in Civil Cases, 4 Cal Law 65 (Dec. 1984); Wolfram, Client Perjury, 50 S Cal L Rev 809 (1977). On potential perjury discovered before trial, see §§5.54-5.55.

§12.1 I. SCOPE OF CHAPTER

This chapter covers:

- Using depositions at trial (see §§12.32-12.97), including requirements for stenographically recorded depositions (see §§12.2-12.15) and audio and video recorded depositions (see §§12.16-12.31);
- Using interrogatories at trial (see §§12.98-12.121), including requirements for interrogatories (see §§12.98-12.106);
- Using admissions at trial (see §§12.122-12.134); and
- Checklists and sample forms for using deposition testimony and answers to interrogatories (see §§12.135-12.139).

This chapter does not discuss using pleadings or other documents relevant to the action (e.g., a verified complaint or answer, or declarations or affidavits made under penalty of perjury that were part of pretrial motions) for impeachment or other purposes at trial.

Further research: For discussion of the completion of discovery before trial, see §§2.2-2.18. The effect of judicial arbitration on discovery is covered in §§2.19-2.24. On methods of conducting discovery, see California Civil Discovery Practice (4th ed Cal CEB 2006); Obtaining Discovery: Initiating and Responding to Discovery Procedures (Cal CEB Action Guide March 2007); Handling Motions to Compel and Other Discovery Motions (Cal CEB Action Guide December 2009); Handling Depositions (Cal CEB Action Guide February 2007).

II. REQUIREMENTS FOR STENOGRAPHICALLY RECORDED DEPOSITIONS

§12.2 A. General requirements

The officer before whom a deposition is taken must put the witness (deponent) under oath or affirmation. CCP §2025.330(a). Unless the court orders or the parties agree otherwise, testimony and objections at a deposition must be taken stenographically, but statements of counsel made "off the record" with agreement of all counsel need not be recorded. CCP §2025.330(b). The stenographic record of a deponent's testimony must be transcribed unless the parties agree otherwise. CCP §2025.510(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.3 B. Effect of stipulations

The parties and the deponent may waive the reading, correcting, and signing of the transcript. CCP §2025.520(a). Unless otherwise ordered by the court, the parties by written stipulation may (CCP §2016.030):

- Provide that depositions be taken before any person, at any time or place, on any notice, and in any manner;
- Permit these depositions to be used like other depositions; and
- Modify the procedures for other methods of discovery.

On deposition procedures, see California Civil Discovery Practice, chap 5 (4th ed Cal CEB 2006).

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.4 C. Notice and certification requirements by deposition officer

The deposition officer must send written notice to the deponent and all parties attending the deposition when the original transcript of the testimony for each session of the deposition is available for reading, correcting, and signing unless the deponent and the parties have agreed on the record that the reading, correcting, and signing of the transcript has been waived or that it will take place after the entire deposition has been concluded or at some other specific time. CCP §2025.520(a).

The deposition officer must notify the parties who attended the deposition in writing of any changes timely made by the deponent in person. CCP §2025.520(e) (see §12.9). The officer must certify on the original transcript (and on any copy of it made by the officer) that the deponent was duly sworn and that the transcript is a true record of the deponent's testimony and any changes made by the deponent. CCP §2025.540(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

D. Obtaining and using copies of transcripts

§12.5 1. When to request copies

Any attorney in the case may request the deposition officer or reporter (before, at, or after the taking of the deposition) to send a copy of the deposition transcript as soon as it has been prepared. See CCP §2025.510(c). If, at the time of the request, the deposition transcript will be available to the requesting party before the time the original or copy would be available to any other party, the deposition officer must immediately notify all other parties attending the deposition of the request, and make a copy of the full or partial deposition transcript available to all parties at the same time. CCP §2025.510(d). The copying of depositions, except for internal use or by court order, is prohibited by Govt C §69954(d).

PRACTICE TIP: Most attorneys request copies of the transcript at the deposition.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.6 2. Obtaining copy of transcript before correction

Any party may obtain a certified copy of the transcript within 30 days after notification that the transcript is available for reading, correcting, and signing. See CCP §§2025.510(b)-(c), 2025.520(a)-(f). The deposition officer is required to send written notice to the deponent and all parties attending the deposition that the original transcript is available for reading, correcting, and signing, unless the parties agree otherwise. CCP §2025.520(a). The deposition officer is also required to notify counsel for all parties by sending a copy of the required letter if the deponent has made any changes or refused to approve the transcript. CCP §2025.520(e).

When the deposition transcript is prepared as a rough draft, it may not be certified and may not be used, cited, or transcribed as the certified transcript of the deposition proceedings. This rough draft also may not be used to rebut or contradict the certified transcript of deposition proceedings. CCP §2025.540(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.7 3. Obtaining certified copy

After the period for correction of the deposition, any person may obtain from the deposition officer a certified copy of the deposition transcript for a reasonable charge. CCP §2025.570(a). If a copy is requested, the deposition officer is required to mail notice to all parties attending the deposition and to the deponent advising them:

- That a copy is being sought;
- The name of the person requesting the copy; and
- The right to seek a protective order under CCP §2025.420.

CCP §2025.570(b). This section, however, applies only to recorded testimony taken at depositions occurring on or after January 1, 1998. CCP §2025.570(d).

PRACTICE TIP: To keep the original transcript clean and unmarked, make several photocopies of the transcript. Read and make notes on one copy while the deponent reads and marks another. Make additional photocopies from the clean copy as needed.

© The Regents of the University of California

E. Making corrections and changes to transcript

§12.8 1. When deponent may change record

Within 30 days after written notice from the deposition officer that the original transcript is available for reading, correcting, or signing, the deponent may make changes to the form or substance of any of the answers and either approve the transcript by signing it, or refuse to do so by not signing it. CCP §2025.520(b).

The deponent must make any changes by sending (CCP §2025.520(c)):

- A letter by certified or registered mail (with return receipt requested) to the deposition officer; and
- A copy of that letter by first-class mail to all parties attending the deposition.

The 30-day period may be shortened by the court on a showing of good cause. CCP §2025.520(d). The 30-day period may also be shortened or extended if the attending parties and the deponent agree on the record or otherwise in writing. CCP §2025.520(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.9 2. Deponent's action must be noted on record

If the deponent has not already done so, the deposition officer must enter on the original transcript any action taken by the deponent and indicate the deponent's approval of, or failure or refusal to approve, the transcript on the original transcript. CCP §2025.520(e).

The deponent's failure or refusal to sign the deposition or to send a letter stating approval within the 30-day time period will be noted on the transcript but does not prevent use of the deposition at trial. See CCP §2025.530(d). Unless the transcript is suppressed for gross error, the transcript has the same force and effect as if it were read, corrected, and signed, subject to any changes that the deponent may have timely made. CCP §§2025.520-2025.530.

Further research: On motion to suppress and sanctions concerning the motion, see CCP §2025.520(g), (h). See also §12.13.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.10 3. When correction advisable

Some attorneys believe that by correcting the transcript, the deponent can ensure that the recorded answers are accurate and reflect what the deponent truly knows and believes. When a witness changes testimony at trial, opposing counsel may point out during argument that the witness had the opportunity to make corrections in the deposition before the trial began.

Correcting the transcript:

- Can reduce the possibility that adverse counsel will find deposition testimony that is inconsistent with the deponent's trial testimony;
- Allows the deponent to add facts to a recorded answer so that it is more fully responsive to the question asked;
- May eliminate inaccurate answers that adversely affect the determination of pretrial motions (e.g., a summary judgment motion); and
- May eliminate the appearance of correcting testimony at the last minute.

If the deposition transcript will be used as substitute testimony (i.e., when the witness's deposition testimony will be read into evidence in place of the witness's oral testimony), it is extremely important to make sure not only that the deposition is transcribed correctly, but also that substantive errors are corrected. It may be less important to correct other than truly substantive errors if the deposition will not be used as substitute testimony.

Counsel should review the deposition when it is available and send a copy of it to the client or witness for review as soon as possible. If there are errors in what the deponent said, counsel should consider whether it would be beneficial to the case as a whole to make corrections on the deposition record or to wait until trial.

CAUTION: When the deponent is a friendly witness but neither the attorney's client nor a client-related witness (e.g., an officer of the entity that the attorney represents), the communications between counsel and the deponent are not subject to the attorney-client privilege. Weigh the benefits to be gained from suggesting to the deponent that the deponent correct the deposition against the possibility that the communications between the deponent and the attorney will be disclosed during trial.

For the attorney's obligations on discovering that a witness intends to commit perjury during trial, see §§5.91-5.95. On the attorney's obligations when perjury is committed during trial, see §§11.152-11.158.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.11 4. When correction not advisable

Depending on the circumstances and the nature of the error, it may be better for deponent not to correct the transcript and, instead, make any changes or corrections during trial. The preference to not correct the deposition is based on the following beliefs:

- If some corrections are made, it will be more difficult for the deponent at trial to disavow other statements in the transcript that were inadvertently not corrected;
- The burden of ensuring the correctness of all answers in the deposition is too great;
- Making changes may highlight troublesome areas that opposing counsel might otherwise miss;
- Opposing counsel can attack the witness's credibility by pointing out any corrections at trial; and
- Opposing counsel may comment during closing argument that the witness's oral testimony cannot be trusted because a number of changes were made to the deposition testimony.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.12 5. If typographical or transcription errors

When a deposition transcript contains typographical or transcription errors (as opposed to errors in substantive testimony), ask the deposition officer to correct the errors and notify other counsel of the request by letter. Make the request not only to ensure the accuracy of the transcript, but also to ensure that the transcript can be used smoothly at trial.

The deponent may escape characterization as a witness who is given to changing sworn testimony after it has been recorded if the deposition officer makes the corrections. If the deposition officer refuses to make the corrections, the errors may be corrected by stipulation of counsel.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.13 6. When moving to suppress deposition

If the corrections cannot be accomplished either through the deposition officer or by stipulation, a motion to suppress the deposition may be necessary if the deposition contains gross errors. CCP §2025.520(g). The motion must be "seasonable" and must be accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good faith attempt to resolve informally each issue presented by the motion. CCP §2025.520(g).

PRACTICE TIP: Be reasonable in permitting correction of typographical and transcription errors. The court will impose monetary sanctions if you cannot present substantial justification for making or opposing the motion and no other circumstances exist that make imposition of sanctions unjust. CCP §2025.520(g), (h).

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/12 Effective Use of Discovery/§12.14 F. Custody of transcript and when to file

§12.14 F. Custody of transcript and when to file

The certified deposition transcript is not filed with the court. CCP §2025.550(a). The deposition officer must securely seal it in an envelope or a package, clearly marked with the title of the action and the deponent's name. The deposition transcript is sent to the attorney for the party who noticed the deposition. CCP §2025.550(a). The custodian must store the transcript so that it will be protected against loss, tampering, or destruction. CCP §2025.550(a).

CAUTION: Well before trial, check the local rules or policies that apply to your case to determine if you need to file the deposition with the court. Although the use of a deposition transcript at a hearing or trial is not predicated on the filing of the transcript, be aware that local rules of court, pretrial orders, or complex litigation case management orders may require the lodging of transcripts before hearing or trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.15 G. Using enlargements

Some attorneys occasionally use an overhead projector or make an enlarged photograph of a crucial page or passage from a deposition and display the enlargement during cross-examination or closing argument (assuming that the exact pages and line numbers were read to the trier of fact before the close of evidence). The enlargement should not, of course, display inadmissible, confusing, or otherwise objectionable matter.

CAUTION: Check local rules, obtain approval from the trial judge, and notify opposing counsel before displaying enlargements in open court. See §§13.35-13.38.

© The Regents of the University of California

III. REQUIREMENTS FOR AUDIO OR VIDEO RECORDED DEPOSITIONS

A. Notice or agreement for recording deposition

§12.16 1. General requirements

Depositions may be audio- or video-recorded in addition to stenographic recording if (CCP §2025.330(c)):

- The deposition notice contains a statement of the noticing party's intention to audio or video record the deposition; or
- All parties agree that the testimony may also be recorded by either method.

Examination and cross-examination must proceed as permitted at trial under the provisions of the Evidence Code. CCP §2025.330(d).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/12 Effective Use of Discovery/§12.17 2. When other parties may record

§12.17 2. When other parties may record

Any other party may make a simultaneous audio or video recording of the deposition at that party's own expense if that party, no less than 3 calendar days before the date for which the deposition is scheduled, serves a written notice of intent to record the deposition testimony on (CCP §2025.330(c)):

- The party or attorney who noticed the deposition;
- All other parties or attorneys who were served with the original deposition notice; and
- Any deponent whose attendance is being compelled by a deposition subpoena under CCP §§2020.010-2020.510.

The notice must be made by personal service under CCP §1011 if given 3 calendar days before the deposition date. CCP §2025.330(c).

PRACTICE TIP: If you want to make a simultaneous recording, serve notice at the earliest possible date (more than 3 days before if possible) and coordinate with the original noticing party to ensure that the deposition site can accommodate two or more cameras and operators.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.18 B. Stenographic transcript is official record

When deposition testimony is recorded both stenographically and by audio or video recording, the stenographic transcript is the official record of that testimony for the purpose of the trial and any subsequent hearing or appeal. CCP §2025.510(g).

PRACTICE TIP: Although the parties may agree that a deposition not be recorded stenographically (see CCP §2025.330(b)), it is in your best interest to arrange to have a stenographer present to simultaneously record a video deposition. The added expense is outweighed by the fact that a stenographic transcript is invaluable in reviewing deposition testimony and editing the video. A transcript also serves as a back-up record in case of lost or damaged recordings or camera malfunction. In addition, a stenographic transcript must be prepared at some point before trial if a party intends to use a video deposition under CCP §2025.620 at trial. CCP §2025.340(m).

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.19 C. Requirements for operator

The person operating the audio or video equipment must be competent to set up, operate, and monitor the equipment. CCP §2025.340(b). That person may be an employee of the attorney taking the deposition unless the operator is also the deposition officer. CCP §2025.340(b).

Further research: On qualification of deposition officers generally, see CCP §2025.320.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.20 D. Setup of equipment

If noticing the deposition, be sure that the recording operator arrives at the deposition site at least half an hour before the deposition to allow adequate setup and test time. The operator should be informed of the location of the witness's and the interrogator's chairs in order to correctly place the camera and acoustical equipment. See §12.19.

While the deposition is being recorded, the most prudent practice is to maintain the camera facing and focused on the witness. Except for the beginning of the interrogation, dramatic camera angles and excessive zooming or panning are likely to be distracting or objectionable.

The operator is prohibited from distorting the appearance or demeanor of the participants in the deposition by the use of camera or sound-recording techniques. CCP §2025.340(g). The area in which the deponent's testimony is recorded must be suitably large, adequately lighted, and reasonably quiet. CCP §2025.340(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/12 Effective Use of Discovery/§12.21 E. Be prepared for the deposition

§12.21 E. Be prepared for the deposition

The key to the success of a video deposition is preparation. The effectiveness of video recording can be squandered if there are pauses to formulate questions or a witness leafs through records to refresh recollection of the most fundamental facts. Likewise, the impact of an expert video recorded may be magnified by poorly formulated questions and ill-informed cross-examination.

Prepare for a video deposition with the same care and planning used in preparing for examination or cross-examination of a witness at trial.

PRACTICE TIP: If possible, conduct a mock examination of the witness before the deposition. If the mock examination is recorded, review the recording with the witness before the deposition.

In addition to thoroughly preparing the line of questioning, consider how to exploit the visual nature of the video medium. Using exhibits, models, and demonstrations can be particularly helpful in explaining technical testimony. To be effective, however, exhibits and models must be used in such a way that the viewer can easily see the exhibits on the video screen monitor.

Practice using demonstrative evidence before the deposition. To make the most effective presentation, the deponent must be conscious of the position of the camera and microphone when exhibits and models are handled. Consider using in-court models, enlargements of key documents, and charts to supplement video testimony at trial.

PRACTICE TIP: Be aware that the microphones are recording all sounds in the deposition room. The impact of a video deposition can be lost if the recording is filled with the sounds of papers being shuffled or charts being moved. Avoid any "off-the-record" conversations unless the video has been stopped; the deponent's microphone may pick up and record such conversations.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.22 F. Prepare witnesses

Demeanor, tone of voice, and general appearance of the witness are critical in a video deposition. The camera will magnify any nonverbal mannerisms, which may enhance or detract from the deponent's credibility. For example, nervous habits such as hair-pulling, lip-biting, twitching, or making evasive glances or sounds can be extremely distracting. Bring such mannerisms to the witness's attention during preparation so that they are eliminated or reduced.

PRACTICE TIP 1: Advise the deponent to avoid excessively long pauses in responding to a question. Although long pauses are generally not reflected in a stenographically recorded deposition, such pauses in a video deposition may reflect adversely on the deponent's testimony.

PRACTICE TIP 2: Remind the witness not to slouch, to speak clearly and evenly, to look directly at the examining attorney rather than at the camera, and to dress in a neat, conservative manner in the dark, solid colors and blue tones that appear best on television.

PRACTICE TIP 3: Foresee and prevent distractions that would not be on the record in a stenographically recorded deposition, e.g., smoking, telephone calls, or other interruptions.

PRACTICE TIP 4: If a deposition will be taken at an expert's place of business, the setting should be organized and "under control," reflecting the authority and standing of the expert as a professional.

© The Regents of the University of California

G. Procedural requirements

§12.23 1. Identification

The deposition should begin with an oral recorded statement or an on-camera statement written on a sign or poster, including the following (CCP §2025.340(h)):

- The audio or video operator's name and business address;
- The name and business address of the operator's employer;
- The date, time, and location of the deposition;
- The case caption;
- The deponent's name;
- The party's name on whose behalf the deposition is being taken; and
- Any stipulations entered into by the parties.

Counsel for the parties must also identify themselves on the audio recording or on camera. CCP §2025.340(i). The deponent's oath must be administered on the audio recording or on camera. CCP §2025.340(j).

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.24 2. Stipulations

Attempt to secure any stipulations well enough before the deposition to allow time to prepare a concise, plainly worded statement that will be easily grasped by a jury.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.25 3. Objections

If possible, reach an agreement with opposing counsel that all objections, except for the form of the question or responsiveness, be reserved until trial. This agreement will simplify editing and presentation.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.26 4. Authentication or foundation

Attempt to group questions on the authentication or foundation of documents at the end of the examination. This step will facilitate deletion of these critical, but probably uninteresting points if the parties are able to stipulate to them at trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.27 5. Statement of conclusion

At the conclusion of the deposition, a statement must be made on the audio recording or on camera that the deposition has ended. CCP §2025.340(l). This statement must include (CCP §2025.340(l)):

- Any stipulations of the parties regarding the custody of the audio or video recording and exhibits; and
- Any other stipulations concerning other matters that may have arisen.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.28 6. If more than one unit of electronic storage necessary

If the length of the deposition requires more than one unit of electronic storage, the end of the first unit and the beginning and end of all subsequent units must be announced on the audio recording or on camera. CCP §2025.340(k).

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.29 H. Corrections and changes

If there is no stenographic transcription of the deposition, the deposition officer must send written notice to the deponent and all parties attending the deposition that the recording is available for review unless the deponent and all the parties have waived on the record the right to review or hear the recording. CCP §2025.530(a). Within 30 days after written notice, the deponent (either in person or by a signed letter to the deposition officer) may change the substance of the testimony. CCP §2025.530(b).

The deposition officer must set forth any of the deponent's changes in a writing to accompany the recording, together with either (CCP §2025.530(c)):

- The deponent's signature identifying the deposition as his or her own; or
- A statement of the deponent's failure to supply such signature or to contact the office within the allotted period.

The deposition officer in the writing also must certify "that the deponent was duly sworn and that the … recording is a true record of the testimony given." CCP §2025.540(a). The original audio or video recording may not be altered, edited, or changed in anyway. See CCP §2025.340(m).

If, within the allotted time, the deponent fails to contact the deposition officer or the deponent expressly refuses to identify the deposition, the deposition has the same force and effect as though it had been signed (unless it is suppressed). CCP §2025.530(d)-(e).

Further research: On motions to suppress, see CCP §2025.530(e)-(f).

§12.30 I. Custody of recording

An audio or video deposition, including a certified recording made by an operator qualified under CCP §2025.340(b), is not filed with the court. CCP §2025.560(a). Rather, the operator must retain custody of the recording, unless the parties agree otherwise, and store the recording "under conditions that will protect it against loss, destruction, or tampering, and preserve as far as practicable the quality of the recording and the integrity of the testimony and images it contains." CCP §2025.560(a). See CCP §2025.340(l). See also CCP §2025.560(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.31 J. May review recording

Any party (including one not attending the deposition), or the deponent, may hear the audio or view the video by making a request to the operator and paying a reasonable charge for providing facilities for its hearing or viewing. CCP §2025.560(b).

At the request of any other party to the action (including one who did not attend the deposition), the party who caused an audio or video recording of a deposition must promptly (CCP §2025.510(f)):

- Permit the other party to hear the audio or view the video; and
- Furnish a copy of the audio or video recording to the other party on receipt of payment of the reasonable cost of making the copy.

NOTE: There is no mention in CCP §2025.510(f) about paying a reasonable charge for providing facilities for hearing or viewing the audio or video recording as there is in CCP §2025.560(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

IV. USING DEPOSITIONS AT TRIAL

§12.32 A. Use at trial in general

A deposition can be used at trial against any party (CCP §2025.620):

- Who had due notice of the deposition and did not serve a valid objection under CCP §2025.410(a); or
- Who attended the deposition personally or through an attorney.

Deposition testimony is generally subject to the same limitations and objections as the deponent would be subject to if testifying at trial. Evid C §1291(b). An objection cannot be raised, however, if it is (Evid C §1291(b)):

- Related to the form of the question and was not made during the deposition; or
- Based on competency or privilege that did not exist when the deposition was taken.

Further research: See §12.135 for a checklist for using deposition testimony. On testifying on direct examination, see §§11.47-11.81.

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Procedures that affect use at trial

§12.33 1. Improper notice

Notices of deposition must be given to each party who has appeared in the action. CCP §2025.240(a). A deposition may not be used at trial against a party who was not given due notice of the taking of the deposition and who was neither present nor represented at the deposition. CCP §2025.620. See, e.g., N.N.V. v American Ass'n of Blood Banks (1999) 75 CA4th 1358, 1395, 89 CR2d 885.

PRACTICE TIP: Make certain at the deposition that all parties (i.e., those in attendance as well those who are not in attendance and should be there) are identified on the record. It is a good idea to attach copies of the notice with proof of service on all parties to the transcript as an exhibit.

The video deposition of a treating or consulting physician or of any expert witness may be used at a hearing or trial if the deponent is available to testify under CCP §2025.220 only if the notice of deposition reserved the right to use the deposition at trial and the party complies with CCP §2025.340(m). CCP §2025.620(d). See §§12.16-12.17.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.34 2. Effect of stipulations

Stipulations made at a deposition can affect the handling of the transcript and its use at trial. Before entering into any stipulations at a deposition, consider whether a stipulation at the time of the deposition (e.g., a stipulation to certain facts) may later affect what must be proven at trial and how deposition testimony is used at trial. See §12.3.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.35 3. Effect of objections

A party waives the right to object at trial by failing to raise timely, specific objections at a deposition to (CCP §2025.460(a)-(b)):

- Questions calling for privileged information or work product; or
- Errors or irregularities that might have been cured if promptly presented (e.g., questions relating to the manner of taking the deposition; the oath or affirmation administered; the conduct of a party, attorney, deponent, or deposition officer; or the form of any question or answer).

Objections to the competency of a witness or to the relevance, competency, or materiality of testimony are not waived by failure to object at the deposition. CCP §2025.460(c).

Further research: On procedures and tactics in taking and defending depositions, see California Civil Discovery Practice, chap 6 (4th ed Cal CEB 2006). See also Handling Depositions (Cal CEB Action Guide February 2007).

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.36 C. Effect of adding or substituting parties after deposition taken

Depositions that are taken before other parties are added to the action cannot be used against them. See CCP §2025.620. However, substitution of parties (e.g., when a personal representative is substituted for a party who has died) does not affect the right to use depositions previously taken. CCP §2025.620(f). On using depositions taken in another action, see §§12.74-12.77.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.37 D. General considerations when using at trial

Two primary concerns if the jury is to hear or see deposition testimony are:

- The admissibility of the testimony (i.e., whether the desired use is objectionable under provisions of the Evidence Code or Code of Civil Procedure (see §12.2); and
- When and how to use the deposition to achieve the most favorable effect (see §§12.37-12.44).

Both admissibility and the strategy of when to introduce the testimony depend on whether the deponent is:

- An adverse party (see §§12.46, 12.54-12.57);
- A nonparty (see §§12.58-12.59); or
- Counsel's own client (see §12.45).

In general, any part or all of a deposition may be used against any party who was present or represented at the deposition or who had due notice of the deposition and did not serve a valid objection, if the testimony is admissible under the rules of evidence applied as though the deponent were present and testifying as a witness. CCP §2025.620.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.38 1. Obtaining stipulation as to admissibility

Admissibility questions and the need to lay a foundation for use of the deposition can sometimes be avoided by obtaining the agreement of all parties to a particular use of the deposition. The agreements may be written stipulations made and filed before or during trial, or may be oral stipulations made on the record.

CAUTION: A disadvantage of seeking a stipulation is that it can give advance warning to adverse counsel that there is something damaging in the deposition. If you do not want to provide opposing counsel with advance notice of how you plan to use a deposition, a stipulation is not feasible.

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Use of depositions by any party

§12.39 a. To contradict or impeach deponent

A deposition can be used to contradict or impeach the testimony of the deponent as a witness (or for any other purpose permitted by the Evidence Code). CCP §2025.620(a). See §12.137 for sample questions and answers for impeaching with deposition testimony.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.40 b. On findings of court

Any party may use the deposition of a person or organization, whether or not a party, for any purpose if the court finds that:

- The deponent resides over 150 miles from the place of trial or hearing (CCP §2025.620(c)(1); see §12.59);
- The deponent, without the deposition proponent's procurement or wrongdoing for the purpose of preventing in-court testimony, is (see §12.60):
- Precluded or exempted from testifying on the grounds of a privilege (CCP §2025.620(c)(2)(A));
- Disqualified from testifying (CCP §2025.620(c)(2)(B));
- Dead or unable to attend or testify because of physical or mental illness or infirmity (CCP §2025.620(c)(2)(C));
- Not present at the trial or hearing and the court is unable to compel the deponent's attendance (CCP §2025.620(c)(2)(D)); or
- Not present at the trial or hearing and the deposition's proponent has exercised reasonable diligence but has been unable to procure the deponent's attendance by the court's process (CCP §2025.620(c)(2)(E)); or
- Exceptional circumstances exist that make it desirable, in the interest of justice and with due regard to the importance of presenting the testimony of witnesses orally in open court, to allow the deposition to be used (CCP §2025.620(c)(3); see §12.61).

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.41 c. If treating or consulting physician or other expert witness

In addition to the general rules regarding using deposition testimony at trial (see §12.32), any party may use at trial a treating or consulting physician or other expert witness's video deposition in lieu of an appearance by the physician or other expert witness, even though the deponent is available to testify. CCP §2025.620(d). To be able to do so, however, the party must comply with CCP §2025.340(m) and the notice of deposition under CCP §2025.220 must reserve the party's right to use the video deposition at trial. CCP §2025.620(d). See §§12.78-12.88.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.42 d. May use part or all of deposition

Subject to the requirements of CCP §§2025.010-2025.260, a party may offer all or any part of a deposition into evidence. CCP §2025.620(e). If the party introduces only part of a deposition, any party may introduce any other parts relevant to the parts introduced. CCP §2025.620(e). See §12.42.

Consider whether to introduce favorable portions of a deposition when other unfavorable parts might then be introduced. This problem frequently arises when a party desires to offer into evidence part of an adverse party's deposition.

EXAMPLE: In litigation between A and B, B's deposition contains testimony favorable to A but also considerable testimony favoring B. Because B is an adverse party, A may offer portions of B's deposition into evidence (see §§12.55-12.57). If A does this, however, B can then read into evidence the portions favorable to B. If A does not read B's deposition, B cannot either, because B is available to testify (see §§12.58-12.61). Note, however, that the portions of B's deposition that are favorable to A may still come before the jury by impeachment if B's testimony on the stand is inconsistent with B's deposition testimony.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.43 e. Effect of substitution of parties

The substitution of parties does not affect the right to use depositions previously taken. CCP §2025.620(f). On use of depositions taken in another action, see CCP §2025.620(g), discussed in §§12.74-12.77.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.44 f. Using depositions in subsequent actions

All depositions taken in a former action and otherwise admissible under the Evidence Code may be used in a subsequent action as though originally taken in the subsequent action if (CCP §2025.620(g)):

- The former action was brought in any court of the United States or a state court;
- The depositions were lawfully taken and duly filed in the former action; and
- The current action involves the same subject matter and is between the same parties (or their representatives or predecessors in interest) as the former action.

NOTE: The same admissibility rules apply (e.g., hearsay is still hearsay), and if the procedures of CCP §§2025.010-2025.260 are not satisfied, the deposition is inadmissible. Gatton v A. P. Green Servs. (1998) 64 CA4th 688, 696, 75 CR2d 523; Evid C §1292.

© The Regents of the University of California

E. Determining appropriateness of offering deposition testimony into evidence

§12.45 1. For own party

Many attorneys prefer not to use a deposition as substitute testimony during presentation of their party's case (i.e., in place of oral testimony), particularly in a jury trial, because:

- Oral testimony is usually more persuasive to a jury than is deposition testimony (see Ray v Henderson (1963) 212 CA2d 192, 195, 27 CR 847); and
- A party's personality is important whenever credibility is at issue (see Allstate Ins. Co. v King (1967) 252 CA2d 698, 710, 60 CR 892).

PRACTICE TIP: Consider restricting use of a deposition as substitute testimony, if possible, to occasions when the deponent is not available to testify at trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.46 2. For adverse party

Attorneys sometimes wish to use deposition testimony rather than live testimony when an employee or agent of an adverse party has given valuable deposition testimony that may be qualified or explained at trial.

At trial, testimony of an adverse party may be read into evidence or the video shown without calling the witness, or the witness may be called to provide live testimony. Reading the deposition into evidence or showing the video testimony may be more effective than calling the witness to testify because, once called to the stand, the witness may be able to explain any conflicts in the deposition testimony. Although opposing counsel can later call the witness to explain the deposition testimony, this explanation may not be as effective as if it were given under cross-examination.

© The Regents of the University of California

F. Offering deposition testimony into evidence

§12.47 1. Necessity for offer

When to offer deposition testimony into evidence is primarily a matter of trial strategy. The only requirement is that the testimony be offered before the parties have finally rested. The court may properly refuse to receive deposition testimony in evidence when it is offered after the close of evidence (see Gillett v Gillett (1959) 168 CA2d 102, 335 P2d 736) or during closing argument (see Stafford-Lewis v Wain (1954) 128 CA2d 614, 276 P2d 157).

Before deposition testimony can be considered as substantive evidence at trial, it must be offered and received in evidence. Ponce v Black (1964) 224 CA2d 159, 36 CR 419; Corbett v Otts (1962) 205 CA2d 78, 86, 22 CR 849. If deposition testimony is not offered into evidence, an appellate court can disregard a claim of error in its exclusion. See Corbett v Otts, supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Reading deposition into evidence

§12.48 a. Consider timing

Stenographically recorded depositions are presented to the jury by reading them into evidence. See 3 Witkin, California Evidence, Presentation at Trial §158 (4th ed 2000). Reading a deposition into evidence rarely holds juror interest as well as testimony from a live witness.

When deposition testimony will be read as part of a party's case, most attorneys prefer to:

- Open and close the case with live witnesses;
- Offer deposition evidence immediately before or after the testimony to which it relates;
- Offer deposition testimony immediately before the receipt of evidence for which it provides a foundation; or
- Offer the deposition testimony during a lull in the case or when the next witness has not arrived in the courtroom.

Some judges prefer that all reading of depositions be postponed until the end of the party's case or even the end of trial.

PRACTICE TIP: Resist this procedure because it may interfere with the orderly presentation of evidence and the jury's understanding of the case. Because listening to deposition testimony can be tedious, intersperse its introduction with oral testimony, if possible, to sustain the jurors' attention. If opposing such a procedure, argue that the jury's understanding of the case will be aided by introduction of deposition evidence at appropriate points throughout the trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.49 b. Manner of reading

So that the testimony is clear to the jury, when reading a deposition, use appropriate vocal inflections to separate questions from answers. Take advantage of the opportunity to stress important portions of the testimony, but read the testimony in a manner that is fair and accurate.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.50 c. If lengthy passages involved

When lengthy passages or an entire deposition will be read to the jury, various techniques may be employed to try and maintain the jury's interest. Subject to the court's approval, many attorneys put a "reader" on the stand to read the deponent's answers while counsel reads the questions.

PRACTICE TIP: An associate of counsel can serve in this capacity, but offers by opposing counsel to assist should usually be refused as it may confuse the jury or detract from the impact of the testimony.

One way to neutralize the jurors' natural preference for oral testimony is by using video depositions. Consider this procedure whenever it is anticipated that a favorable witness to the case may not be able to testify at trial. On video depositions generally, see §§12.16-12.31, 12.78-12.88.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.51 3. Consider exchanging lists of testimony to be offered

Before offering deposition testimony into evidence (except during cross-examination), the proponent should advise opposing counsel outside the presence of the jury of those portions of the deposition, by page and line number, that the proponent intends to read into evidence. Some attorneys prepare a list of questions and answers, noting page and line references, and submit it to the court and opposing counsel.

PRACTICE TIP: If you are not given such a list by opposing counsel, request the court (e.g., during a chambers conference before commencement of trial) to require that such a list be given so that there will be adequate time to reflect on objections and to consider other portions that you might need to introduce.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.52 4. Request hearing outside jurors' presence

If opposing counsel objects to any of the testimony proposed on lists exchanged, request a hearing with the judge outside the presence of the jurors so that the judge can rule on the objections. See Evid C §402. This procedure enables counsel to know what portions of the deposition can be read or used during the trial without interruption for objections, rulings, or recesses for foundational hearings. The jury can then concentrate on the deposition testimony without being distracted by objections and arguments on admissibility.

PRACTICE TIP: Check applicable local rules or policies (e.g., rulings on objections) before offering deposition testimony into evidence.

Further research: On special requirements for audio or video depositions, see CCP §2025.340(b), CCP §2025.620(d), discussed in §§12.16-12.31, 12.78-12.88.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.53 5. Request that judge explain depositions

Ask the trial judge to instruct the jury on the nature of a deposition, i.e., that the deposition testimony was given under oath, and that the testimony should be considered as if it had been given in court. Without such an instruction from the judge, the jurors may give less weight to the deposition testimony than they would otherwise.

Even when a judge explains the nature of depositions to the jury at the outset of the trial, consider asking the judge to repeat the explanation before the deposition is used.

NOTE: A deposition cannot be taken into the jury room. CCP §612.

Further research: See chap 17 regarding jury management, and chap 21 regarding jury deliberations.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.54 G. Offering deposition testimony of adverse party

A deposition can be used at trial by an adverse party against any party to the action or anyone who, at the time of taking the deposition, was an officer, a director, a managing agent, an employee, an agent, or a designee (see CCP §§2025.220, 2025.230) of a party. CCP §2025.620(a), (b). The deposition may be used even though the deponent is available to testify, has testified, or will testify at the trial or hearing. CCP §2025.620(b). See generally 3 Witkin, California Evidence, Presentation at Trial §153 (4th ed 2000).

Deposition testimony of an adverse party may be used as substantive evidence as well as to contradict or impeach. CCP §2025.620(b); Alvarez v Felker Mfg. Co. (1964) 230 CA2d 987, 41 CR 514 (decided under former CCP §2016(d)(2)). It may establish any material fact or a prima facie case or may even prove counsel's whole case. CCP §2025.620(b); Mayhood v La Rosa (1962) 58 C2d 498, 24 CR 837 (decided under former CCP §2016(d)(2)). Such a deposition may be used even though the deponent is present and able to testify at trial. CCP §2025.620(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.55 1. Determining who is adverse party

In determining who is an adverse party under CCP §2025.620(b), courts are guided by particular issues and practical considerations rather than by the caption or pleadings. Parties may be adverse to each other on an issue even though one has not filed suit against the other. See Mahoney v Founders' Ins. Co. (1961) 190 CA2d 430, 12 CR 114 (decided under former CCP §2016(d)(2)).

Even though one party has cross-complained against another, the parties are not necessarily adverse on all issues.

EXAMPLE: Two defendants in a personal injury action each allege that the other is responsible for the accident that caused the plaintiff's injuries, but the deposition testimony of an employee of one defendant might establish that the plaintiff was at fault. Because one defendant's employee is not "adverse" to the codefendant on the issue of the plaintiff's negligence, it is improper to allow the codefendant to introduce the deposition of the employee as substantive evidence to establish the plaintiff's comparative negligence.

Whether an employee of a party is adverse also depends on the relationship at the time the deposition is taken. A person whose deposition was taken while employed by an adverse party is considered to be an adverse party, even if no longer employed by that party at the time of trial. See CCP §2025.620(b); 3 Witkin, California Evidence, Presentation at Trial §205 (4th ed 2000). Conversely, an employee who is discharged after the occurrence of the event giving rise to the litigation but before being deposed is not considered to be an adverse party. See Vivion v National Cash Register Co. (1962) 200 CA2d 597, 19 CR 602.

PRACTICE TIP: You need to decide whether to introduce deposition testimony of an adverse party during cross-examination, if the opportunity arises, or during the presentation of the party's case. The attention level of the jury is usually higher during cross-examination than it is while a deposition is being read aloud during the presentation of a party's case. A witness under cross-examination, however, may be prepared to explain or contradict statements in a deposition or explain away inconsistencies between deposition and trial testimony. While presenting the client's case, if you read portions of a deposition into evidence while the deponent is not on the stand, the adverse party must either ignore the evidence or call the deponent to the stand to explain it, giving you another opportunity to emphasize the statements during cross-examination.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.56 2. Using deposition testimony during cross-examination

During cross-examination, an attorney may be able to introduce additional testimony from an adverse party's deposition favorable to the position of counsel's client, that was not brought out on direct examination of the adverse party. Similarly, an attorney may confront an adverse party on cross-examination with statements in the party's deposition that are inconsistent with the party's trial testimony.

Relatively minor inconsistencies on peripheral matters may have a cumulative effect, causing jurors to lose confidence in the veracity of the witness. Even when the primary purpose is to introduce the deposition statements as evidence of the matters stated rather than to impeach the accuracy or truthfulness of the party's trial testimony, bringing the statements out during cross-examination highlights them for the trier of fact.

PRACTICE TIP: If you do not want to confront the adverse party with the party's deposition testimony during cross-examination, you may ask the party to acknowledge:

- Attendance at the deposition;
- Giving testimony under oath;
- Receiving notice that the transcript had been prepared; and
- Having 30 days to correct, sign, or reject it and either did or did not do so.

If the adverse party refuses to acknowledge these steps, show the witness the letter sent by the deposition officer, or call the officer as a witness.

NOTE: Jurors hearing testimony about the taking of the deposition and the deponent's opportunity to correct it may give the inconsistent statements in the deposition greater weight than if the statements were merely read.

When using deposition testimony to impeach a witness during cross-examination, be sure to phrase the questions to track the deposition transcript. Any deviation from the language of the deposition questions will give the witness an out and create an impression with the jury that counsel is trying to trick the witness. The question and answer given at the deposition must be readily available, without having to rummage through the transcript. When receiving an inconsistent answer from the witness, counsel should immediately state, "I wish to read from the witness's deposition, from page x, line x, to page y, line x." After pausing briefly to permit opposing counsel to locate the appropriate page, counsel should simply read the impeaching information. If there was a closing question on each area of examination at the deposition (e.g., "Have you told me everything that was said at the meeting?"), then counsel will be able to counter any attempt by the witness to spring new testimony to explain the inconsistency at trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.57 3. Using deposition testimony during presentation of client's case

During the presentation of a client's case, it may be advisable to offer to read (or play, if audio or video recorded) pertinent portions of an adverse party's deposition into evidence as substantive evidence of the matter stated or to contradict or impeach previous testimony given at trial by the adverse party.

Consider the use of an adverse party's deposition in connection with calling the adverse party under Evid C §776. Note that under §776, a party may call and question an adverse party without being bound by the adverse party's testimony. See Gerhard v Stephens (1968) 68 C2d 864, 910, 69 CR 612. See also Evid C §785 ("credibility of a witness may be attacked or supported by any party, including the party calling the witness"); 3 Witkin, California Evidence, Presentation at Trial §§202, 356 (4th ed 2000).

PRACTICE TIP: Often, the most effective time to read or play portions of an adverse party's deposition is at or near the time other evidence of the matters covered by the deposition has been presented or immediately following presentation of the adverse party's trial testimony. It is sometimes better to open some cases, however, by reading or playing portions of the adverse party's deposition that support elements of the attorney's case, or that damage the opponent's case.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.58 H. Using deposition as substitute for trial testimony

Generally, it is a good idea to present a client's case through the live testimony of witnesses present at trial. In certain situations, however, the appearance of live witnesses may not be possible or tactically wise. See §§12.45-12.46.

If the foundational requirements are established, read, or played during the presentation of the case, a nonparty witness's deposition is admissible under the rules of evidence. See CCP §2025.620. On the possibility of obtaining a stipulation to obviate the need to show the foundational requirements of CCP §2025.620(c), see §12.38.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.59 1. If witness lives more than 150 miles from place of trial

A nonparty witness's deposition testimony may be used as substitute testimony during the presentation of the party's case at the trial or other hearing if the 150-mile residency requirement is satisfied. To take advantage of CCP §2025(u)(3)(A), submit proof that the deponent resides more than 150 miles from the place of trial or hearing.

Proof of the deponent's place of residence may be established either by the testimony of a witness who has personal knowledge of the deponent's place of residence or by stipulation. Once such residence is established, counsel need not show that the witness is either unavailable under Evid C §240 or that other exceptional circumstances exist.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.60 2. If witness unavailable

Inability to attend because of illness (see CCP §2025.620(c)(2)(C)); Evid C §240(a)(3)) can be established through the testimony (or perhaps the affidavit, declaration, or other statement) of an attending or another physician. See Marriage of Higgason (1973) 10 C3d 476, 482 n2, 110 CR 897, disapproved on other grounds in Marriage of Dawley (1976) 17 C3d 342, 352, 131 CR 3.

A certified copy of a death certificate, or testimony by a witness with personal knowledge of the deponent's illness or death is sufficient. Statements by the deponent in the deposition about the deponent's physical condition are not sufficient. See Sanchez v Bagues & Sons Mortuaries (1969) 271 CA2d 188, 193, 76 CR 372.

Proof that the witness is beyond the subpoena power of the court (see CCP §2025.620(c)(2)(D); Evid C §240(a)(4)), or that the proponent exercised reasonable diligence but was unable to procure the witness's attendance by court process (see CCP §2025.620(c)(2)(E); Evid C §240(a)(5)), can be made either by testimony of a witness who has personal knowledge that the witness is absent from the jurisdiction, or by testimony of a process server who tried unsuccessfully to locate the witness.

Proof that the proponent was unable to procure the witness's attendance should include a showing of reasonable diligence in attempting to do so. See CCP §2025.620(c)(2)(E); Evid C §240(a)(5). See Nizinski v State Bar (1975) 14 C3d 587, 590, 121 CR 824 (deponent unavailable under Evid C §240(a)(4); parties apparently conceded that deponent was in prison located beyond court's subpoena power); Cseri v D'Amore (1965) 232 CA2d 622, 625, 43 CR 36 (defendant learned at trial that absent codefendant had settled with plaintiff; facts concerning unsuccessful efforts to subpoena were "stated to the court" and not controverted). See also Topanga Corp. v Gentile (1967) 249 CA2d 681, 690, 58 CR 713 (decided under former CCP §2016(d)(3)). For discussion of a client's unavailability, see §12.69.

§12.61 3. If exceptional circumstances

Counsel who wants to read into evidence portions of a deposition of a witness who resides within 150 miles of court (see §12.59) and who does not come within the meaning of an unavailable witness under CCP §2025.620(c)(2) (see §12.60) may ask the judge to permit the deposition to be read on the ground that "exceptional circumstances" make it desirable, in the interests of justice, to do so. See CCP §2025.620(c)(3). See also Jordan v Warnke (1962) 205 CA2d 621, 630, 23 CR 300 (decided under former CCP §2016(d)(3); defendant offered deposition, taken by plaintiffs, of defendant's former attorney who defense counsel said was in trial in another city; plaintiff made no effort to subpoena him; admission of deposition was within court's discretion).

A formal application or giving notice is not required before requesting admission of testimony for exceptional circumstances under CCP §2025.620(c)(3).

PRACTICE TIP: It is best to move for the admission of deposition testimony as soon as possible after learning of the facts giving rise to exceptional circumstances. Any delay will make it more difficult to persuade a court that use of the testimony is necessary "in the interests of justice." See CCP §2025.620(c)(3). If the ruling is not in your favor, you will have time to find alternative evidence or adduce additional evidence of the witness's unavailability or the exceptional circumstances.

§12.62 I. Using deposition to refresh memory

The memory of any witness (whether or not a party to the action) can be refreshed by using a deposition transcript while the witness is on the stand. For example, a witness who was asked on direct examination, "What color was the car?" and answered, "I don't remember," can then be asked to read a specified portion of the deposition and then answer the question again. Counsel might proceed as follows:

> Q: Do you remember going with me to Jon Foster's office on September 16, 2009, and giving a deposition under oath?
>
> A: Yes.
> Q: Were the details of the accident fresher in your mind then than they are now?
>
> A: Yes.
> Examiner: Your Honor, with your permission, I would like to show the witness this copy of the deposition that he gave on September 16, 2009.
> Q: Mr. Sanderson, please read to yourself lines 4 through 11 on page 27 of your deposition. Now, does that refresh your memory about the color of the car that hit you?
>
> A: Yes.
> Q: What color was it?
> A: Red.

Alternatively, consider proceeding with direct examination and request a recess at an appropriate point. During the recess, show the deposition to the witness. If the witness's recollection is refreshed, elicit the facts on direct examination after the recess. With this approach, consider eliciting from the witness that the witness's recollection was refreshed by looking at the deposition. This type of testimony will contradict any impression that counsel told the witness the correct answer.

NOTE: Any deposition, not just that given by the witness, can be used to refresh the witness's recollection.

A more difficult problem is presented when a favorable witness called by the party testifies at trial in a manner that is inconsistent with that witness's deposition testimony. At that time, counsel may elect to impeach the witness by using the deposition to establish a prior inconsistent statement. See Evid C §§780(h), 785.

PRACTICE TIP: Avoid emphasizing the impeaching material, as well as possibly destroying the ability to effectively rehabilitate the witness, by requesting a recess before direct examination has been concluded. Use the deposition to refresh the witness's memory during the recess. The witness can then return to the stand, retract the erroneous testimony, and explain why it was originally given. If you use this approach, consider eliciting from the witness that the witness's recollection was refreshed by looking at the deposition to avoid any impression that you told the witness the correct answer.

Further research: On refreshing a witness's recollection generally, and on right of adverse party to inspect, cross-examine, and introduce into evidence pertinent portions of writing used to refresh recollection, see §§11.63-11.68.

§12.63 J. Using deposition to impeach by showing prior inconsistent statement

A deposition of a witness, whether or not the witness is a party to the action, can be used for impeachment (i.e., to attack the witness's credibility) by showing that the testimony on the stand is not consistent with the deposition testimony or "for any other purpose permitted by the Evidence Code." CCP §2025.620(a). The quoted language is meant to permit the deposition to be used to show both prior inconsistent statements (Evid C §1235) and prior consistent statements (Evid C §1236).

The witness's credibility can be attacked by any party, including the party calling the witness. Evid C §785. During examination, the witness need not be shown the deposition (see Evid C §768(a)) or be given any information concerning it (see Evid C §769). To prove inconsistent statements during the presentation of the case, rather than eliciting them during cross-examination of the witness, request the judge to instruct the witness before he or she leaves the stand that the witness is not excused from giving further testimony in the action and must remain available for recall to testify later.

