- Distances and travel time between locations. City of Anaheim v WCAB (1981) 116 CA3d 248, 261, 172 CR 92 (it is more difficult, time-consuming, and expensive "for a party to engage in a contested litigation in a tribunal some 95 miles distant from the offices of its attorney and prospective witnesses than in a tribunal only 9 miles away").
- Economic trends. See San Luis Obispo Bay Prop. v PG&E (1972) 28 CA3d 556, 564, 104 CR 733 (inflationary or deflationary trend and its effect on real property values in general, but not as it affects value of leasehold interests in specific parcels of land during period in question).
- Ethical code. Easton v Strassburger (1984) 152 CA3d 90, 101 n5, 199 CR 383 (Code of Ethics of the National Association of Realtors judicially noticed under Evid C §452(h)).
- Federal law when it supersedes state law. Prescod v California Unemployment Ins. Appeals Bd. (1976) 57 CA3d 29, 42, 127 CR 540.
- Geographical features. Dunbar v Humboldt Bay Mun. Water Dist. (1967) 254 CA2d 480, 484, 62 CR 358 (existence and features of river).
- Interest rate. Gamer v dupont Glore Forgan, Inc. (1976) 65 CA3d 280, 290, 135 CR 230 (prime rate within specified period had been as high as 9 percent).
- Location of local streets within city boundaries. People v Vega (1971) 18 CA3d 954, 958, 96 CR 391.
- Maps, official. Planned Parenthood Shasta-Diablo, Inc. v Williams (1995) 10 C4th 1009, 43 CR2d 88 (Public Works Department official maps).
- Master lease. Marina Tenants Ass'n v Deauville Marina Dev. Co. (1986) 181 CA3d 122, 226 CR 321(when trial court was considering demurrer of defendant landlords, plaintiffs had relied in their pleadings on selected portions of lease).
- Municipal code sections. Igna v City of Baldwin Park (1970) 9 CA3d 909, 911, 88 CR 581.

- Necessity of available parking facilities to commercial enterprises in highly developed areas. City of Los Angeles v Wolfe (1971) 6 C3d 326, 336, 99 CR 21.
- Official Reports, existence of. Shaeffer v State (1970) 3 CA3d 348, 354, 83 CR 347 (California Debris Commission Reports were made, but court will "not, however, take judicial notice that everything said [in reports] is true").
- Patents defining a boundary. White v State (1971) 21 CA3d 738, 762, 99 CR 58 (based on survey).
- Permit issued by State Board of Public Health. Hughes v City of Lincoln (1965) 232 CA2d 741, 748, 43 CR 306 (permit to municipality for water treatment program including fluoridation).
- Publications, authoritative. Adoption of Michelle T. (1975) 44 CA3d 699, 706, 117 CR 856 (child placement, emphasizing importance to child of continuity of parental relationships); Board of Educ. v Watson (1966) 63 C2d 829, 836, 48 CR 481 (data in publication titled "California Education," issued by the State Department of Education); Serrano v Priest (1971) 5 C3d 584, 591, 96 CR 601 (publications by state officers or agencies); White v State (1971) 21 CA3d 738, 742, 99 CR 58 (U.S. Army Corps of Engineers publication titled "Water Resources Development in California").

Comment: No format is specified in Evid C §452 for requests for judicial notice. However, Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113(l) states that any request for judicial notice must be made in a separate document listing the specific items for which notice is requested and must comply with Cal Rules of Ct 3.1306(c). Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113(l). See also §14.27. Attach sufficient information to enable the court to take judicial notice. It is also good practice to attach a proposed jury instruction for the judge to read to the jury. See form in §14.55, which can be used both for instructing the jury before closing argument and preinstructing the jury earlier during trial.

Give other parties sufficient notice to meet the request and have an opportunity to be heard on the matter to be judicially noticed. See §14.28.

NOTE: When the court is required to take judicial notice of matters listed under Evid C §451, no request is necessary. See §14.25.

§15.1 I. SCOPE OF CHAPTER

This chapter explains the importance of the record and provides suggestions for making and maintaining a clear record (see §§15.4-15.18) and procedures for making objections that will preserve the record (see §§15.19-15.68).

Objections made at particular points during the trial are also discussed in the chapters dealing with those aspects of a trial. See, e.g., objections made during voir dire discussed in chap 8.

As discussed in §15.2, the "record" is created throughout the court proceedings, e.g., during pretrial motions, trial motions, and other proceedings during and after trial. Nonevidentiary pretrial and trial day motions are discussed in chap 6. Evidentiary motions in limine, usually made before trial or on the first day of trial, are discussed in chap 7. Trial motions are discussed in chap 18, and motions after trial are discussed in chap 25.

II. UNDERSTANDING THE RECORD AND ITS IMPORTANCE

§15.2 A. Record defined

The record of the trial court proceedings is most often used when one party appeals the judgment. In almost all cases, the record consists of two items:

- The reporter's transcript of oral proceedings in open court and in chambers (Cal Rules of Ct 8.130); and
- The clerk's transcript, consisting of trial exhibits, copies of pleadings, briefs, court orders, and other papers filed with the clerk during the litigation (Cal Rules of Ct 8.122).

Before trial, the record consists primarily of documents filed with the clerk and few transcripts of proceedings, e.g., law and motion or other preliminary hearings. During trial, the record consists primarily of transcripts of oral proceedings, including testimony (see §§15.13-15.15), objections (see §§15.19-15.44), argument (see §§15.45-15.64), and court rulings (see §§15.65-15.68). It is the responsibility of trial counsel to maintain a clear and concise record.

See California Civil Appellate Practice, chap 9 (3d ed Cal CEB 1996) for a complete discussion of the record on appeal. See also Cal Rules of Ct 8.120 and 8.121.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.3 B. Importance of record

The advocate's primary objective at trial is to obtain the best result for the client. A crucial factor in achieving this objective is the effective presentation of testimony and exhibits, while maintaining a clear and concise record. Counsel must be alert to making objections and preserving the record.

No experienced trial attorney expects to win every case. When a case is lost, a reviewing court may consider the objections made during trial substantial enough to require a reversal. It is equally important for the winning party to make sure the record supports the court's rulings. Everything possible should be done to create a trial record that will demonstrate to a reviewing court the wisdom (or impropriety) of the trial court's evidentiary or other rulings.

An appellate court cannot speculate on what occurred at trial. It has only the record to look at, and the record must be complete. A judgment cannot be reversed on appeal on the ground of an erroneous ruling unless it appears that the error was prejudicial, i.e., resulted in a "miscarriage of justice." Cal Const art VI, §13. The record should not only contain the prejudicial error but also indicate that it was made known to the trial judge. See Marshall v Hancock (1889) 80 C 82, 22 P 61.

Further Research: For practical suggestions for ensuring that all relevant matters do become part of the record, including chambers conference and evidentiary issues (including offers of proof, in limine motions, exhibits, nonverbal conduct and vague expressions, and gaining ruling on objections), see Rylaarsdam, Making and Designating a Record on Appeal, 18 CEB Civ Litigation Rep 219 (June 1996). For a discussion of how one could and should use evidentiary objections not only to preserve the record, but also to persuade the trier of fact, see McElhinny, Evidentiary Objections As Tools of Persuasion, 6 Cal Litigation (Fall 1992). McElhinny suggests that jurors expect articulate objections and that counsel should not shy away from objections, but use them to change the focus of the trial and to gain control over the flow of evidence.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.4 III. PRETRIAL AND SPECIAL PROCEDURES FOR PRESERVING THE RECORD

Immediately before trial, counsel presents to the court, and the court considers, numerous issues about the procedures to be followed at trial and the evidence that will be presented. These issues are usually considered at pretrial status conferences, at chambers conferences, or in motions in limine. For example, trial counsel and the judge will usually discuss how the judge will handle voir dire during a status or chambers conference. See §6.3. A motion in limine might be made to exclude evidence that one party claims is inflammatory. See §7.3. Each of these issues may form the basis for an appeal, and therefore, counsel must be careful to create a sufficient record of each proceeding.

In addition, use a motion in limine during trial to make a formal record about an evidentiary issue that was unanticipated. See §§15.8-15.10.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/15 Making Trial Objections and Protecting the Record/§15.5 A. Conferences with trial judge

§15.5 A. Conferences with trial judge

Many courts now require a final status conference or final issue conference shortly before trial. See Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(h); San Diego Ct, Div II, R 2.1.15. In addition, immediately before the trial begins, the trial judge is likely, as a matter of routine, to invite counsel into chambers to explore areas of agreement and disagreement, anticipated trial objections, and how certain matters will be handled at trial. See §§6.2-6.5.

Pretrial conferences are probably the most effective means of reducing the number of objections the parties will need to make during a trial. Seasoned attorneys usually request an informal conference with the judge in chambers before trial to discuss any evidentiary or other unresolved questions. This is also a good time to alert the court to any motions in limine that are not yet filed. Some courts may use the pretrial conference to hear arguments on motions in limine or may schedule the arguments to be heard on the same day. See Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(h). Make sure that any argument or decisions are on the record. See §15.6.

PRACTICE TIP: Check whether any local court rules or policies or any requirements of the assigned judge apply to or affect a preliminary chambers conference. For example, the court may require the parties to file motions in limine and status conference statements several days before trial begins. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(h).

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: This meeting is critical. Even in a direct calendaring court, the judicial officer generally has not focused his or her undivided attention on the case until this time. Therefore, it is very important that counsel be prepared to clearly sketch out the trial for the judge at this meeting.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.6 1. Request court reporter

Request that a court reporter be present when evidentiary problems or other matters are discussed in chambers. Be aware that some judges, in an effort to keep the initial chambers conference very informal, do not allow court reporters to be present. In that situation, immediately following the chambers conference, put on the record the matters discussed or ruled on by the judge. Either orally announce these matters while the court reporter records them or prepare a written order. This step reduces the possibility that the parties will later dispute what was said or covered. For discussion of chambers conference before trial generally, see §§6.2-6.5.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Most judges prefer not to have a court reporter in chambers; however, other judges will have a reporter present during the entire chambers conference.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.7 2. Preserve issues for appeal

Raising an issue in chambers may improve a party's chances of preserving that issue for appeal. For example, in Pierce v J. C. Penney Co. (1959) 167 CA2d 3, 334 P2d 117, the appellate court held that a party's trial objection was sufficient to preserve the issue for appeal because the matter had been thoroughly discussed both in chambers before trial began (where the issues of law and pertinent decisions were discussed and parties stated their respective positions) and at the bench during trial. "Thus, the trial judge had been fully apprised of the respective contentions of the parties with respect to the admissibility of the evidence in question and the specific grounds of the objection." 167 CA2d at 13. See also People v Morris (1991) 53 C3d 152, 190, 279 CR 720, overruled on other grounds in People v Stansbury (1995) 9 C4th 824, 830 n1, 38 CR2d 394 (motions in limine).

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.8 B. Motion in limine

A motion in limine is a motion directed to the court either before the court admits any evidence or before the parties offer the evidence under discussion. See chap 7 on in limine motions. The motion is used to obtain a ruling on evidentiary issues before anyone mentions the subject in front of the jury, or at least to obtain a temporary ruling of exclusion and silence until the court has sufficient legal and factual information to make a final ruling on admissibility.

The motion may be made before trial begins or at any time during trial before the evidence is admitted. If made during trial, argue the motions out of the jury's presence, e.g., in chambers or when the jury is out of the courtroom.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: In accordance with local court rules, such motions are often heard and considered at the final status conference. In many instances, this is the first opportunity that the judge has to concentrate on this particular case. Even if a party is unsuccessful, the lasting effect on the judge can be significant and helpful. By "planting the seed," the party has directed the judge, and that often prompts independent research and concern with the issue.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.9 1. Make sure motion is on the record

Because the motion may be argued during the final status conference or in chambers during trial, be sure to request that a court reporter be present for the argument and the court's decision. As with other chambers conferences, some judges do not want court reporters to be present in chambers for argument. In that event, put the matters discussed or ruled on by the judge on the record immediately after the chambers conference. Either state the matters orally to be recorded by the court reporter, or prepare a written order to reduce the possibility that the parties will later dispute what was said or covered. For discussion of chambers conference before trial generally, see §§6.2-6.5. For discussion of motions in limine, see §§15.8-15.10, chap 7.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.10 2. Preserve issues for appeal

Motions in limine are one way to assure that an adequate record is made concerning any evidentiary issue, because it is usually easier to satisfy the basic requirements of Evid C §353 in a well-thought-out motion than when objecting during the heat of trial. See People v Morris (1991) 53 C3d 152, 190, 279 CR 720, overruled on other grounds in People v Stansbury (1995) 9 C4th 824, 830 n1, 38 CR2d 394. The written motion also allows time for a written response and a considered ruling by the court.

In People v Morris, supra, the supreme court held that a motion in limine serves the function of a timely objection or motion to exclude under Evid C §353 when the motion satisfies the basic requirements of §353, i.e.:

- A specific legal ground for exclusion is advanced and subsequently raised on appeal;
- The motion is directed to a particular, identifiable body of evidence; and
- The motion is made at a time before or during trial when the trial judge can decide the evidentiary question in its appropriate context.

If the motion in limine does not satisfy each requirement, an objection satisfying Evid C §353 must be made during the trial to preserve the evidentiary issue for appeal. 53 C3d at 190.

The Morris court also suggested that the better practice is for the parties to stipulate to the effect of the court's ruling on the motion in limine or for the court to indicate to counsel not only what the court's ruling is, but whether the court would allow further objection or argument when the evidence is offered. 53 C3d at 190. See §7.46. If a stipulation or a statement by the court is not put on the record, counsel should consider objecting to the evidence when it is presented during the trial to avoid any possibility of waiving the issue in case of an appeal. See 53 C3d at 191 (citing former edition of this book). Do not expect to have a second evidentiary hearing during trial, however, if the court already decided the evidentiary issue in the motion in limine. See generally discussion in §§7.44-7.46.

Motions in limine, including typical uses, are discussed in greater detail in chap 7. For form of motion in limine, see §7.49.

§15.11 C. Preliminary fact hearing; requiring proper foundation before admission of evidence

When the admissibility of certain evidence rests on the existence of a preliminary fact or facts, Evid C §310 requires the trial court to make a preliminary determination according to Evid C §§402-405. See §§7.25-7.26 for discussion of preliminary fact hearings.

IV. MAKING A CLEAR RECORD DURING TRIAL

§15.12 A. Conferences, stipulations, and court rulings on the record

Many parts of the case will not become part of the record unless counsel requests that (1) a court reporter be present and (2) the reporter take down all the proceedings. For example, a reporter, unless one is requested, is not usually present at pretrial or chambers conferences. Because important matters, of both a procedural and an evidentiary nature, are frequently resolved at such sessions, ask that a court reporter record any stipulations or orders.

PRACTICE TIP: If the court reporter is unavailable to attend the chambers proceedings, be sure to put what occurred at the session on the record in summary fashion when the court reporter is next available. Similarly, it is prudent to put on the record, out of the jury's presence and before the end of that day, what occurred at any bench conference.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Many judges do not burden their court reporters with placing "side bar" conferences on the record. Also, the judge often will not allow the attorneys to make statements for the record or otherwise invade "jury time."

§15.13 B. Transcript of testimony

An official transcript is prima facie evidence of the proceedings in a case. CCP §273. The record must be clear and concise for the appellate court to adequately assess the point on appeal.

In substantial cases, many lawyers arrange to have a daily transcript available. This may require arranging with the court reporter to have a standby transcriber, who can transcribe the morning proceedings in the afternoon and the afternoon proceedings in the evening.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: With video recording and electronic recording now being used in some courts, practical problems regarding obtaining transcripts or copies of the recording are still being resolved.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.14 1. Audible and clear

The reporter cannot take down an answer unless it is audible. It is the lawyer's duty to obtain audible oral answers from witnesses. When a witness nods or gestures instead of answering audibly, counsel can immediately say, "Please give your answer in words so that the court reporter can take down your answer."

Alternatively, counsel can make a statement for the record to fill in testimonial gaps created by the witness's nonverbal responses. Instead of reminding the witness to give oral answers, the examining attorney may turn to the court reporter and say, "Let the record show that the witness, in response to the question, nodded his head in the affirmative." Vague statements such as "about that wide" or "this close" may be comprehensible to those present but meaningless on the record. Counsel or the court should make a clarifying statement on the record.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/15 Making Trial Objections and Protecting the Record/§15.15 2. Items to clarify for the record

§15.15 2. Items to clarify for the record

- Spell names. Many names sound alike, yet have various spellings (e.g., Smith, Smithe, Smyth). Ask the witness to spell out the name, or do it for the witness.
- Recite each digit of numbers. When dealing with a long number, like that of a savings account, ask the witness to recite each digit, rather than using hundreds or thousands. It is simple enough to say "account number one, four, seven, five, dash, three, zero." References to sums of money and dates should also be stated number by number.
- Reading testimony. In reading depositions or previous trial testimony into the record:
- Speak clearly and slowly so that the testimony can be followed.
- It helps to read the words "Question" and "Answer" at the appropriate points.
- When reading deposition testimony, put someone else—preferably someone familiar with the case—in the witness stand to read the answers.
- Provide the reporter with the transcript to refer to when transcribing his or her notes.
- Provide written transcript for videotaped testimony. In this age of technology, depositions are often videotaped. If portions of videotaped depositions are shown at trial—which alleviates the monotony of reading deposition testimony and gives the court and the jury a flavor of the deponent's demeanor and body language—provide the court reporter with the written deposition transcript, specifically showing which portions are being used in the video clip. See CCP §2025.260, CCP §2025.340(m). Give this written reflection of the video testimony to the reporter at the time that the video is played at trial, because many reporters find it difficult to or are reluctant to transcribe from the videotape.

PRACTICE TIP: Check local court rules first to learn whether there are any local filing requirements on the original written deposition transcript or time requirements for giving a copy to the reporter.

- Clearly delineate what is off the record. Counsel and the court may agree that a matter being taken up out of the jurors' presence should go "off the record." This may be confusing to a reporter, because it is often unclear when to stop taking notes and when to begin again. Confusion about when to resume taking notes can be embarrassing to the attorney who later discovers that an important concession or stipulation either did not get on the record, or was included in such a truncated form that it is indecipherable. Give clear indication to the court reporter by saying, "I want to go back on the record now."

For further discussion of reading deposition testimony, see §§12.48-12.50. On showing videotaped depositions, see §§12.16-12.31.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: No matter how much warning is given, lawyers inevitably read far too fast for jurors to understand. Very few lawyers take this valuable opportunity to emphasize testimony with proper consideration and effort.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/15 Making Trial Objections and Protecting the Record/ C. Documents and other exhibits/§15.16 1. Clearly mark exhibits for identification

C. Documents and other exhibits

§15.16 1. Clearly mark exhibits for identification

To build a trial record that will be understandable and efficient to work with, the court clerk should mark for identification all documentary, real, and demonstrative evidence. Counsel frequently exchange documentary exhibits before trial and premark them to avoid delay in front of the jury. If this has not been done, show exhibits to opposing counsel and judge at the time marking is requested. Provide extra copies when practicable.

PRACTICE TIP: Some courts may require that the exhibits be marked before trial. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(h) (exhibits must be premarked by the time of the final status conference).

After the exhibits are marked, during examination of witnesses, refer to each item both by its identifying letter or number (for purposes of the record) and by its vernacular description (for the jury's benefit).

EXAMPLE: Before questioning the witness about a letter, the attorney says: "Let me show you a document that was previously marked as Plaintiff's Exhibit 21. It is a letter dated May 12, 1992, from John Smith to Mary Jones." This statement identifies it by both exhibit number and description.

§15.17 2. Offer exhibit into evidence

After laying the necessary foundation, counsel may offer the previously marked exhibit into evidence. It is at this point that even experienced trial lawyers occasionally forget to offer, or move, the exhibit into evidence. Always keep a separate exhibit list with at least two columns, showing for each exhibit that it was marked for identification and whether it was admitted into evidence. It is imperative that the exhibit be completely described for the record. On preparing table of exhibits, see §3.31.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.18 3. Using exhibits during trial

After the exhibit has been admitted:

- Ask the witness to describe it or read portions of it.
- An extremely effective technique in using documentary exhibits is to show blow-ups on a screen so that the jury can see the exhibit as the witness reads from it. Have transparencies made of the document and arrange for equipment to show them. See §§13.32, 13.48.
- Another technique, preferred by some attorneys for the most important documents that may be referred to several times, is to use poster enlargements.

NOTE: The court may require that the transparencies or poster enlargements be marked as adjuncts to the original exhibits.

For further discussion of using exhibits at trial, see chap 13.

V. MAKING OBJECTIONS DURING TRIAL TO PRESERVE RECORD

A. Purpose of objections

§15.19 1. To exclude inadmissible evidence

The immediate purpose of most objections at trial is to persuade the court to exclude inadmissible evidence. The attorney, not the judge, has the burden of invoking the exclusionary rules of evidence. Even inadmissible evidence, if not objected to, will support a judgment. See Exley v Exley (1951) 101 CA2d 831, 226 P2d 662 (letters from probation officer received and relied on by judge in awarding custody).

EXAMPLE 1: Hearsay is admissible evidence unless objected to. See Wicktor v County of Los Angeles (1960) 177 CA2d 390, 2 CR 352.

EXAMPLE 2: Evidence will support a judgment although there was a lack of foundation for its admissibility if no objection. Bank of America v Taliaferro (1956) 144 CA2d 578, 301 P2d 393.

If proper objections are not made to inadmissible evidence that is damaging to the case, the objections will be waived. See §15.24.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: The judge often will intercede and prevent flagrant breaches; however, this gets tiresome for the judge and counsel should not count on judicial intercession to protect the record.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/15 Making Trial Objections and Protecting the Record/ 2. To prevent other errors at trial/§15.20 a. During opening statement

2. To prevent other errors at trial

§15.20 a. During opening statement

Objections are also used during opening statement to call the court's attention to potential errors. For example, counsel may object that opposing counsel is:

- Arguing his or her case. Argument in opening statement is impermissible. See §9.23.
- Referring to inadmissible evidence. See §9.22.
- Discussing law. See §9.25.

For further discussion on available objections during opening statement, see §§9.36-9.37.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.21 b. Unqualified witness

A party may object to a witness because no foundation was laid to show that the witness is qualified to testify, e.g., in the form of an opinion (see Evid C §720(a)) or that the witness is competent to testify at all. See Evid C §§700-704. See also §11.19 for witness qualifications; California Trial Objections, chap 18 (Cal CEB Annual).

If the witness's identity is disclosed before trial, counsel should attempt to discover his or her background and qualifications. When the witness is called to testify at trial, counsel may object, in which case the proponent of the testimony would have the burden of laying a foundation for the witness's testifying. For court hearings to establish preliminary facts, see §§7.25-7.26. Counsel who objects to the witness's qualifications may also seek to voir dire the witness at trial. See Trial Objections, chap 20.

For further discussion of witness qualifications, see §§11.19-11.25.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Many local rules require an exchange of witness lists before trial. Last-minute additions are generally not favored. Another major concern for the court is "overkill" (too many witnesses on the same issue), because cumulative testimony is not favored.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.22 c. During closing argument

Failure to object to remarks during closing argument usually waives the issue on appeal. See §19.52. For example, counsel may object that opposing counsel is making an improper argument, such as appealing to passion or prejudice, during closing argument. See §16.73.

For discussion of closing argument, see chap 19. On attorney misconduct generally, see §§16.66-16.90.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.23 3. To preserve objection on the record for appeal

A proper, timely objection calls the court's attention to improper evidence or procedures. If the court disagrees with the objection, and the objecting party ultimately loses at trial, the record must contain the objection for the court of appeal to be able to consider the error. Evid C §353(a); Parker v Shell Oil Co. (1946) 29 C2d 503, 175 P2d 838. See 3 Witkin, California Evidence, Presentation at Trial §§371-372 (4th ed 2000).

§15.24 B. When objection waived

Failure to object or an insufficient objection waives the defect in the evidence. Generally, counsel who fails to object or who improperly objects to the introduction of evidence cannot urge that admitting the evidence was error. Similarly, counsel who fails to secure a ruling on the objection may be barred from claiming error on appeal. See §15.28. Appellate courts will not consider objections that were not presented to the trial court (see Russell v Geis (1967) 251 CA2d 560, 59 CR 569) or that were urged on the wrong grounds. See §15.38.

§15.25 1. Failure to get objection on the record

Make sure the objection is on the record. In People v Boehm (1969) 270 CA2d 13, 75 CR 590, defense counsel stated that he objected to a question and that he wanted to make his objection at the bench. Counsel then made the objection off the record. The appellate court had nothing before it on which to rule and held that the general objection made on the record was insufficient to preserve the point for review on appeal. See §15.39.

§15.26 2. Untimely objection waives error

Waiver occurs when an objection is not made at the earliest opportunity, i.e., object before the question is answered, or, if the question was already answered, raise the objection immediately by moving to strike. See §15.44 on motion to strike. See Mosesian v Pennwalt Corp. (1987) 191 CA3d 851, 865, 236 CR 778, disapproved on other grounds in People v Ault (2004) 33 C4th 1250, 1272 n15, 17 CR3d 302 (plaintiff waived error of introducing hearsay opinions of outside experts by failing to make timely objection); 3 Witkin, California Evidence, Presentation at Trial §372 (4th ed 2000). See also California Trial Objections, chap 4 (Cal CEB Annual).

§15.27 3. Invited error: Waiver by offering inadmissible evidence

When a party is responsible for the introduction of evidence, whether through direct or cross-examination, on appeal that party cannot claim that the evidence was erroneously admitted. See People v Moran (1970) 1 C3d 755, 762, 83 CR 411 (direct examination); Zarafonitis v Yellow Cab Co. (1932) 127 CA 607, 16 P2d 141 (cross-examination). This is known as the doctrine of invited error.

Similarly, a party may be barred from claiming error on appeal when the party objects to evidence when offered, the objection is overruled, but the party then offers the same type of evidence. See Heiman v Market St. Ry. (1937) 21 CA2d 311, 69 P2d 178 (plaintiffs objected to motion pictures when offered by defendant, objection was overruled, and later plaintiffs exhibited pictures to jury). The objection is not waived, however, if the objecting party mentions the evidence or examines witnesses about it after the court has overruled the objection. See Warner Constr. Corp. v City of Los Angeles (1970) 2 C3d 285, 299 n17, 85 CR 444.

When the court receives hearsay in evidence on direct examination without objection, opposing counsel is entitled to conduct cross-examination on such evidence. Counsel who elicited the hearsay on direct examination may not make a hearsay objection to such cross-examination. See People v Fatone (1985) 165 CA3d 1164, 211 CR 288.

§15.28 4. Court fails to rule

Once you have objected, be sure the court rules on the objection. Sometimes the court reserves ruling until a later time. It is up to the objecting party to have the court rule before the end of trial; otherwise, the objection may be deemed to have been waived. 3 Witkin, California Evidence, Presentation at Trial §389 (4th ed 2000); Haskell v Carli (1987) 195 CA3d 124, 129, 240 CR 439. Alternatively, the objection would be deemed overruled. See §15.67.

© The Regents of the University of California

5. When no waiver

§15.29 a. Admitting evidence would result in unfair trial

On rare occasions, the trial court may grant a motion for a new trial when erroneous admission of evidence prevented a fair trial, even though counsel did not object to the evidence at the time it was offered. See Clark v Bradley (1951) 106 CA2d 537, 235 P2d 439 (prejudicial inadmissible evidence presented to jury through inadvertence of both parties and court).

§15.30 b. Change in law

Counsel may fail to object to the admission of evidence based on a reasonable assumption that the evidence is admissible under the law at that time. This failure does not constitute a waiver when a reported appellate decision later holds such evidence to be inadmissible and the objecting party acts in timely fashion to exclude it. People v Turner (1990) 50 C3d 668, 703, 268 CR 706; Marriage of Hewitson (1983) 142 CA3d 874, 888, 191 CR 392.

EXAMPLE: Both parties during a trial in a marital dissolution case relied on the price-earnings ratio method to evaluate their closely held corporation, and such evidence was received without objection. After the trial, an appellate decision decided that it is improper to value a closely held corporation solely by the price-earnings ratio of publicly traded corporations. Either party may request that the court exclude the evidence based on this opinion, and the issue of excluding the evaluation evidence may be considered on appeal. See Marriage of Hewitson, supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.31 c. Stipulation as to form

If counsel objects to the admission of evidence, and after the objection is overruled, stipulates as to the form of the evidence, the objection is not waived. People v Baciagalupo (1991) 1 C4th 103, 138, 2 CR2d 335.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.32 C. Deciding whether to object

Counsel need not object to all evidence that might be objectionable. Deciding whether to object is an important exercise of counsel's judgment and skill. See Easton, Questions To Ask Yourself Before Objecting, Practical Litigator (Sept. 1998).

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.33 1. Reasons not to object

Before deciding to object, weigh the various factors, e.g.:

- Is the information harmful or helpful? If harmful, how damaging is it?
- Does the potentially objectionable evidence "open the door" to otherwise inadmissible favorable evidence?
- Will an objection serve only to highlight the importance of the information or make the attorney appear to be hiding things from the jury?
- How likely is it that the judge will agree with the objection?
- Is there a viable alternative (see California Trial Objections, chap 4 (Cal CEB Annual))?

Weigh the wisdom of objecting to a certain witness's testimony in front of a jury. For example, a very young or very old witness, or any witness who will evoke sympathy, may present a good image to the jury; carefully consider whether objections to such testimony might alienate the jury.

PRACTICE TIP: Whether the case is before a judge or a jury, keep your objections to a minimum, consistent with protecting the clients' interests. Objections consume time and interrupt the pace of a trial, and frequent objections may make an unfavorable impression on the jury. But when appropriate, counsel should object: Cases can be won or lost on crucial objections.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Many attorneys fail to make appropriate objections because they fear that jurors might regard them as obstreperous, thus putting the client's interests at risk. Judges sometimes voluntarily tell jurors that it is the proper function of an attorney to object when it is appropriate, so if the judge does not do this, counsel should make a request for such a statement. The problem is most apparent when a lawyer is "overmatched."

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.34 2. Alternatives to objecting

Counsel may decide not to object to a witness's answering a question and then demonstrate through cross-examination, or through other evidence, that the witness is wrong. On what constitutes proper impeachment, see §§11.114-11.124. See also California Trial Objections, chap 22 (Cal CEB Annual). Similarly, counsel may decide not to object to evidence, because he or she intends to present evidence that will rebut it.

EXAMPLE: Plaintiff testifies that he recognizes the decedent's signature at the bottom of a will. Defendant may decide not to object that there is no foundation for plaintiff's testimony, because defendant intends to present evidence from a handwriting expert that the handwriting was not decedent's.

CAUTION: If you decide not to object, remember that you thereby waive the objection on appeal. See §15.25.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.35 D. Preparing for objections

It is helpful to prepare before trial a short memorandum of law on anticipated objections to testimony or documents. Then when an objection arises, you have a ready argument on both the facts and the applicable law to assist the trial judge in ruling on the objection. For further discussion, see §3.32. A judge who sees that one attorney is better prepared on disputed points of evidence may be inclined to give that attorney the benefit of the doubt in deciding the point.

The number of areas in which "experts" are available requires counsel to be prepared to question their qualifications and, at times, the appropriateness of expert testimony at all. A timely objection to a witness's qualifications must be made before or during trial; it cannot be made for the first time on appeal, even if there is newly discovered evidence to impeach or discredit the witness. Simmons v Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1976) 62 CA3d 341, 367, 133 CR 42. If the witness's identity is disclosed before trial, try to discover the witness's background and qualifications.

© The Regents of the University of California

E. How to object

§15.36 1. Objection must be timely

The objection must be made in a timely manner; otherwise, the error is waived. Evid C §353(a); see §15.26. Object as soon as it becomes clear that the question is objectionable. In practice, most judges will still consider an objection, even if it is made after or midway through the answer or even several questions and answers later. Tactically, of course, it is better to object before the information is given and the jury has heard the answer.

NOTE: If the witness begins or completes the answer before the objection is made, and the judge sustains the objection, move to strike the answer and request that the judge admonish the jury not to consider the answer. See §15.44.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.37 2. Briefly and specifically state grounds for objection

Merely announcing "I object" is insufficient to create an adequate record for appeal. Although an objection has no required form, it should clearly state the specific ground for the court and the record. Evid C §353(a); see People v Morris (1991) 53 C3d 152, 187, 279 CR 720, overruled on other grounds in People v Stansbury (1995) 9 C4th 824, 830 n1, 38 CR2d 394.

EXAMPLE: "Objection, your honor. Counsel has not laid any foundation showing that the witness has personal knowledge of the matter."

PRACTICE TIP: Consult local court rules or policies on objections. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.76.

PRACTICE TIP: Do not start arguing while making your objection. Argument will slow things down and may annoy the judge or jury. Instead, completely and fully state your objection and the grounds for it. Save the argument for a sidebar or other conference. See Los Angeles Ct R 8.76; §15.47.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.38 a. State correct grounds for objection

Appellate courts have refused to find error when objections that were overruled by the trial court had been urged on the wrong grounds. In Kinney v County of Contra Costa (1970) 8 CA3d 761, 87 CR 638, plaintiff's overruled objections concerned lack of foundation. The court held that: "An objection might have been proper on grounds of immateriality or irrelevancy, but no error occurs unless the objection states a proper ground." 8 CA3d at 771. See People v Boyd (1990) 222 CA3d 541, 572, 271 CR 738.

NOTE: The appellate court will uphold a trial court's sustaining an objection on the wrong ground as long as any valid ground exists to exclude the evidence. See Philip Chang & Sons v La Casa Novato (1986) 177 CA3d 159, 173, 222 CR 800.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.39 b. General objections not usually sufficient

An objection that does not state the specific ground relied on is known as a general objection and usually will not preserve the point for appeal. A classic example can be found in Bundy v Sierra Lumber Co. (1906) 149 C 772, 87 P 622, in which a general objection was made to specific testimony of an expert. On appeal, counsel argued that the testimony was on a matter inappropriate for expert testimony. The appellate court refused to consider the point because it had not been raised by a specific objection. See also Drullinger v Erskine (1945) 71 CA2d 492, 163 P2d 48.

PRACTICE TIP: Avoid general objections such as "prejudicial," "self-serving," "incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial." "No foundation" is another commonly used objection that is not specific enough. See People v Modell (1956) 143 CA2d 724, 729, 300 P2d 204. Judges are now being taught at judge's school to turn to the objector and ask what specific element of the foundation is missing.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.40 (1) Use general objection to gain time

As a practical matter, experienced trial counsel sometimes do say, "Objection, Your Honor," "That's not a proper question, Your Honor," and similar general phrases when their instincts tell them that opposing counsel has asked an improper question, but they cannot immediately think of the proper objection.

PRACTICE TIP: Although the general "I object" will usually not preserve the issue on appeal, it will often gain a few moments of time for you to think of the specific ground for the objection. Sometimes an experienced trial judge will sustain the objection with no further ado because he or she also knows it is an improper question. If not, the judge will ask what the grounds are and a brief discussion of the question may give you time to refer to your list of trial objections and formulate the reasons for objecting. See, e.g., §15.69 for a list of evidentiary objections you can use at trial.

On the court's power to exclude inadmissible matter on its own motion or when an insufficient objection is made, see 3 Witkin, California Evidence, Presentation at Trial §392 (4th ed 2000).

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.41 (2) When general objection may be sufficient

A general objection might be sufficient if a question is objectionable from every aspect and the evidence sought to be elicited is not admissible for any purpose. See, e.g., Short v Frink (1907) 151 C 83, 90 P 200. To protect the record, however, counsel should normally make specific objections.

© The Regents of the University of California

F. Continuing objection

§15.42 1. If court allows

A trial court may permit a single statement of the objection to stand as a "continuing objection" to an entire line of questioning or the same class of evidence to save time and save counsel from appearing unduly obstructive in the eyes of the jury. See Comment to Evid C §353; Balcom v Growers Warehouse Co. (1921) 55 CA 474, 204 P 39 (objection to all testimony offered by defense tending to contradict receipts).

PRACTICE TIP: To make a continuing objection, ask the court to rule that it is not necessary to object each time and that a continuing objection is deemed to be made to the entire line of questioning and the same class of evidence, whether offered by the same or different witnesses. See W. C. Cook & Co. v White Truck & Transfer Co. (1932) 124 CA 721, 13 P2d 549.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.43 2. May be better to repeat objection

When a party, through one or more witnesses, repeatedly asks questions seeking the same or similar objectionable evidence, counsel should object to each question, even if the court has previously overruled objections to questions on the same subject.

It is especially important to repeat the objection to the same class of evidence elicited from different witnesses. See People v Epps (1981) 122 CA3d 691, 176 CR 332 (continuing hearsay objection did not preserve defendant's objections to testimony of two later witnesses). But see Moore v Norwood (1940) 41 CA2d 359, 106 P2d 939. See also Green v Southern Pac. Co. (1898) 122 C 563, 565, 55 P 577.

NOTE: Of course, an objection that is made and overruled need not be repeated when the question is immediately repeated. Balcom v Growers Warehouse Co. (1921) 55 CA 474, 204 P 39.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.44 G. Move to strike if answer given before court sustains objection

Although an objection should be made as soon as the basis for it appears, and should occur before the witness answers, it is not always possible to interpose the objection between the question and the answer. If the witness responds very quickly, or an unobjectionable question results in an inadmissible answer, state the objection immediately afterward, requesting that the witness's answer be stricken and that the court instruct the jurors to disregard it. On waiver by failure to timely object or move to strike, see §15.26.

There are times when, instead of reserving its ruling, the court will admit evidence subject to a motion to strike. The subsequent motion to strike then becomes mandatory. Unless it is made, the objection is waived. In Ault v International Harvester Co. (1974) 13 C3d 113, 117 CR 812, the court held that a defendant who did not move to strike expert witness testimony after it had been admitted over objection subject to a motion to strike, but instead moved for a mistrial after plaintiff rested his case, had waived the alleged error.

PRACTICE TIP: Keep a record of each time the court admits evidence conditionally during trial so as not to forget what action, if any, to take later in the trial to preserve the record.

§15.45 VI. RESPONDING TO OBJECTION

After a party objects, the proponent of evidence can respond as follows:

- Argue that the objection does not apply or is not valid or that the evidence is admissible because of an exception (see §§15.46-15.49);
- Make an offer of proof (see §§15.50-15.60); or
- Ask the court to admit the evidence for a limited purpose (see §§15.61-15.64).

§15.46 A. Discussing or arguing objection

The proponent of evidence may argue that the objection does not apply, that the objection is not valid, or that the evidence is admissible because of an exception to the ground stated in the objection. The existence of an exception may raise a preliminary fact issue that the court should decide under Evid C §403 or §405. See chap 7, §15.11.

The proponent may also argue that the evidence can be shown to be properly admissible when other evidence is introduced, and ask the court to admit the evidence, conditioned on additional evidence being produced later in the trial. See §15.66.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.47 1. Sidebar or chambers conferences

Sidebar conferences between court and counsel are conducted quietly at the side of the court's bench with the jury present but unable to hear what is being said.

CAUTION: California Rules of Court, Standards of J Admin 2.20(b)(8), which is part of the Standards of Judicial Administration recommended by the Judicial Council, provides that the trial judge should permit sidebar conferences only when necessary and keep them as short as possible. Counsel should also consult local court rules or policies on sidebar or similar conferences. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.41, 8.76-8.77.

When sidebar conferences are permitted, they usually follow an objection during a witness's testimony that counsel wish to argue about out of range of the jury's hearing. If the discussion is meritorious, the judge may suggest (or counsel may request) that the jury be excused or that argument take place in chambers then or at another time. In any event, a court reporter should be present to record the proceedings.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: To avoid delay in trials, many judges do not favor having the reporter at a sidebar conference. If this is the case, request a reporter after the jury departs, and summarize the discussion for the record.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.48 2. When to use sidebar conference

Whether or not to request a sidebar conference usually depends on whether it is the jury's hearing of the objection itself, or of the response it may evoke, that would cause the prejudice that the objection is designed to prevent. A sidebar conference may be necessary when an objection is designed to exclude reference to specific evidence by a witness, or when counsel does not want the jurors to hear argument on an objection. When extensive argument is necessary to assert or resolve an objection, or when the court will need to conduct a hearing on preliminary facts as a result of the objection, it may be necessary to request (at the bench) that the jury be excused or that the matter be taken up in chambers. Generally, objections on phrasing of a question do not dictate a sidebar conference.

Many trial attorneys do not like to request sidebar conferences in front of the jury, believing that they create the impression that counsel is trying to withhold evidence from the jurors. The effective use of motions in limine before or during trial (see chap 7) out of the jurors' presence can eliminate this concern and reduce the number of sidebar and other conferences needed during trial.

PRACTICE TIP: If you anticipate a need for a sidebar conference, try to schedule it for a time when the jury is not present, e.g., in the morning before the jury arrives, during lunch recess, or after the jury has left for the day.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.49 3. How to request sidebar conference

If you believe a conference is needed, first object and then request permission to approach the bench.

EXAMPLE: "Objection, Your Honor. May we approach the bench?"

If the court refuses permission because the reason for the request is not apparent, indicate that the matter should be discussed out of the jurors' presence. If the judge again refuses, you may have no alternative but to state the objection in open court or request that the court defer the matter until it can be heard out of the jurors' presence. At the beginning of a sidebar conference, many judges state for the record that the conference is being conducted out of the jurors' hearing.

PRACTICE TIP: Consult local court rules or policies on argument after an objection. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.77.

§15.50 B. Offer of proof

An offer of proof by the proponent of evidence tells the judge that a witness or witnesses are available to testify and also discloses the substance, purpose, and relevancy of the evidence sought to be offered. For what to include in an offer of proof, see §§15.55-15.59.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.51 1. When to consider offer of proof

An offer of proof is made in the following circumstances:

- When an objection to a question is first raised, and the judge has not yet ruled, to persuade the judge to overrule the objection.
- When opposing counsel moves to strike certain testimony, and the judge has not yet ruled, to persuade the judge to deny the motion.
- When a party objects to the introduction of evidence based on a privilege, and the judge has not yet ruled, the party asserting the privilege may need to offer foundational facts concerning the privilege to persuade the court to recognize the privilege and exclude the evidence.
- When the court has just sustained the objection to the introduction of evidence or granted a motion to strike, the offer of proof serves two purposes:
- It enables the judge to reconsider and reverse or revise the ruling; and
- It ensures that the record reflects that the court was adequately informed about the proposed evidence (see §§15.23, 15.56-15.59).

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Offers of proof, if made after due consideration, can be most effective in convincing the court of the need for and appropriateness of the evidence.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.52 2. Usually required if objection sustained to preserve record

When counsel offers evidence and the court sustains an objection (and the evidence cannot otherwise be introduced, e.g., by rephrasing the question or through another witness), an offer of proof is usually required to preserve the record so that the claimed error by the trial court in excluding the evidence can be considered on appeal. See Evid C §354(a); Marshall v Hancock (1889) 80 C 82, 22 P 61; PG&E v Hacienda Mobile Home Park (1975) 45 CA3d 519, 119 CR 559.

If an offer of proof is not made (on the record), the party is usually precluded from having the point considered on appeal. See Marshall v Hancock, supra. See also Helfend v Southern Cal. Rapid Transit Dist. (1970) 2 C3d 1, 84 CR 173. However, in Rodriguez v McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1978) 87 CA3d 626, 665, 151 CR 399, the court considered the defendant's contention on the merits, but the defendant failed to make an adequate offer of proof.

For circumstances when offer of proof is not required, see §15.53. For further discussion of offers of proof, see California Trial Objections, chap 5 (Cal CEB Annual); 3 Witkin, California Evidence, Presentation at Trial §§401-405 (4th ed 2000).

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.53 3. Circumstances when not required

Circumstances in which an offer of proof is not required include:

- When the question itself makes known to the court the substance, purpose, and relevance of the excluded evidence. Evid C §354(a).
- When making it would be futile to do so. Evid C §354(b). Thus, e.g., when "an entire class of evidence has been declared inadmissible or the trial court has clearly intimated that it will receive no evidence of a particular type or class," an offer of proof is not a prerequisite. Lawless v Calaway (1944) 24 C2d 81, 91, 147 P2d 604; Castaneda v Bornstein (1995) 36 CA4th 1818, 1825, 43 CR2d 10, disapproved on other grounds in Bonds v Roy (1999) 20 C4th 140, 149 n4, 83 CR2d 289.

EXAMPLE 1: In a contract interpretation case, no offer of proof was required when the court repeatedly ruled that it would not admit extrinsic evidence to interpret the contract and sustained objections to all questions seeking to elicit such evidence. PG&E v G.W. Thomas Drayage & Rigging Co. (1968) 69 C2d 33, 36 n1, 69 CR 561.

EXAMPLE 2: The trial court denied defendant's in limine request and his renewed request at trial to permit expert psychiatric testimony on defendant's mental state when the offense occurred; defense counsel made no formal offer of proof. The appellate court held that a formal offer of proof was unnecessary because the trial court made it clear that it would not admit evidence of defendant's mental state for any reason. People v Whitsett (1983) 149 CA3d 213, 219 n1, 196 CR 647.

EXAMPLE 3: No offer of proof was made by plaintiffs on certain proposed testimony of their expert economist witness after the trial court had ruled that related evidence by the witness would not be admitted. The appellate court held that the trial court did not make a blanket ruling and in fact allowed much of expert's testimony; therefore, failure to make an offer of proof constituted waiver of the claimed error. Ferreira, Inc. v Quik Stop Mkts., Inc. (1983) 141 CA3d 1023, 1031, 190 CR 778.

EXAMPLE 4: When the evidence is offered during cross-examination or recross-examination. Evid C §354(c).

EXAMPLE 5: The trial court excluded impeaching deposition testimony that defendant raised during cross-examination. Although the defendant made no offer of proof from the deposition during trial, the appellate court permitted defendant to raise the issue on appeal because no offer of proof was necessary. See Chavez v Zapata Ocean Resources, Inc. (1984) 155 CA3d 115, 124, 201 CR 887 (trial court erred in excluding plaintiff's deposition testimony when objection to excluded questions did not state specific legal grounds).

EXAMPLE 6: An offer of proof was required during cross-examination when the trial court ruled that the questions were not material and the cross-examiner made no offer of proof or other attempt to explain the relevant purpose of question. People v Coleman (1970) 8 CA3d 722, 87 CR 554 (not error to restrict cross-examination by sustaining objection when counsel made no offer of proof and did not explain relevance of question).

EXAMPLE 7: When the substance, purpose, and relevance of the excluded evidence is made known to the court by any other means, e.g., a motion in limine or a pretrial conference. Evid C §354(a); see, e.g., People v McGee (1947) 31 C2d 229, 187 P2d 706 (question itself, along with discussion with judge, revealed purpose); People v Duane (1942) 21 C2d 71, 130 P2d 123 (no need to establish that exclusion of witness was prejudicial when entire record established that witness's testimony would be vital).

For further discussion of offers of proof, see California Trial Objections §§5.4-5.14 (Cal CEB Annual); 3 Witkin, California Evidence, Presentation at Trial §§401-405 (4th ed 2000).

§15.54 4. Make offer on the record, outside jury's presence

The jury should not be present when an offer of proof is made. Request that:

- The offer of proof be made in the judge's chambers;
- The offer of proof be made at a sidebar conference (out of the jurors' hearing); or
- The judge excuse the jury.

Be sure the court reporter is present to make a record during the offer of proof. See In re Mark C. (1992) 7 CA4th 433, 8 CR2d 856 (out of jury's presence).

§15.55 5. What to include in offer of proof

An offer of proof educates the judge; it must indicate that a witness or witnesses are available to testify and it must disclose the substance, purpose, and relevancy of the evidence sought to be offered. Evid C §354(a); Moore v Rogers (1958) 157 CA2d 192, 320 P2d 524. See also United Sav. & Loan Ass'n v Reeder Dev. Corp. (1976) 57 CA3d 282, 129 CR 113. Offers of proof must be specific, setting out the actual evidence to be produced, and not merely facts or issues to be addressed or argued, so the trial court is given the opportunity to change or clarify its ruling. People v Schmies (1996) 44 CA4th 38, 53, 51 CR2d 185.

§15.56 a. Substance of evidence

An offer of proof is insufficient and affords no ground for appeal if it merely refers to conclusions, summaries, or ultimate facts. Stickel v San Diego Elec. Ry. (1948) 32 C2d 157, 195 P2d 416. When stating the substance of the evidence, do not just state facts, i.e., facts do not constitute evidence. United Sav. & Loan Ass'n v Reeder Dev. Corp. (1976) 57 CA3d 282, 294, 129 CR 113. A valid offer of proof must contain evidence, i.e., the testimony of specific witnesses, writings, material objects, or other things presented to the senses, to be "introduced to prove the existence or nonexistence of a fact in issue." 57 CA3d at 294.

EXAMPLE: Counsel states to the court: "If permitted to testify under oath, Mrs. White would testify as follows…."

After stating the expected testimony, some attorneys, when possible, have the witness verify that he or she would so testify.

To introduce documents or other items, the offer of proof consists of producing those documents or items, marking them for identification, and describing them for the record.

§15.57 b. Purpose of evidence

An offer of proof must disclose the purpose of the evidence sought to be offered. Evid C §354(a). For example, in Moore v Rogers (1958) 157 CA2d 192, 320 P2d 524, the proponent of the evidence argued that it was offered to show the parties' intention at the time they signed a release.

NOTE: The court may admit the evidence for a limited purpose and instruct the jurors to restrict their use of the evidence accordingly. See §§15.61-15.64.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.58 c. Relevancy of evidence

An offer of proof must disclose the relevancy of the evidence sought to be offered. Evid C §354(a). In Moore v Rogers (1958) 157 CA2d 192, 320 P2d 524, the proponent of the evidence argued that the parties' intention at the time they signed a release was relevant to prove an element of fraud.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.59 d. Availability of evidence

The proponent must show that the evidence is available to be presented to the court. If the objection is made while a witness is on the stand, the proponent has no difficulty in showing that the witness is available. For example, counsel might say: "If Mrs. Jones is allowed to continue testifying, she will say…."

Sometimes, the objection and offer of proof occur when a witness is not on the stand. If the evidence is offered through testimony, two procedures are available to show that the witness is prepared to testify. See Stickel v San Diego Elec. Ry. (1948) 32 C2d 157, 195 P2d 416. The attorney may either:

- Produce and question the witness so as to elicit the evidence; or
- Establish that the named witness is available to testify and specify for the court the testimony expected from the witness.

§15.60 6. When to renew

Sometimes, an offer of proof must be renewed. This happens when an offer, defective when first made, is later perfected. An offer may be ruled premature because an element of its foundation is missing or because it has been made during the wrong stage of the trial. It is important that counsel renew the offer after having adduced additional evidence; if not, the trial court is free to treat the earlier offer as having been abandoned or waived.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.61 C. Limited admissibility of evidence

Evidence may be admissible only for a limited purpose or only as to certain parties. See Evid C §355. This is usually referred to as the "limited admissibility" rule. See California Trial Objections, chap 53 (Cal CEB Annual) for discussion of this type of evidence.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.62 1. After objection, offering party should state limited purpose

When evidence is admissible only for a limited purpose and the offering party does not state that purpose, the opposing party may object. The party offering the evidence must then "state the proper purpose." Larson v Solbakken (1963) 221 CA2d 410, 422, 34 CR 450; 1 Witkin, California Evidence, Circumstantial Evidence §§30-31, 33 (4th ed 2000).

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.63 2. Objecting party: Ask for exclusion of evidence or limiting instruction

If the only expressed purpose for evidence is an improper one, the opposing party may ask the court to exclude the evidence. Larson v Solbakken (1963) 221 CA2d 410, 422, 34 CR 450; 1 Witkin, California Evidence, Circumstantial Evidence §§30-31, 33 (4th ed 2000). Even if the party offering the evidence states a proper purpose, the court might sustain an objection under Evid C §352 that the evidence would be too prejudicial, confuse the issues, or mislead the jury. See Comment to Evid C §355.

If there is only a limited purpose for the evidence, the opposing party may ask the court to restrict the evidence to its proper scope and give a limiting instruction to the jury. See Evid C §355. The opposing counsel should make a proper request for a limiting instruction when the evidence is introduced, and not at a later time, thereby providing both clarity for the jury and a clear trial record. Merely objecting to such evidence is not enough; to limit the scope of the evidence a limiting instruction must be requested under Evid C §355. Dincau v Tamayose (1982) 131 CA3d 780, 791, 182 CR 855 (no error on admissibility of statements when no request for limiting instruction made under §355).

EXAMPLE: Defendant's expert testified as to opinions of other experts, which opinions were hearsay. Assuming that the hearsay was inadmissible, the error was cured in part because the court instructed the jury not to consider the hearsay opinions of outside witnesses for the truth of the matter in those opinions. Mosesian v Pennwalt Corp. (1987) 191 CA3d 851, 236 CR 778, disapproved on other grounds in People v Ault (2004) 33 C4th 1250, 1272 n15, 17 CR3d 302.

NOTE: If the evidence is highly prejudicial, it may not be enough for the court to give the jury a limiting instruction. Under Evid C §352, the trial court may conclude that some or all of the evidence should be excluded. See People v Coleman (1985) 38 C3d 69, 211 CR 102 (reversible error to admit over §352 objection contents of highly emotional and inflammatory letters for limited purposes of impeaching defendant's credibility and to explain and challenge basis for psychiatric experts' opinions).

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.64 3. Waiver if failure to request limiting instruction

If the objecting party does not request the limiting instruction, the right to a limiting instruction is waived and the judge has no duty to give it. Foreman & Clark Corp. v Fallon (1971) 3 C3d 875, 92 CR 162 (when no express understanding between counsel and court that evidence was limited to particular matter, court could consider it for any purpose); Daggett v Atchison, T. & S.F. Ry. (1957) 48 C2d 655, 313 P2d 557 (defendants could not complain on appeal when they failed to request instruction at trial that impeaching evidence was admitted only for that purpose and was not otherwise competent).

If a request for a limited instruction would be futile, however, failure to request a limiting instruction is not a waiver of claimed error. Warner Constr. Corp. v City of Los Angeles (1970) 2 C3d 285, 296, 85 CR 444.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.65 VII. COURT'S RULING

When an objection is made, counsel should make certain that the court rules on the objection and that the ruling is on the record. If the court neglects to rule on the objection, or if the court's ruling is unclear and counsel proceeds without clarification, counsel may be deemed to have waived or abandoned the objection. People v Jacobs (1987) 195 CA3d 1636, 1650, 241 CR 550. See Goodale v Thorn (1926) 199 C 307, 249 P 11 (when court directed defendant's counsel to proceed after plaintiff's objection and it was not clear what this meant, defendant was precluded from raising point on appeal). See also California Trial Objections, chap 4 (Cal CEB Annual); 3 Witkin, California Evidence, Presentation at Trial §389 (4th ed 2000).

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.66 A. Reserved ruling

A court may reserve its ruling on an objection and admit evidence subject to striking it when the court has had a chance to hear other evidence or determine the law on the subject. The court in Estate of Horman (1968) 265 CA2d 796, 71 CR 780, criticized this practice because it may work substantial injury to the parties, and the resulting error may be considered of sufficient gravity to require reversal. In Clopton v Clopton (1912) 162 C 27, 33, 121 P 720, the court noted that when "such a course is followed … a ruling should be made prior to the conclusion of the trial and in time to enable the party to fully present his case in the light of such ruling." For further discussion of a judge reserving a ruling on an objection, see California Trial Objections, chap 4 (Cal CEB Annual); 3 Witkin, California Evidence, Presentation at Trial §387 (4th ed 2000).

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.67 B. If no ruling, considered overruled

When the court reserves its ruling and does not rule before conclusion of the trial, the objections raised have been deemed overruled (not waived) and the point concerning the admissibility of the evidence has been permitted to be raised on appeal. See Stanwood v Carson (1915) 169 C 640, 147 P 562; People v Jacobs (1987) 195 CA3d 1636, 1651, 241 CR 550; People v Flores (1979) 92 CA3d 461, 466, 154 CR 851.

CAUTION: When the trial court fails to rule on an objection and has not made any decision to reserve ruling, the objecting party must do something to precipitate an actual ruling, or be deemed to have waived or abandoned the issue. See §15.28.

© The Regents of the University of California

§15.68 C. After ruling, be careful to preserve objection

If the court overrules the objection and the objecting party then offers the same type of evidence, a waiver of the objection can occur, barring that party from claiming error on appeal. See Heiman v Market St. Ry. (1937) 21 CA2d 311, 69 P2d 178 (plaintiffs objected to motion pictures when offered by defendant, objection was overruled, and plaintiffs later exhibited pictures to jury).

NOTE: Generally, the objecting party will not waive the objection by referring to the objectionable evidence during trial. See Warner Constr. Corp. v City of Los Angeles (1970) 2 C3d 285, 299 n17, 85 CR 444.

§16.1 I. SCOPE OF CHAPTER

An attorney's failure to abide by the proper rules of conduct during trial work hurts the legal system, the client, and the attorney's professional reputation. A breach of ethics by counsel may constitute misconduct warranting a contempt citation or sanctions by a judge, and disciplinary action by the state bar. Misconduct by the court may result in a mistrial or new trial. Misconduct of court or counsel further undermines the public's confidence in the judicial system. It is the duty of all lawyers to aid the court in avoiding error and determining cases in accordance with justice. Furlong v White (1921) 51 CA 265, 271, 196 P 903.

This chapter discusses the following:

- Regulations of the legal profession (see §§16.2-16.7);
- Courtroom etiquette and appearance (see §§16.8-16.17);
- Guidelines for ethical conduct of attorneys (see §§16.18-16.52) and judges (see §§16.53-16.65);
- Misconduct of attorneys (see §§16.66-16.90) and judges (see §§16.130-16.142); and
- Remedies for misconduct by attorneys (see §§16.91-16.129) and by judges (see §§16.143-16.147).

Further research: Jury management issues, including jury misconduct during voir dire and trial, are discussed in chap 17. Jury deliberations, including misconduct during deliberations, are discussed in chap 21.

II. REGULATION OF LEGAL PROFESSION

A. Regulation of attorneys

§16.2 1. Under Business and Professions Code

Statutory authority regulating the legal profession is found in Bus & P C §§6000-6228. The duties of an attorney are provided in Bus & P C §6068. Consequences that may result from violating any provision under §§6000-6228 include:

- Violation of a lawyer's oath or duties is a cause for disbarment or suspension. Bus & P C §6103.
- A willful breach of any Rule of Professional Conduct enacted under Bus & P C §6076 is a ground for disciplinary proceedings. See also Bus & P C §6077.
- An attorney who is guilty of deceit or collusion (or consents to deceit or collusion), with intent to deceive the court or a party, is guilty of a misdemeanor. Bus & P C §6128.

The Board of Governors of the State Bar of California is authorized to formulate and enforce rules of professional conduct for all members of the state bar. Bus & P C §6076. A court that has ordered reversal of a judgment based in whole or in part on misconduct, incompetent representation, or willful misrepresentation by counsel must report the matter to the state bar, which will investigate and determine whether initiating disciplinary action against an attorney is appropriate. Bus & P C §6086.7. The court must notify the state bar when sanctions of $1000 or more, and when nonmonetary sanctions, are imposed against an attorney. Bus & P C §6086.7(a)(3).

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.3 2. Under Rules of Professional Conduct

The California Rules of Professional Conduct establish an attorney's civil liability for breach of duty and may even be judicially noticed to establish an attorney's negligence. See Mirabito v Liccardo (1992) 4 CA4th 41, 5 CR2d 571; Day v Rosenthal (1985) 170 CA3d 1125, 1147, 217 CR 89. A breach of the rules does not automatically give rise to a civil cause of action. See Noble v Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1973) 33 CA3d 654, 109 CR 269.

Further research: Current Rules of Professional Conduct enacted under Bus & P C §6076 are published in West's Annotated California Codes, Rules of Professional Conduct (vol 23, pt. 3); and Deering's California Codes (Annotated), Rules of Court, State Bar Rules. They are also published in State Bar Publication No. 250.

§16.4 3. Regulation by judiciary

The judiciary has inherent power to regulate the profession. See 1 Witkin, California Procedure, Attorneys §§339-340 (5th ed 2008). In Merco Constr. Eng'rs v Municipal Court (1978) 21 C3d 724, 147 CR 631, the supreme court held that the judiciary's power to govern admissions to the practice of law is provided in Cal Const art VI, §1, which provides that the state's judicial power is vested in the supreme court, the courts of appeal, and the superior courts.

A judge must take appropriate corrective action whenever the judge has personal knowledge that a lawyer has violated a provision of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Code of Judicial Ethics, Canon 3D(2). For example, if a judge were to find in a statement of decision that an attorney had acted fraudulently, the judge would be obligated to send a copy of the decision to the state bar. See 1993 California Judges Association, Ethics Update IX.

§16.5 4. Under local rules

Many California courts have adopted local court rules or policies on attorneys' conduct with respect to the jury, witnesses, and the court. Become familiar with local policies or rules that are in effect in the court in which your case is pending. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.1-8.17.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.6 5. Influence of ABA guidelines

The American Bar Association has enacted Model Rules of Professional Conduct. Although they have not been adopted in California, the ABA rules sometimes serve as a guide to California courts in related matters. See Chambers v Superior Court (1981) 121 CA3d 893, 898 n3, 175 CR 575. See also City of Los Angeles v Decker (1977) 18 C3d 860, 871, 135 CR 647; Cho v Superior Court (1995) 39 CA4th 113, 121, 45 CR2d 863.

According to Cal Rules of Prof Cond 1-100, rules of other bar associations may be considered. State Bar Formal Opinion No. 1983-71 explains that, although not binding in California, the ABA rules may be persuasive when no controlling rule of conduct, statute, or court ruling applies in California.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.7 B. Regulation of judges

The California Judges Association adopted a Code of Judicial Conduct, in Division II of the Appendix to the California Rules of Court, that provides ethical standards for all members of the judiciary. The Code reflects a judicial consensus regarding appropriate behavior and is binding on judges. Adams v Commission on Judicial Performance (1994) 8 C4th 630, 34 CR2d 641; Kloepfer v Commission on Judicial Performance (1989) 49 C3d 826, 836 n6, 264 CR 100. See §§16.54 and 16.130 for further discussion. The grounds for disqualification of a judge are specified in CCP §§170.1-170.2; the procedure is addressed in CCP §170.3. The procedure for exercising a peremptory challenge to disqualify a judge is found in CCP §170.6. For further discussion of disqualification under CCP §§170.1-170.3, and 170.6, see §§6.26-6.78.

NOTE: If the Commission on Judicial Performance, the state agency that investigates misconduct complaints and imposes discipline against judges, has determined that a judge should be disciplined for a certain action, the judge or former judge has 60 days to petition the supreme court to review the determination after the commission notifies the judge or former judge that a determination has been filed or entered in its records or the determination becomes final, whichever event is later. See Cal Rules of Ct 9.60.

III. COURTROOM ETIQUETTE AND APPEARANCE

§16.8 A. Suggestions for courtroom conduct

Requirements of courtroom etiquette for counsel vary from court to court and are enforced by the trial judge. The requirements are seldom considered in appellate decisions, except when breaches of etiquette also constitute misconduct.

In 1956, a memorandum titled "Suggestions for Uniform Formality of Courts and Courtroom Etiquette" was approved by the Conference of California Judges (now called the California Judges Association). Its preamble noted that "great differences in local customs, thought, climatic conditions and court facilities [impede] complete agreement and uniformity of formality and etiquette." Some of these suggestions are discussed in §§16.9-16.15 (with some updating).

NOTE: The suggestions in the memorandum are still valid, although not readily available or widely known.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.9 1. Courtroom demeanor

Attorneys during trial should not exhibit familiarity with witnesses, jurors, or opposing counsel and should avoid the use of first names. In jury arguments, never address a juror individually or by name.

Attorneys should not appear too familiar with the court and should address the court in the third person, as "The court will remember the testimony," not, "You will remember." While on the bench, the judge may be addressed as "Your Honor," never as "You" or "Judge." Invite, do not direct, the court's attention.

§16.10 2. Positions in the courtroom

Attorneys should not walk between the judge's bench and the counsel table unless necessary because of the courtroom's layout. During opposing counsel's argument, other counsel should remain seated at the counsel table and listen respectfully. Never get up and walk about, make asides to others, or express personal feelings so as to divert the attention of the court or jury.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.11 3. Addressing the court

Rise and remain standing while addressing the court or a jury, except when making an objection or statement of only a few words. Stand behind the counsel table or at a lectern to address the court.

After a matter has been argued and submitted and the court has announced its decision, gracefully accept the decision and do not make further comment or argument, unless the court reopens argument on request.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/16 Misconduct of Counsel and Court/ §16.12 4. Addressing the jury

§16.12 4. Addressing the jury

In addressing the jury, do not crowd the jury box or address the jury in a loud voice or in an undignified manner. Address the jury from a lectern if one is provided and if the judge approves its use. (Ask the bailiff or clerk if the judge allows use of a lectern, or ask the judge directly.)

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.13 5. Opening address

The proper form of an opening statement is "May it please the court," not "If the court please."

PRACTICE TIP: Some judges consider such terms unnecessarily formal. Check with other attorneys who have appeared before this judge for information about the judge's preferences or the practice in your area.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.14 6. Examining witnesses

Examine witnesses from a position behind the counsel table or from a lectern. With the court's permission, it is proper to approach witnesses who are hard of hearing when handling exhibits or to stand at the blackboard when questioning witnesses concerning a map or diagram.

NOTE: This suggestion should be observed in all proceedings, including default and probate matters.

PRACTICE TIP: Most courts rely on these basic principles. You can't go wrong following these "rules," even when more informality is allowed. Some judges consider asking the court's permission every time you approach a witness to be cumbersome. When in doubt, check with the judge for the preferred procedures.

When you complete examination of a witness, so indicate by stating, "I have no further questions of this witness," which alerts both the court and opposing counsel that you have finished your examination. Do not say, "That is all" or use a similar vague statement, because your statement can be confusing and encourage the witness to leave the stand before opposing counsel has the opportunity to examine the witness.

§16.15 7. Making objections

Refrain from interrupting the court or opposing counsel until the statement being made is fully complete, except when absolutely necessary to protect the client's rights on the record. Also, respectfully await the completion of the court's statement or opinion before pointing out objectionable matters. When objection is made to your question, refrain from asking the witness another question until the court has ruled on the objection.

NOTE: All objections and arguments should be made to the court rather than to opposing counsel.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.16 B. Review local court rules

Local court rules or policies may address the conduct of attorneys during trial. Become familiar with local requirements, which may differ from the suggestions discussed in §§16.9-16.15. If you have not been given, or seen posted on the court's website, any local rules or policies on the conduct of a trial, determine what the judge trying the case requires from the judge's clerk or from the trial judge during the initial chambers conference.

NOTE: The Judicial Council has preempted local court rules relating to "pleadings, demurrers, ex parte applications, motions discovery, provisional remedies, and form and format of papers." Cal Rules of Ct 3.20.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.17 C. Guidelines for appropriate attire

Attorneys generally should wear appropriate business attire. A judge has authority to dictate matters of courtroom decorum and behavior that bear on the orderly conduct of courtroom proceedings. See People v Rainey (1964) 224 CA2d 93, 97, 36 CR 291. This authority may include a judge's reasonable and proper request regarding attire. For example, in Rainey the court held that the trial judge was not guilty of misconduct, nor was defendant prejudiced, when the judge on the first day of trial requested that defendant's female attorney appear without a hat in future sessions. There are limits, however, on a judge's power to dictate proper attire.

EXAMPLE: In Jensen v Superior Court (1984) 154 CA3d 533, 201 CR 275, an extraordinary writ was brought by an attorney who wore a turban to court. He was refused access to a courtroom by a judge who admitted turbaned lawyers to his courtroom on a showing that the turban was worn for "religious, cosmetic or other, 'legitimate' purpose." Petitioner refused to make that showing. In granting the writ, the appellate court stated that the test for attorneys' courtroom attire "is whether it interferes with courtroom decorum by disrupting justice, i.e., whether it tends to cause disorder or interfere with or impede the functioning of the court." 154 CA3d at 537. The appellate court held that to engage in the practice of law does not require a person to declare the person's faith, or lack of it. "Courtroom inquisition concerning physical condition or cosmetic appearance is an invasion of privacy." 154 CA3d at 541.

Further research: For further discussion of counsel's attire during trial, see Anno, Power of Court to Impose Standard of Personal Appearance or Attire, 73 ALR3d 353 (1976). On courtroom decorum for parties and witnesses generally, see chap 5. See also Los Angeles Ct R 8.0-8.3, 8.13, 8.17.

IV. GUIDELINES FOR ETHICAL CONDUCT BY ATTORNEYS

A. Consequences of a breach of ethics

§16.18 1. Business and Professions Code Provisions

Many ethical obligations of attorneys are set forth in Bus & P C §6068 and the California Rules of Professional Conduct. See §§16.2-16.3. In Marshall v Taylor (1893) 98 C 55, 62, 32 P 867, the court held that a "trial court should always be alert to prevent an attorney from obtaining advantages in jury trials by the practice of methods not countenanced by the ethics of the profession." This also holds true for nonjury trials.

Attorneys usually conduct themselves in an ethical manner. When a breach of ethics occurs, however, serious consequences may follow. Business and Professions Code §6103 specifically provides that:

> [W]illful disobedience or violation of an order of the court requiring [the attorney] to do or forbear an act connected with or in the course of his profession, which he ought in good faith to do or forbear, and any violation of the oath taken by him, or of his duties as such attorney, constitute causes for disbarment or suspension.

Similarly, Bus & P C §6077 provides that, for a willful breach of any of the California Rules of Professional Conduct, the Board of Governors of the State Bar may:

- Discipline the attorney by public or private reproval; or
- Recommend to the California Supreme Court that the attorney be suspended from practicing law for not over 3 years.

Commission of an act involving moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption may constitute a cause for disbarment or suspension. See Bus & P C §6106. An attorney who is guilty of any deceit or collusion (or consents to deceit or collusion), with intent to deceive the court or a party, is guilty of a misdemeanor. Bus & P C §6128.

When a court has ordered reversal of a judgment based in whole or in part on misconduct, incompetent representation, or willful misrepresentation by counsel, Bus & P C §6086.7 requires the court to report the matter to the State Bar of California for investigation concerning the appropriateness of initiating disciplinary action against the attorney.

§16.19 2. State bar proceedings

An attorney must cooperate and participate in any state bar disciplinary investigation or other regulatory or disciplinary proceeding pending against that attorney, subject to constitutional or statutory privileges. Bus & P C §6068(i). Other duties include:

- Complying with membership information reporting requirements (Bus & P C §6068(j));
- Complying with disciplinary probation (Bus & P C §6068(k)) or agreements (Bus & P C §6068(l));
- Responding promptly to clients' reasonable status inquiries and keeping clients reasonably informed of significant developments in matters for which the attorney has agreed to provide legal services (Bus & P C §6068(m));
- Providing copies to the client of relevant documents within specified time limits (Bus & P C §6068(n)); and
- Reporting of lawsuits, sanctions, indictments, convictions, and discipline against the attorney and any reversal of judgment because of the attorney's misconduct, or grossly incompetent or willful misrepresentation (Bus & P C §6068(o)).

A breach of ethics may constitute misconduct and result in issuance of a contempt citation (see §§16.99-16.129), sanctions (see §16.94), the granting of a motion for a mistrial (see §16.95) or a new trial (see §16.96), or reversal of a judgment on appeal (see §§16.97-16.98). On misconduct generally, see §§16.66-16.90.

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Ethical conduct in court

§16.20 1. Maintain respect for court

Although lawyers have a duty to represent their clients zealously within the bounds of law (which includes disciplinary rules and enforceable professional obligations) (see §§16.32-16.43), as officers of the court they also must maintain respect for the court. See Bus & P C §6068(b); Hawk v Superior Court (1974) 42 CA3d 108, 126, 116 CR 713. See §16.148 for examples of acts or omissions that are contempts of the court's authority under CCP §1209. See §§16.99-16.129 for a detailed discussion of contempt.

EXAMPLE: In Hawk, while examining witnesses, an attorney frequently repeated questions after objections to them had been sustained, and after the court admonished him not to repeat questions to which objections had been sustained. The court held that the attorney had violated his duty under Bus & P C §6068(b) to maintain respect for the court and was thus in contempt of court under CCP §1209(a)(3), (5).

§16.21 a. Arguing with judge in front of jury

Arguing with a judge or disputing the judge's ruling in front of the jury is usually improper. Justice Kane in the concurring opinion in In re Grossman (1972) 24 CA3d 624, 640, 101 CR 176, noted that each lawyer should be conclusively presumed to know that.

For evidentiary objections generally, most courts require that argument on objections beyond a few statements be heard outside the jurors' hearing at the sidebar or, when there will be extended discussion, in chambers. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.41-8.43. To be heard on such a matter, counsel can simply ask: "Your honor, may we approach the bench?" To protect the record, the court reporter should be present to record the arguments, whether made at the sidebar or in chambers. On need for a timely and proper objection to avoid waiver, see §§16.91-16.93, chap 11. On making trial objections and preserving the record generally, see chap 15.

PRACTICE TIP: When the issue is significant, immediately request the court's permission to approach the bench. If your request is granted, discuss the issue at the sidebar or in chambers and be sure the court reporter is present to record it. If the request is denied, at that time or at the recess, ask for a hearing on the matter during the recess. If the judge permits the hearing, discuss the issue out of the jurors' presence but with the court reporter present.

NOTE: If you wait until the next normal recess, you risk prejudicing the client's case in the jurors' eyes.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.22 b. General scope of advocacy

In protecting the client's interests, counsel has the right to press legitimate argument and to protest an erroneous ruling. In re Hallinan (1969) 71 C2d 1179, 1183, 81 CR 1; Gallagher v Municipal Court (1948) 31 C2d 784, 794, 192 P2d 905; McCan v Municipal Court (1990) 221 CA3d 527, 270 CR 640. An attorney must be given substantial freedom of expression in representing the client. In re Hallinan, supra; Gallagher v Municipal Court, supra.

According to the court in Gallagher, an attorney addressing the court may do the following (31 C2d at 795):

- Combat and strongly contest adverse views expressed by the judge during argument;
- Object and protest against any course that the judge may take, which the attorney thinks is irregular or detrimental to the client's interest, and
- Caution the jurors against the judge's interfering with their function (or with the attorney when addressing the jurors), or against any strong view adverse to the client expressed by the judge on the facts of the case before a jury verdict is reached.

PRACTICE TIP: You can use legitimate argument to persuade the judge on questions of law arising during the trial (e.g., on the propriety of asking certain questions or on the admissibility of certain evidence (see Evid C §310)), as long as the judge indicates an open mind on the subject under consideration.

After the court has ruled on the matter, respectfully yield to the court's ruling. People v McKenzie (1983) 34 C3d 616, 632, 194 CR 462; Hawk v Superior Court (1974) 42 CA3d 108, 130, 116 CR 713; In re Grossman (1930) 109 CA 625, 293 P 683; Hallinan v Superior Court (1925) 74 CA 420, 240 P 788. If the ruling is adverse, do not resist it or insult the judge; respectfully preserve the point (on the record) for appeal. See In re Buckley (1973) 10 C3d 237, 253 n21, 110 CR 121; Hawk v Superior Court, supra. Counsel's repeated efforts to introduce evidence that the judge ruled inadmissible was an attempt to gain unfair advantage and is punishable as contempt. Trans-Action Commercial Investors, Ltd. v Firmaterr, Inc. (1997) 60 CA4th 352, 70 CR2d 449. However, you have the right to respectfully request that the court reconsider its adverse rulings. Hawk v Superior Court, supra.

§16.23 c. Attorney's right to argue against, or test validity of, a ruling

Counsel has the privilege (if not the duty) to argue an objection before the trial judge rules on it, unless requested or instructed not to do so by the court.

EXAMPLE: In Bennett v Superior Court (1946) 73 CA2d 203, 216, 166 P2d 318, the court held that trial counsel's conduct in presenting argument on an objection after the court had ruled on the objection was performed with the court's express consent and did not constitute contempt.

An attorney cannot disregard a court ruling, or advise a client to do so, but can, in good faith, take appropriate steps to test the validity of the ruling. See Hawk v Superior Court (1974) 42 CA3d 108, 116, 116 CR 713 (attorney's conduct in advising client to violate lawful court order requiring client's handwriting exemplars to be provided violated attorney's duty under Bus & P C §6068(b) and constituted contempt under CCP §1209(a)(3), (8)).

EXAMPLE: Under Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-210 a member of the state bar:

- Must not advise the violation of any law, rule, or ruling of a tribunal unless the member believes in good faith that the law, rule, or ruling is invalid; but
- May take appropriate steps in good faith to test the validity of any law, rule, or ruling of a tribunal.

NOTE: Rule 3-210 became effective after the decision in Hawk v Superior Court, supra.

PRACTICE TIP: When circumstances warrant, if confronted with what appears to be an invalid court ruling, request the court (out of the jurors' presence and on the record) to stay the ruling, and then test it by appropriate writ.

§16.24 d. Judge's duty to protect court's integrity

The court has a right to expect and demand that attorneys conduct themselves in a courteous, professional manner. In re Grossman (1972) 24 CA3d 624, 629, 101 CR 176. When aggressive advocacy by counsel gives way to insolence and disrespect toward the court, it is the trial judge's duty to protect the court's integrity. In re Buckley (1973) 10 C3d 237, 249, 110 CR 121. On contempt generally, see §§16.99-16.129.

EXAMPLE: In Buckley, the court held that counsel's statement that "This Court obviously doesn't want to apply the law" constituted an attack on the court's integrity and was held contemptuous on its face.

Further research: For further discussion, see Gilmore, Professional Responsibility Problems and Contempt in Advocacy, 12 San Diego L Rev 288 (1975). See also Anno, Attorney's Addressing Allegedly Insulting Remarks to Court During Course of Trial as Contempt, 68 ALR3d 273 (1976); Anno, Conduct of Attorney in Connection With Making Objections or Taking Exceptions as Contempt of Court, 68 ALR3d 314 (1976).

§16.25 2. Affirmative duty to inform court of misrepresentation

A misrepresentation to the court, whether negligent or intentional, invokes an immediate, affirmative duty on realization to > inform the court and to request that it set aside any orders based upon such misrepresentation; also counsel should not attempt to benefit from such improvidently entered orders.

Datig v Dove Books, Inc. (1999) 73 CA4th 964, 981, 87 CR2d 719. An attorney's actions must be "consistent with truth," and never misleading to the judge or any judicial officer by any "artifice or false statement of fact or law." Bus & P C §6068(d). See a similar provision in Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-200. The willful presentation to the court, through pleadings or other means, of facts that counsel knows to be untrue constitutes professional misconduct. See Paonessa v State Bar (1954) 43 C2d 222, 272 P2d 510.

The conduct prohibited by Bus & P C §6068(d) and Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-200 is not necessarily that which successfully misleads the court, but rather that which tends to mislead the court. See Vaughn v Municipal Court (1967) 252 CA2d 348, 358, 60 CR 575 (misrepresentation of fact for purpose of obtaining a continuance). When actual deception is intended, actual harm need not result to merit disciplinary action against an attorney. Coviello v State Bar (1955) 45 C2d 57, 65, 286 P2d 357.

An attorney is prohibited from:

- Misquoting to a judge or a judicial officer the language of a book, statute, or decision (Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-200(C)); or
- Citing as authority an overruled decision or a statute that has been repealed or declared unconstitutional when counsel knows the authority is invalid, and not disclosing that knowledge (Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-200(D)).

Deceiving or misleading the court may also take the form of conduct such as concealment. Daily v Superior Court (1935) 4 CA2d 127, 40 P2d 936. Reckless misstatements of law and fact, if made for an improper purpose, will expose an attorney to the possibility of being sanctioned. Fink v Gomez (9th Cir 2001) 239 F3d 989.

EXAMPLES: In Daily, a judge who was unfamiliar with the motion calendar, and who was hearing only uncontested matters, sat in for the regular vacationing judge. Attorneys were held in contempt for failing to disclose to the judge, during an ex parte motion to obtain funds deposited in court, that the calendar contained various contested motions concerning the same funds. See also Sullins v State Bar (1975) 15 C3d 609, 125 CR 471 (attorney disciplined by public reproof for concealing existence of pertinent letter in connection with petition for court approval of 50-percent contingency fee); Russell v Dopp (1995) 36 CA4th 765, 42 CR2d 768 (representation by lawyer not licensed to practice in California is misconduct and fraud on the court, justifying new trial).

Further research: See also Code of Judicial Ethics, Canon 3B(3)-(4). On prohibition against citing an unpublished opinion of a court of appeal or a superior court appellate department (and exceptions) see Cal Rules of Ct 8.1115.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.26 3. Must argue fairly

It is unethical to mislead an opponent by concealing or withholding positions in the opening statement and then expounding on them during closing argument. See generally McCullough v Langer (1937) 23 CA2d 510, 525, 73 P2d 649. See also Cortez v Macias (1980) 110 CA3d 640, 657, 167 CR 905.

It is improper for plaintiff's counsel to wait for rebuttal argument to argue for an amount of damages when no mention of an amount was made in the opening statement. Cain v State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1975) 47 CA3d 783, 121 CR 200. On misconduct in arguing matters not in evidence, see §16.41.

Further research: See chap 19 for discussion of closing arguments.

§16.27 4. Handling news media releases

In some circumstances, statements by counsel to the news media concerning a pending or anticipated trial may be ethically improper. A party has the right to have a case adjudicated by an impartial jury. Dissemination of information about a case can defeat this right by influencing the judge or jury. The American Bar Association Model Rules of Professional Conduct set forth standards of permissible conduct concerning trial publicity by lawyers dealing with the press. The California Rules of Professional Conduct do not provide comparable standards. At times, particularly in cases that have attracted high publicity, news media releases may constitute misconduct. See §16.39.

On instances of when a publication may constitute contempt by the publisher, see 7 Witkin, California Procedure, Trial §§208-209 (5th ed 2008).

§16.28 5. Avoid private communications with court

Except for ex parte matters, an attorney must not directly or indirectly communicate with or argue to a judge or judicial officer the merits of any contested matter pending before the judge or judicial officer except (Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-300(B); see also Code of Judicial Ethics, Canon 3B(7)):

- In open court;
- With consent of all other counsel;
- In the presence of all other counsel; or
- In writing with a copy to all other counsel.

PRACTICE TIP: It is very easy to violate this rule, especially regarding procedural questions. Do not talk to or write to a judge about anything to do with a case unless you include opposing counsel, or opposing party if unrepresented by counsel.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.29 6. Avoid gifts to judge or court officials

An attorney should not, either directly or indirectly, give or lend anything of value to a judge, official, or employee of a tribunal, unless the attorney has a personal or family relationship with the judge, official, or employee and they customarily exchange gifts. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-300(A). See CCP §170.9 regarding limitations on acceptance of gifts by judges (judge cannot accept gifts whose total value is greater than $250 from any single source in any calendar year). See also Adams v Commission on Judicial Performance (1995) 10 C4th 866, 884, 42 CR2d 606 (supreme court held that a judge who received gifts from a lawyer who occasionally appeared before him, even though there was no quid pro quo showing, and who provided legal advice to that lawyer's firm, had engaged in misconduct justifying the judge's removal from the bench).

§16.30 7. Be punctual

Be punctual at court during the trial of a case unless you have a valid excuse. Lyons v Superior Court (1955) 43 C2d 755, 758, 278 P2d 681 (counsel who had no valid excuse held in contempt for failing to appear in court at announced hour for resumption of trial).

An attorney cannot unreasonably delay a trial for personal matters within the attorney's control. Lyons v Superior Court, supra. See also People v Tabb (1991) 228 CA3d 1300, 279 CR 480 (court sanctioned counsel under CCP §177.5 for failure to appear on time at scheduled hearing).

PRACTICE TIP: If unavoidably detained because of an emergency, be sure to phone the court and explain your delay.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.31 C. Ethical conduct toward opposing counsel

The adversary process can sometimes lead to intemperate remarks concerning opposing counsel. An attorney must "advance no fact prejudicial to the honor or reputation of a party or witness, unless required by the justice of the cause with which he or she is charged." Bus & P C §6068(f).

PRACTICE TIP: Avoid any unfair or derogatory personal reference to opposing counsel. Remember that the parties are the litigants; even if ill feelings exist between you and opposing counsel, do not let those feelings influence your conduct, attitude, or demeanor.

Personal attacks on opposing counsel can be grounds for contempt. In Hawk v Superior Court (1974) 42 CA3d 108, 129, 116 CR 713, the court noted that "[i]t is unprofessional conduct for a lawyer to engage in behavior or tactics purposely calculated to irritate or annoy the court or the prosecutor." After being warned, an attorney in Hawk was held in contempt of court on several grounds, including reference to the prosecutor as a "high-priced lawyer." The court held that this behavior was calculated to irritate the prosecutor and to annoy the court, and constituted a violation of counsel's duty to abstain from all "offensive personality." See also People v Pitts (1990) 223 CA3d 606, 704, 273 CR 757 (new trial granted for improper conduct, including casting aspersions on opposing counsel).

PRACTICE TIP: Even more devastating to your case than a contempt charge may be a judge's explanation to a jury that you have inappropriately tried to sway them by your tactics.

© The Regents of the University of California

D. Ethical conduct toward clients

1. Control of litigation

§16.32 a. Procedural matters

An attorney has authority to bind the client in procedural matters that arise during the course of litigation (Linsk v Linsk (1969) 70 C2d 272, 276, 74 CR 544; 1 Witkin, California Procedure, Attorneys §244 (5th ed 2008)) through either written or oral stipulations, or by admissions of fact made by counsel in open court (see Price v McComish (1937) 22 CA2d 92, 96, 70 P2d 978). Attorneys may bind their clients in any of the steps of an action or proceeding by agreement filed with the clerk, or entered on the minutes of the court, but not otherwise. CCP §283.

Authority to bind the client in procedural matters extends to tactical decisions. See Duffy v Griffith Co. (1962) 206 CA2d 780, 787, 24 CR 161 (at trial, counsel "must have and exercise discretion to make such tactical decisions as the exigencies of the combat may dictate").

EXAMPLE: In Diamond Springs Lime Co. v American River Constructors (1971) 16 CA3d 581, 607, 94 CR 200, trial counsel made a discretionary tactical maneuver sacrificing potential recovery from one adverse party to fortify potential recovery from the other. During closing argument, plaintiff's trial counsel invited the jury to return a verdict solely against one defendant—an implicit invitation to reach a verdict exonerating the other defendant. The court noted that this tactical maneuver did not exceed the attorney's authority (16 CA3d at 607) and held that "plaintiff's request for a verdict against one defendant alone was an effective waiver of its rights to appeal from the verdict exonerating the other defendant" (16 CA3d at 608).

The attorney, not the client, makes the ultimate decision on procedural matters. See Zurich Gen. Acc. & Liab. Ins. Co. v Kinsler (1938) 12 C2d 98, 105, 81 P2d 913, overruled on other grounds in Fracasse v Brent (1972) 6 C3d 784, 792, 100 CR 385. See also Giouzelis v McDonald (1981) 119 CA3d 436, 445, 174 CR 58.

EXAMPLE: In Nahhas v Pacific Greyhound Lines (1961) 192 CA2d 145, 13 CR 299, counsel represented two plaintiffs in a personal injury action. One plaintiff, who was not an eyewitness to the accident in question and whose only interest was damage to his truck, wished to testify. Counsel refused to call the plaintiff, believing that the subject of damage to the plaintiff's truck had been amply covered and that the subject matters to which plaintiff wished to testify were incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and would prejudice the coplaintiff's case. The appellate court held that an attorney has the prerogative, if not the duty, not to call a witness to testify, even though the client desires the witness to testify, when the attorney believes the testimony would be detrimental to the best interests of the client's case. 192 CA2d at 146.

An attorney has the authority to bind a client in resolving discovery orders. Young v Rosenthal (1989) 212 CA3d 96, 116, 260 CR 369.

Further research: For examples of procedural matters over which the attorney has ultimate control, and substantive matters over which the client retains ultimate control, see Linsk v Linsk (1969) 70 C2d 272, 74 CR 544.

§16.33 b. Client's substantive rights

An attorney has no right to impair a client's substantive rights; the client retains ultimate control over them. An attorney may not impair, compromise, settle, surrender, or destroy a client's substantive rights without the client's consent. Blanton v Womancare, Inc. (1985) 38 C3d 396, 407, 212 CR 151 (mere retention of services of an attorney does not authorize attorney to enter into binding arbitration agreement on behalf of client in absence of client's consent); CPI Builders, Inc. v Impco Technols., Inc. (2001) 94 CA4th 1167, 1172, 114 CR2d 851 (holding that an attorney is not authorized to impair the client's substantial rights); Romadka v Hoge (1991) 232 CA3d 1231, 283 CR 878.

EXAMPLE: In Romadka v Hoge, supra, an attorney mistakenly marked the "with prejudice" section of a voluntary dismissal form that the trial court refused to vacate. The court of appeal held that the dismissal was invalid because the attorney lacked her clients' authority to surrender their substantive rights; there was no reason for the trial court not to have believed the attorney's declaration and testimony that the attorney acted without authority and by mistake.

An attorney must be specifically authorized to settle and compromise a lawsuit; the relationship with the client does not provide an implied authority to bind the client to a settlement. Levy v Superior Court (1995) 10 C4th 578, 586, 41 CR2d 878. See Gauss v GAF Corp. (2002) 103 CA4th 1110, 127 CR2d 370; 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Proceedings Without Trial §120 (5th ed 2008).

§16.34 c. Effect of stipulations by counsel

Oral stipulations by counsel can bind the parties even if not entered in the minutes of the court or filed with the clerk if the parties have acted in reliance on the stipulation. Harding v Collazo (1986) 177 CA3d 1044, 223 CR 329.

EXAMPLE 1: In Harding, the court held that the parties were bound to an oral stipulation that a hearing on a demurrer and a motion to strike be taken off calendar in exchange for the in pro per plaintiff's agreement to file an amended complaint by a certain day; plaintiff admitted to the oral stipulation and had received benefits from it, and defendants had given up rights and advantages in reliance on the stipulation.

EXAMPLE 2: In Blanton v Womancare, Inc. (1985) 38 C3d 396, 212 CR 151, an attorney who had been retained to prosecute a malpractice action entered into a stipulation to have the matter arbitrated without the client's express consent. The nature of the stipulation was such that it could be viewed as either an agreement for judicial arbitration governed by CCP §§1141.10-1141.32 or an agreement for private arbitration governed by CCP §§1280-1288.8. The supreme court held that the attorney had no apparent authority to bind the client by entering into the stipulation. The court noted that (38 C3d at 407):

> [T]he agreement did not constitute a tactical maneuver in pending litigation; rather, it called for a diversion of the dispute from the judicial to the arbitral arena.… [A]n attorney, merely by virtue of his employment as such, has no apparent authority to bind his client to an agreement for arbitration.… When a client engages an attorney to litigate in a judicial forum, the client has a right to be consulted, and his consent obtained, before the dispute is shifted to another, and quite different… forum.

EXAMPLE 3: The court in Marriage of Helsel (1988) 198 CA3d 332, 243 CR 657, applied Blanton to a stipulation between counsel that resolved several disputed issues. The court held that the trial court must determine whether the stipulation "substantially resolved the pending controversy." If so, it may be enforced only if the attorney was authorized to enter into the agreement. 198 CA3d at 340.

§16.35 d. Counsel's ethical obligations versus unethical actions authorized by client

Although classified as an "agent" (see 1 Witkin, California Procedure, Attorneys §§235-236 (5th ed 2008)), lawyers are also officers of the court with corresponding rights and duties under the legal and ethical rules governing the practice of law. Some actions authorized by the client may be improper to carry out because of counsel's ethical obligations as an officer of the court.

A lawyer may not seek or accept employment to accomplish any of the following objectives (Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-200):

- Bring a legal action, conduct a defense, assert a position in litigation, or otherwise take steps solely to harass or maliciously injure a person; or
- Present a claim or defense not warranted under existing law, unless the lawyer can support it by good faith argument for an extension, modification, or reversal of existing law.

When confronted by a client who wants to commit perjury, first try to persuade the client to testify truthfully. If unsuccessful, advise the client of the consequences of perjury and that you will be forced to make a motion to withdraw (see §16.37) if the client is still intent on testifying falsely. If the client is adamant, move to withdraw so as not to give implied consent to the use of perjurious testimony in violation of Bus & P C §6128(a). People v Brown (1988) 203 CA3d 1335, 1339 n1, 250 CR 762.

EXAMPLE: In Price v Giles (1987) 196 CA3d 1469, 242 CR 559, the court held that an attorney's claim during jury argument that his own client (defendant) had been less than candid and engaged in collusion with an opposing party constituted misconduct toward his client, even though the client prevailed in the action, and that such conduct deprived plaintiff of a fair trial.

Further research: On a client's being bound by ratifying an unauthorized stipulation, see City of Fresno v Baboian (1975) 52 CA3d 753, 125 CR 332.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.36 2. Duty to represent client competently

Do not perform legal services for a client if you know or reasonably should know that you do not possess the ordinary knowledge and skill of lawyers who perform, but do not specialize in, similar services. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-110. Failure to represent a client competently may give rise to a malpractice action and subject you to disciplinary proceedings. See, e.g., Lewis v State Bar (1981) 28 C3d 683, 170 CR 634.

A lawyer who lacks learning and skills may associate, or when appropriate, consult professionally, with another lawyer who has the requisite knowledge and skill. "Ability" includes the state of being mentally, emotionally, and physically able to perform competent legal services. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-110(B). The duties of Rule 3-110 include supervising the work of subordinate attorneys in performing work for a client.

The duty of loyalty to one's client is fundamental. An attorney who offers to sell out a client in return for a large cash payment violates that duty and is properly disqualified. Any fees the attorney may have earned after that offer are impliedly forfeited. Cal Pak Delivery, Inc. v United Parcel Serv., Inc. (1997) 52 CA4th 1, 14, 60 CR2d 207. The court has inherent power to control the conduct of its officers, including lawyers, under CCP §128. 52 CA4th at 80.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.37 3. Duty to represent client within bounds of law

A lawyer has a duty to represent the client zealously, but the representation must be within the bounds of law (which includes disciplinary rules and enforceable professional obligations). See Hawk v Superior Court (1974) 42 CA3d 108, 126, 116 CR 713. See also Bus & P C §6068(a), (c)-(d); Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-700(B)-(C), 5-200.

When to withdraw. A lawyer must withdraw from representing a client if the lawyer knows or should know that the client is (Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-700(B)):

- Bringing a legal action, conducting a defense, asserting a position in litigation, or otherwise taking steps solely to harass or maliciously injure a person or solely out of spite;
- Taking or prosecuting an appeal merely for delay, or for any other reason not in good faith; or

If Rule 3-700(B) does not apply, withdrawal is permissible under Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-700(C) if the client:

- Insists on "presenting a claim or defense that is not warranted under existing law and cannot be supported by good faith argument for an extension, modification, or reversal of existing law";
- Seeks to pursue an illegal course of conduct; or
- Insists that the lawyer pursue an illegal course of conduct or prohibited conduct under the California Rules of Professional Conduct or the State Bar Act

Withdrawal is also permissible under Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-700(B)-(C) if the lawyer's continued employment is likely to result in a violation of the California Rules of Professional Conduct or the State Bar Act.

Further research: On the lawyer's obligations and procedure to follow when confronted with potential or actual perjury by the client or a witness for the client, see People v Brown (1988) 203 CA3d 1335, 1339, 250 CR 762. See People v Guzman (1988) 45 C3d 915, 941, 248 CR 467, overruled in Price v Superior Court (2001) 25 C4th 1046, 1069 n13, 108 CR2d 409, for the procedure of allowing narrative testimony by a client who wants to commit perjury against counsel's advice in a criminal case. See also chap 5 on preparing witnesses for trial and chap 11 on examining witnesses.

§16.38 4. When attorney is witness for client

Attempting to be both advocate and witness impairs an attorney's credibility as witness and diminishes the attorney's effectiveness as advocate. Comden v Superior Court (1978) 20 C3d 906, 912, 145 CR 9. In Comden, the supreme court interpreted former Cal Rules of Prof Cond 2-111(A)(4) and concluded that the trial court had not abused its discretion in ordering withdrawal of a law firm from representing plaintiffs after it was determined that a member of the firm ought to be called as a witness for plaintiffs at trial.

After the decision in Comden, former Cal Rules of Prof Cond 2-111 (now Rule 5-210), was adopted to provide standards for the advocate-witness. If a client's lawyer knows on or after undertaking employment, that it may be necessary to testify on the client's behalf before a jury concerning the subject matter of the employment, the lawyer may continue to represent the client with the client's written consent. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-210.

The fact that a lawyer may conceivably be a witness is not dispositive of whether the lawyer will be or should be disqualified. Smith, Smith & Kring v Superior Court (1997) 60 CA4th 573, 580, 70 CR2d 507 (lawyer who had represented defendant in underlying case now represented plaintiff's former lawyer in malpractice action; no factual showing that lawyer would be witness; further, being party adverse to plaintiff in both cases fails to show detriment to plaintiff).

EXAMPLE: In Reynolds v Superior Court (1986) 177 CA3d 1021, 223 CR 258, the court held that the trial court may disqualify counsel under former Cal Rules of Prof Cond 2-111(A)(4) only when it is confronted with manifest interests that it must protect from prejudice. Citing Lyle v Superior Court (1981) 122 CA3d 470, 175 CR 918, the court held that when attorneys for a party in a pending proceeding are key witnesses in the litigation and thus subject to disqualification under former Rule 2-111(A)(4), the client's consent to the dual capacity must be given great weight. The court found that the trial court should resolve a close case in favor of the client's right to representation by the attorney of the client's choice. The trial court must also determine whether the proposed testimony by counsel is really necessary or relevant. The appellate court thus held that the trial court erred in granting an attorney's motion to disqualify a former client's current counsel from representing her in an action brought by the attorney to recover fees for work performed in a will contest. The attorney had withdrawn as counsel and had been replaced by current counsel, whom the attorney intended to call as a key witness.

Disqualification may not be warranted when there is no prejudice to the client. In Brown v DeRugeris (1979) 92 CA3d 895, 155 CR 301, the court held that the trial court did not commit error by not disqualifying defendant's attorney, who was called as a witness under Evid C §776 and whose testimony did not prejudice the client. See also Graphic Process Co. v Superior Court (1979) 95 CA3d 43, 156 CR 841 (disqualification denied in absence of showing that client would be prejudiced by trial counsel's testimony).

§16.39 a. When written consent required

Written consent must be obtained after the client (see Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-210):

- Has been fully advised of the possible effects of the dual role as to the outcome of the client's case; and
- Has had a reasonable opportunity to seek the advice of independent counsel on the matter.

PRACTICE TIP: File written consent no later than the beginning of trial.

§16.40 b. When written consent not required

Written consent is not required if the lawyer's testimony relates solely to the following (Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-210):

- An uncontested matter; or
- The nature and value of legal services rendered in the case.

When a lawyer represents a governmental entity, consent must be obtained from the head of the office (or designee) by which the lawyer is employed and must be consistent with the principles of recusal. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-210.

§16.41 5. Representing multiple parties

A conflict of interest may occur when a lawyer is asked to represent two parties in the course of litigation. For example, a conflict may arise when:

- An employer and employee disagree over whether the employer ratified the employee's conduct, or whether the employee acted in the course and scope of employment;
- Unnamed partners in a partnership disagree with a named defendant partner; or
- In a comparative fault setting, a father must be named as a defendant regarding his son's injuries in an automobile accident.

Counsel owes a duty to maintain clients' confidence and preserve their secrets. Bus & P C §6068(e); see Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-310 (avoiding representation of adverse interests). For example, Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-310(E) prohibits a lawyer from accepting employment adverse to a client or former client without that client's informed and written consent when the lawyer has obtained confidential information material to the employment; Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-310(B) prohibits an attorney from representing conflicting interests except with the written consent of all parties concerned. See, e.g., Cal W. Nurseries v Superior Court (2005) 129 CA4th 1170, 29 CR3d 170 (law firm disqualified because it represented adverse party in another, unrelated matter). In Apple Computer, Inc. v Superior Court (2005) 126 CA4th 1253, 24 CR3d 818, a law firm was disqualified as class counsel because a member of the firm was a class representative (plaintiff and his firm's financial interest in recovering attorney fees conflicted with their duty to maximize class's recovery).

When there is an actual, present, simultaneous representation, a more stringent test for disqualification applies. In re Charlisse C. (2008) 45 C4th 145, 159, 84 CR3d 597.

EXAMPLE: In Truck Ins. Exch. v Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. (1992) 6 CA4th 1050, 8 CR2d 228, Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-310 was strictly construed. The court held that a law firm may not avoid per se automatic disqualification when it concurrently represents clients whose interests conflict by withdrawing from representation of one client in favor of the other. The court distinguished between rules applying to former representation and to concurrent representation. The duty of undivided loyalty owed to each client currently represented causes disqualification, absent the informed written consent from each client whose interests were in conflict.

A conflict of interest may arise whenever a lawyer's representation of one jointly represented client renders representation of the other less effective. See Spindle v Chubb/Pacific Indem. Group (1979) 89 CA3d 706, 713, 152 CR 776. In Spindle, the court distinguished a "divergence of interest" between jointly represented clients from a "conflict of interest" between them. The court noted that a divergence of interest is not an actionable impropriety, but counsel must disclose to each of the jointly represented clients whatever is necessary for them to make intelligent, informed decisions.

Conflicts may also occur when one client pays for the representation of another client; for example, when a corporation pays for the defense of its employee, when an insurance company pays for the defense of its insured, or when a parent pays for the defense of a child. An attorney must avoid any adverse influence from the party paying the attorney fees and exercise independent judgment on behalf of the client whom the attorney represents. See generally Lysick v Walcom (1968) 258 CA2d 136, 65 CR 406; Pennix v Winton (1943) 61 CA2d 761, 143 P2d 940. See also Morrison Knudsen Corp. v Hancock, Rothert & Bunshoft, LLP (1999) 69 CA4th 223, 81 CR2d 425 (representing insurance underwriters of parent corporation in matters involving parent corporation disqualifies firm from representing party adverse to subsidiary when firm received information substantially related to dispute involving subsidiary and parent and subsidiary had sufficient unity of interest to treat them as one entity for purposes of alleged conflict). But see Brooklyn Navy Yard Cogeneration Partners v Superior Court (1997) 60 CA4th 248, 252, 70 CR2d 419 (representation of subsidiary corporation on unrelated matters not per se conflict to representing party adverse to parent unless one corporation is alter ego of other). See also Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp. v La Conchita Ranch Co. (1998) 68

CA4th 856, 80 CR2d 634 (party may not create conflict when none exists merely by filing meritless cross-complaint seeking to make interests of opposing attorney's clients adverse to one another); Forrest v Baeza (1997) 58 CA4th 65, 79, 67 CR2d 857 (joint representation of two shareholders of closely held corporation not per se disqualification, when actions of shareholders and corporations so intertwined that any distinction was fictional).

§16.42 6. Representing client with interests adverse to former client's interests

When an attorney represents a client with interests adverse to those of a former client, disqualification requires a substantial relationship between the former and current representation, so that the attorney would normally have received, through the former representation, confidential information that is material to the current dispute. See Marriage of Zimmerman (1993) 16 CA4th 556, 20 CR2d 132; H. F. Ahmanson & Co. v Salomon Bros. (1991) 229 CA3d 1445, 280 CR 614.

A former client may seek to disqualify a former attorney as well as the former attorney's new law firm from representation when a substantial relationship exists between the former and current representation. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 3-310(E); Ochoa v Fordel, Inc. (2007) 146 CA4th 898, 907, 53 CR3d 277; City Nat'l Bank v Adams (2002) 96 CA4th 315, 117 CR2d 125; Henriksen v Great Am. Sav. & Loan (1992) 11 CA4th 109, 14 CR2d 184.

EXAMPLE 1: The court in Henriksen held that a law firm could not continue to represent a client when, during pending litigation, it hired an associate who formerly represented the adverse party in the same proceeding. The associate's disqualification resulted in the law firm's vicarious disqualification, even though the law firm took careful steps to insulate the new associate from any involvement in the current litigation.

EXAMPLE 2: In the public sector context, in City of Santa Barbara v Superior Court (2004) 122 CA4th 17, 23, 18 CR3d 403, vicarious disqualification of an entire city attorney's office was not required when a private firm attorney who worked on a particular case against the city moved to the city attorney's office but was not involved in the case, had no managerial duties, and an ethical wall was constructed to prevent disclosure of confidential information. The California Supreme Court reached the opposite conclusion in City & County of San Francisco v Cobra Solutions, Inc. (2006) 38 C4th 839, 848, 43 CR3d 771. There, the city was in litigation with a company that the city attorney had previously represented while in private practice, and the litigation was substantially related to the prior representation. Under the circumstances, an ethical screen was insufficient; there was no reason to believe that the city attorney knew of the company's alleged kickback scheme but, as the head of the government law office, the city attorney's entire office had to be disqualified. See also In re Charlisse C. (2008) 45 C4th 145, 160, 84 CR3d 597 (affirming reversal of order that disqualified nonprofit law center from representing minor in dependency action because different unit of law center had previously represented minor's mother).

EXAMPLE 3: In the criminal arena, the court in Rhaburn v Superior Court (2006) 140 CA4th 1566, 45 CR3d 464, concluded the trial court erred by applying a rigid vicarious disqualification rule to situations involving the public defender's office that had previously represented a witness for the prosecution in one case and the victim in another. The court held that because trial counsel did not have a "direct and personal relationship" with the witness (or the victim), the "direct acquisition of confidential information need not (and should not) be presumed." 140 CA4th at 1581 (emphasis in original). Under Rhaburn's flexible approach, courts "should evaluate the totality of the circumstances" to determine "whether there is a reasonable possibility that … confidential information" has been obtained. 140 CA4th at 1581. The court identified several factors to be considered, including "the length of time that has elapsed" since the prior representation. 140 CA4th at 1581.

An attorney armed with confidential information who switches sides while litigation is pending may cause the disqualification of the entire new law firm because of the need to maintain the high ethical standards of professional responsibility. See In re Complex Asbestos Litig. (1991) 232 CA3d 572, 283 CR 732 (firm disqualified from nine cases, but not from another 11 cases pending in another county). This rule is limited to the receipt of attorney-client information with respect to the prior client, not information gained from other litigation sources, e.g., the subsequent client. Strasbourger Pearson Tulcin Wolff Inc. v Wiz Technol., Inc. (1999) 69 CA4th 1399, 1410, 82 CR2d 326.

§16.43 7. Avoid emotional involvement

An attorney should avoid any emotional involvement in the client's case that impairs objectivity. An attorney who becomes emotionally involved may become a combatant and no longer see issues objectively or serve the client dispassionately as a counselor. See Bus & P C §6106.8, which prohibits sexual involvement between lawyers and clients.

E. Ethical conduct toward jury

1. Communication with or investigation of jurors prohibited

§16.44 a. Before trial

Before trial of a case, an attorney may not communicate directly or indirectly with anyone known to be a member of the panel from which the jury will be selected. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-320(A).

Although a background investigation of the prospective panel is not expressly prohibited by the California Rules of Professional Conduct, an attorney may not directly or indirectly conduct an out-of-court investigation of a juror or a prospective juror in a manner likely to influence that person in present or future jury service. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-320(E). All restrictions imposed on an attorney by Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-320 also apply to communications with or investigations of members of the family of anyone who is either a prospective juror or an actual juror. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-320(B).

NOTE: If jurors are permitted to separate either during the trial or after the case is submitted to them, the judge must warn them that they may not converse with, or be addressed by, another person on any subject of the trial, or express an opinion about the case until it is finally submitted to them. CCP §611. See §§17.3, 17.6, 21.11.

§16.45 b. After trial

After trial, communications with members of the jury are permitted, but an attorney may not ask questions or make comments intended to harass or embarrass jurors or to influence their actions in future jury service. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-320(D).

NOTE: Attorneys may not provide information to jurors that they were prevented from knowing during the trial.

Trial lawyers often discuss jurors' impressions of the trial with jurors willing to do so after trial. This discussion should remain on a professional level and avoid any adverse comments on the jury's reasoning or results.

EXAMPLE: In Lind v Medevac, Inc. (1990) 219 CA3d 516, 521, 268 CR 359, the prevailing counsel wrote to the jurors after the trial to discourage them from talking to plaintiff's counsel. The court held that, because prevailing counsel's intention was to chill any attempt to find evidence of jury misconduct, the letter violated former Cal Rules of Prof Cond 7-106 (now Rule 5-320).

§16.46 2. Avoid undue solicitude for jurors

It is improper for a trial attorney to curry favor with jurors by undue solicitude for their comfort. For example, during trial it can be improper to discuss in the jury's presence the length of each trial session or the time or place of the jury's retiring. See Atchison, T. & S.F. Ry. v Southern Pac. Co. (1936) 13 CA2d 505, 509, 57 P2d 575, disapproved on other grounds in Klopping v Whittier (1972) 8 C3d 39, 49, 104 CR 1, and County of Los Angeles v Faus (1957) 48 C2d 672, 680, 312 P2d 680.

An attorney who has questions about the length of a trial session or the jury's comfort should discuss the matter out of the jurors' presence, e.g., in the judge's chambers. See also Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 3.25(f), which provides that the trial judge should not permit counsel during voir dire examination to question the jurors about their comfort, except in unusual circumstances, to ensure the selection of a fair and impartial jury.

Further research: For other examples of improper attempts to influence the jury, see Whitfield v Roth (1974) 10 C3d 874, 890, 112 CR 540 (candy and cigars given to jurors when attorney's wife gave birth); Neumann v Bishop (1976) 59 CA3d 451, 473, 130 CR 786 (individual jurors addressed by name during argument).

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.47 3. Report juror misconduct

A lawyer must reveal promptly to the court any knowledge of improper conduct by a juror or prospective juror, or by another person toward a prospective juror, a juror, or a member of the juror's family. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-320(G).

PRACTICE TIP: Bring any such knowledge promptly to the trial judge's attention, with a court reporter present to make a record. The court then can conduct whatever investigation is considered necessary.

Failure to report knowledge of improper conduct may constitute a waiver of any claimed error on appeal. See generally Weathers v Kaiser Found. Hosps. (1971) 5 C3d 98, 103, 95 CR 516. For further discussion, see §16.82.

Further research: On jury management and misconduct, see §§25.22-25.71.

F. Ethical conduct toward witnesses

1. Compensation of lay and expert witnesses

§16.48 a. Compensation must not depend on outcome of trial

An agreement to pay a lay or expert witness a fee contingent on the outcome of a lawsuit is void as against public policy. Pelkey v Hodge (1931) 112 CA 424, 296 P 908. See Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-310(B). A contract of this kind offers an inducement to perjury. Pelkey v Hodge, supra. Make clear that compensation paid to a lay or expert witness and the witness's testimony are unrelated. See Los Angeles County Bar Ass'n Informal Ethical Opinion No. 1954-6.

EXAMPLE: In Ojeda v Sharp Cabrillo Hosp. (1992) 8 CA4th 1, 10 CR2d 230, a plaintiff in a medical malpractice case validly contracted with a consulting service to assist the plaintiff's counsel in return for a 20-percent contingency fee from the plaintiff's recovery. The court ruled the agreement did not violate public policy or any rule of conduct and approved a contingency fee to a consulting firm that helped review medical records and obtain expert witnesses. The consulting firm members were not going to testify and did not engage in the practice of law, and counsel retained complete control of the litigation.

Further research: For an opinion discussing the professional responsibility of state bar members to see that contingent fees are not paid for the testimony of witnesses, see State Bar of Cal, Standing Comm on Prof Resp & Cond, Formal Opinion No. 84-79.

NOTE: A plaintiff's attorney cannot be disqualified for hiring the former consultant of defense counsel when the consultant had not received any confidential information from the defense counsel. Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A., Inc. v Superior Court (1996) 46 CA4th 778, 54 CR2d 22.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.49 b. Reasonable fees and expenses allowed

A witness legally required to attend a civil trial or proceeding is entitled to $35 per day for each day of actual attendance plus 20 cents per mile for mileage traveled both ways. Govt C §68093. A lay witness may be compensated over the statutory amount for any loss of wages and for reasonable expenses incurred, e.g., transportation costs to and from the place of trial and some or all meals away from home. See generally Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-310(B). Liberal cross-examination concerning this compensation may be permitted. See Crutchfield v Davidson Brick Co. (1942) 55 CA2d 34, 130 P2d 183.

An expert witness is entitled to a reasonable fee for professional services. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-310(B)(3). The amount of an expert's compensation should be agreed on in advance, to avoid a misunderstanding. Obtain the client's written permission to advance the expert witness fees. Without an express contract between a party and an expert concerning the expert's compensation, the court may fix the compensation under Govt C §68092.5.

A party requiring the testimony of a nonparty expert (or an expert who is not an employee of a party) must pay the reasonable and customary hourly or daily fee for the actual time the witness is examined by any party attending the action or proceeding, not to exceed the fee charged the party who retained the expert, unless the expert donated the services to a nonprofit organization. Govt C §68092.5(a). The court can set the fee for the expert if it determines that the fee demanded by the expert is unreasonable. Govt C §68092.5(c).

Counsel may (except when prohibited by law) advance, guarantee, or acquiesce in payment of the following (Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-310(B)):

- Expenses that the witness reasonably incurred in attending or testifying,
- Reasonable compensation for the witness's lost time in attending or testifying, and
- A reasonable fee for an expert witness's professional services.

Further research: On client's liability for costs generally, see Cal Rules of Prof Cond 4-210. For further discussion of witness compensation, see §§4.40-4.44. See also California Expert Witness Guide (2d ed Cal CEB 1991); Handling Expert Witnesses in California Courts (Cal CEB Action Guide May 2008).

§16.50 2. Suppression of evidence or hiding of witnesses prohibited

A lawyer may not suppress any evidence that the lawyer or the client has a legal obligation to reveal or produce. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-220. Nor may a lawyer advise, or directly or indirectly cause, "a person to secrete himself or herself or to leave the jurisdiction of a tribunal for the purpose of making that person unavailable as a witness therein." Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-310(A). See also Pen C §§135, 136.1.

§16.51 3. Prepare witnesses to testify at trial

It is acceptable practice to meet with a witness to prepare the witness to testify at trial.

PRACTICE TIP: Opposing counsel may try to catch a witness off guard during trial by asking whether the witness has discussed the case with counsel to insinuate improper coaching of a witness. Anticipate this question, and tell each witness that meeting with you in preparation for trial is proper. Advise each witness to testify truthfully about previous discussions of the case with counsel. On witness preparation generally, see chap 5.

An attorney may communicate freely with unrepresented former employees and with unrepresented current employees (other than officers, directors, or managing agents) if the communication does not involve the employee's act or failure to act in connection with the matter that may bind the corporation, be imputed to it, or constitute an admission of fact by the corporation for purposes of establishing liability. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 2-100; Triple A Mach. Shop v State (1989) 213 CA3d 131, 140, 261 CR 493. See also Continental Ins. Co. v Superior Court (1995) 32 CA4th 94, 37 CR2d 843 (no ethical violation for making contact with two former nonmanagerial employees of corporation, even though there were potential misrepresentations of interrogating lawyer's role in litigation); Nalian Truck Lines v Nakano Warehouse & Transp. Corp. (1992) 6 CA4th 1256, 8 CR2d 467 (Rule 2-100's prohibition of contact with employees applies only to persons employed at time of communication).

EXAMPLE: In Bobele v Superior Court (1988) 199 CA3d 708, 713, 245 CR 144, the court held that the prohibition of former Cal Rules of Prof Cond 7-103 (now Rule 2-100), extends to all employees of a corporation and to former employees who may be current members of the control group that directs the corporation's actions. The court observed that counsel may contact other former employees about facts but not about any privileged communications.

Nothing in Rule 2-100 precludes the parties themselves from communicating with respect to the case. It may be inadvisable, but it is not prohibited. An attorney is not prohibited from communicating with a public officer, board, or committee of a governmental entity. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 2-100(C)(1).

NOTE: A lawyer may communicate with a party who is no longer represented by counsel, but at one time did have such representation. Jackson v Ingersoll-Rand Co. (1996) 42 CA4th 1163, 1168, 50 CR2d 66.

Further research: On prohibition against communicating with party represented by counsel without counsel's express consent, see Cal Rules of Prof Cond 2-100. Note also State Bar Formal Opinion No. 1975-33, adopted by the Committee on Professional Ethics of the State Bar of California, concerning the propriety of defense counsel's communication with plaintiff's physician in pending personal injury action. See Anno, Right of Attorneys to Conduct Ex Parte Interview with Corporate Party's Non-Management Employees, 50 ALR4th 652 (1986).

§16.52 4. Treatment of opposing witnesses

It is an attorney's duty not to advance a fact prejudicial to the honor or reputation of a party or witness, except as required by the merits of the case. Bus & P C §6068(f). An attorney may not ask a witness questions solely intended to gratify the client's personal ill feelings that are prejudicial to the honor or reputation of a party or witness. See People v Wyatt (1909) 11 CA 120, 104 P 12.

V. GUIDELINES FOR ETHICAL JUDICIAL CONDUCT

§16.53 A. Code of Judicial Conduct

The Code of Judicial Ethics contains many ethical standards to guide justices and judges of California courts. For the history of the Code of Judicial Conduct, see Adams v Commission on Judicial Performance (1994) 8 C4th 630, 34 CR2d 641; Kloepfer v Commission on Judicial Performance (1989) 49 C3d 826, 838 n6, 264 CR 100.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.54 B. General guidelines in Code of Judicial Conduct

The Code of Judicial Ethics is comprised of six canons that set forth standards of ethical conduct for judges on and off the bench and for candidates for judicial office.

For example, Code of Judicial Ethics, Canon 3B provides that a judge shall:

- Be faithful to the law regardless of partisan interests, public clamor, or fear of criticism, and shall maintain professional competence in the law (Code of Judicial Ethics, Canon 3B(2));
- Require order and decorum in proceedings before the judge (Code of Judicial Ethics, Canon 3B(3));
- Be patient, dignified, and courteous to litigants, lawyers, witnesses, jurors, and others with whom the judge deals in an official capacity, and require similar conduct of lawyers and others subject to the judge's direction and control (Code of Judicial Ethics, Canon 3B(4));
- Accord every person legally interested in the proceeding, or the person's attorney, full right to be heard according to law (Code of Judicial Ethics, Canon 3B(7));
- Require lawyers to refrain from manifesting by words or conduct any bias based on race, sex, religion, disability, national origin, age, sexual orientation, or socioeconomic status against parties, witnesses, counsel, or others (Code of Judicial Ethics, Canon 3B(6));
- Initiate or consider ex parte or other communications concerning a pending or impending proceeding only when expressly authorized by law (Code of Judicial Ethics, Canon 3B(7)); and
- Promptly, efficiently and fairly dispose of the court's business, and manage the courtroom to provide litigants the opportunity to have their matters fairly adjudicated (Code of Judicial Ethics, Canon 3B(8)).

Code of Judicial Ethics, Canon 3E(4) also provides that judges should disqualify themselves in a proceeding when their impartiality reasonably might be questioned, or as otherwise required by law.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.55 C. Judge may obtain expert's advice on the law

Under Code of Judicial Ethics, Canon 3B(7)(a), a judge may obtain a disinterested expert's advice on the law applicable to a proceeding if the judge:

- Gives notice to each party of the person consulted and the substance of the advice, and
- Gives each party a reasonable opportunity to respond.

The Commentary to Code of Judicial Ethics, Canon 3B(7)(a) indicates that the court may obtain the advice of a disinterested expert on legal issues by inviting the expert to file an amicus curiae brief. On a judge committing judicial misconduct by receiving evidence while court is not in session, see §16.67.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.56 D. Conduct regarding public comments

A judge should not publicly comment on a pending or impending court proceeding in any court and should require court personnel under the judge's control to do the same. Code of Judicial Ethics, Canon 3B(9); Broadman v Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 18 C4th 1079, 1100-1105, 77 CR2d 408 (giving magazine interviews defending decision judge made is misconduct). A judge, however, is not prohibited from making public statements during official duty or from explaining court procedures for public information.

§16.57 E. If judge becomes aware of unprofessional conduct

Whenever a judge has reliable information that another judge has violated any provision of the Code of Judicial Ethics, the judge is required to take corrective action. Code of Judicial Ethics, Canon 3D(1). This action may include direct communication with the judge who has committed the violation or a report of the violation to the presiding judge or other appropriate authority. Commentary to Code of Judicial Ethics, Canon 3D.

A court that orders reversal of a judgment based in part or in whole on misconduct, incompetent representation, or willful misrepresentation by counsel must report the matter to the California State Bar to determine whether disciplinary action should be taken. Bus & P C §6086.7. The court must also notify the attorney that the matter has been referred to the state bar for investigation. Bus & P C §6086.7.

The trial court must report to the state bar any judgment against an attorney for fraud, misrepresentation, breach of fiduciary duty, or gross negligence. Bus & P C §6086.8.

§16.58 F. Judge's control over course of trial

A judge has broad latitude over the course of a trial, including the conduct of parties and witnesses. See, e.g., Evid C §765. A judge can properly:

- Admonish a witness not to evade a question;
- Ask witnesses questions to explain ambiguous testimony (see generally 3 Witkin, California Evidence, Presentation at Trial §§80-81 (4th ed 2000);
- Rebuke an attorney for wrongful accusations against opposing counsel (see §16.28); and
- Maintain courtroom decorum by requiring everyone to remain orderly and quiet.

A judge is not merely a referee between counsel (see Engineering Servs. Corp. v Longridge Inv. Co. (1957) 153 CA2d 404, 417, 314 P2d 563), but is charged with eliciting all pertinent facts without undue waste of time. To carry out this duty, a judge may interfere with an attorney whose methods are intentionally or unintentionally dilatory. See Engineering Servs. Corp. v Longridge Inv. Co., supra. On prohibition against judge arbitrarily ordering counsel to be seated during examination of witnesses, see Curran v Superior Court (1925) 72 CA 258, 265, 236 P 975. But see Hallinan v Superior Court (1925) 74 CA 420, 240 P 788, in which the court limited Curran to its own facts. Curran could not be cited as authority concerning the court's power to limit argument on an objection.

Further Research: For further discussion of the judge's ability to impose time limits in a trial, see §1.36.

§16.59 G. When judge is trier of fact

When sitting as the trier of fact, the trial judge takes the place of the jury and is subject to the same rules of conduct. One of these rules is to refrain from forming or expressing an opinion about the case before it is submitted to the trier of fact. Martin v Martin (1947) 79 CA2d 409, 410, 179 P2d 655. See Gary v Avery (1960) 178 CA2d 574, 579, 3 CR 20, in which the court noted that the judge's duty differs from that of jurors with regard to expressing an opinion on any subject of the case before its submission. To have a fair trial, the judge must often express conclusions to advise counsel on how to proceed. Although these expressions might indicate that the judge has a closed mind, this inference cannot always be drawn. 178 CA2d at 579.

When there is direct conflict in the testimony of only two witnesses to the paramount fact at issue, the judge may advise the jury that one witness committed perjury as long as the jury determines the guilty party. Pomerantz v Bryan Motors, Inc. (1949) 92 CA2d 114, 119, 206 P2d 440. See also Kahn v Commercial Union Fire Ins. Co. (1936) 16 CA2d 42, 60 P2d 177 (comment that certain evidence seems very weak).

§16.60 H. Admonishing counsel allowed

To maintain orderly trial procedure and determine justice, a judge may admonish counsel not to interrupt the witnesses before their answers are complete. Estate of Dupont (1943) 60 CA2d 276, 289, 140 P2d 866.

A judge may also rebuke counsel for improper remarks regarding opposing counsel. Tingley v Times Mirror Co. (1907) 151 C 1, 20, 89 P 1097. In Hickambottom v Cooper Transp. Co. (1960) 186 CA2d 479, 485, 9 CR 276, the trial judge's comments directed to plaintiff's counsel during trial were considered to be proper when there had been constant bickering between counsel, constant argument by plaintiff's counsel after the court had made its rulings, and persistent disregard of admonitions by the court to prevent misconduct by counsel. The court noted that the trial court's purpose was to ensure that proper evidence was elicited, and that the trial was conducted with decorum. 186 CA2d at 486.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.61 I. Commenting on omissions and defects

A judge has a duty to see that the parties receive a fair trial on the merits of the case. Hoel v City of Los Angeles (1955) 136 CA2d 295, 307, 288 P2d 989; Dastagir v Dastagir (1952) 109 CA2d 809, 816, 241 P2d 656. Thus, it is proper for a judge to call attention to omissions in the evidence or defects in the pleadings that are likely to result in a decision other than on the merits. Lombardi v Citizens Nat'l Trust & Sav. Bank (1955) 137 CA2d 206, 209, 289 P2d 823; Farrar v Farrar (1919) 41 CA 452, 457, 182 P 989.

§16.62 J. Calling or examining witnesses

A trial judge has the power to exercise reasonable control over the mode of interrogation of witnesses (Evid C §765):

- To make the interrogation as rapid, distinct, and effective in determining the truth as possible; and
- To protect witnesses from undue harassment or embarrassment.

A trial judge also has the inherent power to examine witnesses in order to elicit or clarify testimony. McCartney v Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1974) 12 C3d 512, 533, 116 CR 260. "The judge's function as presiding officer is preeminently to act impartially." Cooper v Superior Court (1961) 55 C2d 291, 301, 10 CR 842. When examining witnesses, a judge may not become an advocate for a party or cast aspersions on or ridicule a witness. McCartney v Commission on Judicial Qualifications, supra. Nor may the judge engage in "fatherly" (i.e., gender-biased) questioning. Catchpole v Brannon (1995) 36 CA4th 237, 42 CR2d 440. See §16.64. It is not misconduct for the trial judge to ask an expert witness pointed questions, even though the effect may be to benefit one of the parties. People v Hawkins (1995) 10 C4th 920, 947, 42 CR2d 636, overruled on other grounds in People v Blakely (2000) 23 C4th 82, 89, 96 CR2d 451.

A trial judge also has the power to call witnesses on the judge's own motion and examine them as if they had been called by a party to the action. Evid C §775. This power must be exercised impartially. A judge who shows partiality or bias in calling and examining witnesses is guilty of misconduct. Comment to Evid C §775. See §16.64.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.63 K. Attempting to settle case

A trial judge may attempt to effect a settlement of a case before trial, make appropriate comments in a settlement context and then later try the case to a jury. A judge's comments in discharging a duty to resolve a case do not necessarily indicate a bias that would prevent the judge's impartiality at trial. Garcia v Estate of Norton (1986) 183 CA3d 413, 422, 228 CR 108.

§16.64 L. Commenting on evidence

A trial judge may comment on the evidence, the testimony, and the credibility of any witness that in the judge's opinion is necessary for the proper determination of the case. Cal Const art VI, §10. If analyzing testimony or discussing the credibility of witnesses, the judge may discuss only a portion of the evidence or the credibility of one witness. See People v Friend (1958) 50 C2d 570, 577, 327 P2d 97, overruled on other grounds in People v Cook (1983) 33 C3d 400, 413 n13, 189 CR 159, in which the court noted that a judge's comments should be temperate and fair rather than argumentative or contentious to a degree amounting to partisan advocacy. The court also noted that the judge should make clear that the judge's views are not binding, but advisory only.

A California judge rarely comments on the evidence; but if commenting, the judge must inform the jurors that they are the exclusive judges of all questions of fact and of the witnesses' credibility. CCP §608; Schnear v Boldrey (1971) 22 CA3d 478, 483, 99 CR 404. The judge may not withdraw evidence from the jurors' consideration or distort testimony. 22 CA3d at 483.

The trial court has broad latitude to comment on the evidence if the trial court does not effectively control the verdict. People v Rodriguez (1986) 42 C3d 730, 230 CR 667 (supreme court held that trial court did not err in commenting on evidence in supplemental charge after jury announced it was deadlocked). In commenting on the evidence, a judge is not confined to a colorless recital of the evidence. Schnear v Boldrey, supra.

The judge must keep an open mind until after hearing all the evidence. In People v Rigney (1961) 55 C2d 236, 241, 10 CR 625, the court discussed CCP §611 and noted that a judge must not defeat its purpose by commenting on the evidence during trial.

EXAMPLE 1: An example of improper comment on the evidence by the trial judge can be found in Lewis v Bill Robertson & Sons, Inc. (1984) 162 CA3d 650, 208 CR 699, in which the court reversed a jury verdict on the ground of judicial misconduct for commenting on the evidence, even though the trial judge had interspersed his comments with reminders that the jury was the sole judge of the facts and that the trial judge's opinions were not binding. The key issue was whether any defect in the premises had caused appellant's accident. After argument had concluded, the judge told the jury that in his opinion any defect in the property was unrelated to plaintiff's fall. In holding that the judge had committed judicial misconduct, the court noted that the judge not only commented on the crucial issue of proximate cause, but distorted testimony and engaged in partisan advocacy.

A judge may express an opinion on negligence if the comment is appropriate and fair. Clark v Laughlin (1977) 68 CA3d 506, 513, 137 CR 354.

EXAMPLE 2: In Clark, an action for malpractice against an orthodontist, the court held that the judge was allowed to express a fair opinion on negligence and comment on portions of testimony without summing up both favorable and unfavorable evidence. The court also noted that, even if the trial judge's comment was improper, the verdict was supported by such a preponderance of substantial evidence that no miscarriage of justice or reversible error occurred.

§16.65 M. Commenting on a privilege

A judge (or counsel) is prohibited from commenting on the exercise of a privilege, and the trier of fact may not draw any inference from the witness's exercise of the privilege concerning the witness's credibility or any matter at issue in the proceeding. Evid C §913. Inferences may be drawn only from the evidence in the case and a party's failure to explain or deny the evidence. See generally Comment to Evid C §913.

VI. ATTORNEY MISCONDUCT

§16.66 A. What constitutes misconduct

Misconduct has been defined to be "a dishonest act or an attempt to persuade the court or the jury by the use of deception or reprehensible methods." People v Rhinehart (1973) 9 C3d 139, 154, 107 CR 34, disapproved on other grounds in People v Bolton (1979) 23 C3d 208, 213, 152 CR 141. See also People v Jenkins (1974) 40 CA3d 1054, 1057, 115 CR 622. A showing of bad faith is not necessarily required to establish misconduct. Misconduct need not be intentional to constitute reversible error. People v Bolton (1979) 23 C3d 208, 213, 152 CR 141.

Misconduct may occur at any stage of the trial, e.g., during voir dire examination of prospective jurors, opening statement, examination of witnesses, and closing argument. Misconduct may result any time counsel goes beyond zealously representing the client and indulges in unfair advocacy. For examples of misconduct, see §§16.69-16.89. For examples of acts or omissions constituting contempt of the court's authority under CCP §1209, see §16.148.

EXAMPLE: In People v Goldberg (1984) 161 CA3d 170, 190, 207 CR 431, the court noted that a prosecutor may argue vigorously "and is not limited to 'Chesterfieldian politeness.'" The court held that a prosecutor's comment to the jury that defense counsel was "trying to get you confused about what some of the issues are" was not outside the bounds of permissible vigor. The court further noted that even if the comment was improper reversal would not be required unless prejudice under the standard enunciated in People v Watson (1956) 46 C2d 818, 299 P2d 243, was shown.

It is not misconduct to challenge vigorously the reasonableness of plaintiff's damage request. In Menasco v Snyder (1984) 157 CA3d 729, 203 CR 748, comments made by defense counsel that plaintiff's request for damages was "an incredible sum of money" and "ridiculous" did not constitute misconduct.

There is no formula to determine whether improper remarks or conduct by counsel will constitute prejudicial misconduct. This determination depends on the facts and circumstances of each case. The court takes into consideration:

- The nature and seriousness of the remarks and misconduct;
- The general trial atmosphere, including the judge's control;
- The likelihood that the jury will be prejudiced; and
- The effectiveness of an objection or admonition under the circumstances.

See Sabella v Southern Pac. Co. (1969) 70 C2d 311, 320, 74 CR 534. See also Scally v PG&E (1972) 23 CA3d 806, 814, 100 CR 501.

§16.67 B. Effect of misconduct

Sometimes, the court can cure the effect of misconduct through an admonition and corrective instruction. See §16.93. Prejudicial misconduct, however, may result in the granting of a mistrial (see §16.95) or a new trial (see §16.96), or the reversal of a judgment on appeal (see §§16.97-16.98).

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.68 C. Court must report misconduct

A court that orders reversal of a judgment based in whole or in part on misconduct must report the matter to the state bar to determine whether disciplinary action should be taken. Bus & P C §6086.7. Depending on the circumstances, counsel may also be held in contempt. See §§16.99-16.129. Attorneys who engage in unfair tactics may impair their credibility and adversely affect their clients' cases before the trier of fact.

© The Regents of the University of California

D. Examples of misconduct

§16.69 1. Disparaging remarks

Personal attacks by counsel on the character or motive of an adverse party, witness, or counsel constitute misconduct. Stone v Foster (1980) 106 CA3d 334, 355, 164 CR 901; Las Palmas Assocs. v Las Palmas Ctr. Assocs. (1991) 235 CA3d 1220, 1247, 1 CR2d 301. Personal attacks should be distinguished from permissible methods of attacking a witness's credibility (see §§11.114-11.124) and proper argument (see chap 19).

EXAMPLE 1: In Horn v Atchison, T. & S.F. Ry. (1964) 61 C2d 602, 606, 39 CR 721, plaintiff's counsel committed misconduct by, among other things, suggesting to the jury in argument that defendant's expert witness and another defense witness had committed perjury, without any support in the record for the accusations. Some remarks by plaintiff's counsel disparaged defendant (e.g., characterizing defendant as "cheap, inconsiderate[,] inhumane") and also constituted misconduct. 61 C2d at 607.

EXAMPLE 2: In Love v Wolf (1964) 226 CA2d 378, 38 CR 183, misconduct consisted of vilification and abuse of defense counsel by plaintiff's attorney throughout the trial. Plaintiff's counsel repeatedly referred to one defendant's attorney as "an idiot," a "smart guy," and a "laughing hyena." When defendants' attorney objected to an obvious improper reference concerning his client, plaintiff's counsel replied, "Can I make a statement or two without being interrupted or do I have to floor you, Mr.…?" 226 CA2d at 391. When defendants' attorney complained that he could not see a witness, plaintiff's counsel asked whether the attorney was passing signals to the witness. Counsel representing several defendants were invited by plaintiff's counsel to "step outside and do something about it." Objections they raised were characterized as "asinine" and "hogwash." They were also accused of "suborning perjury" and "sleeping together."

EXAMPLE 3: The court in Simmons v Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1976) 62 CA3d 341, 351, 133 CR 42, cited numerous instances of misconduct, e.g., statement by plaintiff's counsel to the jury, without any basis in the record, that defendants lie, cheat, steal, elicit and suggest perjury, and "when they get caught, they go, 'So what?'" The court noted that from the beginning of trial plaintiff's counsel embarked on a campaign of hate, vilification, and subterfuge solely to prejudice the jury against defendant and its employees.

Further research: For other examples of this type of misconduct directed toward an adverse party, see the following cases: Sabella v Southern Pac. Co. (1969) 70 C2d 311, 317, 74 CR 534 (repeated references to defendants as "inhuman," "heartless," and "cheapskates"); Stone v Foster, supra (attempts to portray defendant as evil); Love v Wolf (1964) 226 CA2d 378, 385, 38 CR 183 (several examples of misconduct, e.g., statement by plaintiff's counsel that "there isn't a bigger con outfit in the world than [defendant]"). See also Peacock v Levy (1931) 114 CA 246, 299 P 790 (remarks about counsel's religious beliefs); Walters v Evick (1928) 93 CA 1, 268 P 1061 (reviving scandal involving attack on character of plaintiff's counsel). But see People v Davis (1995) 10 C4th 463, 540, 41 CR2d 826 (plaintiff's closing argument describing defense strategy as seeking "to attack and smear everybody," referring to psychiatric testimony as "the bottom-of-the-barrel defense," and characterizing defense arguments as attempting to lay a "guilt trip" on the jury, was fair comment and did not cast aspersions on integrity of defense counsel).

§16.70 2. Accusations of willful suppression of evidence

It is misconduct for counsel to suggest either directly or indirectly (through hints, suggestions, and insinuations), without support in the record, that an opposing party willfully suppressed evidence. See Keena v United R.Rs. (1925) 197 C 148, 156, 239 P 1061 (failure to call witness not willful suppression of evidence); Weaver v Shell Co. (1936) 13 CA2d 643, 648, 57 P2d 571 (intimation during argument of suppression of documents). See also Gackstetter v Market St. Ry. (1933) 130 CA 316, 325, 20 P2d 93 (implied charges during presentation of evidence that defendant attempted to suppress evidence by concealing codefendant).

Accusations of suppression of evidence, without support in the record, should be distinguished from legitimate comment on the failure to produce witnesses or other evidence without further implication of an intent to suppress facts. See Evid C §§412-413; Neumann v Bishop (1976) 59 CA3d 451, 480, 130 CR 786. In Neumann, it was held proper for plaintiff's counsel to comment in argument on defendant's failure to produce evidence to rebut (1) testimony offered by plaintiff to show that she did not violate the basic speed law, and (2) evidence showing plaintiff's loss of earnings. See King v Karpe (1959) 170 CA2d 344, 347, 338 P2d 979, in which a comment on defendant's failure to produce a former employee, who was an essential element in defendant's case, was held proper. See also People v Smith (1971) 22 CA3d 25, 32, 99 CR 171.

§16.71 3. Other improper comments

Commenting on an adverse party's failure to produce a witness may be improper. In general, a party has no duty to call any particular witness without a showing of special circumstances. Neumann v Bishop (1976) 59 CA3d 451, 481, 130 CR 786. See Smith v Covell (1980) 100 CA3d 947, 956, 161 CR 377, in which defense counsel commented during rebuttal argument on plaintiffs' failure to call as witnesses certain doctors who had treated one of the plaintiffs. The implication was that their testimony would have adversely affected plaintiffs' case. The doctors were equally available to subpoena by defendant had his attorney chosen to call them. The appellate court held that defense counsel's comments constituted misconduct.

Suggesting that one's clients would donate a punitive damage award to charity is misconduct. Las Palmas Assocs. v Las Palmas Ctr. Assocs. (1991) 235 CA3d 1220, 1247, 1 CR2d 301.

Further research: On commenting during argument on opposing party's failure to produce witnesses or other evidence generally, see §§16.9-16.11.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.72 4. Insinuating and improper questions and objections

Questions asked not to obtain answers but to present facts, inferences, and suggestions that cannot be supported by the record have been characterized as misconduct. See People v Hamilton (1963) 60 C2d 105, 116, 32 CR 4, disapproved on other grounds in People v Morse (1964) 60 C2d 631, 648, 36 CR 201; People ex rel Dep't of Pub. Works v Lillard (1963) 219 CA2d 368, 380, 33 CR 189 (even though prosecutor's questions elicited negative answers, nature of questions suggested to jurors that prosecutor had source of information unknown to them that corroborated truth of matters in question).

The dilemma faced by opposing counsel in defending against insinuating tactics is described in Dastagir v Dastagir (1952) 109 CA2d 809, 819, 241 P2d 656:

> Unless the court promptly strikes an improper question and rebukes counsel for asking it[,] the damage is done. If opposing counsel objects and the objection is sustained[,] the jury may well speculate on what the answer would have been. If no objection is made the witness' denial still leaves the damaging implication or inference of the question in the record. In such circumstances for opposing counsel to object is generally more damaging than to permit it to be answered without an objection.

Beginning questions on cross-examination with "Do you know that…" or "Do you remember that…," as a means of bringing before the jury matters not in evidence, has been held to constitute misconduct. See Love v Wolf (1964) 226 CA2d 378, 390, 38 CR 183. This type of question is not designed to obtain information or test adverse testimony. Rather, it affords cross-examining counsel a device by which counsel's own unsworn statements can be heard by the jury and accepted by them as proof. People ex rel Dep't of Pub. Works v Lillard (1963) 219 CA2d 368, 379, 33 CR 189.

Similarly, asking questions that begin with the phrase "Isn't it a fact that" and assume facts not in evidence has been held to be improper. See Simmons v Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1976) 62 CA3d 341, 133 CR 42; Dastagir v Dastagir, supra. See also Estate of Martin (1915) 170 C 657, 669, 151 P 138 (constant reiteration on cross-examination of questions assuming facts not in evidence, beginning with phrase "Did he ever tell you"). In Marcus v Palm Harbor Hosp. (1967) 253 CA2d 1008, 1015, 61 CR 702, however, the court held that counsel's asking during cross-examination an "Isn't it a fact that"-type of question that alluded to facts in evidence was proper.

Arguing the merits of a case on the pretense of objecting to offered evidence and making self-serving, gratuitous remarks is also improper. Continental Dairy Equipment Co. v Lawrence (1971) 17 CA3d 378, 384, 94 CR 887. The court noted that gratuitous remarks like the following cannot be condoned as proper conduct (17 CA3d at 384):

> Your Honor, I have been very patient; I suggested [it] as a trick question, Your Honor; I object, Your Honor. I have allowed counsel wide latitude but…; I think I am about to cite counsel for prejudicial error.

EXAMPLE: In Dominguez v Pantalone (1989) 212 CA3d 201, 214, 260 CR 431, the court distinguished Love v Wolf (1964) 226 CA2d 378, 38 CR 183 (60 instances of flagrant misconduct, especially in attempting to insinuate inadmissible evidence through form of questioning), the court held that repeated attempts to have a police officer express his opinion of fault were not prejudicial misconduct, because the court's admonitions to the jury removed any impropriety.

§16.73 5. Appeals to jurors' prejudice or sympathy

Attempts by counsel "to appeal to the prejudice, passions or sympathy of the jury are misconduct." Stone v Foster (1980) 106 CA3d 334, 355, 164 CR 901. See §§16.74-16.79 for discussion of different types of appeals to prejudice or sympathy.

§16.74 a. Wealth or poverty

Whether rich or poor, litigants must be accorded equal justice. Appealing to the jury's social or economic prejudices by reference to a party's wealth or poverty is misconduct if wealth or poverty is not relevant to an issue in the case. Hoffman v Brandt (1966) 65 C2d 549, 553, 55 CR 417. In Hoffman, misconduct consisted of defense counsel's remarks during closing argument implying that, if the jurors returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs, the defendant would have to go to a home for indigents. See also Du Jardin v City of Oxnard (1995) 38 CA4th 174, 45 CR2d 48 (defense lawyer, who commented during closing argument that government services would be lost if a plaintiff's verdict was returned, committed prejudicial misconduct).

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.75 b. Corporate status or wealth

It is misconduct to appeal to the jury's sympathy based on the size or status of a corporate defendant. Brokopp v Ford Motor Co. (1977) 71 CA3d 841, 860, 139 CR 888.

EXAMPLE 1: In Brokopp, misconduct consisted, among other things, of plaintiff's counsel stating during argument, "Save a buck, and that is the only reason I can think of why they would handle things the way they do. These large corporations, in effect, crippled Bob; they took his manhood away from him; they took his privacy from him; they took his body away from him; and they left him in pain." 71 CA3d at 860.

EXAMPLE 2: In Seimon v Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1977) 67 CA3d 600, 605, 136 CR 787, it was held misconduct for plaintiff's counsel to deliberately try during argument to portray himself and his client as financial underdogs by statements such as "I represent the little guy."

When punitive damages are at issue, reference to the wealth of the party against whom punitive damages are sought has been held proper. Las Palmas Assocs. v Las Palmas Ctr. Assocs. (1991) 235 CA3d 1220, 1243, 1 CR2d 301; Roemer v Retail Credit Co. (1975) 44 CA3d 926, 941, 119 CR 82 (thrust of remarks made by plaintiff's counsel during argument that "defendant is a large, snooping monopoly which makes huge profits by specializing in destroying people's reputations" was legitimate advocacy).

The court, for good cause shown, may grant defendant a protective order requiring plaintiff to produce evidence of a prima facie case for liability before permitting plaintiff to introduce evidence of (CC §3295):

- Defendant's profits gained from wrongful conduct.
- Defendant's financial condition.

Section 3295 was enacted to prevent premature unfair reference to a defendant's wealth. In a punitive damages case, CC §3295(d) provides that on application of any defendant, the court must preclude the admission of evidence of that defendant's profits or financial condition until after the trier of fact returns a verdict for plaintiff awarding actual damages and finds that a defendant is guilty of malice, oppression, or fraud under CC §3294. This evidence is admissible against only the defendant or defendants found to be liable to the plaintiff and guilty of malice, oppression, or fraud. CC §3295(d). A claim for exemplary damages must not state an amount. CC §3295(e).

§16.76 c. Jurors' self-interest

It is misconduct to appeal to the jurors' self-interest as taxpayers to persuade them to mitigate their verdict. Brokopp v Ford Motor Co. (1977) 71 CA3d 841, 861, 139 CR 888 (misconduct for counsel to tell jury during argument "Bob doesn't have to stay at the V.A. Hospital. I don't think that we, the taxpayers, ought to pay for Bob in preference to Ford, if they are liable"). See Lufkin v City of Bakersfield (1933) 131 CA 21, 28, 20 P2d 788.

Appeals to jurors' self-interest violate "the fundamental concept of an objective trial by an impartial jury." People ex rel Dep't of Pub. Works v Graziadio (1964) 231 CA2d 525, 533, 42 CR 29. See Du Jardin v City of Oxnard (1995) 38 CA4th 174, 178, 45 CR2d 48 (statement by attorney implied that a verdict against city would result in jurors' loss of governmental service). See Anno, Counsel's Appeal to Self-Interest or Prejudice of Jurors as Taxpayers, as Ground for Mistrial, New Trial, or Reversal, 93 ALR3d 556 (1979).

§16.77 d. Military service

It is misconduct to appeal to jurors' sympathy or prejudice by referring to or disparaging the military service of the litigants or their family members. See Paolini v City & County of San Francisco (1946) 72 CA2d 579, 587, 164 P2d 916 (improper during examination of plaintiff and argument to remark that plaintiff's two sons were in U.S. Army); Deibler v Wright (1931) 119 CA 277, 281, 6 P2d 344 (misconduct to ask questions of plaintiff's father concerning his military service during World War I).

§16.78 e. Race, nationality, or religion

Questions or argument of counsel concerning the race, nationality, or religion of a party is improper when irrelevant to the issues in the case. Kolaric v Kaufman (1968) 261 CA2d 20, 27, 67 CR 729 (misconduct to ask plaintiff on cross-examination whether she had ever been in a concentration camp). For further discussion, see Anno, Statement by Counsel Relating to Race, Nationality, or Religion in Civil Action as Prejudicial, 99 ALR2d 1249 (1965).

§16.79 f. "Golden rule" argument

It is misconduct for counsel to suggest during argument that in calculating damages the jurors should place themselves in plaintiff's shoes "and award the amount they would 'charge' to undergo equivalent disability, pain and suffering." Brokopp v Ford Motor Co. (1977) 71 CA3d 841, 860, 139 CR 888. See Horn v Atchison, T. & S.F. Ry. (1964) 61 C2d 602, 609, 39 CR 721 ("improper to appeal to the jurors to fix damages as if they or a loved one were the injured party"). This type of argument in effect asks the jurors to become partisan advocates for the injured party instead of unbiased weighers of the evidence. It may also induce the jurors to consider a higher figure than they might otherwise consider. See Neumann v Bishop (1976) 59 CA3d 451, 484, 130 CR 786.

Note, however, that a "per diem" argument is proper, i.e., that damages for pain and suffering should be measured in terms of a stated number of dollars for specific periods of time. Beagle v Vasold (1966) 65 C2d 166, 53 CR 129. The court in Beagle (65 C2d at 172) noted that it is proper for counsel to:

- Tell the jury the total amount of damages sought by plaintiff; and
- Read a complaint, including the prayer, to the jury.

Further research: On use of pleadings, see §§16.18, 19.45.

§16.80 6. Reference to insurance

Reference to insurance during trial may constitute misconduct. Under Evid C §1155, evidence that a party is insured is inadmissible to prove negligence or other wrongdoing. Thus, asking questions during voir dire examination that unnecessarily convey the impression that defendant is insured has been held to constitute misconduct. See, e.g., Swift v Winkler (1957) 148 CA2d 927, 307 P2d 666.

EXAMPLE 1: In Scally v PG&E (1972) 23 CA3d 806, 814, 100 CR 501, the court held that it is improper to ask prospective jurors any questions about ownership of stock or other financial interest in insurance companies, when an insurance company is not a party to the action. Other courts have held, however, that counsel may, in good faith, ask prospective jurors whether they are interested in a particular insurance company, if the question does not unnecessarily convey the impression that defendant is insured. See Hart v Wielt (1970) 4 CA3d 224, 230, 84 CR 220.

EXAMPLE 2: In Neumann v Bishop (1976) 59 CA3d 451, 130 CR 786, during opening statement, examination of witnesses, and argument, plaintiff's counsel used the term "defense interests," thereby hinting that defendant had insurance. The court noted that prompt objection and admonition could have prevented the reference, but because that did not occur defendants were in no position to urge misconduct on appeal. 59 CA3d at 473.

EXAMPLE 3: In Bigboy v County of San Diego (1984) 154 CA3d 397, 201 CR 226, plaintiff's counsel inquired during voir dire whether any juror had an interest in an insurance company. The trial judge admonished the jury that the county was uninsured and that insurance coverage was not relevant to the trial. The court of appeal held that the trial court's admonition cured any potential prejudice. The court also noted that the questioning was not prejudicial, because the jurors, as taxpayers, were not likely to inflate a damage award on a "deep pocket theory" against a county.

Evidence of insurance is excluded because it is irrelevant and it may encourage the jury to assume that unlimited funds are available to pay the claim. Experienced attorneys seldom mention insurance; most jurors today generally assume some form of coverage. See Causey v Cornelius (1958) 164 CA2d 269, 330 P2d 468, for discussion of jurors' knowledge of insurance.

Further research: On admissibility of evidence of insurance when relevant to an issue other than the quality of the insured's conduct, see 1 Witkin, California Evidence, Circumstantial Evidence §§134-135 (4th ed 2000).

§16.81 7. Reading law to jury

In some circumstances, reading the law to the jury may constitute misconduct. People v Anderson (1872) 44 C 65.

EXAMPLE: In Anderson, the court noted that the practice is objectionable and should not be tolerated. Its effect is usually to confuse rather than to enlighten the jurors. The court recognized that counsel's reading from a textbook or a reported case for purposes of illustration may sometimes be permissible.

The court should promptly stop any effort by counsel to have the jury take the law of the case from a book rather than the court's instructions. 44 C at 66. See Meyer v Foster (1905) 147 C 166, 81 P 402 (within court's discretion to refuse to allow counsel to read certain sections of Civil Code to jury during argument). See also De Armas v Dickerman (1952) 108 CA2d 548, 239 P2d 65, in which the court held that it was within the trial court's discretion to permit excerpts from the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, which consisted of statements of law applicable to the case, to be read to the jury. For further discussion, see §16.15.

Counsel has the right in argument to discuss pertinent law and its application to the facts of the case. See Neumann v Bishop (1976) 59 CA3d 451, 479, 130 CR 786. See also §16.15. For further discussion, see Anno, Counsel's Right in Civil Case To Argue Law or To Read Lawbooks to the Jury, 66 ALR2d 9 (1959). On voir dire examination of prospective jurors concerning law, see §8.52.

§16.82 8. Motions made in jury's presence

Motions made in the jury's presence to curry favor or to influence a verdict constitute misconduct.

EXAMPLE: A motion to amend a complaint in order to increase the amount of damages constituted reversible error in Sanguinetti v Moore Dry Dock Co. (1951) 36 C2d 812, 228 P2d 557. The motion was made in the jury's presence after production of the evidence, and the court permitted the complaint to be amended in their presence. The jurors may have surmised that the judge, after hearing the evidence, believed that a higher demand was in order, which then influenced their verdict.

A motion to view premises (see CCP §651) made in the jury's presence is improper. On resisting the motion, opposing counsel may appear to be suppressing evidence. See generally Anno, Proper Procedure To Guard Party Against Prejudicing Jury by Objecting to Opposite Party's Request for View, 95 ALR 1505 (1935).

Offers of proof in the jury's presence are also improper. See Kenworthy v State (1965) 236 CA2d 378, 397, 46 CR 396. In People v Francis (1957) 156 CA2d 1, 6, 319 P2d 103, the court found no error in the trial court's denial of a request to make an offer of proof, because there was no request that the offer be made out of the jury's presence. See Hrnjak v Graymar, Inc. (1971) 4 C3d 725, 733, 94 CR 623, in which the court considered an evidentiary issue under Evid C §352, noting that the determination should be made out of the jury's presence. See also Augustus v Shaffer (1959) 171 CA2d 160, 167, 340 P2d 37, in which the court stated that it is generally not the best trial practice, and often is error, to ask for a stipulation before a jury.

§16.83 9. Calling jurors by name

An issue of prejudicial misconduct can arise when counsel addresses jurors individually by name. In People v Wein (1958) 50 C2d 383, 395, 326 P2d 457, overruled on other grounds in People v Daniels (1969) 71 C2d 1119, 1140, 80 CR 897, the court noted that arguments should be addressed to the jury as a body. See Los Angeles Ct R 8.16, which prohibits counsel from addressing jurors by first name during voir dire examination and from referring to or addressing jurors by name or occupation during argument. The court in People v Wein, supra, also noted that "it does not follow that such conduct is necessarily prejudicial in any given case." See Neumann v Bishop (1976) 59 CA3d 451, 474, 130 CR 786.

§16.84 10. Conversations with jurors

Conversing with jury members, either collectively or individually, during trial is improper. See Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-320; Whitfield v Roth (1974) 10 C3d 874, 890, 112 CR 540 (conduct was improper and constituted misconduct); Garden Grove Sch. Dist. v Hendler (1965) 63 C2d 141, 144, 45 CR 313 (prejudicial error for plaintiff's counsel to talk with the jury foreman). This conduct gives rise to a rebuttable presumption of prejudice. People v Honeycutt (1977) 20 C3d 150, 156 n3, 141 CR 698. See Hasson v Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 C3d 388, 185 CR 654. See also Pen C §§95-96.

Try at all times to preserve both the substance of justice and every appearance of propriety. CCP §611; Maaskant v Matsui (1942) 50 CA2d 819, 826, 123 P2d 853. See also Los Angeles Ct R 8.37.

PRACTICE TIP: If a juror questions you during recess about the case, politely inform the juror that you cannot speak to any member of the jury during the trial and discreetly inform the judge and opposing counsel of the juror's question.

Further research: See chap 17 for discussion of jury management and jury misconduct. See chap 21 for discussion of jury misconduct during deliberations.

§16.85 11. Reference to inadmissible evidence

Deliberately asking questions calling for inadmissible and prejudicial answers has been held to be misconduct. See Hawk v Superior Court (1974) 42 CA3d 108, 128, 116 CR 713 (during cross-examination, prosecution witness questioned in manner designed to bring before jury evidence inadmissible under Evid C §787). For example, when seeking to prove liability it is improper to examine a witness about or otherwise attempt to introduce evidence of an offer of compromise or settlement. See generally Evid C §1152; 7 Witkin, California Procedure, Trial §221 (5th ed 2008).

Introducing evidence of a compromise and settlement may be so serious that neither striking the offensive material nor instructing the jury to disregard the matter will cure the error. See, e.g., Citti v Bava (1928) 204 C 136, 266 P 954. See also Tobler v Chapman (1973) 31 CA3d 568, 575, 107 CR 614. In this case, although the trial judge's admonition was considered sufficient to cure misconduct, the appellate court recognized that telling the jurors during argument that the injured party received compensation from another codefendant who was dismissed from the case constituted prejudicial misconduct. The receipt of compensation demonstrated no liability on the part of the remaining codefendant.

Attempts to place inadmissible evidence before the jury by pursuing a line of inquiry to which an objection has been sustained constitute misconduct. See Simmons v Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1976) 62 CA3d 341, 133 CR 42. See also Stevenson v Link (1954) 128 CA2d 564, 574, 275 P2d 782 (misconduct for counsel to ask witness about a prior acquittal in a criminal case when judge in chambers had earlier ruled this evidence inadmissible); Young v Tassop (1941) 47 CA2d 557, 565, 118 P2d 371 (misconduct to repeat question after an adverse ruling). On contempt generally, see §§16.99-16.129.

EXAMPLE: In Cote v Rogers (1962) 201 CA2d 138, 19 CR 767, a wrongful death action, defense counsel committed misconduct by trying to bring before the jury an inadmissible magazine article concerning the accident that gave rise to the lawsuit. The attorney continuously referred to the article while holding a copy of it in his hand during cross-examination of a witness for the plaintiff, and brought the article to the attention of a local newspaper, which published a story about it the next day. See also Richardson v Employers Liab. Assur. Corp. (1972) 25 CA3d 232, 102 CR 547, disapproved on other grounds in Gruenberg v Aetna Ins. Co. (1973) 9 C3d 566, 580 n10, 108 CR 480, discussed in §16.38.

Hearsay or opinion testimony, which is technically inadmissible under an exclusionary rule, may be considered in support of the judgment when offered and received without objection. Crocker-Anglo Nat'l Bank v American Trust Co. (1959) 170 CA2d 289, 299, 338 P2d 617. See Comment to Evid C §140; 3 Witkin, California Evidence, Presentation at Trial §§393-395 (4th ed 2000). See also Los Angeles Ct R 8.89, which provides that the court on its own motion should not ordinarily exclude inadmissible evidence unless irrelevant or excludable under Evid C §352.

Through questions during cross-examination of an expert, an attorney may properly indicate familiarity with studies the attorney is referring to during the cross-examination. People v Jones (1991) 53 C3d 1115, 1144, 282 CR 465. It is misconduct, however, for an attorney to ask a witness a question that implies a fact, unless the attorney has reasonable grounds to anticipate an answer confirming the fact or is prepared to prove the fact by other means. See People v Price (1991) 1 C4th 324, 481, 3 CR2d 106.

Further research: On inquiring into settlement during cross-examination to show bias or prejudice, see 1 Witkin, Evidence, Circumstantial Evidence §§150-151; 3 Witkin, Evidence, Presentation at Trial §272.

§16.86 12. Exhibiting prejudicial matter or objects not in evidence

A court will not tolerate an attorney's tactic of deliberately permitting the jury to see exhibits that are not in evidence. See People v Fusaro (1971) 18 CA3d 877, 886, 96 CR 368. Thus, allowing jurors to view photographs that have not been admitted in evidence is improper. In Fusaro, however, the prosecutor's showing the jurors two photographs before their admission in evidence was considered harmless, because the photographs were later admitted in evidence.

Exposing jurors to a copy of an inadmissible article containing prejudicial headlines constitutes misconduct. See Richardson v Employers Liab. Assur. Corp. (1972) 25 CA3d 232, 242, 102 CR 547, disapproved on other grounds in Gruenberg v Aetna Ins. Co. (1973) 9 C3d 566, 580 n10, 108 CR 480. In Richardson, the article was located on the counsel table in front of plaintiffs' counsel while the jurors were in recess, but remained in view after they returned. See People v Hernandez (1977) 70 CA3d 271, 281, 138 CR 675 (while at bench arguing propriety of question asked of defense witness, prosecutor waved witness's "rap sheet" around in front of jury). Similarly, in Weisbart v Flohr (1968) 260 CA2d 281, 291, 67 CR 114, it was held misconduct for counsel to use toys that had not been received in evidence to support his argument to the jury.

EXAMPLE: In Bates v Newman (1953) 121 CA2d 800, 264 P2d 197, plaintiff's counsel made marks on a blackboard before completion of plaintiff's case when some of the jurors were present in the courtroom. Apparently, the material was intended to aid counsel in presenting the opening statement and not to be used as evidence. The trial judge ordered plaintiff's counsel to erase it. In sustaining the trial court's order, the appellate court noted that, because the reception of testimony was not complete, jurors could be misled to believe that the material on the blackboard was evidence in the case. 121 CA2d at 811.

§16.87 13. News media releases

Sometimes extrajudicial statements by counsel to the news media regarding an anticipated or pending trial may improperly affect the tribunal's impartiality and constitute misconduct. In In re Hammond (1898) 121 C 385, 389, 53 P 899, the court noted that it would be unprofessional for a lawyer representing anyone accused of a crime to attempt to get favorable or unfavorable evidence before a jury through the press. See generally Sheppard v Maxwell (1966) 384 US 333, 16 L Ed 2d 600, 86 S Ct 1507; People v Stroble (1951) 36 C2d 615, 226 P2d 330, aff'd in Stroble v California (1952) 343 US 181, 96 L Ed 872, 72 S Ct 599; County of Los Angeles v Superior Court (1967) 253 CA2d 670, 62 CR 435 (discusses several criminal cases that have considered the effect of publicity on an accused's constitutional right to a fair trial before an impartial jury). See also Cembrook v Sterling Drug Inc. (1964) 231 CA2d 52, 41 CR 492, on the right to a public trial not including a right to have the news media publicize the trial. In Cembrook, the court also discussed the right to use news media advertising to locate witnesses.

EXAMPLE: In People v Stroble, supra, defendant confessed after being arrested. Even before defendant had completed his statement, the district attorney released details of it to the press. The district attorney also announced his belief that defendant was sane and guilty. 36 C2d at 620. The court characterized this as "flagrant misconduct." 36 C2d at 617. Note that the California standard for measuring the impact of pretrial publicity on criminal trials is whether the publicity results in a reasonable likelihood that a fair trial cannot be held. People v McKee (1968) 265 CA2d 53, 58, 71 CR 26. In Sheppard v Maxwell, supra, prejudicial publicity was attributed in part to the prosecution's repeatedly making available to the news media evidence that was never offered in the trial—much of which was clearly inadmissible. The U.S. Supreme Court noted that excluding evidence in court becomes meaningless when the news media make it available to the public. 384 US at 360, 16 L Ed 2d at 618.

Further research: For further discussion, see Goldhammer, Playing by the Rules: Free Speech for Lawyers, 18 CEB Civ Litigation Rep 95 (June 1996); Shapiro, When the Press Calls: A Lawyer's View, 5 Cal Litigation (Fall 1991) (for practical tips on press relations in high-profile cases); Anno, Release of Information Concerning Forthcoming or Pending Trial as Ground for Contempt Proceedings or Other Disciplinary Measures Against Member of the Bar, 11 ALR3d 1104 (1967). For discussion of right to a public trial and remedies to dissipate effect of publicity and prejudice, see §§2.36-2.60.

§16.88 14. Reading jurors' notes

During trial, it is improper for counsel to read notes taken by the jurors. These notes are confidential. See Bauguess v Paine (1978) 22 C3d 626, 636 n6, 150 CR 461; Los Angeles Ct R 8.37-8.38.

In Bauguess v Paine, supra, plaintiff's trial attorney requested that a diagram attached to a deposition, which was going to be read, be admitted in evidence. Extra copies of the diagram were admitted in evidence and handed to the jurors. The judge gave these instructions to the jurors (22 C3d at 631):

> These are Xerox copies for your use in following the deposition. They are numbered exhibits 6A through M. So you each have a copy. You are free to write on those documents, take notes. At the conclusion of the reading of this deposition those exhibits will be picked up by the bailiff, deposited with the clerk. At the time the case is submitted to you[,] you will have those available in the jury room during your deliberations. So if you want to mark on them, fine.

After the deposition was read, the bailiff collected the copies. The same procedure was followed for a sketch prepared by the next witness. After another deposition was read, the judge observed jurors taking notes on the diagrams. He again instructed them that they could take notes on the copies, but should not share the notes with anyone until the case was finally submitted. At that time, they could refer to the notes in their deliberations. After the trial had recessed for the day, plaintiff's counsel asked the clerk's permission to examine one of the exhibits containing a juror's notes. This examination ultimately led to the granting of (1) defendants' motion for a mistrial, and (2) defendants' motion for attorney fees for the 2 days of the aborted trial. Plaintiff's counsel was ordered to pay $700 as sanctions.

On appeal, the Supreme Court in Bauguess reversed the trial court order awarding attorney fees as sanctions. The court recognized that the trial judge was correct in instructing the jurors to keep their notes confidential. The court concluded, however, that the trial court breached this confidentiality when it admitted them into evidence, and noted that any document admitted into evidence may be inspected at any time by counsel. 22 C3d at 636 n6. As a result of the Bauguess case, the legislature passed CCP §128.5 and, later, CCP §128.7, which permit the awarding of reasonable expenses, including attorney fees, as a result of tactics or actions not based on good faith that are frivolous or cause unnecessary delay. See also CCP §177.5 on a judge's power to impose "reasonable money sanctions"; §§16.92-16.129 on remedies for misconduct.

§16.89 15. Arguing matters not in evidence

During argument to the jury, it is misconduct for counsel to argue matters not in evidence or to assert as fact matters allegedly within counsel's personal knowledge. Brokopp v Ford Motor Co. (1977) 71 CA3d 841, 862, 139 CR 888. Counsel may not invite the jury to speculate on unsupported inferences. Malkasian v Irwin (1964) 61 C2d 738, 747, 40 CR 78. See People v Bolton (1979) 23 C3d 208, 213 n2, 152 CR 141 (prohibition against using closing argument to introduce new evidence).

It is also improper and misconduct for counsel to argue that the case, or some aspect of it, has judicial approval. Neumann v Bishop (1976) 59 CA3d 451, 485, 130 CR 786. However, counsel may argue all reasonable inferences from the evidence. Brokopp v Ford Motor Co., supra.

EXAMPLE: In City of Los Angeles v Decker (1977) 18 C3d 860, 135 CR 647, plaintiff brought an eminent domain action to condemn property for expansion of an airport, a parcel of which belonged to defendant. On the valuation issue, the appraiser who was called during trial by defendant property owners testified that the property could be best put to use for airport-related facilities, especially parking. Two appraisers called by plaintiff testified that it was unlikely that any developer would undertake these developments. Although the city's airport board had determined that airport parking facilities were needed and that defendant's property was suitable for that purpose, the city attorney argued during closing argument that defendant's valuation figure was too high because there was no such need, and that claim of the need was speculative. The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff.

The supreme court in Decker held that the city and its attorney had committed misconduct in argument to the jury, requiring a new trial. The court referred to former Cal Rules of Prof Cond 7-105(1) (now Rule 5-200), which:

- Requires an attorney presenting a matter to a tribunal to use means consistent with the truth, and
- Prohibits an attorney from seeking to mislead a judge, judicial officer, or jury by artifice or false statement of law or fact.

The court noted that a government lawyer occupies a position analogous to a public prosecutor and may be under an even higher duty. 18 C3d at 871.

In summation it is permissible to refer to nonevidentiary matters of common knowledge or to illustrations drawn from common experience, history, or literature. People v West (1983) 139 CA3d 606, 611, 189 CR 36 (trial court properly prevented counsel from reading aloud newspaper clippings about instances of witness misidentification). References to quotations from the Bible do not constitute misconduct. Ballou v Master Props. No. 6 (1987) 189 CA3d 65, 76, 234 CR 264.

PRACTICE TIP: What is "common knowledge" may be controversial. Check to verify that the trial judge agrees with your appraisal before argument.

Further research: On improper appeals to prejudice or sympathy of jurors, see §16.31. For examples of other improper arguments, see Sabella v Southern Pac. Co. (1969) 70 C2d 311, 74 CR 534; Love v Wolf (1964) 226 CA2d 378, 38 CR 183. See also Cortez v Macias (1980) 110 CA3d 640, 658, 167 CR 905, in which the court held that the trial court committed error in permitting plaintiff's counsel over objection to argue for the first time in rebuttal closing argument that a specific sum should be awarded as general damages, thereby depriving defendant of an opportunity to challenge that figure.

§16.90 E. Anticipating and preventing misconduct

An attorney should try to anticipate possible misconduct on the part of an opponent whenever possible. For example, if opposing counsel indicates, during discovery proceedings or otherwise, an attempt to introduce inadmissible evidence during trial (or evidence excludable under Evid C §352), raise the issue in chambers before trial by a motion in limine asking the court to issue an order barring opposing counsel, the parties, and witnesses from mentioning or referring to such inadmissible evidence or otherwise seeking to introduce it during trial. On motions in limine, see chap 7.

If the court agrees and issues the order, opposing counsel usually must make an offer of proof about the evidence to be produced in the presence of a court reporter to protect the record on appeal. On offers of proof, see §§15.50-15.60. After the order is issued, opposing counsel must first obtain the court's approval before bringing the matter before the jurors (through questioning or otherwise) or run the risk of severe rebuke or a contempt citation. See Charbonneau v Superior Court (1974) 42 CA3d 505, 116 CR 153 (contempt).

VII. REMEDIES FOR ATTORNEY MISCONDUCT

A. Action by counsel

§16.91 1. Timely objection; waiver

Generally, it is essential that you object to misconduct when it occurs. Otherwise, the court usually considers the claimed error based on misconduct to be waived. Warner Constr. Corp. v City of Los Angeles (1970) 2 C3d 285, 303, 85 CR 444; Menasco v Snyder (1984) 157 CA3d 729, 203 CR 748 (plaintiff's failure to object to alleged misconduct in trial court constituted waiver of right to have matter addressed on appeal).

EXAMPLE 1: In Horn v Atchison, T. & S.F. Ry. (1964) 61 C2d 602, 610, 39 CR 721, the court held that a motion for mistrial by defense counsel at the conclusion of closing argument was not a timely objection for misconduct committed during plaintiff's opening and closing argument.

EXAMPLE 2: The court in Barajas v USA Petroleum Corp. (1986) 184 CA3d 974, 229 CR 513, held that failure to request a curative admonition resulted in waiver of any error in references by opposing counsel to matters the trial court had ordered not be mentioned.

EXAMPLE 3: In Fleming v Safeco Ins. Co. (1984) 160 CA3d 31, 42, 206 CR 313, the court held that a claim of misconduct was entitled to no consideration on appeal when the record did not show a timely and proper objection and a request that the jury be admonished.

Requiring a timely objection enables the court to (see, e.g., Horn v Atchison, T. & S.F. Ry., supra):

- Admonish the jury;
- Instruct counsel; and
- Forestall accumulation of prejudice by repeated improprieties, thus avoiding the need for a retrial.

§16.92 2. Object and assign improper matter as misconduct

The language used to make an objection to misconduct is not subject to any fixed rules, except that it should apprise the court of the impropriety sufficiently to enable a cure by appropriate admonition. See, however, Cope v Davison (1947) 30 C2d 193, 202, 180 P2d 873, in which the record showed no assignment of misconduct and the trial court was not asked to instruct the jurors to disregard the challenged remarks. The court held that the issue could not be considered on appeal. See also Ray v Henderson (1963) 212 CA2d 192, 195, 27 CR 847 (counsel, whose objection to offered evidence was sustained, did not assign misconduct or ask for jury admonition, thereby precluding consideration of misconduct on appeal); Cody v Von's Grocery Co. (1961) 189 CA2d 329, 331, 11 CR 277 (not all improper matters objected to; none cited as misconduct). On need to request curative admonition, see §16.45.

Assign the statement, question, or other improper matter as misconduct, and ask that the court instruct the jury to disregard it. See 3 Witkin, California Evidence, Presentation at Trial §386 (4th ed 2000).

When initially objecting to misconduct, do not repeat improper remarks in front of the jurors. Object as follows:

> Objection, Your Honor, I object to counsel's last _ _[question/remarks]_ _ and assign _ _[it/them]_ _ as misconduct. May we approach the bench?

Outside the hearing of the jury, counsel may state the following:

> I object to counsel's inappropriate and improper remarks concerning _ _[state improper matter]_ _. I assign it as misconduct and respectfully request that the court instruct the jurors to disregard it.

You may wish to have opposing counsel reprimanded and admonished against continuing the misconduct. If so, add the following language to the above example:

> I also request the court to reprimand counsel for this misconduct and to admonish _ _[him/her]_ _ to discontinue it.

If opposing counsel persists with the misconduct, the judge may be prompted to hold opposing counsel in contempt.

PRACTICE TIP: After objecting to the misconduct and requesting that the court instruct the jurors to disregard it, you may gain a tactical advantage by requesting permission to approach the bench before requesting that opposing counsel be reprimanded and admonished to discontinue the misconduct. Some judges prefer this procedure. Specify at the bench the question or remarks constituting misconduct and the particular relief desired. The court reporter should be present to protect the record on appeal. The court reporter should be present at the bench to record the discussion. If the judge denies the request at the bench, the jurors will remain unaware of it.

§16.93 3. Request admonition to cure misconduct

Ordinarily, the effect of misconduct may be cured by the court's prompt admonition to the jury to disregard it. Only misconduct so prejudicial that an admonishment would be ineffective excuses the failure to request the admonishment. The language used by the judge to reprimand counsel for misconduct and to admonish the jurors is not subject to fixed rules. Generally, the judge's reprimand instructs counsel to stay within the record and the boundaries of relevant evidence; if the conduct is flagrant, the judge can demand that counsel cease. The judge will then instruct the jury to disregard the remark, question, or other improper matter. On occasion, the judge may request counsel to withdraw a particular question or may order an answer stricken from the record. See Hart v Wielt (1970) 4 CA3d 224, 234, 84 CR 220; Barlin v Barlin (1957) 156 CA2d 143, 145, 319 P2d 87. See also Sabella v Southern Pac. Co. (1969) 70 C2d 311, 319, 74 CR 534.

If warranted by the misconduct, counsel may wish to offer a specially tailored written instruction to be read by the judge to the jury to directly admonish the jury to disregard certain misconduct.

B. Remedies for attorney misconduct

§16.94 1. Consider requesting sanctions for bad faith or frivolous action

One possible remedy for attorney misconduct is a motion under CCP §128.7 for reasonable expenses, including attorney fees incurred as a result of opposing counsel's tactics or actions not based on good faith that were frivolous or caused unnecessary delay.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: When considering remedies for attorney misconduct, give serious consideration to what you want to accomplish by seeking a remedy. That objective should guide your choice.

Code of Civil Procedure §128.7 applies to complaints filed, or proceedings initiated, on or after January 1, 1995. CCP §128.7(i); Murphy v Yale Materials Handling Corp. (1997) 54 CA4th 619, 623, 62 CR2d 865. See §§26.32-26.53.

The focus of CCP §128.7, taken almost verbatim from revised Fed R Civ P 11, is to make every signature by an attorney or unrepresented party on a pleading, petition, written notice of motion, or "other similar paper" a certification "to the best of the person's knowledge, information, and belief," that the action has merit. CCP §128.7(a). See §26.36 for discussion of the scope of certification. California courts may look to federal decisions interpreting Fed R Civ P 11 in interpreting CCP §128.7. See §26.34.

Compare Operating Eng'rs Pension Trust v A-C Co. (9th Cir 1988) 859 F2d 1336, 1344 (Fed R Civ P 11 sanctions are proper only in rare and exceptional cases and should be awarded with extreme caution), with In re Hawaii Fed. Asbestos Cases (9th Cir 1989) 871 F2d 891, 897 (upholding sanctions against attorney who made summary judgment motion when no legal authority supported attorney's position).

Further research: See chap 17 for discussion of jury misconduct during voir dire and trial and chap 21 for discussion of misconduct during deliberations. See §§26.11-26.31 for discussion of §128.5 and §§26.32-26.53 for discussion of §128.7.

The court also retains the power to control the conduct of attorneys appearing before it and to enforce that power by means of disqualification. CCP §128; Cal Pak Delivery, Inc. v United Parcel Serv., Inc. (1997) 52 CA4th 1, 9, 60 CR2d 207. See Cal Rules of Ct 2.30 on sanctions that may be ordered after written notice and following an opportunity to be heard.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.95 2. Consider moving for mistrial

Consider moving for a mistrial if:

- Misconduct is so flagrant that its prejudicial effect cannot be cured by admonition, and
- To proceed would deprive a party of the right to a fair trial.

For example, counsel may state:

> Objection, Your Honor. Counsel is showing the jurors the _ _[e.g., photograph]_ _ that you earlier ruled inadmissible. I assign it as misconduct and move for a mistrial on the ground that the misconduct is so prejudicial that a fair trial is not possible.

Further research: On motions for mistrial generally, see §§18.82-18.102.

§16.96 3. Evaluate moving for new trial

A party can move for a new trial based on irregularity in the proceedings of the court, jury, or adverse party that prevented the party from having a fair trial. CCP §657(1). Counsel's misconduct is considered to be such an irregularity and a ground for a new trial. City of Los Angeles v Decker (1977) 18 C3d 860, 870, 135 CR 647. An unfavorable verdict is strong evidence of the misconduct's prejudicial effect. See generally Garden Grove Sch. Dist. v Hendler (1965) 63 C2d 141, 144, 45 CR 313; Kenworthy v State (1965) 236 CA2d 378, 401, 46 CR 396.

The trial judge has discretion to grant a motion for a new trial even though the judge may have sustained an objection to the misconduct and given a curative admonition. Baroni v Rosenberg (1930) 209 C 4, 284 P 1111. The trial judge also may disregard a waiver resulting from a party's failure to object to the misconduct (see §§16.44-16.46) and may grant a new trial when the circumstances warrant. Malkasian v Irwin (1964) 61 C2d 738, 747, 40 CR 78.

Further research: See §§25.22-25.71 for further discussion of motions for new trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

4. Determine whether appeal appropriate

§16.97 a. Objection and request for admonition usually necessary

A claim of misconduct is generally not entitled to consideration on appeal unless the record shows both a timely, proper objection and a request that the jurors be admonished. Horn v Atchison, T. & S.F. Ry. (1964) 61 C2d 602, 610, 39 CR 721. Without such a request, the matter cannot be considered on appeal if a jury admonition would have removed the effect of the misconduct. Sabella v Southern Pac. Co. (1969) 70 C2d 311, 319, 74 CR 534.

When the court's admonition does not eliminate the prejudicial effect of misconduct, a party is not precluded from raising the issue on appeal. See, e.g., Kenworthy v State (1965) 236 CA2d 378, 396, 46 CR 396. See also Hoffman v Brandt (1966) 65 C2d 549, 553, 55 CR 417.

EXAMPLE: In Hoffman, plaintiff's counsel objected to misconduct during trial and sought to go into chambers to consider proper procedure. After defendant's counsel rejected the offer, the court gave an ineffective admonishment to the jury. On appeal, plaintiffs were not barred from raising the issue of misconduct.

Even without an objection and a request for admonition, a party may still be able to raise the issue on appeal when instances of misconduct are so flagrant and repeated that an objection and admonition would be futile. See Simmons v Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1976) 62 CA3d 341, 355, 133 CR 42; Peacock v Levy (1931) 114 CA 246, 299 P 790 (objection futile; court's not acting on objections and requests when made relieved party of duty to object every time). See also Love v Wolf (1964) 226 CA2d 378, 392, 38 CR 183.

EXAMPLE: In Love, the record on appeal showed 60 instances of flagrant misconduct by plaintiff's attorney. Defendants objected many times, but the judge failed to rule on the objections. Plaintiff contended that the issue of misconduct should not be considered, because defendants did not object to each instance of misconduct and request that the jurors be admonished. Holding that the issue could be raised on appeal, the court recognized that multiple objections tend to alienate the jurors, especially when the judge fails to rule on them. The court noted that rectifying repeated and flagrant misconduct by admonition is like trying to "unring" a bell. 226 CA2d at 392.

§16.98 b. Standard for setting aside verdict

An appeal based on misconduct during trial will not set aside the judgment unless the error resulted in a miscarriage of justice. Cal Const art VI, §13. The court's determination of a miscarriage of justice does not depend on whether the amount of an award is reasonable. Garden Grove Sch. Dist. v Hendler (1965) 63 C2d 141, 144, 45 CR 313.

Misconduct has been held prejudicial requiring reversal when it was reasonable to conclude that a different verdict might have been reached in the absence of the misconduct. See Garden Grove Sch. Dist. v Hendler, supra. See also Stone v Foster (1980) 106 CA3d 334, 355, 164 CR 901 (misconduct prejudicial when it was impossible to say that jury was not influenced by misconduct in amount of award). Conversely, misconduct has been held minor and nonprejudicial when a party was unable to show that a different result would have been reached. See Marcus v Palm Harbor Hosp. (1967) 253 CA2d 1008, 1016, 61 CR 702.

The reviewing court gives great weight to the trial court's determination of the effect of misconduct, i.e., whether it resulted in prejudice. See, e.g., Grimshaw v Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 CA3d 757, 793, 174 CR 348, in which the trial judge denied a motion for mistrial and a later action for new trial based on misconduct. The rulings implied that the misconduct did not result in prejudice, and they were upheld on appeal. The court in Stevens v Parke, Davis & Co. (1973) 9 C3d 51, 72, 107 CR 45, noted that a trial judge is in a better position than an appellate court to determine whether a verdict results wholly, or in part, from attorney misconduct.

Unless clearly incorrect, the trial judge's conclusion in the matter will not be disturbed on appeal. See Malkasian v Irwin (1964) 61 C2d 738, 747, 40 CR 78, in which the court indicated that, when a motion for a new trial is granted, the trial court's discretion in granting the motion cannot be disturbed on appeal even when the misconduct is minor or debatable. See City of Los Angeles v Decker (1977) 18 C3d 860, 135 CR 647, for an example of a trial court's denial of a motion for a new trial not being upheld on appeal.

The issue of misconduct generally will not be considered on appeal if the record does not show:

- A timely objection; and
- A request for a curative admonition (unless the prejudicial effect of the misconduct cannot be cured by admonition).

5. Contempt citation for misconduct

§16.99 a. Contempt defined

A trial court has inherent power to punish as contempt an act that "tends to impede, embarrass, or obstruct the court in the discharge of its duties." In re Shortridge (1893) 99 C 526, 532, 34 P 227. See In re McKinney (1968) 70 C2d 8, 10, 73 CR 580. Although this power exists independent of statute (see In re Shortridge, supra), it has been codified by the legislature. Nierenberg v Superior Court (1976) 59 CA3d 611, 616, 130 CR 847. See generally CCP §§128, 177-178, 1209-1222, 1991; Pen C §§166, 1044. See §16.148 for examples of acts and omissions constituting contempt under CCP §1209.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.100 b. Purpose of contempt

According to the court in Penfield Co. v SEC (1947) 330 US 585, 593, 91 L Ed 1117, 1122, 67 S Ct 918, contempt has a dual function:

- Vindication of the public interest by punishment of contemptuous conduct; and
- Coercion to compel the person guilty of contempt to do what the law requires.

Code of Civil Procedure §§1209-1222 are intended to implement the court's inherent power to conduct court business and to enforce its lawful orders. See Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. v Superior Court (1968) 265 CA2d 370, 371, 72 CR 177. If no specific statutory provision applies, the court's power may be exercised. See generally Corum v Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co. (1945) 67 CA2d 891, 897, 155 P2d 710.

§16.101 c. Limitations on use of contempt power

The court's inherent power to punish contempt has been tempered by procedural safeguards enacted by the legislature. Bauguess v Paine (1978) 22 C3d 626, 638, 150 CR 461. Thus, when contempt is committed outside the court's presence, the proceeding must be instituted by an affidavit or declaration. CCP §2015.5, in accordance with CCP §1211; Fabricant v Superior Court (1980) 104 CA3d 905, 916, 163 CR 894.

The penalty for each instance of civil contempt is limited to 5 days in jail or a $1000 fine, or both. CCP §1218; Bauguess v Paine, supra. In addition, a person, or any agent of that person, who is adjudged guilty of contempt may be ordered to pay the party initiating the contempt proceeding the reasonable attorney fees and costs incurred in connection with the contempt proceeding. CCP §1218.

No order of contempt affecting a county government or its governing body acting under its constitutional or statutory authority may be made, unless the court finds, based on review of evidence presented at a hearing, that the county has the resources to comply with the order of the court; that the county has the authority (without voter approval or without incurring additional indebtedness) to generate additional resources necessary to comply with the court order; or that compliance with the order will not expose the county or any member of its governing body, or any other county officer, to liability for failure to perform other constitutional or statutory duties. CCP §128(f).

Further research: For discussion of limitations on who may exercise contempt power, see Marcus v WCAB (1973) 35 CA3d 598, 111 CR 101 (limitations concerning court commissioners, referees, and subordinate officers). See also Rosenstock v Municipal Court (1976) 61 CA3d 1, 132 CR 59 (no stipulation that court commissioner could act as temporary judge; court commissioner without authority); Nierenberg v Superior Court (1976) 59 CA3d 611, 130 CR 847 (limitation on commissioner who acted as judge pro tempore in underlying criminal proceeding; contempt cause distinct from underlying case). On contempt proceedings under CCP §§1209-1221 distinguished from misdemeanor prosecutions for contempt under Pen C §166, see §16.51.

§16.102 d. Aggressive advocacy distinguished

An attorney cannot be summarily adjudged in contempt for aggressive, but respectful, advocacy. In re Buckley (1973) 10 C3d 237, 253, 110 CR 121. Aggressive advocacy is proper and desirable in an adversary system. Love v Wolf (1964) 226 CA2d 378, 393, 38 CR 183. An attorney has a duty to protect the client's interests and has the right to press legitimate argument and protest an erroneous ruling. Gallagher v Municipal Court (1948) 31 C2d 784, 796, 192 P2d 905.

A judge must exercise summary contempt power with great caution to avoid stifling the freedom of thought and speech necessary to a fair trial. In re Buckley (1973) 10 C3d 237, 249, 110 CR 121. When aggressive advocacy gives way to insolence and disrespect toward the court, however, counsel may be held in contempt. See In re Buckley, supra.

EXAMPLE 1: In People v Ward (2009) 173 CA4th 1518, 1528, 93 CR3d 871, trial counsel was held in contempt for accusing the prosecutor of misconduct in the presence of the jury, after the court ordered him not to do so.

EXAMPLE 2: In Hawk v Superior Court (1974) 42 CA3d 108, 126, 116 CR 713, trial counsel was held in contempt while examining witnesses for frequently repeating questions after objections to them had been sustained, despite being admonished not to do so.

EXAMPLE 3: In People v Fusaro (1971) 18 CA3d 877, 887, 96 CR 368, contemptuous conduct consisted of trial counsel's interrupting the trial with frivolous objections, permitting a witness to remain in the courtroom despite an exclusion order, twice returning late to trial after a recess, and using crude and abusive language in a colloquy with the prosecutor.

EXAMPLE 4: In Cooper v Superior Court (1961) 55 C2d 291, 10 CR 842, the court did not hold counsel in contempt for disregarding the trial judge's admonition to wait until the jury was out of the courtroom before making an objection. The judge gave the admonition while commenting on the evidence when the jury had been recalled to the courtroom after almost 3 weeks of deliberations. For examples of attorney misconduct generally, see §§16.66-16.90.

Further research: See also Charbonneau v Superior Court (1974) 42 CA3d 505, 116 CR 153 (violation of in limine order); Thorne v Municipal Court (1965) 237 CA2d 249, 46 CR 749 (trial counsel's unannounced departure from courtroom during trial).

e. Civil and criminal contempt

§16.103 (1) General distinction

Generally, many factors are relevant in distinguishing the two types of contempt; no single factor is determinative. Criminal contempt is prosecuted by the state and docketed as a criminal matter; civil contempt is initiated by a private party. The main purpose of civil contempt is to benefit a party by providing disincentives to future action by the contemnor rather than providing punishment. Civil contempt will generally order a conditional punishment to secure performance rather than an absolute punishment. The primary purpose of criminal contempt is to uphold the court's authority and dignity and to punish past conduct.

§16.104 (2) When civil characterized as criminal

Contempt proceedings instituted under the Code of Civil Procedure are often characterized as criminal in nature. See, e.g., Phillips v Superior Court (1943) 22 C2d 256, 257, 137 P2d 838; Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. v Superior Court (1968) 265 CA2d 370, 371, 72 CR 177. Some courts, however, also classify these proceedings as civil contempts. See United Farm Workers, AFL-CIO v Superior Court (1968) 265 CA2d 212, 214, 71 CR 513. See also In re Martin (1977) 71 CA3d 472, 480, 139 CR 451.

EXAMPLE: In Morelli v Superior Court (1969) 1 C3d 328, 333, 82 CR 375, the court noted that contempt proceedings are regarded as civil in nature when the primary object is to protect the litigants' rights. The proceedings are regarded as criminal, however, when the object is to vindicate the court's dignity or authority—even though the proceedings arise from, or are ancillary to, a civil action.

This distinction is of limited importance, because CCP §§1209-1222 embrace both classes of contempt, which "are to be investigated and punished in the same manner and in accordance with the same rules." In re Morris (1924) 194 C 63, 67, 227 P 914. An example of a contempt proceeding that a court would consider civil in nature might be one to enforce payment of spousal support. See In re Wilson (1888) 75 C 580, 583, 17 P 698; 7 Witkin, California Procedure, Trial §173 (5th ed 2008).

NOTE: Code of Civil Procedure §1209.5, establishing contempt for a failure to comply with a child support order, and establishing a presumption of contempt on proof of noncompliance, was held potentially unconstitutional in Hicks v Feiock (1988) 485 US 624, 99 L Ed 2d 721, 108 S Ct 1423. The United States Supreme Court observed that the due process clause requires that in quasi-criminal contempt proceedings the state has the burden of proving guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. The Court also held that whether a contempt proceeding is civil or criminal is a subtle question of state law. On remand, the California Court of Appeal, in In re Feiock (1989) 215 CA3d 141, 263 CR 437, held that ability to pay is an affirmative defense that shifted the burden of proof to petitioner. In Moss v Superior Court (1998) 17 C4th 396, 428, 71 CR2d 215, the California Supreme Court disapproved this view, holding that a petitioner need only prove a valid order, knowledge, and noncompliance. Inability to pay remains an affirmative defense based on the prohibition against imprisonment for a debt.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.105 (3) Civil contempt distinguished from misdemeanor criminal contempt

Contempt proceedings under CCP §§1209-1221 should be distinguished from misdemeanor prosecutions under Pen C §166 for the criminal offense of contempt. Certain acts or omissions specified as contempts in CCP §1209 duplicate those specified in Pen C §166. In such instances, contempt proceedings may be brought under CCP §§1209-1222. A misdemeanor prosecution under Pen C §166 affords a defendant the rights of a person charged with a crime, including the right to a jury trial. Safer v Superior Court (1975) 15 C3d 230, 239, 124 CR 174.

§16.106 (4) When double jeopardy an issue

The distinction of whether contempt proceedings under CCP §§1209-1222 are civil or criminal in nature (see Morelli v Superior Court (1969) 1 C3d 328, 82 CR 375) may be important when double jeopardy is an issue.

EXAMPLE: In People v Lombardo (1975) 50 CA3d 849, 123 CR 755, defendant was found guilty of contempt under CCP §1209(a)(5), (9) for failing to answer questions, sentenced to 5 days in jail, and fined $500. He then was prosecuted for violating Pen C §166. The appellate court noted that the contempt proceeding was criminal in nature because its object was to vindicate the court's dignity and authority. 50 CA3d at 852. The court concluded that the double jeopardy clause of the Fifth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution barred the misdemeanor contempt prosecution brought under Pen C §166.50. 50 CA3d at 854.

The distinction may also be important when coercive incarceration is imposed to compel compliance with a court order under CCP §1219. When the incarceration ceases to serve its coercive function and becomes punitive in nature, it is limited by the 5-day maximum sentence provided by CCP §1218. In re Farr (1974) 36 CA3d 577, 584, 111 CR 649. See §16.56.

Many cases seeking to distinguish civil contempt from criminal contempt arise when the contemnor is being prosecuted for criminal contempt, after being subjected to civil contempt. The concept of double jeopardy prevents a subsequent prosecution for the same act of contempt if the court has already imposed contempt sanctions that are criminal in nature. Civil contempt has punitive aspects and may be difficult to distinguish from criminal contempt.

Further research: For a review of cases that discuss civil and criminal contempt with respect to double jeopardy, see People v Batey (1986) 183 CA3d 1281, 228 CR 787.

f. Forms of contempt

§16.107 (1) Direct contempt

Direct contempt is committed in the immediate view and presence of the court or the judge (in chambers). CCP §1211; Rosenstock v Municipal Court (1976) 61 CA3d 1, 6, 132 CR 59; Nierenberg v Superior Court (1976) 59 CA3d 611, 616, 130 CR 847.

§16.108 (2) Indirect contempt

Indirect contempt, sometimes referred to as constructive contempt, is not committed in the immediate view and presence of the court or the judge (in chambers). CCP §1211; Nierenberg v Superior Court (1976) 59 CA3d 611, 130 CR 847; In re Rosen (1973) 31 CA3d 71, 73, 106 CR 757, disapproved on other grounds in Boysaw v Superior Court (2000) 23 C4th 215, 221, 96 CR2d 531.

§16.109 (3) Hybrid form of contempt

A hybrid form of contempt occurs when elements of both direct and indirect contempt are present. See In re Martin (1977) 71 CA3d 472, 479 n4, 139 CR 451. See also Arthur v Superior Court (1965) 62 C2d 404, 408, 42 CR 441. This type of contempt may arise when contempt is committed in the court's immediate presence, but matters taking place outside the courtroom excuse it. See Chula v Superior Court (1962) 57 C2d 199, 207, 18 CR 507 (concurring opinion of Gibson, J.).

EXAMPLE: An attorney may fail to appear in court at the scheduled time, causing disruption of the judicial proceedings. The absence from the courtroom occurs in the immediate view and presence of the court. Later, counsel may seek to excuse the conduct by describing matters that occurred out of court for the court to consider in making its determination. See Arthur v Superior Court, supra; Chula v Superior Court, supra. See also In re Martin, supra (statements occurred in immediate presence of court; falsity could be established only by events outside court's presence).

© The Regents of the University of California

g. Procedures for direct or hybrid contempt

§16.110 (1) Court has summary power to punish

A court may summarily punish a direct contempt (see §16.107). CCP §1211. See Hawk v Superior Court (1974) 42 CA3d 108, 116 CR 713. In exercising its summary power, the court must issue an order reciting the facts adjudging the person guilty and designating the punishment. In re Hallinan (1969) 71 C2d 1179, 1180, 81 CR 1. See CCP §1211. The order "must be stated with sufficient particularity, description and detail to show without aid of speculation or reference to any extrinsic document that a contempt actually occurred." Hawk v Superior Court (1974) 42 CA3d 108, 125 n16, 116 CR 713. See CCP §1211.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.111 (2) Hearing may not be required

A hearing is ordinarily not required. DeGeorge v Superior Court (1974) 40 CA3d 305, 315, 114 CR 860. Notice and a hearing may be required, however, if the court does not summarily rule on the misconduct but states that it will hold a hearing later. See In re Karagozian (1975) 44 CA3d 516, 118 CR 793; DeGeorge v Superior Court, supra.

§16.112 (3) Judge may warn first or request an explanation

When contempt is based on language that is not insolent, contemptuous, or disorderly in itself or on words that are wholly innocuous, a judge usually must first warn the person before making a summary judgment of contempt. Hawk v Superior Court (1974) 42 CA3d 108, 118 n9, 116 CR 713. See In re Hallinan (1969) 71 C2d 1179, 1180 n2, 81 CR 1 (antagonistic, insulting, and disrespectful tone of voice); Gallagher v Municipal Court (1948) 31 C2d 784, 796, 192 P2d 905 (sneering and contemptuous expression on face; loud, insolent, belligerent, and offensive tone of voice).

A warning may not be necessary for truly egregious behavior. In DeGeorge v Superior Court (1974) 40 CA3d 305, 314, 114 CR 860, counsel engaged in a deliberate course of misconduct either to salvage what he perceived to be a losing position or to secure a mistrial. The court held a finding of contempt did not require as a prerequisite an admonition that the conduct was wrong.

"[I]n instances of direct contempt an apology to the judge should be given serious consideration." In re Buckley (1973) 10 C3d 237, 257, 110 CR 121. The effect of such an apology, however, lies exclusively in the trial judge's sound discretion. In re Buckley, supra; Hawk v Superior Court (1974) 42 CA3d 108, 123 n15, 116 CR 713.

In hybrid situations (see §16.109), due process should be satisfied if the judge confronts the person with the charge and offers a reasonable opportunity to explain. Arthur v Superior Court (1965) 62 C2d 404, 409, 42 CR 441. Thus, the statutory procedure for direct contempt is proper if an appropriate hearing is conducted on the question of excuse. In re Martin (1977) 71 CA3d 472, 479 n4, 139 CR 451. See Arthur v Superior Court, supra.

§16.113 (4) Written judgment of contempt required

A court must prepare a written judgment of contempt expeditiously. In re Easterbrook (1988) 200 CA3d 1541, 1544, 244 CR 652, overruled on other grounds in People v Romero (1994) 8 C4th 728, 744, 35 CR2d 270 (written order filed 6 days after court orally pronounced its finding was untimely and ordered set aside).

© The Regents of the University of California

h. Procedures for indirect contempt

§16.114 (1) Must have notice and opportunity to be heard

The procedure for punishing an indirect contempt is more elaborate than that required for direct or hybrid contempts. See §§16.110-16.113. Due process requires that the person charged with an indirect contempt be given notice and an opportunity to be heard. See Arthur v Superior Court (1965) 62 C2d 404, 407, 42 CR 441. See also Ingold v Municipal Court (1948) 85 CA2d 651, 193 P2d 808 (due process includes reasonable opportunity to prepare and present defense). The specified procedure (see generally CCP §§1211-1222) must be strictly followed (see Doyle v Superior Court (1952) 113 CA2d 880, 249 P2d 298).

§16.115 (2) Proceeding initiated with declaration or affidavit

Proceedings to adjudicate an indirect contempt are initiated by presenting an affidavit (or declaration, see CCP §2015.5) to the court, stating the facts that constitute the contempt (or a statement of the facts by a referee, arbitrator, or other judicial officer). CCP §1211. See Arthur v Superior Court (1965) 62 C2d 404, 42 CR 441. See also In re Morelli (1970) 11 CA3d 819, 829, 91 CR 72, overruled on other grounds in Cedars-Sinai Imaging Med. Group v Superior Court (2000) 83 CA4th 1281, 1287 n6, 100 CR2d 320 (certificate of court reporter who was to officiate at deposition considered "a statement of the facts" by judicial officer within meaning of §1211).

The lack of an affidavit of facts will void a contempt proceeding brought under CCP §1211. Due process requires notice of facts to the contemnor in the affidavit; a court transcript of the proceedings in which the judge reviewed the acts of indirect contempt does not suffice for the affidavit. In re Cowan (1991) 230 CA3d 1281, 281 CR 740.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.116 (3) Court issues warrant of attachment or order to show cause

After a proper affidavit has been filed under CCP §1212, the court may issue:

- A warrant of attachment (bench warrant; see Silvagni v Superior Court (1958) 157 CA2d 287, 290, 321 P2d 15) to arrest and bring the accused before the court to answer the charge; or
- An order to show cause (the more common procedure).

See Arthur v Superior Court (1965) 62 C2d 404, 42 CR 441.

An order to show cause must be served in the same manner as a summons. CCP §1016. Neither a warrant nor an order to show cause may issue except on a proper affidavit or declaration specifying the full facts of the alleged contempt. Lund v Superior Court (1964) 61 C2d 698, 713, 39 CR 891. On issuance of a bench warrant after a party's failure to appear in court under an order to show cause, see In re Morelli (1970) 11 CA3d 819, 836, 91 CR 72, overruled on other grounds in Cedars-Sinai Imaging Med. Group v Superior Court (2000) 83 CA4th 1281, 1287 n6, 100 CR2d 320.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.117 (4) Accused should serve and file counterdeclaration

A person accused of contempt should serve and file a counteraffidavit (or counterdeclaration), but CCP §§1209-1222 do not expressly require the person to do so.

Although an affidavit (or declaration) initiating the contempt proceeding may be based on information and belief under the hearsay rule, it is insufficient as evidence to sustain a contempt conviction. Freeman v Superior Court (1955) 44 C2d 533, 537, 282 P2d 857.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.118 (5) Affidavits constitute pleadings

The initial affidavit (or declaration) on which the proceeding is based constitutes the complaint; defendant's counteraffidavit (or counterdeclaration) constitutes the answer or plea. Lyon v Superior Court (1968) 68 C2d 446, 452, 67 CR 265; Freeman v Superior Court (1955) 44 C2d 533, 536, 282 P2d 857.

The issues of fact are framed from the respective affidavits (or declarations), which serve as the pleadings; a hearing must be held on these issues. Lyon v Superior Court, supra; Freeman v Superior Court, supra. See CCP §1217. Note, however, that the "allegations in the moving party's declaration are deemed admitted if not denied in the defense declaration," and that a hearing is required only on the controverted issues. Crittenden v Superior Court (1964) 225 CA2d 101, 107, 36 CR 903. See In re Larrabee (1938) 29 CA2d 240, 243, 84 P2d 224 (allegations of affidavit on which order to show cause was based were deemed admitted when there was no answer, counteraffidavit, or other evidence on behalf of accused).

NOTE: An affidavit (or declaration) on which an order to show cause is issued may also serve as evidence, but it does not constitute evidence until it is offered and received. Collins v Superior Court (1957) 150 CA2d 354, 364, 310 P2d 103. If the affidavit (or declaration) is offered in evidence, the accused may object to any matter stated in it on any legal ground. If it is received in evidence, the accused may cross-examine the affiant (or declarant). Collins v Superior Court, supra.

§16.119 (6) Hearing procedure

At the hearing, all elements of the charged contempt must be proved by competent evidence. Hotaling v Superior Court (1923) 191 C 501, 505, 217 P 73; Turkington v Municipal Court (1948) 85 CA2d 631, 635, 193 P2d 795. Because of the quasi-criminal nature of the proceeding, the constitutional rights of the accused must be observed. In re Martin (1977) 71 CA3d 472, 480, 139 CR 451. For example:

- The accused is entitled to a presumption of innocence;
- The accused cannot be compelled to testify; and
- The contempt must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt—a mere preponderance of the evidence is insufficient.

Further research: On the hearing generally, see CCP §1217. On civil versus criminal nature of the proceeding generally, see §16.51.

§16.120 (7) Rights of accused

The accused has no right to a jury trial (Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. v Superior Court (1968) 265 CA2d 370, 375, 72 CR 177), but the accused may request the appointment of a public defender when not financially able to employ counsel (see generally Govt C §27706(a)). The accused has the right to:

- Examine documentary evidence (In re Shackelford (1953) 116 CA2d 864, 867, 254 P2d 610);
- Cross-examine those who give evidence against the accused; and
- Present evidence in behalf of the accused (Collins v Superior Court (1957) 150 CA2d 354, 364, 310 P2d 103).

"[P]resumptions or intendment may not be indulged in to support the contempt order; thus, the findings and judgment are strictly construed in petitioner's favor." In re Martin (1977) 71 CA3d 472, 480, 139 CR 451.

§16.121 (8) Right to disqualify judge

A person charged with an indirect contempt (see §16.108) has the right to disqualify a judge under CCP §§170-170.5. The procedures for disqualification of a judge are set forth in CCP §170.3. See Briggs v Superior Court (1931) 211 C 619, 297 P 3 (applicability of CCP §170). The accused generally has no right to disqualify a judge under §170 for direct contempt. See Blodgett v Superior Court (1930) 210 C 1, 9, 290 P 293.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.122 (9) Judge may defer adjudication of contempt

A judge may defer adjudication of contempt for courtroom misconduct until later in the trial or at the trial's conclusion, unless prompt punishment is required. Nierenberg v Superior Court (1976) 59 CA3d 611, 616, 130 CR 847. In these instances, due process requires a new and impartial judge to adjudicate the contempt, if the trial judge has become personally involved with the accused and thus is unfit to adjudicate the contempt charge. Mayberry v Pennsylvania (1971) 400 US 455, 463, 27 L Ed 2d 532, 539, 91 S Ct 499; In re Buckley (1973) 10 C3d 237, 256, 110 CR 121. See also In re Martin (1977) 71 CA3d 472, 479 n4, 139 CR 451, in which the court noted that when the hearing on a direct or indirect contempt is continued to a later date, basic due process requires that it be conducted before a truly impartial judge.

The test for judicial recusal under CCP §170.1(a)(6)(A)(iii) is objective: If a reasonable person would entertain doubts about the judge's partiality, disqualification is mandated. United Farm Workers of Am. v Superior Court (1985) 170 CA3d 97, 216 CR 4 (former CCP §170.1(a)(6)(C), now CCP §170.1(a)(6)(A)(iii)).

EXAMPLE: In Aetna Life Ins. Co. v Lavoie (1986) 475 US 813, 89 L Ed 2d 823, 106 S Ct 1580, the Court held that the judge's refusal to recuse himself from a case in which his interest was direct, personal, substantial, and pecuniary violated federal due process requirements.

Further research: On court's entering judgments of contempt during trial but staying execution of judgments pending discharge of the jury, see Hawk v Superior Court (1974) 42 CA3d 108, 115 n2, 116 CR 713.

i. Penalty for civil contempt

§16.123 (1) In general

The penalty for civil contempt is 5 days in jail, a $1000 fine, or both. CCP §1218; Bauguess v Paine (1978) 22 C3d 626, 150 CR 461. In addition, a person, or any agent of that person, who is adjudged guilty of contempt may be ordered to pay the party initiating the contempt proceeding the reasonable attorney fees and costs incurred in connection with the contempt proceeding. CCP §1218.

Anyone who is adjudged guilty of misdemeanor contempt under Pen C §166 may be punished by imprisonment in a county jail for not over 6 months or by a fine not over $1000, or both. Pen C §19.

The court may order incarceration "in lieu of payment of a fine imposed for contempt." In re Ciraolo (1969) 70 C2d 389, 399, 74 CR 865 (proper to sentence person guilty of contempt to 3 days in jail and assess $200 fine; in case of default, person to serve additional 10 days). On prohibition against incarcerating indigent instead of requiring payment of a fine imposed for contempt, see In re Siegel (1975) 45 CA3d 843, 120 CR 8, overruled on other grounds in People v Romero (1994) 8 C4th 728, 744, 35 CR2d 270.

§16.124 (2) Separate contemptuous acts

When separate contemptuous acts are committed, the contemner may be fined for each offense in the amount specified in CCP §1218. Donovan v Superior Court (1952) 39 C2d 848, 855, 250 P2d 246. In Vaughn v Municipal Court (1967) 252 CA2d 348, 351 n1, 60 CR 575, an attorney, who was adjudged guilty of 2 counts of contempt, was committed to 5 days in jail and fined $500 on each count—the jail sentences to run concurrently. On a witness's refusal to answer a series of questions as constituting only one contempt, see In re Keller (1975) 49 CA3d 663, 123 CR 223.

§16.125 (3) Failure to perform an act

When contempt consists of the failure to perform an act that is in the power of the accused to perform, the court may imprison the accused until the act is performed. CCP §1219. In that event, the act must be specified in the warrant of commitment. CCP §1219. The court's power under §1219 is coercive rather than penal in nature. See In re Keller (1975) 49 CA3d 663, 670, 123 CR 223; In re Farr (1974) 36 CA3d 577, 583, 111 CR 649. When the commitment ceases to be coercive and becomes punitive, it is limited by the 5-day maximum sentence of CCP §1218. 36 CA3d at 584.

§16.126 (4) Recalcitrant witness

An adverse party may sometimes protect against a recalcitrant witness by seeking contempt. See In re Keller (1975) 49 CA3d 663, 670, 123 CR 223. If the witness refuses to testify fully, the testimony may be disallowed in whole or in part. When the witness's testimony is necessary for the prosecution or defense, however, a party's only recourse is to request that (49 CA3d at 670):

- The court exercise its coercive power under CCP §1219 to jail the witness while the trial is in progress;
- The court exercise its power to punish the witness under CCP §1218; or
- The witness be prosecuted for violating Pen C §166(a)(6).

A court may not "imprison or otherwise confine or place in custody the victim of a sexual assault or domestic violence crime for contempt when the contempt consists of refusing to testify concerning that sexual assault or domestic violence crime." CCP §1219(b).

Procedures for sanctions if a minor under 16 years of age refuses to take an oath or to testify are specified in CCP §1219.5.

© The Regents of the University of California

j. Stay of sentence

§16.127 (1) When stay required

Despite the CCP §1211 provision for summary punishment for contempt, under CCP §§128 and 1209 the sentence for contempt must be stayed "pending the filing within three judicial days of a petition for extraordinary relief testing the lawfulness of the court's order" if the order affects an attorney, agent, investigator, or anyone acting under the attorney's direction, in the preparation and conduct of an action or proceeding.

The execution of any sentence for contempt against a victim of a sexual assault is stayed pending the filing within 3 judicial days after a petition for extraordinary relief testing the lawfulness of the contempt order. CCP §128(d).

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.128 (2) When stay not required

No stay of execution of sentence is required when the conduct giving rise to contempt is proscribed by Bus & P C §6068(b), concerning an attorney's duty to respect the courts and judicial officers. CCP §§128, 1209.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.129 k. Appealability of judgment of contempt

The judgment and orders made in contempt cases are final and conclusive. CCP §1222. They are not appealable. CCP §§904.1(a)(1), 904.2(a)(2); Hawk v Superior Court (1974) 42 CA3d 108, 115 n3, 116 CR 713. The judgment and orders may be reviewed, however, by certiorari, habeas corpus (see In re Buckley (1973) 10 C3d 237, 259, 110 CR 121), or prohibition (see Charbonneau v Superior Court (1974) 42 CA3d 505, 507 n1, 116 CR 153).

© The Regents of the University of California

VIII. JUDICIAL MISCONDUCT

§16.130 A. When judge fails to meet standards of conduct

Judicial misconduct may arise when a judge fails to meet appropriate standards of judicial behavior. For example, a judge:

- Must be courteous to the litigants, witnesses, and lawyers. Code of Judicial Ethics, Canon 3B(4).
- Must be open minded. See Hansen v Hansen (1965) 233 CA2d 575, 584, 43 CR 729.
- Must be impartial. See Haluck v Ricoh Electronics, Inc. (2007) 151 CA4th 994, 60 CR3d 542; Davis v Pezel (1933) 131 CA 46, 50, 20 P2d 982; Code of Judicial Ethics, Canon 3B.
- May not indulge in individual idiosyncrasies while administering justice. Etzel v Rosenbloom (1948) 83 CA2d 758, 765, 189 P2d 848. See Code of Judicial Ethics, Canon 3B.
- Must refrain from engaging in gender-biased conduct. Catchpole v Brannon (1995) 36 CA4th 237, 42 CR2d 440. See Code of Judicial Ethics, Canon 3B(5).
- Must refrain from affecting for personal reasons a case pending in another court. Broadman v Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 18 C4th 1079, 77 CR2d 408.

Prejudicial misconduct arising from a judge's failure to meet these standards can result in the declaration of a mistrial, the granting of a new trial, or reversal on appeal. See Etzel v Rosenbloom, supra, in which the appellate court suggested that trial judges heed Socrates' admonition: "Four things belong to a judge; to hear courteously, to answer wisely, to consider soberly, and to decide impartially." See §§16.53-16.65.

NOTE: A judge can be publicly censured for engaging in "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice that brings the judicial office into disrepute" under Cal Const art VI, §18(c)(2) even though the conduct did not occur while the court was in session or while the judge was on the bench conducting the business of the court. In re Gordon (1996) 13 C4th 472, 474, 53 CR2d 788 (conduct included making sexually suggestive remarks to and asking sexually explicit questions of female staff members, referring to staff member by crude and demeaning names, and other such actions).

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Examples of judicial misconduct

§16.131 1. Judicial intemperance

Insulting remarks, ridicule, or disparagement of counsel, parties, or witnesses on the part of the judge constitute judicial misconduct.

EXAMPLE 1: McCartney v Commission on Judicial Qualifications (1974) 12 C3d 512, 533, 116 CR 260 (casting aspersions on or ridiculing witnesses during judge's examination).

EXAMPLE 2: Webber v Webber (1948) 33 C2d 153, 156, 199 P2d 934 (disparaging remarks, e.g., telling counsel to "go ahead and wash your dirty linen").

EXAMPLE 3: In People v Harmon (1992) 7 CA4th 845, 9 CR2d 265, defense counsel complained that the trial judge turned his back to the attorney during defense counsel's argument to the jury. The court of appeal indicated that partiality may be shown by wordless conduct such as a gesture, a look of disbelief, or a bored closing of eyes. Counsel failed, however, to make a timely objection, and the record did not show that disrespect was inferred by anyone except the defense attorney.

EXAMPLE 4: Etzel v Rosenbloom (1948) 83 CA2d 758, 761, 189 P2d 848 (disparaging remarks, e.g., "If you don't want the jury to know the truth, I will sustain your objection").

Judicial intemperance should be distinguished from the court's power to exercise reasonable control over the proceedings and ensure the orderly administration of justice. On the court's inherent power generally, see Cooper v Superior Court (1961) 55 C2d 291, 10 CR 842.

Further research: See generally 7 Witkin, California Procedure, Trial §244 (5th ed 2008). See also Kloepfer v Commission on Judicial Performance (1989) 49 C3d 826, 264 CR 100, for other examples of judicial intemperance, including berating counsel and failure to remain objective and to protect litigants' rights.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.132 2. Prejudging case

It is misconduct for a judge to prejudge a case or an issue in it.

- Webber v Webber (1948) 33 C2d 153, 199 P2d 934 (plaintiff's presentation of evidence on need for suitable support allowance became meaningless in face of trial judge's prejudgment against her).
- Pratt v Pratt (1903) 141 C 247, 74 P 742 (judge expressed moral indignation about allowing child to testify against parent, and virtually threatened to prejudge father's testimony unless child was withdrawn as witness).
- Carlsson v Carlsson (2008) 163 CA4th 281, 77 CR3d 305 (judge ended trial before husband finished presenting evidence, infringing on husband's right to full and fair hearing).
- McVey v McVey (1955) 132 CA2d 120, 281 P2d 898 (preconceived and declared aversion of trial judge to action for separate maintenance (now legal separation) regardless of plaintiff's proof).
- Rosenfield v Vosper (1941) 45 CA2d 365, 114 P2d 29 (inappropriate for judge to advise defendants' counsel to tell clients that it would be in their best interest to settle for $7500; advice given in chambers before defendants presented any witnesses, indicating that judge was not open minded).

When the law affords more than one remedy, a party must determine which remedy to pursue, no matter how much the judge disapproves. McVey v McVey, supra. When a party properly pursues more than one remedy, the judge may not assert that the party should not have brought the action or asked for the relief. Although a trial judge may not approve of a statute or precedent governing a decision, the judge has a duty to enforce it in a proper case. 132 CA2d at 123.

§16.133 3. Showing partiality

It is misconduct for a judge to show partiality toward a party. See, e.g., Haluck v Ricoh Electronics, Inc. (2007) 151 CA4th 994, 60 CR3d 542; Davis v Pezel (1933) 131 CA 46, 50, 20 P2d 982. Even the appearance of partiality or prejudice on the part of a judge may constitute misconduct. See, e.g., Ward v DeMartini (1930) 108 CA 745, 750, 292 P 192 (while plaintiff testified about where she lived, judge remarked, "I know she lived a respectable and reputable life wherever she lived").

A judge is not, however, a "mere functionary whose sole purpose is to preserve order and lend ceremonial dignity to the proceedings" (Martin v Martin (1947) 79 CA2d 409, 410, 179 P2d 655) or a mere referee presiding over a contest of wits between counsel (see Miller v Republic Grocery, Inc. (1952) 110 CA2d 187, 192, 242 P2d 396). Thus, although a judge may not properly try a case when he or she has formed partisan opinions from outside sources, a trial judge will normally and properly form opinions on the law, evidence, and witnesses from presentation of the case. Expressing critical or disparaging remarks after that presentation is not misconduct. Pacific & Southwest Annual Conf. of United Methodist Church v Superior Court (1978) 82 CA3d 72, 84, 147 CR 44, citing Haldane v Haldane (1965) 232 CA2d 393, 395, 42 CR 828.

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.134 4. Interfering with witnesses

Unreasonable interference by a judge with counsel's examination of witnesses is misconduct. See 7 Witkin, California Procedure, Trial §249 (5th ed 2008).

- Pratt v Pratt (1903) 141 C 247, 250, 74 P 742 (judge interrupted defense counsel's examination of defendant's daughter and virtually threatened to prejudge defendant's testimony unless daughter was withdrawn as witness).
- Murr v Murr (1948) 87 CA2d 511, 517, 197 P2d 369 (judge nagged counsel about taking too much time in trying case and wasting court's time).

A judge may, however, suggest a shortening or condensing of testimony. See Hageman v O'Brien (1914) 24 CA 270, 277, 141 P 33. In Hageman, a nonjury trial, it was not error for the judge to suggest that testimony be shortened and condensed. This did not constitute a denial of the right to offer evidence.

§16.135 5. Improper examination of witnesses

A judge has power to examine witnesses (see §16.60) but cannot become the advocate for a party "or under the guise of examining witnesses comment on the evidence or cast aspersions or ridicule on a witness." People v Rigney (1961) 55 C2d 236, 241, 10 CR 625. Also, while counsel is asking proper questions, a trial judge ordinarily should refrain from taking over the questioning of witnesses, and instead permit counsel to develop the case. See Hart v Farris (1933) 218 C 69, 76, 21 P2d 432. See also People v Rigney, supra (judge should examine witnesses only when it appears that counsel will not elicit relevant and material evidence). See also People v Ferguson (1981) 126 CA3d Supp 22, 30 n4, 179 CR 437 (footnote to case indicated that trial judge should have asked a question the prosecuting deputy failed to ask; court analyzed series of cases regarding judge's "duty" to ask questions).

Particularly in a jury trial, a judge has a duty to exercise a high degree of patience with counsel and witnesses. Hays v Viscome (1953) 122 CA2d 135, 264 P2d 173. Jurors are quick to observe the court's attitude toward the parties and their counsel, and be influenced by it. 122 CA2d at 143. Thus, conduct by a judge that might be considered prejudicial in a jury trial may not be considered prejudicial in a nonjury trial. See, e.g., Seidenberg v George (1946) 76 CA2d 306, 309, 172 P2d 891 (judge's remarks to speed up nonjury trial justified by record). But see Murr v Murr, supra.

§16.136 6. Coercing waiver of substantive or procedural right

Coercing a party into waiving an important substantive or procedural right constitutes misconduct on the part of a judge. See, e.g., Broadman v Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 18 C4th 1079, 77 CR2d 408 (inducing a criminal defendant to waive right to prompt sentencing hearing without disclosing judge's true purpose is willful misconduct); Pratt v Pratt (1903) 141 C 247, 74 P 742 (coercing party to withdraw daughter as witness even though testimony she offered was competent and proper).

Coercion can arise in a subtle way. For example, the judge may suggest in the jury's presence a course of action so pleasing to them that counsel is compelled to accept it. See, e.g., Shippy v Peninsula Rapid Transit Co. (1925) 197 C 290, 240 P 785 (improper interrogation of jurors by judge at close of evidence to determine how many jurors felt reasonably satisfied that they could determine facts without argument or jury instructions; plaintiff's waiver of argument considered involuntary).

§16.137 7. Compelling settlement

A trial judge may not coerce a party to effect a settlement. See Rosenfield v Vosper (1941) 45 CA2d 365, 114 P2d 29. Before defendants had presented any evidence in Rosenfield, a nonjury trial, the trial judge advised their attorney that it would be in their best interests to settle for $7500. The appellate court held this advice to be improper because it indicated that the judge could not hear defendant's witnesses with an open mind. In reversing a judgment favoring plaintiff in a greater amount, the court noted (45 CA2d at 371):

> [A]lthough efforts on the part of a trial judge to expedite proceedings and to encourage settlements out of court are ordinarily to be commended, such efforts should never be so directed as to compel either litigant to make a forced settlement.

Distinguishing what constitutes a reasonable and proper suggestion of compromise or alternative relief from what constitutes coercing a party into settlement may be difficult. 7 Witkin, California Procedure, Trial §252 (5th ed 2008). For cases in which judges' suggestions and comments concerning settlement have been considered proper, see Gardner v Mobil Oil Co. (1963) 217 CA2d 220, 31 CR 731, and Empire Steel Bldgs. Co. v Harvey Mach. Co. (1954) 122 CA2d 411, 416, 265 P2d 32.

EXAMPLE 1: In Gardner v Mobil Oil Co., supra, the trial judge stated, in essence, on the third day of a 5-day nonjury trial that plaintiffs had not yet made a prima facie case. He then inquired whether settlement was possible. During the settlement discussion that followed, the judge commented that, based on the case presented so far, plaintiffs did not appear to have suffered any financial loss from their dealings with defendant. The judge also suggested a settlement figure. He indicated, however, that his mind was still open regarding a decision in the case.

EXAMPLE 2: In Empire Steel Bldgs. Co. v Harvey Mach. Co., supra, the trial judge called the parties into chambers, before plaintiff had finished presenting evidence, and suggested that they effect a compromise. The judge indicated that "it looked as though there was a contract" at that point in the trial. 122 CA2d 416 (no showing of coercion; at conclusion of trial, defendant followed judge's suggestion to amend cross-complaint to pray for divorce).

Further research: See Anno, Propriety and Prejudicial Effect of Suggestion or Comments by Judge as to Compromise or Settlement of Civil Case, 6 ALR3d 1457 (1966).

§16.138 8. Receiving evidence when court not in session

A trial judge may not receive evidence when court is not in session. Gimbel v Laramie (1960) 181 CA2d 77, 85, 5 CR 88.

EXAMPLE: In Gimbel (a nonjury trial), the trial judge advised counsel after the case was submitted for decision that he had submitted a photograph, which had been received in evidence, to a friend who was an amateur photographer. Although the photograph purportedly showed a defective steering wheel, the photographer was unable to detect any damage. The judge offered counsel an opportunity to have expert photographers examine the picture and testify concerning it. The appellate court noted that plaintiff could have moved at this point for a mistrial, because the judge's actions constituted a denial of due process. The judge's friend had testified as an unsworn witness when the court was not in session, he was not subject to cross-examination, and he performed the function of an expert without qualifying as such. Rather than moving for a mistrial, however, plaintiff requested permission to reopen the case, which the court granted. The appellate court held that, by electing to reopen the case rather than moving for a mistrial, the attorney had waived the right to a new trial or reversal of the judgment on that ground. The court noted that an attorney who elects to introduce additional evidence to counteract evidence wrongfully received by the court may not reserve an objection to the evidence in the event of an adverse judgment. 181 CA2d at 86.

Further research: On trier of fact (judge or jury) leaving courtroom to receive evidence when court is in session, see CCP §651.

9. Coercing jury verdict

§16.139 a. Telling jury they must agree

Because individual jurors hold the exclusive right to agree or not agree on a verdict, it is improper for a judge to tell them that they must agree. Cook v Los Angeles Ry. (1939) 13 C2d 591, 594, 91 P2d 118. In addition, a judge may not hurry the jurors' deliberations by coercive threats or disparaging remarks or coerce them into bringing a verdict within an unreasonably short time. Cook v Los Angeles Ry., supra. See Duehren v Stewart (1940) 39 CA2d 201, 209, 102 P2d 784 ("court commits error only when by instruction or conduct the jury is coerced into an agreement").

EXAMPLE: In Cook v Los Angeles Ry., supra, the court held coercive a trial judge's instruction to jurors indicating that he did not consider plaintiff was entitled to recover, and that the jurors should take no more than ten additional minutes to deliberate. 13 C2d at 593.

In Mahoney v San Francisco & San Mateo Ry. (1895) 110 C 471, 476, 42 P 968, when the jury stood 8-3, the judge improperly indicated that:

- The trial had been particularly expensive for plaintiff, who was not well off;
- Plaintiff required at least 9 votes for a verdict; and
- He would cheerfully do anything to help one of the three jurors come to a conclusion, e.g., reread a portion of the charge.

The appellate court remarked that it "must have appeared to the jury that the court was insisting that the three, or one of them, should yield to the eight." 110 C at 479.

A trial judge may not, by means of thinly veiled threats or intimidation, coerce a jury into returning a verdict to which it would not otherwise have agreed. Langdon v Superior Court (1923) 65 CA 41, 223 P 72. This coercion usurps the jury's function in determining the facts of the case. In this situation, the jury's verdict actually represents a verdict by the judge. 65 CA at 43.

§16.140 b. Distinguish proper advice

A distinction should be drawn between coercing the jury and properly advising it of its powers and function. It is not improper for a trial court to advise jurors of the importance of reaching a verdict and of considering one another's arguments with open minds rather than obstinately adhering to first impressions. Cook v Los Angeles Ry. (1939) 13 C2d 591, 91 P2d 118. A judge may insist that the jurors obey the instructions on the law in arriving at a verdict. See Redo y Cia v First Nat'l Bank (1926) 200 C 161, 165, 252 P 587 (court refused to accept jury's verdict and instructed jury to retire and return verdict conforming with instruction on lawful limit of liability).

EXAMPLE 1: In Pandolfo v Jackson (1936) 12 CA2d 232, 235, 55 P2d 550, the court held that the trial judge did not commit error in inquiring about the status of the deliberations after only 3 hours. The judge asked the foreman how many ballots had been taken and how the jurors stood numerically, without asking which side the jury favored. Similarly, even though a jury indicates that it cannot agree on a verdict, it is not misconduct for a judge to send them out for further deliberations. See Pisani v Martini (1933) 132 CA 269, 274, 22 P2d 804.

EXAMPLE 2: In Inouye v Pacific Southwest Airlines (1981) 126 CA3d 648, 179 CR 13, when the jurors were unable to reach a verdict in this case, the judge instructed them that the case would have to be retried if they did not reach a verdict. The judge also instructed the jurors to listen to the other jurors' arguments and distrust their own judgment if a large majority took a different view of the case. In holding that the instructions were not coercive under the circumstances, the court stated (126 CA3d at 651):

> [A]ny coercive effect should be determined by reading the instruction as a whole in light of the surrounding circumstances. Only when the instruction has coerced the jurors into surrendering their conscientious convictions in order to reach agreement should the verdict be overturned.

NOTE: Including the above remarks in a jury instruction in a criminal case would be error. See People v Gainer (1977) 19 C3d 835, 139 CR 861. In People v Moore (2002) 96 CA4th 1105, 1120, 117 CR2d 715, however, the court's instructions were found not to be erroneous because they did not suggest that a verdict must be reached and, while instructing jurors to consider each other's views, also instructed them to base their verdict solely on the evidence and not to abandon a deeply and conscientiously held position simply to compromise.

A court may question the jury about its numerical division if the questioning is not otherwise divisive. People v Morris (1991) 53 C3d 152, 227, 279 CR 720, overruled on other grounds in People v Stansbury (1995) 9 C4th 824, 830 n1, 38 CR2d 394. Also, when a jury cannot agree on a first issue of a special verdict, the court may ask the jury to skip over that question and consider the second issue if the second issue can dispose of the entire action. Santiago v Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1990) 224 CA3d 1318, 1335, 274 CR 576. For further discussion on deadlock during jury deliberations, see §21.14.

§16.141 10. Communicating with jurors during deliberations

Jurors may require the court officer to bring them into court if, during deliberations, they disagree on the testimony or wish to be informed on a point of law. CCP §614. The court must give them the required information in the presence of, or after notice to, the parties or counsel.

EXAMPLE 1: In Nelson v Southern Pac. Co. (1937) 8 C2d 648, 655, 67 P2d 682, the court held that it was improper for the trial judge to communicate with the jury after they retired by sending them a message by the bailiff without the presence of counsel. The court noted that any method of communication other than that authorized by CCP §614 goes to the substance of the right of trial by jury and is considered to be prejudicial except in exceptional circumstances.

EXAMPLE 2: In Tice v Pacific Elec. Ry. (1939) 36 CA2d 66, 96 P2d 1022, communication to the jury in the absence of counsel, or without an express stipulation, is irregular and should be avoided; under the facts of the case, however, no prejudicial error was shown.

When the jury has retired for deliberation and returns to the court for clarification of testimony, the trial judge need not be present in the court while testimony previously received in evidence is read to the jury. CCP §614.5.

§16.142 C. No formula for determining misconduct

No formula governs which judicial comments constitute misconduct. Each case must be examined in relation to its own facts. See Weil v Weil (1951) 37 C2d 770, 786, 236 P2d 159; Gary v Avery (1960) 178 CA2d 574, 579, 3 CR 20.

EXAMPLE: In Anderson v Mothershead (1937) 19 CA2d 97, 101, 64 P2d 995, a personal injury action, expert testimony on the extent of plaintiff's injuries conflicted. When instructing the jury, the trial judge stated:

> [I]f [defendant] isn't liable, then no matter how terribly [plaintiff] may have been injured, [defendant,] of course, would not be liable. It would be a terrible and a sad thing, but one for which he could not be compelled to pay.
> The appellate court held that use of the words "a terrible and a sad thing" was improper because the jury would naturally apply them to plaintiff's injuries and believe that the court regarded them as "terrible."

EXAMPLE 2: In Chapman v Pacific Elec. Ry. (1927) 85 CA 69, 74, 258 P 1006, it was held improper for the court to state in the instructions that the amount claimed by plaintiff was absurd.

EXAMPLE 3: In Iloff v Purity Stores, Ltd. (1960) 178 CA2d 1, 2 CR 735, plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries in a slip-and-fall accident. The crucial issue was the condition of the floor. After plaintiff and an eyewitness testified that the floor was slick and oily, the store's managing agent was called to testify under CCP §2055 (now Evid C §776). He testified that the floor was in good condition and free of cracks. When plaintiff's counsel asked the witness again whether there were any cracks or recesses, the court stated that the witness had already answered counsel a dozen times. The court further said, "These floors are all right. I will vouch for that." 178 CA2d at 4. The appellate court held this to be error because it was improper for the judge to indicate his views during trial on so vital an issue.

When a judge comments on the evidence (see Cal Const art VI, §10), the comment should be expressly labeled as the judge's opinion, and the jurors should be advised that they may disregard it. People v Rigney (1961) 55 C2d 236, 241, 10 CR 625. Questions by the judge are not so labeled. When a judge's question conveys an opinion of a witness's credibility, the jurors may form their opinions before the case is submitted to them (see CCP §611) by substituting the judge's opinion for their own. Thus, a judge may not ask questions that convey an opinion on a witness's credibility to the jury. People v Rigney, supra.

When ruling on an objection to the admissibility of evidence, or on a motion to strike, it is not unusual for a judge to announce, for guidance of counsel, the reason for the ruling. Ries v Reinhard (1941) 47 CA2d 116, 120, 117 P2d 386. It is not improper for a trial judge to give reasons for such rulings if they are not expressed in language, or in a manner, that is prejudicial. Woods v Pacific Greyhound Lines (1949) 91 CA2d 572, 575, 205 P2d 738; McCullough v Langer (1937) 23 CA2d 510, 521, 73 P2d 649. See Lewis v Crenshaw (1920) 47 CA 781, 784, 191 P 72 (trial judge spoke laconically, decisively, and with great brevity in expressing rulings; no prejudice shown).

IX. REMEDIES FOR JUDICIAL MISCONDUCT

§16.143 1. Object to misconduct or assign misconduct as error

To protect the record, object to judicial misconduct when it occurs, or assign the misconduct as error. Otherwise, the error is considered to be waived and the point cannot be considered on appeal. See People v Geier (2007) 41 C4th 555, 613, 61 CR3d 580; Marini v Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control (1960) 177 CA2d 785, 787, 2 CR 714; Karwoski v Grant (1938) 30 CA2d 171, 178, 85 P2d 944. See also Estate of Golden (1935) 4 C2d 300, 310, 48 P2d 962 (no objection, motion, other action to strike, or request for curative instruction; any exception to trial judge's improper remark must be taken when remark is made or some time before close of trial). But see Haluck v Ricoh Electronics, Inc. (2007) 151 CA4th 994, 60 CR3d 542 (failure to object does not preclude review when objection and admonition would not cure prejudice caused by misconduct, or would be futile); Catchpole v Brannon (1995) 36 CA4th 237, 42 CR2d 440 (no requirement to object to gender bias on part of judiciary, which affects public interest in due administration of justice).

Even if the case is tried without a jury, an objection or assignment of misconduct as error usually is required. See, e.g., Rios v Chand (1955) 130 CA2d 833, 840, 280 P2d 47 (no assignment of prejudice or misconduct at time of alleged improper judicial remarks).

An assignment of misconduct as error might take the following form: "Your Honor, I respectfully object to your Honor's remarks and assign them as error." Depending on the circumstances, counsel might also request that the objectionable matter be stricken, that the judge give an admonition to the jurors to cure any harm caused by the misconduct, or both.

EXAMPLE: In Forte v Schiebe (1956) 145 CA2d 296, 301, 302 P2d 336, the court held that defendant did not forfeit the right to urge judicial misconduct on appeal, although no objection was made to allegedly prejudicial remarks of the trial judge and no request was made that the jury be admonished to disregard them. A special admonition apparently would not have cured the harm. Moreover, it appeared from the record that defendant's request that the jury be admonished would have been denied. See Etzel v Rosenbloom (1948) 83 CA2d 758, 762, 189 P2d 848. See also Estate of Golden, supra.

Any statement or other action of the court in commenting on or summarizing the evidence is deemed excepted (objected) to. CCP §647. See Delzell v Day (1950) 36 C2d 349, 223 P2d 625.

NOTE: Not all improper judicial actions cross the threshold of misconduct, but they still require the lawyer to be prepared to preserve objections on the record. See Haratani, Coping with Hostile Judges, Practical Litigator (May 1997).

© The Regents of the University of California

§16.144 2. Request curative admonition

In conjunction with an objection or assignment of error, no request is required that the judge instruct the jurors to disregard the judge's own misconduct to preserve the point for appeal. Delzell v Day (1950) 36 C2d 349, 223 P2d 625. In fact, requesting that the court admonish the jury to disregard the improper remarks may only serve to emphasize the words in the jurors' minds. 36 C2d at 351. But see Miller v Western Pac. R.R. (1962) 207 CA2d 581, 607, 24 CR 785 (injured party relieved of duty to assign judicial misconduct as error (and to request that trial court instruct jury to disregard it) only when admonition would not remove prejudicial effect of judge's remarks or conduct).

Judicial misconduct may be cured by the court's giving an appropriate admonitory instruction. See, e.g., Richman v San Francisco, Napa & Calistoga Ry. (1919) 180 C 454, 458, 181 P 769; Germ v City & County of San Francisco (1950) 99 CA2d 404, 416, 222 P2d 122.

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Review remedies available

§16.145 1. Consider moving for mistrial

If misconduct appears so prejudicial that it cannot be cured by admonition, and to proceed would deprive a party of the right to a fair trial, consider moving for a mistrial. See Etzel v Rosenbloom (1948) 83 CA2d 758, 765, 189 P2d 848. See §16.95.

Further research: On motions for mistrial, see §§18.82-18.102.

§16.146 2. Evaluate moving for new trial

Judicial misconduct is an "irregularity in the proceedings" under CCP §657(1) and, if prejudicial, is the basis for granting a new trial. See generally Gay v Torrance (1904) 145 C 144, 78 P 540. See also Webber v Webber (1948) 33 C2d 153, 163, 199 P2d 934. See §16.96.

Judicial misconduct that violates a party's right to due process requires reversal without determination of actual prejudice. See Carlsson v Carlsson (2008) 163 CA4th 281, 292, 77 CR3d 305 (judge summarily terminated trial before party finished presenting evidence).

Further research: On motions for new trial, see §§25.22-25.71.

§16.147 3. Determine whether appeal appropriate

A party may seek reversal of a judgment based on judicial misconduct. See, e.g., Delzell v Day (1950) 36 C2d 349, 223 P2d 625; Haluck v Ricoh Electronics, Inc. (2007) 151 CA4th 994, 60 CR3d 542. See also McCarthy v Mobile Cranes, Inc. (1962) 199 CA2d 500, 509, 18 CR 750 (denial of party's right to cross-examine adverse witness in consolidated action; former Cal Const art VI, §4-1/2 (currently §13) did not cure error). On absence of affidavit supporting motion for new trial based on judicial misconduct not preventing point being raised on appeal, see Webber v Webber (1948) 33 C2d 153, 199 P2d 934. On Cal Const art VI, §13, being held inapplicable to acts constituting reversible error per se, see 9 Witkin, California Procedure, Appeal §§453-458 (5th ed 2008).

Further research: See chap 17 for discussion of jury misconduct. See chap 21 for discussion of misconduct during deliberations.

§16.148 X. EXAMPLES OF ACTS OR OMISSIONS THAT ARE CONTEMPTS OF COURT'S AUTHORITY

The following acts or omissions are contempts of the court's authority (CCP §1209):

- Disorderly, contemptuous, or insolent behavior toward the judge while holding the court, tending to interrupt the due course of a trial or other judicial proceeding.
- A breach of the peace, boisterous conduct, or violent disturbance, tending to interrupt the due course of a trial or other judicial proceeding.
- Misbehavior in office, or other willful neglect or violation of duty by an attorney, counsel, clerk, sheriff, coroner, or other person, appointed or elected to perform a judicial or ministerial service.
- Abuse of the process or proceedings of the court, or falsely pretending to act under authority of an order or process of the court.
- Disobedience of any lawful judgment, order, or process of the court.
- Rescuing any person or property in the custody of an officer by virtue of an order or process of the court.
- Unlawfully detaining a witness, or a party to an action while going to, remaining at, or returning from the court where the action is on the calendar for trial.
- Any other unlawful interference with the process of proceedings of a court.
- Disobedience of a subpoena duly served or refusal to be sworn or answer as a witness.
- When summoned as a juror in a court, neglecting to attend or serve as such, or improperly conversing with a party to an action, to be tried at the court, or with any other person, in relation to the merits of the action, or receiving a communication from a party or other person in respect to it, without immediately disclosing the same to the court.
- Disobedience by an inferior tribunal, magistrate, or officer, of the lawful judgment, order, or process of a superior court, or proceeding in an action or special proceeding contrary to law, after the action or special proceeding is removed from the jurisdiction of such inferior tribunal, magistrate, or officer.

§16.149 XI. EXAMPLES OF REMEDIES FOR MISCONDUCT OF COUNSEL

The following remedies, or an effective combination of them, may be invoked for misconduct of counsel during trial. See §§16.66-16.90 for discussion of attorney misconduct, and §§16.92-16.129 for discussion of remedies for misconduct.

- An objection to the misconduct.
- A request that offending counsel be reprimanded and admonished to cease the objectionable conduct (see §16.92).
- A demand that offending counsel withdraw the argument or remark.
- A request for an admonition to the jury to disregard the objectionable material (see §16.93).
- A motion for the granting of a mistrial (see §16.95).
- A request to reopen the party's case when opposing counsel has made a flagrant misrepresentation of fact during closing argument.
- A motion for the granting of a new trial (see §16.96).
- Reversal on appeal, regardless of the corrective steps taken in the lower court, on the ground that counsel's conduct was so prejudicial as to be not correctable (see §§16.97-16.98).
- Citation of counsel for contempt after continued warning (see §§16.99-16.129).
- Sanctions up to $1500 under CCP §177.5 for violation of court orders (see People v Tabb (1991) 228 CA3d 1300, 279 CR 480, applying §177.5 to both civil and criminal cases; see also Caldwell v Samuels Jewelers (1990) 222 CA3d 970, 272 CR 126).
- The granting of a motion under CCP §§128.5, 128.7 for reasonable expenses, including attorney fees incurred as a result of opposing counsel's tactics or actions not based on good faith that were frivolous or caused unnecessary delay.

§17.1 I. SCOPE OF CHAPTER

This chapter addresses the practical issues that arise after a citizen is selected for jury service and is compelled to report to court. These issues include:

- Jury management during voir dire (see §§17.2-17.4), including misconduct during voir dire (see §17.4);
- Jury management during trial (see §§17.5-17.9);
- Juror misconduct during trial (see §§17.10-17.14), including communication of facts from sources outside the evidence (see §§17.10-17.14), improper communications (see §§17.15-17.19), and inattentiveness during trial (see §§17.20-17.22); and
- Remedies for misconduct (see §§17.23-17.32), including how to object (see §§17.23-17.24), requesting replacement of jurors (see §17.25), moving for mistrial (see §17.26) or moving for new trial (see §§17.27-17.32).

Jury deliberations, including misconduct during deliberations, are discussed in chap 21. Jury selection is covered in chap 8, and jury instructions in chap 20. Motions for new trial are covered in more detail in chap 25.

II. JURY MANAGEMENT DURING VOIR DIRE

§17.2 A. Managing prospective jurors

The jury commissioner manages the jury system, and the trial judge manages the prospective jurors assigned to the trial department. CCP §§191, 222, 222.5.

In most counties, prospective jurors (veniremen) gather in a jury assembly room. Before the prospective jurors are called to a courtroom (department), jury commission staff members take roll and outline the procedures that prospective jurors will follow. See CCP §214. When a particular department or courtroom needs a jury, a call goes to the jury assembly room. A designated number of prospective jurors is then selected at random and sent to the requesting department.

After the prospective jurors arrive at the designated courtroom, the trial judge is responsible for them. The trial judge may direct the clerk, bailiff, marshall, or other courtroom attendant (depending on local court practice) to greet the jurors and to take roll. Either outside the courtroom or after the prospective jurors are seated, the courtroom attendant will instruct them not to talk, eat, drink, or chew gum in the courtroom (and may also instruct them on the trial judge's rules).

PRACTICE TIP: Jury management issues may be handled differently in some courts. Although most judges address practical issues with counsel before trial, it is also good practice to seek out an attorney who has conducted a trial before the judge handling your case and discuss the judge's approach to jury management and other practical issues.

Further research: For discussion of improving jury procedures, see §§1.15-1.23. For a discussion of the jury selection process, see chap 8.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/17 Jury Management/§17.3 B. Jurors given introductory information about voir dire process

§17.3 B. Jurors given introductory information about voir dire process

Judge gives introductory speech. The judge usually welcomes the jurors and thanks them for their willingness to serve. The judge next states the name of the case, explains whether the case is civil or criminal, and reads a brief, neutral statement of the dispute, usually in a form that has been agreed on and prepared by counsel. The judge then identifies and introduces the parties, if present, as well as the attorneys. The judge also reads a list of witnesses whom the parties expect might be called. The trial judge may permit short opening statements by counsel to the panel before examination of prospective jurors begins. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1034. These actions are all directed toward identifying early in the process a prospective juror who knows something about the case or is familiar with the parties, the attorneys, or prospective witnesses and should be disqualified.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: A short opening statement—or "mini-opening statement"—can be a useful tool for counsel. For further discussion of mini-opening statements, see §1.18A.

Selection for voir dire. The clerk randomly selects prospective jurors for voir dire until the jury panel is complete. See CCP §222. Before examination of the panel assigned for voir dire, the prospective jurors swear, under penalty of perjury, to "accurately and truthfully answer" all questions on qualifications and competency to serve as trial jurors. CCP §232(a). Twelve names are then called for initial questioning by the judge and attorneys. See CCP §222.5. For detailed discussion of jury selection, see chap 8.

NOTE: Judges use a variety of procedures for jury selection, including the "six pack" method in which 18 jurors are seated for voir dire (12 in the jury box and 6 outside it). When a juror is excused, a replacement is taken from the extra six potential jurors (the "six pack").

All prospective jurors must pay attention during voir dire. The judge often explains that, because questions are repetitive, jurors can save time by listening and being prepared with answers when they are selected for voir dire. For a discussion of the juror's obligation to pay attention at all stages of the proceedings, and of inattentiveness as misconduct, see §§17.20-17.22.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Many judges direct jurors who are not in the original draw to listen carefully and to volunteer their responses if they are called to replace a seated prospective juror. This technique can help counsel identify which jurors are listening and tracking the issues being discussed.

Admonished not to discuss case. Before the first break during voir dire, the court usually admonishes the prospective jurors for the first time, instructing them not to discuss the jury selection or anything about the case, not to form or express any opinion about the case until it is submitted to them, as well as to avoid news coverage of the case and any independent investigation. CCP §611. See §17.6.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Many judges have expanded the admonition to include discussions by means of electronic media (e.g., blogs, texting), and one-way expressions that may not constitute a "discussion."

Take oath after selection. After the jury is selected, the jurors take an oath to render a verdict based only on the evidence and the instructions given. CCP §232(b). See chap 8 for discussion of jury selection.

NOTE: The identity of jurors is not normally subject to seal in a civil action. CCP §237(a)(1). In a criminal case, however, the court's record of personal juror identifying information must be sealed upon the recording of a jury's verdict. CCP §237(a)(2); see Erickson v Superior Court (1997) 55 CA4th 755, 758, 64 CR2d 230.

Preinstruction. Immediately after jurors are sworn, the court may preinstruct them regarding the elements of the charges or claims, their duties and conduct, the order of proceedings, the procedure for submitting written questions for witnesses, if allowed (see Cal Rules of Ct 2.1033), and the legal principles governing the proceeding. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1035. On preinstructions, see §1.21.

§17.4 C. Juror misconduct during voir dire: Concealment of bias

A juror's concealment of bias on voir dire examination constitutes misconduct. Weathers v Kaiser Found. Hosps. (1971) 5 C3d 98, 95 CR 516. See Clemens v Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1971) 20 CA3d 356, 97 CR 589 (during voir dire examination, juror concealed bias and prejudice against persons, including plaintiff, who prosecute medical malpractice litigation). "The right to unbiased and unprejudiced jurors is an inseparable and inalienable part of the right to a trial by jury guaranteed by the constitution." In re Hitchings (1993) 6 C4th 97, 110, 24 CR2d 74 (concealment by juror of greater knowledge of case than revealed on voir dire was misconduct because record showed that juror's prior knowledge was crucial to defense); Lombardi v California St. Ry. (1899) 124 C 311, 317, 57 P 66. See also Tapia v Barker (1984) 160 CA3d 761, 206 CR 803 (juror failed to disclose possible prejudice toward plaintiff's ethnic background).

Whether concealment of relevant information or background constitutes reversible error depends on two major factors (see cases listed below):

- Whether the concealment was intentional; and
- Whether the facts not divulged were similar to any matters in issue.

EXAMPLE 1: Concealment unintentional: People v Dyer (1988) 45 C3d 26, 59, 246 CR 209; Jutzi v County of Los Angeles (1987) 196 CA3d 637, 654, 242 CR 74; People v Kelly (1986) 185 CA3d 118, 120, 229 CR 584.

EXAMPLE 2: Concealed facts not directly relevant to those in dispute in the trial: Jutzi v County of Los Angeles, supra; People v Kelly, supra.

EXAMPLE 3: Concealment intentional and concealed matters directly relevant to the case: Ovando v County of Los Angeles (2008) 159 CA4th 42, 71 CR3d 415; People v Blackwell (1987) 191 CA3d 925, 236 CR 803; Tapia v Barker, supra.

It is up to the court to determine whether voir dire questions are relevant and unambiguous enough to determine whether concealment is intentional. In Wiley v Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1990) 220 CA3d 177, 188, 269 CR 240, a juror concealed his bias (the juror had been sued in a similar incident) against plaintiff during voir dire, but mentioned it during deliberations. The court noted that the trial court must determine whether the voir dire questions were relevant and unambiguous enough to enable it to determine whether the concealment was intentional and whether the juror knew of the facts elicited. The court found that a new trial was properly granted because the commonly used general voir dire question sufficed to elicit the responses needed, and the juror's misconduct was thus intentional.

A new trial may be granted under CCP §657(1)-(2) if, during voir dire examination, a juror conceals a state of mind that could prevent the juror from acting impartially. See People ex rel Dep't of Pub. Works v Curtis (1967) 255 CA2d 378, 388, 63 CR 138.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Jurors sometimes forget to mention certain details or concerns during questioning, and then find themselves uncertain how to raise the issue later. The judge should inform the jurors that if at any time, even during the trial, they realize that they have a response to a question raised in voir dire that they did not bring up for any reason, they should tell the bailiff so that the information can be given to the judge.

Further research: On concealment of bias by silence, see Lindemann v San Joaquin Cotton Oil Co. (1936) 5 C2d 480, 496, 55 P2d 870, discussed in §17.23; Smith v Covell (1980) 100 CA3d 947, 161 CR 377, discussed in §17.11. See also Clemens v Regents of Univ. of Cal., supra (prospective jurors' duty to volunteer information during voir dire examination).

III. JURY MANAGEMENT DURING TRIAL

§17.5 A. Jurors assemble in jury room or outside courtroom

Trial jurors usually report each day to the jury deliberation room assigned to their particular courtroom. When courts lack separate jury rooms, the jurors may be instructed to assemble outside the courtroom while trial matters or other cases are handled outside their presence. Trial courts should set up a system for receiving and responding to juror complaints. See Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 10.51.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/17 Jury Management/§17.6 B. Jury permitted breaks during trial

§17.6 B. Jury permitted breaks during trial

Usually, the judge allows a short morning break and a short afternoon break. Because smoking is not permitted in the courts, jurors must leave the building to smoke during a break. See Cal Rules of Ct 10.504. Jurors usually receive a lunch break during the trial.

PRACTICE TIP: Check the custom of the court in your case for such things as whether jurors are reimbursed for their meals during trial, or whether there are any lunch breaks at all. In some state courts, trial begins at 8:30 a.m. and continues until early afternoon without a lunch break so that the judge can spend some time each afternoon on matters unrelated to the ongoing trial.

In longer trials, the trial judge should consider scheduling trial days to permit jurors time for personal business. See Cal Rules of Ct, Standards of J Admin 2.20(b)(9).

The court must admonish the jurors that, if permitted to separate from other jurors, they (CCP §611):

- Are not allowed to communicate with anyone, including each other, about the subject of the trial; and
- Have the duty not to form or express an opinion to anyone on any subject of the trial until the case is submitted to them.

PRACTICE TIP: Before trial begins, the judge typically meets with counsel to discuss the trial proceedings and solicits from trial counsel a stipulation that the admonition to the jurors at each break or separation need not be given. There is little reason not to enter into such an agreement. Even with the stipulation, most trial judges repeat the admonition periodically, usually at the end of the trial day. Judges also often caution juries, on break or separation, to "remember the admonition."

© The Regents of the University of California

§17.7 C. Jurors may take notes during trial

Jurors must be permitted to take notes during the proceedings. At the beginning of a trial, the court must inform jurors of their right to take notes and provide them with note-taking materials. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1031. On juror note-taking, see §1.19. The court will remind jurors of their responsibility to pay attention and advise them that note taking should not interfere with the jurors' ability to listen to the evidence. Jurors may use their notes during deliberations but cannot remove their notes from the courtroom until they are discharged. For discussion of the use of juror notes during deliberations, see §21.30. See also CALJIC 1.05.

NOTE: The court should allow jurors to submit written questions for witnesses during trial. If such questions are allowed, the court must give counsel an opportunity to object to them outside the jury's presence. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1033. On juror questions, see §1.20.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/17 Jury Management/§17.8 D. When jury may see physical evidence or exhibits

§17.8 D. When jury may see physical evidence or exhibits

If an exhibit admitted into evidence is one that the jury can quickly observe or easily handle, such as a photograph, the jury will usually be permitted to pass the exhibit among themselves after it is admitted. Counsel must obtain leave of court, however, before giving the jury copies of documents (or blowups or transparencies of documents) to read.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Often counsel will ask the court if they can "publish" the exhibit and, if permitted, submit it to the jurors immediately to be passed around. Because some judges find this disruptive, it is advisable to raise the issue in advance with the court.

Trial judges should encourage counsel in complex civil cases to include key documents and exhibits in notebooks that the jurors may use to assist themselves during trial. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1032. On juror notebooks, see §1.19A.

PRACTICE TIP: To avoid delay and disruption of the proceedings, deliver to the jury, after it begins deliberations, documents that must be read, or exhibits that the jury will examine in detail.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/17 Jury Management/§17.9 E. Jury may view the scene on motion of party or court

§17.9 E. Jury may view the scene on motion of party or court

When a view would properly aid the trier of fact in determining the case, the court may order a view of:

- Property that is the subject of litigation (CCP §651(a)(1));
- The place where any relevant event occurred (CCP §651(a)(2)); or
- Any object, demonstration, or experiment that cannot reasonably be viewed in the courtroom, when the viewing is relevant and admissible in evidence in the case. CCP §651(a)(3).

Court is considered in session throughout the viewing. CCP §651(b). The entire court, including the judge, bailiff, and court reporter, accompanies the jury to the view site. CCP §651(b). For a discussion of consideration of facts based on personal knowledge or improper observations, see §17.11.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Judges generally do not favor jury views, which are expensive and present logistical difficulties. Before requesting one, consider the problems inherent in taking a large group of people into an area over which there is little control.

Jury views are discussed in §1.32. For discussion of fact-finder views in bench trials, see §24.4.

© The Regents of the University of California

IV. JURY MISCONDUCT DURING TRIAL

§17.10 A. Receiving or communicating facts from sources outside evidence

It is misconduct for jurors during trial to communicate to other jurors facts obtained outside the evidence presented at trial. See Smith v Covell (1980) 100 CA3d 947, 952, 161 CR 377. Facts brought in by the jurors from sources outside the evidence may improperly influence the jury's verdict. See Lankster v Alpha Beta Co. (1993) 15 CA4th 678, 682, 18 CR2d 923 (discussed in §17.12). However, the communication by one juror to the remaining jurors, during deliberation, of her written statement composed over a weekend is not communication of facts or sources outside the evidence, and is not otherwise improper. Bormann v Chevron USA, Inc. (1997) 56 CA4th 260, 264, 65 CR2d 321.

NOTE: The rule requiring all evidence to be received in open court gives each party full knowledge of the evidence, and it enables each party to object to the evidence by cross-examination, to test it, or otherwise to respond as appropriate.

© The Regents of the University of California

§17.11 1. Facts based on personal knowledge or observations may be improper

Because facts from sources outside the evidence provide no opportunity for the opposing party to explain or refute, they are patently unfair, and it is improper for the jury to consider them. See Andrews v County of Orange (1982) 130 CA3d 944, 957, 182 CR 176, disapproved on other grounds in People v Nesler (1997) 16 C4th 561, 582 n5, 66 CR2d 454. In Andrews, the court held that prejudicial statements made by a juror during viewing of a home, and a report by a juror during deliberations of independently obtained information, constituted misconduct.

Discussion of similar injury. In Smith v Covell (1980) 100 CA3d 947, 952, 161 CR 377, a juror improperly discussed his own injury, which was similar to the plaintiff's, with other jurors. Receipt of information by jurors from sources outside the evidence was cited in the motion for new trial, both as evidence of concealed bias (see §17.4) and as an objective fact that may have improperly influenced the jury's verdict.

Opinion of nonjuror. In Weathers v Kaiser Found. Hosps. (1971) 5 C3d 98, 106, 95 CR 516, a juror phoned a physician for an opinion on the effect of the disease involved in the suit and communicated that opinion to other jurors. See also Jones v Sieve (1988) 203 CA3d 359, 367, 249 CR 821 (juror communicated to other jurors his own experience on pivotal issue).

Independent viewing of evidence. In Tunmore v McLeish (1919) 45 CA 266, 187 P 443, a personal injury action arising from a collision between a motorcycle and an automobile, two jurors carefully examined the motorcycle during a recess before it was introduced into evidence, and one of them stated to the other that the plaintiff's wife could not have seen the speedometer from her place on the rear seat at the time of the accident. Because of the force of impact, however, the speedometer was not in the same position during the jurors' examination that it was in before the accident. No evidence was introduced during the trial on the speedometer's position before the collision. In holding the jurors' conduct improper, the court noted that the jurors were not only taking evidence outside the court without the parties' knowledge, but were "taking evidence along new lines which the plaintiff had no opportunity to explain or refute." 45 CA at 268.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Jurors may occasionally observe parties or witnesses outside the courtroom in the courthouse building, parking lot, or other public areas. If counsel is concerned that jurors have observed some behavior or interaction that they might take into account in forming their opinions about the evidence, it would be wise to let the court know and request an additional admonition.

Consulting dictionary. In Glage v Hawes Firearms Co. (1990) 226 CA3d 314, 323, 276 CR 430, the court held that jurors committed misconduct when they checked a dictionary for a definition of "preponderance." Because the verdict was 9 to 3 and the offending jurors were in the majority, the court held that there was sufficient basis to find that the jurors were impermissibly influenced. See also People v Karis (1988) 46 C3d 612, 642, 250 CR 659 (error for jurors to consult dictionary, although error held nonprejudicial in this case).

Collateral sources of income; race. The court held in Tapia v Barker (1984) 160 CA3d 761, 206 CR 803, that the jury's discussion of reducing the amount of the verdict because of collateral sources of income constituted misconduct, despite the absence of any evidence of collateral sources. In reversing the verdict, however, the court relied primarily on the "insidious" discussion of plaintiff's race during jury deliberations, which also constituted misconduct.

Juror's statements in nature of expert opinions. In McDonald v Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1999) 71 CA4th 256, 263, 83 CR2d 734, during deliberations the court found misconduct in statements that contradicted trial evidence and were in the nature of expert opinions by a juror who was a career professional in the relevant field. By contrast, it is not improper for a juror to express an opinion on a technical subject, even if informed by his or her own life experience, including specialized expertise, as long as the opinion is based on trial evidence. In re Malone (1996) 12 C4th 935, 963, 50 CR2d 281.

PRACTICE TIP: Jurors are able to search the Internet to find information about the case, including parties, counsel, and similar or related litigation. To prevent this improper activity, courts should instruct jurors not to search the Internet for this information. Although some counsel are reluctant to ask for this instruction out of fear that it will suggest the idea to the jurors, counsel should ask for the instruction in order to have a remedy if a juror later conducts a improper search.

© The Regents of the University of California

§17.12 2. Considering facts not in evidence creates presumption of prejudice

Presumption of prejudice. The jury's consideration of facts not in evidence creates a presumption of prejudice. In Lankster v Alpha Beta Co. (1993) 15 CA4th 678, 18 CR2d 923, plaintiff sued a grocery store when her hand was caught in a turnstile. The jurors found the store not liable after they discussed their observation over the weekend that different stores had different clearances for turnstiles. The jurors' investigations constituted misconduct that led to reversal because the defendant failed to rebut a presumption of prejudice. However, it is not misconduct for a juror to draw on his or her own experience during deliberations. See Grotemeyer v Hickman (9th Cir 2004) 393 F3d 871, 879 (juror's past personal experience is not extrinsic evidence and may be appropriate part of jury's deliberations).

Presumption rebuttable. In DiRosario v Havens (1987) 196 CA3d 1224, 1235, 242 CR 423, in which the jury foreman stated that a judge had the power to reduce the amount of a verdict, the court held that the conduct was presumptively prejudicial misconduct but upheld the trial court's denial of a new trial, noting that the foreman's statement was a correct statement of the law. The court also stated that the trial court's denial of the new trial motion amounted to a determination of the controverted facts in favor of the prevailing party and a rebuttal of the presumption of prejudice. See also Jones v Sieve (1988) 203 CA3d 359, 365, 249 CR 821 (prejudicial misconduct presumed when one juror consulted reference volume for definition of central issue in trial and another related her personal experiences with medical condition at issue in trial).

When evidence erroneously admitted. In People v Clair (1992) 2 C4th 629, 668, 7 CR2d 564, although the jury was to receive an edited tape recording and transcript, through a court clerk's error, the jury received an unedited version. The court held that the clerk's error was not jury misconduct and that the prejudicial effect of the error was to be judged as any other erroneously admitted evidence.

§17.13 3. Unauthorized viewing outside courtroom is improper

A juror's unauthorized visit to the scene of an accident or other viewing of matters that are the subject of the litigation outside the courtroom is improper, except as authorized by CCP §651. See, e.g., People v Sutter (1982) 134 CA3d 806, 184 CR 829 (jurors' unauthorized view of crime scene not prejudicial when scene was not at issue in trial); Anderson v PG&E (1963) 218 CA2d 276, 32 CR 328 (jurors' unauthorized view of scene of fire not reversible error, because no prejudice was shown). See also §17.12.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/17 Jury Management/§17.14 4. Reading or listening to news media accounts of trial is improper

§17.14 4. Reading or listening to news media accounts of trial is improper

It is improper for jurors to receive impressions about the case from sources other than the evidence, because jurors take an oath that they will render a true verdict according to the evidence. See CCP §232(b).

Newspapers. It is misconduct for a juror to read newspaper accounts of the trial on which the juror is sitting. The juror misconduct raises a presumption that may be rebutted by a showing that no prejudice resulted from the misconduct. People v Hardy (1992) 2 C4th 86, 5 CR2d 796; People v Lessard (1962) 58 C2d 447, 454, 25 CR 78.

EXAMPLE 1: In People v Hardy, supra, the court held that jurors' reading of newspaper accounts of the trial judge's opinions on some aspects of the criminal law process, during the time they were jurors in that judge's courtroom, constituted misconduct and raised a presumption of prejudice. The court held, however, that the presumption of prejudice was rebutted because the newspaper accounts were generalized arguments on the criminal justice system as a whole, with no specific references to the defendants or to their case.

EXAMPLE 2: The court in People v Jenkins (1987) 196 CA3d 394, 401, 241 CR 827, disapproved on other grounds in People v Brown (1993) 6 C4th 322, 24 CR2d 710, found that jurors' reading of a newspaper account of the ambush killing of a witness to the trial was presumed to be prejudicial, especially in conjunction with a drastic increase in courtroom security. The court held, however, that both the trial court's admonition and jurors' statement that they were unaffected rebutted the presumption.

EXAMPLE 3: In People v Holloway (1990) 50 C3d 1098, 269 CR 530, overruled on other grounds in People v Stansbury (1995) 9 C4th 824, 830 n1, 38 CR2d 394, a juror who read a newspaper account of the defendant's prior conviction did not disclose that information until after the verdict. The court held that this action was prejudicial misconduct, even though the trial court had gone to great pains to prevent misconduct and the juror had not communicated the information to other jurors.

EXAMPLE 4: In People v Pinholster (1992) 1 C4th 865, 4 CR2d 765, the court found no prejudice when jurors, while sitting on a capital case, read an account of another capital case although the article contained extraneous legal information about reversal and appeal; the court held that the judge's admonition was sufficient.

EXAMPLE 5: In People v Von Villas (1995) 36 CA4th 1425, 1432, 43 CR2d 233, the court found that although it was misconduct to read newspaper headlines on the verdict in a closely related case, it was not necessarily prejudicial.

Television programs. Like reading newspaper accounts of the trial, or matters related to the trial, viewing television accounts of the trial, or matters related to the trial, raises a rebuttable presumption of prejudice. Elsworth v Beech Aircraft Corp. (1984) 37 C3d 540, 208 CR 874.

EXAMPLE 1: In Gorman v Leftwich (1990) 218 CA3d 141, 147, 266 CR 671, a medical malpractice case, two jurors saw a television program on medical malpractice but because neither juror had set out to see the program, and no allegations were made that the program influenced their decision, the court held that no misconduct occurred.

EXAMPLE 2: In Elsworth v Beech Aircraft Corp., supra, the California Supreme Court affirmed a jury verdict against an aircraft manufacturer for defective design despite evidence that, immediately before the jury began its deliberations, two jurors had watched a 60 Minutes broadcast that criticized the safety record of light aircraft. The court initially noted that the jurors had not deliberately sought to obtain evidence outside the courtroom but had inadvertently watched a popular television program that discussed the subject in a general way. The court analogized Hasson v Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 C3d 388, 185 CR 654, in which the court found no jury misconduct when, during trial, a juror who was a paralegal attended a class in which a lecturer coincidentally discussed a prior verdict against Ford in which punitive damages had been awarded.

Presumption of prejudice rebuttable. The court in Elsworth v Beech Aircraft Corp., supra, noted that, even if the jurors' viewing of the program constituted misconduct and created a presumption of prejudice, the presumption was rebutted by the evidence. A juror's affidavit supporting the motion for new trial stated that "two jurors indicated that they had seen the program" (37 C3d at 557), but the affiant was uncertain about one juror's identity, and there was no indication that either juror saw the entire program. The two jurors' actual statements and the circumstances under which they were made lacked specificity. The appellate court reviewed the transcript of the broadcast and was unable to conclude whether it favored plaintiffs' or defendant's case. The court concluded that any misconduct was unlikely to have influenced the verdict improperly.

B. Improper communications among jurors or with others

§17.15 1. When jurors discuss case among themselves before submission

It is improper for jurors to discuss the case among themselves before it is submitted to them. Monaghan v Pacific Rolling Mill Co. (1889) 81 C 190, 22 P 590; Smith v Brown (1929) 102 CA 477, 484, 283 P 132. A juror who forms and expresses an opinion before submission of the case violates "the prescribed protocol for the performance of his duties." City of Pleasant Hill v First Baptist Church (1969) 1 CA3d 384, 429, 82 CR 1.

A juror may, however, remark to himself or herself as a witness leaves the stand, "That fellow is not to be believed." Gary v Avery (1960) 178 CA2d 574, 579, 3 CR 20. Such a remark does not imply that a juror reached a verdict on the fact at issue but only that the testimony did not establish the fact in the juror's mind. 178 CA2d at 579.

§17.16 2. When jurors communicate with others about trial

A juror's conversing with counsel, a party, a witness, or other person during trial or after the case is submitted constitutes misconduct. See, e.g., Garden Grove Sch. Dist. v Hendler (1965) 63 C2d 141, 144, 45 CR 313 (plaintiff's counsel talked during recess with juror who later became jury foreman); Bell v State (1998) 63 CA4th 919, 929, 74 CR2d 541 (juror experiment outside court with other person); City of Pleasant Hill v First Baptist Church (1969) 1 CA3d 384, 429, 82 CR 1 (improper communications between juror and witness, but no showing that misconduct was prejudicial). See also In re Hitchings (1993) 6 C4th 97, 24 CR2d 74 (writ of habeas corpus granted after convicted defendant uncovered evidence that juror had discussed case with co-workers during trial).

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: All parties should be aware of the practice of texting, and the court should explicitly prohibit texting about the trial. It may be necessary to have all jurors give up their cell phones to the bailiff or court attendant for safekeeping during the trial sessions.

§17.17 3. Improper communications create presumption of prejudice

Although jury misconduct may arise from improper communications, the misconduct creates only a presumption of prejudice, which may be overcome by a showing that there was no actual prejudice. In People v Goldberg (1984) 161 CA3d 170, 207 CR 431, the court held that jurors' discussions with jurors in a codefendant's trial was misconduct, but the presumption of prejudice was overcome by proof that no prejudice actually occurred.

§17.18 4. When communications improper but not prejudicial

Improper conversations may be nonprejudicial or harmless error and thus not justify a new trial. In People v Vinson (1981) 121 CA3d 80, 175 CR 123, the court held that ordering a new trial was error when a juror and the judge met privately in the judge's chambers in an improper communication, but there was no prejudice and the error was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. Similarly, in People v Chavez (1991) 231 CA3d 1471, 283 CR 71, the court held that, although a conversation between a police officer witness and a juror was evidence of possible improper communication and the trial court should have held a hearing, failure to do so was harmless when defense counsel indicated to the court that they were satisfied with the officer's explanation of the conversation. See People v Loot (1998) 63 CA4th 694, 74 CR2d 324 (juror's lighthearted inquiry about whether prosecutor was single and available was misconduct, but not prejudicial).

Brief conversations with witnesses unrelated to the trial may not be misconduct. See People v Goff (1981) 127 CA3d 1039, 1045, 179 CR 190. The court noted that the essence of juror misconduct (as defined in Pen C §96) involves communications relating to the trial. 127 CA3d at 1046. See also City of Los Angeles v Lowensohn (1976) 54 CA3d 625, 127 CR 417 (juror approached witnesses, but they refused to discuss case). In People v Miranda (1987) 44 C3d 57, 115, 241 CR 594, the supreme court affirmed the trial court's determination that a juror's outside contact with a criminal defendant's girlfriend (juror asked her for a date) did not affect either the jury's impartiality or its consideration of any issue in the trial. See also discussion of Hasson v Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 C3d 388, 415, 185 CR 654, in §17.21 (juror inattentiveness under the circumstances held not prejudicial).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/17 Jury Management/§17.19 5. Juror may be held in contempt for improper communications

§17.19 5. Juror may be held in contempt for improper communications

A juror may be found in contempt of court for improperly discussing the merits of the action with a party or any other person (or receiving communications from a party or other person regarding the action) without disclosing these actions immediately to the court. CCP §1209(a)(10).

Further research: See 7 Witkin, California Procedure, Trial §§330-333 (5th ed 2008).

C. Inattentiveness during trial

§17.20 1. Jurors have duty to listen carefully

Jurors have a duty to listen carefully during presentation of the evidence. Failure to pay attention, e.g., by reading novels or doing crossword puzzles is misconduct. Hasson v Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 C3d 388, 410, 185 CR 654. Litigants are constitutionally entitled to a complete and thoughtful consideration of the merits of their case. 32 C3d at 411.

© The Regents of the University of California

§17.21 2. Inattentiveness may or may not be held prejudicial

A new trial may be granted if jurors have failed to pay attention and the misconduct is shown to be prejudicial to the losing party. See CCP §657(2). Prejudice exists if, absent proven misconduct, it is reasonably probable that the complaining party would have obtained a more favorable result. Hasson v Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 C3d 388, 415, 185 CR 654.

Prejudice occurs only if the court can infer "from the bare fact of the jurors' diverting activities that they had prejudged the outcome of the case and closed their minds to further consideration of the evidence." 32 C3d at 415. In Hasson, some jurors worked on crossword puzzles and one juror read a novel during the presentation of evidence. Although concluding that they had committed misconduct by failing to pay attention, the court held that the misconduct was not prejudicial under the record before it.

The court in Hasson also discussed the requirement that declarations to impeach a jury verdict and counterdeclarations to support it must contain proof of overt conduct, conditions, events, and statements rather than the jurors' mental processes or reasons for assent or dissent. See Evid C §1150. The court noted that the instances of misconduct demonstrated in the case were not serious enough to improperly influence the verdict. 32 C3d at 417. See §17.31 for further discussion of declarations to impeach the verdict.

§17.22 3. Court must be notified of any juror inattentiveness

Juror inattentiveness, like any other juror misconduct, must be called to the court's attention. See §17.23. A party who claimed that a juror had fallen asleep waived the right to complain on a motion for new trial by not calling the matter to the court's attention when it occurred. Kershaw v Tilbury (1932) 214 C 679, 8 P2d 109. The trial court was not required, however, to hold a formal hearing to determine if jurors were dozing off during the proceedings in People v De Santis (1992) 2 C4th 1198, 9 CR2d 628. When the claim was made, the trial judge stated that he had been watching the jurors in question, and concluded that they were awake, one with eyes closed but twiddling his thumbs. See also People v Espinoza (1992) 3 C4th 806, 12 CR2d 682 (counsel's speculation that juror might be asleep was insufficient to apprise trial court of good cause to discharge juror and did not obligate court to conduct further inquiry).

© The Regents of the University of California

V. REMEDIES FOR JUROR MISCONDUCT

§17.23 A. Object to any misconduct or irregularity

Promptly object and notify the court of any misconduct or irregularity in the proceeding, otherwise the court will consider the misconduct or irregularity to have been waived as a ground for a motion for a new trial. See Weathers v Kaiser Found. Hosps. (1971) 5 C3d 98, 103, 95 CR 516 (juror phoned physician for opinion on effect of disease involved in suit and communicated opinion to other jurors); Kershaw v Tilbury (1932) 214 C 679, 691, 8 P2d 109 (defendant's failure to notify attorney that juror fell asleep during trial considered waiver of objection).

Even if juror misconduct during trial is merely suspected, counsel should promptly call the situation to the court's attention. The court can then cure the misconduct by appropriate admonition or other remedy. See Newton v Thomas (1955) 137 CA2d 748, 769, 291 P2d 503 (counsel should have called to court's attention suspicion that juror had taken unauthorized papers into jury room as soon as he realized it had occurred).

In upholding the trial court's denial of defendant's action for a new trial, the supreme court in Lindemann v San Joaquin Cotton Oil Co. (1936) 5 C2d 480, 496, 55 P2d 870, noted that on discovering misconduct defendant's counsel had a duty to:

- Ask the court to reopen jury examination;
- Elicit the facts; and
- Offer a challenge to the offending juror.

In Lindemann, a juror remained silent when asked on voir dire examination if she knew of, or was acquainted with, the plaintiff. During recess on the first day of trial, defendant's counsel discovered that the juror knew the plaintiff. Before court was reconvened that day, defendant's counsel notified the trial judge but did nothing more.

The court in Lindemann stated: "It would obviously be improper to permit a party knowing of misconduct to withhold action and gamble on the outcome before making complaint." 5 C2d at 496. See also City of Los Angeles v Lowensohn (1976) 54 CA3d 625, 127 CR 417 (juror in eminent domain proceeding approached condemnor's counsel and appraiser with questions, but appraiser and counsel refused to discuss case with juror; no abuse of discretion by trial court in refusing to discharge juror or grant motion for mistrial). See §§17.2-17.4 for discussion of jury management during voir dire.

NOTE: To avoid undue prejudice, call juror misconduct to the court's attention out of the jurors' hearing or presence.

© The Regents of the University of California

§17.24 B. Request admonition

After counsel informs the court of known or suspected juror misconduct, the court will try to determine the facts on its own. Whether or not the judge rules that juror misconduct occurred, counsel may label it as misconduct after the judge examines the juror (out of the other jurors' presence).

After notifying the court of a juror's misconduct, if the misconduct is of the type that can be cured by an admonition from the judge, consider requesting that the judge give an appropriate admonition to the offending juror, and to the other jurors if warranted under the circumstances. See People v Goff (1981) 127 CA3d 1039, 1046, 179 CR 190.

Objections are waived if counsel accepts the court's admonitions as satisfactory. See Romo v Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1977) 71 CA3d 909, 139 CR 787. In Romo, a juror was excused after informing the judge that she was biased against plaintiff's attorney and that she and other jurors blamed plaintiff's attorney for delays in trial. The trial proceeded with eleven jurors on stipulation of counsel, and the judge admonished jurors that delays were not either party's fault. Any objection was waived because plaintiff's attorney agreed he would be satisfied with the trial court's admonition to the jury. See also People v Pinholster (1992) 1 C4th 865, 4 CR2d 765 (no prejudice found when jurors in death penalty case read account of another capital case although article contained extraneous legal information about reversal and appeal; judge's admonition considered sufficient).

PRACTICE TIP: To avoid any question of waiver, if you are not satisfied that the court's admonition truly cures the misconduct or irregularity, discuss the nature of the admonition with the judge, and, if necessary, note on the record (for purpose of appeal), that you are concerned that the admonition does not completely cure the misconduct. (Always choose your words carefully to avoid offending the judge.) In addition, consider requesting that the judge poll jurors to ensure their understanding of the admonition. For example, if jurors improperly consulted a dictionary and the court admonished them not to consider any definition other than that found in jury instructions, the court could conduct a special poll asking whether individual jurors followed the jury instruction definition or used some other source.

§17.25 C. Request replacement with alternate if necessary

Depending on the prejudicial effect of the juror's misconduct, consider requesting that the court replace the offending juror with an alternate (assuming that alternate jurors are available). If an alternate is not available, consider moving for a mistrial. See §17.26. Failure to move to excuse the juror for cause and substitute an alternate may be considered a waiver of the claimed error. See City of Pleasant Hill v First Baptist Church (1969) 1 CA3d 384, 82 CR 1.

The court may discharge jurors and replace them with alternates (if available) on a showing of good cause that they are unable to perform their duties. CCP §234. A juror who refused to deliberate or to explain her viewpoints and who indicated that she had made up her mind before trial was properly discharged. People v Feagin (1995) 34 CA4th 1427, 40 CR2d 918. In Garden Grove Sch. Dist. v Hendler (1965) 63 C2d 141, 145, 45 CR 313, the supreme court held that the trial judge had discretion to dismiss a juror who spoke to plaintiff's counsel during a recess, and that the judge erred in not granting defendants' motion to excuse the juror and replace him with an alternate. The opinion was silent about the nature of the conversation. See also City of Pleasant Hill v First Baptist Church (1969) 1 CA3d 384, 427, 82 CR 1, in which the court interpreted the Garden Grove opinion to mean that a juror who converses with counsel may be unable to perform the juror's duties.

The court in Pleasant Hill held that the facts before it did not dictate a categorical extension of the same principle to a juror who converses with a witness. The court noted that communication between a witness and a juror in a civil action is generally held not to be a ground for setting aside a verdict or granting a new trial unless the communication prejudiced the juror against a party.

EXAMPLE 1: In People v Hecker (1990) 219 CA3d 1238, 1245, 268 CR 884, a juror saw the defendant at church during a trial recess and stated to the court that she could no longer decide the case without reference to the encounter. The trial court properly excused her and substituted an alternate.

EXAMPLE 2: In People v Lopez (1993) 13 CA4th 1840, 17 CR2d 317, the court replaced a juror with an alternate when the juror attempted to use the law library to research arson and financial gain during an arson trial and attempted to inquire about types of arson from the defense expert. Although the juror indicated he could be impartial and follow the law, the court's decision to excuse the juror was not an abuse of discretion.

See also People v Green (1995) 31 CA4th 1001, 38 CR2d 401 (court discharged juror after poll revealed her uncertainty about proposed verdict and court learned she knew defendant's family; court had power to reconvene the jury and require additional deliberations).

© The Regents of the University of California

§17.26 D. Consider moving for mistrial

Consider moving for a mistrial when a juror's misconduct appears to be so prejudicial that neither an appropriate court admonition nor replacement of the juror with an alternate will cure the misconduct. Failure to move for a mistrial may be considered a waiver of the claimed error. In People v Goff (1981) 127 CA3d 1039, 1045, 179 CR 190, the trial judge ruled that conversations between the juror and a witness, unrelated to the trial, were nonprejudicial. The court noted that any error was waived because, although counsel objected, counsel did not move to have the juror excused for cause and substituted with an alternate or move for a mistrial.

If the motion for a mistrial is denied, request the court to give an appropriate admonition to the offending juror (and to other jurors, if warranted).

When a juror's misconduct is prejudicial and an alternate is unavailable, a mistrial should be declared unless the parties consent to have the trial proceed with the remaining jurors. See CCP §233. See also Romo v Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1977) 71 CA3d 909, 139 CR 787 (parties stipulated that trial could proceed with 11 jurors). On moving for mistrial, see §§18.82-18.102.

© The Regents of the University of California

E. Consider moving for new trial

§17.27 1. When misconduct discovered after verdict

Juror misconduct often is not discovered until after a verdict has been rendered. After the verdict, the appropriate remedy is to move for a new trial rather than to appeal. See Ovando v County of Los Angeles (2008) 159 CA4th 42, 57, 71 CR3d 415 (juror's intentional concealment of knowledge of police corruption scandal was prejudicial misconduct; court properly ordered new trial); Province v Center for Women's Health & Family Birth (1993) 20 CA4th 1673, 25 CR2d 667 (misconduct constituted grounds for motion for new trial when juror revealed after deliberations that another juror had read relevant news accounts; trial court's denial of motion for new trial reversed). See §17.29 for discussion of using declarations to show that neither the party nor the party's attorney was aware of the misbehavior until after the verdict.

© The Regents of the University of California

§17.28 2. Three-step inquiry by court

When a party seeks a new trial based on jury misconduct, the court undertakes a three-step inquiry (People v Perez (1992) 4 CA4th 893, 6 CR2d 141):

- The court must first determine whether the affidavits supporting the motion are admissible under Evid C §1150(a).
- If the evidence is admissible, the court must determine whether the facts establish misconduct.
- Finally, assuming misconduct, the court must determine whether the misconduct was so prejudicial as to warrant a new trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

§17.29 3. Preparing support for motion

Prepare the record. Generally, an appellate court will not review matters that are not contained in a properly prepared record on appeal. See 9 Witkin, California Procedure, Appeal §§330-335 (5th ed 2008).

Use declarations in support. To place the facts of the juror's misconduct into the trial record, counsel must use declarations (or affidavits) in support of a motion for a new trial. Declarations that should have been, but were not, filed in the trial court in support of a motion for a new trial will not be considered on appeal. See Ballard v Uribe (1986) 41 C3d 564, 224 CR 664 (plaintiff cross-appealed after denial of motion for new trial in negligence case; court declined to consider merits of juror misconduct claim because plaintiff had not supplied adequate record); Crespo v Cook (1959) 168 CA2d 360, 363, 336 P2d 31.

PRACTICE TIP: Although raising the issue of misconduct during trial may be sufficient to preserve the matter for appeal, consider also bringing a motion for new trial if there are evidentiary gaps in the trial court record. The motion will provide an opportunity to fill those gaps with declarations or other evidence to facilitate meaningful appellate review.

If declarations are in conflict, consider requesting a formal evidentiary hearing. In People v Hedgecock (1990) 51 C3d 395, 272 CR 803, the court endorsed a formal evidentiary hearing when the declarations were in conflict and only a hearing could resolve the conflict. But see People v Cabrera (1991) 230 CA3d 300, 306, 281 CR 238, in which the court stated that, for strong policy reasons, the Hedgecock procedure should be invoked sparingly.

"No knowledge" declarations. In Weathers v Kaiser Found. Hosps. (1971) 5 C3d 98, 103, 95 CR 516, the court ruled that a party moving for a new trial under CCP §657(1)-(2) based on juror misconduct discovered after the verdict is rendered must present "no knowledge" declarations (or affidavit), i.e., declarations showing that neither the party nor the party's attorney was aware of the misbehavior until after the verdict. Counsel and the client should file separate "no knowledge" declarations. 5 C3d at 105. In Weathers, an attorney's declaration was upheld as substantially complying with the "no knowledge" rule when it stated unequivocally that "both the plaintiffs and their attorneys lacked prior knowledge of the jury misconduct raised in the motion for a new trial." 5 C3d at 105. On requirement of "no knowledge" affidavit when alleged juror improprieties occur before jury deliberations begin, see Krouse v Graham (1977) 19 C3d 59, 82, 137 CR 863; Weathers v Kaiser Found. Hosps., supra.

When "no knowledge" declarations unnecessary. "No knowledge" declarations (or affidavits) on a motion for a new trial are not necessary when the alleged juror misconduct occurs after jury deliberations have begun. Krouse v Graham, supra. In such a case, "no knowledge" declarations are unnecessary because counsel could not have been aware of misconduct occurring during the jury's secret deliberations.

Grounds for new trial when jurors involved. Two grounds for new trial concerning actions by jurors are (CCP §657(1)-(2)):

- Irregularity in jury proceedings that prevented a party from having a fair trial, and
- Juror misconduct.

Further research: On showing required and denial of the motion in the absence of prejudice, see Hasson v Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 C3d 388, 414, 185 CR 654. On likelihood that the same acts of misconduct cited both as concealment of bias and as objective fact will improperly influence the jury's verdict, see Weathers v Kaiser Found. Hosps. (1971) 5 C3d 98, 104, 95 CR 516.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/17 Jury Management/§17.30 4. If conduct improper but not prejudicial

§17.30 4. If conduct improper but not prejudicial

If a juror's conduct was improper but unlikely to have been prejudicial, a new trial may not be required.

EXAMPLE 1: People v Karis (1988) 46 C3d 612, 250 CR 659 (use of dictionary definition was harmless in context of case);

EXAMPLE 2: People v Lessard (1962) 58 C2d 447, 454, 25 CR 78 (reading newspaper account of trial or issues was improper, but motion for new trial denied);

EXAMPLE 3: Jutzi v County of Los Angeles (1987) 196 CA3d 637, 242 CR 74 (discussion of juror's prior experiences did not warrant new trial);

EXAMPLE 4: Hasson v Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 C3d 388, 185 CR 654 (juror can have some general knowledge and have done some reading on topics or parties involved in litigation; new trial not justified when juror was not paying full attention during trial, e.g., by working on crossword puzzle);

EXAMPLE 5: City of Pleasant Hill v First Baptist Church (1969) 1 CA3d 384, 427, 82 CR 1 (improper conversation with witness on unimportant subjects did not warrant new trial);

EXAMPLE 6: People v Barton (1995) 37 CA4th 709, 43 CR2d 671 (juror's repeated contact with defendant's uncle was plainly misconduct, but contact would only be to the detriment of the prevailing party; therefore, no prejudicial error).

When juror misconduct seems to be of a material nature, a presumption of prejudice arises.

EXAMPLE 1: Smoketree-Lake Murray, Ltd. v Mills Concrete Constr. Co. (1991) 234 CA3d 1724, 286 CR 435 (court held that it was misconduct for juror to use kitty litter and a box in jury room to demonstrate effect of pouring concrete over sand with impressions in it, based on information juror had learned in the family business);

EXAMPLE 2: Tapia v Barker (1984) 160 CA3d 761, 765, 206 CR 803 (juror failed to disclose possible prejudice toward plaintiff's ethnic background);

EXAMPLE 3: People v Feagin (1995) 34 CA4th 1427, 40 CR2d 918 (juror who refused to deliberate or to explain her viewpoints and who indicated she had made up her mind before trial was properly discharged).

But see People v Green (1995) 31 CA4th 1001, 38 CR2d 401 (juror's statement made at the beginning of deliberations, that he knew defendant was guilty as soon as he looked at him, is not per se prejudgment of evidence but open to trial court's discretionary analysis of the credibility of the juror's statements).

The misconduct must be substantial.

EXAMPLE 1: Andrews v County of Orange (1982) 130 CA3d 944, 954, 182 CR 176, disapproved on other grounds in People v Nesler (1997) 16 C4th 561, 582 n5, 66 CR2d 454 (prejudicial statements by juror during viewing of home, and report by juror during deliberations of independently obtained information, constituted misconduct);

EXAMPLE 2: People v Dorsey (1995) 34 CA4th 694, 40 CR2d 384 (juror stepping out of jury room while jury deliberated committed misconduct and was properly discharged; continuing deliberations during juror's absence was also improper).

Like other presumptions, the presumption of prejudice is subject to rebuttal.

EXAMPLE 1: Lankster v Alpha Beta Co. (1993) 15 CA4th 678, 18 CR2d 923 (jurors conducted independent investigations that constituted misconduct leading to reversal because defendant failed to rebut presumption of prejudice);

EXAMPLE 2: Hasson v Ford Motor Co., supra (juror inattentiveness, under the circumstances, held not prejudicial).

§17.31 5. Impeaching jury's verdict

The only improper influences that may be proved to impeach a jury's verdict are those open to sight, hearing, and the other senses that are subject to corroboration. Evid C §1150. The court in In re Stankewitz (1985) 40 C3d 391, 397, 220 CR 382, discusses the general principles concerning impeaching a jury's verdict with jurors' declarations. See also People v Hutchinson (1969) 71 C2d 342, 350, 78 CR 196.

Proof of the subjective reasoning of individual jurors is not permitted. See Krouse v Graham (1977) 19 C3d 59, 137 CR 863; People v Hutchinson, supra. On motions for new trial generally, see §§25.22-25.71.

Juror declarations (or affidavits) impeaching the verdict must be based on and contain objective proof of overt acts, rather than proof of an individual juror's subjective reasoning process. See Evid C §1150. See also §22.32.

Further research: On the issue of evidence admissible under Evid C §1150 to impeach a verdict, see In re Stankewitz (1985) 40 C3d 391, 220 CR 382; People v Sanchez (1998) 62 CA4th 460, 475, 72 CR2d 782; Mesecher v County of San Diego (1992) 9 CA4th 1677, 12 CR2d 279; Cove, Inc. v Mora (1985) 172 CA3d 97, 218 CR 7. Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/17 Jury Management/§17.32 6. If motion denied

§17.32 6. If motion denied

If a motion for a new trial is denied, a party may appeal from the judgment (see CCP §906; Fogo v Cutter Labs. (1977) 68 CA3d 744, 748, 137 CR 417) and have the issue of juror misconduct reviewed on appeal (see, e.g., Smith v Covell (1980) 100 CA3d 947, 161 CR 377). On appealing from a court order granting a new trial, see CCP §§904.1(a)(4), 904.2(a); discussion in §25.68.

PRACTICE TIP: If you called the court's attention to juror misconduct during trial (see §§17.23-17.24), presumably, you should be able to have the issue reviewed on appeal without first moving for a new trial. The alleged misconduct and the court's ruling are part of the trial record and form part of the record on appeal. However, do not pass up the opportunity to persuade the trial judge by moving for a new trial based on the alleged misconduct and the judge's error in denying appropriate relief, e.g., refusal to replace a juror with an alternate or to grant a mistrial.

Further research: See §§25.22-25.71 for discussion of motions for new trial.

I. SCOPE OF CHAPTER

§18.1 A. Motions covered

This chapter discusses the following motions that may be made during trial:

- Motion for nonsuit. See §§18.7-18.34.
- Motion for directed verdict. See §§18.35-18.56.
- Motion for continuance (temporary or indefinite recess) during trial. See §§18.57-18.64.
- Motion to reopen case. See §§18.65-18.81.
- Motion for mistrial. See §§18.82-18.102.
- Motion to amend pleadings to conform to proof. See §§18.103-18.123.

When the motion can be made orally, suggested wording appears in boldface type under the procedures for making the particular motion. See, e.g., form language in §§18.25 (nonsuit) and 18.50 (directed verdict). Forms of motions that may be submitted to the court in written form appear in §§18.124-18.134.

Except for the motion for directed verdict and, rarely, the motion for mistrial, the motions discussed in this chapter can be made during a bench trial as well as a jury trial. The motion for judgment under CCP §631.8, which is made exclusively in a bench trial after the close of a party's evidence, is discussed in the bench trial chapter. See §§24.14-24.29.

Evidentiary motions in limine are covered in chap 7. Motions to continue (postpone) the trial before it begins are discussed in §§6.6-6.25. Other pretrial motions are discussed in chap 6. On posttrial motions made after a verdict is rendered, see chap 25.

§18.2 B. Chart: Trial motions

This chart lists motions that can be made during trial, with cross-references to sections in this book and other books where each motion is discussed. Several motions that are ordinarily made well before trial or in limine, but can also be made during trial under certain circumstances, are discussed in the places indicated.

| Motion to determine good faith of settlement with joint tortfeasor (CCP §877.6) | Ordinarily a pretrial motion, this motion can be made on shortened notice for good cause if the settlement occurs during trial. CCP §877.6(a). See California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 50 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004). |
| Motion for judgment on the pleadings | See §§6.94-6.98. Ordinarily a pretrial motion (see Civ Proc Before Trial, chap 27), this motion can be made any time before final determination of an action. |
| Plaintiff's request for voluntary dismissal (CCP §581) | See §§6.79-6.86. |
| Motion to disqualify counsel | See §6.109 on moving to disqualify counsel who will be or has been called as a trial witness. |
| Motion in limine to exclude or limit evidence | See chap 7. |
| Motion to strike evidence at trial | See §15.44. See also California Trial Objections, chap 52 (Cal CEB Annual). |
| Motion to establish preliminary facts | See §§7.25-7.36. |
| Motion to prohibit mention of claim for punitive damages or inquiry into defendant's financial records before plaintiff establishes prima facie case | See §§8.12, 8.28. |
| Motion to preinstruct jury | See §§20.47-20.50. |
| Motion to allow jury to take instructions into jury room | See §§16.26, 17.21. |
| Request for use of special verdict or special findings | See §§16.39, 18.6-18.14. |
| Motion for interpreter | See §§11.28-11.43. |
| Motion to exclude witnesses and admonish them not to discuss testimony | See §§6.105-6.108. |
| Motion for jury view | See §12.48. Ordinarily made in limine, the motion is not subject to a timing restriction under CCP §651. |
| Motion for continuance (postponement) of trial | See §§6.6-6.25. |

|---|---|
| Motion for continuance (temporary or indefinite recess) during trial | See §§18.57-18.64. |
| Motion for nonsuit | See §§18.7-18.34. |
| Motion for directed verdict | See §§18.35-18.56. |
| Motion for judgment in bench trial | See §§24.14-24.29. |
| Motion to reopen case | See §§18.65-18.81. |
| Motion for mistrial | See §§18.82-18.102. |
| Motion to amend pleadings to conform to proof | See §§18.103-18.123. |
| Motion to appoint expert witness (Evid C §730) | See Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 30 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009). |
| Motion to produce writing used to refresh memory (Evid C §771) | See Evidence Benchbook, chap 28. |
| Motion to reexamine witness (Evid C §774) | See Evidence Benchbook, chap 28. |
| Motion to recall excused witness (Evid C §778) | See Evidence Benchbook, chap 28. |
| Motion to exclude privileged information (Evid C §916(a)) | See Evidence Benchbook, chap 37. |
| Motion for judgment when jury has been discharged without verdict (CCP §630) | See §§18.40-18.41. |
| Motion to quash or modify subpoenas (CCP §1987.1) | See §4.45. |

II. PROCEDURES FOR MAKING TRIAL MOTIONS

A. Form of motion

§18.3 1. Usually oral; when written papers advisable

Because it is often impossible to anticipate the need for a trial motion, the motions discussed in this chapter are usually made orally. Formal notice of a motion is not customarily given or required for motions made during trial. See, e.g., Morel v Morel (1928) 203 C 417, 418, 264 P 760 (motion for judgment on pleadings; notice not required for motion made in open court after trial has commenced).