Extrinsic evidence of prior inconsistent statements is inadmissible unless (Evid C §770):

- The witness while testifying was so examined "as to give him an opportunity to explain or deny the statement";
- The witness has not been excused from giving further testimony in the action; or
- The interests of justice otherwise require the statements to be admitted.

Some judges refuse to permit the reading of deposition testimony to the jury as a prior inconsistent statement unless he or she is first convinced that there is a true contradiction between the trial testimony and the deposition testimony. In this determination, "inconsistency in effect rather than contradiction in express terms is the test." 3 Witkin, California Evidence, Presentation at Trial §328 (4th ed 2000). Some judges first review the deposition testimony to see whether it is inconsistent before allowing it to be read to the jury. Others believe that inconsistency is a matter for the jury to decide and allow the deposition to be read without prior review.

PRACTICE TIP: Exercise care in objecting in front of the jury that deposition testimony is not inconsistent. If the court overrules the objection, it will emphasize to the jury that the deposition testimony contradicts the trial testimony just given by the witness.

NOTE: Evidence Code §1235 creates an exception to the hearsay rule for prior inconsistent statements that are offered in compliance with Evid C §770.

Further research: For an example of a technique for impeachment by use of prior inconsistent statements during cross-examination, see §§12.64-12.66. On methods of impeachment by use of prior inconsistent statements generally, see §§11.118-11.124. On use of video deposition containing a prior inconsistent statement, see §12.88. On the use of deposition testimony to show prior consistent statements to rehabilitate a witness's credibility, see §12.67. See §12.137 for sample questions and answers for impeaching with deposition testimony.

§12.64 1. Pinning down trial testimony

To highlight an inconsistency in deposition testimony, pin the witness down to a definite statement that contradicts the deposition on cross-examination. The danger in doing this, however, is that the witness may recall the deposition statement and tailor testimony to lessen the appearance of inconsistency.

EXAMPLE: A witness to an automobile accident testifies on direct examination that both drivers appeared normal after the accident. The witness had previously testified during the deposition that one of them "looked drunk." The cross-examiner might proceed as follows:

Q: Sir, you testified on direct examination that you saw Mr. Takamichi at the scene of the accident and that he appeared normal. Is that right?

A: Yes.

Q: By normal, did you mean that he did not appear to be intoxicated?

A: Yes.

Q: So your present recollection is that Mr. Takamichi appeared not to be intoxicated at the scene of the accident. Is that correct?

A: Yes.

Q: And is that your testimony?

A: Yes.

Now that the witness has been pinned down, the cross-examiner can proceed to establish the inconsistency.

PRACTICE TIP: After the witness is committed to an inconsistency, consider whether to first ask a series of questions concerning the time, place, and circumstances of taking the deposition or whether to impeach the witness immediately. See §§12.63-12.66). Some attorneys prefer not to interrupt the flow of cross-examination; they first impeach the witness and then ask questions concerning the time, place, and circumstances of taking the deposition. Other attorneys believe that jurors will give more weight to the impeachment if they are first made aware of the circumstances surrounding the deposition.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.65 2. Using foundational questions

Although there is no requirement to do so before confronting a witness with a prior inconsistent statement, many attorneys on cross-examination prefer to lay a foundation by asking the witness questions relating to the time, place, and circumstances of taking the deposition.

PRACTICE TIP: After the witness has been committed to the inconsistency, you may wish to ask a series of questions concerning the deposition which you believe the witness must answer affirmatively.

Q: Sir, was your deposition taken in this case on June 17, 2009, at my office?

A: Yes.

Q: Were you represented by counsel at that deposition?

A: Yes.

Q: Was your testimony given under oath at that deposition?

A: Yes.

Q: And did I inform you that if you did not understand the question to let me know and I would rephrase it?

A: Yes.

Q: And did I advise you that any inconsistency between your deposition testimony and your testimony at trial could be brought to the attention of the jury?

A: I believe you did. Yes.

If the witness made corrections in his or her deposition transcript or if he or she has signed it, counsel might continue:

Q: Did you later read the transcript of your testimony?

A: Yes.

Q: Did you make any corrections in your testimony?

A: Yes.

Q: Did you sign your deposition transcript?

A: Yes.

The object of this approach is to impress the jury with the seriousness and importance of the deposition testimony and to demonstrate that the deposition testimony was more likely the accurate testimony later changed in anticipation of trial.

PRACTICE TIP: Before a deposition is taken, instruct the deponent to ask the examiner to rephrase questions that the deponent does not understand, because inconsistencies between deposition testimony and trial testimony may be brought out at trial. This type of instruction will ensure that the deponent understands what is being asked during the deposition (see California Civil Discovery Practice §§5.32-5.33 (3d ed Cal CEB 1998)) and will respond in the affirmative at trial to the types of questions asked above. If the deponent does not remember the admonitions made by counsel during the deposition, read the relevant portions of the deposition to the jury.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.66 3. Confronting witness with inconsistency

After the witness has been committed to the inconsistency (see §12.64), confront the witness with the inconsistency, thereby conveying it to the jury. Some attorneys like to confront the witness with an inconsistent deposition statement by first showing the witness the transcript and then reading from it:

> Q: I show you the original transcript of your deposition. [If signed, ask whether it is the witness's signature.] Will you now please read to yourself lines 6 through 9 on page 12? [Hands deposition to witness.] Were you asked "How did Ms. Kraus appear to you at the scene of the accident?"
>
> A: Yes.
> Q: And did you answer: "Well, she looked drunk to me."
> A: Yes.

In examining a witness about a prior inconsistent statement made in the deposition, counsel need not show the deposition transcript to the witness (Evid C §768(a)) or give any information concerning the statement to the witness (Evid C §769). It is permissible under Evid C §§768-769 to simply ask the witness whether a specific statement was made at the deposition (without referring to the specific page and line number of the transcript). The impeaching testimony can then be read directly without asking the witness whether he or she so testified. For example, the cross-examiner might confront the witness with the inconsistent deposition statement as follows:

> Q: You stated under oath before this trial that Ms. Kraus looked drunk. Is that right?
> A: I did not.
> Q: I will read to you from the transcript of your testimony in your deposition at page 12, lines 6 through 9. Question: "How did Ms. Kraus appear to you at the scene of the accident?" Answer: "Well, she looked drunk to me." That was your testimony at your deposition. Is that correct?
> A: Yes, it was.

The witness may answer that he or she does not remember giving that testimony, that he or she did not give that testimony, or that the answers must have been inaccurately reported. One way to counter such an explanation is to establish that the witness signed or corrected the deposition transcript.

If the deposition was not corrected or signed, or the witness contends either that the witness overlooked that particular response when signing the deposition, or that the deposition testimony was inaccurately reported, it may be necessary to call the deposition reporter as a witness to testify (e.g., to the steps taken and the accuracy of the transcript). If the witness is expected to disavow the deposition transcript at trial, the deposition reporter should be readily available to testify. Alternatively, because the judge has explained the deposition process to the jury and the jury will understand that counsel is reading testimony previously given by the witness, to avoid giving the witness a chance to disavow or explain prior testimony, simply read the transcript and then proceed with cross-examination.

If the witness denies reading and correcting the deposition shortly after it was taken, ask whether the witness has read the deposition in preparation for the trial. Almost all witnesses will testify that they read the deposition in preparation for trial. The witness then must say that the witness:

- Overlooked the error (implying that it is actually not an error);
- Recognized it but did not call it to anyone's attention (implying either that it is not an error or that the witness intentionally wanted to hide it); or
- Called it to the attention of opposing counsel, who failed to notify other parties or the court.

Some counsel ask the deponent whether "your memory of events at the time your deposition was taken is better then it is now?" Any answer to this question will usually help. If the witness says yes, it strengthens the credibility of the deposition testimony. If the witness says no, it sounds illogical, unreasonable, and therefore untruthful. Other counsel, however, believe that a witness appearing to have a better memory at trial is normal, because the process of preparing for trial often substantially refreshes the witness's recollection.

K. Using deposition testimony to rehabilitate

§12.67 1. By showing prior consistent statement

Deposition testimony of a witness, whether or not a party to the action, can be used to rehabilitate the witness's credibility by showing a previous statement consistent with the witness's trial testimony if:

- Evidence of a prior inconsistent statement was admitted to attack the witness's credibility (e.g., during cross-examination), and the prior consistent statement in the witness's deposition was made before the alleged inconsistent statement (see Evid C §791(a)); or
- There was an express or implied charge that the witness's trial testimony is a recent fabrication or is influenced by bias, or other improper motive, and the prior consistent statement was made before the improper motive allegedly arose (see Evid C §791(b)).

Evidence Code §1236 creates an exception to the hearsay rule for prior consistent statements that are offered in compliance with Evid C §791.

Counsel might attempt to rehabilitate a witness during redirect examination in the following manner:

Q: Mr. Taylor, when I was questioning you earlier, did you testify that the car was blue?

A: Yes.

Q: And then when Mr. Frankenheimer was cross-examining you, you said that on about October 22, 2009, you had told Ms. Wambaugh, an investigator, that you were uncertain about the color of the car. Is that correct?

A: Yes.

Q: Mr. Taylor, do you recall coming to my office some time ago and having your deposition taken?

A: Yes.

Q: Did you make your statement to Ms. Wambaugh before or after you had given that deposition testimony?

A: After.

Q: About how long after?

A: Several months.

Examiner: Your Honor, at this time I would like the witness to read lines 3 through 5 on page 65 of the transcript of his deposition that was taken on February 3, 2009.

Witness: [Reading from deposition] Question: "What color was the car?" Answer: "The car was blue."

Q: Was that your testimony at that time?

A: Yes, it was.

Q: Mr. Taylor, can you tell the jury why you said something different to Ms. Wambaugh when you spoke with her?

A: [Witness states reasons.]

The last question in this dialogue should be asked only by an attorney who is confident that the witness's answer will add to the witness's credibility.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.68 2. By additional deposition testimony

When a party introduces a portion of a deposition, any other party may introduce additional portions. CCP §2025.620(e). See §12.42. Thus, when a witness is impeached on cross-examination by reading a portion of the deposition testimony to the jury to show the prior inconsistent statement (see §§12.63-12.66), the party calling the witness may then read other portions of that witness's deposition in an effort to rehabilitate.

Depending on the circumstances, many judges prefer that the rehabilitating testimony not be read until after cross-examination has been concluded (i.e., not until redirect examination). However, when the cross-examiner has impeached the witness by reading a portion of the witness's deposition taken out of context, the effect of the rehabilitating testimony on the jury may be lost if delayed. In this situation, counsel who called the witness should usually object and request permission to read the rehabilitating testimony immediately, so that the jury is not misled:

> Q: Mr. Chun, you testified on direct examination that you had a series of meetings with my client in March 2009, relating to the contract at issue in this suit. Is that correct?
> A: That is correct.
> Q: You testified in your deposition that you never even met my client until June 2009, two months after the alleged meetings about the contract. Is that correct?
> A: I don't remember that, sir.
> Q: I refer you to page 32, line 16, of your deposition, where you make the statement that you first met my client in June 2009. That was your testimony. Is that correct?
> Opposing counsel: Objection, Your Honor. If counsel will refer to line 2 of the following page, she will see that Mr. Chun corrected his testimony and said that he first met counsel's client in June 2008 instead of June 2009.
> Cross-examiner: Your Honor, opposing counsel will have the opportunity to rehabilitate his witness when my cross-examination has been completed.
> Opposing counsel: Your Honor, the rehabilitation will be too late by that time to be effective, and the jury may be misled. In fairness to Mr. Chun, I believe counsel should read to the jury the deposition testimony on the following page, where Mr. Chun corrected his answer.
> The Court: Counsel, I believe that in fairness to the witness you should read the testimony on the following page, because Mr. Chun corrected himself about the year of the first meeting.

When a witness's deposition contains impeaching testimony and does not contain any rehabilitating testimony that explains it, the witness should be prepared to explain in a forthright manner why the inconsistency exists between the deposition and trial testimony. For example, the witness may be able to say truthfully that the witness misunderstood the question, or did not realize that the answer was incorrect until going over the deposition while preparing to testify at trial. An explanation by the witness that the witness did not understand the deposition question may be ineffective if the witness was asked at the beginning of the deposition to make certain that the witness understood each question before answering.

To elicit why the witness's deposition testimony is inconsistent with the witness's trial testimony, counsel might proceed as follows:

> Q: Ms. Wright, I asked you during direct examination how far away from the intersection Mr. Stone's car was when you first observed it, and your answer was 175 feet. Is that correct?
> A: That's correct, sir.
> Q: You testified in your deposition, which was read to the jury, that you didn't remember how far the car was from the intersection. You thought it might have been 40 or 50 feet when you first saw it. Do you remember that?
> A: Yes, sir. I do.

Q: Can you tell us why your memory is better now than it was when your deposition was taken?

A: Yes, sir. Yesterday I walked past the intersection, which at the time my deposition was taken I hadn't seen for one year. When I was there yesterday, I remembered that the car was just approaching the entrance of the gas station when I first saw it. I paced off the distance from the intersection to the gas station's entrance, and it was 175 feet. Therefore, I believe that the car was about 175 feet away when I first saw it.

§12.69 L. Using client's deposition

In this section, the word "client" includes not only counsel's client but also those who, at the time of the taking of the deposition, were directors, officers, employees, and agents of the client (although the latter may not be parties to the action).

The client's deposition can be used by the client's attorney for substitute testimony (i.e., in place of the client's oral testimony) if a showing is made that the client resides more than 150 miles from the place of trial (see §12.59), the client is unavailable (see §12.60), or exceptional circumstances exist that, in the interest of justice, make use of the deposition desirable (see §12.61). CCP §2025.620(c)(1)-(3).

NOTE: A deponent is not considered to be unavailable under CCP §2025.620(c)(2) if the deponent's absence (or other ground constituting unavailability) was brought about by the procurement or wrongdoing of the party proposing to use the deposition for the purpose of preventing the witness's testimony in open court.

The client's deposition is seldom used as substitute testimony to establish the client's case, especially in a jury trial. Not only is the jury unable to judge the client's credibility, but the jury may draw unfavorable inferences from a client's nonappearance.

Certain circumstances may make it necessary, however, to use the client's deposition as substitute testimony, e.g., an employee witness of an entity represented by counsel has died, the client is very ill, or the poor demeanor of a client who resides more than 150 miles from the place of trial outweighs the disadvantage of the deponent being absent from the trial.

If the client resides within the 150-mile radius of the place of trial, does not meet the unavailability requirements of CCP §2025.620(c)(2) but is able to attend trial only at great hardship, counsel may wish to use the client's deposition for substitute testimony.

To justify using the deposition in lieu of in-court testimony under CCP §2025.620(c)(3), try to make a showing of exceptional circumstances. See §§12.58-12.61.

© The Regents of the University of California

M. Preserving the record

§12.70 1. Using objections

The admissibility of deposition testimony at trial is generally subject to the same rules that govern the admissibility of oral testimony. Objections may be made at trial to receiving in evidence all or part of a deposition, as would be made if the witness were present and testifying. CCP §2025.620. Unlike oral testimony elicited at trial, however, some grounds for objection to deposition testimony are waived (e.g., errors in the form of the questions or answers) and, absent a stipulation to the contrary, cannot be raised at trial unless timely objection is made at the deposition. CCP §2025.460(a)-(c). See §12.2.

An attorney may object to deposition testimony when the proponent of the testimony has not laid a sufficient foundation under CCP §2025.620 for its proposed use. Objection may be raised if the deposition is sought to be used against a party who was not present or represented at the deposition or who was given due notice and validly objected to the taking of the deposition. See §§12.37-12.44.

After the party that intends to offer the deposition into evidence has timely notified the court and all the parties to that effect, objections to all or part of the deposition must be made in writing. CCP §2025.340(m).

PRACTICE TIP: Find out whether any local court rules or policies require that objections to deposition testimony be made in writing or at any particular time (e.g., before the trial).

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.71 a. How to object

To object to deposition testimony that is offered into evidence, make a timely objection stating the specific grounds for the objection. See Evid C §353(a). A general objection is usually not sufficient to preserve the issue on appeal. See Estate of Doyle (1932) 126 CA 446, 14 P2d 909. See also §15.39. Unless objecting to the introduction of the entire deposition (e.g., on the ground that a sufficient foundation has not been laid under CCP §2025.620), object to specific questions and answers.

When objecting to portions of a deposition, obtain a ruling on the objectionable matter on the record outside the jury's presence. Unless the proponent has requested a preliminary hearing on admissibility, the objecting party might proceed as follows:

> Proponent: Your Honor, I wish to offer portions of this witness's deposition into evidence.
> Opponent: Your Honor, may we approach the bench?
> The Court: Yes.
> Opponent: [At sidebar] Your Honor, I want the questions and answers read outside the jury's presence so that I may object to certain questions and move to strike certain answers. May we adjourn to chambers?

In general, objections to deposition testimony are made in the same manner and on the same grounds as objections to oral testimony. Local rules or policies should be checked, however, for any special requirements on the time or manner for raising objections to deposition testimony. On special requirements concerning audio or video depositions, see CCP §2025.340(m), discussed in §12.22.

Further research: On objections to evidence and preserving the record generally, see chap 15. For discussion of permissible objections, see California Trial Objections (Cal CEB Annual).

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.72 b. Objecting to own deposition question

Objection should be made to a deposition question that calls for inadmissible testimony damaging to the client's case —no matter who asked the question.

The argument that an attorney cannot object at trial to a question that he or she asked, or to an answer that he or she received in deposition, overlooks the difference between interrogation at trial and the broader interrogation permitted at a deposition.

Deposition and trial practice differ in purpose, procedure, tactics, and strategy. The Discovery Act (CCP §§2016.010-2036.050) is not intended to limit obtainable information or testimony to that which is admissible at trial. See CCP §2017.010; Greyhound Corp. v Superior Court (1961) 56 C2d 355, 391, 15 CR 90 (interpreting former CCP §§2016-2035); Irvington-Moore, Inc. v Superior Court (1993) 14 CA4th 733, 18 CR2d 49.

An attorney in deposition may ask for hearsay and other inadmissible evidence if it appears reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. CCP §2017.010. Good discovery techniques also usually require that counsel elicit information unfavorable to a client. Legislative intent that discovery statutes be liberally construed (see 56 C2d at 377) would be frustrated if an attorney were prohibited from pursuing discovery questions on inadmissible matters at a deposition out of fear that the answers would be admitted against the client at trial.

Further research: On admissibility of evidence generally, see chap 10.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.73 2. When use of deposition denied

The trial judge may deny an attorney's request to read or use part of a deposition transcript. An appellate court need not consider a claim that deposition testimony was erroneously excluded unless the testimony is part of the record on appeal. See Wulferdinger v Pickwick Stages Sys. (1930) 105 CA 509, 288 P 93. Merely identifying page and line numbers of the deposition in the record is not enough. Paulin v Paulin (1940) 39 CA2d 180, 102 P2d 809.

Generally, when a party offers evidence and an objection to its introduction is sustained, an offer of proof is required to preserve the point so that the claimed error can be raised on appeal. See Evid C §354(a). See also §§15.50-15.60.

EXAMPLE 1: In Beverly Hills Nat'l Bank v Glynn (1968) 267 CA2d 859, 866 n1, 73 CR 808, a deposition was filed in the trial court but never offered or received in evidence. The court noted that a "deposition not so offered and marked for identification may not be considered on appeal."

EXAMPLE 2: In Wulferdinger v Pickwick Stages Sys., supra, a deposition was offered into evidence but rejected in the trial court. The deposition was not marked or requested to be marked for identification. The appellate court refused to direct that the deposition be certified as part of the record on appeal.

PRACTICE TIP: To protect the record when deposition testimony is offered but not received in evidence, consider doing the following:

- Request that the deposition transcript be marked for identification;
- Specify on the record the portions to be offered by page and line number;
- Read the excluded portions into the record out of the jury's presence; and
- Unless the purpose and relevance is apparent from the context, state on the record the purpose and relevance of the deposition testimony.

This procedure can be followed at the time any objection is sustained to the use of audio or video deposition testimony. In addition, a request can be made that the recorded deposition itself be marked for identification and filed with the court. On the procedure for objecting to audio or video deposition testimony generally, see §12.80.

N. Using depositions taken in another action

1. Using against party (or successor in interest) to former action

§12.74 a. When they may be used

All depositions taken in a former action that are admissible under the Evidence Code may be used in a subsequent action as though they were originally taken in the subsequent action if (CCP §2025.620(g)):

- The former action was brought in any court of the United States or a state court;
- The depositions were lawfully taken and duly filed in the former action; and
- The current action involves the same subject matter and is between the same parties (or their representatives or predecessors in interest) as the former action.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.75 b. Admission under Evidence Code

A previously taken deposition can be used "as permitted by the Evidence Code." CCP §2025.620(g). If prior deposition testimony does not meet the requirements of CCP §2025.620(g) (because, e.g., the prior deposition was not "duly filed"), attempt to admit the prior deposition testimony under Evid C §1291. Evidence Code §1291(a) creates an exception to the hearsay rule for former testimony, which includes a deposition "taken in compliance with law in another action." Evid C §1290.

Evidence of former testimony is not made inadmissible by the hearsay rule if the deponent is unavailable as a witness (Evid C §1291(a)) and if:

- The former testimony is offered against a person who offered it into evidence in his or her own behalf on the former occasion or against the successor in interest of such person; or
- The party against whom the former testimony is offered was a party to the action or proceeding in which the testimony was given, and had the right and opportunity to cross-examine the declarant with an interest and motive similar to that which he or she has at the hearing.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.76 c. Limitations and objections

When deposition testimony taken in another action is offered against a party, an objection to its admissibility may be raised if the party's interest and motive to cross-examine in that action differ from the party's interest and motive to cross-examine in the present action. According to the 1965 Cal L Rev'n Comm'n Comment to Evid C §1291:

> The determination of similarity of interest and motive in cross-examination should be based on practical considerations and not merely on the similarity of the party's position in the two cases.

EXAMPLE: In Wahlgren v Coleco Indus. (1984) 151 CA3d 543, 198 CR 715, the court excluded former deposition testimony given in an unrelated action because of the practical differences between the deposition and trial proceedings, noting that a deposition normally functions as a discovery device while trial serves to resolve liability issues. At trial, the interest and motive to cross-examine increase dramatically.

Authentication of former testimony is governed by CCP §273. Wahlgren v Coleco Indus., supra (trial court acted properly in excluding deposition testimony when plaintiff sought to introduce notarized photocopies of depositions rather than certified copies or duplicate originals).

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.77 2. Using against party who was not party to former action

"A deposition previously taken may also be used as permitted by the Evidence Code." CCP §2025.620(g). Evidence Code §1292(a) may apply in situations in which deposition testimony taken in a former action is sought to be used against a party who was not a party to the former action.

Former testimony (which includes a "deposition taken in compliance with law in another action" (see Evid C §1290(c)) is not inadmissible because of the hearsay rule if (Evid C §1292(a)):

- The declarant is unavailable as a witness (see §12.60);
- The former testimony is offered in a civil action; and
- The issue is such that the party to the action or proceeding in which the former testimony was given had the right and opportunity to cross-examine the declarant with an interest and a motive similar to that which the party against whom the testimony is offered has at the hearing.

The deposition testimony is subject generally to the same limitations and objections as though the deponent were testifying at trial, except that objections based on competence or privilege that did not exist when the deposition was taken cannot be raised. Evid C §1292(b).

Further research: For further discussion, see Comment to Evid C §1292. See also Wahlgren v Coleco Indus. (1984) 151 CA3d 543, 198 CR 715, discussed in §§12.53, 12.76.

O. Using audio or video recorded depositions

§12.78 1. When appropriate

A video deposition may be quite effective at trial because the medium conveys the deponent's appearance and demeanor as well as the spoken words, and a video will usually receive more attention from the trier of fact than the reading of a cold deposition transcript.

A video deposition may be particularly appropriate when an attorney anticipates that a favorable witness with a good appearance or a hostile witness with a poor demeanor may not be available for trial. Sections 12.15-12.21 discuss various aspects of video depositions that may affect their use or effectiveness at trial. Unless otherwise specified, the discussion also applies to audio recorded depositions.

Further research: See §12.136 for a checklist of special considerations if deposition audio or video recorded.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.79 2. Written notice of intention to offer recorded deposition into evidence required

A party intending to offer an audio or video deposition into evidence under CCP §2025.620 must notify the court and the parties in writing of that party's intent to do so, designating the proposed portions to be offered at the trial (or hearing). CCP §2025.340(m). Under CCP §2025.340(m), this written notice and designation must be made in sufficient time to allow for:

- Objections to be made and ruled on by the trial (or hearing) judge; and
- Editing of the recording, if necessary.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.80 3. Objections must be in writing

Objections to all or part of the deposition must be made in writing. CCP §2025.340(m). Under §2025.340(m), the court may permit further designations of testimony and objections as justice may require by ordering one of the following:

- That the party offering the deposition recording suppress those portions not designated by any party or ruled to be objectionable.
- That an edited version of the recording be prepared. The original recording, however, must be preserved unaltered.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.81 4. Admissibility objections

Pay particular attention to admissibility objections based on the adequacy of a party's opportunity to confront and cross-examine the deponent. This problem often arises during complex litigation, e.g., in asbestos actions in which the death of a party deponent occurs before the completion of the deposition. When a party has not been afforded an opportunity to examine or complete the examination of a deponent, deposition testimony has been held inadmissible.

EXAMPLE 1: In Sprague v Equifax, Inc. (1985) 166 CA3d 1012, 1041, 213 CR 69, plaintiff's counsel, who noticed the deposition, were advised by defendant's counsel after 4 hours of the deponent's testimony that the deponent was returning to Michigan and would not be available the next day to continue the deposition. Although plaintiff's counsel insisted that the deposition continue from day to day as stated in the deposition notice and in accordance with custom for out-of-town witnesses, they ultimately submitted to the deposition's termination under protest, stating on the record that the deponent had not completed his examination. The deponent did not attend the trial. Plaintiff's counsel moved at trial to exclude the deponent's deposition testimony on the ground that the plaintiff was deprived of the right to cross-examine the adverse witness. The appellate court affirmed the trial court's granting of the motion, noting that admission of a deposition is generally within the trial court's discretion.

EXAMPLE 2: In Pollard v Pollard (1959) 166 CA2d 698, 705, 333 P2d 356, a deposition proceeding was held to perpetuate testimony. After direct examination was substantially completed, the deposition was continued but the deponent died before the deposition could be resumed. The court ruled that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in sustaining an objection to the offering of the deposition into evidence when no cross-examination had taken place and it was unclear whether direct examination had been completed.

PRACTICE TIP: To prevent this problem, make every effort to conduct the deposition in one session. If the deposition must be continued, it should be for only a short period—particularly when the deponent is elderly or ill.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.82 5. Stenographic record necessary

If no previous stenographic transcript was made, the party offering an audio or video deposition under CCP §2025.620 must accompany the offer with a stenographic transcript prepared from the recording. CCP §2025.340(m). Unless otherwise ordered by the judge, the written transcript must be given to the court and opposing parties and the transcript must be marked for identification. The clerk must file a duplicate of the transcript so it can be made part of the record in the event of an appeal. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1040.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.83 6. Check local requirements

Check local court rules or policies for any time limits, objection limitations, or other requirements on designating portions of an audio or video deposition to be used at trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

7. Deposition of treating physician or other expert

§12.84 a. Using deposition in lieu of live testimony

A video deposition of a treating or consulting physician or of any expert may be used in lieu of the live testimony of such a witness at trial even if the deponent is available to testify (CCP §2025.620(d)):

- When the deposition notice reserves counsel's right to use the deposition at trial (see CCP §2025.220(a)(6), CCP §2025.340(m), CCP §2025.620(d)); and
- When the party offering the testimony notifies the court and all parties in writing of:
- The intent to offer the audio or video recording; and
- The parts of the recording to be offered.

The notice to the court and parties must be made in sufficient time for objections to be made and ruled on by the judge to whom the case is assigned for trial or hearing, and for any editing of the recording. CCP §2025.620(d). See also §§12.41, 12.84.

CAUTION: Audio depositions are not mentioned in CCP §2025.620(d) and thus are not permissible for use in lieu of live testimony.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.85 b. Conducting discovery deposition before use of expert's deposition

When a video deposition is noticed that will preserve testimony for trial of a treating or consulting physician or any expert (see CCP §§2025.220(a)(6), 2025.620(d)), another party may wish to first conduct a discovery deposition when the circumstances warrant, to ensure effective cross-examination at the videotaping. CCP §2025.420(b).

PRACTICE TIP: First attempt to enter into a stipulation for a discovery deposition with all the parties, but if they are unwilling, seek a protective order. CCP §2025.420(b). Because the deponent's testimony at trial will be presented through video rather than live testimony, argue that you must first conduct a discovery deposition in order to be prepared for effective cross-examination during the video recorded deposition.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/12 Effective Use of Discovery/§12.86 8. Requirements for video operator if video used at trial

§12.86 8. Requirements for video operator if video used at trial

If the deposition of a treating or consulting physician or of any expert witness will be used at a trial or hearing, the person operating the recording equipment (CCP §§2025.340(c), 2025.620):

- Must be authorized to administer an oath; and
- May not be:
- Financially interested in the action; or
- An employee or a relative of any attorney of any of the parties.

These qualifications and restrictions for the operator of the recording equipment may be waived on the record by all parties attending the deposition. CCP §§2025.340(c), 2025.620.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.87 9. Rules for setting up equipment and handling video recording

If possible, consult with the clerk of the department in which the trial will be held or with the office of court administration to discuss the mechanics of setting up and operating video playback equipment. Courts are becoming increasingly security conscious; metal detectors and briefcase and package searches are common.

CAUTION: The magnetic fields of walk-through and hand-held metal detectors may erase or alter audio or video recordings. Become familiar with the trial department's ground rules and courthouse security procedures well before the day of trial to avoid embarrassing delays in setting up audio or video equipment or sustaining damage to the audio or video recording. If necessary, secure a court order from the presiding judge or the trial department to allow the audio or video operator to enter and exit the courthouse through a doorway that will not harm the recorded depositions and will allow easy setup of the monitoring equipment.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.88 10. Using computer software programs

Although video recorded depositions are a more effective way of presenting testimony than dry transcript readings, they are generally not very effective for impeachment purposes. Unless the precise portions to be used for impeachment and their exact order are known in advance, the fast-forwarding or rewinding necessary to locate recorded portions will be awkward and time consuming. By the time the segment has been located, the jury may have forgotten the inconsistency, and the dramatic effect may be lost.

Counsel should consider using computer software programs, e.g., Trial Director or Summation, for courtroom presentation of videotaped depositions. These programs allow the user to locate deposition testimony by page and line references quickly. Another alternative to the cumbersome process of locating testimony on a video recording is to prepare areas of impeachment that can be presented visually to the jury.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.89 P. Marking deposition for use at trial

Clearly mark the portions of a deposition that will be read into the record at trial, e.g., by highlighting with a marker so that the reading proceeds smoothly and without hesitation. To minimize interruptions for objections by an adverse party, consider preparing a memorandum of the portions of the deposition intended to be read and giving it to opposing counsel.

Do not offer advance copies of testimony that are intended as impeachment of the deponent. Also, when selecting parts of the deposition to be read, keep in mind unfavorable related testimony because an alert opponent will request an immediate reading of the omitted portions, enhancing their negative impact.

PRACTICE TIP: Anticipate which portions of the deposition opposing counsel may offer into evidence. To object to those portions, make a note of the grounds in the transcript so that they can be stated quickly and effectively. Also, mark additional portions of the deposition to read on redirect-examination, recross-examination, or rebuttal.

Further research: On the sequence of presenting evidence generally, see §11.2.

© The Regents of the University of California

Q. Determine advisability of summary or index

§12.90 1. Purpose of summary

For a deposition to be used effectively at trial, know both its substance and the exact location of pertinent testimony by page and line number. Use summaries and indexes of deposition transcripts to ensure that useful passages can be quickly located, thereby avoiding a loss of impact in cross-examination and the embarrassment of thumbing distractedly through a transcript while judge and jury wait impatiently. See §§12.91-12.96.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.91 2. Form of summary or index

The form of a deposition summary is dictated by the length of the transcript, the complexity of the case, whether the trial attorney or someone else prepares the summary, and the attorney's needs and preferences. Some summaries recapitulate the deponent's testimony while others are little more than skeletal indexes of topics covered. (For convenience, the word "summary" is used here to cover both summaries and indexes.)

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.92 3. Who prepares summary

Preparing a summary of each deposition that might be used at trial usually results in a greater familiarity with the deposition testimony than depending on summaries prepared by others.

There are various opinions on who prepares summaries or indexes in different law firms. In some firms, summaries are prepared by associates or legal assistants rather than the trial attorney. Some firms have associates who specialize in taking depositions and preparing them for use at trial by the firm's trial attorneys.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.93 4. When to prepare summary

A summary prepared soon after receiving a copy of the deposition transcript can be referred to during the pretrial stages of litigation, including settlement discussions or conferences and used in preparing to make or contest a summary judgment motion.

Be aware that there are various opinions on when it is best to prepare summaries or indexes. Some attorneys:

- Believe that it is a waste of time and money to prepare a summary until fairly certain that the case cannot be settled but will go to trial;
- Think it is helpful to prepare the summary as soon after the deposition as possible while the testimony is still fresh; or
- Prefer to summarize depositions shortly before trial, feeling that will make it easier to remember the deposition testimony during trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.94 5. Index key pages

If only one or two statements in a deposition might be referred to at trial, "index" those statements by sticking a tab on each key page and indicating appropriate lines by penciled marks in the margin. Even if a summary is prepared, indexing the most important pages with tabs may still be a useful guide.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.95 6. Prepare chronology index

Consider preparing a separate index sheet that gives a rough chronological summary of all possibly significant aspects of the deponent's testimony. This sheet might be kept with other deposition summaries in the trial notebook (see §3.21). The chronology could be based on the order of the deponent's testimony, the order of the actual events, or the order in which the deponent is expected to testify at trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.96 7. When to prepare both summary and index

In complex cases, with numerous and lengthy deposition transcripts, it can be helpful to have both extensive summaries of each deponent's testimony and a separate index showing by page and line number each place where a deponent testified on a relevant topic. This approach is particularly helpful when a deponent testifies on the same subject at different times during the deposition or when several deponents testify on the same subject.

An attorney who expects to conduct a long and detailed cross-examination of a deponent may even have two summaries prepared: one based on the chronology of events and the other based on the subject matter covered by the deponent.

PRACTICE TIP: Some attorneys prepare a separate file card for each exhibit that the deponent identified or introduced at the deposition. The card can describe the nature or contents of the exhibit and indicate the page and line numbers where the deponent talked about it.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.97 R. Requesting copy on computer disk

It is becoming an increasingly common practice to request a computer disk from the court reporter. Most court reporters will make available to all counsel a copy of the disk for a nominal charge. The computerized testimony can then be loaded into a full-size or laptop computer.

The disk may be used for indexing or cross-referencing. Some court reporters offer additional services such as "key word indexing," which selects all testimony in which a particular word or phrase appears. This service is particularly helpful in complex litigation when an attorney wishes to compile all testimony on a particular subject.

V. USING INTERROGATORIES AT TRIAL

A. General requirements

§12.98 1. Answers must be signed and verified

Interrogatories must be answered under oath, and the answers must be signed by the person making them. CCP §§2030.210(a), 2030.250(a). Interrogatories that are served on a public or private corporation, partnership, association, or government agency must be signed under oath by an officer or agent of that entity. CCP §2030.250(b).

When serving interrogatories, make certain that the responses are not only signed by the person answering the interrogatories but are also verified by that person and not, for example, by counsel for a corporate party, unless counsel signed the responses in the capacity as an officer or agent under CCP §2030.250(b). Otherwise, even if the answering person signed the responses, that person may be able to disclaim the answers at trial. See LeGrand v Yellow Cab Co. (1970) 8 CA3d 125, 87 CR 292 (decided under former CCP §2030(a); answer excluded when signing party who did not verify answers claimed that he neither read answers nor knew their content).

NOTE: Requiring that the answers be properly verified reduces the possibility that the party will be able to disclaim his or her answers at trial.

If the officer or agent signing the response on behalf of a public or private corporation, partnership, association, or government agency is an attorney acting in that capacity for such a party (CCP §2030.250(b)):

> that party waives any attorney-client privilege and any protection for work product under [CCP §§2018.010-2018.080] during any subsequent discovery from that attorney concerning the identity of the sources of the information contained in the response.

An attorney who verifies responses to interrogatories may thereby subject himself or herself to being called as a witness by the opposing party and, under certain circumstances, disqualification of counsel may result.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.99 2. Moving to compel responses

If necessary, the propounding party should move to compel answers under CCP §2030.290(b) if the responding party does not sign a verification. A failure to sign answers to interrogatories under oath would presumably be deemed a failure to respond to the interrogatories, thereby allowing counsel to move to compel under CCP §2030.290(b).

Consider moving under CCP §2030.300 instead within the time period specified in that section, to compel further responses in order to avoid any possible claim of waiver of the right to answers under oath if a court held that CCP §2030.300 applied in the circumstances. For procedure and further discussion of compelling answers and further answers to interrogatories, see California Civil Discovery Practice §§7.107-7.119 (4th ed Cal CEB 2006).

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.100 3. Amending or supplementing answers to interrogatories before trial

Because answers to interrogatories can be used against the responding party at trial, consider amending or supplementing any incorrect or incomplete answers provided by a client before trial. See §12.107. Failing to amend or supplement such answers creates the risk that the evidence intended to be introduced may be limited or excluded, as well as the risk that evidence differing from earlier interrogatory answers may not be believed.

An amended answer to interrogatories may be served without leave of court. The amended answer may cover information subsequently discovered, inadvertently omitted, or mistakenly stated in the previous answer. CCP §2030.310(a). The initial answer may be used by the propounding party or any other party at trial under CCP §2030.410 and the responding party may then use the amended answer. CCP §2030.310(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.101 4. Moving for order to make first response binding

The propounding party may move for an order that the first answer to the interrogatory be made binding on the responding party for the pending action. CCP §2030.310(b). The responding party would normally be able to deny or explain the answer. These possibilities are not available when the answer is made binding on the responding party.

Before an answer will be made binding, the propounding party must first make a good faith attempt to resolve the matter. The motion to have the initial answer binding on the responding party must "be accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented by the motion." CCP §2030.310(b).

For the court to grant the motion, the court must determine the following (CCP §2030.310(c)):

- The initial failure to correctly answer the interrogatory substantially prejudiced the propounding party;
- The responding party failed to show substantial justification for the initial answer; and
- The prejudice to the propounding party cannot be cured by a continuance for further discovery or by permitting the initial answer to be used in the normal manner, which would allow the responding party to deny or explain the initial answer.

Further research: See Gordon v Superior Court (1984) 161 CA3d 157, 207 CR 327, for an example of prejudice to the propounding party sufficient to justify binding the responding party with an initial answer.

© The Regents of the University of California

5. Preparing summaries or enlargements

§12.102 a. When appropriate

It may be helpful to prepare a summary or an index of the interrogatories and answers that might be needed quickly during trial, e.g., names of percipient and expert witnesses and kinds of exhibits might be listed, and contentions and topics of testimony summarized. In large, complex matters, the interrogatories and responses can be organized by subject matter in a binder, with a subject index for quick reference.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.103 b. If used to impeach or as admissions

If certain answers to interrogatories will be used for impeachment or as admissions, they can be summarized and indexed separately according to subject matter. The particular interrogatories and answers can also be placed in sequence on a single document. For ease of use at trial, this document might also include a copy of the first page of the set of interrogatories (to show the caption, the propounder, the person asked, and any typed instructions on how to answer) and a copy of the last page of the response (to show the responder's signature and oath or verification).

PRACTICE TIP: For a particularly important admission or impeachment of an interrogatory answer, consider using an enlargement (by overhead projector or otherwise) at trial during closing argument. Obtain the court's permission before its use. The enlargement should not display inadmissible, confusing, or otherwise objectionable matters.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.104 6. Prepare copies for court and opposing counsel

Neither the Code of Civil Procedure nor the California Rules of Court require that a party desiring to use interrogatories or responses to interrogatories first provide the court and opposing counsel with a single document setting forth in sequence the interrogatory and answer that the party plans to use. Many attorneys believe that this procedure should be followed except when the interrogatories and answers are going to be used on cross-examination. Check local jurisdictions for applicable rules and policies. See, e.g., applicable rules in Los Angeles Ct R 8.70-8.72.

Counsel for the responding party who wants to use interrogatories and answers during trial may use copies. An attorney for a responding party who wants to use the originals should request the propounding attorney (or party, if unrepresented) to bring them to court. A request that the propounding party produce the original interrogatories and responses can be included in a CCP §1987(c) notice to produce documents, served at least 20 days before the start of trial. For discussion of such notice, see §§4.36-4.39.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.105 7. Request production of originals

Counsel who serves a set of interrogatories on behalf of a party (i.e., the propounding attorney) must retain the original interrogatories with the original proof of service form attached and serve copies. See CCP §2030.280. Counsel for the responding party is required to serve the original responses under oath on the propounding attorney (or the propounding party, if unrepresented). See CCP §2030.260(a). Thus, the propounding attorney has possession of the original interrogatories and responses and may bring them to court.

The propounding attorney (or the propounding party, if unrepresented) must retain the original interrogatories, original proof of service, and original responses until 6 months after the action's final disposition. The originals may be destroyed at that time unless the court on a showing of good cause orders that the originals be preserved for a longer period. CCP §2030.280.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.106 8. Evaluate filing requirements

Interrogatories and answers to interrogatories are not to be filed with the court. The propounding party retains the original interrogatories with the original proof of service and the original sworn responses for 6 months after final disposition of the action, at which time they may be destroyed unless the court, on a party's motion and a showing of good cause, orders that they be retained for a longer period. CCP §2030.280.

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Using interrogatories at trial

§12.107 1. Use against responding party only

The propounding party or any other party other than the responding party may use at trial any answer or part of an answer to an interrogatory admissible under the rules of evidence only against the responding party. CCP §2030.410. See Castaline v City of Los Angeles (1975) 47 CA3d 580, 121 CR 786. Compare the permitted use of interrogatories with the broader use of deposition testimony (see §12.32).

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel should keep interrogatories short and in plain English so that they can be easily understood by jurors and have maximum impact at trial. Counsel should also ask the trial judge to instruct the jury on the nature of interrogatories, i.e., that the answers were given under oath and should be considered as if they had been given in court.

The fact that the responding party is available to testify, has testified, or will testify is not a valid basis for objecting during trial to the use of the responding party's answer to an interrogatory. CCP §2030.410.

Further research: See §12.138 for a checklist for introducing answers to interrogatories or requests for admission.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.108 2. Check local rules for filing requirements

Although interrogatories and their responses do not have to be filed as a prerequisite to their use at trial (CCP §2030.410), be sure to check local rules and policies for filing requirements.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.109 3. Offering interrogatory responses into evidence

Interrogatory responses are presented to the jury by reading them into evidence. As with deposition testimony, take care to separate questions and answers so that the testimony is clear to the jury.

Before offering responses into evidence (with the exception of responses to be used on cross-examination), advise opposing counsel of those portions of the interrogatories and responses that counsel intends to offer. If opposing counsel has objections, a hearing can be requested outside the jury's presence to obtain rulings on the objections.

When interrogatory responses have been read into evidence, the proponent can request that the court instruct the jury to consider the interrogatory responses as if the questions had been asked and answered in court.

© The Regents of the University of California

4. Using answers to restrict presentation of evidence

§12.110 a. To exclude witness not named in answers

A party may be asked in interrogatories to specify the party's contentions and factual bases for the contentions and to list lay witnesses having knowledge of facts relevant to the subject matter of the action, documents, or other things. See CCP §§2017.010, 2017.210, CCP §2030.010(a), §2030.010(b); California Civil Discovery Practice §§7.39-7.43, 7.50 (4th ed Cal CEB 2006). However, a party usually cannot be compelled to disclose the identity of lay witnesses that the party intends to call to testify. City of Long Beach v Superior Court (1976) 64 CA3d 65, 134 CR 468 (disclosure protected under former CCP §2016(b) (now CCP §2018.030(b) as qualified work privilege).

At trial, move to preclude the answering party from calling a witness not named or from introducing any evidence that goes beyond the scope of the answers given to the interrogatories. Campain v Safeway Stores, Inc. (1972) 29 CA3d 362, 104 CR 752 (undisclosed claim for loss of earnings and future earnings); Thoren v Johnston & Washer (1972) 29 CA3d 270, 105 CR 276 (willful omission of witness's name); Universal Underwriters Ins. Co. v Superior Court (1967) 250 CA2d 722, 58 CR 870 (undisclosed contention).

Responses to deposition questions and interrogatories that are merely inconsistent, and could be used for impeachment at trial, do not serve as a basis to exclude testimony without a finding of discovery abuse sufficiently severe to warrant an evidence sanction. Kelly v New W. Fed. Sav. (1996) 49 CA4th 659, 672, 56 CR2d 803.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.111 b. To exclude evidence not in answer

Whether the trial judge will exclude evidence on the ground that it was not mentioned in an answer to an interrogatory depends on such factors as:

- The nature of the information sought;
- The precision with which the question was asked; and
- Whether the party deliberately concealed known facts in its answer.

When the information not mentioned in the answer can be viewed as a good faith omission, or does not otherwise constitute surprise, the court can grant relief from the failure to disclose and allow the evidence to be introduced. See Singer v Superior Court (1960) 54 C2d 318, 325, 5 CR 697 (effect of good faith oversight); Castaline v City of Los Angeles (1975) 47 CA3d 580, 590, 121 CR 786 (no surprise); Milton v Montgomery Ward & Co. (1973) 33 CA3d 133, 140, 108 CR 726 (good faith; no surprise).

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.112 c. To exclude evidence inconsistent with prior answer to interrogatory

Absent significant prejudice to the propounding party, the trial court may allow evidence to be presented that is at variance with prior answers to interrogatories. Phillips v Cooper Labs. (1989) 215 CA3d 1648, 264 CR 311. Note that, even if the court grants the party relief, the inconsistent response can be used for impeachment.

Further research: On disclosure of information concerning each other's expert trial witnesses and exclusion of an expert's opinion, see CCP §§2034.010-2034.730, discussed in §2.7.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.113 5. Using answers during presentation of party's case

The adverse party's answers to interrogatories are not often used as substantive evidence during the presentation of the party's case. It is usually more effective to elicit the testimony from the adverse party at trial rather than reading it from an answer to an interrogatory.

Circumstances may arise, however, when it is advisable to read an adverse party's answers to interrogatories into the record during the presentation of his or her client's case, e.g., when it is necessary to establish certain facts as part of the client's case such as the date and place of incorporation, the principal place of business, or the identity of corporate officers, and the adverse party is unlikely to dispute the facts. For discussion of who may be considered an adverse party, see §12.46.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.114 6. Using answers given in another action

Responses to interrogatories given in another action might be used against the responding party during cross-examination in the present action. For example, if discovery reveals that the opposing party gave answers to interrogatories in another case, attempt to introduce them into evidence as admissions of a party opponent in the present case (see Evid C §1220), or use them for impeachment purposes (see Evid C §780).

PRACTICE TIP: These answers may be particularly helpful against a litigious opponent, e.g., you may be able to show by previous answers to interrogatories that the plaintiff has claimed sizable damages for preexisting injuries that the plaintiff presently claims are insignificant.

© The Regents of the University of California

7. Using answers to impeach

§12.115 a. Consider benefits

Using answers to interrogatories to contradict what the party has testified to at trial can be extremely effective as impeachment. Although the witness might be able to explain away conflicting deposition testimony by claiming confusion, it is extremely difficult to use that excuse with an answer to an interrogatory. Skillful cross-examining will bring out the fact that the witness had 30 days (or 5 days in an unlawful detainer action) to answer the interrogatory and that the answer to the interrogatory was prepared with the help of counsel.

NOTE: When answers to interrogatories are used to establish an inconsistency, they are not only a means of attacking credibility but are also a means of introducing substantive evidence on the matter stated. See Evid C §1235; CCP §2030.410.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.116 b. Review procedures

The procedure for impeaching a witness with interrogatory responses is similar to that for impeaching a witness with deposition testimony. See generally §§12.63-12.66. The cross-examiner can first pin down the witness's trial testimony so that its inconsistency with the interrogatory answer can be more clearly seen by the trier of fact. See §12.115. The cross-examiner can then ask the witness foundational questions about the witness's response to the interrogatories, either before or after the witness has been impeached by the response.

A witness need not be shown the answers or be given any information about them before they are used to show the inconsistency. Evid C §§768-769.

After the witness has been committed to his or her testimony, the cross-examiner might proceed as follows:

Q: Now, sir, you were asked certain written questions concerning this lawsuit. Correct?

A: Yes.

Q: And you gave written responses to those questions. Is that correct?

A: Yes, I believe I did.

Q: And you made those responses under oath. Correct?

A: Yes, I did.

Q: And you stated under oath in those responses that you were going 25 miles an hour at the time of the accident. Is that correct?

A: Yes, I did.

A witness may claim not remembering giving written answers to interrogatories or signing a verification. The witness may even attempt to claim that the answer is incorrect. If the witness does not readily recall the response or claims that the answer was incorrect, the cross-examining attorney may need to show the interrogatories and responses to the witness.

The cross-examination of such a witness at trial might proceed as follows:

Q: Now, sir, you were asked certain written questions concerning this lawsuit, and you gave written responses to those questions. Is that correct?

A: I really don't remember.

Q: Well, sir, I will show you this document and ask you to read to yourself interrogatory number 7. Do you now recall being asked how fast you were going at the time of the accident?

A: I have a vague recollection of those questions being asked, yes.

Q: Sir, please read the response to interrogatory number 7. Do you remember giving the response that you were going 25 miles an hour?

A: [No, I really don't remember giving that response/Yes, but that was an incorrect answer].

Q: Well, sir, I direct you to the last page of the document I handed you and ask you to read the paragraph entitled Verification. Now, sir, that paragraph says that you swear under penalty of perjury that you read the interrogatories and responses and that the responses were true of your own personal knowledge. Is that correct?

A: Yes, it does say that.

Q: And that is your signature at the bottom of that paragraph. Is that correct?

A: Yes, it is.

Read the interrogatory and answer into the record at some appropriate point during cross-examination if, as in the above example, the witness responds "No, I really don't remember giving that response." (An appropriate time might be after the last answer in the example.)

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.117 8. Using party witness who did not sign verification

Normally, there will be an opportunity to cross-examine the same party who verified the responses. When an entity is being sued, however, the entity may call an officer or agent to testify on its behalf without calling the officer or agent who signed the verification. The officer who is called as a witness may testify in a manner inconsistent with the interrogatory response and, when confronted with the response, disclaim any responsibility for it. In such a situation, the response can still be used in an attempt to impeach the party.

Counsel confronted with this situation might proceed in the following manner:

Q: Now, Mr. Klimesh, you testified that your company tested the widget in 2007. Is that correct?

A: Yes, it is.

Q: Mr. Klimesh, I would like to read your company's response to an interrogatory propounded by plaintiff on June 17, 2009. Interrogatory number 4 asks: "Please state the year that Middletown Engineering Company first began testing the widget." Answer: "2008." Is that correct?

A: Well, I don't know where you got that answer because I never saw that interrogatory, nor did I answer it.

Q: Well, sir, I will show you a document. [Reads verification and signature out loud.] Do you know a Mr. Clarke of your company?

A: Yes, I believe I do.

Q: What work did he do for your company during 2008?

A: He was the assistant manager of the engineering department.

Q: And is that the department in charge of testing widgets?

A: Yes, it is.

Q: And is one of the responsibilities of the assistant manager of the engineering department to know what products are being tested?

A: Yes, it is.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.118 9. Using client's answers

The reason why responses to interrogatories cannot be used on behalf of the answering party is that the responses are self-serving statements and there is no opportunity for cross-examination. See CCP §2030.410; Estate of Horman (1968) 265 CA2d 796, 805, 71 CR 780.

Even though responses to interrogatories are not authorized by statute, there may be some circumstances under which the answering party can use them. For example, the responses might be used to refresh the recollection of the answering party (see §§11.63-11.68) or to rehabilitate the party by showing a prior consistent statement (see §§12.67-12.68).

© The Regents of the University of California

10. Preserving the record

§12.119 a. Handling objections

The admissibility of interrogatory responses at trial is subject to the same rules governing the admissibility of oral testimony. See CCP §2030.410. At trial, appropriate objections may be made to receiving into evidence all or part of a response as if the witness were present and testifying.

Objections at trial to the introduction of interrogatory responses are generally made in the same manner and on the same grounds as for oral testimony. Check local rules for any special requirements on the use of answers to interrogatories at trial.

NOTE: Counsel may not object to the use of an answer to an interrogatory on the ground that the responding party is available to testify, has testified, or will testify at the trial or other hearing. CCP §2030.410.

To preclude a witness from introducing evidence that goes beyond the scope of answers given to interrogatories, first object to the introduction of the evidence. Unless the court has issued a ruling on the evidence in an Evid C §402 hearing, objecting to the evidence should result in a ruling on the objectionable matter outside the presence of the jury:

> Proponent: Your Honor, I now wish to call as a witness Mrs. Edgar.
> Opponent: Your Honor, may we approach the bench?
> The Court: Yes.
> Opponent: [At sidebar] Your Honor, I believe this witness may testify on the issue of Mr. Rutland's injuries. If so, I object because in interrogatory answers this witness was not disclosed as having knowledge of Mr. Rutland's injuries. May we adjourn to chambers?

This example assumes that the objecting attorney knew the substance of the witness's proposed testimony. However, the proposing party may call a witness whose testimony is unknown to the objecting attorney. If the proposing counsel will not voluntarily reveal the nature of the witness's testimony, the objecting attorney can ask the court to determine the nature of the witness's testimony outside the presence of the jury to determine whether there is an objection to it.

Further research: On objections to evidence, see §§11.15-11.23. On grounds for objections generally, see California Trial Objections (Cal CEB Annual).

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.120 b. When nonresponding party requests limiting instruction

Because responses to interrogatories are generally admissible against only the responding party (see §12.107), a nonresponding party usually will want to object whenever the opposing party attempts to introduce into evidence an interrogatory response against the nonresponding party.

EXAMPLE: In a multiparty lawsuit brought by A against B and C, A may wish to introduce B's responses to A's interrogatories. These responses cannot be used against C, however, who may want to object to their being introduced against C. At the time of objecting, C can ask the court for a limiting instruction that would inform the jury that the responses are admitted only as evidence against B and cannot be used against C.

Sometimes, however, the admission of the interrogatory response, even with the limiting instruction that the response is admissible against only B, can cause severe prejudice to C. C may ask the court to exclude the interrogatory response completely as too prejudicial under Evid C §352.

Further research: For further discussion of the limited admissibility of evidence and requesting a limited instruction, see §§15.61-15.64.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.121 c. Protecting record when response erroneously excluded

When an objection to the introduction of interrogatory responses into evidence is sustained, counsel can protect the record for appeal by:

- Requesting that the interrogatories and responses be marked for identification and specifying on the record by number the interrogatories and responses to be offered; or
- Reading the excluded portions into the record out of the jurors' presence.

Unless the purpose and relevance of the objection is apparent from the context, state the purpose and relevance on the record out of the jurors' presence.

Further research: On offers of proof generally, see §§15.50-15.60.

VI. USING REQUESTS FOR ADMISSION AT TRIAL

§12.122 A. General requirements

A party may serve on another party written requests for admission, asking the party served to admit the "truth of specified matters of fact, opinion relating to fact, or application of law to fact" or that certain documents, copies of which are attached to the request (unless copies have already been furnished), are genuine. CCP §2033.010, CCP §2033.060(g), CCP §2033.070.

The party to whom the request for admission is directed must answer each request separately under oath in writing. CCP §2033.210(a). This means that an affirmative statement is required even when the matter is admitted or qualifiedly admitted. CCP §§2033.210(a), (b), 2033.220. An admission made by a party is binding only on that party and only for the pending action. CCP §2033.410.

Further research: See §12.138 for a checklist for introducing answers to interrogatories or requests for admission.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.123 1. When response not timely served

When a response is not timely served, the party requesting the admissions may then make a motion that the genuineness of any document or the truth of any matter on which a request for admission was sought be deemed admitted. CCP §2033.280(b). The court must order the matters deemed admitted unless the responding party serves a proposed response to the admissions that substantially complies with CCP §2033.220 before the hearing on the motion; monetary sanctions are mandatory. CCP §2033.280(c). On motions to compel a further response when the requesting party deems that an answer to a request is evasive or incomplete, or an objection to a request is without merit or too general, see CCP §2033.290.

Failure to serve a timely response waives any objection to the request for admission, including an objection based on privilege or protection of an attorney's work product. CCP §2033.280(a). This waiver may be removed if the party failing to serve a timely response subsequently serves an adequate response and moves the court to be relieved from the waiver. Under CCP §2033.280(a), the court may grant such relief if it finds that:

- The subsequently served response is in substantial compliance with CCP §§2033.210-2033.230; and
- The party's failure to serve a timely response was the result of mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.124 2. Withdrawal or amendment of admissions

A party may not withdraw or amend an admission unless the court grants leave to do so after notice to all parties. CCP §2033.300(a). The motion may be made even after the matters are deemed admitted by court order, and even if no timely response has previously been made. Wilcox v Birtwhistle (1999) 21 C4th 973, 90 CR2d 260. Under CCP §2033.300(b), the court may grant the motion only if it determines that > the admission was the result of mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect, and that the party who obtained the admission will not be substantially prejudiced in maintaining that party's action or defense on the merits.

EXAMPLE: In Elston v City of Turlock (1985) 38 C3d 227, 211 CR 416 (decided under former CCP §2033), excusable neglect was established under CCP §473 when plaintiffs' counsel contended that his office was understaffed and that he was unaware of the existence of the misplaced papers until the answers were overdue. The defendants did not allege prejudice due to the delay in receiving the responses or that setting aside admission would prejudice their case.

The trial court may impose conditions when granting the motion to withdraw or amend an admission. See CCP §2033.300(c); New Albertsons, Inc. v Superior Court (2009) 168 CA4th 1403, 1421, 86 CR3d 457 (error to deny motion to withdraw admission when it was result of mistake, did not prejudice opposing party, and court had authority to impose conditions).

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.125 3. Requests not filed with court

Requests for admission and responses to them are not to be filed with the court. CCP §2033.270(a). Both the original requests for admission with its proof of service and the original responses are to be retained by the requesting party until 6 months after final disposition of the action, at which time they may be destroyed. On a motion by any party, however, the court may order on a showing of good cause that the 6-month period for preserving the originals be extended. CCP §2033.270(b).

Further research: On procedure, time limitations, rules, and motions for requests for admission and responses, see CCP §§2033.010-2033.740; California Civil Discovery Practice, chap 9 (4th ed Cal CEB 2006); Obtaining Discovery: Initiating and Responding to Discovery Procedures (Cal CEB Action Guide March 2007). For forms concerning requests for admission, see California Civil Litigation Forms Manual, chap 30 (Cal CEB 1980).

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Using requests for admission at trial

§12.126 1. How used

Although CCP §2033.270(a) does not provide for the filing of requests for admission or their responses as a prerequisite to their use at trial, check local rules or policies for their requirements.

Requests for admission that have been admitted can be read into the record at an appropriate time during the trial. Consider requesting that the judge explain requests for admission to the jury and the legal effect of their being admitted.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.127 2. Admission conclusively establishes admitted matter

A request for admission that is expressly admitted conclusively establishes the admitted matter against the responding party in the pending action (unless the court has permitted withdrawal or amendment of that admission under CCP §2033.300(a)), thereby making other evidence on that point irrelevant. CCP §2033.410.

Further research: See generally California Civil Discovery Practice, chap 9 (4th ed Cal CEB 2006). When the genuineness of a document has been admitted, however, objections to the admission of the document into evidence may still be made on hearsay or other grounds.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.128 3. Admission may preclude introduction of contrary evidence

A party's admission of fact might be referred to as a basis for precluding that party from introducing evidence contrary to the admitted fact. See CCP §2033.410 (admitted matter conclusively established). A motion to preclude might be made in chambers before the evidence is offered, or an objection might be made when the evidence is offered.

Further research: See also California Civil Discovery Practice §9.86 (4th ed Cal CEB 2006). On motions in limine before trial, see chap 7. On when to object and protect the record when the evidence is offered, see chap 15.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/12 Effective Use of Discovery/§12.129 4. Admission may not be used in other actions

§12.129 4. Admission may not be used in other actions

An admission made pursuant to a request for admission is for the purpose of the pending action only and may not be used against the party in any other action. CCP §2033.410. Thus, an admission by a party in one case cannot be used against the party in a related action even if the two actions are joined in one trial.

EXAMPLE: In Shepard & Morgan v Lee & Daniel, Inc. (1982) 31 C3d 256, 182 CR 351 (decided under former CCP §2033(c)), admission by a general contractor in plaintiff's personal injury action could not be used against the contractor to preclude the contractor from seeking indemnity in a cross-complaint from his subcontractor.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.130 5. Court may limit scope of use

Although an admission is usually dispositive, in an appropriate case, e.g., when an admission is susceptible of different meanings, a trial court has discretion to limit the scope and effect of an admission and how it is applied. Fredericks v Kantos Indus. (1987) 189 CA3d 272, 276, 234 CR 395.

After the matter is admitted, the trial court must determine the scope and effect of the admission; the trial court has broad discretion in determining the admissibility and relevance of the evidence. Milton v Montgomery Ward & Co., supra. A repudiated admission may be used for impeachment in the same manner as a changed response to an interrogatory or a deposition question. See Jahn v Brickey (1985) 168 CA3d 399, 405, 214 CR 119.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.131 C. Recovering expenses for requests

Requests for admission that have been denied are of little use at trial. If at trial the truth of the fact or the genuineness of documents that the responding party denied in the request is proved, the party requesting the admission may move the court for an order requiring the party to whom the request was made to pay the reasonable expenses, including attorney fees, incurred in making such proof. See CCP §2033.420(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.132 1. When court may not award expenses

The court must order payment of expenses unless it finds one of the following (CCP §2033.420(b)):

- An objection was sustained to the request, or a response to the request was waived under CCP §2033.290;
- The party failing to make the admission had reasonable ground to believe that party would prevail on the matter;
- The admission sought was of no substantial importance; or
- Some other good reason existed for the failure to admit.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.133 2. Timing of motion

The establishment of the proof of the denied fact is a prerequisite to making the motion to recover expenses. This means that the motion must be made in most cases after the proof, i.e., after the trial. Hillman v Stults (1968) 263 CA2d 848, 884, 70 CR 295 (construing former CCP §2034(c) in effect at that time).

Neither statutory nor case law establishes limits on how long after trial a "cost of proof" motion may be brought and heard. Prudent practice dictates bringing the motion as soon after trial as possible, while the facts are still fresh in the court's mind.

PRACTICE TIP: It is advisable to serve and file the motion before or at the same as serving and filing a memorandum of costs. For time limits on serving and filing a memorandum of costs, see Cal Rules of Ct 3.1700, discussed in chap 27.

© The Regents of the University of California

§12.134 3. Procedure for making motion

Although CCP §2033.420(a) is silent on the procedure for making a "cost of proof" motion, the procedural requirements for such a motion may be governed by CCP §§2023.010-2023.040, which describes the rules for discovery abuse sanction motions. A court would probably consider a failure to admit a fact or the genuineness of a document, without a reasonable basis, to be an "evasive response" to discovery, sanctionable as a misuse of the discovery process under CCP §2023.010. See Sherman v Kinetic Concepts, Inc. (1998) 67 CA4th 1152, 1162, 79 CR2d 641 (intentional concealment of material information gives rise on postverdict motion to sanctions, including attorney fees of first trial).

A motion for sanctions must be accompanied by a notice of motion, a supporting memorandum, and a declaration setting forth the facts supporting the amount of monetary sanction sought. CCP §2023.040. The court must provide the responding party with an opportunity for a hearing before sanctions may be imposed. CCP §2023.030. Note that the court must impose monetary sanctions if authorized by any provision in CCP §§2016.010-2036.050 unless it finds that the one subject to the sanction acted with "substantial justification" or that other circumstances make the imposition of sanctions unjust.

NOTE: Although CCP §2023.040 continues to refer to "points and authorities," the newly reorganized and renumbered rules of court have replaced that term with "memorandum in support of motion" or simply "memorandum." See, e.g., Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113. For consistency, this text uses the term "memorandum" in place of the term "points and authorities."

VII. CHECKLISTS AND SAMPLE FORMS

§12.135 A. Checklist: Using deposition testimony

___ 1. Ascertain whether original transcript is available. Verify that original transcript is available, to be lodged or filed with court by reporter or custodial attorney when needed and that review, correction, and signing procedures have been completed. CCP §§2025.520-2025.560.

___ 2. Check local rules. Satisfy any local court rule or order requiring pretrial disclosure of portions of deposition transcripts to be used.

___ 3. Review statutory requirements. It is important to comply with statutory requirements for using a deposition, particularly if the witness is not available at trial. If you do not satisfy these requirements, you risk being unable to use critical deposition testimony at trial.

___ 4. Verify availability of witnesses. Comply with the requirement that you exercise pretrial diligence to secure attendance at trial of unavailable witnesses so that depositions can be read. Evid C §§240, 1290-1292; CCP §2025.620(c)(2)(E).

___ 5. Prepare to prove diligence. Be prepared to prove by admissible evidence that you have exercised appropriate diligence. Merely stating "as an officer of the court" that you have been diligent in trying to secure an unavailable witness does not make an adequate record and will be rejected by most judges.

___ 6. Lodge transcript. Before or when the witness first takes the stand, lodge with court the original deposition transcript with appropriate certification by the court reporter.

___ 7. Identify transcript. Before you begin reading prior testimony, briefly identify the transcript for the record and jury.

___ 8. Ask foundational questions. Although often unnecessary, consider using foundational testimony to impress the jury with the importance of a prior inconsistency, e.g., that the witness remembers the deposition and knew that he or she was answering under oath.

NOTE: Developing foundational questions is extremely useful in underlining the importance of the testimony to be read. Most jurors have never had a deposition taken and do not understand the circumstances under which the testimony was given, i.e., that the witness was under oath and that the deponent was probably represented at the deposition by counsel.

___ 9. Ask permission to read transcript. Request permission to read from the transcript (decide whether you should read it yourself, rather than asking the witness to read it).

___ 10. Ask court to instruct jury. Consider requesting the court to instruct the jury on the nature and importance of deposition testimony.

___ 11. Designate portions of transcript. Announce the portions that you intend to read by inclusive page and line numbers. For sample designation, see §12.139.

NOTE: If the testimony is lengthy, ask the court for permission to have someone play the role of the witness when reading the transcript.

___ 12. Allow time for review. Pause long enough for the court and opposing counsel to review designated portions for possible objections.

___ 13. Anticipate objections. If opposing counsel has any objection to any specific portion, expect it to be made and resolved before that portion of the transcript is read.

___ 14. Read transcript. Read the designated portion carefully into the record, prefacing each question with the word "Question" and each answer with the word "Answer."

___ 15. Do not ask witness to explain. After you finish reading the designated portion of the transcript, you need not ask the witness to explain discrepancies, to comment on the testimony, or whether his or her recollection has been refreshed.

___ 16. Do not offer transcript into evidence. It is generally unnecessary to offer deposition transcript into evidence, and the court will usually reject such an offer.

___ 17. Refer to deposition during closing argument. You can read or display previously read deposition testimony during closing argument. People v Coontz (1953) 119 CA2d 276, 282, 259 P2d 694.

NOTE: Be aware that jurors are not allowed to take deposition transcripts into deliberations. CCP §612.

___ 1. Notify court and other parties of intent. If you plan to use audio or video deposition, satisfy the disclosure requirements (see CCP §2025.340(m)). If you intend to introduce all or part of the deposition testimony at trial, notify the court and all parties in writing in "sufficient" time for (CCP §2025.340(m)):

___ a. The trial judge to hear and rule on the written objections of opposing parties; and ___ b. Any editing of the recording.

___ 2. Ascertain whether all objections have been responded to. It is advisable to respond to objections in writing, although the Code of Civil Procedure does not discuss the form of response. See CCP §2025.340(m).

___ 3. Consider possible responses by court. The court can (CCP §2025.340(m)):

___ a. Rule on objections;

___ b. Allow parties to designate additional testimony to be offered; and ___ c. Allow further objections that the court decides are required in the interests of justice.

___ 4. If only part of deposition is used. If you or another party designate only a portion of the recorded testimony for use at trial, the court may order you (or the other party also designating a portion) to:

___ a. Suppress the nondesignated portions; or ___ b. Prepare an edited version of the recording.

NOTE: Expect the trial judge to ask you and other counsel to agree to edit the video recording to include only admissible material. Do not expect the judge to play the video and decide which portions to edit.

___ 5. Preserve original recording. If the court orders the suppression or editing of a portion of the recording, make sure that the original is preserved unaltered. CCP §2025.340(m).

___ 6. Prepare stenographic record. If the recorded deposition was not also stenographically recorded (CCP §2025.340(m)):

___ a. Have the court reporter prepare a stenographic transcript from the audio or video recording;

___ b. Offer the transcript into evidence at trial when recorded testimony is offered.

§12.137 C. Sample questions and answers: Impeaching with deposition testimony

After asking preliminary questions, counsel may ask the following sample setup questions:

Q: Now, at the time that you made the decision to ride the horse, you knew that you were not a particularly good rider. Correct?

A: Yes.

Q: In fact, you had only been on a horse twice in your entire life before this incident. Correct?

A: Yes.

Q: And the last time you were on a horse before this incident was about 25 years ago, right after you got out of high school. Correct?

A: That's true.

Q: When you got out to the ranch, you were sufficiently concerned about having to ride a horse that you were actually scared, weren't you?

A: I wouldn't say that.

Q: Weren't you scared when you went out to the ranch to ride the horse, Mr. Gray?

A: No.

After reaching for the deposition transcript, counsel can ask the following sample foundational questions:

Q: You recall that your deposition was taken in this matter, don't you?

A: Yes.

Q: That deposition was taken at my offices in San Francisco, right?

A: Yes.

Q: And you came to the deposition with your attorney, Mr. Lee.

A: Yes.

Q: And you understood at that deposition that your testimony there was being given under oath, just as it is here in this courtroom today?

A: Yes.

Q: And after the deposition was taken, you received a letter telling you that it was available for you to read and correct, didn't you?

A: Yes.

Q: And you didn't make any corrections to the transcript, did you?

A: No.

Counsel may then read the following deposition testimony:

Counsel: At this time, your Honor, I would like to read to the jury from Mr. Gray's deposition testimony in this case. I'm referring to the deposition given on April 18, 2005, page 47, lines 10-15.

Counsel pauses. "Question: What was your state of mind as you approached the horse that day? Answer: I was scared."

§12.138 D. Checklist: Introducing answers to interrogatories or requests for admission

___ 1. Determine whether originals are available. Confirm that original interrogatories and requests for admission, with corresponding answers and responses, are verified and available for use at trial. CCP §§2030.010-2030.410, CCP §§2033.210-2033.420, CCP §2033.710.

___ 2. Check local rules for prior disclosure requirement. Satisfy any local court rule or order requiring prior disclosure of interrogatories or admissions to be used at trial. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.70.

___ 3. Check local rules for format requirements. If reading multiple interrogatories or requests for admission, you may be required by local rules, orders, or practice to prepare in advance cut-and-paste extracts of the pertinent portions for ease of reading. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.70.

___ 4. Lodge with court. Lodge interrogatories, requests, and corresponding responses with the court.

NOTE: Increasingly, courts are requiring counsel to perform this task before trial begins. For discussion of interrogatories, see §§12.98-12.121; requests for admission, see §§12.122-12.134.

___ 5. Ask court. Notify the court of your intent to read portions. Consider requesting a jury instruction on the nature and importance of interrogatory answers or admissions.

___ 6. Designate portions. Designate portions to be read by set, interrogatory/admission number, page, and lines.

___ 7. Wait for review and objections. Pause to give the court and opposing counsel an opportunity to review designated portions for objections.

___ 8. Read transcript. Read designated portions slowly and with emphasis: first read the request, and then (after a pause) the corresponding response.

___ 9. Formally introduce transcript into evidence. Many counsel mistakenly believe that responses to discovery requests, such as interrogatories, are automatically in evidence after they are lodged with the court. They cannot be read to the jury, argued during summation, or relied on as supporting evidence unless they are formally introduced into evidence following the procedures outlined above.

§13.1 I. SCOPE OF CHAPTER

Counsel approaching trial must be aware of the many substantive, procedural, and practical aspects of handling evidence at trial. This chapter:

- Provides a pretrial preparation checklist to help determine what exhibits are needed, how to organize them, and how to comply with local pretrial rules regarding exchanging and premarking exhibits and stipulating to admissibility (see §13.14);
- Identifies the procedural guidelines for offering exhibits into evidence and a step-by-step guide to follow in satisfying these guidelines (see §§13.45-13.63);
- Highlights substantive rules for laying a proper foundation for documentary (see §§13.65-13.84), demonstrative (see §§13.85-13.111), and real evidence (see §§13.112-13.113);
- Provides sample questions and answers for use at trial (see §§13.69, 13.92, 13.98);
- Outlines the objections available to the attorney opposing the introduction of such evidence (see §§13.114-13.132) and how to meet such objections (see §§13.133-13.138);
- Provides sample forms (see §§13.140-13.142); and
- Provides a bibliography (see §13.143).

The use of documentary, demonstrative, and real evidence during trial has expanded over the past few decades. Recognizing that jurors often become bored listening to hours of uninterrupted oral testimony and that they are more likely to remember something that has been both seen and heard, skillful attorneys try to involve jurors' senses as much as possible in presenting their cases. Oral testimony of witnesses can be confusing, is subject to contradiction, and can quickly fade from jurors' minds. Physical evidence is less subject to interpretation and usually may be taken into the jury room to refresh jurors' recollection.

II. DEFINITIONS

§13.2 A. Documentary evidence

California law does not clearly distinguish between documentary, demonstrative, and real evidence; the terms are not defined in the Evidence Code.

"Documentary evidence" is used in this chapter to refer to "writings," as defined in Evid C §250:

> handwriting, typewriting, printing, photostating, photographing, photocopying, transmitting by electronic mail or facsimile, and every other means of recording upon any tangible thing any form of communication or representation, including letters, words, pictures, sounds, or symbols, or combinations thereof, and any record thereby created, regardless of the manner in which the record has been stored.

"Writing" is thus defined to include all forms of tangible expressions, including audio and video recordings, and motion pictures. See Comment to Evid C §250; People v Rich (1988) 45 C3d 1036, 1086 n12, 248 CR 510 (video recordings); People v Kirk (1974) 43 CA3d 921, 928, 117 CR 345 (audio recordings); People v Enskat (1971) 20 CA3d Supp 1, 3, 98 CR 646 (motion picture).

Documentary evidence is usually, though not necessarily, created during the events giving rise to the dispute. Common examples of documentary evidence are letters, memorandums, and manuals. Documentary evidence can usually be taken into the jury room while the jurors deliberate. For categories of papers and exhibits that may be taken into the jury room, see CCP §612, discussed in §§13.65-13.84.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/13 Trial Exhibits/§13.3 B. Demonstrative evidence

§13.3 B. Demonstrative evidence

"Demonstrative evidence" is used in this chapter to refer to material objects or other things that are presented to aid the factfinder in understanding the testimony of trial witnesses. It is evidence offered to explain, illustrate, demonstrate, or reconstruct principles, facts, or events.

Demonstrative evidence is typically, though not always, created or assembled as a result of the legal proceeding itself rather than during the course of the events giving rise to the litigation. Examples of such evidence include photographs, models, charts, courtroom demonstrations, and computer simulations. See Effective Introduction of Evidence in California, chap 39 (2d ed Cal CEB 2000). See also 21 McCormick on Evidence §§212-220 (6th ed 2006). This type of evidence is admissible in the court's discretion (see Evid C §352; Fed R Evid 403) for its probative value in aiding the trier of fact. See §§13.65-13.84 on the admissibility of demonstrative evidence.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.4 C. Real evidence

A term sometimes used by attorneys, "real evidence" is not defined in the Evidence Code. The term is generally used to refer to tangible items of physical evidence that played a direct role in the disputed events or whose condition or appearance is directly at issue, e.g., the damaged fender of an automobile involved in a collision, the defective electric blanket that caught fire and burned the plaintiff, the gun used in a murder.

The difference between real evidence and demonstrative evidence lies in the purpose for which it is offered. Real evidence is typically a material object (Evid C §140) that is itself at issue (e.g., a murder weapon); demonstrative evidence is a material object or tangible thing offered to illustrate or explain testimony. See §13.3. See also Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 21 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.5 D. Exhibits

Exhibits are items of physical evidence that are marked for identification during trial and logged in the court clerk's record. An exhibit may be demonstrative, documentary, or real evidence. To be an exhibit, the item need not be formally admitted into evidence. Formal receipt is usually required, however, before the item may be argued by counsel as evidence or be relied on by the trier of fact. For purposes of this discussion, "exhibit" also includes items of physical evidence not yet marked for identification, which counsel intends to use during trial.

On effect of marking an exhibit for identification, see §§13.45-13.49. See §13.94 on how to mark a video recording and a computer disk.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/13 Trial Exhibits/§13.6 E. Evidence

§13.6 E. Evidence

"Evidence" is defined by Evid C §140 as "testimony, writings, material objects, or other things presented to the senses that are offered to prove the existence or nonexistence of a fact." As noted in Comment to Evid C §140.

> "Evidence" is defined broadly to include the testimony of witnesses, tangible objects, sights (such as a jury view or the appearance of a person exhibited to a jury), sounds (such as the sound of a voice demonstrated for a jury), and any other thing that may be presented as a basis of proof. The definition includes anything offered in evidence whether or not it is technically inadmissible and whether or not it is received.

Some evidence may be received silently by the factfinder (e.g., a jury's view of an accident scene), with no formal record of it made in either the court reporter's transcript or the clerk's record, although the evidence may be argued by counsel and considered by the factfinder in determining the trial outcome. See generally Downey v Santa Fe Transp. Co. (1955) 134 CA2d 720, 725, 286 P2d 40 (jury view). On jury views, see §§13.110-13.111. On photographing or videotaping such evidence and marking it for identification to protect the record on appeal, see §§13.76-13.77, 13.118.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/13 Trial Exhibits/§13.7 F. Proffered evidence

§13.7 F. Proffered evidence

"Proffered evidence" is evidence that the proponent wishes to have admitted and the admissibility or inadmissibility of which depends on the existence or nonexistence of a preliminary fact. Evid C §401. Proffered evidence may include testimony from a witness who is claimed to be disqualified, testimony or tangible evidence that is claimed to be privileged, and any other evidence to which objection is made. Comment to Evid C §401. See also Evid C §403(a).

If the existence of the preliminary fact is disputed, proffered evidence is generally admitted into evidence only after the court has held a hearing under Evid C §§400-406 to determine the preliminary fact issues (e.g., whether the witness is disqualified, whether the evidence is privileged). Only after the preliminary fact issues have been heard and resolved by the court will the evidence be admitted, assuming that the court finds in favor of the proponent of the evidence. On preliminary fact-finding process generally, see §§7.25-7.36.

The court does have discretion under Evid C §403(c), however, to admit the proffered evidence subject to a motion to strike and to let the jury decide whether the preliminary fact exists. This alternative occurs most often in a court trial. However, if it occurs in a jury trial and the jurors determine that the preliminary fact does not exist, they are instructed to disregard the proffered evidence.

III. WAYS TO USE DOCUMENTARY, DEMONSTRATIVE, AND REAL EVIDENCE DURING TRIAL

§13.8 A. As substantive evidence

The principal use of documentary, demonstrative, and real evidence at trial is as "substantive" evidence, i.e., evidence tending to prove or disprove one of the factual contentions of the case. Once it is properly admitted, substantive evidence may be relied on by the factfinder in reaching its conclusion. For example, the following evidence has been held to be substantive evidence supporting a verdict:

- Photographs used to illustrate testimony and as probative evidence of what the photographs depict. People v Bowley (1963) 59 C2d 855, 860, 31 CR 471. See §§13.91-13.93.
- The jury's view of a scene. Hogue v Southern Pac. Co. (1969) 1 C3d 253, 258, 81 CR 765; Downey v Santa Fe Transp. Co. (1955) 134 CA2d 720, 725, 286 P2d 40. See §§13.110-13.111.
- A courtroom demonstration by a witness of how the defendant pointed a gun. People v Buttles (1990) 223 CA3d 1631, 1639, 273 CR 397. See §§13.39-13.41.

See Effective Introduction of Evidence in California, chap 39 (2d ed Cal CEB 2000) on how to introduce particular types of demonstrative and documentary evidence. See also California Expert Witness Guide §§9.15-9.23 (2d ed Cal CEB 1991) on how to use demonstrative evidence with experts at trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.9 B. To refresh recollection

Documentary, demonstrative, and real evidence can be used to refresh a witness's memory that has dimmed over time. Showing a witness an old letter or picture often causes forgotten events to be immediately recalled. The item need not be admissible or admitted to be used for this purpose. Counsel may refresh a witness's memory both before and during trial.

On how to use writings to refresh a witness's recollection and their effect under Evid C §771 generally, see §§9.37, 13.34, 13.124. See also Effective Introduction of Evidence in California, chap 44 (2d ed Cal CEB 2000).

§13.10 C. As past recollection recorded

If a witness is unable to recall certain events at trial that the witness previously remembered, a writing recounting the events can be read into evidence as past recollection recorded under Evid C §1237. The witness need not have been the author of the writing.

Past recollection recorded is an exception to the hearsay rule. See Comment to Evid C §1237. See also §§11.69-11.71 on the rules governing past recollection recorded and the procedures for introducing the writing into evidence. For a sample foundation for past recollection recorded, see Effective Introduction of Evidence in California, chap 38 (2d ed Cal CEB 2000); Laying a Foundation To Introduce Evidence (Preparing and Using Evidence at Trial), step 31 (Cal CEB Action Guide April 2008).

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/13 Trial Exhibits/§13.11 D. To impeach

§13.11 D. To impeach

The use of documentary evidence can play an important role in attacking the credibility of a witness. See Evid C §785. For example, a witness may be impeached during cross-examination through the use of documentary evidence containing:

- A prior inconsistent statement (see Evid C §§780(h), 1202, 1235);
- An admission (see Evid C §§780(k), 1220-1227); or
- A judgment of a felony conviction (see Evid C §§788, 1300).

Documentary evidence from scientific, technical, or professional publications can also be used to cross-examine and impeach an expert witness as long as the testifying expert referred to, considered, or relied on the publication in reaching an opinion; the publication has otherwise already been admitted into evidence; or the publication has been established as a reliable authority. Evid C §721(b). See Luque v McLean (1972) 8 C3d 136, 147, 104 CR 443 (cross-examination properly refused because expert did not refer to publication); McGarity v Department of Transp. (1992) 8 CA4th 677, 685, 10 CR2d 344 (crash-test report properly excluded and cross-examination of department's expert limited). See §11.51 for a sample question and answer demonstrating how to use a scientific text to impeach an expert.

On cross-examination generally, see §§11.82-11.124. On use of discovery materials for impeachment purposes, see §12.39.

§13.12 E. To rehabilitate

Rehabilitation is the presentation of evidence that bolsters the credibility of a witness whose testimony has been attacked. Documentary and demonstrative evidence can be used effectively to rehabilitate a witness because such evidence usually makes a strong impact on a jury.

Evidence Code §791 sets out the conditions under which a witness's prior consistent statement may be used to rehabilitate. A witness's prior consistent statement offered in compliance with Evid C §791 constitutes substantive evidence. Evid C §1236. On rehabilitation of witnesses, see §11.26.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.13 F. As aid for judicial notice

Documentary evidence is often used to aid the court in taking judicial notice of a matter. A party requesting judicial notice under Evid C §452 is required under Evid C §453(b) to give the court sufficient information to enable it to take judicial notice of the matter. Often this information is documentary evidence. See People v Maxwell (1978) 78 CA3d 124, 144 CR 95 (request for judicial notice denied because party failed to furnish court with transcripts needed to take judicial notice of court records). See also Comment to Evid C §453.

The court is required to take judicial notice of certain matters even if it is not requested to do so. Evid C §451. On other matters over which the court has discretion to take judicial notice, see Evid C §452. The rules and procedures pertaining to judicial notice are discussed in detail in chap 14.

§13.14 A. Checklist: Pretrial preparation

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

___ 1. Decide what exhibits are needed. See §13.15.

___ 2. Identify sources for exhibits. See §§13.16-13.20.

___ 3. Ascertain whether particular exhibits are admissible and in what ways. See §§13.21-13.27.

___ 4. Decide when exhibits should be used. See §§13.29-13.32.

___ 5. Organize exhibits. See §13.28.

___ 6. Prepare witnesses to use exhibits. See §§13.33-13.34.

___ 7. Comply with local mandatory pretrial procedures. See §§13.35-13.38.

___ 8. Make special preparations for in-court demonstrations and experiments. See §§13.39-13.41.

§13.15 B. Determining need for exhibits

One of the first steps in preparing for trial is to identify needed exhibits. From the time counsel first takes a case, counsel should be alert to any helpful documentary and real evidence and the need for specially created demonstrative evidence. Evaluate each step of the trial process, including opening statement, direct and cross-examinations of witnesses, closing argument, and appeal. Some evidence (e.g., photographs of injuries or the scene) may be available only if collected at the outset.

Confer with clients, favorable lay witnesses, and expert witnesses in assessing the need for particular exhibits. Consultants specializing in the preparation of demonstrative evidence may also be a valuable source of assistance. Determine whether personal computers and information management software might be useful in preparing exhibits or computer simulations for trial. See §§13.107-13.108.

CAUTION: Don't prepare your case with too many visual aids. Overusing demonstrative and documentary evidence may suggest that you are trying to dazzle the jury with gimmicks. The cost of preparing and presenting extensive documentary and demonstrative evidence can also be prohibitive.

PRACTICE TIP: See Bernstein, The Correct Way To Present Exhibits, 19 CEB Civ Litigation Rep 14 (Feb. 1997), noting that "[t]he law loves the word, but people love pictures" and identifying three common mistakes lawyers make with respect to exhibits: (1) illustrating facts—and usually too many facts—instead of telling the trial story; (2) designing self-explanatory visuals that render the witnesses and lawyer irrelevant; and (3) anticipating the punch line by making the point and then showing it.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/13 Trial Exhibits/§13.16 C. Identifying sources of exhibits

§13.16 C. Identifying sources of exhibits

Demonstrative and documentary evidence may come from a variety of different sources. The evidence may have been:

- In existence before the disputed occurrence;
- Created by the occurrence itself;
- Generated by the pleadings;
- Disclosed during pretrial discovery;
- Developed during informal investigation; or
- Prepared especially for the litigation.

Consider all these sources of evidence and keep careful track of the source of each piece of evidence.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/13 Trial Exhibits/§13.17 1. Formal discovery

§13.17 1. Formal discovery

The largest source of documentary and demonstrative evidence is the material generated during formal discovery, including interrogatories, depositions, requests for production of documents, requests for physical examinations, requests for rights to inspect premises, broad-based powers of subpoena, and requests for admission. On discovery tools generally, see CCP §§2016.010-2036.050.

PRACTICE TIP: Make sure all discovery responses you plan to use at trial have been received from the opposing counsel and verified by the client. When verifications are forgotten and supplied later, they can easily be misfiled.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/13 Trial Exhibits/§13.18 2. Informal discovery and investigation

§13.18 2. Informal discovery and investigation

Informal discovery and investigation includes all means of gathering information without invoking formal discovery vehicles. It may include:

- Obtaining information from the client;
- Hiring an investigator to talk with nonparty witnesses and obtain physical evidence; and
- Investigation by the attorney and the attorney's in-house assistants.

PRACTICE TIP: Avoid being placed in the position of becoming a witness on the client's behalf. See §13.76.

Informal discovery allows counsel to learn facts relevant to the case without having them simultaneously disclosed to the opposing counsel. It also is often less expensive than formal discovery.

© The Regents of the University of California

3. Custom-made exhibits

§13.19 a. Checklist: Need for custom-made exhibit

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

In determining whether to have custom-made exhibits prepared and how to prepare them, consider the following practical considerations:

___ 1. What is the purpose of the exhibit? The intended use of an exhibit dictates how it should be prepared. For example, if the map's only purpose is to provide the jury with a rough view of a particular geographic setting, a scale presentation may be a substantial waste of time and money. The best exhibit is usually the simplest design that satisfies its intended purpose. For discussion of exhibits prepared to scale, see §13.100.

___ 2. How will the exhibit be entered into evidence? Prepare the exhibit with its foundational requirements in mind (e.g., identify witnesses who will be used to lay a foundation, if necessary, and consider having one or more assist in preparing the exhibit). This strategy will ensure the witnesses' ability to vouch for its accuracy. On foundational rules for demonstrative evidence, see §§13.85-13.111.

___ 3. Is the exhibit economically justified? Because expensive custom-made exhibits can be excluded at trial, consider alternative ways of illustrating critical testimony (e.g., use enlarged photographs or documents or the opposing counsel's exhibits, if they have been disclosed).

___ 4. Can opposing counsel use the exhibit against your client? If so, redesign or discard the exhibit.

PRACTICE TIP: If witnesses might be asked to mark on an exhibit that is prepared to scale, consider having transparent overlays prepared to scale so that the witnesses need not mark on the original exhibit. Each witness should mark on the transparency with a different color marker to highlight the differences in testimony. Consider having cutouts or stickers prepared to scale for the witnesses to place on the exhibit. If this technique is used during trial, however, ask the witnesses to trace around the cutouts or stickers to preserve the record in case a cutout or sticker falls off.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/13 Trial Exhibits/§13.20 b. Common examples

§13.20 b. Common examples

It has become common practice to create exhibits specifically for the purpose of trial. The most commonly used custom made exhibits are:

- Charts (see §13.100);
- Maps (see §13.100);
- Models (see §13.100);
- Graphs or diagrams of important facts (see §13.100);
- Photographs or video recordings of scenes, exhibits, or people (see §§13.91-13.98);
- Actual demonstrations conducted in the courtroom (see §§13.39-13.41); and
- Demonstrations simulated by a computer (see §13.108).

These exhibits are needed because of the difficulties in explaining or showing certain facts or principles to the jury. Such difficulties may arise from the factfinder's inability:

- To understand complex data;
- To correlate different facts and organize key events chronologically;
- To "view" the scene of an accident or view an object with the naked eye; or
- To bring a bulky piece of real evidence into the courtroom.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/13 Trial Exhibits/§13.21 D. Determining how evidence can be admitted

§13.21 D. Determining how evidence can be admitted

Well before trial, consider the various means by which you can lay a proper foundation for admissibility of all exhibits helpful to your client's case. In determining the admissibility of any item of documentary, demonstrative or real evidence, check the following:

- The item's relevance to the facts of the case (see §§13.22, 13.85);
- The item's authentication or foundation (see §§13.65-13.84, 13.85-13.111);
- Whether foundational evidence is needed (e.g., it may not be needed if the adverse party has admitted the authenticity of a document through a request for admission, or opposing counsel has stipulated to admissibility; see §§13.66-13.84, 13.86);
- Whether the item complies with the secondary evidence rule (see §13.122);
- Whether the evidence is inadmissible hearsay (see §13.119);
- Whether the evidence is subject to exclusion under Evid C §352 (i.e., it is unduly prejudicial, misleading, or time-consuming; see §13.117) or other statutes; and
- Which witness will introduce each exhibit (see §§13.33-13.34).

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.22 1. Relevance

Relevant evidence is evidence that has "any tendency in reason to prove or disprove any disputed fact that is of consequence to the determination of the action." Evid C §210. It includes evidence bearing on the credibility of a witness or hearsay declarant. Evid C §210.

Evidence may be relevant even though it is created solely for purposes of trial. See, e.g., Culpepper v Volkswagen of Am., Inc. (1973) 33 CA3d 510, 521, 109 CR 110 (film of experiment; experiment must be conducted under substantially similar conditions as those of actual occurrence). See §§13.24, 13.90. Evidence may also be relevant even though its purpose is limited to helping jurors understand a witness's testimony. See, e.g., People v McDaniel (1976) 16 C3d 156, 174, 127 CR 467 (court found model bomb prepared by expert, which was substantially similar to bomb that exploded, to be relevant evidence).

The burden of showing relevancy rests on the proponent of the evidence. Be prepared to state all theories of relevancy of a particular exhibit or evidentiary item. Without an adequate explanation, the court may exclude the evidence. See generally Evid C §§350-352.1.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.23 2. Authenticity

A writing must be authenticated before it, or secondary evidence of its content, may be received in evidence. Evid C §1401. See §13.65 for definition of authentication. To be admissible, the writing must be relevant (see §13.49), comply with the secondary evidence rule (see §13.122), not be inadmissible hearsay, and not be subject to exclusion under Evid C §352 or other statutes.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.24 3. "Substantial similarity"

Certain types of demonstrative evidence (e.g., evidence of experiments) usually require a preliminary showing to support relevance that the conditions reflected in or underlying the proffered evidence are "substantially similar" to those giving rise to the issue to which the evidence is relevant. See Culpepper v Volkswagen of Am., Inc. (1973) 33 CA3d 510, 521, 109 CR 110. See also §13.90 for further discussion.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/13 Trial Exhibits/§13.25 4. Chain of custody

§13.25 4. Chain of custody

The party offering documentary or demonstrative evidence may need to prove the chain of custody of the evidence to establish identity or to show that the evidence has not been altered. See §§13.26-13.27. This need usually arises when:

- The condition or quality of an item of evidence, as of the time of the event giving rise to the lawsuit, is at issue; or
- No witness is able to say that the item in court is the same item or in the same condition as the item involved in the disputed event.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.26 a. Burden of proof

The party offering the evidence has the burden of showing that it is reasonably certain that no alteration occurred. In meeting this burden, the party must take into account all circumstances, including the ease or difficulty with which the evidence could have been altered. People v Riser (1956) 47 C2d 566, 580, 305 P2d 1, disapproved on other grounds in People v Chapman (1959) 52 C2d 95, 98, 338 P2d 428, and in People v Morse (1964) 60 C2d 631, 648, 36 CR 201. See 60 C2d at 649 (introduction of bottle and glass with fingerprints permitted over objection because chain of custody had not been broken).

This burden is not absolute, however, and does not require the party to negate any possibility of tampering. 47 C2d at 580. See also People v Morris (1991) 53 C3d 152, 279 CR 720, overruled on other grounds in People v Stansbury (1995) 9 C4th 824, 830 n1, 38 CR2d 394 (copy of letter written by defendant was admissible over defendant's objections that copy was altered or incomplete); People v Williams (1989) 48 C3d 1112, 1134, 259 CR 473 (despite mishandling of business cards containing fingerprints, prosecution made proper showing that card had not been tampered with).

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.27 b. Procedure to establish chain of custody

The proponent of the evidence must call each person who had possession of the evidence during the crucial period, typically between the date of the disputed event and (1) trial or (2) the testing of the evidence. Testimony from each person is required to establish that the item of evidence is the same or in the same condition as the item involved in the disputed event.

Each witness may be required to testify on the following:

- How, when, and from whom the witness acquired the item of evidence;
- What the witness did with the item while it was in his or her custody;
- Whether the item was in any way modified and, if so, how;
- What the witness did with the item in allowing custody to pass to another person; and
- If the item is present in court, whether it appears to be the same item that was in the witness's custody.

If some link in the chain of possession is not accounted for, the requirement of reasonable certainty may not be met and the court may be required to exclude the evidence. People v Riser (1956) 47 C2d 566, 580, 305 P2d 1, disapproved on other grounds in People v Chapman (1959) 52 C2d 95, 98, 338 P2d 428, and People v Morse (1964) 60 C2d 631, 649, 36 CR 201. If there is mere "speculation that there was tampering," however, "it is proper to admit the evidence and let what doubt remains go to its weight." 47 C2d at 581. See Wagner v Osborn (1964) 225 CA2d 36, 42, 37 CR 27.

PRACTICE TIP: Avoid chain-of-custody problems by careful pretrial handling of evidence and by obtaining pretrial admissions concerning identity of the evidence. Mark or seal the evidence in such a way that you can later attest, to the court's satisfaction, that the evidence is unchanged. For example, scratch your initials or some other identifying mark on a metal part of the item or seal evidence in an envelope or a sealed container, signed by someone who can identify it later. The testimony of the witness who has marked the item or sealed the evidence should be sufficient to lay the foundation for its admissibility without calling other witnesses.