If the issues are complicated, counsel can ask the court for a brief recess in which to prepare written authorities. Most judges are reluctant to protract a trial but, if the motion is critical, may grant counsel's request for a reasonable time to prepare argument or may set a later date for arguing the motion while the trial proceeds on other issues.

Although time may not permit the drafting of an extensive written memorandum to support a trial motion, counsel should organize a concise argument and cite to relevant authorities. When key cases are dispositive, it is a good idea to furnish copies to the court and opposing counsel.

If counsel can anticipate a trial motion, providing the court with written supporting papers may substantially advance the client's position. This written material can take the form of a portion of the trial brief, an early motion in limine, or a memorandum of law presented to the judge when making the motion that may or may not include the motion itself in writing. The court may be more inclined to take even abbreviated papers seriously, and those documents may also protect the record on appeal.

Any written memorandum in support of a motion should conform as much as possible to generally accepted format and filing rules. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1110-3.1116, 3.1300, 3.1302. On drafting motion papers, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chaps 11-13 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

NOTE: Although use during a trial is unlikely, it may be possible in a given situation to make a telephone appearance motion. Cal Rules of Ct 3.670.

In bench trials, the motion can be made in open court at the appropriate time. In jury trials, counsel may make certain motions in open court and then ask permission to approach the bench so that argument may be heard out of the jury's hearing or, in cases of extended discussion, in chambers or in the courtroom after the jury has been excused.

PRACTICE TIP: Local rules can significantly vary the procedure for motions made during trial. Some local rules of court require that specified motions be made as well as argued outside the jury's hearing. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.47 (motions for judgment on the pleadings, directed verdict, and mistrial must be made and argued outside jury's hearing). Even when no such requirement exists, it is a good practice to ask to approach the bench for the purpose of making a motion in order to avoid an adverse effect on the jury if the motion is denied. It is also a good idea to become familiar with the particular judge's preferences in these matters. Information about courtroom procedures may be requested during the chambers conferences before trial. For a checklist for covering trial motion procedures and other useful points with the trial judge, see §6.5.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.4 2. Making a Record

When the motion is made orally, special care should be taken to communicate both for the court and for the record the specific grounds for the motion, or to state that written papers containing this information are being filed with the clerk. Any supporting documents should indicate that the motion was made orally on the record at a particular time and date. Even though the trial court exercises considerable discretion in ruling on motions during trial, a favorable ruling may be reversed for lack of sufficient basis in the record to support the order. See, e.g., §18.34 (nonsuit). For further discussion on protecting the record, see chap 15.

It is good practice to request a minute order from the clerk after the judge rules on the motion or, if written authorities have been drafted, to prepare a written form of order for the judge to sign before filing it with the court. Otherwise, counsel may not recall certain orders later in the trial, and it may not be feasible to search the court transcript for the ruling.

In camera hearings during trial to limit testimony, or to test privileges, are a well-recognized and useful adjunct to trial proceedings. The fact such a proceeding is used, however, does not relieve counsel from the duty to make and protect the record.

PRACTICE TIP: Be alert to making a record and requesting the reporter's presence. Individual judges vary in their preferences on hearing motions at the sidebar, in chambers, or in open court with the jury excused. Counsel should ensure that the motion itself is part of the record. If argument takes place later in chambers, it may be necessary to repeat for the record a motion previously made at the bench outside the court reporter's hearing. If a written motion is presented, let the record reflect that the motion is being submitted in writing and consider summarizing its main points in the court reporter's presence. Ensure that the court's ruling is memorialized in a minute order or in the reporter's transcript.

§18.5 B. Timing

Failure to make trial motions at the proper time can waive the right to raise the point on appeal. The time for making some trial motions, such as motions for nonsuit or directed verdict, is dictated by statute or customary practice.

Other motions, such as motions for continuance, require a showing that counsel made them as soon as the grounds for the motion became known and must be made in a timely fashion. County of San Bernardino v Doria Mining & Eng'g Corp. (1977) 72 CA3d 776, 783, 140 CR 383. Otherwise, counsel waives the right to make the motion later in the trial or to raise the point on appeal.

§18.6 C. Opposing party's options

Although trial motions are not easy to anticipate, opposing counsel may be able set out a legal opposition before trial in a memorandum of law to be produced when the need arises. Counsel's trial notebook or even the trial brief sometimes addresses the same issues as the motion and contains legal authorities that can be used to oppose it.

As an alternative, counsel can ask the court for a brief recess to prepare an argument, and perhaps written authorities, in opposition to the motion. See §18.3.

___ 1. Request hearing outside presence of jury but on record. See §18.24.

___ 2. Make oral statement of specific grounds. See §18.25.

___ 3. Identify absence of material element or existence of fact constituting opponent's failure to establish a prima facie case. See §18.15.

___ 4. Ensure that record shows that opponent had opportunity to request reopening. See §18.28.

___ 5. Ensure that record reflects that opponent had opportunity to request amending pleadings, if appropriate. See §18.16.

___ 6. Consider preparation of written memorandum in support of motion. See §18.26.

___ 7. Consider possible negative reaction by trial court and appellate courts' reluctance to affirm judgments of nonsuit. See §18.20.

___ 8. Consider using nonsuit motion to challenge only some causes of action or some parties. See §18.11.

Opponent

___ 1. Identify substantial evidence creating issue. See §18.19.

___ 2. Request expansion of opening statement or reopening of evidence. See §§18.27-18.28.

___ 3. Request amendment to pleadings. See §18.16.

___ 4. Consider limiting motion to some cause of action or some parties. See §18.11.

___ 5. If motion granted, move to have order not granted on merits. See §18.10.

___ 6. If motion granted, move to preclude reference to a dismissed party. See §18.29.

B. Nature of Motion

§18.8 1. Nonsuit is equivalent to involuntary dismissal

A nonsuit order dismisses a party's action (or cross-action) when, after the opening statement or the presentation of evidence, the party fails to establish a prima facie case. CCP §581c; Doria v AFL-CIO (1961) 196 CA2d 22, 32, 16 CR 429.

A motion for nonsuit is sometimes termed a demurrer to the evidence because it concedes the truth of the facts of the plaintiff's proposed or admitted evidence, and any inferences reasonably drawn from them, but contends that those facts, as a matter of law, do not sustain the plaintiff's case. Stein-Brief Group, Inc. v Home Indem. Co. (1998) 65 CA4th 364, 369, 76 CR2d 3.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.9 2. Purpose: to eliminate nonmeritorious actions or remedy correctable defects

The primary purpose of the motion is to eliminate the time and expense of presenting the defendant's evidence when the plaintiff's case has no merit. Howard v General Petroleum Corp. (1951) 108 CA2d 25, 29, 238 P2d 145.

In addition to the goal of ending a nonmeritorious case promptly, a nonsuit motion following the opening statement is designed to call attention to correctable defects. Hamilton v Gage Bowl, Inc. (1992) 6 CA4th 1706, 1710, 8 CR2d 819.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.10 3. Court decides whether nonsuit judgment is adjudication on merits

The court has discretion to determine whether the nonsuit judgment is an adjudication on the merits. Unless the court specifies otherwise, the judgment is deemed to be on the merits. CCP §581c(c); Paddleford v Biscay (1971) 22 CA3d 139, 142, 99 CR 220.

The court's failure to specify may be error, although a court of appeal may correct the judgment. American Broad. Co. v Walter Reade Sterling, Inc. (1974) 43 CA3d 401, 406, 117 CR 617.

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Partial nonsuit

§18.11 1. Dismisses action on some issues

The court may grant a motion for nonsuit on some issues in the action; the trial then proceeds on the remaining issues. CCP §581c(b). Final judgment is entered at the end of trial, based both on the matters determined at trial and the court's ruling on the motion for nonsuit. CCP §581c(b).

PRACTICE TIP: Partial nonsuit is a practical remedy for a defendant when the plaintiff asserts several legal theories but produces evidence supporting only one or two causes of action. For example, nonsuit was used to advantage in Rokos v Peck (1986) 182 CA3d 604, 611, 227 CR 480 (nonsuit granted after opening statement against one of two plaintiffs on one of three causes of action when plaintiff's counsel unable to augment statement of facts in response to the motion).

The court may grant a nonsuit for one party without affecting the other parties. Kidron v Movie Acquisition Corp. (1995) 40 CA4th 1571, 1582, 47 CR2d 752 (nonsuit as to one defendant); Brimmer v California Charter Med., Inc. (1986) 180 CA3d 678, 683, 225 CR 752 (nonsuit granted for three of four defendants).

If the court grants nonsuit to a codefendant in a personal injury or property damage action, the remaining defendants may not, over the plaintiff's objection, defend the action by asserting the fault of the former codefendant. CCP §581c(d).

§18.12 2. Preparing written order after judgment of partial nonsuit

If a judgment of partial nonsuit under CCP §581c(b) has been granted on some but not all of the issues, request the court to state its ruling fully, if appropriate, and prepare a written order for the judge's signature on those issues.

Although it is usually a better practice for prevailing counsel to draft the order when a motion for partial judgment is granted, counsel can instead request the court to issue a minute order of its ruling, which may then be incorporated into the order of final judgment at the end of trial. See §18.32.

§18.13 3. Allows appellate review only after final judgment

Issues on which partial nonsuit is granted or denied are not subject to appellate review until final judgment is entered. CCP §581c(b).

NOTE: This was not true for cases decided under the former statute, which was amended in 1980. See former CCP §581c(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

D. Test for granting motion: "Sufficient substantiality"

§18.14 1. No evidence of "sufficient substantiality" to support judgment

Courts have established rules to protect plaintiffs from the drastic effect of granting motions for nonsuit. Timmsen v Forrest E. Olson, Inc. (1970) 6 CA3d 860, 868, 86 CR 359. A judgment of nonsuit after the opening statement is warranted only when the court concludes from all the asserted facts and inferences that no evidence of "sufficient substantiality" will support a judgment in favor of the plaintiff. Willis v Gordon (1978) 20 C3d 629, 633, 143 CR 723; Timmsen v Forrest E. Olson, Inc., supra.

The court must accept as proved all facts that counsel says will be proved and must "indulge every legitimate inference in favor of the plaintiff.... The evidence offered in the opening statement … must be substantial evidence, sufficient to support a judgment." Hays v Vanek (1989) 217 CA3d 271, 288, 266 CR 856. See Cole v State (1970) 11 CA3d 671, 678, 90 CR 74. When the motion is made after opening statement, the court must assume the plaintiff will be able to prove all favorable facts alleged. Aspen Enter., Inc. v Bodge (1995) 37 CA4th 1811, 1817, 44 CR2d 763.

CAUTION: Presumptions (which are not evidence) favoring the defendant (e.g., presuming that defendant obeyed the law) may not be considered. See Evid C §600; Engelman v Consolidated House Movers (1955) 135 CA2d 237, 243, 286 P2d 988.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.15 2. Make motion when opening statement either does not state cause of action or establishes affirmative defense

A defendant should make a motion for nonsuit if the opening statement of the facts that the plaintiff expects to prove:

- Does not state a cause of action; or
- Establishes an affirmative defense as a matter of law.

See, e.g., Olivia N. v National Broad. Co. (1981) 126 CA3d 488, 178 CR 888 (plaintiff's opening statement failed to allege facts establishing "incitement" needed to state personal injury cause of action for broadcast negligence); Russell v Soldinger (1976) 59 CA3d 633, 642, 131 CR 145 (contract described in opening statement was contrary to public policy).

Courts have traditionally considered a nonsuit at the close of an opening statement to be a disfavored motion. Galanek v Wismar (1999) 68 CA4th 1417, 1424, 81 CR2d 236 (recognizing opening statement may not present full version of plaintiff's case). Nevertheless, a nonsuit order at this stage is sometimes appropriate. See, e.g., Hoff v Vacaville Unified Sch. Dist. (1998) 19 C4th 925, 930, 80 CR2d 811. See also Jensen v Hewlett Packard Co. (1993) 14 CA4th 958, 971, 18 CR2d 83 (nonsuit after opening statement was proper when there was neither a showing of causation of an injury nor of a libelous statement).

If the plaintiff's theory in the opening statement does not give rise to liability as a matter of law, the defendant is entitled to a judgment of nonsuit. See, e.g., Calrow v Appliance Indus. (1975) 49 CA3d 556, 559, 122 CR 636 (defendant's employer could not be liable under factual circumstances described in opening statement). Before such a motion is granted, however, it must be clear that counsel has stated all the facts that the plaintiff expects to prove and has had full opportunity to enlarge or reopen the opening statement. Rodin v American Can Co. (1955) 133 CA2d 524, 535, 284 P2d 530.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.16 3. Make motion when variation between pleading and proof

Unlike a motion for judgment on the pleadings (see §§6.94-6.98), a motion for nonsuit tests the sufficiency of the evidence rather than the sufficiency of the pleadings. Nelson v Specialty Records, Inc. (1970) 11 CA3d 126, 89 CR 540.

A motion for nonsuit should be made, however, if there is a material variance between the pleading and the proof. Lewis v South San Francisco Yellow Cab Co. (1949) 93 CA2d 849, 852, 210 P2d 62 (judgment of nonsuit affirmed when plaintiff's cause of action based on set of facts different in general scope or meaning from that pleaded; no request to amend complaint to conform to proof). Compare CC-California Plaza Assocs. v Paller & Goldstein (1996) 51 CA4th 1042, 1051, 59 CR2d 382 (error to grant motion for nonsuit where there is substantial conflict in evidence).

NOTE: It is the responsibility of trial counsel to bring any substantial conflict in the evidence to the court's attention.

The court may then grant the opposing party's motion to amend the pleadings to conform to proof. See §18.104. If the evidence was presented, notice was given to the parties and the trial court, and the issue was clearly tendered, the motion for nonsuit may be properly denied and a motion to amend the pleadings granted. Pierce v PG&E (1985) 166 CA3d 68, 81, 212 CR 283.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/18 Motions During Trial/§18.17 4. Make motion after presentation of evidence when evidence insufficient

§18.17 4. Make motion after presentation of evidence when evidence insufficient

A defendant's motion for nonsuit after presentation of evidence should be granted if:

- The plaintiff presents insufficient evidence on any essential element of the case.

EXAMPLE 1: Miller v Los Angeles County Flood Control Dist. (1973) 8 C3d 689, 703, 106 CR 1 (by neglecting to produce expert testimony on standard of care required, plaintiff failed to establish prima facie showing of negligence).

EXAMPLE 2: Unilogic, Inc. v Burroughs Corp. (1992) 10 CA4th 612, 627, 12 CR2d 741 (nonsuit properly granted when plaintiff failed to show substantial evidence of actual loss or unjust enrichment from misappropriated trade secrets, even though other elements of claim were established).

EXAMPLE 3: Helm v K.O.G. Alarm Co. (1992) 4 CA4th 194, 5 CR2d 615 (nonsuit properly granted when plaintiff failed to proffer expert testimony to effect that had a malfunctioning alarm installed by defendant worked properly, plaintiff's damages would have been mitigated because police would have interrupted burglary and arson of plaintiff's home). But see Mast v Magpusao (1986) 180 CA3d 775, 778, 225 CR 689 (expert testimony unnecessary when case was one of ordinary negligence supported by matters of common knowledge).

EXAMPLE 4: Brimmer v California Charter Med., Inc. (1986) 180 CA3d 678, 684, 225 CR 752 (no probative evidence presented that defendant psychiatrists had participated in decision to involuntarily detain plaintiff).

EXAMPLE 5: Mikialian v City of Los Angeles (1978) 79 CA3d 150, 163, 144 CR 794 (plaintiff's evidence failed to establish necessary element of duty of care in negligence action).

EXAMPLE 6: James v St. Elizabeth Community Hosp. (1994) 30 CA4th 73, 35 CR2d 372 (nonsuit properly granted when plaintiff's expert on standard of care found unqualified to render opinion).

EXAMPLE 7: Castaneda v Bornstein (1995) 36 CA4th 1818, 1825, 43 CR2d 10, disapproved on other grounds in Bonds v Roy (1999) 20 C4th 140, 149 n4, 83 CR2d 289 (when expert opinion erroneously excluded, propriety of nonsuit turns on whether exclusion ruling was also erroneous).

- An affirmative defense is established that defeats the cause of action.

EXAMPLE 1: Nally v Grace Community Church (1988) 47 C3d 278, 291, 253 CR 97 (action against clergyman for malpractice in failing to prevent suicide; defendant held to have no duty to victim on which to base liability for his death).

EXAMPLE 2: Williams v Foster (1989) 216 CA3d 510, 522, 265 CR 15 (trial court error to deny nonsuit; law imposed no duty on adjacent owner to remedy sidewalk defect).

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.18 5. Court may not weigh evidence when ruling on motion

When ruling on a motion for nonsuit (unlike a motion for new trial), a judge may not weigh the evidence or consider the credibility of the plaintiff's witnesses. The judge is not bound, however, to accept testimony that is inherently improbable. Neblett v Elliott (1941) 46 CA2d 294, 305, 115 P2d 872.

The court must also disregard unfavorable evidence introduced by the defendant under Evid C §776. Miller v Dussault (1972) 26 CA3d 311, 316, 103 CR 147. In ruling on a motion for nonsuit, the question of what inferences may permissibly be drawn from the facts is a question of law for the court. An inference may not be illogically or unreasonably drawn, nor can an inference be based on mere "possibility, suspicion, imagination, speculation, supposition, surmise, conjecture or guesswork." Kidron v Movie Acquisition Corp. (1995) 40 CA4th 1571, 1580, 47 CR2d 752.

NOTE: The judge is not permitted to consider presumptions, which by definition are not evidence. See Evid C §600; 7 Witkin, California Procedure, Trial §410 (5th ed 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.19 6. Opposing party must ensure that evidence is adequate to support verdict

To avoid a judgment of nonsuit, the plaintiff's attorney must present evidence that is of "sufficient substantiality" to support a verdict. O'Keefe v South End Rowing Club (1966) 64 C2d 729, 733, 51 CR 534; Goldstone v Merchants' Ice & Cold Storage Co. (1899) 123 C 625, 627, 56 P 776.

When the evidence creates nothing more than a mere conjecture or surmise, it is insufficient. Abreu v Svenhard's Swedish Bakery (1989) 208 CA3d 1446, 1457, 257 CR 26.

A "scintilla of evidence" is not sufficient to allow a case to go to the jury. See Nally v Grace Community Church (1988) 47 C3d 278, 291, 253 CR 97; Mikialian v City of Los Angeles (1978) 79 CA3d 150, 144 CR 794.

A motion for nonsuit will not be granted when:

- There is a substantial conflict of evidence, some evidence tends to sustain the plaintiff's case, or different conclusions can reasonably be drawn from the plaintiff's evidence. See Golceff v Sugarman (1950) 36 C2d 152, 153, 222 P2d 665. If, however, the evidence shows that one of two defendants is culpable, but fails to show which one, a judgment of nonsuit should be granted because there is insufficient evidence to support a verdict. Garcia v Joseph Vince Co. (1978) 84 CA3d 868, 873, 148 CR 843.
- The plaintiff's evidence reasonably supports an inference that would give rise to the defendant's liability if accepted by the jury. See Leonard v Watsonville Community Hosp. (1956) 47 C2d 509, 515, 305 P2d 36. However, when the plaintiff relies without direct proof on an inference that a fact exists, and clear uncontradicted evidence shows that the fact does not exist, the nonexistence of the fact is established as a matter of law, and nonsuit may be granted. To dispel the plaintiff's inference, the evidence must be "clear, positive and uncontroverted." Dimond v Caterpillar Tractor Co. (1976) 65 CA3d 173, 185, 134 CR 895.

§18.20 7. Consider appellate consequences; courts reluctant to affirm nonsuit motions

The appellate courts are reluctant to affirm judgments of nonsuit after opening statements. See, e.g., Lingenfelter v County of Fresno (2007) 154 CA4th 198, 209, 64 CR3d 378; Baber v Napa State Hosp. (1989) 209 CA3d 213, 216, 257 CR 55; Loral Corp. v Moyes (1985) 174 CA3d 268, 272, 219 CR 836.

Likewise, the trial courts are understandably reluctant to take a case from the jury by granting a motion for nonsuit. See, e.g., Campbell v General Motors Corp. (1982) 32 C3d 112, 117, 184 CR 891 ("courts traditionally have taken a very restrictive view of the circumstances under which nonsuit is proper"); Kopfinger v Grand Cent. Pub. Mkt. (1964) 60 C2d 852, 855, 37 CR 65 (error to grant nonsuit if evidence was sufficient to support verdict in plaintiff's favor).

If there is reasonable doubt that the plaintiff's evidence may be sufficient to make a case, the court must let the case go to the jury. Golceff v Sugarman (1950) 36 C2d 152, 222 P2d 665; Agnew v Parks (1959) 172 CA2d 756, 774, 343 P2d 118.

Counsel should make such a motion only after careful consideration of the consequences on appeal if it is granted. See, e.g., Mahannah v Hirsch (1987) 191 CA3d 1520, 1526, 237 CR 140 (judgment of nonsuit affirmed when plaintiff produced no substantial evidence that defendant pathologists had violated any legal duty to plaintiff); Freeman v Lind (1986) 181 CA3d 791, 807, 226 CR 515 (judgment of nonsuit reversed for one defendant and affirmed for others).

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.21 8. Failing to grant judgment may be reversible error

Judicial reluctance to grant judgments of nonsuit should not be interpreted as an obligation to deny such motions. If the defendant's motion specifies a ground for a judgment of nonsuit, and the plaintiff is unable to correct the defect, the court has a duty to grant a judgment of nonsuit.

To do otherwise would needlessly incur the cost and delay of proceeding further with a case of no merit. See O'Keefe v South End Rowing Club (1966) 64 C2d 729, 746, 51 CR 534; McGoldrick v Porter-Cable Tools (1973) 34 CA3d 885, 888, 110 CR 481; Howard v General Petroleum Corp. (1951) 108 CA2d 25, 29, 238 P2d 145. The failure to grant a judgment of nonsuit that should have been granted is reversible error. Williams v Foster (1989) 216 CA3d 510, 522, 265 CR 15.

E. Timing

§18.22 1. Jury trial: Motion can be made after either opening statement or presentation of evidence

A defendant may move for a judgment of nonsuit only after, and not before, the completion of plaintiff's opening statement, or after the presentation of plaintiff's evidence. CCP §581c(a). If the motion is denied, the defendant has not waived the right to present evidence. CCP §581c(a).

Although it is not ordinary practice, motions for nonsuit also have been made at other times during trial. See, *e.g., Luca*s v County of Los Angeles (1996) 47 CA4th 277, 284, 54 CR2d 655 (motion allowed after all evidence and before argument to the jury); King v Hercules Powder Co. (1918) 39 CA 223, 224, 178 P 531 (motion made after presentation of plaintiff's evidence and renewed after presentation of both parties' evidence). Older cases permitting a nonsuit motion during presentation but before completion of plaintiff's evidence are no longer valid. See CCP §581c(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.23 2. Bench trial: Motion can be made only after plaintiff's opening statement

In a bench trial, a motion for nonsuit may be made only after the plaintiff's opening statement. CCP §581c(a). See Lingenfelter v County of Fresno (2007) 154 CA4th 198, 204, 64 CR3d 378. The appropriate motion for a defendant to make after the completion of the plaintiff's evidence in a bench trial, when that evidence is insufficient, is a motion for judgment under CCP §631.8. See §§24.14-24.29.

When the issue is a close one, it may be inadvisable to move for nonsuit in a bench trial. On appellate courts' reluctance to affirm judgments of nonsuit, see §18.20. A judge who will grant a motion for nonsuit may be likely to decide in the defendant's favor in any event. The motion should be made, however, when the plaintiff's opening statement clearly shows a lack of liability and the time and expense of the trial justifies the motion.

© The Regents of the University of California

F. Procedures for moving party

§18.24 1. Make motion outside jury's presence

In jury cases, counsel should ask the court for permission to approach the bench in order to make the motion. Counsel should check local rules, which may require a motion for nonsuit and any argument to be made outside the jury's hearing.

The court then may excuse the jury from the courtroom, hear the motion in chambers, or in rare instances permit argument at side bar outside the hearing of the jury. Counsel should be certain that the court reporter is present and able to hear what is said. On making a record, see §18.4.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.25 2. Oral motion: Specify grounds

Counsel must specify the grounds on which the motion is made, in order to afford the plaintiff the opportunity to cure any defects. Loral Corp. v Moyes (1985) 174 CA3d 268, 272, 219 CR 836.

Even if the trial court grants the motion, it may be reversed on appeal if counsel or the court has not stated on the record the specific elements lacking in the plaintiff's case. Timmsen v Forrest E. Olson, Inc. (1970) 6 CA3d 860, 868, 86 CR 359 (inadequate statements of grounds by defendant, e.g.: it is too general to say, "The evidence is insufficient to prove the allegations in the complaint").

A ground not advanced will generally not be considered on appeal. Loral Corp. v Moyes (1985) 174 CA3d 268, 273, 219 CR 836. See Lawless v Calaway (1944) 24 C2d 81, 94, 147 P2d 604. For further discussion, see §18.33.

An oral motion for nonsuit may be stated as follows:

> Defendant, _ _[name]_ _, moves for a judgment of nonsuit. The motion is made on the grounds that _ _[specify deficiency of opening statement or evidence]_ _.

If more than one defect in the plaintiff's case will provide independent grounds for a judgment of nonsuit, the following form can be used:

> Defendant, _ _[name]_ _, moves for a judgment of nonsuit. This motion is made on _ _[e.g., three]_ _ grounds, each of which independently entitles defendant to the granting of the motion: _ _[Specify grounds]_ _.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.26 3. Draft written supporting papers when issues complicated

A motion for nonsuit is usually made orally, although it may also be submitted in writing. It is sometimes difficult for trial counsel to prepare a written motion for nonsuit before the close of the plaintiff's evidence or opening statement because counsel does not know what proof the plaintiff will offer.

In many instances, however, defense counsel can anticipate the grounds for a motion for nonsuit based on the known weaknesses of the plaintiff's case and can prepare a written memorandum for submission at the appropriate time. Often the motion itself is made orally, accompanied by written supporting papers. Although oral citation of authorities can suffice when arguing the motion, a written supporting memorandum is more likely to convince the trial judge to grant the motion when the legal questions are complicated and to protect the record on appeal. See §§18.19-18.20.

© The Regents of the University of California

G. Procedures for opposing party

§18.27 1. Supplement opening statement; waiver

When a defendant has made a motion for nonsuit after the plaintiff's opening statement, the plaintiff's counsel may elect to stand on the opening statement as presented, arguing that the grounds for the motion are insufficient. The plaintiff also has the right to supplement the opening statement with any additional facts counsel expects to prove during trial, unless the plaintiff clearly cannot state a case. See Cole v State (1970) 11 CA3d 671, 674, 90 CR 74 (court gave plaintiff "full opportunity to state all facts he expected to prove"); Rodin v American Can Co. (1955) 133 CA2d 524, 534, 284 P2d 530 (nonsuit reversed when plaintiff was denied opportunity to expand opening statement).

PRACTICE TIP: If plaintiff requests that the opening statement be reopened or enlarged and the trial court denies this request, plaintiff's counsel should make sure a reporter is present to record the request and denial. The appellate court will presume a motion was properly granted if the record does not show the error. Hodges v Mark (1996) 49 CA4th 651, 657, 56 CR2d 700.

A plaintiff's attorney who fails to request an opportunity to enlarge or reopen the opening statement, however, waives this right. John Norton Farms v Todagco (1981) 124 CA3d 149, 162, 177 CR 215 (no error in trial court's ruling without expansion of opening statement when plaintiff did not ask to enlarge it; case reversed on other grounds). On motion to reopen, see §§18.65-18.81.

§18.28 2. Move to reopen after presentation of evidence; waiver

In response to a motion for nonsuit after the close of the plaintiff's evidence, counsel may stand on the evidence as presented or move to reopen the case to offer new evidence. On motion to reopen, see §§18.65-18.81.

It is reversible error for the court to grant a motion for nonsuit after refusing the plaintiff the opportunity to reopen for introduction of further evidence to remedy any deficiencies. Eatwell v Beck (1953) 41 C2d 128, 134, 257 P2d 643. See Charles C. Chapman Bldg. Co. v California Mart (1969) 2 CA3d 846, 858, 82 CR 830 (motion for judgment under CCP §631.8).

Counsel must affirmatively seek such an opportunity, however, or the court may assume that the plaintiff has no further evidence to offer. Consolidated World Inv. v Lido Preferred, Ltd. (1992) 9 CA4th 373, 381, 11 CR2d 524 (although court errs if it fails to permit reopening of evidence, any error is waived if plaintiff fails to make an offer of proof of additional evidence that would be presented or how that evidence would cure defects). See also Carrier & Braddock, Inc. v S.W. Straus & Co. (1931) 213 C 508, 513, 2 P2d 811; John Norton Farms v Todagco (1981) 124 CA3d 149, 162, 177 CR 215. On offers of proof, see §§15.50-15.60.

A party who indicates that the court need not consider a given issue waives the right to raise this issue on appeal. Carmichael v Reitz (1971) 17 CA3d 958, 968, 95 CR 381.

PRACTICE TIP: In evaluating any additional evidence that could be offered, distinguish whether the new material is merely cumulative (which is insufficient) or would actually help cure the stated deficiencies. When the plaintiff chooses to stand on the previous presentation, counsel's principal argument to the court is that the case has sufficient support to go to the jury.

Even if the court denies the plaintiff's motion to reopen, the plaintiff's counsel should ensure that the case is supported by evidence that is not merely speculation or conjecture. Abreu v Svenhard's Swedish Bakery (1989) 208 CA3d 1446, 1457, 257 CR 26. On ensuring that evidence is adequate to support a plaintiff's verdict, see §18.19.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/18 Motions During Trial/§18.29 3. If motion granted, request court order: Remaining parties cannot shift blame to dismissed party

§18.29 3. If motion granted, request court order: Remaining parties cannot shift blame to dismissed party

Code of Civil Procedure §581c(d) effectively prevents defendants in multiple party actions from shifting blame to a party no longer in the action. When one of several defendants obtains a dismissal by a motion for nonsuit based on lack of liability in an action for property damage or personal injury, the plaintiff can, by objecting, prevent the remaining defendants from commenting or attempting to attribute fault to persons dismissed from the case.

If a defendant prevails on a motion for nonsuit, plaintiff's counsel should move immediately for an order precluding any reference to the dismissed party rather than wait to object under CCP §581c(d) when another defendant attempts to shift blame to the dismissed defendant. Such a motion should be made outside the jury's hearing.

© The Regents of the University of California

H. Effect of granting motion; costs; appeal

§18.30 1. Operates as adjudication on merits

Unless the court otherwise specifies in its order, a judgment of nonsuit operates as an adjudication on the merits. CCP §581c(c). When the motion is granted, the judgment is made by written order, signed by the judge, and filed like any other dismissal of an action. CCP §581(d).

Compare: Unlike a judgment under CCP §631.8 in a bench trial (see §§24.14-24.29), a statement of decision is not required and cannot be requested after a judgment of nonsuit. See Nelson v Specialty Records, Inc. (1970) 11 CA3d 126, 142, 89 CR 540; Cullen v Spremo (1956) 142 CA2d 225, 231, 298 P2d 579.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.31 2. Prevailing party entitled to costs

A defendant who has been granted a judgment of nonsuit is entitled to costs and necessary disbursements under CCP §§1031-1034. Matson v Fortuna High Sch. Dist. (1921) 54 CA 586, 202 P 167. On recovering costs, see chap 27.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.32 3. Appeal from judgment after motion granted

A dismissal order following nonsuit is a final judgment, depriving the court of the power to change it except by motions to vacate (see §§25.72-25.77) or for new trial (see §§25.22-25.71).

The trial court's order granting a motion for nonsuit is not appealable, but an appeal may be taken from the written judgment of dismissal filed in the action. Graski v Clothier (1969) 273 CA2d 605, 607, 78 CR 447.

§18.33 4. Upholding judgment correctly decided on merits

To prevent reversal on technical grounds, a reviewing court ordinarily will uphold the trial court's judgment if it was correctly decided on the merits, even though the reasons relied on by the court were wrong. Lawless v Calaway (1944) 24 C2d 81, 93, 147 P2d 604.

A judgment of nonsuit will not be upheld, however, if a party neglected to specify the grounds for the motion, thereby denying the opponent the opportunity to correct defects during the trial. See §18.25. Any unspecified grounds will be considered only if the defect could not have been remedied even though the moving party had called it to the plaintiff's attention. Carson v Facilities Dev. Co. (1984) 36 C3d 830, 839, 206 CR 136.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.34 5. Reversal if sufficient evidence supports judgment for plaintiff

When reviewing conflicting evidence after a jury has rendered a verdict, the appellate court must affirm the trier of fact's decision if any substantial evidence supports the prevailing party. When considering the same conflicting evidence after a judgment of nonsuit, the appellate court must reject any contradictory evidence against the plaintiff and reverse the judgment of nonsuit if any sufficient evidence supports a judgment for the losing party (the plaintiff). See Carson v Facilities Dev. Co. (1984) 36 C3d 830, 839, 206 CR 136; Stonegate Homeowners Ass'n v Staben (2006) 144 CA4th 740, 745, 50 CR3d 709.

Because of this standard of review, motions for nonsuit granted after opening statement or after presentation of the plaintiff's evidence are more likely to be reversed on appeal than verdicts reached by the trier of fact. Before a judgment of nonsuit can be disturbed, however, there must be some substance to the plaintiff's evidence over which reasonable minds could differ; proof that raises mere speculation, suspicion, surmise, guess, or conjecture is not enough to sustain the burden. Abreu v Svenhard's Swedish Bakery (1989) 208 CA3d 1446, 1457, 257 CR 26. See §18.19.

NOTE: A nonsuit granted for the wrong reason but correct on other grounds will be affirmed. Devins v United Servs. Auto. Ass'n (1992) 6 CA4th 1149, 1156, 8 CR2d 263.

IV. MOTION FOR DIRECTED VERDICT

§18.35 A. Checklist: Procedures for making or opposing motion

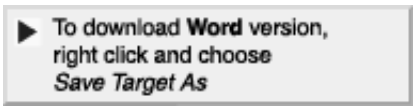

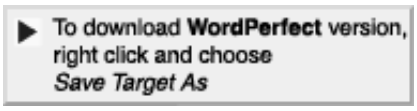

Moving Party

___ 1. Determine legal basis for motion, including local rules. See §18.36.

___ 2. Request hearing outside presence of jury but on record. See §18.49.

___ 3. Identify absence of material element of claim or defense or facts establishing claim or complete defense. See §18.36.

___ 4. Make oral statement of specific grounds. See §18.50.

___ 5. Consider preparation of written supporting memorandum. See §18.51.

___ 6. Consider motion directed to some causes of action or some parties. See §18.39.

___ 7. Consider whether record should reflect that opponent has opportunity to reopen evidence. See §18.53.

Opponent

___ 1. Identify substantial evidence creating jury issue. See §18.42.

___ 2. Request reopening of evidence. See §18.53.

___ 3. Request amendment to pleadings. See §18.104.

___ 4. Request that ruling be made only regarding specified parties or specified causes of action. See §18.39.

___ 5. If granted, request that finding not be made on merits. See §18.54.

B. Nature of Motion

§18.36 1. Make motion when evidence insufficient to support other party's case

A motion for directed verdict asks the court to instruct the jury to return a verdict against the nonmoving party. Either the plaintiff or the defendant may make the motion at the close of the other party's evidence. A party does not waive the right to a jury trial by making a motion for directed verdict. CCP §630(a).

The motion for directed verdict is particularly useful in cases in which the law favors the moving party, but the jury's sympathy may favor the other side. After the motion is made, the trial court's function is to determine whether there is sufficient evidence to support a verdict for the nonmoving party. If the only reasonable conclusion is that the evidence is insufficient, the court should grant the motion. Dailey v Los Angeles Unified Sch. Dist. (1970) 2 C3d 741, 745, 87 CR 376; Estate of Lances (1932) 216 C 397, 400, 14 P2d 768.

Directed verdict motions are well established in practice (see Bias v Reed (1914) 169 C 33, 38, 145 P 516), and they are specifically authorized by CCP §630(a). Under CCP §630(b), the court is authorized to grant a motion for directed verdict on some issues before proceeding to trial on the remaining issues. On partial directed verdict, see §18.39.

NOTE: California no longer has a requirement comparable to Fed R Civ P 50, which provides that a motion for directed verdict is a prerequisite to a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. See People v Mapp (1983) 150 CA3d 346, 350, 198 CR 177.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.37 2. Compared with motion for nonsuit

A motion for directed verdict, like a motion for nonsuit, is equivalent to a demurrer to the evidence. Hilliard v A. H. Robins Co. (1983) 148 CA3d 374, 394, 196 CR 117. The court's power to direct a verdict is the same as its power to grant a nonsuit. The test for granting each motion is the same, and decisions that discuss the standard for granting nonsuits also apply to motions for directed verdicts. Estate of Lances (1932) 216 C 397, 400, 14 P2d 768. On motion for nonsuit generally, see §§18.7-18.34.

Unlike a nonsuit motion, a directed verdict motion may be made by any party for a verdict to be directed in the moving party's favor. A previous denial of nonsuit does not prevent the court from later granting a defendant's motion for directed verdict. Fuchs v Southern Pac. Co. (1935) 5 CA2d 409, 412, 42 P2d 704.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.38 3. Jury's obligation to return verdict

If the jury refuses the court's instruction to return a verdict, the court may enter judgment without the jury's assent. Umstead v Scofield Eng'g Constr. Co. (1928) 203 C 224, 226, 263 P 799.

The court may also accept a verdict signed by the foreperson alone (Gaskill v Pacific Elec. Ry. (1916) 30 CA 593, 598, 159 P 200) or by any juror under a court order (Reay v Reay (1929) 97 CA 264, 271, 275 P 533). The court may hold any uncooperative jurors who refuse to return the appropriate verdict in contempt. Estate of Sharon (1918) 179 C 447, 460, 177 P 283.

CAUTION: Granting a motion for directed verdict can violate the constitutional right to trial by jury if the evidence is sufficient to permit the jury to decide on a legitimate question of fact. Singleton v Hartford Fire Ins. Co. (1930) 105 CA 320, 326, 287 P 529; Butler-Veitch, Inc. v Barnard (1926) 77 CA 709, 716, 247 P 597.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/18 Motions During Trial/§18.39 C. Motion for partial directed verdict

§18.39 C. Motion for partial directed verdict

Under CCP §630(b), if the evidence supports the granting of a motion for directed verdict for some but not all of the issues in the action, the court must grant the motion on those issues, and the action must proceed on the remaining issues.

No final judgment may be entered before completing the rest of the case, but the final judgment must reflect the directed verdict ordered by the court. CCP §630(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

D. Motion for judgment under CCP §630(f) after discharge of jury

§18.40 1. Judgment based on directed verdict test

If the jury has already been discharged, the court can order judgment in favor of a party on its own motion or a party's motion as long as the test for a motion for directed verdict is met. CCP §630; Miesen v Bolich (1960) 177 CA2d 145, 155, 1 CR 912 (hung jury discharged; §630 motion properly granted, under directed verdict standard); Thompson v Atchison, T. & S.F. Ry. (1950) 96 CA2d 974, 977, 217 P2d 45 (same).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/18 Motions During Trial/§18.41 2. Time requirements: Notice within 10 days of jury's discharge

§18.41 2. Time requirements: Notice within 10 days of jury's discharge

A motion, either by a party or by the court sua sponte, under CCP §630 must be noticed within 10 days after the jury is discharged. The court's power to act expires 30 days after the jury is discharged. CCP §630(f).

Failure of the court to act timely operates as a denial of the motion. For forms regarding this motion, see §§18.127-18.128.

© The Regents of the University of California

E. Test for granting motion

§18.42 1. Other party's evidence not "sufficiently substantial"

The grounds for granting a motion for directed verdict are the same as those for granting a motion for nonsuit. See Estate of Lances (1932) 216 C 397, 400, 14 P2d 768. See also Metzenbaum v ROS Assocs. (1986) 188 CA3d 202, 208, 232 CR 741 (directed verdict for defendant affirmed).

The court may grant a defendant's motion when no evidence of "sufficient substantiality" supports a verdict for the plaintiff, disregarding conflicting evidence and giving the plaintiff's evidence, and every legitimate inference drawn from it, all the weight to which it is entitled. Center Found. v Chicago Ins. Co. (1991) 227 CA3d 547, 551, 278 CR 13; De La Rosa v City of San Bernardino (1971) 16 CA3d 739, 743, 94 CR 175 (directed verdict for defendant reversed).

A plaintiff's motion for directed verdict may be granted when the evidence supports the plaintiff's case and no substantial evidence exists to support the defense. Walters v Bank of Am. Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n (1937) 9 C2d 46, 49, 69 P2d 839 (directed verdict for plaintiff affirmed); Kostecky v Henry (1980) 113 CA3d 362, 377, 170 CR 197 (partial directed verdict for plaintiff affirmed).

PRACTICE TIP: Make a motion for directed verdict when the issue is resolvable as a matter of law. If the issue on the proffered facts is resolvable as a matter of law, the court is under a duty to grant a directed verdict. Blanchard v State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. (1991) 2 CA4th 345, 350, 2 CR2d 884.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.43 2. Motion inappropriate when evidence substantially conflicts

If there is a substantial conflict in the evidence, the court does not have the power to direct a verdict and the case must be permitted to go to the jury. Estate of Fleming (1926) 199 C 750, 754, 251 P 637; Short v Nevada Joint Union High Sch. Dist. (1985) 163 CA3d 1087, 1096, 210 CR 297 (directed verdict for defendant reversed).

Because the "scintilla of evidence" doctrine has been rejected in California, however, there need not be a complete absence of conflict in the evidence but rather the absence of a substantial conflict. Conservatorship of Everette M. (1990) 219 CA3d 1567, 1573, 269 CR 182; Jensen v Leonard (1947) 82 CA2d 340, 353, 186 P2d 206.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.44 3. Make motion when nonexistence of essential fact established as matter of law

If the evidence raises an inference that a fact exists and either party offers uncontradicted evidence that the fact does not exist, the nonexistence of the fact is established as a matter of law. The evidence must be so persuasive, however, that it cannot rationally be disbelieved.

If the fact was necessary to establish an essential element of the plaintiff's case or a defense, the motion for directed verdict may be granted. Engstrom v Auburn Auto. Sales Corp. (1938) 11 C2d 64, 70, 77 P2d 1059; Teich v General Mills, Inc. (1959) 170 CA2d 791, 794, 339 P2d 627 (stating rule for nonsuit and directed verdict).

NOTE: In at least one case, the court suggested that the prudent course for a court is to deny the directed verdict motion in favor of granting a later motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Beavers v Allstate Ins. Co. (1990) 225 CA3d 310, 328, 274 CR 766. On motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, see §§25.2-25.21.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.45 4. Evidence viewed in light favorable to nonmoving party

Although the court considers all evidence on a motion for directed verdict when it is brought at the end of a trial, the evidence is viewed, as in a motion for nonsuit, in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. See §18.14.

Unlike a motion for new trial, the court may not weigh the credibility of witnesses when considering a motion for directed verdict. It may consider only the effect of their testimony after conceding the truth of it. Stevens v Parke, Davis & Co. (1973) 9 C3d 51, 69, 107 CR 45; Alexander v State (1984) 159 CA3d 890, 896, 205 CR 758; Miller v Dussault (1972) 26 CA3d 311, 316, 103 CR 147. On new trial motions, see §§25.22-25.71.

The court is not bound, however, to accept testimony that is inherently improbable. Jensen v Leonard (1947) 82 CA2d 340, 353, 186 P2d 206 (inherently improbable testimony, from mentally ill witness, not substantial evidence).

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.46 5. Evidence unfavorable to nonmoving party cannot be considered

If the nonmoving party examined a moving party's witness as an adverse witness under Evid C §776, the court may not consider evidence unfavorable to the nonmoving party produced by that moving party's witness. Miller v Dussault (1972) 26 CA3d 311, 316, 103 CR 147.

The fact that a trial court might grant a new trial on evidence that it judges to be unreliable does not justify granting a directed verdict on the same evidence. Estate of Caspar (1916) 172 C 147, 150, 155 P 631; Urland v French (1956) 141 CA2d 278, 282, 296 P2d 568; Weck v Los Angeles County Flood Control Dist. (1947) 80 CA2d 182, 190, 181 P2d 935. On motion for new trial, see §§25.22-25.71.

© The Regents of the University of California

F. Timing

§18.47 1. Making motion at close of presentation of evidence

Unless the court specifies an earlier time for making a motion for directed verdict, any party may move for a directed verdict after all parties have completed the presentation of their evidence in a jury trial. CCP §630(a). Ordinarily, a motion for directed verdict is made at this time. On making motion at other times, see §18.48.

Although the court has discretion to hear a motion for directed verdict any time before submission of the case to the jury (Gibson v Southern Pac. Co. (1955) 137 CA2d 337, 346, 290 P2d 347), moving for directed verdict before full presentation of evidence may deny the adverse party a full opportunity to present the case (Bias v Reed (1914) 169 C 33, 37, 145 P 516).

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.48 2. Making motion at other times

The court may also grant a motion for directed verdict at the following times:

- After submission to the jury, if the jury is unable to reach a verdict. Perrine v PG&E (1960) 186 CA2d 442, 446, 9 CR 45.
- After the defendant's opening statement, if it is clear that the defendant has stated all facts expected to be proved and has had an opportunity to enlarge the opening statement. Topanga Beach Renters Ass'n v Department of Gen. Servs. (1976) 58 CA3d 188, 192, 129 CR 739 (improperly granted because some factual issues remained that could potentially defeat plaintiff's case); Nuffer v Insurance Co. of N. Am. (1965) 236 CA2d 349, 363, 45 CR 918 (directed verdict for plaintiff after presentation of plaintiff's case and defendant's opening statement; defendant's opening statement determined to be complete statement of facts defendant expected to prove).
- After the plaintiff's opening statement. Because the grounds for nonsuit and directed verdict are the same, some courts have permitted the defendant to move for a directed verdict after the plaintiff's opening statement (see Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co. v Bank of America (1963) 220 CA2d 545, 34 CR 23), but conventionally a motion for nonsuit is made under CCP §581c. On motion for nonsuit after opening statement, see §18.15.
- At any time on the court's own motion. See Golden v Conway (1976) 55 CA3d 948, 953, 128 CR 69 (reversed owing to existence of factual issues).

© The Regents of the University of California

G. Procedures for moving party

§18.49 1. Make motion outside jury's presence

The motion for directed verdict is usually made orally after a request to approach the bench at the conclusion of the evidence. Local rules may require that the motion be made outside the hearing of the jury. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.47.

The judge may excuse the jury or retire with counsel to chambers to hear argument on the motion. The motion and the specific grounds for making it, as well as counsel's argument, should take place in the court reporter's presence. On making a record, see §18.4.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.50 2. Oral motion: Specify grounds

Unless counsel specifies the grounds on which the motion is made, and unless the court gives the grounds on which a judgment is based, a directed verdict can be reversed on appeal. See Timmsen v Forrest E. Olson, Inc. (1970) 6 CA3d 860, 868, 86 CR 359 (nonsuit case); 7 Witkin, California Procedure, Trial §§425-426 (5th ed 2008). By pointing out the specific grounds supporting the motion, counsel allows the opposing party the opportunity to introduce further evidence to correct any defects in the case.

Although no particular form of motion for directed verdict is required, an oral motion such as the following can be used:

> _ _[Plaintiff/Defendant]_ _, _ _[name]_ _, moves that the Court direct a verdict in favor of the _ _[plaintiff/defendant]_ _ on the following grounds, each of which independently entitles _ _[plaintiff/defendant]_ _ to the granting of the motion: _ _[Specify]_ _.

If the description of the deficiencies of the opponent's evidence is lengthy, counsel should delineate each additional defect in the opponent's case for the record with an introductory phrase such as, "The motion for directed verdict is further made on the separate and independent ground that …."

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.51 3. Written supporting memorandum desirable when issues complicated

Although supporting papers are preferable and may assist in persuading the judge, a written memorandum in support of the motion is not required and may be difficult to produce if counsel is not sure that a motion for directed verdict can be made until all the opposing party's evidence is heard.

Counsel should try, however, to submit a supporting memorandum when the motion is made or argued if the issues are complicated and the grounds for making the motion can be anticipated from weaknesses in the opposing party's case. If the motion itself is also written, counsel should state this on the record when the motion is argued or submitted. For form of written motion, see §18.129.

© The Regents of the University of California

H. Procedures for opposing party

§18.52 1. Argue that moving party failed to adequately specify grounds

Counsel for the opposing party should ensure that the moving party states the specific grounds for the motion. A specific statement of grounds permits the opposing party to offer additional evidence to correct any deficiencies in the case.

If the grounds for the motion are not specified, opposing counsel can request that the court require the moving party to state any objections specifically and completely or ask that the motion be denied on that ground. As with a motion for nonsuit, it is error to grant the motion when the grounds have not been specifically stated. Timmsen v Forrest E. Olson, Inc. (1970) 6 CA3d 860, 868, 86 CR 359 (nonsuit case). See §18.25.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.53 2. Ask to reopen case; waiver

The opposing party may stand on the evidence as presented and explain to the court why the evidence is sufficient. If any available evidence has been overlooked, however, the opposing party may ask the court for permission to reopen the case to introduce it. On motion to reopen, see §§18.65-18.81.

If a motion to reopen is not made, the court will assume that counsel has no further evidence to present, and the right to reopen will be waived. See Carrier & Braddock, Inc. v S.W. Straus & Co. (1931) 213 C 508, 513, 2 P2d 811 (nonsuit case); Tuller v Arnold (1893) 98 C 522, 523, 33 P 445 (same).

It is error not to allow counsel to reopen the case if requested, unless the deficiency clearly cannot be remedied, e.g., the proposed evidence is redundant of admitted evidence or simply asks differently phrased questions of the same witnesses. See Eatwell v Beck (1953) 41 C2d 128, 133, 257 P2d 643 (nonsuit case); Sanchez v Bay Gen. Hosp. (1981) 116 CA3d 776, 794, 172 CR 342 (court denied motion to reopen before directing verdict when proposed evidence covered same areas counsel thoroughly contested during trial).

© The Regents of the University of California

I. Effect of granting motion; costs; judgment

§18.54 1. Operates as adjudication on merits

Unless the court rules otherwise, a directed verdict operates as an adjudication on the merits. CCP §630(c). It is effective without any assent of the jury. CCP §630(e). See §18.38.

Such a verdict is res judicata on the issues of the case (unless the court has ordered that the directed verdict is not on the merits). CCP §581c(c). See 7 Witkin, California Procedure, Trial §420 (5th ed 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.55 2. Prevailing party entitled to costs

The order directing a verdict results in a judgment and consequently carries costs. Matson v Fortuna High Sch. Dist. (1921) 54 CA 586, 202 P 167 (granting costs on judgment of nonsuit).

The prevailing party on a motion for directed verdict, like any party with an action dismissed in that party's favor, may file a cost bill under CCP §§1031-1034. On recovering costs generally, see chap 27.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.56 3. Order of judgment

The order of judgment must be in writing, signed by the judge, entered in the clerk's register, and filed in the action. See CCP §581d. See form in §18.130.

As with other successful motions, the prevailing party normally prepares the judgment for the judge's signature and ensures that the clerk enters and files the judgment. On judgments generally, see chap 23.

Moving Party

___ 1. Determine legal basis for motion. See §18.62.

___ 2. Advise court and counsel of situation at earliest opportunity. See §18.60.

___ 3. Prepare declarations (or subpoena witnesses) as needed. See §18.61.

___ 4. Prepare a written memorandum in support of motion if time permits. See §18.61.

___ 5. Consider alternatives to continuance (e.g., witnesses out of order). See §18.59.

___ 6. Consider cost liability for motion. See §18.64.

Opponent

___ 1. Investigate evidentiary basis for motion, particularly timeliness and diligence. See §18.63.

___ 2. Prepare counterdeclarations (or subpoena witnesses) as needed. See §18.61.

___ 3. Identify prejudice to be caused by continuance. See §18.58.

___ 4. Identify absence of good cause or delaying tactics. See §18.60.

___ 5. Identify costs to be incurred if motion granted. See §18.64.

___ 6. Consider alternatives to continuance. See §18.63.

Either Party

___ 1. If motion granted, seek order that subpoenas remain in effect. See chap 4.

___ 2. If witness not available in future, request that deposition be ordered. See §18.63.

B. Nature of motion

§18.58 1. Disfavored

Judicial policy does not favor continuances before or during trial. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(c). See County of San Bernardino v Doria Mining & Eng'g Corp. (1977) 72 CA3d 776, 783, 140 CR 383. In spite of the seemingly obligatory language of CCP §595.2, which provides for a 30-day continuance upon stipulation of the parties, the statute is directory only. It does, however, reflect the legislature's policy of allowing brief continuances when the parties extend professional courtesy to one another, which the courts should, if possible, accommodate. Pham v Nguyen (1997) 54 CA4th 11, 15, 62 CR2d 422 (criticizing County of San Bernardino v Doria Mining & Eng'g Corp., supra).

A motion for continuance made after the trial has begun asks that the progress of the trial be interrupted and a future time or date set for resumption. Such a motion is rarely granted. Nonetheless, emergencies during trial may compel counsel to move for a continuance. On grounds for making motion, see §18.60.

PRACTICE TIP: It is particularly difficult to obtain a continuance after trial has started—when a courtroom, judge, reporter, and other resources have been dedicated to resolving the case. It is important to be aware, however, that it is technically possible to obtain a continuance during trial. In extreme circumstances, consider this motion or another viable alternative for meeting an emergency during trial. For possible alternatives, see §18.59.

The increasing concern for prompt disposition of civil actions is reflected in a widespread disinclination toward granting continuance motions. See, e.g., Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(c) (court may grant a continuance only on affirmative showing of good cause); 7 Witkin, California Procedure, Trial §9 (5th ed 2008). On the other hand, changes made to the California Rules of Court in 2004 reflect concern that some courts have taken an inflexible and overly rigid approach to continuances (discussed in Note, §6.6). See Oliveros v County of Los Angeles (2004) 120 CA4th 1389, 1394, 16 CR3d 638 (abuse of discretion to deny continuance solely because of its impact on trial court's calendar; strong public policy favoring disposition on merits outweighs judicial efficiency when two principles collide). On pretrial motions for continuance, see §§6.6-6.25.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.59 2. Consider alternatives

If the emergency or surprise can be resolved in a relatively short period of time, it is better to ask the court for a recess rather than to move for a continuance. Many trial judges are amenable to reasonable requests for a recess, even when it will merely facilitate presentation of a case. A recess is often only a matter of hours, involving minimal interference with the court calendar and the progress of a trial.

Other alternatives may be preferable to a motion for continuance. For example, if the reason for the continuance is that a witness is unavailable, consider using the existing deposition of that witness in lieu of testimony, particularly if the deposition was videotaped. This alternative is less desirable than presenting the witness in person, but a videotaped deposition may help ameliorate the deficiency.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.60 C. Satisfying grounds for continuance

A continuance before or during trial must not be granted except on a showing of good cause under Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(c). See Jurado v Toys 'R' Us, Inc. (1993) 12 CA4th 1615, 1617, 16 CR2d 158 (error for trial court to deny motion for continuance to plaintiff's attorney, who showed good cause by subpoenaing essential medical expert witnesses, both of whom disobeyed subpoenas); Young v Redman (1976) 55 CA3d 827, 832, 128 CR 86 (defendant's business trips during trial did not constitute good cause for continuance). For further discussion of continuance motions made before trial, see §§6.6-6.25. See also California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 42 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

PRACTICE TIP: Not only must you show good cause, you must also make the motion as soon as reasonably practical on discovering that a continuance is needed. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(b). Additionally, you must show that the situation could not have been reasonably foreseen. See Hays v Viscome (1953) 122 CA2d 135, 141, 264 P2d 173 (reversing trial court's denial of continuance when party legitimately surprised by opponent's failure to call expected witness; time needed to locate counsel's own witness).

An order denying a continuance will be overturned on appeal only if clear abuse can be shown. Vann v Shilleh (1975) 54 CA3d 192, 196, 126 CR 401 (abuse of discretion when trial court's ruling denying continuance was arbitrary, capricious, and contrary to interests of justice; attorney withdrew at last minute). See Crosby v Martinez (1958) 159 CA2d 534, 541, 324 P2d 26 (reversal of judgment denying short continuance to allow plaintiff to produce witness to refute damaging, incompetent, and unanticipated hearsay admitted over plaintiff's objection); Arntz Contracting Co. v St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. (1996) 47 CA4th 464, 54 CR2d 888 (expert witness had stroke; continuance properly denied when expert's deposition testimony was available for use at trial; court allowed former party witness to testify on same matters and forbade opposition to make any comment on absence of independent expert). See also §6.7; California Trial Objections, chap 54 (Cal CEB Annual). See also 7 Witkin, California Procedure, Trial §§10-12 (5th ed 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

D. Procedures for moving party

§18.61 1. Written noticed motion or ex parte application; supporting declarations

Motions for continuance must be made on written notice or by ex parte application under Cal Rules of Ct 3.1200-3.1207. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(b). Because most reasons for requesting a continuance during trial are not foreseeable, however, the motion is usually made orally. Whether oral or written, the motion must conform to Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332.

PRACTICE TIP: When it is practicable to obtain them within a short time, give the court written declarations showing that an unforeseen emergency has developed and that no available means exist to meet it short of a trial continuance. For medical emergencies, present declarations of treating doctors to the court and opposing counsel when the motion is made or argued, or offer to submit them shortly after argument. See Jurado v Toys 'R' Us, Inc. (1993) 12 CA4th 1615, 1618, 16 CR2d 158 (when court accepts lawyer's representations without affidavit, requirement is excused by implication).

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.62 2. Making oral motion

It is good practice for both the motion and argument to be made outside the jury's presence. An oral motion can take the following form:

> _ _[Plaintiff/Defendant]_ _, _ _[name]_ _, moves for continuance of this trial on the ground that _ _[e.g., a key witness, _ _[name]_ _, has suddenly become ill]_ _. We request _ _[e.g., that the trial be recessed until _ _[time]_ _ on _ _[date]_ _, when the witness should be able to testify]_ _.

After making the motion, specifically state the following:

- The grounds for the motion;
- When the emergency or the reason for the motion arose;
- When the need for a continuance first became known; and
- The unsuccessful measures short of continuance already taken to meet the situation.

For medical emergencies, submit (or, if there is no time, offer to obtain) declarations of treating physicians. If the motion is based on the unavailability of a witness, explain the nature of the testimony to be given to show its materiality and the fact that no substitute witness is readily available.

© The Regents of the University of California

E. Procedures for opposing party

§18.63 1. Suggest alternatives or conditions to continuance

In arguing against the motion, suggest alternative solutions to the problem short of a continuance whenever appropriate. For example, if trial counsel or a witness is ill, ask the court to substitute another attorney or witness instead of continuing the trial (see Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(d)(4)) or ask the court to condition the continuance on the moving party's consent to the taking of depositions of witnesses who are present at the trial.

Depositions may be taken before the judge or clerk of the court in which the case is pending or before a notary public. Testimony may be read from the deposition when the trial resumes, subject to the same objections as if the witnesses had been produced. CCP §596. See Taylor v Bell (1971) 21 CA3d 1002, 1008, 98 CR 855 (continuance conditioned on testimony of then-present witness to be given by deposition). On requesting that a witness's travel expenses to return to the trial and other costs be paid by the moving party, see §18.64.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.64 2. Ask for payment of costs

When appropriate, emphasize the costs that will be incurred if a continuance is granted and request that the moving party pay the costs that will be incurred by the other parties due to the continuance. If possible, these costs should be identified and quantified for the court. For form that can be adapted for this purpose, see §27.129.

The court may condition a continuance on the moving party's payment of the adverse party's costs due to the postponement of trial. CCP §1024. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1332(d)(10). These items are not regulated by general statutes defining costs, and the court has discretion to order compensation to the opposing party for expenses incurred in preparing for the now-continued trial. CCP §1024. See, e.g., Inman v Fremont Med. Ctr. (1975) 49 CA3d 169, 173, 122 CR 372 (trial court's order conditioning continuance on payment of court costs for impaneling jury affirmed); Wilkin v Tadlock (1952) 110 CA2d 156, 158, 241 P2d 1066 (party seeking continuance ordered to pay parties' transportation costs to and from employment outside state). The trial court, however, lacks authority to condition a grant of continuance on plaintiff's payment of attorney fees to defendant. Levine v Pollack (1995) 37 CA4th 129, 43 CR2d 491.

Moving Party

___ 1. Determine legal basis for motion. See §18.66.

___ 2. Prepare written memorandum in support of motion if time permits. See §18.78.

___ 3. Describe new evidence to be presented and show good cause for granting motion. See §18.70.

___ 4. State grounds showing diligence in seeking evidence; inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect in presenting evidence; and relevance and materiality of proposed evidence. See §18.71.

___ 5. Be prepared to rebut claim of prejudice or allegation of delaying tactics. See §18.79.

Opponent

___ 1. Investigate evidentiary basis, particularly timeliness and diligence. See §18.66.

___ 2. Evaluate whether new evidence is cumulative of evidence already presented. See §18.80.

___ 3. Identify absence of good cause or delaying tactics. See §18.70.

___ 4. Identify prejudice to be caused by reopening. See §18.67.

___ 5. Request continuance to meet new evidence that will be presented. See §18.60.

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Nature of motion

§18.66 1. Motion asks for opportunity to offer new evidence

A motion to reopen is a request to reopen a party's case in chief. In contrast to evidence presented merely in rebuttal, in which a party is limited to the issues raised by the opponent, a motion to reopen asks that the moving party be permitted to offer new evidence to establish the elements of a cause of action or a defense.

A motion to reopen may be made when counsel believes that essential evidence has been omitted. This realization may come because the opponent makes a motion for nonsuit or directed verdict, counsel is surprised at trial, or evidence was inadvertently omitted or previously unavailable.

PRACTICE TIP: Before making a motion to reopen, be sure that the new evidence is clear and substantial. Otherwise, matters presented after reopening may adversely affect the trier of fact by appearing to weaken or confuse your case.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.67 2. Within court's discretion

Normally, a plaintiff or defendant can only offer rebutting evidence after its case in chief has been presented, "unless the court, for good reason, in furtherance of justice, permits them to offer evidence upon their original case." CCP §607(6). See Evid C §320 (court has discretion to regulate order of proof).

A decision to reopen is within the trial court's discretion. Marriage of Olson (1980) 27 C3d 414, 422, 165 CR 820 (denying motion); Western Specialty Co. v Clairemont Constr. Co. (1962) 204 CA2d 532, 537, 22 CR 536 (denying motion).

It is an abuse of discretion to deny a motion to reopen when a different result on further hearing was likely if the party had been permitted to reopen and present the evidence. Estate of Horman (1968) 265 CA2d 796, 807, 71 CR 780 (inadvertence coupled with surprise by delayed rulings of court).

No abuse of discretion exists, however, if the moving party does not show that a different result would follow from the introduction of further evidence. Ensher, Alexander & Barsoom, Inc. v Ensher (1964) 225 CA2d 318, 325, 37 CR 327; Fry v Sheedy (1956) 143 CA2d 615, 623, 300 P2d 242. The court may correctly deny a motion to reopen when it finds that the proffered evidence is merely cumulative. Malibou Lake Mountain Club, Ltd. v Robertson (1963) 219 CA2d 181, 186, 33 CR 74.

§18.68 3. Bench trial: Reopening alternative to new trial

After a bench trial, the court can reopen the case instead of granting a new trial for the introduction of additional evidence. CCP §662. Even if the court does not specifically vacate prior findings and judgment, its order to reopen has the effect of vacating the earlier judgment. Taormino v Denny (1970) 1 C3d 679, 684, 83 CR 359.

The signing of a judgment constitutes a denial of a reopening motion. Silver v Schwartz (1956) 142 CA2d 92, 96, 297 P2d 1018. For further discussion, see §24.13.

§18.69 4. Reopening on court's own motion

The court may also reopen a case on its own motion. Taylor v Bell (1971) 21 CA3d 1002, 1007, 98 CR 855. For example, it may do so following a suggestion to the parties that they explore a new theory. Baker v City of Palo Alto (1961) 190 CA2d 744, 755, 12 CR 425.

In Coit Drapery Cleaners, Inc. v Sequoia Ins. Co. (1993) 14 CA4th 1595, 1611, 18 CR2d 692, the trial judge, hearing one part of a case as a bench trial, considered evidence adduced in the jury trial phase but only after oral statement of the court's ruling. The judge gave notice to the parties of his consideration of that evidence and then ruled contrary to his previous ruling. Although such a procedure is unorthodox, it is nothing other than a sua sponte reopening of evidence—well within the trial court's discretion. See §18.67.

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Requirements

§18.70 1. Grounds: Good cause required

The moving party must show good cause for granting a motion to reopen. Sanchez v Bay Gen. Hosp. (1981) 116 CA3d 776, 793, 172 CR 342; Pocock v Deniz (1955) 134 CA2d 758, 761, 286 P2d 466.

Failure to be sufficiently specific and clear is itself a ground for denial. Sample v S.H. Kress & Co. (1961) 190 CA2d 503, 508, 12 CR 198 (unnamed witness to describe door's operation in general terms; court properly held alleged testimony claim to be too vague).

§18.71 2. Showing of due diligence

Failure to show due diligence in procuring evidence during the case in chief, or in offering a satisfactory explanation for not previously introducing it, justifies a denial of a motion to reopen. Stewart v Cox (1961) 55 C2d 857, 866, 13 CR 521; De Angeles v Roos Bros. (1966) 244 CA2d 434, 441, 52 CR 783. See Giomi v Viotti (1956) 144 CA2d 714, 718, 301 P2d 597 (court found a failure of diligence because counsel did not determine which of two similarly named persons was the proper witness).

In some cases, the courts have held that a party must show that evidence was either unknown or unavailable. See Malibou Lake Mountain Club, Ltd. v Robertson (1963) 219 CA2d 181, 185, 33 CR 74. See also Foster v Keating (1953) 120 CA2d 435, 437, 261 P2d 529 (court stated that counsel should defer expiration of damages issue until relationship of party decided; when court found that damages had not been proved, reversible error to deny reopening).

© The Regents of the University of California

D. Timing

§18.72 1. Asking to reopen case after motion for nonsuit or directed verdict

When a party asks to reopen the case in response to a motion for nonsuit or directed verdict, the purpose of the motion to reopen is to supply additional evidence correcting the deficiencies enumerated by the opposing party. Unless a case clearly cannot be stated, it is error to grant the motion for nonsuit after refusing the plaintiff the chance to remedy the defects of the case. See Eatwell v Beck (1953) 41 C2d 128, 133, 257 P2d 643.

The court may deny a motion to reopen and direct a verdict, however, when the evidence to be presented after reopening is merely cumulative, covering the same areas counsel thoroughly litigated during trial. Sanchez v Bay Gen. Hosp. (1981) 116 CA3d 776, 794, 172 CR 342. See Sample v S.H. Kress & Co. (1961) 190 CA2d 503, 508, 12 CR 198 (denial of motion to reopen proper when nonsuit would still result even if additional facts were proved).

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.73 2. Making motion immediately after oversight or surprise; waiver

Waiver. If the motion to reopen is made because of an oversight by the moving party or surprise during trial, the motion should be made as soon as practicable or counsel may waive any objection on appeal. Morris v Williams (1967) 67 C2d 733, 760, 63 CR 689; Christina v Daneri (1937) 22 CA2d 190, 193, 70 P2d 983 (inadvertently omitted evidence).

If surprised, new evidence cannot be merely cumulative. The court retains jurisdiction to reject a claim of inadvertence if the proposed effort is merely of differently phrased questions of prior witnesses who had been thoroughly examined on the same subjects as proposed. Sanchez v Bay Gen. Hosp. (1981) 116 CA3d 776, 794, 172 CR 342. See also Ulwelling v Crown Coach Corp. (1962) 206 CA2d 96, 127, 23 CR 631 (proposed evidence would merely be cumulative).

False allegation of surprise. Counsel cannot claim inadvertence or excusable neglect when that is not the case. See Rosenfeld, Meyer & Susman v Cohen (1987) 191 CA3d 1035, 1053, 237 CR 14, in which an examination of the trial briefs disclosed that the parties knew of the issues involved and that counsel's assertion of mistake based on an alleged misunderstanding of who bore the burden of proof was untrue. The motion was properly denied because the failure was not due to inadvertence or excusable neglect but, instead, the informed and knowing choice of trial counsel.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.74 3. Making motion after argument

A case may be reopened after argument in a jury trial at the court's discretion. Nelson v Douglas Pedlow, Inc. (1955) 130 CA2d 780, 783, 279 P2d 823; Eatwell v Beck (1953) 41 C2d 128, 134, 257 P2d 643.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.75 4. Making motion after submission in bench trial

The motion may be made in a bench trial after the case has been submitted for decision. Taylor v Bell (1971) 21 CA3d 1002, 1007, 98 CR 855; Alvak Enters. v Phillips (1959) 167 CA2d 69, 74, 334 P2d 148. This is true even if considerable time has elapsed since submission of the case for decision. Marriage of Hahn (1990) 224 CA3d 1236, 1240 n3, 273 CR 516 (motion properly granted even though made 3 months after announcement of a tentative decision, but before entry of judgment).

A considerable delay can militate against the granting of the motion. Minnick v California Dep't of Corrections (1979) 95 CA3d 506, 526, 157 CR 260 (trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to reopen made 5 months after case submitted for decision, as "made by afterthought and much too late"); Stowmen v Monroe (1963) 219 CA2d 302, 33 CR 305 (motion could have been, but was not, made for a considerable time between submission of case and entry of judgment). See In re T.M.R. (1974) 41 CA3d 694, 702, 116 CR 292.

§18.76 5. Reopening case after judgment in bench trial

When a new trial motion is made, a case may be reopened in a bench trial even after judgment, with the same effect as if the case had been reopened after submission but before findings were filed or judgment was rendered. CCP §662. For further discussion, see §24.13.

© The Regents of the University of California

E. Procedures for moving party

§18.77 1. Oral motion during trial

When a motion to reopen is made during trial, it is typically made orally and without notice. In a jury trial, counsel should make a motion outside the jury's presence, accompanied by an offer of proof of the evidence to be produced. On handling offers of proof, see §§15.50-15.60.

No particular form of motion to reopen is required. A clear statement of the motion, why good cause exists for granting it, and the nature of the proposed evidence is satisfactory. Counsel should explain why the evidence was not previously introduced despite due diligence.

For an oral motion to reopen, counsel can use wording such as the following:

> _ _[Plaintiff/Defendant]_ _, _ _[name]_ _, moves to reopen the case to present further evidence on the issue of _ _[describe]_ _. Good cause exists for granting this motion because _ _[describe reason, explain why evidence was not previously presented, and demonstrate due diligence in bringing motion]_ _. The nature of the evidence that _ _[plaintiff/defendant]_ _ wishes to introduce consists of _ _[describe]_ _.

§18.78 2. Written motion after submission in bench trial

When the motion is made in a bench trial after the matter has been submitted for decision, it can be made by written motion with a supporting memorandum and declarations. If the case has been submitted and counsel for the parties are no longer present in the courtroom, it may also be necessary to notice the motion. See Alvak Enters. v Phillips (1959) 167 CA2d 69, 75, 334 P2d 148 (noticed motion to reopen; additional evidence presented solely by affidavits).

The declaration should state what the moving party expects to prove, the character of the proposed evidence, the diligence exercised to introduce the evidence during trial, and the reasons justifying failure to offer it at that time. Westerholm v 20th Century Ins. Co. (1976) 58 CA3d 628, 634, 130 CR 164; Malibou Lake Mountain Club, Ltd. v Robertson (1963) 219 CA2d 181, 185, 33 CR 74.

Before asking the court to set aside the submission of a case in a bench trial, the moving party should be sure that any motion to reopen will present only new evidence—not evidence that is merely cumulative. Malibou Lake Mountain Club, Ltd. v Robertson, supra; Virtue v Flynt (1958) 164 CA2d 480, 489, 330 P2d 879. See Diamond Springs Lime Co. v American River Constructors (1971) 16 CA3d 581, 604, 94 CR 200 (proposed evidence not related to cause of dam failure; denial of reopening proper). For written form of motion to reopen, see §18.131.

© The Regents of the University of California

F. Procedures for opponent

§18.79 1. Motion for nonsuit or directed verdict pending

Choosing not to oppose motion. When a motion for nonsuit or directed verdict is pending, counsel may not wish to oppose a motion to reopen. It may be error for the court not to permit the case to be reopened unless the defect clearly cannot be remedied. Compare Eatwell v Beck (1953) 41 C2d 128, 133, 257 P2d 643 (error for refusal to reopen), with Sample v S.H. Kress & Co. (1961) 190 CA2d 503, 508, 12 CR 198 (no error for refusing to reopen).

Opposing motion when defect cannot be corrected. In some cases, however, counsel may wish to oppose the motion to reopen made in response to a motion for nonsuit or directed verdict if the opposing party clearly cannot correct the defect and if the court specifically states this point on the record. See, e.g., Sanchez v Bay Gen. Hosp. (1981) 116 CA3d 776, 793, 172 CR 342 (directed verdict); Sample v S.H. Kress & Co., supra (nonsuit).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/18 Motions During Trial/§18.80 2. Motion to reopen after submission

§18.80 2. Motion to reopen after submission

Counsel opposing a motion to reopen after submission of the case in a bench trial may wish to support any opposition with a written memorandum. Although opposing counsel's argument depends on the particular factual situation, an essential point may be that good cause does not exist for reopening the case.

PRACTICE TIP: Pay particular attention to the thoroughness and admissibility of the moving party's declaration of facts on which the motion to reopen is based. A declaration is often vulnerable to the argument that the "newly discovered" evidence would not have been overlooked had the moving party's counsel exercised due diligence. In some instances, the declaration may also make it appropriate to argue that the evidence that the moving party seeks to present is cumulative in nature.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.81 G. Appeal after judgment only

An order denying a motion to reopen is not appealable and is reviewable only on appeal from the judgment. Litvinuk v Litvinuk (1945) 27 C2d 38, 43, 162 P2d 8; Pete v Henderson (1957) 155 CA2d 772, 774, 318 P2d 720; Kallgren v Steele (1955) 131 CA2d 43, 47, 279 P2d 1027.

The ruling on the motion will not be disturbed on appeal unless the trial court clearly abused its discretion. Marriage of Hahn (1990) 224 CA3d 1236, 1240, 273 CR 516.

VII. MOTION FOR MISTRIAL

§18.82 A. Checklist: Procedures for making or opposing motion

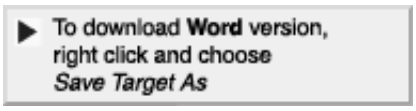

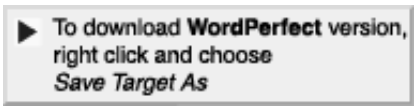

Moving Party

___ 1. Object immediately to offending conduct or prejudicial event. See §18.88.

___ 2. Reserve motion to be heard at earliest opportunity outside presence of jury. See §18.91.

___ 3. Make oral statement of specific grounds. See §18.92.

___ 4. Identify specific offending conduct or prejudicial event. See §18.92.

___ 5. Specify how conduct or event prevents party from receiving a fair trial. See §18.85.

Opponent

___ 1. Determine opponent's diligence and whether waiver has occurred. See §18.97.

___ 2. Point out how conduct or event has not caused incurable damage. See §18.83.

___ 3. Advance less-drastic solutions (e.g., recess, admonition to jury). See §18.96.

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Nature of motion

§18.83 1. Asks to terminate trial

A motion for mistrial requests the court to end the trial before its conclusion for error or irregularity too substantial to correct. Grounds for mistrial may be any misconduct or irregularity that prevents a party from receiving a fair trial. Typically, the error is one whose prejudicial effect on the jury is not curable through admonition. See Clemente v State (1985) 40 C3d 202, 217, 219 CR 445 (counsel improperly referred to matter not in evidence, but error cured by admonition).

Substantial irregularities include the illness of a juror when no alternate is available (CCP §233) or the jury's failure to return a verdict (CCP §616). See, e.g., Estate of Bartholomae (1968) 261 CA2d 839, 842, 68 CR 332 (court granted mistrial when jury returned special verdicts on only two of three issues to be decided). On other irregularities as grounds for mistrial, see California Trial Objections, chap 56 (Cal CEB Annual).

Counsel, jurors, witnesses, spectators, or the court may be responsible for misconduct or irregularities that result in a mistrial. On misconduct of counsel and court during trial, see chap 16. On juror misconduct, see chap 17.

§18.84 2. Consider alternatives

Because the result is so significant, counsel should consider alternatives to a motion for mistrial. If, for instance, the court erroneously admits certain evidence, a motion to strike may be adequate to preserve the issue for later motions or for appeal. Mosesian v Pennwalt Corp. (1987) 191 CA3d 851, 865, 236 CR 778, disapproved on other grounds in People v Ault (2004) 33 C4th 1250, 1272 n15, 17 CR3d 302.

Other alternatives to a motion for mistrial include counsel's request that the court admonish the jurors and instruct them to disregard what has occurred. When appropriate, counsel can also ask that the court impose sanctions or a contempt citation on offending counsel. See §§16.94, 16.99.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.85 C. Grounds: Preventing fair trial

In most situations, the trial court has discretion to grant or deny motions for mistrial. See, e.g., Santiago v Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1990) 224 CA3d 1318, 1335, 274 CR 576 (jury could not agree on question 1 of a special verdict; no injustice in instructing jury to answer question 2; answer would be dispositive).

Any misconduct or irregularity that irreparably prejudices a party's chances of receiving a fair trial is grounds for a mistrial. The court may properly deny the motion if it is satisfied that no injustice will result from the complained-of activity. The most common grounds for a motion for mistrial are misconduct by a juror, counsel, a spectator, or a trial witness that the court in its discretion determines to be irreparably prejudicial. On misconduct of counsel, court, and jury as grounds for mistrial, see chaps 16-17, 21.

NOTE: Many motions for mistrial are often based on the same grounds as those supporting a motion for new trial. See CCP §657(1)-(2); §§25.22-25.71.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.86 1. Statutory grounds

Mistrials must be granted when:

- The judge presiding at the trial testifies as a witness over a party's objection. Evid C §703(b). Calling the judge to testify is considered to be a consent to the granting of a motion for mistrial, and objecting to the judge as a witness is considered to be a motion for mistrial. Evid C §703(c).
- A juror testifies over the objection of a party. Evid C §704(b). Calling a juror to testify is considered to be a consent to the granting of a motion for mistrial, and objecting to a juror as a witness is considered to be a motion for mistrial. Evid C §704(c).
- A juror becomes ill, no alternate is available, and the parties will not stipulate to less than a full jury panel rendering the verdict. CCP §233.
- A jury is discharged without rendering a verdict, or is prevented from giving a verdict by accident or other cause, and the court declines to enter judgment under CCP §630. CCP §616.
- A person previously presiding over the case testifies as a witness at the trial, with certain exceptions. See Evid C §703.5.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.87 2. Judge unable to complete trial

If a judge is unable to complete either a bench trial or a jury trial when any issues require court findings, a mistrial must be granted. A party is entitled to a decision on the facts of a case by the same judge who heard the evidence. Guardianship of Sullivan (1904) 143 C 462, 468, 77 P 153 (one judge heard evidence; second judge heard argument; third judge entered judgment).

The death of a judge generally requires a mistrial. McAllen v Souza (1937) 24 CA2d 247, 250, 74 P2d 853 (judge died before entering final judgment). But see Leiserson v City of San Diego (1986) 184 CA3d 41, 48, 229 CR 22 (deceased judge's executed intended decision properly confirmed by presiding judge under CCP §635).

NOTE: A judge's power to complete a trial in superior court is terminated when the judge is appointed to the appellate court. Reimer v Firpo (1949) 94 CA2d 798, 801, 212 P2d 23. On events establishing a judge's vacancy from office, see Govt C §1770.

© The Regents of the University of California

D. Timing

§18.88 1. Prejudicial effect from cumulative errors or irregularities

Frequently, the cumulative effect of an adversary's prejudicial remarks throughout trial, rather than one act of misconduct, may compel counsel to move for mistrial. In this instance, counsel should object on the record immediately after each impropriety, request an admonition and instruction to the jury, and move for mistrial if the misconduct continues. See Barajas v USA Petroleum Corp. (1986) 184 CA3d 974, 985, 229 CR 513 (objection to one but not other repeated acts of misconduct constituted waiver of right to mistrial).

PRACTICE TIP: Be sure to object not just once, but each time a repeated act of misconduct occurs. Otherwise, your rights to mistrial and to preserve your objection on appeal may be waived. See §18.102. On procedures for objecting and requesting admonitions, and moving for mistrial, see §18.90.

§18.89 2. Single act of misconduct or serious irregularity

If a grievous error occurs that in the trial attorney's judgment incurably prejudices the case, preventing the client from having a fair trial, a motion for mistrial should be made immediately after the misconduct or irregularity takes place. In most courts, the motion must be made outside the jury's presence. On procedures for making a motion for mistrial, see §§18.90-18.95.

Only misconduct so prejudicial that an admonishment would be ineffective excuses the failure to request such admonition. Lewis v Bill Robertson & Sons, Inc. (1984) 162 CA3d 650, 654, 208 CR 699 (court's prejudicial comment on evidence constituted incurable error). See §18.86 on mandatory grounds for mistrial.

© The Regents of the University of California

E. Procedures for moving party

§18.90 1. Objection on record and request for admonition; waiver of right to mistrial

Counsel should object immediately on the record to the protested action, assign it as misconduct or error, and promptly request the judge to give the jury a curative admonition. On making motion for mistrial, see §18.92.

If counsel delays making an objection or fails to object, the right to move for mistrial later in the trial may be waived. Horn v Atchison, T. & S.F. Ry. (1964) 61 C2d 602, 610, 39 CR 721 (failure to make timely objections and request jury admonitions waived right to mistrial after plaintiff's closing argument). See Whitfield v Roth (1974) 10 C3d 874, 892, 112 CR 540 (counsel sent cigars and candy to jury room to celebrate birth of his child; misconduct curable and failure to object was waiver).

Objection to one but not other repeated acts of misconduct may also constitute a waiver of the right to mistrial. Barajas v USA Petroleum Corp. (1986) 184 CA3d 974, 985, 229 CR 513 (reference to excluded evidence in contravention of court order).

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.91 2. Motion for mistrial and argument outside jury's presence

A motion for mistrial is almost always made orally. Some courts require that the motion for mistrial itself as well as the argument take place outside the jurors' hearing. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.47.

Even if not required by local rules, it is good practice for counsel both to make the motion and to request that argument take place outside the jurors' hearing so that any prejudicial effect will not be further compounded. The judge may hear the motion and argument at the bench, retire with counsel to chambers, or recess the jury and proceed with argument in the courtroom. Counsel should request the court reporter's presence if the judge has not already done so.

PRACTICE TIP: Before making a motion for mistrial, be sure that it is something you want the court to grant. Evaluate the possibility that your opponent is deliberately trying to scuttle the trial if his or her case is not going well. Asking for sanctions or a contempt citation may be a wiser course. See §§16.94, 16.99.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.92 3. Oral motion: Specify grounds

Although no particular form is required, the grounds for a motion for mistrial must be clearly and specifically stated. For example, counsel may move for mistrial on the ground that an admonition to the jury cannot cure the prejudicial effect of the misconduct or error, stating specifically why the prejudicial effect cannot be cured.

Counsel may use a form of oral motion such as the following:

> _ _[Plaintiff/Defendant]_ _, _ _[name]_ _, objects to _ _[describe act, occurrence, or irregularity]_ _ and assigns it as _ _[misconduct/error]_ _. _ _[Plaintiff/Defendant]_ _ moves for mistrial on the ground that the _ _[act/occurrence/irregularity]_ _ is so prejudicial that a fair trial is not possible. The prejudice cannot be cured by an admonition to the jury or by cautionary instructions because _ _[specify]_ _.

§18.93 4. Admonishment of jury after motion denied; protecting the record

If the motion for mistrial is denied, counsel should renew the request that the court admonish the jury.

PRACTICE TIP: Be sure that your request for admonition is on the record. The court's ruling on the mistrial motion should also be entered in the record. You may also wish to request a minute order from the court clerk.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.94 5. Proceeding with trial after motion taken under submission

Some judges proceed with the trial after argument on a motion for mistrial, taking the motion under submission until a decision can be made on the effect of the prejudicial conduct or irregularity on the jury.

In this event, counsel should request the court to admonish the jurors to disregard the improper conduct or irregularity. Counsel should renew the motion taken under submission before the close of evidence to avoid waiver of the motion. Any delay in giving an admonition would only compound the prejudicial effect of the complained-of irregularity.

§18.95 6. Moving for mistrial in bench trial

A motion for mistrial is rare in a bench trial, but it should be considered when there is irregularity or misconduct on the part of the trial judge. Unlike a jury, a judge is usually presumed to be capable of overlooking prejudicial remarks from counsel or witnesses when reaching a decision on the merits.

If a mandatory ground for mistrial occurs (e.g., the death of the trial judge after submission, but before decision, in the case; see §18.86), counsel should make the motion for mistrial in writing. Rose v Boyson (1981) 122 CA3d 92, 97, 175 CR 836 (judge sitting without jury elevated to appellate court after judgment but before findings signed; court noted power of parties to stipulate otherwise). See Reimer v Firpo (1949) 94 CA2d 798, 801, 212 P2d 23.

© The Regents of the University of California

F. Procedures for opposing party

§18.96 1. Suggest alternative means to cure prejudice

Generally, opposing counsel can suggest less drastic means than mistrial to cure any prejudice. Mistrials can result in substantial additional expense for both the courts and the parties if the case is retried. Normally, a prompt admonition is considered sufficient to cure any prejudicial effect. See Clemente v State (1985) 40 C3d 202, 217, 219 CR 445; Horn v Atchison, T. & S.F. Ry. (1964) 61 C2d 602, 610, 39 CR 721.

In some instances, a continuance (or recess) may make a mistrial unnecessary. See, e.g., Schnear v Boldrey (1971) 22 CA3d 478, 482, 99 CR 404 (when several jurors became ill, judge continued trial instead of discharging jury and declaring mistrial).

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.97 2. Argue when appropriate that motion was not made immediately following misconduct

If, e.g., a motion for mistrial is based on juror misconduct (counsel for moving party overhears jurors discussing the case before deliberation), the motion for mistrial must be made immediately. Otherwise, opposing counsel can argue that the right to a mistrial is waived, because a party should not be permitted to gamble on the outcome of the case before moving for relief.

Opposing counsel can also ask the court for a brief recess in which to research authorities if counsel believes that this would help persuade the court to deny the motion. If the court seems inclined to grant the motion, another alternative is to request that the matter be taken under submission until it becomes clear whether prejudice has resulted.

© The Regents of the University of California

G. Effect of court's ruling: Motion granted

§18.98 1. Deciding when case will be retried

When a jury is discharged without rendering a verdict, or is prevented from rendering a verdict by accident or other cause, the case may be retried immediately or at a future time. CCP §616.

Some judges call a conference among counsel immediately after a mistrial has been declared, covering questions of possible settlement or retrial of the case and the name of the judge who may preside at the trial. For example, if a mistrial was declared because of the deliberate misconduct of an attorney seeking a way out of a losing case, the judge may wish to disqualify himself or herself from retrial of the case.

§18.99 2. Reinstate case to trial calendar

After an order for mistrial has been granted, the case may be dropped from the trial calendar. If this happens, it is generally the plaintiff's counsel's responsibility to ensure a trial date, whether by making a motion to specially set for trial, invoking a fast-track procedure in accordance with local rules, or choosing some other method.

Although no statute authorizes preference for cases in which a mistrial has been declared, as a practical matter such cases often receive an early retrial date. If the court chooses to do so, however, it may commence the new trial immediately after declaring a mistrial. See §18.98.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.100 3. Order not appealable

An order granting a motion for mistrial is the same as having no trial at all. When a mistrial is declared, the finder of fact has made no determinations or final judgment from which to take an appeal. See Reimer v Firpo (1949) 94 CA2d 798, 801, 212 P2d 23 (motion granted).

Although the order granting a mistrial is not directly appealable, there are some circumstances under which it may be reviewed by extraordinary writ, e.g., when the jury has already reached its verdict. See Heavy Duty Truck Leasing, Inc. v Superior Court (1970) 11 CA3d 116, 119, 89 CR 598 (court of appeal issued peremptory writ of mandate requiring trial court to enter judgment on jury verdict and vacate its order for mistrial).

© The Regents of the University of California

H. When motion denied

§18.101 1. Appellate review from judgment

An order denying a motion for mistrial is not directly appealable, but it may be reviewed on appeal from the judgment. Hartman v Gordon H. Ball, Inc. (1969) 269 CA2d 779, 75 CR 618; Warner v O'Connor (1962) 199 CA2d 770, 774, 18 CR 902.

When a motion for mistrial is denied, a later appeal may be based on the erroneous ruling itself or for failure to grant a new trial for trial irregularities, jury misconduct, or the like. See CCP §657(1)-(2); discussion in §§25.22-25.71.

§18.102 2. Waiver on appeal

Failure to object, delay in making an objection, or failure to seek jury admonitions when prejudicial conduct occurs may constitute waiver on appeal. See, e.g., Neumann v Bishop (1976) 59 CA3d 451, 468, 130 CR 786 (improper argument). On moving for mistrial during argument, see §19.54.

A timely objection and request for admonition are necessary to preserve the issue on appeal. As long as an objection is made, however, making a motion for mistrial is not required to reverse a verdict on appeal.

Generally, an admonition in jury trials will cure all but extreme cases of error. Horn v Atchison, T. & S.F. Ry. (1964) 61 C2d 602, 610, 39 CR 721. The record on appeal must show that counsel made a timely objection and request for admonition of the jury, but that the admonition was insufficient to cure the prejudice. See Whitfield v Roth (1974) 10 C3d 874, 892, 112 CR 540; Lewis v Bill Robertson & Sons, Inc. (1984) 162 CA3d 650, 654, 208 CR 699; Love v Wolf (1964) 226 CA2d 378, 392, 38 CR 183 (extreme misconduct; repeated attorney misconduct not cured by admonition).

Moving Party

___ 1. Evaluate whether issues already tried or to be tried are different than those in pleadings. See §18.104.

___ 2. If there is a variance, prepare amended pleading or amendment to pleading or ask court for permission to interlineate small amendments on face of pleading. See §18.115.

___ 3. If challenged, explain how opposing party had notice of issues in dispute and that proposed amendment does not change issues or evidence to be presented. See §18.106.

___ 4. Show that amended pleading or amendment is in furtherance of justice. See §18.117.

Opponent

___ 1. Determine whether amended pleading or amendment raises new issues after close of evidence. See §18.105.

___ 2. Show departure from facts originally pleaded and lack of notice. See §18.109.

___ 3. Identify prejudice that amended matter will cause in maintaining the action or defense on merits. See §18.106.

___ 4. Show that moving party's motion was not timely made. See §18.113.

___ 5. Argue that allowing the amended pleading or amendment to be filed is not in furtherance of justice. See §18.120.

___ 6. If granted, ask for continuance to meet the new issues and evidence and ask for reimbursement for costs incurred from continuance. See §18.110.

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Nature of motion

§18.104 1. Amendments liberally granted during trial

Amendments to pleadings made during trial are governed by the same general rule of liberality that allows amendments before trial, so that disputed issues may be decided on the merits. Hooper v Romero (1968) 262 CA2d 574, 580, 68 CR 749. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1324. The courts have discretion to permit amendments to pleadings to conform to proof "on such terms as may be just." CCP §469.

Amendments to answers are usually granted with liberality because a defendant denied leave is permanently deprived of the defense. Gould v Stafford (1894) 101 C 32, 34; Dunzweiler v Superior Court (1968) 267 CA2d 569, 576, 73 CR 331.

On amending pleadings before trial, see §§6.87-6.93. For full discussion of pretrial changes to pleadings, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 16, §§25.70-25.79 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.105 2. Denial of amendments that raise new issues after close of evidence

Motions to amend pleadings to conform to proof are often made because issues that have already been tried are different from those in the pleadings. On contents of motion to amend pleadings, see Cal Rules of Ct 3.1324.

The court tends to deny amendments to conform to proof when those amendments raise new issues after the close of evidence. Trafton v Youngblood (1968) 69 C2d 17, 31, 69 CR 568; Lavely v Nonemaker (1931) 212 C 380, 385, 298 P 976.

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Curing immaterial variances

§18.106 1. Showing no prejudice to other party

Amendments during trial most often arise when there is a variance between a pleading and the proof presented at trial, i.e., the pleading alleges one thing and the proof shows another. See Stearns v Fair Employment Practice Comm'n (1971) 6 C3d 205, 212, 98 CR 467.

Case law has minimized the effect of variance, and motions to amend pleadings to conform to proof are generally granted as long as they do not prejudice the rights of the other party. Trafton v Youngblood (1968) 69 C2d 17, 31, 69 CR 568; Quezada v Hart (1977) 67 CA3d 754, 761, 136 CR 815, disapproved on other grounds in Holliday v Jones (1989) 215 CA3d 102, 112, 264 CR 448.

If the variance is slight, or one that has not misled the adverse party to his or her prejudice, the court may direct the fact to be found according to the evidence, or order an immediate amendment, without costs. CCP §470. See, e.g., Zander v Texaco, Inc. (1968) 259 CA2d 793, 802, 66 CR 561 (court's findings conformed to factual issues tried but at variance with pleadings).

The motion may be denied, however, when the amendment raises a disfavored plea, was insufficient to state a cause of action or defense, changed a cause of action, or contradicted an admission.

Under CCP §475, the court must disregard any error or defect that does not affect the substantial rights of the parties. Lever v Garoogian (1974) 41 CA3d 37, 41, 115 CR 856 (defect in answer to complaint not reversible error when plaintiff had notice of defense from defendant's answers to plaintiff's requests for admission).

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.107 2. General rule: Amendments limited to causes of action in complaint

As a general rule, a party's recovery is limited to the causes of action set out in the complaint. See Howard v Schaniel (1980) 113 CA3d 256, 265, 169 CR 678. Likewise, a party's defense generally is limited to proof of issues raised by the answer. These restrictions give the other party notice of the scope of proof that will be presented at trial. See 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §1209 (5th ed 2008).

If an objection is sustained as being outside the pleadings, the court has no duty to aid counsel or to amend the pleadings sua sponte. Counsel must affirmatively move for relief. R.E. Tharp, Inc. v Miller Hay Co. (1968) 261 CA2d 81, 85, 67 CR 854.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.108 3. Exception: New causes of action permitted when based on same set of facts

The courts generally permit amendments that state a different cause of action or a new defense if the proposed recovery or defense is based on the same general set of facts. Godfrey v Steinpress (1982) 128 CA3d 154, 174, 180 CR 95 (cause of action added by amendment did not alter factual issues or presentation of evidence).

PRACTICE TIP: Whenever possible, point out to the court that your proposed amendment does not alter the issues in the case or have an effect on the evidence presented by either side. See, e.g., Brady v Elixir Indus. (1987) 196 CA3d 1299, 1303, 242 CR 324, disapproved on other grounds in Turner v Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 C4th 1238, 1251, 32 CR2d 223 (reversible error to deny amendment to conform to proof when facts admitted in trial were admissible under unamended complaint and adversary not prejudiced).

It is error for a trial court to permit an amendment alleging facts entirely outside the existing causes of action. Earp v Nobmann (1981) 122 CA3d 270, 286, 175 CR 767, disapproved on other grounds in Silberg v Anderson (1990) 50 C3d 205, 219, 266 CR 638.

© The Regents of the University of California

D. Curing material variances

§18.109 1. Variance has misled other party

A material variance is defined as one that has actually misled the adverse party to his or her prejudice in maintaining the action or defense on the merits. CCP §469.

Even material variances may be cured by an amendment to conform to proof if they do not represent a complete departure from the general set of facts originally pleaded. Union Bank v Wendland (1976) 54 CA3d 393, 400, 126 CR 549; General Credit Corp. v Pichel (1975) 44 CA3d 844, 849, 118 CR 913.

§18.110 2. Ordering continuance (recess) or vacating submission of court case; waiver

The court can correct a material variance by ordering an amendment to the pleadings on terms it considers just. CCP §469. Such terms may include ordering a continuance for the opposing party to meet the evidence.

In a bench trial, the order granting leave to amend the pleadings may vacate submission of the case to permit the opposing party to introduce additional evidence. See Mountain States Creamery Co. v Tagerman (1952) 39 C2d 355, 357, 246 P2d 21.

Substantial variance may also be cured under the theory that the issues were already tried, and that counsel had notice during trial and waived any prejudicial effect by failing to object to evidence or moving for nonsuit when the variance between the pleadings and proof became apparent. See 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §1214 (5th ed 2008).

§18.111 E. Failure of proof

If the claim or defense is unproved—not merely in some particulars, but in its general scope and meaning—it is considered to be a failure of proof rather than a case of variance under CCP §469 or §470. CCP §471. Hunt v Smyth (1972) 25 CA3d 807, 829, 101 CR 4 (trial court properly disallowed proposed amendment unsupported by evidence and not timely made).

The absence of a fact vital to the proposed defense constitutes a complete failure of proof that a pleading amendment cannot cure. See Johnston v County of Yolo (1969) 274 CA2d 46, 51, 79 CR 33.

F. Timing

§18.112 1. Motion may be granted at any time

The court may allow any pleading to be amended at any stage of the proceedings as long as it is in "furtherance of justice." CCP §§576, 473.

EXAMPLE 1: Enterprise Leasing Corp. v Shugart Corp. (1991) 231 CA3d 737, 750, 282 CR 620 (motion after opening statement erroneously denied).

EXAMPLE 2: Kamm v Bank of Cal. (1887) 74 C 191, 198, 15 P 765 (at close of plaintiff's evidence pending motion for nonsuit).

EXAMPLE 3: Walsh v Hooker & Fay (1963) 212 CA2d 450, 454, 28 CR 16 (after conclusion of argument).

EXAMPLE 4: Valencia v Shell Oil Co. (1944) 23 C2d 840, 848, 147 P2d 558 (after submission of case).

EXAMPLE 5: Foster v Keating (1953) 120 CA2d 435, 444, 261 P2d 529 (after announcement of intended decision).

Pleadings may be conformed to proof even after judgment. See §18.133.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.113 2. Making timely motion; tactics

Counsel should normally make the motion at the earliest possible time because prejudicial delay is a ground for denial. See §§18.106, 18.109.

PRACTICE TIP: The best practice is to move to amend the pleadings as soon as it becomes clear that they should be amended. If possible, the motion should be made before trial begins.

In certain situations all the necessary information may not be available or the amendment may be so minor or technical (e.g., the spelling of a name when the person's identity is not in dispute) that a motion to amend may be legitimately delayed. McKee v Mires (1952) 110 CA2d 517, 523, 242 P2d 954 (affirming trial court's discretion to permit amendment to complaint, even when made at "conclusion of case" or "after submission of the cause"). See Hulsey v Koehler (1990) 218 CA3d 1150, 1159, 267 CR 523 (affirmed trial court's denial of plaintiff's motion to amend to add defense when counsel realized existence of defense on reading deposition transcript 2 days before trial).

CAUTION: An amendment that raises new issues or requires a reopening of evidence will normally be denied without a strong showing of diligence and justification. If it is granted, the adverse party should be allowed to meet the amendment and with any new evidence.

§18.114 3. Conforming pleadings to proof after judgment

Pleadings may also be amended to conform to proof after judgment (Babcock v Antis (1979) 94 CA3d 823, 830, 156 CR 673, disapproved on other grounds in Snukal v Flightways Mfg., Inc. (2000) 23 C4th 754, 775 n6, 98 CR2d 1) but only if the judgment is first vacated under CCP §473 or a new trial motion or other basis exists. Young v Berry Equip. Rentals, Inc. (1976) 55 CA3d 35, 38, 127 CR 200; King v Unger (1938) 25 CA2d 632, 635, 78 P2d 255. See Jahn v Brickey (1985) 168 CA3d 399, 402, 214 CR 119 (in posttrial motion, judgment vacated to amend complaint by interlineation to substitute figures in prayer for damages).

On vacating judgment to amend pleadings after trial, see §§25.72-25.77.

G. Procedures for moving party

§18.115 1. Methods of amending pleadings

A pleading may be amended by:

- An amendment to the pleading;
- An amended pleading; or
- Alterations on the face of the pleading.

An amendment to the pleading specifically itemizes, line by line, the changes made in the original pleading. See, e.g., McKee v Mires (1952) 110 CA2d 517, 522, 242 P2d 954 (amendment to conform to proof designated line, page, and paragraph of complaint to be amended).

Unlike an amendment to the pleading, an amended pleading wholly supersedes the original pleading. See, e.g., Cohen v Superior Court (1966) 244 CA2d 650, 657, 53 CR 378.

The correct procedure for amendments by alteration on the face of the pleading includes receiving prior permission from the court and requesting the court or clerk to initial all alterations. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1324. Amendments made by interlineating or otherwise making alterations on the face of the pleading are not allowed unless the court gives permission and the court or clerk initials the alterations. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1324.

Although minor changes of several words can be interlineated into an original pleading, an "amendment to the pleading" can be inconvenient and confusing because it requires reference to multiple documents. The courts frequently prefer that an "amended pleading" be drafted to wholly supersede the original pleading.

§18.116 2. Oral motion: Submit written amendment

A motion to amend pleadings to conform to proof is usually made orally during trial. If the motion is granted, the order allowing the amendment is not equivalent to the amendment itself. Campagna v Market St. Ry. (1944) 24 C2d 304, 308, 149 P2d 281; People ex rel Dep't of Pub. Works v Vallejos (1967) 251 CA2d 414, 416, 59 CR 450.

It is good practice to submit the proposed amendment to the court with copies for the opposing party at the time of making the motion or, if this is not possible, after the motion is granted. The opposing party may request the right of approval as to form before it is filed. See form of amendment in §18.134.

If the motion can be anticipated, written supporting papers may be prepared. On occasion, counsel may wish to make the motion itself in writing. See forms of motion to amend and court order in §§18.132-18.133.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.117 3. Arguing motion

In arguing the motion, the moving party should state why the evidence presented during trial is sufficient to justify the proposed amendment. To avoid the need for an answer, counsel amending a complaint can request that new allegations be deemed denied and the existing answer be deemed the answer to the amended pleading. See Valencia v Shell Oil Co. (1944) 23 C2d 840, 848, 147 P2d 558 (issues presented by amended complaint already tried with defendants presenting their evidence on disputed issues). It would be error for an amendment to be made and judgment entered without further hearing. Reidy v Collins (1933) 134 CA 713, 722, 26 P2d 712.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/18 Motions During Trial/ H. Procedures for opposing party/§18.118 1. Before motion made: Object on grounds of relevancy or move for nonsuit

§18.118 1. Before motion made: Object on grounds of relevancy or move for nonsuit

If evidence is offered during trial that differs from the pleadings, and no motion to amend the pleadings has yet been made, counsel may immediately object on grounds of relevancy. Evid C §350. When there is a variance between the pleadings and the proof, defense counsel may also choose to move for nonsuit at the close of the plaintiff's case. CCP §581c. On nonsuit, see §§18.7-18.34.

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.119 2. Failure to challenge variance; waiver

A failure to challenge evidence at variance with the pleadings may result later in the trial in a waiver of counsel's objections to the moving party's amending the pleadings to conform to proof. Quezada v Hart (1977) 67 CA3d 754, 761, 136 CR 815, disapproved on other grounds in Holliday v Jones (1989) 215 CA3d 102, 112, 264 CR 448. On doctrine of substantial variance cured by trial, see 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §1214 (5th ed 2008).

A variance may be disregarded when the action has been fully and fairly tried on the merits as though the variance had not existed. See, e.g., Hayes v Richfield Oil Corp. (1952) 38 C2d 375, 382, 240 P2d 580 (variance not prejudicial when unpleaded theory of recovery fully litigated by parties).

© The Regents of the University of California

§18.120 3. Arguing against motion when made; grounds

Once a motion to amend the pleadings has been made, the opposing party may object on grounds such as the following:

- Good cause does not exist for granting leave to amend.

EXAMPLE 1: Hartman v Shell Oil Co. (1977) 68 CA3d 240, 251, 137 CR 244 (denial of motion to amend to conform to proof affirmed when evidence before jury did not support proposed affirmative defense).

EXAMPLE 2: Brautigam v Brooks (1964) 227 CA2d 547, 560, 38 CR 784 (leave to amend erroneous when amendment proposed a defense already withdrawn before jury selection).

- The moving party has not shown due diligence in making the motion.

EXAMPLE 1: Bedolla v Logan & Frazer (1975) 52 CA3d 118, 135, 125 CR 59 (amendment not sought until fourth day of trial).

EXAMPLE 2: Stockton v Ortiz (1975) 47 CA3d 183, 194, 120 CR 456 (plaintiff delayed without good cause in making motion to add new theory of liability).

- Granting the motion would unduly prejudice the opposing party in maintaining the action or defense on the merits.

EXAMPLE 1: Earp v Nobmann (1981) 122 CA3d 270, 286, 175 CR 767 (error to permit amendment alleging facts entirely outside cause of action), disapproved in part on other grounds in Silberg v Anderson (1990) 50 C3d 205, 219, 266 CR 638.

EXAMPLE 2: Richter v Adams (1937) 19 CA2d 572, 577, 66 P2d 226 (plaintiff prejudiced at close of trial by amended complaint setting forth defense not originally pleaded and introduced over plaintiff's objection).

- The statute of limitations has run and the relation-back doctrine does not apply.

EXAMPLE 1: Barrington v A. H. Robins Co. (1985) 39 C3d 146, 155, 216 CR 405 (amended complaint erroneously dismissed based on trial court's failure to apply relation-back rule to that complaint).

EXAMPLE 2: Dominguez v City of Alhambra (1981) 118 CA3d 237, 244, 173 CR 345 (untimely government tort claim).

- The amendment is based on evidence to which an objection was properly made at trial.

EXAMPLE: Cota v County of Los Angeles (1980) 105 CA3d 282, 293, 164 CR 323 (denial of motion at end of trial when court previously excluded evidence related to amendment).

- The amendment contradicts an admission or stipulation.

EXAMPLE: Roemer v Retail Credit Co. (1975) 44 CA3d 926, 939, 119 CR 82 (unjustifiably long delay and amendment in conflict with stipulated facts).

© The Regents of the University of California

I. Effect of granting motion

§18.121 1. Opposing party's request to produce evidence

When the motion is granted, it is often not necessary for the opposing party to request time to plead and produce further evidence. If the complaint has been amended, the original answer on file is generally adequate to state a defense against any new allegations. In this instance, either counsel can ask the court to rule that the new allegations be deemed denied.

If the amendment raises new issues that the opposing party has not heard, however, counsel for the opposing party should request an opportunity to respond and produce further evidence. See Reidy v Collins (1933) 134 CA 713, 723, 26 P2d 712 (judgment reversed; appellant had no opportunity to be heard on new issues raised by amended complaint to conform to proof filed after submission).

In a bench trial, the court may vacate submission to give the adverse party time to gather additional evidence to rebut allegations in a plaintiff's amendment to conform to proof. Mountain States Creamery Co. v Tagerman (1952) 39 C2d 355, 356, 246 P2d 21.

§18.122 2. Granting opposing party continuance and costs

If appropriate, counsel for the opposing party may request that the court grant a continuance to meet the contentions of the amended pleading, and require the moving party to pay any costs resulting from a postponement. See CCP §473; Oakes v McCarthy Co. (1968) 267 CA2d 231, 262, 73 CR 127 (1-week continuance and deposition properly ordered even though amendments merely elaborated on issues previously pleaded).

The court may order costs otherwise not recoverable. Williams v Myer (1907) 150 C 714, 718 (fees for jurors, witnesses, defendants' expenses of attending trial, attorneys); Fuller v Vista del Arroyo Hotel (1941) 42 CA2d 400, 402, 108 P2d 920 (defendant who raised new defense ordered to pay all expenses plaintiff had incurred to date). But see DeCesare v Lembert (1983) 144 CA3d 20, 23, 192 CR 354 (recovery of attorney fees inappropriate on motion for continuance).

§18.123 3. Abuse of discretion test on appeal

If timely and appropriate objections to a variance between the pleadings and proof have been made during the trial, the issues are preserved on appeal in the event of an adverse judgment. See Richter v Adams (1937) 19 CA2d 572, 577, 66 P2d 226 (judgment against plaintiff who repeatedly, yet unsuccessfully, objected to introduction of evidence at variance with defendants' pleadings; reversed). See also Union Bank v Wendland (1976) 54 CA3d 393, 400, 126 CR 549 (error to deny leave to amend pleadings; appellate court adopted amended theory and reversed on merits).

A ruling will not be reversed on appeal, however, unless abuse of discretion can be shown. Godfrey v Steinpress (1982) 128 CA3d 154, 174, 180 CR 95. See Trafton v Youngblood (1968) 69 C2d 17, 31, 69 CR 568 (clear abuse required for reversal); Bedolla v Logan & Frazer (1975) 52 CA3d 118, 135, 125 CR 59 (only manifest or gross abuse of discretion required for reversal). See also CCP §§473 (providing for amendments of pleadings generally), 576 (providing for amendments to pleadings or pretrial orders).

§19.1 I. SCOPE OF CHAPTER

This chapter covers the closing argument that is presented to the jury at the end of the trial. It is also good practice to give a closing argument at the end of a bench trial. At a bench trial, unlike a jury trial, a closing argument is permitted only at the judge's discretion. See §19.8. On planning the argument and its content, see §§19.9-19.22.

The latitude permitted during argument is discussed in §§19.23-19.33. For techniques that can be used in delivering the closing argument, see §§19.34-19.38. On arguing damages in personal injury trials, see §§19.39-19.50.

Procedures for objecting and protecting the record during the opposing party's closing argument are discussed in §§19.51-19.55. For a checklist that can be used for spotting impermissible arguments, see §19.56. A checklist of grounds for objections that can be made during opponent's closing argument appears in §19.57.

Because the judge usually gives jury instructions immediately following the argument, it is a good idea to refer to those instructions during closing argument. On jury instructions, see chap 20.

Most experienced trial attorneys also make a point of echoing the themes they presented to the jury during their opening statement and "delivering" on the promises they made at the beginning of trial. On opening statement, see chap 9.

II. GENERAL ISSUES

§19.2 A. Right to argue in jury trial; waiver

In California, a litigant has the right to make a closing argument in a jury trial. CCP §607(7); Shippy v Peninsula Rapid Transit Co. (1925) 197 C 290, 294, 240 P 785; Hodges v Severns (1962) 201 CA2d 99, 114, 20 CR 129. The discretion of the trial judge plays no part in whether closing arguments may be given to the jury. Shippy v Peninsula Rapid Transit Co., supra.

The trial court judge may, however, limit the number of attorneys who argue (if a party has more than one attorney) and determine the order of their appearance. In re Estate of Gird (1910) 157 C 534, 108 P 499; Potapoff v Mattes (1933) 130 CA 421, 425, 19 P2d 1016. See §§19.5-19.7. The judge may also set and enforce reasonable time limits on the attorneys' closing arguments. Eley v Curzon (1953) 121 CA2d 280, 263 P2d 86. See §19.13.

Each side has the right to waive closing argument. Kenny v Trust Oil Co. (1963) 215 CA2d 305, 307, 29 CR 909; Kling v Crown Fin. Corp. (1944) 63 CA2d 33, 35, 146 P2d 54; McCullough v Langer (1937) 23 CA2d 510, 523, 73 P2d 649. Because of its importance, however, closing argument should never be waived. See §19.9. Most trial attorneys believe that closing argument is essential to win the case or minimize losses.

NOTE: In a trial without a jury, counsel does not have a right to argue, and the court has discretion either to grant or to deny argument. Guardianship of Baby Boy M. (1977) 66 CA3d 254, 278, 135 CR 866; Oil Workers Int'l Union v Superior Court (1951) 103 CA2d 512, 581, 230 P2d 71. For further discussion, see §19.8. On bench trials generally, see chap 24.

B. Argument and rebuttal argument

§19.3 1. Plaintiff's counsel

Plaintiff's closing argument consists of two parts: the opening argument and the concluding (or rebuttal) argument after defendant's argument. The plaintiff's rebuttal argument is limited to matters already raised in the plaintiff's opening argument or the defendant's responding argument. The plaintiff has the burden of proof and the duty to present the whole case that the plaintiff relies on in the opening argument before the jury hears the defendant's responding argument. See Ravettino v San Diego (1945) 70 CA2d 37, 160 P2d 52.

It is improper for plaintiff's counsel to attempt to raise new issues in the plaintiff's closing argument that defense counsel has no opportunity to rebut. If defense counsel does not object to new issues raised during rebuttal, however, the point may not be raised for the first time on appeal. See Cain v State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1975) 47 CA3d 783, 800, 121 CR 200.

If the plaintiff deliberately presents a limited argument and postpones discussion of certain aspects of the case until rebuttal, the court could consider the opening argument not to have been presented in good faith.

EXAMPLE: If plaintiff's counsel does not discuss a specific amount of damages in the opening argument, the plaintiff may be precluded from discussing this subject during rebuttal. In Cortez v Macias (1980) 110 CA3d 640, 167 CR 905, the court found that it was error to permit plaintiff's counsel, over objection, to argue in rebuttal for the first time that a specific sum should be awarded as general damages.

Because most of the defendant's arguments can be anticipated well before the argument stage of trial, plaintiff's counsel should be prepared for rebuttal before hearing opposing counsel's argument. If taken by surprise, however, it is important to appear calm about any unexpected argument presented by the defense and address the jury on these points during rebuttal.

PRACTICE TIP: Present your strongest points during your opening argument. Consider visual aids to help the jury fully understand and remember the most important issues. See §19.12. It is risky to assume that defense counsel will raise points that you may want to address on rebuttal. Even when you are able to argue important points as part of your rebuttal, they may be viewed as an afterthought by a jury that has already been convinced by defense counsel's argument. You may also be prevented from presenting any rebuttal at all if the defendant waives closing argument. Write down key words during the defendant's closing argument to remind yourself of additional or unanticipated points you want to cover in rebuttal. Use your concluding argument to rebut any damaging points raised in defense counsel's argument and highlight evidence that supports the plaintiff's position regarding those points.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Check to see if the court will limit the time for argument. If the time is limited, plaintiff's attorney must carefully monitor the time so as not to use up the time that may be necessary for rebuttal.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.4 2. Defense Counsel

As defense counsel, your task is to raise as many doubts as possible about the plaintiff's case. Describe how the plaintiff has failed to meet the burden of proof by pointing out the weaknesses in the plaintiff's argument, the witnesses who are not entirely credible, and the evidence that leaves room for doubt. Use analogies and graphics to help illustrate your points. On using visual aids, see §19.12.

If the plaintiff's case is clearly unconvincing or incomplete, defense counsel could also consider waiving closing argument. The advantages to such a strategy are that plaintiff's counsel will not be able to present a rebuttal argument and the jury may conclude that the plaintiff's case was not worthy of comment. Most defense counsel believe, however, that a closing argument is essential to summarize the evidence and persuade the jury to return a verdict for the defense. On the right to argue and waiver, see §19.2.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: A tactic used successfully by defense counsel in preparing the closing argument was to review the opening statement of the plaintiff attorney and state forcefully how the jury was misled by plaintiff's counsel and the plaintiff.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/19 Closing Argument/§19.5 C. Order of argument

§19.5 C. Order of argument

In a two-party case, plaintiff's counsel usually presents closing argument first because the plaintiff has the burden of proof. CCP §607(7); McCullough v Langer (1937) 23 CA2d 510, 524, 73 P2d 649. After the defense argues, the plaintiff presents a rebuttal argument, which is limited to countering subject areas and arguments made by the defense. Plaintiff's counsel should present a complete argument on all issues, including damages, before the defense argument. If plaintiff's counsel does not cover damages and the defense does not mention damages in its closing, the plaintiff may not be permitted to discuss damages in rebuttal. See §19.3.

The defense may argue first when it has the burden of proof on an issue, e.g., when (1) the statute of limitations issue is tried first in bifurcated trials, (2) the defense admits all the facts of the plaintiff's case but relies on an affirmative defense, or (3) there is a substantial counterclaim. Coogan Fin. Corp. v Beatcher (1932) 120 CA 278, 7 P2d 695.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.6 1. Multiple plaintiffs or defendants

When multiple plaintiffs are represented by different counsel, each attorney may make a closing argument. If one attorney represents all the plaintiffs, there will be only one argument. CCP §607(7). Similarly, when there are multiple defendants, each counsel may have a separate argument. If all defendants are represented by one attorney, there will be only one defense argument. CCP §607(8).

The court has discretion to decide the order in which the arguments are presented. Some judges allow the arguments to proceed in the same order in which the parties presented evidence. Counsel may also request a particular order. Generally, the court will require that all the plaintiffs' attorneys present their arguments, followed by defense counsel's argument, followed by plaintiffs' counsel's rebuttal. Rebuttal is usually presented in the same order as the plaintiffs' opening argument.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.7 2. When more than one attorney represents a party

If more than one attorney represents a party, the number of attorneys allowed to argue is at the court's discretion. Potapoff v Mattes (1933) 130 CA 421, 426, 19 P2d 1016. Usually, only one attorney is allowed to argue for each side, but the court may allow one attorney to argue liability and another to argue damages. Or the court may allow one plaintiff's attorney to give the opening argument and another the rebuttal. See §19.3.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.8 D. Argument in bench trials

In a bench trial, counsel does not have a right to argue, and the court has discretion either to grant or to deny argument. Guardianship of Baby Boy M. (1977) 66 CA3d 254, 278, 135 CR 866; Oil Workers Int'l Union v Superior Court (1951) 103 CA2d 512, 581, 230 P2d 71. But see Gillette v Gillette (1960) 180 CA2d 777, 781, 4 CR 700, in which the court observed that a court's disallowance of argument in some cases might be error.

Because argument can be beneficial during bench trials, counsel should try to persuade the court to allow closing arguments. Argument before the court should be structured and presented somewhat differently than argument before a jury. In bench trials, attorneys are usually permitted more leeway in discussing the applicable law than in jury trials. For example, technical legal language may be used because judges, unlike most jurors, are schooled in legal terminology. Even when it is not necessary to define the meaning of terms, such as "preponderance of the evidence," or explain legal theories or defenses, such as "comparative fault," counsel should nonetheless carefully argue how these concepts apply to the facts in the case.

PRACTICE TIP: Make the issues clear to the judge by presenting the facts from your client's perspective and in an order that highlights your reasoning. To assist the judge in weighing the evidence, distinguish the most important evidence from less credible evidence and explain how certain facts relate to others. Persuade the judge in your argument by emphasizing how the law supports your contentions. Knowing how the judge has ruled in the past can also guide you in presenting your client's case and result in a more effective argument.

For further discussion of bench trials, see chap 24.

© The Regents of the University of California

III. PLANNING AND PREPARING ARGUMENT

§19.9 A. Importance of closing argument

Closing argument provides counsel with an opportunity to restate the primary issues of the trial, summarize the evidence from the client's perspective, and explain the law on which the jury's decision must be based. The ideal closing argument is simple, clear, and presented with confidence. On delivering closing argument in bench trials when the judge is the trier of fact, see §§19.8, 24.12. See also Mediterranean Constr. Co. v State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. (1998) 66 CA4th 257, 266, 77 CR2d 781 (summary judgment case, noting that authorities asserting no right to oral argument are "more stale than seasoned" and "without explanation or analysis").

At the beginning of closing argument, outline the major issues of the case and briefly explain the law as it relates to the events giving rise to the trial, including the burden of proof. Because the judge will instruct the jurors to base their verdict on the evidence presented during trial, explain that "evidence" refers to facts brought out in the witnesses' testimony and in the documents, records, exhibits, and objects shown to the jury during the trial.

Reconstructing the facts on which your case is based can have a tremendous impact on the jury, especially if you emphasize the significance of the events for those involved.

PRACTICE TIP 1: Use vivid language to help the jurors imagine your client's emotions during the events giving rise to the trial. Instead of blandly stating that your client lost the use of her legs in an accident, describe the events in story form: "Mary Hall drove to the park that sunny afternoon for a bicycle ride with her friends, hoping to experience the beauty of the outdoors. As Mary rode her rented bicycle down the slope in that serene and awe-inspiring place, the brakes failed and she plunged over a cliff. Her life changed forever when her head struck the branch of a tree. She lay there unconscious, broken, never to walk again."

PRACTICE TIP 2: Describe the essential points made by witnesses during examination and cross-examination. Remind jurors of the meaning and significance of the documentary and demonstrative evidence presented during the trial. Listing key facts on a blackboard or pad may be useful for emphasis. On using visual aids, see §19.12. Plaintiff's counsel should also explain the damages suffered by the client as a result of the events giving rise to the trial.

PRACTICE TIP 3: Only a little time is usually required to refute opposing counsel's position. It is better to concentrate on your side of the story in order to persuade the jury to adopt your client's view of the evidence.

Remind the jurors that, as the sole judges of the facts, they are responsible for weighing the evidence and the witnesses' credibility during their deliberations. Despite the expertise of the judge and counsel for both parties, the law requires a jury made up of a diverse group of citizens to decide the standard of behavior expected in a community. Closing argument is counsel's opportunity to persuade the jury that justice requires a verdict in the client's favor.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Closing argument is the single most valuable opportunity for the lawyer to communicate directly with the jury. Throw away the scholarly pages, look the jurors in the eye, and speak directly to them. Jurors have a limited attention span. Sincerity and clarity are far more important than a boring review of the evidentiary portion of the trial. This is the time for communication.

§19.10 B. Structuring argument

A strong closing argument can persuade jurors to argue for your side in the jury room during deliberations. A typical outline of a closing argument is shown below, with cross-references to discussion of each topic in this chapter. Because each case is different, some of these topics should be more fully developed than others.

- Statement of the case (see §19.14);
- Summary of the facts and issues (see §19.15);
- Burden of proof (see §19.16);
- The law (see §19.17);
- Evidentiary basis, including witness testimony, for liability or nonliability (see §19.19);
- Refutation of other side's contentions (see §19.17);
- Jury instructions (see §19.18);
- Damages (see §19.20);
- Verdict forms (see §19.21); and
- Final five minutes and request for verdict (see §19.22).

Most plaintiff's attorneys agree that liability must be won before closing argument and that the primary goal of the closing is to convince the jury to award damages. Nonetheless, liability must be discussed. Defense counsel usually concentrate on refuting liability and only secondarily argue damages. On approaching the subject of damages during argument from both the plaintiff's and defendant's viewpoint, see §§19.39-19.50.

§19.11 C. Deciding objectives

Depending on what has occurred during the trial, consider the following objectives when outlining your closing argument:

- Communicating the most favorable case for your client by (1) presenting the essentials of the case, (2) clarifying any misleading or irrelevant issues that have developed during trial, and (3) emphasizing the important items of evidence that support your client's position;
- Explaining the significance of any impeaching testimony;
- After explaining the law in easily understood language, pointing out its application and relation to the evidence;
- Subject to the court's approval, reviewing important jury instructions to be given or that were given, if the court instructed the jury before argument (see CCP §607 (court may alter order of proceedings)); and
- Reviewing the verdict forms (if the court permits).

For further discussion, see §§19.18 (jury instructions), 19.21 (verdict forms).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/19 Closing Argument/§19.12 D. Using visual aids

§19.12 D. Using visual aids

When planning your argument, carefully consider using visual aids. Visual aids can be created in many forms. Consider the intended purpose of each visual aid, the kind of evidence to be represented, and whether the jury can easily understand it. On relying on visual aids during argument, see §19.37. See Chu, Making the Most of Closing Argument—Don't Bore the Jury with Words, Remind Them with Pictures, Practical Litigator (Sept. 1998).

The court usually permits counsel to use a blackboard or large paper pad to list key points to be covered during closing argument. Trial lawyers use blackboards or pads to diagram an accident, calculate damages, or outline the chronology of events based on the testimony from different witnesses. When using a blackboard or pad, it is best to write down phrases that create visual images, because the jury will retain these the longest. Some lawyers write on the blackboard or pad as they speak; others prepare a list or other items ahead of time. One disadvantage to both methods is the ability of opposing counsel to comment on or modify the written entries you have made. On use of blackboards and pads during opening statement, see §9.12.

During closing argument, counsel can refer to and use documentary and demonstrative evidence that has already been received in evidence. Many trial judges also routinely permit counsel to use visual aids during argument (e.g., enlargements or transparencies) that have not been received in evidence if they illustrate matters directly in evidence.

PRACTICE TIP: Consult local court rules or policies concerning visual aids to be used during argument. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.74, which provides that graphic devices such as a chart, summary, or model must be prepared and shown to adversaries before argument. If the adversary requests, the device must remain available for reference and be marked for identification. Even in the absence of a local rule, check with the court clerk to see what equipment can most conveniently be used in the particular courtroom and whether the judge requires any special procedures before the visual aid can be presented to the jury during closing argument.

If enlargements, transparencies, or computer monitors are to be used, the underlying document or other evidence should be admitted during trial to prevent opposing party's objection, or counsel should seek prior court approval to show the item during argument. Projecting documents or diagrams onto a screen that the entire jury can see permits counsel to call the jurors' attention during argument to significant portions of the visual exhibit.

Counsel may also be permitted to illustrate and explain argument with charts, summaries, or models that were not received in evidence but depict evidence that has been admitted or represents reasonable inferences or conclusions from the evidence. Photographs and other pictorial exhibits can make a lasting impression in the minds of jurors.

EXAMPLE 1: In a breach of contract case, project essential portions of a contract or another critical document onto a screen, so that the jury can see the language in dispute while the attorney argues.

EXAMPLE 2: In a medical malpractice case, show medical charts and photographs of injuries.

EXAMPLE 3: In an asbestos case, enlarge the photograph of a pathology slide, showing an asbestos fiber imbedded in lung tissue.

For tactical reasons, counsel may not wish to reveal the contents of a visual aid to the jury before its use in argument. To avoid any objection, however, counsel should be sure to clear the use of visual aids not received in evidence with the court and opposing counsel before argument. If an objection is raised and sustained early enough, counsel may still have time to prepare other visual aids that will overcome any further objection. On the rules of admissibility for trial exhibits, see chap 13.

If the court sustains an opponent's objection to the use of an exhibit during argument, counsel's credibility could be damaged in the eyes of the jurors and the failed attempt to present the exhibit could lessen the impact of an otherwise effective closing argument. Similarly, illustrating closing argument with inadmissible items may be grounds for reversal on appeal. See Weisbart v Flohr (1968) 260 CA2d 281, 67 CR 114 (misconduct for attorney to use toys, which had not been admitted into evidence, to support closing argument). On objecting to improper use of visual aids during opponent's closing argument, see §19.55.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Visual aids during closing argument often assist jurors; however, they should either be aids the jury has seen before or something prepared by you before argument. If you take the time to write something new on the blackboard or on an overhead, you will lose eye contact with your "audience" and you may lose the attention of some of the jurors.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.13 E. Managing time limits

The trial court has discretion to set the amount of time allocated to argument. Bates v Newman (1953) 121 CA2d 800, 809, 264 P2d 197; Bell v Kelly (1925) 73 CA 189, 238 P 719. Before any argument, the trial judge will usually discuss with counsel the amount of time thought necessary for argument.

The amount of time that plaintiff's counsel should allocate to opening and rebuttal argument depends on the content and complexity of the individual case. In general, however, opening argument should take at least two-thirds of the time allowed for both the opening and rebuttal. On argument and rebuttal argument, see §19.3.

PRACTICE TIP: Some attorneys try to pressure other counsel into agreeing to limit the length of closing argument. It is almost never a good idea to stipulate to an abbreviated time for argument. The longer counsel has to argue (within reasonable limits), the more opportunity there is to sway the jury. To maintain credibility and the jury's attention, however, use the time for argument effectively. The length of argument cannot make up for a lack of clarity, cohesion, or thoroughness. When planning your closing argument, keep in mind any time allotment set by the court and try to strike a balance between covering all important points and maintaining the jury's interest. Many jurors have been conditioned by television to have short attention spans and to expect frequent breaks.

Some judges believe that argument should be limited or waived because of court time constraints. Counsel should not consent to this approach and, if necessary, put objections on the record. On the right to argue, see §9.2. On making trial objections and protecting the record, see chap 15.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/19 Closing Argument/ IV. CONTENT OF CLOSING ARGUMENT/§19.14 A. Statement of case

IV. CONTENT OF CLOSING ARGUMENT

§19.14 A. Statement of case

Counsel's statement of the case during closing argument should be a concise factual statement of what the evidence proves. Many attorneys think of this statement as the case theme. See §9.26.

EXAMPLE 1: Plaintiff's counsel could say: "Mary Hall rode her rented bicycle down the hill without any warning that the brakes did not work. She lost the use of her legs and will remain on a breathing machine for the rest of her life after an accident that Parker Corporation could have prevented."

EXAMPLE 2: Defense counsel could say: "Sometimes, accidents are the fault of the person who was hurt. On a dare from her friend, the plaintiff careened down a steep mountain full of trees and rocks to see whether she could beat the bus to the parking lot. She never rode the safe, marked pathways that were developed over years of effort by my client."

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.15 B. Summary of facts and issues

In the summary of facts and issues during closing argument, outline the most important aspects of the case. Recount only the critical facts or issues. Plaintiff's counsel should establish five or six salient points concerning the defendant's factual liability. Defense counsel should undermine these points by emphasizing facts that show why the defendant is not at fault.

Both sides should emphasize evidence supporting their client's viewpoint. Anticipate the arguments that opposing counsel is likely to make during closing argument. Discuss problem areas in a light that is favorable to your client or explain why they do not undermine your position.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.16 C. Burden of proof; preponderance of evidence

Carefully explain to the jury the meaning and significance of "burden of proof" and "preponderance of the evidence." Both concepts must be clearly understood for the jury to carry out its duty as trier of fact. The jurors cannot weigh the evidence properly without understanding the standard that applies to all facts that must be decided.

Evidence Code §115 defines "burden of proof" as a party's obligation to establish, through evidence, a requisite degree of belief about a fact in the jurors' or judge's mind. Unless otherwise provided by law, the minimum degree of proof required to satisfy the burden of proof in a civil case is by a preponderance of the evidence. Evid C §§115, 500. See CACI 200 (more likely to be true than not true). In contrast, the burden of proof for punitive damages is "clear and convincing" evidence. See CACI 3940, 3947.

Proof by a preponderance of the evidence requires that a party convince the jurors or judge that a fact's existence is more probable than not. Evid C §500. Unless otherwise provided by law, a party has the burden of proof on the existence or nonexistence of each material fact essential to the party's claim or defense. Evidence introduced by the opposing party may help satisfy a party's burden of proof. See CACI 200. See also Perrotti v Sampson (1958) 163 CA2d 280, 282, 329 P2d 310. On burden of producing evidence, see Evid C §§110, 550.

If no evidence is presented on an issue, the jury must find against the party who had the burden of proof on that issue. For a jury instruction on burden of proof, see CACI 200. Similarly, if the evidence is evenly balanced on a material issue, the jury must find against the party who had the burden of proof on that issue. See CACI 200.

Plaintiff's perspective: Explain to the jury that "preponderance of the evidence" means "the party who is required to prove something need prove only that it is more likely to be true than not true." See CACI 200. You must convince the jury that the preponderance of evidence clearly shows that a verdict should be entered in the plaintiff's favor. Recount important testimony to illustrate why the jury should reach such a verdict.

Defendant's perspective: The requirement of the burden of proof demands that the plaintiff prove that the defendant is likely to be liable. Evid C §500. Emphasize that the defendant cannot be held liable if the evidence is evenly balanced. See CACI 200.

Further research: On the burden of proof and the burden of producing evidence generally, see Jefferson's California Evidence Benchbook, chap 47 (4th ed CJA-CEB 2009); 1 Witkin, California Evidence, Burden of Proof and Presumptions §§67-98 (4th ed 2000).

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: The burden of proof is often discussed by the court, not counsel. The court may give an initial explanation of the concept of burden of proof, and later will address it more fully. Therefore, counsel often will need to touch on it only when they feel that it is necessary.

© The Regents of the University of California

D. The law

§19.17 1. Parties' rights and duties

Plaintiff's perspective: Focus on the idea of the plaintiff's right to pursue activities or work without injury. Then systematically show how this right was violated. Make the jury understand how important it is to protect a person's right to safely live and work from infringement by another.

Defendant's perspective: The defense position in a personal injury case rests on proof that the defendant was not negligent or that any negligence did not harm the plaintiff. Emphasize to the jury that for the plaintiff to recover, the injury must be clearly linked to the defendant's negligence and that, in this case, it is not. When comparative negligence is an issue, argue that any recovery for the plaintiff must be limited by the extent of plaintiff's own negligence.

§19.18 2. Jury instructions

The California Civil Jury Instructions (CACI) "approved by the Judicial Council are the official instructions for use in the state of California," and their use "is strongly encouraged." Cal Rules of Ct 2.1050(e). Instructions from the Book of Approved Jury Instructions (9th ed 2002) (BAJI) are no longer "approved." On jury instructions, generally, see chap 20.

Although counsel has a right to discuss the law and apply it to the facts of the case, instructing the jury is the court's duty. Neumann v Bishop (1976) 59 CA3d 451, 479, 130 CR 786; Gotcher v Metcalf (1970) 6 CA3d 96, 100, 85 CR 566.

If the judge instructs the jury before argument, counsel can refer to the instructions during the argument. See CCP §607 (statutory order of proof is to charge jury after closing argument). If the jurors will be instructed after argument, the court may allow counsel to tell them how the judge will instruct them. For further discussion, see §19.30.

PRACTICE TIP: Be sure to avoid any conflicts with the judge during argument. Although you can explain the law and bearing of the testimony, charging the jury on the law is the judge's responsibility. Because many judges jealously guard this prerogative, even correct statements of the law may annoy them. If you have any doubts about the judge's predilections, raise this issue during the chambers conference when the jury instructions are settled. Explain the approach you would like to take and obtain the judge's approval to refer to the jury instructions and discuss the law during your argument.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Many judges take a dim view of counsel reading instructions to the jury. Counsel can make far better use of the limited attention span of the jurors by addressing the factual aspects of the case and leaving the reading of the instructions to the court. Some courts provide the jurors with photocopies of the instructions, which they can read along with the judge.

Whether the jury will get a copy of the written instructions when they retire for deliberation is no longer solely within the court's discretion. See CCP §612.5. When the jury retires to deliberate, the court must advise the jury of the availability of written jury instructions. The court has the discretion to provide the jury with a copy. If the jury requests it, the court must supply a copy of the written instructions. CCP §612.5.

If you want the jury to have a copy of the instructions, request that a copy be given to the jury. To reduce the possibility of prejudice or confusion, the attorney requesting that written instructions be given to the jury should prepare "clean" copies of the applicable instructions. The instructions should omit any reference to the party requesting them and any brackets, blank spaces, footnotes, or case citations. On jury instructions generally, see chap 20.

NOTE: If instructions are sent into the jury room, some trial attorneys believe that a separate set of instructions should be made for each juror. This will minimize the chance that a dominant juror might misquote or misconstrue an instruction.

© The Regents of the University of California

E. Witness testimony and key evidence

§19.19 1. Problem witnesses

Although a witness may have been involved in activities of an unlawful or a generally disapproved nature, during argument counsel can explain to the jury that the testimony is reliable regardless of how the witness acted in the past. Explain that the witness is in court to provide evidence for the trial and that past activity is not an issue before the court. Remind the jury of any facts brought out during examination or cross-examination that tend to prove the witness's reliability.

On impeaching the credibility of witnesses, see §§11.114-11.124.

§19.20 2. Damages

The discussion of damages during closing argument can have a significant impact on the outcome of the case. Plaintiff's counsel should emphasize the consequences of the defendant's liability on the plaintiff, arguing that a substantial award of damages will reflect the seriousness of the defendant's wrongful act. The defense should try to mitigate the emotional effect of the plaintiff's discussion of damages on the jury by arguing that the defendant is not responsible for the plaintiff's injuries.

Plaintiff's counsel may quote a lump sum or per diem figure for damages or suggest another method of calculating damages. Explain that the law intends the jury's verdict to deter not only the defendant but all others from similar conduct in the future. Impress on the jury that its verdict will benefit and protect all citizens. Defense counsel should argue that society cannot afford to compensate individuals for every accident that happens, especially when the individuals themselves are at fault, or that it is unjust to require a defendant to pay for damages caused by another.

WARNING: Be careful not to make punitive damage arguments in the compensatory damage phase of a case. After showing how the defendant's negligent or reckless conduct led to the plaintiff's injuries, plaintiff's counsel should argue for a damages award that merely compensates the client for those injuries. On elements and procedures required before a prima facie case of malice, oppression, or fraud can be made and punitive damages can be argued, see CC §§3294-3295.

Even when punitive damages are at issue, plaintiff's counsel should explain how they are reasonably related to the injury or to the compensatory damages award. Gagnon v Continental Cas. Co. (1989) 211 CA3d 1598, 1603, 260 CR 305. See, e.g., Johnson v Ford Motor Co. (2005) 35 C4th 1191, 29 CR3d 401 ($10 million punitive damages reduced to $53,000 level when compensatory damages were about $18,000); Simon v San Paolo U.S. Holding Co. (2005) 35 C4th 1159, 29 CR3d 379 (punitive damages of $1.7 million reduced to $50,000 when compensatory damages were $5000); Century Sur. Co. v Polisso (2006) 139 CA4th 922, 966, 43 CR3d 468 ($2 million punitive damages award was reasonably related to $622,911 in compensatory tort damages). See also State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v Campbell (2003) 538 US 408, 155 L Ed 2d 585, 123 S Ct 1513 (three factors for determining whether punitive damage award is "grossly excessive" in relation to interests of "punishing unlawful conduct and deterring its repetition"); Roby v McKesson Corp. (2009) 47 C4th 686, 101 CR3d 773 (applying State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. factors and concluding that 1:1 ratio between punitive and compensatory damages was required).

Defense counsel should emphasize that a higher burden of proof (i.e., clear and convincing evidence) must be met before punitive damages may be awarded and argue that the defendant's conduct was not "vile" or "despicable." See CACI 3940, 3947. It is also a good idea to review the jury instruction on punitive damages carefully with the jury to show how the facts do not support a finding of "malice," "oppression," "despicable conduct," or "fraud."

A punitive damage award based in part on a jury's desire to punish a defendant for harming persons not before the court (i.e., nonparties) amounts to a taking of "property" from the defendant without due process. Philip Morris USA v Williams (2007) 549 US 346, 166 L Ed 2d 940, 127 S Ct 1057. See also Holdgrafer v Unocal Corp. (2008) 160 CA4th 907, 934, 73 CR3d 216 (admittance of unconstitutional evidence of similar oil spills required new trial for punitive damages).

NOTE: If the defendant elects to bifurcate the trial, the discussion of damages may be affected. See §6.99.

On arguing damages in personal injury trials, see §§19.39-19.50.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.21 F. Verdict form

In most cases, the jury returns a general verdict finding for one side or the other. See CCP §624. The court can also ask the jury to make special findings of fact in response to interrogatories designed to test the general verdict. See §22.5. Alternatively, the court may direct the jury to reach a "special" verdict on the factual issues of the trial, while it draws the legal conclusions and reaches a decision. CCP §625). On the tactical considerations involved in deciding which verdict form to request the court to use, see §§22.15-22.17.

When the jury will return special findings of fact or a special verdict, both counsel should discuss the verdict form carefully with the jury during closing argument. It is essential for the jury to understand the questions being asked. If a special finding of fact is inconsistent with a general verdict, the former controls the latter, and the court must give judgment accordingly. CCP §625. See §22.25. See sample verdict forms in §§22.36-22.37, 22.39, 22.41.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.22 G. Conclusion: Final five minutes

The last few minutes are the most critical part of your entire closing argument. Argument during the final 5 minutes requires brevity, conciseness, and specific emphasis on all key points. Raising the emotional pitch at this time may inspire the jury to hand down a verdict in favor of your client.

Whether you are arguing for the plaintiff or defendant, the conclusion of your closing argument should impress the jurors with the significance of their responsibility. They should leave the courtroom for their deliberations with the conviction that your client's case deserves serious deliberation and that a verdict for your side will resolve the dispute fairly.

© The Regents of the University of California

V. LATITUDE PERMITTED DURING ARGUMENT

§19.23 A. Comment on evidence; inferences

Counsel has wide latitude during argument to discuss all facets of the case. Tischoff v Wolfchief (1971) 16 CA3d 703, 94 CR 299; Risley v Lenwell (1954) 129 CA2d 608, 659, 277 P2d 897. Counsel may argue every material issue in the case on which evidence has been introduced. King v Kaplan (1949) 94 CA2d 697, 699, 211 P2d 578. All reasonable inferences drawn from the evidence may be brought to the jury's attention. Beagle v Vasold (1966) 65 C2d 166, 176, 53 CR 129.

Any legal theory that the evidence will reasonably support can be presented. West v Johnson & Johnson Prods., Inc. (1985) 174 CA3d 831, 220 CR 437; Fleming v Flick (1934) 140 CA 14, 35 P2d 210. Counsel can also express opinions based on fair deductions or reasonable inferences from the evidence. Rogers v Foppiano (1937) 23 CA2d 87, 94, 72 P2d 239.

It may be difficult to persuade the jury of an argument unless it is based on testimony and evidence clearly established during trial. Do not overreach or stretch the facts to advance an argument.

EXAMPLE: It is better for counsel to say, "The evidence shows, in my opinion, that plaintiff suffered serious injuries" than to say, "In my opinion, plaintiff suffered serious injuries."

No rule requires that counsel be absolutely logical in argument. Miller v Pacific Constructors, Inc. (1945) 68 CA2d 529, 551, 157 P2d 57. However, counsel may not misstate the evidence or invite the jury to speculate on unsupported inferences. Malkasian v Irwin (1964) 61 C2d 738, 745, 40 CR 78; Brokopp v Ford Motor Co. (1977) 71 CA3d 841, 139 CR 888. Even using brief hypothetical examples during closing argument that are not based on the evidence, but not purporting to rely on extra-judicial evidence, is not misconduct. People v Davis (1995) 10 C4th 463, 538, 41 CR2d 826. If evidence has been admitted for a limited purpose, however, counsel may not argue inferences beyond the scope of the limited purpose. Granville v Parsons (1968) 259 CA2d 298, 303, 66 CR 149.

§19.24 1. Credibility of witnesses

Counsel has the right to comment on the credibility of witnesses. Baker v Market St. Ry. (1932) 123 CA 688, 694, 11 P2d 912. Counsel may also draw any inference concerning a witness's credibility of which the evidence is reasonably susceptible. McCullough v Langer (1937) 23 CA2d 510, 521, 73 P2d 649.

Counsel may fairly argue from the evidence that a witness has either misstated the facts or lied under oath. Rogers v Foppiano (1937) 23 CA2d 87, 94, 72 P2d 239. But deliberate unwarranted attacks on a witness's credibility or motives are unjustifiable.

EXAMPLE: In Price v Giles (1987) 196 CA3d 1469, 242 CR 559, the defense attorney claimed during closing argument that his client had committed perjury and engaged in collusion with the plaintiff. Although the defendant prevailed in the action, the court found that this statement constituted misconduct and deprived the plaintiff of a fair trial.

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Opposing party's failure to produce witnesses or other evidence

§19.25 a. When comments are allowed

Some trial conditions properly allow counsel to discuss opposing counsel's avoidance of calling certain witnesses or presenting certain evidence. When a party offers weaker or less satisfactory evidence than is within the party's power to produce, it is permissible for that evidence to be viewed with mistrust. Evid C §412. See CACI 203. Similarly, in determining what inferences to draw from the evidence or facts against a party, the trier of fact may consider the party's (1) failure to explain or to deny by testimony the evidence or facts against the party or (2) willful suppression of evidence relating to such evidence or facts. Evid C §413. See CACI 205, 214.

The opposing party's failure to produce rebuttal evidence may also allow counsel to call this to the attention of the jury. If evidence tends to prove a material fact against a party, it would be reasonable to try to produce contradictory evidence in order to disprove it. Otherwise, it may be inferred that the evidence was prejudicial to counsel's contentions. Evid C §§412-413. See CACI 107, 203-205, 213-214.

EXAMPLE 1: In Neumann v Bishop (1976) 59 CA3d 451, 480, 130 CR 786, a personal injury action, the court held that plaintiff's counsel had properly commented during argument when he pointed out defense counsel's failure to produce evidence to rebut (1) testimony offered by the plaintiff showing that she did not violate the basic speed law and (2) evidence showing a computation of her loss of earnings.

EXAMPLE 2: In King v Karpe (1959) 170 CA2d 344, 338 P2d 979, it was not error for the court to allow plaintiff's counsel to comment on the defendant's failure to produce a former employee. The employee had taken notes dictated by a veterinarian. Later, these notes were recopied for the sake of legibility, but discrepancies appeared that were the basis of the conflict in the veterinarian's testimony.

EXAMPLE 3: In Schmidt v Union Oil Co. (1915) 27 CA 366, 149 P 1014, the court found that it was within the legitimate range of argument for plaintiff's counsel to comment on the failure of the defendant to produce two employees and one former employee who signed the test report of oil that the defendant introduced into evidence.

When the record warrants, counsel may comment on the fact that the opposing party purposely withheld evidence. See Evid C §413. Compare Freitas v Peerless Stages, Inc. (1952) 108 CA2d 749, 239 P2d 671 (plaintiff's insinuation that defendant's bus company had willfully withheld evidence by not producing a passenger whose name and address the bus driver had obtained at the time of the accident was not error), with Ferrate v Key Sys. Transit Lines (1958) 165 CA2d 391, 331 P2d 991 (distinguishing that case from Freitas, Ferrate court found no evidence of willful suppression, because no evidence was presented that would allow inference to be drawn that bus driver knew names of any witnesses).