If you anticipate that the evidence will be subject to a chain-of-custody examination, avoid being the sole custodian of any evidence, unless you wish to risk being called to testify later at trial. If you must take possession of evidence, it should be labeled, stored, and protected to avoid the successful raising of ethical questions at trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/13 Trial Exhibits/§13.28 E. Organizing exhibits

§13.28 E. Organizing exhibits

In every lawsuit, counsel should adopt a system for organizing and maintaining evidence so that documents and exhibits can be retrieved efficiently during trial. No single, uniform system is ideal for all cases. Instead, the individual circumstances of each case usually require adaptations. For discussion of an approach to organizing trial materials, see chap 3.

PRACTICE TIP: Anticipate all important objections. Clip a note to the front of each anticipated exhibit, stating the theory of relevancy or irrelevancy, the basis of admissibility or inadmissibility, and a brief citation of supporting authorities. Prepare a formal written brief to present to the court if the issues involved are complicated or unusual.

To keep track of exhibits during trial, prepare an exhibit log that lists exhibits in the order you plan to introduce them at trial. The log will serve as a ready reference to the status of all documents marked for identification and offered into evidence. During trial, this log should be updated as documents are introduced. Occasionally you should compare the information appearing on the exhibit log with the clerk's record to ensure that they correspond in all details. If there is a discrepancy, the transcript should be checked to determine which record is correct. The exhibit log should be kept in a separate file or in the trial notebook. For a sample exhibit log, see §13.140. See also §3.31.

PRACTICE TIP: If any group of documents is such that it tests a juror's attention span, i.e., ten pages or more, prepare a summary of the documents under Evid C §1523(d). See People v Southern Cal. Edison Co. (1976) 56 CA3d 593, 605, 128 CR 697 (one-page summary of numerous pages of details supporting large dollar-value damage claim).

When organizing exhibits, verify that all obligations to disclose exhibits during discovery have been fulfilled. Failure of counsel to produce an exhibit that was properly requested by opposing counsel can preclude its admission once trial begins. See CCP §2023.030(c), CCP §2031.320(c), discussed in §13.118. See Zellerino v Brown (1991) 235 CA3d 1097, 1 CR2d 222 (failure to disclose experts in timely manner barred testimony at trial); Thoren v Johnston & Washer (1972) 29 CA3d 270, 105 CR 276 (willful omission of witness's name from answer to interrogatory barred his testimony at trial). See also Vallbona v Springer (1996) 43 CA4th 1525, 51 CR2d 311 (court of appeal affirmed trial court judgment that discovery sanctions imposed at trial, which prohibited defendants from presenting certain evidence due to defendant's noncompliance with discovery, were appropriate under former CCP §2023(b)(2) (now CCP §2023.030(b)).

Such oversights usually may be corrected if they are discovered by erring counsel before trial begins. See Zellerino v Brown, supra (court has power under CCP §473 to grant relief from an untimely demand for discovery of expert witnesses). In extreme situations, however, sanctions ranging from exclusion of the exhibit to entry of judgment against the nondisclosing party may be imposed.

As a final step in organizing exhibits, verify that all local mandatory pretrial procedures have been satisfied. See §§13.34-13.38. On completing pretrial procedures generally, see chap 2.

NOTE: Many attorneys use personal computers and information management software in their practices and during trial. Software can be used to name and index evidence or exhibits for trial; cross-reference case information by subject matter, date, or name; summarize depositions; and make a record of all documents produced by each party. On organizing trial materials generally, see chap 3.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/13 Trial Exhibits/§13.29 F. Determining when to use exhibit; tactical considerations

§13.29 F. Determining when to use exhibit; tactical considerations

An exhibit should be presented in court at the time it will yield the best result. In many instances, this may be as early as the opening statement. For example, counsel should introduce the exhibit early in the trial in the following circumstances:

- It contains information critical to understanding the basic issues in the case;
- More than one witness will need to refer to the exhibit while testifying; or
- Certain testimony in the case depends on having the exhibit already in evidence.

In other circumstances, however, counsel may conclude that the maximum impact or advantage can be gained by withholding the exhibit until rebuttal.

CAUTION: If "rebuttal evidence" is essential to proof of your prima facie case, you may be precluded from introducing the evidence by waiting until rebuttal to do so. See CCP §607(3), (6).

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.30 1. During opening statement

If you plan to use documentary, demonstrative, or real evidence during the opening statement, first obtain the court's permission even if the opposing counsel has stipulated to the use of such evidence. Los Angeles Ct R 8.40. If there is any question about admissibility of the evidence, the court will probably deny the request.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.31 2. During trial

Consider whether the surprise use of an exhibit can be a strategic advantage. Traditionally, attorneys try to withhold disclosure of exhibits they intend to use until the last moment, particularly when opposing counsel is not already aware of an exhibit or may not have anticipated how it will be used at trial. However, with the increase of formal discovery and mandatory disclosure of exhibits at or before the commencement of trial (see §§13.17-13.30), the ability to surprise opposing counsel with an exhibit has greatly diminished.

WARNING: If the exhibit is a critical one, consider the risk that surprising opposing counsel could result in the granting of a continuance to prepare a response or the presenting of a motion for a new trial based on misconduct.

Nevertheless, if procedurally possible, early disclosure should be avoided because it gives opposing counsel time to consider possible objections, plan ways of diminishing the impact of the exhibit, and prepare witnesses to answer questions about it. Similarly, premature disclosure of an exhibit to a jury can diminish the dramatic impact of confronting the adverse witness with it.

PRACTICE TIP: Consider enhancing the dramatic impact of an exhibit by wrapping it to disguise its identity and carrying it into the courtroom each day in a conspicuous manner. Jurors' curiosity should be sufficiently piqued that, when the exhibit is finally revealed, it will leave an indelible impression on them. Opposing counsel, however, should promptly seek an order requiring that the item be brought into court only when it is actually used. Allowing an exhibit to be displayed before it is admitted into evidence may constitute attorney misconduct. See generally People v Fusaro (1971) 18 CA3d 877, 886, 96 CR 368. See also §16.86.

When an exhibit is large, you should calculate when during trial it should be carried into the courtroom. You may want to have a large exhibit admitted into evidence as early as possible. In many instances, large exhibits that have been admitted into evidence remain in the jury's full view from the time they are admitted until after the verdict is returned, unless opposing counsel takes appropriate steps to prevent this. Try to have such an exhibit removed from the jury's view by having it removed from the courtroom or covered up, especially if the exhibit might prejudice the jurors (e.g., an enlarged photograph of the victim's injuries).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/13 Trial Exhibits/§13.32 3. During closing argument

§13.32 3. During closing argument

During closing argument, counsel has an opportunity to review the evidence and refer to and explain exhibits that may have been overlooked or not fully understood. The use of documentary, demonstrative, and real evidence during closing argument can make the spoken word more persuasive.

The fact that an exhibit has been received in evidence does not mean that the jurors know its content, appreciate its significance, or even remember it. When a favorable exhibit is important, direct the jurors' attention to it by describing it, referring to its exhibit number, and holding it up or placing it in front of the jurors. Explain to the jury in clear terms why the exhibit demonstrates that your client should prevail.

Consider reading critical portions of the exhibit aloud or having them displayed by enlargement or overhead projector. If the court has agreed under CCP §612 that jurors can take certain exhibits into the jury room, remind the jurors during closing argument that they may inspect these exhibits during jury deliberations. See §21.29 for further discussion of items that the jurors may take into the jury room during deliberations.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/13 Trial Exhibits/ G. Preparing witnesses to use exhibits/§13.33 1. Review exhibit with witness

G. Preparing witnesses to use exhibits

§13.33 1. Review exhibit with witness

Before a favorable witness takes the stand, discuss with the witness each item of documentary, demonstrative, and real evidence the witness will be asked about, indicating the general or specific questions that will be asked and discussing the answers with them. Discuss the significance of each of the questions and answers, so that the witness will understand why questions are being asked on both direct examination and cross-examination.

If the witness will be confronted with exhibits on cross-examination, show them to the witness and discuss areas of anticipated inquiry. It is usually best not to have a favorable witness surprised by any exhibit during direct examination, cross-examination, or redirect examination.

If the witness will participate in a demonstration during trial, the demonstration should be practiced until the witness feels comfortable in conducting it. See §13.34. Thorough witness preparation should make the witness more confident on the stand, better able to deal with unexpected areas of questioning, and less likely to make inadvertent mistakes.

WARNING: The witness should not sound so rehearsed that the testimony sounds canned and unconvincing.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.34 2. Exhibit used to refresh recollection must be produced

In determining which exhibits to show to a witness, consider the effect of Evid C §771, which requires writings used to refresh a witness's memory to be produced on demand of the adverse party unless production is excused under Evid C §771(c). The adverse party may "inspect the writing, cross-examine the witness concerning it, and introduce into evidence such portion of it as may be pertinent to the testimony of the witness." Evid C §771(b). If such a writing is not produced on demand, the witness's testimony on the matter must be stricken. Evid C §771(a). See also International Ins. Co. v Montrose Chem. Corp. (1991) 231 CA3d 1367, 282 CR 783 (documents used to refresh deponent's recollection must be produced on request). See §§11.63-11.68 for a more detailed discussion of using exhibits to refresh a witness's recollection.

CAUTION: If the writing used to refresh recollection is subject to the attorney work-product privilege, the privilege is waived and the exhibit must be produced at trial at the request of an adverse party who may use it in accordance with Evid C §771. See §5.5. If the writing used to refresh recollection is subject to the attorney-client privilege, however, the law is unclear on whether an adverse party may inspect it and use it in the manner provided in Evid C §771. See §5.6.

H. Complying with local mandatory pretrial procedures

§13.35 1. Exchange of exhibit lists

Local court rules or policies may require counsel to prepare and exchange, before the start of trial, a list of all exhibits that counsel intends to use, except possibly those to be used solely for impeachment or rebuttal. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(h) (counsel must have exchanged and filed lists of prenumbered exhibits 5 days before final status conference); Mendocino Ct R 5.3(k); Ventura Ct R 8.12(E).

WARNING: When an exhibit is not disclosed on the exhibit list, the court may exclude it from the trial unless good cause is shown. Cottle v Superior Court (1992) 3 CA4th 1367, 5 CR2d 882 (court excluded evidence of personal injuries based on plaintiffs' failure to provide adequate pretrial disclosure of prima facie case in court's mandated disclosure).

Local court rules or policies may require that counsel exchange or make available to opposing counsel various exhibits before commencement of trial. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(h).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/13 Trial Exhibits/§13.37 3. Stipulations on admissibility

§13.37 3. Stipulations on admissibility

Local court rules or policies may require that counsel meet before the trial date to attempt to work out stipulations waiving foundations for admissibility and objections on evidence they intend to use. Procedures also have been adopted in many courts requiring counsel who have objections to proposed exhibits to advise the court of the objections. See, e.g., Mendocino Ct R 5.5. See §13.141 for Sample Stipulation Regarding Use of Documents at Trial.

When there are written stipulations that certain exhibits can be immediately received in evidence, file these stipulations before trial and request a conference in chambers with the judge and opposing counsel so that the court may formally order the exhibits into evidence. This order may be in writing or may be made orally by the court in the presence of the court reporter. Make sure that the court clerk is aware of the order, so that the clerk's record accurately reflects receipt of the evidence.

PRACTICE TIP: Some attorneys prefer to make offers of evidence before the jury for tactical reasons. As a result, the stipulation can provide that the evidence will be admitted only when offered. The stipulation should be filed with the court at the commencement of trial, but the request for the court to act on it can usually be made at an appropriate time during the trial itself.

§13.38 4. Premarking exhibits

Many courts either formally or informally require that anticipated exhibits be marked for identification at a time other than just before a witness is examined about them in court. See Los Angeles Ct R 8.60-8.61. In other counties, informal premarking must be done on the date it is to be used, but before trial commences for that day. See, e.g., Yolo Ct R 15.3. Check local court rules and policies to ascertain whether any similar requirements have been adopted.

NOTE: To expedite the trial and permit counsel to better organize their trial papers, consider stipulating that exhibits will be premarked.

I. Preparing for demonstrations and experiments; using photographs and video recordings

1. Demonstrations and experiments

§13.39 a. Planning required before trial

If you plan to have a demonstration or experiment conducted during trial, begin working on the project well before trial. Determine:

- The issues for which a demonstration/experiment will be helpful;
- Exactly what type of demonstration or experiment to conduct;
- How to lay the requisite foundation for admissibility of the demonstration or experiment; and
- The specific witnesses or experts who will be needed to conduct or comment on the demonstration or experiment.

On laying a foundation for admissibility of demonstrations or experiments, see §§13.85-13.111. On preparing witnesses to use exhibits, see §§13.33-13.34.

Logistical problems are often encountered in the use of demonstrations or experiments that are not encountered with other forms of evidence. To avoid such problems, visit the courtroom before trial and before the creation of demonstrative exhibits, if possible, to examine the following:

- Access to courtroom. Make sure all demonstrative exhibits and equipment will fit through the doorways and that the court's security services will not create problems.
- Space in the courtroom. Make sure there is enough room in the courtroom to display all exhibits so that they can be easily seen and used.
- Lighting. Make sure the courtroom lighting is suitable for the types of exhibits or demonstrations that are contemplated. In some courtrooms, dimmed lights will not go on again immediately.
- Monitor placement. If video presentations will be made, look for appropriate placement of video monitors. In many instances, two monitors will be required for the jury, a third for the judge, and a fourth for the counsel table.
- Electrical outlets. Make sure the courtroom has enough electrical outlets in the right places for video and other electronic equipment. Note where extension cords will be needed.
- Presence of necessary equipment. Make certain that any equipment necessary for the demonstration is available and suitable for the courtroom in which the demonstration will be conducted. Check the courtroom for necessary chalkboards, easels, chalk, marking pens, tape, tacks, and other items that counsel intends to use.
- Size and location of exhibits. Sit in every seat of the jury box to make sure that the exhibits will be the right size and in the right place to be effective.

PRACTICE TIP: Consult local rules and procedures to ascertain whether there are any requirements or prohibitions relating to demonstrations or experiments in the courtroom. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.40, 8.74.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.40 b. Prior notice of demonstration or experiment recommended

If you plan to conduct a demonstration or experiment during trial, inform the court and adverse counsel in advance, e.g., at a pretrial conference in chambers.

On the day you intend to present the demonstration or experiment in court, again advise the court and opposing counsel of counsel's intention before the trial session begins. Opposing counsel may move in limine to exclude the demonstration or experiment. The court also may require that a preliminary hearing on the admissibility of the evidence be conducted outside the jury's presence (see chap 7). Thus, at either of these times, you should be prepared with a brief in support of admissibility of the evidence in case it is needed. On motions in limine, see §§13.130, 13.134. See generally chap 7.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.41 c. Preparations on day of demonstration or experiment

On the day of the demonstration or experiment, arrive at the courtroom as early as possible to do any necessary advance work in setting up the demonstration. A demonstration must be performed professionally and efficiently to be persuasive. Long delays in setting up equipment or problems in making them run can diminish the demonstration's effect and reflect badly on counsel. Move through the demonstration or experiment at a brisk pace, in a manner that is interesting, entertaining, and educational. Use language during the demonstration or experiment that jurors will easily understand.

Be sufficiently comfortable with the demonstration to deal with any unexpected problems. For example, do not be so tied to notes that unexpected developments cause a confusing demonstration. Because demonstrations and experiments typically involve technical terminology and principles beyond common experience, make certain that the jury has been given a full enough explanation of the underlying concepts and language to understand the significance of the evidence.

If a courtroom demonstration may be dangerous, the court may order that the demonstration take place outside the courtroom. In a fuel-tank fire case, for instance, the court may need to move outside the courtroom to watch a fireman demonstrate how a fireman's pick could make holes in a fuel tank.

PRACTICE TIP: Make an audio or video recording of the demonstration or experiment performed during trial to make sure there is a complete record on appeal. Obtain court approval for such audiotaping or videotaping.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.42 2. Photographs and video recordings

Pictures, whether still or moving, are one of counsel's most versatile courtroom tools. They allow the jury to view both very small and very large objects in the comfort of the courtroom. They can illustrate the place where an incident took place or show the type of objects involved in a dispute. They can show the condition of real property before and after certain events, or injuries suffered by a party as they appeared just after an accident. They can bring otherwise dry evidence to life, often holding the jurors' attention more effectively than words.

Video recordings can provide a more dramatic version of events than photographs and illustrate motion in appropriate circumstances. For example, only a video can illustrate moving traffic or flowing water. Of course, counsel planning to use video recordings must provide the necessary equipment and make sure it can be used in the courtroom.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.43 a. Considerations in taking photographs and making video recordings

Before trial, counsel should be alert for opportunities to use pictures because a good picture can be better than several good witnesses. A photograph is not only more graphic and reliable than verbal testimony, but it also preserves evidence that might not be available at the time of trial because of subsequent repairs.

EXAMPLE: In a street defect case in which counsel wants to show the size of a hole or defect in the pavement, an effective method is to take photographs of a yardstick placed in the hole to show its depth and across the top to show its length and width.

Whenever possible, consider accompanying the photographer to the location to be photographed or video recorded. Then you can be certain that the results represent exactly what you want. The manner in which the picture is taken may be important.

EXAMPLE: If a picture of a marked crosswalk is desired, a photograph taken from the roof of a building looking down on the crosswalk may benefit the plaintiff's case. The lines of the crosswalk generally stand out clearly, and it appears to be what it was created for: a sanctuary for pedestrians.

While filming, counsel should closely supervise the technician to curb any tendencies to interpret the subject creatively. Ensure that the technician makes a good record of the techniques and equipment used in operating the camera, e.g., the type of camera, lens, and filters; lighting conditions; shutter speeds; and the distance between camera and subject. The technician should be available to testify, if necessary, although such testimony is not usually required.

CAUTION: Do not act as your own photographer. If accuracy or fairness of a photograph is questioned, you may be put in the embarrassing position of testifying on the methods used in taking it, the precautions against distortion of perspective, and the photograph's authenticity. A professional photographer or objective third person should take photographs intended for use as evidence.

See §§13.91-13.93 for discussion of how to lay a proper foundation for introduction of a photograph.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.44 b. Uses for photographs and video recordings at trial

Photographs can be used for many purposes. For example, they may be used to reproduce fingerprints, to compare handwriting when there is a question of forgery, to establish identity, to illustrate similarities or differences in fibers and other materials as seen through a microscope, and to illustrate the results of ballistic tests. Photographs showing vehicle damage, skid marks, road signs, visibility, and distances usually can illustrate a point much better than oral testimony.

Color photographs and slides are also of inestimable value in presenting medical evidence. Contusions, abrasions, and lacerations may be ugly and striking in the early stages of treatment but disappear long before the case comes to trial. A doctor's testimony that a bruise was a certain size and badly discolored makes far less impression than a colored photograph showing that there was a real basis for the patient's complaints and residual problems. When plastic surgery is required (e.g., in a burn case), colored photographs should be taken regularly to show the patient's progress and the surgical work required. Photographs should be taken before and after skin grafting and other reconstructive work is done. Similarly, photographs showing the patient in a cast, in traction, or wearing a neck brace may also be helpful in illustrating treatment and the patient's discomfort.

Aerial photography can be helpful in certain cases to show large sections of highway or land. For example, aerial photographs have been used to show areas affected by air pollution, to show the location of witnesses in proximity to the scene of an accident, or to depict an area of a city for zoning purposes. Aerial photographs can also be used to create three-dimensional models.

NOTE: It is best to use a dull finish on photographs that will be enlarged and presented at trial, because it is difficult to mark photographs with a glossy finish. In a case in which intricate details of a photograph are important, however, a glossy photograph should be used because it usually provides finer detail.

Video recordings can also be very useful at trial. For example, they have been used to show "a day in the life" of an injured plaintiff (see §13.95) and the vantage point of a key witness (see People v Rodrigues (1994) 8 C4th 1060, 36 CR2d 235).

V. HANDLING EXHIBITS DURING TRIAL

§13.45 A. Procedural guidelines for offering exhibits into evidence

The procedures for using documentary, demonstrative, or real evidence during trial depend somewhat on the nature of the evidence, the court's pretrial procedures, whether foundational prerequisites have been satisfied by stipulation, and whether the exhibit is being used on direct examination or cross-examination.

Although one procedural approach is not suitable for all types of evidence, the guidelines discussed in the following sections can assist counsel in deciding how to offer exhibits into evidence properly and how to use exhibits even if they are not offered into evidence:

- Mark for identification (see §§13.46-13.49);
- Disclose to opposing counsel (see §§13.50-13.51);
- Disclose to judge (see §13.52);
- Demonstrate admissibility of exhibit (see §§13.53-13.54);
- Offer exhibit into evidence (see §13.55);
- Obtain court's ruling on admissibility (see §§13.56-13.57); and
- Disclose substance of exhibit to jury (see §§13.59-13.60).

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.46 1. Mark for identification

The first step in handling an exhibit to be offered into evidence is to have it marked for purposes of identification. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.60-8.62. Marking an exhibit for identification, once it is formally logged by the court clerk, places it under the court's custody and control until it is released by court order or destroyed. See CCP §§1952-1952.3; Los Angeles Ct R 8.73.

PRACTICE TIP: Make sure all exhibits are marked for identification because once the exhibit is marked, it becomes part of the clerk's record and can be designated as part of the record on appeal.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.47 a. When to mark

The point during trial when the exhibit should be marked varies from court to court. Traditionally, the court clerk marked an exhibit when a witness was first to be asked about it. While the witness was on the stand, counsel would ask the clerk, in the jury's presence, to mark a particular item "for purposes of identification." All participants in the trial would then wait while the clerk placed an identifying mark on the exhibit and logged it in the clerk's record. Counsel would then take the item back from the clerk, show it to opposing counsel and possibly to the court, and then begin to ask the witness questions about it.

Because this process is generally time consuming and dull, many courts now require that exhibits be premarked, e.g., marked before trial begins or when the court is not in session and before counsel begins questioning the witness. When premarking is not practical or required by the court, however, the court will allow counsel to mark an exhibit in the middle of a witness's examination, e.g., evidence used during cross-examination to respond to unanticipated testimony or to impeach the witness. In such cases, the court will only ask that the clerk tell counsel, before examining the witness, what the number of the new exhibit will be. Actual marking of the exhibit is completed after counsel has examined the witness or during a break in the proceedings. Local court rules or policies may cover this situation. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.61.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/13 Trial Exhibits/§13.48 b. Manner of marking

§13.48 b. Manner of marking

The specific manner in which an exhibit will be marked depends largely on its individual characteristics and local practice. Generally, two-dimensional exhibits should be marked on their face by using an exhibit stamp, a gummed label, or a written notation. It is good practice to consistently locate the mark as near as possible to the bottom of the exhibit. Using this location speeds up subsequent identification of the exhibit, especially when copies or exhibits are bound together at the top. Make sure, however, that the identification mark does not cover entries in the exhibit.

Although marking an exhibit on the back is not improper, this practice should be used only when absolutely necessary. Although marks on the back of an exhibit may be adequate to identify the original exhibit at trial, difficulties may arise in handling copies at trial and on appeal.

When three-dimensional exhibits are marked, consider using gummed labels and tags wired to the exhibit. The identifying mark should be firmly attached to the exhibit so that constant handling will not remove the mark during trial or afterwards.

PRACTICE TIP: Before marking an exhibit, check whether there are any local rules or policies on the manner of marking exhibits. Also make sure that no problems will be created by marking the originals.

PRACTICE TIP: Video recordings, CD-ROMs, and computers are used to store images of the documents in large document cases so that the documents can be retrieved onto video screens rather than being physically handled in the courtroom. This practice allows everyone in the courtroom the chance to review the documents at the same time the witness is testifying about them. If exhibits will be handled in this way in your case, ask to have the video recording, computer disk, or compact disks marked as exhibits.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.49 c. Content of mark

The content of the identifying mark depends on the practice of the individual court. To preserve a record for appeal, however, the exhibit tag should include the following:

- Case name;
- Case number or docket number;
- Sponsoring party;
- Letter or number identification; and
- An indication of whether the exhibit was admitted into evidence or is marked only "for identification."

The exhibit mark may also include the date of marking, the clerk's name, and the court's department number.

Some courts require that numbers (e.g., 1, 2, 3) be used for exhibits offered by the plaintiff and letters (e.g., A, B, C) be assigned to items offered by the defendant. If this system is followed when there are multiple parties on a side, counsel may be required to mark exhibits with a party's name or initials, followed by a number (for exhibits offered by the plaintiff; e.g., "Smith-1") or letter (for exhibits offered by the defendant; e.g., "Jones-A"). For a collection of related or integrated documents (e.g., medical records from a particular hospital), you may be required to mark the entire collection as a single exhibit and then designate each individual document within the group with a subnumber such as "A-1," "A-2."

Courts sometimes require that only numbers be used in large document cases to avoid having exhibits marked with multiple letters. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.62. When there are more than 100 exhibits, the number of letters necessary to identify each exhibit quickly becomes burdensome and confusing. For example, a document that could be marked as "Exhibit 150" would be designated as "Exhibit TTTTTT" if letters were used. It is extremely hard for a court reporter to differentiate between "Exhibit W" and "Exhibit Double U," "Exhibit TTTT" and "Exhibit TTTTT," or "Exhibit 40" and "Exhibit Four T."

When only numbers are used, the parties should begin numbering the documents in sequence, starting with different numbers. For example, the plaintiff may be allocated numbers 1-500, and the first defendant numbers 500-1000. In large document cases, the judge may require that counsel meet and number their exhibits together in strict numerical sequence (e.g., "Plaintiff's Exhibit 1-100," "Defendant's Exhibit 101-200").

NOTE: Even when specific local rules or policies apply, the parties may be able to stipulate with court approval to another marking system or a judge may prefer that another system be used, e.g., a straight numerical system for all exhibits.

2. Disclose to opposing counsel

§13.50 a. Disclosure before trial

Some local pretrial rules require that counsel make exhibits available to opposing counsel before trial. See §§13.30-13.31 for local rules on the exchange of exhibits.

If local rules do not exist on this issue, consider stipulating with opposing counsel to disclose exhibits before trial. This process could be coupled with an effort to work out stipulations on admissibility of the exhibits. Such stipulations are often discussed at the pretrial conference. See §6.3. In deciding whether to agree to such a stipulation, consider whether some exhibits would be better kept undisclosed, whether the failure to disclose would be preclusive (and, if so, in what circumstances), and whether opposing counsel can be trusted. On stipulations, see §13.37 (use of pretrial stipulations). See also §§13.67 (use with documentary evidence) and 13.86 (use with demonstrative evidence). For Sample Stipulation Regarding Use of Documents at Trial, see §13.141.

NOTE: If an exhibit is a writing that will be shown to a witness, all parties to the action must be given an opportunity to inspect it before the witness is asked about it at trial. Evid C §768(b). Even if the exhibit is not a writing, good practice dictates that opposing counsel be given an opportunity to inspect the exhibit so that objections may be made before disclosure. See Los Angeles Ct R 8.64. On an objection for failure to show a writing to other counsel, see §13.125.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.51 b. Disclosure during trial

If local rules do not require disclosure of exhibits before trial, disclosure to opposing counsel can be delayed until the specific court session at which the exhibit will be used. Disclosure is often accomplished at the same time counsel asks the court clerk to mark the exhibit for purposes of identification (see §13.46). Such disclosure allows opposing counsel to make objections before the jury is aware of the exhibit.

Disclosure could also be delayed by counsel until the moment the exhibit will be used at trial. Although many attorneys routinely use this last method of disclosure, it has certain disadvantages and risks. Because the disclosure takes place during the trial session itself, it necessarily requires an interruption in the proceedings—generally to the annoyance of both judge and jury. If this practice is repeated, the court may intervene to stop it. Additionally, because opposing counsel is entitled to examine the tendered exhibit, offering counsel should expect that the examination will be interrupted by opposing counsel, who may believe that an interruption will help defuse a damaging line of questioning or allow the witness a few moments to think.

WARNING: Late disclosure of an exhibit creates the possibility that it will be excluded. If the court perceives that counsel is relying on surprise tactics unfairly, it may resolve close questions of admissibility in favor of exclusion. The court may also find that counsel has overlooked some obligation to disclose the exhibit earlier, such as during discovery or pretrial preparations, thereby warranting the exhibit's suppression. Martinez v City of Poway (1993) 12 CA4th 425, 15 CR2d 644, disapproved on other grounds in Bonds v Roy (1999) 20 C4th 140, 149 n4, 83 CR2d 289; Do It Urself Moving & Storage, Inc. v Brown, Leifer, Slatkin & Berns (1992) 7 CA4th 27, 34, 9 CR2d 396.

In-court disclosure of exhibits also carries an inherent risk of mistrial. Although most documents can be disclosed to opposing counsel in open court without the jury's necessarily becoming aware of their contents, this is not true of other types of exhibits. If such an exhibit is inflammatory or unduly prejudicial, the court may not only exclude it but may also reprimand counsel for misconduct or grant a mistrial because of the jury's exposure to it. On attorney misconduct generally, see chap 16.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/13 Trial Exhibits/§13.52 3. Disclose to judge

§13.52 3. Disclose to judge

When questioning a witness about an exhibit, provide the judge with the original exhibit, a copy of it, or both. This practice will give the judge an opportunity to study the exhibit at the same time as the witness is testifying about it. If an exhibit contains sensitive or confidential material or for some other reason may be excluded, judges generally require counsel to disclose the intention to use the exhibit beforehand, so that the court can rule on its admissibility before any prejudice occurs. See Los Angeles Ct R 8.46. See also People v Fusaro (1971) 18 CA3d 877, 96 CR 368 (court of appeal cautioned that trial court should not tolerate attorney who deliberately permits jury to see exhibit that is not in evidence).

PRACTICE TIP: Before going to court, make enough copies of the documents you plan to introduce so that individual copies can be provided to the court, each attorney, and each juror in certain situations. If you are the interrogating attorney, retain an additional copy so that you will have a copy to use while the witness answers questions about the original. When it is important for a party, a witness, or another person to retain possession of the original document, make one final copy to be substituted for the original (with the court's approval) in the clerk's record.

© The Regents of the University of California

4. Demonstrate admissibility of exhibit

§13.53 a. Establish foundational facts

Before an exhibit can be received in evidence, sufficient foundational facts should be developed by counsel to show that the exhibit is admissible. This may be accomplished by showing the court a stipulation from opposing counsel permitting admissibility. See §§13.37 (use of pretrial stipulations), 13.67 (use with documentary evidence), 13.86 (use with demonstrative evidence).

When stipulations are not available and the existence of a preliminary fact is disputed, a preliminary hearing is generally required. At the hearing, the court will determine whether counsel has submitted sufficient evidence to sustain a finding of the preliminary fact necessary for admissibility. Evid C §402(b). The evidentiary rules governing the preliminary hearing are discussed in detail in §§7.25-7.26.

The purpose for authenticating a document or laying the foundation for an exhibit is twofold:

- To prove to the court that the exhibit is admissible; and
- To persuade the jurors to reach a decision in reliance on it.

Thus, the foundation-laying process should not be approached in a perfunctory manner. Instead, make the procedure as interesting as possible—emphasizing the exhibit's important qualities by the timing, tone, and content of the questions. If the exhibit is truly important, act that way about it.

PRACTICE TIP: If you wish the jury to ignore an exhibit (e.g., when you disclose an exhibit that is prejudicial to your case merely to diminish the effect of the opponent's use of it), your demeanor should reflect a lack of interest in the exhibit or at least a lack of alarm about its disclosure.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

▶ To download WordPerfect version, right click and choose Save Target As

To establish foundational facts, you should:

___ 1. Verify that the exhibit has been marked and disclosed to opposing counsel before the witness is asked any questions about it. See §§13.46-13.51.

___ 2. Provide a copy of the exhibit to the opponent and the judge. See §§13.50-13.52.

___ 3. Ask for the court's permission to approach the witness, if required by local rules.

PRACTICE TIP: Check local rules to see whether you must first obtain the court's permission to hand the exhibit to a witness. Local practice varies greatly on this. See, e.g., Shasta County Unified R 4.06(c) (counsel must first obtain court's permission before handing exhibits that have been admitted into evidence to jurors in jury box). But see Los Angeles Ct R 8.10 and Sacramento Ct R 7.02, under which counsel need not have the court's permission to approach a witness to show a document or other object, unless the court directs otherwise.

___ 4. Clearly identify the exhibit to be viewed by the witness so that the record accurately reflects which exhibit the witness is looking at.

PRACTICE TIP: When identifying an exhibit in court, refer to the exhibit's identifying mark (e.g., "Plaintiff's Exhibit 1") and provide a general description of the exhibit (e.g., "a typewritten letter, dated February 20, 1992"). This description, however, should not disclose the substantive content of the exhibit. See Los Angeles Ct R 8.63.

___ 5. Give the witness an opportunity to look at the exhibit before beginning the questioning.

___ 6. Ask the necessary questions to authenticate the document (see §§13.65-13.84) or to lay a proper foundation for the demonstrative evidence (see §§13.85-13.111) or real evidence (see §§13.111-13.112). For general rules of admissibility, see §§13.21-13.27.

___ 7. Request that the court allow the exhibit to be admitted into evidence. See §13.55.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/13 Trial Exhibits/§13.55 5. Offer exhibit into evidence

§13.55 5. Offer exhibit into evidence

Once all the foundational prerequisites have been satisfied, ask the court to admit the exhibit into evidence. This request is described by some as a motion and by others as an offer. In this context, the two terms are synonymous.

Typically, the request takes one of the following forms:

> Your Honor, I ask that Plaintiff's Exhibit 1 be received in evidence or

> Your Honor, I move that Plaintiff's Exhibit 1 be admitted into evidence.

When the nature of the exhibit is not apparent, consider again describing the exhibit:

> Your Honor, at this time plaintiff offers into evidence Plaintiff's Exhibit 2, a letter from Mr. Hopkins to Ms. Brown, dated April 18, 1995.

When the formal offer is made, the court generally looks at opposing counsel to determine whether there is any objection to the exhibit's being received. If there is no objection or the court determines that those made are without merit, the exhibit will be admitted into evidence.

Exhibits should be offered into evidence as soon as reasonably practicable. When the evidence is self-authenticating, the formal offer can be made in chambers to the court even before the opening statements. See §13.78 on self-authenticating documents. When foundational testimony is necessary, the exhibit should be formally offered as soon as sufficient facts have been established to show prima facie admissibility and to overcome any anticipated objections.

PRACTICE TIP: Offer exhibits into evidence individually or in small, logical groups, rather than accumulating a substantial number of exhibits and then offering them into evidence all at once at the end of the party's case. See Los Angeles Ct R 8.65. On reoffering exhibits into evidence en masse, see §13.61.

WARNING: Make sure the formal offer and any reoffers of evidence are reflected in the court reporter's transcript. See §§13.56-13.57 on the obligation of an offering party to obtain a definite ruling on admissibility of matter taken under consideration. The exhibit log described in §13.28 is an essential tool in avoiding the disastrous consequences of establishing all prerequisite facts but failing to obtain formal admission into evidence for each exhibit. For a sample exhibit log, see §13.140.

If the court excludes the evidence with a statement that it may be offered later after additional foundational evidence has been presented, the proponent of the evidence must formally reoffer the exhibit before the close of evidence. Failure to make this follow-up offer constitutes a waiver of any error on appeal. Spanfelner v Meyer (1942) 51 CA2d 390, 392, 124 P2d 862. On reoffering exhibits generally, see §13.61.

6. Obtain court's ruling on admissibility

§13.56 a. Court's failure to make immediate ruling

After a specific exhibit has been offered into evidence, make sure the court makes a decision on the record of the exhibit's admissibility. 3 Witkin, California Evidence, Presentation at Trial §§387-390 (4th ed 2000). If the court declines to make an immediate ruling on an offer of evidence (e.g., because an objection has been interposed), but indicates that the matter will be taken under consideration (or submission), the parties may not refer to the evidence during the intervening period. In such circumstances, the party offering the exhibit may need to remind the court of the pending offer and of the need for a definite decision. See Spanfelner v Meyer (1942) 51 CA2d 390, 392, 124 P2d 862.

The court can make any of the following potential rulings:

- Admit the exhibit for all purposes and against all parties;
- Exclude the exhibit completely;
- Admit the exhibit but limit its use to certain purposes or against certain parties (see Evid C §355; see also §13.120);
- Admit the exhibit but excise portions from it (see §13.122);
- Decline to admit the evidence for a reason that can be remedied with additional foundational evidence; or
- Admit the evidence on a provisional basis, reserving a final ruling on admissibility until later in the trial or subject to a later motion to strike (see Gribaldo, Jacobs, Jones & Assocs. v Agrippina Versicherunges A.G. (1970) 3 C3d 434, 443 n6, 91 CR 6; see also §13.57 on provisional admission of evidence).

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.57 b. Provisional admission of evidence

The court, particularly in bench trials, may decide to provisionally admit certain evidence when it believes that the evidence will prove to be admissible but recognizes the need to hear additional testimony. 3 Witkin, California Evidence, Presentation at Trial §52 (4th ed 2000). In such a situation, rather than require witnesses to be recalled to the stand after the additional testimony has been heard, the court may allow the exhibit to be used on a provisional basis. This alternative allows the first witness to be asked questions about the exhibit, even though the full foundation for the exhibit's admission will not come until a later witness's testimony.

The practice of provisionally admitting evidence in jury trials has been criticized. California courts have held that the provisional admission of evidence may prejudice a litigant by allowing the jury to hear evidence that is ultimately held inadmissible; such injustice may result in reversal. See Stanwood v Carson (1915) 169 C 640, 644, 147 P 562. See also Estate of Horman (1968) 265 CA2d 796, 805, 71 CR 780; Piercy v DeFillipes (1963) 215 CA2d 284, 289, 30 CR 62.

When evidence is admitted provisionally, counsel on both sides should be prepared either to elicit the necessary additional testimony or to make any requisite motion to strike. Failure of an objecting party to move to strike when evidence has been admitted subject to a motion to strike constitutes a waiver of any claimed error. Ault v International Harvester Co. (1974) 13 C3d 113, 117 CR 812 (alleged error waived when defendant failed to move to strike expert's testimony and instead moved for mistrial after plaintiff rested case). For further discussion, see §24.10.

If the court admits evidence provisionally and then fails to make a final ruling, the objection raised is considered to be overruled and the objecting party will be permitted to raise the admissibility of the evidence on appeal. See Stanwood v Carson (1915) 169 C 640, 645, 147 P 562; Clopton v Clopton (1912) 162 C 27, 32, 121 P 720. For further discussion of provisional admission of evidence, see §13.121.

If the court declines to admit an exhibit, consider whether the decision can be overcome by additional testimony or a different argument. If additional testimony will overcome the basis for exclusion, it should be elicited from the same or a different witness. If you believe that adequate foundation has been shown, the exhibit should be reoffered into evidence, with your explanation of how the additional testimony has cured any earlier deficiency. If the evidence is again excluded, consider making an offer of proof. An offer of proof should also be considered if, at the time of the original exclusion, you conclude that the court's decision is final and incorrect. On offers of proof generally, see §13.138. See also §15.51.

PRACTICE TIP: Once the court makes a definitive ruling on admissibility, make sure that it is formally recorded by the court reporter and, in the event of admission, by the court clerk. Record the ruling in your exhibit log. See sample exhibit log in §13.140.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.58 7. Disclose substance of exhibit to jury

Once an exhibit has been received in evidence, make sure that the jury is aware of the exhibit's contents and significance. There are a number of methods of disclosing exhibits to a jury. The method chosen depends on the nature of the evidence, its importance in the case, time, expense, and the attitude of the court.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/13 Trial Exhibits/§13.59 a. Read exhibit to jury

§13.59 a. Read exhibit to jury

Often the exhibit is read aloud to the jury by counsel or a witness. Decide whether the entire exhibit or only selected portions of it should be read. If only selected portions are read, make sure that the editing is not misleading or subject to a legitimate charge of deception. When the entire document is not read, opposing counsel is entitled to have undisclosed portions read if they are material and not otherwise inadmissible. See generally Evid C §771.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/13 Trial Exhibits/§13.60 b. Show exhibit to jury

§13.60 b. Show exhibit to jury

Because jurors will remember an exhibit better if they see it as well as hear it, it may be a good idea to show the exhibit to the jury while a witness is being interrogated about it. This can be accomplished by the following methods:

- Use enlargement of exhibit. Enlarging an exhibit on slides or by digital means can be particularly effective when counsel will use an exhibit extensively while examining a witness. Whether to use such techniques will depend on the circumstances and the attitude of the court. When enlargements are used, treat them as separate exhibits, which must be properly authenticated and offered into evidence. This rule is particularly important if a witness is asked to make any markings on the enlargement. See §13.94 on admitting a video recording into evidence.
- Provide jurors with individual copies of exhibit. Obtain the court's permission before providing individual copies of an exhibit to each juror. Whether the court will allow this step depends on local rules, the judge's attitude, and the circumstances surrounding the exhibit. See Los Angeles Ct R 8.66 (procedures for giving exhibits to jurors for inspection during trial). If the court has not announced its preference already, ask about it during the pretrial conference. Many attorneys, but fewer judges, feel that copies of exhibits should be provided to jurors whenever possible. This practice is particularly useful when many documents will be discussed and questions regarding their admissibility have been resolved before trial. On pretrial stipulations, see §13.37.

PRACTICE TIP: When exhibits have been premarked and the parties have stipulated to admissibility, consider providing each juror with an exhibit book of premarked exhibits to refer to while listening to testimony. Each exhibit will be easily accessible to jurors, but jurors may spend more time examining the exhibits than listening to the testimony.

- Circulate the exhibit itself to the jury. Because this process is time-consuming, courts are often reluctant to circulate exhibits to the jury when the exhibit is not particularly important or counsel has made numerous such requests. Moreover, some jurors may not be able to examine the exhibit while the witness is being questioned. Nonetheless, this technique can still be used effectively when there are few exhibits or each juror must personally inspect the exhibit to appreciate it. Obtain the court's permission to circulate an exhibit before using this technique in court. If such a request is granted, some courts may require that the requesting party prepare and furnish copies of the exhibit to all the jurors and alternates. See Los Angeles Ct R 8.66. Check whether local rules require that the exhibit be handed to the jury by the court's bailiff or clerk rather than by the attorney or witness.

PRACTICE TIP: After examining a witness about a particular exhibit, return the exhibit to the court clerk, the exhibit box, or other place designated by the trial judge. See Los Angeles Ct R 8.73.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.61 8. Reoffer exhibits into evidence

Before the close of counsel's case in chief, make sure that all exhibits have been offered and received in evidence. Check with the court clerk to see that the record reflects the receipt into evidence of all exhibits offered.

To ensure that all exhibits have been offered into evidence, make an "en masse" offer (or reoffer) of all your exhibits into evidence (out of the jurors' presence), designating each individually for the record (normally by their identifying exhibit letter or number). This offer theoretically eliminates the possibility that counsel has forgotten to make a renewed offer of a particular exhibit into evidence when the original offer was taken under submission (see §§13.43-13.44) or when the court's decision was not clear on the record. It also allows counsel to discuss with the court the specific status of all important exhibits. "En masse" offers of evidence are not favored by many courts, however, and should not be relied on as a way to have exhibits formally received in evidence at the close of counsel's case in chief. See Los Angeles Ct R 8.65.

B. Admission of deposition testimony and former testimony

§13.62 1. Deposition testimony

Attorneys commonly introduce deposition testimony or former testimony of a party or witness at trial. Generally, the method for introducing such evidence is to read it into the record rather than to offer the transcript into evidence. See 1 Witkin, California Evidence, Hearsay §267 (4th ed 2000); 3 Witkin, Evidence, Presentation at Trial §§153-158 (4th ed 2000). Absent a stipulation or advance ruling, it is generally improper to introduce the entire deposition transcript into evidence without reading it because the deposition generally includes inadmissible questions and answers to which all parties must have an opportunity to object. On using depositions at trial, see §§12.32-12.97. On the use of video deposition testimony and other audio or visual recordings at trial, see Cal Rules of Ct 2.1040.

PRACTICE TIP: Bring original deposition transcripts to trial and provide them to the court clerk. Check local rules on this issue.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.63 2. Former testimony

Portions of testimony from a prior hearing or trial are generally read into evidence. The transcripts of the former testimony can also be admitted into evidence if a certified copy or duplicate original of the former testimony is presented as required by CCP §273. 1 Witkin, California Evidence, Hearsay §267 (4th ed 2000). See also People v Stevenson (1978) 79 CA3d 976, 990, 145 CR 301 (transcripts of preliminary hearing testimony). Photocopies of former testimony or notary certificates are not acceptable. See Wahlgren v Coleco Indus. (1984) 151 CA3d 543, 546, 198 CR 715.

Before reading from a transcript of former testimony, consider marking the transcript for identification so that it is available to be made part of the record on appeal. If an objection to the reading from a transcript of former testimony is sustained, request permission to read those portions that have been excluded into the record, out of the jurors' presence, to protect the record in the event of appeal. See Evid C §§1290-1293 on former testimony exception to hearsay rule. See also Abbett Elec. Corp. v Sullwold (1987) 193 CA3d 708, 714 n8, 238 CR 496.

NOTE: Code of Civil Procedure §612 specifically prohibits jurors from taking depositions into the jury room during deliberations. See §21.32.

For discussion of use of deposition testimony during trial generally, see chap 12.

§13.64 VI. DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE: ADMISSIBILITY REQUIREMENTS

To be admissible, documentary evidence must be:

- Relevant (see §13.22);
- Properly authenticated or founded (see §§13.65-13.84);
- In compliance with the secondary evidence rule (see §13.122);
- Admissible hearsay (see §13.119); and
- Not excluded under Evid C §352 (i.e., not unduly prejudicial, misleading, or time consuming) or other statutes (see §13.117).

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.65 A. Authentication defined

Any writing must be authenticated before it can be admitted into evidence (Evid C §1401(a)) or before secondary evidence of its contents can be received in evidence (Evid C §1401(b)). The term "writing" has a broad definition, which includes handwriting, typing, photographs, and recordings, among other things. See Evid C §250, discussed in §13.2.

Evidence Code §1400 defines "authentication" as:

- Introducing evidence sufficient to show that it is the writing that the proponent of the evidence claims it to be; or
- Establishing such facts by any other means provided by law (e.g., stipulation).

Whether a writing has been properly authenticated is a preliminary fact issue that is determined by the judge at a hearing under Evid C §403(a). On the preliminary fact-finding process generally, see §§7.25-7.36. Authentication alone, however, does not guarantee that a writing will be admitted into evidence. The writing must be relevant, comply with the secondary evidence rule (see §13.122), not be inadmissible hearsay, and not be subject to exclusion under Evid C §352 or any other statutes. See §13.64.

CAUTION: Be sure to object to improper authentication of a document at trial rather than waiting to do so on appeal. Lack of authentication cannot be raised for the first time on appeal if there was no objection at trial. Interinsurance Exch. v Velji (1975) 44 CA3d 310, 118 CR 596; People v Jones (1970) 7 CA3d 48, 86 CR 717.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/13 Trial Exhibits/§13.66 B. Methods for authenticating writings

§13.66 B. Methods for authenticating writings

Authentication is a foundational requirement for most writings that can be satisfied by a stipulation, live testimony, or other methods. Each method is discussed in §§13.67-13.77. Carefully consider which one is preferable for each particular document requiring authentication. Determine this far enough before trial that additional pretrial discovery may be conducted on authentication, if necessary.

NOTE: The means of authentication listed in Evid C §§1410-1421 are not the only means by which a writing may be authenticated or proved. See Evid C §§1400, 1410. For example, an exhibit can be authenticated by using facts about the creation of the writing, its discovery or use, or the contents of the writing itself. See, e.g., Young v Sorenson (1975) 47 CA3d 911, 915, 121 CR 236 (unverified carbon copy of reporter's transcript authenticated by comparing its contents with clerk's minutes). For additional examples, see Comment to Evid C §1410.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.67 1. Stipulations

A stipulation between counsel regarding the writings' authenticity will satisfy the authentication requirement (see §13.65). Such a stipulation may be agreed to at any time before trial, e.g., during the usual preliminary conference with the court at the outset of trial or during the trial itself. See also §13.32. For Sample Stipulation Regarding Use of Documents at Trial, see §13.141. It is not appropriate, however, for counsel to stipulate to an exhibit's authenticity in front of the jury. See Los Angeles Ct R 8.43-8.44.

When counsel have agreed to stipulate to the authentication of a document, a record of this agreement should be made by, e.g., a confirming letter, a written stipulation signed by all counsel, a joint oral statement recorded by a court reporter, or a jointly propounded written order ordered by a judge. Such a record eliminates the possibility that opposing counsel will deny the existence of the stipulation at trial or misconstrue its terms. The written stipulation should then be made a part of the formal record. If in writing, it should be filed with the court. If not in writing, the stipulation should be recited by counsel before the court reporter. Even though a stipulation covers all requirements of admissibility, you must still ask the court during trial to receive the exhibits in evidence. See §13.55.

The proponent of an exhibit should ordinarily assume the burden of drafting any stipulation governing admissibility. Opposing counsel who has stipulated to authenticity, but still anticipates making specific objections to admissibility (e.g., hearsay or relevancy), should insist that the stipulation clarify that all such objections have been reserved. For that reason, opposing counsel may wish to undertake the drafting.

NOTE: Many judges encourage the use of stipulations when there is no real dispute over a document's authenticity, because the use of stipulations shortens the trial and avoids distracting the judge or jury with peripheral issues.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/13 Trial Exhibits/§13.68 2. Testimony of witnesses

§13.68 2. Testimony of witnesses

A writing can be authenticated by the testimony of one or more witnesses. Such testimony may come from:

- The maker of the writing (see §13.69);
- A witness who saw the writing made or executed (see §13.70);
- A witness who is familiar with the writer's handwriting (see §13.71); or
- An expert (see §13.72).

NOTE: If a writing is formally witnessed by a subscribing witness, the witness's testimony is not necessary to authenticate the writing "except as provided by statute." Evid C §1411. Even if a statute requires a subscribing witness's testimony to authenticate a writing, the writing may be authenticated by other evidence if the subscribing witness denies or does not recall the writing's execution. Evid C §1412.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/13 Trial Exhibits/§13.69 a. Maker of writing; sample foundation

§13.69 a. Maker of writing; sample foundation

The most common manner of authenticating a writing is through the testimony of its maker. The witness should first acknowledge creating the exhibit and then describe what it is. A typical examination to authenticate a letter might proceed as follows:

Q: Let me hand you a document, which has been marked as Plaintiff's Exhibit 1 for purposes of identification. Would you tell us whether you recognize this document?

A: Yes, I do.

Q: What is it?

A: It's the letter I mailed to Mr. Smith immediately after our telephone conversation on September 1, 2008.

Q: Does the letter bear your signature?

A: Yes, it does.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/13 Trial Exhibits/§13.70 b. Witness who saw writing made or executed; sample foundation

§13.70 b. Witness who saw writing made or executed; sample foundation

A writing may be authenticated by anyone who saw the writing made or executed, including a subscribing witness. Evid C §1413. Compare O'Laskey v Sortino (1990) 224 CA3d 241, 273 CR 674 (transcript of recording excluded because attorney's declaration that transcript was accurate was insufficient to authenticate recording; however, court implied that recording itself would have been admissible), disapproved on other grounds in Flanagan v Flanagan (2002) 27 C4th 766, 776 n4, 117 CR2d 574, with People v Patton (1976) 63 CA3d 211, 133 CR 533 (witness's testimony that recording of telephone conversation was accurate and complete, except for initial gap, was sufficient authentication; recording also identified by officer who operated recording machine).

Eliciting testimony from such a witness to authenticate a writing might proceed as follows:

Q: During the course of this meeting, which you attended, was any sort of document prepared?

A: Yes, there was.

Q: Who prepared the document?

A: Ms. Jones.

Q: Did Ms. Jones identify the document when she was preparing it?

A: Yes.

Q: What did she say?

A: She said she was putting together a short memorandum of understanding, which could be signed by both Mr. Smith and Ms. Jones to confirm their agreement.

Q: When you were at this meeting, did you see the document that Ms. Jones prepared?

A: Yes, I did.

After satisfying the requirements of marking the exhibit (see §§13.46-13.49), disclosing the exhibit to opposing counsel (see §§13.50-13.51) and the judge (see §13.52), and obtaining permission to approach the witness (see §13.54), continue as follows:

Q: Let me hand you a document, which has been marked as Defendant's Exhibit D for identification. Do you recognize this document?

A: Yes. It's the memo that Ms. Jones prepared at the meeting.

Q: Did you see Ms. Jones sign her name to this memorandum?

A: Yes, I did.

Q: Is that her signature at the bottom of the memorandum?

A: Yes, it is.

§13.71 c. Witness familiar with writer's handwriting; sample foundation

A writing may be authenticated by a witness with personal knowledge of the author's handwriting. Evid C §§1415-1416. A witness who is not otherwise qualified to testify as an expert may state an opinion about whether a writing is in the handwriting of the supposed writer if the court finds that the witness has personal knowledge of the writer's handwriting. Evid C §1416. Compare People v Remiro (1979) 89 CA3d 809, 153 CR 89 (brother held competent to identify sister's handwriting in seized notebook), with Palma v Leslie (1935) 6 CA2d 702, 45 P2d 391 (contract improperly authenticated by witness who had not seen contract signed and was unfamiliar with plaintiff's handwriting; court upheld judgment, however, because error was harmless).

A witness may also acquire personal knowledge of the writer's handwriting from the following (Evid C §1416):

- Having seen the supposed writer write;
- Having seen a writing that purports to be in the supposed writer's handwriting and on which the supposed writer has acted or been charged;
- Having received letters through the mail that purport to be from the supposed writer in response to letters addressed and mailed by the witness to the supposed writer; or
- Any other means of obtaining personal knowledge of the supposed writer's handwriting.

Counsel might proceed to authenticate a writing through a witness with personal knowledge of the writer's handwriting as follows:

> Q: During the period from February 2007 until September 2008, were you employed by Mr. Holloway as his secretary?
> A: Yes, I was.
> Q: During this period, did you become familiar with Mr. Holloway's handwriting?
> A: Of course I did.
> Q: Did you have occasion to watch him sign his name?
>
> A: Yes.
> Q: How often, would you estimate?
> A: Hundreds, perhaps thousands of times. Mr. Holloway would usually sign his letters as soon as I gave them to him, so that I could take them right to the mail room.

After satisfying the requirements of marking the exhibit (see §§13.46-13.49), disclosing the exhibit to opposing counsel (see §§13.50-13.51) and the judge (see §13.52), and obtaining permission to approach the witness (see §13.54), continue as follows:

> Q: Let me show you a document, which has been marked as Plaintiff's Exhibit 5 for identification. Please take a look at the handwritten portion at the bottom of the letter and tell us whether you are able to express an opinion on whether it is the signature of Mr. Holloway.
> A: Yes, I am.
> Q: What is your opinion?
> A: It is Mr. Holloway's signature.

§13.72 d. Expert authentication

The genuineness of a writing may be proved or disproved by an expert witness. Evid C §1418. The proponent must satisfy the following two prerequisites before asking the expert's opinion on the genuineness of the document or handwriting:

- The witness must be shown to be qualified as an expert by virtue of his or her special knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education. See generally Comment to Evid C §1418. On expert testimony generally, see Evid C §§801-805. See also §§5.70-5.90, 11.130-11.151; California Expert Witness Guide (2d ed Cal CEB 1991).
- The writing that the expert has used for purposes of comparison must have been admitted or treated as genuine by the party against whom the evidence is offered, or it must be otherwise proved to be genuine to the court's satisfaction. Evid C §1418.

Section 1418 "applies to any form of writing, not just handwriting." Comment to Evid C §1418. The Comment points out that experts can compare typewritten specimens and other forms of writing as accurately as handwritten ones. When the writing offered into evidence is more than 30 years old, a court may be satisfied with a lesser degree of proof concerning the writing's authenticity. Evid C §1419. See Comment to Evid C §1419. See also §13.58.

PRACTICE TIP: Refuse any offers by opposing counsel to stipulate that the witness is qualified as an expert. Instead, thank opposing counsel for this offer, but explain that it is important for the jurors to hear about the expert's background and qualifications to evaluate the expert's testimony. See §11.131 for a list of questions that counsel should ask to qualify the expert. Once the expert is qualified, have the expert explain step by step how his or her opinion was reached. This will emphasize the expert's competence and buttress the strength of his or her conclusions.

§13.73 3. Admitting business records by affidavit

Business records produced by a third party in response to a subpoena duces tecum can be authenticated without requiring the third party to testify at trial on the admissibility of the documents. The third party can satisfy the subpoena duces tecum by delivering copies of the documents requested to the appointed officer at the place designated in the subpoena (Evid C §1560) and by accompanying the documents with an affidavit stating (Evid C §1561(a)):

- That the signatory is the custodian of the records or has the authority to certify their authenticity;
- That they are true copies of the requested documents; and
- That the documents were prepared in the ordinary course of business at or near the time of the events recorded.

If these requirements are satisfied, the third party will not need to testify at trial to authenticate the documents, because the affidavit is held to be admissible at trial and is presumed to be true by Evid C §1562.

The copies produced with the affidavit are then admissible if they otherwise satisfy the requirements of the business records exception to the hearsay rule (Evid C §1271) and would have been admissible had the affiant been present in court. See Taggart v Super Seer Corp. (1995) 33 CA4th 1697, 40 CR2d 56. On the business records exception, see §10.25. See also Effective Introduction of Evidence in California, chap 13 (2d ed Cal CEB 2000); California Trial Objections, chap 19 (Cal CEB Annual).

§13.74 4. Authentication by trier of fact

The trier of fact can also determine the genuineness of a contested writing by comparing the writing with handwriting that (a) the court finds was admitted or treated as genuine by the party against whom the evidence is offered or (b) is otherwise proved to be genuine to the court's satisfaction. Evid C §1417. See Interinsurance Exch. v Velji (1975) 44 CA3d 310, 318, 118 CR 596 (trial court properly authenticated signature on back of insurance policy by comparing it with signature on front; same person admittedly signed both sides); Devereaux v Frazier Mountain Park & Fisheries Co. (1967) 248 CA2d 323, 330, 56 CR 345 (trial court properly authenticated document by comparing signature with signature on certified copy of official document filed with secretary of state).

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.75 5. Writing authenticated by response to communication

A writing's authenticity may be established by evidence that the writing was received in response to a communication sent to the person who is claimed to be the author. Evid C §1420. See House Grain Co. v Finerman & Sons (1953) 116 CA2d 485, 492, 253 P2d 1034 (telegram received in reply to telegram addressed to sender was presumed to be genuine and was admissible into evidence without further proof of sender's identity). See also People v Roland (1969) 270 CA2d 639, 646, 76 CR 72 (teletype received by investigator in response to request was properly authenticated under Evid C §1420).

§13.76 6. Authentication by contents of writing

A writing may be authenticated by evidence that the writing refers to or states matters unlikely to be known to anyone other than the purported author. Evid C §1421. See McAllister v George (1977) 73 CA3d 258, 263, 140 CR 702 (dental bill was authenticated by its contents because it referred to matters about which only plaintiff and party who performed dental services would likely have known); Interinsurance Exch. v Velji (1975) 44 CA3d 310, 318, 118 CR 596 (information on reverse side of insurance policy could have been supplied only by appellant). See also People v Fonville (1973) 35 CA3d 693, 708, 111 CR 53 (surreptitious audio recording referred to details of crime charged; voice identification established through comparison with recording in evidence containing defendant's voice).

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.77 7. Authentication by adverse party's admission

A writing may be authenticated by evidence of an admission by the adverse party. Such an admission may arise either from a specific statement by the adverse party admitting the writing's authenticity (Evid C §1414(a)) or from an action by the adverse party acting on the writing as if it were authentic (Evid C §1414(b)).

Pretrial discovery provides many tools to obtain or discover admissions of authenticity by the opposing party. Admissions may be obtained through interrogatories, deposition questions, and requests for admission.

§13.78 C. Self-authenticating writings

Several types of writings are considered to be self-authenticating. See §§13.79-13.82. For these writings, a presumption exists that they are authentic. Such writings do not require evidence of authenticity before they are received in evidence.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/13 Trial Exhibits/§13.79 1. Acknowledged writings

§13.79 1. Acknowledged writings

A writing other than a will, having an appropriate certificate of acknowledgment, may be received in evidence without formal proof of its authenticity. Evid C §1451. An appropriate certificate of acknowledgment must meet the requirements of CC §§1180-1207, which list the judges and clerks (CC §1180) and notary publics and local officers (CC §1181) authorized to execute certificates of acknowledgment, the form that the acknowledgment must take (CC §§1188-1189), and the type of required seal and signature (CC §1193; Govt C §8207).

The acknowledgment creates a presumption requiring "a finding of authenticity unless the adverse party produces evidence sufficient to sustain a finding that the writing in question is not authentic." Comment to Evid C §1450. If the adverse party produces such evidence, the presumption is dispelled and the trier of fact determines the issue of the authenticity of the acknowledged writing without reference to any presumption created by Evid C §1451. Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 31 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/13 Trial Exhibits/§13.80 2. Uniform Commercial Code documents

§13.80 2. Uniform Commercial Code documents

Certain documents are presumed to be authentic and do not require authenticating evidence. Com C §1307. These documents include (Com C §1307(1)):

- A bill of lading;
- A policy or certificate of insurance;
- An official weigher's or inspector's certificate;
- A consular invoice; or
- Any other document authorized or required by the contract to be issued by a third party.

These documents are presumed to be authentic and are admissible as evidence of the facts stated in them in actions arising from the contract that authorized or required the document. Com C §1307(2). The presumption of authenticity is a presumption affecting the burden of producing evidence. Com C §1307(2)(a) and (b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.81 3. Official seals or signatures on official writings

Authenticating evidence is not required to determine the genuineness of certain official seals and signatures. Evid C §§1452-1453. For example, under Evid C §1452 a seal is presumed to be genuine and its use is presumed to be authorized if it purports to be a particular seal (e.g., the United States seal or a seal of a nation recognized by the United States). See Evid C §1452, which lists the recognized seals.

Similarly, a signature is presumed to be genuine and authorized if it purports to be the signature, affixed in an official capacity, of a public employee of the United States, a public employee of any public entity in the United States, or a notary public. Evid C §1453.

The presumptions created by these two sections can be rebutted by evidence sufficient to sustain a finding that they are not genuine or authorized. See Comment to Evid C §1452. If the adverse party introduces such evidence, the issue of authenticity is determined by the trier of fact without regard to the presumptions created by Evid C §§1450 and 1453. See Comment to Evid C §1452; Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 31 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

On the presumption of authenticity of official signatures on foreign official writings and procedures for authenticating them, see Evid C §1454.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/13 Trial Exhibits/§13.82 4. Ancient documents

§13.82 4. Ancient documents

A deed, will, or other writing that purports to create, terminate, or affect an interest in real or personal property is presumed to be authentic under Evid C §643 if it:

(a) Is at least 30 years old;
(b) Is in such condition as to create no suspicion concerning its authenticity;
(c) Was kept, or if found was found, in a place where such writing, if authentic, would be likely to be kept or found; and
(d) Has been generally acted upon as authentic by persons having an interest in the matter.

This is known as the ancient documents rule. See Comment to Evid C §643. See also §§13.57-13.58.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/13 Trial Exhibits/§13.83 D. Authenticating altered writings

§13.83 D. Authenticating altered writings

A writing can be authenticated even if it has been altered or appears to have been altered after its execution, as long as the party introducing the writing accounts for the alteration or appearance of alteration. If a sufficient account is not given of the alteration, the writing may not be received in evidence. Evid C §1402.

The proponent of the evidence may make an appropriate accounting by showing that the alteration (Evid C §1402):

- Was made by another person without the concurrence of the proponent;
- Was made with the consent of the parties affected by the alteration;
- Was otherwise properly or innocently made; or
- Did not change the meaning or language of the writing.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/13 Trial Exhibits/§13.84 E. Exceptions to authentication

§13.84 E. Exceptions to authentication

Prior use of a writing by an adverse party can obviate the need for counsel to lay any foundation authenticating the writing. For example, authenticating evidence is not required in the following circumstances:

- Refreshing recollection. When a writing is used by a witness to refresh his or her recollection either before or while testifying, the adverse party may introduce into evidence any portion pertinent to the witness's testimony. See Evid C §771. The proponent of the writing need show only that the writing was used to refresh the witness's recollection and need not present any other authenticating evidence. Evid C §771. On refreshing recollection generally, see §§13.9, 13.34.
- Past recollection recorded. When a party reads a writing into evidence as a past recollection recorded, the adverse party may offer the writing into evidence. See Evid C §1237. There is no requirement under Evid C §1237 that the party present any additional authenticating evidence. On past recollection recorded generally, see §13.10.
- Prior authentication. When a writing has already been authenticated by testimony elicited by other parties, or when the writing has already been received in evidence, additional authenticating evidence is not required. Once a writing has been received in evidence, all parties are entitled to use it during trial without further authenticating testimony—unless the writing has been admitted only as to one party or for one purpose. In that event, the court must "restrict the evidence to its proper scope and instruct the jury accordingly." Evid C §355. For further discussion of limited admissibility, see §13.135.

VII. DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE: FOUNDATIONAL REQUIREMENTS

§13.85 A. Foundation varies depending on type of demonstrative evidence

To be admissible, demonstrative evidence must be:

- Relevant (see §13.22, 13.85);
- Properly authenticated or founded (see §13.85);
- In compliance with the secondary evidence rule (see §13.122);
- Admissible hearsay (see §13.119); and
- Not excluded under Evid C §352 (i.e., not unduly prejudicial, misleading, or time-consuming) or other statutes (see §13.117).

The foundation will vary depending on the nature of the demonstrative evidence. For definition of demonstrative evidence, see §13.3. A proper foundation can also be established by obtaining a stipulation or an admission from the opposing party. On methods for laying a foundation for demonstrative evidence, see §§13.86-13.89.

To determine whether there is a proper foundation for demonstrative evidence, a preliminary hearing may be required but only if an objection is raised by motion in limine or at the time such evidence is introduced at trial. On this preliminary fact-finding process generally, see §§7.25-7.36. In many instances, a formal hearing is not conducted, because the nature of the proffered evidence is self-evident.

EXAMPLE: If a witness to an accident is asked to mark on an existing diagram of the accident site where the witness was standing, no hearing would be required to lay a foundation, because the testimony itself has established the foundation. The marked diagram can be admitted by exactly the same procedure as if it were not marked. In other situations, however, the preliminary hearing on the admissibility of the evidence may be extensive.

PRACTICE TIP: Be prepared to show all elements necessary to establish admissibility of demonstrative evidence and to rebut or explain any theories of inadmissibility offered by the opponent if you want to have demonstrative evidence received in evidence. Conversely, counsel opposing admission of such evidence should be prepared to challenge it vigorously by bringing a motion in limine during the preliminary hearing to either conduct a voir dire examination of the foundational witnesses offered in support of the disputed evidence or offer his or her own witnesses and evidence.

Admissibility of demonstrative evidence is largely within the discretion of the trial court. See Kraus v Walt Disney Prods. (1963) 221 CA2d 736, 740, 34 CR 702 (jury view and demonstration of actual operation of turnstile properly permitted); Odell v Frueh (1956) 146 CA2d 504, 511, 304 P2d 45 (no abuse of discretion by trial court for permitting evidence of result of controlled experiment).

On foundations required for specific types of demonstrative evidence, see §§13.91-13.111. See also Laying a Foundation To Introduce Evidence (Preparing and Using Evidence at Trial) (Cal CEB Action Guide April 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Methods for laying foundation

§13.86 1. Stipulations

As with documentary evidence, the foundational requirements for the admissibility of demonstrative evidence may be satisfied by stipulation. See §13.67. Unless there is some tactical reason for not disclosing the evidence to opposing counsel before trial, consider seeking such a stipulation. This is particularly important if you want to refer to the evidence in the opening statement. One tactical reason for avoiding such a stipulation is that you may wish to have the foundational evidence received in evidence to enhance the impact and weight of the demonstrative evidence with the trier of fact.

On referring to demonstrative evidence during the opening statement and clearing its use with the judge beforehand, see §§13.30, 13.37. On the procedure for stipulating and protecting the record, see §§13.32, 13.67. See also §13.141 for Sample Stipulation Regarding Use of Documents at Trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/13 Trial Exhibits/§13.87 2. Testimony of witnesses

§13.87 2. Testimony of witnesses

The most common method of laying a foundation for the receipt of demonstrative evidence is through the testimony of witnesses. This may be testimony of the maker of the evidence, someone familiar with the creation of the evidence, or someone familiar with what the evidence is designed to depict.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/13 Trial Exhibits/§13.88 3. Admissions by adverse party

§13.88 3. Admissions by adverse party

If the use of demonstrative evidence at trial is contemplated, be alert to the opportunity to establish the foundational prerequisites for its admissibility by use of admissions of the adverse party. For example, when substantial similarity is a foundational requisite, as in the case of photographic recreation of events (see §13.97), you may be able to obtain admissions about underlying facts of the dispute. Similarly, admissions may be obtained from the adverse party on the reliability of certain types of testing or the authenticity of certain documents. As with documentary evidence (see §13.65), the tools of pretrial discovery can be extremely useful in obtaining such admissions.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.89 4. Judicial notice

In proffering demonstrative evidence, consider having the court take judicial notice of key preliminary facts. Notice may be taken of facts underlying the dispute, the quality of certain objects, or the reliability of certain scientific processes. See, e.g., People v MacLaird (1968) 264 CA2d 972, 975, 71 CR 191 (under Evid C §451(f), court took judicial notice of validity and accuracy of radar devices; expert witness was not necessary to establish this commonly known and accepted proposition). On judicial notice generally, see chap 14.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.90 C. Substantial similarity

For some types of demonstrative evidence (e.g., evidence of experiments), you may be required to make a preliminary showing that the conditions reflected in or underlying the proffered evidence are "substantially similar" to those giving rise to the issue to which the evidence is relevant. See Culpepper v Volkswagen of Am., Inc. (1973) 33 CA3d 510, 521, 109 CR 110 (preliminary showing required before introduction of film of accident reconstruction experiment; court found experiment was conducted under substantially similar conditions as when accident took place). Compare Larramendy v Myres (1954) 126 CA2d 636, 641, 272 P2d 824 (courtroom demonstration of smoke-producing device permitted), with Garcia v Hoffman (1963) 212 CA2d 530, 535, 641, 28 CR 98 (court did not allow results of demonstration regarding distance within which automobile could be stopped when driven at certain speed). See 2 Witkin, California Evidence, Demonstrative, Experimental and Scientific Evidence §§38-40 (4th ed 2000). On preliminary fact hearings, see §§7.25-7.36.

"Substantial similarity" does not require that the conditions be absolutely identical. Culpepper v Volkswagen of Am., Inc., supra (evidence concerning film of experiment admitted). See Hasson v Ford Motor Co. (1977) 19 C3d 530, 550, 138 CR 705 (experimental evidence on automobile brakes admitted), disapproved in part on other grounds in Soule v General Motors Corp. (1994) 8 C4th 548, 574, 34 CR2d 607. A showing of substantial similarity generally requires evidence of both the conditions existing at the time of the dispute and those reflected in the proffered evidence. For definition of "proffered evidence," see §13.7.

Counsel can aid the court in determining substantial similarity by presenting expert testimony on whether and how any dissimilarities affect the instructional qualities of the proffered evidence. See People v McDaniel (1976) 16 C3d 156, 174, 127 CR 467 (model bomb prepared by expert witness and demonstration using this bomb admitted into evidence for limited purpose of aiding jurors in understanding expert's testimony, even though model did not depict device that triggered explosion). Photographic reconstruction or reenactment of events must also be connected to the case by testimony showing that the recreation is substantially similar to the facts of the case. See §13.97.

© The Regents of the University of California

D. Specific types of demonstrative evidence; foundation required

§13.91 1. Photographs

The admission of photographs into evidence is so common that it is often accomplished by stipulation. See §13.86. When no such stipulation exists, all that is generally required to lay a proper foundation is for a witness (who need not be the photographer) to testify that he or she has knowledge of the facts depicted by the photograph and that the photograph accurately depicts what it purports to show. See Berkovitz v American River Gravel Co. (1923) 191 C 195, 201, 215 P 675; 2 Witkin, California Evidence, Demonstrative, Experimental and Scientific Evidence §16 (4th ed 2000).

Photographs of the event in dispute will be received in evidence if they are relevant and not unduly prejudicial. See, e.g., People v Robillard (1960) 55 C2d 88, 100, 10 CR 167 (photographs of deceased officer's body taken at scene of murder; disapproved on other grounds in People v Morse (1964) 60 C2d 631, 36 CR 201); Adams v City of San Jose (1958) 164 CA2d 665, 667, 330 P2d 840 (photographs of sidewalk at scene of accident). Compare Robillard and Adams with People v Love (1960) 53 C2d 843, 854, 3 CR 665 (photograph showing front view of deceased should not have been admitted when prejudicial effect outweighed probative value of inflammatory evidence). On making an objection under Evid C §352, see §13.117.

Whether a photograph accurately and fairly represents an object or a scene is a question for the trial court; its ruling will be sustained unless an abuse of discretion is apparent. Adams v City of San Jose, supra. See Barone v Jones (1947) 77 CA2d 656, 661, 176 P2d 392. If a photograph does not accurately and fairly depict what it portrays, it is subject to objection. See Ehrhardt v Brunswick, Inc. (1986) 186 CA3d 734, 231 CR 60 (demonstration video excluded because it was inconsistent with testimony of all eye witnesses). Compare Ehrhardt with DiRosario v Havens (1987) 196 CA3d 1224, 1232, 242 CR 423 (video reenactment admitted despite numerous differences in conditions depicted), and Anello v Southern Pac. Co. (1959) 174 CA2d 317, 322, 344 P2d 843 (appellate court criticized introduction of photographs of orange diesel locomotive when engine in collision was black steam locomotive; court reversed for other reasons, thus court did not decide whether introduction of slides constituted reversible error).

§13.92 a. Sample foundation

A proper foundation for the admission of a photograph can be established as follows:

Q: Let me hand you a document, marked as Plaintiff's Exhibit 10 for purposes of identification. Do you recognize this document?

A: Yes.

Q: Would you tell us what it is?

A: It's a picture I took of my car several days before the accident.

Q: When was this picture taken, if you recall?

A: April 18, 2008. It was on my birthday.

Q: Could you tell us whether Exhibit 10 accurately and fairly depicts the physical condition of your car just before the collision on April 20, 2008?

A: Yes, it does.

Q: Was there any change in the condition of your car between the time that this photograph, Exhibit 10, was taken and the time that the collision occurred on April 20, 2008?

A: No.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.93 b. Photograph must be substantially similar to disputed event

When a photograph depicts a different object than that involved in the underlying dispute, it may be admitted on a showing of substantial similarity between the object or scene portrayed and the object or scene involved in the dispute. See, e.g., People v Slocum (1975) 52 CA3d 867, 891, 125 CR 442 (photograph depicting similar but not identical equipment held admissible). On substantial similarity, see §13.90. A photograph depicting a similar situation usually is not admissible unless its proponent offers proof that what the photograph depicts is substantially similar to the disputed event. See PG&E v Hacienda Mobile Home Park (1975) 45 CA3d 519, 530, 119 CR 559 (photographs of power lines at location other than one involved in dispute held inadmissible because there was no evidence of substantial similarity). See also People v Vaiza (1966) 244 CA2d 121, 126, 52 CR 733 (trial court erroneously admitted four photographs solely to show lighting conditions at time of a crime when no foundation was laid that the photographs were taken at same hour of morning as incident).

If, however, counsel wishes to offer a photograph of the scene of an accident into evidence, even substantial changes in conditions at the scene depicted in the photograph will not necessarily cause the court to exclude it as long as "the photograph, as explained, will give a correct understanding of the condition existing at the time of the accident." Barone v Jones (1947) 77 CA2d 656, 660, 176 P2d 392, quoting from McNair v Berger (Mont 1932) 15 P2d 834. On photographic recreation of events generally, see §13.97. On requirement for relevance generally, see §13.22.

NOTE: When special lenses or unusual techniques have been used to take the photograph, it may be necessary to have the photographer explain these techniques in court and testify that the picture accurately depicts what it purports to depict. For discussion of why counsel should not be the photographer, see §13.43.

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Motion pictures and video recordings

§13.94 a. Foundational requirements

Relevance of motion pictures and video recordings must first be established. See §13.22 on relevancy. After relevance is established, both movies and video recordings must be authenticated before they may be received in evidence because they are "writings" under Evid C §250. Evid C §§1401, 1413. See §§13.65-13.77. As "writings," motion pictures and video recordings may also be subject to the secondary evidence rule embodied in Evid C §§1520-1523. See also Evid C §1553 ("printed representation of images stored on a video or digital medium is presumed to be an accurate representation of the images it purports to represent"). For discussion of the secondary evidence rule, see §§13.122-13.123.

A proper foundation can generally be established through testimony that the movie or video accurately depicts what it purports to show (see People v Dabb (1948) 32 C2d 491, 498, 197 P2d 1; see also People v Bowley (1963) 59 C2d 855, 859, 31 CR 471) or that it depicts facts substantially similar to those in dispute (compare DiRosario v Havens (1987) 196 CA3d 1224, 1232, 242 CR 423 (no reversible error in showing video recreating automobile accident, because recording was made under conditions substantially similar to accident conditions), with People v Boyd (1990) 222 CA3d 541, 566, 271 CR 738 (insufficient showing that lighting conditions displayed on film were similar to lighting conditions on night of crime). On substantial similarity, see §13.90.

If counsel intends to show movies or video recordings during trial, they should be disclosed in advance because they usually cannot be viewed during a sidebar conference. Once this intent has been disclosed, a preliminary screening can be arranged so that objection can be raised and ruled on out of the jury's presence. Some courts require that this disclosure be made at the beginning of trial. All counsel, the judge, and a court reporter should be present at the screening. Although it is not necessary for the court reporter to report the movie's soundtrack, the ensuing discussion between counsel and the judge about the film should be recorded.

When the soundtrack has dialogue, some courts routinely suggest that a transcript be prepared by the proponent in advance. This is particularly important when the dialogue is difficult to decipher. Counsel offering the motion picture or video should have a copy of the transcript authenticated as accurate and admitted into evidence.

Two evidentiary objections commonly raised to motion pictures or video recordings are the hearsay objection (see §13.119) and an objection under Evid C §352 (see §13.117).

On motion pictures used in connection with experiments, see §13.41.

PRACTICE TIP: The video, CD, or laser disk should be marked as the exhibit. If only a portion of the simulation is shown to the jury, the attorney should describe for the record what portion of the recording was allowed (i.e., by reference to the time display or counter on the video or disk playback device). On the manner of marking, see §13.48.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.95 b. Day-in-the-life films

"Day-in-the-life" films have become an increasingly popular way for a plaintiff to dramatize and illustrate for a jury the impact of an injury on the plaintiff's daily routine. Admission of such films has been permitted on the basis that they corroborate oral testimony regarding the victim's life after the injury. Lehmuth v Long Beach Unified Sch. Dist. (1960) 53 C2d 544, 555, 2 CR 279 (movie showing effects on victim's life of tracheotomy and unconscious body movements held admissible even though oral testimony about plaintiff's physical condition was also introduced); Jones v City of Los Angeles (1993) 20 CA4th 436, 24 CR2d 528 (plaintiff's day-in-the-life video admissible in trial for damages from automobile accident).

The foundation for these films requires a witness with personal knowledge of the filmed events who can testify that the film is an accurate portrayal of what it shows. This is the same foundation required for other photographic evidence. Jones v City of Los Angeles, supra (nurse's testimony that she observed making of "day in the life" video and that it accurately reflected plaintiff's daily routine in nursing home was sufficient to lay foundation for admission of video into evidence). See §13.92. These films are susceptible to exclusion, however, if their prejudicial effects outweigh their probative value. See Evid C §352. But see Lehmuth v Long Beach Unified Sch. Dist., supra. Although California courts have not ruled directly on the exclusion of day-in-the-life films under Evid C §352, courts outside California have imposed foundational requirements for day-in-the-life films that are beyond those required for other films.

Out-of-state courts note that additional foundational requirements may be necessary for such films because they have special emotional power, tend to dominate other more conventional evidence, and may unfairly disadvantage a defendant who has no similar opportunity to depict with equal impact times when the plaintiff is not specially disadvantaged. See Bolstridge v Central Me. Power Co. (D Me 1985) 621 F Supp 1202, 1204 (film may be admitted only if it conveys information more fully or more accurately than could be obtained from a witness in court); Thomas v C.G. Tate Constr. Co. (D SC 1979) 465 F Supp 566, 571 (trial court properly refused to admit video of burn victim receiving physical therapy but did allow still photographs of plaintiff's wounds).

In determining whether the film's probative value outweighs its prejudicial effect, the court will examine whether the film corroborates other testimony that may itself be a basis for admission. See Lehmuth v Long Beach Unified Sch. Dist., supra. Out-of-state courts have also examined whether the same information can be introduced through testimony of the plaintiff or the plaintiff's relatives or caregivers or through demonstration in court of special problems faced by the plaintiff. If such information can be obtained through sources other than a film, the film may be considered cumulative and may circumvent the defendant's right to cross-examine. See Bolstridge v Central Me. Power Co., supra; Haley v Byers Transp. Co. (1967) 414 SW2d 777, 780.

NOTE: Because California courts have not addressed this issue directly, litigants are presented with a challenging set of strategic choices. A plaintiff must decide whether to invite a defendant to attend the filming and whether to preserve outtakes and make them available to the court. By denying the defendant access to the full process, the plaintiff risks having the final product excluded because the defendant has no viable way of knowing whether it is fairly representational. The defendant, if invited to attend, faces the dilemma of whether to accept, because the defendant's presence could be deemed to waive objections or to validate the filming process, and there may be little gained by attending. See Cisarik v Palos Community Hosp. (1991) 579 NE2d 873, 874 (right to discovery does not give defendant automatic right to be present at a day-in-the-life filming).

Until the issue has been decided in California, the plaintiff should:

- Preserve and make available all film so that any claim by the defendant that the film is not accurate can be addressed during discovery and on cross-examination rather than as a basis for complete exclusion;
- Avoid especially gruesome sequences or sound effects that a court may conclude will unfairly prejudice the jury;
- Make the film as accurate as possible and avoid overstating; and
- Make sure that the witness who will present the film is able to testify fully about the circumstances under which the film was made.

§13.96 c. Surveillance films

In the past, motion picture surveillance was often offered into evidence by defense counsel in workers' compensation and personal injury suits to prove that the plaintiff's claimed injuries were exaggerated or nonexistent. This practice, while still common, is not as widespread as it once was, possibly as a result of the expanding rights of privacy (see Cal Const art I, §1; Cain v State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1976) 62 CA3d 310, 132 CR 860).

Surveillance films have been excluded from evidence when the recorded activity was fraudulently induced. See Redner v WCAB (1971) 5 C3d 83, 93, 95 CR 447. Such fraudulent inducement may entitle a person under surveillance to recover for intentional infliction of physical and emotional injury and punitive damages. See Unruh v Truck Ins. Exch. (1972) 7 C3d 616, 102 CR 815. In contrast, the plaintiffs often introduce into evidence so-called day-in-the-life films to demonstrate the extent of their injuries. See, e.g., Lehmuth v Long Beach Unified Sch. Dist. (1960) 53 C2d 544, 555, 2 CR 279 (motion picture of plaintiff in hospital). See §13.95.

§13.97 d. Photographic re-creation of events

Photographic recordings of a reenactment or reconstruction of relevant events are admissible at trial on a proper showing. Such films or photographs can have a substantial effect on the outcome of the trial because they enable the jury to be on-the-spot observers of the dispute. See, e.g., People v Dabb (1948) 32 C2d 491, 197 P2d 1 (reenactment of crime by defendants recorded by sound motion pictures; jury viewed film, in which defendants admitted committing crime in manner depicted).

Assuming relevancy (see §13.22), the general foundational requisite for admitting photographic reenactments or reconstructions is a showing that the facts and conditions portrayed in the film or photograph are the same as or substantially similar to those involved in the dispute. See, e.g., People v O'Brien (1976) 61 CA3d 766, 780, 132 CR 616 (posed photographs reconstructing event). But see People v Boyd (1990) 222 CA3d 541, 565, 271 CR 738 (court properly excluded video based on dissimilarities in lighting conditions); People v Vaiza (1966) 244 CA2d 121, 126, 52 CR 733 (trial court abused discretion in admitting photographs designed to show lighting conditions at scene of crime that were taken many months later and not at same hour of morning as incident). See also 2 Witkin, California Evidence, Demonstrative, Experimental and Scientific Evidence §19 (4th ed 2000).

The court may admit a photographic reenactment even if it portrays conditions somewhat dissimilar to conditions at the time of the dispute. Compare DiRosario v Havens (1987) 196 CA3d 1224, 1232, 242 CR 423 (video reenactment admitted despite numerous differences in conditions depicted), Greeneich v Southern Pac. Co. (1961) 189 CA2d 100, 107, 11 CR 235 (color and sound motion pictures portraying reenactment of defendant's train passing over railroad crossing properly admitted, even though film was shot during day, accident occurred at night, and courtroom distorted sound of train), and People v Freeman (1951) 107 CA2d 44, 54, 236 P2d 396 (court properly admitted film of experiment showing lighted matches thrown from moving jeep, even though wind and temperature conditions not identical), with Ehrhardt v Brunswick, Inc. (1986) 186 CA3d 734, 740, 231 CR 60 (video reenactment excluded because it was inconsistent with all eyewitness testimony). See also Anello v Southern Pac. Co. (1959) 174 CA2d 317, 322, 344 P2d 843 (appellate court criticized trial court's admission of film of orange train approaching crossing when train in dispute was black; reversed on other grounds so court never decided issue of admission of color slides). For further discussion of the foundation required for photographs, see §13.92.

PRACTICE TIP: When the photographic evidence is in a motion picture, court and counsel should view the film in chambers to resolve any objections. The court or counsel may also wish to conduct a voir dire examination of foundational witnesses out of the jurors' presence so that a ruling on the film's admissibility can be made. On anticipating sensitive areas of inquiry, see Los Angeles Ct R 8.46.

§13.98 e. Sample foundation for video recording

After establishing the video maker's name, occupation, and business address, counsel seeking to have this video received in evidence might ask the witness the following questions to lay a foundation:

Q: How long have you been in the videographics business?

A: 10 years.

Q: Please state your training and experience in this field.

A: In 2007 and 2008 I attended two 4-day seminars at the University of Nevada in Reno on the equipment and techniques of videographic reporting.

Q: During the years that you have been in the videographics business, approximately how many assignments have you completed?

A: Over 500 assignments.

Q: Have any of your assignments involved the taking of videographic pictures for use in legal proceedings?

A: Yes, I have given testimony in a court of law where I have presented videographic footage over 30 times.

Q: Did you take video footage of Mr. Fuller, the plaintiff in this case?

A: Yes, I took it in front of Avenida del Prisa, La Jolla, California, on November 1, 2007, at the defense attorney's request.

Q: What equipment did you use for this purpose?

A: I used a Sony VHS video camera with a six-to-one zoom lens.

Q: Where were you when you took this video footage?

A: I was on the west side of the street, opposite the address that I previously mentioned. I was approximately 100 feet away from the plaintiff. I had the camera on a tripod. The lighting exposure is automatic.

Q: What were the lighting conditions at the time?

A: It was clear daylight and sunshine, about three in the afternoon.

Q: How many minutes of footage did you take?

A: 27 minutes.

Q: Were any splices made in the video?

A: No.

Q: Do you have the video with you in court?

A: Yes. Here it is.

Q: [Include if video has not already been identified (see §§13.46-13.49)] Your Honor, may this package be marked as Defendant's next exhibit in order for identification?

Court: It will be marked Defendant's D for identification.

Q: Does Defendant's D for Identification represent all the video footage taken by you of plaintiff on November 1, 2007?

A: Yes.

Q: Have you seen the video footage?

A: Yes.

Q: Is it a fair representation in all respects of the plaintiff's actions on the date mentioned?

A: Yes.

Counsel can now offer the video into evidence, stating:

At this time, Your Honor, we offer Defendant's D into evidence and ask permission to show the recording to the jury.

§13.99 3. X rays

The foundational requirement for the admissibility of X rays is similar to that for the admissibility of photographs. See §13.91. Generally, there must be testimony to establish the accuracy of the X ray. See Sim v Weeks (1935) 7 CA2d 28, 40, 45 P2d 350.

This requirement is often satisfied by testimony that:

- The X ray is in fact the X ray of the person or object involved in the litigation;
- The X ray depicts a specific portion of the person or object on a particular date; and
- The X ray accurately portrays what it depicts.

This testimony is often presented by the proponent's expert witness who interprets the X ray for the trier of fact. Unlike normal photographs, an X ray's significance depends on an expert's interpretation of it. Without this expert's analysis, the X ray is normally unintelligible to the jury. When the accuracy of an X ray not taken by the expert witness is contested, counsel will probably be required to call a witness familiar with the manner in which the X ray was created, particularly if an unusual technique was used or the X ray depicts an uncommon condition or a nonhuman subject.

X rays that reflect a normal condition other than of the person or object involved in the suit may also be admitted into evidence for purposes of comparison. See, e.g., DeMartini v McDonnell (1936) 14 CA2d 405, 58 P2d 170.

PRACTICE TIP: X rays are essentially photo-negatives and, as such, they present logistical problems in the courtroom. An illuminating view box is needed for their content to be viewed by the jury. Although many courts now have such equipment available, you should make advance arrangements. Having a positive print made of an X ray is even better than using an X ray alone. This allows the jury to compare the X ray with the positive print. The print can be handled with the ease of a photograph and may be permitted inside the jury room during deliberations. X rays are usually not allowed inside the jury room, because the jurors may misinterpret them or be misled. See §13.139.

NOTE: The foundational requirements for X rays are often the subject of stipulation. On stipulations generally, see §13.37.

4. Drawings, diagrams, charts, graphs, maps, and models

§13.100 a. Foundational requirements

The admissibility of drawings, diagrams, charts, graphs, maps, models, and other such visual aids depends on principles similar to those required for the admissibility of photographs. See 2 Witkin, California Evidence, Demonstrative, Experimental and Scientific Evidence §24 (4th ed 2000). On photographs, see §13.92. Visual evidence is acceptable because it is "the pictorial communications of a qualified witness." See People v Snyder (1958) 50 C2d 190, 324 P2d 1; People v Kynette (1940) 15 C2d 731, 755, 104 P2d 794, overruled on other grounds in People v Horn (1974) 12 C3d 290, 301, 115 CR 516. Visual aids may be introduced into evidence to illustrate the scene of an accident or to show the location of objects or places involved in a dispute. See, e.g., People v Brown (1988) 46 C3d 432, 442, 250 CR 604 (use of mannequin to illustrate gunshot wounds).

Generally, the requisite foundation can be laid through a witness (or witnesses) testifying that the visual aid accurately and fairly reflects certain facts. In certain instances, a witness's testimony on the accuracy of measurements and proportions depicted by the visual aid may be important to satisfy the foundational requirement.

The proponent may have to overcome an objection that the visual aid is unduly prejudicial, time-consuming, or misleading. See Evid C §352. See also County of San Mateo v Christen (1937) 22 CA2d 375, 378, 71 P2d 88 (foundation for model properly laid, but court sustained §352 objection, noting that trial court has discretion in ruling on whether to admit models into evidence because great disparity in size between model and original may be misleading). On objections generally, see §§13.114-13.138.

NOTE: Duplicates of an article may also be admitted into evidence for visual aid purposes. See Smith v McClary (1938) 28 CA2d 468, 470, 82 P2d 712 (duplicate lid to 100-pound malt can admitted into evidence just as photograph would be).

Although maps, plans, and diagrams need not be prepared to scale to be admissible in most courts, preparing them to scale overcomes objections about their accuracy and fairness. See §13.19. In some courts, however, the visual aid must state on its face whether it is prepared to scale. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.75. Some courts also require that permission to use such aids be obtained in advance.

Visual aids such as maps, drawings, and diagrams also may be made by a witness while testifying. If the visual aid accurately reflects what it depicts, it may be received in evidence. Generally, a witness will be allowed to make notes, drawings, or markings if the requested task helps explain the witness's testimony and is not unduly time-consuming, misleading, or destructive to the exhibit's original significance. See generally Evid C §352. Counsel should ask the court's permission before requesting the witness to perform this task.

§13.101 b. Medical drawings

A foundation for medical drawings of surgical procedures can be established by the surgeon's testimony that the drawings fairly portray the surgery. The drawings should be made under the surgeon's direction by consultation between the artist and the surgeon. These drawings can be effectively used to convince the trier of fact that cases involving soft-tissue injuries can be serious. One way of demonstrating soft-tissue injury is to present medical drawings showing the bone structure, with acetate overlays to show the soft-tissue structure.

EXAMPLE 1: A woman had intractable pain in her arm from a whiplash injury. A series of drawings illustrated surgery involving the severing of sensory nerves in the cervical region to relieve the pain. The first drawing showed the incision; others showed various steps in reaching the nerves, including removal of portions of bone in the spine and severance of the nerve.

EXAMPLE 2: A woman swallowed a piece of wire, which was inside a cream puff. An artist's colored drawings illustrated the surgery to remove the wire from her intestines. The first drawing showed the female torso. The first acetate overlay showed the incision made in the abdomen; the next overlay showed the location of the wire in the body.

Because some judges do not permit X rays to be taken to the jury room (see §13.124), it is sometimes helpful to have drawings made illustrating fractures. A foundation can usually be laid for the introduction of the drawings by having the medical witness compare the X rays with the drawings. If the witness testifies that the drawings are a fair reproduction of the fractures shown by the X rays, the drawings may be offered into evidence. The court will usually receive such drawings and permit them to go into the jury room. Once in the jury room, these drawings are a constant reminder during the deliberations of the nature of the injury and medical procedure. On taking exhibits to the jury room, see §§13.139, 21.29.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.102 c. Models

For models, the foundational testimony required is that the model be substantially similar to that which it illustrates. On how to establish substantial similarity, see §13.90.

EXAMPLE 1: A pistol substantially similar to one involved in a robbery was admitted for the limited purpose of illustrating and clarifying a witness's testimony. See People v Ham (1970) 7 CA3d 768, 780, 86 CR 906, disapproved on other grounds in People v Compton (1971) 6 C3d 55, 60 n3, 98 CR 217.

EXAMPLE 2: Demonstration with a model bomb was received in evidence for the limited purpose of aiding the jurors in understanding the expert's testimony, even though the model did not purport to depict the device that actually triggered the explosion involved in the case. See People v McDaniel (1976) 16 C3d 156, 175 n13, 127 CR 467.

EXAMPLE 3: The trial court admitted a model on the theory that it correctly depicted the appearance of property before it was taken in an eminent domain proceeding. See City of Pleasant Hill v First Baptist Church (1969) 1 CA3d 384, 398, 82 CR 1.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.103 d. Skeletons

Testimony may be illustrated by skeletons, which fall "within the same category as pictures and diagrams." Dameron v Ansbro (1918) 39 CA 289, 298, 178 P 874. On foundational requirements for photographs and drawings, see §§13.91, 13.100, respectively. In the absence of a stipulation, foundational testimony is usually elicited through an expert witness who interprets the skeleton and testifies that it accurately portrays what it depicts. Permitting counsel to use a skeleton to illustrate testimony is within the court's discretion. Dameron v Ansbro, supra.

NOTE: Personal injury attorneys who use skeletons often during trial can avoid buying a new skeleton for every trial, by obtaining a stipulation or court order that the witness and counsel may use the skeleton without marking it for identification or admitting it into evidence. This way, counsel can regain custody of the skeleton on return of the verdict or entry of judgment.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/13 Trial Exhibits/§13.104 e. Drawing pad or blackboard

§13.104 e. Drawing pad or blackboard

While testifying, a witness may be permitted to make notes or drawings on a blackboard or drawing pad to illustrate the testimony. A court may also permit a witness to mark on an exhibit already in evidence. Any location on an exhibit that is referred to by a witness should be marked and identified with a reference to that witness (e.g., all markings by witness Smith should be marked Smith-1, Smith-2; if extensive markings will be made, counsel should use a transparent overlay and grease pencils so that the original is not altered).