Under Evid C §413, failure to call a witness does not necessarily constitute a willful suppression of evidence. See Neumann v Bishop (1976) 59 CA3d 451, 480, 130 CR 786; Davis v Franson (1956) 141 CA2d 263, 270, 296 P2d 600. In general, a party has no duty to call any particular witness to testify unless special circumstances are shown. Neumann v Bishop, supra. Counsel must exercise discrimination in selecting witnesses. Assuming good faith and honesty, an attorney may disbelieve a potential witness or think that the witness is "inaccurate or prejudiced or otherwise disqualified to testify." Davis v Franson, supra. When it is within a party's power to call a witness to disprove or elucidate facts, however, failure to do so may give rise to an inference that the testimony would be prejudicial. See Evid C §§412-413; Keena v United R.Rs. (1925) 197 C 148, 157, 239 P 1061.

b. When comments are prohibited

§19.26 (1) Witnesses available to both sides

Comment during argument on the opposing party's failure to call a witness is improper when the witness is available to both sides. Smith v Covell (1980) 100 CA3d 947, 161 CR 377; Patton v Royal Indus., Inc. (1968) 263 CA2d 760, 768, 70 CR 44. For example, because the following witnesses were available by subpoena, the courts have held that they were equally available to both sides:

- The plaintiff's treating physicians (see Smith v Covell (1980) 100 CA3d 947, 956, 161 CR 377);
- A witness to an accident (see Davis v Franson (1956) 141 CA2d 263, 270, 296 P2d 600); and
- An officer who investigated an accident but did not witness it (see Provencio v Merrick (1970) 5 CA3d 39, 42, 84 CR 882).

Similarly, when a witness is equally available to both the plaintiff and defendant, no inference may be drawn against either because the other party calls the witness. Gibson v Kennedy Extension Gold Mining Co. (1916) 172 C 294, 305, 156 P 56. See Gillett v Gillett (1959) 168 CA2d 102, 108, 335 P2d 736.

An employee of a party, however, is not considered to be equally available to both sides. When the record warrants, comment on the opposing party's failure to produce such a witness is proper. See King v Karpe (1959) 170 CA2d 344, 338 P2d 979; Schmidt v Union Oil Co. (1915) 27 CA 366, 373, 149 P 1014. A different rule applies to former employees. See Fleming v Safeco Ins. Co. (1984) 160 CA3d 31, 42, 206 CR 313 (error for plaintiff to imply that defendant could have produced nonresident former employee who was equally available to both parties; however, error waived because the defendant did not object to the plaintiff's argument).

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.27 (2) Exercise of privilege

Commenting on a witness's exercise of the privilege not to testify or to disclose evidence is prohibited. Counsel may comment on the evidence or on a party's failure to explain or deny evidence but not on the exercise of the privilege itself. Evid C §913(a). Unless the comment is prejudicial and the opposing party objects, however, the error will be waived.

EXAMPLE 1: In People v Ford (1988) 45 C3d 431, 247 CR 121, a brief and mild reference to a defendant's failure to testify, unaccompanied by any suggestion that an inference of guilt should be drawn, was held to be harmless error.

EXAMPLE 2: In People v Bittaker (1989) 48 C3d 1046, 1104, 259 CR 630, counsel's comment that the opponent could have called a witness, when that witness's testimony was privileged, was improper. It did not constitute reversible error, however, because there was no objection.

No negative presumption arises because a privilege is exercised, nor may the jury draw any inference from its exercise on the witness's credibility or any other matter at issue in the case. See Evid C §913(a). At the request of a party who may be adversely affected because a jury may draw an unfavorable inference from the exercise of a privilege, the court must instruct the jury as provided in Evid C §913(b). See CACI 215 (exercise of a communication privilege), 216 (exercise of a witness's right not to testify). See also BAJI 2.27 (no unfavorable inference from exercise of a privilege).

§19.28 3. Evidence admitted for limited purpose

When evidence has been admitted for a limited purpose, it is improper "to argue inferences for which the evidence is inadmissible." People v Love (1961) 56 C2d 720, 730, 16 CR 777, disapproved on other grounds in People v Morse (1964) 60 C2d 631, 36 CR 201.

EXAMPLE: When evidence of settlement and dismissal is admitted during cross-examination for the limited purpose of showing prejudice, defense attorneys can cause reversible error when they argue that evidence for the improper purpose of establishing a dismissed witness's liability. Shepherd v Walley (1972) 28 CA3d 1079, 1083, 105 CR 387; Granville v Parsons (1968) 259 CA2d 298, 66 CR 149. The court may conduct a hearing outside the presence of the jury under Evid C §§402-403 to determine whether to permit evidence of dismissal and settlement for the limited purpose of impeachment. Granville v Parsons, supra. On limited admissibility of evidence, see §§15.61-15.64.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.29 4. Reading evidence taken at former trial or hearing

If testimony from a former trial has not been entered into evidence, counsel cannot read from the transcript. Shaff v Baldwin (1951) 107 CA2d 81, 86, 236 P2d 634. There is a hearsay exception, however, for former testimony given in a former trial or a hearing of the same action. See Evid C §§1290(a), 1291.

Reading portions of depositions taken in the same case during closing argument, which have not been read into evidence, is also improper. Shaff v Baldwin, supra.

Counsel may read any part of the testimony of the current case, however. For example, it is permissible for counsel to read a transcript of the testimony of a key witness during closing argument. See People v Coontz (1953) 119 CA2d 276, 282, 259 P2d 694. On techniques for presenting key portions of the trial transcript to the jury, see §19.38.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.30 B. Discussing the law and jury instructions

Counsel has a right to discuss the pertinent law and its application to the facts of the case as long as it does not differ from the jury instructions to be given by the judge. Neumann v Bishop (1976) 59 CA3d 451, 479, 130 CR 786; Gotcher v Metcalf (1970) 6 CA3d 96, 100, 85 CR 566.

It is reversible error for the court to refuse to allow counsel to exercise this right. Beaird v Bryan (1966) 244 CA2d 836, 53 CR 428. However, the court can exercise reasonable control over discussion of legal principles. Hodges v Severns (1962) 201 CA2d 99, 114, 20 CR 129 (judge may properly insist that counsel not tell jury how judge will instruct them in the law).

The court has the discretion to permit counsel to read from the jury instructions during argument. People v Calpito (1970) 9 CA3d 212, 222, 88 CR 64. Generally, appellate courts look with disfavor at counsel's reading jury instructions. Their view is based on the fact that instructing the jury is the judge's prerogative. See Regus v Gladstone Holmes, Inc. (1962) 207 CA2d 872, 878, 25 CR 25; People v Conley (1955) 134 CA2d 580, 285 P2d 693. However, counsel may obtain the court's permission to read jury instructions, or request that the court provide a written copy of the instructions to the jury during deliberations. See §19.18.

Reading from statutes follows similar rules. De Armas v Dickerman (1952) 108 CA2d 548, 553, 239 P2d 65 (court permitted counsel to read to jury excerpts from Housing and Rent Act of 1947). See also Bohme v Southern Pac. Co. (1970) 8 CA3d 291, 87 CR 286, disapproved on other grounds in Lund v San Joaquin Valley R.R. (2003) 31 C4th 1, 11, 1 CR3d 412.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.31 C. Referring to matters of common knowledge

Reference may be made during argument to matters of common knowledge that are not in evidence, e.g., historical facts or well-known events. People v Love (1961) 56 C2d 720, 730, 16 CR 777, disapproved on other grounds in People v Morse (1964) 60 C2d 631, 36 CR 201; People v Mendoza (1974) 37 CA3d 717, 725, 112 CR 565.

Alternatively, counsel who foresees problems and wishes to avoid opposing counsel's interrupting closing argument with objections should request the court to take judicial notice of universally known or indisputable facts under Evid C §§451-452. On procedures for requesting judicial notice, see chap 14.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.32 D. Reading from books and newspapers

There are three conflicting lines of authority on whether counsel can read to jurors from books, newspapers, poems, and the like about matters of common knowledge during closing argument. One line of cases, allowing this view, is typified by People v Woodson (1964) 231 CA2d 10, 15, 41 CR 487. In Woodson, the appellate court decided that the trial court should have permitted counsel to read a newspaper article about a mistakenly convicted defendant. Counsel intended this article to illustrate his argument that convictions based on mistaken identity are not unusual.

The second line of cases, rejecting this view and holding that it is generally improper during argument for counsel to read from books or newspapers that have not been admitted into evidence, is typified by People v Mendoza (1974) 37 CA3d 717, 725, 112 CR 565 (court prohibited counsel from reading newspaper clippings about unrelated specific crimes). See People v Palmer (1984) 154 CA3d 79, 203 CR 474 (counsel prohibited from reading from newspaper articles about specific unrelated crimes). See also People v Polite (1965) 236 CA2d 85, 92, 45 CR 845. These decisions reflect the fear that jurors may have difficulty distinguishing between expert opinions in evidence (which are subject to cross-examination) and the opinions of authors that only counsel has read.

The third line of cases takes the position that the trial court has discretion to decide whether to permit counsel to read from a newspaper or magazine not in evidence. If objection is raised on the ground that the article contains improper material, the court should ask counsel to indicate on the record (out of the jurors' hearing) which portions counsel intends to read. In determining whether to permit the material to be read, the court considers the following factors:

- Its relation to matters of common knowledge;
- Its relevance to the case; and
- The likelihood that the material will tend to confuse the jury.

People v West (1983) 139 CA3d 606, 610, 189 CR 36. See People v Travis (1954) 129 CA2d 29, 37, 276 P2d 193 (error for court to prohibit counsel from reading from book, magazine, or newspaper solely on ground that it has not been received in evidence).

Under the discretionary view, counsel may read the writings of philosophers, patriots, statesmen, and judges who have formulated thoughts or sentiments better than counsel could. See Ballou v Master Props. No. 6 (1987) 189 CA3d 65, 234 CR 264 (biblical references made by plaintiff's counsel during closing argument did not improperly appeal to jury's passions and did not require reversal). See also People v Guzman (1975) 47 CA3d 380, 392, 121 CR 69.

PRACTICE TIP: If reading from material not in evidence during closing argument seems to be a valuable and persuasive technique for your case, request judicial notice of the matter under Evid C §§451-452 beforehand. This will enable you to confront objections when there is still time to thoroughly support your view, and you will avoid having to deal hastily with opposing counsel's objections during the argument itself. On procedures for requesting judicial notice, see chap 14.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.33 E. Referring to pleadings

Counsel may refer to the pleadings on file in the case during closing argument. When the content of a pleading has been received in evidence during trial, as either an admission or for impeachment, counsel may discuss it during argument. Broffman v Newman (1989) 213 CA3d 252, 261 CR 532. On judicial admissions, see chap 14.

Counsel, however, cannot read from dismissed causes of action of a complaint. See Cahill Bros. v Clementina Co. (1962) 208 CA2d 367, 383, 25 CR 301 (trial court committed error in permitting pleading to be read, because no foundation for admissibility of dismissed cause of action had been laid during trial).

VI. TECHNIQUES FOR DELIVERING ARGUMENT

§19.34 A. Demeanor and language

To be persuasive, closing argument should be based on the evidence, the law, and sound logical reasoning. It should reveal the strength of the client's case and any weakness in the adversary's case. To reinforce jurors' positive feelings, many trial lawyers refer to their own client by name and the opposing party as "plaintiff" or "defendant." Most experienced trial lawyers use notes sparingly because shuffling paper and constantly looking down at notes interfere with the attorney's ability to communicate effectively with the jury.

Counsel should use language that the jurors can easily understand. When speaking, avoid phrases such as "plaintiff's theory" or "defendant's contention." Instead, counsel should simply say, "We will take a few minutes to explain the plaintiff's position" or "the defendant's conduct." Emotional table-pounding and shouting should be avoided because such behavior appears to be immature and may irritate the jurors. Counsel, however, should use voice and body movements to emphasize important points.

Everything counsel does and says during closing argument should be designed to persuade the jury. Use the principles of "primacy" and "recency" when timing the presentation of major points:

- The principle of primacy maintains that listeners will tend to believe most of what they hear first.
- The principle of recency maintains that listeners will tend to remember longest what they hear last.

Following these principles, counsel should begin and end the closing argument with the strongest arguments and weave specific issues into the body of the argument for maximum effect. Focus on key issues by selecting meaningful, vivid, and persuasive words to describe your client's view of the case and to encourage the jury to reach a favorable verdict during deliberations.

§19.35 B. Dealing with inattentive jurors

Occasionally a juror will drift off to sleep during argument. The arguing attorney should not let the juror know that he or she has been observed. Instead, try to regain the juror's attention through tone of voice and body movement. For example, counsel might walk over to the jury box, raise his or her voice, use hand gestures, or refer to an exhibit by tapping on it with a pointer.

If this fails, counsel may ask to approach the bench and request a brief recess to speak to the judge in chambers about the problem. Raising objections to this type of juror misconduct at the first logical break in counsel's argument should be considered timely enough for the purpose of avoiding waiver and preserving the issue for appeal.

The court reporter should be present during the chambers discussion, so that counsel can object to the juror's misconduct on the record. Counsel might request that the judge tell the juror that the drowsiness has been observed and remind the juror of the duty to devote full attention to the trial. Some attorneys hesitate to make this request, however, for fear of upsetting or offending the juror. Instead of requesting that the juror be admonished, counsel might request that the juror be replaced by an alternate juror, if one is available. This option is appropriate when the juror's misconduct is particularly egregious.

If the problem seems serious enough, and no alternate juror is available, consider moving for a mistrial. On procedure and grounds for moving for mistrial, see §§18.82-18.102.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.36 C. Appealing to jury "leaders"

Starting with voir dire and continuing throughout the trial, try to identify the jury leaders who will most likely influence the deliberations of other members of the jury. After you identify them, consider what their motivation and interests might be and direct portions of the closing argument to them.

Observe the jury leaders' facial expressions and body language. Are they leaning forward, nodding approval, or smiling? These actions tend to show receptivity or agreement with the points being made. If they look puzzled, confused, or dazed, slow down and try to explain matters more simply. Use easy to understand analogies and examples, which may appeal to those you have identified as the jury leaders, and focus on persuading them to see a few key issues in the case from your client's point of view.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.37 D. Relying on visual aids

Psychological studies show that most people remember only a small percentage of what they hear. Their recollection increases, however, of what they both hear and see. Because many people are poor listeners, effective visual aids can also help counsel maintain the jurors' attention and persuade them of counsel's argument.

PRACTICE TIP: Use visual aids during your argument to help jurors understand and remember important points. Explain a point carefully, then show it visually. Check local rules and the judge's customary practice concerning use of visual aids during closing argument.

On planning and developing visual aids for your closing argument, see §19.12. On objecting to the improper use of visual aids in opponent's closing argument, see §19.55.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.38 E. Using trial transcript

During argument, it is more effective to quote from the record verbatim rather than paraphrasing it. Be careful, however, not to read lengthy quotations and risk boring the jurors or causing them to be less attentive during argument.

Point out any unfulfilled promise made by opposing counsel in the opening statement or repeat briefly key portions of important eyewitness or expert testimony. Arrangements can be made with the court reporter before trial for an early transcript of opposing counsel's opening statement and daily transcripts of witness testimony.

Comment on opposing counsel's failure to fulfill specific promises of proof made in his or her opening statement is particularly effective when, e.g., plaintiff's counsel has grossly exaggerated the case and then failed to produce sufficient evidence to back up all the claims. If this happens, defense counsel should emphatically charge that opposing counsel failed to fulfill promises made during the opening statement. An attack of this type may cause the jurors to lose confidence in the plaintiff's entire case, even though the promises may relate to nonessential information. The unfulfilled promises should not be immaterial, however, because plaintiff's counsel may be able to point this out in the rebuttal argument and, in turn, raise questions about defense counsel's credibility.

When attacking the credibility of witnesses by pointing out discrepancies in their testimony, an effective technique is to enlarge this portion of the trial transcript and project it on a screen in front of the jury. By literally showing the inconsistent testimony to the jurors, counsel helps ensure that they will remember it during deliberations. On planning to use, and relying on, visual aids during closing argument, see §§19.12, 19.37. On reading from the transcript of a former trial or hearing on the same action, see §19.29.

VII. ARGUING DAMAGES IN PERSONAL INJURY TRIALS

§19.39 A. Plaintiff's counsel

When closing argument reaches the subject of damages in a personal injury case, plaintiff's counsel frequently write the following categories on a pad or a blackboard and then list the amounts for each. Some trial lawyers prefer to write this material clearly and legibly on the pad or blackboard before commencing argument. This technique helps remind counsel to discuss each item, eliminates the need to refer to notes, and ensures that all calculations are correct. Check local rules for any requirements on using blackboard or pad during closing argument. On using visual aids during argument, see §§19.12, 19.37.

- Medical expenses to date and all future medical expenses reasonably certain to occur and supported by the evidence, e.g., expenses for the hospital stay, physicians, X rays, physical therapy, nurses, a wheelchair, and medications (see §19.40);
- Loss of earnings to date (see §19.41);
- Loss of earnings in the future (see §19.42);
- Impairment of earning capacity (see §19.42);
- Physical injuries (see §19.43); and
- Pain and suffering, including mental suffering and distress, e.g., anxiety, humiliation, frustration, loss of social prestige, and loss of enjoyment of life (see §19.44).

Plaintiff's counsel should list specific dollar amounts attributable to each item in the first three categories ("economic" damages). Many attorneys also suggest a figure for the jury to consider for the final three items ("noneconomic" damages). See CACI 3902. See also Evangelatos v Superior Court (1988) 44 C3d 1188, 246 CR 629 (economic and noneconomic damages must be asserted with regard to percentage of defendant's liability). For additional discussion of damages in closing argument, see §19.20.

§19.40 1. Medical expenses

Plaintiff's counsel frequently show the jury each medical bill or statement entered into evidence and then point to the corresponding figure listed on the pad or blackboard. Counsel should also explain the significance of each bill or category of bills (e.g., for physical therapy).

EXAMPLE: If the doctor for the defense testified that the plaintiff suffered no injury, plaintiff's counsel can argue that the defense doctor only examined the plaintiff once, but that the plaintiff's treating doctor saw the plaintiff ten times, as shown by the testimony and medical bills entered into evidence. The implication is that the treating doctor is a more reliable source of information about the plaintiff's injuries.

When medical bills are small and the time between treatments long, emphasize that this does not lessen the seriousness of the plaintiff's injuries, because many painful injuries do not require frequent visits to a physician. In some cases, the patient does not visit the physician, because nothing can be done to help relieve the patient's pain.

Before the plaintiff can recover for prospective damage in a personal injury case, counsel must establish that the loss is reasonably certain to occur in the future. There must be testimony from a physician about future care to a reasonable degree of certainty. See CC §3283; Roedder v Lindsley (1946) 28 C2d 820, 172 P2d 353.

If the plaintiff needs continued medical care, services, and supplies, recount any testimony or evidence that establishes that plaintiff "is reasonably certain to need in the future" medical care and a reasonable cost for that care. See CACI 3903A. Emphasize the economist's testimony or other evidence presented during trial on the present cash value of this type of care.

Remind the jury that this is the plaintiff's only day in court and that the plaintiff cannot come back in the future if the money for medical care (or wage loss) is insufficient. Argue that there must be full and complete compensation now.

Further research: On costs of future medical care, see 6 Witkin, Summary of California Law, Torts §1670 (10th ed 2005). On reducing the value of future medical care to present cash value, see Johns, California Damages—Law and Proof §§1.87-1.92 (5th ed 1996).

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Wage loss

§19.41 a. Past wage loss

Present the past loss of wages and the evidence supporting it. See CACI 3903C. Refer to testimony from supervisors and co-workers establishing the plaintiff's satisfactory work record before the injury.

Show how the plaintiff's injuries prevented the plaintiff from working and, if the defense has implied this, that it is implausible that the plaintiff deliberately wanted to stay at home and lose money. See Handelman v Victor Equipment Co. (1971) 21 CA3d 902, 906, 99 CR 90; Swanson v Bogatin (1957) 149 CA2d 755, 758, 308 P2d 918.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.42 b. Impairment of earnings capacity; future wage loss

Even when there is no proof of earnings or income before or after the injury, loss of earning power can be inferred from the nature of the injury and damages can be awarded for the loss of the plaintiff's ability to earn money after the injury. See Rodriguez v McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1978) 87 CA3d 626, 656, 151 CR 399.

Consider discussing the impairment of the plaintiff's earnings capacity by describing the potential effect of the injury on plaintiff's ability to find and keep a job. If the plaintiff is currently unemployed, suggest that the injury may prevent the plaintiff from competing with healthy workers for the same job. If the plaintiff is employed, explain how an impairment might affect the plaintiff's ability to work up to the standards of healthy workers.

Cite statistics presented by an economist during trial, e.g., showing that people with disabilities earn a significant percentage less than other people in the same career. Remind the jurors of economic testimony explaining how the present cash value of the plaintiff's lost future earnings capacity was calculated. See Henninger v Southern Pac. Co. (1967) 250 CA2d 872, 883, 59 CR 76; Deshotel v Atchison, T. & S.F. Ry. (1956) 144 CA2d 224, 229, 300 P2d 910. For jury instructions on loss of earnings and loss of future earning capacity, see CACI 3903C-3903D.

When a plaintiff has established a good earnings record, many attorneys prefer to argue in terms of loss of future earnings rather than future earnings capacity because specific dollar amounts may reasonably be used. They restrict their discussion of future earnings capacity loss to cases in which the plaintiff has no proven earnings record, e.g., an injured child. Discuss the testimony of expert witnesses called to substantiate the plaintiff's loss of future earnings.

Further research: On calculating loss of earnings capacity, see Johns, California Damages—Law and Proof §§1.11-1.30 (5th ed 1996). On impairment of earnings capacity as an element of general damages for pleading purposes, see 5 Witkin, California Procedure, Pleading §937 (5th ed 2008).

§19.43 3. Physical injuries

The extent, type, and nature of the plaintiff's physical injuries should be explained thoroughly so that the jury can appreciate their seriousness. Use of detailed diagrams and charts, entered into evidence during the testimony of physicians or shown to other counsel and approved by the judge before argument, can be effective when discussing injuries. On using visual aids during closing argument, see §§19.12, 19.37.

§19.44 4. Pain and suffering

Plaintiff's counsel must help the jurors properly evaluate damages for pain and suffering. Counsel can begin by pointing out that no evidence or testimony presented can automatically translate the client's injuries into a dollar amount. Because the law offers no measuring stick to value pain and suffering, jurors must use their own good judgment. The only guideline is that jurors must use their "judgment to decide a reasonable amount based on the evidence and [their] common sense." See CACI 3905A. Be sure the jury understands CACI 3905A, emphasizing again that the law prescribes no definite standard or method of calculation to ensure adequate compensation for pain and suffering.

To persuade the jurors to give a fair award for pain and suffering, ask them to imagine the shocking reality of constant pain and its effect on a person over time. Explain that this trial is the plaintiff's only chance to receive adequate compensation for his or her injuries, past and future. Some attorneys remind the jurors of any promises made during voir dire examination to return an award that is based fairly on the evidence, without giving consideration to the size of the award. Because the law requires that each item of damage be compensated in a "reasonable" amount, suggest that damage figures for each category listed in §19.39 be decided separately, and that the items be added up only after they have all been decided. Alternatively, instead of specifying a dollar range for pain and suffering, suggest that the jury multiply the plaintiff's economic damages total by some multiple. On per diem methods of calculating general damages, see §19.46.

Further research: For jury instructions on damages generally, see CACI 3900-3905A, 3920-3932, 3940-3949, 3960-3963.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Damages for pain and suffering must be personalized for the jurors. For example, plaintiff's counsel could remind jurors that long after they have performed their civic duty the plaintiff will be suffering with each step.

§19.45 a. Golden rule argument prohibited

Any argument that suggests that the jury place themselves in the plaintiff's situation (known as the "golden rule" argument) is objectionable. It is misconduct for counsel to suggest that the jurors place themselves in the plaintiff's shoes "and award the amount they would 'charge' to undergo equivalent pain and suffering." Brokopp v Ford Motor Co. (1977) 71 CA3d 841, 860, 139 CR 888.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.46 b. Per diem argument permissible

As one method for evaluating compensation for pain and suffering, counsel may wish to illustrate reasonable compensation by arguing that damages should be measured in terms of a fixed amount of money per day, month, or year. "Per diem" arguments are permissible. Beagle v Vasold (1966) 65 C2d 166, 53 CR 129.

EXAMPLE: In a case in which the plaintiff is likely to suffer irreparable injury, use the BAJI tables for the plaintiff's life expectancy. Write the remaining life expectancy figure on a pad or blackboard, representing the probable number of years that the plaintiff will live with the injury. Next, suggest to the jury that a certain dollar figure per day is reasonable compensation for the plaintiff's pain and suffering. Then, multiply the dollar-per-day figure by the number of days left in the plaintiff's life to arrive at a reasonable value for damages.

Some counsel who use a per diem argument suggest a dollar range for pain and suffering rather than one figure. Other attorneys, believing that a per diem calculation does not appeal to certain jurors, suggest a total figure that is fair and reasonable. See §19.44.

§19.47 6. Final remarks on damages

At the end of closing argument, many plaintiff's attorneys add up all the figures listed on the pad or blackboard to reach a fair and reasonable total for the plaintiff's compensation. Some counsel request that the jurors award this entire sum, particularly when the plaintiff's case is strong and the injuries are substantial. Others ask only that the jury return a verdict that is fair, reasonable, and consistent with the evidence.

In cases in which proof of liability is marginal but the injuries are substantial, some attorneys discuss the elements of the plaintiff's pain and suffering without using any specific amount or per diem argument. These attorneys do not ask the jurors to award a specific sum but leave it up to the jurors to decide a reasonable amount. For jury instructions on damages generally, see CACI 3900-3905A, 3920-3932, 3940-3949, 3960-3963.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.48 B. Defense counsel

One method of undermining the plaintiff's claim of damages is to concentrate on the facts of the incident causing the injury, e.g., a slight impact. Defense counsel may be able to persuade the jury that the plaintiff's injuries are nonexistent, or less severe than claimed. See Menasco v Snyder (1984) 157 CA3d 729, 203 CR 748.

In cases in which the plaintiff has been severely injured, defense counsel must decide whether to discuss damages at all. If the plaintiff's estimation of damage is reasonable, many defense lawyers limit their argument to liability. Because the jurors' sympathy may be with the severely injured plaintiff, argument over damages risks turning them against the defendant. Many defense attorneys in this situation, however, believe that it is essential to discuss damages because they can give a more realistic perspective than the plaintiff's attorney on what amount should be awarded, particularly if it is likely that the jury will return a plaintiff's verdict.

Although the defense may appear to be conceding liability by discussing damages, counsel can counter this impression by stating something along the following lines:

> I doubt that you will be discussing damages, because it is clear that my client is not liable for the plaintiff's injuries, but I would not be a responsible attorney if I did not address the issue of damages. What plaintiff's counsel has said is wrong.

If plaintiff's counsel has unreasonably calculated damages or exaggerated the extent of injuries, defense counsel must discuss damages to cast doubt on the plaintiff's figures. Consider presenting an alternative calculation of damages to counter the plaintiff's and to explain why the plaintiff's calculation is incorrect or exaggerated. Point out inconsistencies in the testimony of the plaintiff and the plaintiff's witnesses concerning the nature and extent of the injuries and then show how this testimony conflicts with what defense medical experts found.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Except in the most serious injury cases, the plaintiff is almost always vulnerable to the scrutiny of defense counsel regarding exaggeration, both of treatment and alleged suffering. The defense lawyer has to carefully gauge the case but should not be afraid in the appropriate situation to show why the plaintiff's damage figures are exaggerated.

§19.49 1. Admitted liability

When the defendant's legal liability is clear, but the plaintiff's request for damages is out of proportion to the injuries received, some defense attorneys admit liability. They then try the case on the issue of damages and the injuries suffered by the plaintiff. These attorneys believe that if they contested obvious liability, the defense would merely create more sympathy for the plaintiff that could actually encourage the jury to award higher damages.

As a variation on this same theme, if there is any damaging evidence of the plaintiff's own negligence, the defense will admit negligence when the defendant's liability is clear, and then argue the plaintiff's comparative negligence in order to substantially reduce the award.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Arguing plaintiff's comparative negligence has proven to be a very successful strategy. When defense counsel does not have to argue a weak or nonexistent "no liability" position, credibility remains with the defense and will more likely be listened to and be believed by the jurors.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/19 Closing Argument/§19.50 2. Doubtful liability

§19.50 2. Doubtful liability

When liability is unclear, but the injuries are severe, defense counsel should focus on liability. The jury's sympathy may be with the severely injured plaintiff, but the defense attorney should argue that an injured plaintiff may not recover from the defendant until the defendant is legally found to have caused the injuries.

Many defense attorneys also argue the reasonableness of damages when confronted with a severely injured plaintiff even if there is doubtful liability. Remind the jurors to set aside their emotions because the law requires that they not allow their verdict to be influenced by "bias, sympathy, prejudice, or public opinion." CACI 100. Point out any weaknesses or exaggeration of the damages the plaintiff's attorney has calculated and requested the jury to award.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: A constant reminder by defense counsel to the jurors that they are "judges" and should not be swayed by emotion is extremely important.

VIII. PROCEDURES FOR OPPOSING PARTY

A. Making objections during argument

§19.51 1. Tactical considerations

One of the most difficult tactical choices to make during trial is whether to make objections, particularly during opposing counsel's closing argument. The law requires a clear objection and request for a curative admonition if an issue is to be preserved for appellate review. See Horn v Atchison, T. & S.F. Ry. (1964) 61 C2d 602, 610, 39 CR 721. The dilemma of when to make an objection requires counsel to determine which issues are actually worth preserving for appeal.

Because jurors usually react unfavorably to objections when another attorney is delivering closing argument, it is unwise to interrupt an opponent except for the most egregious of violations. Objections often drive the offending evidence further into the jurors' minds, even when the objections are sustained and the judge admonishes the jury to disregard the improper statement.

PRACTICE TIP: Because the decision to object should be deliberate rather than reactive, do not simply police your opponent's closing argument for minor or unintentional improprieties. Develop a strategy for objection that is tailored to the case. Both evidence presented at trial and evidence ruled as inadmissible can guide you in anticipating matters that may surface as objectionable points during your opponent's argument. As an alternative if you represent the plaintiff, consider whether you will be able to cure the problem effectively during rebuttal argument. See §19.3.

For additional suggestions and procedures for making trial objections and protecting the record, see chap 15.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.52 2. Timely objection and request for curative admonition; waiver

Usually, counsel must immediately object to any improper argument made by opposing counsel and then request the court to admonish the jurors to disregard it. See Clemente v State (1985) 40 C3d 202, 219 CR 445 (any prejudice caused by isolated remarks made by plaintiff's counsel during closing argument regarding the extent of plaintiff's injuries was eliminated by the trial court's proper admonishment to the jury to disregard such remarks). Any motion for a mistrial must also be made at the time of the objection or shortly afterwards. See §19.54.

If a timely objection is not made, the objection is considered to have been waived. See Conservatorship of Gordon (1989) 209 CA3d 364, 257 CR 365 (counsel did not timely object to an argument made during closing). If counsel waits until opposing counsel has concluded argument, any claimed error is usually waived. See Horn v Atchison, T. & S.F. Ry. (1964) 61 C2d 602, 610, 39 CR 721 (court determined that attorney must object and ask for admonition to preserve issue for appeal).

PRACTICE TIP: If opposing counsel repeats an objectionable remark, you may be able to overcome the original waiver if you failed to object earlier. Object to both remarks, and ask the judge to admonish the jury with regard to both comments.

§19.53 3. How to make objections

Because it is not always possible to anticipate and raise an objection before any objectionable comment is made, object as soon as possible after the violation has occurred. Stand, state the objection, and wait until the court rules on the objection before sitting down. Be prepared to state the grounds for the objection and to argue its merits. For a checklist of grounds for objections, see §19.57.

If argument regarding the merits of the objection is required, request that it be made outside the jury's presence. Ask the judge to tell the jury that argument on the merits of an objection concerns applicable law, not facts, so that the jury will not feel left out of the discussion.

Although repetitive objections may suggest to the jury that counsel is trying to obstruct the discovery of truth, they sometimes must be made. For example, repetitive objections must be made when counsel's argument continues along a forbidden path, when counsel tries to use several visual aids not previously admitted into evidence, or when counsel does not fairly summarize the evidence. On objecting to visual aids, see §19.55.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: When objections are sustained there is a double victory. The offender gets "off track" and out of "sync" and the jurors lose confidence in what is being said because the court has ruled that this was improper.

© The Regents of the University of California

§19.54 B. Moving for mistrial

When opposing counsel's improper argument is so prejudicial that the misconduct cannot be cured by any action of the trial judge (e.g., admonishing the jury to disregard it), counsel should move for a mistrial. For checklist of remedies that can be requested after opposing counsel's misconduct, see §16.149.

Request for a mistrial should be made at the time the attorney objects and asks the judge to assign the impropriety as misconduct. See §§16.91-16.93. Failure to object in a timely fashion or to move for a mistrial will preclude the issue from being reviewed on appeal. Horn v Atchison, T. & S.F. Ry. (1964) 61 C2d 602, 610, 39 CR 721 (defense counsel did not make any objections during plaintiff's counsel's opening or closing argument but instead moved for a mistrial at the conclusion of argument; court held that objections were waived).

PRACTICE TIP: If your motion for a mistrial is denied, be sure that the court gives the jury a curative admonition to avoid any possible argument of waiver on appeal. Both the motion for mistrial and the request for admonition should be made on the record in the court reporter's presence.

Moving for a mistrial should not be made lightly. If the motion is granted, the plaintiff's case will probably be retried months later. Witnesses may be unavailable, and a retrial will create more costs. For detailed discussion of mistrial, see §§18.82-18.102.

§19.55 C. Protecting the record when improper visual aids permitted during closing argument

Counsel should object to the improper use of visual aids during argument. If the court overrules your objection, ask that each visual aid be marked for identification to present a clear record for appeal. If the visual aid cannot be readily marked (e.g., a picture drawn on a blackboard), consider having it photographed out of the jurors' presence with an instant-developing camera, and the photograph marked for identification purposes.

EXAMPLE: Counsel drew a prejudicial diagram on a pad or blackboard, and opposing counsel timely objected and moved for a mistrial. The judge assigned the impropriety as misconduct and gave a curative admonition to the jury but denied the motion for mistrial. To give the appellate court a clear record of what transpired in the trial court, opposing counsel photographed the diagram and had it marked for identification.

Local rules, and sometimes judges in the absence of a local rule on the subject, require visual aids such as charts or illustrations that counsel plans to use during argument to be shown to other counsel and approved by the court well before argument. On planning to use, and relying on, visual aids during closing argument, see §§19.12, 19.37.

The following arguments constitute misconduct when stated during the closing argument:

- Arguing for a large amount of punitive damages by suggesting that the money awarded would go to consumer groups. Notrica v State Compensation Ins. Fund (1999) 70 CA4th 911, 952, 83 CR2d 89.
- Arguing inferences for evidence that was admitted for a limited purpose only. Evid C §355.
- Arguing facts not in evidence or asserting as fact matters within counsel's personal knowledge. Brokopp v Ford Motor Co. (1977) 71 CA3d 841, 862, 139 CR 888.
- Arguing the importance of a court-excluded document and asking the jury to draw negative inferences because the document was not admitted in evidence. Hansen v Warco Steel Corp. (1965) 237 CA2d 870, 877, 47 CR 428.
- Alluding to personal knowledge of a case. Garden Grove Sch. Dist. v Hendler (1965) 63 C2d 141, 45 CR 313. But see Jutzi v County of Los Angeles (1987) 196 CA3d 637, 653, 242 CR 74, in which defense counsel, responding to the plaintiff's claim that the case did not involve the defendant's physician-employee, implied that the physician would be incriminated if there were an award for the plaintiff. The court held that, taken in context, the defense attorney's comment was not misconduct, because it was an appropriate response to the plaintiff's claim.
- Arguing facts not justified by the record and suggesting that the jury could speculate about unsupported inferences. Malkasian v Irwin (1964) 61 C2d 738, 747, 40 CR 78.
- Referring to verdicts of other juries. Menchaca v Helms Bakeries, Inc. (1968) 68 C2d 535, 544, 67 CR 775.
- Referring to judgments given in similar cases. Salgo v Stanford Univ. Bd. of Trustees (1957) 154 CA2d 560, 579, 317 P2d 170.
- Expressing a personal belief in the credibility of a witness. People v Roberts (1966) 65 C2d 514, 520, 55 CR 412, modified on another point in In re Roberts (1970) 2 C3d 892, 87 CR 833 (counsel may comment on witness's credibility in light of all evidence, but counsel may not say "I believe him").

NOTE: This misconduct may not be reversible error. See People v Jenkins (1987) 196 CA3d 394, 406, 241 CR 827, disapproved on other grounds in People v Brown (1993) 6 C4th 322, 336 n12, 24 CR2d 710. In Jenkins, counsel stated that her familiarity with the facts led her to believe that a witness was lying. The court ruled that although this statement was misconduct, the case was not reversible on appeal, because no objection was made and a timely admonition to the jury would have cured the harm.

- Referring to a party's wealth or poverty, unless it is directly relevant to an issue in the case, such as punitive damages. See the following cases:
- Du Jardin v City of Oxnard (1995) 38 CA4th 174, 45 CR2d 48 (making comments during closing argument that government services would be lost if a plaintiff's verdict was returned was plainly and inherently prejudicial misconduct; opponent's immediate objection and request for admonition preserved issue on appeal);
- Dumas v Stocker (1989) 213 CA3d 1262, 262 CR 311 (even though punitive damages were at issue, plaintiff counsel's reference to defendant's substantial financial holdings, without first establishing defendant's net worth at trial, was prejudicial);
- Seimon v Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1977) 67 CA3d 600, 605, 136 CR 787 (plaintiff's counsel improperly tried to convey the image that he and his client were financial underdogs, by making statements such as "I represent the little guy");

- Roemer v Retail Credit Co. (1975) 44 CA3d 926, 119 CR 82 (reference to defendant's wealth was held to be proper because punitive damages were at issue); and
- Love v Wolf (1964) 226 CA2d 378, 389, 38 CR 183 (improper for plaintiff's counsel to argue that the jury should allow large damages because the defendant was rich or because it could well afford to be held to absolute liability as the price for marketing chloromycetin).

- Requesting that the jurors place themselves in the "plaintiff's shoes" (known as the "golden rule" argument). See §19.45. Counsel may not ask the jury to "award such damages as they would 'charge' to undergo equivalent pain and suffering." Beagle v Vasold (1966) 65 C2d 166, 182 n11, 53 CR 129; Horn v Atchison, T. & S.F. Ry. (1964) 61 C2d 602, 609, 39 CR 721; Brokopp v Ford Motor Co. (1977) 71 CA3d 841, 860, 139 CR 888.

NOTE: Counsel may argue that damages for pain and suffering should be awarded on a "per diem" basis (i.e., a certain amount of money per day or per hour). See §19.46.

- Appealing to prejudice based on a party's race, religion, ethnicity, or nationality when it is irrelevant to the issues. See Kolaric v Kaufman (1968) 261 CA2d 20, 27, 67 CR 729, a personal injury action, in which defense counsel improperly asked the plaintiff during cross-examination whether she had been in a concentration camp. Later, during argument, defense counsel improperly argued that he had rarely seen such evidence of sheer greed: Plaintiff and her husband had emigrated to this country and in return for its protection, peace, and opportunities, "[t]hey have made a mockery of our judicial system and have abused doctors and hospitals...." 261 CA2d at 25.
- Appealing to the sympathy or prejudice of the jury by referring to or disparaging a party's war record. Paolini v City & County of San Francisco (1946) 72 CA2d 579, 587, 164 P2d 916; Deibler v Wright (1931) 119 CA 277, 281, 6 P2d 344.
- Appealing to jurors' self-interest to persuade them to enlarge or mitigate their verdict. Brokopp v Ford Motor Co. (1977) 71 CA3d 841, 861, 139 CR 888.
- Commenting that the defendant is insured against liability, when arguing negligence or other wrongdoing. See Evid C §1155; Neumann v Bishop (1976) 59 CA3d 451, 469, 130 CR 786.
- Referring during argument on liability to settlements between the plaintiff and others concerning the same claim pending against the defendant. See the following cases:
  - Shepherd v Walley (1972) 28 CA3d 1079, 1083, 105 CR 387 (improper for defense counsel to refer to a settlement between plaintiff and co-named defendant who had been dismissed, stating, "I think that gives us a pretty good idea of who the plaintiff thinks was responsible and liable"); and
  - Brown v Pacific Elec. Ry. (1947) 79 CA2d 613, 614, 180 P2d 424 (proof of defendant's settlement with a third person, for injuries caused by same accident in which plaintiff's claim arose, was held inadmissible as evidence of defendant's liability; defense counsel improperly asked defendant: "Did the Pacific Electric Railway [codefendant] make a settlement with you for the injuries you sustained?").

NOTE: See Evid C §1152 on inadmissibility of offers of compromise or settlements to prove liability for loss or damage. Reference may be made to a settlement, however, to show the bias or prejudice of a witness. For example, pretrial "sliding scale" settlements can be disclosed to show that the bias of a defendant who previously settled is at issue. See CCP §877.5(a)(2).

- Referring to the remarried name of a party's widow in a wrongful death case. Cherrigan v City & County of San Francisco (1968) 262 CA2d 643, 69 CR 42.
- Addressing a juror individually by name. Neumann v Bishop (1976) 59 CA3d 451, 473, 130 CR 786.
- Implying that if opposing counsel uses inconsistent theories, he or she does not believe in the case. People v Bell (1989) 49 C3d 502, 537, 262 CR 1.
- Arguing the income tax consequences of compensatory damages, unless taxes are at issue. Rodriguez v McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1978) 87 CA3d 626, 151 CR 399.
- Implying that the court endorses one party's allegations. Cassim v Allstate Ins. Co. (2004) 33 C4th 780, 798, 16 CR3d 374.

§19.57 B. Checklist: Grounds for objections during closing argument

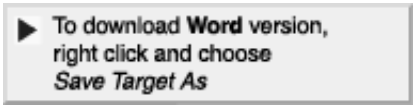

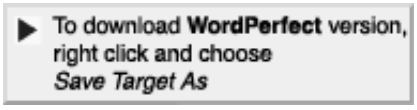

The following are grounds for objection during closing argument. Depending on how flagrant opposing counsel's comments are, interrupt with an objection and specify the grounds for your objection (which may be taken from the list below). Then ask the judge to give the jury a cautionary instruction. See §§19.52-19.53. If you believe your client's right to a fair trial has been irreparably damaged, move for a mistrial. See §19.54. For additional remedies for opposing counsel's misconduct, see the checklist in §16.149.

- Refers to facts not in evidence or from counsel's own knowledge.
- Calls for speculation on unsupported inferences.
- Refers to other verdicts.
- Refers to counsel's opinion of a witness's credibility.
- Refers to the wealth or poverty of a party.
- Appeals to the jury's prejudice through race, religion, nationality, or war record.
- Appeals to the jury's self-interest to enlarge or reduce the verdict.
- Refers to the defendant's insurance.
- Refers to a prior settlement.
- Addresses jurors by name.
- Refers to inconsistent theories and suggests that opposing counsel does not believe in the case.
- Refers to income tax consequences of damages award.
- Refers to a collateral source.
- Refers to the remarried name of a party's widow in a wrongful death case.

I. OVERVIEW

§20.1 A. Scope of chapter

This chapter discusses the procedures, rules, and tactics for preparing, submitting, and giving both form instructions (see §§20.12-20.19) and attorney-drafted jury instructions (see §§20.20-20.29).

The California Civil Jury Instructions (CACI), which are approved by the Judicial Council, are the official instructions for use in California and their use is strongly encouraged. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1050(e). Counsel submitting a BAJI instruction should follow the procedures for forms not previously approved by the court, i.e., include at the bottom of any BAJI instruction submitted a citation of authorities supporting the statement of law in the instructions. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1055(d).

A checklist of how to prepare effective instructions is included. See §20.2.

___ 1. Review CACI, BAJI and other form instructions before drafting instructions to see whether any of them fit the issues in the case. Make sure to check for recent revisions of CACI, BAJI or other form instructions in the pocket part. See §§20.12-20.19.

___ 2. Prepare instructions well in advance of trial so that you have the opportunity to focus your attention on them and avoid drafting last-minute instructions. See §20.9.

___ 3. Review pleadings and discovery before drafting instructions to determine what the issues are. Reread the complaint, answer, any cross-complaints and answers, the pretrial conference order (if one was entered), answers to all contention interrogatories, all requests for admission, and any orders on any motions to see if any of the pleaded issues have been removed from the case. See §20.9.

___ 4. Ascertain who bears the burden of proof on each issue or element of each claim and affirmative defense, and prepare burden of proof instructions. See CACI 200. See also BAJI 2.60. See also §20.12.

___ 5. When drafting original instructions, use simple language, cite authority accurately, and read the instructions to nonattorneys to make sure the jurors can understand them. See §§20.21-2.24.

___ 6. Prepare a list of CACI, BAJI and originally drafted instructions you plan to give in the case and compare this list with the substantive issues involved. Make sure all instructions necessary to cover the substantive issues are ready to submit.

___ 7. Organize all proposed instructions into a sequence that makes sense for your case rather than ordering them by number. See §§20.30-20.31 for sequence considerations.

___ 8. Review all instructions to make sure the authority cited is accurate. See §§20.24-20.28.

___ 9. Remove instructions that are repetitive or cumulative and that do not accurately recite controlling law. See §§20.60-20.70.

___ 10. Proofread and edit all instructions for clarity and conciseness. See §§20.21-20.22.

___ 11. When certain instructions are essential to your case, be prepared to offer alternative instructions if the trial judge refuses your initial proposal. This is critical on appeal because the court of appeal will ask you what instruction you offered as an alternative. See §§20.32-20.33.

§20.3 C. Jury instructions are statements of law

Traditionally, the trial judge reads the jury instructions to jurors at the conclusion of the case—although many judges now also read some of the instructions at the beginning, or during, the trial. See §§20.47-20.50. This process is called "instructing" or "charging" the jury. See CCP §607(9).

In charging the jury, the judge may state all matters of law the judge thinks the jurors will need to reach a verdict. CCP §608; see §§20.37-20.51 for further discussion of court's duties.

Once instructed on the law, the jury must apply these legal principles to the facts to reach a verdict. Duff v Schaefer Ambulance Serv. (1955) 132 CA2d 655, 283 P2d 91. See also Carlson, Collins, Gordon & Bold v Banducci (1967) 257 CA2d 212, 64 CR 915 (court properly let jury decide meaning of fee agreement under applicable principles of law).

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.4 1. Jury must follow court's proper instructions

Each juror takes an oath to render a true verdict according to the evidence and the court's instructions. See CCP §607.

NOTE: Admonitions to the jury during trial regarding conduct or testimony should be distinguished from instructions. People v Pitts (1990) 223 CA3d 606, 883, 273 CR 757 (no error for court to give instructions that reminded jury of limiting admonitions given to them at time certain evidence was admitted.)

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.5 2. Counsel's duty to submit proposed instructions

In every jury trial, a complete and comprehensive set of jury instructions covering the law as disclosed by the pleadings should be submitted by counsel to the judge and served on opposing counsel. CCP §607a; Finn v G. D. Searle & Co. (1984) 35 C3d 691, 701, 200 CR 870; Willden v Washington Nat'l Ins. Co. (1976) 18 C3d 631, 636, 135 CR 69; Roberts v Ford Aerospace & Communications Corp. (1990) 224 CA3d 793, 804, 274 CR 139.

PRACTICE TIP: Check local rules and any pretrial orders on the form and submission of jury instructions.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.6 3. Waiver for party's failure to submit instructions; exception

A party who fails to request a specific proper instruction on a particular issue has generally waived the right to have the jury instructed on that issue. Jarvis v Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1983) 142 CA3d 246, 255, 191 CR 29. See also McCloud v Roy Riegels Chems. (1971) 20 CA3d 928, 935, 97 CR 910.

If a party fails to specifically request jury instructions on material issues and the controlling legal principles, the court's failure to instruct the jury on those matters may be reversible error. See Agarwal v Johnson (1979) 25 C3d 932, 951, 160 CR 141, disapproved on other grounds in White v Ultramar, Inc. (1999) 21 C4th 563, 88 CR2d 19. See §20.37 for more detailed discussion of court's duty to instruct on "controlling legal principles."

© The Regents of the University of California

D. Parties' right to jury instructions

§20.7 1. Instructions permitted on all theories of case

A party is entitled to correct, nonargumentative instructions on every theory of the case advanced by that party that is supported by substantial evidence. The trial court may not force a litigant to rely on abstract generalities, but must instruct the jury in specific terms that relate the party's theory to the particular case. Soule v General Motors Corp. (1994) 8 C4th 548, 572, 34 CR2d 607. See also Morey v Vanucci (1998) 64 CA4th 904, 915, 75 CR2d 573 (party's theory of case must be supported by substantial evidence before court obligated to instruct jury on that theory).

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.8 2. Instructions on alternative theories or defenses allowed

Jury instructions based on alternative theories or defenses raised by the pleadings are allowed because each party is entitled to have the jury instructed on all issues raised in the pleadings. Petersen v Rieschel (1953) 115 CA2d 758, 765, 252 P2d 986; Brown v Yocum (1931) 113 CA 621, 623, 298 P 845.

PRACTICE TIP: If at all possible, avoid presenting instructions on alternative theories, because they might confuse the jury. Consider including a protective instruction stating that double recovery is not permitted even if plaintiff is able to prove the case on two alternative theories.

© The Regents of the University of California

E. Tactical considerations

§20.9 1. Instructions help plan case

A review of jury instructions at the beginning of a case will tell the trial attorney what the law is, what the attorney's burden of proof is, and what elements are part of each cause of action. The instructions are a road map for pleading and discovery because they tell the attorney where he or she must end up.

Plaintiff's counsel can use key jury instructions to assist in drafting pleadings and discovery and in preparing trial briefs. Defense counsel should review applicable jury instructions on receipt of the complaint to assist in shaping dispositive motions such as demurrers or motions for summary judgment.

PRACTICE TIP: Keep copies of applicable jury instructions in a separate, readily accessible, file. As the case develops, add new instructions to the file. After you have prepared a general list of proposed jury instructions in one civil case, you will find that many of the instructions can be used over and over again in other civil cases.

§20.10 2. Opening statement; prepare jury for key instructions

After preparing the opening statement, an experienced trial attorney will know which jury instructions will likely be given. The phrasing and structure of the factual discussion in the opening statement should anticipate these instructions and give the jury a chance to hear the important "buzz" words from the instructions.

Avoid a direct reference to the instructions early in the trial, because it would probably draw an objection, particularly if the instructions are not ultimately given. See Persuasive Opening Statements & Closing Arguments §2.14 (Cal CEB 1988).

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.11 3. Final argument: Use exact language of key jury instructions

Use the exact language of key jury instructions in the final argument to alert the jurors to the instructions the judge will read to them. Doing so provides an opportunity to reargue the specifics of the case in the very language of the instructions. Incorporate the most favorable instructions into the closing argument to break up the monotony of the instruction-reading process.

PRACTICE TIP: If you are going to discuss jury instructions in closing argument, enlarge the key instructions or make them into transparencies to display on an overhead projector. Jurors can then read the instructions while you are discussing them and, by seeing the written words, the jurors will be better able to remember their content and importance. Use the precise words that the judge will read to the jury in the enlargement of the instructions. See chap 9 on opening statement and chap 19 on closing argument. See also Persuasive Opening Statements & Closing Arguments §2.14 (Cal CEB 1988).

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: If you plan to discuss jury instructions in your final argument, check with the judge first because some judges feel that the instructions are the judge's domain.

II. PREPARING FORM INSTRUCTIONS

§20.12 A. What are CACI instructions?

The best place to begin in preparing a set of jury instructions in a civil case is to review the Judicial Council California Civil Jury Instructions ("CACI"), which are the official, approved instructions for California. See Cal Rules of Ct 2.1050(e). Although the CACI jury instructions are organized differently from the BAJI instructions that trial lawyers have used over the years, the Judicial Council's CACI instructions are usually followed by notes to the sources and authorities on which a particular instruction is based. This CEB publication also references, when available, similar BAJI instructions. The acronym "BAJI" is taken from the first edition of the Book of Approved Jury Instructions, published in 1938. This book is now in its ninth edition and is titled California Jury Instructions, Civil, even though it is usually referred to as BAJI. BAJI instructions are also available on computer disks. However, BAJI is no longer officially "approved." See Cal Rules of Ct 2.1050(e).

CACI (and BAJI) contain instructions of a general nature that apply to all types of trials, as well as instructions on substantive law and damages:

General law instructions:

- General instructions, e.g., instructions on the court's and jury's respective duties, terminology, and designation of parties in the pleadings (CACI 100-110; see also BAJI 1.00-1.25);
- Instructions on evidence and guides for its evaluation and interpretation, e.g., instructions on direct and circumstantial evidence and weighing conflicts, witnesses' credibility, and expert testimony (CACI 107, 200-221, 5003-5004; see also BAJI 2.00-2.43);
- Burden of proof and degree of proof instructions (CACI 200-201; see also BAJI 2.60-2.62 and Note below);
- Cautionary instructions (CACI 5000-5001; see also BAJI 15.20-15.22);
- Instructions on manner of jury deliberations (CACI 5001; see also BAJI 15.30-15.31);
- Instructions on jury's duties and functions (CACI 5001; see also BAJI 15.30-15.40); and
- Concluding instructions (CACI 5006-5008; see also BAJI 15.50-15.60).

NOTE: In cases with several causes of action, decide whether it is preferable to have one instruction for each claim. Review each cause of action, and then determine which party has the burden of proof on that claim and what the burden of proof is for that claim.

Substantive law instructions:

- Negligence law (e.g., negligence per se, special doctrines such as res ipsa loquitur and the good Samaritan rule, professional negligence) (CACI 400-403, 405-407, 411-422, 430-435, 450-453, 460-463, 500-518, 600-604, 700-712, 730-731, 800-806, 900, 902-903, 905-908, 1221; see also BAJI 3.00-6.67);
- Owners and occupiers of land (CACI 1000-1011, 2021; see also BAJI 8.00-8.60);
- Intentional torts (e.g., defamation, libel, slander) (CACI 1300-1305, 1400, 1402-1404, 1407-1409, 1500-1501, 1503-1505, 1520, 1701-1708, 1720-1723, 1800-1809, 1820-1821, 2200-2204, 3020, 3023-3027, 3100-3108, 3112-3116; see also BAJI 7.00-7.94);
- Product liability (CACI 1200-1207, 1220-1222, 1224, 1230-1233, 1240-1243, 3210-3211, 3220-3221, 3241; see also BAJI 9.00-9.90);
- Contractual relationships (CACI 300-325, 330-337, 350-361, 2400-2424, 2430-2433; see also BAJI 10.00-10.96);
- Statutory actions (CACI 423, 1100-1103, 1111-1112, 1120-1121, 1123, 2900-2901, 2903, 2920-2921, 2926, 2940-2942, 3500-3506, 3509-3515; see also BAJI 11.00-11.99);
- Employment discrimination (CACI 2500-2505, 2520-2526, 2540-2545; see also BAJI 12.00-12.26);
- Fraud and deceit (CACI 1900-1908, 1920-1924; see also BAJI 12.30-12.57);

- Implied indemnity (CACI 3800-3801; see also BAJI 12.60-12.69);
- Emotional distress (CACI 1600-1605, 1620-1623; see also BAJI 12.70-12.88);
- Insurance company obligations (CACI 2330-2335; see also BAJI 12.90-12.98); and
- Vicarious responsibility (CACI 410, 720-724, 3600-3602, 3700-3712, 3720-3726; see also BAJI 13.00-13.97).

Damages instructions:

- Compensatory damages (CACI 3900-3901; see also BAJI 14.00-14.02);
- Measure of damages (CACI 3903A-3903D, 3903J-3903K, 3903M, 3920-3922. See also BAJI 14.10-14.52);
- Punitive damages instructions (CACI 3940-3949);
- Miscellaneous damages instructions (CACI 3904, 3921-3932. See also BAJI 14.60-14.76); and
- Determining damages under comparative negligence (CACI 3960. See also BAJI 14.90-14.91).

Concluding instructions:

- Multiple parties (CACI 103, 217; see also BAJI 15.00-15.03.1);
- Cautionary instructions (CACI 5000-5001; see also BAJI 15.20-15.22); and
- Jurors' duties (CACI 5001; see also BAJI 15.30-15.40).

CACI includes various special verdict forms (VF-400—VF-402, VF-500—VF-502, VF-700—VF-701, VF-704, VF-1000—VF-1001, VF-1200—VF-1206, VF-1208, VF-2900—VF-2901, VF-3100—VF-3107, VF-3700). BAJI also has special verdicts forms (BAJI 16.00-16.93) and several appendices, including a life-expectancy table and a present-value table.

NOTE: When using CACI, BAJI or any other form book, always check the pocket parts and read the Use notes at the end of the printed instructions for any recent changes.

B. Approved form instructions preferred in state court

§20.13 1. Judicial Council recommends use of CACI

The California Civil Jury Instructions (CACI) "approved by the Judicial Council are the official instructions for use in the state of California," and their use "is strongly encouraged." Cal Rules of Ct 2.1050.

When a judge decides to instruct the jury on a subject covered by CACI, "it is recommended that the judge use the Judicial Council instruction" unless "a different instruction would more accurately state the law and be understood by jurors." Cal Rules of Ct 2.1050(e). Only when the latest edition of the CACI instructions does not contain an instruction that the judge determines the jury needs, or when a CACI instruction cannot be modified to submit the issue properly, should a non-CACI instruction be given, and it should be "accurate, brief, understandable, impartial, and free from argument." See Cal Rules of Ct 2.1050(e).

As long as the topic is covered in CACI, the Judicial Council "endorses" the use of CACI instructions. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1050(b). The goal of the CACI instructions is to improve the quality of a jury's decisions by making the law understandable to the average juror. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1050(b). That is, the CACI instructions seek to accurately state the law in plain English so that the law is more comprehensible and less confusing to jurors during their deliberations. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1050(e).

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.14 2. Counsel must complete form instructions properly

CACI instructions often indicate by brackets or blanks that information must be filled in or deletions made so that the instruction follows the facts of the particular case. If counsel omits any required information, the court may refuse the instruction as incomplete. On format of proposed jury instruction when submitting to court, see §20.17.

In ruling on the formerly court-approved BAJI instructions, appellate opinions have held that the trial judge may refuse to give an instruction that is missing any required fact. Shaw v Pacific Greyhound Lines (1958) 50 C2d 153, 158, 323 P2d 391; see Roberts v City of Los Angeles (1980) 109 CA3d 625, 630, 167 CR 320 (defense counsel waived right to have jury instructed on its legal theory by repeatedly refusing court's request to correct defective instructions).

The court may not, however, refuse to give an instruction because of small oversights. See Laird v Moss (1959) 173 CA2d 48, 53, 342 P2d 463 (trial court improperly refused instruction containing a blank; court should have corrected instruction and given it because the jury was thus not instructed on a material issue).

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.15 3. Form instructions generally upheld on appeal

It is good practice to use approved form instructions when applicable because they are generally upheld on appeal. On occasion, however, approved form instructions (BAJI) have been disapproved and subsequently modified. See 7 Witkin, California Procedure, Trial §273 (5th ed 2008).

EXAMPLE 1: The California Supreme Court disapproved the proximate cause instruction and held that the trial court committed prejudicial error by giving it. Mitchell v Gonzales (1991) 54 C3d 1041, 1052, 1 CR2d 913. See discussion of Mitchell in §20.79.

EXAMPLE 2: BAJI 2.62, covering clear and convincing evidence for punitive damages, has been criticized as misleading, but never found so misleading as to require reversal. See, e.g., Weeks v Baker & McKenzie (1998) 63 CA4th 1128, 1164, 74 CR2d 510; Mattco Forge, Inc. v Arthur Young & Co. (1997) 52 CA4th 820, 847, 60 CR2d 780; Roberts v Ford Aerospace & Communications Corp. (1990) 224 CA3d 793, 274 CR 139. But see criticism of BAJI 2.62 in CACI 201.

EXAMPLE 3: The court in National Med. Transp. Network v Deloitte & Touche (1998) 62 CA4th 412, 425, 72 CR2d 720, found the giving of BAJI 6.37.3, governing the duration of accountants' employment and duty to their clients, to constitute prejudicial error requiring reversal.

It is essential to scrutinize even official, approved form instructions to ensure that they state the law properly and completely. Because CACI is the approved form of jury instructions, it is probable that, like BAJI, some of the CACI instructions will be tested on appeal and on occasion will be disapproved.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.16 4. Restrictions on certain jury instructions must be observed

Before using a form instruction, investigate whether there are any restrictions on its use; if so, be sure to observe them. Restrictions are usually stated in the comments following the instruction. For example, the following two CACI jury instructions contain restrictions:

EXAMPLE 1: CACI 320, Interpretation - Construction Against Drafter. This instruction directs the jury to interpret the meaning of a contract against the party who drafted it. But it should only be read when the jury is deadlocked. The purpose of this restriction is to allow the jury to interpret the contract using all other avenues before it is given this tool.

EXAMPLE 2: CACI 2403, Breach of Employment Contract - Unspecified Term - Implied-in-Fact Promise Not to Discharge Without Good Cause. The instruction should only be read when an employee is basing his or her claim of wrongful discharge on an implied covenant not to terminate except for good cause. If the jury finds that there is an express at-will agreement, the jury cannot find an implied contrary understanding. In addition, only those factors that apply to the facts of the particular case should be read.

PRACTICE TIP: If CACI instructions do not cover all the issues in the case, review other form instructions (see §20.28 for list of sources of form instructions) or draft your own original instructions (see §§20.20-20.29).

C. Procedure for requesting jury instructions

§20.17 1. Format of request

All proposed jury instructions, whether CACI instructions or "special instructions," must be submitted like any other court paper in the format specified by Cal Rules of Ct 2.100-2.119. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1055(a)-(b). For detailed information on how to prepare instructions, see §20.20.

The document proposing CACI instructions should be titled "_ _[Plaintiff, Defendant, etc.]_ _'s Request and Index for Jury Instructions," and contain the usual caption of court, case, and number. See §20.81 for sample request and index for jury instructions.

The set of proposed jury instructions must include an index that identifies each CACI instruction by its name and reference number. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1055(b)(2). In the index, indicate whether it is an exact copy of the CACI instruction, an exact copy except for the deletion or other handling of bracketed material or blanks, or a modified version of CACI. Make a notation such as the following:

- "CACI No. _ _ _ _ _ _ (exact copy)" (when the instruction is an exact copy of a CACI instruction);
- "CACI No. _ _ _ _ _ _ (exact copy except adaptations)" (when the instruction is a copy of a CACI instruction except for integration or deletion of bracketed material, or the filling-in of blanks); or
- "CACI No. _ _ _ _ _ _ (as modified)" (when the instruction is modified other than by filling in the blanks or striking bracketed items).

For an example of an index and request for jury instructions, see §20.81. See also Cal Rules of Court 2.1055(b)(3). Each proposed instruction, including CACI instructions, must be on a separate page, contain the number and title of the instruction at the top of the first page of the instruction, and be prepared without any blank lines or bracketed material so that it can be read directly to the jury. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1055(c). See §20.20.

On other procedures, see §20.19.

No jury instructions can be requested simply by number references in civil cases. This applies to CACI form instructions and to those from the Book of Approved Jury Instructions (9th ed 2002) (BAJI). See Cal Rules of Ct 2.1055(c). No citation to authorities is required for the CACI instructions, however. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1055(d).

The requested jury instructions must be loosely bound. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1055(b)(4). See §20.20.

PRACTICE TIP: Before reading the instructions, the court often asks the parties to meet and confer and give the court a set of instructions on which they agree, a set sought by one side as to which there is objection, and a set sought by the other side as to which there is objection. The parties typically agree on the basic instructions (e.g., basic introductory and concluding instructions, burden of proof, standard elements of a claim) and focus their disagreement on the important points.

§20.18 2. Number of copies required

Prepare enough copies of the request for jury instructions to serve on all opposing counsel and to provide at least one copy to the court. It is helpful to have several full sets of instructions with the required index of all instructions on top. Having extra copies facilitates modifications during jury instruction conferences with court and other counsel. See §20.17 for format of proposed jury instructions.

On time for submission of instructions generally, see §§20.34-20.36.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Some courts make copies of all instructions in their final form for each juror to read along with the judge; however, most do not.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.19 D. Modification of form instructions; notification to court required

Frequently, form instructions must be modified so that they properly instruct the jury on the facts of the particular case. When making a substantive modification to an official, approved CACI instruction and the issue is important enough, refer to the modification in the trial brief or in a motion in limine. Any issue of importance should be in the trial brief, even if not couched in the language of a proposed instruction.

Make certain that the authority for the modification is included on the instruction and have copies of these authorities available for the judge to review. These requirements do not apply if counsel is simply filling in blanks or selecting alternative clauses in the CACI instruction. A modified CACI instruction should also be listed in the required index and state on its face: "CACI NO. _ _ _ _ _ _, as modified." See §20.17.

PRACTICE TIP: Even though some jury instructions, no matter how clearly stated, may be difficult for jurors to understand, be careful in modifying or adding explanatory language to them simply for that reason because some judges may refuse to modify an approved CACI instruction. As an alternative to modifying the instruction that you feel is difficult to understand, you can always explain it verbally to the jury during closing argument.

III. DRAFTING ORIGINAL INSTRUCTIONS

§20.20 A. Format requirements

All proposed jury instructions, whether approved by the court (e.g., CACI instructions) or specially prepared by counsel, must be submitted to the court in the form and format set out in Cal Rules of Ct 2.1055(b)-(d). For discussion of CACI instructions, see §20.17. For a sample format for proposed jury instructions, see §20.81. Rule 2.1055(e) prohibits local court rules from requiring that jury instructions be submitted in any manner other than those set out in subsections (b), (c), and (d).

Be sure to submit written instructions. See Howarth v Maroney (1964) 228 CA2d 116, 126, 39 CR 260 (criticizing oral instructions). This is particularly important if the original instructions you submitted in writing are changed or altered orally at the instruction conference. If this occurs, make the changes in writing and resubmit the instructions in their final form. If a court reporter has not made a record of the changes made, note why the modifications occurred.

All jury instructions, including those drafted by counsel, must be attached to the request for proposed jury instructions and must meet specific requirements. They must:

- Comply with rules governing papers to be filed. E.g., 8-1/2 by 11 inch pleading paper must be used, the body of the instruction reflecting statement of law must be double spaced. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1055(b)(1); see Cal Rules of Ct 2.100-2.119.
- Have a cover page including the case caption and identifying the party proposing the instructions. See Cal Rules of Ct 2.1055(b)(2).
- Have an index. The index must list all the proposed instructions, identify approved jury instructions by their numbers, and number special jury instructions consecutively. The index must include a checklist that the court may use to indicate whether the proposed instruction was:
- Given as proposed;
- Given as modified;
- Refused; or
- Withdrawn. See Cal Rules of Ct 2.1055(b)(3). For example of an index, see §20.81.
- Not be firmly bound, to make renumbering easy. See Cal Rules of Ct 2.1055(b).

Each proposed jury instruction should in the following format:

- Be on separate pages. Each jury instruction must be on a separate sheet of paper. CCP §607a. Cal Rule of Ct 2.1055(c)(1).
- Be typewritten. "Typewritten" includes papers prepared on computers and printed out on a separate sheet of paper (CCP §607a).
- Include the instruction number, the title of the instruction, and identify the party requesting the instruction at the top of the first page of the instruction. For example, the top of the instruction might read: "Plaintiff _ _[name]_ _; Instruction No. _ _[number]_ _." Indicating just below this the nature of the instruction allows the court and counsel to refer to the content of an instruction in a shorthand form even though it is not required (e.g., in an action based on interference with contractual relationships, the nature of the instruction might be "ELEMENTS OF INTERFERENCE"). (This heading is not read to the jury as part of the instruction.) See Cal Rules of Ct 2.1055(c). See also Connor v Pacific Greyhound Lines (1951) 104 CA2d 746, 758, 232 P2d 500. See §20.83 for sample instruction.
- Be prepared without any blank lines or unused bracketed portions. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1055(c)(3).
- Cite authorities. Citations supporting the statement of law in the instruction should appear below the body of the instruction. No citation is required for CACI instructions. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1055(d).

NOTE: No particular form of citation is required, but it is generally good practice to follow the system used by the California Supreme Court (see Jessen, Edward W., California Style Manual (4th ed 2000) or The Blue Book

Uniform System of Citation (18th ed 2005).

- Be numbered consecutively. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1055(b).

On preparing jury instructions that will be taken into the jury room, see §20.56.

B. Language of instructions

§20.21 1. Simple language preferred

Proposed jury instructions should be "accurate, brief, understandable, impartial and free from argument." Cal Rules of Ct 2.1050(e). They should contain accurate statements of law set forth in easy-to-understand terms and be as brief, concise, and clear as possible to avoid misleading the jury (see Guerra v Handlery Hotels, Inc. (1959) 53 C2d 266, 272, 1 CR 330).

CAUTION: When attempting to simplify jury instructions, do not oversimplify. Balance the need for simplicity against the need for instructions that state the law correctly. See §20.24.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/20 Jury Instructions/§20.22 2. Avoid technical language

§20.22 2. Avoid technical language

Use nontechnical language in jury instructions and use well-established, easily understood words. Nichols v Nelson (1927) 80 CA 590, 598, 252 P 739. Avoid complex words, Latin phrases, and terms of art whenever possible. Use short sentences that present the concepts in everyday terms.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.23 3. Gender-neutral language required

All jury instructions must be written in gender-neutral language. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1058. Counsel must recast instructions based on case opinions, when necessary, to meet this requirement.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.24 4. Proposed instruction must state law properly

Proposed jury instructions can cover only the following issues (CCP §607a):

- The law as disclosed by the pleadings;
- Questions of law developed by the evidence that were not disclosed by the pleadings; and
- Issues raised during argument that were not covered by instructions given or refused.

Counsel submitting proposed jury instructions must believe they properly state the law. People v Davenport (1966) 240 CA2d 341, 347, 49 CR 575. The court has a duty to reject a proposed instruction that incorrectly states the law. Werkman v Howard Zink Corp. (1950) 97 CA2d 418, 427, 218 P2d 43. Similarly, the court may refuse to give proposed instructions that are misleading or incomplete statements of the law. Levy-Zentner Co. v Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1977) 74 CA3d 762, 782, 142 CR 1. If the court gives an instruction that is incorrect in the law, it can lead to reversible error. Pappert v San Diego Gas & Elec. Co. (1982) 137 CA3d 205, 211, 186 CR 847. This is true even if a party withdraws an objection to an erroneous instruction. Huffman v Interstate Brands Corp. (2004) 121 CA4th 679, 706, 17 CR3d 397 (when instruction involves misstatement of law on burden of proof, not invited error to withdraw objection to instruction).

A party does not have a right to have the jury instructed in any particular phraseology. Byrum v Brand (1990) 219 CA3d 926, 939, 268 CR 609; Hyatt v Sierra Boat Co. (1978) 79 CA3d 325, 335, 145 CR 47. If the court correctly gives the substance of the law, a party may not complain on the ground that the party's requested instructions were refused. Hyatt v Sierra Boat Co., supra. See Dodge v San Diego Elec. Ry. (1949) 92 CA2d 759, 763, 208 P2d 37.

NOTE: It is good practice to limit the subject matter of each instruction to one point of law, keeping in mind that repetitious instructions can be a source of error. See §§20.63-20.64. On objectionable instructions generally, see §§20.60-20.70.

§20.25 C. Sources of law for jury instructions

Although jury instructions are generally based on statutory law and court opinions, do not overlook other sources, e.g., treatises, hornbooks, form books containing instructions, and the various restatements of law, when drafting original instructions. See §20.28.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.26 1. Statutes: Verbatim quotations preferred to paraphrasing

As a rule, when a proposed jury instruction is based on a statute, quote the statute verbatim; do not paraphrase or restate it in different language. See Reilly v California St. Cable R.R. (1946) 76 CA2d 620, 629, 173 P2d 872; Formosa v Yellow Cab Co. (1939) 31 CA2d 77, 84, 87 P2d 716. It may be error to depart from the strict language of a statute when it declares a rule of law (7 Witkin, California Procedure, Trial §268 (5th ed 2008)), but it is legitimate to "ellipse out" surplus language as long as the statute's meaning is not altered.

If the code language is confusing or couched in legal terms, explanatory or definitional instructions may be necessary and should be given. See Lourence v West Side Irrig. Dist. (1965) 233 CA2d 532, 538, 43 CR 889 (court of appeal criticized giving of instruction quoting from California Constitution without any explanatory instructions; court noted that jurors should be given instructions in statute's language only if they would have no difficulty understanding it without guidance from court); Formosa v Yellow Cab Co., supra (no error in refusal to give explanatory instructions when Vehicle Code language was clear). See also Harris v Belton (1968) 258 CA2d 595, 609, 65 CR 808 (trial court properly modified nearly verbatim quotations of state and federal health codes, and deleted unnecessary definitions, to clarify instruction for jury).

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.27 2. Court opinions: Verbatim excerpts not recommended

It is not a good idea to take excerpts from judicial opinions and indiscriminately change them into jury instructions, because the result can be instructions that contain misleading or improper statements of the law as they apply to the specific case. Drake v Dean (1993) 15 CA4th 915, 924, 19 CR2d 325 (instruction quoting appellate opinion accurately was prejudicial because it was procedurally inapposite case and its use was misleading in this case). See Fierro v International Harvester Co. (1982) 127 CA3d 862, 867, 179 CR 923 (direct quotations from opinions rarely produce satisfactory jury instructions); Ernest W. Hahn, Inc. v Sunshield Insulation Co. (1977) 68 CA3d 1018, 1023, 137 CR 732 (proposed instruction containing definition of "active negligence" from California Supreme Court opinion properly refused).

Even when a statement in an opinion is made a general rule, it is drafted with the particular case in mind and may not apply in another case. Tait v City & County of San Francisco (1956) 143 CA2d 787, 792, 300 P2d 74. See Reagh v San Francisco Unified Sch. Dist. (1953) 119 CA2d 65, 73, 259 P2d 43. See also Merritt v Reserve Ins. Co. (1973) 34 CA3d 858, 876 n5, 110 CR 511.

When the facts of a cited case are substantially similar to facts in the case being tried, counsel may still want to use a verbatim excerpt from a judicial opinion as a basis for a proposed jury instruction. See Kline v J. C. Penney Co. (1957) 153 CA2d 717, 720, 314 P2d 989 (upholding use of proposed jury instruction taken verbatim from appellate opinion involving similar underlying facts; court noted that quotation in proposed jury instruction appeared applicable to substantially similar set of facts and was not indiscriminate use of excerpt from another decision). See also Sprague v Equifax, Inc. (1985) 166 CA3d 1012, 1049, 213 CR 69 (court held that instructions that included language from appellate opinions were proper because they were not argumentative or dangerously vague and would not mislead jury).

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: The conference at which jury instructions are discussed, particularly non-CACI instructions, is a critical part of the trial. Counsel should be prepared to argue their position without delay, hesitation, or uncertainty.

§20.28 3. Miscellaneous: Form books, program materials, hornbooks, dictionaries

Sample jury instructions that include authorities can be found online, in form books, practice books, and program materials. The following is a partial list of such sources in California:

- The approved CACI instructions may be found in pdf format at the California courts' website: http://www.courtinfo.ca.gov.
- BAJI covers general instructions, substantive law instructions, and damage instructions.
- California Forms of Jury Instructions (2d ed 1996) includes general instructions and form instructions for breach of contract, business torts, claims arising from debtor-creditor relations, real property actions, and other civil topics usually not found in BAJI.

If unable to locate applicable form instructions, statutes, or court opinions, consider checking treatises, hornbooks, and dictionary definitions. These sources, however, although recognized, may not be accepted as readily by judges.

§20.29 D. Effect of parties' failure to comply with format and content requirements

The court may refuse proposed instructions, except those required by law, that fail to comply with statutory requirements or court rules. The California Judicial Council Advisory Committee report on changes to Cal Rules of Ct 2.1055 states that the court should note the reason for the refusal on the record. The report also states that the court would have the option of indicating the reason for refusal on the jury instruction index. Judicial Council, Jury Instructions: Format for Proposed Instructions (Nov. 17, 2003). On index requirement, see Cal Rules of Ct 2.1055(b)(2), discussed in §20.20. On refusal of jury instruction, see §§20.44-20.46.

Although the court ordinarily has no duty to instruct in the absence of a party's specific request, there is an exception to this rule when there is a complete failure to instruct on a material issue and a controlling legal principle. Agarwal v Johnson (1979) 25 C3d 932, 951, 160 CR 141, disapproved on other grounds in White v Ultramar, Inc. (1999) 21 C4th 563, 88 CR2d 19; Paverud v Niagara Mach. & Tool Works (1987) 189 CA3d 858, 863, 234 CR 585, disapproved on other grounds in Soule v General Motors Corp. (1994) 8 C4th 548, 574, 34 CR2d 607. It is therefore the duty of the court to properly instruct the jury on such controlling legal principles even if the parties submitted faulty or inadequate instructions. Lysick v Walcom (1968) 258 CA2d 136, 157, 65 CR 406. See §20.6.

The court also has a duty to craft its own instructions when the jury has expressed confusion and when modifying proffered instructions will not cure the problem. Smith v David (1981) 120 CA3d 101, 109, 176 CR 112.

IV. ORGANIZING JURY INSTRUCTIONS

A. Sequence of instructions

§20.30 1. Organize instructions in logical order

Jury instructions logically fall into sequential order as well as into categories of subject matter. Therefore, the jury's understanding of the instructions may be enhanced if the instructions are given in a logical sequence.

PRACTICE TIP: Compile the instructions in the most logical order and ask the court to give the instructions in that order. Although the court has the final word on the sequence of instructions, a thoughtful presentation can save the court's time and persuade the judge to give the proposed instructions as compiled. See §20.31.

For example, counsel might group proposed jury instructions in the following order, rather than in sequential order of CACI numbers:

- Introductory instructions;
- Duties of the court;
- Duties of jurors;
- Evidence and witnesses;
- Burden of proof;
- Issues and substantive law (including damages); and
- Concluding instructions.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.31 2. Judge has discretion to give instructions in particular order

The order in which the trial court reads instructions to the jury is within the court's discretion. Ritchey v Watson (1928) 204 C 387, 390, 268 P 345; Nungaray v Pleasant Valley Lima Bean Growers & Warehouse Ass'n (1956) 142 CA2d 653, 661, 300 P2d 285. In fact, when instructions are given to the jury, an instruction is generally included that tells the jury to consider the instructions as a whole—regarding each in light of all the others. See CACI 5000.

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Using instructions in the alternative

§20.32 1. Prepare alternative instructions on important legal issues

Many attorneys prepare alternative instructions for important points of law that can be stated in various ways without error. When submitting instructions, counsel can submit a proposed instruction that presents the most favorable view of the law for the client together with proposed backup instructions. To preserve the record for appeal, indicate on the alternative instruction the reason the less favorable instruction is submitted as an alternative to another instruction.

EXAMPLE: On the bottom of the first proposed alternative instruction, the following notation can be made: "Plaintiff's instruction No. 20 is submitted as an alternative to plaintiff's instruction No. 19 because [insert reason]. No. 20 is only to be given if No. 19 is rejected. Both should not be read."

Counsel may make similar notations for additional alternative instructions.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.33 2. Doctrine of invited error may bar alternative instruction

Under the doctrine of invited error, a party cannot complain to the court of appeal of an error induced by the party's own conduct. Mary M. v City of Los Angeles (1991) 54 C3d 202, 225, 285 CR 99. See also §§20.75-20.78 for further discussion of this doctrine. Thus, a party cannot seek reversal if the court gave an improper instruction which that party requested. Stevens v Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1996) 49 CA4th 1645, 57 CR2d 525 (court of appeal affirmed judgment and held that defendant was barred by the doctrine of invited error from arguing that the jury was prohibited from awarding lost pension benefits as economic damages to decedent's estate because defendant had invited the error based on the jury instructions it submitted); Miller v Kennedy (1987) 196 CA3d 141, 146, 241 CR 472.

The application of the doctrine of invited error can be barred if the party preparing the instructions prepares proposed alternative instructions. See Huebotter v Follett (1946) 27 C2d 765, 167 P2d 193; Electronic Equip. Express, Inc. v Donald H. Seiler & Co. (1981) 122 CA3d 834, 856, 176 CR 239 (although appellant offered an alternative instruction, appellant did not object to court's definition, so error was waived). See §20.32.

PRACTICE TIP: Consider submitting alternative instructions to highlight your concern about a particular point of law. Experienced trial lawyers sometimes refrain from submitting alternative instructions until the judge refuses to give their first proposed instruction at the time for settling instructions. However, this move can be risky because under CCP §607a instructions dealing with the law as disclosed by the pleadings that are submitted after the first witness is sworn are technically considered late, and the judge has discretion to refuse to give them on that ground. See §20.35. Also, if an instruction is offered late, the judge may not give the instruction the consideration it deserves. Before you delay presenting alternative instructions, try to find out whether the judge will refuse to consider proposed alternative instructions tendered at a later time. On time for submission and service of instructions generally, see §§20.34-20.36.

© The Regents of the University of California

V. TIME REQUIREMENTS

§20.34 A. Time for submission depends on subject matter of instruction

Jury instructions must be submitted to the court in accordance with the time requirements of CCP §607a or as required by local rules or the particular practices of the court. These requirements vary depending on the subject matter of the instruction:

Issues disclosed by pleadings. Instructions covering the law as disclosed by the pleadings must be delivered by counsel to the trial judge and served on opposing counsel before the first witness is sworn. CCP §607a.

Issues developed by the evidence. Instructions on questions of law developed by the evidence that are not disclosed by the pleadings may be delivered to counsel and served on opposing counsel after the first witness is sworn and before commencement of argument. CCP §607a.

Issues raised during argument. Instructions on issues raised during argument that were not covered by instructions given or refused may be submitted on request of counsel to the court and served on opposing counsel following argument. CCP §607a.

A party is entitled to instructions on presentation of slight evidence, even if the evidence is "opposed to the preponderance of the evidence." Bernal v Richard Wolf Med. Instruments Corp. (1990) 221 CA3d 1326, 1338, 272 CR 41, disapproved on other grounds in Soule v General Motors Corp. (1994) 8 C4th 548, 574, 34 CR2d 607. See also Bihun v AT&T Info. Sys., Inc. (1993) 13 CA4th 976, 992, 16 CR2d 787 (party entitled to have instruction on willful suppression of evidence when only circumstantial evidence showed suppression of two relevant personnel files), disapproved on other grounds in Lakin v Watkins Assoc. Indus. (1993) 6 C4th 644, 25 CR2d 109.

PRACTICE TIP: In addition to the requirements of CCP §607a, local practice varies on the time to submit jury instructions. For example:

- San Diego Ct, Div II, R 2.1.16 provides for delivery to the trial judge of all jury instructions on the "scheduled trial date."
- Los Angeles Ct R 7.9(h) requires that jury instruction requests be filed and exchanged at least 5 days before the final status conference.
- San Francisco Ct R 6.4 requires counsel to deliver proposed instructions to the judge on the day of assignment to trial department. Within 2 court days thereafter, counsel must meet and confer and notify judge which instructions are agreed on.

NOTE: Under Govt C §68106 (b)(1), effective July 28, 2009, and operative through June 30, 2010, if a court is closed as the result of a budget reduction measure in response to the state fiscal crisis, the day is considered a holiday and not a court day.

PRACTICE TIP: Become familiar with the individual practices and policies of the trial judge on the time to submit instructions because individual practices vary. Check with the court clerk to learn when the judge trying the case wants proposed instructions submitted. For additional ideas, see discussion of chambers conferences in §§6.2-6.4.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.35 B. Late submission of jury instructions within court's discretion

The court has discretion to give or refuse late jury instructions despite the time requirements of CCP §607a. See Wilson v Gilbert (1972) 25 CA3d 607, 613, 102 CR 31; Young v Carlson (1954) 128 CA2d 743, 746, 276 P2d 23.

Nevertheless, try to submit proposed jury instructions on time and not rely on the court to exercise this discretion. §§20.44-20.46.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Obviously, there can be certain unforeseen circumstances that require late submission of jury instructions and most experienced judges will recognize such cases and allow them when appropriate.

VI. COURT'S RESPONSIBILITY ON JURY INSTRUCTIONS

A. When sua sponte instructions are required

§20.37 1. Sua sponte defined

Instructions given on the court's own motion are called sua sponte instructions. In a civil case, the court ordinarily has no duty to give an instruction on a subject if none is proposed by the parties. Pool v City of Oakland (1986) 42 C3d 1051, 1066, 232 CR 528; Willden v Washington Nat'l Ins. Co. (1976) 18 C3d 631, 636, 135 CR 69. The court's duty to instruct sua sponte arises only if the parties fail to provide instructions on "controlling legal principles" that are raised by the pleadings. Herbert v Lankershim (1937) 9 C2d 409, 482, 71 P2d 220; Paverud v Niagara Mach. & Tool Works (1987) 189 CA3d 858, 863, 234 CR 585, disapproved on other grounds in Soule v General Motors Corp. (1994) 8 C4th 548, 574, 34 CR2d 607. See §20.6.

If the parties fail to provide instructions on "controlling legal principles," the court must instruct sua sponte on these issues. The court's failure to do so may be reversible error. Paverud v Niagra Mach. & Tool Works, supra (reversible error when court failed to instruct on superseding cause).

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Naturally judges prefer that counsel provide the instructions; however, most courts are ready to step forward and give instructions when necessary.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.38 2. Court has discretion to instruct

On its own motion, a court may instruct the jury on all matters of law necessary for the jurors to arrive at a verdict and can add any additional instructions to those proposed. CCP §§607a, 608; Alwood v City of Los Angeles (1956) 139 CA2d 49, 65, 293 P2d 69; Jennings v Arata (1948) 83 CA2d 143, 146, 188 P2d 298. The court is also free to modify jury instructions. See Byrum v Brand (1990) 219 CA3d 926, 939, 268 CR 609.

PRACTICE TIP: Do not rely on the court to give an instruction that has not been requested. A party who fails to request specific proper instructions is precluded on appeal from complaining about the trial court's failure to instruct on that issue unless a controlling legal principle was involved. See Paverud v Niagara Mach. & Tool Works (1987) 189 CA3d 858, 863, 234 CR 585 (court has no duty to instruct jury without specific request to do so unless counsel completely failed to instruct on material issue and on controlling legal principle), disapproved on other grounds in Soule v General Motors Corp. (1994) 8 C4th 548, 574, 34 CR2d 607.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.39 3. Form of sua sponte instructions

There are no statutory rules for the form that instructions proposed by the court (sua sponte instructions) should take, except that, on a party's request, the court must put all court-proposed, or sua sponte, instructions in writing. CCP §608.

Even without a request, the court should put its instructions in writing both for counsel's use and benefit and for the court's own use in giving instructions to the jurors. See People v Danielson (1992) 3 C4th 691, 13 CR2d 1, overruled on other grounds in Price v Superior Court (2001) 25 C4th 1046, 1069 n13, 108 CR2d 409; Howarth v Maroney (1964) 228 CA2d 116, 126, 39 CR 260 (criticizing court's practice of giving extemporaneous oral instructions).

The language and applicability of the sua sponte instructions should be discussed among counsel and the judge. This discussion usually occurs at the chambers conference. The court decides whether to redraft the instructions, modify them, or keep them as written. The instructions then become part of the total package of instructions the court will give the jury.

B. Correcting or modifying erroneous instructions

§20.40 1. Generally no duty to modify or correct

The trial court generally has no duty to modify or correct erroneous, misleading, or incomplete instructions as long as the jury is properly instructed on the law. See Orient Handel v United States Fid. & Guar. Co. (1987) 192 CA3d 684, 698, 237 CR 667 (citing Wank v Richman & Garrett (1985) 165 CA3d 1103, 1113, 211 CR 919). See Fleming v Safeco Ins. Co. (1984) 160 CA3d 31, 40, 206 CR 313 (instruction requested was incomplete and misleading; trial court had no duty to give instruction or modify it on its own motion).

The court has discretion to either reject defective instructions (see Rogers v County of Los Angeles (1974) 39 CA3d 857, 862, 114 CR 540) or to correct or modify them (see Byrum v Brand (1990) 219 CA3d 926, 939, 268 CR 609. A party proposing instructions has the responsibility to see that those instructions are correct. See Hyatt v Sierra Boat Co. (1978) 79 CA3d 325, 335, 145 CR 47.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/20 Jury Instructions/§20.41 2. Exception

§20.41 2. Exception

The court has a duty to correct instructions in the following circumstances:

- When the parties propose incomplete jury instructions;
- When the court does not propose its own instructions; and
- When the jury will not be instructed on controlling legal principles if the court does not correct or modify the proposed instructions.

Herbert v Lankershim (1937) 9 C2d 409, 482, 71 P2d 220. See Smith v David (1981) 120 CA3d 101, 109, 176 CR 112 (trial court had duty to modify proffered instructions when jury asked questions during their deliberations that indicated confusion, and minor modifications of instructions would have made them usable). See also Kelly v Trans Globe Travel Bureau, Inc. (1976) 60 CA3d 195, 204, 131 CR 488 (trial court had duty to give proposed instruction or to modify it by eliminating surplusage).

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Hearing and ruling on instructions

§20.42 1. Court's duties at chambers conference before final argument

Under CCP §607a, the trial court, if requested by counsel, must accomplish the following duties regarding jury instructions before the final argument begins:

- Decide which proposed instructions to give, refuse, or modify;
- Decide which instructions to give in addition to those proposed; and
- Advise counsel of all instructions that will be given.

See also CCP §609.

These duties are generally carried out at the chambers conference, which is held outside the jury's presence to settle the instructions before final argument. See §6.2. At this conference, counsel and the judge discuss which instructions to give and how they should be phrased. Ultimately, the judge decides which instructions to give, refuse, or modify.

NOTE: Before the conference, all counsel should meet and review their instructions and decide which instructions they agree on. If this is done, the chambers conference can proceed more efficiently because the court can focus primarily on the instructions on which counsel disagree.

Counsel must be wary, however, about agreeing (often at the judge's request) to modify his or her proposed instructions or to giving instructions proposed by the adverse party. If counsel agrees, this may constitute a waiver of the right to argue error on appeal. See Orient Handel v United States Fid. & Guar. Co. (1987) 192 CA3d 684, 699, 237 CR 667 (aggrieved party must request proper instruction in order to complain of failure to instruct on particular issue.) See also Bernal v Richard Wolf Med. Instruments Corp. (1990) 221 CA3d 1326, 1337, 272 CR 41 (oral objection and orally proposed modification to jury instructions preserve error for appeal), disapproved on other grounds in Soule v General Motors Corp. (1994) 8 C4th 548, 574, 34 CR2d 607.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.43 2. Court reporter should be present at chambers conference

Request that a court reporter be present at the chambers conference, although it is not required that one attend. Then, if any question arises on appeal as to what argument counsel presented to the court regarding particular instructions, the record is preserved. The court usually determines at this conference which verdict and special finding forms, if any, will be submitted to the jury.

Some trial judges refuse to allow lengthy conferences on instructions to be recorded. If this occurs, request at the close of the conference that counsel be permitted to state their objections on the record and file any proposed modifications or alternative instructions with the clerk. In the unlikely event this option is not available, prepare and file a short formal pleading noting specific objections and attaching any proposed, revised, or alternative instructions. If an inadequate record is made and counsel moves forward, counsel may find that significant claims of instructional error are deemed irrelevant by an appellate court. For further discussion of protecting the record, see §20.58.

Very few courts subject their reporters to the burden of reporting the often spirited and sometimes informal colloquy of a chambers discussion. It is essential, however, that counsel note their particular concerns on the record later.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.44 3. Court's refusal of instruction

A judge may refuse to give proposed instructions for lateness, for defects in format (see §20.29), or for any other reason unless the proposed instruction is "required by law" (i.e., an instruction on a controlling legal principle; see §20.61).

If an instruction is required by law, the court cannot refuse it even if it is late or has format defects. See Ng v Hudson (1977) 75 CA3d 250, 257, 142 CR 69 (trial judge entered minute order refusing plaintiff's oral request for BAJI instruction; court of appeal held refusal was prejudicial error necessitating reversal because refusal of instruction meant jury would not be instructed on material issue), disapproved on other grounds in Soule v General Motors Corp. (1994) 8 C4th 548, 574, 34 CR2d 607.

The former requirement that the judge endorse the reason for refusal on each refused instruction has been repealed. See Cal Rules of Ct 2.1055. Instead, the trial court may indicate the reason for the ruling on the index submitted with all proposed jury instructions (see Cal Rules of Ct 2.1055(b)) or may note the information on the record. Judicial Council, Jury Instructions: Format for Proposed Instructions (Nov. 17, 2003) (endorsement requirement was unduly burdensome; better and more common practice is to note the information on the record; court has option of indicating its ruling on the index).

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel should monitor the disposition of proposed instructions to make certain the judge provides a reason for the refusal on the record or in the index, to ensure that the appellate record is accurate and complete.

§20.45 a. Court need not endorse reason for refusal on instruction

The judge is not required to endorse on the proposed instruction the reason for refusing the instruction. See Cal Rules of Ct 2.1055. See §20.29.

§20.46 b. Consequences of court's failure to endorse

Although the judge is not required to endorse on the proposed instruction the reason for refusing the instruction (see Cal Rules of Ct 2.1055; §20.29), to ensure that the appellate record is accurate and complete, counsel should monitor the disposition of proposed instructions to make certain the judge provides a reason for the refusal.

D. Instructing jury during trial

§20.47 1. Timing within court's discretion

Traditionally, courts have given instructions to the jury after final argument. CCP §607(9). Lately, however, an increasing number of judges give some instructions earlier in the trial or at various stages during the trial. See Los Angeles Ct R 8.51 (gives counsel option of having instructions read at different times during trial).

Doing so is called "preinstructing" the jury and is within the trial judge's discretion. See McShane v Cleaver (1966) 247 CA2d 260, 265, 55 CR 427 (court impliedly sanctioned preinstruction before opening statement in absence of objection that it violates CCP §607(9)). Compare McShane with Kelly v Trans Globe Travel Bureau, Inc. (1976) 60 CA3d 195, 203, 131 CR 488 (appellate court found trial judge's preinstruction was error because it misled jury on applicable legal principles; but court also noted that preinstruction during voir dire may be desirable if it is fair and accurate).

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.48 2. Before deliberations

"Preinstruction" has been permitted during voir dire and throughout trial as long as the instructions are not prejudicial. For example, some judges give selective instructions of a general nature at the beginning of trial before the presentation of any evidence. These may include, e.g., instructions on the judge's role, the jury's role, issues to be determined, methods of judging witnesses' credibility, types of evidence (e.g., circumstantial or direct), the significance of counsel's statements, and the effect of court rulings. See McShane v Cleaver (1966) 247 CA2d 260, 265, 55 CR 427.

PRACTICE TIP: Before trial begins, determine whether the trial judge plans to preinstruct and consider whether to ask for or to oppose preinstruction. Preinstructing the jury on the law of the case before evidence is presented (and possibly during the trial) can be prejudicial and objectionable. Before evidence is introduced, the court and counsel do not ordinarily know what issues will go to the jury.

In addition, if instructions are given on various theories, the jury may give undue weight to evidence that is admitted afterwards. When confronted with this situation, object if preinstruction may be prejudicial. Failure to make a timely objection waives the right to challenge the propriety of giving such instructions on appeal. Westover v City of Los Angeles (1942) 20 C2d 635, 639, 128 P2d 350 (judge instructed jury on certain principles of law in general terms before commencement of trial, believing that clarification of law before hearing evidence would be helpful to them). See Linder v Cooley (1963) 216 CA2d 390, 394, 31 CR 271.

PRACTICE TIP: Ascertain whether there are any local court rules or policies on preinstruction. See Los Angeles Ct R 8.51 for list of issues permissible for preinstruction and rules on when preinstruction can occur (i.e., instructions, except concluding instructions, are permitted before final argument begins).

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.49 3. During trial

Some judges give selected instructions to the jury as the need arises during trial. For example, before deposition testimony is presented, some courts instruct the jurors (1) on the nature of a deposition and (2) that they must consider deposition testimony as if it had been given in court. When evidence is admitted for a limited purpose or against a particular party, the court may also instruct the jury at the time it is admitted.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.50 4. Immediately before final argument

Some judges prefer to instruct before final argument. If a judge is inclined to do this, defense counsel should ensure that the judge saves some instructions for after plaintiff's concluding argument. Otherwise, plaintiff's concluding argument will be the last thing that the jury hears before deliberations.

On preinstructing in a criminal case, see People v Valenzuela (1977) 76 CA3d 218, 142 CR 655; People v Chung (1997) 57 CA4th 755, 758, 67 CR2d 337.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.51 5. Case examples of reversible error by court relating to jury instructions

EXAMPLE 1: Court's refusal to permit rereading of all instructions on negligence was reversible error on appeal when court only permitted rereading of some instructions. Davis v Erickson (1960) 53 C2d 860, 863, 3 CR 567.

EXAMPLE 2: Question from jury indicated confusion on two issues for which no instructions had been offered or given; court's failure to give appropriate instructions on these issues after learning of confusion was reversible error. Bartosh v Banning (1967) 251 CA2d 378, 387, 59 CR 382.

EXAMPLE 3: Court's refusal to give instruction proposed by defendant, which would have responded to question by jury, and court's subsequent decision to reread an instruction that had already been given and that provided no help constituted reversible error because court failed to provide legal guidance on the confusing issue. Sesler v Ghumman (1990) 219 CA3d 218, 227, 268 CR 70. But see §20.37 on court's ordinarily having no duty to give an instruction if none is proposed by a party.

VII. REINSTRUCTION OF JURY DURING DELIBERATIONS

§20.52 A. Permitted only if requested by jury

If the jurors disagree during deliberations on any part of the testimony or wish to be informed on any point of law in the case, they may request to be brought into court and provided with additional information. CCP §614. Such information may include rereading instructions or testimony or reading newly proposed instructions.

Strict compliance with the mandatory language of CCP §614 is required, and failure to comply with the jury's request to reread instructions is reversible error. Davis v Erickson (1960) 53 C2d 860, 3 CR 567 (jury's request for rereading of all instructions on negligence proper in negligence action; court's failure to do so was prejudicial error); Asplund v Driskell (1964) 225 CA2d 705, 712, 37 CR 652 (court accurately interpreted jury's request to reread certain instructions on negligence and proximate cause while refusing to reread all general instructions on negligence).

The court must provide additional instructions if the jury indicates confusion on the law. Smith v David (1981) 120 CA3d 101, 109, 176 CR 112; Kelly v Trans Globe Travel Bureau, Inc. (1976) 60 CA3d 195, 204, 131 CR 488.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.53 1. Meet with judge before reinstruction

When the jury asks for information on a point of law during its deliberations, first meet with the judge out of the jury's presence to learn precisely how the judge will respond.

PRACTICE TIP: If you have any objections, ask the judge to allow you to state them on the record out of the jury's presence rather than requiring you to object in front of the jury. Also object to protect the record, if (a) the judge deviates from the instructions that the judge stated he or she would give or (b) what is said or presented to the jury is prejudicial. A court need not respond to a juror's question during deliberations that would require the court to develop new instructions if the question involves philosophical, moral, or irrelevant issues. Ashcraft v King (1991) 228 CA3d 604, 617, 278 CR 900.

After the jurors are brought into court, they must be given the requested information in the presence of the parties or counsel or after notice to them. The judge need not be present while testimony previously received into evidence is read to the jury. CCP §614.5.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Often a conference with counsel outside the presence of the jury is sufficient to modify or clarify the troubling language, thus avoiding the need to reassemble the jurors in the courtroom.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.54 2. Court can give omitted instructions sua sponte

A party is not entitled to have jury instructions reread that are not requested by the jury. Gray v Wagner (1969) 272 CA2d 671, 77 CR 608. If an instruction was inadvertently omitted, a court on its own motion may recall the jury to give that instruction. See Weirum v RKO Gen., Inc. (1975) 15 C3d 40, 50, 123 CR 468.

To avoid the danger of overemphasizing such an instruction, the court may (a) admonish the jurors not to attach any particular emphasis to the fact that it is reading an instruction that was inadvertently omitted in the initial reading of the instructions, or (b) reread all the instructions. Weirum v RKO Gen., Inc., supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.55 B. Court can assist in jury deliberations

In breaking a jury deadlock, the court may, in the presence of counsel, advise the jury of its duty to decide the case based on the evidence and with an open mind, and ask the jury whether it has specific concerns that, if resolved, might assist them in reaching a verdict. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1036(a). If the court finds that further action might assist the jury, the judge may give additional instructions or clarify previous instructions. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1036(b). See also People v Guilmette (1991) 1 CA4th 1534, 1542, 2 CR2d 750 (when jury requests reinstruction, court may, but need not, provide clarifying instructions); People v Thomas (1991) 231 CA3d 299, 282 CR 258 (court may require jury to consider whether it needs further instruction). Through reinstruction, the court can amplify certain issues and define the terms in key instructions. The court may also assist the jury at impasse by permitting counsel to make additional closing arguments. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1036(b)(3).

When a jury is unable to agree on the first issue of a special verdict, the court may ask the jury to skip over that question and consider the second issue, if that issue could be dispositive of the entire action. Santiago v Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1990) 224 CA3d 1318, 1335, 274 CR 576.

On the jury's request, the court must send a copy of written instructions into the jury room. CCP §612.5; see §20.56.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.56 C. Counsel's preparation of jury instructions to go to jury room: "Clean" copy preferred

The court is required to tell the jury at the time they retire for deliberations that a written copy of all jury instructions is available. CCP §612.5. The court has discretion to give the jury a written copy of the written instructions at any time; however, the court must supply a copy of the written instructions if the jury requests them.

When a copy of written instructions will be sent to the jury room, make certain that no instruction contains the case number, title, citation of authorities, history, or proposing party's name. In addition, stricken portions should be totally obliterated and additions completely legible. See Los Angeles Ct R 8.52. It is preferable that the jury sees clean copies of the instructions without obvious deletions or additions. If possible, have new copies of the instructions printed out if the jury insists on seeing them. On making copies for each juror, see §21.31.

PRACTICE TIP: If one instruction is to be sent to the jury room, request that all instructions be sent to prevent undue emphasis on some instructions. If fewer than all instructions are sent into the jury room, the record should show which ones were sent.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/20 Jury Instructions/ VIII. PREPARING OBJECTIONS TO OPPONENT'S JURY INSTRUCTIONS AND THOSE PREPARED BY THE COURT/§20.57 A. When and how to object

VIII. PREPARING OBJECTIONS TO OPPONENT'S JURY INSTRUCTIONS AND THOSE PREPARED BY THE COURT

§20.57 A. When and how to object

Carefully examine the instructions proposed by opposing counsel as well as those the court intends to give on its own motion. Although many of these instructions will be unobjectionable, others will be contrary to the client's interest. If possible, prepare an objection to each such instruction. Objections should be made in writing if time permits, but objections are generally made orally because of time constraints.

The most common objections to improper instructions are discussed in §§20.60-20.70.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.58 B. Protecting the record

A complete record is necessary before the instructional error will be considered on appeal. See Null v City of Los Angeles (1988) 206 CA3d 1528, 1534, 254 CR 492. Appellant has the burden of presenting a sufficiently complete record to establish that any alleged errors were not invited by appellant. See Gulliford v Pierce County (9th Cir 1998) 136 F3d 1345, 1348 (holding objection to jury instruction, by proposing legally accurate jury instruction and orally stating objection at trial, adequately preserves record on appeal).

Be prepared to object to every instruction that counsel does not agree with and to state precisely the reason for the objection despite the protection of CCP §647. See §§20.73-20.74 on the automatic exception rule under §647. If the instruction fails to properly state the controlling law, is incomplete, or needs to be qualified or modified, offer a correct instruction to make sure that all grounds of error are preserved.

Counsel must preserve the trial record by ensuring that:

- The proposed instructions are proper;
- The form requirements are met;
- The party originating or proposing the instruction is documented in the record; and
- The disposition of each instruction (given, refused, modified, or withdrawn) is accurately reflected, including all modifications that were made, and who requested them. See form instructions in §§20.82-20.83.

CAUTION: In Phillips v Noble (1958) 50 C2d 163, 168, 323 P2d 385, plaintiff claimed court modifications of two instructions rendered them uncertain and erroneous, but the record did not include the instructions in the form requested by plaintiff. The supreme court held that plaintiff, as appellant, had failed to satisfy the burden of presenting a sufficiently complete record to establish that he had not invited the error.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/20 Jury Instructions/§20.59 C. Proper documentation of error

§20.59 C. Proper documentation of error

Document on the record other aspects of the trial that bear on the issue of reversible error. For example, find out:

- Whether the jury came back for reinstruction. If so, request that the instructions given to the jury be preserved. Also, confirm how often the jurors came back for reinstruction, what they asked about, and whether they were confused. This can be done orally. Check with the clerk to see how minutes of jury deliberations are created, get a copy of the minutes, and put them into the record. In addition, ask the court to poll the jury on each issue.
- The length of the jurors' deliberations and their final split on the verdict. The closer the case, the more likely a court of appeal will find that an error in instructions was reversible. A bare minimum verdict (e.g., 9-3 or 6-2) is evidence that error in jury instruction was significant. LeMons v Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1978) 21 C3d 869, 876, 148 CR 355; Robinson v Cable (1961) 55 C2d 425, 428, 11 CR 377.

After getting the answers to these questions, make sure this information is in the record.

© The Regents of the University of California

D. Objectionable instructions

§20.60 1. Inaccurate statements of law

Instructions that do not accurately state the substantive law must be objected to and generally constitute grounds for reversal as long as they create prejudice. Sexton v Brooks (1952) 39 C2d 153, 245 P2d 496; Osborn v Mission Ready Mix (1990) 224 CA3d 104, 115, 273 CR 457. Modifications that render BAJI instructions less confusing under the facts of the case are proper. Martinez v Vintage Petroleum (1998) 68 CA4th 695, 702, 80 CR2d 449. It may even be error to deny modification in a proper case. Gutierrez v Cassiar Mining Corp. (1998) 64 CA4th 148, 155, 75 CR2d 132.

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Argumentative instructions

§20.61 a. Defined

It is error for the court to give an argumentative instruction. Slayton v Wright (1969) 271 CA2d 219, 238, 76 CR 494. An instruction is argumentative if it goes too elaborately into the facts relied on by a party instead of stating rules of law. Slayton v Wright, supra.

An argumentative instruction is improper because it unduly emphasizes a portion of the evidence and in effect puts the court in the position of making an argument to the jury. In addition, it misleads the jury. If the court mentions certain testimonial facts, the jury may believe that the court considers them to be important or true. Slayton v Wright, supra. See also Wank v Richman & Garrett (1985) 165 CA3d 1103, 1113, 211 CR 919 (argumentative, incomplete, and slanted instructions properly rejected).

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.62 b. Instruction should state rules of law, not argue evidence

In the instruction, state the rules of law in general terms, and do not elaborate on matters of evidence. Slayton v Wright (1969) 271 CA2d 219, 76 CR 494; Fibreboard Paper Prods. Corp. v East Bay Union of Machinists (1964) 227 CA2d 675, 718, 39 CR 64.

The court should not require a party to rely on abstract generalities in presenting its legal theory of the case to the jury but should instruct the jury on vital issues in terms that relate to the case before it. Sesler v Ghumman (1990) 219 CA3d 218, 225, 268 CR 70 (court of appeal held that trial court committed reversible error when it refused to give defendant's specific instruction that defined duty in context of facts in the case and instead gave more general BAJI instruction). Giving an instruction embodying a general rule does not justify refusing a more specific instruction that applies the rule to the particular circumstances of the case. Sesler v Ghumman, supra. On the court's generally having no duty to modify or correct instructions, see §20.37.

3. Repetitive instructions

§20.63 a. Defined

It is error to give an instruction that unduly emphasizes issues, theories, or defenses "by repetition or by singling them out or making them unduly prominent." Dodge v San Diego Elec. Ry. (1949) 92 CA2d 759, 764, 208 P2d 37. See Taha v Finegold (1947) 81 CA2d 536, 545, 184 P2d 533 (16 instructions to jury on duties of plaintiff; only 3 instructions on duties of defendant). See also Smith v Shankman (1962) 208 CA2d 177, 187, 25 CR 195.

The trial court can refuse to give a proposed instruction if it merely repeats other instructions. Deaile v General Tel. Co. (1974) 40 CA3d 841, 853, 115 CR 582. Hearing a series of instructions on the same point of law, with slight modifications, can prejudice the jury, which may conclude that the court considers this particular point to be of special importance.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.64 b. Reversible error results only if instruction caused prejudice

Giving repetitious instructions constitutes reversible error only if the instructions unduly emphasize issues, theories, or defenses. Fibreboard Paper Prods. Corp. v East Bay Union of Machinists (1964) 227 CA2d 675, 39 CR 64. By itself, repetition of a proposed instruction rarely constitutes reversible error. Stone v Foster (1980) 106 CA3d 334, 350, 164 CR 901. See Sprague v Equifax, Inc. (1985) 166 CA3d 1012, 1046, 213 CR 69 (appellant contended that quantity of instructions on conspiracy overemphasized that theory; court of appeal held no error if instructions are consistent with case's length and complexity, but cautioned jury from inferring that emphasis on conspiracy theory was intended). Compare Sprague with Taha v Finegold (1947) 81 CA2d 536, 544, 184 P2d 533 (court found prejudicial error based on cumulative effect of erroneous instructions—giving formula instructions, overemphasizing plaintiff's duties, and repeating certain instructions).

On the court's generally having no duty to modify or correct instructions, see §§20.40-20.41. On submitting alternative instructions, see §§20.32-20.33.

4. Formula instructions

§20.65 a. Defined

A formula instruction directs the jury to return a verdict in favor of a party if the jury decides that certain facts are true. Such an instruction often purports to state the facts applicable to the disposition of a particular matter followed by a statement such as the following: "If you find the stated facts to be true (or to exist), then you will find for plaintiff (or defendant)."

For examples of formula instructions, see Murrell v State ex rel Dep't of Pub. Works (1975) 47 CA3d 264, 268 n2, 120 CR 812 (trial court did not err in rejecting both formula instructions). See also 7 Witkin, California Procedure, Trial §313 (5th ed 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.66 b. Formula instructions criticized

Courts have frequently criticized the use of formula instructions. See Fibreboard Paper Prods. Corp. v East Bay Union of Machinists (1964) 227 CA2d 675, 719, 39 CR 64; Tice v Pacific Elec. Ry. (1939) 36 CA2d 66, 71, 96 P2d 1022. Formula instructions may unduly emphasize a party's case, and incomplete formula instructions often mislead the jury. Bertero v National Gen. Corp. (1974) 13 C3d 43, 58, 118 CR 184. Giving such instructions often amounts to an argument rather than a fair discussion of the law. Dodge v San Diego Elec. Ry. (1949) 92 CA2d 759, 764, 208 P2d 37. Such instructions are also hazardous because of their possible effect on the jury. They invite an affirmative (i.e., favorable) response to the formula, in much the same way as a leading question suggests the answer desired by the questioner.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.67 c. Exception: Formula instruction permitted if certain criteria satisfied

Formula instructions do not constitute prejudicial error if they state all the essential legal elements involved in a case or if other specific instructions cover elements omitted from the formula instruction. Compare Bertero v National Gen. Corp. (1974) 13 C3d 43, 58, 118 CR 184 (no reversal, because omitted element covered by another instruction (see also Godfrey v Steinpress (1982) 128 CA3d 154, 180, 180 CR 95)), with Hubbard v Calvin (1978) 83 CA3d 529, 534, 147 CR 905 (court found reversible error because formula instruction was based on incorrect premise, even though correct instruction was given in another part of instructions).

To determine whether giving an alleged formula instruction constitutes prejudicial error, the proper test is whether the instruction states all legal elements essential to a recovery and whether the omitted elements are covered by other, specific instructions. Bertero v National Gen. Corp., supra. As a method of implementing a discovery issues sanction under former CCP §2023(b)(2) (now CCP §2023.030(b)), the court may properly use instructions directing that a particular fact or issue has been demonstrated. Vallbona v Springer (1996) 43 CA4th 1525, 1548, 51 CR2d 311.

For further discussion, see 7 Witkin, California Procedure, Trial §§313-314 (5th ed 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.68 5. Conflicting or contradictory instructions

It is error for the court to give conflicting or contradictory instructions on a material point because it cannot be determined which instruction the jury followed in reaching its decision. Lewis v Franklin (1958) 161 CA2d 177, 185, 326 P2d 625. Giving conflicting instructions often warrants reversal. See Westberg v Willde (1939) 14 C2d 360, 371, 94 P2d 590.

If an erroneous instruction is given, it generally cannot be cured by giving a correct instruction if the result is a clear conflict in the instructions. Under this situation, it is impossible to know which instruction the jury followed to reach a verdict. Francis v City & County of San Francisco (1955) 44 C2d 335, 341, 282 P2d 496; Hargrave v Winquist (1982) 134 CA3d 916, 926, 185 CR 30. See Ferguson v Nakahara (1941) 43 CA2d 435, 442, 110 P2d 1091 (prejudicial effect of instruction containing principle of law that is materially incorrect ordinarily not cured by another instruction that correctly states law).

NOTE: It is not error for the court to give correct instructions on inconsistent causes of action or defenses even though they are in conflict. See Petersen v Rieschel (1953) 115 CA2d 758, 765, 252 P2d 986.

For further discussion, see 7 Witkin, California Procedure, Trial §308 (5th ed 2008). On the court's generally having no duty to correct or modify instructions, see §20.40.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.69 6. Irrelevant instructions

A jury instruction, even if it is a correct statement of the law, may still be improper if it is unrelated to the issues raised by the pleadings or unsupported by the evidence. Levy-Zentner Co. v Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1977) 74 CA3d 762, 783, 142 CR 1; Harpst v Kirkpatrick (1972) 26 CA3d 482, 487, 102 CR 621.

Jury instruction is unwarranted if, as a matter of law, not even slight or inconclusive evidence supports it. Wilkinson v Bayshore Lumber Co. (1986) 182 CA3d 594, 227 CR 327. Such an instruction is likely to mislead the jury and constitute prejudicial error. Traxler v Varady (1993) 12 CA4th 1321, 1328, 16 CR2d 297 (court properly rejected instruction as overbroad because party offered instruction citing several regulations as basis for negligence per se instruction but only two regulations were applicable); Dierks v Mitsubishi Motors Corp. (1989) 208 CA3d 352, 256 CR 230 (trial court properly denied requested jury instructions on strict liability and negligence when all of plaintiff's evidence and argument had been solely on design defect theories); DeGeorge v Crimmins (1967) 254 CA2d 544, 547, 62 CR 394. See also 7 Witkin, California Procedure, Trial §307 (5th ed 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.70 7. Fact-assuming instructions

A fact-assuming instruction assumes as true a fact introduced in the trial on which there is conflicting or contrary evidence. Sometimes this instruction takes the form of the court's telling the jury that a certain fact has been established.

Giving such an instruction is improper because it is the jury's responsibility to determine the facts of the case, not the court's. Clement v State Reclamation Bd. (1950) 35 C2d 628, 644, 220 P2d 897 (error to instruct jury as a matter of law on question of fact when there was conflicting evidence). However, if facts are admitted or uncontradicted and the jury can draw only one conclusion from the evidence, it is not error to instruct the jury on those facts. Smith v American Sur. Co. (1957) 148 CA2d 131, 134, 306 P2d 489 (agency instruction); Heple v Kluge (1952) 114 CA2d 473, 481, 250 P2d 694 (same).

IX. CORRECTING INSTRUCTIONAL ERRORS DURING TRIAL

§20.71 A. Erroneous instruction can be corrected by subsequently given correct instruction

Counsel can correct an error caused by an incorrect or misleading instruction by a subsequent correction of the instruction as long as the correction establishes for the jury that it must disregard the former incorrect instruction. Slayton v Wright (1969) 271 CA2d 219, 238, 76 CR 494. The error may not be prejudicial if the court gives other correct precautionary instructions. People v Morris (1988) 46 C3d 1, 41, 249 CR 119, disapproved on other grounds in In re Sassounian (1995) 9 C4th 535, 543 n5, 37 CR2d 446. See also Jones v Toyota Motor Co. (1988) 198 CA3d 364, 371, 243 CR 611 (quoting LeMons v Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1978) 21 C3d 869, 148 CR 355, and holding error harmless).

EXAMPLE: Where the court inadvertently omitted part of a jury instruction while reading it to the jury, it properly rectified the problem by pointing out the written instruction to the jury and telling the jury to review the instruction carefully. Jensen v BMW of N. Am., Inc. (1995) 35 CA4th 112, 41 CR2d 295.

If, however, the subsequently given correct instruction produces a clear conflict and it cannot be determined which instruction the jury followed in reaching its verdict, the incorrect instruction cannot be cured and may constitute reversible error. Slayton v Wright, supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.72 B. Incomplete or incorrect instruction can be cured by another instruction

Jury instructions must be considered in their entirety. Douglas v Southern Pac. Co. (1928) 203 C 390, 396, 264 P 237. Even though a selected passage of an instruction may be subject to criticism, if the instructions in their entirety state the law of the case clearly and fairly, they are unobjectionable as a whole. For example, incorrect instructions may be cured in the following manner:

- An error in one instruction might be cured by another instruction when it does not result in a clear conflict on a material point (i.e., a correct specific instruction on a subject will often cure an incorrect general instruction not expressly dealing with the subject unless it is clearly shown that the jury was misled). See Sebrell v Los Angeles Ry. (1948) 31 C2d 813, 817, 192 P2d 898; Saltzen v Associated Oil Co. (1926) 198 C 157, 161, 244 P 338; Dabis v San Francisco Redev. Agency (1975) 50 CA3d 704, 709, 122 CR 800.
- If a single instruction omits an essential element but is otherwise correct, the omission will ordinarily be cured if another instruction provides the omitted element. Miller v Schell (1957) 149 CA2d 346, 351, 308 P2d 445; see Ferguson v Nakahara (1941) 43 CA2d 435, 443, 110 P2d 1091.

X. INSTRUCTIONAL ERROR ON APPEAL

A. Automatic exceptions and objections

§20.73 1. Defined

A party is protected by CCP §647 if the party fails to object to a proposed erroneous instruction or fails to propose a correct instruction during trial. Under §647, the party will be permitted to raise that error for the first time on appeal. This is referred to as an "automatic exception or objection."

An erroneous instruction is considered to be excepted to, and a specific objection is not required to preserve the point on appeal. Mock v Michigan Millers Mut. Ins. Co. (1992) 4 CA4th 306, 334, 5 CR2d 594; Continental Airlines v McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1989) 216 CA3d 388, 406, 264 CR 779. See Beck v Kessler (1965) 235 CA2d 331, 334, 45 CR 237. This is true even when the party claiming on appeal that an instruction was erroneous had not proposed a correct instruction on the same subject. Mock v Michigan Millers Mut. Ins. Co., supra; Enis v Specialty Auto Sales (1978) 83 CA3d 928, 939, 148 CR 255.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/20 Jury Instructions/§20.74 2. Limitations on CCP §647

§20.74 2. Limitations on CCP §647

Despite the broad language of CCP §647, which suggests that instructional errors are never waived, appellate courts have held that several types of instructional error can be waived. For example, a party must state a specific objection if an instruction as originally proposed or after modification is substantively correct but is too general, unclear, or incomplete. People ex rel Dep't of Transp. v Salami (1991) 2 CA4th 37, 42 n2, 2 CR2d 833; United States Roofing, Inc. v Credit Alliance Corp. (1991) 228 CA3d 1431, 1446, 279 CR 533.

When the instruction needs additional language or qualifying language, counsel must:

- Object despite the language of §647; otherwise, the error will be deemed waived. See Agarwal v Johnson (1979) 25 C3d 932, 948, 160 CR 141, disapproved on other grounds in White v Ultramar, Inc. (1999) 21 C4th 563, 88 CR2d 19; Delia S. v Torres (1982) 134 CA3d 471, 480, 184 CR 787, disapproved on other grounds in Christensen v Superior Court (1991) 54 C3d 868, 905. See also Bernal v Richard Wolf Med. Instruments Corp. (1990) 221 CA3d 1326, 1337, 272 CR 41 (oral objection and orally proposed modification to jury instructions preserved error for appeal), disapproved on other grounds in Soule v General Motors Corp. (1994) 8 C4th 548, 574, 34 CR2d 607.
- Request an instruction that is more specific, clear, or elaborate in order to preserve the right to challenge the instruction on appeal. Mock v Michigan Millers Mut. Ins. Co. (1992) 4 CA4th 306, 334, 5 CR2d 594; Murrell v State ex rel Dep't of Pub. Works (1975) 47 CA3d 264, 270, 120 CR 812; Downing v Barrett Mobile Home Transp. (1974) 38 CA3d 519, 523, 113 CR 277 (appellate court held plaintiff's failure to request amplification of incomplete instruction and to propose instruction concerning it precluded plaintiff from complaining about instruction on appeal); 7 Witkin, California Procedure, Trial §260 (5th ed 2008).

In the absence of both an objection and a proposed alternative instruction that presents a correct statement of the law, an argument on appeal that the jury was not correctly apprised of the full import of the controlling law may come too late. See Pacific-Southern Mortgage Trust Co. v Insurance Co. of N. Am. (1985) 166 CA3d 703, 714, 212 CR 754.

PRACTICE TIP: Before relying on the automatic exception rule of CCP §647, make sure that a purportedly erroneous instruction is, in fact, an instruction. In Hercules Powder Co. v Automatic Sprinkler Corp. (1957) 151 CA2d 387, 400, 311 P2d 907, the court held that the trial court's statement to jurors in response to their confusion over whether they would have to sign two verdict forms was not an instruction but a statement on the form of the verdict and therefore did not fall within ambit of §647; the defect was waived by lack of objection to it.

On counsel's duty to submit instructions, see §20.5. On the court's generally having no duty to correct or modify instructions, see §20.40.

B. Doctrine of invited error

§20.75 1. Defined

When a party's own conduct induces or invites the commission of an instructional error, the party is estopped from asserting that error as a ground for reversal on appeal. This rule is known as the "doctrine of invited error." Mary M. v City of Los Angeles (1991) 54 C3d 202, 225, 285 CR 99; Redevelopment Agency v City of Berkeley (1978) 80 CA3d 158, 166, 143 CR 633; Mozzetti v City of Brisbane (1977) 67 CA3d 565, 573, 136 CR 751. See generally 9 Witkin, California Procedure, Appeal §389 (5th ed 2008).

Under this doctrine, a party cannot complain on appeal about an erroneous instruction if it was:

- Offered by that party. See Miller v Kennedy (1987) 196 CA3d 141, 146, 241 CR 472 (requesting erroneous jury instruction is invited error unless further objection is made after request); Gherman v Colburn (1977) 72 CA3d 544, 567, 140 CR 330. See also 7 Witkin, Procedure, Trial §316.
- Given by the court on its own motion, or at the opposing party's request, and the appealing party proposed a substantially similar instruction to the one given. Mary M. v City of Los Angeles, supra; Weirum v RKO Gen., Inc. (1975) 15 C3d 40, 50, 123 CR 468; Smith v Americania Motor Lodge (1974) 39 CA3d 1, 7, 113 CR 771; 7 Witkin, Procedure, Trial §316.
- Inconsistent with, or contradictory to, other correct instructions given at the other party's request. Treadwell v Nickel (1924) 194 C 243, 271, 228 P 25; 7 Witkin, Procedure, Trial §316. See also Gherman v Colburn, supra.
- Jointly submitted by coparties. In this situation, neither party may claim error, because it comes within the doctrine of invited error. See Gherman v Colburn, supra. A party, however, is not barred by the doctrine of invited error from attacking on appeal the giving of an erroneous instruction independently submitted by a coplaintiff or codefendant. See Colbert v Borland (1957) 147 CA2d 704, 713, 306 P2d 53.

NOTE: The doctrine of invited error does not apply if the court error involved using improper verdict forms and not the defective instructions requested by the appellant. Demkowski v Lee (1991) 233 CA3d 1251, 1357, 284 CR 919. See chap 22 on verdict forms. Further, the doctrine might not apply if the court error involved jury instruction that misstated the law on the burden of proof, even if counsel withdrew his objection to the erroneous instruction. Huffman v Interstate Brands Corp. (2004) 121 CA4th 679, 706, 17 CR3d 397.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.76 2. If proper alternative instructions are requested, doctrine of invited error not a bar

When a party submits certain instructions with a request that they be given only if other instructions requested at the same time are refused, the doctrine of invited error does not bar that party from urging on appeal that the court should have given the refused instructions even though the conditionally submitted instructions were given. Huebotter v Follett (1946) 27 C2d 765, 769, 167 P2d 193. See Christensen v Bocian (1959) 169 CA2d 223, 228, 336 P2d 1018 (withdrawal of previously requested instructions). On alternative instructions generally, see §20.8.

Similarly, when an instruction is given that was requested by a party only after the court erroneously refused to give another previously submitted instruction, the party is not estopped on appeal from raising the trial court's error in refusing to give the originally requested instruction. Winkler v Southern Cal. Permanente Med. Group (1956) 141 CA2d 738, 746, 297 P2d 728.

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.77 3. Party may object to own instruction when no instruction should be given

Counsel may face a situation in which the opposing party proposes an instruction on a point, but counsel believes that no instruction on that issue is proper. This objection should be raised at the preargument chambers conference for settling instructions and put on the record.

Counsel's primary position should be that no instruction is proper. Counsel's secondary position should be that, if some instruction on this issue will be given, the proposed instruction is improper. Counsel must decide whether to propose an instruction on the point or to rely on the primary position. It is a difficult decision, but a party who submits a jury instruction may still complain about it when the party was merely acquiescing in the trial court's determination reached over the objection.

This rule follows the theory that a party does not waive error by trying to make the best of a bad situation. Mary M. v City of Los Angeles (1991) 54 C3d 202, 213 n4, 285 CR 99 (defendant properly objected to court's requirement to submit instruction on theory defendant believed was erroneous, but defendant could not attack specific language in instruction that defendant had drafted).

© The Regents of the University of California

§20.78 4. Unidentified instruction constitutes invited error

The doctrine of invited error makes it especially important that the record identify each instruction and its source. Indicate by each instruction the name of the party who requested it or that the court gave it on its own motion, because on appeal an unidentified instruction is presumed to have been given at the appellant's request. Lynch v Birdwell (1955) 44 C2d 839, 847, 285 P2d 919; Morehouse v Taubman Co. (1970) 5 CA3d 548, 559, 85 CR 308.

Thus, an appellant is considered to have invited error with an unidentified instruction and is consequently precluded from complaining about it. Lynch v Birdwell, supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Prejudicial error must be shown

§20.79 1. Defined

Instructional error can result in a new trial or a reversal of judgment only if the error is shown to be prejudicial. To be prejudicial, the court must conclude, after examination of the entire case, that the error complained of resulted in a miscarriage of justice (Cal Const art VI, §13) and that a different result was probable if that instruction had not been given. CCP §475; Blake v E. Thompson Petroleum Repair Co. (1985) 170 CA3d 823, 834, 216 CR 568.

In determining whether instructional error resulted in a "miscarriage of justice," the court must examine:

- Whether it seems probable that a jury's verdict was based on the erroneous instruction;
- Whether the instruction resulted in prejudice; and
- Whether the reviewing court would have to speculate on the basis of the verdict.

Vistica v Presbyterian Hosp. (1967) 67 C2d 465, 471, 62 CR 577.

To determine whether prejudicial error occurred and whether a different result would have been probable under CCP §475, courts generally use the following criteria:

- The degree of conflict in the evidence on the crucial issue;
- Whether the jury asked for a reading of the erroneous instruction or of related evidence;
- The closeness of the jury's verdict;
- Whether closing argument contributed to the instruction's misleading effect; and
- The effect of other instructions in remedying the error.

See Mitchell v Gonzales (1991) 54 C3d 1041, 1054, 1 CR2d 913 (court noted that there was no precise formula to determine prejudicial effect of instructional error, listing above criteria, and held that trial court erred in giving jury instruction incorporating term "proximate cause," reasoning that it was conceptually and grammatically deficient and that it was reasonably probable that jury was confused by the instruction).

EXAMPLE 1: Gutierrez v Cassiar Mining Corp. (1998) 64 CA4th 148, 159, 75 CR2d 132 (error in refusing requested instruction was prejudicial when plaintiff's attorney, having successfully argued against requested instruction on rationale that its theory was something for argument, not instruction, did about-face on final argument, telling jury theory was "irrelevant," not approved by any instruction, and therefore outside given law they were sworn to follow).

EXAMPLE 2: Caldwell v Paramount Unified Sch. Dist. (1995) 41 CA4th 189, 206, 48 CR2d 448 (jury instruction that erroneously required jury to apply shifting burdens of proof in employment discrimination case was not prejudicial error and was accurate statement of underlying substantive law).

EXAMPLE 3: Bromme v Pavitt (1992) 5 CA4th 1487, 1509, 7 CR2d 608 (court followed five-step analysis of LeMons court and held that it was not reversible error to give jury instruction disapproved by supreme court).

EXAMPLE 4: Jones v Toyota Motor Co. (1988) 198 CA3d 364, 371, 243 CR 611 (applying LeMons v Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1978) 21 C3d 869, 876, 148 CR 355, court held that trial court's error was harmless when it incorrectly instructed jury on significance of minor's blood-alcohol level; such evidence was only marginally relevant to case's critical issue).

§20.80 2. Examples of reversible error based on erroneous instructions

- The court of appeal reversed the judgment on grounds that the trial court committed reversible error when it gave an erroneous burden of proof instruction. Nizam-Aldine v City of Oakland (1996) 47 CA4th 364, 54 CR2d 781 (instruction erroneously placing burden of proving truth of claimed defamatory statements).
- It was prejudicial for the trial court to define professional standards in a way that a party's good cause defense was not encompassed in any other instruction, thus foreclosing both primary issue of liability and primary defense in an otherwise close case. National Med. Transp. Network v Deloitte & Touche (1998) 62 CA4th 412, 434, 72 CR2d 720.
- The appellate court could not ascertain whether the jurors based their verdict on the erroneous instruction or to what extent it might have influenced them in arriving at a verdict. See Gibson v State (1960) 184 CA2d 6, 10, 7 CR 315; LeMons v Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1978) 21 C3d 869, 877, 148 CR 355.
- The trial court refused to give instructions covering a party's theory of the case that was supported by substantial evidence. See Barrett v Bank of America (1986) 183 CA3d 1362, 229 CR 16. In deciding whether a trial court erred in refusing to give a requested instruction, the appellate court should view the evidence in a light most favorable to the appellant. Bernal v Richard Wolf Med. Instruments Corp. (1990) 221 CA3d 1326, 1338, 272 CR 41, disapproved on other grounds in Soule v General Motors Corp. (1994) 8 C4th 548, 574, 34 CR2d 607; Gonzales v Carmenita Ford Truck Sales, Inc. (1987) 192 CA3d 1143, 1148, 238 CR 18; Ng v Hudson (1977) 75 CA3d 250, 254, 142 CR 69.
- Refusal to give the concurrent causation jury instruction (BAJI 3.77), when at least two theories of causation existed in the case and a simple modification by interlineation would have addressed the objection, was reversible error. Logacz v Limansky (1999) 71 CA4th 1149, 84 CR2d 257. Note that approved CACI 431 parallels BAJI 3.77.

NOTE: In reviewing the instructions for error, the appellate court will interpret the instructions "in a manner that will support rather than defeat a judgment." Grimshaw v Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 CA3d 757, 817, 174 CR 348. See also Little v Stuyvesant Life Ins. Co. (1977) 67 CA3d 451, 465, 136 CR 653.

A proposed jury instruction prepared by defense counsel in an action for interference with contractual relations might look like this:

DEFENDANT'S SPECIAL INSTRUCTION NO. 1

DEFINITION OF BEST EFFORTS

A contract may require one party to use its best efforts to accomplish a goal or to proceed in a certain manner. The term "best efforts" appears most frequently when the parties wish to require a party to attempt to meet a goal but do not which to bind them to accomplish the goal. As long as the required amount of effort is made, the performing party will not be in breach of the contract, even if the goal is not actually achieved. Whether the party used its best efforts is something you will have to decide.

The obligation of best efforts has diligence as its essence. Whether a party used its best efforts is determined by a comparison of what the party actually did to what the efforts of a reasonable person of the same kind in the same circumstances would have made.

In this case, the plaintiffs and defendant were contractually obligated to use their best efforts as specified in the Distributor Agreement. The plaintiffs contend that defendant breached the Distributor Agreement by failing to use its best efforts and that it therefore did not breach the agreement. Defendant also contends that plaintiffs did not use their best efforts as specified in the Distributor Agreement.

§21.1 I. SCOPE OF CHAPTER

This chapter discusses jury deliberations, including:

- Logistical considerations affecting the deliberative process, such as custody of the jury, location and scheduling, requirements for jurors with disabilities, costs for jurors' meals, and outside communications (see §§21.2-21.8);
- The nature of the deliberative process, such as disposition of alternates, admonitions, stipulations to streamline the process, and length of deliberations (see §§21.9-21.14);
- The effects of absence or illness of jurors, and when and how jurors may be discharged (see §§21.15-21.19);
- The process for selecting alternate jurors (see §§21.20-21.23);
- Handling jurors' requests for information during deliberations (see §§21.24-21.28);
- Materials allowed or prohibited in the jury room (see §§21.29-21.34); and
- Jury misconduct during deliberations (see §§21.35-21.43).

Further research: Jury management, juror misconduct during trial, remedies for jury misconduct, and moving for new trial based on juror misconduct are discussed in chap 17. Jury selection is covered in chap 8, and jury instructions in chap 20. Motions for new trial are discussed in detail in chap 25.

II. LOGISTICAL CONSIDERATIONS

§21.2 A. Custody of jury during deliberations

The jury may decide a matter submitted to it in court or retire for deliberations. CCP §613. When they retire, the jurors must be kept together in a convenient place under an officer's charge. CCP §613. The officer, historically a deputy sheriff or bailiff, must prevent outsiders from speaking to or communicating with the jurors and must return the jurors to the court when they have agreed on a verdict. CCP §613. The purpose of these rules is to allow the jury to deliberate in secret.

Cost considerations are requiring California counties to replace bailiffs in civil courtrooms with non-law-enforcement personnel, usually called courtroom attendants. Courtroom attendants perform all responsibilities of the "officer" described in CCP §613.

The jury officer coordinates communications between the jury and the court, but any communications by the jury officer must be limited to asking jurors if they have reached a verdict. CCP §613. The officer should make this inquiry only on the court's request and should not attempt to hurry the deliberative process. Leonard v Hume (1935) 5 CA2d 41, 43, 41 P2d 965 (no undue influence by bailiff); see People v Hutchinson (1969) 71 C2d 342, 346, 78 CR 196. The officer must not communicate to any outsider the state of jury deliberations or any verdict agreed on. CCP §613.

Anyone who listens to or observes the jury's deliberations is guilty of a misdemeanor. Pen C §167. Although a violation of the jury's secret deliberations is a criminal offense and may constitute misconduct, the presumption of prejudice may be rebutted.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: If a jury asks for a readback of testimony, the judge should ask the attorneys to confer with the court reporter to agree on the precise testimony to be read back. If there is a disagreement, the judge must settle it. The judge should ask the attorneys if they will stipulate that the court reporter may read the appropriate testimony back to the jurors, including alternates, in the jury deliberation room. Any request for readback is limited to those jurors formally deliberating, and the substitution of an alternate juror requires deliberations to begin anew. See People v Proctor (1992) 4 C4th 499, 537, 15 CR2d 340; People v Collins (1976) 17 C3d 687, 694, 131 CR 782, superseded by statute on other grounds as stated in People v Boyette (2002) 29 C4th 381, 462 n19, 127 CR2d 544. See §21.10. Before deliberations begin again, the court reporter must leave.

EXAMPLE: In People v Oliver (1987) 196 CA3d 423, 435, 241 CR 804, a court reporter reread testimony in the jury room and was present during some deliberations. The appellate court held that although this action constituted misconduct, the presumption of prejudice was effectively rebutted because the reporter did not participate in any way in the deliberations.

§21.3 B. Location and schedule for deliberations

All courts must be equipped with a jury deliberation room, which must be designed to minimize intrusion and have suitable furnishings and supplies, including restroom facilities for female and male jurors. CCP §216.

There are no strict rules concerning the schedule for a deliberating jury. In civil cases, the judge usually requires jurors to be present and to deliberate during the court's normal hours. At the judge's discretion, the jury may deliberate past normal business hours if the jury indicates to the court that it is close to reaching a verdict. Usually, there are no deliberations on weekends or holidays.

NOTE: Civil juries are usually not sequestered during the deliberative process.

During deliberations the trial judge may proceed with other matters. The deliberating jury takes precedence, however, and the judge must remain available and "open for every purpose connected with the cause submitted to the jury, until a verdict is rendered or the jury discharged." CCP §617.

The number of breaks (including smoking breaks) is generally within the discretion of the jury. The jury also determines whether to break for lunch or continue the deliberative process. See §21.11 for discussion of the admonition given by the judge at breaks.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Jurors communicate better when they have control of their schedule. Jurors should be advised that they can set their own breaks and hours and they do not have to conform to the trial calendar. This must be coordinated with the bailiff or court attendant. In addition, many courts and litigators find it helpful to provide lunch for the jurors on the last day of trial. Ideally, counsel should share the costs, but judges must never put any pressure on parties to provide this meal. Jurors should be told that lunch has been arranged, with no credit given to any party. This small technique has been useful in initiating communications between jurors. See §21.5.

The courts strongly discourage the consumption of alcoholic beverages during both the trial and the deliberative process. People v Allen (1986) 42 C3d 1222, 1265, 232 CR 849. See §21.6 for discussion of smoking and §21.39 for discussion of consumption of alcoholic beverages.

§21.4 C. Service providers appointed for jurors with disabilities

Persons with disabilities are eligible for jury service. CCP §203(a)(6). If a person who is deaf, hearing impaired, blind, visually impaired, or speech impaired is selected as a juror, the court will appoint a service provider if needed to facilitate communication. CCP §224.

An appropriate service provider includes a sign-language interpreter, oral interpreter, deaf-blind interpreter, reader, or speech interpreter. CCP §224(b). The county in which the action is pending must pay the interpreter's fee. Evid C §754(i). The court must instruct the jury and the service provider that the service provider is not to participate in the jury's deliberations except to facilitate communication between the juror with disabilities and the other jurors. CCP §224(b).

After a juror with disabilities is impaneled, any party who did not challenge the juror with disabilities must stipulate to the service provider's presence in the jury room and must prepare and deliver to the court proposed jury instructions for the service provider. CCP §224(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.5 D. Payment for jury's meals; recovery of costs for meals

The trial court has inherent power to provide jurors with food (and lodging, if necessary). Bloniarz v Roloson (1969) 70 C2d 143, 148, 74 CR 285; Hart Bros. Co. v County of Los Angeles (1938) 31 CA2d Supp 766, 770, 82 P2d 221. It is improper to tell jurors who is paying for the meals. See, e.g., San Francisco Ct R 7.0. If the meals are paid for by the prevailing party, the expense is recoverable as a cost of suit. CCP §1032; Gibson v Thrifty Drug Co. (1959) 173 CA2d 554, 556, 343 P2d 610. See chap 27 for discussion of recovery of costs.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: If the parties provide jurors with refreshments, the parties must not tell the jurors which party is paying for them. Any designations of the sources of the items should be carefully screened.

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.6 E. Smoking prohibited

Smoking is prohibited in all court facilities, including the jury room. Cal Rules of Ct 10.504. Consequently, smokers must exit the building for breaks and smoke outside the courthouse. Absent a stipulation, the admonition required by CCP §611 (discussed in §21.11) may be necessary, even for smoking breaks.

© The Regents of the University of California

F. Outside communications discouraged

§21.7 1. Using cellular telephones

As the use of cellular telephones and personal digital assistants (PDAs) becomes more common, jurors may attempt to take telephones into the jury room, but such practices should be discouraged. Using telephones in the jury room violates the secrecy of the deliberations, is distracting to other jurors, and may lead to improper communications by the juror using the telephone. People v Fauber (1992) 2 C4th 792, 837, 9 CR2d 24 (finding no misconduct, but expressing court's disapproval of practice of allowing cellular phones into jury deliberation room). See §21.36 for discussion of improper communications during deliberations, and §§17.20-17.22 for discussion of inattentiveness as misconduct.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Some cellular phones can be used as laptop computers, and jurors may use them for many purposes, including taking notes and electronic research. The court should advise jurors that they may not research any matter relating to the trial. Judges should also advise jurors they cannot send text messages, even to each other, during the trial, or play electronic games. In addition, jurors should be explicitly advised that they cannot engage in blogging or other discussions online about the trial until it is fully concluded.

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.8 2. Using beepers

Although beepers do not pose the potential problems with improper communications that cellular telephones do, beepers have the same potential to "distract jurors," which the court impliedly warned against in People v Fauber (1992) 2 C4th 792, 837, 9 CR2d 24. See §21.7.

NOTE: If you anticipate that jurors' use of cellular telephones or beepers may be a problem, consider discussing the matter with opposing counsel and the judge to arrive at a solution. One solution would be to have the courtroom attendant take custody of any cellular telephone or beeper; if someone tries to contact a juror, the courtroom attendant could determine whether the matter is an emergency or could be handled on a break. At the beginning of trial, jurors should be given the court phone number to provide to people who may need to contact them, and be advised that such contacts are permissible.

© The Regents of the University of California

III. JURY'S DELIBERATIVE PROCESS

§21.9 A. Jury chooses foreperson

The jury must choose a foreperson or "presiding juror." The court may not select a foreperson, because to do so might give other jurors the impression that the opinion of the court's assignee should be given undue weight. Dorshkind v Harry N. Koff Agency, Inc. (1976) 64 CA3d 302, 308, 134 CR 344.

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.10 B. Disposition of alternates

Alternate jurors are generally not allowed in the jury room during deliberations. Vaughn v Noor (1991) 233 CA3d 14, 22, 284 CR 222. Counsel may stipulate to the presence of alternate jurors in the jury room during deliberations. People v Valles (1979) 24 C3d 121, 125, 154 CR 543. Alternates should be instructed not to participate in the jury's deliberations in any manner except by silently paying attention, unless required to take the place of an original juror. 24 C3d at 128.

Because alternates may be needed to substitute for one of the deliberating jurors, they must remain in the custody of the sheriff or marshall. CCP §234. The court may excuse alternate jurors on its own, or counsel may stipulate to allow them to leave and then request the court to approve. See CCP §234. Court and counsel often agree to allow the alternates to leave, particularly if the deliberations are expected to be lengthy, but they must remain available and within reasonable distance to permit their timely return.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Many attorneys stipulate to having alternates present during deliberations, but some alternates may find it too difficult to remain strictly observers during deliberations. Jurors should be advised that if they cannot remain aloof during the deliberations, they may be released and remain on-call. In addition, if a seated juror is facing a time conflict that might effect deliberations, counsel and the court might consider switching the juror with an alternate, and keeping the time pressured juror as an alternate.

If alternates are permitted to leave, the court should admonish them and advise them that they could be recalled at any time and that they should not discuss the case or read news accounts of the trial until they are advised by the court that the jury has been discharged. See §21.11 regarding the admonition.

PRACTICE TIP: Be sure to request the admonition if the court does not automatically give it, or include it in the stipulation releasing alternates. Be sure to obtain the phone numbers of provisionally released alternates in case they are needed.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/21 Jury Deliberations/§21.11 C. Judge admonishes jury at separations

§21.11 C. Judge admonishes jury at separations

On each separation, the court must admonish the jury (CCP §611):

- Not to speak with others or confer among themselves on any subject relating to the trial; and
- That it is their duty not to form or express an opinion until the case is submitted to them.

Courts usually give this admonition at the close of each day of deliberation. In the absence of stipulation, the admonition is also required during each break in the deliberations (including comfort and meal breaks). See §21.12.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: It is extremely disruptive for the judge to have to admonish the jury at each break. Accordingly, stipulations to do away with the requirement are the rule rather than the exception.

A juror may, however, ponder a case alone during deliberations, outside the presence of the other jurors. Bormann v Chevron USA, Inc. (1997) 56 CA4th 260, 65 CR2d 321 (on weekend break, juror prepared 2½-page typed statement of her views on evidence and, on return to deliberations, read her statement to other jurors; held not to constitute misconduct).

NOTE: In People v Engelman (2002) 28 C4th 436, 121 CR2d 862, the California Supreme Court disapproved CALJIC 17.41.1, which requires jurors to immediately report a juror's refusal to deliberate, or intent to disregard the law or to decide the case on an improper basis. The court reasoned that the instruction, given immediately before the jury withdraws to begin deliberations, could be misunderstood and used as a tool for some jurors to browbeat others. 28 CA4th at 445. See also People v Barnwell (2007) 41 C4th 1038, 1054, 63 CR3d 82 (discussing Engelman).

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.12 D. Counsel may stipulate to streamline deliberations

The court often solicits stipulations designed to streamline the deliberative process. Counsel can usually agree to most ministerial stipulations, e.g., that the court need not admonish the jury, as required by CCP §611, each time the jury takes a break. See §21.11.