PRACTICE TIP: It is usually not a good idea for a witness to use a blackboard, because a drawing on a blackboard cannot easily be made part of the formal record. Instead, use a pad mounted on a bulletin board. Most courts make such equipment available as a matter of routine. Once the witness has finished making notes or drawings on the pad, have the piece of paper marked for identification and received in evidence.

If a blackboard must be used, consider having a photograph taken of the witness's notes or drawings. The photograph can be marked for identification and offered into evidence. This helps create a clearer record for purposes of appeal. Opposing counsel can use the same technique if the witness's notes or drawings prove to be important to him or her. Note that when such a photograph is received in evidence, it should be received for the limited purpose of explaining the witness's testimony.

NOTE: Counsel who is examining a witness may make a drawing or mark on a drawing under the witness's direction. If the witness testifies on the accuracy of the drawing or marking, it can be received in evidence.

On the requirement for relevancy generally, see §13.22.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.105 5. Audio recordings

Properly authenticated recordings are admissible as "writings." Darley v Ward (1980) 28 C3d 257, 261, 168 CR 481. On definition of writings, see §13.2.

NOTE: Authentication alone does not overcome other rules of evidence, e.g., the hearsay rule. There is a difference between a foundational device, such as authentication, and the substantive rules on admissibility of evidence, such as the hearsay rule. Stockinger v Feather River Community College (2003) 111 CA4th 1014, 1027, 4 CR3d 385.

An adequate foundation for the admissibility of a recording can be laid through testimony regarding voice identity and accuracy of the recording. The voice-identification witness need not have seen the speaker as his or her voice was recorded. Evid C §§1410-1421. See People v Fonville (1973) 35 CA3d 693, 708, 111 CR 53 (identification of voices on recording not necessary for foundation; statements on recording could have been known only by appellant); People v Sica (1952) 112 CA2d 574, 588, 247 P2d 72 (police officers identified defendants by voices they were already familiar with and by conversations held with them after arrest). But see O'Laskey v Sortino (1990) 224 CA3d 241, 249, 273 CR 674 (transcript of recorded admission excluded for lack of adequate foundation of recording) disapproved in part on other grounds in Flanagan v Flanagan (2002) 27 C4th 766, 776 n4, 117 CR2d 574. For a federal case discussing the problem of a recorded conversation not in English, see U.S. v Fuentes-Montijo (9th Cir 1995) 68 F3d 352, 355 (holding it is proper for court to instruct the jury not to reject the accuracy of the translation, especially when some of the jurors are bilingual). Where portions of the recording are unintelligible, a properly authenticated transcript may yet be admissible. People v Polk (1996) 47 CA4th 944, 955, 54 CR2d 921.

To authenticate a recording, ask the participant in the conversation to listen to the recording and testify that the conversation is truthfully recorded to the best of his or her recollection. People v Finch (1963) 216 CA2d 444, 453, 30 CR 901. The court must be satisfied that the recording is substantially complete and correct on material matters before it permits the recording to be played to the jury. People v Finch, supra.

NOTE: California Rules of Court 2.1040 requires that, if a party offers into evidence an audio recording or sound-and-video recording, an advance written transcript be prepared and marked for identification. A duplicate of this transcript must be filed by the clerk and as part of the clerk's transcript in event of an appeal. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1040. Check local rules for additional requirements. See Stanislaus Ct R 3.26; Fresno Ct R 4.1.2.

The trial court must exercise great care when a recording is unintelligible in part. People v Mulvey (1961) 196 CA2d 714, 720, 16 CR 821. In such situations, some judges suggest that the judge, counsel, and jurors be given copies of the audio transcript to follow the recording as it is played. A copy of the transcript should also be admitted into evidence. See People v Finch, supra (transcript used during trial but not admitted into evidence).

WARNING: California law prohibits making a recording of confidential communications without notice to the other parties to the conversation. Pen C §632; Coulter v Bank of America (1994) 28 CA4th 923, 33 CR2d 766. A communication is confidential when there is an objectively reasonable expectation by a party that the conversation is not being overheard or recorded. Flanagan v Flanagan (2002) 27 C4th 766, 776, 117 CR2d 574. Evidence obtained from such an illegal recording must be excluded. See Pen C §§630-637.5; Frio v Superior Court (1988) 203 CA3d 1480, 250 CR 819. Recordings inadmissible under Pen C §632 may, however, be admitted for the limited purposes of refreshing a witness's recollection or to impeach a lying witness. 203 CA3d at 1496. In Feldman v Allstate Ins. Co. (9th Cir 2003) 322 F3d 660, 667, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals held that although conversations recorded in violation of Pen C §632 should be excluded, the testimony of participants in those conversations is admissible to the extent those witnesses have an independent recollection of the conversations. Some types of public activities, however, are not deemed confidential for purposes of Pen C §630.

§13.106 6. Exhibitions of persons or prosthetic devices

The court has discretion to permit in-court displays or demonstrations of a person's injuries or prosthetic devices. See Comment to Evid C §140. When a courtroom display or demonstration of a person's injuries or prosthetic devices is permitted, the jurors are seeing substantive evidence. See Comment to Evid C §140. For example, a party may exhibit to the jury injuries received. Sassano v Roullard (1938) 27 CA2d 372, 374, 81 P2d 213 (scar); Faras v Lower Cal. Dev. Co. (1915) 27 CA 688, 697, 151 P 35 (disfiguring and incapacitating burns).

Similarly, a court may permit manipulation of certain parts of a person's body to demonstrate limited physical abilities. Willoughby v Zylstra (1935) 5 CA2d 297, 301, 42 P2d 685 (court permitted plaintiff's medical witness to manipulate plaintiff's neck in front of jury and to pinch his cervical vertebrae, which resulted in pain).

Before determining whether to allow such an exhibition or display, the court will consider the following factors:

- Whether the person's present condition is sufficiently similar to his or her condition at the time in dispute that the demonstration would be relevant and assist the jury. See, e.g., People v Wong (1973) 35 CA3d 812, 835, 111 CR 314 (criminal defendant not allowed to show jury absence of needle marks on his arms; irrelevant because nearly a year had passed since critical event).
- Whether the requested exhibition would subject the person to undue harassment or embarrassment. See Evid C §765. See also Leonard v Hume (1935) 5 CA2d 41, 41 P2d 965.
- Whether the probative value is outweighed by the possible tendency of the demonstration to inflame the jury's passion or prejudice. See §13.117 for discussion of objection under Evid C §352.

In proposing such a demonstration, the feelings of the person to be displayed must be considered. When the process may be embarrassing to the person, the court, or the jury, counsel can request that it be conducted in chambers or in a place other than an open courtroom with only essential persons present. The court, all counsel, and the jurors should be present for the demonstration. Additionally, a court reporter should be present to record the proceedings. The jurors should be instructed that they may not ask questions or do anything other than observe.

PRACTICE TIP: Prepare a photographic presentation of the plaintiff's injury in the event the court does not allow a particular exhibition.

For a sample record of how to exhibit personal injuries at trial, see Laying a Foundation To Introduce Evidence (Preparing and Using Evidence at Trial), step 37 (Cal CEB Action Guide April 2008).

7. Computer-generated evidence

§13.107 a. Computer-recorded information and computer programs; objections

A printed representation of computer information or a computer program, or of images stored on a video or digital medium, is presumed to be an accurate representation of the computer information or images that it purports to represent. Evid C §§1552-1553. If a party introduces evidence that the printed representation is inaccurate or unreliable, the party introducing it into evidence has the burden of proving, by a preponderance of evidence, that the printed representation is an accurate representation of the existence and content of the computer information, or of the images stored on a video or digital medium, that it purports to represent. Evid C §§1552-1553. Section 1552(a) does not apply to computer-generated official records certified in accordance with Evid C §452.5 or §1530. Evid C §1552(c).

NOTE: Any printout constitutes an "original" of the data stored in the computer. Evid C §255. To be admitted into evidence, the programs and printouts must be relevant (see §13.22), authenticated (see §13.65), comply with the secondary evidence rule under Evid C §§1520-1523, 1552-1553 (see §§13.122-13.123), not be inadmissible hearsay (see §13.119), and not be excluded by Evid C §352 or any other statutes (see §13.117).

For a brief description of computer- and video-aided presentation of exhibits in the courtroom, see Brosnahan, The Latest Trial Procedures, 18 CEB Civ Litigation Rep 342 (Sept. 1996). See also Lee & Page, Use and Admissibility of 'High-Tech' Evidence, California Litigation (Summer 1998); Carey, Using User-Friendly Computer-Generated Demonstrative Evidence To Keep the Jury Awake, Practical Litigator (July 1998).

When computer-recorded information is offered for the truth of what it contains, the proponent of the computerized evidence may also have to overcome a hearsay objection. On hearsay, see §13.119. Most often, the applicable exception to the hearsay rule will be the business records exception set forth in Evid C §1271.

Under the business records exception, the proponent of the evidence must show that the writing was made in the regular course of business (Evid C §1271(a)) and at or near the time of the act, condition, or event recorded (Evid C §1271(b)). These requirements can be shown by testimony from a witness who knows how and when the computer lists were prepared and the sources of the information in the computer lists. The court, of course, retains broad discretion to determine whether particular evidence meets the standards of trustworthiness established by Evid C §1271. See People v Matthews (1991) 229 CA3d 930, 940, 280 CR 134 (computer-generated "rap sheets" inadmissible to prove prior convictions in absence of such testimony); People v Martinez (2000) 22 C4th 106, 91 CR2d 687 (court had discretion to admit computer-generated "rap sheets" when foundational evidence established trustworthiness).

The witness requirement (Evid C §1271(c)) and the reliability requirement (Evid C §1271(d)) of the business records exception are commonly satisfied by the testimony of anyone "who generally understands the system's operation and possesses sufficient knowledge and skill to properly use the system and explain the resultant data." People v Lugashi (1988) 205 CA3d 632, 640, 252 CR 434.

For computer-based public records, Evid C §1280 can provide the basis of the hearsay exception, which often is considerably easier to establish than other hearsay exceptions. See, e.g., People v George (1994) 30 CA4th 262, 273, 35 CR2d 750 (records of jail bunk and locker assignments properly admitted under Evid C §1280 (official records exception)), even though there was no witness testifying about the identity and mode of preparation of the specific document, because the foundational facts may be shown by judicial notice or under the official duty presumption of Evid C §664). See also Gananian v Zolin (1995) 33 CA4th 634, 39 CR2d 384, in which the highway patrol officer's sworn report constituted an admissible public employee record under Evid C §1280. The report also contained a deputy sheriff's personal observations, which were admissible over a hearsay objection because they were made in the course of his duty as a police officer to observe facts and report them correctly. But see People v Campos (1995) 32 CA4th 304, 309, 38 CR2d 113 (Evid C §§1271 and 1280 do not permit the admission of nontestifying experts' reports or a probation report).

NOTE: The party offering computer-generated evidence need not prove the acceptability or reliability of the computer hardware or software used to generate the evidence or the sufficiency of the computer system's internal maintenance or accuracy checks. People v Lugashi (1988) 205 CA3d 632, 638, 252 CR 434. The same is true whether the computer information involves computations or merely retrieval of data. 205 CA3d at 642. See People v Dorsey (1974) 43 CA3d 953, 960, 118 CR 362 (mistakes can be taken up on cross-examination).

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/13 Trial Exhibits/§13.108 b. Computer simulations

§13.108 b. Computer simulations

Use of computer simulations at trial can be used for a wide variety of cases (e.g., car accidents, collisions of boats, construction accidents). The foundational requirements for admitting a computer simulation into evidence are the same as for a photographic reenactment or reconstruction of events. Counsel must show that the facts and conditions portrayed in the simulation are the same as or substantially similar to those involved in the dispute. See §§13.91-13.93. Computer animation is not subject to the scientific evidence limitation of People v Kelly (1976) 17 C3d 24, 30, 130 CR 144, because it is more similar to drawing on a blackboard than a scientific technique. See People v Hood (1997) 53 CA4th 965, 969, 62 CR2d 137.

EXAMPLE: A computer simulation was used at trial to reconstruct the path of two vessels that collided outside a port. The computer program was written so that the path of the vessels could be altered by different turning points. The expert manipulated the computer while testifying. The computer simulation was enhanced by using a video camera over the witness's shoulder, and this image was beamed to monitors in the courtroom so that others in the courtroom could see the simulation. The video of the expert witness's computer presentation was marked as an exhibit at trial and designated as an exhibit for appeal. The video was shown with other demonstrative pieces of evidence in arguments before the court of appeal.

PRACTICE TIP: Mark the computer simulation as evidence by marking one of the following:

- Computer disk. After the computer disk is marked, it can be submitted as evidence to the court. Although the disk is a useless piece of evidence without the computer and the appropriate application software, it could be used in a later proceeding if necessary.
- Video of computer simulation. A video of one version of a computer simulation can also be marked as evidence. The advantage of this is that a video provides a readily accessible medium for presentation at trial and an easily viewable medium in any later proceeding.
- Laser disk. The computer simulation can also be transferred onto a laser disk, which is just like transferring it onto a video.
- Video recording of computer simulation presented at trial. A video of the computer simulation as the witness was testifying about it can be introduced as a separate piece of evidence. This has the advantage of preserving not only the actual simulation presented at trial but also the witness's testimony about that simulation.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/13 Trial Exhibits/§13.109 8. Scientific evidence

§13.109 8. Scientific evidence

Kelly* standard. Evidence obtained through the use of scientific techniques can only be admitted in the courtroom if the Kelly foundational standard is met. People v Kelly (1976) 17 C3d 24, 30, 130 CR 144; Frye v U.S. (DC Cir 1923) 293 F 1013, 1014. Under this standard, the proponent of scientific evidence must satisfy the following three-pronged test (People v Venegas (1998) 18 C4th 47, 78, 74 CR2d 262):

- The technique used was sufficiently reliable that it has gained general acceptance in its scientific community or field. People v Ashmus (1991) 54 C3d 932, 970, 2 CR2d 112; People v Kelly (1976) 17 C3d 24, 30, 130 CR 144; Frye v U.S., supra. This is sometimes referred to as the "Kelly" rule. See 2 Witkin, California Evidence, Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence §42 (4th ed 2000).
- The witness testifying to the substantial reliability of the scientific method is qualified as an expert to give an opinion on the subject. People v Ashmus, supra; People v Kelly, supra.
- The correct scientific procedures were used. People v Ashmus, supra; People v Kelly, supra.

Leahy* decision. In People v Leahy (1994) 8 C4th 587, 34 CR2d 663, a drunk-driving case, the California Supreme Court considered whether the Kelly-Frye standard should be modified following the United States Supreme Court's decision in Daubert v Merrell Dow Pharms., Inc. (1993) 509 US 579, 125 L Ed 2d 469, 113 S Ct 2786. In Daubert, the court held that the rule set forth in Frye v U.S., supra (which required a showing that scientific technique used was sufficiently reliable that it had gained general acceptance in its scientific community or field), was abrogated by Fed R Evid 702. Under Rule 702, the expert's testimony must pertain to scientific knowledge and must also assist the trier of fact in understanding the evidence or in determining a fact at issue. Nothing in Rule 702 establishes "general acceptance" (a Frye requirement) as a prerequisite to admissibility. See also Lust v Merrell Dow Pharms., Inc. (9th Cir 1996) 89 F3d 594, in which the Ninth Circuit affirmed the exclusion of the expert's opinion under Fed R Evid 702 and the granting of summary judgment because of the absence of evidence proving causation.

In Leahy, the California Supreme Court refused to apply Daubert and held that the Kelly formulation should remain a prerequisite to the admission of expert testimony regarding new scientific methods. People v Leahy (1994) 8 C4th 587, 591, 34 CR2d 663.

As a result of the court's decision in Leahy, the standard governing admissibility of scientific evidence in California state courts is different from the standard applicable in the federal courts.

NOTE: District court rulings under the federal Daubert test are to be reviewed under the abuse of discretion standard. General Elec. Co. v Joiner (1997) 522 US 136, 138, 139 L Ed 2d 508, 514, 118 S Ct 512. The trial court's function is a flexible one, not limited to the factors specifically mentioned in Daubert. Kumho Tire Co. v Carmichael (1999) 526 US 137, 143 L Ed 2d 238, 251, 119 S Ct 1167. Furthermore, Daubert applies not only to scientific knowledge, but also to technical or other specialized knowledge. 143 L Ed 2d at 250. California law applying Kelly, on the other hand, appears to apply only to new scientific evidence. Texaco Producing, Inc. v County of Kern (1998) 66 CA4th 1029, 1048, 78 CR2d 433.

PRACTICE TIP: Although the foundational requirements of Kelly evolved in the context of criminal cases, you should be prepared to satisfy these prerequisites if you plan to use such evidence in civil cases. See, e.g., Melaleuca, Inc. v Clark (1998) 66 CA4th 1344, 1357, 78 CR2d 627 (for expert testimony to be admissible to prove truth of alleged defamatory statements, underlying scientific technique must meet Kelly requirements). Additionally, as the development of DNA evidence has shown, the fact a particular scientific technique is rejected in its early stages of development does not mean it will remain inadmissible. See People v Kelly (1976) 17 C3d 24, 41, 130 CR 144. The lawyer must therefore remain alert to scientific progress. Conversely, what is generally accepted now may, after further scientific advances, become no longer acceptable.

In addition to establishing the reliability of the scientific technique, it may be necessary to show that the subject matter and conditions of the test are substantially similar to those of the disputed event. This may be necessary, e.g.,

when the object tested is different from the one involved in the dispute. On substantial similarity generally, see §13.90.

General acceptance in scientific community. Courts have also permitted literature in the scientific field to be used as evidence, not for the actual reliability of the new scientific technique but for its general acceptance in the scientific community. People v Shirley (1982) 31 C3d 18, 56, 181 CR 243 (use of hypnosis to restore potential witness's memory not generally accepted as reliable by scientific community); Schall v Lockheed Missiles & Space Co. (1995) 37 CA4th 1485, 1492, 44 CR2d 191 (although Shirley "arguably" was overruled in criminal context in 1992 by Proposition 8 (Cal Const art I, §28), "Shirley precludes hypnotically restored testimony in civil cases"); People v Davis (1995) 35 CA4th 1488, 1505, 42 CR2d 6 (use of horizontal gaze nystagmus (HGN) field sobriety test admissible under Kelly rule based on general acceptance by relevant scientific community—behavioral psychologists, highway safety experts, criminalists, and specific doctors).

The court of appeal in Roberti v Andy's Termite & Pest Control, Inc. (2003) 113 CA4th 893, 901, 6 CR3d 827, held that the trial court erred in applying the Kelly admissibility test to expert testimony that pesticide caused plaintiff's autism, because plaintiff's experts based their testimony on research papers and studies in peer-reviewed journals and on the physical examination of plaintiff using techniques that are generally accepted in the medical community. They did not rely on any new scientific technique, device, or procedure that was not generally accepted in the relevant scientific or medical community. Rather, their theory of causation (that a particular pesticide caused plaintiff's autism) is not generally accepted in the medical community. The Roberti court said the Kelly test does not apply even if testimony presents new theory of medical causation.

Admissibility of DNA evidence. The California courts have ruled DNA testing to be admissible evidence. People v Taylor (1995) 33 CA4th 262, 269, 40 CR2d 132 (use of DNA testing is generally accepted, but more difficult question lies in which statistical inferences may be drawn; after considering numbers and expertise of experts on both sides of the question, National Research Council's "modified ceiling approach" was properly found to be generally accepted in the scientific community). But see People v Soto (1999) 21 C4th 512, 88 CR2d 34 ("uniform product rule" used to conduct statistical analysis of DNA evidence is generally accepted scientific method and expert testimony based on same is admissible). See also People v Brown (2001) 91 CA4th 623, 110 CR2d 750 (when generally accepted but new scientific method was used to conduct DNA sampling, and evidence showed that analysis was done in accordance with technique, criticisms directed at technique went to weight and not to admissibility, of DNA evidence). On expert testimony on DNA cases, see §11.139. For further discussion of DNA evidence, see California Expert Witness Guide §4.17 (2d ed Cal CEB 1991).

Other types of blood evidence. Questions concerning other aspects of blood evidence are not as controversial. See People v Morganti (1996) 43 CA4th 643, 50 CR2d 837 (affirmed trial court's finding polymerase chain reaction analysis (PCR) as generally accepted in relevant scientific community when two expert witnesses and extensive documentary evidence also presented at trial, and little opposition in scientific community presented); People v Yorba (1989) 209 CA3d 1017, 257 CR 641 (use of two separate chemical and physical tests, electrophoresis and agglutination inhibition, properly allowed by trial court. Relying on People v Reilly, supra, the court of appeal stated it was satisfied that electrophoretic testing of dried bloodstains is scientifically reliable and held that the record supports the trial court's conclusion that the scientific community accepts agglutination inhibition as valid and reliable scientific technique).

Computer animation. Computer animation is not subject to the Kelly test because it is more similar to drawing on a blackboard than a scientific technique. People v Hood (1997) 53 CA4th 965, 969, 62 CR2d 137.

Enhanced and recovered memory issues. A witness who has been interviewed while under the influence of sodium amytal ("truth serum") is incompetent to testify, and such an interview fails the Kelly test. Ramona v Superior Court (1997) 57 CA4th 107, 116, 66 CR2d 766. One court has noted in dicta that recovered memory theory is now of questionable scientific basis. Trear v Sills (1999) 69 CA4th 1341, 1344, 82 CR2d 281. But see Wilson v Phillips (1999) 73 CA4th 250, 86 CR2d 204 (treating psychotherapist's testimony concerning existence of repressed memory syndrome in plaintiff was admissible because it relied on professional's percipient observations of patient and not on scientific opinion or technique).

9. Jury view

§13.110 a. Foundational requirements

A jury view is a type of demonstrative evidence. The court, on its own motion or on the motion of a party, has discretion to order that the jury view the following places or objects (CCP §651(a)):

- Property that is the subject of the litigation;
- The place where any relevant act occurred; and
- Any object, demonstration, or experiment, if a view is relevant and admissible into evidence and it cannot be viewed in the courtroom with reasonable convenience.

In deciding whether to allow a jury view, the court generally considers the following:

- Whether the need for a view is outweighed by the time to be consumed;
- Whether the conditions of the site are substantially similar to those that existed at the time of the event in dispute;
- Whether changes in the site's condition are of sufficient magnitude that the view will be misleading, confusing, or unduly prejudicial; and
- Whether problems may be encountered with transportation.

See People v Mooring (1982) 129 CA3d 453, 460, 181 CR 71. See also §17.9 on jury views.

The fact that the conditions at the site are not identical to those at the time of the disputed event does not foreclose the judge's discretion to allow a view. See, e.g., City of Pleasant Hill v First Baptist Church (1969) 1 CA3d 384, 414, 82 CR 1; Kraus v Walt Disney Prods. (1963) 221 CA2d 736, 740, 34 CR 702. See also Rau v Redwood City Women's Club (1952) 111 CA2d 546, 554, 245 P2d 12.

§13.111 b. Attendance at and testimony during jury view

The entire court (including the judge, jury, court reporter, counsel, and any necessary officers) must go to the place, property, object, demonstration, or experiment to be viewed. CCP §651(b). A view can be conducted just outside the courthouse (e.g., in a parking lot) if a bulky exhibit is difficult to move into the courtroom. The court is in session throughout the view. CCP §651(b).

At the view, the court may permit the testimony of witnesses. CCP §651(b). The court may also allow experiments to be conducted during the view. Kraus v Walt Disney Prods., supra. The proceedings at the viewing must be recorded to the same extent as the proceedings in the courtroom. CCP §651(b). Substantial problems can be created for counsel opposing a jury view by the absence of an adequate record of what occurred during the view. However, when there is a question on appeal regarding the sufficiency of the evidence supporting the verdict, courts tend to give great weight to what the jury might have seen during the view even if it was not recorded. City of Los Angeles v Kossman (1969) 274 CA2d 116, 120, 78 CR 849; Downey v Santa Fe Transp. Co. (1955) 134 CA2d 720, 725, 286 P2d 40. The same is true for a view by the judge in a nonjury case. City of Los Angeles v Kossman, supra; Downey v Santa Fe Transp. Co., supra.

PRACTICE TIP: When the jury is allowed to participate in a view that cannot adequately be made the subject of a reported transcript, opposing counsel should consider requesting that the view be video recorded, with the recording marked for identification and made part of the court's record.

Ordinarily, the jury will go and return from the view together under the charge of an officer. See Comment to CCP §651. However, the court may permit the jury to assemble at the view and leave separately. When the jury is permitted to separate, the court must admonish them not to talk with anyone about the trial and not to form or express an opinion about the case until it is finally submitted to them. CCP §611. On improper communications of jurors generally constituting misconduct, see §§17.15-17.19.

NOTE: An unauthorized view by a juror may constitute juror misconduct. Compare Maffeo v Holmes (1941) 47 CA2d 292, 117 P2d 948, with People v Sutter (1982) 134 CA3d 806, 184 CR 829 (juror's unauthorized visit to crime scene was misconduct but not prejudicial), and City of Pleasant Hill v First Baptist Church (1969) 1 CA3d 384, 414, 82 CR 1 (juror's solo visit to property was misconduct but not prejudicial). See also §17.13.

VIII. REAL EVIDENCE

§13.112 A. Admissibility requirements

The term "real evidence" is sometimes used by attorneys to refer to tangible items of physical evidence that were directly involved in the event at issue, e.g., the gun in a murder case or the defective product that injured the plaintiff in a personal injury case. This term, however, is not defined in the Evidence Code.

To be admissible, real evidence must be:

- Relevant (see §13.22);
- Properly authenticated (see §13.112); and
- Not excluded as unduly prejudicial under Evid C §352 (see §13.117) or other statutes.

Authentication can be established by testimony from a witness identifying the object as the identical object that the proponent claims it is. If the object is not identical, counsel must establish that it is substantially similar to the original object. See §13.90. If no one witness can establish authenticity, be prepared to present evidence of a continuous claim of custody of the object. See §13.113.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.113 B. Examples of real evidence: wreckage and other objects

Wreckage, debris, and other physical objects may be received in evidence when relevant (see §13.22) after a showing has been made that such items are in the same, or a substantially similar, condition as they were in at the time of the occurrence or event giving rise to the lawsuit. This is sometimes accomplished through chain-of-custody testimony establishing that the evidence has not been altered or tampered with. See Spolter v Four-Wheel Brake Serv. Co. (1950) 99 CA2d 690, 692, 222 P2d 307 (wheel and axle as evidence in personal injury case). Note, however, that such evidence may be excluded under Evid C §352 when it is overly dramatic, inflammatory, gruesome, or otherwise prejudicial. See §13.117. On chain of custody and laying a foundation, see §§13.25-13.27. On substantial similarity, see §§13.24, 13.90.

Once wreckage or other debris has been received in evidence, it can be extremely useful in helping witnesses to illustrate their testimony. Often, the greatest problem in having wreckage admitted into evidence is bringing the item physically into the courtroom. If this is a problem, consider using photographs, video recordings, models, or a jury view. See San Diego Ct, Div I, R 1.4.2 (court may order photographs substituted for bulky exhibits posing storage problems); Los Angeles Ct R 8.59. On jury views generally, see §§13.110-13.111.

IX. MAKING AND MEETING OBJECTIONS

§13.114 A. Making objections; waiver

An objection to inadmissible evidence must be made in a timely manner and must clearly state the specific ground of the objection. Evid C §353(a). Failure to make a timely, specific objection usually constitutes waiver of a party's right to complain of the erroneous admission of the evidence on appeal. See §15.24. See also 3 Witkin, California Evidence, Presentation at Trial §367 (4th ed 2000).

Local rules may require objections to exhibits to be made before trial. When an objection is made after evidence has already been admitted, however, it should be coupled with a motion to strike and a request that the jury be admonished to disregard the evidence. When desirable, counsel may request the court's permission to have a continuing objection to an entire line of questioning. See Comment to Evid C §353. For further discussion of objections and preserving the record, see chap 15.

The primary purpose of objecting to documentary and demonstrative evidence is to exclude improper, damaging evidence and to preserve the record in the event of an appeal. Additional purposes for making objections may include protecting a witness from undue harassment and thwarting inappropriate or unfair trial tactics by opposing counsel.

Decisions on whether to object to particular questions or exhibits can be difficult, primarily because counsel has little time to reflect. On one hand, failure to object constitutes waiver of the objection; on the other hand, frequent objections (particularly to minor deficiencies) tend to waste time, annoy the court and jury, create an appearance of trying to conceal facts, and highlight otherwise unexceptional testimony.

PRACTICE TIP: Thorough pretrial preparation will help you recognize possible objections before trial begins and decide whether, when, and how each objection should be made. Despite such preparation, however, you must always expect to be called on repeatedly during trial to make split-second judgments regarding objections. For discussion of an approach to exercising such judgments, see California Trial Objections, chap 4 (Cal CEB Annual).

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Particular objections

§13.115 1. Irrelevant

Documentary, demonstrative, and real evidence must be relevant to be admissible. See §13.22.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.116 2. Lack of foundation

The term "lack of foundation" embodies a number of different objections. Generally, such objections are directed at the failure of the evidence's proponent to establish the preliminary facts necessary for admissibility.

EXAMPLE: A photograph of a staged recreation of an accident would be objectionable if the testimony of the witness laying the foundation did not establish that the photograph depicted the facts and conditions of the accident with accuracy or substantial similarity. On the foundation required for photographic re-creation of events, see §13.97.

In phrasing such an objection, do not merely state, "Objection: lack of foundation." Instead, specify why the foundation is deficient. If this is not done, the objection will generally not be preserved for appeal by the objecting party. See Parlier Fruit Co. v Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. (1957) 151 CA2d 6, 15, 311 P2d 62; People v Modell (1956) 143 CA2d 724, 728, 300 P2d 204.

For further discussion, see California Trial Objections, chap 21 (Cal CEB Annual). See also 3 Witkin, California Evidence, Presentation at Trial §380 (4th ed 2000).

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.117 3. Unduly prejudicial, misleading, or time-consuming (Evid C §352)

A court may exclude evidence if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the probability that its admission will be unduly prejudicial, misleading, or time-consuming. Evid C §352. The courts often use §352 to control the type and quantity of demonstrative evidence allowed at trial. See, e.g., Finn v G. D. Searle & Co. (1984) 35 C3d 691, 703, 200 CR 870 (cumulative evidence); Horn v General Motors Corp. (1976) 17 C3d 359, 371, 131 CR 78 (same); Aguayo v Crompton & Knowles Corp. (1986) 183 CA3d 1032, 1040, 228 CR 768 (evidence of postaccident warning and addition of safety equipment excluded in product liability actions as cumulative).

Video recordings and motion pictures may also be excluded under Evid C §352 as misleading, even if they are based on substantially similar conditions. See §13.94. As a result, judges are often cautious about receiving video recordings and motion pictures into evidence because an artful technician can manipulate their impact by using telescopic lenses, creating ingenious stage settings, eliminating unfavorable portions of film, and taking shots from angles that obscure objective reality. All of this "may tend to create misleading impressions." Harmon v San Joaquin Light & Power Corp. (1940) 37 CA2d 169, 174, 98 P2d 1064.

An Evid C §352 objection can be raised by making a motion in limine before trial or by making an objection during trial. On motions in limine generally, see chap 7. At either time, the objection should be specific. See Evid C §353(a). For example, counsel might state:

> I object to the introduction of _ _[specify type of evidence]_ _ and request that the court exclude it under Evidence Code section 352 because _ _[e.g., its probative value is substantially outweighed by the prejudicial effect/its introduction will be unduly time-consuming and cumulative]_ _.

The purpose of making an objection under Evid C §352 is to prevent the jury from becoming aware of evidence that would otherwise be disclosed. If the objection is raised during trial, counsel should ask to have the argument heard either at the bench or in chambers. The court reporter should be present to record what is said.

The fact that evidence may prejudice the jury does not necessarily require its exclusion under Evid C §352. If the court determines that the probative value of the evidence outweighs its prejudicial effect, the evidence may be admitted although it may incidentally arouse the passions of the jury. See People v Seastone (1969) 3 CA3d 60, 64, 82 CR 907 ("fact that gruesome photos may prejudice a defendant in the eyes of a jury does not, alone, render them inadmissible"). See also People v Ashmus (1991) 54 C3d 932, 974, 2 CR2d 112; People v Milan (1973) 9 C3d 185, 193, 107 CR 68.

When the court exercises its discretion under Evid C §352, the party favored by the court's ruling should make certain that the record adequately reflects that the court conducted the balancing process stated in Evid C §352. Unless the record shows that the trial court balanced the evidence's probative value against its negative impact, the court's decision may be overturned on appeal. See People v Montiel (1985) 39 C3d 910, 924, 218 CR 572 (trial court's decision to admit photographs of murder victim upheld on appeal; judge expressly referred to his discretion, looked at photographs, and listened to argument but did not explicitly state the factors and his assessment in making his decision); People v Hempstead (1983) 148 CA3d 949, 955, 196 CR 412 (failure to make record of weighing process not necessarily reversible error). In Smalley v Batey (2005) 128 CA4th 977, 984, 27 CR3d 575, the trial court was held to have abused its discretion under Evid C §352 by excluding evidence that the plaintiff in a personal injury action had paid his own medical expenses (evidence was "manifestly relevant" to prove plaintiff's damages and to rebut defendants' insinuation that plaintiff was malingering; collateral source rule irrelevant because insurer did not pay those expenses).

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.118 4. Exhibit not produced in response to discovery request

Counsel may ask the court to prevent the opposing party from offering an exhibit into evidence at trial if the proponent failed to disclose the existence of the exhibit in accordance with a proper discovery request. See CCP §2031.320(c); Dwyer v Crocker Nat'l Bank (1987) 194 CA3d 1418, 1431, 240 CR 297 (failure to produce documents during deposition); Puritan Ins. Co. v Superior Court (1985) 171 CA3d 877, 217 CR 602 (expert testimony based on failed drive shaft excluded; shaft misplaced before production); Thoren v Johnston & Washer (1972) 29 CA3d 270, 105 CR 276 (witness precluded from testifying when witness's name willfully excluded from answer to interrogatory seeking names of witnesses to an event).

For sanctions on failure to comply with discovery generally and procedures, see CCP §§2023.010-2023.040, 2031.320. See also California Civil Procedure Before Trial §22.55 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004). Note that special rules apply to the discoverability of experts and writings concerning their proposed testimony and preparation to testify. See CCP §§2034.010-2034.730. See also Zellerino v Brown (1991) 235 CA3d 1097, 1 CR2d 222 (testimony of undisclosed experts excluded).

§13.119 5. Hearsay

Hearsay evidence is defined as "evidence of a statement that was made other than by a witness while testifying at the hearing and that is offered to prove the truth of the matter stated." Evid C §1200(a). Such evidence is inadmissible unless an exception to the hearsay rule applies. Evid C §1200(b). The burden is on the party offering the evidence to prove that an exception to the hearsay rule applies. See Evid C §§403, 405. On hearsay exceptions generally, see Evid C §§1220-1350. See also California Trial Objections, chap 19 (Cal CEB Annual).

The hearsay objection is frequently asserted against documentary evidence when it is offered for the truth of the matter asserted but does not meet the requirements for an exception to the hearsay rule. A hearsay objection also is available against certain types of demonstrative evidence. For example, a motion picture or video with a verbal soundtrack might be subject to a hearsay objection. See People v Edwards (1991) 54 C3d 787, 819, 1 CR2d 696 (video interview of defendant not admissible under state of mind exception to hearsay rule, because defendant was available to testify and statements were not made under conditions with sufficient indicia of reliability); People v Moran (1974) 39 CA3d 398, 406, 114 CR 413 (video of preliminary hearing testimony admitted as "former testimony").

In the event a hearsay objection is sustained, consider having the narrator of the video or motion picture in court and available to testify. For further discussion of hearsay, see §§10.18-10.27.

§13.120 6. Privileged

Although most claims of privilege are determined at the discovery stage in civil cases, privileges occasionally arise for the first time at trial. Privileges are set forth in Evid C §§900-1070.

When a privilege objection is raised, the judge determines the claim of privilege as a preliminary fact under Evid C §405. See Comment to Evid C §405. See also Evid C §914 on the same procedure for a presiding officer who is not a judge. The party claiming privilege has the burden of proof on the preliminary facts to show that the matter is subject to the privilege. Conversely, the party offering the evidence has the burden of proof on any preliminary facts to show that an exception to the privilege applies. Comment to Evid C §405. On the preliminary fact-finding process generally, see §§7.25-7.36.

In ruling on a claim of privilege, the court is generally precluded from requiring disclosure of information claimed to be privileged. However, the court may require disclosure to be made in chambers when ruling on official information, the identity of an informer, a trade secret or sexual assault victim-counselor privileges, or disclosure of peace officer personnel records. The only people present in chambers should be the judge, the witness, the person authorized to claim the privilege, and that person's attorney or designated representative. Evid C §§1035.4, 1040-1047, 1060. Evid C §915(b); Cooke v Superior Court (1978) 83 CA3d 582, 588, 147 CR 915; Carlton v Superior Court (1968) 261 CA2d 282, 293, 67 CR 568. See also Rubio v Superior Court (1988) 202 CA3d 1343, 1350, 249 CR 419 (trial court required to review privileged video recordings to determine whether criminal defendant's right to due process outweighs privilege holder's privilege rights).

If the judge determines that the information is privileged, all persons present in chambers (including the judge) are prohibited from ever disclosing the information, except with the consent of a person authorized to permit disclosure. Evid C §915(b).

To defeat a claim of privilege, the following questions should be asked by counsel:

- Can the privilege be asserted? Check the statute and relevant case law to see whether all requisite elements of the privilege exist.
- If the privilege may be asserted, is the person asserting the privilege the proper person to do so? Normally only a holder of the privilege has standing to assert it.
- If the person asserting the privilege is entitled to do so, has that person waived the privilege? If the holder waives the privilege, the right of every other person to claim the privilege is waived also. See Evid C §912.

NOTE: Any privilege attached to a communication in writing may be waived when a witness uses that privileged writing to refresh his or her memory. Kerns Constr. Co. v Superior Court (1968) 266 CA2d 405, 72 CR 74. On using a writing to refresh recollection, see §13.9, 13.124.

After a privilege is successfully asserted, consider asking the court to instruct the jury that exercise of the privilege creates no presumption and that no inference may be drawn from exercise of the privilege regarding the witness's credibility or any matter at issue in the proceeding. See Evid C §913. See also CACI 215-216; BAJI 2.27. These instructions may be requested when the privilege is asserted, when the jury is instructed at the end of the case, or at both times. When such instructions are requested, the court is obligated to give them. Evid C §913(b). On prohibition against counsel and judge commenting on exercise of a privilege, see Evid C §913(a).

For detailed discussion of privileges, see 2 Witkin, California Evidence, Witnesses §§59-97 (4th ed 2000); California Trial Objections, chaps 33-51 (Cal CEB Annual); Effective Introduction of Evidence in California, chap 43 (2d ed Cal CEB 2000).

§13.121 7. Opinions in writings

Opinions in writings are inadmissible unless the author could express the same opinion in court if called to testify. On opinion testimony generally, see Evid C §§800-805. The objection, if applicable, should be raised before the contents of the document are disclosed to the trier of fact. Frequently, opinion evidence objections are raised in connection with business records. See Hutton v Brookside Hosp. (1963) 213 CA2d 350, 355, 28 CR 774.

Under the business records exception to the hearsay rule, business records are admissible if a proper foundation is laid. See People v Moore (1970) 5 CA3d 486, 492, 85 CR 194. See also Springer v Reimers (1970) 4 CA3d 325, 338, 84 CR 486 (personal observations of attending physician; patient's history used by physician in reaching professional opinions). The business records exception does not, however, permit inadmissible opinions or conclusions to be received in evidence. See Hutton v Brookside Hosp., supra (nurse's opinion in medical record that patient was too ill to move was inadmissible); Hoel v City of Los Angeles (1955) 136 CA2d 295, 309, 288 P2d 989 (police accident report).

NOTE: Writings often contain numerous notations, some admissible and some not. To object to one portion of an exhibit, counsel must object to admission of the entire exhibit based on the inappropriate entry. It then becomes the burden of the exhibit's proponent to suggest a manner in which the inadmissible entry can be excised. On excising objectionable entries, see §13.137.

8. Secondary evidence rule

§13.122 a. General rule

The secondary evidence rule replaced the best evidence rule. See Evid C §§1520-1523, 1552-1553. The contents of a writing may be proved either by an original (Evid C §1520) or by otherwise admissible secondary evidence (Evid C §1521). The court may exclude secondary evidence if it determines that (1) a genuine dispute exists concerning material terms of the writing and justice requires its exclusion, or (2) admitting the secondary evidence would be unfair. Evid C §1521(a).

Except as otherwise provided by statute, oral testimony to prove the content of a writing is limited. Evid C §§1521(b), 1523(a)-(c). See §13.123.

Several familiar exceptions to the best evidence rule are now available only in criminal cases. See Evid C §1522. On printed representations of computer information or of images stored on a video or digital medium as admissible secondary evidence under Evid C §§1552-1553, see §§10.84, 13.107.

NOTE: An original is defined as the writing itself or any counterpart intended to have the same effect by the person executing or issuing it. Either prints or negatives of photographs, as well as a computer printout, are originals. Evid C §255. A "writing" is defined broadly to include all forms of recorded communications and representations, such as photographs, motion pictures, audio and video recordings, as well as handwriting, typewriting, and printing. Evid C §250.

The secondary evidence rule, by its terms, is limited to proof of the content of a writing. Therefore, cases on evidence offered to prove something other than the content of the writing (in which the best evidence rule was held not to apply) are still good law. Crail v Blakely (1973) 8 C3d 744, 754, 106 CR 187 (testimony about oral agreement, under which mutual wills would be irrevocable, held admissible); Ponce v Marr (1956) 47 C2d 159, 301 P2d 837 (parol evidence on explanation of canceled checks did not violate best evidence rule).

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.123 b. Particular applications and limitations

The use of secondary evidence is subject to the following limitations:

- The proffered secondary evidence must be "otherwise admissible." Thus, testimony must be based on personal knowledge, not be barred by the hearsay rule, and otherwise meet the tests of admissibility. Evid C §1521(a)-(b).
- The writings must still be authenticated under Evid C §1401, because nothing in Evid C §1521 excuses compliance. Evid C §1521(c).
- The court retains discretion to exclude testimony when there is a genuine dispute about the writing's material terms and where justice requires exclusion. Evid C §1521(a)(1).
- The court has seemingly broad discretion to exclude evidence when it finds admission "would be unfair." Evid C §1521(a)(2).

Oral testimony is not admissible to prove the content of a writing, except when (Evid C §1523(a)):

- The proponent has neither original nor copy, and the writing has been lost or destroyed without fraudulent intent on the part of the proponent. Evid C §1523(b).
- The proponent has neither original nor copy, and neither is reasonably procurable by subpoena or otherwise. Evid C §1523(c)(1).
- The proponent has neither original nor copy, where the document is collateral to the controlling issues, and production is inexpedient. Evid C §1523(c)(2).

In addition, oral testimony of a writing is permissible if the writing consists of numerous accounts or other writings that cannot be examined in court without great loss of time, and the evidence sought from them "is only the general result of the whole." Evid C §1523(d).

PRACTICE TIP: As a rule of thumb, any element of proof that requires more than ten documents to prove should be summarized. See Brockett, Timing Is Everything, 17 CEB Civ Litigation Rep 350 (Sept. 1995). Preparing a one-page summary chart may well supplant a thick book of supporting documents. See People v Southern Cal. Edison Co. (1976) 56 CA3d 593, 128 CR 697 (one-page summary of costs for putting out fire).

Printed representations of computer or other storage medium are admissible under Evid C §§1552-1553. See §13.107. For further discussion on the secondary evidence rule, see §§10.84, 13.122.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.124 9. Writing used to refresh recollection not produced at hearing

When a witness has refreshed his or her recollection through a writing either before or during trial, the writing must be produced at the hearing at an adverse party's request unless production is excused. Evid C §771(a). See also International Ins. Co. v Montrose Chem. Corp. (1991) 231 CA3d 1367, 282 CR 783 (documents used to refresh deponent's recollection must be produced on request).

If production of the writing is not excused and the writing is not produced, the witness's testimony on the matter must be stricken. Evid C §771(a). Under Evid C §771(c), production of such a writing is excused when (a) it is not in the possession or control of the witness or party who produced the testimony on the matter and (b) it was not reasonably procurable by the party through use of the court's process or other available means.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.125 10. Writing not shown to other counsel

In examining a witness about a writing, counsel need not show, read, or disclose any part of it. Evid C §768(a). If the writing is shown to the witness, however, all parties must be given an opportunity to inspect the writing before the witness may be questioned about it. Evid C §768(b). If such inspection is not permitted, opposing counsel may object, and the court must allow the inspection of the proffered document before the witness is asked any questions about it. See Evid C §768(b).

Increasingly, local court rules and policies dictate that anticipated exhibits be disclosed to opposing counsel before trial. On mandatory pretrial procedures generally, see §§13.35-13.38. When such local rules have not been satisfied before trial, opposing counsel may have the document excluded from evidence if the proponent of the document cannot show good cause why the exhibit was not previously disclosed.

§13.126 11. Prohibited documentary evidence

Certain types of documentary evidence are inadmissible by statute. These include vehicle accident reports (see Veh C §§20012-20013), coroner's inquest verdicts (see Govt C §27502.2), and records and proceedings of medical staffs and societies (see Evid C §§1157-1157.7).

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.127 a. Vehicle accident reports

Vehicle accident reports prepared under Veh C §20008 by the operator of the vehicle involved, a California Highway Patrol officer, or a city police department officer are inadmissible in any trial arising from the accident, absent a stipulation to the contrary. See Veh C §§20012-20013; Box v California Date Growers Ass'n (1976) 57 CA3d 266, 270, 129 CR 146 (accident report prepared by California Highway Patrol officer inadmissible even though officer used report at trial to refresh his recollection); Zollars v Barber (1956) 140 CA2d 502, 508, 295 P2d 561 (accident report, made by defendant under former Veh C §488 (now Veh C §20013) properly excluded). But see Evid C §771.

Even though the report itself may not be received in evidence, the information in it may. For example, testimony can be elicited on the content of such a report as long as no hearsay or other objections have been made. See Sherrell v Kelso (1981) 116 CA3d Supp 22, 28, 172 CR 667 (court permitted portions of vehicle accident report prepared by police officer to be read into evidence as past recollection recorded).

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.128 b. Coroner's inquest verdicts

Coroner's inquest verdicts or decisions are inadmissible as evidence. Govt C §27502.2. Such an inquest may be held at the request of the city coroner to inquire into the circumstances of a person's death. At the conclusion of the inquest, the inquest jury or coroner must render a verdict or decision "setting forth the name of the deceased, the time and place of death, the medical cause of death and whether the death was by (1) natural causes, (2) suicide, (3) accident, or (4) the hands of another person other than by accident." Govt C §27504. "Such findings shall not include nor shall they make any reference to civil or criminal responsibility on the part of the deceased or any other person." Govt C §27504.

On inadmissibility of a coroner's report to the California Highway Patrol about an accident involving a motor vehicle, see Veh C §§20011, 20013. On procedures applicable to a coroner's request to use privileged communications of a decedent at an inquest, see Govt C §27491.8.

§13.129 c. Records and proceedings of medical staffs and committees; exceptions

The records and proceedings of medical peer review bodies and of various organized committees that are responsible for evaluating medical care in hospitals and improving the quality of health care are not discoverable and therefore not admissible at trial. Evid C §1157. For a description of these staffs and committees, see Evid C §§1157(a), 1157.5-1157.7.

No one who attends a meeting of these committees is required to testify on what happened there, unless otherwise provided in Evid C §1157; Fox v Kramer (2000) 22 C4th 531, 93 CR2d 497. This rule, however, does not prohibit a committee member from voluntarily testifying about the committee's activities. Fox v Kramer, supra; West Covina Hosp. v Superior Court (1986) 41 C3d 846, 226 CR 132.

NOTE: The identities of the evaluating committee members are also protected from disclosure under the privilege of Evid C §1157. Cedars-Sinai Med. Ctr. v Superior Court (1993) 12 CA4th 579, 16 CR2d 253.

Discovery and testimony may be permitted, however, under the following exceptions to the prohibition under Evid C §1157.

- If statements were made by a person attending a proceeding or meeting, described in Evid C §1157, who is a party to an action or a proceeding that was reviewed at the meeting. Evid C §1157(c). This exception is known as the "party exception."

NOTE: This exception does not, however, permit discovery of records and proceedings of medical staffs by the plaintiffs in medical malpractice actions. Brown v Superior Court (1985) 168 CA3d 489, 214 CR 266 (court permitted discovery in medical malpractice action of fact that staff evaluation of physician's competency had been performed); Schulz v Superior Court (1977) 66 CA3d 440, 446, 136 CR 67 (hospital staff records containing medical committee investigation reports and peer appraisals not open to discovery); Matchett v Superior Court (1974) 40 CA3d 623, 628, 115 CR 317 (court applied Evid C §1157 prohibition in medical malpractice action but noted that hospital's own administration files could be discovered).

- If a person is requesting hospital staff privileges. See Evid C §1157(c). This exception is known as the "privileges exception." Compare Roseville Community Hosp. v Superior Court (1977) 70 CA3d 809, 139 CR 170 (discovery permitted in action brought by doctors against hospital for wrongful exclusion from hospital staff privileges), with California Eye Inst. v Superior Court (1989) 215 CA3d 1477, 264 CR 83 (privileges exception inapplicable because plaintiff's action was for damages and not action in which plaintiff sought to become or remain hospital staff member).
- If a bad-faith action has been filed against an insurance carrier who refused to accept a settlement offer within policy limits. Evid C §1157(c).
- If the medical, dental, dental hygienist, podiatric, dietetic, psychological, veterinary, or chiropractic society committee exceeds 10 percent of the society's membership, or if any person serves on any of these committees when his or her own conduct or practice is being reviewed. Evid C §1157(d).

For further discussion of this issue, see California Civil Discovery Practice §§3.134-3.141 (4th ed Cal CEB 2006).

C. Tactical considerations in making objections

§13.130 1. Motions in limine to exclude evidence

If it appears that opposing counsel intends to introduce or refer to improper irrelevant, inadmissible, or unduly prejudicial evidence, consider making a motion in limine to prevent this. See, e.g., Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co. v Superior Court (1988) 200 CA3d 272, 288, 245 CR 873 (court upheld trial court order precluding evidence and noted that such matters may be brought before court by either pretrial motion or motion in limine); Charbonneau v Superior Court (1974) 42 CA3d 505, 507, 116 CR 153.

When possible, the motion should be made before the jury is impaneled. Making the motion in limine to exclude evidence before trial enables counsel to obtain an advance ruling from the court excluding the evidence and barring any reference to it during trial. If counsel has no advance warning of proffered evidence, however, counsel may move in limine during trial (out of the jurors' presence and hearing) to exclude it and to prohibit any reference to it. On motions in limine, see chap 7.

PRACTICE TIP: Make the motion in limine in writing. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1112(f). The court will better understand and be persuaded by a motion supported by a memorandum that it can read and study. The timing and place of filing a motion in limine shall be at the discretion of the trial judge. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1112(f). Counsel should also consult local rules regarding timing and filing requirements.

The motion in limine should request a court order that specifically bars the parties, their attorneys, and witnesses from referring to the inadmissible or prejudicial evidence in the jury's presence at any time during trial—including during voir dire examination, opening statement, examination of witnesses, and closing argument. The order should specifically direct opposing counsel to instruct his or her client and witnesses not to refer to the evidence and to follow the court's order.

On using motions in limine for admitting evidence, see §§7.10, 13.134. See also sample form of motion in §7.49.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.131 2. Sidebar conferences

Sidebar conferences are discussions between the court and counsel at some point during a witness's testimony that are conducted out of the jury's hearing. They are generally quietly conducted at the side of the court's bench with the jury present. When discussion may be lengthy or sensitive matters will be discussed, counsel may request that the jury be excused or that discussion take place in chambers. The judge may also suggest this.

Whether counsel should request a sidebar conference to discuss an evidentiary objection usually depends on whether prejudice would result from the jury's hearing of the objection or the response it might evoke. A sidebar conference may be necessary when an objection is designed to exclude reference to specific evidence by a witness or when counsel does not want the jurors to hear argument on an objection. When extensive argument is necessary to assert or resolve an objection, or when the court will need to conduct a hearing on preliminary facts as a result of the objection, it may be necessary to request (at the bench) that the jury be excused or that the matter be taken up in chambers. Generally, objections as to the phrasing of a question do not dictate a sidebar conference.

When it appears that a sidebar conference is needed, make an initial objection and request permission to approach the bench. For example, counsel might state: "Objection, Your Honor. May we approach the bench?" If the court refuses permission because the reason for the request is not apparent, indicate that the matter you wish to discuss should be taken up out of the jurors' presence. If the judge again refuses permission, you may have no alternative but to state the objection in open court or to request that the court defer the matter until it can be heard out of the jurors' presence.

At the beginning of a sidebar conference, many judges state for the record that the conference is being conducted out of the jurors' hearing. The court reporter should be present to record all sidebar conferences; if that is not feasible, however, counsel must make a formal record of the objections that were made and the court's ruling on them in order to preserve the issues on appeal. See §§15.12-15.31.

WARNING: California Rules of Court, Standards of J Admin 2.20(b)(8), which is part of the Standards of Judicial Administration recommended by the Judicial Council, provides that the trial judge should permit sidebar conferences only when necessary and keep them as short as possible. Counsel should also consult local court rules or policies on sidebar or similar conferences. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.41, 8.76-8.77.

For further discussion of sidebar conferences, see §§1.43, 15.48-15.50.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.132 3. Preserving the record; opposing proof of preliminary facts

When raising evidentiary objections, make certain that the court reporter is present to record all objections and arguments concerning them. Create a record from which the appellate court can find a timely and proper objection, the erroneous overruling of it, and resulting prejudice. On making trial objections and protecting the record, see chap 15.

In many instances, admission of documentary, demonstrative, and real evidence is predicated on a finding of certain preliminary facts. See generally §§7.25-7.36. Counsel objecting to the admissibility of such evidence and opposing proof of the necessary preliminary facts should anticipate that the evidence's proponent will probably not disclose facts showing inadmissibility.

EXAMPLE: In seeking permission to use a model car for demonstration purposes during trial, the proponent is likely to emphasize all the similarities, but none of the differences, between the model and its subject (see §13.102). As a result, opposing counsel should make a record of facts favoring exclusion. Opposing counsel should conduct a voir dire examination of the foundational witness before the court receives the evidence and, if necessary, call his or her own witnesses during the preliminary hearing. If permission to call such witnesses is denied, an appropriate offer of proof should be made.

© The Regents of the University of California

D. Meeting objections

§13.133 1. Anticipating objections; preparation

During the pretrial stages of litigation, try to anticipate ways to overcome possible objections raised by opposing counsel to documentary, demonstrative, and real evidence that you intend to use during trial. Before trial, plan carefully the theories of relevancy you will rely on and the testimony or other foundational evidence necessary to establish admissibility. Care should also be taken that all pretrial procedural requirements have been satisfied. See §§13.35-13.38.

In addition, if you anticipate that opposing counsel will object to an exhibit's admissibility during trial, prepare a written memorandum for the court, explaining why the evidence should be received and citing pertinent authorities. Consider alternative actions to take and other ways to present the evidence if the court ultimately rejects the exhibit.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.134 2. Motions in limine to admit evidence

Motions in limine are frequently made to exclude evidence from trial. See §13.130. They may also be made to obtain rulings admitting evidence. See, e.g., People v Jennings (1988) 46 C3d 963, 975, 251 CR 278; Pugh v See's Candies, Inc. (1988) 203 CA3d 743, 757, 250 CR 195. For a detailed discussion of motions in limine, see chap 7.

Such a motion may be made in chambers before the start of trial, thereby allowing the parties to know whether they can safely refer to critical evidence during opening statement. This type of motion also reveals technical objections that opposing counsel intends to make, inadequacies about admissibility of the evidence, and unanticipated foundational testimony that may be necessary for having the evidence admitted. If the motion is successful, counsel knows that the evidence will actually be received during trial. If it is unsuccessful, counsel may have time to overcome the objection or make arrangements to have other evidence available to prove the point (i.e., arrange to have an out-of-state witness fly in for trial to testify).

If a motion in limine to admit evidence is denied, this does not necessarily mean that the evidence will be excluded. The motion can be renewed at an appropriate time during trial if the ground for the objection can be overcome then. A court may refuse to rule on a motion in limine to admit evidence because it believes that additional evidence should be heard before a final ruling can be made. In that situation, counsel can seek in the usual manner to have the evidence admitted at the appropriate point in the trial.

Local court rules or policies increasingly establish pretrial procedures for motions in limine. For further discussion of motions in limine and procedures generally, see chap 7.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/13 Trial Exhibits/§13.135 3. Offering exhibit for limited purpose

§13.135 3. Offering exhibit for limited purpose

An exhibit is often admissible as to one party or for one purpose but inadmissible as to another party or for another purpose. In that event, the proponent of the exhibit should be prepared to explain to the court the theory of limited admissibility on which counsel relies in offering the exhibit into evidence. It should be made clear by counsel that the exhibit is offered for that limited purpose. For example, a letter written by one defendant may be admissible as to that defendant but remains inadmissible hearsay as to another defendant.

The court, on request, is required to "restrict the evidence to its proper scope and instruct the jury accordingly." Evid C §355. Even though evidence may be admissible as to one party or for one purpose, it may be excluded under Evid C §352 if the judge finds it so prejudicial that a limiting instruction would not adequately protect a party, and the matter can be proved sufficiently by other evidence. On objections under Evid C §352, see §13.117.

For more detailed discussion of the limited admissibility of evidence, see §§15.61-15.64.

© The Regents of the University of California

§13.136 4. Offering exhibit conditioned on subsequent testimony

The process of accommodating the order of exhibits to be used at trial with the order of witnesses to be called can pose logistical problems. This is particularly true when a witness necessary to laying the foundation for a particular exhibit is not within the control of the party wishing to present the exhibit, or when several witnesses are necessary to provide all the foundational requirements. Opposing counsel may object if counsel questions the first witness about the content of the exhibit before the second witness is called to provide the additional necessary foundation.

PRACTICE TIP: To avoid such an objection, raise the problem with the court in chambers before attempting to offer the exhibit into evidence. Explain the logistical problem, outline the theory of admissibility, state the additional facts that will be developed to support that theory, and advise the court of your intention to call sufficient witnesses to establish those facts. Then request that the exhibit be received in evidence on a provisional basis, subject to a motion to strike if the foundational evidence necessary for admissibility is not established. If the court refuses this offer, you may have no alternative but to call witnesses out of order or to introduce the exhibit at another stage in the trial.

When an exhibit has been received on a provisional basis, counsel for both sides should verify before the close of evidence whether the requisite foundational facts have been established. The burden is on the opposing party, however, to move to strike the exhibit when such foundational facts have not been established. See Ault v International Harvester Co. (1974) 13 C3d 113, 117 CR 812; Tarpey v Veith (1913) 22 CA 289, 295, 134 P 367. 3 Witkin, California Evidence, Presentation at Trial §52 (4th ed 2000). In such circumstances, opposing counsel should also move to strike any testimony about the exhibit provided by witnesses during the course of the trial. If the motion to strike is granted, there may be grounds for a mistrial or new trial because of the exhibit's prejudicial effect. On motions for mistrial, see §§16.95, 18.82-18.102. On new trial motions, see §§25.22-25.71.

If opposing counsel makes a motion to strike evidence received on a provisional basis because counsel has overlooked certain facts to establish admissibility before the close of evidence, counsel should request that the court reopen the case for the limited purpose of providing the necessary testimony. On reopening case, see §§18.65-18.81.

§13.137 5. Excising objectionable entries in exhibit

Frequently, a writing contains some entries that are admissible and others that are not. Counsel who wishes to have such a writing received in evidence must take steps to excise the inadmissible portions.

One procedure is to bring to the trial the original exhibit, with no portion of it deleted, and copies of the writing with the inadmissible portion excised. Excise the document by using white correcting fluid or by placing a piece of white paper over the inadmissible portion and then photocopying it. The edited copy can then be offered into evidence during trial.

PRACTICE TIP: If you have not obtained a stipulation as to admissibility of a writing and an objection is anticipated, discuss the troublesome exhibit with the court outside the jury's hearing before any foundational testimony is elicited. This can be done during a chambers conference before or during trial. If the court rules that the edited copy is admissible, it can be received in evidence while the unaltered exhibit remains part of the record, marked for identification only.

If you are confident that the entire writing, including a questionable entry, should be received in evidence, consider offering the entire exhibit after foundational testimony has been laid. If the court agrees with opposing counsel that a particular entry is objectionable, proposing counsel should then offer the edited copy. In some instances, it is not physically possible to delete the objectionable portions of a writing. The court has discretion to allow counsel to read into evidence the admissible portions but to prevent the exhibit from being displayed to the jury. See Los Angeles Ct R 8.68.

When the court rules that an edited exhibit is admissible, counsel opposing admissibility should consider asking the court to prevent the exhibit from being taken into the jury room during the jury's deliberations. If it is apparent that portions have been deleted from the edited exhibit, the jurors may speculate about the deletions. This can be extremely prejudicial to the party against whom the exhibit was offered.

PRACTICE TIP: Some local court rules describe procedures for edited exhibits and their admissibility. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.67-8.68.

§13.138 6. Offers of proof

When counsel has offered evidence, but the court has excluded it, an offer of proof must be made by counsel to preserve the right to argue on appeal that the trial court erred in excluding the evidence. See Evid C §354(a); Pugh v See's Candies, Inc. (1988) 203 CA3d 743, 758, 250 CR 195. In addition to preserving the record, an offer of proof educates the trial judge and may persuade the judge to correct an erroneous ruling.

An offer of proof should be made on the record out of the jury's presence. The offer should identify the "substance, purpose, and relevance of the excluded evidence." Evid C §354(a). An offer of proof that states the substance of facts to be proved, rather than the substance of the evidence, does not comply with §354(a). United Sav. & Loan Ass'n v Reeder Dev. Corp. (1976) 57 CA3d 282, 129 CR 113. According to the court, "substance" of the evidence is the testimony of specific witnesses, writings, material objects, or other things presented to the senses, to be introduced to prove the existence or nonexistence of a fact at issue. 57 CA3d at 294.

A general offer of proof is insufficient to preserve the point for appeal. Stickel v San Diego Elec. Ry. (1948) 32 C2d 157, 195 P2d 416; Semsch v Henry Mayo Newhall Mem. Hosp. (1985) 171 CA3d 162, 167, 216 CR 913; Moore v Rogers (1958) 157 CA2d 192, 320 P2d 524.

On procedures for making offers of proof, see §§15.50-15.60. For a sample oral offer of proof, see Laying a Foundation To Introduce Evidence (Preparing and Using Evidence at Trial) (Cal CEB Action Guide April 2008).

§13.139 X. EXHIBITS PERMITTED IN JURY ROOM

The following list describes whether certain types of demonstrative evidence may be taken into the jury room:

- Maps and diagrams. Maps and diagrams are generally sent to the jury room. See Balasco v Chick (1948) 84 CA2d 802, 809, 192 P2d 76.
- Models. Models may be permitted in the jury room, but counsel should consider whether this is tactically wise. Jurors will have an unsupervised opportunity to examine and play with the model, and they may come to different conclusions than the proponent's own witnesses. In addition, the jurors might conduct improper experiments with the model. See generally Higgins v Los Angeles Gas & Elec. Co. (1911) 159 C 651, 115 P 313. Note, however, that "it is the duty of the court, by instruction to the jury, to limit and restrict" the use of an exhibit that may be susceptible to improper use. 159 C at 660.
- Photographs. Photographs are normally permitted in the jury room. See, e.g., People v Williams (1960) 187 CA2d 355, 366, 9 CR 722 (photographs of decedent's nude body). Exceptions may be made, however, if the subject is unduly inflammatory or prejudicial.
- Motion pictures. Motion pictures are seldom permitted in the jury room, because a trained person is needed to run projection equipment. If the jurors request to see the film during deliberations, judges sometimes prefer that the showing be conducted in open court. If the judge permits a motion picture to go into the jury room with a trained operator (e.g., the bailiff), the judge should instruct the jury that they may not communicate with or deliberate in front of that person.
- Audio recordings. Recordings are increasingly treated like motion pictures because a trained person is needed to operate the recording equipment without damaging the exhibit. The courts have discretion, however, to allow a specified person (e.g., the bailiff) to play the recordings for the jury in the jury room as long as that person does not remain during the actual deliberations. See, e.g., People v Douglas (1977) 66 CA3d 998, 1006, 136 CR 358 (bailiff manually operated audiotape under court order; no indication that he was present during jury deliberations). The court may permit transcripts of recordings into the jury room that have been admitted into evidence. See People v Fujita (1974) 43 CA3d 454, 473, 117 CR 757; People v Beverly (1965) 233 CA2d 702, 717, 43 CR 743.
- X rays. Although X rays may be sent to the jury room, they often are not. Because X rays must be explained by an expert, the jurors may misinterpret them. See Los Angeles Ct R 8.67.

PRACTICE TIP: Before final argument, discuss with the court in chambers which exhibits will be permitted into the jury room during deliberations. If the court decides not to allow an exhibit into the jury room, you will be able to explain and emphasize it during closing argument. In addition, early consideration gives the parties time to organize voluminous written exhibits into an indexed binder for easy handling by the jury. If the court concludes that certain documents in evidence should be retained by the person with original possession of them, copies may be provided to the jury. See CCP §612.

Whether or not demonstrative evidence will be permitted in the jury room depends on the type of evidence it is and the manner in which it is presented. The court generally will permit exhibits received in evidence to go into the jury room. See CCP §612. There are exceptions, however. See §§21.32-21.34. See also, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.67 (types of exhibits not be permitted in jury room).

The jury may use audio recorders, phonographs, magnifying glasses, or other equipment necessary or helpful in reviewing evidence, even though the apparatus itself is not in evidence, as long as it is provided by the court or with its permission. See, e.g., People v Douglas, supra (tape recorder); People v Manson (1976) 61 CA3d 102, 214, 132 CR 265 (phonograph); People v Turner (1971) 22 CA3d 174, 182, 99 CR 186 (magnifying glasses). When counsel wishes the jury to consider evidence that requires equipment, such equipment should be provided by counsel to the court and opposing counsel sufficiently in advance that any concerns about fairness may be resolved. This way, alternate equipment or means of display may be substituted if necessary.

On juror misconduct during deliberations, see §§21.35-21.43.

§14.1 I. SCOPE OF CHAPTER

This chapter covers judicial notice, attorneys' stipulations concerning facts or testimony, and judicial admissions, all methods of establishing particular matters during the trial as indisputably true. By using these methods, counsel need not present formal proof—and opposing counsel cannot offer conflicting evidence on any matter that has been so established. See §14.6.

Matters that the trial court must take judicial notice of, when requested, are discussed in §§14.6-14.14. On discretionary judicial notice, see §§14.15-14.24. The procedures for requesting (and opposing) the court's taking of judicial notice, and the court's ruling, are covered in §§14.25-14.43. See Evid C §§451-456. On judicial notice taken by the appellate courts, see Evid C §459; discussion in California Civil Appellate Practice §§11.86-11.90 (3d ed Cal CEB 1996). For forms of judicial notice and accompanying instruction to jury, see §§14.54-14.55.

The admissions covered in this chapter are judicial admissions made in a party's pleadings (e.g., the complaint). See §§14.43-14.46. For discussion of admissions made in discovery documents (e.g., in response to requests for admission), see §§12.122-12.134. Evidentiary admissions made during depositions are also discussed in chap 12.

Counsel may stipulate that particular facts are true, or they may agree on the content of testimony a witness would offer, were that witness to testify. For discussion of attorneys' stipulations, see §§14.47-14.52.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/14 Judicial Notice, Admissions, and Stipulations/§14.2 A. Means of establishing undisputed facts

§14.2 A. Means of establishing undisputed facts

Evidence inadmissible. Judicial notice, attorneys' stipulations, and judicial admissions are substitutes for evidence and make proof of the established matters unnecessary. Parties are precluded from presenting contrary evidence disputing any judicially noticed, admitted, or stipulated matters. See Comment to Evid C §457 (judicial notice); Robinson v Robinson (1962) 208 CA2d 213, 217, 25 CR 143 (stipulation). On admissions, see §14.43.

Evidence defined. "Evidence" means testimony, writings, material objects, or other things presented to the senses that are offered to prove the existence or nonexistence of a fact. Evid C §140.

NOTE: Not only is contrary evidence inadmissible, allegations in a pleading that conflict with a judicially noticed fact must also be disregarded. See Young v Boy Scouts of Am. (1935) 9 CA2d 760, 764, 51 P2d 191.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.3 B. Relevancy requirement

The matter being judicially noticed or admitted, or stipulated to by counsel, must be relevant to the issues being tried. Evid C §350.

Counsel who objects to a request for judicial notice must persuade the court that the requesting party did not meet its burden (see §14.30) or that the matter to be noticed is irrelevant to the issues in the case. See, e.g., Santos v DMV (1992) 5 CA4th 537, 7 CR2d 10 (court refused to judicially notice distance between place of arrest and hospital because mere distance gave no information on whether arrival at hospital was immediate or how much time elapsed before blood was drawn); Behrens v Fogette Mfg. Co. (1992) 4 CA4th 1567, 7 CR2d 264 (court refused to notice documents showing legislative intent because they reflected personal view of legislator who wrote them and were irrelevant to legislative language, which was clear and unambiguous).

Challenging relevancy is frequently opposing counsel's best argument for opposing judicial notice or for excluding an admission or stipulation. On grounds for objecting to judicial notice, see §14.34.

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Tactical considerations

§14.4 1. Advantages

Expedited trial. Like judicial admissions and stipulations of counsel, the purpose of judicial notice is "to expedite the production and introduction of otherwise admissible evidence." See Mozzetti v City of Brisbane (1977) 67 CA3d 565, 578, 136 CR 751. Judicial notice is often superior to a stipulation of counsel, because the judge tells the jury that a particular fact is undeniably true, which often carries more weight than an announcement that counsel agree that a fact is true. On preinstruction and instruction of jury, see §§14.33 (judicial notice), 14.51 (stipulation). Judicial admissions enjoy the same advantage. On judge's instructing jury to accept judicial admission as true, see §14.45.

Documentary or demonstrative evidence may aid the court in taking judicial notice of a matter. On sources of information the court may rely on in deciding whether to take judicial notice, see §14.36. On preparing trial exhibits that could be used for this purpose, see generally chap 13.

It is important to gather and present evidence as simply and efficiently as possible, for both the client's and jury's benefit. The more matters that are judicially noticed or admitted (or stipulated to), the fewer matters there are to prove, thus reducing trial expenses. For other ideas on trying cases more efficiently, see chap 1.

PRACTICE TIP: A judge may be persuaded to take judicial notice of matters that would be too complex or difficult to prove during trial. Consider the time and effort it would take to introduce evidence to the jury on particular matters, e.g., contradictory eyewitness statements about the weather on the day of the accident. It is worth attempting to persuade the judge that problematic discovery material, for example, could best be handled by judicial notice; this method of admission would prevent opposing counsel from objecting to your proof and from presenting conflicting evidence to the jury.

Favorable effect on jury. The judge's telling the jury that a matter is indisputably true may underscore its importance. The risk that the jurors would doubt the proof offered on the matter is minimized.

More reliable than testimony. As mentioned in the practice tip above, some matters are difficult to prove through eyewitnesses who may not have noticed certain facts. A stipulation or admission, or judicial notice, is the best way to establish them.

Defendant's viewpoint. In some trials, an eyewitness account could be inflammatory or unnecessarily graphic and the judge's statement of the matter to the jury less emotionally charged.

EXAMPLE: The judge's statement that "the defendant was intoxicated" may be less damaging than the testimony of a witness who graphically describes the behavior of the defendant while under the influence of alcohol.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.5 2. Disadvantages

Jury may not understand complicated matters that are judicially noticed or stipulated. It may be less effective to have the judge explain certain matters to the jury than to have several witnesses explain different aspects of those matters. If the points that could be the subject of judicial notice or stipulation are complex but vital to the case, it may be worth the time and effort to educate the jury about them during the course of the trial.

Less impact on jury. Because counsel cannot offer evidence on an undisputed matter, far less emphasis may be placed on a crucial aspect of the case. It may be more effective to require the opposing party to admit the truth of a matter on the stand. To help the jury remember a particular fact, counsel may want more drama than a judge will give the judicially noticed matter.

Plaintiff's viewpoint. A description of the damage or injuries incurred may have much more drama if it is narrated by a witness who was privy to the event, rather than merely stated by the judge. For example, an eyewitness account of an accident is clearly superior to stipulated facts read to the jury during trial.

CAUTION: Plaintiff's counsel should almost never stipulate to facts about the client's pain and suffering. Use good judgment on how to present the salient facts of your case to the jury. Do not stipulate to facts if you have a credible, persuasive witness to tell what happened.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.6 II. JUDICIAL NOTICE

A court taking judicial notice of a matter acknowledges a fact or law to be true. Evid C §§451-453. When a court takes judicial notice of a matter of fact or law, the matter is deemed established in the case. On procedures for requesting and opposing judicial notice, see §§14.25-14.34.

The effect of judicial notice is that no formal proof of the truth or existence of the matter is thereafter required, and any contrary evidence is inadmissible. Post v Prati (1979) 90 CA3d 626, 633, 153 CR 511. See 1 Witkin, California Evidence, Judicial Notice §§1, 3 (4th ed 2000). See also Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 49 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

Rationale: The admission of matters by judicial notice is based on the theory that some propositions of law or fact cannot reasonably be disputed and it is therefore unnecessary to introduce evidence to prove them. See Varcoe v Lee (1919) 180 C 338, 344, 181 P 223; Evidence Benchbook, chap 49.

NOTE: Reviewing courts, as well as trial courts, may take judicial notice. On appellate courts' taking judicial notice, see Evid C §459.

The courts are prohibited from taking judicial notice of any matter not authorized or required by law. Evid C §450. "Law" is defined to include constitutional, statutory, and decisional law. See Evid C §160

PRACTICE TIP: When your opponent proposes that judicial notice be taken, your first reaction ought to be to review Evid C §§451-452 to determine whether the statutory requirements for judicial notice have been met. On grounds for objecting to judicial notice, see §14.34.

The court must take judicial notice of certain matters. Evid C §451 (mandatory judicial notice). See §§14.6-14.14. The court may take judicial notice of other matters. Evid C §452 (discretionary judicial notice). See §§14.15-14.24.

Judicial notice of discretionary matters made mandatory by request. After a party requests judicial notice of permissive matters under §452 (after meeting Evid C §453 requirements to give sufficient information to the court and sufficient notice to other parties), the court must take notice of those §452 matters. See §§14.26-14.30.

Additional sources of authority: statutes and cases. Other sections in various California codes provide specific statutory authority for judicial notice. See, e.g., CC §53; Pen C §§961, 963. See also CCP §430.70 on specifying in a demurrer any Evid C §§452-453 matters that are judicially noticed as grounds for the demurrer.

Decisional law may also authorize or require the court to take judicial notice of a matter. See §14.8.

PRACTICE TIP: Do not overlook decisional law as a basis for arguing that the court should take judicial notice of similar matters. See case examples of matters judicially noticed by California courts in §14.53. See also Comment to Evid C §450; 1 Witkin, California Evidence, Judicial Notice §9 (4th ed 2000).

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.7 A. Mandatory judicial notice (Evid C §451)

The court must judicially notice matters of law or fact listed in Evid C §451. The matters listed are those that the "court can reasonably be expected to discover and apply … even if the parties fail to provide the court with references to the pertinent cases, statutes, regulations and rules." Comment to Evid C §451.

Although no formal request for judicial notice is necessary for any matter listed under the mandatory provisions of Evid C §452, it is advisable for counsel to call the court's attention to such matters. On procedures for doing so, see §14.25.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.8 1. California and United States law

A court must take judicial notice of the "decisional, constitutional and public statutory law" of California and the United States. Evid C §451(a). See, e.g., County of Lassen (1992) 4 CA4th 1151, 6 CR2d 359 (judicial notice taken of Penal Code provisions on state control and operation of county jails).

Evidence Code §230 defines "statute" to include a treaty and a constitutional provision. A private statute concerns only designated individuals and affects only their private rights. See §14.17. All other statutes are considered to be public (including statutes creating or affecting corporations). See CCP §1898.

§14.9 2. California city and county charters

Judicial notice must be taken of "the provisions of any charter described in Section 3, 4, or 5 of Article XI of the California Constitution." Evid C §451(a).

Article XI, §§3-5 concern the adoption and provisions of city and county charters. On discretionary judicial notice of ordinances and other legislative enactments, see §14.18.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.10 3. Regulations of state and federal agencies

Government Code. Judicial notice must be taken of any matter made the subject of judicial notice by certain Government Code provisions listed in Evid C §451(b):

- Rules and amendments of the state personnel board (Govt C §18576);
- Each state agency regulation, or order of repeal of such regulation, duly filed with the Secretary of State (Govt C §11343.6); and
- Each regulation printed or incorporated into the California Code of Regulations and any repeal of a regulation as published in the California Regulatory Code supplement (Govt C §11344.6).

See Comment to Evid C §451. See, e.g., Environmental Protection Info. Ctr. v Maxxam Corp. (1992) 4 CA4th 1373, 1382, 6 CR2d 665, in which the court took judicial notice of the revised regulations and changing policies of the California Department of Forestry and Fire Protection, and concluded that the department now took a more active environmental stance.

Regulation defined. "Regulation" means rules or standards adopted by any state agency to implement, interpret, or make specific the law enforced or administered by it. Govt C §11342.600. Legal rulings of counsel issued by the Franchise Tax Board or State Board of Equalization are not considered regulations. Govt C §11340.9(b). Nor are procedures that govern only the internal management of a state agency, or the forms (or instructions to forms) issued by a state agency deemed to be regulations. See Govt C §11340.9(d).

United States Code. The contents of the Federal Register must be judicially noticed. Evid C §451; 44 USC §1507. As specified in the Comment to Evid C §451, documents published in the Federal Register include presidential proclamations and executive orders having general applicability and legal effect. See 44 USC §1505. See, e.g., Rader v Apple Valley Bldg. & Dev. Co. (1968) 261 CA2d 308, 312, 68 CR 108 (judicial notice of federal aviation regulations). On permissive notice of regulations of public entities not listed in the Federal Register, see §14.18.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.11 4. California rules of professional conduct and rules of court

The California Rules of Professional Conduct (enacted under Bus & P C §6076) must be judicially noticed. Evid C §451(c).

Judicial notice is also required for the rules of practice and procedure adopted by the Judicial Council for the courts of California (i.e., California Rules of Court). Evid C §451(c). See Comment to Evid C §451.

Permissive notice of local court rules. On the court's discretionary power to take judicial notice of local court rules under Evid C §452(e), see §14.21.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.12 5. Federal rules of pleading, practice, and procedure

A court must take judicial notice of the rules of pleading, practice, and procedure "prescribed by the United States Supreme Court" for the federal courts. Evid C §451(d). Under this provision, judicial notice of such rules as the Rules of the U.S. Supreme Court and the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure is required.

Permissive notice of other appellate court rules. Rules not promulgated by the United States Supreme Court, e.g., rules of the various U.S. courts of appeal, are not required to be judicially noticed under Evid C §451(d). On court's discretionary power to judicially notice such rules under Evid C §452(e), see §14.21.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.13 6. English words, phrases, and legal expressions

Judicial notice must be taken of the meaning of all English words and phrases and of all legal expressions. Evid C §451(e).

The courts have interpreted §451(e) to include meanings broader than dictionary definitions, e.g., slang or colloquial expressions of a particular group, or words of trade as understood in a particular industry. See People v Powell (1934) 1 CA2d 222, 224, 36 P2d 201 (court "not restricted to academic definitions which would render absurd a transaction or conversation and artificially defeat the ends of justice").

Examples of judicial notice taken under this provision include:

- The meaning of English words and phrases and of idioms in the vernacular. See People v Cunningham (1950) 99 CA2d 296, 301, 221 P2d 283 (when witness stated that her daughter was "six," court was entitled to infer unit of age referred to was "years").
- The meaning of words unique to a particular industry as applied to that industry. See Hines v Miller (1898) 122 C 517, 55 P 401 (shafts, tunnels, levels, etc., signify instrumentalities whereby mines are prospected and developed).

Judicial notice not mandated for non-English words and phrases. Non-English words and phrases do not fall within the category of mandatory judicial notice under Evid C §451(e). However, counsel may request judicial notice of their meaning, depending on the words and phrases in question, under Evid C §452(g) or (h). See §§14.23-14.24 (matters that are of common knowledge or verifiable).

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.14 7. Universally known matters

A court is required to take judicial notice of facts and propositions "of generalized knowledge that are so universally known that they cannot reasonably be the subject of dispute." Evid C §451(f).

Reasonable person test. A fact need not be known by everyone to be "universally known" within the meaning of Evid C §451(f). The "universally known" requirement is satisfied if the fact is known among persons of reasonable and average intelligence and knowledge. See Comment to Evid C §451.

EXAMPLE: Relying on §451(f), the court took judicial notice of the use of the term "hippies" in a rural area to describe a general external appearance adequate for group identification, but the court refused to take judicial notice that "hippies" would engage in a particular type of behavior at a particular time or place. People v Coulon (1969) 273 CA2d 148, 153, 78 CR 95.

Compare: Unlike the mandatory provisions of Evid C §451(f), Evid C §452(g)-(h) permits the court to take judicial notice of facts and propositions that are not widely known, yet are indisputable. See §§14.23-14.24.

On right to hearing before court rules on matters of "substantial consequence" to outcome of case when matters to be noticed are under §451(f) or §452, see Evid C §455; discussion in §14.40.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.15 B. Discretionary judicial notice (Evid C §452)

The court has discretion to take judicial notice of the matters listed in Evid C §452. Even if none of the parties makes a request, the court may take judicial notice of these matters on its own motion as long as it gives the parties a reasonable opportunity to be heard. See §14.35.

Permissive notice made mandatory by request. If a party requests that judicial notice be taken of a matter under Evid C §452 and complies with Evid C §453 (i.e., provides sufficient information to the court and reasonable notice to the other parties), the court must take judicial notice of the matter. Evid C §453. See §14.26.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.16 1. Law of sister states

Although California and federal public laws are the subject of mandatory judicial notice (see §14.8), the decisional, constitutional, or statutory law of other states falls under the discretionary provisions of Evid C §452(a). "State" under Evid C §220 includes any United States district, commonwealth, territory, or insular possession. See Comment to Evid C §452.

Decisional law includes intermediate appellate courts of other states. See Comment to Evid C §452. "Statute" as defined by Evid C §230 includes treaties and constitutional provisions.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.17 2. Resolutions and private acts of United States and California legislatures

Unlike federal and California public statutes, which the court must judicially notice (see §14.8), resolutions and private acts of the United States Congress and of the California Legislature are discretionary with the court. Evid C §452(a).

NOTE: Resolutions and private acts of the legislatures of other states are not a proper subject for judicial notice under Evid C §452(a), although the Comment to Evid C §452 indicates that they are. Witkin states that the "reference to 'this state' [in §452(a)] supersedes language of an original draft referring to 'any state,'" pointing out that the Comment to Evid C §452 overlooked the change. 1 Witkin, California Evidence, Judicial Notice §17 (4th ed 2000). On judicial notice of resolutions and private acts of other states, see §452(c) and discussion in §14.19.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.18 3. Regulations and legislative enactments of public entities

A court may judicially notice regulations and legislative enactments "issued by … any public entity in the United States." Evid C §452(b). A "public entity" is defined broadly to include a "state, county, city and county, city, district, public authority, public agency, or any other political subdivision or public corporation." Evid C §200. The terms "regulations and legislative enactments" include ordinances and similar legislative enactments because not all public entities legislate by ordinance. Comment to Evid C §452(b).

Section 452(b) permits a court to take judicial notice of federal and California regulations not covered under Evid C §451(b) as well as the regulations of other states, territories, and possessions of the United States. Comment to Evid C §452. This section also allows a court to take judicial notice of city and local ordinances not authorized under §451(b) concerning federal and state entities. See §14.10.

EXAMPLE: Although a court may be precluded under §451(b) from judicially noticing regulations implemented by a city, §452(b) expressly includes city actions. Da Vinci Group v San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd. (1992) 5 CA4th 24, 6 CR2d 461 (court judicially noticed four amended versions of rules and regulations implemented by San Francisco Residential Rent Stabilization and Arbitration Board that were in effect at various times during plaintiff's tenancy).

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.19 4. Official acts of legislative, executive, and judicial departments of United States or any state

A court may judicially notice the official acts of the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the United States or any state. Evid C §452(c).

A wide variety of administrative and executive acts (including records of proceedings, reports, and findings of legislative and administrative committees) falls within this category. Comment to Evid C §452. See, e.g., Masters v San Bernardino County Employees Retirement Ass'n (1995) 32 CA4th 30, 37 CR2d 860 (judicial notice taken of by-laws of county retirement association); City of Sacramento v State Water Resources Control Bd. (1992) 2 CA4th 960, 3 CR2d 643 (judicial notice taken of minutes of relevant Regional Water Quality Control Board meetings); Post v Prati (1979) 90 CA3d 626, 153 CR 511 (judicial notice taken of legislative committee reports and excerpts from testimony given at public hearings).

Unofficial acts excluded. Matters that are not "official acts" have been held not to be a proper subject of judicial notice under Evid C §452(c). For example, judicial notice may not be taken of documents prepared by a private party and merely filed with a public entity. Hughes v Blue Cross (1989) 215 CA3d 832, 856 n2, 263 CR 850. Nor are internal memorandums of the district attorney's office "official acts" subject to judicial notice. People v Pinholster (1992) 1 C4th 865, 4 CR2d 765. See Quelimane Co. v Stewart Title Guar. Co. (1998) 19 C4th 26, 45 n9, 77 CR2d 709 (material supplied to counsel by legislative interpretive service not subject to judicial notice).

To aid in their interpretation of official acts, the courts may judicially notice extrinsic related documents. Estate of Crabtree (1992) 4 CA4th 1119, 6 CR2d 224 (in construing jurisdictional filing requirements for notice of appeal, court judicially noticed memorandum prepared by its administrative office in support of a draft amendment eventually adopted by Judicial Council).

Legislative history. Cases in which courts have taken judicial notice of documents or statements of legislative history or intent include:

- San Mateo County Coastal Landowner's Ass'n v County of San Mateo (1995) 38 CA4th 523, 552, 45 CR2d 117 (letter from California Secretary of Resources regarding whether county's action satisfied CEQA);
- People v Goodloe (1995) 37 CA4th 485, 493, 44 CR2d 15 (state agency's administrative bulletin interpreting statute on prison terms judicially noticed on administrative interpretation of statute);
- Joseph v Superior Court (1992) 9 CA4th 498, 11 CR2d 757 (court judicially noticed statements and comments by state agencies, legislation sponsor, and senate committee);
- Monterey Peninsula Taxpayers Ass'n v County of Monterey (1992) 8 CA4th 1520, 11 CR2d 188 (court judicially noticed legislative history to interpret validity of sales tax approved by simple majority of voters, instead of two-thirds majority required by Proposition 13); and
- Hung v Wang (1992) 8 CA4th 908, 11 CR2d 113 (court judicially noticed legislative history in evaluating constitutionality of statute).

The following cases illustrate the various forms of legislative history of which courts have taken judicial notice:

- Beck Dev. Co. v Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1996) 44 CA4th 1160, 1190, 52 CR2d 518 (comments made by state agency to legislature while bill under consideration); and
- Empire Props. v County of Los Angeles (1996) 44 CA4th 781, 788, 52 CR2d 69 (report by task force commissioned by legislature as part of legislative history). But see Quintano v Mercury Cas. Ins. Co. (1995) 11 C4th 1049, 1062, 48 CR2d 1 (various versions of bill as it made its way through legislature, but not of letters to legislators and governor expressing support or opposition to bill, because they merely expressed individual opinions of authors).

For discussion of court's consideration of extrinsic aids in determining the meaning of a law, see §14.37.

Statutes that concern private rights. Private state statutes (i.e., an act that concerns only designated individuals and affects only their private rights) can be included in the "official acts" that a court may judicially notice. See CCP

§1898. However, the acts of cities and other nonstate subdivisions are not the proper subject of judicial notice under Evid C §452(c). Edna Valley Ass'n v San Luis Obispo Coordinating Council (1977) 67 CA3d 444, 136 CR 665; Marino v City of Los Angeles (1973) 34 CA3d 461, 110 CR 45. But see Planned Parenthood Shasta-Diablo, Inc. v Williams (1995) 10 C4th 1009, 1021, 43 CR2d 88 (court stated that law is well settled that trial or reviewing courts may properly take judicial notice of government maps and surveys and held that it was proper to take judicial notice of city maps and surveys showing width of street); Washington v County of Contra Costa (1995) 38 CA4th 890, 901, 45 CR2d 646 (county's inspection records and documents submitted to county as part of development).

PRACTICE TIP: If any city organizations or nonstate subdivisions can be construed as "public entities," ask the court to take judicial notice of any ordinances or legislative enactments under the judicial notice provisions of §452(b). It is sometimes difficult to meet the requirement that the matter was an "official act" that the court should take judicial notice of under §452(c). See §14.18.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.20 5. Court records

The records of any California court, or any federal or sister state court of record, may be judicially noticed. Evid C §452(d). See, e.g., Pruyn v Agricultural Ins. Co. (1995) 36 CA4th 500, 511, 42 CR2d 295 (proper to judicially notice special verdicts against same defendant on similar negligence claim in insurance coverage action); Ellenberger v Espinosa (1994) 30 CA4th 943, 948 n1, 36 CR2d 360 (judicial notice of superior court's file and record on appeal in related case was considered to contradict allegations of complaint); Stolz v Bank of Am. Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n (1993) 15 CA4th 217, 19 CR2d 19 (judicial notice taken of prior determination that plaintiff was "vexatious litigant" within meaning of CCP §391; with respect to claim of collateral estoppel, court records are properly noticed for purpose of determining issues raised by pleadings, litigated, and finally decided in that proceeding); In re John V. (1992) 5 CA4th 1201, 7 CR2d 629 (judicial notice taken of partial transcript of prior hearing that showed court adopted incorrect plan for foster care); Hills Transp. Co. v Southwest Forest Indus. (1968) 266 CA2d 702, 710, 72 CR 441 (court took judicial notice of exhibits incorporated into unverified original complaint, even though verified second amended complaint omitted them).

Similarly, a party may request judicial notice of a court's own records. Nulaid Farmers Ass'n v LaTorre (1967) 252 CA2d 788, 791, 60 CR 821. It is improper for a court to take judicial notice of an interpretation of a document submitted by a demurring party based solely on the document, without allowing parties to submit extrinsic evidence. Fremont Indem. Co. v Fremont Gen. Corp. (2007) 148 CA4th 97, 114, 55 CR3d 621.

NOTE: In 1996, the legislature added Evid C §452.5, specifying special procedures for judicial notice of computer-generated official court records of criminal convictions.

Procedures. If a party requests judicial notice of material in a file of the same court in which the matter will be heard, under Cal Rules of Ct 3.1306(c) the party must:

- Specify in writing the part of the court file to be judicially noticed; and
- Arrange with the clerk to have the file in the courtroom at the time of the hearing.

Any request for judicial notice must be made in a separate document listing the specific items for which notice is requested. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113(l).

PRACTICE TIP: Consult local court rules to see if any special local requirements apply. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 9.2. Under Rule 9.2, a party seeking to have judicial notice taken of a matter in a Los Angeles superior court file must file a separate document at least 5 days before the hearing directly in the department where the matter is noticed, setting forth the case name and number and requesting the department clerk to order delivery of the file for the hearing date. Rule 9.2 advises that "[i]t is also good practice to provide the court with a copy of the material to be noticed, on the possibility that the file cannot be located in time for the hearing." If the matter is in another court's file, the requesting party must either (a) subpoena the file for the hearing date or (b) accompany and attach to the moving papers a certified copy of the record or the portion of it to be judicially noticed.

Unless the material is in the court's own file, it is better practice to provide certified copies of court records that you want judicially noticed under Evid C §452(d) and to be sure that the scope of the request is limited, e.g.: "Exhibit C is a certified copy of the amended complaint filed on April 30, 2009, in Orange County Superior Court case number _____, in which structural defects are alleged on page 2. Exhibit D is a certified copy of the proof of service of the amended complaint on the defendant on May 5, 2009."

Grounds for denial of judicial notice request. Trial courts may properly refuse to take judicial notice of matters in court files when trial counsel has not adequately furnished information to support the request. See, e.g., Conservatorship of Bones (1987) 189 CA3d 1010, 234 CR 724 (nothing in record supported county counsel's request for judicial notice other than superior court case number in which alleged conservatorship was established). See §14.29. Judicial notice may also be refused when its purpose is improper. See, e.g., Cooper Cos. v Transcontinental Ins. Co. (1995) 31 CA4th 1094, 1105, 37 CR2d 508 (judicial notice of supreme court briefs rejected as effort to ask court to second-guess supreme court opinion).

Hearsay limitation. A court may not take judicial notice of hearsay allegations as true merely because they are part of a court record or file. A court may take judicial notice of the existence of a document in a court file, but not of the truth of allegations asserted there unless the documents (e.g., orders or judgments) are reliable. See Day v Sharp (1975) 50 CA3d 904, 914, 123 CR 918.

A court may, however, take judicial notice of allegations in a pleading if they are not offered for the truth of the matter asserted. Magnolia Square Homeowners Ass'n v Safeco Ins. Co. (1990) 221 CA3d 1049, 1056, 271 CR 1 (judicial notice of allegations in amended complaint concerning structural defects to prove notice or knowledge of defects).

On judicial notice, see Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 49 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

Judge's findings of fact. Some courts have viewed a judge's findings of fact in a previous case to be reliable enough to be a proper subject of judicial notice. See, e.g., In re Tanya F. (1980) 111 CA3d 436, 168 CR 713 (judicial notice of facts asserted in orders and findings in juvenile court file concerning dependency proceedings). See also Safeco Ins. Co. v Tholen (1981) 117 CA3d 685, 173 CR 23 (judicial notice of federal district court judgment and memorandum of opinion and of affirming opinion filed by Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals).

On the other hand, in Sosinsky v Grant (1992) 6 CA4th 1548, 8 CR2d 552, the court refused to take judicial notice of the findings of facts reached in a prior case between the parties. The Sosinsky court was willing to judicially notice that the judge believed witness A, but not "that A's testimony must necessarily have been true simply because the judge believed A and not B." 6 CA4th at 1565. See also Kilroy v State (2004) 119 CA4th 140, 148, 14 CR3d 109; Lockley v Law Office of Cantrell, Green, Pekich, Cruz & McCort (2001) 91 CA4th 875, 884, 110 CR2d 877.

§14.21 6. Local, sister state, and federal rules of court

Under Evid C §452(e), the court may take judicial notice of the rules of court of any California court (whether a court of record or not), and of any court of record of the United States or any other state. "State" includes any district, commonwealth, territory, or insular possession of the United States. Evid C §220.

Some overlap exists between Evid C §452(e) and Evid C §451(c)-(d). Judicial notice is mandatory to the extent that the matter falls under §451(c)-(d) (see §§14.11-14.12). Comment to Evid C §452. For example, while the local rules of the Los Angeles County Superior Court are subject to discretionary judicial notice under §452(e), judicial notice of the California Rules of Court adopted by the Judicial Council is mandatory under Evid C §451(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.22 7. Foreign law

A court may take judicial notice of foreign law under Evid C §452(f), which is specified as the law of (1) an organization of nations (such as the European Economic Community), (2) foreign nations, and (3) public entities in foreign nations. See Comment to Evid C §452.

"Law" includes constitutional, statutory, and decisional law. Evid C §160. A "public entity" is defined in Evid C §200 as:

> a nation, state, county, city and county, city, district, public authority, public agency, or any other political subdivision or public corporation, whether foreign or domestic.

Under Evid C §452(f), all foreign law in whatever form can be the subject of judicial notice by the court. Comment to Evid C §452. See, e.g., Volkswagenwerk Aktiengesellschaft v Superior Court (1981) 123 CA3d 840, 852, 176 CR 874 (terms of existing agreements between United States and West Germany).