Despite pressure from the trial judge to agree to a stipulation, it is important to distinguish those stipulations that are practical from those that may give away a tactical advantage. For example, a stipulation that the §611 admonition not be given at every break carries little risk. In contrast, counsel should avoid a stipulation permitting the court reporter to reread testimony to the jury in the jury room, because it is beneficial to observe the jurors' reactions to the evidence. Counsel's observations might provide some insight about what is happening in the jury room.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: This is a rare request. The judge may feel that because the presentation of evidence has concluded, observance of the jurors' reactions, though enlightening, is too late to be "beneficial" or a "tactical advantage." Moreover, the courtroom will probably be in use for jury selection or other matters in another case. In presiding over many hundreds of cases I can recall only one or two criminal cases and no civil cases in which the attorneys did not stipulate to court reporter readback in the jury room. There is also the additional cost of being present for what may be hours of read-back and the need to remain in the courtroom during deliberations for potential additional requests for readback. Disputes in read-back can be resolved by phone, which relieves the attorney from having to be immediately physically available. It also increases the burden on the court to stop all other matters being conducted.

Counsel should be cautious about stipulating to a less than full jury. Stipulation to a smaller jury should not be made without client consent. See §21.23 on continuing with less than a full 12-person jury. Although you may wish to cooperate and to be economical, if the trial has not gone well or you believe another trial would be advantageous (e.g., a key witness would be available the second time around) such a stipulation could be a mistake.

§21.13 E. Jurors must deliberate with open minds

After jurors receive the case, their verdict should be arrived at "through deliberations which are the common experience" of all of them. Griesel v Dart Indus. (1979) 23 C3d 578, 584, 153 CR 213, overruled on other grounds in Privette v Superior Court (1993) 5 C4th 689, 21 CR2d 72. The judge usually instructs the jurors on their duty to deliberate. See CACI 5001.

A juror's violation of this duty to deliberate constitutes misconduct. See Enyart v City of Los Angeles (1999) 76 CA4th 499, 90 CR2d 502 (defendant city entitled to new trial when jurors expressed negative bias against city and police officers during deliberations, but concealed such bias during voir dire). See §§21.35-21.43.

Jurors should understand that they are not partisans or advocates. At the start of deliberations, jurors should not express emphatic opinions, but should first consider the views of other jurors. It is proper for a court to advise a jury "of the duty of individual jurors to hear and consider each other's arguments with open minds, rather than to prevent agreement by obstinate adherence to first impressions." Cook v Los Angeles Ry. (1939) 13 C2d 591, 594, 91 P2d 118. But see Vomaska v City of San Diego (1997) 55 CA4th 905, 909, 64 CR2d 492 (jurors' verdict after 10 to 15 minutes was not failure to discuss evidence or issues). See also CACI 5009 (predeliberation instructions).

§21.14 F. Length of deliberations varies; jury deadlock

Jury deliberations do not have a set length of time. A long, complicated trial may be resolved in an hour. See, e.g., Vomaska v City of San Diego (1997) 55 CA4th 905, 64 CR2d 492 (jury reached verdict after 10-15 minutes); Lussier v San Lorenzo Valley Water Dist. (1988) 206 CA3d 92, 253 CR 470 (verdict after 44 minutes did not suggest insufficient deliberation). In contrast, a trial that requires only a few days of evidence and argument may require a week for a jury to resolve.

If the jury indicates that it cannot arrive at a verdict, the trial judge usually has the panel return to the courtroom and asks the foreperson whether further deliberations might result in a verdict. The court may also ask each juror if, in the juror's individual opinion, the jury is hopelessly deadlocked and whether further deliberations are likely to produce a verdict.

To determine the seriousness of the deadlock, the court may ask the foreperson about the number of ballots taken and the time the votes were cast. A court may also question the jury concerning its numerical division, if the questioning is not otherwise coercive. People v Rodriguez (1986) 42 C3d 730, 776 n14, 230 CR 667.

It is within the court's discretion to request the jury to try again to reach a verdict. To help break a deadlock, the court may ask the jurors whether they have specific concerns that, if resolved, might assist them in reaching a verdict. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1036(a). The court may also ask jurors whether they need further instruction and may require them to deliberate on that question. People v Thomas (1991) 231 CA3d 299, 303, 282 CR 258.

If the court finds that further action might assist the jury, it may give additional instructions, clarify previous instructions, reopen closing arguments on the specified issues, or any combination of these measures. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1036(b). On court assistance in jury deliberations, see §20.55.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: The ability of counsel to personally respond to a juror's question during deliberations is a useful tool. Unless the juror's question is one that can be easily answered by a written response, counsel should orally answer the jury. The types of answers agreed on by the court and all parties are usually so bland that they fail to address the concern of the jurors. These responses often insult jurors by simply directing them to an unhelpful instruction. If counsel has the opportunity to respond orally, there is technically no rebuttal available, because it is only a response to a request from a juror and not a formal argument.

Special verdict. When a jury cannot agree on the first issue of a special verdict, the court may ask the jury to skip over that question and consider the second issue, if that second issue could be dispositive of the entire action. Santiago v Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1990) 224 CA3d 1318, 1335, 274 CR 576.

Allen* instruction. Sometimes, but usually after at least one previous trip to the courtroom to discuss the jury's deadlock, trial courts may employ an "Allen instruction" (named after Allen v U.S. (1896) 164 US 492, 41 L Ed 528, 17 S Ct 154). An Allen instruction informs the jury that if they cannot reach a verdict, the matter must be retried at considerable cost and inconvenience to the parties and the witnesses, and that there is no reason to believe that another jury will be better able to decide the case. See CACI 5013 (deadlocked jury admonition).

NOTE: Trial judges have sometimes added that the jurors in the minority may want to reconsider their position. In People v Moore (2002) 96 CA4th 1105, 1120, 117 CR2d 715, the court's instructions were found not to be erroneous because they did not suggest that a verdict must be reached and, while instructing jurors to consider each other's views, also instructed them to base their verdict solely on the evidence. See also People v Whaley (2007) 152 CA4th 968, 982, 62 CR 3d 11 (court's suggestion that deadlocked jurors consider reverse role playing not improper because suggestion was directed to all jurors, not just jurors in minority). In civil cases, while risky, the instruction is improper only if it coerces jurors into abandoning their individual positions. See Inouye v Pacific Southwest Airlines (1981) 126 CA3d 648, 651, 179 CR 13.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: The judge questioning jurors about further deliberations should be careful to remind them not to tell him or her how they are divided. Moreover, in the view of some judges, an Allen instruction tends to dissuade the minority from holding to their view.

IV. WHEN JUROR ABSENT OR ILL, OR GOOD CAUSE FOR DISCHARGE

§21.15 A. All jurors must be present to deliberate

Deliberations may not begin until all jurors are in place and may not continue during the absence of any juror. CCP §613. Because smoking is prohibited in jury rooms (see §21.6), deliberations cannot continue during any smoking break.

Any unauthorized separation during deliberations may be grounds for a mistrial. See Estate of McKenna (1904) 143 C 580, 589, 77 P 461; Andrews v County of Orange (1982) 130 CA3d 944, 959, 182 CR 176, disapproved on other grounds in People v Nesler (1997) 16 C4th 561, 66 CR2d 454. The burden of showing that a juror's absence was prejudicial rests on the party seeking a mistrial. McDowd v Pig'n Whistle Corp. (1945) 26 C2d 696, 699, 160 P2d 797.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/21 Jury Deliberations/§21.16 B. When court may discharge juror

§21.16 B. When court may discharge juror

Before the jury returns a verdict, the court may discharge a juror if (CCP §233):

- The juror becomes sick; or
- On good cause shown, the juror is otherwise unable to perform jury duties.

The court will select an alternate juror, if available, to take the discharged juror's place. CCP §§233-234.

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.17 C. Hearing to determine good cause to discharge

The hearing to determine whether there is good cause to replace a juror with an alternate is summary in nature and scope. See CCP §§233-234. Although it is not a full, adversarial hearing, the proceeding must be complete enough to determine good cause. The trial judge may question a juror in chambers or in open court in the absence of other jurors. The judge has the discretion to determine if the facts demonstrably show that the juror in question cannot further perform the duties of a juror. People v Van Houten (1980) 113 CA3d 280, 287, 170 CR 189.

© The Regents of the University of California

D. Review factors affecting court's willingness to discharge

§21.18 1. When juror ill

The stage of the deliberations and the availability and number of alternates will affect the court's willingness to discharge a deliberating juror who is ill. If the jury has been deliberating for some time and believes it may be close to a verdict, or if few alternates remain, the court may suspend deliberations pending the recovery of an ill juror. If deliberations have only recently begun or several alternates are available, the court will more readily discharge an ill juror and replace the regular juror with an alternate.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/21 Jury Deliberations/§21.19 2. Discharge for other reasons

§21.19 2. Discharge for other reasons

Although discharge for reasons other than illness are infrequent, the court has the discretion to discharge and these discharges are infrequently disturbed on appeal. Examples of grounds for replacing jurors unable to perform their duties are:

- Emotional upset (see People v Collins (1976) 17 C3d 687, 691, 131 CR 782, superseded by statute on other grounds as stated in People v Boyette (2002) 29 C4th 381, 462 n19, 127 CR2d 544 (juror unable to cope with experience of jury duty));
- Inability or unwillingness to follow the court's instructions; or
- Inability to follow or participate in the jury's deliberations.

A juror need not participate in deliberations in a literal sense. There is no requirement that each juror articulate a viewpoint. See Vomaska v City of San Diego (1997) 55 CA4th 905, 911, 64 CR2d 492 (jurors not obligated to discuss issues already decided). Thus, a juror's failure to speak during deliberations does not, by itself, imply incompetence or an unwillingness to discharge the juror's obligation as a juror.

NOTE: As a practical matter, courts rarely discharge jurors for inability to perform their duties, and only then after extensive questioning. This is particularly true when there are no alternates, and the discharge of a juror will effectively result in a mistrial.

© The Regents of the University of California

V. WHEN ALTERNATE JUROR MUST BE USED

§21.20 A. How chosen

When an alternate juror is to be chosen, and more than one is available, the court either selects by:

- Lot, i.e., by drawing names (see CCP §234); or
- Another prearranged method, e.g., before the trial begins, many courts designate alternates by numbers; when replacement becomes necessary, they select alternates in sequential order.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: The better method is to tell the alternate jurors at the beginning of the trial that if one of them is needed, he or she will be chosen by lot. This method tends to keep all the alternates alert and involved. In some courts, attorneys privately stipulate, with the court's agreement, to the order of replacement and when the alternates are selected. The alternates themselves should never be told of this order of replacement, but they should be advised that each one could be substituted into the case at any time. This technique provides certainty for counsel and comfort for later jurors who are unlikely to be seated. In addition, some courts permit the selection of 14 jurors, and alternates are selected at random after the trial ends. With this approach complications can arise if, e.g., a juror who has taken the best notes is excused after deliberations have started or a newly designated alternate is a natural leader and foreperson. This nondesignation of alternates is also a violation of CCP §234.

§21.21 B. Deliberations must begin anew

Any time that a deliberating juror is replaced, the deliberations must begin anew, even if a partial verdict has been reached. CCP §233. The court must instruct the jury to disregard all past deliberations. See People v Proctor (1992) 4 C4th 499, 536, 15 CR2d 340; Griesel v Dart Indus. (1979) 23 C3d 578, 584, 153 CR 213, overruled on other grounds in Privette v Superior Court (1993) 5 C4th 689, 21 CR2d 72 (verdict must be reached through deliberations that are common experience of all jurors arriving at verdict). See also CACI 5014 (substitution of alternate juror).

The trial court must give extremely clear, direct instructions on the need to begin new deliberations. See Vaughn v Noor (1991) 233 CA3d 14, 22, 284 CR 222, in which the court held that it was insufficient, and therefore error, merely to instruct the jury, regarding the liability decision they had already reached, that they would have to "tackle that issue anew." Instructions requiring the jury to start deliberations anew are obligatory, even when the alternate has been present in the jury room during the deliberations and the jury has reached a decision on liability and lacks only a decision on damages at the time of the substitution. 233 CA3d at 21.

When deliberations have failed to begin anew, prejudice must be shown for a jury verdict to be reversed on appeal. In determining prejudicial error, the appellate court will consider whether "it is reasonably probable that a result more favorable to the appealing party would have been reached in the absence of the error." People v Watson (1956) 46 C2d 818, 836, 299 P2d 243. See also Griesel v Dart Indus. (1979) 23 C3d 578, 585, 153 CR 213 (instruction to continue with deliberations was error, because of "closeness of case, the composition of the nine jurors returning the verdict and the comparison of time spent deliberating" before and after alternate juror was seated), overruled on other grounds in Privette v Superior Court (1993) 5 C4th 689, 702 n4, 21 CR2d 72.

§21.22 C. Possible actions if alternate juror unavailable

If no alternate jurors are available and a juror becomes unable to serve (see §21.23 for discussion of continuing with less than a full jury):

- The court may discharge the jury and try the action again after impaneling a new jury (CCP §233); or
- With the consent of all parties (CCP §233):
- The trial may proceed with only the remaining jurors, or
- Another juror may be sworn and the trial started over (i.e., a new trial date will be given).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/21 Jury Deliberations/§21.23 D. Continuing with less than full jury

§21.23 D. Continuing with less than full jury

If a deliberating jury loses a member who cannot be replaced because no alternate jurors are available, a mistrial is required. See CCP §233 ("the cause may again be tried"). All the parties may consent, however, to continue the trial with only the remaining jurors. CCP §233.

The parties may also agree on the vote required for a party to prevail.

EXAMPLE: When a 12-person jury loses one member, the parties may stipulate that 9-2 is sufficient for a verdict. The parties may even stipulate that fewer than 9 votes will result in a verdict. For example, if a 12-person jury loses two members, the parties may agree that a vote of 8-2 will prevail, to avoid retrying the case. Without an agreement, however, the case must be retried.

The decision on whether to stipulate to a less than a full jury is difficult and requires a lawyer's best judgment. Factors to consider include:

- The way the case "went in" (such as whether there was any surprise testimony or all factors were as expected),
- The status of the testimony that will provide new or additional material for impeachment,
- The costs of another trial,
- The importance of any jury request for read-back of testimony during deliberations, and
- Any questions about the law or the instructions during deliberations.

The pros and cons of retrial include whether the opposition will be better prepared later. If a mistrial is declared, then both parties have the right to designate new expert witnesses. Beverly Hosp. v Superior Court (1993) 19 CA4th 1289, 1294, 24 CR2d 238. In the end, the decision rests on an ultimate guess about what this group of jurors is likely to do and whether the client would be better served by a second trial.

PRACTICE TIP: Consider the length of time before the case can be retried, and balance the length and expense of another trial with the risks inherent in a less than a full jury. Be sure to obtain your client's consent before stipulating to a less than a full jury.

VI. WHEN JURORS REQUEST INFORMATION DURING DELIBERATIONS

§21.24 A. Jury requests information through bailiff or designated court officer

To assist their deliberations, jurors may request further information, such as rereading of testimony or instructions, additional instructions on the law, additional argument, or further evidence. The court must respond to jurors' questions or requests for information whenever the jury is deliberating. See §21.3. Counsel for all parties must be notified of any request and be given an opportunity to be present if additional information is given to the jury. CCP §614.

Communications from the jury to the court during deliberations should always be through the bailiff or court officer. CCP §614.

NOTE: Although not strictly necessary, almost all trial judges require that the jury's requests be in writing. If in writing, requests are less subject to interpretation or debate and are more easily entered into the record of the trial.

The trial judge must preserve and deliver to the clerk, for inclusion in the record, all written communications received from the jury or any individual juror, as well as any written communications sent by the judge to the jury or any individual juror. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1030. The trial judge must also ensure that oral communications with the jury are recorded. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1030. The jurors' request for additional information should be considered on the record. See Los Angeles Ct R 8.55. On receiving the request from the jury, the trial judge and counsel may consult on an appropriate response, including having the attorneys address the question in reopened argument. Any result of these discussions should also be on the record.

WARNING: Although parties sometimes stipulate that the judge or court reporter may provide a response to the jury in the jury room, see discussions in §§21.2 and 21.12 on impact of court reporter's presence in the jury room.

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.25 B. When jurors request that testimony be reread

Jurors often wish to have the testimony of a particular witness or testimony on a particular subject matter reread. During deliberations the jury has the right on request to rehear testimony and instructions. See People v Frye (1998) 18 C4th 894, 1007, 77 CR2d 25.

The easiest requests to honor are those for testimony of a witness or witnesses on a particular subject. More difficult to respond to are requests for more generic topics (for example, all testimony on the question of the color of the traffic light at the intersection). The court usually requires that counsel assist the court reporter in finding the particular passage or passages that will respond to the request. After all parties agree to the selected testimony, it is reread in the jury room with only the jurors and the court reporter present.

It is now becoming more common for a trial to be recorded, not by a court reporter, but either electronically or on videotape. Although more time and effort is usually required to locate the requested passages in these circumstances, the request should be honored as if the proceedings were recorded by a court reporter.

Counsel may request that testimony other than that specifically requested by the jury be read to put the request of material in context. There is no right to such a reading, however. Asplund v Driskell (1964) 225 CA2d 705, 714, 37 CR 652.

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.26 C. When instructions may be reread and further instructions added

Jurors may request a further instruction on the law, which may take the form of either rereading previous instructions or creating new instructions. Written jury instructions are available and eliminate most requests for simple reiterations of instructions. Jurors may ask that the written instructions be clarified, however, or even ask additional questions. See §21.31 for discussion of requirement that jurors be given copies of jury instructions if they request.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: It is strongly recommended that each juror be given an individual copy of the final jury instructions. When jurors have their own copies, they can review and absorb the instructions at their own pace. This lessens the risk and embarrassment of slowing the process down or confronting the foreperson with a demand to review an instruction. It also reduces requests for further explanations of the law. Counsel should avoid requesting the court to read a previously given instruction. If the instruction did not help the first time, it is unlikely that a rereading will clarify.

If the request for a particular instruction or group of instructions indicates a problem for the case, consider suggesting to the trial judge that other, balancing, instructions also be reread but be aware that the trial judge is not required to honor a request for additional, balancing instructions.

If the jury has questions on any point of law not covered by the instructions, the court must provide additional guidance. Unless it is something common (for example, further elucidation on the concept of preponderance of the evidence), the court must consult with counsel on an appropriate response.

PRACTICE TIP: Take an active role in any further instruction that will be submitted to the jury. It is a significant opportunity to influence a key instruction on a point of law.

Further research: See chap 20 for a discussion of jury instructions.

§21.27 D. Requests to view the scene will be rejected

After deliberations begin, jurors sometimes request that they be allowed to view the scene of an important event in the evidence (for example, a traffic accident). Because this viewing amounts to the introduction of new evidence after the matter has been submitted (and may engender requests for reargument), courts routinely reject them. This also applies to electronic views of a scene (e.g., Google "street view"). For further discussion, see §§13.110-13.111, 24.6.

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.28 E. Requests for collateral aids will be rejected

Sometimes jurors request collateral materials to assist them in their deliberations, such as a dictionary to help with an undefined term or an encyclopedia to expand their knowledge of an area. Because these materials are not admitted into evidence, giving them to the jury is improper. People v Karis (1988) 46 C3d 612, 642, 250 CR 659 (error for jurors to consult dictionary); Glage v Hawes Firearms Co. (1990) 226 CA3d 314, 323, 276 CR 430 (jurors committed misconduct when they checked a dictionary for definition of preponderance).

Exceptions are items that are not evidence themselves, but that would assist in the deliberative process, e.g., measuring devices. These items may be supplied to the jury at the trial court's discretion, depending on the circumstances. Care must be taken, however, that the aids do not lead to improper experiments. See §21.35.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: The court should admonish the jurors not to use electronic devices to conduct Internet research.

© The Regents of the University of California

VII. WHEN JURORS REQUEST MATERIALS IN JURY ROOM DURING DELIBERATIONS

A. Materials Allowed

§21.29 1. Documents or exhibits admitted into evidence

Any documents admitted into evidence (excluding depositions, see §21.32) are usually available to jurors during deliberations. CCP §612. The court has the discretion to make documents or exhibits unavailable to the jury if it determines that they should not be taken from the person who possesses them. CCP §612. See also Powley v Swensen (1905) 146 C 471, 483, 80 P 722; People v Balestieri (1914) 23 CA 708, 712, 139 P 821. The court also has discretion not to allow certain papers in the jury room. Powley v Swensen, supra. For example, the court might not allow access to exhibits if the exhibits are numerous and reading through them would take the jury a great deal of time. Reading through all the exhibits might be considered distracting, rather than conducive, to the deliberation process.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Judges will sometimes resist sending into the jury room a large blowup of a document when the effect might be to emphasize its importance. Counsel should therefore be ready with the actual document, or a true and correct copy of it, which can be substituted for any large blowup used during the trial. Counsel should also advise the jurors that these blowups will not be automatically provided to them during deliberations.

Jurors may use an exhibit to aid them in weighing the evidence and reaching a conclusion on a contested matter. They may conduct experiments within the parameters of the offered evidence. People v Bogle (1995) 41 CA4th 770, 777, 48 CR2d 739. An experiment that falls outside the purview of the evidence constitutes the taking of evidence without the parties' knowledge and denies the injured party an opportunity to meet, answer, or explain the evidence. See Higgins v Los Angeles Gas & Elec. Co. (1911) 159 C 651, 660, 115 P 313.

If the exhibit is one the jury can experiment with, the court should instruct the jury that the jury's use of the exhibit during deliberations must be confined to the purpose for which it was admitted during trial. Higgins v Los Angeles Gas & Elec. Co., supra. See also People v Conkling (1896) 111 C 616, 627, 44 P 314 (misconduct when jurors took rifle outside and fired it to determine powder patterns). See §21.35.

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.30 2. Juror's notes and juror-drawn diagrams

Although the judge will usually instruct the jury that a juror's recollection supersedes notes, jurors are allowed to carry into the jury room the notes they wrote during testimony or other trial proceedings. CCP §612; see Ferner v Casalegno (1956) 141 CA2d 467, 475, 297 P2d 91 (juror notes of counsel's arguments may be taken into jury room). Diagrams drawn by a juror based on the presented evidence are also permitted in the jury room during deliberations. Wagner v Doulton (1980) 112 CA3d 945, 950, 169 CR 550. See §17.7.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: A juror's notes are for his or her personal use only, to assist the note taker's own personal recollection. See CACI 102. See also CALJIC 1.05.

Notes taken by any person other than a juror are not permitted in the jury room. CCP §612. For example, in Conger v White (1945) 69 CA2d 28, 41, 158 P2d 415, the court held that it was improper for the jury to take into the jury room a large sheet of paper, not admitted into evidence, on which plaintiff's counsel had made calculations.

Courts are required to permit note-taking and to provide materials for note-taking. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1031. The jurors must leave the notes in court at the end of each court session. The bailiff collects them and puts them in a safe place and returns them the next day to the jurors. At the end of trial, jurors may request to take their notes with them. Unclaimed notes are destroyed.

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.31 3. Jury instructions allowed if sanitized

When the jury retires for deliberations, the court must advise the jury that a written copy of the instructions is available. The jury must be provided with a written copy of the jury instructions if it requests one. CCP §612.5. Even if the jury does not request a copy of the jury instructions, it is within the court's discretion to provide the jury with a copy. CCP §612.5. See §20.56.

Copies of jury instructions given to the jury should be sanitized so that references to the party requesting the instructions and other prejudicial references are deleted. See People v Beach (1983) 147 CA3d 612, 625, 195 CR 381. Omitted instructions should be completely obliterated. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.52 (requesting party's title, citation, and identity should be removed before instructions are given to jury).

PRACTICE TIP: Printed-out, individual copies of jury instructions, on two-sided paper, are superior to detached pages with obliterations. Because the current technology is simple and fast, there is no excuse to provide jurors with the old version of detached pages with obliterations. Computer programs can produce copies of jury instructions in booklets that run the instructions consecutively, with the names of the parties included and customized headings provided.

Further research: See chap 20 for a more detailed discussion of jury instructions.

B. Materials not allowed

§21.32 1. Deposition transcripts or videotapes

Deposition transcripts are not permitted in the jury room because they may contain inadmissible evidence. See CCP §612; Higgins v Los Angeles Gas & Elec. Co. (1911) 159 C 651, 656, 115 P 313. Exhibits attached to the depositions, however, may be permitted if they have been admitted into evidence. See CCP §612; Cockrill v Hall (1888) 76 C 192, 196, 18 P 318.

If a deposition transcript is accidentally taken into the jury room, the court will determine whether it has had a prejudicial effect on the jury. See Brandwein v Rodriguez (1955) 133 CA2d 433, 436, 284 P2d 130. See also Davenport v Waite (1959) 175 CA2d 623, 627, 346 P2d 501 (no prejudicial effect when transcript of defendant's deposition testimony was taken into jury room, because deposition testimony was consistent with defendant's trial testimony).

Even though jurors are not permitted to take deposition transcripts into the jury room, they have a right to have any portion of a deposition that was read at trial reread; the testimony became evidence when it was read in court. See Smith v Shankman (1962) 208 CA2d 177, 184, 25 CR 195; James v Key Sys. Transit Lines (1954) 125 CA2d 278, 285, 270 P2d 116.

Pretrial videotaping of some witness's testimony for use at trial has become common practice. After these videos are shown at trial, they are evidence and are in the record. Although juries sometimes request to review videos, some trial judges may decline on the grounds that the videos and the testimony contained in them can take on too much prominence in a juror's mind and can also take too long to replay. The use of videotaped testimony may also create problems if objections have rendered portions inadmissible. Counsel should review what is being presented in advance.

§21.33 2. Pleadings not received into evidence

In keeping with the basic rule that the jury may not take inadmissible materials into the jury room, the jury should not be permitted to take pleadings into its deliberations. See Powley v Swensen (1905) 146 C 471, 483, 80 P 722 (practice of allowing pleadings into jury room not advisable). Pleadings admitted into evidence, however, as with other materials admitted into evidence, are available to jurors during deliberations. CCP §612; McLean v Crow (1891) 88 C 644, 648, 26 P 596.

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.34 3. Other items not permitted in jury room

Even though exhibits admitted into evidence may generally be taken into the jury room, check local rules to learn whether there are any rules regarding items not permitted in the jury room.

A local rule might specify items not permitted in the jury room as exhibits that (1) are inherently dangerous (e.g., toxic materials), (2) require expertise to understand (e.g., X-rays), (3) are inflammatory or prejudicial (e.g., a bloody shirt), or (4) include as an integral part inadmissible matter. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.67.

VIII. JURY MISCONDUCT DURING DELIBERATIONS

§21.35 A. Conducting improper experiments

It is improper for jurors to conduct experiments that "put them in possession of evidence not offered at trial." Wagner v Doulton (1980) 112 CA3d 945, 950, 169 CR 550. See also People v Wilson (2008) 44 C4th 758, 829, 80 CR3d 211. The jury's use of exhibits is governed by the fundamental rule that all evidence must be taken in open court. Higgins v Los Angeles Gas & Elec. Co. (1911) 159 C 651, 656, 115 P 313.

Each party must have knowledge of the evidence brought against it to be able to meet and answer that evidence. See Smoketree-Lake Murray, Ltd. v Mills Concrete Constr. Co. (1991) 234 CA3d 1724, 1749, 286 CR 435 (misconduct for juror to use kitty litter and box in jury room to demonstrate effect of pouring concrete over sand with impressions in it).

Certain experiments conducted in the jury room within the parameters of the offered evidence have been held proper. For example, in Wagner v Doulton, supra, in the jury room, a juror made a diagram of the accident scene involved in the suit, based solely on the evidence. The court held that the juror's action did not constitute misconduct, because the diagram was a pictorial representation of the juror's idea of the testimony heard during trial. See also People v Bogle (1995) 41 CA4th 770, 778, 48 CR2d 739 (juror use of key to open safe was permissible experiment).

It is also misconduct for a juror to conduct an experiment outside the jury room. See Lankster v Alpha Beta Co. (1993) 15 CA4th 678, 682, 18 CR2d 923 (juror made measurements at store similar to accident scene); People v Phillips (1981) 122 CA3d 69, 81, 175 CR 703 (juror's home experiment consistent with evidence presented at trial constituted prejudice, but it did not require reversal).

EXAMPLE 1: In Locksley v Ungureanu (1986) 178 CA3d 457, 223 CR 737, plaintiff, a pedestrian, was injured when hit by a car driven by defendant. After the trial began and before deciding on the verdict, a juror drove his car with one eye covered to simulate defendant's physical condition. The juror voted for defendant in an 11-1 verdict for defendant. The appellate court affirmed the trial court's denial of a new trial based on its determination that even if the juror's experiment was misconduct, it would not have prejudicially affected the outcome of the case.

EXAMPLE 2: In People v Castro (1986) 184 CA3d 849, 229 CR 280, a jail inmate was convicted of arson that occurred during a jail riot. The only evidence of the defendant's guilt was the testimony of a guard who had observed the defendant during the riot through 7-power binoculars at a distance of 75 to 100 yards. The appellate court held that defendant was entitled to a new trial on the basis that it was prejudicial misconduct when a juror conducted, during deliberations, an experiment with binoculars at home to determine whether the guard could have identified defendant as he had alleged. The juror reported his findings to the other jurors, who thus received evidence, developed outside the courtroom, that the defendant was unable to meet or answer.

A jury's experiment based on evidence received during trial is not misconduct. An experiment that does not generate any new evidence and is simply a reenactment of the offered evidence is permissible. People v Cumpian (1991) 1 CA4th 307, 317, 1 CR2d 861.

EXAMPLE: In People v Cumpian, supra, the jurors strapped a duffel bag to their torsos in a fashion similar to that described by witnesses during the trial. The jurors wanted to determine whether the accused could easily remove the duffel bag to avoid arrest for theft. If the bag was easily removable, the jury could conclude the accused intended to escape with the stolen bag. The court held that the jury's reenactment of the evidence did not constitute receipt of evidence outside the courtroom under the circumstances. It was merely an experiment directed at the proffered evidence. The court drew a distinction between impermissible experiments outside of deliberations and experiments in the jury room that amount to no more than a careful examination of the evidence presented in court. This case catalogues various cases involving jurors' experiments.

When an exhibit that will go to the jury room may be susceptible to improper use, the court must limit or restrict its use by instruction to the jury. Higgins v Los Angeles Gas & Elec. Co. (1911) 159 C 651, 660, 115 P 313.

Further research: For further discussion of the topic of this section, see Anno, Propriety of Juror's Tests or Experiments in Jury Room, 31 ALR4th 566 (1984).

§21.36 B. Improper communications during deliberations

Depending on the nature of the conversations, it may be misconduct if a juror converses with counsel, a party, a witness, or other person during trial or after the case is submitted. See, e.g., Iwekaogwu v City of Los Angeles (1999) 75 CA4th 803, 89 CR2d 505 (juror discussed case with spouse and reported spouse's view to other jurors; no prejudice found from juror misconduct); Garden Grove Sch. Dist. v Hendler (1965) 63 C2d 141, 144, 45 CR 313 (plaintiff's counsel talked during recess with juror who later became jury foreman); City of Pleasant Hill v First Baptist Church (1969) 1 CA3d 384, 426, 82 CR 1 (improper communications between juror and witness, but no showing that misconduct was prejudicial). See also In re Hitchings (1993) 6 C4th 97, 24 CR2d 74 (writ of habeas corpus granted after convicted defendant uncovered evidence that juror had discussed case with coworkers during trial).

An attorney connected to the case may not communicate, either directly or indirectly, with any juror. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-320(B). It is also inappropriate for an attorney not connected with the case to communicate about a case with a juror. Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-320(C).

Although jury misconduct can arise from improper communications, the misconduct creates only a presumption of prejudice, which may be overcome by a showing that there was no actual prejudice. People v Goldberg (1984) 161 CA3d 170, 193, 207 CR 431. See §§17.10-17.19.

§21.37 C. Resorting to chance or using quotient to arrive at verdict

Code of Civil Procedure §657(2) specifies the following as a basis for granting a new trial:

> whenever any one or more of the jurors have been induced to assent to any general or special verdict, or to a finding on any question submitted to them by the court, by a resort to the determination of chance…

For example, it is misconduct for jurors to arrive at a verdict by flipping a coin (Donner v Palmer (1863) 23 C 40, 47), drawing lots (Levy v Brannan (1870) 39 C 485, 489), throwing dice, or resorting to any other type of gaming (see Wilson v Berryman (1855) 5 C 44). In Dixon v Pluns (1893) 98 C 384, 387, 33 P 268, the court defined "chance" as "hazard, risk, or the result or issue of uncertain and unknown conditions or forces." Verdicts arrived at in this manner are often called "chance" verdicts. See also CACI 5009.

Similarly, it is misconduct for jurors to arrive at a quotient verdict in determining the amount of damages to award. See Chronakis v Windsor (1993) 14 CA4th 1058, 1066, 18 CR2d 106 (in personal injury case, juror affidavits showed verdict on economic damages had been a quotient verdict arrived at by chance). To arrive at a quotient verdict, each juror selects a sum to award and then the jurors' sums are added together and the aggregate is divided by the number of jurors. The quotient is returned as the verdict. See Dixon v Pluns, supra; Wilson v Berryman, supra. Compare Iwekaogwu v City of Los Angeles (1999) 75 CA4th 803, 819, 89 CR2d 505 (no quotient verdict when jury selected and voted on several suggested figures); Fredrics v Paige (1994) 29 CA4th 1642, 35 CR2d 246 (court of appeal affirmed trial court's denial of motion for new trial based on assertion that jury rendered quotient verdict).

In Ham v County of Los Angeles (1920) 46 CA 148, 154, 189 P 462, the court noted that jurors' agreement in advance to adopt an average, without further discussion or deliberation, is fatal to a verdict. A quotient verdict is considered a chance verdict within the meaning of CCP §657(2). See Dixon v Pluns, supra; Ham v County of Los Angeles (1920) 46 CA 148, 153, 189 P 462.

If jurors do not agree to be bound by a quotient figure, and afterwards discuss and vote on whether to adopt or reject the sum, the verdict will not be considered a chance verdict and will be upheld (assuming that there is substantial evidence in the record to support the numbers). See Bardessono v Michels (1970) 3 C3d 780, 794, 91 CR 760. See also Mirabito v San Francisco Dairy Co. (1934) 1 C2d 400, 35 P2d 513, in which the appellate court upheld the verdict of nine jurors who, in order to return a verdict for plaintiff to avoid deadlock on the amount of damages, agreed that a single vote would be taken on two amounts and that the amount voted by the majority would be returned as the unanimous verdict of the jury.

Further research: For further discussion of chance and quotient verdicts, see Glass v Gulf Oil Corp. (1970) 12 CA3d 412, 96 CR 902; 7 Witkin, California Procedure, Trial §§380-381 (5th ed 2008).

§21.38 D. Improper calculations to include attorney fees

In a personal injury or wrongful death action, jurors' agreement to increase a verdict in favor of plaintiff by an amount that they estimate plaintiff will pay in legal fees constitutes misconduct. See Krouse v Graham (1977) 19 C3d 59, 81, 137 CR 863. In Krouse, the Supreme Court vacated the trial court's order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, and directed the trial court to reconsider the motion and admit four juror declarations that the trial court previously had ruled inadmissible. See also Hasson v Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 C3d 388, 415 n8, 185 CR 654 (discussing the Krouse decision). Under CACI 3964, jurors are explicitly instructed not to consider attorney fees or court costs.

EXAMPLE 1: In Moore v Preventive Medicine Med. Group, Inc. (1986) 178 CA3d 728, 740, 223 CR 859, a medical malpractice action, a juror's declaration stated that a juror asked what amount of any award plaintiff would have to pay as attorney fees. Another juror stated that plaintiff probably would have to pay 40 percent of any award in attorney fees. The appellate court held that these statements during deliberations were not juror misconduct, because they did not indicate an express agreement between the jurors was reached and the statements were not extensively discussed.

EXAMPLE 2: In Tramell v McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1984) 163 CA3d 157, 209 CR 427, the court, citing Krouse v Graham, supra, found misconduct when evidence indicated that several jurors impliedly agreed to increase the verdict to compensate the plaintiff for attorney fees and income taxes. Compare Tramell with Ferreira, Inc. v Quik Stop Mkts., Inc. (1983) 141 CA3d 1023, 1033, 190 CR 778, in which the verdict was upheld despite affidavits showing that the jury used a comparative fault formula to reduce its award.

EXAMPLE 3: In Thompson v Friendly Hills Reg'l Med. Ctr. (1999) 71 CA4th 544, 84 CR2d 51, defendant moved for a new trial, submitting declarations from three jurors alleging that the jury had inflated damages by one-third to cover plaintiff's attorney fees. Plaintiff opposed the motion with declarations from other jurors denying any such agreement. The trial court granted a motion for new trial, and plaintiff accepted a remittitur. The court of appeal reversed the new trial order and reinstated the original verdict, finding that the jurors' declarations "taken as a whole" did not show an agreement to inflate the verdict and noting that plaintiff's closing argument asked for the amount awarded and did not include a claim for attorney fees.

In Iwekaogwu v City of Los Angeles (1999) 75 CA4th 803, 820, 89 CR2d 505, the court, citing Tramell v McDonnell Douglas Corp., supra, found that it was permissible for the trial court to include questionable activity by the jury as one of the reasons for concluding that damages awarded by the jury were excessive. Although the court concluded that there was questionable activity by the jury, it held that no act of juror misconduct precluded the city from receiving a fair trial.

§21.39 E. Consumption of alcohol may be misconduct

Whether consumption of alcohol constitutes juror misconduct depends on whether the alcohol renders the juror incapable of competently performing a juror's duties. See People v Hedgecock (1990) 51 C3d 395, 420, 272 CR 803.

In People v Allen (1986) 42 C3d 1222, 1265, 232 CR 849, the Supreme Court held that the trial court's comment to the jury that "if you want to have something to drink, that's up to you," when the court informed the jury that they would be sequestered for the evening and their dinner would be paid for by the state, was insufficient to establish juror misconduct in a criminal prosecution. The comment was made to the jury after rebuttal argument but before instructions were given, and there was no evidence that any juror consumed alcohol during the trial or became intoxicated or unable to completely perform jury duties. 42 C3d at 1266. Although the Supreme Court in Allen discouraged jurors' consumption of alcoholic beverages by jurors, during either the presentation of evidence or deliberations, the court stated that the mere consumption of alcoholic beverages by jurors is not a ground for reversal per se "in the absence of some showing or some reasonable ground to suspect that the consumption of alcohol actually affected the jurors' capacity to competently perform their duties." 42 C3d at 1266.

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.40 F. Discussion of improper topics

Evidence of jury discussions on improper topics is admissible as overt acts, provided the evidence is not directed at the juror's subjective reasoning process. See, e.g., DiRosario v Havens (1987) 196 CA3d 1224, 1238, 242 CR 423 (statements between jurors regarding court's authority to reduce excessive jury award are overt acts that are admissible on motion for new trial; motion denied in this case). See also In re Stankewitz (1985) 40 C3d 391, 397, 220 CR 382 (juror used own experience as law enforcement officer on question of law); Glage v Hawes Firearms Co. (1990) 226 CA3d 314, 323, 276 CR 430 (juror consulted dictionary for definition of word).

During deliberations in Gorman v Leftwich (1990) 218 CA3d 141, 147, 266 CR 671, jurors discussed whether a defendant had malpractice insurance and concluded that he did. The court held that this was not misconduct, because the jurors did not agree to base their decision on the insurance discussion. In Garfoot v Avila (1989) 213 CA3d 1205, 1211, 261 CR 924, the court held inadmissible, evidence showing juror affidavits that stated the jury had used a per diem method to arrive at pain and suffering damages and then reduced them to present value. The court held that only evidence that the jury used an expressly prohibited method to arrive at damages (e.g., by chance) would be admissible.

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.41 G. Mistakes in law by jurors

Depending on the circumstances, jurors' mistakes in the law during deliberations may be misconduct. In Ford v Bennacka (1990) 226 CA3d 330, 335, 276 CR 513, the court held that a series of declarations stating that jurors thought that plaintiff's 50-percent negligence required a defense verdict, contrary to law, were not objective, verifiable incidents but at the most were deliberative errors in the jurors' mental processes and did not amount to misconduct.

© The Regents of the University of California

§21.42 H. Misconduct to show bias

Consideration of a party's or witness's race or gender, or other characteristics, like marital status or sexual orientation during deliberations, constitute misconduct. See Tapia v Barker (1984) 160 CA3d 761, 206 CR 803 (juror failed to disclose possible prejudice towards plaintiff's ethnic background).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/21 Jury Deliberations/§21.43 I. When smoking by jurors a problem

§21.43 I. When smoking by jurors a problem

The alleged intimidation of nonsmoking jurors by smoking jurors, without more, does not constitute juror misconduct, but bears only on the jurors' mental process. People v Cox (1991) 53 C3d 618, 695, 280 CR 692, overruled on other grounds in People v Doolin (2009) 45 C4th 390, 421 n22, 87 CR3d 209.

NOTE: This should be less of a problem now that smoking is banned from court facilities (see §21.6), but the issue may occur in other circumstances (e.g., during lunch).

§21.44 IX. CHECKLIST: REMEDIES FOR MISCONDUCT DURING DELIBERATIONS

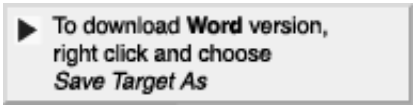

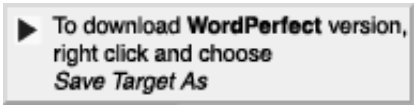

Remedies for jury misconduct include:

___ 1. Object to the misconduct or irregularity in the proceedings (see §17.23).

___ 2. Request appropriate admonition(s) from the judge (see §17.24).

___ 3. Request replacement of juror with alternate (see §§21.20-21.23).

___ 4. Move for mistrial (see §§17.26, 18.82-18.102).

___ 5. Move for new trial (see §§17.27-17.32, 25.22-25.71).

Further research: Remedies for juror misconduct are discussed in detail in §§17.23-17.32. See chap 16 for discussion of misconduct of counsel and court.

§22.1 I. SCOPE OF CHAPTER

A verdict is the jury's means of delivering and formally recording its resolution of the disputed issues in a case. A jury may return either a general or a special verdict. CCP §624. See §22.2.

On procedures and timing for submitting verdict forms, see §§22.8-22.11.

On drafting verdict forms of various kinds, see §§22.12 (general verdicts), 22.13 (general verdicts with special findings), 22.14 (special verdicts).

Examples of written verdict forms appear in §§22.35-22.41.

The process by which a jury is instructed in reaching its verdict is discussed in chap 20. On directed verdicts, see §§18.35-18.56. On impeaching the verdict based on the jury's improper conduct, see §§17.10-17.22.

II. GENERAL AND SPECIAL VERDICTS

§22.2 A. Authority; definitions

Before drafting verdict forms, familiarize yourself with the principal authorities discussed in this chapter: CCP §§613, 619, 624, 630, and Cal Rules of Ct 3.1580.

By rendering a general verdict, the jury pronounces generally in favor of plaintiff or defendant. With a special verdict, the jury makes findings on the relevant facts, and the court draws the conclusions of law. CCP §624.

PRACTICE TIP: Before deciding on the verdict form that you will request the court to give to the jury, assess your client's position and the facts of your case, including the likelihood that the jury will render a verdict in your favor. The prevailing party has a much better chance of defending a general verdict on appeal, but a special verdict forces the jury to think before it acts. On when verdict forms must be submitted to the court, see §22.11. For further discussion on when to use particular verdict forms, see §§22.15-22.17.

The court has the discretion to direct the type of verdict the jury will deliver, in either of two forms (CCP §§624-625):

- A general verdict in favor of a party, with or without special findings on particular questions of fact; or
- A special verdict finding on the facts only.

On the issue of punitive damages, special verdicts are mandatory. CCP §625. See §22.14.

WARNING: Be sure you know the difference between a "special verdict" and a "general verdict with special findings," which can differ significantly in their effect on your case, and avoid the unintentional or incorrect use of these terms. See §§22.4-22.6. Unfortunately, CCP §625 uses "special verdict" and "special finding" in an interchangeable and confusing manner, as do some court opinions. See, e.g., Li v Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 C3d 804, 824 n18, 119 CR 858.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.3 B. Compared with judgment

A verdict is not the same as a judgment. Pronouncing judgment is a judicial act that must be performed by a judge. Unless the court grants a posttrial motion affecting the verdict (e.g., judgment notwithstanding the verdict; see §§25.2-25.21), the judgment of a court sitting with a jury must conform to the jury's intention. Telles v Title Ins. & Trust Co. (1969) 3 CA3d 179, 187, 83 CR 444 (trial judge erroneously modified jury's verdict on allocating damages among joint tortfeasors).

If motions after trial do not result, e.g., in an order for a new trial or judgment notwithstanding the verdict, judgment is entered based on the verdict. See §22.23. Because the verdict is not a judgment or an order, the verdict itself is not appealable. For discussion of judgments, see chap 23.

© The Regents of the University of California

C. General verdicts

§22.4 1. Without special findings

A general verdict, if otherwise valid, includes an implicit finding in the prevailing party's favor on every fact or issue essential to support the jury's conclusion. Henderson v Harnischfeger Corp. (1974) 12 C3d 663, 673, 117 CR 1.

This is the reason that a general verdict is not easily overturned on appeal. When several causes of action have been tried and a general verdict is returned for plaintiff without referring to any specific causes of action, that verdict can be upheld on appeal if the evidence supported the verdict on any of the causes of action. Codekas v Dyna-Lift Co. (1975) 48 CA3d 20, 24, 121 CR 121. See Louisville Title Ins. Co. v Surety Title Guar. Co. (1976) 60 CA3d 781, 786, 132 CR 63.

Similarly, when there is more than one defense theory, a finding in defendant's favor on a general verdict implies a finding in defendant's favor on whichever defense theory is supported by the evidence. McCloud v Roy Riegels Chems. (1971) 20 CA3d 928, 935, 97 CR 910.

PRACTICE TIP: Consider the advantage that using a general verdict form could ultimately have on your case. Is it likely that the other side will appeal if you win? California appellate courts have long shown judicial deference to general verdicts. See discussion of California law on general verdicts in Niles v U.S. (ND Cal 1981) 520 F Supp 808, 812, aff'd (9th Cir 1983) 710 F2d 1391 (requiring general verdicts to be upheld if sufficient evidence supports at least one of the prevailing party's alternative theories). On other advantages of using general verdict forms, see §22.15.

§22.5 2. With special findings

The court may direct the jury, if it reaches a verdict for or against a particular party, to then respond to special interrogatories. CCP §625. The jury's response to those interrogatories, its "special findings," test the validity of the general verdict by verifying that the jury found appropriately on an essential fact or a material issue that is either favorable or fatal to a party's case. Hurlbut v Sonora Community Hosp. (1989) 207 CA3d 388, 403, 254 CR 840; Masonite Corp. v PG&E (1976) 65 CA3d 1, 11, 135 CR 170. See 7 Witkin, California Procedure, Trial §353 (5th ed 2008).

PRACTICE TIP: Some local rules require that special findings and special verdict forms be drafted to require the jury to answer yes or no, or to state a simple percentage or sum. On drafting verdict forms, see §§22.12-22.14.

Special findings may be requested by a party or ordered on the court's own initiative. The court's discretion in instructing the jury to make special findings will not be overturned on appeal unless abuse is shown. Gherman v Colburn (1977) 72 CA3d 544, 588, 140 CR 330 (no abuse). See Gorman v Leftwich (1990) 218 CA3d 141, 152, 266 CR 671 (court's refusal to permit special verdict on future damages in medical malpractice action was abuse of discretion).

NOTE: Unlike special verdicts (see §22.6), special interrogatories need not address all issues, because they are accompanied by a general verdict in favor of one party or another.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.6 D. Special verdicts; required for punitive damages

When returning a special verdict, the jury determines the ultimate facts of the case, and the court renders the legal consequences of those facts (and the judgment). CCP §624; Muffett v Royster (1983) 147 CA3d 289, 300, 195 CR 73. Nothing must remain for the court to do but to draw conclusions of law. All-West Design, Inc. v Boozer (1986) 183 CA3d 1212, 228 CR 736.

WARNING: If the special verdict answers do not resolve all the factual issues, the special verdict cannot properly provide a foundation for a judgment. Myers Bldg. Indus. v Interface Technol., Inc. (1993) 13 CA4th 949, 960, 17 CR2d 242 (inherent in special verdict is risk that not all ultimate issues will be decided, resulting in defective verdict). See Falls v Superior Court (1987) 194 CA3d 851, 854, 239 CR 862. On disadvantages of using special verdict forms, see §22.17. On drafting special verdict forms, see §22.14.

When the jury cannot reach a consensus on one issue in a special verdict, it is permissible for the jury to then consider the next dispositive issue. See Contreras v Goldrich (1992) 10 CA4th 1431, 1434, 13 CR2d 394 (jury unable to reach verdict on negligence, but did determine that, even if it found there had been negligence, it was not the legal cause of injury).

A special verdict is mandatory in all cases in which the issue of punitive damages is presented to the jury. A plaintiff is not entitled to punitive damages as a matter of law. Brewer v Second Baptist Church (1948) 32 C2d 791, 801, 197 P2d 713. The jury must find that the defendant committed a tort and that the tortious act was conducted with malice, fraud, or oppression. See Myers Bldg. Indus. v Interface Technol., Inc., supra. The special verdict form must separate punitive damages from compensatory damages, i.e., the jury must assess those amounts separately. CCP §625; All-West Design, Inc. v Boozer, supra.

Other than on the issue of punitive damages, the trial judge has discretion to require that a special verdict be used in any trial. CCP §625. The court's decision on what verdict form should be used will not be overturned on appeal unless the losing party can show abuse of discretion. See Gorman v Leftwich (1990) 218 CA3d 141, 150, 266 CR 671 (court's refusal to permit special verdict concerning future damages in medical malpractice action was abuse of discretion).

NOTE: In the past, special verdicts were mandatory in will contests tried before a jury, but the provisions for jury trial of will contests have been eliminated. Any contested issue of fact that affects the validity of a will must now be tried and determined by the court. Prob C §8252(b).

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.7 E. Written verdicts required

The verdict must be in writing and signed by the foreperson. CCP §618. The verdict must be clear and unambiguous as to who has won and who has lost. A verdict that finds against defendant A but that is silent about defendant B is not a verdict in favor of defendant B; it is a failure to find on the issue of defendant B's liability. Walters v Marler (1978) 83 CA3d 1, 20, 147 CR 655, disapproved on other grounds in Gray v Don Miller & Assocs. (1984) 35 C3d 498, 507, 198 CR 551. On defective verdicts, see §§22.24-22.28.

Counsel usually prepare forms that the court submits to the jury so that they can be filled out by the foreperson. On drafting considerations, see §22.12-22.14; for sample forms, see §§22.35-22.41.

III. PREPARING VERDICT FORMS

§22.8 A. Checklist

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

___ 1. Check local rules and the trial judge's practice on drafting, serving, and submitting verdict forms (see §22.10).

___ 2. Consider and determine what type of verdict form is most advantageous:

___ a. General verdict (see §22.15);

___ b. General verdict with special findings (see §22.16); or ___ c. Special verdict (see §22.17).

___ 3. Draft form of verdict to be proposed, and consider or draft associated jury instructions (see §§22.9, 22.12-22.14).

___ 4. If punitive damages are to be presented to the jury, prepare required special verdict forms (see §22.6).

___ 5. Serve on other counsel and submit the proposed verdict forms with the court (sometimes as early as the in-chambers conference before trial or before closing arguments) (see §22.10).

___ 6. Consider whether changes or modifications are necessary or advisable and, if so, make an appropriate request to the court to modify the forms (see §22.10).

___ 7. Review proposed verdict forms served by the opposition or suggested by the court (see §§22.18-22.19).

___ 8. Attempt to resolve with opposing counsel any conflicts in proposed verdict forms, or preserve on the record the objections you have to the court's forms (see §22.19).

___ 9. If conflicts cannot be resolved, prepare written or oral objections to the opposition's forms and argument supporting your proposed forms (see §22.18).

___ 10. File written position with the court and argue the issues on the record (see §§22.18-22.19).

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.9 B. Procedures

Counsel for each party should prepare proposed verdict forms, along with proposed jury instructions on the verdict. Verdict forms must be consistent with the jury instructions given by the court. See Demkowski v Lee (1991) 233 CA3d 1251, 1262, 284 CR 919 (verdict form failed to segregate damages for workers' compensation and personal injury, thereby preventing double recovery).

As a part of its jury instructions, the court will decide which verdict forms will be given to the jury and direct the jury on their use, including any special findings that must be made. Some courts hold a conference on all proposed jury instructions and verdict, and findings forms before closing argument. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.24. On court's discretion to decide verdict forms, see §22.2. On jury instructions, see chap 20.

PRACTICE TIP: Label the forms that you draft and submit to the court, e.g., "General Verdict with Special Findings" or "Special Verdict." When the jury is asked to respond to interrogatories so that it can make special findings, it is particularly important to remove any ambiguity about whether the jury will return a general or a special verdict. Otherwise, it may be left to appellate counsel with little or no record on the issue to argue which type of verdict forms were actually intended and used. See §§22.4-22.6, 22.12-22.17.

Check local rules for any requirements on general or special verdict forms. On drafting considerations for different types of verdict forms, see §§22.12-22.14.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.10 1. Submission and Service

Counsel should learn of any particular practices or requirements of the trial judge before submitting verdict forms. If the judge prefers the parties to submit verdict forms as early as the in-chambers conference or before evidence is introduced, counsel should remain cognizant of opportunities to adjust the verdict form. This step is sometimes missed as a result of the pressures of trial.

Check local rules for any procedures for modifying verdict forms before they are given to the jury. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.27 (judge to advise parties on the record outside jurors' hearing if substantive changes are made in jury instructions and verdict and findings forms). Consider too the possibility of seeking modifications to verdict forms submitted by other parties. On objecting to verdict forms, see §§22.18-22.19. When the jury retires to deliberate, the verdict forms that the trial judge has decided are appropriate will be sent to the jury room for the jurors' use.

If counsel wants the jury to make special findings (either to test a general verdict or because the jury is rendering a special verdict), Cal Rules of Ct 3.1580 requires service on all parties of copies of the proposed special interrogatories that are presented to the judge. See §§22.13-22.14. Even when counsel prepares general verdict forms, it is good practice to circulate the proposed forms to other counsel for approval before submitting them to the trial judge.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.11 2. Timing

Although local rules may dictate when verdict forms must be submitted to the court, as a practical matter, all verdict forms should be settled before final argument. The parties' counsel may then appropriately refer to the forms during argument. But see Pressler v Irvine Drugs, Inc. (1985) 169 CA3d 1244, 1251, 215 CR 807 (party complied with court direction that party's proposed interrogatories be submitted after general verdict given to see whether they were necessary).

Generally, however, it is too late to request accompanying special interrogatories after the jury has returned a general verdict. Vivion v National Cash Register Co. (1962) 200 CA2d 597, 602, 19 CR 602 (court cannot require jury to make special findings after general verdict rendered). Under Cal Rules of Ct 3.1580, a party seeking special findings must submit the proposed interrogatories to the trial judge before closing argument (unless otherwise ordered by the court).

PRACTICE TIP: Local court rules or policies frequently require that verdict forms be submitted at a particular point in the trial, which may be earlier than the beginning of closing argument. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.95 (proposed special verdict and finding forms to be submitted before jury instruction conference).

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Drafting considerations

1. General verdicts

§22.12 a. Without special findings

The form used for a general verdict should permit the jury to express any permissible conclusions that may be reached under the evidence and the court's instructions. Fransen v Washington (1964) 229 CA2d 570, 574, 40 CR 458.

Counsel should take care that a general verdict form minimizes opportunities for confusion and does not convey a preference for any party that would risk the trial court's rejecting it or that would provide a basis for appeal. See Mish v Brockus (1950) 97 CA2d 770, 776, 218 P2d 849 (when verdict unintelligible and inconsistent, court should have sent jury back to jury room with instructions to clarify). On defective verdicts, see §§22.24-22.32.

For a form of the court's instructions to the jury in connection with the use of a general verdict form, see §22.35. See general verdict forms for two-party and multiparty lawsuits in §§22.36-22.37.

PRACTICE TIP: It is often better strategy to use a single general verdict form, even if the trial is of more than one action in a consolidated trial. See, e.g., Manufacturers' Fin. Corp. v Pacific Wholesale Radio, Inc. (1933) 130 CA 239, 245, 19 P2d 1013 (using separate verdicts in consolidated cases confused jurors). When the trial is consolidated and there are multiple parties, take special care in drafting the verdict form to avoid confusion and to clearly and unambiguously present all possible outcomes.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.13 b. With special findings

When the court instructs the jury to provide a general verdict with special findings, counsel usually drafts special interrogatories that are included with the general verdict form. It is counsel's responsibility to formulate the appropriate special interrogatories. The trial judge is not obligated to draft special interrogatories or verdict forms. See Mesecher v County of San Diego (1992) 9 CA4th 1677, 1686, 12 CR2d 279. See also Finn v G. D. Searle & Co. (1984) 35 C3d 691, 701, 200 CR 870. On procedures when counsel disagree on the special interrogatories to present to the jury, see §22.18.

If the two are inconsistent, special findings override a general verdict. CCP §625. See §22.25. Because they control, special interrogatories must be carefully drafted. For a court to enter judgment on the findings, they must be specific enough to show absolute irreconcilability to a contrary general verdict. Curtis v State (1982) 128 CA3d 668, 689, 180 CR 843.

PRACTICE TIP: If possible, draft multiple interrogatories so that the answer to one interrogatory determines whether the next interrogatory is to be answered. As an example, see form in §22.39. This technique should help you draft each interrogatory based on a single fact and not assume the existence or nonexistence of other disputed facts in the particular interrogatory.

If multiple parties are involved, it is often useful to refer to a party by name as well as to that party's position in the lawsuit (e.g., "Defendant Smith"). When there are multiple defendants and issues of comparative fault with both economic and noneconomic damages, it is important to have the jury separately specify the amount of each type of damage. For a special verdict form that can also be used for a general verdict with special findings, see §22.41.

The substance of the questions must be within the issues framed by the pleadings and the questions should be phrased to elicit answers that are supported by at least some of the evidence. The interrogatories should call for plain and direct answers, usually "yes" or "no."

Each interrogatory should be unambiguous and readily understandable, avoiding technical language or references, if possible. Law v Northern Assur. Co. (1913) 165 C 394, 405, 132 P 590. The number and detail of special interrogatories, however, should not be so great as to risk jury confusion or to waste jury time. See, e.g., Wyler v Feuer (1978) 85 CA3d 392, 405, 149 CR 626.

Special interrogatories that test a general verdict do not need to address all the issues in the case. Special interrogatories should deal with ultimate facts rather than specific evidentiary matters or legal conclusions. The following examples have been discussed in cases:

EXAMPLE 1: Numerous detailed interrogatories laced with legal conclusions resulted in inconsistencies and confusion. Wyler v Feuer (1978) 85 CA3d 392, 404, 149 CR 626.

EXAMPLE 2: Deposition-style questions that sought to demonstrate the jury's inconsistent subjective thought processes were improper. Gherman v Colburn (1977) 72 CA3d 544, 588, 140 CR 330.

EXAMPLE 3: Special interrogatories were inappropriate when they were not within the issues or did not involve a question of law. Vallejo & N. R.R. v Home Sav. Bank (1914) 24 CA 166, 174, 140 P 974.

EXAMPLE 4: Questioning whether particular representations were material was improper. McEwen v New York Life Ins. Co. (1914) 23 CA 694, 697, 139 P 242.

EXAMPLE 5: "Did the plaintiffs sell and deliver certain goods?" was a sufficiently factual interrogatory. Napa Valley Packing Co. v San Francisco Relief & Red Cross Funds (1911) 16 CA 461, 468, 118 P 469.

When drafting special interrogatories, it is important to label the verdict form clearly as, e.g., "General Verdict with Special Findings" as opposed to "Special Verdict," which has quite a different effect. See §§22.6, 22.17.

For examples of special verdict forms that may also be used as special interrogatories testing a general verdict, see CACI VF-500—VF-502, VF-700—VF-701, VF-704, VF-1000—VF-1001, VF-1200—VF-1206, VF-1208, VF-2900—VF-2901, VF-3100—VF-3107, VF-3700. See also BAJI 16.01-16.93.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.14 2. Special verdicts

The form of interrogatories used for a special verdict can be the same as those used for special findings that accompany a general verdict. The substance of the questions must be within the issues framed by the pleadings, and the questions should be phrased to elicit answers that are supported by at least some of the evidence. The questions must call for ultimate facts, not evidentiary facts or conclusions of law, and must cover all ultimate disputed issues of fact raised by the pleadings. See also discussion in §22.13.

A special verdict is usually in the form of a series of questions to which the jury provides answers. Admitted or undisputed facts should be omitted. See Babcock v Omansky (1973) 31 CA3d 625, 630, 107 CR 512, overruled on other grounds in Canal-Randolph Anaheim, Inc. v Wilkoski (1978) 78 CA3d 477, 485, 144 CR 474. Like special interrogatories accompanying a general verdict, the questions should not be compound or assume facts not in evidence. They should be as simple and clear as possible, and should call for plain and direct answers, preferably "yes" or "no." They should be drafted insofar as possible so that the answer to one interrogatory determines whether the next interrogatory is to be answered.

This technique should help counsel draft each interrogatory based on a single fact and not assume the existence or nonexistence of other disputed facts in the particular interrogatory. See CACI VF-500—VF-502, VF-700—VF-701, VF-704, VF-1000—VF-1001, VF-1200—VF-1206, VF-1208, VF-2900—VF-2901, VF-3100—VF-3107, VF-3700. See also BAJI 16.01-16.93.

WARNING: When drafting special verdict interrogatories, make sure that an affirmative answer establishes a conclusion of fact as established by the evidence and does not merely reiterate the evidence. See CCP §624. See form in §22.41.

© The Regents of the University of California

D. Tactical issues; when to use

1. General verdicts

§22.15 a. Without special findings

The use of general verdicts usually results in the jury's reaching a decision more quickly than it would if it had to discuss and vote on several specific findings. It may also make it easier for the jury to reach a verdict when the jury members have different reasons for arriving at the same outcome, and it allows greater leeway for the jury to act on emotional or other sympathetic reasons in favor of one party.

For these reasons and sometimes for others, plaintiffs often prefer a general verdict while defendants prefer special interrogatories. But generalizations do not always apply, and counsel should carefully consider the potential effects of the several verdict forms possible on a particular case. See §§22.16-22.17.

A general verdict is more easily defended on appeal because it will be upheld if the evidence was sufficient to justify the verdict on any theory. For this reason, general verdicts tend to favor the prevailing party. Conversely, counsel representing a party who appears to be losing the trial should consider requesting special findings. Any important findings in a losing party's favor may form a basis for appeal or, if they are inconsistent with the verdict, may cause the court to enter judgment in accordance with the findings. On verdicts that are defective because of inconsistent findings, see §22.24.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.16 b. With special findings

Whether counsel should request special findings to accompany a general verdict is a tactical issue that requires evaluating the impact they may have on the case. Special interrogatories structure the jury's decision-making process and act as a powerful device for organizing its deliberations.

Unlike special verdicts, which require findings on every fact essential to the case (see §22.17), counsel may select special interrogatories that focus the jury's attention on critical elements that should be considered before reaching a general verdict. Special interrogatories may be useful when an element of a claim or defense should be given particular weight, if multiple plaintiffs or defendants could result in significantly different or confusing decisions on liability or damages, or if some other factor should be emphasized to assist the jury in its truth-finding process.

EXAMPLE: If a claim can be proved or disproved on either of two factual theories, A or B, a general verdict will be upheld if sufficient evidence supports either theory. If the jury establishes on special findings that it based its general verdict on finding A and not on finding B, an appeal can focus on the propriety of finding A. Then if finding A was inappropriate, a reversal may result, even if evidence existed to support finding B, which the jury rejected.

Defendants have traditionally favored special findings in cases in which inflammatory factors could influence the jury to ignore the law through prejudice or sympathy. Well-framed interrogatories can direct the jury's attention to the essential issues and away from irrelevant, although persuasive, emotional issues.

However, special findings may also benefit plaintiffs. For example, when a defendant or a defendant's position might have an undue emotional appeal to a jury, special interrogatories may focus the jury's attention on the appropriate issues or provide a check on the general verdict outcome. Special interrogatories may educate the jury if they highlight the specific requirements that must be met before a defendant can prevail on an affirmative defense.

A plaintiff's verdict may be better able to withstand a motion for new trial or an appeal, particularly in lengthy or complex cases, if the jury has made special findings. See Li v Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 C3d 804, 824, 119 CR 858 ("special verdicts or jury interrogatories can be of invaluable assistance in assuring that the jury has approached its sensitive and often complex task with proper standards"). But see the contrary judicial opinion in Hathaway v Spiro (1985) 164 CA3d 359, 367, 210 CR 421 (use of special findings should be discouraged because of problem of inconsistencies).

Special interrogatories can be useful in isolating the critical issues on appeal. Murrell v State ex rel Dep't of Pub. Works (1975) 47 CA3d 264, 271, 120 CR 812. See also McCloud v Roy Riegels Chems. (1971) 20 CA3d 928, 936, 97 CR 910 (jury returned general verdict without making special findings). Because it was unable to ascertain on appeal which of two defense theories the jury had accepted, the McCloud court strongly urged the use of "special verdicts" in the interests of judicial economy. Although it did not distinguish special verdicts under CCP §624 from general verdicts accompanied by special findings under CCP §625, the court's comments on special verdicts would apply equally well to a general verdict tested by special interrogatories.

Special interrogatories may also be helpful in personal injury actions in which a settlement offer under CCP §998 has been rejected. If the jury decides personal injury and other damages separately, plaintiff's counsel may have an opportunity to obtain prejudgment interest on the personal injury damages under CC §3291, if the personal injury portion of the verdict exceeds the §998 offer. See, e.g., Morin v ABA Recovery Serv. (1987) 195 CA3d 200, 240 CR 509, disapproved on other grounds in Lakin v Watkins Assoc. Indus. (1993) 6 C4th 644, 25 CR2d 109 (holding that CC §3291 "does not authorize the award of prejudgment interest on punitive damages"). For discussion of effect of §998 offers on costs, see §§27.51-27.66.

PRACTICE TIP: A division between personal injury damages and economic damages may have tax consequences, which should be evaluated. As with any special interrogatories, consider whether forcing the jury to determine the specific answers will help or hurt (a) the chances of a favorable outcome or the total amount of the verdict or (b) the chances of defending the verdict on a posttrial motion or appeal.

The responses to special interrogatories may also affect the extent to which the case outcome will have collateral estoppel effects in future litigation. Counsel should consider the potential impact on subsequent lawsuits from factual findings in the current case. For example, a general verdict might be rendered in a case on the basis that a product was either defective in design or negligently used. A general verdict, without more, may not collaterally estop the defendant manufacturer from contending, in later cases, that the product had no design defects. See CCP §1911;

Brake v Beech Aircraft Corp. (1986) 184 CA3d 930, 941, 229 CR 336; Walnut Creek Aggregate Co. v Testing Eng'rs (1967) 248 CA2d 690, 698, 56 CR 700. If the jury renders a special finding that there was a design defect, collateral estoppel may apply, precluding relitigation of that issue in a subsequent suit.

WARNING: A special interrogatory should be used only if it is easy to determine whether its answer is consistent or inconsistent with the general verdict. See Wyler v Feuer (1978) 85 CA3d 392, 404, 149 CR 626; Weisenburg v Molina (1976) 58 CA3d 478, 487, 129 CR 813. On defective verdicts, see §§22.24-22.28.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.17 2. Special verdicts

Special verdicts that omit a necessary factual finding may prevent the entry of judgment or invalidate any resulting judgment. Because they increase the likelihood of reversal on appeal, special verdicts are seldom used unless required. See §22.2.

For a sample form of the court's instructions to the jury in connection with the use of a special verdicts, see CACI 5012, reproduced in §22.40.

NOTE: Most courts and counsel prefer to use a general verdict form with special findings rather than a special verdict. See §22.16.

© The Regents of the University of California

IV. OBJECTING TO FORM OF VERDICT

§22.18 A. When to object: Chambers conference

Counsel should ask to examine any verdict and special interrogatory forms prepared by the court or other counsel before the court instructs the jury. Local rules may address this issue. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.24 (any verdict or findings forms that the trial judge intends to use on the court's own motion should be delivered to counsel).

PRACTICE TIP: When reviewing verdict and findings forms, look carefully for significant ambiguities, phrases that could confuse the jury, disadvantageous preferences in the form of the interrogatories, and internal inconsistencies. Be sure that they appropriately cover the issues tried and do not erroneously depart from jury instructions on the law that applies to the case. Consider seeking the advice of appellate counsel before the final opportunity to raise objections to the verdict forms. That advice may lead to preserving additional issues for appeal. On making trial objections and protecting the record, see chap 15.

Objections must be heard and any necessary corrections made before the forms are submitted to the jury. Counsel who disagree with proposed verdict forms or special interrogatories should present alternative forms to other counsel and to the trial judge. Objections are usually made during the conference in the judge's chambers in which the jury instructions and verdict forms are settled. Serving requests for special findings on all counsel is required. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1580. See §22.10.

PRACTICE TIP: Local rules may also impose a "meet and confer" requirement on counsel to voluntarily withdraw, modify, or stipulate to verdict forms prior to the conference with the judge. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.24.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.19 B. How to preserve record; waiver

If any disagreements about the verdict forms cannot be resolved by the parties, the trial judge usually hears formal argument in the presence of the court reporter, then rules on the objections and proposed forms. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.24.

Counsel should request this or a similar procedure to avoid waiving objections to the verdict forms used. An objection to a verdict form not made in a timely fashion may result in a waiver of the objection for appeal purposes. Orient Handel v United States Fid. & Guar. Co. (1987) 192 CA3d 684, 700, 237 CR 667. On making trial objections and protecting the record, see chap 15.

Any objections to the form of a special interrogatory testing a general verdict must be made before the interrogatory is submitted to the jury; otherwise, the objections will be considered to be waived. See Olson v Arnett (1980) 113 CA3d 59, 66, 169 CR 629; Bank of Santa Ana v Molina (1969) 1 CA3d 607, 624, 81 CR 885.

Similarly, any objections to the form of a special verdict must be made before the special verdict is submitted to the jury, or the objections will be found to have been waived. Olson v Arnett, supra. See Mesecher v County of San Diego (1992) 9 CA4th 1677, 1680, 12 CR2d 279 (county's deliberate submission of inconsistent verdict forms constituted waiver of objection).

V. RETURN OF VERDICT

§22.20 A. Delivery of verdict

When at least three-quarters of the jurors (i.e., nine of the twelve) have agreed on a verdict, the jury foreperson signs the verdict form. CCP §618. If the verdict was reached during a court recess or adjournment, the court may direct the jury to submit the written verdict in sealed form. CCP §617. The verdict may also be received on a holiday. CCP §134(2).

NOTE: Under Govt C §68106(b)(1), effective July 28, 2009, and operative through June 30, 2010, if a court is closed as the result of a budget reduction measure in response to the state fiscal crisis, the day is considered a holiday and not a court day.

When the verdict is ready to be entered, the jury returns to the courtroom. The foreperson usually gives the signed verdict to the bailiff. Then the clerk reads the verdict to the jurors followed by an inquiry to the jury, such as: "Is this your verdict?" See CCP §618. If the jury is not polled, the verdict is entered in the court minutes. See §§22.22-22.23.

PRACTICE TIP: Some trial courts specify additional procedures when the verdict is returned, e.g., that the foreperson give all signed and unsigned verdict forms to the bailiff for delivery to the judge, who then examines them for correctness before the clerk reads them into the record. See Los Angeles Ct R 8.56.

§22.21 1. Number of jurors needed for verdict

In civil cases, three-quarters of the jurors (i.e., nine of the 12) must vote in favor of a verdict. Cal Const art I, §16; CCP §618. This number must agree on all matters essential to the verdict. However, any nine jurors may decide any question submitted to them. See Resch v Volkswagen of Am., Inc. (1984) 36 C3d 676, 682, 205 CR 827. In Resch, the court affirmed the defense verdict in which three jurors who disagreed on a finding that a defect existed voted on another finding that this defect was not a substantial factor in causing plaintiff's injuries. The court reasoned that, if the jury had simply been asked for a general verdict, there would have been nine jurors voting in favor of defendant and that the parties are entitled to have all twelve jurors deliberate on each issue.

As an example, in contrast to the Resch situation, suppose nine jurors find that there was a manufacturing defect and a different nine jurors find that the defect was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury, i.e., only seven of the nine finding a defect also found proximate cause. In this situation, there would not be nine jurors in favor of a general verdict for the plaintiff. Stoner v Williams (1996) 46 CA4th 986, 994, 54 CR2d 243, addresses questions left undecided in Resch. In Stoner, a fraud case, jury instructions included a modified BAJI 2.60 instruction identifying the elements of plaintiff's fraud cause of action. During deliberations, the jury sent the trial judge a note asking "do a minimum of 9 jurors need to agree that the same allegation had been proven or could some agree that one has been proven and others a different one as long as 9 agree that at least one has been proven?" The trial court instructed the jury that it was not necessary that the same nine jurors agree to the same items listed on BAJI 2.60 as long as nine or more agreed that all the elements of the cause of action had been met. The court of appeal, relying by analogy to criminal cases, affirmed.

NOTE: The California Civil Jury Instructions (CACI) have been approved by the Judicial Council as the official instructions for use in California. Cal Rules of Ct 2.1050(e). See CACI 200, which parallels BAJI 2.60 discussed in Stoner v Willliams, supra.

For other scenarios, see Juarez v Superior Court (1982) 31 C3d 759, 762, 183 CR 852 (if same nine jurors find defendant negligent and find such negligence was proximate/legal cause of plaintiff's injury, a different nine jurors may then provide basis for apportionment of damages for comparative negligence purposes). See Mitchell v Gonzales (1991) 54 C3d 1041, 1 CR2d 913, on legal cause (the substantial factor test) requirement in all negligence cases.

WARNING: Counsel must object to the trial court's improperly instructing the jury on the number of jurors that must agree on the same theory in order to reach the verdict; otherwise, waiver may occur. See Orient Handel v United States Fid. & Guar. Co. (1987) 192 CA3d 684, 700, 237 CR 667 (failure to object to special verdict form questions in trial court precluded appeal on issue of number of jurors needed to agree).

On making trial objections and protecting the record, see chap 15.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.22 2. Polling jury; waiver

When the verdict is returned, any party may request that the jury be polled. CCP §618. The court or the clerk polls the jury by asking each juror separately if it is his or her verdict, e.g.: "Is the verdict as read your personal verdict?" Or, for a general verdict with special findings or a special verdict: "Is the response to that question (or issue) your personal response?" See Los Angeles Ct R 8.56.

If the poll discloses that an insufficient majority is in favor of the verdict (i.e., more than one-quarter (or more than three of the twelve jurors) state that it is not their verdict), the jury must be sent back to the jury room for further deliberations. CCP §618; Van Cise v Lencioni (1951) 106 CA2d 341, 347, 235 P2d 236. But see Keener v Jeld-Wen, Inc. (2009) 46 C4th 247, 257, 92 CR3d 862 (silence of juror whom court inadvertently neglected to poll did not constitute disagreement with verdict; verdict stood with only eight polled jurors in agreement). On the jury's reconsideration of a verdict, see §22.30.

During the polling process, the judge, on his or her own initiative or at a party's request, may question a juror to clarify that juror's vote. See, e.g., Marinucci v Bryant (1957) 151 CA2d 298, 302, 311 P2d 622; Fulton v Huguet (1952) 113 CA2d 692, 696, 248 P2d 954. The court may not inquire into the juror's process of evaluation or deliberation except for the express purpose of clarifying the verdict. Tri-Delta Eng'g v Insurance Co. of N. Am. (1978) 80 CA3d 752, 758, 146 CR 14 (trial court erred by questioning jurors after discharge on what they intended verdict to be).

If a party fails to challenge the regularity of the verdict by requesting the court to poll the jury when the verdict is returned, that party waives the right to complain later on appeal about any infirmity that would have been evident from a poll. Henrioulle v Marin Ventures, Inc. (1978) 20 C3d 512, 521, 143 CR 247 (special verdict); Keener v Jeld-Wen, Inc. (2009) 46 C4th 247, 262, 92 CR3d 862 (failure to object to incomplete polling at time constitutes waiver of defect); Silverhart v Mount Zion Hosp. (1971) 20 CA3d 1022, 1029, 98 CR 187 (general verdict).

This principle does not apply, however, when the verdict itself is inconsistent. Remy v Exley Produce Express, Inc. (1957) 148 CA2d 550, 554, 307 P2d 65 (jury held one defendant negligent for plaintiff's injuries but not negligent for another party's injuries, an impossibility under facts of that case). On inconsistent verdicts, see §§22.24-22.26.

NOTE: When a directed verdict has been returned, polling the jury is unnecessary and inappropriate. See Estate of Sharon (1918) 179 C 447, 460, 177 P 283. On directed verdicts, see §§18.35-18.66.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.23 B. Entry of verdict in minutes

Entry of the verdict must be made in the minutes of the court. After the verdict is received, the court clerk is required to specify the time of trial, specify the names of the jurors and witnesses, and set out the verdict at length in the court minutes. CCP §628.

Special verdicts and special findings accompanying a general verdict must be filed with the clerk and entered in the minutes. CCP §625. If a special verdict is returned, the judgment based on that verdict, or an order reserving the case for further argument or consideration, is entered. CCP §628.

Within 24 hours after receiving the verdict in a jury trial, the clerk must enter judgment in conformity with the verdict, unless the court orders otherwise. See CCP §664. On judgments, see chap 23.

VI. DEFECTIVE VERDICTS

§22.24 A. Internal inconsistencies in verdict

A verdict may be defective if, given the applicable law, it has material internal inconsistencies. These defects usually occur when there are multiple parties. On inconsistencies between a general verdict and special findings testing that verdict, see §22.25.

EXAMPLE: In an automobile accident case against a car manufacturer, the jury awarded plaintiff $7.5 million after rendering special verdicts that the vehicle was negligently, but not defectively, designed. The court of appeal reversed and remanded for a new trial based on an inconsistent verdict. A finding of negligent design is precluded if the jury finds no defect in design. Lambert v General Motors (1998) 67 CA4th 1179, 79 CR2d 657.

A verdict against a defendant who can be only secondarily liable, e.g., on a respondeat superior basis, and in favor of a defendant who is primarily liable, is fatally inconsistent. Brown v Regan (1938) 10 C2d 519, 522, 75 P2d 1063. A similar rule applies to plaintiffs. See Morris v McCauley's Quality Transmission Serv. (1976) 60 CA3d 964, 970, 132 CR 37 (when plaintiff A's rights are derivative of those of plaintiff B, a verdict in favor of A but no recovery for B is fatally inconsistent).

When a defendant who is found liable may also be found liable on some independent basis, the verdict may not be inconsistent. See McCullough v Langer (1937) 23 CA2d 510, 516, 73 P2d 649 (verdict upheld in favor of defendant employee/nurse but against defendant employer/doctor who negligently supervised plaintiff's treatment). On judicial interest in upholding verdicts, see §22.33.

When two defendants should both be legally liable or not liable if certain facts are found, a verdict is inconsistent if it is in favor of one and against the other. See Campbell v Zokelt (1969) 272 CA2d 315, 319, 77 CR 561 (verdict in one plaintiff's favor but not the other's for injuries from single accident caused by defendant's alleged negligence is inconsistent); Remy v Exley Produce Express, Inc. (1957) 148 CA2d 550, 554, 307 P2d 65 (jury held one defendant negligent for plaintiff's injuries but not negligent for another party's injuries, an impossibility under facts of that case).

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Special findings inconsistent with general verdict

§22.25 1. Judgment must be in accord with special findings

When a special finding is fatally inconsistent with the general verdict, the court must give judgment in accordance with the special finding. CCP §625; Bond v DeWitt (1954) 126 CA2d 540, 544, 272 P2d 561.

The courts are reluctant, however, to conclude that an irreconcilable inconsistency has occurred. Tavaglione v Billings (1993) 4 C4th 1150, 1157, 17 CR2d 608; Curtis v State (1982) 128 CA3d 668, 689, 180 CR 843. See Hathaway v Spiro (1985) 164 CA3d 359, 210 CR 421 (plaintiffs made unopposed motion to dismiss two defendants, thereby making verdict consistent). See §25.33.

For the court to enter a judgment based on a special finding that is contrary to the general verdict, the special finding itself must unquestionably require a judgment different from the general verdict. Hasson v Ford Motor Co. (1977) 19 C3d 530, 540, 138 CR 705, disapproved on other grounds in Soule v General Motors Corp. (1994) 8 C4th 548, 574, 34 CR2d 607; Weisenburg v Molina (1976) 58 CA3d 478, 486, 129 CR 813.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.26 2. Procedures for entering judgment on findings

If the difference between a special finding and the general verdict cannot be reconciled, the party in whose favor the findings have been made should move to enter judgment on the findings.

Counsel must make the motion before judgment is entered on the general verdict. Otherwise, the only remedy in the trial court is a motion for new trial. See, e.g., Olson v Arnett (1980) 113 CA3d 59, 66, 169 CR 629; Bank of Santa Ana v Molina (1969) 1 CA3d 607, 624, 81 CR 885. On objecting to and curing inconsistencies before jury's discharge, see §22.30.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.27 C. Partial verdict

A verdict must be complete as to the parties before judgment can be entered on a claim between those parties. A verdict that is specific for some but not all defendants may indicate the jury's failure to determine all issues. See, e.g., Walters v Marler (1978) 83 CA3d 1, 20, 147 CR 655, disapproved on other grounds in Gray v Don Miller & Assocs. (1984) 35 C3d 498, 507, 198 CR 551; Keller v Smith (1933) 130 CA 128, 131, 19 P2d 541.

A verdict must also be complete as to the issues submitted to it. A jury must resolve all the ultimate facts presented to it in a special verdict form. A "partial" verdict finding negligence based on a special finding of negligence cannot be entered by itself if the jury has not decided the causation and damage issues. See Falls v Superior Court (1987) 194 CA3d 851, 855, 239 CR 862 (mistrial necessary when jury, by special verdicts, found negligence and causation but was deadlocked on percentage of fault and damages). But see Contreras v Goldrich (1992) 10 CA4th 1431, 13 CR2d 394 (jury deadlocked on negligence but decided that defendant's negligence was not a legal cause of plaintiff's injury; verdict held to be complete).

If the jury has not been discharged, it should be ordered to retire and attempt to complete or correct a partial verdict. On jury's reconsideration of verdict, see §22.30. If the jury was deadlocked or excused, the issues regarding the omitted defendants may have to be retried. See Irelan-Yuba Gold Quartz Mining Co. v PG&E (1941) 18 C2d 557, 571, 116 P2d 611. On motion for new trial based on jury's verdict, see §25.46.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.28 D. Irregularities and ambiguities

If a written verdict form returned by the jury includes unnecessary or surplus language, and the unnecessary language is immaterial to the verdict, it may be disregarded. Kirby v Adcock (1953) 116 CA2d 570, 571, 253 P2d 700; Keating v Zumwalt (1949) 91 CA2d 845, 847, 206 P2d 10. See Floyd v Laws (9th Cir 1991) 929 F2d 1390, 1397 (surplus information given in jury verdict in violation of instructions may be ignored).

EXAMPLE: When the jury improperly tries to apportion damages among joint tortfeasors, the court may treat that language as surplusage and uphold the verdict for plaintiff without ordering a new trial. Aitken v White (1949) 93 CA2d 134, 142, 208 P2d 788.

A verdict that is incomplete or ambiguous can be clarified by the judge when the verdict is announced, or the judge may direct the jurors to return to the jury room to eliminate the ambiguities in the verdict. CCP §619. See §§22.29-22.30. A verdict with improper grammatical construction may stand if the verdict's meaning is reasonably clear. Grover v Morrison (1920) 47 CA 521, 532, 190 P 1078.

If the jury has already been discharged, a verdict that is ambiguous, inconsistent, or incomprehensible requires a new trial. See Woodcock v Fontana Scaffolding & Equip. Co. (1968) 69 C2d 452, 457, 72 CR 217; Stillwell v Salvation Army (2008) 167 CA4th 360, 84 CR3d 111. On motions for new trial, see §§25.22-25.71.

© The Regents of the University of California

E. Curing defective verdict

§22.29 1. Judge's clarification of verdict

When the jury delivers a verdict that is insufficient or does not cover the issues submitted, the judge may have the jury correct it under the advice of the court or send the jury back to the jury room to correct it. CCP §619. The trial judge is obligated to require the jury to correct or clarify a verdict needing correction or clarification. See Brown v Regan (1938) 10 C2d 519, 524, 75 P2d 1063; Mish v Brockus (1950) 97 CA2d 770, 776, 218 P2d 849. On sending jury out to reconsider its verdict, see §22.30.

The trial judge may question the jurors in court to clarify the verdict. See Marinucci v Bryant (1957) 151 CA2d 298, 302, 311 P2d 622; Fulton v Huguet (1952) 113 CA2d 692, 696, 248 P2d 954. There are limits, however, to a trial judge's power to interrogate jurors. It is improper for a trial judge to try to influence or coerce a verdict. Crowe v Sacks (1955) 44 C2d 590, 598, 283 P2d 689; Tri-Delta Eng'g v Insurance Co. of N. Am. (1978) 80 CA3d 752, 758, 146 CR 14. Check local rules for any procedures affecting correction of the verdict. See §22.30.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.30 2. Jury's reconsideration of verdict

Instead of questioning the jurors in an effort to cure a defective verdict (see §22.29), the court may return the jury to the jury room and order further deliberations to clarify or correct an uncertainty or ambiguity. CCP §619; Sherwood v Rossini (1968) 264 CA2d 926, 928, 71 CR 1; Fibreboard Paper Prods. Corp. v East Bay Union of Machinists (1964) 227 CA2d 675, 732, 39 CR 64.

PRACTICE TIP: Local rules may spell out additional procedures for correcting a verdict. See Los Angeles Ct R 8.56 (trial judge should call counsel to the bench to discuss inquiries to be directed to foreperson and the possible return of the verdict forms with instructions to clarify, complete, or revise them).

If the jury is sent out for further deliberations on a verdict that has not yet been entered, the jury, in reconsidering the issues, is free to change the verdict. See, e.g., Crowe v Sacks (1955) 44 C2d 590, 598, 283 P2d 689; Toon v Pickwick Stages (1928) 95 CA 370, 374, 272 P 797.

Any clarification or correction of a jury verdict should be made before the jury is discharged and the verdict recorded. See, e.g., Sparks v Berntsen (1942) 19 C2d 308, 313, 121 P2d 497. The courts have been reluctant to recall jurors after their discharge to clarify or correct a verdict. See People v Thornton (1984) 155 CA3d 845, 855, 202 CR 448.

Recall of a recently discharged jury is permissible if there is no reason to believe that the jurors were subjected to events or matters that could influence their decision in the case after their discharge. See Estate of Woehr (1958) 166 CA2d 4, 14, 332 P2d 818; People v Powell (1950) 99 CA2d 178, 181, 221 P2d 117. However, a court has no jurisdiction to correct a defective verdict once the jury has been discharged when the jurors could have been influenced after their discharge (e.g., discussing the case with counsel for the parties or others) and are out of the court's "control." People v Hendricks (1987) 43 C3d 584, 597, 238 CR 66.

NOTE: After polling, if no more than one-quarter of the jury disagrees with the verdict, and if the verdict is not ambiguous or inconsistent, the jury cannot properly be sent back for further deliberations. The verdict is complete and the jury must be discharged from the case. CCP §618; Resch v Volkswagen of Am., Inc. (1984) 36 C3d 676, 682, 205 CR 827. On polling the jury after delivery of the verdict, see §22.22.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.31 3. Procedures; waiver

Counsel should call any defect in the verdict to the trial judge's attention before the jury is discharged, because any correctable error evident at that time may be waived if no objection is made. See Henrioulle v Marin Ventures, Inc. (1978) 20 C3d 512, 521, 143 CR 247; Keener v Jeld-Wen, Inc. (2009) 46 C4th 247, 269, 92 CR3d 862 (objection to incomplete polling must be timely made; court cannot cure defect after jury is discharged).

Failure to raise an objection to a jury's verdict does not automatically result in a waiver. See Saxena v Goffney (2008) 159 CA4th 316, 328, 71 CR3d 469 (no waiver because defendant had no obligation to ensure that defective verdict addressed plaintiff's battery); DuBarry Int'l v Southwest Forest Indus. (1991) 231 CA3d 552, 565 n17, 282 CR 181 (waiver only if element of negligence or culpability exists). A waiver will not occur when the failure to object was not the result of a desire to reap a "technical advantage" or engage in a "litigious strategy," in which case the court may have to interpret an ambiguous verdict. Woodcock v Fontana Scaffolding & Equip. Co. (1968) 69 C2d 452, 456 n2, 72 CR 217. See §22.33.

Waiver will not occur when there is a fatal inconsistency, error, or confusion in the jury verdict itself. Morris v McCauley's Quality Transmission Serv. (1976) 60 CA3d 964, 972, 132 CR 37.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.32 F. Impeaching improper verdict

The courts have recognized the desirability of preserving the secrecy of jury deliberations, protecting jurors from the pressures of dissatisfied litigants and from corrupt jurors' destroying a proper verdict, and avoiding unnecessary relitigation. See §22.33. On jury deliberations, see chap 21.

After the verdict has been entered and the jury discharged, however, counsel may properly question consenting jurors on the possibility that the verdict was improperly reached. A verdict may be improper if it is based on guess, conjecture, speculation, chance, quotient, or other juror misconduct. See CCP §657(2); CACI 5001; Oldenberg v Sears Roebuck & Co. (1957) 152 CA2d 733, 741, 314 P2d 33. See also BAJI 15.33. A verdict may be impeached on the basis of affidavits that describe jurors' overt conduct that is open to corroboration, but not by the mental processes by which the jurors determined the verdict. See In re Stankewitz (1985) 40 C3d 391, 398, 220 CR 382; Ford v Bennacka (1990) 226 CA3d 330, 334, 276 CR 513; DiRosario v Havens (1987) 196 CA3d 1224, 1238, 242 CR 423. On motion for new trial based on juror misconduct, see §§25.30-25.32. See also §§21.35-21.43.

EXAMPLE: The classic example of an improperly reached verdict is Ham v County of Los Angeles (1920) 46 CA 148, 189 P 462, in which nine jurors agreed that each would write the amount of damages he or she thought was appropriate on a slip of paper and that they would then render a verdict for damages at the average of those nine numbers. No further discussion or voting took place. That process was found to result in an improper quotient verdict, and a new trial was ordered.

It is not improper, however, for the jury to use an averaging or quotient calculation as part of its discussions, as long as there is no agreement beforehand to be bound by the result and if there is further discussion and deliberation about the propriety of the final number as the jury's verdict. Bardessono v Michels (1970) 3 C3d 780, 794, 91 CR 760; Balkwill v City of Stockton (1942) 50 CA2d 661, 672, 123 P2d 596.

A verdict is also improper if it includes in its damage assessment items that are not properly recoverable as damages. See, e.g., Kruse v Graham (1977) 19 C3d 59, 81, 137 CR 863 (improper for jury to agree to increase award by one third as compensation for attorney fees); Tramell v McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1984) 163 CA3d 157, 172, 209 CR 427 (improper discussion to raise verdict amount to compensate for attorney fees and taxes).

When it becomes clear that the jury improperly reached its verdict, counsel for the losing party should file the required "no-knowledge" affidavits (see §25.62) and move for new trial. On motions for new trial, see §§25.22-25.71.

© The Regents of the University of California

§22.33 G. Judicial interest in upholding verdicts

Avoiding court time and effort in retrying cases is in the interest of judicial administration, and whenever possible appellate courts interpret verdicts to uphold them. See, e.g., Clark v McClurg (1932) 215 C 279, 285, 9 P2d 505 (verdicts should be liberally construed and not reversed because of their form); Crain v Sumida (1922) 59 CA 590, 594, 211 P 479 (verdict can be made sufficiently certain by reference to pleadings, evidence, or record).

Courts may even strain to find some analysis to uphold a verdict. See, e.g., Chance v Lawry's, Inc. (1962) 58 C2d 368, 382, 24 CR 209 (concluding that error may have been on the portion of verdict not appealed); Stefanuto v Market St. Ry. Co. (1938) 24 CA2d 565, 566, 75 P2d 1089 (possibility that jury could have concluded that defendant/employee was not driver of car causing accident meant that verdict against corporate employer, the vehicle owner, was not inconsistent with verdict in favor of defendant/employee).

Jury Instruction

When you go to the jury room, the first thing you should do is choose a presiding juror. The presiding juror should see to it that your discussions are orderly and that everyone has a fair chance to be heard.

If there is more than one verdict to decide, for example, a verdict on the complaint and a verdict on the cross-complaint, the same jurors do not have to agree on each verdict. Any nine jurors are sufficient.

As soon as you have agreed on a verdict, the presiding juror must date and sign the form and notify the clerk or the bailiff.

Comment: This general verdict form may be used in a trial with one plaintiff, two defendants, and a cross-complaint against a cross-defendant, or modified for use in any multiple-party case. The form presupposes joint and several liability on the part of the defendants found liable. If liability is not joint and several, or if comparative negligence doctrines apply, the verdict forms must specify damages against each potentially culpable party. See, e.g., CACI VF-1200, VF-1204. See also BAJI 16.10. On special verdict forms for comparative implied indemnity among defendants, see BAJI 16.72-16.73, which have no counterpart in CACI. ## I. SCOPE OF CHAPTER

§23.1 A. Judgment after trial

This chapter covers the procedures for obtaining entry of judgment after trial based on either a jury verdict or the court's decision after a bench trial. Considerations involved in drafting proposed judgments to accompany statements of decision after a bench trial are covered in detail in §§24.34-24.50.

Judgment as a result of successful motions during trial for nonsuit or for directed verdict is discussed in chap 18. For other ways of obtaining judgment, including judgment without trial, see §23.2.

This chapter is written from the perspective of a litigant who expects to prevail and whose concerns, after prevailing, are twofold: (1) enforcing the judgment and (2) making sure the judgment is immune from challenges advanced on appeal. The chapter focuses on the following broad questions, any or all of which a litigant is likely to ask:

- What is a judgment and how does it differ from other rulings that appear similar? See §§23.3-23.5.
- How is a judgment prepared and entered? See §§23.19-23.28. For procedures that focus on jury trials, see §§23.20-23.22. For procedures that focus on bench trials, see §§23.23-23.26.
- What are the substantive factors affecting the validity and enforceability of a judgment? See §§23.6-23.12.
- What are the formal requirements affecting the validity and enforceability of a judgment? See §§23.13-23.18.
- What can be done with a judgment once it has been obtained? On correcting and modifying judgments, see §§23.29-23.31.
- What is the effect of entry of judgment on subsequent proceedings? See §§23.32-23.36.

Sample forms appear in the final section of the chapter. See §§23.37-23.42.

For discussion of the procedures for enforcement of money judgments, see Debt Collection Practice in California (2d ed Cal CEB 1999).

§23.2 B. Ways to obtain judgment with or without trial

The following list outlines various ways that judgments can be obtained with or without a trial, or without a complete trial (e.g., when a motion during trial eliminates the need to try the case further). Cross-references to discussion in this chapter, other chapters of this book, and other sources are included for each subject listed.

- Judgment based on jury verdict. See §§23.20-23.22.
- Judgment based on statement of decision in bench trial. See §23.24.
- Judgment obtained in bench trial when statement of decision not requested or waived. See §23.25.
- Judgment for dismissal when a party fails to appear at trial. See California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 39 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).
- Judgment for default on party's failure to answer complaint (CCP §§585-587). See Civ Proc Before Trial, chap 38.
- Judgment for nonsuit. See §§18.7-18.34.
- Judgment on directed verdict. See §§18.35-18.56.
- Judgment notwithstanding the verdict. See §§25.2-25.21.
- Summary judgment (CCP §437c). See Civ Proc Before Trial, chap 36.
- Stipulated (or consent) judgments. See Civ Proc Before Trial, chap 48.

II. DISTINGUISHING TYPES OF JUDGMENTS FROM OTHER SIMILAR RULINGS

§23.3 A. Final and interlocutory judgments, appealable

A judgment is the final determination of the rights of the parties in an action or a proceeding. CCP §577.

The term "final judgment" is used in several senses but most often to designate a judgment that terminates litigation between parties. In this sense, a judgment is "final" when it terminates the litigation between the parties and leaves nothing to be done but to enforce, by execution, what has been determined. See Civic W. Corp. v Zila Indus. (1977) 66 CA3d 1, 12, 135 CR 915.

EXAMPLE: A trial court judgment enforcing an administrative tribunal's final order is a final judgment because nothing is left to be done except enforce the judgment. ALRB v Tex-Cal Land Mgmt., Inc. (1987) 43 C3d 696, 703, 238 CR 780.

Only a final judgment on the merits can serve as the basis for invocation of the doctrines of res judicata or collateral estoppel. See French v Rishell (1953) 40 C2d 477, 254 P2d 26; Romadka v Hoge (1991) 232 CA3d 1231, 283 CR 878; Rebco Dev. v Superior Court (1977) 67 CA3d 13, 136 CR 351. For further discussion, see §23.35.

An "interlocutory" judgment, by contrast, is only a provisional determination of certain issues and requires further judicial action. Most interlocutory judgments (i.e., those that are not appealable) may be modified by the court before entry of the final judgment. Travelers Ins. Co. v Superior Court (1977) 65 CA3d 751, 760, 135 CR 579.

EXAMPLE: A verdict on completion of the liability phase of a bifurcated trial is not a final order or appealable until final judgment in the case. Plaza Tulare v Tradewell Stores, Inc. (1989) 207 CA3d 522, 254 CR 792.

Some interlocutory decrees must be challenged by means of a writ petition, rather than on appeal. For example, although a determination that a settlement has been made in good faith under CCP §877.6 is an interlocutory decree, a defendant wishing to challenge the good faith determination must do so through a petition for writ of mandate under CCP §877.6(e). O'Hearn v Hillcrest Gym & Fitness Ctr., Inc. (2004) 115 CA4th 491, 498, 9 CR3d 342. The defendant may not wait and appeal the good faith settlement determination following a final judgment. See California Civil Procedure Before Trial §50.28 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

A judgment labeled "interlocutory," may actually be "final." See Price v Slawter (1959) 169 CA2d 448, 451, 337 P2d 914. Similarly, a judgment may be final even though it shares some characteristics of an interlocutory order, such as the following:

- The trial court retains the ability to modify it in some aspects (see Sontag Chain Stores Co. v Superior Court (1941) 18 C2d 92, 94, 113 P2d 689; Civic W. Corp. v Zila Indus., supra);
- The judgment is conditional (see Taper v City of Long Beach (1982) 129 CA3d 590, 181 CR 169; discussion in §23.4); or

A distinction must be made between acts that constitute compliance with a final judgment, on the one hand, and a judgment requiring further judicial action, on the other. See Kinoshita v Horio (1986) 186 CA3d 959, 231 CR 241 (trial court's order for sale that must later be confirmed, or direction that receiver's accounting be prepared and later approved, held to be "interlocutory").

Another basis for distinguishing final from interlocutory judgments is appealability. See CCP §904.1. There can be no final judgment until all the matters in litigation are determined. Kinoshita v Horio, supra. In an action involving multiple parties, a judgment that leaves no issues to be determined as to any one party is appealable. See Justus v Atchison (1977) 19 C3d 564, 568, 139 CR 97, disapproved on other grounds in Ochoa v Superior Court (1985) 39 C3d 159, 171, 216 CR 661.

All judgments that leave issues to be resolved are therefore interlocutory. A court order (i.e., a direction that a judge makes in writing) is generally not appealable. Statutory exceptions, however, allow certain interlocutory judgments and court orders to be appealable. See list in CCP §§904.1 (unlimited civil case; see CCP §88), 904.2 (limited civil case; see CCP §85). For example, a sanctions order of over $5000 is an appealable matter. CCP §904.1(a)(11)-(12). Sanctions of a lesser amount are reviewable by petition for an extraordinary writ at the discretion of the court of appeal or after final judgment. CCP §904.1(b). An order granting an injunction is appealable, but the right of appeal does not bar the right to seek a writ if appeal is not an adequate remedy. CCP §904.1(a)(6); Board of Police Comm'rs v Superior Court (1985) 168 CA3d 420, 214 CR 493. For complete discussion of appealability, see California Civil Appellate Practice, chap 3 (3d ed Cal CEB 1996).

In another sense, a judgment is "final" as to the issues it resolves only when the judgment is immune from review. In this sense, a judgment is not "final" as long as an appeal is pending, the time to file a notice of appeal has not yet expired, or a motion for new trial is pending. See Southern Pub. Util. Dist. v Silva (1956) 47 C2d 163, 165, 301 P2d 841; Jennings v Ward (1931) 114 CA 536, 300 P 129.

NOTE: The term "decree" usually describes a judgment made in an equitable proceeding, but because both legal and equitable proceedings are now heard in the same court, there is no longer any particular significance to the term.

§23.4 B. Conditional, alternative, and deficiency judgments

Conditional judgments. Although a judgment must be definite, it need not be unconditional. The court may render a judgment in which relief is granted to the prevailing party only after specified conditions designed to protect the rights of the losing party have been met. Seeger v Odell (1941) 18 C2d 409, 115 P2d 977. Generally, the purpose of a conditional judgment is to avoid a forfeiture.

NOTE: A conditional judgment is, by its nature, usually interlocutory and requires further judicial action. See §23.3. When the condition affects only the right to enforce the judgment, however, a judgment is final even if it is called "interlocutory" or "conditional."

Alternative judgments. A final judgment may be framed in the alternative. A common example is the typical judgment in an action for the recovery of personal property, which provides that the plaintiff is entitled to immediate possession of specific property or the value of the property in the event possession cannot be had. For a sample form of alternative judgment, see §23.39.

Deficiency judgments. A deficiency judgment is a money judgment for the amount of a debt that remains unpaid after a lien securing the debt was foreclosed. CCP §580a. A number of statutes prohibit a secured creditor from obtaining a deficiency judgment, thereby forcing the creditor to satisfy the debt solely from the security. See CCP §§580b, 580d, 726; CC §1812.5. For detailed discussion of deficiency judgments and antideficiency rules, see California Mortgages, Deeds of Trust, and Foreclosure Litigation, chaps 4-5 (4th ed Cal CEB 2009).

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.5 C. Separate judgments and "single judgment" rule

Although there are many exceptions, the general rule is that there can be only one final judgment in an action, i.e., a single judgment rather than separate judgments. See, e.g., Nicholson v Henderson (1944) 25 C2d 375, 153 P2d 945.

If there are only two parties to an action, or if the interests of all parties on each side are united, only one judgment is proper regardless of the number of separate causes of action set forth in the complaint. Bank of America Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n v Superior Court (1942) 20 C2d 697, 128 P2d 357.

Similarly, a defendant held liable in a bifurcated trial must wait until the completion of all stages of the trial before a single judgment is entered "as if all the issues in the case had been tried at one time." CCP §598. Lauderdale v U & I Equipment Co. (1969) 271 CA2d 140, 76 CR 483.

Generally, a ruling on a cross-complaint is not sufficiently independent to allow a separate judgment. Sjoberg v Hastorf (1948) 33 C2d 116, 199 P2d 668. When an action involves cross-demands between the same parties and both the plaintiff and the cross-complainant prevail, a single net judgment should be rendered. Moss Constr. Co. v Wulffsohn (1953) 116 CA2d 203, 253 P2d 483. A separate judgment is within the trial court's discretion, however, when the plaintiff's and cross-complainant's interests are not identical. Howe v Key Sys. Transit Co. (1926) 198 C 525, 246 P 39. See National Elec. Supply Co. v Mount Diablo Unified Sch. Dist. (1960) 187 CA2d 418, 9 CR 864.

The single judgment rule applies to negligence cases if neither the plaintiff nor the defendant is insured. Jess v Herrmann (1979) 26 C3d 131, 137, 161 CR 87. When both parties are insured, however, the insurer of each must pay the damages awarded to the other; therefore, there must be separate judgments. Jess v Herrmann, supra.

Whenever there is an action involving separate and independent claims against two or more defendants, the "single judgment" rule does not apply and the court determines whether a single judgment or separate judgments are appropriate. Rauer v Hertweck (1917) 175 C 278, 165 P 946; Stafford v Yerge (1956) 139 CA2d 851, 294 P2d 721. In an action against several defendants, the court may render judgment against one or more of them, leaving the action to proceed against the others. CCP §579.

PRACTICE TIP: When there are several plaintiffs or defendants, be prepared to address the issue of a "single judgment" versus more than one separate judgment. See CCP §579.

Similarly, in an action against two or more defendants whose liability is joint, several, or joint and several, the court may properly render several judgments. This rule applies to actions in contract as well as to actions in tort. CCP §410.70. On joint and several judgments, see §23.32.

When two or more defendants are named in an action on a contract and some of them do not appear because they are not served, the court may proceed "against such of the defendants as are served as if they were the only defendants." CCP §410.70. When read together with CCP §§578-579, §410.70 enables a court to render several judgments against the defendants who are served.

Code of Civil Procedure §§410.70 and 579 also apply to actions in which some but not all of the defendants have defaulted. Entry of a default judgment may be taken "against one or more of the defendants" in an action on a contract. CCP §585(a). Therefore, it is generally proper for a court to render a default judgment against one or more defendants, even though other defendants have answered and are awaiting a trial on the merits. See Taylor v Socony Mobil Oil Co. (1966) 242 CA2d 832, 51 CR 764. This is a matter for the court's discretion, however. See CCP §579; Morehouse v Wanzo (1968) 266 CA2d 846, 72 CR 607.

CAUTION: If the defendants are jointly liable on the same obligation, as in the case of a partnership and its partners, it is error for the court to enter the default judgment of one defendant while the action remains pending against the others. Mirabile v Smith (1953) 119 CA2d 685, 260 P2d 179. To do otherwise might result in inconsistent adjudications of joint liability.

Separate default judgments on cross-complaints are permitted. See CCP §585(e). There must be a factual basis for the judgment, however, and the court must find that a separate judgment on the cross-complaint would not substantially delay the final disposition of the action between the parties. CCP §585(e).

III. SUBSTANTIVE FACTORS AFFECTING VALIDITY AND ENFORCEABILITY OF JUDGMENTS

§23.6 A. Lack of jurisdiction

A final judgment by a court of general jurisdiction bears a presumption of validity and is not subject to collateral attack. A "collateral attack" on a judgment is an indirect attack, made in a proceeding brought for some purpose other than directly challenging the judgment. A collateral attack will lie only for jurisdictional defects in the judgment. See Marriage of Hanley (1988) 199 CA3d 1109, 1120, 245 CR 441, overruled on other grounds in Leadford v Leadford (1992) 6 CA4th 571, 575 n5, 245 CR 441. The burden is on the party attacking the judgment to show lack of jurisdiction. Craney v Low (1956) 46 C2d 757, 298 P2d 860.

A court may lack jurisdiction to render a judgment for either of two distinct reasons: (1) The court may lack jurisdiction over one of the parties to the action or the subject matter of the action; or (2) the court may lack the power to grant a particular type of relief under any circumstances. In either case, a judgment rendered by a court in excess of its jurisdiction is void and subject to collateral attack. See Hunter v Superior Court (1939) 36 CA2d 100, 112, 97 P2d 492. On the jurisdictional requirement that must be met before a temporary judge tries a case, see §23.18.

Nonjurisdictional errors are not the appropriate targets of a collateral attack. For example, a judgment that violates a statute is reversible on appeal but is not void and therefore not subject to collateral attack. Armstrong v Armstrong (1976) 15 C3d 942, 126 CR 805; Estate of Gardiner (1941) 45 CA2d 559, 114 P2d 643.

For detailed discussion of the substantive law of jurisdiction, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chaps 6-7 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

B. Death or dissolution of party

§23.7 1. Before action

A dead person cannot properly be joined as a defendant in a civil action; any claim against a decedent must be pursued against the personal representative of the estate. It follows that a judgment in an action brought against a dead person is void because the decedent was never a party to the action. Conlin v Blanchard (1933) 219 C 632, 28 P2d 12. But see Estate of Wise (1949) 34 C2d 376, 210 P2d 497 (in heirship proceedings in which jurisdiction is in rem, Conlin rule does not apply).

A different rule applies in the case of a corporation or partnership. After dissolution, corporations and partnerships continue to exist for the purpose of winding up their affairs; they cease to exist as viable legal entities only when they have been wound up. MacMillan Petroleum Corp. v Griffin (1950) 99 CA2d 523, 222 P2d 69 (corporation). Many litigants, and even some courts, erroneously speak of dissolution and winding up as interchangeable terms. Dissolution represents only the first step in the process of winding up, and corporations and partnerships in dissolution may prosecute and defend actions. Corp C §§6720(a) (corporations).

The partners of a dissolved partnership continue to be liable for partnership obligations incurred before dissolution, and a partnership in dissolution properly can be joined as a party defendant. Braun v Woollacott (1900) 129 C 107, 61 P 801. See also Cotten v Perishable Air Conditioners (1941) 18 C2d 575, 116 P2d 603.

A corporation whose powers have been suspended (e.g., for nonpayment of taxes) can still be a party if it later perfects or reinstates its corporate status. Peacock Hill Ass'n v Peacock Lagoon Constr. Co. (1972) 8 C3d 369, 105 CR 29. See Traub Co. v Coffee Break Serv., Inc. (1967) 66 C2d 368, 57 CR 846 (suspension of corporation's powers for nonpayment of taxes after filing of cross-complaint but before judgment neither deprived court of jurisdiction nor rendered its judgment void). See also Color-Vue, Inc. v Abrams (1996) 44 CA4th 1599, 1603, 52 CR2d 443; Benton v County of Napa (1991) 226 CA3d 1485, 1489, 277 CR 541.

§23.8 2. During action, before judgment

The death of a party during the course of an action but before the verdict or decision raises the question of whether the action survives the death. See 3 California Decedent Estate Practice, chap 32 (2d ed Cal CEB 2009).

If the action survives, it is stayed until the appointment of the decedent's personal representative. The court must allow the action to be continued by or against the personal representative if a motion to that effect is made. CCP §§377.31, 377.41.

Code of Civil Procedure §669 provides that the court may render judgment notwithstanding the death of a party "after trial and submission of the case to a judge sitting without a jury for decision or after a verdict upon any issue of fact." Unlike other judgments, one entered against a deceased party is not a lien on his or her real property. The judgment merely serves to liquidate a claim payable in the course of the administration of the decedent's estate. Prob C §§9300-9304.

Given the court's inherent power to render judgment nunc pro tunc (retroactively), and the absence from CCP §669 of language limiting that power, judgment in a case in which one of the parties dies may be entered nunc pro tunc as of a date before his or her death if, at the time of death, the action was in condition for the entry of final judgment. Norton v City of Pomona (1935) 5 C2d 54, 62, 53 P2d 952. See also Cadlo v Metalclad Insulation Corp. (2007) 151 CA4th 1311, 61 CR3d 104 (in personal injury case in which plaintiff died 2 days after jury verdict, court did not abuse its discretion in entering judgment retroactive to day after verdict and 1 day before plaintiff died). But see Williamson v Plant Insulation Co. (1994) 23 CA4th 1406, 1413, 28 CR2d 751, a personal injury case in which the court of appeal held that a trial judge could not enter judgment nunc pro tunc in order to save the deceased plaintiff's damages for pain and suffering. See also Sullivan v Delta Air Lines, Inc. (1997) 15 C4th 288, 300, 63 CR2d 74 (citing Williamson dictum with approval).

On the situation of a corporation being suspended during the pendency of an action, see Traub Co. v Coffee Break Serv., Inc. (1967) 66 C2d 368, 57 CR 846.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.9 3. After judgment

The death of a party after judgment does not affect the judgment's validity or enforceability:

- On the death of a judgment creditor, the unsatisfied portion of any judgment in his or her favor becomes an asset of the probate estate, which may be enforced by the personal representative of the estate. Widener v Hartnett (1938) 30 CA2d 165, 85 P2d 925. See also Collison v Thomas (1961) 55 C2d 490, 11 CR 555. This rule applies even where the judgment is on appeal. Sullivan v Delta Air Lines, Inc. (1997) 15 C4th 288, 63 CR2d 74 (explaining the common law and statutory bases of the rule).
- On the death of a judgment debtor, an unsatisfied judgment must be filed and presented as a claim against the estate if payment is to be obtained during the course of administration. Prob C §§9300-9304. Under Prob C §9300, after the death of the decedent, all judgments against the decedent are payable in the course of administration of the decedent's estate and must be filed in the same manner as other claims.
- Regarding a corporation's suspension while a judgment is on appeal, see Peacock Hill Ass'n v Peacock Lagoon Constr. Co. (1972) 8 C3d 369, 105 CR 29; Rochin v Pat Johnson Mfg. Co. (1998) 67 CA4th 1228, 1236, 79 CR2d 719 (corporation's powers suspended in 1981 but revived in 1998 while appeal pending).

§23.10 C. Bankruptcy proceedings

Section 362 of the United States Bankruptcy Act provides that, when a bankruptcy petition is filed, all civil actions against the bankrupt or debtor are automatically stayed, except those actions enumerated in 11 USC §362(b). 11 USC §362. To continue the pending civil action, the creditor must obtain relief from the stay in accordance with the Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure. See Rules of Bankr Proc 4001.

In view of the automatic stay provisions of the Bankruptcy Code, a civil judgment against a bankrupt or debtor is void if the bankruptcy court has not granted relief from the stay. If the defendant is the debtor, the plaintiff will have to obtain relief from the stay in order to prosecute the action. Once relief is obtained, the trustee can defend the action under Rules of Bankr Proc 6009. If the plaintiff is the debtor, however, the bankruptcy trustee has the power to prosecute the debtor's action. Rules of Bankr Proc 6009.

§23.11 D. Death or disability of judge

A party is entitled to a decision from the judge who heard the evidence. Armstrong v Picquelle (1984) 157 CA3d 122, 203 CR 552; David v Goodman (1952) 114 CA2d 571, 250 P2d 704. When a trial judge dies or becomes disabled before making a decision, a mistrial must be declared. See Reimer v Firpo (1949) 94 CA2d 798, 212 P2d 23. If a temporary judge trying a case by stipulation dies, the trial court may not assign the case to another temporary judge without again obtaining the parties' consent. Kim v Superior Court (1998) 64 CA4th 256, 75 CR2d 468 (case discussion in §23.18).

This does not mean, however, that a party is entitled to have the judge who heard the evidence sign the judgment. The presiding judge (or a judge designated by the presiding judge) may sign the formal judgment or order conforming to the minutes, when the decision of the court has been entered in the minutes and the judge who heard or tried the case is unavailable. CCP §635.

EXAMPLE 1: In Leiserson v City of San Diego (1986) 184 CA3d 41, 229 CR 22, the court held that the presiding judge properly entered judgment in conformity with a statement of intended decision filed by a judge who died before the hearing on the plaintiff's objections to the decision had been completed. According to the court, the intended decision provided a complete and adequate basis for appellate review, and there was no indication that a modification of the decision was contemplated or even considered.

EXAMPLE 2: In Swift v Daniels (1980) 103 CA3d 263, 162 CR 863, the trial judge became incapacitated after expressing the intended decision but before making findings and conclusions. The court concluded that the presiding judge lacked the authority to sign findings and conclusions and a judgment.

Compare: With a motion for new trial, CCP §661 allows a new judge to rehear the matter and change the conclusions of law and modify the judgment of the original judge. Kelly v Sparling Water Co. (1959) 52 C2d 628, 343 P2d 257. Similarly, with a default judgment, under CCP §473, a second motion to set aside a default can be heard by another judge if new evidence becomes available. Rambush v Rambush (1968) 267 CA2d 734, 73 CR 268.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.12 E. Disqualification of judge

A judge may be disqualified for cause (CCP §170.1) or by peremptory challenge (CCP §170.6). If the judge erroneously fails to disqualify himself or herself, any judgment that the judge thereafter renders is void. Solberg v Superior Court (1977) 19 C3d 182, 190, 137 CR 460; Estate of Cuneo (1963) 214 CA2d 381, 29 CR 497. Similarly, a judgment rendered by a judge subsequently disqualified for cause is void. See Tatum v Southern Pac. Co. (1967) 250 CA2d 40, 58 CR 238. See also North Beverly Homeowners Ass'n v Bisno (2007) 147 CA4th 762, 772, 54 CR3d 644 (statutory procedure for disqualification of judges for cause does not apply to statements of disqualification filed after final judgment).

For discussion of the various circumstances in which a judge may be challenged for cause and the procedures governing both peremptory challenges and challenges for cause, see §§6.26-6.78.

© The Regents of the University of California

IV. FORMAL REQUIREMENTS AFFECTING VALIDITY AND ENFORCEABILITY OF JUDGMENTS

§23.13 A. Basic requirement of certainty

A judgment finally determines the rights of the parties. CCP §577. There is no prescribed form for a judgment. Avakian v Dusenberry (1936) 15 CA2d 55, 58 P2d 1306.

To be legally sufficient, however, a judgment must show that the issues raised in the action have been determined in favor of one of the parties. Oppenheimer v Deutchman (1958) 161 CA2d 501, 326 P2d 883.

Lack of certainty in a judgment is a ground for reversal. Kittle v Lang (1951) 107 CA2d 604, 237 P2d 673. Whatever the nature of a judgment, it must be sufficiently certain to enable the prevailing party to enforce it and to permit the defeated party to comply with the judgment's requirements. Imperial Cas. & Indem. Co. v Sogomonian (1988) 198 CA3d 169, 243 CR 639; Marriage of Knickerbocker (1974) 43 CA3d 1039, 118 CR 232.

The judgment must clearly specify which party obtained the judgment and the party against whom the judgment was rendered. Seaboard Sur. Corp. v Superior Court (1931) 112 CA 248, 249, 296 P 633; Shriver v Superior Court (1920) 48 CA 576, 584, 192 P 124. It is a correctable clerical error if a judgment fails to specify the name of the party against whom judgment was rendered. See LaMar v Superior Court (1948) 87 CA2d 126, 131, 196 P2d 98, disapproved on other grounds in Phelan v Superior Court (1950) 35 C2d 363, 371, 217 P2d 951. On correcting judgments, see §§23.29-23.31.

PRACTICE TIP: When drafting the judgment, make certain that the name of each judgment debtor is recited fully and spelled correctly and that all aliases or fictitious names used by each judgment debtor are shown on the face of the judgment. Doing so could prove invaluable in later efforts to enforce the judgment. On drafting a proposed judgment in a bench trial, see §23.26. For sample forms of judgment, see §§23.37-23.40.

A money judgment must show either that a certain sum is due to one party from another or that the plaintiff takes nothing. Ferrara v Jordan (1955) 134 CA2d Supp 917, 918, 286 P2d 589. The amount of the judgment must be "computed and stated in dollars and cents, rejecting fractions." CCP §577.5.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.14 B. Avoid incorporation of documents by reference

Technically, any document may be incorporated into a judgment either expressly or by reference. Whether or not part of the permanent records of the court, the document thereby becomes an operative part of the judgment. Flynn v Flynn (1954) 42 C2d 55, 265 P2d 865. See Jackson v Jackson (1967) 253 CA2d 1026, 62 CR 121. Local court rules, however, frequently prohibit the incorporation of documents into judgments.

PRACTICE TIP: Even if not prohibited by local rule, avoid "riders" because they make the judgment incomplete on its face. If the incorporated document is lost or destroyed, the meaning of the judgment may be rendered fatally uncertain. Even if the judgment is based on a written stipulation that is already a part of the court's files, the judgment should be drafted so that the terms of the stipulation are clearly recited on the face of the judgment itself. In the case of a stipulated judgment, the consensual terms of the stipulation should be restated as a directive (e.g., "Defendant shall…" replaces "Defendant agrees to…").

The risk of encountering difficulties in enforcing a judgment increases, even if the judgment incorporates other court documents, e.g., a property settlement agreement incorporated into a judgment in a marital dissolution proceeding. Ascertaining the terms of the judgment may become something other than what it should be: a ministerial function. To minimize the risk of delays in enforcement, the party drafting a judgment should assume that enforcement of the judgment will require the cooperation of a court clerk who knows nothing about the judgment other than the terms appearing on its face.

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Additional requirements for special types of judgments

§23.15 1. Injunctions

An attorney drafting a judgment granting injunctive relief should recognize that the injunction will be construed strictly against the party seeking to enforce it. An injunction must not be uncertain or ambiguous but must specify clearly what the defendant may and may not do. In re Berry (1968) 68 C2d 137, 155, 65 CR 273. See People v Pacific Land Research Co. (1977) 20 C3d 10, 141 CR 20 (preliminary injunction forbidding spending or transferring money in payment of land "sold without complying with the requirements of the Subdivided Land Law" sufficiently precise). But see Continental Baking Co. v Katz (1968) 68 C2d 512, 534, 67 CR 761 (language of injunction can be interpreted in light of record).

Constitutional considerations of due process require that the prohibited conduct be stated in definite terms, so that a person of common intelligence need not guess at the meaning of those terms. Pitchess v Superior Court (1969) 2 CA3d 644, 651, 83 CR 35. See KGB, Inc. v Giannoulas (1980) 104 CA3d 844, 164 CR 571 (injunction forbidding defendant to appear in "any design substantially similar" to radio station KGB chicken costume held "presumptively void because it is too uncertain to be a valid conduct regulation").

The injunction must also not be too broad. See, e.g., Johnson v Farmer (1940) 41 CA2d 874, 882, 107 P2d 959. But see People v Columbia Research Corp. (1977) 71 CA3d 607, 139 CR 517 ("fact that the terms of the injunction are sometimes broader than is necessary to restrain the precise act engaged in by [defendant] does not make it void"). For detailed discussion of injunctions, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 32 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.16 2. Recovery of property

Personal property. The fundamental requirement of certainty (see §23.14) is especially important when the judgment provides for the recovery of personal property. Particular care should be taken to describe personal property with a degree of certainty sufficient to identify it for the purpose of a writ of possession.

PRACTICE TIP: Describe personal property in such a way that it can be distinguished from other, similar property. Remember that the sheriff or marshal who will enforce the judgment, by levying the writ of possession, will be a stranger to the action, with no means to identify the property other than the writ. Serial numbers and other identifying features are an invaluable aid to the enforcement of judgments for the recovery of personal property.

Real property. Similarly, if the judgment affects real property, that property must be described with such certainty that a stranger can clearly identify the particular property affected. Newman v Cornelius (1970) 3 CA3d 279, 83 CR 435. But see Daluiso v Boone (1969) 269 CA2d 253, 75 CR 287, and Morris v George (1943) 57 CA2d 665, 135 P2d 195, in which the courts found the judgments to be enforceable even though their property descriptions were not as detailed as those in conveyances.

PRACTICE TIP: When drafting a judgment affecting real property (the title to which is evidenced by a document), include mandatory language directing that any documents necessary to transfer title be executed by the proper party or, if the obligated party fails to comply within a specified period of time, by the court clerk.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.17 3. Installment judgments

A judgment providing for the recovery of money in installments should state clearly, in addition to the full amount of the judgment, the amount of each installment payment and either (a) the due date of each payment or (b) the frequency, duration, and commencement date of the payments. This specificity facilitates execution on the judgment in the event of a default.

PRACTICE TIP: If a judgment provides for payment at future times, use specific dates. For example, "April 1, 2010," is preferable to less precise references such as, "30 days after the entry of this judgment." A specific date is never a matter of interpretation.

§23.18 D. Judgments rendered by temporary judges or commissioners

As long as the procedures of Cal Rules of Ct 2.831(a)-(b) are met, a judgment made by a temporary judge is entitled to the same presumption of regularity as a judgment made by a permanent judge of the same court. Estate of Kent (1936) 6 C2d 154, 163, 57 P2d 901. Temporary judges are authorized to hear and decide cases under Cal Const art VI, §21, which provides that, if the parties agree and the court orders, a case may be tried by a member of the State Bar who is sworn and empowered to adjudicate the case to final determination.

The parties must stipulate that a case may be tried by a temporary judge. If the parties stipulate to a temporary judge who dies while trying their case, the trial court may not assign the case to another temporary judge without again obtaining the parties' consent. Kim v Superior Court (1998) 64 CA4th 256, 75 CR2d 468 (delegation of judicial power is constitutionally limited; trial court exceeded its authority in appointing another temporary judge over party's objections). See CCP §639 (enumerating statutory grounds for involuntary, court-ordered reference). On using special masters and referees, see §1.14.

The parties' stipulation must be in writing, include the name and office address of the State Bar member agreed on as the temporary judge, and be submitted for approval to the presiding judge or a supervising judge of a branch court. Cal Rules of Ct 2.831(a). The order designating the temporary judge must be endorsed on the stipulation. The temporary judge must take and sign the oath of office, and certify that he or she is aware of and will comply with Code of Judicial Ethics, Canon 6 and these rules. The oath and certification must be attached to the stipulation and order of designation. After the stipulation, order, certification, and oath are filed with the court, the temporary judge may try the case. Cal Rules of Ct 2.831(b).

In addition to the oath and certification, the temporary judge must—no later than 5 days after appointment—disclose to the parties any matter subject to disclosure under canon 6 of the Code of Judicial Ethics, and any significant personal or professional relationship the temporary judge has or has had with a party, attorney, or law firm in the instant case, including any other proceedings in the past 24 months in which the temporary judge has been privately compensated by one of the parties, attorneys, or law firms.

The California Supreme Court has held, however, that the procedures of Cal Rules of Ct 2.831 are directory rather than mandatory. In re Richard S. (1991) 54 C3d 857, 865, 2 CR2d 2 (failure to enter trial court order appointing a referee as the temporary judge until after the hearing was not a jurisdictional error). For example, if the parties agree on the record to use a temporary judge but fail to sign the written stipulation required by Rule 2.831, that failure is not jurisdictional. In re Robert S. (1988) 197 CA3d 1260, 243 CR 459. See also In re Lamonica H. (1990) 220 CA3d 634, 644, 270 CR 60.

PRACTICE TIP: If a temporary judge will try the case, be sure that all procedures for filing a written stipulation, order, and oath meet the requirements of Cal Rules of Ct 2.831. Including all these documents in the court record before the trial will help eliminate problems later.

Parties who appear and take part in a proceeding may stipulate to the appointment of a temporary judge without the consent of the absent, nonlitigating parties. Sarracino v Superior Court (1974) 13 C3d 1, 118 CR 21.

The signature by attorneys, without the signature by their clients, to a stipulation is sufficient to invest a temporary judge with jurisdiction to hear a case. In re Horton (1991) 54 C3d 82, 93, 284 CR 305. See also Marriage of Crook (1991) 235 CA3d 30, 35, 286 CR 537 (attorney's signature is sufficient to consent to trial by temporary judge; neither client's knowledge nor signature is necessary).

The procedures for assigning temporary judges do not apply when a court commissioner is selected to act as a temporary judge. Cal Rules of Ct 2.831(a). A commissioner may act as a temporary judge if appointed for that purpose or by written consent of an appearing party. See CCP §259(d) (no compensation other than compensation as commissioner permitted).

V. ENTRY OF JUDGMENT

§23.19 A. Entry as clerical act

A judgment must be entered before it is effective for any purpose. CCP §664. On measuring the time for appeal, filing a motion for new trial, and other matters based on the date of entry of judgment, see §23.33-23.36. On notice of entry, see §23.28.

Judgment must be entered by the clerk in conformity with the verdict after a jury trial or with the court's decision after a bench trial. CCP §664. Entry of judgment is a clerical act in which the clerk, depending on the particular county's method of record keeping, does one of the following (CCP §668.5):

- Makes a microfilm copy of the judgment;
- Enters the judgment into the court's register of actions; or
- Enters the judgment in the court's electronic data-processing system.

The clerk then places the original judgment in the case file. The date of filing the judgment with the clerk constitutes the date of entry. CCP §668.5.

If the court is one that still maintains a judgment book, the clerk enters the judgment in the judgment book instead of entering judgment by one of the methods described in CCP §668.5. See CCP §668.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.20 B. Procedures in jury trial

The entry of the judgment gives effect to the decision of the trier of fact. In cases tried by a jury, the judgment must be entered in conformity with the verdict. CCP §664. See Telles v Title Ins. & Trust Co. (1969) 3 CA3d 179, 83 CR 444. On time requirements for entering judgment, see §23.21.

Entry of judgment after a jury trial is a routine matter for the court clerk, and trial counsel are not usually involved in the process unless the judge asks the prevailing party to submit a judgment for entry. See CCP §664.5(a). See form of judgment on verdict in §23.37.

Whether the judge's clerk fills out a court form of judgment or accepts counsel's form of judgment, the clerk usually has the judge sign the judgment. See §23.27. Then the clerk files the document in the case file and copies or enters the information into the court's record-keeping system. CCP §668.5. See §23.19.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.21 1. Time requirements for entry

The judgment after a jury trial must be entered by the clerk within 24 hours after the verdict is rendered, unless the court orders the case reserved for argument or further consideration, or grants a stay. CCP §664

Judgment must be entered even if one of the parties has made a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict (JNOV) and the motion is pending. CCP §664. On JNOV motions, see §§25.2-25.21.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.22 2. Judgment on special verdict

A jury may render either a general or a special verdict. A general verdict consists of a general pronouncement by the jury on all or any of the issues, in favor of either the plaintiff or the defendant. CCP §624. See §§22.4-22.5.

A special verdict consists only of conclusions of fact drawn by the jury from the evidence, leaving to the court the task of determining the appropriate conclusions of law, which constitute the judgment. CCP §624. See §22.6.

On receipt of a verdict, general or special, the clerk must make an entry in the minutes of the court, listing the time of trial, the names of all jurors and witnesses, and the verdict at length. CCP §628. For a special verdict, the minute entry must include either (a) the judgment rendered on the verdict, if the judge has given it, or (b) the order reserving the case for argument or further consideration. CCP §628.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.23 C. Procedures after bench trial

In cases tried without a jury, the judgment must be entered in conformity with the decision of the court. CCP §664. A judgment after a bench trial must be entered "immediately" by the clerk on the filing of the court's decision or judgment. CCP §664; Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590. On entry of judgment, see §23.19.

Procedures concerning the proposed judgment and entry of judgment in cases in which the court issues a statement of decision are discussed in §23.24. On judgment after a bench trial in which a statement of decision is not requested or is waived, see §23.25.

Until the judgment is entered, the judge is free to change the court's decision even after a statement of decision is filed explaining the factual and legal basis for the decision. Phillips v Phillips (1953) 41 C2d 869, 264 P2d 926; Marriage of Hafferkamp (1998) 61 CA4th 789, 793, 71 CR2d 761; Marriage of Micalizio (1988) 199 CA3d 662, 245 CR 673. For further discussion, see chap 24. For complete discussion of trial without a jury, the court's tentative decision, and the procedures and timing for drafting of the statement of decision, see chap 24.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.24 1. When statement of decision requested

After the court announces its tentative decision (see §§24.30-24.33), any party may request the court to issue a statement of decision explaining the factual and legal basis for its decision. CCP §632. On when statement of decision must be requested or it is waived, see §24.35.

Within 10 days after the announcement or service of the tentative decision, a party may request a statement of decision to address the principal controverted issues; these issues must be specified in the request. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590(d). On the procedures and timing for requesting and drafting a statement of decision, see §§24.34-24.50. On drafting the proposed judgment, see §23.26.

Any party may, within 15 days after the proposed statement of decision and proposed judgment have been served, serve and file objections to the proposed statement of decision and proposed judgment. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590(g).

The judge may order a hearing on the proposals and objections to the proposed statement of decision or the proposed judgment. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590(k).

Although not a judgment, the statement of decision, like former findings of fact, may help to interpret ambiguous or uncertain provisions in the judgment. See Mayes v Sturdy N. Sales, Inc. (1979) 91 CA3d 69, 82, 154 CR 43, disapproved on other grounds in Applied Equip. Corp. v Litton Saudi Arabia Ltd. (1994) 7 C4th 503, 521 n9, 28 CR2d 475.

NOTE: If the trial was completed within 1 day, Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590 do not apply. See §24.37.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.25 2. When statement of decision not requested or waived

If no party requests or is ordered to prepare a statement of decision and a written judgment is required, the court must prepare and serve a proposed judgment on all parties within 20 days after the announcement or service of the tentative decision. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590(h). On drafting a proposed judgment, see §23.26.

The court may also order a party to prepare, serve, and submit the proposed judgment to the court within 10 days after the date of the order. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590(h).

Within 10 days after service of the proposed judgment, any party may then serve and file objections to the proposed judgment. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590(j). The court may hold a hearing concerning the proposals and objections to the proposed judgment. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590(k).

The judgment signed and filed by the court in this manner constitutes the decision on which judgment is entered under CCP §664. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590(l). The clerk must enter the judgment in conformity to the judgment signed by the judge, immediately on its filing. CCP §664.

If the trial was completed within 1 day, or less than 8 hours over more than 1 day, a request for statement of decision must be made before the matter is submitted for decision; the statement of decision may be made orally on the record in the presence of the parties. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590(n). See §24.37.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.26 3. Drafting proposed judgment

After a bench trial, the court has discretion to prepare a proposed judgment or to direct counsel to draft the proposed judgment. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590. The court usually delegates the task of preparing the proposed judgment to counsel for the prevailing party.

PRACTICE TIP: To avoid uncertainty about who will prepare the proposed judgment, ask the court to clarify before the end of trial who will produce the initial draft of the proposed judgment and any statement of decision. Check local rules for guidelines or requirements on drafting a proposed judgment. See, e.g., Los Angeles Ct R 8.96.

Drafting considerations. In drafting a proposed judgment, counsel should consider the points such as the following, most of which are based on the form of judgment recommended in Los Angeles Ct R 8.96.

- Clearly show the full names of the parties for whom, and against whom, the judgment is rendered, including their capacities as plaintiffs, defendants, cross-complainants, and cross-defendants. See §23.13.
- Refer to such full names as they appear in the pleadings, or obtain an order amending the pleadings in respect to such names. See §§18.103-18.123.
- Leave a blank space for insertion of any costs (including attorney fees if appropriate), as follows: "and costs in the sum of _ _[dollar amount]_ _." See forms of judgment in §§23.37-23.38.
- Leave a blank space for insertion of any interest accrued before the signing and filing of the judgment since the clerk computes such interest, with illustrative wording as follows: "the principal sum of ($25,000) plus interest at the rate of 8 percent from January 1, 2006, to date hereof in the sum of _ _[dollar amount]_ _, a total sum of _ _[dollar amount]_ _."
- Refrain from attaching "riders" to the judgment, except in rare instances. See §23.14. Riders include external documents containing legal descriptions of real property or schedules of financial data. If such matters are appropriate in a judgment, they must be placed in the body of the judgment, above the judge's signature line, rather than incorporated by reference.
- Use language describing any liability of opposing parties to be "joint and several" unless otherwise decided by the court. See §23.32.

For a detailed discussion of attorney fees awards, recovering costs, and obtaining interest, see chaps 26-27. On procedures requesting and drafting a proposed statement of decision, see §§24.34-24.50.

Counsel preparing the proposed judgment should take particular care to protect the judgment against future challenges. A judgment may not go beyond the issues raised in the action. Jew Fun Him v Occidental Life Ins. Co. (1948) 88 CA2d 246, 250, 198 P2d 711. Because of this rule, relief available on default is limited to that prayed for in the complaint. CCP §580(a). See Becker v S.P.V. Constr. Co. (1980) 27 C3d 489, 493, 165 CR 825. If the judgment goes beyond the litigated issues, it is void. In re Wren (1957) 48 C2d 159, 308 P2d 329. In limited civil actions, certain types of relief may not be granted, e.g., a permanent injunction, except as authorized by law, or relief exceeding the maximum amount in controversy permitted for a limited civil case. See CCP §580(b).

PRACTICE TIP: In drafting the judgment, remember that the rules for determining the meaning of any other writing apply to judgments. Colvig v RKO Gen., Inc. (1965) 232 CA2d 56, 65, 42 CR 473. The attorney preparing the judgment may be the one who will have to enforce it or defend it on appeal. Take special care to create a document free of ambiguity because any ambiguities in the judgment will be resolved against the drafter.

If enforcing the judgment becomes necessary, the attorney for the prevailing party must deal with court personnel and clerks whose only knowledge of the terms of the judgment comes from the face of the judgment itself. A clerk may be unwilling or unable to issue a writ of execution on a judgment that fails to set forth the precise obligations of the losing party. For further discussion, see §23.13 (basic requirement of certainty).

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.27 D. Judge's signature required

If a written judgment is required, the court must sign and file the judgment within 50 days after the announcement or service of the tentative decision, whichever is later, or if a hearing was held, within 10 days after the hearing. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590(l); Marriage of Hafferkamp (1998) 61 CA4th 789, 793, 71 CR2d 761.

Although judgments are in fact signed by judges, it is also common for a judgment to be announced by the court and entered in the minutes. For cases on announcement of judgment, see In re Steiner (1955) 134 CA2d 391, 398, 285 P2d 972.

If the judge who tried the case is unavailable, but that judge was able to reach a decision and it is recorded in the court minutes, the formal judgment or order conforming to the minutes may be signed by the presiding judge of the court. CCP §635. On death or disability of judge before decision rendered as grounds for mistrial, see §23.11.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.28 E. Notice of entry of judgment

Except in a small claims action, a case involving certain family law matters specified in CCP §664.5(a), or an action in which the prevailing party is not represented by counsel, the party who submits the judgment for entry must also prepare a notice of entry. That party must mail a copy of the notice to all parties who have appeared in the action, and then file the original notice of entry and a proof of service by mail with the court. CCP §664.5(a). In most actions, the judge asks the prevailing party (if represented by counsel) to submit the judgment for entry.

PRACTICE TIP: As the attorney for the prevailing party, for your own and your client's protection, always give written notice to the losing party promptly on entry of judgment. Even if the clerk delays or fails entirely to give the required statutory notice, the prevailing party's notice will start the running of the time to appeal under Cal Rules of Ct 8.104(a) (60 days from the clerk's or party's service of notice of entry, rather than 180 days from entry of judgment if no notice). See Sharp v Union Pac. R.R. (1992) 8 CA4th 357, 9 CR2d 925 (notice of appeal filed more than 60 days from defendant's mailing of endorsed copy of judgment held to be untimely, even though copy of judgment never received by appealing party).

If the prevailing party is not represented by counsel, the clerk of the court must give notice to all parties who have appeared in the action "promptly upon entry of judgment" and place a certificate of such mailing in the case file. CCP §664.5(b).

No particular form of notice of entry of judgment is required. Any notice in writing that informs the losing party that judgment was entered is sufficient. For example, an endorsed copy of the judgment showing the date of its entry in the judgment book has been held to be sufficient notice. See National Advertising Co. v City of Rohnert Park (1984) 160 CA3d 614, 206 CR 696.

For purposes of the time within which the notice of appeal must be filed, Cal Rules of Ct 8.104(a)(1) requires a single, self-sufficient document that satisfies all the rule's conditions, either a "Notice of Entry," so entitled, or a file-stamped copy of the judgment or appealable order showing the date on which the document was served. The clerk may satisfy the single-document requirement by attaching a certificate of mailing to the "Notice of Entry" or to the file-stamped judgment or appealable order. Alan v American Honda Motor Co. (2007) 40 C4th 894, 55 CR3d 534. See also Sunset Millenium Assocs., LLC v Le Songe, LLC (2006) 138 CA4th 256, 41 CR3d 273 ("Notice of Entry" language on 13th page of 14-page minute order insufficient to trigger appeal period; rules mandate that document actually be entitled "Notice of Entry"). Note that Rule 8.104(a) does not require that the document served indicate when an appealable judgment or order was entered, but only requires notice of when the judgment or order was filed. Estate of Crabtree (1992) 4 CA4th 1119, 1123, 6 CR2d 224. For a sample form of notice of entry, see §23.40.

The notice of entry also affects the time to file a notice of intention to move for new trial under CCP §659 (see §23.33) and to vacate the judgment under CCP §663a. On motion to vacate judgment, see §§25.72-25.77.

VI. CORRECTING AND MODIFYING JUDGMENTS

§23.29 A. Power to correct clerical mistakes but not judicial error

Every court has statutory and inherent power to correct clerical mistakes in its judgments or orders as entered to conform to the judgments or orders that were actually made. CCP §473. This power exists independent of the statute. In re McGee (1951) 37 C2d 6, 229 P2d 780 (appellate court); Bastajian v Brown (1941) 19 C2d 209, 214, 120 P2d 9 (trial court).

By contrast, judicial error (i.e., an erroneous decision) in a judgment cannot be corrected after entry; judicial error can be rectified only by attack on the judgment. Lankton v Superior Court (1936) 5 C2d 694, 55 P2d 1170.

To ascertain whether an error is clerical or judicial in nature, a party need determine only whether the judgment entered was the judgment that the court intended to render. Gill v Epstein (1965) 62 C2d 611, 44 CR 45, diapproved on other grounds in Manta Mgmt. Corp. v City of San Bernardino (2008) 43 C4th 400, 412 n8, 75 CR3d 353; Lankton v Superior Court, supra. An error made in entering judgment is a clerical error, while an error made in rendering judgment is a judicial error. In re Candelario (1970) 3 C3d 702, 705, 91 CR 497. See Aspen Int'l Capital Corp. v Marsch (1991) 235 CA3d 1199, 1204, 286 CR 921 (correcting inadvertent omission of costs and attorney fees from California judgment, when provided by Colorado judgment, was ministerial function that could be performed by court clerk).

An error may be clerical even though made by the judge rather than by the clerk. If a judge mistakenly signs a judgment different from the one intended, the mistake is a clerical error that may be corrected. Bastajian v Brown (1941) 19 C2d 209, 120 P2d 9; Hennefer v Butcher (1986) 182 CA3d 492, 227 CR 318; Sampson v Sapoznik (1954) 124 CA2d 709, 269 P2d 209.

The courts have sometimes gone to great lengths to define an error as "clerical" and therefore correctable. See, e.g., Pettigrew v Grand Rent-A-Car (1984) 154 CA3d 204, 201 CR 125 (defendant moved under CCP §473 to modify judgment to statutory limits of Veh C §17151; court affirmed trial court's granting of motion, holding that entry of judgment of $150,000 when $15,000 was maximum amount permitted by statute was "clearly" not result of judicial reasoning but rather error in judgment made through inadvertence and, thus, clerical error).

If the error to be corrected appears on the face of the record, the correction may be made on the court's own motion. Mills Sales Co. v Gonzales (1956) 146 CA2d Supp 899, 304 P2d 274 (court upheld as "clerical" error what appeared to be judicial mistake simply because judge who changed his mind characterized his mistake as "clerical").

When extrinsic evidence is required because the error is not apparent from the face of the record, notice should be given even though the law on the question of the necessity of notice is unclear. See Estate of Costa (1951) 37 C2d 154, 231 P2d 17 (no notice required); Burnam v DeLong (1947) 81 CA2d 559, 184 P2d 705 (notice required). Counsel should also consider whether additional evidence is needed, e.g., a declaration of the clerk to show that the error was clerical. See §25.78.

After a judgment has been entered, the trial court may not use its power to correct clerical errors to substantially modify it or materially alter the parties' rights. Rochin v Pat Johnson Mfg. Co. (1998) 67 CA4th 1228, 1237, 79 CR2d 719; Craven v Crout (1985) 163 CA3d 779, 209 CR 649 (trial court entered lump-sum judgment and had no jurisdiction to grant motion to amend judgment to provide for periodic payments of future damages; party seeking periodic payment of future damages must move court before entry of any judgment, which includes damages in action, to stay entry of that judgment until periodic payment schedule has been formulated).

Consent of the parties to vacate a judgment does not give the court the power to act when that power is not otherwise provided. See Southern Cal. White Trucks v Teresinski (1987) 190 CA3d 1393, 236 CR 159 (trial court erroneously vacated judgment after postverdict settlement).

When an appeal is perfected from a judgment or part of it, the power of the trial court to enforce, modify, or vacate any portion of the judgment embraced by the appeal is suspended. CCP §916(a); Elsea v Saberi (1992) 4 CA4th 625, 5 CR2d 742.

Code of Civil Procedure §473 imposes no time limitations on the court's power to correct clerical errors; such corrections may be made at any time. Pettigrew v Grand Rent-A-Car, supra (court modified judgment 2 months after motion for new trial and judgment NOV was denied).

The courts have held that CCP §473 relief is available to correct judgments after judicial arbitration proceedings conducted under CCP §§1141.10-1141.30 (CCP §1141.23; see Alvarado v City of Port Hueneme (1982) 133 CA3d 695, 184 CR 154) as well as after nonjudicial arbitration proceedings (see MJM, Inc. v Tootco (1985) 173 CA3d 598, 219 CR 100).

On procedures for making motion to correct clerical error, see §§25.78-25.83. For forms, see §§25.99-25.100. On motion to vacate the judgment, see §§25.72-25.77.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.30 B. Correction of errors nunc pro tunc

A clerical error in a judgment may be corrected nunc pro tunc (retroactively) as of the date of the original entry. Young v Gardner-Denver Co. (1966) 244 CA2d 915, 53 CR 522.

A party may make a motion to correct the clerical error nunc pro tunc under CCP §473. See, e.g., Estate of Goldberg (1938) 10 C2d 709, 76 P2d 508 (judgment nunc pro tunc made 35 years after original judgment); People v Landon White Bail Bonds (1991) 234 CA3d 66, 76, 285 CR 575 (by nunc pro tunc order, trial court changed judgment entered 8 months earlier by inserting another defendant's name in judgment; change held to be proper correction to express trial court's true intentions, which had been ambiguous).

An order nunc pro tunc may not be used to correct judicial error or inadvertence or to show what the court should have done. See Bell v Farmers Ins. Exch. (2006) 135 CA4th 1138, 1145, 38 CR3d 306 (because record did not disclose inadvertent error, judgment could not be changed by motion nunc pro tunc); Tokio Marine & Fire Ins. Corp. v Western Pac. Roofing Corp. (1999) 75 CA4th 110, 118, 89 CR2d 1 (nunc pro tunc order may not be used to add general contractor's insurer as judgment debtor when insurer was not defendant in action and no alter ego relationship existed between general contractor and insurer). Rather, it should correct a clerical error by placing on the record what was actually decided by the court but was incorrectly recorded. See Marriage of Padgett (2009) 172 CA4th 830, 91 CR3d 475 (original order stated that court would retain jurisdiction over ex-husband's pension; error after his death for trial court to issue nunc pro tunc order awarding interest in pension to ex-wife); Hamilton v Laine (1997) 57 CA4th 885, 67 CR2d 407 (court of appeal reversed trial court's order that materially changed original order).