On court consideration of extrinsic aids to determine meaning of law, see §14.37. On court options when foreign law cannot be easily determined, see §14.39.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.23 8. Matters of common knowledge

Facts and propositions that are of such common knowledge within the court's territorial jurisdiction that they cannot reasonably be the subject of dispute may be judicially noticed. Evid C §452(g); In re Michael G. (1993) 19 CA4th 1674, 24 CR2d 260 (trial court entitled to take judicial notice that public relies on dangers and antidotes listed on label as matter of common knowledge; minor declared ward of court for possession of spray paint containing hazardous substance toluene with intent to inhale for purpose of intoxication). See Carleton v Tortosa (1993) 14 CA4th 745, 17 CR2d 734 (advertisements and brochures by private corporation, or its summary of changes in federal regulations, do not contain matters of common knowledge within court's territorial jurisdiction, and no other statutory basis exists for judicial notice of such information); see also Medina v Hillshore Partners (1995) 40 CA4th 477, 481, 46 CR2d 871 (it is common knowledge that street gangs claim home territory and prohibit other gangs from that territory and that gang activity spawns violence). See Evid C §450 (judicial notice may not be taken of any matter unless authorized or required by law).

"Territorial jurisdiction" within the meaning of Evid C §452(g) is the county in which a superior court is located. See Comment to Evid C §452.

A fact need not be physically present within a court's territorial jurisdiction for the court to judicially notice it under Evid C §452(g). Rather, §452(g) requires only that common knowledge of the fact exist within the court's territorial jurisdiction. See Comment to Evid C §452.

EXAMPLE: The Orange County Superior Court may judicially notice a fact concerning another county (e.g., that a major fire occurred in the Malibu area in the fall of 2009), as long as common knowledge of that facts exists within Orange County and the fact cannot reasonably be the subject of dispute. See Ogle v Superior Court (1992) 4 CA4th 1007, 6 CR2d 205 (Kern County Superior Court judicially noticed that defendant's domicile was in Los Angeles County).

The salary level available to a supported spouse in a specific geographical area is not a proper subject for judicial notice in a proceeding to modify spousal support, because it is neither a matter of common knowledge (Evid C §452(g)) nor indisputable information (Evid C §452(h)). Marriage of Prietsch & Calhoun (1987) 190 CA3d 645, 235 CR 587.

If common knowledge of a fact exists among a particular group within a court's territorial jurisdiction and the fact cannot be reasonably disputed, the court may judicially notice it under Evid C §452(g) even though the fact may not be common knowledge of everyone within the court's jurisdiction. See, e.g., Denham v Superior Court (1970) 2 C3d 557, 564, 86 CR 65 (judicial notice taken under §452(g) of changes in attorneys and law firm representing plaintiff; two changes resulted from appointment of member of firm as commissioner or judge).

If the fact to be judicially noticed is "essential," the court's power should be invoked with caution. The propounding party has the burden of providing the court with sufficient information to establish that the fact is "common knowledge." Heist v County of Colusa (1984) 163 CA3d 841, 213 CR 278.

Compare: On judge's personal knowledge distinguished from facts and propositions commonly known within the territorial jurisdiction of the court, see Comment to Evid C §451; discussion in §14.41.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.24 9. Verifiable matters

A court may judicially notice facts and propositions that are not reasonably subject to dispute and are capable of immediate and accurate determination. Evid C §452(h). See Press-Enterprise v Superior Court (1994) 22 CA4th 498, 27 CR2d 708 (trial court took judicial notice of newspaper's daily circulation).

Facts need not actually be known to be subject to judicial notice under §452(h) as long as they are indisputable and subject to immediate and accurate verification. See Comment to Evid C §452. See, e.g., Norbert v Upjohn Co. (1999) 21 C4th 383, 408, 87 CR2d 453 (taking judicial notice under §452(h) that, by 1989, controversy about drug Halcion had arisen in popular press).

"Reasonably indisputable accuracy" standard. Courts have declined to take judicial notice under Evid C §452(h) when the source does not constitute "reasonably indisputable accuracy." See, e.g., Leibert v Transworld Sys. (1995) 32 CA4th 1693, 1700, 39 CR2d 65 (unauthenticated internal memorandum within state's department of industrial relations fell short of the reasonably indisputable accuracy standard); Osborn v Irwin Mem. Blood Bank (1992) 5 CA4th 234, 7 CR2d 101 (reporter's account of meeting of Centers for Disease Control contained in book not reliable, because facts may have been subject to dispute); Heist v County of Colusa (1984) 163 CA3d 841, 213 CR 278 (California Attorney General's advisory letter contained disclaimer of factual basis of its conclusion and could not be relied on as source of "reasonably indisputable accuracy"). See also Gould v Maryland Sound Indus. (1995) 31 CA4th 1137, 1145, 37 CR2d 718.

Recognized sources of verification. Sources that the court can use for verification include treatises, encyclopedias, and almanacs as well as persons learned in the field. Comment to Evid C §452. The use of such reference books is limited to consultation by the judge and the parties to decide whether to take judicial notice. See, e.g., Jordache Enters. v Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison (1998) 18 C4th 739, 748 n6, 76 CR2d 749 (denied request to take judicial notice of biographies of three lawyers in Martindale-Hubbell, a national directory of attorneys and law firms). See also Honig v San Francisco Planning Dep't (2005) 127 CA4th 520, 524 n3, 25 CR3d 649 (declining request to take judicial notice of State Bar of California "attorney profile" of party). The reference works are not received in evidence and do not go to the jury room. Comment to Evid C §452.

Facts accepted as established by experts and specialists in the natural, physical, and social sciences may be judicially noticed under Evid C §452(g)-(h) "if those facts are of such wide acceptance that to submit them to the jury would be to risk irrational findings." Comment to Evid C §452. On impropriety of the court's judicially noticing facts based solely on the judge's personal knowledge, see §14.41.

III. JUDICIAL NOTICE PROCEDURES

A. Party requesting judicial notice

§14.25 1. No formal request of mandatory matters under Evid C §451 necessary

Counsel need not formally request judicial notice under Evid C §451. The court must take judicial notice of the matters specified in §451, whether or not a party requests the court to do so. Quelimane Co. v Stewart Title Guar. Co. (1998) 19 C4th 26, 45 n9, 77 CR2d 709; Stop Youth Addiction, Inc. v Lucky Stores, Inc. (1998) 17 C4th 553, 571 n9, 71 CR2d 731.

The court's failure to judicially notice a mandatory matter under Evid C §451 is error, but it may not be reversible error. Comment to Evid C §451. A party may be precluded from asserting the error on appeal because of, e.g., the doctrine of invited error, failure to raise the point in the trial court, or another, similar principle of appellate practice. See Comment to Evid C §452. On protecting the record, see §14.32.

Good advocacy demands that counsel call attention to matters that the court must judicially notice under Evid C §451. Doing so is usually accomplished in the normal course of representation by citing the statutory and decisional laws that apply to the case in memorandums and other supporting papers, the trial brief, and motions in limine, and during oral argument or in conferences with the judge in chambers.

PRACTICE TIP: Let the court know of matters requiring judicial notice, and be sure your statement is in writing or on the record. Whenever legal authorities that the court must judicially notice are not immediately available to the judge, attach copies to the brief or supporting memorandum that cites them. For example, a county law library serving a California superior court may not have easy access to federal statutes and United States Supreme Court cases, and it is to your advantage to give the court a convenient means of reviewing your supporting memorandum. Check local rules for requirements that copies of federal cases and other authorities be attached when cited.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.26 2. Discretionary matters under Evid C §452 may become mandatory upon request

The court must take judicial notice of any matters specified under Evid C §452 if a party (Evid C §453):

- Requests that judicial notice be taken (see §14.27);
- Gives each adverse party sufficient notice of the request to enable each party to prepare to meet the request (see §14.28); and
- Furnishes the court with sufficient information to enable it to take judicial notice (see §14.29).

Even if a party fails to give the court sufficient information (or sufficient notice to other parties), the court still has the discretion to take judicial notice of the matters it may notice under §452. Comment to Evid C §453. Denial of a request when a party failed to meet the requirements of §453, however, is also proper. Whispering Pines Mobile Home Park v City of Scotts Valley (1986) 180 CA3d 152, 162, 225 CR 364.

Overlap between discretionary and mandatory matters. When overlap between the matters listed in Evid C §§451 and 452 occurs (e.g., public statutory law in Evid C §451(a) is also included within official acts of legislative departments in Evid C §452(c)), judicial notice is required even if no request was made. See Cal L Rev'n Comm'n Reports Comment to Evid C Div 4 (discussion of additional examples). It is still a good idea to formally request judicial notice of a matter that overlaps both provisions.

Compare: Overlap can also occur within the provisions of §452, but these categories are treated alike, and a request for judicial notice is required. See, e.g., Weiner v Mitchell, Silberberg & Knupp (1980) 114 CA3d 39, 45, 170 CR 533 (federal appellate decision and judgment viewed either as official act of U.S. judicial department under §452(c) or record of U.S. court of record under Evid C §452(e)); People v Terry (1974) 38 CA3d 432, 439, 113 CR 233 (judicial notice of death certificate as official state act under §452(c) or immediately verifiable fact under Evid C §452(h)).

PRACTICE TIP: When a document could fall into more than one category for discretionary judicial notice under Evid C §452, be sure to request judicial notice under each applicable subsection.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.27 a. Request for judicial notice

No form for requesting the trial court to take judicial notice is specified in Evid C §§450-460. However, Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113(l) requires that any request for judicial notice must be made in a separate document that lists the specific items for which notice is requested. See form in §14.54. Any request must also comply with Cal Rules of Ct 3.1306(c). A request that judicial notice be taken at trial can be in oral or in written form. See People v Maxwell (1978) 78 CA3d 124, 130, 144 CR 95 (request for judicial notice made orally).

If the request is made orally, be sure a court reporter is present to record it in order to protect the record in the event of an appeal. See §14.32. For example, if a witness states that she had the conversation on the morning she voted at the polls in the last presidential election, counsel can orally request on the record that the court take judicial notice of that date.

For more complicated matters, it is better to make a written request in advance. See Evid C §453 (sufficient notice to adverse party required). Also, the judge may take the request more seriously if it is in writing. For form, see §14.54; on giving sufficient notice and timing, see §14.28.

It is also a good idea to attach to the request for judicial notice any material that will help the court in its ruling. On giving the court sufficient information, see §14.29. Many trial lawyers also submit a proposed jury instruction with the request for judicial notice, and ask the judge to preinstruct the jury on the judicially noticed matter. See §14.46; form in §14.55.

PRACTICE TIP: Check for local court rule requirements. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 9.2 on procedures for requesting judicial notice of the court's own records in writing; discussion in §14.20. Make sure you comply with Cal Rules of Ct 3.1306(c) on the format of the request.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.28 b. Sufficient notice to other parties; timing

A party requesting judicial notice of a matter under Evid C §452 must give "sufficient notice," through the pleadings or otherwise, to enable the opposing party "to prepare to meet the request." Evid C §453(a). If the notice fails to satisfy this requirement, the court may refuse to judicially notice the matter.

The notice time is not specified; Evid C §453 merely requires reasonable or ample notice, and the reasonableness of the notice given depends on the circumstances of the particular case. Comment to Evid C §453. If a matter of common knowledge comes up during the trial, oral notice at trial would be sufficient to satisfy §453. In more complex matters, advance notice in written form is required. Often, it is reasonable to expect that the notice will be given at or before the time of the pretrial conference.

PRACTICE TIP: It is usually a good idea to obtain a court ruling on a request for judicial notice before the trial begins (e.g., during a pretrial chambers conference or with motions in limine). To protect yourself from any claim that you failed to give other parties sufficient notice to enable them to prepare to meet the request, serve the other parties and the court with a written form well before the time the court will rule on the matter. See form in §14.54. If the request is denied, you still have time to present evidence during trial to establish the point. On the requirement that the court advise parties as soon as possible when denying a request, see §14.41. On opportunity to be heard before court judicially notices matters of "substantial consequence," see §14.40.

Effect of insufficient notice when overlapping mandatory and discretionary matters. If a matter is subject to judicial notice under both Evid C §§451 and 452 but the party desiring judicial notice fails to comply with the sufficient notice requirement of Evid C §453 (regarding Evid C §452 discretionary matters), the court is required to take mandatory judicial notice of the matter under §451. See Comment to Evid C §452.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.29 c. Sufficient information to court

A party must furnish the court with "sufficient information" to enable it to take judicial notice of an Evid C §452 matter. Evid C §453(b). If the parties do not provide this information, the court is not required to resort to its own sources of information, but the court may conduct independent research in deciding whether to judicially notice a matter. Comment to Evid C §453. On sources of information the court may rely on, see §14.36.

What constitutes "sufficient information" is not defined in Evid C §453 and varies from case to case. The party requesting judicial notice should submit the best information available in the circumstances. See Comment to Evid C §453.

Cases in which a party's failure to supply the court with "sufficient information" resulted in the court's declining to take judicial notice include:

EXAMPLE 1: Willis v State (1994) 22 CA4th 287, 291, 27 CR2d 413. Judicial notice was held not to be mandatory when the plaintiff simply requested the court to take judicial notice without appending any information. In an action against the state for recovery of community property (i.e., the deceased husband's final payroll amounts), the widow claimed the state erroneously paid his designee rather than her. A certified copy of the State Administrative Manual regulations, which directs payment to the designee only if there are no competing claims, should have been presented to the court.

EXAMPLE 2: Department of Fish & Game v Anderson-Cottonwood Irrig. Dist. (1992) 8 CA4th 1554, 1568, 11 CR2d 222. A court refused to judicially notice a pending U.S. Department of Administrative Hearing proceeding before the U.S. Department of Commerce because defendant "has given us nothing to notice … has not presented any documentation or declarations" and the purpose in seeking judicial notice was unclear.

EXAMPLE 3: Osborn v Irwin Mem. Blood Bank (1992) 5 CA4th 234, 7 CR2d 101. A court declined to take judicial notice of a statement in the Report of the Presidential Commission on the Human Immunodeficiency Virus Epidemic because the report was not presented to the court.

EXAMPLE 4: Heist v County of Colusa (1984) 163 CA3d 841, 213 CR 278. A court refused to take judicial notice of a river's navigability because the plaintiff failed to furnish sufficient information to enable it to do so; advisory opinion of the Attorney General containing a disclaimer as to the factual basis of the conclusion was not sufficient.

EXAMPLE 5: Conservatorship of Bones (1987) 189 CA3d 1010, 234 CR 724. The trial court's refusal to take judicial notice of an alleged conservatorship established for the appellant, who was appealing his involuntary confinement for mental health treatment, was confirmed when nothing in the record supported county counsel's request for judicial notice other than the superior court case number in which the alleged conservatorship was established.

On requirements for requesting judicial notice of court records, see §14.20.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.30 3. Burden on requesting party

The requesting party has the burden of persuading the judge of the propriety of taking judicial notice under Evid C §452 and of the tenor of the matter to be noticed. See Evid C §454; Comment to Evid C §453. Only matters authorized or required by law can be judicially noticed. Evid C §450.

The degree to which a party must persuade the judge on a particular matter is determined by the §452 subsection authorizing judicial notice of the matter. See Comment to Evid C §453.

EXAMPLE: If the matter is a fact of common knowledge under Evid C §452(g), the party must persuade the judge that the fact is of such common knowledge within the court's territorial jurisdiction that it is not reasonably subject to dispute, i.e., no reasonable person having the same information that is available to the judge could rationally disbelieve the fact.

If the matter to be noticed is a city ordinance under §452(b), the party must persuade the judge that a valid ordinance exists and also of its tenor but the judge need not believe that no reasonable person could conclude otherwise. Comment to Evid C §453.

If the requesting party fails to meet its burden, the court may decline to judicially notice the matter. Comment to Evid C §453. See People v Preslie (1977) 70 CA3d 486, 495 n8, 138 CR 828 (requesting party has burden to show good cause for not furnishing certified copies of original documents filed in superior court); Chas. L. Harney, Inc. v State (1963) 217 CA2d 77, 86, 31 CR 524 (matter to be judicially noticed properly brought to trial court's attention by transmission of certified copies of records involved). For discussion of procedures for requesting judicial notice of court records, see §14.20.

To meet its burden, a court might require the requesting party in an appropriate case to furnish expert testimony to clarify difficult problems. Comment to Evid C §453. See §14.38.

On the court's not taking judicial notice when in doubt, see, e.g., Barreiro v State Bar (1970) 2 C3d 912, 925, 88 CR 192 (fact under Evid C §§451-452).

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.31 4. Using exhibit to support request for judicial notice

Consider preparing a demonstrative exhibit to aid the court in taking judicial notice of a matter.

Judicial notice of a matter was requested in the following cases:

- Colberg, Inc. v State ex rel Dep't of Pub. Works (1967) 67 C2d 408, 423, 62 CR 401 (extent of tidal influence);
- People v Sanders (1969) 268 CA2d 802, 805 n1, 74 CR 350 (effect of stoppage of blood flow to brain);
- People v MacLaird (1968) 264 CA2d 972, 975, 71 CR 191 (accuracy of radar devices); and
- Hom v Clark (1963) 221 CA2d 622, 638, 35 CR 11 (definition of "alley").

Although exhibits were not provided to the court in each of the above-referenced cases, they illustrate instances in which it would have been helpful for counsel to provide the court with, respectively: a tide chart; a computer-animated demonstration of blood flow to the brain; a chart of how often radar was used and how often it was effective; and a photograph of the street or alley in question. For more information on preparing trial exhibits that could be used for judicial notice purposes, see generally chap 13.

It is important to weigh the expense of developing and producing the exhibit against the strategic importance of obtaining judicial notice of the matter. If the exhibit qualifies as admissible demonstrative evidence, it may be more advantageous to prove the fact to the jury by using the exhibit for its emphasis and persuasive force. On tactical considerations involved in requesting judicial notice, see §§14.4-14.5.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.32 5. Protecting the record

Counsel frequently request the court to take judicial notice of matters specified in Evid C §451 (in addition to those specified in Evid C §452) to ensure that the matter is raised in the trial court and to protect the record on appeal. See, e.g., Nedlloyd Lines B.V. v Superior Court (1992) 3 C4th 459, 11 CR2d 330 (stock purchase agreement containing choice of law provision applying Hong Kong law).

If no request was made in the trial court, an appellate court might hold that:

- The doctrine of invited error applies (i.e., the party invited the error and is thus estopped from asserting that it is reversible error); or
- The point cannot be raised on appeal, because it was not raised in the trial court.

The principles of appellate practice are not abrogated by §451. Comment to Evid C §451. See, e.g., Conservatorship of Bones (1987) 189 CA3d 1010, 234 CR 724 (nothing in record supported county counsel's request for judicial notice other than superior court case number in which alleged conservatorship was established; court of appeal refused to take judicial notice of conservatorship). On procedures for requesting judicial notice of court records, see §14.20.

On protecting the record during trial, see chap 15. On estoppel and waiver in appellate courts, see 9 Witkin, California Procedure, Appeal §§389-415 (5th ed 2008); California Civil Appellate Practice §§1.56, 5.42-5.45 (3d ed Cal CEB 1996).

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.33 6. Asking for jury instruction

Right to jury instruction. A trial court that judicially notices a matter of fact may, and if requested must, "instruct the jury to accept as a fact the matter so noticed." Evid C §457. Judicially noticed matters are binding on the jury. Comment to Evid C §457.

Right limited to matters of fact. Although the court may take judicial notice of laws, it need only instruct the jury on a matter that would have been the jury's to determine anyway. The court may decline to give jury instructions on matters of law (that are not matters of evidence). Instructing jurors on matters of law is covered by the general provisions of law governing instruction of juries. Comment to Evid C §457. For complete discussion of jury instructions, see chap 20.

Preinstruction advisable. Instructions to jurors are usually given after the parties conclude argument. After the court takes judicial notice of a request to do so, prepare a jury instruction (or better, submit a proposed jury instruction with your written request). It is also a good idea to ask the court to preinstruct the jury during the trial on any matter that has been established by judicial notice as true. In the following example, a judge preinstructs the jury on a judicially noticed fact.

EXAMPLE: "You must accept as true that on the night of September 19, 2009, the evening the accident occurred, there was a full moon and the weather was clear. No evidence will be offered by either party during the trial to prove or dispute this fact."

On the courts' growing tendency to preinstruct the jury, see §§20.47-20.50. For form of jury instruction regarding judicially noticed matter, see §14.55.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/14 Judicial Notice, Admissions, and Stipulations/§14.34 B. Grounds for objecting to judicial notice

§14.34 B. Grounds for objecting to judicial notice

A party may object to the court's taking judicial notice of a matter on one or more of the following grounds:

For Evid C §451 or §452 matters:

- The matter is not a proper subject for judicial notice under Evid C §451 or §452. Evid C §450. See §14.6.
- The matter is not relevant. Evid C §§350, 450; Mozzetti v City of Brisbane (1977) 67 CA3d 565, 578, 136 CR 751. See §14.3.
- The tenor differs from that suggested by the requesting party. Evid C §454. See §14.30.
- The sources of information relied on by the court to decide the propriety of judicial notice are subject to Evid C §352 (unduly time-consuming, prejudicial, confusing, or misleading). Evid C §454. See §14.36.
- The sources of information relied on by the court to decide the propriety of judicial notice are subject to the rules of privilege. Evid C §454. See §14.36.
- Foreign law (i.e., the law of an organization of nations, a foreign nation, or a public entity of a foreign nation) is the subject of judicial notice and the court received the advice of experts outside of open court, but the advice is not in writing. See §14.39.

For §452 matters only:

- The requesting party failed to give sufficient notice to enable the objecting party to meet the request. See §14.28.
- The requesting party failed to give sufficient information to enable the court to take judicial notice of the matter. See §14.29.
- The court records to be noticed contain hearsay that makes them inadmissible under the judicial notice doctrine. See §14.36.

For Evid C §451(f) (universally known matters) or any §452 matters of "substantial consequence" to case:

- The objecting party did not have a reasonable opportunity to be heard on the propriety of taking judicial notice of the matter or on the tenor of the matter. Evid C §455(a). See §14.40.
- The objecting party did not have a reasonable opportunity to meet information not received in open court (including the advice of experts), but relied on by the judge in determining the request for judicial notice. Evid C §455(b). See §14.38.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.35 C. Judicial notice on court's own motion

If the court proposes to take judicial notice of a matter "that is of substantial consequence to the determination of the action" and if that matter falls under Evid C §451(f) (universally known matters) or under any category of Evid C §452 (matters that the court has discretion to judicially notice), the court must (Evid C §455):

- Give each party a reasonable opportunity to present information on the propriety of taking judicial notice of the matter and the tenor of the matter to be noticed; and
- If any source of information the court resorted to was not received in open court, make that information and its source part of the record, and give the parties a reasonable opportunity to meet the information.

The same procedures are required when a party requests the court to take judicial notice of any §451(f) or §452 matter and the matter is of "substantial consequence" to the determination of the action. Evid C §455. See §14.40.

© The Regents of the University of California

D. Trial court's ruling

§14.36 1. Sources of information court may rely on

A court may consult or use any source of pertinent information (including the advice of persons learned in the subject matter), whether or not provided by a party, in determining the propriety of taking judicial notice of a matter or its tenor. Evid C §454(a)(1). See, e.g., Volkswagenwerk Aktiengesellschaft v Superior Court (1981) 123 CA3d 840, 852, 176 CR 874.

The court has considerable latitude in deciding which sources are trustworthy. Comment to Evid C §454. Except for Evid C §352 (unduly time-consuming, prejudicial, confusing, or misleading) and the rules of privilege, the exclusionary rules of evidence (e.g., hearsay) do not apply to the court's obtaining information from such sources. Evid C §454(a)(2).

PRACTICE TIP: Do not object to the source of information (or the advice the court relies on) on the ground that it, e.g., violates the secondary evidence rule. See §13.122. The court is explicitly authorized to use information that would not qualify as admissible evidence in reaching its decision to judicially notice a matter. See Evid C §455. The court is free to consult any reliable source of information it deems helpful, and it may use copies rather original documents if it chooses. It would be error for the court to sustain an objection to a source of pertinent information based on an exclusionary rule of evidence, but it may sustain an objection based on Evid C §352 or privilege. If, e.g., a copy is truly unreliable, object on the ground that the information in the copy (compared with the original document) is "misleading" under Evid C §352. For more examples, see Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 49 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

Compare: The judicially noticed matter itself must not be hearsay; only the sources of information the court relies on may be hearsay. For example, it is improper for the court to take judicial notice of the truth of hearsay statements in court records. See §14.20.

PRACTICE TIP: Special requirement for advice on foreign law. If the court relies on an expert for information and advice when the subject of judicial notice is foreign law (i.e., the law of an organization of nations, a foreign nation, or a public entity in a foreign nation), it is not sufficient to state the source of information on the record. If not received in open court, that advice must be in writing. Evid C §454(b).

On the appointment of experts to advise the court, see §14.38. On the court's determination when foreign law is the subject of judicial notice, see §14.39.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.37 a. Consideration of extrinsic aids

A court may consider whatever materials it deems appropriate when construing a statute, determining a constitutional issue, or formulating a rule of law. These materials can include legislative history, discussions by experts or scholars in treatises and law reviews, materials that contain controversial economic or social facts or findings that indicate contemporary opinion, and similar materials. Comment to Evid C §450.

NOTE: Some commentators use the term "legislative facts" to denote the factual matter in such materials relied on by a court to decide a rule of law that has policy consequences beyond the particular case. California courts have judicially noticed such legislative facts. See Kongsgaard, Judicial Notice and the California Evidence Code, 18 Hastings LJ 117 (1966).

Parties moving for judicial notice are not required to demonstrate that statutory language is ambiguous, but the court may determine that the use of legislative history is inappropriate when it finds language unambiguous. To be cognizable, however, legislative history must shed light on the collegial view of the legislature as a whole. See California Teachers Ass'n v San Diego Community College Dist. (1981) 28 C3d 692, 170 CR 817. A document is not subject to judicial notice simply because it is located in the file of a legislative committee; a document that appears to reflect only the personal views of an assembly member and has not been communicated to the legislature as a whole is not appropriate for judicial notice as legislative history. Kaufman & Broad Communities, Inc. v Performance Plastering, Inc. (2005) 133 CA4th 26, 39, 34 CR3d 520.

PRACTICE TIP: Kaufman & Broad Communities, Inc., supra, provides a useful list of legislative materials that have been found cognizable and those found noncognizable by courts, and those that are not acceptable to the Third District Court of Appeal. The decision further articulates necessary procedures for seeking judicial notice of legislative history materials in the Third District Court of Appeal.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.38 b. Appointment of expert

On occasion, the court may need expert advice to enable it to take judicial notice of a matter. In this situation, the court, on its own motion or on the motion of any party, may appoint one or more persons "learned in the subject" to provide the advice it needs. Evid C §460. See Evid C §730 (expert may be called on court's own motion).

Experts appointed under Evid C §460 are appointed and compensated in the same manner as provided in Evid C §§730-733. Normally, when expert advice is required to enable the court to judicially notice a matter, the parties furnish their own experts. See Comment to Evid C §460.

PRACTICE TIP: Remember that the exclusionary rules of evidence do not apply to the sources of information or the advice the court resorts to. See §14.36. Unlike a witness giving expert testimony at trial, no expert witness qualifications are necessary before the witness gives information and opinions about the matter that may be judicially noticed. But it is still a good idea to establish your own expert's qualifications, just as if that expert were giving opinion testimony, in order for the judge to feel that the person is credible and reliable. The court then usually consults with the expert outside the jury's presence. You should also ask permission to be present to hear the expert's advice so that you know what has been said. You may also have an opportunity to clarify any points on your client's behalf.

If the matter to be noticed falls under the category of universally known matters under Evid C §451(f), or under any subsection of Evid C §452—and that matter is of "substantial consequence" to the determination of the action—you have a right to present your information and to oppose other information given to the court. Evid C §455. See §14.40 (reasonable opportunity to be heard required).

Foreign law expert. If the expert will give information and opinions on foreign law, the testimony must be heard in open court or put in writing. See Evid C §454. For discussion, see §§14.36, 14.39.

§14.39 c. When foreign law is subject of judicial notice

If foreign law applies but the court cannot ascertain what that law is, the court may "as the ends of justice require" either (Evid C §311(a)-(b)):

- Apply California law if it is consistent with state and federal constitutions; or
- Dismiss the case without prejudice (or, if the case is on appeal, remand it to the trial court with directions that it dismiss the action without prejudice).

The court should make every effort to verify the foreign law, or other state's law, before it applies California law or dismisses without prejudice under Evid C §311. Comment to Evid C §311.

A party's failure to supply the court with sufficient information to enable it to verify the applicable foreign or other state's law may be a reason the court cannot make such a determination. Comment to Evid C §311.

The court may grant the parties additional time to obtain such information and make it available to the court. If they fail to obtain it and the court is not satisfied that they made reasonable efforts to do so, it can dismiss the action without prejudice. On the other hand, if counsel have made reasonable efforts, all sources of information have been exhausted, and the court cannot determine the foreign law, it may either apply California law, within constitutional limits, or dismiss the action without prejudice. Comment to Evid C §311.

If an expert gives information and opinions on foreign law, the testimony must be heard in open court or put in writing. See Evid C §454. On furnishing the court with sufficient information to enable it to take judicial notice generally, see §14.36.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.40 2. Judicial notice of matters of "substantial consequence" to the case

Reasonable opportunity to be heard. If a party requests judicial notice of a matter "that is of substantial consequence to the determination of the action" and that matter falls under Evid C §451(f) (universally known matters) or under any category of Evid C §452 (matters that the court has discretion to judicially notice), the court must (Evid C §455):

- Give each party a reasonable opportunity to present information on the propriety of taking judicial notice of the matter and the tenor of the matter to be noticed; and
- If any source of information (including the advice of experts) that the court resorted to was not received in open court, make that information and its source part of the record and give the parties a reasonable opportunity to meet the information.

See, e.g., Lua v Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1992) 6 CA4th 1897, 9 CR2d 116 (in evaluating negligence per se, court judicially noticed Public Utilities Commission Order in decision of California P.U.C., but only after notifying parties of its intention to do so and inviting and receiving their comments); Estate of Nicholas (1986) 177 CA3d 1071, 223 CR 410 (judicial notice could not be taken of previous court records containing trust's financial information, because trust's previous financial condition was of substantial consequence to case and no notice was given to parties that judicial notice was to be taken).

On sources of information the court may rely on, see §14.36; on special requirements of foreign law and experts testifying on foreign law, see §§14.38-14.39.

NOTE: The same procedures are required when the court proposes to take judicial notice on its own motion of any §451(f) or §452 matter and the matter is of "substantial consequence" to the determination of the action. Evid C §455. See §14.35.

The court is not required to afford each party a reasonable opportunity to be heard for a matter subject to mandatory judicial notice under Evid C §451(a)-(e). See Comment to Evid C §455. Nor is the court required to give each party that opportunity when the matter is not of "substantial consequence" to determination of the action. See Comment to Evid C §455.

EXAMPLE: When a "reasonable opportunity" to present information is required depends on the complexity of the matter and its importance to the case. When the existence and validity of a city ordinance is not disputed, no formal hearing is needed to decide the propriety of taking judicial notice of the ordinance and of its tenor. But when a complex question about the foreign law applies to the case, a hearing under §455(a) is mandatory. See Comment to Evid C §455.

Timing. In a jury trial, the opportunity to be heard must be given before the jury is instructed; in a bench trial, it must be given before the case is submitted to the court for decision. Evid C §455(a).

Despite the mandatory language of §455(a), the timing in a bench trial can be changed if the judge discovers—even after a case is submitted for decision—that judicial notice of a matter should have been taken. The judge may reopen the case to permit the parties to provide relevant information on the matter. See Comment to Evid C §455.

On taking judicial notice at a subsequent proceeding (e.g., a hearing on a motion for new trial) of a matter for which judicial notice was requested during trial, see §14.42.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.41 3. Court's refusal to take judicial notice

When denying a request to take judicial notice, a trial court must (1) advise the parties at the earliest practicable time and (2) indicate for the record that the request was denied. Evid C §456. This requirement was imposed in order to provide the parties with an adequate opportunity to submit evidence on a matter for which judicial notice was anticipated but not taken. Comment to Evid C §456. But see Heist v County of Colusa (1984) 163 CA3d 841, 850, 213 CR 278 (appellate court held it was harmless error for trial court to fail to inform plaintiff of its denial of request to take judicial notice of creek's navigability when plaintiff failed to present evidence on another crucial point).

Matters outside Evid C §§451 and 452. The court may not judicially notice a matter that falls outside the categories of Evid C §451 or §452 (e.g., a judge who has personal knowledge of certain facts is not free to take judicial notice of those facts—unless they fall into the permissible categories). Evid C §450 (court cannot take judicial notice of a matter not required or authorized by law). See §14.6.

Inadmissible or irrelevant information. If the information to be judicially noticed is not admissible or relevant, or helpful to the trier of fact, the court has the discretion to refuse a request for judicial notice. See, e.g., Santos v DMV (1992) 5 CA4th 537, 7 CR2d 10 (court refused to judicially notice distance between place of arrest and hospital because distance gave no information on whether arrival at hospital was immediate or how much time had elapsed before blood was drawn). See §14.3. For other grounds on which the court may refuse judicial notice, see §14.34.

Standard on appeal. If a party requests the court to take judicial notice of a matter specified in Evid C §452 and gives notice to each adverse party as required by Evid C §453, the judge's decision not to take judicial notice will be upheld on appeal—unless the reviewing court finds that the party furnished information to the judge that was so persuasive no reasonable judge would have refused to take judicial notice of the matter. See Comment to Evid C §453.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.42 4. Judicial notice by trial court in subsequent proceedings

Even if a court failed or refused to take judicial notice of a matter during trial, the trial court in a subsequent proceeding may do so. Evid C §458. See Comment to Evid C §458.

The trial judge or another trial judge is not barred from taking judicial notice of the matter in a later proceeding, such as a hearing on a motion for new trial. See Ponce v Tractor Supply Co. (1972) 29 CA3d 500, 509, 105 CR 628 (judicial notice of previous default judgment against codefendant taken even though request made after entry of later judgment against requesting party but before judgment became final; collateral estoppel effect).

CAUTION: Except for the practical matter of instructing the jury on what has been judicially noticed (see §14.33), the Evidence Code does not limit the taking of judicial notice to any particular stage in a proceeding. If the court fails or refuses to take judicial notice of a matter at the demurrer stage, the court may take judicial notice of that matter at a later stage in the proceeding.

Potential problems exist when opposing counsel contests an earlier ruling on a judicially noticed matter. It is uncertain whether the court's determination is conclusive for the remainder of the trial. If you intend to rely on an earlier court ruling that took judicial notice of a matter (in order to dispense with the need to introduce evidence on the point at trial), you could encounter problems during trial because opposing counsel can argue that the trial judge is not bound by the earlier ruling if it is erroneous. To avoid this problem, request at a chambers conference before trial begins that the judge take judicial notice of the matter, and cite the earlier ruling.

IV. JUDICIAL ADMISSIONS

A. Admissions made in pleadings or on trial record

§14.43 1. Judicial admissions conclusively establish facts

A "judicial" admission is made when a party voluntarily concedes the truth of certain matters during the course of the litigation, usually in the party's pleadings or by counsel's statement on the record at trial. The effect is that the opposing party need not offer proof on the admitted matter, which is deemed to be conclusively established.

"Evidentiary" admissions (e.g., a party's express or adoptive admissions) are exceptions to the hearsay rule and can be admitted into evidence and weighed by the trier of fact along with conflicting evidence. See Evid C §1220. See §10.22. For detailed discussion of evidentiary admissions, see Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 3 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009).

Unlike "evidentiary" admissions, "judicial" admissions are not evidence. Instead, a judicial admission indisputably establishes the truth of a matter, i.e., no evidence may be admitted on the point. For further discussion of judicial admissions, see 1 Witkin, California Evidence, Hearsay §§97-98 (4th ed 2000).

Requests for admission served on a party during discovery may also result in an admission that is conclusively established against the admitting party. See CCP §2033(n). See §12.75. On using admissions and prior inconsistent statements made during depositions to impeach witnesses, see §§12.63-12.66.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.44 2. Procedures

Look for judicial admissions in the pleadings. Complaints, demurrers, answers, and cross-complaints are the only pleadings permitted in civil actions. CCP §422.10. The pleadings allege the parties' respective claims and defenses for the judgment of the court. CCP §420. See, e.g., Miller v Lakeside Village Condominium Ass'n (1991) 1 CA4th 1611, 1623, 2 CR2d 796 (summary judgment case; allegations in plaintiff's complaint constitute judicial admissions conceding truth of matter and removing it from issues).

The pleadings frame the trial issues and govern questions of relevance. Parties are bound by the pleadings they file and may not introduce evidence contrary to their own pleadings. Fuentes v Tucker (1947) 31 C2d 1, 5, 187 P2d 752 (error to receive evidence relevant to issue that was removed by party's admission in answer).

PRACTICE TIP: It is a good idea to routinely peruse all parties' pleadings before trial, and to amend your pleadings when they contain an unfavorable admission. Although admissions that have been corrected by amendment are no longer conclusive and binding, the amending party should be prepared to explain to the jury the changes made if opposing counsel decides to use the discrepancy between the pleadings for impeachment purposes. For discussion of amending complaints, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 16 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004); for discussion of amending answers, see Civ Proc Before Trial §§25.70-25.78.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.45 3. Requesting jury instruction

Any party can ask the court to instruct the jury that the admitted matter has been established as true and that no contrary evidence will be permitted. Smith v Walter E. Heller & Co. (1978) 82 CA3d 259, 269, 147 CR 1.

It is also a good idea to ask the court to preinstruct the jury. See §§20.47-20.50.

PRACTICE TIP: Before trial, during in chambers conferences with the judge (see chap 6) or motions in limine (see chap 7), call the court's attention to the pleading in which the judicial admission appears and request that the jury be preinstructed to the effect that, for purposes of this trial, the fact or facts involved in the admission must be taken as true. On preparing jury instructions, see chap 20.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.46 B. Admissions in prior actions

Judicial admissions made in prior civil actions are not treated as indisputably true in later actions. Although admissions in pleadings from other civil actions are not conclusive judicial admissions in a later action, they may be used as evidentiary admissions to impeach a party who cannot explain the prior admission with additional evidence. See Magnolia Square Homeowners Ass'n v Safeco Ins. Co. (1990) 221 CA3d 1049, 1061, 271 CR 1 (allegations in complaint on defective structure; declarations not hearsay, because not offered to prove their truth but that party had notice of defects). See §14.43.

© The Regents of the University of California

V. STIPULATIONS

§14.47 A. Stipulated facts

Fact stipulations between counsel allow the parties to agree that certain facts or matters are true and, for purposes of the trial, are not in dispute. The effect of counsels' stipulations is that no evidence need be, or can be, offered on the stipulated matter. Harris v Spinali Auto Sales, Inc. (1966) 240 CA2d 447, 452, 49 CR 610.

Evidence can be received only when it tends to prove or disprove issues in dispute. See Evid C §§210, 350. Because the stipulated matter is conclusively established, any evidence would be irrelevant.

Such stipulations reduce the issues that must be proved at trial and streamline the presentation of evidence. For discussion of stipulations as a means of making trial less expensive and more efficient, see §1.28.

PRACTICE TIP: Consider the effect on the jury before stipulating or not stipulating to certain facts. Stipulating to routine facts that would be proved in any event saves time, keeps the jury from becoming bored, and may help make the important evidence stand out better. Reasons to stipulate to damaging facts include shielding the jury from actually hearing an eyewitness testify to evidence that is prejudicial to your client. But be careful in stipulating to matters that are so important that there is very little left of interest to prove at trial. On tactical considerations, see §§14.4-14.5.

Compare: Besides stipulating to facts that the parties agree not to dispute during trial, the parties can stipulate to testimony. That is, the parties can agree on the testimony a witness would have given if called to testify in front of the judge or jury. Unlike stipulated facts, which are treated as conclusively true, stipulated testimony means that the testimony is accepted into evidence without the witness actually testifying, but not necessarily that the testimony is undisputed. See §14.52.

Attorneys routinely enter into other stipulations that concern neither the facts nor testimony in the case, but that expedite trial. For example, counsel may agree to certain foundational facts or stipulate that copies of documents rather than originals may be used during trial, bypassing the need to present evidence on background issues. On stipulations used by counsel to introduce exhibits and demonstrative evidence, see §13.86. On stipulations to authenticate documents, see §13.67. See sample stipulation regarding the use of documents at trial in §13.141.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.48 1. Authority to bind client

Counsel has authority to reach a binding agreement on behalf of a client "in any of the steps of an action or proceeding." CCP §283(1). This code section is generally viewed as counsel's authority to enter into stipulations on the client's behalf in "procedural" matters. See Linsk v Linsk (1969) 70 C2d 272, 276, 74 CR 544.

If substantive right involved, obtain client's express authorization. Dicta in some cases suggest that counsel is presumed to have the authority to enter into an agreement on the client's behalf, whether or not the matter affects the client's substantive rights. See, e.g., Marriage of Helsel (1988) 198 CA3d 332, 339, 243 CR 657. However, a better line of authority holds that, if the stipulation involves substantive rights (i.e., the stipulated fact virtually resolves the litigation), the client may set aside an unauthorized stipulation. See, e.g., Blanton v Womancare, Inc. (1985) 38 C3d 396, 407, 212 CR 151; CPI Builders, Inc. v Impco Technols., Inc. (2001) 94 CA4th 1167, 1172, 114 CR2d 851 (holding that an attorney is not authorized to impair the client's substantial rights).

PRACTICE TIP: Inform the client of any important stipulations entered into before trial. It is also good practice to obtain the client's express written authorization of any stipulation that could affect the client's substantive rights. Some attorneys write a letter informing the client of the stipulations planned or already entered into, with a place at the end of the letter for the client to date and sign an acknowledgment of the disclosed stipulations. The letter should refer to any discussion counsel has had with the client on the stipulations in question.

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Procedures

§14.49 a. Timing

Most judges prefer that attorneys' stipulations be prepared in writing ahead of time. The judge can then review and approve the stipulations in chambers conferences before the trial. If for some reason the stipulations are not approved, counsel will be prepared to offer proof on the issue during the trial.

It is often a good idea to seek stipulations with other counsel as part of the overall trial strategy at the preparation stage. See chaps 2 and 3 on completing pretrial procedures and organizing trial materials.

However, even the eve of trial is an appropriate time for trial counsel to consider and seek stipulations. Particularly in simple cases, and perhaps wisely in view of the fact that most cases settle, trial lawyers often wait until very close to trial before deciding how the case will actually be tried. It is at this point, rather than during the discovery process when the reflexive reaction of most litigators is to keep all options open, that the discussion of stipulations can realistically achieve meaningful results. In these circumstances, counsel may agree to stipulated facts in chambers conferences before trial.

After trial is under way, there may be instances in which the desirability of an unplanned-for stipulation becomes obvious; if so, be sure to handle the situation outside the jury's presence.

PRACTICE TIP: Local rules may affect the timing and form of the stipulation. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.43 (while court is in session, counsel who want to stipulate must request leave to confer with other counsel outside the jurors' hearing).

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.50 b. Form of stipulation

The stipulation itself must be written and signed by counsel or read orally into the record in the court reporter's presence. CCP §283(1). Check for any local rules that may apply to stipulations. See §14.49.

A written stipulation is usually printed on pleading paper. If counsel are agreeing to a fact, the stipulation should state exactly and specifically the fact that counsel have agreed to is undisputed. See Harris v Spinali Auto Sales, Inc. (1966) 240 CA2d 447, 49 CR 610 (to be enforced, terms of stipulation must be definite and certain).

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.51 3. Requesting jury instruction

Preinstruction advisable. Prepare a jury instruction for the judge on the stipulated matter. Ask the judge to preinstruct the jury during the trial at the time the stipulated fact is presented. The judge could tell the jury:

EXAMPLE: "Counsel have stipulated that the parties entered into a valid contract on September 24, 1999. You must accept this as a fact that has been conclusively proved."

Limitations. The court is not bound to give jury instructions on the parties' stipulated legal conclusions. If a stipulation is against public policy or decides a question of law (rather than fact), the court need not accept it or instruct the jury on it. See, e.g., Marriage of Goodarzirad (1986) 185 CA3d 1020, 1026, 230 CR 203 (parties cannot stipulate away court's child custody jurisdiction). But the court can uphold stipulations on ambiguous documents because such agreements are treated as matters of fact that the parties in effect agree have been proved. See, e.g., Estate of Burson (1975) 51 CA3d 300, 306, 124 CR 105 (agreement on meaning of ambiguities in decedent's will upheld).

Further research: On stipulated facts, see CACI 106.

On jury instructions generally, see chap 20. On the growing tendency of courts to permit preinstruction of the jury during the course of the trial, see §§20.47-20.50.

© The Regents of the University of California

§14.52 B. Stipulated testimony

Unlike stipulated facts, stipulated testimony does not render a matter indisputably true. The parties simply agree that the witness would testify in a certain way if called to the stand. The jury need not accept the stipulated testimony as conclusively true, only that the witness would have so testified. See CACI 106. Counsel can still introduce evidence tending to disprove the content of the stipulated testimony.

Request jury instruction. Prepare a jury instruction on the stipulated testimony. It is also good practice to request a preinstruction at the time the stipulated testimony is offered during trial. On preinstructing the jury, see §§20.47-20.50. In preinstructing the jury on stipulated testimony, the judge could say:

EXAMPLE: "Counsel have stipulated that, if Officer Clyde were called as a witness, she would testify as follows on this subject: 'The collision on the evening of April 12, 1999, caused glass to be scattered across the road. I still observed bits of glass on the street at the accident site at noon the next day.' You must accept that officer's statement as stipulated testimony as if it had been stated here in this courtroom."

Plaintiff's perspective. Be cautious about substituting stipulated testimony for eyewitness testimony on matters that may have an emotional impact on the jury and thus may tend to increase damage awards. Most plaintiff's counsel limit stipulated testimony to foundational matters that are not controversial.

§14.53 VI. CASE EXAMPLES: MATTERS THAT HAVE BEEN GIVEN JUDICIAL NOTICE IN CALIFORNIA COURTS

The California courts have taken judicial notice of a wide variety of matters. A sample list follows.

- Advertising programs. Gherna v Ford Motor Co. (1966) 246 CA2d 639, 652, 55 CR 94 (large-scale by automobile manufacturers); Anthony v General Motors Corp. (1973) 33 CA3d 699, 706, 109 CR 254 (national advertising for many years by automobile manufacturers, stressing excellence and reliability of products).
- Agreements between counties and private agencies. Lara v Board of Supervisors (1976) 59 CA3d 399, 405 n1, 130 CR 668 (22 counties entered into agreements with private agencies under Govt C §26220).
- Assessor's handbook. Hunt-Wesson Foods, Inc. v County of Alameda (1974) 41 CA3d 163, 180, 116 CR 160 (property valuation).
- Census data re community size. People v Jurado (1981) 115 CA3d 470, 482, 171 CR 509 (newspaper article on pretrial publicity also judicially noticed).
- City charter provisions. Clark v Patterson (1977) 68 CA3d 329, 334 n5, 137 CR 275.
- Commission decisions. Lua v Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1992) 6 CA4th 1897, 9 CR2d 116 (Public Utilities Commission decisions and general orders); Nipper v California Auto. Assigned Risk Plan (1977) 19 C3d 35, 44, 136 CR 854 (Insurance Commissioner decisions).
- Common knowledge. Kronen v Pacific Coast Soc'y of Orthodontists (1965) 237 CA2d 289, 304, 46 CR 808 (doctors or dentists who limit practice to specialty enjoy prestigious position with economic advantages); Sierra Inv. Corp. v County of Sacramento (1967) 252 CA2d 339, 344, 60 CR 519 (great bulk of county taxes are paid on or around due date); Nevens v City of Chino (1965) 233 CA2d 775, 778, 44 CR 50 (noiseless tape recorders).
- Cost of insurance coverage under assigned risk plan exceeds cost of public liability insurance under ordinary plan. Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co. v McCullough (1965) 235 CA2d 195, 206, 44 CR 915.