§23.31 C. Modification to bind alter ego of judgment debtor

If, following entry of judgment against a corporate defendant, supplemental proceedings disclose evidence sufficient to establish that the corporation had an alter ego, the judgment may be modified by making the alter ego an additional judgment debtor, even if that person or entity had not been a party to the action. Ukegawa Bros. v ALRB (1989) 212 CA3d 1314, 261 CR 420; Thomson v L.C. Roney & Co. (1952) 112 CA2d 420, 246 P2d 1017.

EXAMPLE: In Dow Jones Co. v Avenel (1984) 151 CA3d 144, 198 CR 457, the court held that an amendment of a summary judgment to add judgment debtors (an individual and a corporation who were alter egos of the judgment debtor) was proper. The court also held that the postjudgment debtors were not entitled to a jury trial of their alter-ego liability, because the issue was equitable in nature and was within the province of the trial court. There was no denial of due process in holding the alter-ego judgment debtors liable without a trial on the merits because the judgment of liability against the original defendant necessarily included liability against its alter egos.

The availability of this summary relief does not extend to cases in which the original judgment was obtained by default. NEC Electronics, Inc. v Hurt (1989) 208 CA3d 772, 256 CR 441 (reversal of trial court's order granting plaintiff's motion to amend default judgment against corporation to add corporation's chief executive officer and sole shareholder as additional judgment debtor).

Rationale: When a judgment is by default, the defendant did not have an opportunity to present a defense and amending the judgment would violate due process. Motores de Mexicali v Superior Court (1958) 51 C2d 172, 331 P2d 1. See also Oyakawa v Gillett (1992) 8 CA4th 628, 632, 10 CR2d 469, in which the court held that a judgment creditor may not use the alter-ego theory to add a wife as a judgment debtor to a judgment entered against her husband.

VII. EFFECT OF ENTRY OF JUDGMENT ON SUBSEQUENT PROCEEDINGS

§23.32 A. Effect on enforcing judgment against defendants: Joint and several judgments

An obligation imposed on several persons may be (1) joint, (2) several, or (3) joint and several. CC §1430. An obligation imposed on more than one person is presumed to be a "joint" liability, with certain exceptions referred to in CC §1431.

Practically speaking, the exceptions are the rule. Civil Code §§1659 and 1660 provide that most joint obligations are in fact joint and several. An obligation is joint and several when all the parties who join in a promise receive some consideration (CC §1659) or when the promise is made in the singular but executed by several people (CC §1660). If the parties are jointly and severally liable, a creditor has the option of suing one or more of the parties separately or all of them together.

An obligation is "several" if each of the obligors agrees only to pay a particular sum. Under such an obligation, it is as if a series of individual agreements were consolidated into a single document. See Herz & Co. v Solt (1937) 23 CA2d 178, 180, 72 P2d 251.

PRACTICE TIP: The judgment should clearly state on its face whether the liability imposed on multiple parties is joint and several or merely several. Unless the trial judge clearly directs that the judgment be several, the attorney responsible for drafting the judgment should include "joint and several" language in the proposed judgment submitted to the court for signature. The following language is sufficient: "Judgment in favor of Plaintiff, _ _[name]_ _, and against defendants, _ _[name]_ _ and _ _[name]_ _, jointly and severally, in the amount of _ _[dollar amount]_ _." The effect of such language is to hold all judgment debtors responsible to the judgment creditor for the full amount of the judgment.

For further discussion of drafting judgments, see §23.26.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.33 B. Effect on motion for new trial

For practical purposes, the entry of judgment initiates the period during which any party dissatisfied with the judgment may file a notice of intention to move for a new trial, i.e., whichever date is earliest: (1) within 15 days of the clerk's mailing of notice of entry of judgment, (2) within 15 days of service by any party of notice of entry of judgment, or (3) within 180 days after entry of judgment. CCP §659.

NOTE: Under Govt C §68106(b)(1), effective July 28, 2009, and operative through June 30, 2010, if a court is closed as the result of a budget reduction measure in response to the state fiscal crisis, the day is considered a holiday and not a court day.

CAUTION: Although the controlling statute, CCP §659, also permits the filing of such a notice "before the entry of judgment" (i.e., after the court's statement of decision or the jury's verdict), the case law describes this as a "dangerous trap to the uninformed attorney." Ehrler v Ehrler (1981) 126 CA3d 147, 152, 178 CR 642. Attorneys should be wary of filing the notice of intention to move for new trial if instead of a statement of decision, the court has only issued its "tentative decision" or "intended decision," which the court is free to change. Examining the terms used in §659, the Ehrler court concluded that a notice of intention to move for a new trial filed after an "intended decision" in a bench trial but before the entry of judgment is "premature" and thus "void and of no effect." See also Bunton v Arizona Pac. Tanklines (1983) 141 CA3d 210, 190 CR 295, involving a notice filed after a jury trial but before rendition of the verdict. On motion filed prematurely, see §25.54.

For detailed discussion of motions for new trial, see §§25.22-25.71.

§23.34 C. Effect on filing of appeal

Under Cal Rules of Ct 8.104(a), a notice of appeal must be filed on or before the earliest of the following dates:

- 60 days after the date of service by the clerk of the court of a written "notice of entry" of judgment;
- 60 days after the date of service of a written "notice of entry" of judgment by any party on the party filing the notice of appeal; or
- 180 days after the date of entry of judgment.

NOTE: Under Govt C §68106(b)(1), effective July 28, 2009, and operative through June 30, 2010, if a court is closed as the result of a budget reduction measure in response to the state fiscal crisis, the day is considered a holiday and not a court day.

A file-stamped copy of the judgment may be used in place of the document titled "notice of entry." Cal Rules of Ct 8.104(a).

A premature notice of appeal filed before entry of judgment, but after its rendition, is nonetheless valid and is considered to have been filed immediately after entry of the judgment. Cal Rules of Ct 8.104(e)(1). On filing the notice of appeal before the entry of judgment, see California Civil Appellate Practice §§7.38-7.43 (3d ed Cal CEB 1996).

§23.35 D. Res judicata and collateral estoppel effect

Only a final judgment can serve as the basis for invocation of the doctrines of res judicata or collateral estoppel. See French v Rishell (1953) 40 C2d 477, 254 P2d 26; Romadka v Hoge (1991) 232 CA3d 1231, 283 CR 878; Rebco Dev. v Superior Court (1977) 67 CA3d 13, 136 CR 351.

When a plaintiff prevails, the causes of action merge into the judgment. When the defendant prevails, the judgment constitutes a bar to any further suit on the same cause of action. Busick v WCAB (1972) 7 C3d 967, 104 CR 42.

A merger is the substitution of rights and duties under the judgment for those under the agreement or cause of action sued on. Flynn v Flynn (1954) 42 C2d 55, 265 P2d 865. The judgment absolves the parties from performing except as provided in the judgment. Caughlin v Blair (1953) 41 C2d 587, 262 P2d 305.

This doctrine, known as res judicata or "claim preclusion," bars a party from relitigating the identical cause of action in a second lawsuit. Safeco Ins. Co. v Tholen (1981) 117 CA3d 685, 173 CR 23. The rationale for res judicata is that the party to be affected, or some other party in privity with that party, has litigated or has had an opportunity to litigate the same matter in a former action in a court of general jurisdiction and should not be permitted to litigate again.

Compare: Res judicata is distinguishable from collateral estoppel or "issue preclusion." Collateral estoppel operates on issues rather than causes of action. A prior judgment operates as an estoppel or a conclusive adjudication of the issues in a second suit that was actually litigated and determined in the first action. Taylor v Hawkinson (1957) 47 C2d 893, 306 P2d 797.

© The Regents of the University of California

§23.36 E. Duration and renewal measured from entry

The duration and renewal of judgments are measured from the date of entry. Once entered, a judgment is enforceable for 10 years from the date of its entry. CCP §683.020. If a judgment is payable in installments, a separate 10-year period runs from the date each installment is due. CCP §683.030.

NOTE: Judgments entered under the Family Law Act and those entered against certain public entities are governed by separate enforcement and renewal provisions. See, e.g., Fam C §§272, 290-292, 5100, 5103-5104; Govt C §§965.5, 970.1.

The 10-year period may be extended by filing an application for renewal of judgment. CCP §683.130. This application may be filed any time before the 10-year period of enforceability expires. On procedures for renewing judgments, see CCP §683.120.

§23.36A VIII. REGISTRATION OF SISTER STATE JUDGMENT

The 1974 Sister State Money Judgments Act (CCP §§1710.10-1710.65) provides the registration system for the enforcement of judgments rendered in other states. To obtain a California judgment, the judgment creditor need file only:

- An application, under penalty of perjury, that includes all the information required by CCP §1710.15(b); and
- An authenticated copy of the sister state judgment.

See §23.40 for the application form approved by the Judicial Council.

The application is filed in the trial court of the county where any judgment debtor resides. See CCP §1710.20(b).

If no judgment debtor is a California resident, the application may be filed in any county. CCP §1710.20(b). On the filing of the application, the clerk must enter a judgment in the same manner as any other superior court judgment. CCP §1710.25. See §23.41 for the form approved by the Judicial Council for notice of entry of judgment on the sister state judgment. Sister state judgments must be given full faith and credit as long as the rendering court has jurisdiction. Washoe Dev. Co. v Guaranty Fed. Bank (1996) 47 CA4th 1518, 55 CR2d 479. A sister state judgment may not be set aside under CCP §473. Liquidator of Integrity Ins. Co. v Hendrix (1997) 54 CA4th 971, 976, 63 CR2d 240.

§24.1 I. SCOPE OF CHAPTER

This chapter highlights the law, procedures, and rules that are unique to trial without a jury. On the strategies to consider before waiving a jury and choosing a bench trial, see §24.3. Procedural steps and order of proof are discussed in §§24.7-24.13. On the judge's role as the trier of fact, see §§24.4-24.6; on the court's tentative decision, see §§24.29-24.32. Requesting and drafting statements of decision are discussed in §§24.34-24.50. On bench trials in which a statement of decision was not requested, see §§24.51-24.52.

Trial motions that may be made in either a jury trial or a bench trial (e.g., motion to reopen, nonsuit) are covered briefly in §§24.11 and 24.13, and fully in chap 18. The motion for judgment under CCP §631.8 that may be made only in a bench trial after the opposing party has presented evidence is covered in detail in §§24.14-24.28.

On drafting proposed judgments after trial without a jury, see §23.26. Entry of judgment and the factors affecting the validity and enforceability of judgments are also discussed in chap 23. On moving to disqualify the judge before trial, see §§6.26-6.78. On preparing for trial generally, see chap 3.

II. GENERAL ISSUES

§24.2 A. When bench trial required

There is no right to a jury trial when:

- The causes of action being tried are wholly "equitable" instead of "legal"; or
- The parties have waived the right to a jury trial.

Otherwise, each party is entitled to a trial by jury. For discussion of the distinction between equitable and legal causes of action, see §§8.3-8.6. Occasionally, a court will order an issue of fact to be tried by a jury in an equitable action. See CCP §592. In these circumstances, the jury's verdict is advisory only. See §8.13. On waiver of jury trial and relief from that waiver, see §§8.15-8.16.

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.3 B. Tactical considerations

Trial by a judge instead of a jury can have important consequences, not all of them predictable. It is even more important in a bench trial, for example, to disqualify the judge for cause or exercise the right of peremptory challenge based on the judge's prejudice against a party or an attorney. See CCP §§170.3, 170.6 and discussion in §§6.26-6.78.

Consider whether the features and risks of a bench trial would be appropriate to your case and advantageous to your client:

- Earlier trial date. Bench trials are usually given earlier calendar dates than jury trials. The earlier a case goes to trial, the more likely it is that witnesses can be located and will be available to testify, and their memories are likely to be fresher. An earlier trial date, however, does not always ensure an earlier judgment. In a bench trial, the judge may take the case under submission and delay judgment for weeks or months. Because the judge is not concerned with jurors' schedules, the trial itself could be spread out over a longer period of time as the trial judge squeezes the trial between other duties and activities.
- More predictable outcome. Because a judge's predilections have a greater impact on the outcome of a bench trial than on a jury trial, counsel's familiarity with the judge's rulings in similar cases may help predict the outcome of the case. If possible, gather this information early so that you can adjust your case presentation and key your arguments accordingly. In some counties, you may not know who the trial judge is until the first day of trial. Various sources of information on judges include colleagues who have previously tried cases before the judge and biographical information in handbooks, such as Arnold, California Courts and Judges Handbook (7th ed 1995) or Chiang, California Courts and Judges (1999). Valuable guidance can also be found in the profiles of judges that appear regularly in newspapers such as the Los Angeles Daily Journal, The California Lawyer, and The Recorder. Trial court judges occasionally sit on appellate panels and may have published opinions in California Appellate Reports and California Reporter. Both Lexis and Westlaw access cases by the judge's name.
- More streamlined trial. Bench trials usually take less time than jury trials. There are no delays to impanel or instruct the jury or to remove the jury while evidentiary and procedural matters are argued. Counsel need not focus on jury reactions during trial, and the judge may permit more flexibility in the order of proof, both of which tend to save time.
- Easier case presentation. The judge's familiarity with the law makes presenting a case with complex legal issues less difficult. For example, in multiparty actions, a judge is less likely to confuse the individual rights that must be decided separately. When explaining technical factual issues, counsel may also be able to forgo the expensive trial exhibits in a bench trial that would have to be prepared for a jury. Similarly, if the major factual issue is the valuation of a closely held business or real property subject to leases, or the applicability of a technical defense, a judge may be better able than a jury to sort out and follow expert testimony.
- Potential cost savings. Many of the above factors can translate into cost savings for your client. Even eliminating jury fees and mileage reimbursements can help. See §§2.31, 4.41. However, if the judge extends a bench trial over time, the cost savings will be eroded as counsel is forced to review the status of the case and "reprepare" each time trial is resumed.

On the advantages of a bench trial in avoiding the adverse impact of publicity, see §6.50. For further comparison of bench and jury trials, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial §41.8 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

C. Judge's role

§24.4 1. Fact-finding function

As in a jury trial, the judge in a bench trial decides all questions of law (including but not limited to questions on the construction of statutes and other writings, the admissibility of evidence, and other rules of evidence). Evid C §310. See CCP §591.

In addition, the judge in a bench trial assumes the jury's function as the trier of fact. The fact-finding role gives the judge significant control over trial proceedings. This role includes ascertaining the credibility of witnesses and deciding how much weight to give their testimony. Bullock's, Inc. v Security-First Nat'l Bank (1958) 160 CA2d 277, 285, 325 P2d 185.

The judge's fact-finding role imposes a duty not to prejudge the issues but to keep an open mind until all evidence is presented. Rosenfield v Vosper (1941) 45 CA2d 365, 371, 114 P2d 29. For example, the judge should not urge counsel for one party to settle the case before or during trial based on a prejudgment of the evidence. Until all the evidence is in, the judge should not express any conclusions about the case. See Pacific & Southwest Annual Conf. of United Methodist Church v Superior Court (1978) 82 CA3d 72, 86, 147 CR 44. After hearing evidence, however, a judge may give counsel an expression of any conclusions up to that moment in order to encourage settlement discussion. Pacific & Southwest Annual Conf. of United Methodist Church v Superior Court, supra.

In a bench trial, a judge may do any or all of the following:

- Partially or totally disregard a witness's testimony on the belief that it is inaccurate or uncertain, or that the witness is biased, or because too much time has elapsed. Tom Thumb Glove Co. v Han (1978) 78 CA3d 1, 5, 144 CR 30.
- Indicate a belief that a party has testified falsely. Keating v Superior Court (1955) 45 C2d 440, 444, 289 P2d 209.
- Resolve conflicting evidence, including inconsistent witness testimony (Howard v Howard (1954) 128 CA2d 180, 184, 275 P2d 88), and draw, or refuse to draw, inferences from the evidence (Davis v Kahn (1970) 7 CA3d 868, 874, 86 CR 872).

On the more prominent role of judicial notice in bench trials, see §24.5. On the judge's viewing of evidence outside the courtroom, see §24.6. On reasons and procedures for disqualifying a judge, see §§6.26-6.78.

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.5 2. Taking judicial notice

Judicial notice allows a matter of law or fact that is relevant to a case to be considered proved without having to present evidence. Fosselman's, Inc. v City of Alhambra (1986) 178 CA3d 806, 812, 224 CR 361; Mozzetti v City of Brisbane (1977) 67 CA3d 565, 578, 136 CR 751.

Judicial notice requirements are the same whether the case is tried before a jury or a judge. See Evid C §§451-453. In a bench trial, however, the judge may permit greater procedural informality, i.e., by simply taking judicial notice on the record without need of a written request from counsel or by being more inclined to take judicial notice on the court's own motion. The attorneys may also be more amenable to the court's taking judicial notice of matters of fact or law. In a jury trial, counsel may feel that the significance of certain matters needs to be explained through witnesses' testimony before the jury can fully understand or appreciate them. In a bench trial, neither the judge nor the parties need be concerned about instructing the jury to accept the judicially noticed matter as indisputably true. See Evid C §457.

For a complete discussion of procedures for taking judicial notice, and the mandatory and permissible matters that may be judicially noticed, see chap 14.

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.6 3. Viewing evidence outside courtroom

In either a bench or a jury trial, a party may request (or the court on its own motion may order) a view of relevant evidence outside the courtroom. The court must find that such a view would be proper and would aid the trier of fact in deciding the case. CCP §651(a).

The judge may view the property that is the subject of the litigation; the place where any relevant event occurred; and any object, demonstration, or experiment that is pertinent, admissible in evidence, and not reasonably obtainable in the courtroom. CCP §651(a). The judge may permit testimony of witnesses at the view. CCP §651(b).

The court remains in session throughout the view proceedings, and the entire court, including the judge, the court reporter, and all other necessary court officials, must witness the property, place, object, demonstration, or experiment being viewed. Proceedings at the view must be recorded to the same extent as proceedings in the courtroom. CCP §651(b).

If a trial judge views the premises that are an issue in the lawsuit, that view furnishes independent evidence of anything disclosed by a visual inspection. See Fosselman's, Inc. v City of Alhambra (1986) 178 CA3d 806, 812, 224 CR 361.

Some judges grant an out-of-court view more readily in a bench trial because the mechanics are easier without a jury. Other judges, who may feel they can or should decide the case on oral testimony and documentary evidence alone, may be less inclined to grant an out-of-court view. On out-of-court views in jury trials, see §§13.110-13.111.

III. TRIAL PROCEDURES

§24.7 A. Order of proof

The order of civil trial proceedings is the same for bench and jury trials and, in both, the court has discretion to change this order and to eliminate or curtail some of the steps. CCP §§607, 631.7. See, e.g., McLellan v McLellan (1972) 23 CA3d 343, 353, 100 CR 258. Judges often change the order in bench trials to save time and to avoid having to recall witnesses.

In a bench trial, the procedural steps for impaneling and instructing the jury are eliminated and the usual procedures are as follows:

- The case is called, and counsel for all parties identify themselves and their clients.
- If there is a pretrial order fixing the parties' factual and legal contentions, the judge reads it. Otherwise, the court reviews the trial briefs and lists of witnesses.
- The judge asks whether counsel want to make any stipulations, admissions, or amendments to the pretrial order.
- The judge, with counsels' advice or stipulation, sets the order in which the issues will be tried. In fixing this order, the judge's goal is usually to reduce the length of trial. See Ransom v Ransom (1963) 215 CA2d 258, 262, 30 CR 53.

EXAMPLE: In a personal injury case, the trial judge frequently directs that the issue of liability be tried first, obviating the need for the court to receive evidence on the issue of damages if no cause of action is established against the defendant. See, e.g., Murphy v Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co. (1960) 177 CA2d 539, 542, 2 CR 325. On bifurcation and other trial-ordering techniques, see §§1.11-1.14.

- Plaintiff and defendant may make opening statements. CCP §607(1)-(2). Most judges encourage opening statements to get a preview of what is to come. On opening statements in bench trials, see §9.35. On motion for nonsuit following plaintiff's opening statement, see §24.11.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Opening statements in a bench trial will tend to be considerably shorter and more focused on the key factual and legal issues than opening statements in a jury trial.

- Plaintiff presents the plaintiff's evidence. CCP §607(3). Plaintiff may call defendant as an adverse witness under Evid C §776. See §§11.73-11.75.
- Defendant may cross-examine plaintiff's witnesses, and each cross-examination may be followed by redirect examination, recross-examination, and subsequent redirect and recross-examinations as necessary. Evid C §772.
- The trial judge may examine plaintiff's witnesses to clarify or supplement the evidence. See Evid C §775.
- Plaintiff rests.
- Defendant may make motions, e.g., for judgment under CCP §631.8 or to strike evidence to which objections were made and reserved for the judge's ruling. See §§24.14-24.29. Plaintiff may also make motions, e.g., to amend pleadings to conform to proof. See §§18.103-18.123.
- The judge rules on the motions or reserves ruling on them. If the judge does not grant defendant's motion for judgment, the case proceeds.
- Defendant may make an opening statement, if not previously given after plaintiff's opening statement. CCP §607(4). On opening statements in bench trials, see §9.35.
- Defendant presents the defense. Defendant may call plaintiff as an adverse witness under Evid C §776. See §§11.73-11.75. Defendant may also recall witnesses originally called in plaintiff's case in chief. However, a witness once examined cannot be reexamined on the same matter without leave of court. Evid C §774.
- Plaintiff may cross-examine defendant's witnesses and each cross-examination may be followed by redirect examination, recross-examination, and continuing and subsequent redirect and recross-examinations as necessary. Evid C §772.
- The trial judge may examine defendant's witnesses to clarify or supplement the evidence. See Evid C §775.
- Defendant rests.
- Plaintiff and defendant may make motions, e.g., for judgment under CCP §631.8. See §§24.14-24.28. On making other trial motions, see §§24.11, 24.13.

- The judge rules on the motions or reserves ruling on them. If the judge does not grant plaintiff's or defendant's motion for judgment, the case proceeds.
- Plaintiff may present a rebuttal case to counter any new matters raised by defendant's case in chief. Defendant may then present a rebuttal case (sometimes called a surrebuttal), limited to refuting new matters raised in plaintiff's rebuttal case. This process may continue, with the scope of examination becoming progressively limited. See CCP §607(6); Evid C §320.
- The court may allow the parties to admit evidence on their case in chief after each side has presented its case in chief if good cause is shown and if it is in the furtherance of justice. CCP §607(6).
- The parties rest.
- Closing arguments are given, to the extent permitted by the judge. CCP §607(7)-(8). The judge may indicate the points on which argument is desired. See §24.12.
- The judge may immediately announce the tentative decision; but more often, the judge orders the cause submitted and asks or allows counsel to submit further briefs. See §24.8.
- After the judge renders a tentative decision, either or both parties may request a statement of decision. See §§24.33-24.43.
- If a statement of decision is requested, the judge signs and files it, and judgment is entered. See §24.44.
- The judgment is entered by the court clerk. See §24.27.
- The prevailing party files a cost bill, and if necessary, the nonprevailing party brings a motion to tax costs. On recovering costs, see chap 27.

NOTE: A judge has the authority to exercise control over all the proceedings connected with the litigation. People v Ponce (1996) 44 CA4th 1380, 1387, 52 CR2d 422. This authority includes imposing reasonable time limits on portions of the trial. See §1.36 for further discussion of court-imposed time limits.

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.8 B. Submitting trial briefs

It is important to prepare a trial brief on all relevant legal, factual, and evidentiary issues. The brief should focus on the trial issues that will be disputed.

PRACTICE TIP: Counsel should check local court rules as well as investigate, through colleagues and court clerks, the practices of the judge who may preside at the bench trial to learn the best time to file trial briefs. Individual judges may ask for trial briefs and supplemental memorandums at any time during a bench trial.

Pretrial briefs. Occasionally, lawyers view a bench trial as a less formal proceeding and do not file briefs. A trial brief can be far more important in a bench trial, and the judge may view counsel who appears for trial without a brief, except in the simplest of cases, as unprepared or uninterested—particularly if opposing counsel submits a trial brief. On preparation and content of trial briefs, see §§3.49-3.53.

PRACTICE TIP: Even if not required, it is good practice to serve and file a trial brief in enough time for the judge to review it before the final status or chambers conference in the case. Because chambers conferences are often shorter in a bench trial (see §24.9), the trial brief is your first and best opportunity to educate and persuade the judge of the merits of your client's position. If the chambers conference has been set before the first day of trial, be sure to print the conference date under the caption so that the brief can be tracked by court staff and made available to the judge before that time.

Posttrial briefs. Trial briefs may also be submitted after trial. See, e.g., Haupt v La Brea Heating & Air Conditioning Co. (1954) 125 CA2d Supp 888, 890, 270 P2d 125, overruled on other grounds in Zenker-Felt Imports v Malloy (1981) 115 CA3d 713, 720, 171 CR 482.

PRACTICE TIP: When the judge either requests or permits briefs to be filed after trial, establish a posttrial schedule with the judge, fixing specific periods for their submission. Doing so will avoid any misunderstandings that you failed to submit a timely brief. See, e.g., Wells v Coca Cola Bottling Co. (1956) 140 CA2d 218, 220, 294 P2d 955 (if posttrial brief is not submitted for long period, in this case 8 months, judge may properly conclude that right was waived and proceed to decision).

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.9 C. Chambers conference

Chambers conferences with counsel and the judge before the trial are usually much shorter in bench trials. Motions in limine on prejudicial evidence that might inflame the jury, or other matters that should arguably be withheld during a jury trial, are of course not in issue. However, the chambers conference is still a good opportunity to underscore the important claims or defenses that counsel will argue during the trial and to inform the court of any special requests that counsel plans to make during the trial (e.g., an out-of-court view of relevant evidence).

PRACTICE TIP: Be sure that a court reporter will be available during the chambers conference if it becomes necessary to put any matters on the record. In limited civil actions, counsel may need to request the presence of a court reporter.

As in a jury trial, it is a good idea to become informed during the chambers conference of the judge's "housekeeping" rules in effect during the trial. Although the judge may relax these rules more than if a jury were present, and though many matters can be handled informally during the trial without having to argue outside the jurors' hearing, it is still good practice to take a list of questions to the conference about the judge's preferences in handling evidentiary and other matters during the trial.

PRACTICE TIP: Questions of minor importance or of a mechanical nature should be addressed to the judge's clerk. For a list that is used in jury trials that can be modified for a bench trial chambers conference, see §6.5.

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.10 D. Objecting to evidence

Because of the few people present and a frequently low-key atmosphere, many lawyers think of bench trials as less formal. But counsel must ensure that the bench trial's informality does not create an insufficient record on appeal. Failure to object on the record to otherwise admissible evidence in either a bench or jury trial waives the right to urge the inadmissibility of that evidence on appeal. Evid C §353; In re Lynna B. (1979) 92 CA3d 682, 703, 155 CR 256.

This rule also applies to questions asked by the judge. People v Corrigan (1957) 48 C2d 551, 556, 310 P2d 953 (jury trial). Without a jury, however, evidentiary issues can be argued without dismissing the jury and without trips to the bench or the judge's chambers, thus saving considerable time.

In the absence of a jury, the judge may be inclined to conditionally accept much evidence subject to a motion to strike. Or counsel may make a single "continuing" objection to an entire line of questioning or to the same class of evidence. The risk on appeal is that if the judge forgets to rule on the motion or objection, the record may be incomplete.

PRACTICE TIP: To avoid waiver, it is crucial to secure rulings on motions to strike or continuing objections that the trial judge held in abeyance. Maintain a log and take thorough notes to avoid any oversights on evidentiary rulings. Remind the court that certain issues need to be resolved and the decisions put on the record so that there are explicit rulings indicating the court's rejection of incompetent evidence. On making trial objections and protecting the record, see chap 15.

§24.11 E. Making trial motions

Nonsuit. In a bench trial, a defendant may move for nonsuit at the conclusion of the plaintiff's opening statement. CCP §581c(a); Gonsalves v City of Dairy Valley (1968) 265 CA2d 400, 403, 71 CR 255. A motion for nonsuit is properly granted only if the court decides that the evidence is not of sufficient substantiality to support a plaintiff's verdict, even if all the evidence presented in the plaintiff's favor is presumed true. See Willis v Gordon (1978) 20 C3d 629, 633, 143 CR 723. In moving for nonsuit, defendant does not waive the right to offer evidence if the motion is not granted. CCP §581c(a).

The motion for nonsuit must state the precise grounds on which it is made, with the defects in plaintiff's opening statement or case in chief clearly and specifically shown. Only the grounds specified by counsel may be considered by the court of appeal. Saunders v Taylor (1996) 42 CA4th 1538, 1542 n2, 50 CR2d 395. On form of oral motion, see §18.25. For a thorough discussion of the procedures and law on motions for nonsuit, see §§18.7-18.34.

In a bench trial, a party may not move for nonsuit at the close of the other party's case in chief; the correct motion is a motion under CCP §631.8. Ford v Miller Meat Co. (1994) 28 CA4th 1196, 1200, 33 CR2d 899; Commonwealth Mem., Inc. v Telophase Soc'y (1976) 63 CA3d 867, 869 n1, 134 CR 58.

Motion for continuance. Counsel for any party can request a continuance or a recess during the trial. Grounds for a motion for continuance include the illness of a party or a key witness. For discussion of specific grounds and procedures for making and opposing the motion, the potential costs incurred by the moving party, and alternatives to a continuance for resolving the problem, see §§6.6-6.25, 18.57-18.64.

Other trial motions. The motion for judgment in a bench trial (CCP §631.8), made exclusively in trials without a jury at the close of either party's evidence, is discussed in detail in §§24.14-24.28.

On motion to amend the pleadings to conform to proof, see §§18.103-18.123. On motion to reopen the case on the ground that new evidence has become available, see §24.13. On procedures generally for making motions during trial, see §§18.3-18.6.

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.12 F. Closing argument at court's discretion

Closing argument in a civil bench trial is not a right but a privilege granted at the judge's discretion. Gillette v Gillette (1960) 180 CA2d 777, 781, 4 CR 700. A judge who permits closing argument has broad discretion to limit its scope and length. Board of Educ. v Cooper (1955) 136 CA2d 513, 527, 289 P2d 80; Larson v Blue & White Cab Co. (1938) 24 CA2d 576, 578, 75 P2d 612.

PRACTICE TIP: If you think oral argument will benefit your client, be prepared to persuade the judge why argument will be useful in the particular case. When the judge is willing to listen to final argument, you should not ordinarily waive it. An articulate, well-reasoned argument can have a positive effect on the judge's decision. On the differences in arguing to the judge instead of to a jury, see §19.8.

If oral argument is limited or not allowed, counsel may ask to argue the case to the judge in trial briefs. In bench trials, judges also frequently request counsel to submit briefs after trial. See §24.8.

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.13 G. Reopening case

A motion to reopen is a request to present further elements of proof in a party's case after that party has rested. The motion is commonly made after a motion for nonsuit or directed verdict when it comes to a party's attention that an essential element of the case was not argued or put into evidence. See §§18.65-18.81.

NOTE: In a jury trial, the motion must be made before the jury is discharged and may be made even after closing argument. See Nelson v Douglas Pedlow, Inc. (1955) 130 CA2d 780, 783, 279 P2d 823. See §18.74. In a bench trial, a motion to reopen can be made not only during trial but also after the case has been submitted, after the court has reached a tentative decision, or even after judgment has been entered. See, e.g., Marriage of Hahn (1990) 224 CA3d 1236, 1240 n3, 273 CR 516 (trial court properly granted motion to reopen even though motion was made 3 months after tentative decision but before entry of judgment).

Counsel must show good cause to reopen a case. Ensher, Alexander & Barsoom, Inc. v Ensher (1964) 225 CA2d 318, 326, 37 CR 327. Grounds for reopening include surprise or inadvertent omission despite due diligence. See, e.g., Malibou Lake Mountain Club, Ltd. v Robertson (1963) 219 CA2d 181, 185, 33 CR 74; Lyons v Lyons (1961) 190 CA2d 788, 791, 12 CR 349. The new evidence to be presented must not be merely cumulative. Sanchez v Bay Gen. Hosp. (1981) 116 CA3d 776, 794, 172 CR 342.

The judge also has inherent power to reopen a case on the court's own motion when the interests of justice require it. Taylor v Bell (1971) 21 CA3d 1002, 1007, 98 CR 855. Granting or denying a motion to reopen is within the trial court's sound discretion and will not be reversed without a clear showing of abuse and prejudice. Estate of Horman (1968) 265 CA2d 796, 806, 71 CR 780.

When a motion for a new trial is made in a bench trial, the judge may reopen the case as an alternative to granting the motion. CCP §662. A case may be reopened to hear only the issues the judge deems appropriate. See, e.g., Western Electroplating Co. v Henness (1959) 172 CA2d 278, 280, 341 P2d 718. An order to reopen vacates any earlier findings and judgment, even if the order does not expressly make this statement. Taormino v Denny (1970) 1 C3d 679, 684, 83 CR 359. For a form that can be used when requesting the judge to reopen a case, see §18.31.

IV. MOTION FOR JUDGMENT

§24.14 A. Checklist: Procedures for making or opposing motion for judgment

This checklist outlines the procedural steps for both making and opposing a motion for judgment under CCP §631.8. For discussion of motion, see §§24.15-24.29.

Moving Party

___ 1. Determine legal basis for motion. See §24.15.

___ 2. Consider preparing written supporting memorandum. See §24.23.

___ 3. Make oral statement of specific grounds. See §24.22.

___ 4. Argue merits of case, showing why weight of evidence supports motion. See §24.17.

___ 5. Let record reflect either that opponent has opportunity to reopen or that court decided opponent had no new evidence present. See §24.13.

___ 6. Consider asking for partial judgment on some but not all issues in the action. See §24.19.

___ 7. If court is inclined to deny motion, urge instead that court reserve ruling and weigh opponent's evidence while trial proceeds. See §24.20.

Opponent

___ 1. Argue merits of case, showing why weight of evidence supports denial of motion. See §24.17.

___ 2. If own witnesses called under Evid C §776, ascertain whether court is considering such evidence and, if so, seek opportunity to rebut and rehabilitate. See §24.24.

___ 3. Consider requesting reopening of case. See §24.13.

___ 4. Consider requesting amendment of pleadings. See §24.11.

___ 5. If granted, request judgment be deemed not on the merits. See §24.25.

B. Nature of motion

§24.15 1. Any party can move for judgment

In bench trials, any party can move for judgment at the conclusion of the opposing party's case. CCP §631.8(a). The defendant usually makes the motion after the plaintiff's case has been presented. A plaintiff/cross-defendant can also make the motion at the conclusion of the other party's evidence on a cross-complaint. CCP §631.8(a).

Bringing the motion does not waive the right to present a defense or rebuttal evidence if the motion is denied. CCP §631.8(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.16 2. Purpose: to eliminate need to present own evidence

Defendant's perspective. The purpose of a motion for judgment is to eliminate the moving party's need to present evidence. Rodde v Continental Ins. Co. (1979) 89 CA3d 420, 423, 152 CR 500. By making the motion at the end of plaintiff's case, defense counsel may be able to avoid the expense of presenting a defense if the court decides that plaintiff failed to meet the burden of proof. Kirk Corp. v First Am. Title Co. (1990) 220 CA3d 785, 806, 270 CR 24.

Plaintiff's perspective. If plaintiff's counsel makes the motion, it may eliminate the need for plaintiff to produce further evidence in rebuttal when defendant has clearly failed to present a valid defense. A party permitting its own witness to testify out of order is not thereby prevented from bringing a motion at the end of the adverse party's case. Eddy v Gallaway (1970) 11 CA3d 185, 191, 89 CR 491.

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.17 3. Compared with nonsuit or new trial motions

When ruling on a motion for nonsuit, the court must grant all inferences in favor of the nonmoving party. A motion for judgment requires that the court weigh the evidence. See §24.18. On motions for nonsuit, see §§18.7-18.34.

Unlike a new trial motion, which the court can grant only on a showing of specific grounds and which serves only to set aside the prior proceedings, a motion for judgment is on the merits and requires only the weighing of evidence. However, a judgment under CCP §631.8 can be challenged through a motion for a new trial under CCP §657, in which case the court again weighs the evidence. If the motion for a new trial is granted after a judgment under CCP §631.8, the trial court has in effect found that the motion for judgment was erroneously granted. Watt v Kantel (1970) 13 CA3d 249, 253, 91 CR 449. On motions for new trial, see §§25.22-25.71.

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Judge's ruling

§24.18 1. Duty to weigh evidence

A motion for judgment requires the court to sit as a trier of fact with the discretion to disbelieve witnesses or disagree with experts' opinions. Jordan v City of Santa Barbara (1996) 46 CA4th 1245, 1255, 54 CR2d 340; Kirk Corp. v First Am. Title Co. (1990) 220 CA3d 785, 806, 270 CR 24. The court's failure to weigh the evidence is reversible error per se, and its failure to demonstrate a weighing of the evidence normally leads to reversal. Greening v General Air-Conditioning Corp. (1965) 233 CA2d 545, 551, 43 CR 662.

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.19 2. Judge can consider any party's evidence

In ruling on a party's motion for judgment under CCP §631.8(a), the court may consider all evidence received, as long as the nonmoving party has a chance to rebut any evidence the nonmoving party deems unfavorable that was presented when the nonmoving party called the moving party's witnesses under Evid C §776. CCP §631.8(a); People v Mobil Oil Corp. (1983) 143 CA3d 261, 275, 192 CR 155.

EXAMPLE: Under former law, if defendant made the motion, the court could not consider evidence introduced out of order by plaintiff in calling defendant's witnesses to the stand under Evid C §776. See Miller v Dussault (1972) 26 CA3d 311, 316, 103 CR 147. Since a 1978 amendment to CCP §631.8, the court may consider §776 evidence, but plaintiff also must be given an opportunity to rebut any evidence that came in when defendant's witnesses testified under §776 that plaintiff's counsel deems adverse. Plaintiff must also be permitted to rehabilitate the testimony of any witnesses whose credibility was attacked during defendant's cross-examination. See CCP §631.8(a). This right to present evidence in rebuttal or rehabilitation arises, however, only if the court in its discretion considers all evidence received, including §776 evidence, when ruling on the motion. CCP §631.8(a). See People v Mobil Oil Corp. (1983) 143 CA3d 261, 272, 192 CR 155.

For discussion of this issue from the opposing party's point of view, see §24.25.

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.20 3. Granting partial judgment

The court may grant partial judgment if the evidence supports the granting of a judgment to some but not all of the issues in the action. CCP §631.8(b). In that event, final judgment is not entered, and trial proceeds on the remaining issues.

Final judgment is awarded in accordance with the earlier ruling for partial judgment as well as for the matters determined at trial. CCP §631.8(b).

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Even if counsel feels that his or her motion for judgment under CCP §631.8 should be granted in its entirety, it is nearly always advisable to request, in the alternative, partial judgment on those issues or causes of action for which the opposing party most clearly failed to present sufficient evidence to support a judgment in its favor.

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.21 4. Deferring the ruling

After a motion for judgment is made, CCP §631.8 explicitly authorizes the court to decline to render any judgment until all the evidence has been presented. See People v Mobil Oil Corp. (1983) 143 CA3d 261, 275, 192 CR 155. This may ensure a more complete record if the case is appealed, thus lessening the chances of reversal.

PRACTICE TIP: If your defense or rebuttal will be long and expensive and if the other party has not met the burden of proof, consider urging the judge when you make the motion not to defer a ruling until after your presentation of evidence. Your main argument is that a deferral of the ruling, although authorized, would defeat the purpose of this remedy.

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.22 D. Timing

A motion for judgment may be made only in a bench trial at the close of the other party's evidence. As a practical matter, this means that the motion for judgment is usually made by defendant at the close of plaintiff's case; for plaintiff to make the motion at the end of defendant's case is rarely worth the effort because the trial is almost over by that time.

A motion for judgment may not be made after a plaintiff's opening statement. Instead, defendant must move for nonsuit to challenge plaintiff's case after the opening statement. See §§18.7-18.34.

© The Regents of the University of California

E. Procedures for moving party

§24.23 1. Oral motion

A motion for judgment under CCP §631.8 is usually made orally in open court, without notice or written supporting memorandum. No specific form of oral motion for judgment is required. The motion could be worded as follows:

> Your Honor, the defendant moves for judgment under Code of Civil Procedure section 631.8 on the ground that an essential element is missing from the plaintiff's claim, namely, _ _[specify]_ _.

Counsel should state the grounds clearly, showing the court why the other party has failed to prove a case and why judgment should be granted in the moving party's favor.

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.24 2. Written motion with supporting memorandum

In some circumstances, counsel may choose to submit the motion in writing, with supporting papers. After evaluating the weaknesses in the opponent's case, counsel may anticipate making the motion, and the court may be more readily persuaded with a written supporting memorandum—especially if complex legal issues are involved.

If the motion is made in writing, note this fact on the record at the time the papers are submitted to the court. For written version of this motion, see form in §24.53.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: A short succinct written motion is strongly recommended. If defense counsel wishes to make an oral motion at the conclusion of plaintiff's case, but intends to support it with a written supporting memorandum not yet prepared, he or she should not ask the judge to stop the proceedings. Instead, defense counsel should proceed to present his or her evidence while asking the judge to defer ruling on the CCP §631.8 motion until the written materials can be presented (in a day or two), and then to consider the motion nunc pro tunc, on the evidence produced up to the conclusion of plaintiff's case. The judge may wish to invite the plaintiff to submit a simultaneous brief in opposition to the motion.

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.25 F. Procedures for opposing party

The party opposing the motion must be given an opportunity to present additional evidence to rebut any evidence received by the court that the opposing party deems adverse. CCP §631.8(a). This situation usually arises when the plaintiff has called adverse defense witnesses under Evid C §776 during the plaintiff's case in chief. See §24.18.

Counsel opposing the motion must also be permitted to rehabilitate the testimony of a witness whose credibility has been attacked by the party moving for judgment. CCP §631.8(a). But see People v Mobil Oil Corp. (1983) 143 CA3d 261, 272, 192 CR 155 (additional evidence permissible only if court considers, not merely hears, moving party's evidence).

PRACTICE TIP: Whenever possible, opposing counsel should affirmatively seek to present rebuttal evidence and to rehabilitate witnesses whose credibility was damaged during cross-examination. Otherwise, the court is likely to follow the nonsuit rule and assume that counsel has no further evidence to present. See John Norton Farms v Todagco (1981) 124 CA3d 149, 162, 177 CR 215.

© The Regents of the University of California

G. Effect of granting motion

§24.26 1. Adjudication on merits

When the motion for judgment is granted, it operates as an adjudication on the merits, unless the court in its order for judgment specifies otherwise. CCP §631.8(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.27 2. Statement of decision required

If the court grants the motion for judgment, it must make a statement of decision as provided in CCP §§632 and 634. CCP §631.8(a). See Kirk Corp. v First Am. Title Co. (1990) 220 CA3d 785, 805, 270 CR 24. Ordinarily, the court requests the prevailing party to draft a proposed statement of decision with the other party having the right to object and to request changes or additions. For procedures on statement of decision, see §§24.34-24.50.

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.28 3. Entry of judgment; Costs

Like any other judgment, a judgment under CCP §631.8 must be entered by the court clerk in conformity with the court's decision. CCP §664. See §23.19.

The party in whose favor a judgment is entered may file a cost bill under CCP §§1031-1032. On recovering costs, see chap 27.

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.29 4. Substantial evidence test on appeal

An appeal from a judgment given under CCP §631.8 is subject to the substantial evidence standard. If the trial court draws reasonable inferences from the facts, or resolves conflicts of evidence in favor of its deductions for those made by the trier of fact. Rodriguez v North Am. Rockwell Corp. (1972) 28 CA3d 441, 447, 104 CR 678.

Because the appellate court views the evidence in a light most favorable to the prevailing party (the respondent), the trial court's decision must be affirmed on appeal if supported by substantial evidence. Torrey Pines Bank v Hoffman (1991) 231 CA3d 308, 317, 282 CR 354; Swanson v Skiff (1979) 92 CA3d 805, 810, 155 CR 280. See California Civil Appellate Practice §§5.16-5.22 (3d ed Cal CEB 1996).

© The Regents of the University of California

V. TENTATIVE DECISION

§24.30 A. Required after bench trial

The court must issue a tentative decision after a bench trial on a question of fact. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590(a). A tentative decision is an informal indication of the court's contemplated judgment. The tentative decision is not a judgment; it is not binding on the court and may be modified or changed at any time. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590(b).

In the tentative decision, the court may (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590(c)):

- Offer the proposed statement of decision, subject to a party's objection;
- Indicate that it will prepare a statement of decision;
- Order a party to prepare a statement of decision; or
- Direct that the tentative decision become the statement of decision unless, within 10 days after announcement or service of the tentative decision, a party specifies those principal controverted issues concerning which the party is requesting a statement of decision or makes proposals not included in the tentative decision.

NOTE: Although CCP §632 and Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590 use the term "tentative decision," most of the available case law was decided under former provisions requiring an "intended decision." The tentative decision has a similar scope and application, and case law interpreting intended decisions applies to tentative decisions. Some courts still refer to the "intended decision" or use other similar terms. See, e.g., Wolfe v Lipsy (1985) 163 CA3d 633, 209 CR 801 (memorandum of intended decision); People v Casa Blanca Convalescent Homes, Inc. (1984) 159 CA3d 509, 206 CR 164 (memorandum of intended ruling).

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.31 B. Function of tentative decision

The primary purpose of a tentative decision is to explain the judge's reasoning and to enunciate the legal principles applied by the judge to reach a conclusion. See South Bay Irrig. Dist. v California-American Water Co. (1976) 61 CA3d 944, 995, 133 CR 166; Packer v Sillas (1976) 57 CA3d 206, 218, 128 CR 907.

A tentative decision cannot be invoked to contradict or impeach the court's judgment. Carroll v Puritan Leasing Co. (1978) 77 CA3d 481, 491, 143 CR 772; Neumeyer v Crown Funding Corp. (1976) 56 CA3d 178, 186 n3, 128 CR 366, disapproved on other grounds in Liodas v Sahadi (1977) 19 C3d 278, 287, 137 CR 635. A tentative decision is not an appealable order, because it is not a judgment, a decision, or any other type of statement binding on the court. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590(a); Estate of Pieper (1964) 224 CA2d 670, 675, 37 CR 46.

For collateral estoppel purposes, however, an intended decision can be used to determine what issues were litigated in an action. See Carroll v Puritan Leasing Co. (1978) 77 CA3d 481, 492, 143 CR 772.

Whether or not a statement of decision was requested, a memorandum of a tentative decision cannot be considered part of the record on appeal. Any reference to a tentative decision to support allegations of error is improper. See Marriage of Ditto (1988) 206 CA3d 643, 646, 253 CR 770. On requesting a statement of decision, see §§24.34-24.35.

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.32 C. Tentative decision may be oral or written

The announcement of the tentative decision may be an oral statement, entered in the minutes. If made in open court, in the presence of all parties who appeared at trial, no notice to the parties is required. The tentative decision may also be made as a written statement filed with the clerk. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590(a).

If the tentative decision was not given orally in open court in the presence of all the parties, the clerk must mail a copy of the minute entry or the written tentative decision to all parties. The clerk must also mail to all parties a copy of any modifications or changes made after an announced tentative decision. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.33 D. Tentative decision in municipal courts [Deleted]

The rules for the municipal courts have been repealed. See former Cal Rules of Ct 501-598. The superior and municipal courts in all California counties were unified, and matters that were traditionally within the municipal courts' jurisdiction are now identified as "limited civil cases" in the superior trial courts.

© The Regents of the University of California

VI. STATEMENT OF DECISION

§24.34 A. Requesting statement of decision

After the court announces its tentative decision after a bench trial (see §§24.29-24.32), any party may request the court to issue a statement of decision explaining the factual and legal basis for its decision on the principal controverted issues at trial. CCP §632. The requesting party must specify the controverted issues that the party is requesting a statement of decision on. CCP §632. A statement is not required when only legal, not factual, issues are in dispute. See §24.52.

Code of Civil Procedure §632 also applies to administrative mandamus proceedings in which the trial court exercises independent judgment in reviewing the record. Cooper v Kizer (1991) 230 CA3d 1291, 1301, 282 CR 492. The procedures for requesting, submitting, and objecting to the statement of decision are in Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590.

If a statement of decision is not requested, the judgment rests on the findings implicit in the order and will be upheld if any substantial evidence sustains it. Elzey v Metropolitan Builders, Inc. (1971) 16 CA3d 71, 72, 92 CR 461. Even when there is one clear and sufficient finding on which the judgment can rest, it will be concluded that the court did rest its judgment on that finding, and the others may be disregarded. Republic Indem. Co. v Empire Builders Corp. (1985) 167 CA3d 1163, 1167, 213 CR 787. To avoid implied factual findings after a bench trial, a party must request a statement of decision under CCP §632 and, under CCP §634, bring any omissions or ambiguities in the statement of decision to the trial court's attention. Fladeboe v American Isuzu Motors Inc. (2007) 150 CA4th 42, 58, 58 CR3d 225.

PRACTICE TIP: It is almost always a good idea to request a statement of decision, but particularly when you know that the court is likely to grant judgment against your client and an appeal is likely. Failure to request a statement of decision results in an assumption that the trial court made the findings necessary to sustain the judgment. Michael U. v Jamie B. (1985) 39 C3d 787, 793, 218 CR 39.

The court's failure to prepare a statement of decision after a proper request under CCP §632 is reversible error per se. See Marriage of McDole (1985) 176 CA3d 214, 219, 221 CR 734, disapproved on other grounds in Marriage of Fabian (1986) 41 C3d 440, 451 n13, 224 CR 333; Marriage of S. (1985) 171 CA3d 738, 748, 217 CR 561, which were remanded to the trial court for preparation of the statement. See §24.50.

§24.35 1. Time limit

Trials concluded within 1 day. For bench trials concluded within 1 calendar day or less than 8 hours over more than 1 day, the request for a statement of decision must be made before submission of the matter for the court's decision. CCP §632; Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590(n). See Architects & Contractors Estimating Serv. v Smith (1985) 164 CA3d 1001, 1005, 211 CR 45 (request made 5 days after trial untimely); Milligan v Hearing Aid Dispensers Examining Comm. (1983) 142 CA3d 1002, 1004 n3, 191 CR 490 (request made nearly 3 weeks after trial was untimely).

A matter is "submitted" when either of the following first occurs: (1) The court orders the matter submitted; or (2) the final paper is required to be filed, or argument is heard, whichever is later. Cal Rules of Ct 2.900(c).

A request for a statement of decision is timely when made after the court announces its tentative ruling but before counsel completes argument in response to the ruling. Social Serv. Union, Local 535 v County of Monterey (1989) 208 CA3d 676, 256 CR 325. See also Marriage of Ananeh-Firempong (1990) 219 CA3d 272, 268 CR 83.

Trials lasting more than 1 day. The triggering event for requesting a statement of decision for bench trials lasting more than 1 day is the trial court's issuance of its tentative decision. The request must be "made" within 10 days after the court announces its tentative decision. CCP §632. The court clerk may mail a copy of the minute entry or the court's tentative decision. See Hutchins v Galanda (1990) 216 CA3d 1529, 265 CR 596. A request is not considered "made" under CCP §632 when it is deposited in the mail; instead, it is considered "made" when it is received by the court. See Staten v Heale (1997) 57 CA4th 1084, 1091, 68 CR2d 35 (plaintiff's request for statement of decision deemed untimely because it was not considered "made" until it was received by the court and that was beyond allowable time period). If a memorandum of tentative decision is served by mail in California, CCP §1013(a) has been construed to extend this period by 5 more days. See Marriage of McDole (1985) 176 CA3d 214, 221 CR 734, disapproved on other grounds in Marriage of Fabian (1986) 41 C3d 440, 451 n13, 224 CR 333.

It is reversible error per se for the trial court to ignore a timely request for a statement of decision. Miramar Hotel Corp. v Frank B. Hall & Co. (1985) 163 CA3d 1126, 1129, 210 CR 114. The request for a statement of decision is timely if the court receives it on the tenth day after the notice of intended decision is announced, even if the file is stamped after that date. Gordon v Wolfe, supra (request on which clerk noted receipt in handwriting at 5:03 p.m. on tenth day held timely).

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.36 2. Written request advisable

Code of Civil Procedure §632 does not state whether the request for a statement of decision must be in writing, and there is a conflict in the case law on this issue. See Marriage of Ananeh-Firempong (1990) 219 CA3d 272, 283, 268 CR 83, relying in part on Marriage of Reilley (1987) 196 CA3d 1119, 242 CR 302 (court held that request under CCP §632 can be oral or written for trials that are concluded within 1 day or within 8 hours if more than 1 day). See also Whittington v McKinney (1991) 234 CA3d 123, 285 CR 586. But see Martinez v County of Tulare (1987) 190 CA3d 1430, 1434, 235 CR 851, with which the Ananeh-Firempong court specifically disagreed. In Martinez, the court held that the request for a statement of decision must be in writing unless otherwise agreed, or unless the trial is completed within 1 day.

PRACTICE TIP: Until this conflict is resolved, it is better practice to make the request for a statement of decision in writing.

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.37 B. Trials concluded in 1 day: Statement of decision may be oral

In trials completed within 1 day, or less than 8 hours over more than 1 day, the court has discretion to announce its statement of decision orally on the record in the presence of the parties. CCP §632.

This is not always advisable, however, and counsel should consider requesting the court that a written statement be prepared. See §24.43 for applicable discussion on oral statements in trials lasting longer than 1 day.

© The Regents of the University of California

C. Trials longer than 1 day

§24.38 1. Who prepares statement

In court trials lasting longer than 1 day, the court can either prepare a proposed statement of decision itself or designate a party to prepare it. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590(f).

The court's tentative decision may have stated whether a statement of decision, if one is requested, will be prepared by the court or by an ordered party. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590(c). See §24.29.

Ordinarily, the court requests the prevailing party to draft a proposed statement of decision.

JUDICIAL PERSPECTIVE: Because many judges prefer to write their own statements of decision, it would be wise to ask the judge how he or she wants to handle it. If you are the prevailing party after the tentative decision you may want to volunteer to prepare the statement of decision.

On failure to submit a timely statement, see §24.42.

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.39 2. Parties' proposals on content

After a party has requested a statement of decision, any party may make proposals about its contents. CCP §632. Such proposals must be made within 10 days after the date of request for a statement. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590(e). Within 10 days after announcement or service of the tentative decision, whichever is later, any party that appeared at trial may request a statement of decision to address the principal controverted issues; these issues must be specified in the request. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590(d).

Alternatively, the court may have directed in its tentative decision that it be the statement of decision, unless within 10 days a party specifies controverted issues or makes proposals not covered in the tentative decision. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590(c). See §24.29.

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.40 3. Time limit for preparing statement

A party that has been directed by the court to draft the statement of decision must, within 30 days after the announcement or service of the tentative decision, prepare and serve a proposed statement and proposed judgment to the court. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590(f). On proposed judgment, see §24.41.

A court choosing to prepare the statement has 30 days after the announcement or service of the tentative decision to prepare and serve a proposed statement and proposed judgment to all the parties. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590(f).

NOTE: The time periods in Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590 are subject to extension or, for good cause shown, relief from noncompliance. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590(m).

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.41 4. Proposed judgment also required

The party who prepares the proposed statement of decision must also draft a proposed judgment, and serve and submit it at the same time as the statement. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590(f). On drafting proposed judgment, see §23.26.

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.42 5. Failure to timely submit statement

If the proposed statement and judgment are not served and submitted within the 30 days after the announcement or service of the tentative decision, any other party who appeared at the trial may within 10 days (1) prepare, serve, and submit a proposed statement and judgment; or (2) serve on all other parties and file a notice of motion for an order that a statement of decision was waived. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590(f). See Jordan v Malone (1992) 5 CA4th 18, 21, 6 CR2d 454.

The court rules are not clear on when a requested statement not timely filed is to be considered waived. Under Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590(m), the court may extend the time to prepare, submit, and serve the statement and may, at any time before entry of judgment, for good cause shown, excuse noncompliance with the time requirements.

Thus, the rules imply, but do not specify, that a requested statement may be considered waived by the party charged with preparing it if that party has not timely filed the statement and the court refuses to grant an extension. The rules also suggest, however, that a motion to consider a requested statement waived is required and that mere failure to submit a statement may not automatically result in its waiver. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590(f). Presumably, the court could act on its own motion to consider a requested statement waived.

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.43 6. Written statement advisable

The statement of decision must be in writing unless the trial lasts less than 1 day (see §24.37) or the parties agree otherwise. CCP §632. Oral remarks will suffice only if they explain the factual and legal basis for the court's decision on the principal controverted issues. Social Serv. Union, Local 535 v County of Monterey (1989) 208 CA3d 676, 679, 256 CR 325.

If a timely request for a statement of decision has been made, the court's use of a transcript of the oral pronouncement of decision is insufficient and is reversible error. Whittington v McKinney (1991) 234 CA3d 123, 129, 285 CR 586 (although record showed that party expressly waived right to written statement).

PRACTICE TIP: If you represent the prevailing party in a trial longer than 1 day, never agree to an oral statement of decision. Even in a shorter trial, in which the statement may be oral at the court's discretion, consider requesting on the record your client's preference that it be in writing. Except in the simplest of trials, an oral statement on the record will rarely memorialize the court's decision as well as a written statement prepared by a party or the court. It may be better simply not to request a statement of decision if an oral statement seems sufficient. To request a statement of decision suggests that the requesting party (usually the prevailing party) wishes to protect the record in the event of appeal. This objective is accomplished more adequately and thoroughly in writing.

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.44 D. Contents

The statement of decision must explain the factual and legal bases for the court's decision on the principal controverted issues listed in the request. CCP §632. See Nunes Turfgrass, Inc. v Vaughan-Jacklin Seed Co. (1988) 200 CA3d 1518, 1525, 246 CR 823; Miramar Hotel Corp. v Frank B. Hall & Co. (1985) 163 CA3d 1126, 210 CR 114. A material issue of fact underlying the judgment but not disputed at trial need not be included in the statement.

EXAMPLE: If the parties stipulate to facts indispensable to the judgment, these issues may be excluded from the statement of decision.

Because the burden is on the party to specify the controverted issues on which a statement of decision is desired, a trial court can make findings on those specified issues only, i.e., on fewer than all the material issues in dispute in the case. Harvard Inv. Co. v Gap Stores, Inc. (1984) 156 CA3d 704, 709 n3, 202 CR 891. In a statement of decision, a trial judge is not required to find on immaterial issues or to make findings outside the pleadings. In re Cheryl E. (1984) 161 CA3d 587, 207 CR 728.

The court is not required to discuss each question listed in a party's request or to make an express finding on every factual matter controverted at trial. The court's statement of decision is adequate if it "sufficiently disposes of all the basic issues in the case." Bauer v Bauer (1996) 46 CA4th 1106, 1118, 54 CR2d 377. The court's statement of decision need only state ultimate rather than evidentiary facts. Hellman v La Cumbre Golf & Country Club (1992) 6 CA4th 1224, 1230, 8 CR2d 293. The trial court has the discretion to decide which issues are the "principal controverted issues" and need not discuss other issues unnecessary to the decision. Vukovich v Radulovich (1991) 235 CA3d 281, 294, 286 CR 547 (trial court found lack of subject matter jurisdiction, rendering discussion of the remaining issues moot).

It is reversible error, however, for the trial court to fail to make findings requested by a party on material disputed issues. People v Casa Blanca Convalescent Homes, Inc. (1984) 159 CA3d 509, 206 CR 164. See Harvard Inv. Co. v Gap Stores, Inc. (1984) 156 CA3d 704, 711, 202 CR 891. For example, a statement of decision must be provided on the issue of damages even if liability is admitted. The defendant has the right to specification of the components of an award so that they can be reviewed under the substantial evidence rule. Gordon v Wolfe (1986) 179 CA3d 162, 224 CR 481.

PRACTICE TIP: In drafting a proposed statement of decision, ascertain which issues are controverted and, of those issues, which can be considered principal to the court's decision. Use the pleadings to take stock of the issues in the case as narrowed or expanded at trial. List the elements of causes of action on which a party is determined to have prevailed, as well as the elements of any affirmative defenses that were raised. If the less flattering disputed issues are not squarely handled in the statement, you may succeed in building reversible error into an otherwise favorable result. Reflect on how best to organize the statement, e.g., the factual and legal bases for the decision may be merged into one narrative or set forth separately. Whatever approach is taken, the objective is clarity of the factual and legal issues that the court decided. The appellate courts seem to be looking for a narrative statement that is comprehensible and does not avoid material issues. The more conclusionary or cryptic the statement, the more likely it is that a court of appeal will find it inadequate. On appellate review, see §24.50.

The court's tentative decision may be adopted as its statement of decision if the document fairly and completely sets forth the factual and legal bases for the decision. See Wolfe v Lipsy (1985) 163 CA3d 633, 209 CR 801 (called "memorandum of intended decision"). In In re Rodrigo S. (1990) 225 CA3d 1179, 276 CR 183, the court held that when a party's proposed statement of decision was adopted as the court's tentative decision and no objection to it was made, the tentative decision properly became the court's statement of decision.

A judge who has disqualified himself or herself after hearing a bench trial, however, may not issue a statement of decision, even if it would mean merely adopting the tentative decision. Geldermann, Inc. v Bruner (1991) 229 CA3d 662, 280 CR 264.

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.45 E. Objections

Other parties have the right to object and to request additions, deletions, or amendments to the proposed statement of decision. Failure to object to the proposed statement of decision waives the right to claim ambiguities or omissions in the statement on appeal except for legal errors on its face. United Servs. Auto. Ass'n v Dalrymple (1991) 232 CA3d 182, 186, 283 CR 330. See §24.50.

Any party may, within 15 days after the proposed statement of decision and proposed judgment have been served, serve and file objections to the proposed statement of decision and proposed judgment. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590(g).

NOTE: There are no statutory guidelines on the form and content of objections. The wording of former Cal Rules of Ct 232(d) stated that objections should include (a) proposed counterfindings and conclusions, (b) an alternative form of judgment, or (c) a request for further or specific findings. While it is best to avoid the former terms, such as "findings and conclusions," they may suggest useful ideas for framing proposals and objections under the current rule.

Waiver. Failure to make timely objections to another party's proposed statement of decision will usually prevent raising those objections for the first time on appeal. In Marriage of Arceneaux (1990) 51 C3d 1130, 1138, 275 CR 797, the court held that failure to bring defects in the statement of decision to the trial court's attention constitutes a waiver of any objection. For further discussion, see §24.50.

PRACTICE TIP: Review the proposed statement of decision for gaps and ambiguities and call them to the attention of the trial court in your objections. If you are concerned about a waiver, it may be difficult to avoid listing every single disputed issue. Request clarification or additional findings and make your objections specific. Try to avoid minutiae and confine the objections to those dispositive issues that are likely to have a favorable impact on the appellate court's perspective.

§24.46 F. Hearing

The judge may order a hearing on proposals for or objections to a proposed statement of decision or a proposed judgment. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590(k). The use of permissive language implies that the judge has complete discretion regarding oral argument on these issues.

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.47 G. Court's signing and filing

As soon as the judge signs and files the statement of decision and judgment, the court clerk must "immediately" enter judgment in conformity with the court's decision. CCP §664. See §23.19.

If a written judgment is required, the court must sign and file the judgment within 50 days after the announcement or service of the tentative decision, whichever is later, or, if a hearing was held, within 10 days after the hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590(l).

NOTE: A judge is required to decide submitted matters within 90 days. Cal Const art VI, §19; Govt C §68210. Failure of a judge to do so, however, does not afford a basis on which to attack the decision. Hassanally v Firestone (1996) 51 CA4th 1241, 1245, 59 CR2d 625.

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.48 H. Effect in bifurcated trial

When a factual issue is tried by a trial court separately and before trial of other issues, the trial judge must announce the tentative decision on the issue tried, and when requested, issue a statement of decision as prescribed by Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1591. A judge may proceed with the second portion of the bifurcated trial, however, even if the statement of decision has not yet been issued on the first portion. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1591.

The statement of decision must still be requested within the statutory period after the tentative decision on the first portion of the trial is announced. See §24.35. But no proposed judgment may be issued until the other issues are tried, except for an interlocutory judgment or a separate judgment that could otherwise be properly entered before the final judgment in the action is determined. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1591.

In a bifurcated bench trial, a party is entitled to have the same judge try all portions of the trial that depend on the weighing of evidence and issues of credibility, absent a stipulation to a different judge or a waiver. If the judge is unavailable to try the second phase of a bifurcated trial, a mistrial must be declared. European Beverage, Inc. v Superior Court (1996) 43 CA4th 1211, 1216, 51 CR2d 147. If issues are tried by different judges, each judge must follow the procedures in Cal Rules of Ct 3.1590 for the issues tried by that judge. The proposed judgment must be prepared by the judge who tries the final phase. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1591. On motions to bifurcate trials generally, see §§6.99-6.103.

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.49 I. Modifying or vacating statement of decision

The trial judge can change, add to, or vacate the statement of decision instead of granting a motion for new trial. CCP §662. The purpose of §662 is to avoid the unnecessary delays and expenses associated with a new trial. Oliver v Boxley (1960) 181 CA2d 471, 478, 5 CR 468. Section 662 also allows the trial judge to grant relief from judgment by reopening the case, modifying or vacating the judgment, or granting a partial new trial. On motion for a new trial, see §§25.22-25.71.

When a motion to vacate judgment is granted based on the ground that there is an erroneous legal basis for the original decision not consistent with or not supported by the facts, the statement of decision must be amended and corrected if the judgment is set aside. CCP §663. On motion to vacate judgment, see §§25.72-25.77. On reopening case, see §§18.65-18.81.

In some circumstances, a statement of decision may be required when a court rules on a motion to amend a judgment to add a judgment debtor as a defendant on an alter ego theory. Gruendl v Oewel Partnership, Inc. (1997) 55 CA4th 654, 660, 64 CR2d 217.

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.50 J. Appellate review: Statement that does not resolve principal issues

If a party does not call omissions or ambiguities in the statement of decision to the attention of the trial court, it will be presumed that the trial court resolved the controverted issue or the ambiguity in favor of the prevailing party. CCP §634; Marriage of Arceneaux (1990) 51 C3d 1130, 1138, 275 CR 797. See Aviointeriors SpA v World Airways, Inc. (1986) 181 CA3d 908, 914, 226 CR 527.

On the other hand, if the record shows that the omission or ambiguity was brought to the trial court's attention before entry of judgment or in conjunction with the motions for new trial or vacating judgment, any controverted issues or ambiguities not resolved by the statement will not be inferred as having been decided in favor of the prevailing party. On objections and proposals concerning proposed statement of decision, see §24.45.

PRACTICE TIP: If you are counsel for the prospective appellant, specifically request that the statement of decision address each controverted issue that your client may wish to raise on appeal. Failure to request that a particular issue be addressed will preclude raising the sufficiency of the trial court's findings on that issue on appeal. If the party designated to prepare the statement fails to do so, request the trial court to compel that party to prepare the statement and judgment, or request permission to personally prepare the statement and judgment in order to perfect the right to appeal from an appealable, final judgment or order. See §23.34.

If the defect is on the face of the statement, however, there is no waiver. United Servs. Auto. Ass'n v Dalrymple (1991) 232 CA3d 182, 283 CR 330 (court held that award of attorney fees in situation not authorized by statute is such a defect and need not be preserved on appeal by filing objection to statement).

A failure to request a statement of decision does not waive review if the court expressly refuses to make a finding or orally states a finding on the record that precludes a presumption that it made every finding necessary to support an award. Reid v Moskovitz (1989) 208 CA3d 29, 255 CR 910.

When the trial court fails to make findings on a material issue that would fairly disclose the trial court's determination, reversible error may result. See Hellman v La Cumbre Golf & Country Club (1992) 6 CA4th 1224, 1230, 8 CR2d 293, citing Marriage of Garrity & Bishton (1986) 181 CA3d 675, 686, 226 CR 485. If the judgment is otherwise supported, however, that failure is harmless error unless the evidence is sufficient to sustain a finding in the complaining party's favor that would have the effect of countervailing or destroying other findings. 6 CA4th at 1230.

VII. NO STATEMENT OF DECISION

§24.51 A. Procedures when statement of decision not requested or waived

For a trial lasting longer than 1 day that requires a written judgment, and a statement of decision was not requested or was waived, the court has discretion either (1) to prepare and serve a proposed judgment on all parties that appeared at the trial within 20 days after the announcement or service of the tentative decision, or (2) to order a party to prepare, serve, and submit the proposed judgment to the court within 10 days after the date of the order. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1059(h). On time requirements and procedures for drafting, objecting to, and having a hearing on the proposed judgment, see §§23.24-23.25.

© The Regents of the University of California

§24.52 B. When party is not entitled to statement of decision

No question of fact was tried. A statement of decision is not required after trial when only legal, not factual, issues are in dispute. San Francisco Unified Sch. Dist. v San Francisco Classroom Teachers Ass'n (1990) 222 CA3d 146, 152, 272 CR 38. See Earp v Earp (1991) 231 CA3d 1008, 283 CR 43.

Motion proceedings. Because a statement of decision is required only when a disputed question of fact is submitted to the court for trial, CCP §632 does not apply to motions. Lavine v Hospital of the Good Samaritan (1985) 169 CA3d 1019, 1026, 215 CR 708.

Preliminary injunction hearings. An evidentiary hearing on a preliminary injunction is not a trial within the meaning of CCP §632, and no statement of decision is required. People v Landlords Prof. Servs. (1986) 178 CA3d 68, 223 CR 483.

I. SCOPE OF CHAPTER §25.1

II. MOTION FOR JUDGMENT NOTWITHSTANDING THE VERDICT (JNOV)
- A. Description and use
  - 1. Motion for JNOV tests sufficiency of evidence presented during trial §25.2
  - 2. Motion for directed verdict not required beforehand §25.3
  - 3. Who can move for JNOV §25.4
- B. Grounds for motion
  - 1. Jury verdict not supported by substantial evidence §25.5
  - 2. No other reasonable conclusion may be drawn from evidence; judge cannot weigh evidence §25.6
  - 3. Genuine verdict required §25.7
    - a. When verdict defective §25.8
    - b. Motion for judgment under CCP §630(f) §25.9
- C. Procedures
  - 1. Move for JNOV and new trial at same time §25.10
  - 2. All issues must be determined before motion may be made in bifurcated trial §25.11
  - 3. Written motion required §25.12
  - 4. Time requirements §25.13
  - 5. Motion made by court subject to different filing and notice requirements §25.14
- D. Trial judge's ruling on motion
  - 1. After deadline for filing and serving new trial motion §25.15
  - 2. Before time to rule on new trial motion expires §25.16
  - 3. Process judgment form without delay §25.17
  - 4. Order granting JNOV may be limited to certain issues §25.18
- E. Review on appeal
  - 1. Merits of ruling on motion can be reached on appeal from judgment §25.19
  - 2. Judgments notwithstanding the verdict are frequently reversed §25.20
  - 3. Denial of motion will be upheld on appeal if substantial evidence supports verdict §25.21

III. MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL
- A. Description and use
  - 1. Motion appropriate only if injustice occurred §25.22
  - 2. Compared with motion for JNOV §25.23
  - 3. Partial new trial §25.24
  - 4. Motion in bifurcated trial §25.25
- B. Grounds for motion §25.26
  - 1. Irregularity in proceedings or abuse of discretion (CCP §657(1)) §25.27
    - a. Prompt objection to impropriety may cure prejudicial effect and avoid waiver §25.28
    - b. New trial proper after flagrant misconduct even when party failed to object §25.29
  - 2. Jury misconduct (CCP §657(2))
    - a. Jury misconduct raises rebuttable presumption of prejudice §25.30
    - b. Appellate review of entire record may rebut presumption of prejudice §25.31
    - c. Waiver for failure to advise court of jury impropriety §25.32
  - 3. Accident or surprise (CCP §657(3))
    - a. Unexpected condition, diligence, and prejudice required §25.33
    - b. Disfavored ground §25.34
    - c. Case examples §25.35
  - 4. Newly discovered evidence (CCP §657(4))

    - b. Ground disfavored §25.37
  - 5. Excessive or inadequate damages (CCP §657(5))
    - a. Conditional order for new trial may be granted §25.38
    - b. Court has duty to weigh evidence §25.39

c. Motion may be granted on issue of damages when liability correctly determined §25.40
d. Use of remittitur to reduce excessive damages limited §25.41
e. Appellate court may review conditional order under CCP §662.5 §25.42
f. Denial of motion difficult to overturn §25.43
6. Insufficiency of evidence (CCP §657(6))
a. Court must reweigh evidence §25.44
b. Order granting motion on this ground usually affirmed on appeal §25.45
7. Verdict or decision against law (CCP §657(6))
a. Same test as for directed verdict and motion for JNOV §25.46
b. Court may not reweigh evidence §25.47
8. Error in law (CCP §657(7))
a. Motion granted only when court's rulings in error §25.48
b. Waiver for failure to assert error of law §25.49
9. Inability to obtain transcript (CCP §§657.1, 914) §25.50
C. Tactical considerations §25.51
D. Time requirements
1. When notice of intention to move for new trial must be filed §25.52
2. When court must rule on motion §25.53
3. Prematurely filed notice has no effect §25.54
4. Court's specification of reasons to be filed after ruling §25.55
5. Time limits are jurisdictional §25.56
E. Procedures
1. Checklist: Motion for new trial §25.57
2. Preparing the motion
a. Notice of intention to move for new trial must state grounds §25.58
b. Supporting memorandum must be filed within 10 days after notice is filed §25.59
3. Supporting affidavits or declarations
a. When required §25.60
b. Must be filed within 10 days after notice is filed §25.61
c. Jury irregularity or misconduct declarations may not reflect subjective reasoning §25.62
d. When jury declarations necessary §25.63

§25.1 I. SCOPE OF CHAPTER

Motions after trial attacking the judgment or verdict require careful consideration and, in many instances, strict adherence to procedural rules and time requirements. This chapter covers:

- Motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict (JNOV) (see §§25.2-25.21);
- Motions for new trial (see §§25.22-25.71);
- Motions to vacate and enter a different judgment (see §§25.72-25.77);
- Motions to correct a clerical error (see §§25.78-25.83); and
- Other postjudgment proceedings and motions, e.g., involving public entities, medical malpractice actions (see §§25.84-25.89).

Motions for judgment when the jury is discharged without rendering a verdict (CCP §630(f)) are discussed in §25.9 and §§18.40-18.41.

On motions to vacate default and judgment by default, motions to vacate based on extrinsic fraud or mistake, or attack by independent action, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial §§38.62-38.86 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004). See also 8 Witkin, California Procedure, Attack on Judgment in Trial Court (5th ed 2008).

II. MOTION FOR JUDGMENT NOTWITHSTANDING THE VERDICT (JNOV)

A. Description and use

§25.2 1. Motion for JNOV tests sufficiency of evidence presented during trial

The statutory motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict (JNOV) authorizes a trial court to grant judgment in favor of a party against whom the jury has rendered a verdict whenever a motion for directed verdict should have been granted if that motion had been made. CCP §629; Beavers v Allstate Ins. Co. (1990) 225 CA3d 310, 327, 274 CR 766. The denial of a party's motion for directed verdict does not prevent the court from later granting a motion for JNOV. See Teich v General Mills, Inc. (1959) 170 CA2d 791, 794, 339 P2d 627.

A JNOV motion may be granted only when no substantial evidence supports the jury's verdict. It is the equivalent of reversal of a judgment for insufficiency of the evidence as a matter of law. See McCoy v Hearst Corp. (1991) 227 CA3d 1657, 1663, 278 CR 596. In effect, a JNOV motion tests whether the facts in evidence constitute a prima facie case or a defense as a matter of law. For purposes of the motion, all facts supporting the verdict are presumed true. See §25.5.

Tactically, a motion for JNOV is usually made at the same time as a motion for new trial. See §25.10.

§25.3 2. Motion for directed verdict not required beforehand

A motion for directed verdict is not a prerequisite to a JNOV motion. See CCP §629. Even if a motion for directed verdict was denied earlier, the court can still grant a motion for JNOV. See §25.2.

CAUTION: When researching motions for JNOV, counsel should distinguish cases decided before 1963. A 1963 amendment abrogated the former requirement that a motion for directed verdict be made to preserve the right to make a motion for JNOV.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/25 Motions After Trial/§25.4 3. Who can move for JNOV

§25.4 3. Who can move for JNOV

The motion may be made by a party or by the court on its own motion after the verdict has been rendered. CCP §629.

Either defendant or plaintiff may move for JNOV. See CCP §629; Moore v City & County of San Francisco (1970) 5 CA3d 728, 734, 85 CR 281.

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Grounds for motion

§25.5 1. Jury verdict not supported by substantial evidence

The grounds for granting a JNOV motion are the same as those for granting a motion for directed verdict. See §§18.35-18.56. The motion may be granted only when no substantial evidence supports a jury's verdict. See Teich v General Mills, Inc. (1959) 170 CA2d 791, 794, 339 P2d 627.

To grant the motion, the court must use the following test: The court finds that there is no substantial evidence to support the verdict, even when it gives the prevailing party's evidence and the legitimate inferences drawn from that evidence all the value to which they are legally entitled, and disregards conflicting evidence on behalf of the moving party. See Quintal v Laurel Grove Hosp. (1964) 62 C2d 154, 159, 41 CR 577; McFarland v Voorheis-Trindle Co. (1959) 52 C2d 698, 703, 343 P2d 923; Reynolds v Willson (1958) 51 C2d 94, 99, 331 P2d 48.

Viewed from another perspective, the court must deny the motion when it finds that "substantial evidence" supports the verdict (with evidence and reasonable inferences that can be drawn from the evidence) viewed in the light most favorable to the prevailing party, while disregarding conflicting evidence on behalf of the party making the motion. See Hauter v Zogarts (1975) 14 C3d 104, 110, 120 CR 681; Arthur v Avon Inflatables, Ltd. (1984) 156 CA3d 401, 406, 203 CR 1; Castro v State (1981) 114 CA3d 503, 507, 170 CR 734.

The party opposing a JNOV motion may rely on favorable portions of testimony elicited from the cross-examination of adverse witnesses under Evid C §776. Casetta v United States Rubber Co. (1968) 260 CA2d 792, 799, 67 CR 645; Reynolds v Natural Gas Equip. (1960) 184 CA2d 724, 731, 7 CR 879. The evidence or reasonable inferences drawn from it must be presumed true because any conflicting evidence must be resolved in favor of the party opposing a JNOV motion. See Hauter v Zogarts, supra; Castro v State, supra; §25.6.

The motion should be granted when the evidence does not support a special finding of either legal cause or damages. If that is the case, there would also be no substantial evidence to support even a general verdict. Sukoff v Lemkin (1988) 202 CA3d 740, 744 n3, 249 CR 42 (mere probability that event would have happened does not support claim for damages). On special verdicts and special findings supporting a general verdict, see chap 22.

PRACTICE TIP: If any substantive evidence supports an award for punitive damages, a JNOV motion must be denied. But counsel should consider a motion for new trial on the ground of excessive damages. See Teitel v First Los Angeles Bank (1991) 231 CA3d 1593, 1603, 282 CR 916 (court suggested JNOV appropriate when amount of damages not in dispute). This is one example of why experienced trial lawyers usually move for JNOV and for new trial at the same time. See §25.10.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.6 2. No other reasonable conclusion may be drawn from evidence; judge cannot weigh evidence

The motion may be granted only when as a matter of law no other reasonable conclusion is legally deducible from the evidence, and any other holding would be so lacking in evidentiary support that a reviewing court would be compelled to reverse. Sukoff v Lemkin (1988) 202 CA3d 740, 743, 249 CR 42; Valdez v J.D. Diffenbaugh Co. (1975) 51 CA3d 494, 513, 124 CR 467; Moore v City & County of San Francisco (1970) 5 CA3d 728, 733, 85 CR 281; Spillman v City & County of San Francisco (1967) 252 CA2d 782, 786, 60 CR 809.

In considering the evidence, the court may not weigh it. Quintal v Laurel Grove Hosp., supra. It must accept the evidence tending to support the verdict as true—unless it is "inherently incredible" on its face. Borba v Thomas (1977) 70 CA3d 144, 152, 138 CR 565. Similarly, the court may not judge the credibility of witnesses. Hale v Farmers Ins. Exch. (1974) 42 CA3d 681, 690, 117 CR 146, disapproved on other grounds in Egan v Mutual of Omaha Ins. Co. (1979) 24 C3d 809, 822, 169 CR 691.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.7 3. Genuine verdict required

A motion for JNOV assumes that "a verdict has been rendered." CCP §629. The motion is not proper when the verdict is so incomprehensible, contradictory, or unintelligible that the jury's intent cannot be ascertained. See Hallinan v Prindle (1934) 220 C 46, 55, 29 P2d 202.

The court needs a verdict on which a motion for JNOV can be entertained. Mish v Brockus (1950) 97 CA2d 770, 776, 218 P2d 849.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.8 a. When verdict defective

If the jury returns an ambiguous or defective verdict, the proper remedy is to request—before the jury is discharged—the trial court to send the jury out for further deliberations to correct the verdict. See CCP §619. On curing verdicts, see §§22.24-22.31. If counsel makes no objection to a verdict that could have been cured before the jury's discharge, waiver may have occurred. Woodcock v Fontana Scaffolding & Equip. Co. (1968) 69 C2d 452, 456 n2, 72 CR 217. On waiver, see §22.31.

When the jury has been discharged and waiver has not occurred, the trial judge may interpret an ambiguous verdict "from its language considered in connection with the pleadings, evidence and instructions." An appellate court may also attempt to determine a correct interpretation of the verdict, if possible, but reversal is required when a "hopeless ambiguity" exists. Woodcock v Fontana Scaffolding & Equip. Co., supra (verdict held not ambiguous); Telles v Title Ins. & Trust Co. (1969) 3 CA3d 179, 187, 83 CR 444 (trial court erroneously interpreted verdict).

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/25 Motions After Trial/§25.9 b. Motion for judgment under CCP §630(f)

§25.9 b. Motion for judgment under CCP §630(f)

When the verdict is inconsistent or ambiguous after the jury is discharged, and grounds existed to grant a motion for directed verdict if one had been made, a motion for judgment can be made under CCP §630(f). See §§18.40-18.41 and form in §18.127.

NOTE: After the jury has been discharged, defects in the verdict may also become apparent that provide grounds for a motion for new trial. On impeaching the verdict on the ground of jury misconduct, see §§25.30-25.32.

C. Procedures

§25.10 1. Move for JNOV and new trial at same time

It is almost always to a party's advantage to move for JNOV and new trial simultaneously. A motion for JNOV does not extend the time for filing and serving a notice of intention to move for new trial (CCP §629), and simultaneously moving for new trial allows the court flexibility to grant or deny either motion. The code synchronizes the procedures for both motions. See CCP §629 (JNOV motion must be made within same period specified in CCP §659 for filing notice of intention to move for new trial). See also Catania v Halcyon S.S. Co. (1975) 44 CA3d 348, 350, 118 CR 513; Espinoza v Rossini (1966) 247 CA2d 40, 45, 55 CR 205.

If the trial court grants both motions, the order granting the motion for new trial is effective if judgment entered on the order granting JNOV is reversed on appeal. See CCP §629 (4th paragraph). Because of the narrow scope of the trial court's power on motions for JNOV, orders granting the motion are frequently reversed. If the trial judge has also granted a new trial, a motion on which the court has broader discretion, then that order stands and the case will be retried.

The court may also grant the JNOV motion on one or more issues, and new trial on other issues. When there are several issues, such as liability and damages (or negligence, intentional conduct, and damages), the trial court is free to grant JNOV on one or more issues and new trial on the others. For example, the trial court has the power to grant JNOV on a single issue such as punitive damages. Beavers v Allstate Ins. Co. (1990) 225 CA3d 310, 332, 274 CR 766. See §25.18.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.11 2. All issues must be determined before motion may be made in bifurcated trial

In bifurcated trials (see CCP §598), motions for JNOV, like motions for new trial, cannot be made until all issues in the bifurcated trial have been determined. The court does not have jurisdiction to enter JNOV if the plaintiff wins the liability phase, and an unsuccessful defendant cannot make the motion until after the trial on damages is concluded. See Auto Equity Sales, Inc. v Superior Court (1962) 57 C2d 450, 458, 20 CR 321; Meyser v American Bldg. Maintenance, Inc. (1978) 85 CA3d 933, 937, 149 CR 808; Mays v Disneyland, Inc. (1963) 213 CA2d 297, 299, 28 CR 689.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.12 3. Written motion required

A written motion for JNOV is required. See CCP §§629, 659; Younesi v Lane (1991) 228 CA3d 967, 971, 279 CR 89, disapproved on other grounds in Van Beurden Ins. Servs., Inc. v Customized Worldwide Weather Ins. Agency, Inc. (1997) 15 CA4th 51, 63, 61 CR2d 166 (oral motion invalid). As with other motions, a supporting memorandum must be attached. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113(a). It is also good practice to submit a proposed order with the moving papers. For forms of motion and order, see §§25.90-25.91.

PRACTICE TIP: It is also a good idea to speak with the judge's clerk about filing the papers and the date of the hearing. Unlike law and motion matters, a motion for JNOV is generally heard by the trial judge. On notice and other time requirements, see §25.13.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/25 Motions After Trial/§25.13 4. Time requirements

§25.13 4. Time requirements

A motion for JNOV is subject to strict time limitations: It must be made within the period allowed under CCP §659 for filing and serving notice of intention to move for new trial. CCP §629. The motion for JNOV must be filed either:

- Before the entry of judgment; or
- Within 15 days of the date the court clerk mailed notice of entry of judgment under CCP §664.5, within 15 days of service of written notice of entry of judgment by any party, or within 180 days after the entry of judgment—whichever is earliest.

NOTE: Under Govt C §68106(b)(1), effective July 28, 2009, and operative through June 30, 2010, if a court is closed as the result of a budget reduction measure in response to the state fiscal crisis, the day is considered a holiday and not a court day.

See Palmer v GTE Cal., Inc. (2003) 30 C4th 1265, 135 CR2d 654, discussed in §§25.52, 25.53.

Filing a motion for JNOV does not stay entry of judgment (CCP §664), nor does it extend the time for filing and serving a notice of intention to move for new trial (CCP §629). See Pratt v Vencor, Inc. (2003) 105 CA4th 905, 909, 129 CR2d 741.

Counsel for a party moving for JNOV must give at least 16 court days' notice of the hearing, and an additional 5 calendar days' notice if service is by mail when the place of mailing and the place of address are in California. See CCP §1005(b). All papers opposing the motion must be filed and served at least 9 court days before the hearing unless the court orders a shorter time. CCP §1005(b). Opposition and reply motion or reply papers must be served by personal delivery, facsimile transmission, express mail, or other statutory means reasonably calculated to ensure delivery to the other party not later than the close of the next business day after the time the opposing papers or reply papers are filed. CCP §1005(c). Code of Civil Procedure §1013, which extends the time within which a right may be exercised, does not apply to a notice of motion, papers opposing a motion, or reply papers.

When one or more parties have made motions for JNOV and for new trial, the hearing is set by the court clerk at the same time. CCP §§629, 661. Hearing both motions together conserves preparation and travel time of counsel and allows the trial judge to concentrate on all the issues at a single hearing. See §25.10.

If the party moving for JNOV also serves notice of intention to move for new trial, an additional 15 days must be allowed for other parties to file their notices of intention to move for new trial. For further discussion of time requirements on motions for new trial, see §§25.52-25.56.

§25.14 5. Motion made by court subject to different filing and notice requirements

When the trial court moves for JNOV, it need give only 5 days' notice. CCP §629. The court is not bound by the time requirements of CCP §§629 and 659, and may make the motion at any time before its power to rule on a new trial motion expires. CCP §629.

The court has the power to rule on a motion for new trial for 60 days after the clerk or a party mails a notice of the entry of judgment, whichever notice is mailed earlier, or, if no notice has been given, 60 days after the first notice of intention to move for new trial was filed. CCP §660.

D. Trial judge's ruling on motion

§25.15 1. After deadline for filing and serving new trial motion

Whether the court or a party moves for JNOV, the court is prohibited from ruling on the JNOV motion until the time for the parties' filing and serving a motion for new trial has run. CCP §§629, 659. See §25.13.

If a motion for new trial is also filed, both motions must be ruled on at the same time. CCP §629. This provision, however, is directory rather than mandatory, so that separate rulings on each motion made within the requisite time period constitute substantial compliance. Espinoza v Rossini (1966) 247 CA2d 40, 45, 55 CR 205.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/25 Motions After Trial/§25.16 2. Before time to rule on new trial motion expires

§25.16 2. Before time to rule on new trial motion expires

The court must rule on the motion for JNOV before the time for ruling on the motion for new trial has expired. CCP §629, 660; Sturgeon v Leavitt (1979) 94 CA3d 957, 961, 156 CR 687.

The court has the power to rule on a motion for new trial for 60 days after the clerk or a party mails a notice of the entry of judgment, whichever notice is mailed earlier, or, if no notice has been given, 60 days after the first notice of intention to move for new trial was filed. CCP §660.

A "ruling" on the motion is defined as an order that is:

- Entered in the permanent minutes of the court; or
- Signed by the trial judge and filed with the clerk.

CCP §660; Catania v Halcyon S.S. Co. (1975) 44 CA3d 348, 350, 118 CR 513.

PRACTICE TIP: Be sure the court rules on the motion as defined above before the 60-day period expires. If the court has not ruled on the motion for JNOV within that period, the effect is a denial of the motion. CCP §§629, 660.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.17 3. Process judgment form without delay

If the motion is granted, it is good practice to present a form of judgment to the court for signature as soon as possible after the "ruling" is made. See §25.16. When that judgment is signed and entered after the applicable time period has run (see §25.14), CCP §660 is not violated as long as the order appears in the permanent minutes of the court. See Catania v Halcyon S.S. Co. (1975) 44 CA3d 348, 350, 118 CR 513.

It is important for the prevailing party to process the form of judgment without delay because the court is entitled to reconsider its order before the entry of judgment on the order, if the time within which the court must rule on the motion has not expired. See CCP §629; Jach v Edson (1967) 255 CA2d 96, 99, 62 CR 925. For form of judgment, see §23.37.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.18 4. Order granting JNOV may be limited to certain issues

An order granting JNOV may be limited to certain issues. See Mason v Mercury Cas. Co. (1976) 64 CA3d 471, 134 CR 545 (motions for JNOV and new trial granted on punitive damages issue only); Gordon v Strawther Enters. (1969) 273 CA2d 504, 516, 78 CR 417 (liability only; damages to be determined by court or jury).

If judgment on the jury verdict was for the defendant, the trial court cannot grant a plaintiff's motion for JNOV and assess damages when they are unliquidated. But the court can grant the motion for JNOV on liability and order a new trial on damages if plaintiff's counsel has also moved for a new trial. See Spillman v City & County of San Francisco (1967) 252 CA2d 782, 786, 60 CR 809.

© The Regents of the University of California

E. Review on appeal

§25.19 1. Merits of ruling on motion can be reached on appeal from judgment

An order granting a motion for JNOV is not appealable. See Horton v Jones (1972) 26 CA3d 952, 956, 103 CR 399 (motion for JNOV denied after liability phase of bifurcated trial; no appellate jurisdiction, even with parties' consent, because no final judgment).

The merits of that ruling may only be reached on appeal from the resulting judgment. See Jordan v Talbot (1961) 55 C2d 597, 602, 12 CR 488 (no showing that JNOV was entered); Herman v Shandor (1970) 8 CA3d 476, 479, 87 CR 443 (JNOV not entered).

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.20 2. Judgments notwithstanding the verdict are frequently reversed

When motions for JNOV are granted, the judgments entered are as vulnerable on appeal as the judgments entered on motions for nonsuit and directed verdict. On nonsuit and directed verdict motions generally, see chap 18. The appellate court uses the same test as the trial court, reading the record in the light most advantageous to appellant, resolving all conflicts in that party's favor, and giving appellant the benefit of all reasonable inferences in support of the jury's original verdict. Quintal v Laurel Grove Hosp. (1964) 62 C2d 154, 159, 41 CR 577; Estate of Wochos (1972) 23 CA3d 47, 50, 99 CR 782; McCown v Spencer (1970) 8 CA3d 216, 226, 87 CR 213. See §25.5.

Judgments notwithstanding the verdict are often reversed on the ground, contrary to the trial court's determination, that there was sufficient evidence to support the jury's verdict. See, e.g., Henrioulle v Marin Ventures, Inc. (1978) 20 C3d 512, 515, 143 CR 247 (JNOV reversed because exculpatory clause in residential lease found unenforceable); Teitel v First Los Angeles Bank (1991) 231 CA3d 1593, 1603, 282 CR 916 (JNOV reversed and judgment reinstated; remanded to reconsider portion of motion for new trial).

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.21 3. Denial of motion will be upheld on appeal if substantial evidence supports verdict

The scope of appellate review of a trial court's denial of motion for JNOV is to determine whether there is any substantial evidence, whether contradicted or uncontradicted, that supports the jury's conclusion, and, if so, to uphold the trial court's denial. Pusateri v E. F. Hutton & Co. (1986) 180 CA3d 247, 250, 225 CR 526. See Smith v ACandS, Inc. (1994) 31 CA4th 77, 87, 37 CR2d 457, disapproved on other grounds in Camargo v Tjaarda Dairy (2001) 25 C4th 1235, 1245 n10, 198 CR2d 617 (denial reversed; insufficient evidence of causation). See §25.5.

III. MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL

A. Description and use

§25.22 1. Motion appropriate only if injustice occurred

A motion for new trial requests the trial court to reexamine an issue of fact or law. See CCP §§656-662.5, 914; Malkasian v Irwin (1964) 61 C2d 738, 745, 40 CR 78.

When a new trial is ordered, the court must have examined the entire cause, including the evidence, and concluded that a miscarriage of justice occurred. Cal Const art VI, §13. The error must be prejudicial, i.e., a different result would have been probable if the error had not occurred. See CCP §475 (no presumption that an error is prejudicial; both prejudice and substantial resulting injury must be shown); Olinger v Pacific Greyhound Lines (1935) 7 CA2d 484, 488, 46 P2d 774. See also Mercer v Perez (1968) 68 C2d 104, 111, 65 CR 315 (ruling for new trial assumes finding that miscarriage of justice occurred); English v Lin (1994) 26 CA4th 1358, 1364, 31 CR2d 906 (alleged juror misconduct that does not result in actual prejudice does not warrant new trial). For further discussion, see 8 Witkin, California Procedure, Attack on Judgment in Trial Court §§131-132 (5th ed 2008).

A party may raise legal theories in a new trial motion that were not relied on during trial to urge that the judgment was against the law or inconsistent with the facts, as long as the new theory presents a question of law to be applied to undisputed facts in the record. Hoffman-Haag v Transamerica Ins. Co. (1991) 1 CA4th 10, 15, 1 CR2d 805.

Grounds for the motion are statutory only. Fomco, Inc. v Joe Maggio, Inc. (1961) 55 C2d 162, 166, 10 CR 462. See CCP §§657-657.1, 914; §§25.26-25.50. Because the court does not have inherent power to grant a new trial, statutory requirements must be followed precisely. Mercer v Perez (1968) 68 C2d 104, 118, 65 CR 315 (procedural steps for making and ruling on motion are mandatory and must be strictly followed). See Cembrook v Sterling Drug Inc. (1964) 231 CA2d 52, 66, 41 CR 492. But see Shapiro v Prudential Prop. & Cas. Co. (1997) 52 CA4th 722, 726, 60 CR2d 698 (granting new trial on damages where plaintiff did not move for new trial, but did move to correct the verdict and for partial JNOV; court of appeal found that these motions "placed the issue of a new trial before the court").

Waiver of the grounds for a new trial may have occurred if counsel did not properly object to the error during trial, move to strike, or request the court to admonish the jury if prompt action could have cured the misconduct or error. On making trial objections and protecting the record, see chap 15.

A new trial motion may be used to challenge decisions made in many types of actions or special proceedings, not just to attack the verdict or decision rendered in a jury or bench trial. A motion for new trial is appropriate after a judgment of dismissal, nonsuit, directed verdict, or a ruling sustaining a demurrer to the complaint. See Carney v Simmonds (1957) 49 C2d 84, 88, 315 P2d 305. A motion for a new trial can also be granted after judgment on the pleadings. Olson v County of Sacramento (1969) 274 CA2d 316, 79 CR 140.

CAUTION: Carefully analyze the effect of a motion for new trial with regard to default judgments. Under some circumstances, a motion for new trial may be used to attack default judgments for excessive damages, or when the judgment (or decision) was against the law, if all jurisdictional time requirements can be met. See Misic v Segars (1995) 37 CA4th 1149, 1154, 44 CR2d 100. See also California Civil Procedure Before Trial §38.62 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.23 2. Compared with motion for JNOV

Unlike a motion for JNOV, a motion for new trial does not seek reversal of the judgment and entry of a new and different judgment at the trial court level. Instead, the purpose of a motion for new trial is to order retrial of some or all of the issues because of a miscarriage of justice. See Cal Const art VI, §13; §25.22.

If a party moves for both JNOV and a new trial, the court must rule on both motions at the same time. CCP §629. See La Manna v Stewart (1975) 13 C3d 413, 417, 118 CR 761. On motions for JNOV, see §§25.2-25.21.

The trial court's discretion in ruling on a motion for new trial, and the grounds it may consider, are much broader than its discretion and the grounds it may consider when ruling on a motion for JNOV: The latter is effectively limited to instances in which no substantial evidence supports the verdict. Yarrow v State (1960) 53 C2d 427, 436, 2 CR 137. See §25.5.

The trial court has statutory power under CCP §629 to move on its own motion for JNOV (see §25.14), but only an aggrieved party may move for a new trial. Schroeder v Auto Driveaway Co. (1974) 11 C3d 908, 919, 114 CR 622; Healy Tibbitts Constr. Co. v Employers' Surplus Lines Ins. Co. (1977) 72 CA3d 741, 754, 140 CR 375; Smith v Superior Court (1976) 64 CA3d 434, 134 CR 531. See CCP §657.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.24 3. Partial new trial

A new trial may be granted on some issues and not others, in whole or in part. CCP §657. Available options include granting new trial on some issues and not on others, such as damages only. CCP §662.5. See Liodas v Sahadi (1977) 19 C3d 278, 285, 137 CR 635 (complete new trial if any doubt that new trial should be limited to damages).

PRACTICE TIP: Make clear to the court exactly what you are asking for. If a new trial on all the issues would not be in your client's best interest, be sure the court understands that you are not requesting an entire new trial. Your written motion should make it clear that you are moving for a partial new trial (e.g., on the issue of damages only).

When a motion for new trial is made after a bench trial decision, the judge may change or add to the statement of decision, modify or vacate the judgment, grant a new trial on all or part of the issues or, instead of granting new trial, simply vacate and set aside the decision or judgment and reopen the case for further proceedings. See CCP §662; Oliver v Boxley (1960) 181 CA2d 471, 476, 5 CR 468. On bench trials, see chap 24.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/25 Motions After Trial/§25.25 4. Motion in bifurcated trial

§25.25 4. Motion in bifurcated trial

A motion for new trial may not be made until all issues in a bifurcated case have been determined. For example, the plaintiff may move for a new trial if the defendant wins the liability phase, but the defendant must await damage results if the plaintiff prevails on liability. Auto Equity Sales, Inc. v Superior Court (1962) 57 C2d 450, 460, 20 CR 321; Mays v Disneyland, Inc. (1963) 213 CA2d 297, 28 CR 689.

In bench trials, the motion is premature unless all issues have been tried. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1591. When separate issues are tried before different judges, each judge must hear and decide the new trial motion on the issues tried before that judge. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1591. On nullity of prematurely filed motion, see §25.54.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/25 Motions After Trial/§25.26 B. Grounds for motion

§25.26 B. Grounds for motion

Grounds for a motion for new trial are contained in CCP §§657-657.1 and 914 as follows:

- Irregularity in the proceedings of the court, jury, or adverse party, or any order of court or abuse of discretion by which any party was prevented from having a fair trial. CCP §657(1). See §§25.27-25.29.
- Jury misconduct. CCP §657(2). See §§25.30-25.32.
- Accident or surprise that ordinary prudence could not have prevented. CCP §657(3). See §§25.33-25.35.
- Newly discovered evidence, material for the moving party, that could not have been discovered with reasonable diligence and produced at trial. CCP §657(4). See §§25.36-25.37.
- Excessive or inadequate damages. CCP §657(5). See §§25.38-25.43.
- Insufficient evidence to justify the verdict or other decision. CCP §657(6). See §§25.44-25.45.
- Verdict or decision against the law. CCP §657(6). See §§25.46-25.47.
- Error in law occurring at the trial and excepted to by the moving party. CCP §657(7). See §§25.48-25.49.
- Inability to obtain a transcript because of the court reporter's death or disability or loss or destruction of the reporter's notes. CCP §§657.1, 914. See §25.50.

§25.27 1. Irregularity in proceedings or abuse of discretion (CCP §657(1))

A new trial may be granted for irregularity in the proceedings of the court, jury, or adverse party, or be based on any court order or abuse of discretion that prevented a party from having a fair trial. CCP §657(1).

"Irregularity" has been interpreted broadly to mean any overt act of the trial court, the jury, counsel, or an adverse party, amounting to misconduct, that violates a party's right to a fair and impartial trial. Price v Giles (1987) 196 CA3d 1469, 242 CR 559 (defense counsel's claim during jury argument that his own client had not been candid and had colluded with an opposing party constituted misconduct toward his client, even though client prevailed, and it deprived plaintiff of fair trial); Gotcher v Metcalf (1970) 6 CA3d 96, 100, 85 CR 566 (reaffirming necessity of miscarriage of justice). See People ex rel Dep't of Pub. Works v Hunt (1969) 2 CA3d 158, 172, 82 CR 546. For further discussion and examples of misconduct by court or counsel, see chap 16.

Although jury "irregularity" could include problems unrelated to jury misconduct (see §§25.30-25.31), the CCP §657(1)-(2) grounds of jury "irregularity" and "misconduct" overlap. For discussion and examples of jury misconduct during trial, see chap 17; during jury deliberations, see chap 21.

TACTICS: Whenever a motion for new trial is based on any action or impropriety of the jury, assert both grounds: jury irregularity (CCP §657(1)) and jury misconduct (CCP §657(2)). See, e.g., Williams v Bridges (1934) 140 CA 537, 540, 35 P2d 407 (false denial by juror of knowledge of case on voir dire).

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.28 a. Prompt objection to impropriety may cure prejudicial effect and avoid waiver

Counsel should object promptly to misconduct by opposing counsel, another party, or the court; otherwise, the error may be waived. Sabella v Southern Pac. Co. (1969) 70 C2d 311, 319, 74 CR 534. It is rare that the court, when acting promptly and instructing the jury to disregard counsel's misconduct, cannot correct the prejudicial effect of an impropriety. Horn v Atchison, T. & S.F. Ry. (1964) 61 C2d 602, 610, 39 CR 721.

Evidentiary rulings that are patently unfair or that constitute an abuse of discretion are grounds for granting a new trial. See Townsend v Gonzalez (1957) 150 CA2d 241, 249, 309 P2d 878 (admission of irrelevant evidence is grounds for new trial only if moving party was prejudiced).

A new trial may be granted based on the rulings of another judge of the same court that did not occur during trial. Sandco Am., Inc. v Notrica (1990) 216 CA3d 1495, 1507, 265 CR 587 (discovery orders prevented party from having fair trial).

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.29 b. New trial proper after flagrant misconduct even when party failed to object

When there are extreme and repeated instances of misconduct that the court either cannot correct or refuses to recognize, prejudicial misconduct may be present regardless of objections, admonitions, or their absence. Hoffman v Brandt (1966) 65 C2d 549, 55 CR 417; Garden Grove Sch. Dist. v Hendler (1965) 63 C2d 141, 45 CR 313; Simmons v Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1976) 62 CA3d 341, 133 CR 42; Love v Wolf (1964) 226 CA2d 378, 38 CR 183.

When the trial court grants a motion for new trial after flagrant and repeated instances of misconduct, and the offended party failed to object at the trial, the appellate court will not use that failure to overturn the order for new trial unless the order was a clear abuse of discretion. See Malkasian v Irwin (1964) 61 C2d 738, 747, 40 CR 78; Miller v National Am. Life Ins. Co. (1976) 54 CA3d 331, 346, 126 CR 731.

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Jury misconduct (CCP §657(2))

§25.30 a. Jury misconduct raises rebuttable presumption of prejudice

Litigants are entitled to an unbiased and unprejudiced jury. US Const amend VII; Cal Const art I, §16; Hasson v Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 C3d 388, 416, 185 CR 654; Weathers v Kaiser Found. Hosps. (1971) 5 C3d 98, 110, 95 CR 516. On selecting an impartial jury, see chap 8.

When jury misconduct has been shown, a rebuttable presumption of prejudice arises. In re Hamilton (1999) 20 C4th 273, 295, 84 CR2d 403 (juror concealing relevant facts or making false answers during voir dire examination). See Jones v Sieve (1988) 203 CA3d 359, 365, 249 CR 821 (juror consulted reference volume for definition of central issue in trial and another related her personal experiences with medical condition at issue in trial); Young v Brunicardi (1986) 187 CA3d 1344, 232 CR 588 (judgment reversed based on retired police officer's representations to fellow jurors that defendant could not be negligent if he was not cited for Vehicle Code violation). See also Hasson v Ford Motor Co., supra (presumption not conclusive and may be rebutted by showing of lack of prejudice).

A motion for new trial based on juror misconduct must be based on a juror's overt acts that are objectively ascertainable, not on a juror's declaration setting forth his or her subjective reasoning process to impeach the verdict. Locksley v Ungureanu (1986) 178 CA3d 457, 223 CR 737 (assertions in same declaration that juror conducted experiments outside deliberations, however, could be considered in evaluating claim of juror misconduct). See Enyart v City of Los Angeles (1999) 76 CA4th 499, 90 CR2d 502 (defendant city entitled to new trial when jurors expressed negative bias against city and police officers during deliberations, but concealed such bias during voir dire).

A new trial will not be granted on the ground of jury misconduct when the misconduct was of such a trifling nature that it could not have been prejudicial to the moving party, and when it appears that the fairness of the trial was not affected by the alleged impropriety. City of Pleasant Hill v First Baptist Church (1969) 1 CA3d 384, 430, 82 CR 1. For examples of jury misconduct, see chap 17.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.31 b. Appellate review of entire record may rebut presumption of prejudice

When a review of the entire record rebuts the presumption of prejudice arising from a showing of jury misconduct, a motion for new trial on this ground may be denied. Moore v Preventive Medicine Med. Group, Inc. (1986) 178 CA3d 728, 223 CR 859 (issue raised by juror during deliberations regarding personal experience not covered in voir dire); Wagner v Doulton (1980) 112 CA3d 945, 169 CR 550 (juror made diagram; found to be based on evidence); Kritzer v Citron (1950) 101 CA2d 33, 36, 224 P2d 808 (no prejudice shown when juror discussed case with physician but did not discuss information learned with other jurors or vote on verdict). See Andrews v County of Orange (1982) 130 CA3d 944, 960, 182 CR 176, disapproved on other grounds in People v Nesler (1997) 16 C4th 561, 66 CR2d 454 (review of entire record revealed that juror prejudgment and other misconduct resulted in miscarriage of justice requiring new trial).

Criteria for trial court examination of the entire record includes the strength of the evidence that misconduct occurred, the nature and seriousness of the misconduct, and the probability that actual prejudice may have ensued. Hasson v Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 C3d 388, 185 CR 654; Glage v Hawes Firearms Co. (1990) 226 CA3d 314, 276 CR 430.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.32 c. Waiver for failure to advise court of jury impropriety

Failure to advise the court of jury impropriety, when counsel or a party knew in time to remedy the impropriety, waives the right to complain; a party may not remain silent, gambling on the outcome. Sepulveda v Ishimaru (1957) 149 CA2d 543, 547, 308 P2d 809. On advising the court promptly of any jury impropriety, see §17.23; on jury misconduct during trial generally, see chap 17.

Jurors who read newspaper accounts of the trial violate their obligation not to receive information from sources outside the evidence. People v Lessard (1962) 58 C2d 447, 25 CR 78. For further discussion of the significance of juror exposure to media reports related to the trial, see §17.14.

PRACTICE TIP: If juror misconduct becomes known during trial, it does not necessarily require a new trial as long as the court-on its own, or at the request of counsel-gives appropriate instructions and admonitions, and requires jurors to state at the time the verdict is rendered that they were not influenced by the misconduct. People v Barton (1995) 37 CA4th 709, 715, 43 CR2d 671.

© The Regents of the University of California

3. Accident or surprise (CCP §657(3))

§25.33 a. Unexpected condition, diligence, and prejudice required

Counsel who asserts this ground in a motion for new trial must show that:

- An unexpected accident occurred;
- Diligence was exercised; and
- The accident was prejudicial, i.e., but for the accident or surprise, a different and more favorable result could reasonably have been expected.

See Wade v De Bernardi (1970) 4 CA3d 967, 84 CR 817; People ex rel Dep't of Pub. Works v Hunt (1969) 2 CA3d 158, 168, 82 CR 546.

Accident or surprise necessary to warrant a new trial must be more than inadvertence or mistake. The accident or surprise must be a condition or situation in which a party is unexpectedly placed without being negligent and which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against. See CCP §657(3).

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.34 b. Disfavored ground

The ground of accident or surprise is not favored. Kauffman v De Mutiis (1948) 31 C2d 429, 189 P2d 271 (counsel failed to move for continuance after nonappearance of witness; order for new trial reversed); Whitehill v United States Lines, Inc. (1986) 177 CA3d 1201, 223 CR 452 (plaintiff's counsel refused trial court's offer to recess trial to depose defendant's surprise expert witness in order to obtain rebuttal evidence; denial of plaintiff's motion for new trial on ground of surprise affirmed). See Garcia v County of Los Angeles (1986) 177 CA3d 633, 223 CR 100.

Counsel must call the court's attention to the surprise as soon as it becomes apparent, rather than gambling on a favorable verdict before informing the court and only then attempting to remedy the situation. People ex rel Dep't of Pub. Works v Hunt (1969) 2 CA3d 158, 168, 82 CR 546.

§25.35 c. Case examples

Examples of surprise that have been held to provide sufficient grounds for granting a motion for new trial include the following:

- Complaint amended at conclusion of trial; party claiming surprise required to defend an entirely different issue. Lavely v Nonemaker (1931) 212 C 380, 298 P 976.
- Unexpected introduction of unrecorded deed that moving party had no knowledge of. Delmas v Martin (1870) 39 C 555.
- Undisclosed expert witness unexpectedly called; moving party not prepared to cross-examine expert on use of improper calculations. City of Fresno v Harrison (1984) 154 CA3d 296, 300, 201 CR 219. But see Stanchfield v Hamer Toyota, Inc. (1995) 37 CA4th 1495, 44 CR2d 565 (no abuse of discretion in permitting expert to testify because there was enough time for expert to be redeposed before trial).
- Complete change of witness's testimony relied on to prove material fact that could not be proved by other testimony. Whitfield v Debrincat (1937) 18 CA2d 730, 64 P2d 960.

Examples in which the surprise was held not to be sufficient ground for a new trial include the following:

- Failure to assert ground of surprise promptly. State ex rel Dep't of Pub. Works v Donovan (1962) 57 C2d 346, 351, 19 CR 473.
- Plaintiff's expert changed testimony on witness stand; no showing that adverse testimony substantially affected outcome. Wade v De Bernardi (1970) 4 CA3d 967, 971, 84 CR 817.
- Lack of diligence. People ex rel Dep't of Pub. Works v Hunt (1969) 2 CA3d 158, 168, 82 CR 546; Estate of Nessel (1958) 164 CA2d 798, 803, 331 P2d 205.

4. Newly discovered evidence (CCP §657(4))

§25.36 a. Evidence must be likely to produce different result

For counsel to assert this ground successfully, three separate elements must exist:

- The evidence must be new evidence, i.e., different from and not cumulative of the evidence produced at trial. Cameron v Crocker-Citizens Nat'l Bank (1971) 19 CA3d 940, 947, 97 CR 269.
- The evidence must be material, i.e., likely to produce a different result. Plancarte v Guardsmark, LLC (2004) 118 CA4th 640, 647, 13 CR3d 315 (employee's attorney fees paid by employer did not constitute ratification of employee's alleged wrongful acts). See also Sherman v Kinetic Concepts, Inc. (1998) 67 CA4th 1152, 1161, 79 CR2d 641; Baron v Sanger Motor Sales (1967) 249 CA2d 846, 859, 57 CR 896.
- Counsel must have exercised reasonable diligence. Fomco, Inc. v Joe Maggio, Inc. (1961) 55 C2d 162, 165, 10 CR 462 (matter of public record); Andersen v Howland (1970) 3 CA3d 380, 83 CR 308 (newly formed expert opinion). But see Doe v United Air Lines (2008) 160 CA4th 1500, 1509, 73 CR3d 541 (expert's declaration on mental disorder not tendered diligently).

The single most important reason for denying a motion for new trial on this ground is counsel's failure to seek the new evidence with reasonable diligence. See, e.g., Lewis v Agricultural Ins. Co. (1969) 2 CA3d 285, 292, 82 CR 509 (witness could have easily been found before trial).

NOTE: Newly discovered impeachment evidence, if it is not cumulative, may be sufficient grounds for a new trial. Lostritto v Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1977) 73 CA3d 737, 743, 140 CR 905 (witnesses with testimony contrary to plaintiff's position). But see Bostard v Bostard (1968) 258 CA2d 793, 798, 66 CR 348 (impeachment or contradictory evidence insufficient).

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.37 b. Ground disfavored

Because judicial policy encourages litigants to exhaust every reasonable effort to produce all existing evidence on their behalf at trial, the courts disfavor the ground of newly discovered evidence. See South Santa Clara Valley Water Conserv. Dist. v Johnson (1964) 231 CA2d 388, 407, 41 CR 846.

© The Regents of the University of California

5. Excessive or inadequate damages (CCP §657(5))

§25.38 a. Conditional order for new trial may be granted

The trial court has discretion to grant a conditional order for new trial on the ground of excessive or inadequate damages. CCP §662.5. When excessive damages are asserted, the order can specify that the motion be denied if the party in whose favor the verdict was rendered consents to a reduction of damages. CCP §662.5(b). The United States Supreme Court has held that punitive damage awards are permissible only when a meaningful posttrial review protects defendants from excessive awards. Honda Motor Co. v Oberg (1994) 512 US 415, 129 L Ed 2d 336, 114 S Ct 2331.

When inadequate damages are asserted, the order can specify that the motion be denied if the party against whom the verdict was rendered consents to an additional amount as set by the court. CCP §662.5(a).

The court has no power to order a reduction or an addition without a party's consent; if the court changes a jury verdict, it exceeds its jurisdiction. Campain v Safeway Stores, Inc. (1972) 29 CA3d 362, 366 n1, 104 CR 752 (new trial granted on damages only).

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.39 b. Court has duty to weigh evidence

In considering a motion for new trial on this ground, the court has the responsibility to weigh the evidence on damages. The court has a positive duty to keep the verdict in line with the facts if, under the evidence, it believes that the verdict is excessive. Handelman v Victor Equipment Co. (1971) 21 CA3d 902, 909, 99 CR 90; Thompson v John Strona & Sons (1970) 5 CA3d 705, 85 CR 350. This duty applies equally to a damages award that the trial court believes is inadequate. See Sanchez v Hasencamp (1980) 107 CA3d 935, 166 CR 118; Black v County of Los Angeles (1976) 55 CA3d 920, 934, 127 CR 916; San Francisco BART Dist. v Fremont Meadows, Inc. (1971) 20 CA3d 797, 803, 97 CR 898.

The trial court, after independently assessing the evidence, must conclude that the trier of fact clearly should have reached a different result. Fortman v Hemco, Inc. (1989) 211 CA3d 241, 259 CR 311 ($23 million award not excessive in light of $16 million future medical expenses); Bigboy v County of San Diego (1984) 154 CA3d 397, 201 CR 226 (trial judge's "personal opinion" based on ranges of awards in other cases does not show that jury should have reached different verdict here). But see Washington v Farlice (1991) 1 CA4th 766, 777, 2 CR2d 607. See also Las Palmas Assocs. v Las Palmas Ctr. Assocs. (1991) 235 CA3d 1220, 1255, 1 CR2d 301 (appellate court reduced compensatory damages and then reduced punitive damages to same compensatory-to-punitive ratio of damages jury had awarded).

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.40 c. Motion may be granted on issue of damages when liability correctly determined

It is proper for the court to grant a new trial on some issues and not others. Little v Superior Court (1961) 55 C2d 642, 12 CR 481. A limited order granting new trial only on the damages issue is improper when the question of liability is close and may not have been determined completely Thompson v Keckler (1964) 228 CA2d 199, 209, 39 CR 267. Even if judgment is rendered in plaintiff's favor except for an inadequate amount of damages, it may be prejudicial to limit new trial to the issue of damages alone. 228 CA2d at 209, 39 CR at 273.

When it appears that liability was correctly determined, a new trial limited to damages may be granted if it is clear that no injustice will result. Torres v Automobile Club of S. Cal. (1997) 15 C4th 771, 776, 63 CR2d 859. When a limited retrial might prejudice either party, the court may resolve any doubts by granting a complete new trial. Liodas v Sahadi (1977) 19 C3d 278, 285, 137 CR 635 (error in damages instructions necessarily required trier of fact to consider liability as well as damages on retrial).

A new trial may also be granted on a portion of the damages issues, such as punitive damages. Miller v National Am. Life Ins. Co. (1976) 54 CA3d 331, 345, 126 CR 731. See Brewer v Second Baptist Church (1948) 32 C2d 791, 801, 197 P2d 713 (limited retrial ordered on appeal); Bullock v Phillip Morris USA, Inc. (2008) 159 CA4th 655, 696, 71 CR3d 775 (new trial on punitive damages only).

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.41 d. Use of remittitur to reduce excessive damages limited

Code of Civil Procedure §662.5 limits the use of a remittitur to reduce excessive damages. A remittitur may not be used to reapportion liability among parties. Schelbauer v Butler Mfg. Co. (1984) 35 C3d 442, 198 CR 155 (improper for trial court to grant motion for new trial, subject to condition that, if plaintiff consented to reduction of verdict reflecting contributory negligence of both plaintiff and his employer, motion would be denied).

A new trial on apportionment of responsibility only may be appropriate in comparative negligence cases. See O'Kelly v Willig Freight Lines (1977) 66 CA3d 578, 136 CR 171.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.42 e. Appellate court may review conditional order under CCP §662.5

When a conditional order under CCP §662.5 is granted, and the party against whom it is made consents to additur or remittitur, appeal may be taken from the judgment entered. The appellate court will examine the trial court's stated grounds and its specification of reasons. See CCP §657. See §25.67.

NOTE: The issue of excessive damages is preserved on appeal by bringing a new trial motion on that ground. Saari v Jongordon Corp. (1992) 5 CA4th 797, 807, 7 CR2d 82.

Attacking damages as excessive or inadequate must be done in the trial court and cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. Schroeder v Auto Driveaway Co. (1974) 11 C3d 908, 918, 114 CR 622.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.43 f. Denial of motion difficult to overturn

Denial of a motion for new trial on grounds of excessive or inadequate damages is usually quite difficult to overturn on appeal. See, e.g., Seffert v Los Angeles Transit Lines (1961) 56 C2d 498, 507, 15 CR 161 (excessive damages claimed; denial upheld); DiRosario v Havens (1987) 196 CA3d 1224, 242 CR 423 (same); Sherwood v Rossini (1968) 264 CA2d 926, 931, 71 CR 1 (inadequate damages claimed; denial upheld).

However, cases in which a denial of a motion for new trial was reversed include Cunningham v Simpson (1969) 1 C3d 301, 308, 81 CR 855 (excessive damages; denial of new trial reversed); Little v Stuyvesant Life Ins. Co. (1977) 67 CA3d 451, 469, 136 CR 653 (excessive punitive damages; denial of new trial reversed); and Wetherbee v United Ins. Co. of Am. (1968) 265 CA2d 921, 933, 71 CR 764 (excessive punitive damages of $500,000; denial of new trial reversed). Note that in Wetherbee v United Ins. Co. of Am. (1971) 18 CA3d 266, 95 CR 678, an award of $200,000 on retrial was affirmed.

© The Regents of the University of California

6. Insufficiency of evidence (CCP §657(6))

§25.44 a. Court must reweigh evidence

The trial court has the power to set aside a verdict or decision not warranted by the evidence. CCP §657; Perry v Fowler (1951) 102 CA2d 808, 229 P2d 46 (order for new trial upheld despite jury in retrial having returned same verdict as original jury).

In ruling on the evidence, the trial court reweighs the evidence. The judge may review conflicting evidence, determine its sufficiency, draw reasonable inferences from the evidence, and consider the credibility of witnesses. A motion for new trial should be granted if the jury's verdict appears to be against the weight of the evidence. Valdez v J.D. Diffenbaugh Co. (1975) 51 CA3d 494, 512, 124 CR 467 (order for new trial on insufficiency of evidence affirmed).

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.45 b. Order granting motion on this ground usually affirmed on appeal

This ground is frequently asserted and a new trial granted on insufficiency of the evidence is usually affirmed on appeal, as long as the statutory requirements for stating grounds and supplying an adequate specification of reasons are followed. Romero v Riggs (1994) 24 CA4th 117, 121, 29 CR2d 219. On statement of grounds, see §25.66. On specification of reasons, see §25.67.

An order granting a new trial on this ground may be reversed only if there is no substantial evidence in the record to support the order. Locksley v Ungureanu (1986) 178 CA3d 457, 223 CR 737; Valdez v J.D. Diffenbaugh Co. (1975) 51 CA3d 494, 512, 124 CR 467.

NOTE: On appeal, the trial court's evaluation of witnesses' credibility is particularly significant when the higher court considers the sufficiency of the evidence. Meiner v Ford Motor Co. (1971) 17 CA3d 127, 94 CR 702.

© The Regents of the University of California

7. Verdict or decision against law (CCP §657(6))

§25.46 a. Same test as for directed verdict and motion for JNOV

A general verdict is against law only when it is unsupported by any substantial evidence, i.e., when the entire evidence justifies a directed verdict against the party in whose favor the verdict was returned. Sanchez-Corea v Bank of America (1985) 38 C3d 892, 215 CR 679; Marriage of Beilock (1978) 81 CA3d 713, 728, 146 CR 675; Hilts v County of Solano (1968) 265 CA2d 161, 177, 71 CR 275; Kralyevich v Magrini (1959) 172 CA2d 784, 789, 342 P2d 903.

A verdict or decision against law is not widely used as a ground for a motion for a new trial, but it can apply to situations in which:

- There was a failure to make a finding on a material issue;
- The findings are irreconcilable or hopelessly inconsistent; or
- The evidence is not in conflict on any material point but is insufficient as a matter of law to support the verdict or decision.

See Tagney v Hoy (1968) 260 CA2d 372, 376, 67 CR 261.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/25 Motions After Trial/§25.47 b. Court may not reweigh evidence

§25.47 b. Court may not reweigh evidence

This ground is not appropriate when the trial court has weighed conflicting evidence. Bray v Rosen (1959) 167 CA2d 680, 683, 335 P2d 137. Compare the ground of insufficiency of the evidence, in which the court has a duty to weigh the evidence. See §25.44.

A verdict is against law and contrary to jury instructions when the evidence on the point at issue is not in conflict and there are no facts under which the instruction warrants the verdict. Morris v McCauley's Quality Transmission Serv. (1976) 60 CA3d 964, 132 CR 37 (inconsistent verdicts); Kaiser Cement & Gypsum v Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Co. (1973) 35 CA3d 948, 958, 111 CR 210 (new trial reversed).

NOTE: A motion for new trial based on an error in the jury instructions is contemplated in the "error of law" ground. See §§25.48-25.49. A "verdict or decision against the law" assumes that the law in the jury instructions was correct.

© The Regents of the University of California

8. Error in law (CCP §657(7))

§25.48 a. Motion granted only when court's rulings in error

A trial court has no power to grant a new trial unless there was, as a matter of law, error in its rulings. Ramirez v USAA Cas. Ins. Co. (1991) 234 CA3d 391, 397, 285 CR 757 (trial court properly ordered new trial when it realized that its ruling on interpretation of duty of insurance company was incorrect). Errors in law include improper admission or exclusion of evidence, misdirection of the jury, and errors of procedure. Bice v Stevens (1954) 129 CA2d 342, 277 P2d 106 (improper exclusion of evidence).

Counsel commonly assert this ground when errors in jury instructions have occurred. Dabis v San Francisco Redev. Agency (1975) 50 CA3d 704, 710, 122 CR 800 (order for new trial reversed because instruction correct as matter of law). A motion for new trial may be granted on this ground when the trial court failed to instruct the jury on each party's theories of the case that were supported by substantial evidence. See Fish v Los Angeles Dodgers Baseball Club (1976) 56 CA3d 620, 633, 128 CR 807, disapproved on other grounds in Soule v General Motors Corp. (1994) 8 C4th 548, 574, 34 CR2d 607; Kimball v Whetzel (1970) 10 CA3d 836, 89 CR 373. On jury instructions generally, see chap 20.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.49 b. Waiver for failure to assert error of law

If appropriate action to cure certain errors of law is not taken during trial, the right to appeal the error may be waived. See Evid C §§353-354 (necessity to object or move to strike erroneous evidence); Taylor v Union Pac. R.R. (1976) 16 C3d 893, 130 CR 23 (counsel failed to request trial court to withdraw previously granted waiver of jury trial).

Although instructions submitted by a party are deemed excepted to without an objection from opposing counsel (see CCP §§646-647), an instruction that is correct in law may not be attacked as too general or incomplete on appeal unless the aggrieved party requested an additional or qualifying instruction in the trial court. See Agarwal v Johnson (1979) 25 C3d 932, 160 CR 141, disapproved on other grounds in White v Ultramar, Inc. (1999) 21 C4th 563, 88 CR2d 19.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.50 9. Inability to obtain transcript (CCP §§657.1, 914)

On appeal, a new trial may be ordered when it is impossible to have a phonographic report of the trial transcribed because of the stenographic reporter's death or disability, or because the reporter's notes were lost or destroyed. CCP §§657.1, 914. A new trial ordered on this ground must be granted on all the issues. Section 914 does not authorize a new trial on some of the issues only. Hennigan v United Pac. Ins. Co. (1975) 53 CA3d 1, 7, 125 CR 408.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.51 C. Tactical considerations

After an adverse result, counsel and client should evaluate whether to move for a new trial, considering such questions as:

- Is the motion necessary to protect issues on appeal, such as excessive or inadequate damages?
- If jury irregularity or misconduct is suspected, what investigative methods should be used to confirm it?
- What additional costs and fees will be incurred by making and prevailing on the motion?
- If the motion is granted in whole or in part, what is the probability of a favorable result on retrial?
- If the motion is lost, what preliminary recommendations can counsel make regarding appeal?

Some trial attorneys note potential errors during trial in a trial notebook or other record. If the trial was a jury trial, the foreperson or other jurors often consent to an interview about their deliberations and the particular points the jury relied on and rejected in reaching its verdict. Contact with jurors even after trial, however, should be made with care. See Cal Rules of Prof Cond 5-320(D) (attorney must not ask questions or make comments intended to harass or embarrass juror after discharge); Lind v Medevac, Inc. (1990) 219 CA3d 516, 520, 268 CR 359 (improper letter to jurors). On obtaining jurors' declarations, see §25.60.

Documents supporting a motion for new trial must be carefully prepared. If the motion is made, counsel should gather affidavits or declarations, and draft a supporting memorandum for the trial judge.

Do not assume that the trial court clerk has properly calendared hearing and ruling dates. It is a good idea to telephone periodically to follow up on the progress of the motion and to confirm the hearing date. On time requirements, see §§25.52-25.56.

© The Regents of the University of California

D. Time requirements

§25.52 1. When notice of intention to move for new trial must be filed

The court clerk's notice of entry of judgment under CCP §664.5 commonly starts the running of two dependent time periods:

- The 15-day period for filing the notice of intention to move for a new trial (CCP §659); and
- The 60-day period within which the court must rule on the motion (CCP §660).

NOTE: Under Govt C §68106(b)(1), effective July 28, 2009, and operative through June 30, 2010, if a court is closed as the result of a budget reduction measure in response to the state fiscal crisis, the day is considered a holiday and not a court day.

Notice of intention to move for a new trial must be filed and served on all adverse parties (CCP §659):

- Before entry of judgment (i.e., after statement of decision of verdict but before judgment is entered); or
- On whichever of the following dates is earliest:
- Within 15 days after the date of the clerk's mailing of a CCP §664.5 notice of entry of judgment, or other appropriate notice of order;
- Within 15 days after service by any party of notice of entry of judgment; or
- Within 180 days after entry of judgment.

Written notice of entry of judgment is satisfied by serving a copy of the file-stamped judgment. Palmer v GTE Cal., Inc. (2003) 30 C4th 1265, 1277, 135 CR2d 654 (document served on party who moves for new trial need not be separate document entitled "notice of entry of judgment").

Notice of intention to move for new trial is deemed to be a motion for new trial on all grounds stated in the notice. CCP §659.

After a party files a notice of intention to move for new trial, every other aggrieved party has 15 days after the notice is served to file and serve notice of intention to move for new trial. See CCP §§657, 659. See checklist in §25.57.

PRACTICE TIP: In contemplating filing a notice of intention to move for new trial, calendar 15 days after (a) the clerk's mailing of a notice of entry of judgment under CCP §664.5, (b) service by another party of notice of entry of judgment, or (c) service by another party of notice of intention to move for new trial, whichever is earliest. In computing the time period, exclude the first day and include the last day. CCP §12; Douglas v Janis (1974) 43 CA3d 931, 935, 118 CR 280.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/25 Motions After Trial/§25.53 2. When court must rule on motion

§25.53 2. When court must rule on motion

The court must rule on a motion for new trial, whatever date is earlier (a) within 60 days after the court clerk mails the notice of entry of judgment under CCP §664.5, (b) within 60 days after a party serves written notice of entry of judgment on the moving party, or (c) if no notice was given, then 60 days after the first notice of intention to move for new trial was filed. CCP §660.

When a notice of intention to move for new trial is filed before the notice of entry of judgment (see §§25.52, 25.54), the 60-day period in which the court must rule on the motion runs from the filing date of the first notice of intention to move for a new trial. CCP §660; Bunton v Arizona Pac. Tanklines (1983) 141 CA3d 210, 190 CR 295. See checklist in §25.57.

Avoid forcing the court into a hasty decision, which would leave it little time to rule on the motion for new trial after hearing and argument. The following scenario may be illustrative:

EXAMPLE: The clerk mails the notice of entry of judgment under CCP §664.5, and 15 days later, the moving party files its notice of intention to move for new trial. The moving party then obtains a 20-day extension, extending the usual 10-day period under CCP §659a, to file supporting declarations that are filed on the 30th day after the notice of intention was filed. The adverse party files opposing declarations and a supporting memorandum within 10 days. The clerk gives a 5-day notice of hearing under CCP §660, which in effect compels the court both to hear and to rule on the motion on the 60th day. See Desherow v Rhodes (1969) 1 CA3d 733, 82 CR 138 (court hearing and minute order signed on 60th day; harmless clerical error that order not entered until 2 days later).

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.54 3. Prematurely filed notice has no effect

Notice of intention to move for new trial filed prematurely (e.g., before all issues have been decided in a bifurcated trial or before a verdict or decision has been rendered) is a nullity. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1591 (bifurcated trial); Mays v Disneyland, Inc. (1963) 213 CA2d 297, 28 CR 689 (liability issue decided in plaintiff's favor in bifurcated trial; defendant's motion premature). See §25.25.

The notice, if filed before judgment is entered and before the court makes its statement of decision or the jury renders its verdict, is of no effect. Bunton v Arizona Pac. Tanklines (1983) 141 CA3d 210, 190 CR 295 (jury trial); Ehrler v Ehrler (1981) 126 CA3d 147, 152, 178 CR 642 (bench trial).

Although the notice of intention to move for new trial may be filed before entry of judgment, it may not be filed before the jury reaches a verdict. Auto Equity Sales, Inc. v Superior Court (1962) 57 C2d 450, 20 CR 321.

In a bench trial, the notice is not premature if a statement of decision was requested and is signed and filed. Ehrler v Ehrler, supra; Ruiz v Ruiz (1980) 104 CA3d 374, 378, 163 CR 708 (both cases based on former "findings of fact and conclusions of law" instead of current "statement of decision"). However, a notice of intention to move for new trial is premature if the court has only announced its "tentative" decision, which may be changed. See Ehrler v Ehrler, supra (under former law, "intended" decision). On court's not being bound by tentative decision, see §24.30. On statement of decision, see §§24.34-24.50.

When the parties have not requested or waived a statement of decision in a bench trial, the court simply files the judgment. Until the judgment is filed, notice of intention to move for new trial is premature. See Krug v John E. Yoakum Co. (1938) 27 CA2d 91, 96, 80 P2d 492 (judgment need only be filed, not entered). In a county that keeps a "judgment book" (rather than copying documents onto microfilm or recording them in the court's electronic data-processing system), entry of judgment does not occur until the clerk records the judgment in the judgment book. CCP §668. But in most counties today, filing the judgment with the court clerk constitutes entry. CCP §668.5. See §23.19.

§25.55 4. Court's specification of reasons to be filed after ruling

After ruling on a motion for new trial, the court must file its specification of reasons within 10 days after the order is filed. CCP §657. See also Fergus v Songer (2007) 150 CA4th 552, 566, 59 CR3d 273 (minute order granting motion for new trial constitutes determination of motion within meaning of CCP §660 and begins 10-day period). The statutory time period for the court's specification of reasons is jurisdictional. See §25.56.

The 10-day period after the ruling within which the court's specification of reasons must be filed is in addition to the 60-day period within which the court must rule on the motion. See §25.53 (discussing 60-day period). See checklist in §25.57.

EXAMPLE: If the order is filed on the 60th day, there is no requirement that the court's specification of reasons be filed during the 60-day period as long as the 10-day period is met; additional time, up to 10 days beyond the 60-day period, is allowed for that purpose. Fortenberry v Weber (1971) 18 CA3d 213, 220, 95 CR 834.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.56 5. Time limits are jurisdictional

The 60-day period within which the court must rule on the motion is jurisdictional. Siegal v Superior Court (1968) 68 C2d 97, 101, 65 CR 311. An automatic stay in bankruptcy as to a party not involved in the motion for new trial does not extend the court's 60 day jurisdictional time limit to make its order. Frieberg v City of Mission Viejo (1995) 33 CA4th 1484, 39 CR2d 802. Any order made beyond that time is reversible per se. Mercer v Perez (1968) 68 C2d 104, 118, 65 CR 315. It cannot be made later nunc pro tunc. Siegal v Superior Court, supra.

Similarly, the time limit for the trial court to act on a motion for JNOV or a motion for a new trial is not tolled during the period between the date a party filed a peremptory challenge under CCP §170.6 and the date of a later order striking the challenge, when the first judge accepted disqualification immediately, on the same day the challenge was filed. Davcon, Inc. v Roberts & Morgan (2003) 110 CA4th 1355, 2 CR3d 782. Because the trial court's decision act on the motion for JNOV or new trial was made after it lost jurisdiction, the decision was a nullity. 110 CA4th at 1362.

The filing requirements for notice of intention to move for new trial are also mandatory and jurisdictional. CCP §659. The time for filing cannot be extended by the court or waived by the parties. CCP §659. The provisions of CCP §1013 extending the time for exercising a right or doing an act when service is by mail do not apply to a party intending to move for new trial. CCP §659.

A defective notice cannot be amended after the time for filing a notice has expired. Faeh v Union Oil Co. (1951) 107 CA2d 163, 236 P2d 667. Any order granting a new trial after an untimely notice of intention to make the motion is void. Douglas v Janis (1974) 43 CA3d 931, 935, 118 CR 280.

The 10-day time period for the court to file its specification of reasons after ruling on the motion is also jurisdictional. La Manna v Stewart (1975) 13 C3d 413, 118 CR 761. On specification of reasons, see §25.67. See checklist in §25.57.

▶ To download Word version, right click and choose Save Target As

A motion for new trial requires strict adherence to statutory requirements. Key procedural points as well as detailed time lines are associated with the making and ruling on a motion for new trial, including the following (cross-references to chapter discussions are shown after each item listed below):

___ 1. File notice of intention to move for new trial (CCP §659; see §25.52):

___ a. Before entry of judgment (i.e., after statement of decision or verdict but before judgment is entered); or ___ b. Whatever date of the following is earliest:

___ (1) Within 15 days after the date of the clerk's mailing of a CCP §664.5 notice of entry of judgment, or other appropriate notice of order;

___ (2) Within 15 days after service by any party of notice of entry of judgment; or

___ (3) Within 180 days after entry of judgment.

___ 2. Notice of intention to move for new trial is deemed to be a motion for new trial on all grounds stated in the notice (CCP §659; see §25.52).

___ 3. Four grounds for new trial must be supported by declarations or affidavits (or by the court minutes): irregularity in the proceedings or abuse of discretion, jury misconduct, accident or surprise, and newly discovered evidence (CCP §658; see §25.60).

___ 4. Set date for hearing (after conferring with judge's clerk and checking local rules); the hearing must be held within the court's power to rule on the motion, which is 60 days, computed as the earliest date after (CCP §660; see §25.64):

___ a. The clerk's mailing of a CCP §664.5 notice of entry of judgment;

___ b. Service on the moving party of written notice of entry of judgment; or ___ c. In the absence of notice of entry of judgment, 60 days after the filing of the first notice of intention to move for new trial.

___ 5. Order granting new trial must be entered within 60 days of the earliest time set forth in the first item above (CCP §660; see §25.56).

___ 6. Court's specification of reasons for granting new trial must be made and entered within 10 days after court's order granting a motion for new trial (CCP §657; see §25.55).

___ 7. When a new trial is granted on some or all of the issues, the court must specify the ground or grounds on which it is granted and the court's reason or reasons for granting the motion on each ground stated. CCP §657. See §25.67.

___ 8. If the motion for new trial is granted on grounds of excessive/inadequate damages or insufficiency of the evidence, the court must first weigh the evidence, including reasonable inferences drawn from the evidence, and be convinced from the entire record that the court or jury should have clearly reached a different decision or verdict. CCP §657; see §25.67.

___ 9. When motion granted in an unlimited civil case (see CCP §88), notice of appeal from order granting new trial must be filed within the usual provisions of Cal Rules of Ct 8.104(a)-(b) (see §25.68).

___ 10. When motion denied in an unlimited civil case (see CCP §88), there is no appeal from order denying new trial, and appeal must be taken from the judgment (see §25.69). Notice of appeal from the original judgment must be filed within 30 days after either:

___ a. Entry of the order denying the motion; or ___ b. Denial by operation of law, but in no event later than 180 days after entry of judgment whether or not a motion for new trial has been determined. Cal Rules of Ct 8.108(b).

___ 11. When motion granted in a limited civil case (see CCP §85), the time to appeal to the appellate division of the superior court from an order granting new trial is the earliest of (see §25.68):

___ a. 30 days after mailing notice of entry of the order by the clerk;

___ b. 30 days after service of notice of entry of the order by a party; or ___ c. 90 days after entry of the order. Cal Rules of Ct 8.800, 8.804(23), 8.822(a).

___ 12. When motion denied in a limited civil case (see CCP §85), the order denying motion for new trial is not appealable, and appeal must be taken from the judgment. Assuming that notice of intention to move for new trial was valid, the notice of appeal must be filed within (see §25.69):

___ a. 15 days after entry of the order denying the motion;

___ b. 15 days after denial of the motion by operation of law; or ___ c. 90 days after entry of judgment. Cal Rules of Ct 8.800, 8.804(23), 8.823(b)(1).

___ 13. Cross-appeals from the judgment should be filed by a party not moving for a complete new trial, or by a party in whose favor the motion for new trial is granted, in order to protect rights if the court's order granting new trial is reversed on appeal (see Cal Rules of Ct 8.108(d), 8.823(f); §25.70).

2. Preparing the motion

§25.58 a. Notice of intention to move for new trial must state grounds

Notice of intention to move for new trial must state all applicable grounds on which the moving party relies. Failure to do so can be fatal to both the motion and any appeal. See CCP §§657, 659; Malkasian v Irwin (1964) 61 C2d 738, 745, 40 CR 78 (new trial may be granted only on grounds stated in motion).

When the notice of intention omits a ground but, within the time for filing the notice, further documents are filed asserting the missing ground, that ground will not be lost. See Galindo v Partenreederei M.S. Parma (1974) 43 CA3d 294, 301, 117 CR 638. However, a missing ground cannot be validly supplied by a document, such as a supporting memorandum, filed after the statutory period for filing the notice has run. Wagner v Singleton (1982) 133 CA3d 69, 72, 183 CR 631.

It is good practice for counsel to set out all grounds listed in CCP §657 in the notice of intention to move for new trial. Information on some grounds may not be known at the time of filing (e.g., irregularities or misconduct not occurring in counsel's presence, or newly discovered evidence). Some grounds also overlap and the distinction between them is not always clear.

EXAMPLES: Both jury irregularity (CCP §657(1)) and jury misconduct (CCP §657(2)) should be asserted when a jury impropriety is under attack. When the question is one of law (e.g., improper admission or rejection of evidence, misdirection of the jury, errors in trial procedure), the grounds should include the following statements: (a) orders of court and abuse of discretion prevented the moving party from having a fair trial (CCP §657(1)), (b) the verdict or decision was against law (CCP §657(6)), and (c) an error of law occurred (CCP §657(7)). If insufficiency of the evidence or excessive or inadequate damages are asserted, counsel should raise and argue another ground not subject to the adequate specification of reasons required on appeal. See CCP §657. See §25.67.

§25.59 b. Supporting memorandum must be filed within 10 days after notice is filed

A party moving for new trial must serve on all other parties and file with the court a supporting memorandum within 10 days after the filing of the notice. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1600(a). The court may deny the motion without a hearing on the merits if the moving party fails to serve and file the supporting memorandum within this time period. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1600(b).

An adverse party must serve and file any reply supporting memorandum within 10 days after receiving service of the moving party's memorandum. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1600(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

3. Supporting affidavits or declarations

§25.60 a. When required

Four grounds for a motion for new trial must be supported by affidavits: (1) irregularity in the proceedings or abuse of discretion, (2) misconduct of the jury, (3) accident or surprise, or (4) newly discovered evidence. CCP §658. Declarations may be used in the place of affidavits. CCP §2015.5.

When the moving party relies wholly on facts appearing on the face of the record, however, such affidavits or declarations are unnecessary. See Webber v Webber (1948) 33 C2d 153, 163, 199 P2d 934 (trial court irregularities). Instead, the motion can be supported by the minutes of the court or a portion of the trial transcript, if available. On time requirements for filing supporting affidavits or declarations, see §25.61.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.61 b. Must be filed within 10 days after notice is filed

Any affidavits or declarations must be filed within 10 days after filing the notice of intention to move for new trial. CCP §659a. Although the notice of intention to move for new trial must be filed within the statutory period (see CCP §659; §25.52), the notice should not be filed until it is reasonably certain that declarations can be obtained within the 10-day period after the notice is filed.

The 10-day requirement for filing affidavits and declarations is not jurisdictional. Clemens v Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1970) 8 CA3d 1, 21, 87 CR 108. But the court need not grant an extension. See Maple v Cincinnati, Inc. (1985) 163 CA3d 387, 209 CR 451 (order granting new trial reversed; affidavits not filed within 10-day period, no extension given). To be safe, the 10-day period should be calendared and followed unless an extension is obtained. A maximum 20-day extension for filing affidavits or declarations can be obtained by written stipulation or court order on a showing of good cause. CCP §659a. Erikson v Weiner (1996) 48 CA4th 1663, 56 CR2d 362 (20-day rule mandatory).

The other parties have 10 days after the moving party has served affidavits to serve their own counteraffidavits. CCP §659a.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.62 c. Jury irregularity or misconduct declarations may not reflect subjective reasoning

Affidavits or declarations supporting evidence of jury irregularity or misconduct pose particular difficulties. Overt acts and statements may be used; subjective reasoning processes may not. See Evid C §1150(a). Opposing counsel should object to juror declarations that discuss the jury's subjective reasoning process. See Cove, Inc. v Mora (1985) 172 CA3d 97, 218 CR 7.

The moving party and counsel must affirmatively show that both were ignorant of the impropriety. Weathers v Kaiser Found. Hosps. (1971) 5 C3d 98, 103, 95 CR 516; Wiley v Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1990) 220 CA3d 177, 269 CR 240. These "no knowledge" affidavits must be filed within the 10-day period prescribed by CCP §659a. People v Southern Cal. Edison Co. (1976) 56 CA3d 593, 601, 128 CR 697. See §25.61.

In some circumstances, counsel's affidavit alone is sufficient. Weathers v Kaiser Found. Hosps., supra. But see People v Southern Cal. Edison Co., supra. In any event, when the facts of the alleged misconduct occur after jury deliberations have commenced, and counsel and the moving party could not possibly have known of the alleged misconduct before the verdict, "no knowledge" affidavits are unnecessary. Krouse v Graham (1977) 19 C3d 59, 82, 137 CR 863.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.63 d. When jury declarations necessary

Juror declarations are usually necessary if the verdict was reached by lot or chance; if one or more jurors concealed bias or prejudice on voir dire; or if statements were made, or conduct, conditions, or events occurred, within or without the jury deliberation room, that were of a character likely to have improperly influenced the deliberations and the resulting verdict. See Evid C §1150. On juror misconduct during trial, see chap 17; during deliberations, see chap 21.

PRACTICE TIP: Prepare declarations carefully. Even if oral testimony would be helpful at the hearing on the motion, there is no right to take oral testimony from jurors unless the opposing party does not object, or so stipulates. Bardessono v Michels (1970) 3 C3d 780, 91 CR 760 (no objection); Maple v Cincinnati, Inc. (1985) 163 CA3d 387, 209 CR 451.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.64 F. Hearing (CCP §661)

The court sets the hearing date, and the court clerk, not a party, is required to give notice of that date. CCP §661; Jones v Evans (1970) 4 CA3d 115, 118, 84 CR 6. Unless the parties waive the right to a hearing, the court must notice and hear a motion for new trial. Avery v Associated Seed Growers, Inc. (1963) 211 CA2d 613, 626, 27 CR 625.

After the time to file counteraffidavits has run (see CCP §659a; §25.61), the clerk must give the parties 5 days' notice by mail of the time for oral argument, if any. The trial judge usually hears the motion and has discretion to permit oral argument. Although most judges permit the parties to argue, the court is not obligated to allow oral argument at the hearing. CCP §661. See Kimmel v Keefe (1970) 9 CA3d 402, 408, 88 CR 47.

Oral testimony from witnesses is not usually permitted, and testimony is presented by affidavit or declaration. See Linhart v Nelson (1976) 18 C3d 641, 134 CR 813. If oral testimony is heard without objection, however, there is no jurisdictional error. Bardessono v Michels (1970) 3 C3d 780, 793, 91 CR 760. See also People v Hedgecock (1990) 51 C3d 395, 414, 272 CR 803.

At the hearing, the parties may refer to the pleadings and orders in the court's file. When the motion is made on the minutes (on the record), references may also be made to any depositions and documentary evidence that were offered at the trial and to the trial transcript. CCP §660.

When a judge other than the trial judge hears the motion, the hearing must be held no later than 10 days before the time to rule on it expires. CCP §661. After having heard and determined the motion, a judge may authorize another judge in the same court to sign the new trial order. Dell'Oca v Bank of New York Trust Co. (2008) 159 CA4th 531, 545, 71 CR3d 737.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.65 G. Trial judge's ruling on motion

Granting a new trial on all or some of the issues is within the trial court's discretion and will not be reversed on appeal without a clear showing of abuse. Jiminez v Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1971) 4 C3d 379, 387, 93 CR 769; Marshall v Brown (1983) 141 CA3d 408, 414, 190 CR 392. The abuse of discretion standard does not apply, however, if the affidavit or other evidence on which the new trial order is made furnishes no basis for the exercise of that discretion. DeFelice v Tabor (1957) 149 CA2d 273, 275, 308 P2d 377. See Horowitz v Noble (1978) 79 CA3d 120, 137, 144 CR 710.

In making its ruling, the judge may reexamine any fact issues in the case or any decision by a jury, court, or referee. The trial court may disbelieve witnesses, including experts, reweigh evidence, and draw reasonable inferences contrary to those drawn by the jury. See Meiner v Ford Motor Co. (1971) 17 CA3d 127, 94 CR 702; Perry v Fowler (1951) 102 CA2d 808, 229 P2d 46.

If the court denies a motion for new trial, no particular language for the order is required. See CCP §657. If the court fails to rule on the motion for a new trial within the applicable 60-day period, the motion is deemed denied. CCP §660.

In ruling on the motion after a court trial, the court may—in terms that are just—modify either the statement of decision or the judgment, and grant a new trial on all or some of the issues. CCP §662.

Instead of granting a new trial, the court has the power to vacate and set aside the statement of decision or judgment, and reopen the case for further proceedings and the introduction of additional evidence with the same effect as if the case had been reopened after its submission and before the decision was filed or judgment rendered. CCP §662. Any judgment entered under §662 is then subject to motion for new trial under CCP §§657, 659. See Gossman v Gossman (1942) 52 CA2d 184, 198, 126 P2d 178. No statement of grounds or specification of reasons is required to support a judge's order under §662. See LaBorne v Mulvany (1974) 43 CA3d 905, 917, 119 CR 596.

When the court reporter's notes are missing, the trial court may recall a witness to aid the judge in reconstructing a settled statement. If the court is unable to obtain a stipulation or an agreed or settled statement, it must then order a new trial. Weinstein v E.F. Hutton & Co. (1990) 220 CA3d 364, 368, 269 CR 443.

A final order granting or denying a new trial exhausts the trial court's jurisdiction for all purposes except to correct clerical errors or provide relief under CCP §473. A trial court lacks jurisdiction to hear another new trial motion. See Wenzoski v Central Banking Sys. (1987) 43 C3d 539, 237 CR 167. A notice of appeal filed while the trial court retains jurisdiction under rules relating to motions for JNOV or new trial does not deprive the trial court of jurisdiction. Foggy v Ralph F. Clark & Assocs. (1987) 192 CA3d 1204, 238 CR 130.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.66 1. Statement of grounds

When the court grants a motion for new trial on all or some of the issues, the order must state the grounds on which the court relies. CCP §657. See Treber v Superior Court (1968) 68 C2d 128, 136, 65 CR 330. The court is prohibited from directing a party's attorney to prepare the order. CCP §657.

Grounds in the court's order should be stated as closely as possible to the statutory language of CCP §657(1)-(7). See Mercer v Perez (1968) 68 C2d 104, 111, 65 CR 315; Aced v Hobbs-Sesack Plumbing Co. (1961) 55 C2d 573, 12 CR 257.

PRACTICE TIP: If the trial judge inadequately states a ground for granting a new trial, try to cure any deficiencies before expiration of the 60-day period within which the court must rule on the motion. If the order does not state an important ground for the decision, immediately call that omission to the court's attention and try to obtain a clarification. However, the order may not be fatally defective if your notice of intention to move for new trial states grounds that may be supported on appeal. The trial court's failure to state any ground for granting a new trial does not render the order void, but it does render it defective, and the reviewing court can still affirm the order if it should have been granted on any ground listed in the notice of intention to move for new trial.

An exception exists for motions granted on grounds of insufficiency of the evidence, or excessive or inadequate damages. The reviewing court cannot affirm the order on either of these grounds unless the ground is stated in the order. Sanchez-Corea v Bank of America (1985) 38 C3d 892, 906, 215 CR 679.

The trial court has jurisdiction to order a new trial on issues not included in the motion for new trial if they are so interwoven with the issues on which a new trial would be granted that excluding them would be unfair to another party. Pelletier v Eisenberg (1986) 177 CA3d 558, 223 CR 84. Subject to CCP §657, the court may grant a motion for new trial on any ground set forth in the notice of intention to move for new trial even if the moving party does not urge that ground in supporting papers or oral argument. Neal v Montgomery Elevator Co. (1992) 7 CA4th 1194, 9 CR2d 497.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/25 Motions After Trial/§25.67 2. Specification of reasons

§25.67 2. Specification of reasons

When the court grants a motion for new trial on some or all of the issues, the court must specify the ground or grounds on which it is granted and the court's reason or reasons for granting the motion on each ground stated. CCP §657. The court's specification of reasons may be included in the order granting the motion or in a separate document filed within 10 days after the order is filed. CCP §657. See also Fergus v Songer (2007) 150 CA4th 552, 566, 59 CR3d 273 (minute order granting motion for new trial constitutes determination of motion within meaning of CCP §660 and begins 10-day period).

The 10-day requirement is a statute of limitations, and a specification filed after that time is null. Ballou v Master Props. No. 6 (1987) 189 CA3d 65, 234 CR 264; Swanson v Western Greyhound Lines, Inc. (1969) 268 CA2d 758, 74 CR 383. The court has no power to amend its specification of reasons after the 10-day period has expired by nunc pro tunc order or otherwise. Mercer v Perez (1968) 68 C2d 104, 121, 65 CR 315.

Substantial compliance arguments have been accepted by the appellate courts, however, when the trial court made detailed written specifications in its ruling on an invalid oral motion for new trial and the parties agreed to accept them in the court's ruling on a subsequent written motion. Herman v Shandor (1970) 8 CA3d 476, 480, 87 CR 443. But see Miller v Los Angeles County Flood Control Dist. (1973) 8 C3d 689, 698 n8, 106 CR 1 (reasons stated in denial of motion for JNOV referred to in part of order granting new trial held not adequate).

The court's specification of reasons must be written; reasons given orally are inadequate. La Manna v Stewart (1975) 13 C3d 413, 421, 118 CR 761; Worden v Gentry (1975) 50 CA3d 600, 123 CR 496. See Steinhart v South Coast Area Transit (1986) 183 CA3d 770, 228 CR 283 (reference to transcript inadequate). If the court grants a motion for new trial without a written specification of reasons, it is necessarily erroneous because "full and timely compliance" with CCP §657 is required. Stewart v Truck Ins. Exch. (1993) 17 CA4th 468, 484, 21 CR2d 338 (emphasis in original).

The court is prohibited from delegating its responsibility to prepare the specification of reasons to an attorney for a party. CCP §657. However, counsel should immediately call any defects to the court's attention in writing before the 10-day period has expired.

If a new trial motion is granted on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence or extensive or inadequate damages, the trial court's specification of reasons must briefly identify that portion of the record that convinced it that the jury (or the court itself in a bench trial) clearly should have reached a different result. CCP §657. See Scala v Jerry Witt & Sons (1970) 3 C3d 359, 367, 90 CR 592. The specification must refer to all issues in dispute. Devine v Murrieta (1975) 49 CA3d 855, 122 CR 847 (order failed to discuss proximate cause); Previte v Lincolnwood (1975) 48 CA3d 976, 987, 122 CR 194 (order failed to discuss fraud issues).

Although no hard and fast rule can be made on the proper content of the specification of reasons, ultimate facts standing alone are inadequate. Such statements as "the defendant was not negligent" (Scala v Jerry Witt & Sons (1970) 3 C3d 359, 368, 90 CR 592) and "inadequate damages were awarded to plaintiff" (Krueger v Meyer (1975) 48 CA3d 760, 121 CR 814) are unacceptable.

The specification of reasons must include more than a mere restatement of the grounds. Scala v Jerry Witt & Sons (1970) 3 C3d 359, 370, 90 CR 592.

EXAMPLE: If the court disbelieves a witness, based on the witness's demeanor or manner, it should so state, but it need not go into further detail. Meiner v Ford Motor Co. (1971) 17 CA3d 127, 140, 94 CR 702. Comments by the supreme court in Mercer v Perez (1968) 68 C2d 104, 115, 65 CR 315, illustrate adequate specifications: If the ground is "irregularity in the proceedings" caused by counsel's referring to insurance, the judge should state that the reason for the ruling was counsel's misconduct in making that reference; if the ground is "misconduct of the jury" through its resorting to chance, the judge should specify this improper method of deliberation as the reason; if the ground is that the decision is "against the law" because of failure to find on a material issue, the judge should so state and identify that issue. For more examples, see Romero v Riggs (1994) 24 CA4th 117, 29 CR2d 219. See also Resort Video, Ltd. v Laser Video, Inc. (1995) 35 CA4th 1679, 1695, 42 CR2d 136.

When grounds for granting a motion for new trial are insufficiency of the evidence or excessive or inadequate damages, the order is reversible if the specification of reasons is inadequate. CCP §657; Silberg v California Life Ins. Co. (1974) 11 C3d 452, 462, 113 CR 711; Stevens v Parke, Davis & Co. (1973) 9 C3d 51, 60, 107 CR 45; Stewart v Truck Ins. Exch. (1993) 17 CA4th 468, 21 CR2d 338. However, appellate courts will not reverse an order granting a new trial in these circumstances if the ruling can be affirmed on another ground. See Sanchez-Corea v Bank of America (1985) 38 C3d 892, 215 CR 679; Marriage of Beilock (1978) 81 CA3d 713, 728, 146 CR 675; Estate of Sheldon (1977) 75 CA3d 364, 370, 142 CR 119.

H. Review on appeal

§25.68 1. Order granting motion

An order granting new trial is appealable. Appeal is premature when all causes of action are not determined. Cobb v University of S. Cal. (1996) 45 CA4th 1140, 53 CR2d 71. Appeal from an "unlimited civil case" (see CCP §88) is to the court of appeal. CCP §904.1(a)(4). Appeal from a "limited civil case" (see CCP §85) is to the appellate division of the superior court. CCP §904.2(e).

Appeal from an order granting a new trial in an unlimited case is governed by the usual time for filing notice of appeal (60 days after clerk's or party's service of notice of entry of judgment, or 180 days after date of entry itself). Cal Rules of Ct 8.104(a).

Under Cal Rules of Ct 8.800, 8.804(23), and 8.822(a), the time to appeal to the appellate division of the superior court from an order granting new trial in a limited civil case is the earliest of:

- 30 days after the clerk mails notice of entry of the order (CCP §664.5);
- 30 days after a party serves notice of entry of the order; or
- 90 days after entry of the order.

On when the order is deemed entered, see Cal Rules of Ct 8.822(b).

The standard of review on appeal is abuse of discretion. People v Ault (2004) 33 C4th 1250, 1271, 17 CR3d 302.

With certain exceptions (see below), a new trial order will be affirmed on appeal if it should have been granted on any ground stated in the notice of intention to move for new trial, whether or not the ground is included in the order or the court's specification of reasons. CCP §657; Shaw v Pacific Greyhound Lines (1958) 50 C2d 153, 323 P2d 391; Marriage of Beilock (1978) 81 CA3d 713, 146 CR 675.

CAUTION: The exceptions to this rule occur when grounds for a new trial motion are (1) insufficiency of the evidence or (2) excessive or inadequate damages. These two grounds must be stated in the court's order and supported by an adequate specification of reasons. CCP §657. See §25.67. However, if one of these grounds is the only ground stated in the notice of intention, an order granting the motion is proper without stating the ground. La Manna v Stewart (1975) 13 C3d 413, 118 CR 761.

When the order for a new trial cannot be affirmed due to an inadequate specification of reasons for the ground of insufficiency of the evidence or excessive or inadequate damages, the court of appeal will look to other grounds stated in the notice of intention in an effort to affirm the trial court's order. Treber v Superior Court (1968) 68 C2d 128, 132, 65 CR 330.

If no other grounds were stated (or, if stated, are not supported by the record), the new trial order must be reversed. Mercer v Perez (1968) 68 C2d 104, 119, 65 CR 315. See Sanchez-Corea v Bank of America (1985) 38 C3d 892, 906, 215 CR 679 (defendant did not meet its burden; order granting defendant's motion for new trial reversed).

If a new trial motion is granted on the ground of juror misconduct and there is conflicting evidence on this issue, the absence of a statement of reasons requires the appellate court to independently review the trial court's order. Oakland Raiders v National Football League (2007) 41 C4th 624, 640, 61 CR3d 634.

When the trial court fails to file an adequate specification of reasons, counsel should notify the court in writing with suggested amplification before the 10-day mandatory time period has run. See La Manna v Stewart, supra. If the court fails to cure the inadequacy after notice from counsel, the appropriate remedy is either:

- Writ of mandate when within the 10-day period; see LaBorne v Mulvany (1974) 43 CA3d 905, 916, 119 CR 596; or
- Appeal when the 10-day period from the filing of the order has run; see Treber v Superior Court (1968) 68 C2d 128, 135, 65 CR 330.

The party obtaining an order granting a new trial that is appealed should cross-appeal from the original judgment in the event the order granting a new trial is reversed due to the trial court's failure to meet the adequate specification requirement. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.108(d); La Manna v Stewart (1975) 13 C3d 413, 425, 118 CR 761; Smith v Circle Inn (1977) 73 CA3d 86, 140 CR 566. On time for filing a cross-appeal in a limited civil case, see Cal Rules of Ct 8.823(f).

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.69 2. Order denying motion

Unlimited civil cases. An order denying a motion for new trial is not appealable, although the order may be reviewed on appeal from the judgment. CCP §§906, 904.1; State ex rel Dep't of Pub. Works v Donovan (1962) 57 C2d 346, 351, 19 CR 473. The standard of review on appeal of a denial of a motion for new trial is independent review. Whitlock v Foster Wheeler, LLC (2008) 160 CA4th 149, 158, 72 CR3d 369.

When the trial court denies a motion for new trial in an unlimited civil case (see CCP §88), and notice of intention to move for a new trial was timely, notice of appeal from the original judgment must be filed within 30 days after either:

- Entry of the order denying the motion; or
- Denial by operation of law, or in no event later than 180 days after entry of judgment whether or not the court has ruled on the motion.

Cal Rules of Ct 8.108(b); see Howard v Lufkin (1988) 206 CA3d 297, 253 CR 422.

Limited civil cases. An order denying a motion for new trial is not appealable, but it may be reviewed on appeal from the judgment. See CCP §§906, 904.2.

When a motion for new trial is denied in a limited civil case (see CCP §85), and the notice of intention was valid, i.e., met statutory requirements, notice of appeal from the original judgment must be filed within:

- 15 days after entry of the order denying the motion;
- 15 days after denial of the motion by operation of law; or
- 90 days after entry of judgment.

Cal Rules of Ct 8.823(b)(1). On time for filing a cross-appeal when a new trial order is granted in a limited civil case and it is appealed, see Cal Rules of Ct 8.823(f).

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.70 3. Party prevailing on motion should file cross-appeal

When an order granting new trial is appealed, the unsuccessful party on the original judgment who prevailed on the motion for new trial should file a cross-appeal within 20 days after notice of the appeal as protection from a reversal of the order. Cal Rules of Ct 8.108(f). See Mercer v Perez (1968) 68 C2d 104, 124, 65 CR 315. In a limited civil case, the time for filing a cross-appeal is 10 days after the trial court clerk's notice of the first appeal. Cal Rules of Ct 8.823(f).

Otherwise, if an order granting a new trial is reversed, the original judgment is automatically reinstated. Stevens v Parke, Davis & Co. (1973) 9 C3d 51, 63, 107 CR 45. But see Teitel v First Los Angeles Bank (1991) 231 CA3d 1593, 282 CR 916 (JNOV reversed, judgment reinstated, remand to reconsider portion of motion for new trial). All parties to the appeal should designate the appropriate record.

CAUTION: It is extremely important to file timely notices of appeal from all adverse judgments when appropriate, and not to rely on an appeal from a motion granting a limited new trial. On notices of appeal and cross-appeals generally, see California Civil Appellate Practice, chap 7, §§8.21-8.36 (3d ed Cal CEB 1996).

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.71 4. When moving party should appeal original judgment

If motion for new trial is denied, and the moving party's notice of intention is held to be invalid (e.g., because of failure to meet statutory time requirements), the 30-day extension to appeal the original judgment may be inoperative, and the usual period to file a timely appeal will have already expired. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.104, 8.108(b), 8.822-8.823; Ramirez v Moran (1988) 201 CA3d 431, 247 CR 117. But see Wenzoski v Central Banking Sys. (1987) 43 C3d 539, 237 CR 167.

To protect against this contingency, a moving party who is in doubt about the validity of the notice of intention to move for new trial should consider appealing the original judgment within the required time period after the entry of judgment. See Cal Rules of Ct 8.104, 8.822; Neff v Ernst (1957) 48 C2d 628, 634, 311 P2d 849. See §25.38.

The trial court retains jurisdiction to hear and determine the motion for new trial if an appeal was taken from the judgment. Neff v Ernst, supra; Foggy v Ralph F. Clark & Assocs. (1987) 192 CA3d 1204, 238 CR 130. If motion for new trial is granted, the judgment is vacated and the appeal from the judgment becomes ineffective. Neff v Ernst, supra.

IV. MOTION TO VACATE AND ENTER DIFFERENT JUDGMENT

A. Description and use; grounds

§25.72 1. Appropriate when original judgment is contrary to facts found by court or jury

The statutory motion to set aside and vacate the judgment and enter another and different judgment enables the trial court to correct an original judgment that is improper because it is contrary to the facts found by the court or jury. CCP §663. The motion is available only when:

- The judgment is based on an erroneous decision in a bench trial inconsistent with or unsupported by the facts; or
- The judgment or decree is inconsistent or unsupported by a jury's special verdict.

CCP §663; Simac Design, Inc. v Alciati (1979) 92 CA3d 146, 153, 154 CR 676 (uncontroverted facts). See County of Alameda v Carleson (1971) 5 C3d 730, 738, 97 CR 385; Shapiro v Prudential Prop. & Cas. Co. (1997) 52 CA4th 722, 728, 60 CR2d 698.

The motion cannot be used to attack the legal basis for the court's decision. When the court's statement of decision or the jury's verdict is not supported by sufficient evidence, motions for JNOV and new trial are appropriate. See Ramirez v Moran (1988) 201 CA3d 431, 434, 247 CR 117 (motion that was based on excusable neglect of a party and newly discovered evidence was improperly designated as motion to vacate judgment; construed as motion for new trial). However, when a question of law can be applied to undisputed facts in the record, a party may raise new legal theories not relied on during trial to urge that the judgment be vacated because it was against the law or inconsistent with those facts. Hoffman-Haag v Transamerica Ins. Co. (1991) 1 CA4th 10, 15, 1 CR2d 805.

A motion to vacate and enter a different judgment is proper when the statement of decision or verdict is supported by the evidence but the court's judgment or decree is incorrect and needs to be changed. If a judgment has been modified under a motion for new trial (CCP §662) following a court trial, a motion to vacate the judgment and enter a different one under §663 may be appropriate. Howard A. Deason & Co. v Costa Tierra, Ltd. (1969) 2 CA3d 742, 758, 83 CR 105.

Setting aside a default or a void judgment under CCP §473, or under the court's inherent powers, is discussed in California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 38 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004). On motions for equitable relief from judgments entered through extrinsic fraud or mistake, see 8 Witkin, California Procedure, Attack on Judgment in Trial Court §§215-242 (5th ed 2008). When a judgment is void, it is subject to collateral attack by means of a postjudgment motion to vacate or to set aside as void. Residents for Adequate Water v Redwood Valley County Water Dist. (1995) 34 CA4th 1801, 1805, 41 CR2d 123; In re Marriage of Brockman (1987) 194 CA3d 1035, 1040, 240 CR 96.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.73 2. Party's substantial rights must be materially affected

The motion is granted only when a party's substantial rights have been materially affected; it is not granted to correct minor errors. A motion to vacate is applicable only to a final judgment and not to an interlocutory order or judgment. See 9 Witkin, California Procedure, Appeal §§135-136, 138-139 (5th ed 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.74 3. Moving party need not be original party to action

An aggrieved party moving to vacate judgment under CCP §663 need not be an original party to the action. But the party must be one whose interests or rights are injuriously affected by the judgment. County of Alameda v Carleson (1971) 5 C3d 730, 738, 97 CR 385; People v Hy-Lond Enters. (1979) 93 CA3d 734, 750, 155 CR 880; Simac Design, Inc. v Alciati (1979) 92 CA3d 146, 153, 154 CR 676.

To intervene in a lawsuit, an aggrieved party may use a motion to vacate a judgment or a motion for new trial, but only if that party has an "immediate, pecuniary, and substantial interest" in the judgment. Lippman v City of Los Angeles (1991) 234 CA3d 1630, 1634, 286 CR 406. The possibility that a party will be bound by the judgment does not satisfy this standard. A party must be immediately bound by the judgment at the time the party moves to intervene. See Tomassi v Scarff (2000) 85 CA4th 1053, 102 CR2d 750.

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Procedures

§25.75 1. Noticed motion required

The procedures for moving to vacate and enter a different judgment are set forth in CCP §663a. A party intending to make the motion must file a notice of motion with the clerk and serve the notice on the opposing party.

Counsel must designate grounds for the motion and specify the particulars in which the court's decision or judgment are inconsistent with the facts of the case or verdict. CCP §663a. A supporting memorandum must be filed and served with the notice of motion. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1113(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/25 Motions After Trial/§25.76 2. Timing

§25.76 2. Timing

Under CCP §663a, a notice of motion to vacate and enter a different judgment must be filed and served either:

- Before entry of judgment; or
- Within 15 days of the date the court clerk mailed notice of entry of judgment under CCP §664.5, within 15 days of a party's service of written notice of entry of judgment, or within 180 days after the entry of judgment, whichever is earliest.

NOTE: Under Govt C §68106(b)(1), effective July 28, 2009, and operative through June 30, 2010, if a court is closed as the result of a budget reduction measure in response to the state fiscal crisis, the day is considered a holiday and not a court day.

Code of Civil Procedure §1013, extending the time to exercise a right when service is by mail, does not apply to a motion to vacate and enter a different judgment. CCP §663a.

A motion to vacate brought more than 6 months after the judgment is a collateral and not a direct attack on the judgment. If the court that entered the original judgment still has jurisdiction, its ruling is final and conclusive, even if wrong and contrary to statute. Adoption of Matthew B. (1991) 232 CA3d 1239, 1268, 284 CR 18.

A party who filed an untimely motion to vacate a judgment under CCP §663 cannot obtain relief under CCP §473 because CCP §473 does not apply to a party's failure to take a jurisdictional step, such as filing a timely motion for new trial. Advanced Bldg. Maintenance v State Com. Ins. Fund (1996) 49 CA4th 1388, 1393, 57 CR2d 310.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.77 C. Trial judge's ruling; appeal

A motion to vacate must be heard and determined by the judge who presided at the trial unless that judge has died, is unable to hear it, or is absent from the county at the time noticed for hearing. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1602.

Following a change of venue, the court of coordinate jurisdiction has the same power as the original court to vacate the orders of the court of original venue. Greene v Superior Court (1961) 55 C2d 403, 405, 10 CR 817.

NOTE: There is no time limit within which to hear and rule on the motion. See CCP §§663-663a. However, the trial court's power to enforce, modify, or vacate a judgment is suspended when a notice of appeal is filed. Elsea v Saberi (1992) 4 CA4th 625, 629, 5 CR2d 742.

The order granting a motion to vacate and enter a different judgment may be reviewed on appeal in the same manner as a special order made after final judgment; an order denying the motion is also directly appealable. CCP §§663a, 904.1(a)(2); Howard v Lufkin (1988) 206 CA3d 297, 303, 253 CR 422. But see contrary dicta in Clemmer v Hartford Ins. Co. (1978) 22 C3d 865, 151 CR 285 (reference to such order as "being nonappealable"). See also discussion of Clemmer in Howard v Lufkin, supra, and in Forman v Knapp Press (1985) 173 CA3d 200, 218 CR 815.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/25 Motions After Trial/ V. MOTION TO CORRECT CLERICAL ERROR/ A. Description and use; grounds/§25.78 1. Motion appropriate to conform record to actual judgment or order

V. MOTION TO CORRECT CLERICAL ERROR

A. Description and use; grounds

§25.78 1. Motion appropriate to conform record to actual judgment or order

Every court has both statutory and inherent power to correct clerical errors in its records to conform to a judgment or an order that was actually made. CCP §473; In re McGee (1951) 37 C2d 6, 8, 229 P2d 780 (appellate court); Bastajian v Brown (1941) 19 C2d 209, 214, 120 P2d 9 (trial court).

A motion to correct clerical error is appropriate if a form of judgment fails to coincide with the substance intended at the time of rendering the judgment. Estate of Eckstrom (1960) 54 C2d 540, 545, 7 CR 124.

NOTE: The clerical error need not appear on the face of the record. Culligan v Leider (1944) 65 CA2d 51, 57, 149 P2d 894. If it does not, however, counsel should consider whether additional evidence is needed, e.g., a declaration of the clerk or the court itself to show that the error was clerical. See In re Roberts (1962) 200 CA2d 95, 97, 19 CR 147.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.79 2. Motion may not be granted to remedy judicial error

The court may annul judgments or vacate orders that were inadvertently made as long as they were not a result of the judicial error. See Estate of Doane (1964) 62 C2d 68, 71, 41 CR 165; Conservatorship of Tobias (1989) 208 CA3d 1031, 1034, 256 CR 525. The court cannot correct a judicial error or enter a judgment or an order that was never made. Siegal v Superior Court (1968) 68 C2d 97, 101, 65 CR 311.

Judicial error is present when the court misconstrues the evidence, misapplies the law applicable to the facts disclosed by the evidence, or was misled by counsel. Lankton v Superior Court (1936) 5 C2d 694, 695, 55 P2d 1170. Judicial errors must be rectified by attack on the judgment. Phillips v Trusheim (1945) 25 C2d 913, 156 P2d 25 (order granting motion to vacate judgment was reversed).

The distinction between clerical and judicial error turns on whether the error was inadvertently made in recording the judgment or was made in rendering the judgment itself. In re Candelario (1970) 3 C3d 702, 705, 91 CR 497; Ukegawa Bros. v ALRB (1989) 212 CA3d 1314, 1318, 261 CR 420; Conservatorship of Tobias, supra.

EXAMPLE: A motion to correct clerical error can be made when (1) an order is entered by a clerk that was not intended by the court, (2) the court failed to express its actual intention in the order actually made, (3) an irregularity occurred that made the order or judgment premature, or (4) the court was ignorant of some fact that was material to its action. See cases cited in Stevens v Superior Court (1936) 7 C2d 110, 113, 59 P2d 988.

The court cannot correct judicial error by entering a judgment or an order that was never rendered by the judge. Siegal v Superior Court, supra.

For further discussion on correcting and modifying judgments, see §§23.29-23.31. For forms of motion and order, see §§25.99-25.100.

B. Procedures

§25.80 1. Timing: Clerical error may be corrected at any time

A motion to correct a clerical error may be made at any time. Carpenter v Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. (1939) 14 C2d 704, 707, 96 P2d 796. The motion may be made even after the judgment or order has been appealed. Culligan v Leider (1944) 65 CA2d 51, 56, 149 P2d 894 (trial court ordered that record be corrected while appeal was pending in appellate court).

Clerical error in an order concerning a motion for new trial may not be corrected, however, after the 60-day jurisdictional time period within which to rule on a motion for new trial has elapsed. Siegal v Superior Court (1968) 68 C2d 97, 101, 65 CR 311. On motion for new trial, see §§25.22-25.71.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.81 2. Notice

Clerical error may be corrected by the court without notice on its own motion, by a party on properly noticed and supported motion, or by a party by extraordinary writ. Carpenter v Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. (1939) 14 C2d 704, 707, 96 P2d 796.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.82 3. Nunc pro tunc orders

A judgment or an order containing a clerical error may be corrected nunc pro tunc. See Carpenter v Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. (1939) 14 C2d 704, 707, 96 P2d 796. The purpose of a nunc pro tunc order is to correct the judgment or order to reflect the judgment or order actually made. Estate of Eckstrom (1960) 54 C2d 540, 544, 7 CR 124.

EXAMPLE: In Ukegawa Bros. v ALRB (1989) 212 CA3d 1314, 261 CR 420, an administrative board's order misidentifying the subject of the order as a corporation rather than as a general partnership was corrected nunc pro tunc. The court held that the error was clerical, not judicial, and because the trial evidence demonstrated that the corporation was the alter ego of the general partnership, the board retained the power to correctly name the party at any time. For further discussion on correcting judgments nunc pro tunc, see §23.30.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.83 C. Trial judge's ruling; appeal

The court has full power to determine the character of the error. Without a clear showing to the contrary, its conclusion is final. In considering whether the error is clerical or judicial, the court must determine whether the judgment or order expresses its original decision. Estate of Doane (1964) 62 C2d 68, 71, 41 CR 165; Carpenter v Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. (1939) 14 C2d 704, 708, 96 P2d 796. In this function, the court has the right to rely on its own memory, bench notes, memorandum decisions, and minute orders. Bastajian v Brown (1941) 19 C2d 209, 215, 120 P2d 9 (findings of fact contrary to minute order). See Carpenter v Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. (1939) 14 C2d 704, 709, 96 P2d 796.

If there is contrary evidence, however, the court's correction of an alleged error setting forth the history of its thoughts and entries in bench notes may not be conclusive on appeal. Stevens v Superior Court (1936) 7 C2d 110, 113, 59 P2d 988 (court's recitals disregarded); Estate of Sloan (1963) 222 CA2d 283, 293, 35 CR 167 (judicial, not clerical, error); Estate of Harris (1962) 200 CA2d 578, 590, 19 CR 510 (insufficient statement by court).

The question on appeal is, essentially, what order in fact did the court originally intend to make? Estate of Careaga (1964) 61 C2d 471, 474, 39 CR 215.

VI. SPECIAL POSTJUDGMENT MOTIONS

A. Postjudgment procedures involving public entities

§25.84 1. Settlement conference may be held after judgment

In certain actions against public entities, Govt C §962 provides for a postjudgment settlement conference, which must be held on request of a defendant public entity. That request must be made within the time to request a new trial. See §25.52.

The conference must not occur until after determinations of motions for new trial, JNOV, remittitur, and additur, but it must occur before a hearing on any motions under Govt C §§984 and 985 (see §25.85). Govt C §962.

§25.85 2. Posttrial order may regulate payment of awards

Government Code §§984 and 985 provide for a posttrial order allowing periodic payments of large money awards and offset of collateral-source payments. Under Cal Rules of Ct 8.104(c)—applicable only to actions in which Govt C §984 applies—a defendant public entity's election to make periodic payments must be made within 60 days after entry of judgment or 30 days after notice of entry of judgment, whichever is earlier.

If a hearing is required, it must be calendared within 30 days after the election was made. Timely filing of an election extends time for filing notice of appeal to 180 days after entry of judgment or 90 days after notice of entry of judgment, whichever is earlier, subject to extensions under Cal Rules of Ct 8.108 (motions for new trial, vacation of judgment, or JNOV).

B. Posttrial motions in medical malpractice actions

§25.86 1. Medical malpractice damages subject to periodic payments

Under the Medical Injury Compensation Reform Act (MICRA), judgments for medical malpractice damages are subject to periodic payments of that portion of the judgment attributable to future damages. See CCP §667.7; Salgado v County of Los Angeles (1998) 19 C4th 629, 80 CR2d 46; Gorman v Leftwich (1990) 218 CA3d 141, 152, 266 CR 671 (periodic payment provision properly raised by postverdict motion; no surprise because matter was raised in defendant's answer to complaint and in request for jury instructions); Hrimnak v Watkins (1995) 38 CA4th 964, 982, 45 CR2d 514 (directions to trial court on procedure).

The defendant should request a stay of entry of judgment immediately after an adverse verdict is rendered. See Craven v Crout (1985) 163 CA3d 779, 784, 209 CR 649. If a stay is denied, a motion to vacate judgment is appropriate under CCP §663. A plaintiff's attorney may also wish to request a stay of entry of judgment until the amount and method of payment of attorney fees have been determined. See Nguyen v Los Angeles County Harbor/UCLA Med. Ctr. (1995) 40 CA4th 1433, 48 CR2d 301.

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.87 2. Postverdict motion may reduce damages

A postverdict motion may be used to reduce damages to the ceiling figure for noneconomic damages under MICRA. See CC §3333.2; Salgado v County of Los Angeles (1998) 19 C4th 629, 80 CR2d 46. When a plaintiff has been found comparatively at fault in a malpractice action, an award of noneconomic damages is reduced first by the percentage of plaintiff's fault, and then capped by MICRA. McAdory v Rogers (1989) 215 CA3d 1273, 264 CR 71; see also Atkins v Strayhorn (1990) 223 CA3d 1380, 1391, 273 CR 231 (CC §3333.2 applied after plaintiff's award reduced by comparative negligence).

In Gilman v Beverly Cal. Corp. (1991) 231 CA3d 121, 126, 283 CR 17, the court analyzed the interplay between MICRA and Proposition 51 (CC §§1431.1-1431.5), which imposed several (rather than joint) liability on multiple tortfeasors, making a defendant liable for noneconomic damages according to its share of fault. The Gilman court held that when apportionment of defendant liability is at issue (unlike in McAdory and Atkins, which concerned plaintiffs' comparative negligence), the trial court must apply the MICRA cap of CC §3333.2 first to the noneconomic damage award and then determine the prorata liability of each defendant. 231 CA3d at 128. Gilman's method for applying the MICRA cap was followed in Mayes v Bryan (2006) 139 CA4th 1075, 1100, 44 CR3d 14 (in wrongful death action in which all but two healthcare defendants settled before jury deliberations, court reduced noneconomic damages verdict of $3 million to $250,000 MICRA cap, and then apportioned amount owing by nonsettling defendants according to their share of liability under Proposition 51).

Whether the plaintiff is entitled to postjudgment interest on periodic payments for future economic or noneconomic loss depends on the facts of the case. See Schiernbeck v Haight (1992) 7 CA4th 869, 874, 9 CR2d 716 (no entitlement to interest).

Aside from MICRA considerations, a defendant may forfeit claims that damages awarded at trial must be reduced post-verdict. See Greer v Buzgheia (2006) 141 CA4th 1150, 46 CR3d 780 (defendant failed to request verdict form containing separate entry for plaintiff's past medical expenses).

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.88 C. Writ of error coram vobis

Writ of error coram vobis may be available to order another court to correct factual errors, but only if no other remedy is available. Betz v Pankow (1993) 16 CA4th 931, 941, 20 CR2d 841 (writ denied, remittitur afforded appropriate remedy); Monsan Homes, Inc. v Pogrebneak (1989) 210 CA3d 826, 831, 258 CR 676 (writ denied because party had power to correct record under CCP §1008 motion for reconsideration). See 8 Witkin, California Procedure, Attack on Judgment in Trial Court §4 (5th ed 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

§25.89 D. Writ of error coram nobis

The seldom used writ of error coram nobis is directed to the trial court to remedy an error of fact, as opposed to an error of law. Compare Rollins v City & County of San Francisco (1974) 37 CA3d 145, 112 CR 168 (writ upheld), with Monsan Homes, Inc. v Pogrebneak (1989) 210 CA3d 826, 831, 258 CR 676 (writ denied), and Philippine Export & Foreign Loan Guar. Corp. v Chuidian (1990) 218 CA3d 1058, 1090, 267 CR 457 (writ denied). See also Los Angeles Airways, Inc. v Hughes Tool Co. (1979) 95 CA3d 1, 156 CR 805 (writ denied), which questioned the holding and reasoning of Rollins v City & County of San Francisco, supra.

Writ of error coram nobis lies to correct error committed by the same court that is hearing the writ. For discussion, see California Civil Writ Practice §15.44 (4th ed Cal CEB 2008); 3 Witkin, California Procedure, Actions §75 (5th ed 2008).

§26.1 I. SCOPE OF CHAPTER

This chapter covers the various grounds for recovery of attorney fees following resolution of an action (see §§26.2-26.3). It includes recovery of fees provided by statute (see §§26.4-26.10, 26.54-26.76), by contract (see §§26.77-26.112), and under equitable theories (see §§26.121-26.128), as well as when attorney fees may be recovered as damages (see §§26.121-26.126) or in the nature of sanctions (see §§26.11-26.53) for wrongful conduct in litigation (other than discovery). This chapter also outlines fee awards based on express or implied indemnity claims (see §§26.127-26.130), how to determine the amount of fee awards (see §§26.131-26.142), and the procedures for recovering them (see §§26.143-26.153). Recovery of fees as costs under CCP §1033.5 is covered in chap 27. See §§27.51-27.66 on the effect of CCP §998 offers on costs (including attorney fees as costs).

Further research: For further discussion of the topics in this chapter, see California Attorney Fee Awards (3d ed Cal CEB 2010). See also the CEB Civil Litigation Reporter, published eight times a year, for a continuing update on attorney fee awards in California. For discussion of recovering attorney fees in administrative proceedings, see Attorney Fee Awards, chap 13. For discussion of recovery of attorney fees in dissolution proceedings, see Practice Under the California Family Code: Dissolution, Legal Separation, Nullity (Cal CEB Annual); 3 California Decedent Estate Practice, chap 30 (2d ed Cal CEB 2009) for fee awards in probate or conservatorship proceedings; and California Conservatorship Practice (Cal CEB 2005) and California Guardianship Practice (Cal CEB Annual) for fee awards in conservatorship and guardianship cases.

II. REVIEW GENERAL GROUNDS FOR RECOVERY

§26.2 A. General provisions

Attorney fees incurred in litigation are not recoverable without express statutory authority, contractual provisions, or judicially created equitable exceptions. Steele v Gold (1984) 150 CA3d 928, 198 CR 257 (error for trial court to award attorney fees; neither statutory authority nor agreement between parties about attorney fees). See also Grasso v Crow (1997) 57 CA4th 847, 67 CR2d 367.

Local government legislation may also provide for attorney fees. See Brennan v Board of Supervisors (1984) 153 CA3d 193, 200 CR 192 (San Francisco City Charter allowed attorney fees in taxpayer actions against city). See also McHugh v Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1989) 49 C3d 348, 378, 261 CR 318 (dicta noting power of administrative agency to award attorney fees).

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.3 B. In federal court or under federal law

Federal fee-shifting statutes provide a basis for fee awards in state court as well as in federal court. See, e.g., Serrano v Unruh (1982) 32 C3d 621, 638 n27, 186 CR 754 (Serrano IV). See California Attorney Fee Awards, chap 2 (3d ed Cal CEB 2010). See discussion of recovery of attorney fees under the Civil Rights Attorney's Fees Awards Act of 1976 in §§26.55-26.60. Federal courts also have the power to award attorney fees under state laws. See, e.g., Bouman v Block (9th Cir 1991) 940 F2d 1211, 1237 (fee awarded under California Fair Employment and Housing Act, Govt C §12965(b)). See Attorney Fee Awards, chap 2.

State courts also have the power to award attorney fees under federal law. See Attorney Fee Awards, chap 2. Note that Attorney Fee Awards, chap 1, provides a useful summary of whether federal or California law on attorney fees will be applied.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.4 III. WHEN RECOVERY PROVIDED BY STATUTE

Many statutes provide for awards of attorney fees in specific instances; most are intended to enforce statutory rights and remedies. A compilation of California statutes providing for attorney fees is set forth in California Attorney Fee Awards (3d ed Cal CEB 2010).

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/26 Recovering Attorney Fees/§26.5 A. Court usually awards fees to prevailing party

§26.5 A. Court usually awards fees to prevailing party

Most fee-shifting statutes provide that the court may award reasonable attorney fees to the prevailing party. The prevailing party under CCP §1032(a)(4) is usually the party that is deemed to have prevailed under other fee-shifting statutes. See, e.g., Hunt v Fahnestock (1990) 220 CA3d 628, 632, 269 CR 614. In matters regarding hospital medical staff physician privileges, for example, the prevailing party must have obtained a damage award, a permanent injunction, or declaratory relief to be entitled to reasonable attorney fees based on the opponent's conduct in bringing or defending the litigation as frivolous, unreasonable, without foundation, or in bad faith. See, e.g., Bus & P C §809.9; Mir v Charter Suburban Hosp. (1994) 27 CA4th 1471, 33 CR2d 243. See also 42 USC §11113; Smith v Ricks (9th Cir 1994) 31 F3d 1478, 1488.

The determination of the prevailing party under CCP §1032(a)(4) was addressed in Childers v Edwards (1996) 48 CA4th 1544, 56 CR2d 328. In a fraud action by real estate buyers against sellers, the trial court entered judgment for defendants based on its finding that, while defendants had made misrepresentations, the plaintiff buyers had failed to prove out-of-pocket damages. The trial court also denied defendants' motion for attorney fees as the prevailing parties. The court of appeal reversed the order denying attorney fees and held that defendants were the "prevailing parties" by definition under CCP §1032 because even though the buyers won on liability, they failed to prove any damages and thus failed to "recover any relief against" defendants as required by CCP §1032. The Childers court also noted that CC §1717 did not apply because that section covers only "contract actions, when the theory of the case is breach of contract, and when the contract sued on itself specifically provides for an award of attorney fees incurred to enforce that contract." 48 CA4th at 1548 (quoting Xuereb v Marcus & Millichap, Inc. (1992) 3 CA4th 1338, 1342, 5 CR2d 154, disapproved on other grounds in Damien v Tamondong (1998) 65 CA4th 1115, 1127 n13, 77 CR2d 262). In contrast, the action in Childers was limited to fraud and negligent misrepresentation, which did not come within the domain of CC §1717.

Other cases that have determined the "prevailing party" under various statutes awarding attorney fees include:

- Martin v Szeto (2004) 32 C4th 445, 9 CR3d 687 (prevailing party in an action for slander or libel may recover fees under CCP §1021.7 only when a peace officer or the officer's public employer is a party).
- Krug v Maschmeier (2009) 172 CA4th 796, 800, 91 CR3d 452 (no abuse of discretion to award attorney fees to defendant in CCP §527.6 action who successfully moved to dismiss petition for temporary restraining order, even though petition was not frivolous).
- Mann v Quality Old Time Serv., Inc. (2006) 139 CA4th 328, 339, 42 CR3d 607 (defendants were entitled to attorney fees as prevailing party under anti-SLAPP statute (CCP §425.16), even though they did not prevail on all counts, because they successfully narrowed scope of lawsuit by, among other things, eliminating trade libel claim; amount of fees recoverable based on results achieved).
- Salawy v Ocean Towers Hous. Corp. (2004) 121 CA4th 664, 17 CR3d 427 (reliance on terms of common interest development's governing documents as successful defense to claims brought to enforce those documents did not entitle defendant to fee award under CC §1354(f)).
- Los Angeles Times v Alameda Corridor Transp. Auth. (2001) 88 CA4th 1381, 107 CR2d 29 (in action under Public Records Act (Govt C §§6250-6276.48), plaintiff who obtained only one of several documents requested from public agency was still found to be "prevailing party" under provision of statute authorizing fee award).
- Dowling v Zimmerman (2001) 85 CA4th 1400, 103 CR2d 174 (defendant who appears in SLAPP action in propria persona, and later retains pro bono counsel, is entitled to attorney fees under CCP §425.16); but see Witte v Kaufman (2006) 141 CA4th 1201, 46 CR3d 845 (law firm defendant not entitled to its attorney fees in bringing anti-SLAPP motion to strike because work was done by firm members on their own behalf).
- Foothill Props. v Lyon/Copely Corona Assocs. (1996) 46 CA4th 1542, 54 CR2d 488 (court of appeal affirmed award of attorney fees for defendants and reversed order granting discovery sanctions for plaintiffs; court also stated that discovery sanctions awarded against defendants did not constitute "net monetary recovery" under CCP §1032 for purposes of determining the prevailing party).

When a statute does not specifically define "prevailing party," many courts take a practical rather than a rigid approach to determining the prevailing party. See Castro v Superior Court (2004) 116 CA4th 1010, 10 CR3d 865 (prevailing party under CCP §405.38 may include a party moving to expunge an improperly recorded lis pendens when the lis pendens is withdrawn before the court rules on the motion). See also Kim v Euromotors W./The Auto Gallery (2007) 149 CA4th 170, 56 CR3d 780 (settlement of action under Consumer Legal Remedies Act does not preclude award of attorney fees, CC §1780(d), if court determines plaintiff is "prevailing plaintiff" under law).

A defendant, to defeat a prevailing plaintiff's claim for attorney fees, must show special circumstances in order to render an award unjust. Los Angeles Times Communications LLC v Los Angeles County Bd. of Supervisors (2003) 112 CA4th 1313, 1324, 5 CR3d 776; Sokolow v County of San Mateo (1989) 213 CA3d 231, 245, 261 CR 520. Both the federal and state courts have adopted a narrow view of the special circumstances exception to the award of attorney fees. See, e.g., Serrano v Unruh (1982) 32 C3d 621, 632, 186 CR 754; Sokolow v County of San Mateo (1989) 213 CA3d 231, 245, 261 CR 520; Ackerley Communications, Inc. v City of Salem (9th Cir 1985) 752 F2d 1394, 1396. See California Attorney Fee Awards, chap 2 (3d ed Cal CEB 2010).

If a statute provides for an award of attorney fees to the prevailing defendant on a finding that the plaintiff's prosecution was not in good faith, the test for "good faith" is subjective and the burden of proof is on the defendant moving for attorney fees. Corbett v Hayward Dodge, Inc. (2004) 119 CA4th 915, 924, 14 CR3d 741 (discussing CC §1780(d) of the Consumers Legal Remedies Act (§§1750-1784)).

The impact of the action, not the manner in which the action is resolved, determines whether a party has prevailed for purposes of an award of fees. Folsom v Butte County Ass'n of Gov'ts (1982) 32 C3d 668, 685, 186 CR 589. A judgment based on a settlement agreement may preclude an award of attorney fees when no finding of liability is made under the compromise. See Doran v North State Grocery, Inc. (2006) 137 CA4th 484, 491, 39 CR3d 922 (compromise settlement was silent on any liability under CC §52(a) regarding discrimination, thus, there was no finding of liability against defendant as required by statute to permit award of fees to plaintiff).

NOTE: Under the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt C §§12900-12996), prevailing defendants are entitled to attorney fees only if the plaintiff's action is "unreasonable, frivolous, or meritless." Mangano v Verity, Inc. (2008) 167 CA4th 944, 948, 84 CR3d 526. Attorney fees awarded to the prevailing party under FEHA belong to the attorney, not to the attorney's client, absent an enforceable agreement between the attorney and client to the contrary. See Flannery v Prentice (2001) 26 C4th 572, 110 CR2d 809.

Further research: See Attorney Fee Awards, chap 2, for a thorough discussion of the prevailing party concept.

§26.6 B. General retroactive effect

Absent any contrary legislative expression, the enactment, amendment, and repeal of statutes authorizing attorney fee awards are given retroactive effect, applying to all cases pending at the trial level or on appeal as of the effective date of the legislation. Thus, if the legislature enacts a statute authorizing such an award while that action is pending on appeal, attorney fees are recoverable. Harbor View Hills Community Ass'n v Torley (1992) 5 CA4th 343, 349, 7 CR2d 96. See California Attorney Fee Awards, chap 2 (3d ed Cal CEB 2010).

§26.7 C. Same rule governing cost awards generally applies

Statutory fee awards are incidental to the action, not a part of the cause of action, and are therefore generally governed by the same rules governing cost awards. Under CCP §1033.5(a)(10), attorney fees authorized by contract, statute, or law are allowable as costs under CCP §1032.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.8 D. Recovery statute applies to trial court proceedings and appellate court proceedings

If a statute authorizes attorney fees, they are authorized for both trial court proceedings and appellate proceedings. People ex rel Cooper v Mitchell Bros. Santa Ana Theater (1985) 165 CA3d 378, 211 CR 501. See also Wanland v Law Offices of Mastagni, Holstedt & Chiurazzi (2006) 141 CA4th 15, 21, 45 CR3d 633 (under CCP §425.16(c) (anti-SLAPP statute), recoverable fees include those incurred in responding to appeal of order granting special motion to strike or order granting attorney fees, as well as fees incurred in challenging undertaking submitted by plaintiff to stay enforcement of award pending appeal); §26.152. Additionally, attorney fees are authorized for both trial court proceedings and appellate proceedings under CCP §1033.5(a)(10), (c)(5). Costs now specifically include both types of attorney fees, and, consequently, fees may be requested either from the appellate court or from the trial court on issuance of remittitur. Harbour Landing-Dolfann, Ltd. v Anderson (1996) 48 CA4th 260, 55 CR2d 640.

Depending on the statute involved, a prevailing party may be able to recover fees only in a trial and not in an administrative proceeding. See Sampson v Parking Serv. 2000 Com., Inc. (2004) 117 CA4th 212, 223, 11 CR3d 595 (an administrative proceeding is not a "civil action" under Lab C §1194 so claimant could recover only fees attributable to trial de novo). See also Eicher v Advanced Bus. Integrators, Inc. (2007) 151 CA4th 1363, 61 CR3d 114 (Lab C §1194 authorizes award of attorney fees for fees incurred in trial court if employee prevails in trial court in Lab C §98.2 "appeal" from administrative decision.

§26.9 E. Apportionment and liability among losing parties

Liability for sanctions is presumed to be joint and several if the court does not apportion the award among the liable parties, although any party paying a disproportionate share may be entitled to reimbursement. See Young v Rosenthal (1989) 212 CA3d 96, 128, 260 CR 369.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.10 F. When constitutional issue of equal protection of law raised

Statutes authorizing attorney fee awards in certain classes of cases but not others, or to one party who prevails but not to the other party if the latter prevails, raise the constitutional issue of equal protection of the law. For a chart showing the statutes that provide for an award to only one party, see California Attorney Fee Awards (3d ed Cal CEB 2010). An equal protection challenge may be sustained in a case involving a one-sided statute if the court finds the classifications to be arbitrary. See Sacramento Mun. Util. Dist. v PG&E (1942) 20 C2d 684, 128 P2d 529 (statute constitutional); Builders' Supply Depot v O'Connor (1907) 150 C 265, 88 P 982 (statute unconstitutional).

NOTE: Constitutional challenges have been largely unsuccessful.

IV. RECOVERY OF ATTORNEY FEES BASED ON BAD FAITH ACTIONS OR TACTICS UNDER CCP §128.5

§26.11 A. Effective only for proceedings under CCP §425.16 (anti-SLAPP statute) or initiated before January 1, 1995

Code of Civil Procedure §128.5 applies only to complaints or proceedings filed or initiated before January 1, 1995. See Olmstead v Arthur J. Gallagher & Co. (2004) 32 C4th 804, 11 CR3d 298. For proceedings initiated on or after January 1, 1995, see §§26.32-26.53.

Because CCP §425.16 (anti-SLAPP statute) refers to awards of attorney fees "pursuant to Section 128.5," §128.5 and the cases decided under it remain relevant for proceedings under CCP §425.16. See Decker v U.D. Registry, Inc. (2003) 105 CA4th 1382, 1391, 129 CR2d 892.

For further discussion of sanctions under CCP §128.5, see California Attorney Fee Awards, chap 6 (3d ed Cal CEB 2010).

V. RECOVERY OF ATTORNEY FEES BASED ON BAD FAITH ACTIONS OR TACTICS UNDER CCP §128.7

§26.32 A. Purpose of statute

The focus of CCP §128.7, taken almost verbatim from revised Fed R Civ P 11, is to make every signature by an attorney or unrepresented party on a pleading, petition, written notice of motion, or "other similar paper" a certification "to the best of the person's knowledge, information, and belief," that the action has merit. CCP §128.7(a). See §26.39 for discussion of the scope of certification. Sanctions under §128.7 are available in juvenile court dependency proceedings. In re Mark B. (2007) 149 CA4th 61, 56 CR3d 697.

Further research: See California Attorney Fee Awards, chap 6 (3d ed Cal CEB 2010), for discussion of attorney fee awards as sanctions for frivolous appeals under CCP §907 and Cal Rules of Ct 8.276. See Attorney Fee Awards, chap 6, and Handling Motions to Compel and Other Discovery Motions (Cal CEB Action Guide December 2009) for discussion of award of attorney fees as discovery sanctions.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/26 Recovering Attorney Fees/§26.33 B. Effective for complaints or proceedings filed on or after January 1, 1995

§26.33 B. Effective for complaints or proceedings filed on or after January 1, 1995

Code of Civil Procedure §128.7 applies to complaints filed, or proceedings initiated, on or after January 1, 1995. Olmstead v Arthur J. Gallagher & Co. (2004) 32 C4th 804, 11 CR3d 298. See also Murphy v Yale Materials Handling Corp. (1997) 54 CA4th 619, 62 CR2d 865 (CCP §128.7 does not apply to fourth amended complaint filed in 1995 because original complaint filed in 1991). See §§26.11-26.31 for discussion of actions subject to §128.5 (complaints filed, or proceedings initiated, on or before December 31, 1994).

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.34 C. Look to federal decisions for interpretation

In interpreting CCP §128.7, California courts may look to federal decisions interpreting Fed R Civ P 11. Malovec v Hamrell (1999) 70 CA4th 434, 440, 82 CR2d 712; Goodstone v Southwest Airlines Co. (1998) 63 CA4th 406, 419, 73 CR2d 655.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/26 Recovering Attorney Fees/§26.35 D. Requirements for signing

§26.35 D. Requirements for signing

At least one attorney of record must sign the pleading in the attorney's individual name and must state the signer's address and telephone number. An unrepresented party must sign the pleading and give his or her address and telephone number, if any. Unless otherwise provided by law, no verification or accompanying affidavit is required. An unsigned pleading "shall be stricken unless omission of the signature is corrected promptly after being called to the attention of the attorney or party." CCP §128.7(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.36 E. Certification requirements

By presenting the paper to the court (whether by "signing, filing, submitting or later advocating"), the presenter certifies that the conditions specified in the statute are, "to the best of the person's knowledge, information, and belief, formed after an inquiry reasonable under the circumstances." CCP §128.7(b).

The presenter certifies that the paper is "not being presented primarily for an improper purpose, such as to harass or to cause unnecessary delay or needless increase in the cost of litigation." CCP §128.7(b)(1).

The presenter also certifies that the > claims, defenses, and other legal contentions therein are warranted by existing law or by a non-frivolous argument for the extension, modification, or reversal of existing law or the establishment of new law.

CCP §128.7(b)(2).

The certification provides that the "allegations and other factual contentions have evidentiary support or, if specifically so identified, are likely to have evidentiary support after a reasonable opportunity for further investigation or discovery." CCP §128.7(b)(3).

The certification requires that the "denials of factual contentions are warranted on the evidence or, if specifically so identified, are reasonably based on a lack of information or belief." CCP §128.7(b)(4).

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.37 F. Reasonable inquiry required

Under CCP §128.7, the attorney or party presenting a paper to the court must make an inquiry into the law and facts that is reasonable under the circumstances. Like the federal rule, this rule is designed to make litigants "stop-and-think" before filing pleadings. See Senate Committee on Judiciary Report on AB 3594, p 4 (Aug. 16, 1994). It is an objective reasonableness test. See Zaldivar v City of Los Angeles (9th Cir 1986) 780 F2d 823, 829. All circumstances of a case are factors in determining the reasonableness of inquiry. Townsend v Holman Consulting Corp. (9th Cir 1990) 929 F2d 1358.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.38 G. Sanctions are discretionary

Like the revised version of Fed R Civ P 11(c), sanctions are discretionary under CCP §128.7(c): "If … the court determines that subdivision (b) has been violated, the court may … impose an appropriate sanction."

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/26 Recovering Attorney Fees/§26.39 H. Frivolous motion for sanctions is also subject to sanction

§26.39 H. Frivolous motion for sanctions is also subject to sanction

If a motion is brought "primarily for an improper purpose" (e.g., to harass or to cause unnecessary delay or needlessly increase litigation costs), the motion itself will be subject to sanctions. CCP §128.7(h).

J. Procedure for bringing motion for sanctions

§26.41 1. Separate motion required

A motion brought under CCP §128.7(c)(1) must be made "separately from other motions or requests." (The requirement is the same under Fed R Civ P 11.) Thus, do not include a sanctions motion as an addition to another motion.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.42 2. No time period specified

Like Fed R Civ P 11, the California statute provides no time period for bringing the motion after the occurrence of offending conduct. Unlike the federal rule, CCP §128.7(c) provides: "In determining what sanctions, if any, should be ordered, the court shall consider whether a party seeking sanctions has exercised due diligence."

Generally, the motion should be served promptly, but if discovery is critical to determining the motion, it should not be served until the other party has had a reasonable time for discovery. See Proposed Amendments to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and Forms, Judicial Conference Committee Notes to Rule 11, 146 FRD 515, 590.

§26.43 3. Motion must be specific

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.44 4. General serving and filing requirements

The notice of motion must be served as provided for motions in general under CCP §1010. CCP §128.7(c)(1). Once the notice is served, it cannot be filed with or presented to the court unless, within 21 days after service or such other period as the court prescribes, the challenged paper, claim, defense, contention, allegation, or denial is not withdrawn or appropriately corrected. CCP §128.7(c)(1). See, e.g., Malovec v Hamrell (1999) 70 CA4th 434, 440, 82 CR2d 712; Goodstone v Southwest Airlines Co. (1998) 63 CA4th 406, 73 CR2d 655 (affirming denial of motion for §128.7 sanctions because party failed to comply with "safe harbor" provision).

Actual service of the motion and a formal notice of motion are required to comply with CCP §128.7 and begin the running of the "safe harbor" period; informal notice through telephone calls or letters is insufficient. Barnes v Dep't of Corrections (1999) 74 CA4th 126, 87 CR2d 594.

A motion served in compliance with the "safe harbor" provision in §128.7(c)(1) may be filed and ruled on after judgment is entered. Day v Collingwood (2006) 144 CA4th 1116, 50 CR3d 903.

PRACTICE TIP: Note that the court has the authority to prescribe a different period of time. If counsel has not completed its investigation or discovery, it may be reasonable to request the court to extend the safe harbor period while the investigation or discovery continues. Timely withdrawal of the alleged offending contention will protect a party from sanctions.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.45 K. Court may initiate order to show cause

On its own motion, the court may enter an order describing the specific conduct appearing to violate CCP §128.7(b) and direct the attorney, law firm, or party to show cause why it has not violated §128.7(b). Barnes v Dep't of Corrections (1999) 74 CA4th 126, 87 CR2d 594. The safe harbor provision applies to motions for sanctions initiated by the court as well as those initiated by a party and the court must provide an opportunity for the "challenged paper, claim, defense, contention, allegation, or denial" to be withdrawn or appropriately corrected within 30 days after service of the order to show cause. CCP §128.7(c)(2); Malovec v Hamrell (1999) 70 CA4th 434, 440, 82 CR2d 712.

Monetary sanctions may not be awarded on the court's own motion unless the court issues its order to show cause before a voluntary dismissal or settlement of the claims made by or against the party that is, or whose attorneys are, to be sanctioned. CCP §128.7(d)(2).

§26.46 L. Court must describe violation

The court must describe the conduct constituting a violation when imposing sanctions and must explain the basis for the sanctions imposed. CCP §128.7(e).

§26.47 M. Scope of sanctions allowed

Sanctions may include (CCP §128.7(d)):

- Directives of a nonmonetary nature;
- An order to pay a penalty to the court; or
- An order to pay the moving party some or all of the reasonable attorney fees and other expenses incurred as a direct result of the conduct described in the motion.

A monetary sanction imposed after a court motion is limited to a penalty payable to the court and may not include monetary sanctions payable to a party. Malovec v Hamrell (1999) 70 CA4th 434, 443, 82 CR2d 712. Under CCP §128.7, self-represented attorneys are not entitled to sanctions in the form of attorney fees. Musaelian v Adams (2009) 45 C4th 512, 87 CR3d 475.

§26.48 N. Expenses and fees for motion may be awarded

The court has discretion to award the prevailing party reasonable expenses and attorney fees incurred in presenting or opposing the motion. CCP §128.7(c)(1).

§26.49 O. Limitations on sanctions

The sanction for a violation of CCP §128.7(b) must be "limited to what is sufficient to deter repetition" of the conduct involved in the motion, or "comparable conduct by others similarly situated."

Monetary sanctions may not be awarded against a represented party for a claimed violation of CCP §128.7(b)(2) (certification that claims, defenses, or other legal contentions warranted by existing law or by nonfrivolous argument for extension, modification, or reversal of existing law or establishment of new law).

Sanctions under CCP §128.7 may not be awarded on the court's own motion after the court has made a dispositive ruling on the challenged pleading, e.g., sustaining a demurer without leave to amend or granting summary judgment. Malovec v Hamrell (1999) 70 CA4th 434, 444, 82 CR2d 712.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/26 Recovering Attorney Fees/§26.50 P. Who may be sanctioned

§26.50 P. Who may be sanctioned

The court may impose a sanction on the attorney, law firms, or parties that have violated CCP §128.7(b) or are responsible for the violation. CCP §128.7(c). Absent exceptional circumstances, a law firm will be held jointly responsible for violations committed by partners, associates, and employees. CCP §128.7(c)(1).

Business and Professions Code §6068(o)(3) requires attorneys to report to the State Bar any nondiscovery-related monetary sanction award made against them that exceeds $1000. Counsel doing so will probably want to report contemporaneously that the award has been paid.

§26.51 Q. Court may assess punitive damages

The court may also assess punitive damages against a plaintiff on a determination that the plaintiff's action was maintained by a person convicted of a felony against the person's victim, or against the victim's heirs, relatives, estate, or personal representative, for injuries arising from the acts for which the person was convicted of a felony and the plaintiff is guilty of fraud, oppression, or malice in maintaining the action. CCP §128.7(f).

§26.52 R. Appeal of sanction

A sanction award over $5000 is appealable. CCP §904.1(a)(11)-(12). See §26.28. The standard for review of sanctions under CCP §128.7 appears to be an abuse of discretion standard. See McFarland v City of Sausalito (1990) 218 CA3d 909, 911, 267 CR 412; Winick Corp. v County Sanitation Dist. No. 2 (1986) 185 CA3d 1170, 1175, 230 CR 289 (considering sanctions under CCP §128.5 under abuse of discretion standard).

A sanction order under §128.7 against a party's attorney who has been substituted out should be directly appealable, regardless of the amount of the sanction; the order would be final as to that attorney because he or she is no longer involved in the underlying action. See Barton v Ahmanson Devs. (1993) 17 CA4th 1358, 1361, 22 CR2d 56 (discovery sanctions).

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.53 S. Order denying sanctions

Parties have no statutory right to appeal an order denying sanctions. Do not expect a court of appeal to exercise its discretion to allow mandamus review of the denial of a sanctions motion brought under CCP §128.7. But see Muller v Fresno Community Hosp. & Med. Ctr. (2009) 172 CA4th 887, 898, 91 CR3d 617 (order denying sanctions under CCP §128.7 and former CCP §2023 appealable as collateral order). The court of appeal will deem review by appeal from the final judgment to be an adequate remedy. See Wells Prop. v Popkin (1992) 9 CA4th 1053, 1055, 11 CR2d 845 (denial of motion for sanctions under CCP §128.5 presents no unusual or compelling circumstances to justify treating improper appeal as petition for writ of mandate).

NOTE: The provision in CCP §128.7(c) allowing the court to sanction the attorneys, law firms, or parties that have violated or are responsible for violating §128.7(b) may send tremors through many law firms. Law firms must be diligent in making certain that individual counsel and clients are aware of the possible consequences of proceeding with a "baseless claim." Otherwise, enforcement of these provisions could drive an irreparable split between attorney and client and between the individual attorney and his or her law firm.

§26.54 VI. RECOVERY OF ATTORNEY FEES UNDER THE CIVIL RIGHTS ATTORNEY'S FEES AWARDS ACT OF 1976 (42 USC §1988)

An important component of federal civil rights laws is the availability of attorney fee awards. S 94-1011, 94th Cong, 2d Sess (1976), reprinted in 1976 US Code Cong & Ad News 5908. Most federal civil rights acts provide for attorney fees.

A complete discussion of the award of attorney fees under federal fee-shifting statutes is beyond the scope of this chapter. Recovery of attorney fees under the Civil Rights Attorney's Fees Awards Act of 1976, authorizing fee awards in any action or proceeding brought to enforce 42 USC §§1981, 1981a, 1982, 1983, 1985, 1986, 2000bb, 2000d, 20 USC §1681, and Title IX or Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, is briefly discussed (see §§26.55-26.60) in order to present some of the primary issues in claiming attorney fees under federal fee-shifting statutes. See California Attorney Fee Awards, chap 3 (3d ed Cal CEB 2010), for a partial listing of federal fee-shifting statutes.

Further research: See Attorney Fee Awards, chap 2, for discussion of federal fee-shifting statutes in state court.

§26.55 A. Award need not be proportionate to amount of damages

In City of Riverside v Rivera (1986) 477 US 561, 91 L Ed 2d 466, 106 S Ct 2686, the Supreme Court, in a plurality decision, rejected the view that reasonable attorney fees, awarded under the Civil Rights Attorney's Fees Awards Act of 1976 (42 USC §1988), should be proportionate to the amount of damages recovered in the underlying civil rights action. In Rivera, the Supreme Court affirmed an award of $245,456.25 in attorney fees, even though plaintiffs recovered only $33,350 in damages. But see Choate v County of Orange (2000) 86 CA4th 312, 103 CR2d 339 (trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying attorney fees to plaintiffs because damages awarded were de minimis); Benton v Oregon Student Assistance Comm'n (9th Cir 2005) 421 F3d 901, 908 (same; lawsuit must achieve "other tangible results" besides nominal damages to justify award of fees).

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.56 B. Adjustment for delay in payment

The Supreme Court in Missouri v Jenkins (1989) 491 US 274, 283, 105 L Ed 2d 229, 109 S Ct 2463, held that an appropriate adjustment for delay in payment of attorney fees is within the contemplation of 42 USC §1988.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.57 C. If contingent fee agreement

A contingent fee contract does not place a ceiling on the recovery of attorney fees. Blanchard v Bergeron (1989) 489 US 87, 103 L Ed 2d 67, 109 S Ct 939. In Blanchard, the Supreme Court observed that fee awards in 42 USC §1983 cases should not be modeled on the contingent fee arrangements used in personal injury actions, because it would encourage the quest for damages at the expense of equitable remedies. Instead, the contingent nature of a fee agreement between lawyer and client is only one of many factors to consider in assessing a reasonable fee.

The use of a contingency fee arrangement to enhance the award was disapproved in Watkins v Fordice (5th Cir 1993) 7 F3d 453. However, the Supreme Court held in Venegas v Mitchell (1990) 495 US 82, 109 L Ed 2d 74, 110 S Ct 1679, that contingent fee contracts may be honored and that their use is not only consistent with the goals of 42 USC §1988 but furthers its goals by enabling plaintiffs to secure competent counsel. The Court observed that it has never held that §1988 constrains a civil rights plaintiff's freedom to become contractually and personally bound to pay an attorney a percentage of the recovery, if any, even if such a fee is larger than the statutory fee the defendant must pay to the plaintiff.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.58 D. Using time records

The California Attorney General issued a policy memorandum dated August 23, 1985, urging that contemporaneous time records be a prerequisite to a fee award under 42 USC §1988. The approach in the memorandum is based on the criteria set forth in National Ass'n of Concerned Veterans v Secretary of Defense (DC Cir 1982) 675 F2d 1319. Courts have recognized the propriety of such a prerequisite but have seldom invoked it. In Best v California Apprenticeship Council (1987) 193 CA3d 1448, 1470, 240 CR 1, the court held that contemporaneous time records are desirable but not obligatory, because the adequacy of the showing supporting an attorney fee claim is within the trial court's discretion. See Webb v Board of Educ. (1985) 471 US 234, 238 n6, 85 L Ed 2d 233, 105 S Ct 1923 (contemporaneously recorded time sheets are preferred).

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.59 E. When settlement agreement

The court has discretion to uphold a settlement agreement that contains an attorney fee waiver provision. Muckleshoot Tribe v Puget Sound Power & Light Co. (9th Cir 1989) 875 F2d 695; Wakefield v Mathews (9th Cir 1988) 852 F2d 482 (waiver of 42 USC §1988 fees will be found if settlement purports to encompass entire controversy, including costs, as opposed to mere silence on attorney fee issue). For the court to enforce it, however, a waiver of attorney fees must be clearly expressed in a settlement agreement. Muckleshoot Tribe v Puget Sound Power & Light Co. (9th Cir 1989) 875 F2d 695, 698.

The court in EWAP, Inc. v City of Ontario (1986) 177 CA3d 1108, 223 CR 422, held that 42 USC §1988 allows the prevailing party in a civil rights action brought under 42 USC §1983 to recover reasonable attorney fees as part of the costs of suit unless "special circumstances" render such an award unjust. The court held that, even though defendant conceded the constitutional issue raised in plaintiff's civil rights complaint, the plaintiff was the "prevailing party" within the meaning of §1988 and there was no "special circumstance" that would preclude an award of attorney fees.

Complex issues arise when a defense attorney, in the context of resolving a civil rights lawsuit, seeks settlement of the lawsuit conditioned on plaintiff's counsel waiving the statutory fees. A settlement proposal seeking a waiver of such statutory fees creates a dilemma. On one hand, such a fee waiver appears beneficial to the plaintiff/client in that it expedites a resolution of the plaintiff's underlying claim. On the other hand, if such a settlement practice becomes prevalent, the viability of public interest litigation is jeopardized. In Muckleshoot Tribe v Puget Sound Power & Light Co., supra, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals allowed such a settlement proposal. A host of various state bar associations condemned the practice, relying on various provisions of the ABA Code of Professional Responsibility. See generally State Bar of Cal, Standing Comm on Prof Resp & Cond, Formal Opinion No. 89-114 (discussion of former proposed Cal Rules of Prof Cond 2-400 that would prohibit settlement offers conditioned on a plaintiff's attorney's agreement to waive statutory fees); but see State Bar of Cal, Standing Comm on Prof Resp & Cond, Formal Opinion No. 94-136 (opining that lawyers may contract with their clients for an assignment of the client's statutory right to attorney fees). These provisions, however, are only secondary authority for California lawyers.

California specifically chose not to make the Code of Professional Responsibility binding on California lawyers by drafting and adopting the California Rules of Professional Conduct. In Los Angeles County Bar Association Formal Opinion No. 445, it was opined that settlement offers in a civil rights or civil liberty lawsuit, that are conditioned on plaintiff counsel's waiver of his or her statutory attorney fees, are improper. The committee, in reaching this conclusion, relied on former Cal Rules of Prof Cond 2-109 (now Cal Rules of Prof Cond 1-500) which in pertinent part provided that > (A) A member of the State Bar shall not be a party to or participate in an agreement, whether in connection with the settlement of a lawsuit or otherwise, if the agreement restricts the right of a member of the State Bar to practice law.

This same ethics opinion (Los Angeles County Bar Association Formal Opinion No. 445) also relied on Bus & P C §6068(h) in disfavoring such a settlement scheme. Section 6068(h) mandates that it is the duty of an attorney not to reject, for any consideration personal to himself or herself, the cause of the defenseless or oppressed.

§26.60 F. Applies in state court

The statute authorizing attorney fees applies in state court proceedings. See Filipino Accountants' Ass'n v State Bd. of Accountancy (1984) 155 CA3d 1023, 204 CR 913. The appellate court in Filipino Accountants' Ass'n held that the federal Civil Rights Attorney's Fees Awards Act of 1976 (42 USC §1988) applies in state as well as federal court and upheld the trial court's discretion in awarding attorney fees under the statute when petitioners claimed a violation of their civil rights under 42 USC §1981 but prevailed on their state statutory claim that arose from the same common nucleus of operative facts as in their §1981 claim. Compare Filipino Accountants' Ass'n with Kreutzer v County of San Diego (1984) 153 CA3d 62, 200 CR 322 (attorney fees denied because plaintiff acted primarily for his own benefit while public benefit was small; factors for court to consider in granting or denying attorney fees under 42 USC §1988 discussed). See also Board of Admin. v Wilson (1997) 57 CA4th 967, 67 CR2d 477 (affirming denial of attorney fees motion because party did not mention §1983 until its postjudgment motion for attorney fees).

When both state and federal claims are based on the same legal theory or core of common facts, attorney fees may be granted under 42 USC §1988 in the pendent state law claim when the federal claim either is successful or is not adjudicated at all, but not when the federal claim is unsuccessful. See McFadden v Villa (2001) 93 CA4th 235, 113 CR2d 80 (reversing trial court's award of attorney fees under 42 USC §1988 to a party who prevailed on state law cause of action for battery but not on federal civil rights cause of action for excessive use of force).

VII. AWARD OF ATTORNEY FEES UNDER PRIVATE ATTORNEY GENERAL RULE (CCP §1021.5)

§26.61 A. What it is

The purpose of the private attorney general doctrine is to provide an incentive to private parties when they have successfully vindicated important rights that have benefited the public. The rule, first recognized in case law and applied to cases involving constitutional rights, is now codified in CCP §1021.5, which is not limited to cases involving constitutional rights. See Serrano v Priest (1977) 20 C3d 25, 46, 141 CR 315; Concerned Citizens of La Habra v City of La Habra (2005) 131 CA4th 329, 31 CR3d 599.

Although CCP §1021.5 allows a public entity to recover attorney fees from another public entity if the plaintiffs are the people of the state, acting through the Attorney General to enforce the laws of the state, the people cannot recover attorney fees under §1021.5. People ex rel Brown v Tehama County Bd. of Supervisors (2007) 149 CA4th 422, 56 CR3d 558.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/26 Recovering Attorney Fees/§26.62 B. When it applies

§26.62 B. When it applies

On motion, a court may award attorney fees to a successful party against one or more opposing parties in any action that has resulted in the enforcement of an important right affecting the public interest if:

- A significant benefit, whether pecuniary or nonpecuniary, has been conferred on the general public or a large class of persons;
- The necessity and financial burden of private enforcement are such as to make the award appropriate; and
- In the interest of justice, attorney fees should not be paid out of any recovery.

See CCP §1021.5.

In actions involving public entities, this section applies to allowances against, but not in favor of, public entities, in which no claim is required to be filed. CCP §1021.5.

Under CCP §1021.5, parties may recover attorney fees only from "opposing parties." See Connerly v State Personnel Bd. (2006) 37 C4th 1169, 1176, 39 CR3d 788 (real party in interest advocacy group that neither proposed nor enforced invalid statutory affirmative action programs acted like amicus curiae, not opposing party); Plumbers & Steamfitters, Local 290 v Duncan (2007) 157 CA4th 1083, 1093, 69 CR3d 184 (agency responsible for initiating and maintaining challenged policy decision was opposing party). But see Ramon v County of Santa Clara (2009) 173 CA4th 915, 921, 93 CR3d 278 (Connerly does not preclude attorney fee award to plaintiff's counsel for opposing defendant county's amicus brief in related matter, when county was advocating same interpretation of statute in both suits).

Section 1021.5 does not apply to parties without an institutional interest in the litigation that seek only a determination of private rights, even if the case leads to an important appellate decision. Annette F. v Sharon S (2008) 42 C4th 945, 954, 70 CR3d 372. In Sharon S v Superior Court (2003) 31 C4th 417, 2 CR3d 699, the supreme court had earlier upheld "second parent" adoption; Annette F addressed the issue of attorney fees arising from the case.

Further research: A full discussion of the private attorney general rule and the three criteria set out in CCP §1021.5(a)-(c) that are to be considered by the court in making attorney fee awards under the statute, together with many case examples, is provided in California Attorney Fee Awards, chap 3 (3d ed Cal CEB 2010). See also California Common Cause v Duffy (1987) 200 CA3d 730, 246 CR 285, for a summary of the rules.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.63 C. Pre-litigation attempt to enforce "important right"

Under CCP §1021.5, the court may award attorney fees to a private party if the court finds that the necessity of private enforcement makes the award appropriate. In deciding whether the private enforcement was necessary, the court should consider whether the private party attempted to resolve the matter without litigation. Vasquez v State (2008) 45 C4th 243, 85 CR3d 466. In "catalyst theory" cases, the court may allow attorney fees only if the private party made a reasonable effort to settle the dispute without litigation. Graham v DaimlerChrysler Corp. (2004) 34 C4th 553, 560, 21 CR3d 331. See §26.64.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/26 Recovering Attorney Fees/§26.64 D. Prevailing party

§26.64 D. Prevailing party

Cases deciding whether a party has prevailed for purposes of the private attorney general doctrine include:

- Maria P. v Riles (1987) 43 C3d 1281, 1290, 240 CR 872 (when plaintiffs obtained preliminary injunction, attorney fees were properly awarded even though action was dismissed for failure to prosecute; because case had some impact on vindicating important right, trial court had power to award attorney fees).
- Harbor v Deukmejian (1987) 43 C3d 1078, 1103, 240 CR 569 (fees were proper in action that resulted in clarification of both governor's veto power and single subject rule of legislation, even though plaintiffs neither obtained any relief sought nor benefited personally).
- County of Colusa v California Wildlife Conserv. Bd. (2006) 145 CA4th 637, 52 CR3d 1 (county brought suit against state agencies challenging validity of conservation easement; because state agencies subsequently modified easement, county was prevailing party).
- City of Santa Monica v Stewart (2005) 126 CA4th 43, 24 CR3d 72 (intervening party who contributes to success of public interest litigation entitled to award of attorney fees on same terms as other prevailing party).
- Urbaniak v Newton (1993) 19 CA4th 1837, 1841, 24 CR2d 333 (AIDS patient brought invasion of privacy action for disclosure of his condition; party bringing damages action who prevails on declaratory relief cause of action only, and did not bring about any change of behavior of defendants, is not prevailing party).
- City of Sacramento v Drew (1989) 207 CA3d 1287, 1303, 255 CR 704 (allegation that defendant prevailed on ground he did not raise until invited to do so is not dispositive; defendant in fact raised issue and prevailed).
- Sokolow v County of San Mateo (1989) 213 CA3d 231, 244, 261 CR 520 (when plaintiffs sued county and private volunteer search and rescue organization to compel termination of latter's male-only restriction or its association with county sheriff, plaintiffs were prevailing party because one of two options was chosen by organization as part of permanent injunction).
- Leiserson v City of San Diego (1988) 202 CA3d 725, 736, 249 CR 28 (fees not awarded when plaintiff failed to show nexus between his lawsuit and city's later voluntary change of policy on media access to disaster scenes).
- County of San Luis Obispo v Abalone Alliance (1986) 178 CA3d 848, 223 CR 846 (fees were proper in defendants' favor because their success in resisting action to recover costs of their civil disobedience and for injunction confirmed important principles of limiting risks of political protest).
- Carroll v State Bar (1985) 166 CA3d 1193, 1208, 213 CR 305 (reversal of trial court ruling transformed successful plaintiff into unsuccessful party, precluding award of attorney fees).

NOTE: A plaintiff may be considered a prevailing party under the "catalyst theory" if the litigation does not end in judicial resolution, but it leads to a change in the defendant's behavior. Graham v DaimlerChrysler Corp. (2004) 34 C4th 553, 565, 21 CR3d 331. See Tipton-Whittingham v City of Los Angeles (2004) 34 C4th 604, 608, 21 CR3d 371 (catalyst theory for prevailing party under Govt C §12965(b)); Westside Community for Indep. Living, Inc. v Obledo (1983) 33 C3d 348, 353, 188 CR 873; Woodland Hills Residents Ass'n v City Council (1979) 23 C3d 917, 937, 154 CR 503 (Woodland Hills II). The terms "prevailing party" and "successful party," as used in CCP §1021.5, are synonymous. Graham, 34 C4th at 570.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/26 Recovering Attorney Fees/§26.65 E. Causation

§26.65 E. Causation

A finding must be made that the lawsuit motivated the opponent to modify its behavior. Even if plaintiff is successful in the lawsuit, attorney fees may be inappropriate if the causation factor is not satisfied. Examples of cases discussing the causation factor include:

- Westside Community for Indep. Living, Inc. v Obledo (1983) 33 C3d 348, 353, 188 CR 873 (fee award is justified when causal connection exists between lawsuit and relief obtained; no award here, because when suit was filed defendant had already approved regulations that plaintiff sought).
- Californians for Responsible Toxics Mgmt. v Kizer (1989) 211 CA3d 961, 968, 259 CR 599 (inference permitted that causal connection exists between action taken by defendant after plaintiff's lawsuit is filed, but error to rely solely on chronology of events).
- Crawford v Board of Educ. (1988) 200 CA3d 1397, 246 CR 806 (attorney fees properly denied when causal connection between plaintiffs' litigation efforts and eventual adoption of desegregation plan was not established; moreover, efforts to have statewide initiative put on ballot and adopted were not litigation-related and thus did not entitle plaintiffs to attorney fees).
- Macias v Municipal Court (1986) 178 CA3d 568, 223 CR 756 (although changes were made after lawsuit was filed, both trial and appellate courts ruled against plaintiffs; changes made were different from those plaintiffs sought).

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.66 F. Vindication of important right

Although this factor is frequently discussed together with the significant public benefit factor, the two are distinct considerations. The following cases discuss this issue:

- Harbor v Deukmejian (1987) 43 C3d 1078, 240 CR 569 (clarification of both governor's veto power and single-subject rule of legislation).
- Notrica v State Compensation Ins. Fund (1999) 70 CA4th 911, 83 CR2d 89 (award of injunction affecting state fund's relationships with 25,000 separate employers belied claim of state defendant that unfair competition action against fund served only private interests of plaintiffs).
- Hull v Rossi (1993) 13 CA4th 1763, 1768, 17 CR2d 457 (action resulting in minor changes in voter pamphlet ballot arguments was sufficient in view of state's strong interest in providing electorate with accurate information).
- Beasley v Wells Fargo Bank (1991) 235 CA3d 1407, 1417, 1 CR2d 459, disapproved on other grounds in Olson v Automobile Club of S. Cal. (2008) 42 C4th 1142, 1153 n6, 74 CR3d 81 (class action by credit card holders to recover excessive bank fees acted as consumer protection action and thus vital to public interest).
- California Common Cause v Duffy (1987) 200 CA3d 730, 246 CR 285 (in taxpayers' suit for declaratory and injunctive relief against sheriff, seeking to establish illegality of his using departmental funds and personnel to distribute postcards opposing Chief Justice of California Supreme Court, taxpayers, as prevailing parties, were entitled to attorney fees under CCP §1021.5, because causal connection existed between lawsuit and relief obtained and lawsuit secured important right affecting public interest).
- Bouvia v County of Los Angeles (1987) 195 CA3d 1075, 241 CR 239 (litigation establishing right of adult to refuse life-saving medical treatment vindicated important right, but second action that did not challenge defendant's policy did not do so).
- Los Angeles Police Protective League v City of Los Angeles (1986) 188 CA3d 1, 232 CR 697 (invalidation of $5 parking charge vindicated important right because it required city to comply with decision of its Employee Relations Board).
- Folsom v Butte County Ass'n of Gov'ts (1982) 32 C3d 668, 186 CR 589 (action furthered fundamental legislative goals by diverting funds from highways to public transit systems).

G. Significant public benefit

§26.67 1. Several factors considered

Determination of whether a public benefit has been conferred involves consideration of a number of factors, including:

- Magnitude of the right or principle being vindicated (see Press v Lucky Stores, Inc. (1983) 34 C3d 311, 318, 193 CR 900);
- The size of the class directly benefited (34 C3d at 319); and
- Whether the public as a whole has been benefited (see Harbor v Deukmejian (1987) 43 C3d 1078, 240 CR 569; see also King v Lewis (1990) 219 CA3d 552, 268 CR 277 (fees properly denied when lawsuit brought by proponents of ballot referendum resulted in minor changes to ballot pamphlet, because neither important right was enforced nor significant benefit obtained)).

NOTE: Even if the benefits are vindications of concepts and rights rather than of a concrete pecuniary nature, the benefits may still be significant.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/26 Recovering Attorney Fees/§26.68 2. Examples

§26.68 2. Examples

Examples of cases dealing with the scope of the public benefit involved in the action include:

- Maria P. v Riles (1987) 43 C3d 1281, 1293, 240 CR 872 (enforcing student's right to confidentiality of school records benefited all similarly situated students and parents).
- Roybal v Governing Bd. of Salinas City Elementary Sch. Dist. (2008) 159 CA4th 1143, 1149, 72 CR3d 146 (no public benefit from ruling that school district deviated from Ed C §44949 in laying off three school psychologists).
- Baxter v Salutary Sportsclubs, Inc. (2004) 122 CA4th 941, 946, 19 CR3d 317 (no significant benefit to public because relief only affected those people who were or might become members of defendant health club and there was no evidence that anyone had suffered any harm).
- Gregory v State Bd. of Control (1999) 73 CA4th 584, 86 CR2d 575 (action that exposed long-standing errors in practices of state board pertaining to restitution of crime victims conferred significant public benefit).
- Draeger v Reed (1999) 69 CA4th 1511, 82 CR2d 378 (challenge to Department of Motor Vehicles policies concerning out-of-state DUI convictions clarified governing law but affected only narrow class of persons having such convictions).
- Family Planning Specialists Med. Group, Inc. v Powers (1995) 39 CA4th 1561, 46 CR2d 667 (no public benefit found when defendant's success in the litigation was very narrow and benefited only himself).
- Lowe v California Resources Agency (1991) 1 CA4th 1140, 1153, 2 CR2d 558 (action successfully changed civil service classification but inured to plaintiff's pecuniary advantage, not to large class or to public).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/26 Recovering Attorney Fees/§26.69 H. Private benefit and burden

§26.69 H. Private benefit and burden

Most cases focus on whether the plaintiff's financial burden was outweighed by his or her private benefit. When plaintiffs have no financial interest in the outcome, the requirement is usually satisfied. See Press v Lucky Stores, Inc. (1983) 34 C3d 311, 321, 193 CR 900. However, when a party receives a substantial private benefit, attorney fees are available only if the burden of conducting the litigation was out of proportion to the benefit gained. Examples of cases discussing the private benefit and burden issue include the following:

- Meija v City of Los Angeles (2007) 156 CA4th 151, 158, 67 CR3d 228 (although homeowner's personal interest in opposing proposed development based on inadequate environmental review was substantial, financial burden supported attorney fees award).
- Riverside Sheriffs' Ass'n v County of Riverside (2007) 152 CA4th 414, 61 CR3d 295 (sheriffs' association action enforced important procedural rights for its members, and protections afforded by Public Safety Officers' Bill of Rights Act benefit not only public safety officers but public in general).
- Conservatorship of Levitt (2001) 93 CA4th 544, 113 CR2d 294 (reduction in requested attorney fees proper in financial elder abuse cases because fees award is based on all factors relevant to value of services rendered, including value of estates of elderly victims).
- Jobe v City of Orange (2001) 88 CA4th 412, 105 CR2d 782 (trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying attorney fees under CCP §1021.5 to high school association because as the real party in interest it failed to show that cost of its legal victory outweighed its personal benefit).
- Williams v San Francisco Bd. of Permit Appeals (1999) 74 CA4th 961, 88 CR2d 565 (despite possible benefit to neighborhood, plaintiff's nonmonetary stake in blocking huge new construction next to his property constituted individual stake sufficient to deny attorney fees). But see Bowman v City of Berkeley (2005) 131 CA4th 173, 182, 31 CR3d 447 (awarding attorney fees and costs, and distinguishing Williams in that only two of seven plaintiffs in Bowman lived adjacent to proposed housing project, and plaintiffs' personal stakes were "far more attenuated" than in Williams; plaintiff's due process claim conferred significant public benefit).
- Notrica v State Compensation Ins. Fund (1999) 70 CA4th 911, 83 CR2d 89 (disparity between damages award obtained by plaintiffs and amount of attorney fees expended supported finding that private enforcement of right was expensive for purposes of CCP §1021.5 award).
- Flannery v California Highway Patrol (1998) 61 CA4th 629, 71 CR2d 632 (gender discrimination action under FEHA).
- Satrap v PG&E (1996) 42 CA4th 72, 49 CR2d 348 (denial of attorney fees proper when settlement demand of $3 million was not disproportionate to total attorney fees of $1.2 million even though jury verdict was substantially less).
- Wang v Division of Labor Standards Enforcement (1990) 219 CA3d 1152, 1162, 268 CR 669 (no attorney fees recoverable when administrative order was issued without substantial justification against small business, because public benefit was incidental and private financial interest was significant).
- Austin v Board of Retirement (1989) 209 CA3d 1528, 1535, 258 CR 106 (employee's action to obtain retirement benefits motivated by self-interest).
- Save Oxnard Shores v California Coastal Comm'n (1986) 179 CA3d 140, 154, 224 CR 425 (public benefit incidental to private advantage of intervenor's members);
- Henneberque v City of Culver City (1985) 172 CA3d 837, 218 CR 704 (trial court abused discretion in denying attorney fees to police officer who prevailed (on appeal) in action against city for failing to provide administrative appeal mandated by Govt C §3304(b), even though plaintiff's own financial gain was modest).
- Compton Community College Fed'n of Teachers v Compton Community College Dist. (1985) 165 CA3d 82, 211 CR 231 (subject of litigation was enforcement of salary clause in union contract; no showing made of necessity and financial burden of private enforcement, that legal costs were disproportionately large, that plaintiff union was so small it lacked resources to protect its members' interests, or that benefits to public were so out of proportion to benefits received by membership as to justify fee award).

- California Teachers Ass'n v Cory (1984) 155 CA3d 494, 202 CR 611 (association members received substantial benefit to their retirement fund; magnitude of litigation burden not out of proportion to their personal stake in action).

§26.70 I. Whether private action necessary

An additional consideration is whether the private action was necessary to vindicate the right involved. In Best v California Apprenticeship Council (1987) 193 CA3d 1448, 1468, 240 CR 1, the court affirmed an award of attorney fees even though the California Department of Fair Employment and Housing could have prosecuted the case on plaintiff's behalf and obtained the same result. The court noted not only an absence of evidence that the DFEH would or could have handled the case but also that public agencies do not have the time or resources to take on every meritorious case.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/26 Recovering Attorney Fees/§26.71 J. Applicability beyond injunction or damage actions

§26.71 J. Applicability beyond injunction or damage actions

Attorney fees may be recoverable in other than traditional injunction or damage actions, although the extent of the recoverability is not yet clear.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.72 1. Criminal proceedings

The supreme court in In re Head (1986) 42 C3d 223, 228 CR 184, affirmed a fee award when prisoners brought a habeas corpus petition that successfully challenged work furlough procedures. The court noted, however, that fees cannot be recovered by criminal defendants, because their primary motivation is vindication of their personal rights.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.73 2. Administrative proceedings

Several decisions suggest that attorney fees under CCP §1021.5 will be permitted when a party has prevailed in administrative proceedings. In National Parks & Conserv. Ass'n v County of Riverside (2000) 81 CA4th 234, 96 CR2d 576, the appellate court found that the trial court erred in awarding fees incurred by a plaintiff in litigating a challenge to an environmental impact report (EIR) because the litigation itself had not resulted in any significant benefit. The court noted, however, that previous administrative proceedings challenging the EIR might have resulted in such changes and that the plaintiffs might be entitled to fees expended in those proceedings. The court remanded the issue to the trial court for further consideration of the extent to which fees in an earlier administrative proceeding met the three-pronged test for recovery under CCP §1021.5. See also Hospital Sys., Inc. v Office of Statewide Health (1994) 25 CA4th 1686, 30 CR2d 922 (when administrative proceedings are "sufficiently entwined" with later litigation, fees incurred for administrative proceedings may be recovered under CCP §1021.5); Best v California Apprenticeship Council (1987) 193 CA3d 1448, 1459, 240 CR 1. But see Beach Colony II, Ltd. v California Coastal Comm'n (1985) 166 CA3d 106, 116, 212 CR 485 (statute's reference to fees incurred in any "action" suggests that fees are not authorized in quasi-judicial proceedings prior to litigation).

Fees awards in administrative proceedings that follow litigation were also found proper in Wallace v Consumers Coop. of Berkeley, Inc. (1985) 170 CA3d 836, 848, 216 CR 649. In Wallace, the court found that the later administrative action was inextricably intertwined with the legal action and that the prior action's settlement envisioned just such administrative proceedings. 170 CA3d at 548.

§26.74 K. Appellate court can determine or remand on applicability of CCP §1021.5

It is for the appellate court to decide which court, trial or appellate, is better equipped to make the initial determination of whether attorney fees are warranted under CCP §1021.5. Although the more common and perhaps better practice is to remand to the trial court for this determination, CCP §1021.5 does not require it. Laurel Heights Improvement Ass'n v Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1988) 47 C3d 376, 425, 253 CR 426 (appellate court properly granted motion for attorney fees and remanded to trial court to determine amount).

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.75 L. Appealability

A trial court's decision not to award attorney fees under CCP §1021.5 will not be reversed on appeal unless a prejudicial abuse of discretion is shown. Slayton v Pomona Unified Sch. Dist. (1984) 161 CA3d 538, 207 CR 705.

When the trial court awards attorney fees, the court determines the amount under CCP §1021.5 in accordance with the guidelines in Serrano v Priest (1977) 20 C3d 25, 141 CR 315. Slayton v Pomona Unified Sch. Dist., supra. In Slayton, plaintiffs, who were 12 parents and their children, obtained a peremptory writ in the trial court, prohibiting the school district and four administrators from violating the plaintiffs' rights under Ed C §§48900-48927, Cal Const art I, §2, and US Const amend I. The trial court did not award attorney fees. The appellate court reversed the trial court's denial of an award and remanded the case to the trial court to determine the amount of fees to be awarded because: (1) plaintiffs met each of the factors to be considered under CCP §1021.5, and (2) no reasonable basis for denying an award of fees appeared in the record. See also Washburn v City of Berkeley (1987) 195 CA3d 578, 586, 240 CR 784 (award upheld against challenge based on CC §47 privilege and claim that free expression was chilled by threat of fee award).

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.76 M. Procedure

Code of Civil Procedure §1021.5 provides that the court may award attorney fees on motion. See Marini v Municipal Court (1979) 99 CA3d 829, 160 CR 465. Under CCP §1021.5, a prevailing party is not entitled to expert witness fees in addition to attorney fees. Olson v Automobile Club of S. Cal. (2008) 42 C4th 1142, 74 CR3d 81.

A motion for fees under the private attorney general rule may be made after the judgment becomes final. United Firefighters v City of Los Angeles (1991) 231 CA3d 1576, 1584, 283 CR 8. An attorney fee motion is premature if an action is not yet resolved. Bullock v City & County of San Francisco (1990) 221 CA3d 1072, 1094, 271 CR 44.

A CCP §1021.5 motion must be made within the time limitations of Cal Rules of Ct 3.1702(b). Save Our Forest & Ranchlands v County of San Diego (1996) 50 CA4th 1757, 58 CR2d 708 (explaining 1994 change in prior law). But see Lee v Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2001) 88 CA4th 1187, 106 CR2d 726 (trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting motion under CCP §473 for relief from failure to submit untimely cost bill, including claims for attorney fees).

California Rules of Ct 3.1702 does not govern the time limit for seeking attorney fees for successfully litigating post-judgment motions in the trial court. Crespin v Shewry (2004) 125 CA4th 259, 22 CR3d 696 (award of attorney fees to plaintiff that successfully defended injunction against post-judgment challenges was proper). See also Carpenter v Jack in the Box Corp. (2007) 151 CA4th 454, 468, 59 CR3d 839 (time limits imposed by Cal Rules of Ct 3.1702 and 8.104 for filing motion for fees under CCP §425.16(c) do not begin to run until entry of judgment at conclusion of litigation).

It is for the appellate court to decide which court, trial or appellate, is better equipped to make the initial determination of whether attorney fees are warranted under CCP §1021.5. See §26.74.

Courts have generally been hesitant to find implied waiver of attorney fees under CCP §1021.5 in agreements that are silent on fees. In Zambrano v Oakland Unified Sch. Dist. (1991) 229 CA3d 802, 280 CR 454, the court held that plaintiff was entitled to recover fees for efforts expended in nonjudicial enforcement of a consent decree that provided for judicial enforcement but was silent on availability of fees for nonjudicial enforcement. See Rider v County of San Diego (1992) 11 CA4th 1410, 1422, 14 CR2d 885, holding that an action invalidating a sales tax gave rise to an entitlement to attorney fees under a common-fund theory, not under the private attorney general rule.

VIII. WHEN RECOVERY PROVIDED BY CONTRACT

§26.77 A. General interpretation of provisions

Contractual provisions for recovery of attorney fees by a prevailing party in the event of litigation are generally enforceable. CC §1717; CCP §1021; Wilson v Wilson (1960) 54 C2d 264, 5 CR 317. Code of Civil Procedure §1021 specifically authorizes contractual agreements for attorney fees. See generally California Attorney Fee Awards, chap 4 (3d ed Cal CEB 2010). Such clauses are upheld to prevent lessening the value of the successful party's judgment by the expense of obtaining it. See Hunt v Smyth (1972) 25 CA3d 807, 832, 101 CR 4. Courts have long given effect to reciprocal contractual provisions for attorney fees to the prevailing party in the event of litigation between the parties to the contract. See, e.g., Iverson v Spang Indus. (1975) 45 CA3d 303, 119 CR 399; Heidt v Miller Heating & Air Conditioning Co. (1969) 271 CA2d 135, 74 CR 695.

Contract clauses are not to be interpreted inflexibly, but must be reasonably interpreted and may be limited by sound public policy and equitable considerations. See Ecco-Phoenix Elec. Corp. v Howard J. White, Inc. (1969) 1 C3d 266, 272, 81 CR 849 (fee clause cannot be read literally to place liability for fees on one party regardless of who is responsible for litigation); Geffen v Moss (1975) 53 CA3d 215, 227, 125 CR 687 (neither party may recover fees if entire contract void as contrary to public policy). For a short discussion of recovery of fees when the contract is invalid, see Attorney Fee Awards, chap 4.

Civil Code §1717 provides a reciprocal right to attorney fees when the contract provides the right to any party. Even when CC §1717 does not apply, the court may enforce an agreement under CCP §1021 because the parties can usually agree to attorney fee awards. Palmer v Shawback (1993) 17 CA4th 296, 299, 21 CR2d 575.

§26.78 B. No waiver of attorney fees

Attorney fees under CC §1717 (reciprocal right to attorney fees when contract provides fees to any party) in connection with contracts entered into after January 1, 1995, the effective date of the code section, may not be waived. CC §1717(a).

§26.79 C. Fee award provision applies to entire contract

Civil Code §1717 provides that a fee award provision in a contract is construed as applying to the entire contract unless each party was represented by counsel in the negotiation and execution of the contract, and unless the fact of that representation is specified in the contract. CC §1717(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.80 D. Retroactivity of amendments

An amendment to CC §1717 after the date of the contract was held to apply to current litigation because statutes increasing or decreasing litigation costs are applied to pending matters regardless of the absence of retroactivity language. Harbor View Hills Community Ass'n v Torley (1992) 5 CA4th 343, 347, 7 CR2d 96.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/26 Recovering Attorney Fees/§26.81 E. Both sides benefit from provisions

§26.81 E. Both sides benefit from provisions

When a contractual provision provides for fees to only one party to the contract, CC §1717 extends the provision to benefit the other side. Scott Co. v Blount, Inc. (1999) 20 C4th 1103, 1109, 86 CR2d 614. Civil Code §1717(a) provides, in part:

- In any action on a contract, when the contract specifically provides that attorney fees and costs, which are incurred to enforce that contract, shall be awarded either to one of the parties or to the prevailing party, then the party who is determined to be the party prevailing on the contract, whether he or she is the party specified in the contract or not, shall be entitled to reasonable attorney fees in addition to other costs.
- When a contract provides for attorney fees, as set forth above, that provision shall be construed as applying to the entire contract, unless each party was represented by counsel in the negotiation and execution of the contract, and the fact of that representation is specified in the contract.
- Reasonable attorney fees shall be fixed by the court, and shall be an element of the costs of suit.
- The reciprocity of CC §1717 applies only to contractual provisions that allow recovery of attorney fees in actions to enforce the contract. Thus, in Southern Pac. Thrift & Loan Ass'n v Savings Ass'n Mortgage Co. (1999) 70 CA4th 634, 82 CR2d 874, the court held that a party's right to recover attorney fees as an element of indemnified costs under an indemnity contract was not "a provision for attorneys' fees in an action to enforce the contract," and was therefore not made reciprocal by §1717. See also Campbell v Scripps Bank (2000) 78 CA4th 1328, 93 CR2d 635.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.82 F. Purpose of CC §1717

Civil Code §1717 is part of an overall legislative policy designed to prevent oppressive use of attorney fees clauses and to enable consumers and others who may be in an unequal contractual bargaining position to protect their rights through the judicial process by permitting recovery of attorney fees incurred in litigation in the event they prevail. See M. Perez Co. v Base Camp Condominiums Ass'n (2003) 111 CA4th 456, 3 CR3d 563; California Wholesale Material Supply, Inc. v Norm Wilson & Sons, Inc. (2002) 96 CA4th 598, 117 CR2d 390; Reynolds Metals Co. v Alperson (1979) 25 C3d 124, 158 CR 1.

Civil Code §1717 applies to business entities as well as to individuals. ABF Capital Corp. v Grove Prop. Co. (2005) 126 CA4th 204, 23 CR3d 803. The statute applies to contracts executed before January 1, 1969, the effective date of the statute. System Inv. Corp. v Union Bank (1971) 21 CA3d 137, 163, 98 CR 735; Coast Bank v Holmes (1971) 19 CA3d 581, 593, 97 CR 30. For a thorough decision of the history, background, and purpose of §1717, see Sears v Baccaglio (1998) 60 CA4th 1136, 1143, 70 CR2d 769.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/26 Recovering Attorney Fees/§26.83 G. Applies to reciprocal fee clauses

§26.83 G. Applies to reciprocal fee clauses

The statute also applies to reciprocal fee clauses, i.e., clauses benefiting the prevailing party. CC §1717(a). The applicability of CC §1717 and its decisional law to reciprocal fee contracts is important, for example, in determining persons entitled to and liable for fee awards, and the procedures available for making a fee claim.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.84 H. Applicability of CC §1717 to contracts with comprehensive or limited fee clauses

Under CC §1717, contractual provisions that limit attorney fees to specific amounts will be upheld but made reciprocal. Reynolds Metals Co. v Alperson (1979) 25 C3d 124, 128, 158 CR 1 (reciprocal remedy of attorney fees to prevailing nonsignatory defendant sued on contract by signatory plaintiff who would have been entitled to attorney fees had plaintiff prevailed). See also California Wholesale Material Supply, Inc. v Norm Wilson & Sons, Inc. (2002) 96 CA4th 598, 117 CR2d 390 (awarding attorney fees to prevailing signatory defendant in suit on subcontract by nonsignatory plaintiff who would have been entitled to attorney fees had plaintiff prevailed). Civil Code §1717 does not, however, permit contracting parties to limit an attorney fee clause to specific types of actions or to certain contractual provisions. Instead, CC §1717(a) states that a contractual provision for attorney fees will apply to the entire contract. Harbor View Hills Community Ass'n v Torley (1992) 5 CA4th 343, 346, 7 CR2d 96.

In Bruckman v Parliament Escrow Corp. (1987) 190 CA3d 1051, 235 CR 813, the court held that a real estate vendor was entitled to attorney fees under CC §1717 as the prevailing party in an action for negligence and breach of contract. The court held that a provision in the escrow agreement by which the parties to the escrow would indemnify the escrow holder was reciprocal to those parties if they prevailed in the action. See also California Teachers Ass'n v Governing Bd. (1984) 161 CA3d 393, 207 CR 659.

An unsettled issue is the extent to which the right to recover fees extends to actions for damages in tort. The California Supreme Court has held that a tort action for fraud, while arising from the contract, is not an action "on the contract" within the meaning of CC §1717. Stout v Turney (1978) 22 C3d 718, 730, 150 CR 637. However, fees have been awarded under §1717 in cases in which a party defends causes of action sounding in tort while seeking to enforce the contract when the court finds that such defenses were necessarily incurred in attempting to enforce the contract. See Wagner v Benson (1980) 101 CA3d 27, 37, 161 CR 516. Moreover, joinder of tort and contract causes of action do not dilute the right to attorney fees.

The trial court need not apportion fees incurred in connection with an issue common to both causes of action. Bruckman v Parliament Escrow Corp., supra. For further discussion, see California Attorney Fee Awards, chap 4 (3d ed Cal CEB 2010).

It appears to be possible for a party to recover fees in a tort action based solely on contractual authority under CCP §1021 and not under CC §1717. See Xuereb v Marcus & Millichap, Inc. (1992) 3 CA4th 1338, 5 CR2d 154 (prevailing party in tort action on real estate sale recovered attorney fees provided for in purchase agreement, not under CC §1717 but under CCP §1021, which provides that parties may agree to attorney fees in any litigation between themselves), disapproved on other grounds in Damian v Tamondong (1998) 65 CA4th 1115, 1127 n13, 77 CR2d 262. See also Skyway Aviation, Inc. v Troyer (1983) 147 CA3d 604, 611, 195 CR 281 (attorney fees awarded in negligence action in connection with enforcement of express contractual promise to pay for all damages caused by defendant's negligence). See Attorney Fee Awards, chap 4.

I. Examples of typical actions under CC §1717

§26.85 1. Express or implied warranties

In typical fee clauses, an action for breach of either express or implied warranties is an action on a contract within the meaning of CC §1717. A & M Produce Co. v FMC Corp. (1982) 135 CA3d 473, 495, 186 CR 114; Schoolcraft v Ross (1978) 81 CA3d 75, 80, 146 CR 57.

Assuming that the duty involved is embraced by the fee clause, an award may be made on any action, legal or equitable in nature, regardless of whether the remedy sought would affirm or disaffirm the contract, unless perhaps the parties clearly agreed otherwise. See, e.g., Reynolds Metals Co. v Alperson (1979) 25 C3d 124, 129, 158 CR 1 (damages); Star Pac. Inv. v Oro Hills Ranch, Inc. (1981) 121 CA3d 447, 460, 176 CR 546 (rescission); System Inv. Corp. v Union Bank (1971) 21 CA3d 137, 163, 98 CR 735 (equitable relief).

§26.86 2. When case includes cause of action for which award of fees not proper

If a party prevails on a cause of action for which a fee award is proper, but there is another cause of action for which it is not, because the cause of action was not "on the contract," the fees should be apportioned and awarded only on the former cause of action, unless the fees were incurred in connection with an issue common to both causes. Reynolds Metals Co. v Alperson (1979) 25 C3d 124, 129, 158 CR 1. See Korech v Hornwood (1997) 58 CA4th 1412, 1422, 68 CR2d 637; Perry v Robertson (1988) 201 CA3d 333, 341, 247 CR 74 (tort and contract causes of action joined and neither remedy elected during trial); Bruckman v Parliament Escrow Corp. (1987) 190 CA3d 1051, 235 CR 813. If the issues are not common to both causes of action and no apportionment is possible, recovery will be denied. McKenzie v Kaiser-Aetna (1976) 55 CA3d 84, 88, 127 CR 275.

Usually, a party is entitled to CC §1717 fees only if the action is one on contract rather than on noncontract theory, such as fraud. Star Pac. Inv. v Oro Hills Ranch, Inc. (1981) 121 CA3d 447, 460, 176 CR 546 (action for fraud arising from contract is not action on contract within meaning of §1717).

When a plaintiff brings a case on both fraud and contract theories and elects to recover on the fraud cause of action, there will be no recovery of attorney fees. Las Palmas Assocs. v Las Palmas Ctr. Assocs. (1991) 235 CA3d 1220, 1259, 1 CR2d 301 (but attorney fees permitted to defend declaratory relief cross-action arising from same contract). See also Korech v Hornwood, supra (plaintiff prevailed on mechanic's lien claim but defendant prevailed on contract claim; defendant held to be prevailing party); Xuereb v Marcus & Millichap, Inc. (1992) 3 CA4th 1338, 5 CR2d 154 (prevailing party in tort action on real estate sale recovered attorney fees provided for in purchase agreement, not under CC §1717 but under CCP §1021, which provides that parties may agree to attorney fees in any litigation between themselves), disapproved on other grounds in Damien v Tamondong (1998) 65 CA4th 1115, 1127 n13, 77 CR2d 262. On election of remedies, see Perry v Robertson, supra, in which the court held that, when the plaintiff brought an action in both tort and contract and did not elect either remedy at any point during the trial, she preserved her right to seek attorney fees on the contract by bringing a postverdict motion.

When the action is one for fraud arising from a contract to buy land and when the contract provides for attorney fees for any action arising from the agreement, attorney fees are properly awarded. Lerner v Ward (1993) 13 CA4th 155, 160, 16 CR2d 486. When the action is for fraud and for rescission, and plaintiff recovers on the rescission claim, attorney fees are recoverable because they are based on the contract. Super 7 Motel Assocs. v Wang (1993) 16 CA4th 541, 549, 20 CR2d 193.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.87 3. If contract illegal

Attorney fees are not recoverable in a contract action when the successful defense is based on unenforceability owing to illegality. Bovard v American Horse Enters. (1988) 201 CA3d 832, 843, 247 CR 340. Attorney fees may be properly awarded, however, when the contract action is successfully defended because of lack of an enforceable contract on grounds other than illegality. See Torrey Pines Bank v Hoffman (1991) 231 CA3d 308, 321, 282 CR 354 (defendants entitled to both trial and appellate attorney fees on contract found to be unenforceable); Rosen v Robert P. Warmington Co. (1988) 201 CA3d 939, 247 CR 635.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.88 4. Eviction or unlawful detainer

In Drybread v Chipain Chiropractic Corp. (2007) 151 CA4th 1063, 60 CR3d 580, the sublessee was entitled to attorney fees under a clause in the sublease despite sublessors' voluntary dismissal of the unlawful detainer action. The court found that the unlawful detainer action sounded in tort; therefore, CC §1717(b)(2), which bars fees if a contract claim is voluntarily dismissed, did not apply. But see Mitchell Land & Improvement Co. v Ristorante Ferrantelli, Inc. (2007) 158 CA4th 479, 488, 70 CR3d 9 (unlawful detainer action sounded in contract; CC §1717(b)(2) barred fees).

The court in Beeman v Burling (1990) 216 CA3d 1586, 1608, 265 CR 719, held that the attorney fees provision in a tenant's lease gave rise to CC §1717 fees in his successful wrongful eviction case springing from a rent control ordinance violation. The court found that the action was fundamentally based on the lease and on the landlord's interference with the tenants' right to occupy the premises.

In Mitchell v Exhibition Foods, Inc. (1986) 184 CA3d 1033, 229 CR 535, defendants in an unlawful detainer action cross-complained for specific performance of a new lease based on a right of first refusal provision in their original lease. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's award of fees to defendants under the attorney fees provision in the new lease. The court held that the judgment established that the new lease was effective between the parties, so that the fees provision in that lease applied to the action.

In North Assocs. v Bell (1986) 184 CA3d 860, 229 CR 305, plaintiff lessor was entitled to attorney fees although the trial court found that the original lease, on which plaintiff based his action and which contained an attorney fees provision, had expired and a new lease without such a provision had become effective. Under CC §1717, if one party would be entitled to fees under a contract if he or she prevailed, the other party would be entitled to attorney fees even if the contract is found to be invalid, terminated, or nonexistent. The court held that defendant would have been entitled to attorney fees had he prevailed because he claimed extensions under the original lease; plaintiff was thus also entitled to attorney fees because he ultimately prevailed in the action.

§26.89 5. Promissory note

In Ganey v Doran (1987) 191 CA3d 901, 236 CR 787, the prevailing party in a suit on a promissory note was entitled to attorney fees based on the fees provision in the underlying sales contract. The court noted the general rule that several papers relating to the same subject matter (such as note, mortgage, and agreement of sale) constitute one contract when they are part of the same transaction. See also Niederer v Ferreira (1987) 189 CA3d 1485, 234 CR 779 (guarantor on promissory note that contained attorney fees provision effectively agreed to pay attorney fees if there was a suit against him on note even though guaranty did not provide for payment of fees).

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.90 6. When contract found unenforceable as to a party

The prevailing party is entitled to fees when the contract is found unenforceable as to that party if the opposing party has alleged entitlement to fees under the agreement. The contract in question, however, must actually contain a fee clause; "[t]he mere allegation is not enough." M. Perez Co. v Base Camp Condominiums Ass'n (2003) 111 CA4th 456, 468, 3 CR3d 563. A party is similarly entitled to fees against one who is not a signatory to the agreement if the nonsignatory originally alleged an entitlement to fees under the agreement, but only if the contract actually would have entitled the nonsignatory to recover fees. Leach v Home Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1986) 185 CA3d 1295, 1305, 230 CR 553.

NOTE: In M. Perez Co. v Base Camp, supra, the Third District Court of Appeal rejected its own reasoning in International Billing Servs. v Emigh (2000) 84 CA4th 1175, 101 CR 2d 532. In International Billing Servs., the court held that a party need only allege entitlement to attorney fees to be able to recover them. In M. Perez the court decided instead that the mere allegation of entitlement to attorney fees is not enough to support a fee award. The contract must actually provide for recovery of attorney fees by the prevailing party. 11 CA4th at 467. In Blickman Turkus LP v MF Downtown Sunnyvale, LLC (2008) 162 CA4th 858, 899, 76 CR3d 325, the Sixth District Court of Appeal held that the party claiming attorney fees must establish that the opposing party would have been entitled to fees if that party had been the prevailing party. See Leach, 185 CA3d at 307.

§26.91 7. In case of arbitration

When a contract contains both arbitration and attorney fees clauses, the arbitrator may award fees to the prevailing party. Tate v Saratoga Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1989) 216 CA3d 843, 856, 265 CR 440; Taranow v Brokstein (1982) 135 CA3d 662, 185 CR 532.

When a party's entitlement to attorney fees is within the scope of issues submitted for binding arbitration, the arbitrator's decision to award or not to award fees is not subject to review, even when it is premised on an erroneous reading of the law. Moore v First Bank of San Luis Obispo (2000) 22 C4th 782, 94 CR2d 603 (fees denied); Taylor v Van-Catlin Constr. (2005) 130 CA4th 1061, 1068, 30 CR3d 690 (fees awarded); Pierotti v Torian (2000) 81 CA4th 17, 96 CR2d 553 (fees denied).

The prevailing parties in postarbitration judicial proceedings are entitled to recover their attorney fees for those proceedings under CCP §1293.2. Marcus & Millichap Real Estate Inv. Brokerage Co. v Woodman Inv. Group (2005) 129 CA4th 508, 28 CR3d 584 (award of costs per §1293.2, including attorney fees when authorized by contract, is mandatory).

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.92 8. If lawyer chooses to litigate in propria persona

In an action to enforce a contract containing an attorney fee provision, a lawyer who chooses to litigate in propria persona, rather than retain another attorney to represent him or her, may not recover attorney fees under CC §1717. Trope v Katz (1995) 11 C4th 274, 277, 45 CR2d 241. Self-represented attorneys are also not entitled to sanctions in the form of attorney fees. Musaelian v Adams (2009) 45 C4th 512, 87 CR3d 475.

When a corporation chooses to be represented in litigation by its in-house attorneys, however, it may recover attorney fees based on the number of hours reasonably expended by its in-house counsel. PLCM Group, Inc. v Drexler (2000) 22 C4th 1084, 95 CR2d 198. Similarly, two law firms that hire each other to sue their former client for attorney fees may recover such fees under CC §1717. Farmers Ins. Exch. v Law Offices of Conrado Joe Sayas, Jr., Esq. (9th Cir 2001) 250 F3d 1234.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.93 9. If prevailing party's fees paid by insurance carrier

That a prevailing party's fees were paid by an insurance carrier does not preclude an award of fees under CC §1717. Staples v Hoefke (1987) 189 CA3d 1397, 1409, 235 CR 165. Compare Staples with Bramalea Cal. Inc. v Reliable Interiors, Inc. (2004) 119 CA4th 468, 14 CR3d 302 (attorney fees paid by insurance not recoverable through indemnity claim).

J. Fees awarded to party prevailing on contract

§26.94 1. Court determines

The court will determine the party prevailing on the contract regardless of whether the suit proceeds to final judgment. CC §1717(b)(1). As a general rule, the party who obtains judgment is deemed the prevailing party, but the form of the judgment is not controlling. Lewis v Alpha Beta Co. (1983) 141 CA3d 29, 189 CR 840.

In deciding whether a party prevailed on the contract, the trial court is to compare the relief awarded on the contract claim with the party's demand on that claim and the party's litigation objectives; the determination is to be made only on a final resolution of the contract claims and only by comparing the extent to which each party has succeeded and failed in its contentions. Scott Co. v Blount, Inc. (1999) 20 C4th 1103, 1109, 86 CR2d 614 (prevailing plaintiff sought more than $2 million but was awarded only $442,054 in damages); Hsu v Abbara (1995) 9 C4th 863, 876, 39 CR2d 824; Mustachio v Great W. Bank (1996) 48 CA4th 1145, 1150, 56 CR2d 33. See also Estate of Drummond (2007) 149 CA4th 46, 51, 56 CR3d 691 (dismissal of petition filed in wrong forum only "interim victory" and neither party prevailed on contract). But see Turner v Schultz (2009) 175 CA4th 974, 979, 96 CR3d 659 (party entitled to attorney fees after successfully defending suit to stay arbitration under contract, even though merits of underlying matter not yet determined).

The trial court may award attorney fees incurred on appeal, even if the appellate court orders both parties to bear their own appellate costs. Butler-Rupp v Lourdeaux (2007) 154 CA4th 918, 924, 65 CR3d 242.

Equitable considerations. Equitable principles govern the award of contractual attorney fees. See Sears v Baccaglio (1998) 60 CA4th 1136, 1150, 70 CR2d 769 (whether party has prevailed under CC §1717 involves "equitable consideration of who should fairly be regarded as the winner"); Pirkig v Dennis (1989) 215 CA3d 1560, 1566, 264 CR 494 (plaintiff prevailed even though offsets from prior settlements resulted in no net recovery); Hsu v Abbara (1995) 9 C4th 863, 877, 39 CR2d 824 (prevailing party determination is based on comparison of what was sought with what was gained).

Discretion of court. It is within the trial court's discretion to determine which party has prevailed; its finding will not be reversed on appeal unless a clear abuse of discretion is shown. Scott Co. v Blount, Inc. (1999) 20 C4th 1103, 86 CR2d 614; Smith v Krueger (1983) 150 CA3d 752, 198 CR 174 (trial court abused discretion in denying fees to party that prevailed in action to declare invalid acceleration provision in deed of trust). A de novo standard of review does not apply to the issue of entitlement to attorney fees unless pure questions of law are presented. Agnew v State Bd. of Equalization (2005) 134 CA4th 899, 910, 36 CR3d 464 (whether court abused its discretion in finding Tax Board's position was "not substantially justified" under Rev & T C §7156 did not involve questions of law, and thus de novo review not warranted).

Mixed result cases. The trial court's discretion to make a determination of the prevailing party is broad in cases that render mixed results. See, e.g., Jackson v Homeowners Ass'n Monte Vista Estates-East (2001) 93 CA4th 773, 788, 113 CR2d 363 (no clear win by either side, but court was within its equitable discretion in awarding plaintiff unit owners fees even when they were not entitled to any relief or damages).

Definition of prevailing party under CC §1717(b)(1). The party prevailing on the contract is the party who recovered greater relief in the action on the contract except when (1) the action has been voluntarily dismissed or dismissed under a settlement (in which event there is no prevailing party) (CC §1717(b)(2)), or (2) defendant tenders the full amount owed to plaintiff and meets certain other requirements (CC §1717(b)(2)). See CC §1717(b)(1) (the "party prevailing on the contract shall be the party who recovered a greater relief in the action on the contract"). For example, in a fraud action under a real estate contract, plaintiff received a judgment in its favor for $834,900. Defendant was successful in a partial appeal that sought a reduction in the amount of emotional distress damages and punitive damages. The court of appeal rejected defendant's argument that it was the prevailing party simply because it had prevailed on appeal and affirmed the trial court's determination that the plaintiff was the prevailing party on the contract under CC §1717 because plaintiff received a judgment in its favor. Snyder v Marcus & Millichap (1996) 46 CA4th 1099, 54 CR2d 268.

The court also has the power to determine that neither party has prevailed on the contract for purposes of CC §1717. CC §1717(b)(1). See Hsu v Abbara (1995) 9 C4th 863, 875, 39 CR2d 824 (and cases cited); Nasser v Superior Court (1984) 156 CA3d 52, 202 CR 552 (in declaratory relief action, court of appeal affirmed trial court ruling that neither party prevailed because lessee was forced to pay rental amount higher than requested and higher than previously offered, although the 3-year option to renew was validated). A prevailing party is not entitled to fees simply because the opposing party requested them. Hasler v Howard (2005) 130 CA4th 1168, 1171, 30 CR3d 714 (fee award reversed; unlike Hsu, alleged contract in Hasler did not entitle either party to fees, regardless of who prevailed).

The statutory definition of "prevailing party" under CC §1717 is mandatory and cannot be changed by contract. See Exxess Electronixx v Heger Realty Corp. (1998) 64 CA4th 698, 707, 75 CR2d 376. The determination of the prevailing party is normally dispositive, regardless of that party's misbehavior. Deane Gardenhome Ass'n v Denktas (1993) 13 CA4th 1394, 1398, 16 CR2d 816. A writ proceeding, however, is not a final judgment for determination of who is the prevailing party. 580 Folsom Assocs. v Prometheus Dev. Co. (1990) 223 CA3d 1, 29, 272 CR 227.

In People ex rel Cooper v Mitchell Bros. Santa Ana Theater (1985) 165 CA3d 378, 211 CR 501, the court held that it was proper to deny attorney fees to plaintiff when he prevailed on only one of 20 issues raised on appeal and defendant prevailed on four issues. But see Buck v Barb (1983) 147 CA3d 920, 926, 195 CR 461, in which the court noted that the fact that a party recovers less than the amount prayed for in an action under a contract does not make the adversary the prevailing party within the meaning of CC §1717.

Effect of CCP §998. Acceptance of an offer of compromise under CCP §998 that is silent on costs or attorney fees does not preclude recovery of fees as cost items under CC §1717 after judgment was entered on the compromise agreement. Lanyi v Goldblum (1986) 177 CA3d 181, 223 CR 32. Costs and attorney fees are incidental to the judgment unless expressly part of the judgment. Engle v Copenbarger & Copenbarger, LLP (2007) 157 CA4th 165, 169, 68 CR3d 461. Although CCP §998 provides that a written offer to compromise must include "a statement of the offer, containing the terms and conditions of the judgment or award," an offer to compromise will exclude fees only if it expressly excludes them. 157 CA4th at 169.

Tort actions based on contract. The court will decide whether, in any particular case, a written contract provides for attorney fees to the prevailing party in a tort action. Gil v Mansano (2004) 121 CA4th 739, 17 CR3d 420. In Gil, the plaintiff sued defendant for fraud and defendant successfully asserted a written release in defense. Because the release was narrowly drawn to provide for fees only when an action was brought to enforce the terms of the release, defendant's defensive assertion of the release did not entitle him to fees. 121 CA4th at 745. If the attorney fees language is sufficiently broad, however, the court may allow recovery of fees when the contract is used successfully to defend a tort action. See Thompson v Miller (2003) 112 CA4th 327, 336, 4 CR3d 905 (fees awarded to defendant who successfully asserted defense based on representations contained in stock purchase agreement that provided for award of attorney fees to prevailing party in "any dispute under" the agreement).

§26.95 2. If damages awarded on causes of action not on contract

In an action that seeks relief in addition to that based on contract, if the party prevailing on the contract has damages awarded against it on causes of action not on the contract, CC §1717(c) provides that the amounts awarded to the prevailing party under CC §1717 must be deducted from any damages awarded in favor of the party who did not prevail on the contract. If the amount awarded under §1717 exceeds the amount of damages awarded to the party not prevailing on the contract, the net amount must be awarded to the party prevailing on the contract.

However, when various common issues are tried concurrently and the tort issues litigated are determinative of the contract claims, it is within the court's discretion to award attorney fees incurred in litigating those common issues. Erickson v R.E.M. Concepts, Inc. (2005) 126 CA4th 1073, 25 CR3d 39.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.96 3. When cross-complaint

Attorney fees for "costs of collection" properly encompass attorney fees incurred in defending against a cross-complaint in the same action. See Finalco, Inc. v Roosevelt (1991) 235 CA3d 1301, 1306, 3 CR2d 865; Boyd v Oscar Fisher Co. (1989) 210 CA3d 368, 378, 258 CR 473 (cross-complainant was impliedly held to be prevailing party on contract theory when only contractual theory was submitted to jury on cross-complaint and when no specific findings were made concerning tort or contract character of award).

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.97 4. When no prevailing party

Under CC §1717(b)(2), when an action is voluntarily dismissed or dismissed under a "settlement of the case," there is no prevailing party for purposes of CC §1717. In Share v Casiano Bel-Air Homeowners' Ass'n (1989) 215 CA3d 515, 524, 263 CR 753, plaintiffs brought a contempt proceeding to enforce a consent judgment concerning covenants, codes, and restrictions (CC&Rs). During the contempt proceeding, the parties entered into a stipulated order. The court held that the exception of §1717(b)(2) did not apply to a stipulated order reserving contempt issues, because there was no dismissal of the case, and that attorney fees under §1717 were thus available for efforts in enforcing the stipulated order. The court also held that §1717 applied in the contempt proceeding to enforce the consent judgment, because the broad attorney fees clause in the CC&Rs provided for such an award of fees to the prevailing party in any proceeding to enforce the CC&Rs.

Dismissal of an action with prejudice at the plaintiff's request under former CCP §581(5) (now CCP §581(e)) after the commencement of trial is a voluntary dismissal, precluding an award of attorney fees under CC §1717. D & J, Inc. v Ferro Corp. (1986) 176 CA3d 1191, 222 CR 656.

Plaintiff's request to voluntarily dismiss an action and thereby avoid liability for fees under CC §1717(b)(2) has been broadly interpreted. In Rosen v Robert P. Warmington Co. (1988) 201 CA3d 939, 247 CR 635, plaintiff secured an involuntary dismissal through a judgment on the pleadings with respect to plaintiff's contract cause of action. The contract contained a fee clause. Plaintiff then voluntarily dismissed the remaining nonfee claims and, hence, the action as a whole. The court rejected defendant's claim that it was entitled to fees because of having prevailed on the contract cause of action. The court held that §1717(b)(2) precludes an award of fees when the action was "voluntarily dismissed." A dismissal for failure to prosecute, however, may render the defendant the prevailing party. Elms v Builders Disbursements, Inc. (1991) 232 CA3d 671, 283 CR 515.

In Santisas v Goodin (1998) 17 C4th 599, 71 CR2d 830, the supreme court addressed the issue of voluntary dismissal and held that a defendant in a contract action is the prevailing party, in the contract sense, when a plaintiff voluntarily dismisses the action against the defendant without a settlement. The Santisas court, however, held that §1717 precluded the defendant from recovering attorney fees on the contract claim but ruled that the prevailing defendant could recover attorney fees on tort claims under the contract's attorney fees provision because they were not precluded by §1717. See Damian v Tamondong (1998) 65 CA4th 1115, 1127, 77 CR2d 262 (limiting the holding in Santisas to situations in which parties assert a contractually based right to recover attorney fees, so as to bring the case within the scope of §1717). See also Drybread v Chipain Chiropractic Corp. (2007) 151 CA4th 1063, 60 CR3d 580 (unlawful detainer action sounded in tort, therefore §1717 did not apply and defendant was entitled to fees under provisions of sublease). But see Mitchell Land & Improvement Co. v Ristorante Ferrantelli, Inc. (2007) 158 CA4th 479, 488, 70 CR3d 9 (unlawful detainer action sounded in contract; §1717 applied).

A settlement agreement that calls for a voluntary dismissal of the action will also not preclude recovery of fees if disputes over fee issues have been expressly reserved by the parties for resolution by the court. Jackson v Homeowners Ass'n Monte Vista Estates-East (2001) 93 CA4th 773, 113 CR2d 363.

Although a voluntary dismissal of an action may terminate the dismissed party's right to contractual attorney fees under CC §1717, it does not necessarily preclude a party's rights to fees under statutes authorizing them. See, e.g., Del Cerro Mobile Estates v Proffer (2001) 87 CA4th 943, 105 CR2d 5 (dismissal of action by plaintiff prevented recovery of fees by defendant under CC §1717, but did not preclude defendant's right to recover fees under the Mobilehome Residency Law, CC §798). Further case examples include: Graciano v Robinson Ford Sales, Inc. (2006) 144 CA4th 140, 50 CR3d 273 (plaintiff, who settled with auto seller, was entitled to attorney fees under Automobile Sales Finance Act (CC §2981) and Consumers Legal Remedies Act (CC §1750) as prevailing party); Donner Mgmt. Co. v Schaffer (2006) 142 CA4th 1296, 48 CR3d 534 (Corp C §800 provides statutory basis for attorney fees in shareholder derivative suits; director was prevailing party when shareholders dismissed suit without prejudice).

§26.98 5. Award on appeal

A trial court has jurisdiction to award statutorily authorized attorney fees to a prevailing party on appeal, even if the court of appeal did not explicitly award such fees in either its opinion or its remittitur. MST Farms v C.G. 1464 (1988) 204 CA3d 304, 251 CR 72 (fees awarded under CC §1717). However, in this context, "the distinction between a contractual and a statutory right to attorney fees … is now meaningless," since CCP §1033.5 was amended in 1990 to provide that "costs" include attorney fees when authorized by contract, statute, or law. CCP §1033.5(a)(10). Harbour Landing-Dolfann, Ltd. v Anderson (1996) 48 CA4th 260, 264, 55 CR2d 640.

§26.99 6. When multiple agreements

Under CC §1642, when there are several contracts between the parties relating to the same subject and transaction, the contracts must be considered together. In this situation, the court normally awards attorney fees as long as the action sued on is one arising largely from the contract containing the attorney fee clause. Whether the contracts are intended to be elements of a single transaction is a question of fact. If they are not so intended, the fact that one contract has an attorney fee clause will not give rise to attorney fees on actions concerning other contracts. Pilcher v Wheeler (1992) 2 CA4th 352, 3 CR2d 533. But see Republic Bank v Marine Nat'l Bank (1996) 45 CA4th 919, 921, 53 CR2d 90 (sublease incorporated by reference terms and conditions of master lease, including attorney fees clause).

The court in Hunt v Fahnestock (1990) 220 CA3d 628, 269 CR 614, held that, when an action is brought on several contracts, attorney fees may be awarded to the prevailing party on each contract, whether or not that party prevailed overall.

K. Only a party under CC §1717 awarded fees

§26.100 1. Guidelines ambiguous

Civil Code §1717 allows an award of fees to a "party" in an action on a contract, "whether he or she is the party specified in the contract or not." CC §1717(a). Whether a litigant is a party for purposes of §1717 is not always easy to determine, and case law provides ambiguous guidelines. Simply being a party to litigation that in some way involves a contract containing a fee clause is not necessarily synonymous with being a party under §1717. For example, in Citizens Sav. & Loan Ass'n v Khoury (1978) 84 CA3d 244, 148 CR 529, a buyer of real property in a successful action for specific performance was not entitled to fees under §1717, because the only contractual provisions for attorney fees allowed for payment of such fees to the broker or escrow holder, neither of whom was a party to the action.

In Chapple v Big Bear Super Mkt. No. 3 (1980) 108 CA3d 867, 167 CR 103, plaintiff property owner obtained judgment, which included a fee award against defendants, a contractor and real estate broker, but the court of appeal held that the award of fees against the broker was improper because the broker's liability was not based on the contract but on breach of a fiduciary duty to plaintiff that was outside the scope of the contract.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.101 2. If noncontracting party involved

Whether a noncontracting party is entitled to fees was discussed in Reynolds Metals Co. v Alperson (1979) 25 C3d 124, 158 CR 1. In Reynolds, a creditor unsuccessfully sued the shareholders of a bankrupt corporation on a promissory note even though they were not parties to the contract. The court held that under the mutuality provision of CC §1717, they were entitled to fees just as the plaintiff would have been if successful in enforcing a contract. See also Exarhos v Exarhos (2008) 159 CA4th 898, 72 CR3d 409 (decedent's successor in interest was entitled to fees); California Wholesale Material Supply, Inc. v Norm Wilson & Sons, Inc. (2002) 96 CA4th 598, 117 CR2d 390 (awarding attorney fees to prevailing signatory defendant in suit on subcontract by nonsignatory plaintiff who would have been entitled to attorney fees had plaintiff prevailed).

Reynolds was distinguished in Artesia Med. Dev. Co. v Regency Assocs. (1989) 214 CA3d 957, 963, 266 CR 657, in which a lessor, instead of bringing an action on a contract, brought an unlawful detainer action to recover possession from an illegal assignee of the lease. Because it found the assignment to be null and void, the court held that the assignee was neither a party to the contract with the lessor nor in privity with any party to a contract, and that the assignee thus could not recover attorney fees, even when it ultimately had been declared the prevailing party by the trial court. See also Loduca v Polyzos (2007) 153 CA4th 334, 62 CR3d 780 (plaintiff property owner, third party beneficiary under construction contract, entitled to recover fees as prevailing party in suit against subcontractor); Sessions Payroll Mgmt., Inc. v Noble Constr. Co. (2000) 84 CA4th 671, 101 CR2d 127 (defendant that had not prevailed on claim that it was third party beneficiary under contract containing attorney fees provision could not recover fees from plaintiff).

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.102 a. Real estate broker

In some instances, a real estate broker may be entitled to attorney fees even though he or she is not a signatory to the agreement for attorney fees. See Steve Schmidt & Co. v Berry (1986) 183 CA3d 1299, 228 CR 689 (real estate broker entitled to attorney fees under CC §1717 in action against seller for share of commission even though broker did not sign original listing agreement, which provided for attorney fees to prevailing party).

§26.103 b. Competing lienholders to property

Civil Code §1717 was held not to apply in a case between competing lienholders to a parcel of property, because attorney fee provisions were in separate deeds of trust and there was no privity between the parties under which a court could imply a reciprocal right to attorney fees. Clar v Cacciola (1987) 193 CA3d 1032, 238 CR 726.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.104 c. Action to remove cloud on title to trust property

In Leach v Home Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1986) 185 CA3d 1295, 230 CR 553, a beneficiary of a testamentary trust brought an action to remove a cloud on the title to trust property. Defendant lenders, whose lien on the property secured loans made to the trustee, were the prevailing parties. The court held that the lenders were not entitled to fees against the trustee based on the attorney fee provisions in the loan agreements, because plaintiff did not sign the loan agreements and would have had no contractual or statutory right to receive fees if she had prevailed.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.105 d. Property conveyed to third person

A third person to whom property was conveyed after the seller entered into a contract containing a fees clause with the plaintiff was not a party to the contract and was not liable for plaintiff's attorney fees in an action for specific performance against the seller and third person. Glynn v Marquette (1984) 152 CA3d 277, 199 CR 306.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/26 Recovering Attorney Fees/§26.106 e. Recovery of fees when lender does not sign subcontract

§26.106 e. Recovery of fees when lender does not sign subcontract

Attorney fees cannot be recovered by a subcontractor from a construction lender when the lender did not sign the subcontracts containing the fees clause. That the lender foreclosed and became the legal owner of the property did not imply that it assumed any contractual obligations. Wilson's Heating & Air Conditioning v Wells Fargo Bank (1988) 202 CA3d 1326, 1333, 249 CR 553.

© The Regents of the University of California

3. Expanded concept of prevailing parties

§26.107 a. Nonsignatory defendant may be entitled to attorney fees

To ensure the reciprocal nature of contract provisions, the courts have expanded the concepts of "parties" to the contract and "prevailing parties." For example, a nonsignatory defendant sued on a contract as if he or she were a party to it is entitled to fees if he or she prevails, just as the plaintiff would be entitled to fees if successful in enforcing the contractual obligation against defendant. Reynolds Metals Co. v Alperson (1979) 25 C3d 124, 128, 158 CR 1. Similarly, a signatory defendant sued on a contract by a nonsignatory plaintiff is entitled to attorney fees if the plaintiff would have been entitled to such fees had plaintiff prevailed. California Wholesale Material Supply, Inc. v Norm Wilson & Sons, Inc. (2002) 96 CA4th 598, 117 CR2d 390.

PRACTICE TIP: Be cautious in alleging a claim for attorney fees under agreements to which the party is not a signatory, because the other party may be entitled to fees if he or she prevails. Similarly, broad-based allegations against nonsignatories to an agreement, alleging that the nonsignatories are liable under the agreement, may result in fee awards to those parties if they prevail.

A litigant who would effectively and practically but not directly be liable for a fee award if he or she were to lose, is entitled to a fee award if he or she wins. Wilhite v Callihan (1982) 135 CA3d 295, 301, 185 CR 215; Saucedo v Mercury Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1980) 111 CA3d 309, 315, 168 CR 552. In these cases, there would have been no direct or personal liability under the contract, but if the successful parties had lost, they would have been indirectly subject to liability for the other party's attorney fees.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.108 b. Fees may be awarded to litigant benefiting from result of judgment between other contracting litigants

Less well established is the principle that fees may be awarded to a litigant who benefits from the result of a judgment between other contracting litigants. In Lewis v Alpha Beta Co. (1983) 141 CA3d 29, 189 CR 840, liquor store operators sued the Alpha Beta supermarket and their mutual landlord to enjoin the supermarket from selling liquor, contrary to the terms of plaintiffs' lease, which gave plaintiffs the exclusive right to sell liquor in the shopping center. The court granted an injunction against Alpha Beta in favor of cross-complainant landlord and, because the decision resolved all issues in the liquor store operators' favor, denied their request for a separate injunction. The court found that the liquor store operators were prevailing parties and entitled to a fee award under CC §1717.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.109 4. Actions on book accounts

A "book account" is defined in CCP §337a. It is essentially a record of the transactions between the creditor and the debtor, which serves as the creditor's principal record of the transactions between them. Attorney fees and costs may be awarded to the prevailing party in contract actions based on book accounts entered into after 1986. CC §1717.5. These fees and costs are available unless otherwise prohibited by law or waived by the parties. If there is a written agreement between the parties, it must contain a statement that the prevailing party to any action may recover attorney fees and costs as provided by CC §1717.5.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/26 Recovering Attorney Fees/§26.110 a. Exempt parties

§26.110 a. Exempt parties

Banks, insurance companies, savings and loan associations, federal associations, state and federal credit unions, and their subsidiaries, affiliates, or holding companies, authorized industrial loan companies, licensed consumer finance lenders, or licensed commercial finance lenders are specifically exempt from the statute.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.111 b. Fee limits

Reasonable attorney fees are fixed by the court and cannot exceed the lesser of $800 for book accounts for consumer purposes, $1000 for all other book accounts, or 25 percent of the principal amount owing under the contract. The fees cannot exceed $800 for book accounts for consumer purposes or $1000 for all other book accounts when the court finds that there is no liability under a book account. CC §1717.5. No attorney fees awarded under CC §1717.5 shall exceed the lesser of either the maximum allowed ($800 for book accounts for consumer purposes or $1000 for all other book accounts), the amount provided by any court adopted default attorney fees schedule, or an amount the court otherwise provides. CC §1717.5.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.112 L. Fees incurred to enforce judgment

A judgment rendered in a contract case extinguishes all further contractual rights, including attorney fees clauses, and postjudgment attorney fees cannot be recovered unless a statute expressly authorizes them. Berti v Santa Barbara Beach Props. (2006) 145 CA4th 70, 77, 51 CR3d 364. Under CCP §685.040, attorney fees incurred in enforcing a judgment are included as collectible costs if the underlying judgment includes an award of attorney fees to the judgment creditor under CCP §1033.5(a)(10)(A). See Jaffe v Pacelli (2008) 165 CA4th 927, 935, 82 CR3d 423 (award of postjudgment attorney fees is not based on contract but on award of attorney fees and costs in judgment).

Enforcement of an out-of-state judgment arising from a contract is also not an action on the contract but an action to enforce the judgment. Hambrose Reserve, Ltd. v Faitz (1992) 9 CA4th 129, 132, 11 CR2d 638, disapproved on other grounds in Trope v Katz (1995) 11 C4th 274, 292, 45 CR2d 241.

IX. RECOVERY OF ATTORNEY FEES UNDER EQUITABLE THEORIES

A. Common fund doctrine

§26.113 1. What it is

The common fund doctrine is an equitable exception to the general rule that attorney fees are not recoverable in the absence of a statutory or contractual provision. D'Amico v Board of Med. Examiners (1974) 11 C3d 1, 25, 112 CR 786. See also the discussion in California Attorney Fee Awards, chap 5 (3d ed Cal CEB 2010). Under the doctrine, anyone who successfully maintains an action to create, preserve, or compel distribution of a common fund from which others derive benefit is entitled to a total or partial recoupment of attorney fees and other litigation expenses from the fund so that an equitable portion of the burden is borne by all those benefited. See Serrano v Priest (1977) 20 C3d 25, 35, 141 CR 315; D'Amico v Board of Med. Examiners, supra. For discussion of the underlying rationale of the rule, see Estate of Stauffer (1959) 53 C2d 124, 132, 346 P2d 748. The theory of the common fund doctrine has been extended to third party suits as "equitable apportionment." See Quinn v State (1975) 15 C3d 162, 166, 124 CR 1 (workers' compensation).

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.114 2. When it applies

The common fund doctrine rewards an active litigant only when other, passive members of the group benefit from the outcome. It does not apply when members of the benefited group retain their own separate counsel to participate in the litigation. Walsh v Woods (1986) 187 CA3d 1273, 232 CR 629 (plaintiff's counsel not entitled to additional fees on basis that his efforts also benefited intervenor when intervenor's counsel also actively participated in litigation). See Bank of America v Cory (1985) 164 CA3d 66, 210 CR 351 (taxpayers' action resulted in creation of common fund; unusual in that taxpayers' suits usually result in vindication of important public right, not creation of common fund; to extent judgment relied on CCP §1021.5 for recovery of attorney fees, judgment modified to confine award to common fund theory). See also Steinberg v Allstate Ins. Co. (1990) 226 CA3d 216, 222, 277 CR 32 (attorney fees awarded to plaintiffs' attorneys; minimal participation by attorneys representing subrogated insurer that did not bring about settlement fund were properly found not to have actively participated in creation of fund and thus not entitled to attorney fees from it).

Compare Steinberg with Kavanaugh v City of Sunnyvale (1991) 233 CA3d 903, 915, 284 CR 698 (distinguishing Steinberg, court held that attorney fees under Lab C §3856 were improper when allegedly passive beneficiary of litigation was represented by counsel and actively participated in case).

The common fund doctrine allows recovery of fees only from the fund recovered or preserved, and responsibility for payment of the fees cannot be shifted directly to the losing party. Jutkowitz v Bourns, Inc. (1981) 118 CA3d 102, 112, 173 CR 248. Furthermore, "where plaintiffs' efforts have not effected the creation or preservation of an identifiable 'fund' of money out of which they seek to recover their attorneys fees, the 'common fund' exception is inapplicable." Serrano v Priest (1977) 20 C3d 25, 37, 141 CR 315.

When there is a common-fund recovery, counsel may choose to seek fees under the private attorney general rule instead. The criterion for awarding the latter instead of the former is whether the "estimated value" of the case "exceeds by a substantial margin the actual litigation costs." If so, common-fund fees are appropriate. "Estimated value" means the monetary gains actually attained, discounted by the probability of success at the time vital litigation decisions were made. Beasley v Wells Fargo Bank (1991) 235 CA3d 1407, 1414, 1 CR2d 459, disapproved on other grounds in Olson v Automobile Club of S. Cal. (2008) 42 C4th 1142, 1153 n6, 74 CR3d 81.

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/26 Recovering Attorney Fees/§26.115 3. Examples of actions in which common fund doctrine applies

§26.115 3. Examples of actions in which common fund doctrine applies

Some actions in which the common fund doctrine have been applied are:

- Creditor's action against a trustee under an assignment for the benefit of creditors (Farmers & Merchants Nat'l Bank v Peterson (1936) 5 C2d 601, 607, 55 P2d 867).
- Subrogation recoveries (Lee v State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1976) 57 CA3d 458, 466, 129 CR 271). See also Walsh v Woods (1982) 133 CA3d 764, 184 CR 267 (application of Lab C §3856).
- Class action (Melendres v City of Los Angeles (1975) 45 CA3d 267, 119 CR 713 (on behalf of city employees seeking retroactive pay increase); Knoff v City & County of San Francisco (1969) 1 CA3d 184, 81 CR 683 (successful taxpayer class-action suit)).
- Shareholder derivative suits (Fox v Hale & Norcross Silver Mining Co. (1895) 108 C 475, 41 P 328). Compare Fox with Baker v Pratt (1986) 176 CA3d 370, 222 CR 253, in which the common fund doctrine was held inapplicable to actions by one shareholder against another involving closely held corporations because there were no other beneficiaries of the litigation.

NOTE: Baker was criticized by the court in Cziraki v Thunder Cats, Inc. (2003) 111 CA4th 552, 563, 3 CR3d 419. In a close corporation with few other shareholders, a broad reading of Baker would create a negative incentive for a shareholder to seek a legal remedy or to join a suit on behalf of a company in which he or she has any interest. It would have the same effect on any attorney who might otherwise represent such a shareholder in the hope of recovering fees from a better-funded company on whose behalf he or she has litigated. Accordingly, the Cziraki court refused "to extend Baker as a blanket rule disallowing attorney fee awards in any derivative suit merely because the litigation involves the entire class of shareholders in a close corporation." 111 CA4th at 565.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.116 4. Grounds for denying application of doctrine

Common grounds for denying application of the doctrine are that

- A county's lien for medical expenses in a personal injury action asserted against plaintiff's recovery under Govt C §23004.1 is not subject to the common fund doctrine (City & County of San Francisco v Sweet (1995) 12 C4th 105, 48 CR2d 42; see also Parnell v Adventist Health Sys./W. (2005) 35 C4th 595, 605, 26 CR3d 569 (following Sweet; doctrine does not apply to lien asserted under California's Hospital Lien Act (CC §§3045.1-3045.6)); Lovett v Carrasco (1998) 63 CA4th 48, 73 CR2d 496 (extending Sweet rule to private medical providers));
- The benefit to others was incidental, unintended, or both (see Gabrielson v City of Long Beach (1961) 56 C2d 224, 14 CR 651; Estate of Stauffer (1959) 53 C2d 124, 133, 346 P2d 748); and
- The claimant was independently indebted to a person who happened, therefore, to benefit by the recovery of a fund from a third party by the claimant (see Lindsey v County of Los Angeles (1980) 109 CA3d 933, 938, 167 CR 527).

B. Substantial benefit theory

1. What it is

§26.117 a. Characterized as outgrowth of common fund doctrine

A second equitable exception to the general rule against the recovery of attorney fees in the absence of a statutory or contractual provision is the substantial benefit theory. The theory allows an award of attorney fees and other litigation expenses to a litigant proceeding in a representative capacity, whether or not in a formal class action, whose suit results directly in the conferral of a "substantial benefit" on an ascertainable group. Woodland Hills Residents Ass'n v City Council (1979) 23 C3d 917, 943, 154 CR 503 (Woodland Hills II); Serrano v Priest (1977) 20 C3d 25, 38, 141 CR 315.

The substantial benefit theory is characterized as an outgrowth of the common fund doctrine. Woodland Hills Residents Ass'n v City Council, supra. However, unlike the common fund doctrine, the substantial benefit theory does not require that the benefit conferred create a fund of money. See Woodland Hills Residents Ass'n v City Council (1979) 23 C3d 917, 945, 154 CR 503 (Woodland Hills II); Serrano v Priest (1977) 20 C3d 25, 42, 141 CR 315.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/26 Recovering Attorney Fees/§26.118 b. Purpose is to prevent unjust enrichment

§26.118 b. Purpose is to prevent unjust enrichment

The substantial benefit theory, like the common fund doctrine, is aimed at preventing unjust enrichment. Although an award of attorney fees may render the benefited parties "involuntary clients" of the attorneys, equitable considerations justify charging those who have received economic benefits with the costs of obtaining them. The court in Woodland Hills Residents Ass'n v City Council (1979) 23 C3d 917, 945, 154 CR 503 (Woodland Hills II), stated: "So long as the costs bear a reasonable relation to the benefits, the involuntary client who retains a substantial gain from the litigation will generally have no just cause to complain."

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.119 2. When it applies

If the benefits conferred merely result from the stare decisis effect of applying the principle of the case to future litigation, the substantial benefit theory is inappropriate. Woodland Hills Residents Ass'n v City Council (1979) 23 C3d 917, 943, 154 CR 503 (Woodland Hills II). Nor is the theory applicable if the "benefit" derives primarily from "the effectuation of statutory policy." 23 C3d at 947; Concerned Citizens of La Habra v City of La Habra (2005) 131 CA4th 329, 31 CR3d 599.

Further research: For further discussion of the substantial benefit theory and how it differs from the common fund doctrine, see California Attorney Fee Awards, chap 5 (3d ed Cal CEB 2010). For a discussion of the development of the substantial benefit theory, see Braude v Automobile Club of S. Cal. (1986) 178 CA3d 994, 223 CR 914.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.120 3. Examples of actions applying substantial benefit theory

The substantial benefit theory has been applied in:

- Shareholders' derivative actions (Fletcher v A. J. Indus. (1968) 266 CA2d 313, 72 CR 146).
- Taxpayers' suits (Card v Community Redev. Agency (1976) 61 CA3d 570, 582, 131 CR 153).
- State employees' successful suits against an employer (Mandel v Hodges (1976) 54 CA3d 596, 127 CR 244). In Aguilar v Johnson (1988) 202 CA3d 241, 252, 247 CR 909, the court held that a police officer who brought a mandamus action challenging the police department's procedures in handling a citizen's complaint was entitled to attorney fees. The court found that a substantial benefit was afforded to a large class of persons, police officers, which in turn conferred resultant benefits on the general public in the form of stable police employer-employee relations.
- Environmental protection groups' successful suits to enjoin development plans (Friends of "B" St. v City of Hayward (1980) 106 CA3d 988, 165 CR 514; Coalition for Los Angeles County Planning in Pub. Interest v Board of Supervisors (1977) 76 CA3d 241, 142 CR 766).

X. RECOVERY OF ATTORNEY FEES AS DAMAGES

§26.121 A. When recoverable as damages

Attorney fees awarded as an element of damages must be pleaded and proved at trial as part of the case in chief. See Folsom v Butte County Ass'n of Gov'ts (1982) 32 C3d 668, 678 n16, 186 CR 589. Examples of types of cases in which attorney fees have been awarded as an element of damages include:

- When someone commits a wrongful act that reasonably could be foreseen to cause a third party to defend or prosecute a lawsuit (known as the "tort of another doctrine"). See Gray v Don Miller & Assocs. (1984) 35 C3d 498, 198 CR 551.
- Actions for damages in cases of express or implied indemnity (see §§26.127-26.130 below). See Hillman v Leland E. Burns, Inc. (1989) 209 CA3d 860, 257 CR 535.
- Actions for false imprisonment or malicious prosecution. See Mabee v Nurseryland Garden Ctrs. (1979) 88 CA3d 420, 425, 152 CR 31.

Further research: For further discussion of actions in which attorney fees have been awarded as an element of damages, see California Attorney Fee Awards, chap 7 (3d ed Cal CEB 2010).

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.122 B. When not recoverable as damages

An insured is not entitled to an award of attorney fees incurred in the prosecution of a separate action against an insurer to enforce a right to be defended or indemnified or to be reimbursed for attorney fees previously incurred in an action that should have been defended by the insurer. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. v Harbor Ins. Co. (1978) 85 CA3d 105, 114, 149 CR 313 (insured not entitled to award of attorney fees for prosecution of action against insurer for recovery of an excess judgment entered against insured in prior action by third party when insured's claim against insurer was based on its failure to accept settlement offer from third party which was within limits of policy coverage).

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.123 C. Recovery for breach of insurer's duty of good faith and fair dealing

If an insurer tortiously withholds benefits due under a policy, an insured who is successful against the insurer on a cause of action in tort for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing may recover attorney fees reasonably incurred to compel payment of the benefits as an element of damages. These fees are recoverable as damages resulting from a tort in the same manner as medical fees are part of the damages in a personal injury case. Because attorney fees are recoverable as damages, the trier of fact must determine the recoverable fees, unless the parties stipulate otherwise. Brandt v Superior Court (1985) 37 C3d 813, 210 CR 211.

The supreme court in Brandt noted that stipulation for a postjudgment allocation by the trial court is usually preferable because (1) determination will then be made after completion of the legal services, and (2) presentation of proof that otherwise would have to be presented to the jury can be simplified because of the court's expertise in evaluating legal services. The court also noted that, if the jury is to decide this issue, the court should instruct the jury along the following lines (37 C3d at 820):

> If you find (1) that the plaintiff is entitled to recover on his cause of action for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and (2) that because of such breach it was reasonably necessary for the plaintiff to employ the services of an attorney to collect the benefits due under the policy, then and only then is the plaintiff entitled to an award for attorney fees incurred to obtain the policy benefits, which award must not include attorney fees incurred to recover any other portion of the verdict.

Because Brandt entitles a successful plaintiff to recover as damages only that portion of the overall legal fees attributable to collecting the benefits due under the insurance contract, when the legal work on the contract and tort claims overlaps, the court "should exercise its discretion to apportion the fees." Cassim v Allstate Ins. Co. (2004) 33 C4th 780, 807, 16 CR3d 374. When plaintiff's attorney worked under a contingency fee agreement, the court determines the appropriate Brandt fee by:

- Determining the total number of hours the attorney spent on the case;
- Determining how many hours were spent working exclusively on the contract recovery;
- Determining how many hours were spent working on issues related to both the contract and tort recoveries and assigning some hours to the contract and some to the tort;
- Adding the hours spent on the contract alone to the hours spent jointly on contract and tort, but assigned to the contract;
- Dividing the total hours spent on the contract claim by the total number of hours worked and obtaining a percentage; and
- Applying the percentage to the amount of the contingency fee to determine the amount recoverable as Brandt damages.

33 C4th at 812. Plaintiff bears the burden of demonstrating how the fees should be apportioned. 33 C4th at 813.

NOTE: Detailed recordkeeping is essential to recovering Brandt fees. Counsel representing plaintiffs in insurance bad faith cases under contingency fee agreements should keep records of their time.

D. Recovery for tort of another or third party tort

§26.124 1. What it is and when it applies

Attorney fees are recoverable for a plaintiff who must hire an attorney to prosecute or defend an action against a third party because of the defendant's tort. Gray v Don Miller & Assocs. (1984) 35 C3d 498, 198 CR 551; Prentice v North Am. Title Guar. Corp. (1963) 59 C2d 618, 620, 30 CR 821.

The court in Sooy v Peter (1990) 220 CA3d 1305, 1310, 270 CR 151, explained that the third party tort doctrine is not a theory supporting attorney fees awards but is a rule recognizing that, when one is required to defend against a claim, attorney fees are an element of tort damages. However, the court also held that, when one is required to defend a lawsuit because of the negligence of a third party who owed that defendant no duty, the doctrine does not apply.

To recover third-party tort attorney fees, the fee issue must be given to the jury and not to the court after trial, because it is an element of damages rather than an ancillary matter for the court. Moreover, for a third-party tort claim to exist, there must be a distinct third party. The existence of more than one defendant acting jointly in committing tortious acts does not transform one defendant into a third party. Vacco Indus. v Van Den Berg (1992) 5 CA4th 34, 56, 6 CR2d 602. See also Brandt v Superior Court (1985) 37 C3d 813, 819, 210 CR 211.

In Saunders v Cariss (1990) 224 CA3d 905, 910, 274 CR 186, plaintiff employed an attorney on a one-third contingency fee to secure full payment from plaintiff's insurer for an injury that came under the uninsured motorist clause of plaintiff's policy. The insurer claimed that plaintiff had signed a policy amendment agreeing to a reduction in coverage. The insurer paid, then plaintiff sued his insurance agent to recover the contingency fee, claiming that the agent had forged plaintiff's signature to the amendment. The court held that a third party tort was adequately stated against the agent.

§26.125 2. When damages may not be appropriate or the doctrine does not apply

Attorney fees may not be recoverable to the extent that a plaintiff's interest benefited from the third party's negligence so that they were not actually damaged. In Heckert v MacDonald (1989) 208 CA3d 832, 839, 256 CR 369, plaintiffs sued defendants/sellers for damages from a sale in which structural defects were not disclosed. Defendants cross-complained against their broker and sought attorney fees on a third-party tort theory. The court held that attorney fees in defending the case were properly recoverable as an element of damages, but because cross-defendant broker's efforts resulted in a higher sales price, defendants received a special benefit that outweighed the fees.

It is improper to award attorney fees as damages for the prosecution of a separate tort against other defendants unrelated to the conduct of the party against whom the fees are awarded. Flyer's Body Shop Profit Sharing Plan v Ticor Title Ins. Co. (1986) 185 CA3d 1149, 230 CR 276 (plaintiff's suit to impose constructive trust on property sold at foreclosure sale was independent and not causally related to defendant title company's negligence in failing to verify unsigned escrow instructions on completion of loan transaction that placed third deed of trust on overencumbered property).

It is also improper to award attorney fees when an action is a successive case between the same parties and not a defense of a third party's action. See Schneider v Friedman, Collard, Poswall & Virga (1991) 232 CA3d 1276, 1281, 283 CR 882 (suit by former clients against law firm to recover fees in defending firm's suit against client to collect fees); Golden W. Baseball Co. v Talley (1991) 232 CA3d 1294, 1302, 284 CR 53 (action against employee of litigant of prior action in which employee's acts were imputed to employer).

§26.126 E. Recovery in other actions

For examples of recovery of attorney fees as damages in other tort actions, see Bertero v National Gen. Corp. (1974) 13 C3d 43, 118 CR 184 (malicious prosecution); Nelson v Kellogg (1912) 162 C 621, 123 P 1115 (false imprisonment). See California Attorney Fee Awards, chap 7 (3d ed Cal CEB 2010).

XI. FEE AWARDS BASED ON EXPRESS OR IMPLIED INDEMNITY CLAIMS

§26.127 A. Fee award when contractual indemnity

In cases in which one person (the indemnitor) contractually agreed to indemnify another (the indemnitee) against liability, the indemnitor must defend the indemnitee or pay the cost of the indemnitee's defense. CC §2778. For example, if a liability insurer fails to defend the insured in violation of its obligation under an insurance policy, the indemnitee may be awarded fees incurred in defending the action. Gray v Zurich Ins. Co. (1966) 65 C2d 263, 280, 54 CR 104; Mullen v Glens Falls Ins. Co. (1977) 73 CA3d 163, 173, 140 CR 605. See also City of Watsonville v Corrigan (2007) 149 CA4th 1542, 1549, 58 CR3d 458 (CC §2778 does not obligate indemnitee to tender defense to indemnitor to obtain reimbursement of defense costs). Similarly, a statute creating a right of indemnity may be the basis for a fee award against an indemnitor who fails to provide a defense or pay the fees of the indemnitee in an action involving a third party. See, e.g., Lab C §2802; Jacobus v Krambo Corp. (2000) 78 CA4th 1096, 93 CR2d 425.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.128 B. Fee award when implied indemnity

In cases of implied indemnity, on motion, a person who prevails on a claim for implied indemnity may be awarded attorney fees if the court finds that (CCP §1021.6):

- The indemnitee, to protect his or her interest, had to bring an action against or defend an action by a third person because of the tort of the indemnitor;
- The indemnitor was properly notified of the demand to bring the action or provide the defense and did not do so; and
- The trier of fact determined that the indemnitee (1) was without fault in the principal case that is the basis for the action in indemnity or (2) had a final judgment entered in his or her favor granting a summary judgment, a nonsuit, or a directed verdict.

See Wilson, McCall & Daoro v American Qualified Plans, Inc. (1999) 70 CA4th 1030, 83 CR2d 192; John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. v Setser (1996) 42 CA4th 1524, 50 CR2d 413. But see Watson v Department of Transp. (1998) 68 CA4th 885, 80 CR2d 594 (CCP §1021.6 presupposes claim for implied indemnity on which party seeking attorney fees has prevailed and does not allow exonerated alleged tortfeasor, in commonplace case of multiparty tort action, to avoid American rule that each party to lawsuit must ordinarily pay own attorney fees).

Case law provides additional support for the right to implied indemnification for fees incurred. See Prentice v North Am. Title Guar. Corp. (1963) 59 C2d 618, 30 CR 821; Manning v Sifford (1980) 111 CA3d 7, 168 CR 387. See also San Diego Navy Fed. Credit Union v Cumis Ins. Soc'y (1984) 162 CA3d 358, 208 CR 494, in which the insurer provided its own counsel to defend under an insurance policy but reserved its right to disclaim coverage at a later date and denied any coverage for punitive damages. The appellate court held that a conflict of interest existed between the insured and the insurer, entitling the insured to hire independent counsel (to act as co-counsel) paid for by the insurer. See also CC §2860; Gulf Ins. Co. Berger, Kahn, Shafton, Moss, Figler, Simon & Gladstone (2000) 79 CA4th 114, 93 CR2d 534 (reservation of rights alone does not create conflict requiring provision of independent counsel).

In Uniroyal Chem. Co. v American Vanguard Corp. (1988) 203 CA3d 285, 249 CR 787, the court held that a retailer and a wholesaler were prevailing parties on an implied indemnity cross-complaint against the manufacturer. The retailer prevailed on the main action and thus had no opportunity to prevail on the cross-complaint. For attorney fee purposes, the retailer was deemed the prevailing party on the indemnity claim. The wholesaler, which was found liable in the main action, still had the right to pursue its indemnity claim. Because the jury found the manufacturer to be 100 percent at fault and owed the wholesaler indemnity, the court held that the wholesaler was entitled to attorney fees.

§26.129 C. Fee award when good faith settlement agreement involved

A good faith settlement agreement with plaintiff by a joint tortfeasor will bar claims for indemnity by other joint tortfeasors against the settling tortfeasor. IRM Corp. v Carlson (1986) 179 CA3d 94, 224 CR 438 (court dismissed defendant's cross-claim for indemnity under CCP §1021.6 on ground that cross-defendants had entered into sliding-scale settlement agreement with plaintiffs under CCP §877.6). See also Far W. Fin. Corp. v D & S Co. (1988) 46 C3d 796, 817, 251 CR 202 (good faith settlements bar not only partial but also total equitable implied indemnity actions); Reliance Elec. Co. v Superior Court (1986) 190 CA3d 369, 237 CR 1 (trial court's approval of good faith settlement by one defendant precluded other defendant from moving for indemnification of attorney fees under CCP §1021.6). But see John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. v Setser (1996) 42 CA4th 1524, 50 CR2d 413 (defendant obtained summary judgment on plaintiff's complaint and then made successful CCP §877.6 motion; held on appeal that the trial court should have granted motion for attorney fees under CCP §1021.6).

§26.130 D. Recoverability of fees for obtaining indemnification

A distinction is ordinarily drawn between the indemnified expenses, which are recoverable, and the litigation expenses necessarily incurred to obtain indemnification, including attorney fees, which are not generally recoverable without statutory or contractual authority. See, e.g., Douglas v Los Angeles Herald-Examiner (1975) 50 CA3d 449, 467, 123 CR 683.

In Bear Creek Planning Comm'n v Title Ins. & Trust Co. (1985) 164 CA3d 1227, 211 CR 172, disapproved on other grounds in Bay Dev., Ltd. v Superior Court (1990) 50 C3d 1012, 1031 n12, 269 CR 720, plaintiff homeowner's association was required to defend a slander of title action brought by a homeowner due to defendant title insurance company's breach of contract. Plaintiff then sued defendant for indemnification. The appellate court affirmed the trial court's award of plaintiff's attorney fees under CCP §1021.6 for defense of the slander of title action, but reversed the award of fees incurred during the indemnification action. The court held that §1021.6 imposes liability on the indemnitor for fees it caused the indemnitee to incur in the underlying action, but with regard to the indemnification action, plaintiff does not come within §1021.6 but, rather, is subject to the general rule of CCP §1021, i.e., unless a statute or an express or implied agreement authorizes the award of fees, the parties bear their own fees. 164 CA3d at 1246.

Whether the indemnitee is liable to a third party for damages is determined in the principal action. Whether the indemnitee's conduct is sufficient to preclude recovery of implied indemnity is determined in the indemnity action. It is no basis for denying attorney fees in the indemnity action that the indemnitee was found liable for damages in the principal action. 164 CA3d at 1245.

However, if an insurer tortiously withholds benefits due under a policy, an insured who is successful against the insurer on a cause of action in tort for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing may recover attorney fees reasonably incurred to compel payment of policy benefits as an element of damages. Brandt v Superior Court (1985) 37 C3d 813, 210 CR 211. See Cassim v Allstate Ins. Co. (2004) 33 C4th 780, 807, 16 CR3d 374, discussed in §26.123. There is disagreement about whether Brandt allows for recovery of attorney fees incurred when an insurer appeals from a judgment finding breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. See McGregor v Paul Revere Life Ins. Co. (9th Cir 2004) 369 F3d 1099, 1101 (appeal-related attorney fees recoverable); Burnaby v Standard Fire (1995) 40 CA4th 787, 789, 47 CR2d 326 (attorney fees for appeal not recoverable).

XII. DETERMINING AMOUNT OF AWARD

§26.131 A. Fees must be reasonable

Typically, a statute or a contract provides for an award of "reasonable" attorney fees, the exact amount being within the court's sound discretion. See, e.g., Iverson v Spang Indus. (1975) 45 CA3d 303, 119 CR 399 (contract); Trout v Carleson (1974) 37 CA3d 337, 112 CR 282 (statute). When a contract provides that the prevailing party may recover attorney fees "incurred," the prevailing party may not recover more than that amount. San Dieguito Partnership v San Dieguito River Valley Reg'l, etc. Auth. (1998) 61 CA4th 910, 916, 72 CR2d 91, disapproved on other grounds in PLCM Group, Inc. v Drexler (2000) 22 C4th 1084, 1097 n5, 95 CR2d 198.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.132 1. Factors court considers in determining reasonableness

In determining a "reasonable" amount of the fee award, the courts consider several factors, including counsel's skill and experience; the nature, difficulty, and importance of the case; the amount involved; the time consumed; and other circumstances of the case. See Clejan v Reisman (1970) 5 CA3d 224, 241, 84 CR 897. See also Fed-Mart Corp. v Pell Enters. (1980) 111 CA3d 215, 222, 168 CR 525.

In arriving at a reasonable amount, an award of fees as costs must bear a "reasonable relationship" to the substantive recovery. Bakkebo v Municipal Court (1981) 124 CA3d 229, 177 CR 239. See also Garcia v Santana (2009) 174 CA4th 464, 473, 94 CR3d 299 (determination of fee's reasonableness should also include losing party's ability to pay).

In determining the amount of fees, the court may use a "lodestar" (reasonable rate times reasonable number of hours) multiplier to compensate counsel for the risk of loss and to encourage counsel to undertake actions that benefit the public interest. Beasley v Wells Fargo Bank (1991) 235 CA3d 1407, 1418, 1 CR2d 459, disapproved on other grounds in Olson v Automobile Club of S. Cal. (2008) 42 C4th 1142, 1153 n6, 74 CR3d 81. See also Meister v Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1998) 67 CA4th 437, 78 CR2d 913 (trial court has discretion to determine whether number of attorney hours are reasonable); Levy v Toyota Motor Sales, Inc. (1992) 4 CA4th 807, 814, 5 CR2d 770 (appellate court affirmed trial court's reduction of attorney fees when there were several instances of fees and costs that were unnecessary and unreasonable, rejecting claim that trial court was required to apply lodestar multiplier). See also Enpalm, LCC v Teitler (2008) 162 CA4th 770, 774, 75 CR3d 902 (court may equitably reduce lodestar amount by amount of unnecessary fees).

In PLCM Group, Inc. v Drexler (2000) 22 C4th 1084, 95 CR2d 198, the supreme court explained that the "lodestar" methodology is preferred and results, presumptively, in the calculation of reasonable fees. The court noted that, in "exceptional cases," other methodologies might be appropriate. The PLCM court also rejected a "cost plus" methodology that would have included both the prevailing party's "lodestar" fees and additional allocations for administrative and other forms of cost overhead.

The hourly rate for attorney fees is within the sound discretion of the trial judge. In Bihun v AT&T Info. Sys., Inc. (1993) 13 CA4th 976, 997, 16 CR2d 787, disapproved on other grounds in Lakin v Watkins Assoc. Indus. (1993) 6 C4th 644, 664, 25 CR2d 109, the court held an award of $450 per hour to be appropriate under the facts; even though "at the high end," it was not "off the scale."

In Sundance v Municipal Court (1987) 192 CA3d 268, 273, 237 CR 269, the court held that plaintiffs were entitled to attorney fees for all attorney time reasonably expended, not only the time spent on issues on which they prevailed. The court stated that the value of volunteered paralegal time also would be recoverable if the trial court found that the time spent was reasonably necessary to the litigation. But see Atherton v Board of Supervisors (1986) 176 CA3d 433, 222 CR 56 (court rejected self-represented plaintiff's request for fees; CCP §1021.5 authorizes attorney fee awards only to individuals licensed to practice law).

Further research: For a detailed discussion of the lodestar and other methods of determining fees, see California Attorney Fee Awards, chaps 8-10 (3d ed Cal CEB 2010).

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.133 2. Preserving issue of reasonableness

In the calculation of reasonable attorney fees, to preserve an issue on appeal, a party must request specific findings on which hours are deemed reasonable or unreasonable. California Common Cause v Duffy (1987) 200 CA3d 730, 753, 246 CR 285.

In Common Cause, the court held that a finding that time was expended on responding to the press or other attorneys, on duplicated efforts, and on adversarial activities between attorneys was sufficient to deny that portion of the claim. The court concluded that the hourly rate must be based on a market value, rather than the salary actually received by that lawyer or one similarly situated.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.134 3. If contingency fee agreement

The trial court is not limited by the terms of a contingency fee contract between the prevailing party and his or her attorney in determining "reasonable" fees; the contingency contract is merely "some evidence" of the value of the attorney's services. Vella v Hudgins (1984) 151 CA3d 515, 198 CR 725. It is, however, proper for the court to base the award on the contingency fee contract between the prevailing party and his or her attorney as long as all other appropriate factors have been considered. Glendora Community Redev. Agency v Demeter (1984) 155 CA3d 465, 202 CR 389. No published California case has specifically addressed whether the amount awarded may exceed the amount of the contingency fee.

See Salton Bay Marina, Inc. v Imperial Irrig. Dist. (1985) 172 CA3d 914, 218 CR 839, for a discussion of the various approaches that courts have taken in considering a contingency fee agreement for the award of "reasonable" attorney fees. The court reversed an award based on the contingency fee agreement in an inverse condemnation action, criticizing Glendora Community Redev. Agency v Demeter, supra, and remanded to the trial court for a redetermination of fees based on the standard factors enumerated by the courts in determining the propriety of fees, starting with the time actually spent by the attorneys ("risk factor" is an element to be considered).

Compare Glendora with Imperial Cattle Co. v Imperial Irrig. Dist. (1985) 167 CA3d 263, 213 CR 622, affirming an award of fees in an inverse action based on a 40-percent contingency agreement. See also Aetna Life & Cas. Co. v City of Los Angeles (1985) 170 CA3d 865, 216 CR 831, reversing the trial court's award of attorney fees based on a contingency fee of the gross award and holding that the trial court was required to consider all factors enumerated by the courts; the trial court's failure to consider all those factors in relationship to "the actual amount in dollars of this huge fee (approximately $2.2 million)" was error. The appellate court held the fee award to be unreasonable "in absolute terms and in relation to the hours worked" and criticized the compounding effect of applying the contingency percentage to a judgment that already included fees. See also People ex rel Dep't of Transp. v Yuki (1995) 31 CA4th 1754, 1770, 37 CR2d 616 (reversing trial court's award of attorney fees based on contingency fee contract).

§26.135 B. Determining fees under federal law

The Supreme Court in Missouri v Jenkins (1989) 491 US 274, 287, 105 L Ed 2d 229, 242, 109 S Ct 2463, held that a fee award under 42 USC §1988 encompasses paralegals and that the market rate is appropriate for such separately billed services, not their actual cost to the attorney.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.136 C. When no actual expenses incurred

A court may award attorney fees even if the client incurred no actual expense. In Beverly Hills Prop. v Marcolino (1990) 221 CA3d Supp 7, 270 CR 605, a tenant prevailed in an unlawful detainer action while represented by a legal services corporation. The court awarded fees because the attorneys had incurred expenses even though the client had not. See also PLCM Group, Inc. v Drexler (2000) 22 C4th 1084, 1097 n5, 95 CR2d 198 (attorney fees properly awarded to in-house counsel based on number of hours spent multiplied by prevailing market rate for comparable legal services); Young v Exxon Mobil Corp. (2008) 168 CA4th 1467, 1477, 86 CR3d 507 (supervisor subjected to frivolous FEHA suit by former employee entitled to only nominal attorney fees of $1 because employer and codefendant provided representation, and only employer, which was not entitled to fees, would benefit from fee award); Moran v Oso Valley Greenbelt Ass'n (2004) 117 CA4th 1029, 12 CR3d 435 (attorney fees properly awarded to law firm employee represented pro bono by employer).

§26.137 D. If attorney fees exceed amount in controversy

The amount of attorney fees may exceed the amount in controversy if the factors of reasonableness are satisfied. Boyd v Oscar Fisher Co. (1989) 210 CA3d 368, 381, 258 CR 473 ($38,730 in fees on $21,699 judgment); Clayton Dev. Co. v Falvey (1988) 206 CA3d 438, 447, 253 CR 609 ($16,122 in fees in action to foreclose on $15,750 note); Bruckman v Parliament Escrow Corp. (1987) 190 CA3d 1051, 1062, 235 CR 813 ($16,022 in fees on $8297 plus $3216 interest judgment). See Stokus v Marsh (1990) 217 CA3d 647, 653, 266 CR 90 (fees of $75,000 following $6000 unlawful detainer award upheld as reasonable and within court's limited jurisdiction; fees also allowed for work done on prior action because it was reasonable and necessary to ultimate resolution of case). See also City of Riverside v Rivera (1986) 477 US 561, 580, 91 L Ed 2d 466, 483, 106 S Ct 2686, a plurality opinion indicating that there is no requirement for proportionality under 42 USC §1988.

§26.138 E. Fees need not be apportioned

Attorney fees need not be apportioned between distinct causes of action if fees are authorized for some causes of action but not for others when the claims involve a common core of facts or are based on related legal theories and plaintiff prevails on causes of actions for which fees may be authorized. San Dieguito Partnership v San Dieguito River Valley Reg'l, etc. Auth. (1998) 61 CA4th 910, 919, 72 CR2d 91, disapproved on other grounds in PLCM Group, Inc. v Drexler (2000) 22 C4th 1084, 1097 n5, 95 CR2d 198; Drouin v Fleetwood Enters. (1985) 163 CA3d 486, 209 CR 623. See Korech v Hornwood (1997) 58 CA4th 1412, 1422, 68 CR2d 637 (no need to apportion prevailing party's fees). See also Guardians of Turlock's Integrity v Turlock City Council (1983) 149 CA3d 584, 197 CR 303 (if plaintiff has won substantial relief, fees should not be reduced, because court did not accept all party's contentions). But see Sokolow v County of San Mateo (1989) 213 CA3d 231, 247, 261 CR 520 (party achieving limited rather than complete success, on one of several proffered theories, not necessarily entitled to full fee recovery under 42 USC §1988).

§26.139 F. Jurisdictional limitation in limited civil cases

In Bakkebo v Municipal Court (1981) 124 CA3d 229, 177 CR 239, the court held that a municipal court may not make an attorney fee award that itself exceeds the jurisdictional limit. However, it may award fees as costs that result in an aggregate amount that, when added to other costs and the substantive recovery, exceeds the jurisdictional limit. Fees that are recoverable as special damages are added to other elements of the substantive recovery. The total must not exceed the jurisdictional limit. Because the municipal and superior courts have been unified, these rules should also apply to limited civil cases in superior court. See CCP §32.5. See also CCP §§85-86.

§26.140 G. Special rules for determining awards based on particular theories

If a contract provides for a fee award in a specified amount, or as a percentage of some specified amount, the provision will apply, unless unconscionable, and will be made reciprocal. CC §1717. See Reynolds Metals Co. v Alperson (1979) 25 C3d 124, 158 CR 1; Johnson v Kaeser (1925) 196 C 686, 695, 239 P 324; California Wholesale Material Supply, Inc. v Norm Wilson & Sons, Inc. (2002) 96 CA4th 598, 117 CR2d 390.

When an award to the successful litigant is made under the common fund doctrine (see §§26.113-26.116), the substantial benefit theory (see §§26.117-26.120), or the private attorney general rule (see §§26.61-26.76), the formulation ordinarily used in computing the fees is to:

- Multiply the number of hours spent by the attorney(s) by a reasonable hourly rate of compensation; and
- Augment or diminish this "touchstone" figure based on factors such as the novelty or complexity of the litigation.

Any valid contract between the successful party and its attorneys in public interest litigation cases must be respected as between them, but it is not binding as a measure of the appropriate compensation for the attorneys with respect to other benefited persons. That determination is left to the court's sound discretion under the "touchstone" rule. See Long Beach City Employees Ass'n v City of Long Beach (1981) 120 CA3d 950, 172 CR 277 (award under common fund theory); Melendres v City of Los Angeles (1975) 45 CA3d 267, 282, 119 CR 713 (same).

Further research: See Serrano v Priest (1977) 20 C3d 25, 48, 141 CR 315 (private attorney general rule); Mandel v Lackner (1979) 92 CA3d 747, 757, 155 CR 269, disapproved on other grounds in Serrano v Unruh (1982) 32 C3d 621, 630 n12, 186 CR 754 (substantial benefit theory; amount of attorney fees awarded by trial court in exercise of its discretion was for time spent and value per unit of time determined for each attorney).

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.141 H. If award based on cost bill or motion

When an award of attorney fees is pursued by filing a cost bill or motion, the court determines the amount. See Schoolcraft v Ross (1978) 81 CA3d 75, 146 CR 57. When attorney fees must be pleaded and proved as special damages, the jury (in a jury trial) determines the amount, unless, for example, a contract expressly provides that the court shall set the amount. See generally Mabee v Nurseryland Garden Ctrs. (1979) 88 CA3d 420, 424, 152 CR 31; Beneficial Standard Prop. v Scharps (1977) 67 CA3d 227, 136 CR 549. Although local court rules may specify the amount to be awarded in certain situations, the court is not necessarily bound by such rules. Ansco Constr. Co. v Ocean View Estates, Inc. (1959) 169 CA2d 235, 337 P2d 146. See State v Meyer (1985) 174 CA3d 1061, 220 CR 884, on criteria to be applied in determining the amount of the fee award.

In general, the trial court, rather than a court of appeal, will determine the amount of the award. The supreme court in Arenson v National Auto. & Cas. Ins. Co. (1957) 48 C2d 528, 310 P2d 961, held that, although it had the power and ability to determine the value of services rendered by the insured's counsel in defending an action which the insurer wrongfully refused to defend, the better practice was to remand the matter to the trial court for the purpose of making a new determination.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.142 I. Appealability of award

A judicial determination of the attorney fee claim and any order made with respect to it is appealable as a final determination on a collateral matter severable from the general subject of the litigation. Associated Convalescent Enters. v Carl Marks & Co. (1973) 33 CA3d 116, 108 CR 782. See also Serrano v Priest (1977) 20 C3d 25, 32, 141 CR 315.

The trial court properly considers attorney fees after an order of dismissal, even if an appeal is pending, because the trial court retains jurisdiction over such ancillary matters. Dameshghi v Texaco Ref. & Mktg. (1992) 3 CA4th 1262, 1289, 6 CR2d 515, disapproved on other grounds in Trope v Katz (1995) 11 C4th 274, 292, 45 CR2d 241.

Although attorney fee orders are normally appealable, when the order is contingent on a matter still being litigated, it lacks the requirement of finality and is thus not appealable. Nimmagadda v Krishnamurthy (1992) 3 CA4th 1505, 5 CR2d 351. In the case of an interim appeal (e.g., appeal from summary judgment), the party which ultimately prevails is entitled to the attorney fees on appeal. See Presley of S. Cal. v Whelan (1983) 146 CA3d 959, 962, 196 CR 1 (fees under CC §1717). But see Bank of Idaho v Pine Ave. Assocs. (1982) 137 CA3d 5, 17, 186 CR 695 (attorney fees of successful party on appeal offset attorney fees of ultimately prevailing party). See also §26.152.

XIII. REVIEW PROCEDURES FOR RECOVERING ATTORNEY FEES

§26.143 A. Pleading considerations

Generally, there is no requirement that the grounds for a claim for attorney fees be specified in the pleading. See Green v Obledo (1984) 161 CA3d 678, 207 CR 830. A party may seek fees on different grounds from those originally pleaded. Citizens Against Rent Control v City of Berkeley (1986) 181 CA3d 213, 226 CR 265.

Statutory claims. A claim for fees based on statute need not be included in the complaint. See Washburn v City of Berkeley (1987) 195 CA3d 578, 583, 240 CR 784; Folsom v Butte County Ass'n of Gov'ts (1982) 32 C3d 668, 678 n16, 186 CR 589.

Claims based on contract. In contract actions there is no requirement that fee claims be separately pleaded, at least when the contract containing the fee clause is pleaded and proved. Allstate Ins. Co. v Loo (1996) 46 CA4th 1794, 1797, 54 CR2d 541 (explaining significance of 1990 amendment to CCP §1033.5, a statute that states what items are allowable and not allowable as costs); Wong v Davidian (1988) 206 CA3d 264, 271, 253 CR 675; Perry v Robertson (1988) 201 CA3d 333, 247 CR 74; Ganey v Doran (1987) 191 CA3d 901, 236 CR 787. Civil Code §1717(a) provides that fees awarded under contract are "an element of costs of suit." But see §26.95 for discussion of award of fees and costs for purpose of determining when a judgment is more favorable when plaintiff has made a CCP §998 offer. See also §§27.52-27.53.

PRACTICE TIP: It is good practice to include any potential fee claim in the prayer of the complaint. Although failure to include the fee claim is rarely fatal to the claim, failure to plead the claim may prejudice a later claim. See Folsom v Butte County Ass'n of Gov'ts (1982) 32 C3d 668, 680, 186 CR 589; Kreutzer v County of San Diego (1984) 153 CA3d 62, 77, 200 CR 322.

CAUTION: Be aware that including a claim for fees in the complaint or answer may give the opposing party a reciprocal right to fees it would not otherwise have. See Manier v Anaheim Bus. Ctr. Co. (1984) 161 CA3d 503, 207 CR 508. But see Blickman Turkus LP v MF Downtown Sunnyvale, LLC (2008) 162 CA4th 858, 897, 76 CR3d 325 (claim for fees alone does not give rise to reciprocal right).

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.144 B. Settling fee claims

Difficult ethical and tactical concerns arise from the potential conflict of interest between attorneys and their clients when settling fee claims. These concerns are discussed fully in California Attorney Fee Awards, chap 11 (3d ed Cal CEB 2010). See also §§27.51-27.66 (for discussion of the relationship between claiming costs and fees and pretrial settlement procedures under CCP §§998), 26.94.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/26 Recovering Attorney Fees/§26.145 C. Relationship to judgment

§26.145 C. Relationship to judgment

An action need not proceed to final judgment for a party to be entitled to fees. See CC §1717(b)(1). For instance, dismissal of the action for failure to prosecute entitles the dismissed party to fees. In this situation, the prevailing party is entitled to costs. See CC §1717(b)(1). If the action is voluntarily dismissed, or dismissed under settlement, there is no prevailing party. CC §1717(b)(2).

A trial court retains jurisdiction on ancillary matters, including attorney fee awards, even after entry of judgment. Maria P. v Riles (1987) 43 C3d 1281, 1289, 240 CR 872; Grant v List & Lathrop (1992) 2 CA4th 993, 3 CR2d 654.

NOTE: The time limit for appealing a judgment on the merits is not tolled by a pending fee motion. See Budinich v Becton Dickinson & Co. (1988) 486 US 196, 100 L Ed 2d 178, 108 S Ct 1717; UAP-Columbus JV 326132 v Nesbitt (1991) 234 CA3d 1028, 285 CR 856. When a judgment is modified merely to add costs, attorney fees, and interest, the original judgment is not substantially changed and the time to appeal it is therefore not affected. Torres v City of San Diego (2007) 154 CA4th 214, 64 CR3d 495.

PRACTICE TIP: File a timely notice of appeal on the merits regardless of whether a fee motion or a claim for costs is pending.

© The Regents of the University of California

D. General procedures for claiming attorney fees

§26.146 1. Under California Rules of Court

Uncontested cases. Attorney fees based on statute or contract that are fixed without necessity of court determination are claimed in the memorandum of costs. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1702(d). Attorney fees authorized by contract or statute are allowable as costs under CCP §1032. CCP §1033.5(a)(10)(A)-(B). See §§27.88-27.102 for discussion of the procedure for claiming costs; §27.128 for a sample Memorandum of Costs (Worksheet); and §27.129 for a sample Memorandum of Costs (Summary).

Contested cases at trial court level. In contested cases, a notice of motion to claim attorney fees for services rendered, up to and including judgment in the trial court, must be served and filed within the time for filing a notice of appeal (see Cal Rules of Ct 8.104, 8.108, e.g., 60 days after court clerk serves notice of entry of judgment). Cal Rules of Ct 3.1702(b).

Attorney fees on appeal. The notice of motion to claim attorney fees on appeal under a statute or a contract that requires the court to determine entitlement to the fees, the amount of the fees, or both must be filed within the time for serving and filing the memorandum of costs under Cal Rules of Ct 8.278(c)(1), i.e., 40 days after the clerk of the reviewing court mails notice of the issuance of the remittitur. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1702(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/26 Recovering Attorney Fees/§26.147 2. Awards based on statute

§26.147 2. Awards based on statute

Attorney fees recoverable under a statute are generally claimed as costs by filing a memorandum of costs or cost bill unless the fee statute provides otherwise. See Marini v Municipal Court (1979) 99 CA3d 829, 833, 160 CR 465; T.E.D. Bearing Co. v Walter E. Heller & Co. (1974) 38 CA3d 59, 112 CR 910. An important example of a statute that precludes the cost bill procedure by specifying the use of a noticed motion is CCP §1021.5 (private attorney general rule; see §§26.61-26.76). See §§27.88-27.102 for discussion of procedures for claiming costs.

Attorney fees allowable as costs under statute may be fixed (CCP §1033.5(c)(5)):

- By noticed motion;
- At the time a statement of decision is rendered;
- On application supported by affidavit made concurrently with a claim for other costs; or
- On entry of default judgment.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.148 3. Awards based on contract

Attorney fees authorized by contract are allowable as costs under CCP §1032. CCP §1033.5(a)(10)(A). Attorney fees allowable as costs under §1033.5(a)(10)(A) must be fixed either on a noticed motion or on entry of a default judgment unless the parties stipulate otherwise. CCP §1033.5(c)(5).

Notice of motion to claim attorney fees as an element of costs under CC §1717 must be served and filed within the time for filing a notice of appeal. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1702. See Exxess Electronixx v Heger Realty Corp. (1998) 64 CA4th 698, 75 CR2d 376 (denying attorney fees under CC §1717(b)(2), which precludes recovery of attorney fees when action is dismissed under settlement of case). But see Jackson v Homeowners Ass'n Monte Vista Estates-East (2001) 93 CA4th 773, 113 CR2d 363 (settlement agreement that calls for voluntary dismissal of case does not preclude recovery of fees under CC §1717(b)(2) when parties expressly reserve issue of attorney fees to trial court for determination).

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.149 4. Awards based on equitable theories

In general, when a fee award is made under equitable theories, the usual practice is for the party entitled to the award to proceed by posttrial motion. See, e.g., Northington v Davis (1979) 23 C3d 955, 154 CR 524; Serrano v Priest (1977) 20 C3d 25, 31, 141 CR 315. Code of Civil Procedure §1021.5 (private attorney general rule) specifically provides for the motion procedure. See Folsom v Butte County Ass'n of Gov'ts (1982) 32 C3d 668, 684, 186 CR 589.

The motion should be filed within a reasonable time after entry of judgment or other event beginning the period for filing an appeal, but there are no clear rules on what is unreasonably long. See, e.g., Serrano v Priest, supra (successful motion filed within 1 month after entry of judgment). A motion for fees under CCP §1021.5 need not be made until after final adjudication of the claims. No Oil, Inc. v City of Los Angeles (1984) 153 CA3d 998, 200 CR 768. A statement of decision from the trial judge on factual matters affecting the entitlement issue may be requested to avoid unnecessary proof at the hearing on the motion. See CCP §632. In any event, the court's factual bases for an award of fees should appear in an order or otherwise be available in the record for possible appeal. See Mandel v Lackner (1979) 92 CA3d 747, 758 n6, 155 CR 269, disapproved on other grounds in Serrano v Unruh (1982) 32 C3d 621, 630 n12, 186 CR 754.

© The Regents of the University of California

§26.150 5. Awards based on indemnification

Indemnification generally entails an award of fees as damages incurred for prior litigation. Therefore, fees must ordinarily be pleaded and proved as damages. See generally Folsom v Butte County Ass'n of Gov'ts (1982) 32 C3d 668, 678 n16, 186 CR 589; Mabee v Nurseryland Garden Ctrs. (1979) 88 CA3d 420, 425, 152 CR 31. However, in implied indemnity cases under CCP §1021.6, the statute expressly requires that the issue of fees be determined on motion.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/26 Recovering Attorney Fees/§26.151 E. Fee motion procedure

§26.151 E. Fee motion procedure

Motions for attorney fees follow the same procedure as other motions. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1100-3.1306, 3.1200-3.1207, 3.1130-3.1312. The prevailing party generally files the fee motion, and the opponent files an opposition with an opportunity for the moving party to file a reply. See Cal Rules of Ct 3.1300(a). For a detailed discussion of the fee motion procedure, see California Attorney Fee Awards, chap 11 (3d ed Cal CEB 2010).

The attorney claiming fees has the burden of producing evidence to support the claim. Melnyk v Robledo (1976) 64 CA3d 618, 134 CR 602. Entitlement is usually determined by the court from the file and from its general knowledge. See Woodland Hills Residents Ass'n v City Council (1979) 23 C3d 917, 940, 154 CR 503 (Woodland Hills II).

The motion should be presented to the judge who heard the merits of the case. Counsel should fully explain the issues and the nature of the work performed. See Long Beach City Employees Ass'n v City of Long Beach (1981) 120 CA3d 950, 961, 172 CR 277.

The fee motion should include:

- Notice of motion, including the date, time, place of motion, summary of the grounds for entitlement to fees, and the documents on which the claim is based (see Attorney Fee Awards, App C for sample form);
- Supporting memorandum, discussing the background of the litigation, the grounds for entitlement, and the justification for the amount requested (see Attorney Fee Awards, App D for sample form);
- Declarations from attorneys claiming the fees, including, if appropriate, declarations from other attorneys or experts supporting the fee application (see Attorney Fee Awards, App E for sample form);
- A declaration explaining how the fees claimed are reasonable (see Attorney Fee Awards, App F for sample form); and
- A proposed order awarding reasonable attorney fees, including specific findings on the fee calculation (see Attorney Fee Awards, App I for sample form).

NOTE: It is permissible to conduct discovery on the basis for the fee award. See State v Meyer (1985) 174 CA3d 1061, 1075, 220 CR 884.

The hearing usually involves oral argument based on the papers filed with the court. It is up to the trial court's discretion whether to allow an evidentiary hearing with live testimony. See Sablan v Department of Fin. (9th Cir 1988) 856 F2d 1317, 1322.

Although a formal statement of decision is not required, in order to permit appellate review, consider requesting the trial court to state its finding on the elements of the fee award. See Maria P. v Riles (1987) 43 C3d 1281, 1289, 240 CR 872.

PRACTICE TIP: If you decide to bring a motion for summary judgment just before trial (or judgment on the pleadings, a demurrer, or any motion that will conclude the action if granted) that you believe is a "sure winner," consider doing the following:

- Before bringing the motion, send opposing counsel a letter stating why the action has no merit. Conclude by requesting that by a certain date you either (1) be advised in writing why the lawsuit has merit or (2) be in receipt of a conformed copy of a Request for Dismissal.
- Do not seek monetary sanctions at the time of the hearing on the motion for summary judgment.
- Ensure that you get a transcript of the hearing if the motion is granted because the transcript may reflect the court's disfavor that the lawsuit was filed.
- Sixty days after the court has executed the order granting the summary judgment, file your CCP §128.7 sanctions motions, in which you seek all costs and all attorney fees expended. Attach the hearing transcript and request the court to take judicial notice of the transcript under Evid C §452(d)(1).

For discussion of CCP §128.7, see §§26.32-26.53.

§26.152 F. Fees for appellate services

Ordinarily, fee awards under statutory or contractual authority include fees for services on appeal as well as at trial. See, e.g., Wilson v Wilson (1960) 54 C2d 264, 5 CR 317 (contract); Fed-Mart Corp. v Pell Enters. (1980) 111 CA3d 215, 168 CR 525 (statute). This rule has been applied in cases arising under CCP §1021.5 (private attorney general rule), and fees have been properly awarded even though the only issue on appeal was fee entitlement. Serrano v Unruh (1982) 32 C3d 621, 638, 186 CR 754 (Serrano IV).

Entitlement to and the amount of fees for appellate services are determined first in the trial court. See Citizens Ass'n for Sensible Dev. v County of Inyo (1985) 172 CA3d 151, 176, 217 CR 893. However, the appellate court has discretion whether to remand the issue of appellate fees. Laurel Heights Improvement Ass'n v Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1988) 47 C3d 376, 426, 253 CR 426.

Appellate fees may be claimable in the trial court even if the appellate decision is silent on costs or fees if entitlement is based on a statute. Harbour Landing-Dolfann, Ltd. v Anderson (1996) 48 CA4th 260, 55 CR2d 640 (a good survey of the law on this issue); MST Farms v C.G. 1464 (1988) 204 CA3d 304, 251 CR 72; M.C. & D. Capital Corp. v Gilmaker (1988) 204 CA3d 671, 677, 251 CR 178. See Ford Motor Credit Co. v Price (1985) 163 CA3d 745, 210 CR 17 (respondents prevailing on appeal were entitled to reasonable attorney fees under CC §1717); Mackinder v OSCA Dev. Co. (1984) 151 CA3d 728, 198 CR 864 (fee provision in agreement encompasses attorney fees on appeal). See discussion in §26.98.

In contractual awards, CC §1717 does not authorize the award of fees to the successful party on appeal without regard to the ultimate disposition of the entire case. Bank of Idaho v Pine Ave. Assocs. (1982) 137 CA3d 5, 186 CR 695. In Bank of Idaho, the court stated in dicta that if the ultimately prevailing party had been the unsuccessful party on the previous appeal, the fee award should not include the appellate fees of the ultimately prevailing party. However, fees properly awarded to the ultimately prevailing party should be offset by the fees incurred by the other party on the appeal, as long as the other party would have been entitled to an award of appellate fees had it ultimately prevailed. 137 CA3d at 17.

In Presley of S. Cal. v Whelan (1983) 146 CA3d 959, 196 CR 1, the court in dicta disagreed with Bank of Idaho and stated that the party who wins an outright victory at trial should recover all fees without offset for the fees incurred by the other party in a successful appeal and reversal of a summary judgment. Similarly, in Serrano v Unruh (1982) 32 C3d 621, 639 n28, 186 CR 754 (Serrano IV), the California Supreme Court noted: "It would seem obvious that fees would not be recoverable for an appeal that reversed the award entirely or reversed as excessive an award appellant claimed was inadequate."

Further research: The procedure for claiming costs awarded by a reviewing court is specified in Cal Rules of Ct 8.278, 8.891. See also 9 Witkin, California Procedure, Appeal §§803-805 (4th ed 1997). For a full discussion of obtaining fees for appellate services, see California Attorney Fee Awards, chap 12 (3d ed Cal CEB 2010).

§26.153 G. Fees for pressing fee claims

Attorney fees incurred in preparing the fee petition, and in resisting a motion to tax costs, are recoverable if fee awards are authorized by statute. State v Meyer (1985) 174 CA3d 1061, 220 CR 884 (abandonment of eminent domain action). But see Estate of Cirone (1987) 189 CA3d 1280, 1293, 234 CR 749 (court denied private attorney general fees for plaintiffs' efforts to collect final fee award).

The rule allowing attorney fees for pressing fee claims also applies to probate actions. Estate of Trynin (1989) 49 C3d 868, 873, 264 CR 93. The court distinguished this case from both (1) common-fund and common-benefit cases in which fees on fee claims are disallowed and (2) statutory fee cases in which fees are permissible, finding that economic factors and policy militate in favor of allowing such fees. See Levy v Toyota Motor Sales, Inc. (1992) 4 CA4th 807, 817, 5 CR2d 770 (party was held not entitled to improperly inflated fees to oppose motion to tax costs).

In cases successfully brought in state court under the common fund doctrine or substantial benefit theory, fees incurred in pressing fee claims at trial or on appeal are not recoverable, in part because of the potential conflicts of interest for the attorneys. See Gabrielson v City of Long Beach (1961) 56 C2d 224, 229, 14 CR 651; Mandel v Lackner (1979) 92 CA3d 747, 760, 155 CR 269, disapproved on other grounds in Serrano v Unruh (1982) 32 C3d 621, 630 n12, 186 CR 754.

Further research: See California Attorney Fee Awards, chap 15 (3d ed Cal CEB 2010) for discussion of collecting fee awards.

§26.155 XV. FORMS AND DOCUMENTS USED IN FEE MOTIONS

The following forms and documents are commonly used in conjunction with motions for attorney fees:

- Notice of Motion for Award of Reasonable Attorney Fees. See California Attorney Fee Awards, App C (3d ed Cal CEB 2010).
- Memorandum in Support of Motion for Award of Reasonable Attorney Fees. See Attorney Fee Awards, App D.

I. SCOPE OF CHAPTER

§27.1 A. Recovering costs

This chapter discusses the substantive and procedural law on a litigant's right to recover costs in California state trial courts. It covers the statutory basis for recovery of costs (see §§27.3-27.7, 27.19-27.31B), when recovery of costs is a matter of right (see §§27.8-27.18), when recovery of costs is discretionary (see §§27.32-27.46), when costs are disallowed by statute (see §§27.47-27.49), when an award must be reduced or augmented based on a CCP §998 offer to compromise (see §§27.51-27.66), what items of costs are allowed (see §§27.67-27.81) or disallowed (see §§27.82-27.87), and the procedures for claiming costs (see §§27.88-27.102) or moving or taxing costs (see §§27.103-27.111).

This chapter discusses only incidentally recovery of costs in the following matters: proceedings in probate court (see California Decedent Estate Practice (2d ed Cal CEB 2009)); actions for dissolution of marriage and similar proceedings (see Practice Under the California Family Code: Dissolution, Legal Separation, Nullity (Cal CEB Annual)); proceedings before administrative agencies (see California Administrative Hearing Practice (2d ed Cal CEB 1997)); appellate proceedings (see California Civil Appellate Practice §§1.58-1.61 (3d ed Cal CEB 1996)); proceedings related to the contractual relationship between lawyer and client for the payment of attorney fees and costs (see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 5 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004); California Attorney Fee Awards (3d ed Cal CEB 2010)).

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.2 B. Obtaining interest

This chapter also examines the substantive and procedural law regarding a litigant's right to obtain interest on a judgment entered in California state trial courts. See §§27.112-27.121. The discussion covers obtaining interest on awarded damages (see §27.122), interest as damages (see §27.123), interest on obligation after a breach of contract (see §27.124), the rate of interest under retail installment contracts (see §27.125), the circumstances of a waiver of interest (see §27.126), and obtaining an award of prejudgment interest (see §27.127).

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.3 II. RIGHT TO RECOVER COSTS IS STATUTORY

The right to recover costs is purely statutory; there is no common law right to recover costs. See Murillo v Fleetwood Enters., Inc. (1998) 17 C4th 985, 989, 73 CR2d 682; La Mesa-Spring Valley Sch. Dist. v Otsuka (1962) 57 C2d 309, 312, 19 CR 479; Perko's Enters. v RRNS Enters. (1992) 4 CA4th 238, 5 CR2d 470.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.4 A. Primary governing statutes

Although statutory references to costs are found throughout the codes, the central provisions governing cost recovery are in CCP §§1021-1038. The general right to cost recovery is established by CCP §1021, which provides that parties to actions or proceedings are entitled to reimbursement of costs as provided in the Code of Civil Procedure. Code of Civil Procedure §1032 provides for the award of costs to "prevailing parties," and other provisions provide for the award of costs in particular circumstances. See §§27.8-27.18. The specific cost items that may be recovered (see §§27.67-27.81), and those that are not allowed (§§27.82-27.87), are listed in CCP §1033.5.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.5 B. Recovery governed by statute in effect at time right accrues

The recovery of costs is governed by the statute in effect at the time the right accrues. See Stockton Theatres, Inc. v Palermo (1956) 47 C2d 469, 304 P2d 7. Statutes increasing or decreasing a party's right to recover costs apply to cases pending when those statutes become effective. Even if a statute is silent on the issue of retroactivity, the rule applies if the statute is revised while the case is pending on appeal. Heritage Eng'g Constr., Inc. v City of Industry (1998) 65 CA4th 1435, 1439, 77 CR2d 459. But see Bodell Constr. Co. v Trustees of Cal. State Univ. (1998) 62 CA4th 1508, 1511 n1, 73 CR2d 450.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.6 C. Judgment must be final to recover

Because costs are an incident to the judgment, they are seldom recoverable unless there is a final judgment on the merits. CCP §§1021-1038. See Wells Fargo Co. v City & County of San Francisco (1944) 25 C2d 37, 44, 152 P2d 625. When a court lacks jurisdiction to render a judgment on the issues, it also lacks power to award costs. See Begbie v Begbie (1900) 128 C 154, 60 P 667.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.7 D. Court may award costs when settlement agreement silent

If a settlement agreement is silent on costs and attorney fees, and the agreement concludes all matters put in issue by the pleadings, the court retains jurisdiction to entertain a cost bill. See Folsom v Butte County Ass'n of Gov'ts (1982) 32 C3d 668, 186 CR 589; Berti v Santa Barbara Beach Properties (2006) 145 CA4th 70, 75, 51 CR3d 364. However, when settling parties agree among themselves to waive costs, a nonsettling party is not entitled to the benefit of such an agreement and may still be liable for the prevailing party's costs. Nelson v Anderson (1999) 72 CA4th 111, 129, 84 CR2d 753.

PRACTICE TIP: Provide for payment of costs and attorney fees in the settlement agreement so that the parties can decide the matter rather than the court.

© The Regents of the University of California

III. PREVAILING PARTY ENTITLED TO COSTS

§27.8 A. Cost recovery matter of right for prevailing party

Except as otherwise expressly provided by statute, a prevailing party is entitled as a matter of right to recover allowable costs in any action or proceeding. CCP §1032(b). Nelson v Anderson (1999) 72 CA4th 111, 84 CR2d 753.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.9 1. Costs recoverable for action or proceeding

Every remedy that is not an action as defined in CCP §22 is a special proceeding, including all remedies covered in Part III of the Code of Civil Procedure. CCP §23. See Avelar v Superior Court (1992) 7 CA4th 1270, 9 CR2d 536; San Diego Tavern & Restaurant Ass'n v Local Joint Executive Bd. (1959) 174 CA2d 246, 249, 344 P2d 350. The difference between an action and a proceeding is in the remedy sought. Avelar v Superior Court, supra.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/27 Recovering Costs and Obtaining Interest/§27.10 2. Parties and pleadings defined

§27.10 2. Parties and pleadings defined

For purposes of recovery of costs, unless the context clearly requires otherwise (CCP §1032(a)(1)-(3)):

- "Complaint" includes a cross-complaint;
- "Defendant" includes a cross-defendant or anyone against whom a complaint is filed; and
- "Plaintiff" includes a cross-complainant or a party who files a complaint in intervention.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.11 3. Prevailing party defined

Under CCP §1032(a)(4), a "prevailing party" for purposes of determining whether a cost award is mandatory includes:

- The party with a net monetary recovery (see §§27.13-27.14);
- A defendant in whose favor a dismissal is entered (see §§27.15-27.16);
- A defendant when neither plaintiff nor defendant obtains any relief (see §27.17); and
- A defendant as against plaintiffs who do not recover any relief against that defendant (see §27.18).

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.12 4. When court will determine prevailing party

When any party recovers other than monetary relief, and in situations other than as specified in the statute, the prevailing party will be determined by the court. CCP §1032(a)(4); Gilbert v National Enquirer, Inc. (1997) 55 CA4th 1273, 64 CR2d 659. The court has the discretion to allow costs and to apportion costs between the parties. CCP §1032(a)(4). See Lincoln v Schurgin (1995) 39 CA4th 100, 45 CR2d 874 (order for each side to bear its own costs is not abuse of court's discretion).

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Examples of prevailing parties

1. Party with net monetary recovery

§27.13 a. Based on final judgment

In general, the party with the net recovery based on the final judgment is the prevailing party for purposes of recovery of costs. In Haire v Stevenson (1987) 196 CA3d 1249, 242 CR 433, the court of appeal reversed the trial court's granting of the landlords' request for costs and attorney fees in landlord-tenant action, holding that because there can be only one final judgment in an action with a cross-complaint, the tenants, with a net judgment in their favor of $81,000, were the successful parties within the meaning of CCP §1032 and the lease provision granting reasonable attorney fees to the prevailing party. See also, e.g., Michell v Olick (1996) 49 CA4th 1194, 57 CR2d 227 (plaintiff that won $63,000 on one cause of action and lost on 11 other causes of action was prevailing party); Lincoln v Schurgin (1995) 39 CA4th 100, 45 CR2d 874 (plaintiff won approximately $700,000 on one cause of action but lost other causes of action and did not recover on $4 million claim; trial court finding that neither party received net monetary recovery not an abuse of discretion).

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.14 b. When damages offset

Offset of damages may change who the prevailing party is for recovery of costs. See Reed v Wilson (1999) 73 CA4th 439, 444, 86 CR2d 510 (plaintiff's settlement with defendant serves to reduce claims against remaining codefendants); Public Employees' Retirement Sys. v Winston (1989) 209 CA3d 205, 258 CR 612 (damages awarded to lessor were more than offset by award to lessee of security deposit, which made lessee prevailing party with net monetary recovery).

If the settlement amount is greater than the damages award, the award is entirely offset, resulting in a zero judgment. Syverson v Heitman (1985) 171 CA3d 106, 110, 214 CR 581. A plaintiff who does not obtain a net monetary recovery is not the prevailing party under CCP §1032(a)(4). Goodman v Lozano (Feb. 4, 2010, S162655) 2010 Cal Lexis 868.

© The Regents of the University of California

2. Party in whose favor dismissal is entered

§27.15 a. When voluntary dismissal

The voluntary dismissal of a complaint is a dismissal within the meaning of CCP §1032 that entitles the prevailing party to cost recovery as a matter of right. See West Coast Dev. v Reed (1992) 2 CA4th 693, 3 CR2d 790 (award of attorney fees under CCP §128.5); County of Santa Barbara v David R. (1988) 200 CA3d 98, 245 CR 836. See also Boonyarit v Payless Shoesource, Inc. (2006) 145 CA4th 1188, 52 CR3d 241 (voluntarily dismissed defendant must secure entry of order or judgment of dismissal to be prevailing party for purposes of costs award under CCP §1032).

Proceeds from a settlement in exchange for a voluntary dismissal are not a net monetary recovery giving rise to costs as a matter of right under CCP §1032(b). Chinn v KMR Prop. Mgmt. (2008) 166 CA4th 175, 188, 82 CR3d 586.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.15A b. When dismissal result of good faith settlement

A prevailing party is defined to include a party in whose favor a dismissal is entered. CCP §1032(a)(4). The dismissal of a cross-complaint as a result of a good faith settlement is considered such a dismissal and entitles cross-defendant to recover its costs when the cross-complaint against that cross-defendant is dismissed. Crib Retaining Walls, Inc. v NBS/Lowry, Inc. (1996) 47 CA4th 886, 54 CR2d 850. See also Great W. Bank v Converse Consultants, Inc. (1997) 58 CA4th 609, 68 CR2d 224 (cross-defendant who settles with plaintiff and obtains good faith settlement determination order is prevailing party on cross-complaint and is entitled to recover costs from cross-complainant, because cross-complaint was dismissed under CCP §877.6).

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.16 c. When intervention involved

Dismissal of a complaint in intervention entitles the dismissed party to costs against the intervenor for the period in which the intervenor was a party to the principal action. Building Maintenance Serv. Co. v AIL Sys., Inc. (1997) 55 CA4th 1014, 1027, 64 CR2d 353; Catello v I.T.T. Gen. Controls (1984) 152 CA3d 1009, 200 CR 4. Dismissal of the complaint in intervention entitles a defendant who is not a prevailing party to expenses incurred only while the intervenor was a party, i.e., expenses that would not have been incurred but for the intervention. See Andersen v Pacific Bell (1988) 204 CA3d 277, 251 CR 66; Burrow v Pike (1987) 190 CA3d 384, 235 CR 408.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.17 3. In cross-complaint when neither plaintiff nor defendant prevails

Because CCP §1032(a) defines "defendant" to include "cross-defendant," actions involving cross-complaints raise particular issues in cost awards when neither plaintiff nor defendant obtains any relief. When neither plaintiff/cross-defendant nor defendant/cross-complainant prevails on his or her claims, the defendant/cross-complainant is the prevailing party and entitled to costs. See McLarand, Vasquez & Partners, Inc. v Downey Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1991) 231 CA3d 1450, 1455, 282 CR 828.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.18 4. Defendant may be prevailing party if plaintiffs do not recover

When plaintiff does not recover because of offset, or for some other reason does not obtain a net monetary recovery, defendant may be considered the prevailing party. See Public Employees' Retirement Sys. v Winston (1989) 209 CA3d 205, 258 CR 612 (when damages awarded to lessor were more than offset by award to lessee of security deposit, lessee was held to be prevailing party with net monetary recovery). See §27.14.

§27.19 IV. EXAMPLES OF RECOVERABLE COSTS SPECIFIED BY STATUTE

Determine whether specific statutory provisions apply in your case. Some examples of actions governed by specific statutes include those discussed in §§27.20-27.31B.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.20 A. Trespass actions

In any action to recover damages to personal or real property resulting from trespass on lands either under cultivation or intended or used for the raising of livestock, the prevailing plaintiff is entitled to reasonable attorney fees in addition to other costs and any liability for damages imposed by law. CCP §1021.9. See Quarterman v Kefauver (1997) 55 CA4th 1366, 64 CR2d 741; Elton v Anheuser-Busch Beverage Group, Inc. (1996) 50 CA4th 1301, 58 CR2d 303.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.21 B. Eminent domain proceedings

The right to recover costs in eminent domain proceedings is governed by CCP §§1268.610-1268.720. Defendants in eminent domain proceedings, whether or not prevailing parties, are allowed to recover their costs, including the costs of determining the apportionment of the award, except that the cost of determining any issues of title between two or more defendants must be apportioned by the court. CCP §1268.710. In addition, if an eminent domain proceeding is wholly or partially dismissed for any reason, or if final judgment does not allow plaintiff to acquire the property, the court must award defendant litigation expenses. CCP §1268.610(a).

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.22 C. Inverse condemnation proceedings

The right to recover costs in inverse condemnation actions is governed by CCP §1036. Either the court rendering judgment, or an attorney representing a public entity if the claim is settled before judgment, must determine and award costs sufficient to reimburse plaintiff for reasonable costs, disbursements, and expenses, including reasonable attorney, appraisal, and engineering fees, actually incurred. CCP §1036. See Smith v County of Los Angeles (1989) 214 CA3d 266, 262 CR 754 (homeowners and waterworks district entitled to recover costs from county when landslide destroyed homes after construction of roadway and removal of debris).

The court has wide discretion in the scope of the costs awarded. See Estate of Baum (1989) 209 CA3d 744, 257 CR 566; San Gabriel Valley Water Co. v Montebello (1978) 84 CA3d 757, 148 CR 830.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.23 D. Actions to recover wages for labor performed

In actions for the recovery of wages for labor performed, when the amount of the demand, exclusive of interest, does not exceed $300, the court is required to add, as a part of the cost in any judgment recovered by plaintiff or cross-complainant, attorney fees not to exceed 20 percent of the amount recovered. CCP §1031.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.24 E. Eviction costs in unlawful detainer proceedings

In unlawful detainer proceedings, a plaintiff who obtains a judgment for possession of the premises can file a request to recover expenses incurred in the eviction, including costs of the sheriff or marshal to evict the occupants, after the sheriff or marshal informs plaintiff of the exact amounts necessarily incurred. CCP §1034.5.

The plaintiff must file a supplemental cost memorandum, claiming the additional costs and specifying the items and the amounts paid within 10 days after being informed by the sheriff or marshal of the exact costs. Cal Rules of Ct 3.200.

Defendant may move to tax the costs within 10 days after service of the supplemental cost memorandum. If defendant fails to file a timely notice of motion to tax costs, the court clerk will enter judgment for the costs. Cal Rules of Ct 3.200. The judgment is enforced in the same manner as a money judgment.

§27.25 F. Defense costs in actions against public entities

In cases brought against public entities under California's Tort Claims Act, including cases for express or implied indemnity or for contribution, the court must decide at the time a motion for summary judgment or nonsuit is granted whether the action was brought with reasonable cause and in the good faith belief that there was a justifiable controversy under the facts or law that justified commencement of the action. CCP §1038(a). If the court finds that the action was not brought both in good faith and with reasonable cause, it must determine the defense costs reasonably and necessarily incurred, and award such costs as part of the judgment in addition to costs normally awarded to the prevailing party. CCP §1038(a). See Kobzoff v Los Angeles County Harbor/UCLA Med. Ctr. (1998) 19 C4th 851, 80 CR2d 803.

The legislative purpose in enacting CCP §1038 was to allow public entities to recover the cost of defending frivolous lawsuits in the same manner in which damages may be sought in a malicious prosecution action. Knight v City of Capitola (1992) 4 CA4th 918, 6 CR2d 874; Curtis v County of Los Angeles (1985) 172 CA3d 1243, 218 CR 772. Under CCP §1038, the meaning of "good faith" for determining whether costs must be awarded encompasses the equitable principle of fairness, and "reasonable cause" is defined as whether a reasonable attorney would consider the claim tenable. See Carroll v State (1990) 217 CA3d 134, 265 CR 753. Keeping a public entity in a case through summary judgment to avoid an "empty chair" argument by its codefendants does not constitute reasonable cause. Hall v Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1996) 43 CA4th 1580, 51 CR2d 387.

§27.26 G. Under judicial (court-ordered) arbitration

In judicial arbitration cases (see CCP §§1141.10-1141.31), the arbitrator has the power to award costs, not to exceed the statutory costs of suit. CCP §1141.19; Cal Rules of Ct 3.824(a). If the arbitrator does not make a cost award, the court retains jurisdiction to entertain a cost bill filed after the award. See Guevara v Brand (1992) 8 CA4th 995, 998, 10 CR2d 780.

A prevailing party retains the same right to costs under a cost bill procedure (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1700) as with a judgment following trial. Guevara v Brand, supra. The preferable procedure, however, is for the arbitrator to award costs as part of the award. See Dickens v Lee (1991) 230 CA3d 985, 281 CR 783.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.27 H. When judgment in trial de novo not more favorable to requesting party

If the judgment following a trial de novo is not more favorable than the arbitration award in either the amount of damages awarded or the type of relief granted for the party requesting the trial de novo, the court must order that party to pay the costs and fees specified in CCP §1141.21(a); see Bhullar v Tayyab (1996) 46 CA4th 582, 54 CR2d 17 (court of appeal reversed trial court's denial of attorney fees to defendant under CCP §1141.21). An exception to the imposition of costs and fees occurs if the court finds in writing, on a motion, that such imposition would create a substantial economic hardship. CCP §1141.21(a).

The provisions of CCP §1141.21 do not apply if the judgment after the trial de novo exceeds the amount in controversy specified in CCP §1141.11 ($50,000). CCP §1141.26.

§27.29 J. Unsuccessful actions to enjoin public improvement of utility

A person or entity that wrongfully enjoins a public improvement or utility will be liable for all costs, damages, and necessary expenses resulting to defendant because of the filing of the suit (if all statutory requirements are met). CCP §526b.

§27.30 K. Actions to review removal proceedings against permanent school employees

Fees and costs should be awarded under the general provisions of CCP §1032(b) to a prevailing employee for any review proceedings under Ed C §44944(e) (authorizing the payment of attorney fees to an employee whom the Commission on Professional Competence has determined should not be dismissed or suspended), even though §44944(e) does not expressly provide for the award of fees if judicial review of a commission decision is sought. Fontana Unified Sch. Dist. v Burman (1988) 45 C3d 208, 246 CR 733.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.31 L. Actions brought by personal representatives, trustees, or agents

In an action prosecuted or defended by a personal representative, the trustee of an express trust, a guardian or conservator, or anyone expressly authorized by statute, costs may be recovered as in an action by or against a person prosecuting or defending in the person's own right. CCP §1026(a).

Costs allowed will be made chargeable only to the estate, fund, or party represented, unless the court directs the costs to be paid by the fiduciary personally for mismanagement or bad faith in the action or defense. CCP §1026(b).

§27.31A M. Drug house abatement actions

The prevailing party in an action brought under the drug house abatement law (Health & S C §§11570-11587) is entitled to recover costs, including the costs of investigation, discovery, and attorney fees. CC §3496(c). This may include salaries and overhead expenses of government attorneys and law enforcement personnel attributable to the action. City of Oakland v McCullough (1996) 46 CA4th 1, 53 CR2d 531.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.31B N. Public Records Act proceedings

The prevailing party is entitled to costs and attorney fees in any Public Records Act proceeding brought to compel production of records. Govt C §6259(d); see Motorola Communication & Electronics, Inc. v Department of Gen. Servs. (1997) 55 CA4th 1340, 1344, 64 CR2d 477 (court properly denied request for costs and attorney fees because plaintiff was not the prevailing party).

© The Regents of the University of California

V. WHEN COST RECOVERY IS DISCRETIONARY

§27.32 A. Court determines prevailing party

Even when a party does not fall within the definition of a prevailing party as defined by statute (see §§27.8-27.18), the court may award costs to a party found to be "prevailing" by the court. CCP §1032(a)(4). This includes parties who recover other than monetary relief. CCP §1032(a)(4).

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.33 B. Court may apportion costs

When costs are awarded to a party found to be prevailing in the discretion of the court, the court may apportion costs between the parties on the same or adverse sides under rules adopted by the Judicial Council. CCP §1032(a)(4).

In identifying the prevailing party, the courts have stated that the types of parties specifically listed in CCP §1032 are not all-inclusive, and that a party that does not fall within that list may nonetheless be declared prevailing and awarded costs in the court's discretion. See Pirkig v Dennis (1989) 215 CA3d 1560, 264 CR 494. See also §27.101.

When a prevailing party on summary judgment incurs costs jointly with other parties that remain in the litigation, then the prevailing party, during the pendency of the litigation, is entitled to recover only the costs it has incurred or were incurred on its behalf. Fennessy v DeLeuw-Cather Corp. (1990) 218 CA3d 1192, 267 CR 772 (in action for wrongful discharge, one of six defendants was granted summary judgment); Jonkey v Carignan Constr. Co. (2006) 139 CA4th 20, 26, 42 CR3d 399 (prevailing defendants in negligence action, represented by same counsel during proceedings, were jointly entitled to costs).

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.34 C. Parties may stipulate to payment of costs

Parties may stipulate to alternative procedures for awarding costs incurred in litigation. CCP §1032(c). See, e.g., Reveles v Toyota By The Bay (1997) 57 CA4th 1139, 67 CR2d 543, disapproved on other grounds in Gavaldon v DaimlerChrysler Corp. (2004) 32 C4th 1246, 1261, 13 CR3d 793, and in Snukal v Flightways Mfg., Inc. (2000) 23 C4th 754, 775 n6, 98 CR2d 1. Make the language in any agreement stipulating to the payment of costs very clear as to the scope of the costs and the manner of allocation.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.35 D. Plaintiff may not recover costs if no net monetary recovery

A plaintiff whose judgment is reduced to zero is not the party with the net monetary recovery under CCP §1032(a)(4) and is not the prevailing party. Goodman v Lozano (Feb. 4, 2010, S162655) 2010 Cal Lexis 868. See §§27.13-27.14. The court still has discretion to deny costs when the only relief is injunctive and there is no net monetary recovery to either party. United States Golf Ass'n v Arroyo Software Corp. (1999) 69 CA4th 607, 81 CR2d 708.

The reduction of a damages award under principles of comparative fault does not result in the reduction of the costs awarded to a prevailing party. See Hyatt v Sierra Boat Co. (1978) 79 CA3d 325, 347, 145 CR 47. However, costs may be reduced if judgment is reduced below the court's jurisdictional limit. See §27.36.

© The Regents of the University of California

E. When judgment could have been rendered in limited civil case or within jurisdictional limits of small claims court

§27.36 1. Judgment in unlimited civil cases

When an action is brought in superior court in a case other than a limited civil case and the party recovers a judgment that is less than could have been rendered in a limited civil case, the court may award costs or any portion of claimed costs at its discretion. CCP §1033(a); Chavez v City of Los Angeles (2010) 47 C4th 970, ___ CR3d ___ (CCP §1033(a) also applies to actions brought under FEHA); Dorman v DWLC Corp. (1995) 35 CA4th 1808, 1815, 42 CR2d 459 (trial court is not required to add potential attorney fees award to damage award before determining whether prevailing party has recovered judgment exceeding jurisdictional limit). Under CCP §88, any civil action or proceeding other than a limited civil case may be referred to as an "unlimited civil case."

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.37 2. Judgment in limited civil cases

In a limited civil case, when a prevailing plaintiff recovers less than the jurisdictional limit of the small claims court ($5000; CCP §116.220), the following rules apply:

- When the party could have brought its action in small claims court, the court may, in its discretion, allow or deny costs to the prevailing party, or may allow costs in part in any amount that is proper. CCP §1033(b)(1).
- When the party could not have brought its action in small claims court, costs and necessary disbursements must be limited to the (CCP §1033(b)(2)):
- Actual costs of the filing fee;
- Actual costs of service of process; and
- Reasonable attorney fees when specifically allowed by law.

Costs must be awarded to plaintiff only if the court is satisfied that, before the beginning of the action, plaintiff informed defendant in writing (CCP §1033(b)(2)):

- Of the intended legal action against defendant; and
- That legal action could result in a judgment against defendant that would include the costs and necessary disbursements allowed by CCP §1033.

As to situations in which a limited civil case is brought in the small claims division, and the case is within the jurisdiction of the small claims division, see CCP §87.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.38 F. Applicant may be required to pay costs of trial postponement

When an application is made to postpone a trial, the court may require the applicant, as a condition of granting the application, to pay expenses caused by the postponement. CCP §1024. The expenses may include jury fees. See Inman v Fremont Med. Ctr. (1975) 49 CA3d 169, 122 CR 372 (motion for continuance on day of trial conditioned on payment of jury fees for summoned jury panel).

NOTE: The expenses that may be awarded under CCP §1024 do not include attorney fees or reimbursement of lost income. See DeCesare v Lembert (1983) 144 CA3d 20, 192 CR 354. Nor does §1024 apply to juvenile proceedings. See In re Sean (1989) 214 CA3d 662, 262 CR 884.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.39 G. Costs may be awarded in bad faith actions

Trial courts have the discretionary authority to award reasonable expenses, including attorney fees incurred as a result of frivolous actions, actions not based on good faith, or actions that cause unnecessary delay. See CCP §128.7. For a discussion of recovery of attorney fees as sanctions, see chap 26.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.40 H. Cost awards in equitable indemnity actions

An award of costs in an equitable action is governed by the discretionary provisions of CCP §1032(a)(4), even though the relief sought or obtained takes the form of a payment of money. See Miller v American Honda Motor Co. (1986) 184 CA3d 1014, 229 CR 523 (cross-complaint rendered moot when distributor and retailer both defeated purchaser's claims against them; because neither distributor nor retailer prevailed within meaning of former CCP §1032(c), both had to bear their own costs on cross-complaint).

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.41 I. Costs may be awarded in interpleader actions

In an interpleader action, a party who follows the procedures in CCP §386 or §386.5 may, by motion, petition, complaint, or cross-complaint, request an award of costs incurred in that action. CCP §386.6(a).

In ordering the discharge of a party in an interpleader action, the court may, in its discretion, award the party costs from the amount in dispute that was deposited with the court. CCP §386.6(a). At final judgment, the court may further provide for the assumption of such costs and attorney fees by one or more of the adverse claimants as may appear proper. See Business Title Corp. v U.S. (1978) 21 C3d 710, 717, 147 CR 622.

Further research: See California Civil Procedure Before Trial §28.22 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004) for further discussion of recovering costs and fees in interpleader actions.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/27 Recovering Costs and Obtaining Interest/§27.42 J. Costs may be awarded for judgment notwithstanding the verdict

§27.42 J. Costs may be awarded for judgment notwithstanding the verdict

A party who prevails on a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict is a prevailing party, even if the other party receives some relief. See Stevenson v Oceanic Bank (1990) 223 CA3d 306, 321, 272 CR 757.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.43 K. Costs may be awarded for injunctive relief

A party who receives alternative injunctive relief, rather than the primary injunctive relief requested, may still be held by the court to be a prevailing party and awarded costs. See Sokolow v County of San Mateo (1989) 213 CA3d 231, 261 CR 520. But see United States Golf Ass'n v Arroyo Software Corp. (1999) 69 CA4th 607, 81 CR2d 708 (court declined to find prevailing party and award costs when only relief obtained was injunctive and there was no net monetary recovery to either party).

Further research: For further discussion of injunctive relief, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 32 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.44 L. State or county may recover costs

When the state is a party, costs must be awarded against it on the same basis as against any other party. CCP §1028. When any county, city, district, or other public agency or entity is a party, costs must also be awarded against it on the same basis as against any other party. CCP §1029. In Heist v County of Colusa (1984) 163 CA3d 841, 213 CR 278, the court of appeal held that a cost award to the county (including staff time needed to produce documents) was within the trial court's discretion (after denying plaintiff's petition for extraordinary writ challenging county's decision to abandon a road).

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.45 M. Costs may be awarded to small business or licensee

If a small business or licensee prevails in a civil action with a state regulatory agency (that involves the regulatory functions of the state agency regarding the small business or licensee) and the court finds that the agency's action was undertaken without substantial justification, the small business or licensee may be awarded reasonable litigation expenses in addition to other costs. CCP §1028.5. The meanings of "reasonable litigation expenses," "licensee," and "small business" for the purposes of these provisions are defined by statute. See CCP §1028.5(b)-(d).

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.46 N. Defendant recovers costs when tender and deposit made in action to recover money

A defendant who alleges tendering to plaintiff the full amount due before plaintiff filed an action to recover that money (and whose allegation is found to be true), and who has deposited the same amount with the court after the action was filed, is entitled to recover costs from plaintiff, even if plaintiff prevails. CCP §1025.

A tender made after the action is commenced is insufficient to avoid imposition of costs under CCP §1025. See Cirimele v Shinazy (1954) 124 CA2d 46, 268 P2d 210, aff'd (1955) 134 CA2d 50, 285 P2d 311 (on issue of additional allowance for attorney fees incurred on two appeals). The court of appeal held in Cirimele (a lessor's action for rent under a lease entitling him to reasonable attorney fees in the event of suit) that the trial court erred in finding such fees to be unnecessary as a result of the lessee's tender when not only was the tender for less than the amount due, but, being first made by attaching a check to the answer, it was not made before commencement of the action as required by §1025.

© The Regents of the University of California

VI. STATUTES REQUIRING SHARING OR PROHIBITING COST RECOVERY

§27.47 A. Costs not allowed in disclaimer of title actions

A plaintiff cannot recover costs in any action on title to real or personal property in which a defendant disclaims in the answer any claim, or allows judgment to be taken without filing an answer. CCP §761.030(b). However, disclaimer of title will not defeat plaintiff's right to costs if the issue of possession is contested and determined in plaintiff's favor. See McMorris v Pagano (1944) 63 CA2d 446, 146 P2d 944. See also Lawton v Gordon (1869) 37 C 202.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/27 Recovering Costs and Obtaining Interest/§27.48 B. Costs not allowed in submission of controversy without action: Agreed case

§27.48 B. Costs not allowed in submission of controversy without action: Agreed case

When judgment is rendered on an "agreed case" submitted under CCP §1138, no costs may be awarded for any proceeding before trial. CCP §1139.

Further research: See 6 Witkin, California Procedure, Proceedings Without Trial §79 (5th ed 2008).

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.49 C. Costs shared in contractual arbitration

Parties to arbitration proceedings are required to pay their prorata share of the arbitrator's fee and other expenses unless the arbitration agreement or the parties agree otherwise. CCP §1284.2. When the parties agree to bear their own costs in arbitration, costs on appeal will be treated the same in the absence of an agreement to treat them differently. See Humphries Inv. v Walsh (1988) 202 CA3d 766, 248 CR 800.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/27 Recovering Costs and Obtaining Interest/§27.50 D. Costs shared by primary and excess insurers when personal automobile liability policies involved

§27.50 D. Costs shared by primary and excess insurers when personal automobile liability policies involved

When two or more personal policies afford automobile liability insurance that apply to the same motor vehicle in an occurrence from which a loss arises, and one policy is primary and one or more policies are excess, then each insurer must pay for the cost of defense in proportion to the percentage of total damages paid by that insurer. Ins C §11580.9(g)(1). Each insurer's share is the percentage of the total defense costs equal to the amount of damage paid by that insurer as a percentage of total damages paid by all insurers whose policies apply to the motor vehicle involved. Ins C §11580.9(g)(1).

VII. WHEN COST AWARD MUST BE REDUCED OR AUGMENTED BASED ON CCP §998 OFFER TO COMPROMISE

§27.51 A. General effect and requirements

A cost award under CCP §1031 or §1032 must be reduced or augmented as specified in CCP §998 (written offers to compromise on pending action). For procedures for making and accepting offers to compromise under §998, see California Civil Procedure Before Trial, chap 47 (4th ed Cal CEB 2004).

To qualify as a CCP §998 offer, the statute must be fully satisfied in its particulars. See, e.g., Lecuyer v Sunset Trails Apartments (2004) 120 CA4th 920, 16 CR3d 169 (settlement offer under CCP §998 was invalid because not served by mail at least 15 days before trial); Stell v Jay Hales Dev. Co. (1992) 11 CA4th 1214, 1230, 15 CR2d 220, disapproved on other grounds in Citizens for Covenant Compliance v Anderson (1995) 12 C4th 345, 366, 47 CR2d 898 (offer made 79 days before trial, not referring to §998, and requiring immediate response, did not satisfy §998). But see Berg v Darden (2004) 120 CA4th 721, 728, 15 CR3d 829 (otherwise clear CCP §998 offer to compromise is not rendered invalid simply because it does not track statutory language); Elite Show Servs., Inc. v Staffpro, Inc. (2004) 119 CA4th 263, 14 CR3d 184 (settlement offer including offer to pay reasonable attorney fees was not too uncertain to be enforced under CCP §998).

PRACTICE TIP: Prepare and serve separate §998 offers for each plaintiff or defendant, allowing each the opportunity to accept the offer individually. Menees v Andrews (2004) 122 CA4th 1540, 1546, 19 CR3d 664 (offer that did not meet this requirement found invalid).

Code of Civil Procedure §998 provides that the written offer to compromise must include "a statement of the offer, containing the terms and conditions of the judgment or award, and a provision that allows the accepting party to indicate acceptance of the offer by signing a statement that the offer is accepted." CCP §998(b). Any acceptance of the offer must be in writing, and be signed by either counsel for the accepting party or by that party if unrepresented. CCP §998(b).

Section 998 applies to an offer made before commencement of trial or arbitration (as provided in §1281 or §1295) of a dispute to be resolved by arbitration. This section does not apply to specific types of labor arbitrations. See CCP §998(i). Additionally, scheduling an arbitration does not necessarily terminate an existing offer.

A second CCP §998 offer supersedes and extinguishes prior §998 offers. Wilson v Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. (1999) 72 CA4th 382, 85 CR2d 4; but see Ray v Goodman (2006) 142 CA4th 83, 47 CR3d 659 (even if first §998 offer was considered revoked or superseded for purposes of contract law, under language of CC §3291, prejudgment interest accrues from date of first offer).

If a CCP §998 offer is not accepted before trial or arbitration, or within 30 days after it is made, whichever occurs first, the offer is deemed withdrawn, and is inadmissible in the trial or arbitration. CCP §998(b)(2).

A CCP §998 offer that is unilaterally revoked by the offeror before the expiration of the statutory period is a nullity for purposes of the cost-shifting provisions of §998. Marcey v Romero (2007) 148 CA4th 1211, 56 CR3d 402.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.52 B. When defendant's offer not accepted and plaintiff fails to obtain more favorable judgment or award

If defendant's offer is not accepted and plaintiff does not obtain a more favorable judgment or arbitration award, plaintiff cannot recover postoffer costs and must pay defendant's costs from the time of the offer. CCP §998(c). See, e.g., Steele v Jensen Instrument Co. (1997) 59 CA4th 326, 69 CR2d 135. In determining whether the plaintiff obtained a more favorable judgment, the court or arbitrator shall exclude postoffer costs. CCP §998(c)(2)(A).

In Mesa Forest Prods., Inc. v St. Paul Mercury Ins. Co. (1999) 73 CA4th 324, 86 CR2d 398, the plaintiff sued for approximately $122,000 and multiple defendants made a CCP §998 offer of $62,690, which plaintiff did not accept. One defendant then voluntarily paid plaintiff $62,690 before trial. After the jury, taking the voluntary payment into account, returned a verdict for plaintiff for $13,205.85, a defendant claimed it was entitled to recover §998 costs. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's ruling that the voluntary payment would be included in the plaintiff's recovery, resulting in the recovery exceeding the offer and, therefore, denial of §998 costs to the defendant.

The making of a §998 offer does not, however, terminate the plaintiff's rights to recover pre-offer costs. Scott Co. v Blount, Inc. (1999) 20 C4th 1103, 86 CR2d 614. See also Duale v Mercedes-Benz USA, LLC (2007) 148 CA4th 718, 56 CR3d 19.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.53 1. No distinction between tort and other causes of action

Former CCP §998(c) distinguished between tort causes of action and causes of action not in tort. See, e.g., Wilson v Safeway Stores, Inc. (1997) 52 CA4th 267, 271, 60 CR2d 532. In 1997, CCP §998(c) was amended to remove this distinction and provides, without reference to the type of cause of action involved, that if the plaintiff does not accept defendant's §998 offer and fails to obtain a more favorable judgment or award, plaintiff cannot recover postoffer costs and must pay defendant's postoffer costs. CCP §998(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.54 2. Scope of costs recoverable

If defendant's offer is not accepted and plaintiff does not obtain a more favorable judgment or arbitration award, plaintiff cannot recover postoffer costs and must pay defendant's costs from the time of the offer. CCP §998(c). In any action or proceeding other than an eminent domain action, the court or arbitrator has the discretion to require plaintiff to pay a reasonable sum to cover the costs of expert witnesses who are not regular employees of any party; the costs would be actually incurred and reasonably necessary in preparing for or during trial or arbitration of the case by defendant. CCP §998(c)(1).

NOTE: In determining expert witness fees, the court must view the necessity of expert deposition expenses. The court has discretion to apportion these costs among the parties. Brake v Beech Aircraft Corp. (1986) 184 CA3d 930, 229 CR 336. If a party obtains a more favorable judgment or arbitration award after its CCP §998 offer is refused, that party may recover expert witness fees under that statute that were actually incurred, even if they were not personally incurred by that party. Skistimas v Old World Owners Ass'n (2005) 127 CA4th 948, 952, 26 CR3d 319 (defendants awarded expert witness fees even though their insurer paid those fees on defendants' behalf).

If a defendant's offer is not accepted and plaintiff fails to obtain a more favorable judgment or award, the costs required to be paid by plaintiff under CCP §998, from the time of the offer, must be deducted from any damages awarded in plaintiff's favor. CCP §998(e). If the costs awarded under §998 exceed the damages awarded to plaintiff, the net amount must be awarded to defendant and judgment or award entered accordingly. CCP §998(e).

Preoffer costs should be considered a part of plaintiff's judgment in determining whether plaintiff failed to obtain a judgment more favorable than the compromise offer. See Shain v City of Albany (1980) 106 CA3d 294, 165 CR 69. In determining whether a party prevailing at trial has obtained a judgment more favorable than a pretrial settlement offer it refused, the court first adds to the judgment of damages the recoverable costs and attorney fees authorized by statute and incurred before the settlement offer. See Kelly v Yee (1989) 213 CA3d 336, 261 CR 568 (in action against landlords for wrongful eviction, court of appeal held that trial court erred in allowing landlords costs and attorney fees under §998 when total of plaintiffs' preoffer costs and attorney fees, punitive damages, and trebled general damages exceeded landlords' settlement offer). In such a case, plaintiff may not include postoffer costs in calculating the amount of the judgment.

In determining whether a judgment is more favorable, the court must exclude from the total recovery the costs incurred after the time of the offer and must also exclude damages incurred after the time of an offer. See Harvard Inv. Co. v Gap Stores, Inc. (1984) 156 CA3d 704, 711, 202 CR 891.

§27.55 3. Costs recoverable when multiple plaintiffs

With multiple plaintiffs, a defendant's CCP §998 offer to compromise should designate how costs are to be divided among the plaintiffs. Only an offer made to a single plaintiff, without need for allocation or acceptance by other plaintiffs, qualifies as a valid offer under §998. See Randles v Lowry (1970) 4 CA3d 68, 84 CR 321; Meissner v Paulson (1989) 212 CA3d 785, 260 CR 826. The concerns raised by, and the rule of, Meissner do not apply when the plaintiffs are married and their causes of action are, and any recovery therefrom would be, community property, because either plaintiff could accept a settlement offer on behalf of the community. Vick v DaCorsi (2003) 110 CA4th 206, 212, 1 CR3d 626. In addition, a plaintiff suing in multiple capacities is a single party for purposes of a defendant's §998 offer. Peterson v John Crane, Inc. (2007) 154 CA4th 498, 506, 65 CR3d 185.

When there are multiple plaintiffs whose interests are not identical and who have no single, indivisible injury, their joint settlement offer to defendant may not be deemed a valid offer under CCP §998. See Hurlbut v Sonora Community Hosp. (1989) 207 CA3d 388, 410, 254 CR 840. See also Gilman v Beverly Cal. Corp. (1991) 231 CA3d 121, 125, 283 CR 17 (following Hurlbut in medical malpractice wrongful death action); Meissner v Paulson, supra.

However, in Fortman v Hemco, Inc. (1989) 211 CA3d 241, 259 CR 311, although the offer of compromise was originally offered jointly by plaintiffs, a minor and her mother, and the mother subsequently dismissed her causes of action before trial, the court held that the remaining minor plaintiff received a greater amount in damages after trial than she would have received had defendant accepted the joint offer, even if the entire amount of the offer had been attributed to the minor. The offer of $1 million by the original two plaintiffs, in light of the $23 million verdict, left no doubt that the award exceeded the offer even if the entire offer were attributed to the prevailing plaintiff. Similarly, in Stallman v Bell (1991) 235 CA3d 740, 747, 286 CR 755, plaintiffs made, and defendants rejected, a §998 offer to settle for $225,000. The court of appeal affirmed the order awarding expert witness fees and reversed the order denying plaintiff's request for costs, including prejudgment interest, holding that plaintiff's statutory settlement offer was not void, although it was made jointly by both the individual plaintiff and decedent's estate, because there was only a single verdict to be compared with a single offer, and it could be determined clearly whether the judgment was more favorable than the offer.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.56 4. Costs recoverable when multiple defendants

In a multiple defendant case, a joint offer by defendants was permissible without apportionment when they were united in interest and were sued on a theory of joint and several liability. Brown v Nolan (1979) 98 CA3d 445, 451, 159 CR 469. See also Stiles v Estate of Ryan (1985) 173 CA3d 1057, 1066, 219 CR 647. When the offering defendants do not meet these criteria, CCP §998 may still apply if, despite the lack of apportionment, it is possible to determine whether a more favorable judgment was received as to each defendant. See Winston Square Homeowner's Ass'n v Centex W., Inc. (1989) 213 CA3d 282, 294, 261 CR 605.

This is an evolving area of the law, complicated by the passage of Proposition 51, which abolished joint liability for noneconomic damages in negligence suits. The validity of the CCP §998 offer appears to depend on whether it is sufficiently specific to permit one of multiple defendants to determine the exact amount plaintiff is seeking from that defendant. See Steinfeld v Foote-Goldman Proctologic Med. Group, Inc. (1996) 50 CA4th 1542, 1546, 58 CR2d 371; Bihun v AT&T Info. Sys., Inc. (1993) 13 CA4th 976, 16 CR2d 787, disapproved on other grounds in Lakin v Watkins Assoc. Indus. (1993) 6 C4th 644, 664, 25 CR2d 109; Taing v Johnson Scaffolding Co. (1992) 9 CA4th 579, 11 CR2d 820.

In Persson v Smart Inventions, Inc. (2005) 125 CA4th 1141, 1171, 23 CR3d 335, the court upheld the validity of "a joint offer by two defendants, in which the defendants' offer to have judgment taken against each of them jointly and severally in a stated amount," even though "the two defendants are not jointly and severally liable on all claims."

§27.57 C. When plaintiff's offer not accepted and defendant fails to obtain more favorable judgment or award

If plaintiff's offer is not accepted and defendant fails to obtain a more favorable judgment or arbitration award in any action or proceeding other than an eminent domain action, the court or arbitrator in his or her discretion may require the defendant to pay, in addition to plaintiff's costs, a reasonable sum to cover postoffer costs that were actually incurred and reasonably necessary for the services of expert witnesses who are not regular employees of any party in preparing for or during trial or arbitration of the case by plaintiff. CCP §998(d).

In determining whether the plaintiff obtains a more favorable judgment, the court or arbitrator shall exclude the postoffer costs. CCP §998(c)(2)(A). It was the intent of the legislature in enacting CCP §998(c)(2)(A) "to supersede the holding in Encinitas Plaza Real v Knight, 209 CA3d 996, that attorney's fees awarded to the prevailing party were not costs for purposes of this section but were part of the judgment." CCP §998(c)(2)(B).

In cases involving joint offers made by multiple plaintiffs, CCP §998 applies when, even though the offer was not apportioned among the plaintiffs, it is possible to determine whether a favorable judgment was received as to each plaintiff. See Stallman v Bell, supra; Fortman v Hemco, Inc. (1989) 211 CA3d 241, 259 CR 311. In Fortman, when two plaintiffs made a $1 million joint offer, it was still possible to ascertain whether defendant received a more favorable judgment as to each plaintiff, given that the verdict in plaintiffs' favor was more than $23 million and was thus more favorable even if the entire offer were apportioned to both plaintiffs. Compare Fortman with Hurlbut v Sonora Community Hosp. (1989) 207 CA3d 388, 254 CR 840 (cost recovery denied to plaintiffs who made joint offer when it could not be determined whether more favorable judgment was received as to each plaintiff).

Presumably, CCP §998 would apply when a plaintiff makes an offer to multiple defendants. In determining whether the judgment is more favorable than the offer when plaintiff makes separate offers to each of multiple defendants and obtains a judgment of joint and several liability, the offer is not combined and the judgment is not apportioned. See Hilliger v Golden (1980) 107 CA3d 394, 166 CR 33. See also Wickware v Tanner (1997) 53 CA4th 570, 61 CR2d 790.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.58 D. When both parties obtain more favorable judgments

If both parties obtain judgments more favorable than their opponents' CCP §998 offers, neither augmentation nor reduction of the costs is normally allowed by CCP §§1031-1032. See Rose v Hertz Corp. (1985) 168 CA3d Supp 6, 214 CR 795 (prevailing party simply party in whose favor judgment is entered, and concept of prevailing party bears no relationship to "more favorable judgment" language of §998). A CCP §998 offer applies to offers before trial and before arbitration. CCP §998.

Terms of a CCP §998 offer that have merely personal or subjective value to the litigants may also make it difficult for a court to determine whether the offering party has achieved a more favorable outcome than that offered. Thus, in Barella v Exchange Bank (2000) 84 CA4th 793, 101 CR2d 167, the defendant made a CCP §998 offer of $25,000, subject to a confidentiality provision. The defendant rejected the offer and subsequently obtained a verdict of only $10,000. The court denied the defendant's motion to strike the plaintiff's costs bill for CCP §998 costs, finding that the difference between the public vindication achieved through a verdict and a confidential settlement for a greater monetary amount was too subjective to support a finding that the plaintiff had recovered "less" than set forth in the CCP §998 offer.

E. Costs recoverable for expert witnesses

§27.59 1. Costs must be in accord with Govt C §68092.5

The costs for services of expert witnesses awarded to either plaintiff or defendant under CCP §998 may not exceed the costs specified in Govt C §68092.5, which provides that a party requiring expert witness testimony must pay the reasonable and customary hourly or daily fee for the actual time spent in examining that expert by any party attending the action or proceeding. CCP §998(h).

NOTE: Police officers are deemed expert witnesses for purposes of §998. CCP §998(f).

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.60 2. Fees collectible even if appeal pending

A party who is awarded expert witness fees under CCP §998 may collect them even pending an appeal despite the general rule that judgment for ordinary costs is subject to a stay on appeal unless an undertaking is filed. See Bank of San Pedro v Superior Court (1992) 3 C4th 797, 12 CR2d 696. See also Gallardo v Specialty Restaurants Corp. (2000) 84 CA4th 463, 100 CR2d 884 (when judgment included both ordinary costs under CCP §1032(a) and costs allowable under CCP §998, only collection of ordinary costs was stayed on appeal).

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.61 3. Award is discretionary

A party is not entitled to the costs of services of expert witnesses as a matter of right under CCP §998. Rather, awarding such costs is within the discretion of the trial court, which may exercise its discretion only if the party against whom costs are awarded fails to obtain a more favorable judgment than the settlement offer. See Syverson v Heitmann (1985) 171 CA3d 106, 114, 214 CR 581.

In Syverson, the court held that plaintiff was not entitled to costs for the services of expert witnesses, based on an award of damages that equaled plaintiff's §998 offer but was reduced to zero by amounts paid by settling joint tortfeasors under CCP §877. The court found that defendant obtained a more favorable judgment because, had he accepted the offer, he would have been jointly liable for the amount of the offer. 171 CA3d at 114. The 1999 amendments to CCP §998 permit the court to award expert witness fees reasonably necessary in "either or both" preparation for trial or arbitration, or during trial or arbitration. CCP §998(c)(1).

If a party obtains a more favorable judgment or arbitration award after its CCP §998 offer is refused, that party may recover expert witness fees under that statute that were actually incurred, even if they were not personally incurred by that party. Skistimas v Old World Owners Ass'n (2005) 127 CA4th 948, 952, 26 CR3d 319 (defendants awarded expert witness fees even though their insurer paid those fees on defendants' behalf).

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.62 F. Costs recoverable only for offers made in good faith

Only reasonable offers made in good faith give rise to cost shifting under CCP §998. Deciding whether an offer is reasonable is within the trial court's discretion and is viewed in the circumstances in which the offer was made. Jones v Dumrichob (1998) 63 CA4th 1258, 1262, 74 CR2d 607 (under circumstances of case, §998 offer for waiver of costs was reasonable, good faith offer). See Mesa Forest Prods., Inc. v St. Paul Mercury Ins. Co. (1999) 73 CA4th 324, 86 CR2d 398; Elrod v Oregon Cummins Diesel, Inc. (1987) 195 CA3d 692, 699, 241 CR 108; Wear v Calderon (1981) 121 CA3d 818, 175 CR 566.

If the §998 offer is made in good faith, it is an abuse of discretion for the court to refuse to award expert witness fees. Thompson v Miller (2003) 112 CA4th 327, 338, 4 CR3d 905. Moreover, when the offering party obtains a judgment more favorable than its pre-trial offer, the offer is presumed to have been made in good faith and the opposing party bears the burden of proving otherwise. 112 CA4th at 338.

In Elrod v Oregon Cummins Diesel, Inc. (1987) 195 CA3d 692, 699, 241 CR 108, the court articulated a two-part test to determine whether an offer is reasonable: the offer represents a reasonable prediction of the amount of money that the defendant would have to pay the plaintiff following a trial, based on the information that was known or reasonably should have been known to the defendant; and the plaintiff knows or should have known the defendant's information.

In Elrod, although the original award was over $l million, plaintiff received a net award of zero after reductions for comparative negligence and credits from prior settlements. 195 CA3d at 696. The court of appeal held that it was within the trial court's discretion to find a CCP §998 offer of $15,001 not to have been made in good faith, even though the eventual net award was less than the offer. 195 CA3d at 701.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.63 G. Attorney fees may be recoverable

A party who prevails in a breach of contract action by accepting an offer to compromise under CCP §998 may recover attorney fees under CC §1717 when there may also be recovery of attorney fees for action on a contract. See Lanyi v Goldblum (1986) 177 CA3d 181, 193, 223 CR 32. See chap 26 for discussion of recovery of attorney fees.

In Scott Co. v Blount, Inc. (1999) 20 C4th 1103, 86 CR2d 614, the supreme court clarified this issue. Plaintiff sued for over $2 million on a construction subcontract that included an attorney fee clause. Defendant made a CCP §998 offer of $900,000, plaintiff made a CCP §998 offer of $1.5 million, and neither offer was accepted. After trial, plaintiff obtained a judgment for $442,054. The supreme court explained the language and purposes underlying CCP §998 and held that (1) because plaintiff was the prevailing party, it was entitled to its preoffer costs, but (2) because plaintiff recovered less than the amount of defendant's CCP §998 offer, defendant was entitled to its postoffer expert witness costs and attorney fees.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.64 H. Exception for contractual arbitrations

Code of Civil Procedure §998 does not to apply to settlement offers or awards in contractual arbitration proceedings under CCP §§1280-1294.2. See Woodard v Southern Cal. Permanente Med. Group (1985) 171 CA3d 656, 663, 217 CR 514. In Joyce v Black (1990) 217 CA3d 318, 266 CR 8, the court distinguished Woodard as a contractual arbitration case and held that CCP §998 and CC §3291 do apply to judicial arbitration cases. See §27.127 for discussion of CC §3291.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.65 I. Applicability in structured settlement

When a structured settlement offer is made but not reduced to a present value, the failure to reduce may preclude a decision on whether the judgment is more favorable than the offer. See Hurlbut v Sonora Community Hosp. (1989) 207 CA3d 388, 409, 254 CR 840. In Hurlbut, the court held that, because plaintiffs failed to establish the present value of a structured settlement offer, it was impossible to determine what constituted a judgment more favorable than the offer. 207 CA3d at 408. Plaintiffs thus could not take advantage of the benefits of CCP §998.

Costs cannot be shifted when a settlement offer includes a demand for relinquishment of claims not part of the complaint in the action, given the uncertainty in determining how much of the total offer relates to the causes of action in the complaint, as opposed to other potential causes of action. See Valentino v Elliot Sav-On Gas, Inc. (1988) 201 CA3d 692, 247 CR 483. See also Linthicum v Butterfield (2009) 175 CA4th 259, 270, 95 CR3d 538 (costs award upheld despite claims release in §998 offer, because release did not apply to claims outside scope of action).

VIII. COST ITEMS ALLOWED

§27.67 A. General rules

Any award of costs is subject to the following rules:

- Costs are allowable if incurred, whether paid or not (CCP §1033.5(c)(1));
- Allowable costs must be reasonably necessary to conduct litigation, rather than merely convenient or beneficial to its preparation (CCP §1033.5(c)(2));
- Allowable costs must be reasonable in amount (CCP §1033.5(c)(3)); and
- The court has discretion to allow or deny items specified as allowable in CCP §1033.5(a)-(b).

The requirement of reasonableness applies to costs awarded as a matter of right to a prevailing party, as well as to costs awarded in the court's discretion. See Perko's Enters. v RRNS Enters. (1992) 4 CA4th 238, 5 CR2d 470.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.68 B. Costs allowed

The items in §§27.69-27.80 are specifically listed in CCP §1033.5(a) as allowable costs under CCP §1032.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.69 1. Costs for filing, motion, and jury fees

A prevailing party is entitled as a matter of right to recover filing fees except as otherwise expressly provided by statute. CCP §§1032(b), 1033.5(a)(1). See Heppler v JM Peters Co. (1999) 73 CA4th 1265, 1294, 87 CR2d 497; Perko's Enters. v RRNS Enters. (1992) 4 CA4th 238, 244, 5 CR2d 470 (fees must have been necessarily incurred to be recoverable). See also §27.84. Costs of messengers used to file court documents are not expressly permitted by CCP §1033.5, but may be awarded in the court's discretion. Ladas v California State Auto. Ass'n (1993) 19 CA4th 761, 23 CR2d 810. But see Nelson v Anderson (1999) 72 CA4th 111, 84 CR2d 753 (messenger fees not permitted when they were of doubtful necessity due to alternatives such as mail, federal express, or personal filing by parties).

The daily fee for jurors is $15 a day for each day of the juror's attendance after the first day. CCP §215(a). Under some circumstances, government and public employees may not be paid a jury fee. CCP §215(b). Unless a higher mileage rate is provided by statute or by city or county ordinance, jurors must be reimbursed at the rate of 34 cents per mile for each mile actually traveled in attending court. CCP §215(c). Costs for jury fees are authorized under CCP §1033.5(a)(1). On pretrial jury fees, first day fees, and procedures for depositing fees, see §§2.31-2.35.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.70 2. Costs for jurors' food and lodging

Costs are allowed for juror food and lodging while the jurors are kept together during trial and after the jury retires for deliberation. CCP §1033.5(a)(2).

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.71 3. Costs for videotaping and transcribing depositions

Costs are allowed for taking, video recording, and transcribing necessary depositions, including an original and one copy of those taken by the claimant and one copy of those taken by the party against whom costs are allowed, and travel expenses to attend depositions. CCP §1033.5(a)(3); see also Thon v Thompson (1994) 29 CA4th 1546, 35 CR2d 346 (reasonably necessary travel expenses by out-of-county counsel to attend depositions). The "necessity" of a deposition for purposes of recovering costs is determined from the "pretrial vantage point of a litigant," and is not based on how useful or relevant the witness ultimately proves at trial. Nelson v Anderson (1999) 72 CA4th 111, 84 CR2d 753.

Despite the requirement of CCP §1986.5 that a deposition witness is entitled to receive the same fees and mileage as if testifying before the court, the only fees owed to a witness required to produce business records under Evid C §1560, but not required to attend a deposition away from the place of business, are those set out in Evid C §1563. CCP §1986.5.

§27.72 4. Costs for service of process by public officer or registered process server

Costs are allowed for service of process by a public officer, by a registered process server, or by other means, as follows:

- Service by a public officer. The recoverable cost is the fee authorized by law at the time of service. CCP §1033.5(a)(4)(A).
- Service by a registered process server. If service is by a process server registered under Chapter 16 (beginning with §22350 of Division 8 of the Business and Professions Code), the recoverable cost is the amount actually incurred in effecting service, including, but not limited to, a stakeout or other means used to locate the person to be served, unless those charges are successfully challenged by a party to the action. CCP §1033.5(a)(4)(B).
- Service by publication. The recoverable cost is the sum actually incurred in effecting service. CCP §1033.5(a)(4)(C).
- Service by other means. When service is by means other than by a public officer, process server, or publication, the recoverable cost is the lesser of the sum actually incurred or the amount allowed to a public officer in California for that service, except that, on application to the court, the court may allow the sum actually incurred in effecting service. CCP §1033.5(a)(4)(D).

§27.78 10. Costs for attorney fees

Attorney fees are allowed as costs when authorized by contract or statute. CCP §1033.5(a)(10). Attorney fees awarded under CC §1717 are allowable as costs authorized by contract. CCP §1033.5(c)(5). See chap 26 for discussion of recovering attorney fees.

When a contract provides for the payment of attorney fees and costs, some courts allow the prevailing party to recover disbursements of counsel as costs even though the types of disbursements may not be mentioned specifically in CCP §1033.5. See Arntz Contracting Co. v St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. (1996) 47 CA4th 464, 491, 54 CR2d 888; Bussey v Affleck (1990) 225 CA3d 1162, 275 CR 646. Other courts disagree. See Hsu v Semiconductor Sys., Inc. (2005) 126 CA4th 1330, 1342, 25 CR3d 82 (criticizing Bussey; disputed costs may not be awarded as element of attorney fees under "rationale that the expenses were disbursed by the attorneys in the course of litigation"); Jones v Union Bank of Cal. (2005) 127 CA4th 542, 551, 25 CR3d 783; Robert L. Cloud & Assocs. v Mikesell (1999) 69 CA4th 1141, 1154, 82 CR2d 143; Ripley v Pappadopoulos (1994) 23 CA4th 1616, 28 CR2d 878. See also Fairchild v Park (2001) 90 CA4th 919, 930, 109 CR2d 442, in which the court criticized the Arntz holding. The Fairchild court found that litigants cannot expand the definition of "costs" in CC §1717. For a consideration of the legislative history of CC §1717, see Santisas v Goodin (1998) 17 C4th 599, 71 CR2d 830 (litigants precluded from adopting definition of "prevailing party" that differs from CC §1717).

Attorney fees are not recoverable, however, if they were incurred for enforcement of judgment, even if the contract provides for the recovery of attorney fees incurred in enforcement. CCP §685.040; Chelios v Kaye (1990) 219 CA3d 75, 268 CR 38.

§27.79 11. Costs for court reporter fees

Costs for court reporter fees are allowable under CCP §1033.5(a)(11). Government Code §69953 allows costs of court-ordered verbatim records to be made at public expense under Govt C §69952.

§27.80 12. Costs for models, blowups, and photocopies of exhibits

Models, blowups, and photocopies of exhibits may be allowed if they are reasonably helpful to aid the trier of fact. CCP §1033.5(a)(12). In Ladas v California State Auto. Ass'n (1993) 19 CA4th 761, 774, 23 CR2d 810, the court held that exhibit costs are recoverable only if they are reasonably helpful to the trier of fact, which is clearly not so if exhibits are not admitted into evidence or used demonstratively. But see Benach v County of Los Angeles (2007) 149 CA4th 836, 856, 57 CR3d 363 (court held it was not abuse of discretion to award defendant costs for photocopies and exhibits not used at trial because nothing indicated that defendant could have anticipated exhibits would not be used).

In Nelson v Anderson (1999) 72 CA4th 111, 133, 84 CR2d 753, the court disallowed costs for videotapes and laser discs under CCP §1033.5(a), agreeing with the trial court that, although parties were entitled to use "cutting edge" technology in the presentation of their cases, they were not entitled to "automatically pass the high cost of that technology to the other side."

§27.81 13. Costs for other items required to be awarded to prevailing party

In addition to the specifically enumerated cost items that may be recovered, CCP §1033.5(a)(13) provides for recovery of any other item that is required to be awarded to the prevailing party as an incident to its prevailing in the action at trial or on appeal. Gibson v Bobroff (1996) 49 CA4th 1202, 1207, 57 CR2d 235 (mediation fees); Applegate v St. Francis Lutheran Church (1994) 23 CA4th 361, 28 CR2d 436 (blueprints and photographs reasonably necessary even though not used because case dismissed); Ripley v Pappadopoulos (1994) 23 CA4th 1616, 28 CR2d 878 (overhead projector). But see Carr Bus. Enters. v City of Chowchilla (2008) 166 CA4th 25, 82 CR3d 135 (parties' stipulation under CCP §638 to submit to referee and split referee fees precludes prevailing party from recovering referee fees as costs).

IX. COST ITEMS NOT ALLOWED

A. Items not allowed by CCP §1033.5(b)

§27.82 1. Fees for expert witnesses not ordered by court

Fees of expert witnesses not ordered by the court are not allowable costs unless expressly authorized by law. CCP §1033.5(b)(1). See Davis v KGO-T.V., Inc. (1998) 17 C4th 436, 71 CR2d 452; Baker-Hoey v Lockheed Martin Corp. (2003) 111 CA4th 592, 3 CR3d 593 (physician's reasonable and customary fees, which must be paid to take physician's deposition, are expert witness fees and are not recoverable under CCP §1033.5); Sanchez v Bay Shores Med. Group (1999) 75 CA4th 946, 89 CR2d 634 (medical expert witness fees not recoverable in medical malpractice action unless expert appointed by court); Desplancke v Wilson (1993) 14 CA4th 631, 635, 17 CR2d 586 (when expert who testifies is not under court order and no CCP §998 demand is made, it is error to award expert witness fees). See also Olson v Automobile Club of S. Cal. (2008) 42 C4th 1142, 1149 n4, 74 CR3d 81 (Govt C §12965(b) amended after Davis to expressly authorize expert witness fees).

Expert witness fees may be recoverable when the parties have expressly agreed to their recovery in a contract. Such fees must be pleaded and proved at trial as elements of damages and cannot be claimed as costs for the first time through the filing of a memorandum of costs. First Nationwide Bank v Mountain Cascade, Inc. (2000) 77 CA4th 871, 92 CR2d 145. See §27.76 on when expert witness fees are allowed and for sources for further research on expert witnesses.

§27.83 2. Investigation expenses

Investigation expenses incurred in the litigation are generally not allowed. CCP §1033.5(b)(2).

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.84 3. Postage, telephone, and photocopying charges, except for exhibits

Postage, telephone, and photocopying charges are generally not allowed unless they were incurred for exhibits. CCP §1033.5(b)(3). In Austin v Allstate Ins. Co. (1993) 16 CA4th 1812, 1815 n2, 21 CR2d 56, the court allowed photocopying charges as costs, but only for exhibits admitted into evidence. See Fairchild v Park (2001) 90 CA4th 919, 109 CR2d 442 (postage, telephone costs, and other administrative expenses not recoverable under CCP §1033.5). See also *Ladas v California State Auto. ### §27.86 5. Costs for transcripts of court proceedings not ordered by court Costs for transcripts of court proceedings not ordered by the court are not allowed. CCP §1033.5(b)(5).

§27.87 B. Other cost items not allowed

Fees paid for letters of credit for a security bond are not recoverable under CCP §995.250. Golf W., Inc. v Life Investors, Inc. (1986) 178 CA3d 313, 223 CR 539.

Defendants have no right to costs for unnecessary filings. See Perko's Enters. v RRNS Enters. (1992) 4 CA4th 238, 244, 5 CR2d 470 (court held that trial court may disallow recovery of costs, including filing fees, when it finds that costs were incurred unnecessarily; defendant successfully defended application for temporary restraining order, then for no apparent reason filed its opposition, for which it paid filing fee).

The court in Ladas v California State Auto. Ass'n (1993) 19 CA4th 761, 774, 23 CR2d 810, was asked to award costs for exhibits not used at trial, for attorneys' meals while attending local depositions and other meals not related to depositions, for facsimile charges, for travel other than for depositions, for computerized legal research, and for obtaining documents for an expert's review. The court disallowed each claim as not being specified in the costs statute. See also Seever v Copley Press, Inc. (2006) 141 CA4th 1550, 47 CR3d 206 (employer not entitled to costs of unused trial exhibits; travel costs for counsel to attend out of county depositions were permissible, as were costs of videotaping certain depositions). The discretion extended to the trial court under CCP §1033.5(c)(4) is not limited solely by costs expressly prohibited under the statute; a discretionary award of costs for items "not mentioned in this section" is inapplicable unless the costs come within the specific categories stated under CCP §1033.5. Seever v Copley Press, 141 CA4th at 1559.

Costs permitted by CCP §1033.5 do not include costs of administrative law judges in administrative proceedings preliminary to trial. California Teachers Ass'n v State (1999) 20 C4th 327, 84 CR2d 425 (recoverable costs under CCP §§1032 and 1033.5 do not include costs of judges or adjudicators).

X. PROCEDURE FOR CLAIMING COSTS

§27.88 A. When to file and serve

A prevailing party who claims costs must serve and file a memorandum of costs within (Cal Rules of Ct 3.1700(a)(1)):

- 15 days after the date of mailing notice of entry of judgment or dismissal by the clerk under CCP §664.5;
- 15 days after the date of serving the written notice of entry of judgment or dismissal; or
- 180 days after entry of judgment, whichever occurs first.

NOTE: Under Govt C §68106(b)(1), effective July 28, 2009, and operative through June 30, 2010, if a court is closed as the result of a budget reduction measure in response to the state fiscal crisis, the day is considered a holiday and not a court day.

Failure to file a cost bill and a claim for attorney fees may waive the right to costs and fees. See Hydratec, Inc. v Sun Valley 260 Orchard & Vineyard Co. (1990) 223 CA3d 924, 272 CR 899.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.89 B. Verification required

The memorandum of costs must be verified by a statement of the party, attorney, or agent that to the best of his or her knowledge the cost items are correct and were necessarily incurred. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1700(a)(1). A party who fails to file a verified memorandum of costs may be construed to have waived the right to recover costs. See Hydratec, Inc. v Sun Valley 260 Orchard & Vineyard Co. (1990) 223 CA3d 924, 272 CR 899.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.90 C. Verified memorandum is prima facie evidence of necessary expenses

If cost items are expressly authorized by CCP §1033.5 and appear proper on their face, a verified memorandum of costs is prima facie evidence that they were necessarily incurred. Nelson v Anderson (1999) 72 CA4th 111, 84 CR2d 753.

© The Regents of the University of California

D. Time to file may be extended

§27.91 1. By agreement of parties

The time for filing a cost memorandum may be extended by the parties' agreement, which must be in writing, must specify the extended date for service, and must be filed with the clerk. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1700(b)(3).

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.92 2. By court

In the absence of an agreement, the court may extend the time for serving the cost memorandum for no more than 30 days. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1700(b)(3).

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.93 E. Motion under CCP §473 for relief from failure to request costs

A court may grant relief from failure to request costs by a proper showing under CCP §473 of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect. In the absence of prejudice, the court may allow the party to file a late memorandum of costs. See Lee v Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2001) 88 CA4th 1187, 106 CR2d 726 (granting plaintiff's motion for relief under CCP §473 from failure to timely file cost bill). See also Pollard v Saxe & Yolles Dev. Co. (1974) 12 C3d 374, 115 CR 648. However, whenever relief is granted based on an attorney's affidavit attesting to his or her mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, the court must direct the attorney to pay reasonable compensatory legal fees and costs to opposing counsel or parties. CCP §473.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.94 F. Cost bill may be amended

A trial court may allow a party to file amendments to a cost bill that appear necessary when an opposing party has moved for taxation of costs. See Puppo v Larosa (1924) 194 C 721, 724, 230 P 440.

§27.95 G. When party seeking default requests costs

A party seeking a default judgment who claims costs must request them on the Request to Enter Default form at the time the party applies for the default judgment. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1700(a)(2).

© The Regents of the University of California

H. When attorney fees recoverable as costs

§27.96 1. Costs allowable under statute or contract must be fixed

When any statute refers to "costs and attorney's fees," attorney fees are an item and component of the costs to be awarded. CCP §1033.5(c)(5).

Attorney fees allowable as costs under a statute may be fixed as follows (CCP §1033.5(c)(5)):

- On noticed motion;
- At the time a statement of decision is rendered;
- On application supported by affidavit made concurrently with a claim for other costs; or
- On entry of a default judgment.

Attorney fees allowable as costs under a contract or by action of law may be fixed as follows unless otherwise stipulated to by the parties (CCP §1033.5(c)(5)):

- On noticed motion; or
- On entry of a default judgment.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.97 2. Burden of proof requirements

Any claim not based on the court's established schedule for attorney fees for actions on a contract is required to bear the burden of proof. CCP §1033.5(c)(5).

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.98 3. Claiming trial court attorney fees

A notice of motion for attorney fees based on a statute or a contract, for fees up to and including when the judgment is rendered in the trial court, must be served and filed within the time for filing a notice of appeal under Cal Rules of Ct 8.104, 8.108. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1702(b). In a case involving voluntary dismissal, the time for filing a motion for attorney fees commences when notice of entry of dismissal is served, even if the case continues on other causes of action. See Sanabria v Embrey (2001) 92 CA4th 422, 427, 111 CR2d 837.

By stipulation filed before the expiration of the time in which to file, the parties may extend the time for filing a motion for attorney fees until 60 days after the expiration of the time for filing a notice of appeal, or, if a notice of appeal is filed, until the time within which a memorandum of costs must be served and filed under Cal Rules of Ct 8.278. For good cause shown, the trial judge may extend the time for filing without a stipulation or for a period of time longer than allowed by a stipulation. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1702(d).

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.99 4. Claiming attorney fees on appeal

A notice of motion to claim attorney fees on appeal under a statute or a contract that requires the court to determine either entitlement to the fees, the amount of fees, or both, must be served and filed within the time for serving and filing the memorandum of costs under Cal Rules of Ct 8.278(c)(1) (within 40 days after the clerk of the reviewing court mails notice of the issuance of the remittitur). Cal Rules of Ct 3.1702(c), 8.278(c).

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/27 Recovering Costs and Obtaining Interest/§27.100 5. When attorney fees fixed by formula

§27.100 5. When attorney fees fixed by formula

If a party is entitled to statutory or contractual attorney fees that are fixed without requiring a court determination, the fees must be claimed in the memorandum of costs. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1702(d).

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.101 I. Court's discretion to include costs later if judgment fails to award costs

If a party is entitled to costs as a matter of right but the judgment fails to provide for an award, the cost bill should still be filed. The judge may then change the judgment to include costs on the basis that the judge is merely correcting a clerical error. See, e.g., Williams v Santa Maria Joint Union High Sch. Dist. (1967) 252 CA2d 1010, 60 CR 911; Miles Cal. Co. v Hawkins (1959) 175 CA2d 162, 345 P2d 492. Similarly, a minute order dismissing defendant, but failing to award judgment for costs when defendant is entitled to them as a matter of right, may be amended nunc pro tunc. McMahan's v McMahan Serv. Corp. (1956) 145 CA2d 607, 302 P2d 847.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.102 J. Appealability of award

An order awarding costs is not appealable until the final judgment. See Muller v Reagh (1960) 179 CA2d 814, 815, 4 CR 147. The time to file an appeal of an order of costs runs from the notice of entry of judgment, even if the court specifically left open the cost issue in the judgment. See UAP-Columbus JV 326132 v Nesbitt (1991) 234 CA3d 1028, 1039, 285 CR 856.

© The Regents of the University of California

XI. MOVING TO STRIKE TAX BILL OR TO TAX COSTS

§27.103 A. When to file and serve

A notice of motion to strike or tax costs must be served and filed within 15 days after service of the cost memorandum. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1700(b)(1). If the memorandum was served by mail, this period is extended as provided in CCP §1013.

NOTE: Under Govt C §68106(b)(1), effective July 28, 2009, and operative through June 30, 2010, if a court is closed as the result of a budget reduction measure in response to the state fiscal crisis, the day is considered a holiday and not a court day.

© The Regents of the University of California

B. Time to file may be extended

§27.104 1. By agreement of parties

The time for filing a motion to tax costs may be extended by the parties' agreement, which must be in writing, must specify the extended date for service, and must be filed with the clerk. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1700(b)(3).

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.105 2. By court

In the absence of an agreement, the court may extend the time for filing a motion to tax costs for a period not to exceed 30 days. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1700(b)(3).

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.106 C. Objections must be specified

Unless objection is made to the entire cost memorandum, a motion to strike or tax costs must specify each item objected to in the same order and with the same number used in the memorandum of costs and must specify why each contested item is objectionable. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1700(b)(2).

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.107 D. Burden of proof requirements

If cost items are expressly permitted by CCP §1033.5(a), appear proper, and are set forth in a verified memorandum, the burden is on the party objecting to such costs to show that they are not properly chargeable or are unreasonable. Nelson v Anderson (1999) 72 CA4th 111, 84 CR2d 753. If costs do not appear proper, if their necessity seems doubtful on their face, and if the items are properly challenged, the burden is on the claimant to establish the need for them. Nelson v Anderson, supra; Oak Grove Sch. Dist. v City Title Ins. Co. (1963) 217 CA2d 678, 698, 32 CR 288. The claimant will usually file appropriate declarations and copies of documents such as receipts.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.108 E. Court may disallow costs

The burden of proof shifts to the party seeking costs when cost items are properly objected to. When that party offers no substantiation of costs beyond the cost bill and argument, the trial court has discretion to disallow the costs. See Levy v Toyota Motor Sales, Inc. (1992) 4 CA4th 807, 816, 5 CR2d 770.

© The Regents of the University of California

Source: Civil Litigation/California Trial Practice: Civil Procedure During Trial/27 Recovering Costs and Obtaining Interest/§27.109 F. Judgment must include costs

§27.109 F. Judgment must include costs

After the time has elapsed for a motion to strike or to tax costs or for determination of that motion, the clerk must enter the costs on the judgment. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1700(b)(4).

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.110 G. Postjudgment hearing after timely motion to strike or to tax costs

If a motion to tax costs is timely filed, a postjudgment hearing is held and the clerk enters the final costs on the judgment, nunc pro tunc, in accordance with the court's posthearing order. See Nazemi v Tseng (1992) 5 CA4th 1633, 7 CR2d 762; Grant v List & Lathrop (1992) 2 CA4th 993, 996, 3 CR2d 654.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.111 H. Appealability of order denying motion

An order denying a motion to tax costs that is made before entry of final judgment is not appealable, but it may be reviewed on appeal from the judgment. See Lacey v Bertone (1949) 33 C2d 649, 654, 203 P2d 755. An order made after entry of judgment taxing or denying a motion to tax costs is separately appealable as a special order after judgment and is not reviewable on an appeal from the judgment. Oakes v McCarthy Co. (1968) 267 CA2d 231, 256, 73 CR 127; Hardin v Elvitsky (1965) 232 CA2d 357, 363, 42 CR 748.

XII. OBTAINING INTEREST

A. Interest on Judgment

§27.112 1. Authority for Award of Interest

The authority for awarding interest on a judgment appears in Cal Const art XV, §1. The implementing legislation appears in CCP §§685.010-685.030.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.113 2. Interest attaches to money judgment

Interest attaches generally to judgments for an amount of money, regardless of the nature of the suit or the status of the judgment debtor. See Harland v State (1979) 99 CA3d 839, 160 CR 613 (state liable for interest on tort judgment). The entire judgment amount, including any prejudgment interest recovered as damages, bears interest at the legal rate for the interim period, if any, following the verdict or decision until entry of judgment, as well as thereafter. Boscus v Bohlig (1916) 173 C 687, 162 P 100; Big Bear Prop. v Gherman (1979) 95 CA3d 908, 157 CR 443.

Clerk should include interest in the judgment. Interest is automatically included in the judgment even in the absence of a demand in the pleadings. See Budget Fin. Plan v Sav-On Food Club, Inc. (1955) 44 C2d 565, 572 n6, 283 P2d 694. The clerk must include in the judgment any court-awarded interest and the interest accrued since entry of the verdict. Cal Rules of Ct 3.1802. Similarly, CCP §585(a) provides that a default judgment entered by the clerk or judge shall include interest allowed by law. The omission of the provision for postjudgment interest in the judgment does not defeat the party's right to it. Big Bear Prop. v Gherman (1979) 95 CA3d 908, 913, 157 CR 443; Pinecrest Prods. v RKO Teleradio Pictures, Inc. (1970) 14 CA3d 6, 11, 92 CR 44.

Interest may accrue even on conditional judgment. Interest accrues on the judgment even if the judgment is conditional, as long as the condition is eventually fulfilled, and despite an attack on the judgment in the trial court or the granting of a temporary stay of execution. See generally Bellflower City Sch. Dist. v Skaggs (1959) 52 C2d 278, 339 P2d 848; City of Ontario v Kelber (1973) 35 CA3d 751, 111 CR 222. Similarly, interest is not suspended by appeal or certiorari if the judgment is affirmed. Columbia Sav. Bank v County of Los Angeles (1902) 137 C 467, 70 P 308.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.114 3. Interest rate

General interest rate. The legal rate of interest is 10 percent per year on the principal amount of a judgment remaining unsatisfied. CCP §685.010(a).

Interest rate for public entities. The interest rate on judgments against public entities is the constitutional rate of 7 percent because Govt C §970.1(b) specifically exempts public entities from the enforcement provisions of CCP §§680.010-724.260. San Francisco Unified Sch. Dist. v San Francisco Classroom Teachers Ass'n (1990) 222 CA3d 146, 272 CR 38.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.115 4. When interest begins to accrue

Except for money judgments payable in installments, interest begins to accrue on a money judgment on the date of entry of judgment. CCP §685.020(a). Interest begins to accrue on installments as each becomes due. CCP §685.020(b).

The order entered on a motion to tax costs or on the lapse of the time within which that motion may be filed, or on modification on appeal, is equivalent to the entry of judgment, and interest on costs starts running from that time. Dalzell v Kelly (1952) 115 CA2d 60, 251 P2d 343. See also Stockton Theatres, Inc. v Palermo (1961) 55 C2d 439, 11 CR 580. Presumably, the same rule would apply to a postjudgment order awarding attorney fees.

The clerk is required to include in the judgment "any interest awarded by the court and the interest accrued since the entry of the verdict." Cal Rules of Ct 3.1802.

When a judgment is modified on appeal, whether upward or downward, interest accrues from the date of entry of the original order, not from that of the new judgment. See Munoz v City of Union City (2009) 173 CA4th 199, 203, 92 CR3d 527. When a judgment is set aside by the trial court or reversed on appeal, the new award subsequently entered by the trial court will bear interest only from the date of the new judgment, verdict, or decision. Snapp v State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. (1964) 60 C2d 816, 36 CR 612.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.116 3. When interest stops accruing

A valid tender of the judgment amount, plus any interest accrued until the tender, made by the judgment debtor pending postjudgment proceedings, such as new trial motions and appeals, will stop the accrual of interest on the judgment if it is accepted or if the decision on the proceeding affirms or lowers the judgment amount. See Montano v City of South Gate (1970) 13 CA3d 446, 91 CR 523. This is so even if accepting the tender does or would effect a settlement or a satisfaction of judgment that terminates the litigation. Montano v City of South Gate, supra. If acceptance of a tender does not effect a complete settlement, the amount of the tender, if accepted, is applied first to interest and then to principal, and the remaining principal continues to draw interest. See McConnell v Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. (1962) 205 CA2d 469, 24 CR 5.

A tender made before a verdict, decision, or judgment, although effective in stopping accrual of prejudgment interest, does not stop accrual of interest on the judgment entered thereafter. A new tender must be made to stop the running of such interest. Beeler v American Trust Co. (1946) 28 C2d 435, 170 P2d 439; Wadleigh v Phelps (1906) 149 C 627, 643, 87 P 93.

When an appropriate tender stops the running of interest, the judgment debtor should move to amend the judgment to reflect that fact. See Montano v City of South Gate (1970) 13 CA3d 446, 448, 91 CR 523. It may also be possible to defeat an excessive interest charge by opposing execution.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.117 6. Interest not applied retroactively

Code of Civil Procedure §685.010, which sets the legal rate of interest on unpaid judgments, may not be applied retroactively. See Hill v Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1985) 174 CA3d 1076, 220 CR 144; Hersch v Citizens Sav. & Loan (1985) 173 CA3d 373, 218 CR 646.

NOTE: As a practical matter, it is unlikely that there are still active cases to which this principle applies; however, it does provide precedence for any future changes in the interest rate.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.118 7. Interest not cumulatively awarded

The legislature did not intend, and Cal Const art XV, §1, does not allow, interest to be cumulatively awarded under CC §3291 (permitting interest at 10 percent on a judgment more favorable than a rejected offer of compromise) or CCP §685.010 (specifying 10 percent interest on an unsatisfied judgment) between entry of judgment and its satisfaction. However, neither CC §3291 nor CCP §685.010 violates Cal Const art XV, §1, because neither permits recovery of more than 10 percent interest if applied separately or conjunctively. Mendez v Kurten (1985) 170 CA3d 481, 215 CR 924.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.119 8. Compounding of interest

Postjudgment interest is not compounded. See Gillanders v Da Silva (1931) 212 C 626, 299 P 722 (second judgment did not carry interest on interest allowed on previous judgment); Glenn v Rice (1917) 174 C 269, 276, 162 P 1020. There is, however, the compounding effect of including prejudgment interest in the judgment itself as well as the possibility of compounding the interest that accrues between the date of the verdict or decision and the date of the judgment by its inclusion in the judgment. Big Bear Prop. v Gherman (1979) 95 CA3d 908, 913, 157 CR 443. However, CC §3291 prohibits inclusion in the judgment of prejudgment interest accrued under that section for the purpose of compounding the interest. See Hess v Ford Motor Co. (2002) 27 C4th 516, 532, 117 CR2d 220.

© The Regents of the University of California

§27.120 9. Right to postjudgment interest

Postjudgment interest may not exceed the constitutional rate of 10 percent simple interest; awarding compound interest is not authorized. Compound postjudgment interest is permissible only if interest is part of the judgment itself (e.g., postjudgment interest running on prejudgment interest award). See Westbrook v Fairchild (1992) 7 CA4th 889, 894, 9 CR2d 277. But see OCM Principal Opportunities Fund, L.P. v CIBC World Markets Corp. (2008) 168 CA4th 185, 201, 85 CR3d 350 (no constitutional limitation on compounding interest authorized by renewal statutes).

In Schiernbeck v Haight (1992) 7 CA4th 869, 9 CR2d 716, the court held that, when the trial court orders periodic payments under CCP §667.7 (actions against health care provider) that reflect future economic losses, no postjudgment interest is permitted. The court noted that even if there were a constitutional entitlement there is no right to interest on a judgment payment not yet due.

§27.121 10. Special rules for interest on condemnation awards

Special rules apply in computing interest on condemnation awards. See CCP §§1268.310-1268.360. If a public agency condemns property and exercises its statutory right (CCP §§1255.010-1255.480) to take possession before the condemnation price is set or fully paid, constitutional requirements of "just compensation" (US Const amend V, §4; Cal Const art I, §19) require inclusion of interest at prevailing market rates rather than at the rate specified in CCP §1268.310. A statutory interest ceiling cannot prevail if it falls short of constitutional just compensation. Redevelopment Agency v Gilmore (1985) 38 C3d 790, 214 CR 904.

The right to prejudgment interest in inverse condemnation derives from the Fifth Amendment of the United States Constitution, which prohibits the taking of private property without just compensation and is binding on the state through the Supremacy Clause (US Const art IV, §2). In Aetna Life & Cas. Co. v City of Los Angeles (1985) 170 CA3d 865, 216 CR 831, the court held that the trial court did not err in awarding plaintiffs prejudgment interest at the market rate set by Cal Const art XV, §1 and CCP §685.010, stating that the state cannot limit the amount it is required to pay as just compensation.

§27.122 B. Interest on awarded damages

Interest is awarded under CC §3287(a) when damages are certain or are capable of being made certain by calculation, and when the right to recover vests on a particular day. Interest is calculated from that day except for any time the debtor is prevented from paying the debt by law or by action of the creditor. See Stein v Southern Cal. Edison Co. (1992) 7 CA4th 565, 573, 8 CR2d 907 (court awarded plaintiffs prejudgment interest from date notice sent to defendant of claimed damages).

Damages are deemed certain or capable of being made certain under CC §3287(a) when the dispute centers on liability giving rise to the damage and when there is essentially no dispute between the parties on the issue of imposition of recoverable damages. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v Allstate Ins. Co. (1991) 234 CA3d 1154, 1172, 286 CR 146 (interest properly awarded when liability for insurance coverage was disputed, but coverage amount was ascertainable). See Santa Clara County Envt'l Health Ass'n v County of Santa Clara (1985) 173 CA3d 74, 218 CR 678. Denial of liability on the main theory of the case does not necessarily make the damages uncertain within the meaning of CC §3287. Thus, in Cheng v California Pac. Bank (1999) 76 CA4th 274, 90 CR2d 401, a bank presented with an allegedly forged endorsement claimed that the plaintiff's right to disputed funds did not vest for purposes of calculating interest until the plaintiff's title to the funds became clear. The court held that, regardless of whether the plaintiff was the actual owner of the funds, it was undisputed that the bank was not their owner and that interest under §3287 therefore accrued from the date on which the bank received and denied a demand for payment. See Credit Managers' Ass'n v Brubaker (1991) 233 CA3d 1587, 1595, 285 CR 417.

Interest is recoverable from any debtor that meets the criteria of the statute, including the state or a county, city, municipal corporation, public district, public agency, or political subdivision of the state. CC §3287(a).

Prejudgment interest for an action with calculable damages is available when the dispute centers on liability rather than the amount of damages, and when the damages as documented were awarded by the trier of fact. CC §3287(a); Credit Manager's Ass'n v Brubaker, supra.

The trial court can award prejudgment interest if the case comes within the requirement of CC §3287(b) even if the jury has rejected prejudgment interest; cases falling under §3287(b) are within the trial judge's discretion. See Gebert v Yank (1985) 172 CA3d 544, 218 CR 585.

Interest may also be awarded to anyone entitled under a judgment to receive damages based on a cause of action in contract when the claim was unliquidated from a date before entry of judgment, but no earlier than the date the action was filed, as set at the court's discretion. CC §3287(b); George v Double-D Foods, Inc. (1984) 155 CA3d 36, 201 CR 870 (decision to set date from which interest should be awarded is vested in court, not jury). The court in George also held that an action in quantum meruit is an action in contract within the meaning of §3287(b).

Other cases discussing the recovery of prejudgment interest under CC §3287 are:

- Roodenburg v Pavestone Co., L.P. (2009) 171 CA4th 185, 190, 89 CR3d 558 (uncertain damages amount no bar to recovery of prejudgment interest under CC §3287 when prejudgment interest part of amount owed under contract).
- Doppes v Bentley Motors, Inc. (2009) 174 CA4th 1004, 1009, 94 CR3d 797 (prejudgment interest under CC §3287 not barred by Song-Beverly Consumer Warranty Act (CC §§1790-1795.8).
- North Oakland Med. Clinic v Rogers (1998) 65 CA4th 824, 76 CR2d 743 (addresses timing considerations and holds that request for prejudgment interest must be made before entry of judgment).
- Olson v Cory (1983) 35 C3d 390, 197 CR 843 (certainty required by §3287(a) is generally absent if calculation depends on disputed facts, but not if dispute is confined to issue of liability).
- Polster, Inc. v Swing (1985) 164 CA3d 427, 210 CR 567 (certainty requirement of §3287(a) determined by whether defendant either knows amount owed or would readily be able to compute damages; if defendant does not know or cannot readily compute damages, plaintiff must supply statement and supporting data so that defendant can compute damages).
- Chesapeake Indus. v Togova Enters. (1983) 149 CA3d 901, 197 CR 348 (right to interest under §3287 cannot be defeated by filing unliquidated counterclaim as offset).

§27.123 C. Interest as damages

The jury has discretion to provide interest in an action for breach of an obligation not arising from contract and in "every case" of oppression, fraud, or malice. CC §3288.

Although a plaintiff is entitled under CC §3288 to receive prejudgment interest on the full judgment amount, interest must be awarded against the nonsettling defendants on that amount only up to the date the settling tortfeasor makes payment to plaintiff. See Newby v Vroman (1992) 11 CA4th 283, 288, 14 CR2d 44. In Newby, the court held that plaintiff was entitled to further prejudgment interest from nonsettling defendants only on the remaining balance of the judgment after its reduction by the amount of settlement. The court of appeal held that the trial court properly awarded prejudgment interest on the various components that made up the judgment from the date of each individual loss to the date the settling tortfeasor paid its share, and thereafter properly awarded plaintiffs prejudgment interest on the balance of their damages up to the time of judgment.

§27.124 D. Interest on obligation after breach

Under CC §3289(a), any legal interest rate stipulated by a contract remains chargeable after a breach until the contract is superseded by a verdict or other new obligations.

Civil Code §3289(b) sets the interest rate at 10 percent for contracts not specifying an interest rate. A "contract" under §3289(b) does not include a note secured by a deed of trust on real property.

§27.127 G. Award of prejudgment interest

Plaintiff may claim interest on the damages alleged in any action brought to recover damages for personal injury based on tort of a person, corporation, association, or partnership, whether based on negligence or willful intent and whether or not the injury was fatal. CC §3291.

If plaintiff made a CCP §998 offer (see §27.54) that defendant did not accept before trial or arbitration, or within 30 days (whichever occurred first), and plaintiff obtains a more favorable judgment, the judgment bears interest at 10 percent per year from the date of plaintiff's first §998 offer that exceeded the judgment obtained, and interest continues to accrue until the judgment is satisfied. CC §3291.

Section 3291 does not apply to a public entity or to a public employee for any act or omission that was within the scope of employment. The public entity or public employee cannot be liable either directly or indirectly for interest under §3291.

The applicability of CC §3291 depends on the primary purpose of the action (personal injury being recoverable and economic injury not being recoverable). Even if the events that formed the basis of a lawsuit involve other damages (such as property damage), that fact alone will not defeat a claim for damages under a personal injury theory, and prejudgment interest under §3291 will be available. See Lakin v Watkins Assoc. Indus. (1993) 6 C4th 644, 656, 25 CR2d 109. Interest may be awarded under §3291 in strict liability actions as well as in negligence and intentional tort actions. See Fortman v Hemco, Inc. (1989) 211 CA3d 241, 262, 259 CR 311.

EXAMPLE: In an insurance bad faith action, the plaintiff seeks to recover for violation of a property right. Such a bad faith action is not a personal injury claim. Gourley v State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1991) 53 C3d 121, 3 CR2d 666.

Prejudgment interest under §3291 may not be awarded on punitive damages. See Lakin v Watkins Assoc. Indus., supra. Prejudgment interest under §3291 is not an element of damages for calculation of whether a party obtained a more favorable judgment under CCP §998. Steinfeld v Foote-Goldman Proctologic Med. Group, Inc. (1997) 60 CA4th 13, 70 CR2d 41.
